Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member and I have had an exchange before about policies designed to end fishing communities in Newfoundland.

Mr. Simmons: Your comments went over like a lead balloon last time, too.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There were policies of that kind brought in by a former Liberal government of Newfoundland. But they are not part of the plans of this government. Nor is any part of the plan of this government, if I may use his moderate language, to zap fishermen or to take any other actions of that kind.

There is a recognition that there is a serious problem in the fishery and, among other things, that there is a need to help prepare people who are in the fishing industry who will not be able to continue to find full lives in that industry, adapt to other opportunities. That was part of the announcement that was made by my colleague the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. That is part of the policy that this government is following.

* * *

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It relates to the Meech Lake impasse and the activities that are occurring at this time.

As the Deputy Prime Minister knows, we are very concerned that the constitutional impasse over the Meech Lake Accord be resolved. But there are other Canadians who are concerned as well—northerners, women, aboriginal Canadians—that they not be left out of the process completely. They are concerned that by the nature of the behind-the-scenes negotiations they will again be left out, that their concerns will not be addressed, that they will not be informed of the nature of the discussions.

What assurances can the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister give that this will not be a done deal between the Prime Minister and the ten Premiers? What assurances can he give those many, many Canadians who are concerned so that the deal can be done, and that there can be an honest resolve to this impasse?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is aware, I am sure, of the special parliamentary committee that was established to look into this and the recommendations that came forth from a very valuable piece of work that was done by a number of members on all sides of the House.

Those recommendations, along with other proposals that are being advanced by the Premiers and, indeed, the Prime Minister as a result of the discussions that Senator Murray has had with each of the provincial premiers, involve questions that are being dealt with in an attempt to narrow down the differences that exist that prevent the Meech Lake Accord from being ratified.

Clearly, all these things will be taken into consideration. That assurance I think goes without saying.

Clearly, the groups to which the hon. member refers had an opportunity to appear before this committee to have their input. I am sure the committee took those views into account when it drafted its recommendations.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I agree with the Deputy Prime Minister that the concerns of women, aboriginal Canadians, residents of the Northwest Territories and others were taken into account by the committee.

Our concern now is to make sure that those same people are aware of what is happening over the next little while.

As I said earlier, we encourage the process. We encourage the meetings between the Prime Minister and the premiers. However, we want to make sure that the public of Canada is fully informed on a regular basis of what is being discussed and what the parameters of those discussions are.

I ask again that the Deputy Prime Minister give Canadians that assurance.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I can give the hon. member that assurance, just as the Prime Minister has given that assurance.

He indicated in the House yesterday very clearly that he would be meeting with all the Premiers over the weekend to see if there could be a narrowing of the differences which would hopefully form the basis of a first ministers' conference. That task will carry on over the weekend.

I am sure that at an appropriate time the Prime Minister will inform the House precisely as to the results of the meetings he will hold over the weekend with all the provincial premiers. It has been his nature to inform the House as fully as he possibly can. I think the hon. member appreciates that these negotiations are indeed, very sensitive and very important.

I noted that the Premier of Ontario, after the meeting with the Prime Minister, indicated that there are serious questions that must be resolved. He also indicated that he believed that the things that divide us are not insurmountable. As well, he made it very clear that seven provinces support the Meech Lake Accord and have not wavered from that support. He calls upon all provinces, in the national interest, to proceed with the passage of the Meech Lake Accord. I think that is the objective of all members of the House and, I am sure, the objective of all Canadians.

* * *

INTERNATIONAL BANKING

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

I understand that representatives from other countries will be gathering in Paris next week to oversee the establishment of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

Given the importance of this new bank for the future of central and east European countries, which is of interest to all of us concerned that reforms taking place in that region be given every chance of success, what exactly is Canada's commitment to this new institution? How will it complement the government's other efforts of support for central and east European nations?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be representing Canada at the final signing of the agreements bringing into effect the new European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

We will have a participation in this bank of something like 3.4 per cent, which is the eighth-largest participation of the banks.

The initiative is basically a French initiative, but one to which the Prime Minister responded in a very important way because of our commitment to supporting what is happening in eastern Europe. The bank itself will support the reforms that are being undertaken in eastern Europe, in particular the desires of those countries to move into a market-oriented economy with good involvement of the private sector. The activities of the bank will support the private sector. Its mandate is specifically designed to do that.

In addition to that, we will be taking into account the importance of dealing with environmental problems in eastern European countries.

This new bank does complement the support that we have provided to these countries over the past few months. It is a more cost-effective way of providing that support since it is through a bank and therefore can be levered through borrowings by the bank in the financial markets.

In addition to that, we will help provide stronger support for our private sector companies in accessing that market and participating more aggressively in those markets.

EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

When will the minister bring forward a full employment act, as recommended by her own advisory council in its report on full employment for all Canadians by the year 2000, released just a few days ago?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, many of the things suggested by the CEIAC committee are in Bill C-21, which is now in the other place. Thus, I do not want to repeat my arguments about that.

Clearly, there has been and will continue to be on the part of the government a commitment to growing employment in Canada and to the reduction of unemployment. That can be seen in the creation of 1.6 million new jobs since 1984. The proportion of people in the labour force working today is higher than it has ever been.

We are already well on the road to achieving the kind of employment capacities in Canada that we all want to see.

• (1150)

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, I shall have to send the minister's answer to the advisory council to see whether or not it feels that this is a full employment act, as it has suggested.

[Translation]

My supplementary question is for the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology. Let us talk about jobs, good jobs. What is the minister now doing to increase the number of scientists and engineers—we have about a third as many per capita as the United States—and also, to increase investment in research and development, which is about half that in the United States, in order to create good jobs here in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the Economic Council of Canada pointed out, there are very good jobs being created at the high end of the economic spectrum. We are seeing some shift in the kind of jobs as we head into a technological age.

One of the reasons that the training component that is called for in the CEIAC report is important, and which we want to undertake through Bill C-21, is that there is no point in having economic or regional development or investment in science and technology if there are no trained people to fill those jobs.

Already in Canada today we have shortages within some skill areas, regardless of the unemployment rate. I believe that the economy we are building in this decade is exactly the kind of economy we need for the future.

* * *

[Translation]

FISHERIES

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): My question is for the Minister of Fisheries, Madam Speaker. Quebec Fisheries Minister Michel Pagé called the federal agreement on Quebec fisheries "dry bread". Under this fisheries agreement, Quebec will get only 2.7 per cent of the total package. Will the federal fisheries minister try to correct this unfair situation and treat Quebec fishermen fairly and equitably?

[English]

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, there is no question that the Government of Canada is aware of the particular problems facing those who depend on the fishery in Quebec as, indeed, the Government of Canada is aware of and acting on the problems that affect the people who depend on all the Atlantic fishery.

It should be pointed out that the Atlantic plan that was announced has direct benefits for the people of Quebec, not only in terms of the advantages through stock growth and increased science, but specifically through the provision of $10 million that will provide for stability in harvesting, processing, and aquaculture.

I want to point out to my hon. friend that the Minister of Fisheries has met with his counterpart in Quebec. He intends to meet with his counterpart in Quebec again because he is interested in concluding a program to help the fishermen of Quebec, recognizing the problems that they face.

[Translation]

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Madam Speaker, the member who spoke for the minister does not realize that Quebec is in a crisis that has resulted in the loss of 2,000 fisheries jobs.

Will the federal fisheries minister help Quebec fishermen and raise the funding to a reasonable level at the very least, because they have already lost 2,000 jobs?

[English]

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, first, I would like to say that, yes, the minister and—if I am allowed in this forum to say it—I, as well, are more than aware of the problems of Quebec.

My three colleagues who have particular interest in this matter have made the point very clear a number of times to the minister. There is a very clear understanding of the problem.

In terms of response to problems that are ongoing, it is recognized that there has been the loss of jobs. It is the same as it has been in the rest of Atlantic Canada.

The hon. member and others should be aware that the government has responded, and responded quickly, in the past through the use of established programs that are designed specifically to provide for emergencies. We are well aware of those programs—

Madam Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member wants to get into debate, it would be better to do so later on.

The hon. member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Justice.

Yesterday's unanimous Supreme Court ruling on the validity of a treaty signed with Quebec Hurons clearly indicates that the treaty rights of Indian people across Canada must be upheld. Every year, particularly during the spring, Indian people are charged by the provinces for hunting in contravention of the Migratory Birds Convention Act.

Will the federal government now review its position and stop insisting on the prosecution of Indians hunting for their domestic use? Just as important, will the federal government recognize its responsibilities and act to prevent provincial governments from legislating away treaty rights?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, before the federal government reviews its position on the general issue that the hon. member has raised, I think it appropriate to review this very significant decision brought down yesterday by the Supreme Court of Canada in the matter of the Attorney General of Quebec v. the Sioui Indians of the Huron tribes of Quebec.

This decision will be reviewed thoroughly by the Department of Justice and by my officials in the Department of Indian Affairs. A further response will be forthcoming in due course.

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, the obligation of the federal government is obviously to recognize, enforce, and promote treaty rights, instead of trying to off-load services to the provinces.

Will the government accept its responsibilities, maintain and promote the treaty rights, and ensure that the federal government assumes its responsibilities in all these areas?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that the Government of Canada and my ministry, in particular, have always respected and promoted our treaty obligations. We will continue to do so, as witnessed by the very important programs through which we are making great progress in bringing economic and social improvements to the situation of Indians throughout Canada.

* * *

TRANSPORTATION SAFETY

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

I am told that the government is about to announce a reduction in flight inspections, atmospheric tests, a shut-down of some air traffic control centres, and some training for air traffic controllers. How can he even consider such a money grab at the expense of safety?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend's allegations are completely unfounded. We will never compromise on safety.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, here we have the classic case of the left hand not knowing what the other left hand is doing.

On the one hand the minister says he knows nothing. Yet, on the other hand, government sources have revealed that a draft of a Transport Canada plan proclaims: "Reducing this high cost item should provide relief and generate immediate long-term savings attainable through implementation of this plan".

How has the minister considered the long-term effects of such a short-sighted plan?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would suggest that my hon. friend will find that the long-term effects of unfounded allegations will result in nobody believing him when he does have a good one.

* * *

[Translation]

SCOTIA SYNFUELS PROJECT

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology, I direct my question to the Government House Leader. It has to do with a matter which he is familiar with, namely the Scotia Synfuels application under the tax credit program for Cape Breton investment.

The Minister of Industry, Science and Technology knows that this project will be off the drawing board soon and underway the minute it is approved. My question is this: Is the minister now ready to give the green light to this project or to assure us that his colleague will do so?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, if I might be permitted to respond on behalf of the Minister of Industry who is away on government business, this application is under consideration and, when the decision is ready to be released, it will be released.

• (1200)

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that it is essential that approval for this tax credit be given very shortly so the project can go forward. He also knows that approval of the tax credit does not permit the government to spend resources on this project until it starts to earn tax revenue. However, it is necessary for the consortium to begin private sector financing so that this project to go forward. He knows the benefits this will have in terms of jobs and finding a clean source for Cape Breton coal. Will he not act now and accelerate the process so this project can go forward?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is basically asking that the project be approved right now on the floor of the House of Commons without the proper kind of analysis. He knows full well that were we to do what he is asking, one of his colleagues would undoubtedly, based on an Auditor General's report, ask how could you commit so much taxpayers' money without proper consideration to the application? Surely, he would want us to be prudent, as we always are.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government responses to five petitions; Nos. 342-5929, 342-6152, 342-6160, 342-6185 and 342-6186.

Point of Order

POINT OF ORDER

CALL FOR QUORUM

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, I just want to raise a short point of order respecting activities which occurred last night. My point of order concerns a quorum call in the Chamber late last night. Representatives of the parties in this House had worked out, and agreed on, and understood the effect of, the terms of the special order under which debate on the bill was being conducted. These same channels, as we call them, understood that the Chair and its advisers understood and agreed that the terms of the order meant what they said. Debate on the bill would continue until the times set out in the order, or until no further member rose on debate. It would be by vote on the question for third reading, and nothing else, that this stage of the bill would be disposed of.

Much of the understanding by the House seems to have been breached last night when the New Democratic Party proposed a unanimous consent motion right off the wall. There had been no consultation. Then when a quorum count was called, I was surprised that the Chair even entertained, or accepted, either of these proposals. The reason is simply because of the special order, which had been put in place.

Because of that order, members were preparing their remarks for debate or were following debate in places nearby where they could watch the debate through the broadcast system. They were doing this in good faith, based on the all-party special order made by unanimous consent after full consultations.

However, it seems we are faced with a possible new principle given last night's antics. Is it now the case that orders adopted by unanimous consent are binding only on those members who are in the House when the order is made or, even worse, that any member can later change his or her mind and start deviating from or challenging the order?

In conclusion, I think it would best serve the House if the Chair could perhaps, not immediately, report back with a ruling on the weight of a special order in place for this debate. If such orders do not prevent proposals such as made last night, or other proposals from being received by the Chair, then we had all better know about it now so that in future we can take this into account.

Madam Speaker, we operate on the basis of what has been presumed to be practice. We had operated, not in a vacuum, but based on old advice and word given, and so on. Therefore it was with some surprise we saw that the special order—and there were other unwritten things—was tantamount to Standing Orders that supersede the existing ongoing Standing Orders for the duration of that bill, and only that bill. To find out that is not now the case, as I say, was a bit of a surprise.

I hope the Chair might be able to find some means by which we could establish a modus vivendi that would allow us to operate on the basis that we tried to operate on yesterday and which I think is in everybody's interest, on the government side of the House, the opposition side of the House and, certainly, the Chair. So it is in that context that I ask the Chair to consider this point of order.

Ms. Black: You are full of nonsense.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, having been party to the negotiations that led to the special order that we adopted in this House on May 10, I confirm in part what the government House leader has said. I think it was clearly expected that, as stated in the order, no amendments would be accepted by the Chair during the extended debate on third reading.

The purpose of the extension of the hours on third reading, as stated by the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier when he was commenting on the motion, was to, and I quote him from page 11291 of Hansard:

> —allow all members a chance to put forward their views on this very important issue, and also give them the opportunity to plan according to the day and the votes and the hours at which these things will be held so that there will be no surprises.

I stress those words, the intention was there would be "no surprises". Now the government House leader has complained about the conduct of certain members last evening in trying to sidetrack the debate and prevent the decision from being made at the appropriate time on Tuesday. I think that those attempts came to naught. But I do say, in fairness, that it is the government's responsibility to maintain a quorum in the House when government bills are under discussion. It is the government's responsibility to keep members in the House for that purpose and—

Mr. Thacker: Is it your responsibility on an opposition day?

Mr. Milliken: On a government bill, it is the government's responsibility.

Mr. Thacker: It is your responsibility.

Mr. Milliken: The hon. member says it is the opposition's responsibility. It is clearly the government's responsibility and, indeed, it is their responsibility to have ministers here during discussions of government bills.

I have raised that point dozens of times in this Parliament when I have pointed out that there is no minister of the Crown present in the House during discussion of government bills. I am glad to see that they are here and participating in the debate today.

The fact is that is the way Parliament operates. It has to be done in that way. While the tricks that were played last night by certain members of the New Democratic Party were, in my view, contrary to the agreements that had been worked out between the parties, I still feel that there was nothing specific in the order that had been adopted about it and the difficulty is that—

Ms. Black: It was the old boys' network.

Mr. Milliken: I said, while they may have been proper and not included in the order, the spirit of the agreement that was worked out, the intention in allowing the extended debate—

Ms. Black: We interrupted your dinner, eh?

Mr. Milliken: I see I have stirred up a hornet's nest on my left. The agreement was worked out and the hon. member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan was party to this arrangement. They were well aware that an arrangement had been made whereby the debate would be extended to permit orderly debate, with fixed times for votes on this very important bill that is before this House.

If hon. members want to use the rules to delay and obstruct what has been arranged among all parties in this House, of course that is their right and I say it is the government's responsibility to maintain the House.

On the other hand, I think it is clear from the ruling that no amendments were to be accepted and that members were to be recognized in debate, and only in debate, and I suggest that in standing to do other than debate, members may not have been participating properly in the proceedings last evening.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I would like to state very clearly, and it is unfortunate that the minister who has just dressed down myself and this party is not here to listen to the response—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Madam Deputy Speaker: The Chair will of course hear at length whatever the hon. member has to say, but she should know by now that making mention of the presence or absence of any member of the House is not the correct way to proceed in this place.

• (1210)

Ms. Langan: Madam Speaker, I withdraw my reference to his absence and will make reference to his manners.

With regard to the content of what the minister said, that no deals were made on the matters beyond the agreement achieved in a motion before the House, we proposed and moved on matters of great seriousness. In fact, in consultation with the Table and in our caucus, we met both the spirit and content of the motion before us and the rules of the House. At one point, I got up on a point of order and asked the Chair to clarify what the rules were in the House.

As opposition members who have very strong feelings and a strong policy behind us on this bill, we have opposed it from its inception. We opposed its introduction, and we were opposed throughout debate. I would suggest that the government—

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is now getting into debate about the bill itself. She is no longer talking about procedure. Is the hon. member for Churchill seeking the floor? The hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam.

Ms. Langan: Madam Speaker, it is not my intention to go into debate. I am trying to lead to a logical conclusion based on the remarks made by the minister.

The tone of the debate made it very clear that we did not take this motion or legislation lightly and that we would do whatever we could to oppose and defeat the legislation. We sought advice from the Table. We advised them before we made our intervention on the motion when we sought unanimous consent. I think it is very important to respond to the comment about the spirit of the agreement.

Are we now suggesting that members in this House should somehow by osmosis understand the spirit of an agreement? The only spirit of agreement in the House is that a good number here oppose this bill and will work to defeat it. That is what we were doing. I would appreciate and look forward to the Chair's ruling on what happened last night.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, as we know, this place often operates under a consensus.

An hon. member: It is called "the old boys' club."

Mr. Thacker: It might be called "the old boys' club" but my question for the NDP is this. When they have an opposition day, does it mean they have to provide the full quorum all day from start to finish? I can tell you that if you had to do so, you would not have had one opposition day this year.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, other than the silly intervention that we just heard, the issue that was raised by the government House leader was whether or not the Chair should have recognized the various motions that were put forward by the members of the New Democratic Party.

Obviously, the Chair should and did recognize the motions that were put forward. One motion was for a quorum call, and that is quite acceptable within the rules of this House. It is quite acceptable within the rules of the Standing Order under which we were operating. If the government members were so busy that they were all preparing speeches in order to take part in the debate later, as the government House leader indicated, then perhaps they would have spoken later in the evening. Not one of them did so.

Obviously the members of the government were not in their offices preparing speeches. They did not speak. That was a point made—

Madam Deputy Speaker: At this time, I have the feeling of what is going on in the House.

I would like to thank the government House leader and other members who participated in this exchange, the member for Kingston and the Islands, the member for Mission—Coquitlam, and the member for Churchill.

There was a question as to whether the Chair should have entertained the motions last night. The special order was silent on the rules relating to quorum. Whatever the understanding was among the different parties earlier, it was not in the written order. The Chair, I would say, certainly did well in putting the question and asking for a quorum.

When a request for unanimous consent is brought to the Chair's attention, the Chair does not have any choice but to ask for unanimous consent. The House itself is the master at all times and with unanimous consent can do whatever it wants to do.

The government House leader has asked the Chair to look at what happened yesterday, to think about the situation, and to come back to the House with some suggestions as to ways to proceed in the future. The Chair will take this under advisement and will report back to the House.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, of course I accept your ruling and respect it, but I would like a clarification of what you have said.

The member for Mission—Coquitlam has just said that it is their intention to block this legislation in any way possible because they are so opposed to it. Given their total opposition and the fact that they have now committed themselves to doing anything they can—

Ms. Black: In the House.

Mr. Friesen: —in the House to defeat the legislation, it would appear to me that agreements among parties becomes really quite valueless, unless all members of the parties adhere to that understanding and that agreement.

Madam Speaker, I would respectfully ask, you to take that as a question on how we deal in the future with all-party agreements as to how the House should operate if one of the parties to that agreement feels that it can go beyond the agreement because it opposes a particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, the member has actually extended the debate and you allowed him to do so. I think it is only fair that we be able to respond to that.

We did not break any deals, informal or formal. The House order was quite clear and stipulates that debate be allowed. It does not guarantee that we will not move to have a bill withdrawn because we have that right, and that was accepted by the Chair. It does not mean that we will not call for a quorum. We have that right and we exercise that right.

It does mean that if government members wish to keep a quorum they have to be present or available. That is a requirement. It also means that if one of the government members does not want the bill withdrawn, then perhaps there should be one government member in the House or somewhere near the House so that he or she may get up and do that. That is their responsibility.

The fact that they may have misunderstood the agreement or may have read something else into the agreement is their problem. It is not the problem of the Chair. It is not the problem of the New Democratic Party. Our honour is unblemished by what happened last night.

[Translation]

Madam Deputy Speaker: It is obvious to me that we are debating an issue which is altogether different from the matter under consideration a few minutes ago. I can only repeat that, at the request of the Government House Leader, the Chair has examined what happened yesterday. The special order adopted by the House did not preclude the possibility of a quorum call. When unanimous consent is being sought the Chair can only give hon. members an opportunity to do what they can, and that is change their mind at any time if indeed there is unanimous consent.

As to allowing other proceedings when the House is under special order, as requested by the Government House Leader and as I pointed out a moment ago, the Chair will examine the problem and, if necessary, get back to the House at the earliest opportunity.

For the time being I think we ought to put an end to—

Is the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam (Mrs. Langan) rising on a question of privilege?

• (1220)

[English]

Ms. Langan: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member on the other side of the House and the other side of the river from where I live in fact made a direct statement about what I said. As a matter of privilege I have a right to correct that statement.

The statement was that we would do anything we could, and the inference was within wide-ranging bounds, to stop this bill. I want to clarify for the Chair that I said we would do anything, and it is very clear, within the parameters of the rules of this House, to defeat this bill.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This is Friday afternoon. Maybe we should proceed with the business of the House.

* * *

CANADIAN POLAR COMMISSION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-72, an act to establish the Canadian Polar Commission and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Shall the hon. minister have leave to introduce the bill?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

PETITIONS

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition signed by numerous residents of my riding of Kingston and the Islands who are opposed to the cuts the government has made in the budget to the veterans program.

The petitioners object to the cuts in housekeeping services for veterans and the increased charges to veterans who are in long-term care.

These numerous persons who have signed these petitions are generally members of legion branches in my community. They are opposed to the nasty and unfair cuts the government has made which affect these people who have served their country in such a distinguished way and are now in effect being taxed. Their rights are being taken away. Benefits they had been granted by previous Liberal governments are being taken away by this mean-spirited Conservative administration.

These petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these cuts.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House, pursuant to Standing Order 36, a number of petitions.

The first set of petitions deals with the GST. Petitions calling upon the government to withdraw this unfair tax continue to pour into my office, and I am pleased to present them to the House.

VIA RAIL

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Madam Speaker, the second set of petitions deals with VIA Rail cut-backs which continue to be a particular problem in our area because of the cut-backs to the E&N Railway.

It remains critically important for the signatories to this petition that we have a complete change in national rail policy, that the existing VIA network be maintained, that equipment be upgraded and that service be guaranteed so that we have an adequate national rail service in Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from residents of Carleton—Gloucester regarding a Canadian citizen and taxpayer by the name of Yih-Sheh Leo who was arrested in Taiwan and sentenced to 10 months' imprisonment.

These citizens would like the government to issue a public statement expressing Canada's concern about a Canadian citizen's rights being violated, instruct the Canadian Embassy in Japan or the High Commissioner's Office in Hong Kong to send a representative to Taiwan, to appoint a lawyer to handle the case and, finally, to request Canada's allies which have representatives in Taiwan to assist with the case.

The petition is duly signed and certified by the House and countersigned by myself.

CANADA POST

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty, responsibility, and honour to table in the House of Commons petitions signed by residents of the community of Wilkie, Saskatchewan, a community with a population of 1,500. I have signatures on these petitions from 1,300 of those 1,500 residents.

The petitioners point out that the Department of Public Works has declared the Wilkie post office building surplus and offered the structure for sale, recognizing as well that Canada Post Corporation has expressed no interest in maintaining its lease under a new landlord.

The petitioners call on Parliament to support the maintenance of all postal services from the existing full service post office in the town of Wilkie and to reject any proposals that would result in the closing of the existing post office.

I support the petitioners and call on the government to respond favourably to their pleas.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pronovost): Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—MUNICIPAL INFRASTRUCTURE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Harb.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I commend the Liberals for bringing this very important issue to the floor of the House. That is about the only positive thing I can say about the Liberals at this time as pertains to this particular issue.

Although honourable in some ways, I must suggest that Canadians should be somewhat cynical of their task force simply because the Liberals when in government continually cut back on financial assistance for municipalities. Finally, in March 1984 they terminated it.

• (1230)

One really has to wonder why the Liberals would cross this country asking for input from municipalities when they knew full well what the municipalities were going to say to them. In fact, they had initiated or were a part of the crisis. I think that puts it in an appropriate perspective.

Some of my colleagues indicated to me that it is National Fitness Week. I should have been aware of that, but in particular, it is "sneaker day" I understand. I caution Canadians that if you are going to put on your sneakers and get out there running, there is a grave danger that you will hurt yourself while running on the sidewalks of this country.

An hon. member: Or disappear into a pot-hole.

Mr. Butland: Or disappear into a pot-hole. I notice that the ex-mayor of Moncton, now I believe the member, said in 1987 that it would take $3.5 million to bring the sidewalks of Moncton up to par so that people would not get hurt. Not all cities are as fortunate as Ottawa to have running trails.

Last year, I took the opportunity to go out to see Meech Lake. It was a place I had to see, and I am in accord with the agreement. I want to tell you that the roadway that led to Meech Lake was a disaster. Maybe it would be a symbolic gesture if we did something about that roadway on the way to Meech.

As a former municipal politician, I am very pleased to speak because I think the municipal level of government is the most accountable one. It is the one that is the most responsible. It has less bureaucracy for citizens to get involved with. They simply call their alderperson, voice a complaint and I think most of the time these people respond.

I am going to use my community, and not surprisingly so, as an example of the plight in which municipalities find themselves and have found themselves in for a long time. It is suggested in the community of Sault Ste. Marie that it would take $15 million a year to maintain the status quo on road, sewer and bridge infrastructure in the community. The community can spend only $5 million. You can see that the rate of deterioration will be catastrophic unless addressed. The community is forced, and I am sure all communities are doing this, to restructure priorities. It will have to look after only arterials and collectors. The residential streets will be untouched.

Talking about bridge safety, there are several bridges in the community that have weight limits, that is on a truck route which is completely ironical at best and paradoxical at worst. They are safety hazards. There are hundreds of grade separations in this country where nothing has been done and nothing will be done unless the municipalities and the provinces decide to do something. It is a financial impossibility.

Until 1984 the federal government was involved. In March 1984 the Liberal government said: "We cannot be involved any more. It is too costly." Now the Liberals are saying: "If we were in power, if we were the government of this country, we would be very much involved with the municipal infrastructure."

What do the two upper levels of government say? The provincial government says: "We are on side. We want to participate but we cannot participate unless the the federal government participates." The federal government says: "Constitutionally we cannot involve ourselves. Municipalities are creatures of the provinces not the federal government." Yet the federal government does involve itself when it is appropriate to do so. If the timing is right and if the expediency is right, the government does get involved with municipal infrastructure.

It gets involved in an ad hoc way from here to there across this country but with no national strategy whatsoever. This begs the three levels of government to sit down together and discuss the crisis in this country respecting infrastructure. We cannot say: "It is your problem. It is not my problem."

I think of the people in California saying: "I live in Los Angeles. I know that an earthquake is going to occur, but I am going to stay anyway and suffer the risk." It is admirable, I suppose courageous, but one really has to wonder. This government is saying it knows there is a crisis, but it cannot address it.

It saddened me to hear the member for Anjou—Rivière-des-Prairies, who was a well respected president of FCM, calling local governments Santa Clauses when they are in power. I tell you that that member was the Kris Kringle of FCM. He was there every year, year after year, saying the federal government must involve itself. Why now, when asked a question, does the minister say absolutely nothing? He talks about deficit. he says to the municipalities: "I am sorry, there is nothing further we can do." He completely avoids that issue.

On June 4, 1988 he said: "I think there is a thaw coming in Ottawa." Well, I think the thaw has stopped and it is a freeze again. The federal government is not about to get involved. I have clippings from 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988 saying: "We are willing to listen; we want to talk." Many ministers have spoken. The Deputy Prime Minister said: "I have an answer for you; double your water rates." That will go down well, will it not.

Mr. Bellemare: That was the former Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Butland: Was it? Thank you. Whoever said it, it is sheer folly and the government knows that. It is passing the buck in a sense, but in the other sense, it will not pass the buck because it cut transfer payments. On the one hand it passes the buck but on the other hand, it says it cannot pass the buck because it does not have any bucks to pass. It is obvious hypocrisy.

I do not think the government has to say it is going to address the problem immediately and will get involved in this $15 billion or $16 billion big fix as the FCM calls it, and appropriately so because it has to be a big fix or this country is going to deteriorate. The streets, the sidewalks, the bridges, the very structures below them are crumbling. I think everybody understands that. Remediation and rehabilitation of roadways and bridges will cost one-tenth the cost of redoing the whole project, so money spent now will be money spent, yes. It will cost billions, maybe $15 billion to $20 billion, but if we let it go on it will cost 10 times that much. That is obviously a foolhardy way of dealing with the problem.

The federal government does involve itself with housing programs for municipalities, but do you think that the province and the federal government get together on those programs? Certainly not. They do not overlap. They are not dovetailed. They are separate programs. Why would anybody do that? Could they not get together and say: "We will dedicate this much money. Let us put it together. It makes a lot of sense." But no. Politically they say: "We want to take credit for this program" and the provinces say: "We want to take credit for this program". It begs liaison; it begs co-operation.

• (1240)

A department of municipal affairs does not need to have billions of dollars to start off, but I think it behoves the federal government to initiate discussion among the three levels. If the federal government took the lead and the province implemented or at least directed the program, the municipalities would be able to implement it. They are the people who best can implement the program.

The Minister of Finance had the gall to say: "Whenever we get involved with the municipalities we do not think we get our money's worth". What an appalling statement to make to municipal people. I think what he was saying is that we do not get our political money's worth. Whatever funds municipalities get from whichever level of government always have strings attached. In fact, one might say that they have a very heavy rope attached.

"You can have x thousands of dollars if you spend it this way. We will tell you how to spend your money, we know better than you do". Funds with strings attached is ridiculous. "We will give you 75 per cent if you spend 25 per cent on this project". It is not a way of handling a problem. Sometimes municipalities are duped or forced to get into a situation where they say: "Well, if we do not take the money, it will go elsewhere". This ad hoc treatment is not acceptable to anyone.

Government programs like deregulation which bring larger, longer and heavier trucks into our highway system and without trains only serve to exacerbate the problem. The decimation of VIA Rail puts more heavy buses on the roadway. This only exacerbates the problem. It requires at least a standardized national program among the three levels of government to say: "Here is the problem, how will we address it?"

This government is devoid of any creativity. Not one positive step toward addressing this problem has been mentioned. It would not necessarily take a national program immediately. Let us sit down and discuss it. There must be creative ways, such as taking a cent from the gasoline tax and giving it directly to the municipalities commensurate with the amounts of money that they spend in the local municipality. It would be a proportionate division of funds. I am not saying that is an answer. I do not even know how much money that would give to a municipality, but it is just one creative thought.

I know the minister is very sympathetic and a very creative individual. Given the opportunity with the three levels, I know this positive dialogue would address the situation. Right now we have not isolated the problem well enough. FCM has done a tremendous job, but its lobbying has fallen on deaf ears. Each and every year they say: "We want you to address the problem." Some minister says: "We will listen. We are good listeners", but nothing ever has happened. I do not suspect, judging from what the member for Anjou—Rivière-des-Prairies said today, there is any help forthcoming.

I would strongly encourage the government to initiate a department, not armed with millions of dollars, but one to bring about constructive dialogue. I think all Canadians, 100 per cent of the population of this country, would agree that there is a necessity for discussion about this major problem and how we are to address it. We cannot continually say, "It is not my problem". It is everyone's problem.

I have clippings that point out and isolate difficulties in so many municipalities across this country. It did not take a task force for me to find this out. We in the New Democratic Party do not have the funds to be traipsing across the country, nor do we have the funds that the government has to be everywhere. However, we are very aware of the problem. Some of the situations we read about in this country are appalling, to say the least.

Paradise, Newfoundland, for example, is a town of 4,000 people, 10 minutes from St. John's. Only 20 per cent of Paradise is served with water and sewer. They would require about $8 million from government to provide full service. They are getting $50,000 right now.

Old pipelines avenge their neglect. A good example is Yellowknife where they put in a sewer system in 1940 made of corrugated metal lined with moss for insulation. It is still functioning in the 1990s. That is amazing. That goes to show that old things that were built are still the best. We plan now for obsolescence. Plumbers tell us that they have to make repairs now that never were necessary 20 years ago. The old sewer systems are still working but they are starting to fall apart. What they found was that this system looked not unlike a fish's skeleton. The total bill now to replace this skeleton in Yellowknife is $15 million, and the saga continues.

I want to give my hon. friend from Ottawa credit. He went out to St. John's and he found out some very startling information that all of us certainly do appreciate.

"No big fix, but Clark will talk", this is 1988, Mr. Speaker, so FCM was still optimistic at that time. Everybody again seems to agree that this begs tri-level involvement.

"Municipal services", the Finance Minister says, "are the business of the federal government", pardon me, they are "no business of the federal government". I almost came upon a quotation that even would have surprised me.

An hon. member: Time.

Mr. Butland: Mr. Speaker, I rely upon you for the time. I appreciate the Liberals are getting a little bit edgy. They may want to get on another task force and complete the cities that they did not get to the first time.

"Letter seen as signal Ottawa ready for urban renewal talks." That is a good one. Senator Murray said that. "We are almost ready for urban renewal talks." He said that in January, 1989. "Cities' evident needs cannot be ignored, Ottawa just needs some persuading." With what, I do not know.

It goes on: "Ottawa must commit cash to city repairs. This is a national problem, a question of economics and a quality of life. The ageing of infrastructure is a grave problem. It is illusory to think that Montreal could on its own successfully do the work." What are the problems in Montreal—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pronovost): Questions and comments. The hon. member for Carleton—Gloucester.

• (1250)

[Translation]

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I think the remarks of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Butland)— I suppose he pronounces it "Soo". In French, the homonym means something else entirely.

[English]

I would have liked to see the member for Sault Ste. Marie stick to the topic which was the motion of the Liberal Party:

> That this House call upon the government to recognize that Canada's municipal infrastructure is facing a crisis of national proportions and that, given the serious implications to the nation's environment, economic prosperity and quality of life for Canadians, the government resume its traditional role as a partner with the provincial and municipal governments—

Then he seems to want to take the Liberals to task for not being serious or honest about that attitude. Apparently, he did not read the Liberal platform in 1987–88 during the election period. He certainly did not bother to read it. I would like to give him a little lesson in history if he would listen and if he would listen en français. Coming from Sault Ste. Marie, I would suggest that perhaps he grab the—

Mr. Butland: Question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I am from "so" Ste. Marie,—I apologize that my French is not up to the standard of my hon. colleague—but I do take exception. I think he is taking undue liberties with my personal privilege as a member. Also, he is taking undue knocks on my community. I apologize for my lack of French facility, but I would ask the hon. member to decline from continuing those kinds of comments.

Mr. Bellemare: Mr. Speaker, during certain debates on Canadian unity, I did not hear the hon member speak. I do not mind at all in what language he speaks, but I am very interested in his attitude. So far, to me, it has been negative. I will continue—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if he would listen to me, I would tell him—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pronovost): On a point of order, the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam.

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member who has been speaking should, first, be addressing his remarks to the Chair and not directly to the member. In addition, to suggest that somebody did or did not speak on something, I think the hon. member should check the record to see just what the position of this hon. member was on a very important issue. He would find that the hon. member took a very principled position.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pronovost): The hon. member for Carleton—Gloucester (Mr. Bellemare) is trying to make a point, and I suggest we listen very carefully.

Mr. Bellemare: Mr. Speaker, I will continue my short history of Canada, if the hon. member would care to listen.

According to an article that appeared in Le Devoir on December 30, 1988, the Trudeau government, in 1980, suddenly terminated all direct assistance to municipalities, mainly because of a conflict with the provinces about the new Department of Urban Affairs. In 1983, a full-scale legal dispute developed between the Lévesque and Trudeau governments. At the time, Quebec even threatened to use Bill 38 to deal with municipalities that accepted assistance directly from Ottawa. At the time, the dispute was only about job creation programs. In 1987 and 1988, the Liberal caucus wanted to bring this issue up again, and it became part of the Liberal platform.

I want to congratulate the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Harb) and the hon. member for Nepean (Mrs. Gaffney) for setting up the task force.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie objected that he or his party did not have enough money to set up such a task force. I must tell him that the two members of Parliament and their colleagues spent their own money to travel across Canada, they used their own money to tour Canada. I advise him and suggest that he do the same.

I would like to ask him a question, still in reference to the article published in Le Devoir on December 30, 1988. I will first read a short passage to you and then ask you a brief question. I am sure that the hon. member will fully agree with me. Here is the quote:

> Brian Mulroney proposed to the provinces that municipal infrastructures be on the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference on the economy.

This is still from the Devoir article of December 30, 1988:

> A $15-billion reconstruction plan has been waiting for the green light from Ottawa for three years. "I personally think that the maintenance and improvement of municipal infrastructures is very important," said Mr. Mulroney. This conference, which was to take place on November 28 and 29,— > —in Calgary was postponed because of the general election.

1988,

So my question for the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, two years later and still no answer, is: Do you agree with me or not? Do you agree with me? Does the Prime Minister and leader of the Conservative Party keep his word or not?

[English]

Mr. Butland: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for my two Liberal colleagues on the task force. Perhaps I took a little liberty about the fact of spending money. I very much appreciate that they had to expend some of their own funds to participate in that task force. I certainly render complete apologies in that area.

As to the historical lesson on the Liberal Party and the legal wrangle, I think the hon. member for Carleton—Gloucester can also accept the fact that the funding from the government, at that time, had been gradually reducing and deteriorating as time progressed. I think history will bear that out.

Let me answer the question that my hon. colleague asks me. I was not aware of the Prime Minister's comments and I am only too glad to hear them. It simply goes along with a whole host of other ministers who have made several similar comments in 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, and I understand even in early 1990. They are suggesting that they recognize the problem and they will listen. We know there is no action now and there has not been for five years, and we suspect there will not be any action forthcoming.

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, I was most interested in the hon. member's comments with respect to co-operation among levels of government and I am one who certainly subscribes to that principle. As has been pointed out by our colleague from the Liberals, it is not always an easy matter to obtain co-operation through all levels of government, even if you have the best of intentions. There was, previously, as the hon. member will recall, a Minister of State for Urban Affairs in the federal government and because of difficulties with the provinces that position disappeared.

Over the last year I have been making some attempts in my own area of housing to create just such a situation where there is co-operation among the three levels of government. In fact, we have had a good deal of success with respect to that, dealing specifically with the issue of affordable housing. We have set up in a number of the major urban centres across the country tri-level committees made up of federal, provincial and municipal representatives to try to find ways to clear away the barriers and create housing that is affordable in this country.

• (1300)

It has not been possible in every one of the provinces and every one of the urban centres across this country, because there are differing points of view with respect to the provinces as to what role the federal government should be playing in respect to municipalities which they view as their creatures, as the hon. member knows this well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pronovost): The Chair has been very generous with that question and answer. The time has really over-expired.

I will allow a very short comment from the hon. member for Sault-Ste. Marie in reply.

Mr. Butland: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to try to answer the question, if there was a question.

Mr. Redway: I know there will be unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pronovost): Is there unanimous consent to permit the hon. minister to put his question?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Redway: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues. The hon. member referred to a number of newspaper articles and clippings. I realize he is an avid reader and I would like to draw to his attention an article by Mr. Barry Nelson of the Calgary Herald of May 1, 1990, which he may not have read, and then I would like to have a comment from him on that. The article states:

> Every special interest group in the country is always screaming for more—higher wages, expanded services, new legislation, increased government grants and new government support for new worthy causes.
>
> All of this has a price tag, a fact that many opponents of the GST seem able to overlook. We've been living high on the hog for generations and the bill is due.

I wonder if the hon. member would like to comment on that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pronovost): A short reply from the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Butland: Mr. Speaker, I was anticipating a difficult question.

Mrs. Gaffney: Well, he knew you could not give an answer to it if it was a difficult question.

Mr. Butland: It has been a rough afternoon, Mr. Speaker. I have really roused the Liberals and that is probably very positive. It is time they were roused.

As to the minister's statement, he is right, I am an avid reader and this issue is very near and dear to me. I have tried to keep abreast of all recent articles.

[Editor's Note: The fire alarm having sounded.]

Madam Deputy Speaker: The sitting is suspended to the call of the Chair.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The sitting of the House was suspended at 1.04 p.m.

[Translation]

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 1.53 p.m.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Proceedings were interrupted when the siren warned us that fire might have broken out in the building. Everything is now under control. Resuming debate. The hon. member for Nepean.

One moment, please. I see the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie is seeking the floor.

[English]

Mr. Butland: I am wondering about House procedure when the alarm rings. I encouraged people to leave—and I can appreciate why perhaps people would not want to follow me—but I am wondering, is it not procedure to immediately disperse and dispense with House proceedings and leave the House?

Madam Deputy Speaker: As soon as I was advised, I suspended the sitting until the call of the Chair. Of course, everyone is expected to leave the building when we hear the siren. I went outside right away. I don't know if you did. If some members did not, they were not following the rules, and certainly not following the rules of safety. The hon. member for Nepean.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TIME OF SITTING

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member but I did not wish her speech to be interrupted mid-flight.

As you know we must have a motion before the House to deal with Monday's business. I think you will find consent for the following motion:

> That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, on Monday, May 28, 1990, the House meet at 2.00 o'clock p.m. for "Statements by Members", followed by "Oral Questions" and the remaining order of business as provided for Mondays.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Does the parliamentary secretary have leave to introduce the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—MUNICIPAL INFRASTRUCTURE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Harb.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Madam Speaker, I was beginning to wonder if I was ever going to be able to give this speech. After you work on a speech late at night you begin to wonder if your speech really is a barn-burner.

I am very pleased to be able to speak on Canada's deteriorating infrastructure, and as co-chair of the Liberal task force that travelled across Canada in 1989, the critical state was very clearly brought home to me and my colleagues.

On many occasions since 1984 representations have been made to the federal government for the creation of a program to shore up Canada's deteriorating infrastructure. These proposals to date have been ignored by this government.

The facts remain, however, that without a major infusion of funds for the preservation and expansion of bridges, watermains, roads and sewers in Canada, both the productivity and safety of all Canadians will be jeopardized. A Canada-wide infrastructure program would create more jobs than the trade deal alone. It would help develop every region of the country rather than bail out corporations in select communities as this government has done.

PCBs, global warming, wildlife protection, acid rain, ozone depletion and toxic wastes are just a few of the words and catch phrases with which we Canadians are becoming all too familiar. Every day when I watch or read the news I become more and more concerned about living in a world in which the dangers posed by a deteriorating environment and the attendant economic health and social stresses are becoming very serious.

All Canadians want a bright future on this planet for their children, and in my case my grandchildren. To do this we must make global environmental security a cornerstone of Canada's policy.

Historically all three levels of government; municipal, provincial, and federal, have contributed to the costs of financing urban infrastructure. From 1938 to 1984 the federal government made funds available for infrastructure programs. Some of the programs included, from 1938 to 1949, the Municipal Improvement Assistance Act; 1961 to 1974, the Sewage Treatment Program; 1963 to 1966, Municipal Development and Loan Act; 1973 to 1979, the Neighbourhood Improvement Program; 1975 to 1978, the Municipal Infrastructure Program; and 1979 to 1980, the Community Services Contribution Program.

In those years the governments of Canada had been very committed to the infrastructure of this country. Today's federal government has refused to accept any share of the responsibility for infrastructure, leaving the municipal and provincial governments to struggle with this increasing financial burden.

The government argues that constitutionally they have no responsibility in the areas of infrastructure. It is, however, very important to note that the Constitution does not provide for federal involvement in health care, education or social services, yet they are involved as a major contributor in all these areas. Therefore, how can the federal government deny its responsibility for the environment, clean water, regional and national economic development?

The federal government is not only a badly needed funding partner but it is also in the best position to co-ordinate the establishment of national standards and goals.

The favourite statement coming from the government side of the House these days, and they seem to deliver this statement with great gusto and pleasure, is, "Where is the money going to come from?" Well, I have a few ideas of where it can come from. But in order to provide the minimum national standard of service, intergovernmental funding transfers are required. The federal government is in the best position to co-ordinate the establishment of national standards and goals, and the government often states that cities need only raise their water rates to pay for the rehabilitation of their infrastructure. This is certainly one method and it is certainly done by many municipalities across this country.

However, the water costs of some cities would amount to more than the property taxes in order to generate the revenues required. These are all in areas of the country where they can least afford it. Water rates are only one method. There is another method of user-pay that could be utilized in areas where there are severely neglected roads and bridges. These could be rehabilitated with fees from the users of the transportation system.

• (1400)

The federal government is currently levying heavy taxes on the users of gasoline and diesel fuel but channels none of these revenues into our road systems.

Three, investors will choose particular areas of Canada because of the quality of life and the services the area provides. Investment, in turn, creates jobs and increased assessment for the city, resulting in a flourishing economy.

Four, in depressed regions of Canada an infusion of regional development dollars reduces the UIC and welfare costs and puts people back to work. The old saying of "a dollar spent is a dollar earned" is borne out in this instance.

I would like to comment on a few of the cities or areas of Canada that we visited. In the Vancouver area witnesses stressed that the federal government must stop this ad hocery of repairing Canada's infrastructure. They cited examples of the $200 million spent on the Halifax harbour, which certainly will not clean up the Halifax harbour unless sewage treatment plants are in place. There is the example of the infusion of money along the St. Lawrence River which just happened to be at election time. They said this country is in economic chaos due to crisis mismanagement.

Those were the comments from the city of Vancouver. The pulp mills of British Columbia must be cleaned up and wood preservatives eliminated. Global warming is the number two issue in the world and is closely tied to poor infrastructure due to the regulations.

In Nova Scotia, sewage treatment plants are a rarity. People have to carry their drinking water. Open sewers running into ditches are commonplace.

The lack of services destroy the potential of essential growth. The rural areas of Nova Scotia we visited indicated they are always ignored in favour of big towns and cities such as Dartmouth or Halifax.

The Village of Little Narrows in Nova Scotia has never had potable water. The town of Dominion has a moratorium on development. They cannot meet requests for development due to an inadequate system.

Seven outlets in Cape Breton are pumping raw sewage parallel to one of the finest beaches on Cape Breton Island. Tourism is affected. Listening to witnesses speak about such desolation, one wonders whether we are we really talking about Canada or about a Third World country? But, it is surely Canada.

In Newfoundland they stress four points very strongly. There is a need for access to clean water by all Canadians. There is a need for adequate sewage treatment facilities. There is a need for safe roads and bridges, and there is a need for intergovernmental cost sharing.

As the Mayor of Conception Bay said: "An improved infrastructure would create a cleaner and safer environment, would strengthen the economy of the island of Newfoundland and would expand their standard of living".

We heard from the St. Lawrence Seaway cites of Cornwall and Kingston. Mayor Poirier of Cornwall said the responsibility for infrastructure and its deterioration is accelerating at a rate they can no longer afford.

Mayor Cooper of Kingston said the province of Ontario has ordered them to stop issuing building permits until they upgrade their facilities. Economic survival is the issue.

In northern Ontario, the Mayor of North Bay said it is time the federal government realized that this is not a local issue but a national issue.

All the cities and towns in northern Ontario stress the inadequacy of the Trans-Canada Highway. Truckers cannot compete with their American counterpart, travel time is longer, highway fuel consumption is higher. The young people of the north are moving south. The single-lane highway is alienating the north from the southern portion of Ontario. An adequate four-lane highway with same day delivery to Thunder Bay, Toronto or Detroit will make them far more competitive. In Thunder Bay, the cost of a secondary sewage treatment plant alone will bankrupt the city.

The water system in the nation's capital in the national capital region is a pay as you go system. Over the next 10 years, $10 billion must be spent and raised to cover capital dollars for sewage treatment and water expansion. Maybe people from outside this region will know that there are 10 municipalities that make up the Ottawa-Carleton region and that the city of Ottawa is one of them. In this city alone 18 overflows from the heritage sewers are going directly into the Ottawa River, not to mention the very sensitive nature of the Rideau River and its inherent problems.

I have only mentioned a few of the regions in the country, but everywhere the task force visited and in the regions that wrote, the story was abysmal. Only 10 per cent of all raw sewage east of Ontario is treated. Government members should listen to this: only 10 per cent of all raw sewage east of Ontario is treated. More than 8 million Canadians or one-third of the entire population of this country live in municipalities that do not provide sewage treatment. Water quality in Toronto is causing so much concern that some politicians are calling for a $200 million pipeline from Georgian Bay to serve the city.

The value of a water treatment and delivery system now totals a staggering $100 billion. The bill for the next five years for repairing aging, underground pipes alone has been estimated at $3 billion. No level of government in Canada is budgeting for rehabilitation programs of that magnitude.

Beyond speech making from the government side of this House, we have so far seen little federal commitment to the environment. Our rivers and our harbours are polluted from Halifax to Vancouver. Beaches are closed, summer after summer, because the federal government does not make sewer construction and repair a national priority. It is ironic that under the Great Lakes action plan the federal government has recently announced a $125 million fund for the restoration and preservation of this vital water system; this in addition to the almost $1 billion already spent by the government on the Great Lakes since 1972. Yet we are still pumping raw sewage into the Great Lakes system.

There is a cost of doing business. The transportation of goods and services is one important cost to business. Roads in poor condition increase costs, not only through increased use of fuel but through deterioration of vehicles and lost time. Poor roads and lack of waste disposal facilities also add to the costs of businesses, either through increased dump fees or increased costs to have their own waste hauled away. As governments at all levels start placing stricter environmental controls and ask business to bear the costs of its own pollution, business will be able to operate more efficiently in communities that have the infrastructure to handle and treat waste water.

Now that we know Canadians are the least energy efficient consumers in the world. Every possible method has to be used to improve our record through sustainable development. The cost of cleaning up our damaged rivers and lakes far exceeds the cost of treating sewage before it gets to these rivers and lakes. Polluters to date have remained unpunished, and the federal government has failed to prosecute a single polluter in Ontario during the past year. The failure to go after polluters has occurred, even though Ottawa has the Canadian Environmental Protection Act which carries a maximum penalty of $1 million.

No single action will be enough to ensure the future health and viability of Canada's infrastructure. A broad range of measures is necessary to make a meaningful difference. Specifically, these should include the following: a federal recognition of municipal infrastructure as a crisis of national proportions; a federal commitment to share the responsibility to rebuild infrastructure with its provincial and municipal counterparts; the establishment of minimum national standards for infrastructure to provide that environmental protection and uniform levels of service for all Canadians; a federal commitment to rehabilitate and expand the Trans-Canada Highway; the establishment of a process through which the federal government can clarify the respective roles of federal, provincial and municipal governments; identify and prioritize needs on a national scale; increase incentives for maintenance and reconstruction of existing capital assets and the use of low capital; explore alternative funding sources, including such options as more rational user fees for water services; applying fuel tax revenues to road construction and maintenance and increased private sector involvement; increase support for research and development to accelerate technological innovation; promote more efficient municipal management methods to permit phased programs of rehabilitation, better management of infrastructure systems, and more effective use of funds and to reduce waste and excess costs due to delays.

• (1410)

It has been a great privilege for me to travel across the country and talk to Canadians. I heard the desolate response and comments expressed to us in the Liberal task force on Canada's infrastructure.

I have always maintained that everyone in Canada has a right to a roof over their head, food on their table and the very basic amenities of life. Water is probably the most important one, and sewage treatment is probably second.

How can we sit here in the Parliament of Canada when only 10 per cent of the people east of Ontario have adequate facilities? It is shameful and it is disgraceful. The member for Sault Ste. Marie criticized me, sitting on this side of the House, for being concerned about my fellow Canadians and am trying to do something about it. I would applaud him if he was doing the same. As Canadians, we have got to be aware of the inequities in our system and we must do something about it.

I have thrown the government several ideas on how this can be financed. It is high time we recognized the difference between expenditure and investment. This is an investment in Canada's people; it is an investment in our future, in our children, and in our grandchildren.

As I mentioned earlier, more jobs then under the free trade agreement will be created through this program. I see my colleague here in the House. What could be better for the town of Canso, Nova Scotia, where there was the closure of fish plants, than creating a regional development program in that area. It could put those same people, who have been laid off due to the closure of the fish plants, to work. The same situation exists in Newfoundland. It is not expending government funds because it will be paid back in spades. It will get paid back in jobs, through economic development and the cancellation of welfare and UIC.

It is high time that the government recognized that there are Canadians that are probably less fortunate than we in the House. We have a responsibility as legislators to ensure that Canadians are not living in a third-world type of environment.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, in listening to the hon. member's comments, one would almost think that all the devastation that she portrays has happened since 1984.

As someone involved in municipal politics for a number of years before being elected to the House—and I know that she has served for a period of time on municipal council as well—I find it regrettable that she does not realize that municipalities have a great responsibility in budgeting their money and in being able to put funds aside for upgrading and for water and sewer projects.

The community I came from made certain each year we had the opportunity to advance that responsibility for better drinking water and sewer projects. But politicians at the municipal level do not like that because it is under the ground. They would sooner be putting tennis courts and arenas in, things above the ground, because that gets them re-elected.

We should be dealing with realities and I wish the hon. member would start to deal with reality. The reality is that we started in 1984 as a government and the programs were discontinued by her government back in 1980. She said that 10 per cent of eastern Canada is without sufficient water and sewage. It is very regrettable when she tries to blame this Party and this government for those problems.

I say to the hon. member that she should get her facts straight and remember history. That party was in power for 20 years under great economic times. If she goes back in history, she will see the number of infrastructures put in place in industrial parks that are sitting today with not a thing in them and where federal dollars were spent.

How can she say to the House in all sincerity that the infrastructure problems are a federal issue when she knows quite clearly it belongs to the provinces and the municipalities? I really want to know why she thinks it should be the federal government's responsibility when the responsibility lies with the provinces and municipalities.

Mrs. Gaffney: Madam Speaker, the member's statement sounds very simplistic, but it is not that simple.

The programs were in place all of the years that I mentioned. Canada was gradually trying to get out of the trap the municipalities were in. They were making headway. The program has been cancelled since 1982. Does that mean to say that because the program was cancelled by a Liberal government in 1982, it is no reason why I, as a Liberal, would not want to reinstate the program? Come on now.

The member probably comes from a municipality, such as I do, where municipal sewers are up to date. We have arenas, we have everything, because my municipality is well off and his is probably well off, too. But there are eastern municipalities that could not even pay the one-third share. When we said to them, if the federal government pays one-third and the province one-third, can you pay your one-third? They could not pay it.

Travel around the country a little bit and see what is there. Open your eyes. Open your eyes and see what is out there.

An hon. member: Why could they not pay it?

Mrs. Gaffney: They cannot because they do not have job creation, the tax base and the wealth in their municipalities that you and I have.

I find the comment of the member absolutely unconscionable. There is a serious, serious problem in this country. Is the hon. member serious about the environment in this country? For instance, if a city or a town 50 miles down the river is dumping raw sewage into the river, why is that the problem of the municipality 50 miles upriver? It is not, it is a much bigger problem than that. It is a provincial and federal problem.

I fail to understand the insensitivity of the member opposite. I find that regrettable. I am sure the people across the country will find that a very insensitive comment.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate. I got quite excited about getting involved with this when I heard what we would be discussing this afternoon.

We are discussing a motion by a member of the Liberal party that asks the federal government to recognize the crisis that exists in municipal infrastructure. The motion indicates that the problem is serious and affects the nation's environment, economic prosperity and quality of life for Canadians.

Everyone is for quality of life and prosperity of Canadians. When it comes to municipal infrastructure, most of us agree with all the different components that go into making a healthy municipal infrastructure; that bridges are a good thing in municipalities, that water mains are a good idea. We all want good sewage treatment facilities and good local transportation. We all want street lights that work on every street in our community. We all agree with these things, and I would not want anyone to misinterpret any of my future comments on the subject. I agree. I want to see good lights on the street where I live, I want to see good sewage treatment, good water mains, garbage pick-up. I want all those things.

• (1420)

What we are really talking about here and what this motion addresses is really the subject of money and who should pay it. It was made very clear by the Liberal party and the New Democratic speakers today that a great chunk of that must come from the federal government, not just the billions of dollars that we transfer now and put into areas that are of benefit to the municipalities, not just what we are doing now, but far more.

One member thundered "the fair share of the federal government." A recent speaker said "the one-third traditional share the federal government pays for areas"—areas which I might add are within municipal and provincial jurisdiction, not federal jurisdiction, exclusively within the jurisdiction of the provinces and the municipalities.

The members of the Liberal party and the NDP thunder "The federal government must pay its fair share, the federal government must pay one-third of these things."

Madam Speaker, I think you and I both know what would happen if a resolution or bill was introduced by the federal government asking the municipalities and the provincial government to pick up a third of federal programs. I think you know the answer to that one. The NDP would scream: "We will bring Parliament to its knees. How dare the federal government suggest that anything in the federal area would be paid for by the provincial and municipal governments." I can see them nodding their heads in agreement. They would fight that to the very end. That would be a terrible thing.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Victoria.

Mr. Brewin: Madam Speaker, I think it is not fair ball for the member to describe actions on this side of the House which in fact are not happening and that are entirely misleading to the people in this country. It is not fair ball to do that and I ask you to call the member to order and to make it clear that is not happening.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I am sure the hon. member for Niagara Falls will want to make some changes to what he said. I am sure the hon. member for Victoria did not mean that the hon. member was deliberately misleading the House. Let us go on with debate, taking this for granted.

Mr. Nicholson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To be fair to the hon. member, I would be very pleased to know how they would feel about the sharing of all services across the country, and particularly my hypothetical suggestion as to what the reaction of the New Democratic Party would be if we suggested that to the municipalities and provinces. If I am mistaken and they might welcome something like that, I would be very pleased to hear it. I know that the debate will go on for a little bit longer and I would be very pleased if they would address that question.

One of the things in the speeches of the Liberals and the NDP is that there is no mention of the national debt. There is unanimity that the federal government should be spending more money in the areas of municipal jurisdiction. That is unanimous on the other side, but there is no suggestion about the problems of debt. Particularly silent on this of course are the members of the Liberal party because they were the ones who engineered, orchestrated and made up the debt that we are experiencing today.

The hon. member from Hamilton knows that. He knows that when we came to office in 1984 the debt was over $200 billion. He knows that the interest on that puts it well over $300 billion. There is no discussion from the Liberal party as to the national debt in this or in any other forum. The one thing they are very sure of is that they want to spend more money. Well, that is certainly in order from their past performances in this area.

At the same time you do not hear that there is any problem with the national debt, they are unanimous on the subject of tax increases.

On many occasions I heard members of the NDP talk to Parliament about 31 increases in taxes since the Tories came to power. The Liberals have said the same thing. Presumably, they are against those tax increases. They talk about them all the time. They disagree with the number of tax increases.

I always point out that five of those are in the area of increases in the tax on tobacco. Surely that has something to do with the quality of life, but I take the NDP at their word. If they are against all tax changes that the Tories have made in the last six years, I accept that. I disagree with it, because again, it is not coming to reality. It is not coming to grips with the problems that this country is suffering.

What we are talking about here is a question of philosophy. In all these areas, the members of the opposition are not satisfied that anybody else is doing anything or that anybody can be responsible for anything else except the federal government. If it is municipal services, the federal government should pay more. If it is within provincial jurisdiction, the federal government should pay more.

On many occasions, I and other members have pointed out that these are areas within exclusive provincial jurisdiction. They say: "Show leadership. Set national standards. You get in. You take over the area." If it is in the private sector, they say the same thing. It is not good enough to have the private sector ever look after anything, because the federal government should be laying down the law, setting the standards. Above all and most important, it should pay.

As an example, yesterday, I was very pleased during the debate to hear a fine expression of NDP philosophy when it comes to paying. The subject was pre-marital counselling. I challenge an hon member of the NDP to look it up on page 11815 of Hansard. Here is what he asked Parliament. You may remember this, Madam Speaker.

> Do we do any pre-marital counselling in the country? Not a whit.

No, there is no chance. On the next page he goes on to say that the state at least can make, among other things, pre-marital counselling available. That is the problem. The state is not paying for it.

It was pointed out to the hon. member that there are many voluntary agencies involved with pre-marital counselling. When it is pointed out to the hon. member or the members of the NDP that the churches and other groups in this country are very involved with pre-marital counselling, it does not count at all. The hon. member says: "Not a whit." It does not exist if the federal government, the state, is not paying for it.

That is the philosophy of the members of the New Democratic Party when it comes to anything in the private sector. It is the same as we see in the debate today when it comes to areas within exclusive federal and provincial jurisdiction.

One good example of this is the subject of day care, an area within exclusive provincial jurisdiction and one into which the federal government, quite rightly, pours hundreds of billions of dollars through the Canada Assistance Program. We provide tax benefits through the Income Tax Act to help middle income Canadians afford day care. But it is not enough for the members of the New Democratic Party.

I was sitting with the hon. member for Erie on a child care task force a couple of years ago, and he started listening to all the different ideas that the NDP had in the area of provincial jurisdiction. He said to me: "I think what the NDP is proposing is going to cost about $20 billion." He said: "The NDP must have a real big bank account to pay for all of this." Except for the part that I know they do not like banks, I knew the point he was trying to make, that it is not good enough that the federal government contribute as it is doing. It is never enough if it is in an area of provincial jurisdiction.

I challenged a group of students on one of the things in this area. I had the pleasure to be at Governor Simcoe High School in St. Catharines a couple of weeks ago discussing the subject of the GST. There were the usual groups who are against the GST. They are fighting the GST. Of course, they were very weak I thought in the areas as to what we would come up with for alternatives, or how we would balance the budget.

I threw out a challenge to the students of that school. I said: "I have sat in Parliament for six years." I challenged the members of that high school and I challenge the members of this House: Pick up Hansard from any day within the last six years and come up with one day that the NDP has not been suggesting that we spend more money that we do not have in some other area. What day did they not want to spend more of the government's money? That is the challenge I issued to them.

• (1430)

I ask the hon. member to find me a Hansard of the last six years where the NDP was not advocating that we spend more money on top of the national debt that exists. The NDP and Liberal philosophy is just more, more and more.

The NDP, quite apart from their enthusiastic support of this Liberal motion for increased municipal infrastructure costs, has asked in the last few months for more money for the Post Office to abolish supermailboxes. They want a youth initiative program for $1.5 billion. They want the federal government to start spending more money on UIC. They want to increase foreign aid, increase the child tax credits, increase the spousal allowances, more money to CBC, and more money on social housing.

I was just talking with the Minister of State for Housing. We put $1.8 billion into housing. Of course, if you sit in the opposition, money is no problem. It is never enough. It should be doubled and quadrupled. Ten billion dollars is not enough for day care, it should be $20 billion for day care.

Our friends in the Liberal party are not far behind. They want more for all the things the NDP want, plus agriculture, post-secondary education, housing, spousal allowances, research and development, and on and on in a country that has a $350 billion debt, and at a time when the government is honestly, with the taxpayers' money, trying to come to grips with this problem.

You heard what was described as a lover's quarrel here recently, Madam Speaker, as to whether the Liberals used to pay for municipal infrastructure. On this debate on that particular quarrel, I want to tell you that I side with the Liberals.

Madam Deputy Speaker: A point of order, the hon. member for Okanagan—Shuswap.

Mr. MacWilliam: Madam Speaker, the motion in front of us states: "That this House call upon the government to recognize that Canada's municipal infrastructure is facing a crisis of national proportions—"

I am afraid it is an over-extension of the imagination to even conceive that the member opposite is making any rational sense with respect to the motion before us. I think, clearly—

Madam Deputy Speaker: I am sure there will be a full moon tonight, even if it is not the right time of the month. We should not be that strict about the rule of relevancy. I am sure the hon. member for Niagara Falls was just about to come back and bring it closer to the motion at hand. The hon. member.

Mr. Nicholson: The Minister of State for Housing says my remarks were right on. If it is $1.9 billion we spent on housing, then I stand corrected.

This motion is talking about spending the federal government's money and that is what I have addressed all my comments to.

I want to specifically make comments on the lover's quarrel that took place before lunch between the Liberals and the NDP. The NDP made accusations to the Liberals that they were cutting back spending money on municipal infrastructure when they were in power and the members of the Liberal party took exception to that.

I was just about to say, before I was interrupted, that that is one area where I actually agree with the Liberals. I know of no area in Canadian society where the Liberals did not spend all kinds of money—not money we had, mind you, but all kinds of money. I do not think there is any area the NDP could mention that there were not federal Liberal dollars going into before 1984.

There is one point I want to make about that spending and it is on the subject of municipal infrastructure. In my riding of Niagara Falls, I am very pleased to have a secondary water pollution control plant. The announcement for that and the commitment of the federal government was made by the previous government prior to 1984. Out of $12 million, I believe that the federal commitment was $4 million. The government changed in 1984 and the commitment, of course, remained. I was very pleased to go to the opening of this plant.

One municipal politician said to me that it was the Liberals who promised us the money for this. I said that that was true, but that it would be the Conservative Minister of Finance who will figure out where the money is coming from. What do you get more credit for? The Liberals were using the national credit card for all those years, and it was smoking in those months before 1984. A lot of credit has to go the the Minister of Finance. It is his job to pay for those municipal infrastructures that were promised by the previous government. He is the one who is going to have to figure it out. He is doing a marvellous job. All Canadians should applaud that.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nicholson: Madam Speaker, I see that my time is just about over.

Some hon. members: More, more.

Mr. Nicholson: Thank you. If I have the unanimous consent of the House to continue, I would certainly be pleased to do so.

The government took office in 1984, as you will remember, Madam Speaker. The Minister of Labour indicated to the House this morning that at that time there was a $16 billion operating deficit left over. Of course that is as a result of those spending practices I made mention of a minute ago.

The great thing about the finances of this country, and this was mentioned in the The Economic Prosperity of Canada, obviously a pretty important component of that is the government's ability to turn that operating deficit around into an operating surplus. If it had not been for that deficit that we inherited in 1984, we would have more money for all those wonderful projects that we have heard about every single day for the last six years coming from the opposition. We would have had more money for them, if we had not overspent in the 1970s and the early 1980s.

Mr. Milliken: You've doubled it since with your incompetence.

Mr. Nicholson: All of us want all the good things in life. We all want everything from better pensions, more social services to better street lights. It is always just a question, in my opinion, of who should pay for them.

Madam Speaker, you have heard the member who introduced the motion. He is from Ontario, as I am. The situation in Ontario is that Queen's Park runs at a surplus. For the last two budgets it has run at a surplus. They make money down at Queen's Parks. All municipalities in Ontario, in his province, are required not to operate at a deficit.

There is a situation of areas within exclusive municipal and provincial jurisdiction where the decision has been made. Members of the NDP know that municipalities have to operate on a break-even basis. The member who introduced the motion knows that his own province is running at a surplus now. He has decided: "No. The best one to pay for municipal and provincial services is, of course, the federal government". It is $350 billion in debt".

The member for Carleton—Gloucester had a rallying cry. He said: "There are 60 former municipal politicians in this House. They should all get behind this thing". I can tell the members opposite that when you come to the House of Commons you are not here to be lobbying on behalf of municipal councils. You are here for the best interests of all Canadians.

Members of the opposition say: "Do not raise taxes. Do not make cuts. Spend a lot more. The deficit is your problem". That is not a recipe that I think Canadians are going to buy. I do not think it is ultimately going to sell. I think, ultimately, that is why the Progressive Conservatives are on this side of the House and they have for many years now been on that side of the House.

Madam Deputy Speaker: On question or comments, the hon. member for Victoria.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Madam Speaker, while the member was going on we had a vote among members on this side of the House. We decided we would award the member the prize for the best high school debater in this debate so far.

He has waxed enthusiastic, but he has missed the fundamental point, which is that there has been a long tradition in this country of federal government leadership when national programs are necessary.

Even his own government has provided funds for sewage treatment in Halifax and Quebec City, for example. It has provided funds for municipal infrastructure, but on an ad hoc basis so that it can dole it out at the time of election campaigns.

What is important about the proposal of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities is that there be a planned national campaign in partnership with all levels of government which recognizes the responsibilities of all levels of government, not just for municipal services, but for the rivers, lakes and oceans into which sewage is flowing because of the antiquated system we have in this country.

This debate and the speech of the hon. member gives me an opportunity to bring to the attention of the House the situation in my own area in greater Victoria. Over 100 years of growth in the area has been accompanied by a failure to keep up with the disposal of waste that grows in industrial areas.

• (1440)

In this sense we are in common in keeping with so many other municipalities. We have sewage disposal facilities, but they were developed 20 and 30 years ago, and in some cases much longer ago than that. It was an age when we were far less conscious of the requirements to keep a clean environment and not to make the environment any worse for what we have taken from it.

Clearly, what has been identified now in our community is a requirement that we stop pumping raw sewage into the ocean. It is an ocean which, I may say, comes under federal jurisdiction. The federal government clearly has a responsibility in this area, as it recognized in the case of Halifax where it put up $100 million to clean up Halifax harbour. If it can do that for Halifax and Quebec City, then it can do it for Victoria and for other communities across the country.

I am surprised in fact now to hear the government speaking against it. When the Prime Minister came into our area during the last election campaign he was not against it. Conservatives in our area who ran—unfortunately for them a losing cause, but they still ran and put up a good fight—committed the Conservative Party and for those who vote for it to a federal-provincial-municipal infrastructure campaign.

I fail to understand how those who are close to the government are here speaking against this motion.

The capital regional district did a study recently.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was recognized on a question or a comment, not on debate.

Mr. Brewin: I will conclude my comments then, Madam Speaker, very quickly.

We have this important report which outlines the problem in our area. I would call on the government to pay attention to it and to see it as a good example of why a federal contribution in this area is so essential.

Mr. Nicholson: Madam Speaker, the hon. member mentioned the Halifax harbour clean-up, as well as that of the St. Lawrence. I can mention to him as well money going into the Niagara area and the Great Lakes area as well—in fact into all areas of pollution.

I agree with the hon. member on this. The problems of pollution are not within any particular level of government's exclusive jurisdiction. It is all our responsibility.

One member of the Liberal party even commended the government for spending money in Halifax and some other of these areas. I guess that is the point.

The federal government is involved. We transfer billions of dollars to the provincial governments. We have many joint projects, everything from the environment to agriculture. I mentioned the Minister of State for Housing, who is to my right, who committed $1.8 billion a year to housing, these are substantial sums of money.

One of the things that the members of the New Democratic Party never seem to realize is that all of them are great ideas—all of them. It is always just a question of how much money and how quickly we can put money into these worth-while projects.

As I say, I am quite sure that for members of the NDP $1.8 billion is not enough for housing. I am sure $3.6 billion, $7.4 and $14 billion is not half enough for the members of the NDP. But the responsibility of the Minister of Finance is to balance the very legitimate concerns of all Canadians and all areas, and at the same time try to ensure that the Government of Canada does not end up bankrupt trying to do it.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, the member has discussed the role of federal involvement in what may be interpreted as being both municipal and provincial matters. He has reflected upon the fact that in many cases, as it may be perceived, the federal government may in fact be overstepping its jurisdiction. That might actually be the case, if it were a matter that the federal government came in against the wishes of the provinces or the municipalities. The member knows full well that both municipalities and provinces throughout Canada had been requesting strong federal initiatives in terms of the assistance required in developing municipal infrastructure, particularly in the areas of waste management and water management. I want to point out to the member that his own government has, in fact, recognized the need for this type of initiative.

I remind him of the federal government's water policy which was tabled in 1987. It states that "the federal government intends to work with the provinces and territories to encourage the provision of safe and sufficient water supplies for Canadians". That is a quote right out of the federal water policy. It goes on to state that the over-all goal of the federal water policy is to "encourage the use of freshwater in an efficient and equitable manner, consistent with social, cultural and environmental needs". It then identifies two major objectives to achieve that goal: To protect and enhance the quality of the water resource, both in supply and disposal; and, to promote the wise and efficient use of water.

This is a stated initiative in the federal water policy of the government to get involved at the regional and provincial levels with assistance for such programs as water supply and waste management.

It is beyond me to sit and listen to the arguments presented by the member on the government side that this is not a federal responsibility when in fact this very same government has made those initiatives and committed itself, I might add, to do such.

I will extend the argument one more step. Although that has been stated in the federal water policy document, I might provide further evidence for the benefit of the member that that document continues to be a vacuous philosophical tool. It can be used by this government but has no legislation to back it up.

We on this side of the House say that it is time the government put its money where its mouth is. It has made that commitment to the provinces and to the regions within those provinces to get involved in the problems of water management, water supply and waste disposal. It is right there in the document. The member must recognize that.

The government has to recognize that, if it wants to maintain the quality of life that Canadians are used to throughout the country, it has to take the bull by the horns. It has to get involved in these kinds of initiatives that will maintain the environmental quality, not only of our oceans, but of our lakes and inland waters which are also being affected by waste and untreated sewage.

Madam Deputy Speaker: On a short comment, the hon. member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the member was quoting from some document. He must have forgotten about the part where the Government of Canada has and is spending hundreds of millions of dollars specifically in this area.

I told you, Madam Speaker, that the $4 million that went into the secondary water pollution control plant in Niagara Falls was for clean water. This is to help in the area. The millions of dollars that we are spending in the Great Lakes is for clean water. The money that is being spent in Halifax is for clean water. We are doing those things. We have done them in the past.

We are even trying to pay for the ones that were done before 1984, the ones that were all on the credit card. We will pay for those and we will pay for the ones that we are doing at the present time, as well as those we will do in the future.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I must interrupt the hon. member. The time for questions and comments has now expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Marc Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Madam Speaker, the opposition motion now under consideration reads as follows:

> That this House call upon the government to recognize that Canada's municipal infrastructure is facing a crisis of national proportions and that, given the serious implications to the nation's environment, economic prosperity and quality of life for Canadians, the government resume its traditional role as a partner with the provincial and municipal governments to address this national crisis.

I would suggest that any Canadian familiar with the municipal infrastructure issue will agree with this motion.

First, Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate two of my colleagues who created and worked with this task force, the hon. member for Nepean (Mrs. Gaffney) and the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Harb).

• (1450)

Naturally each of us in his or her respective region was glad to co-operate and work with municipal councils to examine infrastructures, budgets, and improvements to be undertaken. The mayors and municipal councillors in my riding of Gatineau—La Lièvre were invited to attend and, much to my surprise, the most pressing issue was the funding required to make improvements or, at the very least, upgrade of the municipal infrastructure to acceptable levels. This makes you think, of course. But when we consider the amounts required for one Canadian region alone it soon becomes patently clear that there has been a lot of negligence over the years, no matter which government was in office at the time. It is so obvious that I had to reflect upon the matter.

Four or five years ago, as I was reading letters to the editor in the well-known New York Times, I spotted an article by a professor of the highly respected Columbia University who had made an exhaustive study throughout the United States—their situation can be compared to ours, I would think—and concluded that the American municipal infrastructure situation was alarming. Not worrisome, alarming! Roadways, bridges and municipal infrastructures generally were in an unbelieveble state of disrepair, and this was four or five years ago. They say the bill to upgrade infrastructures would amount to something like $500 billion, if you can imagine! This gives you an idea of what needs to be done to bring municipal infrastructures up to more satisfactory levels. Nor can we ignore the fact that there has been negligence.

I remember that spokesmen for the Union des municipalités du Québec came to Ottawa to meet members of the various caucuses. The former mayor of Quebec City was there, as were representatives of the City of Montreal, Sherbrooke and other localities. They gave us a rundown on the situation in their respective municipalities, and indeed there is cause for great concern. From all this we can only conclude that the municipal infrastructure upgrading process is a major undertaking.

[English]

I just want to bring out one point. This should be an ongoing operation. Programs should not arrive on the eve of an election. It should be an ongoing process.

I am convinced, when the whole infrastructure deteriorates to the point it is getting to now, that it even has adverse effects on the fabric of our society. I do not think that is an exaggeration. It is a fact.

It is remarkable to think that a country such as Canada has 25 per cent of all the fresh water in the world and the Province of Quebec has 15 per cent of all the fresh water in the world. Yet we are beginning to see problems concerning the supply of fresh water. Can one imagine what is going on in the rest of the world? How did we get to this point?

We must say that the way in which we have handled waste management and sewage treatment has compounded our problems. Therefore, when it comes to municipal infrastructure, regardless of the government, the federal government, which obviously has the resources, along with the provincial and municipal governments, should form a team. We should not say that the provincial government will have precedence over the federal government or vice versa. It is a joint effort, and it is extremely important. I am sure that Canadians from coast to coast are concerned about it.

I do not think it is a surprise to say that the environment and the infrastructure go hand in hand.

We have seen this neglect over the years. We are coming to the point where we are going to have to reconsider how we have handled the whole situation of municipal infrastructure.

It can be said that, if it gets to this point of deterioration, then it practically comes under peace, order, and good government. It is such an essential element for all our municipalities and towns that we cannot let it become the whim of political parties. They cannot say, on the eve of elections, that they are going to invest x number of billions of dollars.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I remember the early 1970s when I had the pleasure to represent the riding of Papineau in the National Assembly. It was a time of great prosperity. We had funds at our disposal. I remember that they were good years in that regard and we ended each year without a deficit, even for current expenditures. At that time, we invested in municipal infrastructure, but maybe not enough. I remember the sewers, viaducts, aqueducts and so on. If a good part of this country's deficit had been for our municipal infrastructure, it would be much easier for us to take.

There has been neglect and we have come to a point where it is essential for all levels of government to join together. We must look into this issue because, as I said, it affects the very structure of our society. It is extremely important for it to be an ongoing process of making sure that municipal infrastructure throughout Canada will never again be neglected. Every municipality must have a continuing stock of municipal infrastructure not only for the security of our fellow citizens but for a healthy environment, which definitely affects our human behaviour.

There is nothing magic about that, except that it is always a matter of having the necessary political will. People expect us to take such initiatives. It will obviously be very expensive but there are choices to be made and this one is a priority in a modern society like ours which needs the technology.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I hope this motion will encourage every political party in this House to develop a policy on the municipal infrastructure issue, not to buy votes but to assess with objectivity the situation across the country and make a commitment not to let it deteriorate as it has done in the past 20 years.

[English]

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I listened to my Liberal colleague and I think that a lot of his arguments are most pertinent.

I think he would agree with my comments that, in large measure, the government has been preoccupied with the big ticket items that have been facing the country: free trade; the GST; and, now, trying to put spit and polish on its Constitution, wringing its hands over the situation with the Meech Lake Accord. Meanwhile, while we are looking at these big ticket items, it is the nuts and bolts that have continued to rust, the very problems that face our many municipalities in Canada. I think the member would also agree that the government has been pleading poverty, faced with a terrible, burdensome debt.

Yet, the member knows as well as any member in the House that during the last election this same government promised the taxpayers of Canada some $20 billion in election goodies. That is what the price-tag was, $20 billion. Read my lips.

After the election, we are suddenly faced with a terrible debt. But during the election, the Minister of Finance never even recognized that there was a debt problem.

I want to ask the member—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately, the hon. member will not have time to ask his question and the hon. member will not have time to answer the question.

[Translation]

It being three o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 81(17), to inform the House that proceedings on the motion have now expired.

This House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m., pursuant to the order made earlier today.

The House adjourned at 3 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 28, 1990

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers

[English]

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

KASHMIR

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, recent days have seen a significant build-up in the number of troops and military equipment installed along the India-Pakistan border. There have been two wars in this region since 1947. Neither war has solved the political conflicts there, and fear is growing that the current situation may deteriorate into a new arms conflict.

We call upon the Government of Canada through External Affairs to communicate in forceful terms to New Delhi and Islamabad its view that assertions of political interest by national and state authorities be made only by peaceful and non-violent means.

Government initiatives to maintain order in and near Jammu and Kashmir must also be undertaken in a manner that ensures respect for human rights, international law and the goals of the UN Charter.

Mr. Speaker, all the world has an interest in a continued peace in this region.

* * *

CRIPPLED CHILDREN

Mr. John E. Cole (York—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time to relate a good-time story in this House. Fourteen years ago the Persechini run-walkathon started in Newmarket with about a dozen participants to raise funds for crippled children.

With Joe Persechini as the driving force, and Whipper Watson as the chairman, they have over the years raised more than $500,000.

Yesterday's event, dedicated to the Whipper, required more than 200 volunteers to organize, involved more than 2,200 participants completing the 10 kilometre run, and raised an additional $80,000 for crippled children.

Today, everyone involved, families with children in strollers, teens and seniors, may be a little tired and a little sore but they all deserve a special thanks for their dedication and effort.

Congratulations to Joe, Dave, Pam and everyone involved for a job well done on behalf of crippled children.

* * *

ARMENIA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, today is the day when all people of good will should join with Armenians around the world in marking the tragic circumstances which have beset Armenian history, from the time of the genocide, to Azeri persecution, to the earthquake, right down to the events of the recent days where Armenians have been victimized by Soviet troops. On this anniversary of the establishment of the Independent Republic of Armenia, I call on President Gorbachev to find a way to respect and enhance the Armenian peoples of the Soviet Union, including those of Nagorno-Karabakh, who are separated from their community and should be able to rejoin it if they wish.

As difficult as it might be, glasnost and perestroika, whenever possible, should include the righting of old wrongs and historical injustices. The people of Armenia are justly aggrieved by the fate history has handed out to them so far. All necessary measures should be taken to lift the current blockage of Nagorno-Karabakh, Soviet troops now inside Nagorno-Karabakh should be stationed on its borders, all imprisoned leaders of the community should be freed, and the legislative and executive bodies of the region should be reinstated.

S. O. 31

[Translation]

TRANSPORT

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Thursday evening and all day Saturday I was in Louvicourt where I met representatives of the independent truckers of Abitibi—Témiscamingue: Rémi Veillette, from Amos; Michel Roy, from Val d'Or; Raymond Landry, from Taschereau; and the truckers themselves.

I was told about their demands, which mainly concern illegal cabotage; increasing cost per mile; the attitude of the sawmills who should consider local truckers first before hiring foreign truckers; excessively high logbook fines; and better monitoring of trucks at the border and on highways.

They also want the provincial government to set up a task force immediately to ensure their demands are taken seriously.

Saturday morning, after talks with the representatives and for the sake of the people and workers of Abitibi, the truckers decided to lift the Louvicourt roadblock.

Mr. Speaker, I think everyone should realize what an important role the trucking industry plays in our economy.

* * *

• (1410)

[English]

RIGHTS OF THE CHILD

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure we acknowledge the presence in Canada of UN Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar and of our government taking this opportunity to sign the Convention on the Rights of the Child. However, despite the fact that Canada signed the convention today, we have yet to ratify this important document.

In September, Canada will be co-hosting the World Summit for Children, the first summit ever to focus exclusively on children. The need is urgent. In the decade ahead, more than one 100 million children will die from common illnesses which can be inexpensively treated or prevented. As well, here at home, we have over 1 million children living in poverty, the second highest rate of child poverty in the western world. With this record, ratification of the convention must occur quickly.

The World Summit for Children will highlight the Convention on the Rights of the Child, a standard by which all civilized nations will be judged. Canada must set the example at the summit. But how will Canada convince other nations to ratify a document that we are not prepared to ratify ourselves? Our children and the children around the world cannot wait. Our future depends on how we provide for our children today.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, we have made noticeable progress in restraining government spending. In fact, expenditure restraint has accounted for some 70 per cent of our deficit reduction efforts.

However, in tough economic times, we cannot afford to become complacent. We must continue our commitment to fiscal responsibility and good management.

I believe that the list of management initiatives announced December 15 by the President of the Treasury Board were steps in the right direction.

For example, one initiative called for an immediate 20 per cent reduction in the number of international trips made by the public sector.

Yet, I wonder whether we might go a little further and take an extra step. Might the government now consider extending a restriction to international travel expenses, not simply to the frequency of these trips?

It is my feeling that a proposal of this nature would demonstrate to all Canadians that good management and spending restraint continue to be top priorities of this government.

* * *

ROMANIA

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, last week, I returned from a visit to Romania as a member of a parliamentary delegation observing the first real election in that country in over 40 years following the December revolution overthrowing the brutal dictator, Nicolai Ceausescu.

While there, my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre and I visited the Cernavoda nuclear reactor site where AECL has, since the early 1980s, been overseeing construction of two Candu reactors. It is clear that this project has involved the use of forced labour in appalling living conditions and a dangerous neglect of basic construction standards, including wells and concrete quality.

Neither AECL nor the Department of External Affairs took any effective steps to address these critical concerns. Now, the Romanian government is asking for more EDC funding. No funds should be advanced until there has been a full, independent assessment of the project which gives it a clean bill of health from the perspective of working conditions, as well as safety.

There must be a thorough parliamentary inquiry to determine what role AECL and the Department of External Affairs have played in turning a blind eye to this disastrous project as long as Ceausescu paid the bills each and every month.

* * *

[Translation]

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, as usual, this weekend I met a number of constituents in my riding, the riding of Lotbinière. They said they were concerned about the failure of some provincial Premiers to understand that Quebecers already negotiated the Accord and made all possible concessions to reach an agreement in 1987.

My constituents also praised the wonderful job being done by our Prime Minister and wished him every success in his meetings with his provincial counterparts so that the Constitutional Accord can be ratified by June 23.

However, Mr. Speaker, we want to appeal to the premiers who have yet to give their support to honour the signatures of their predecessors and thus accept Quebec as part of the Canadian constitutional family.

[English]

MYANMAR

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, over the weekend, we were witness to a truly astonishing event, a seemingly democratic outcome to elections in a country whose government has been called Asia's most repressive regime.

Myanmar, formerly known as Burma, held its first multi-party elections in over 30 years. A country rich in resources and enterprise under a socialist regime, Myanmar became one of the world's least developed countries.

In September 1988 a military government seized power after a brutal crushing of a country-wide pro-democracy movement. In the 20 months since then the government has imprisoned and intimidated political opponents and has in general gained a reputation as one of the world's worse human rights violators.

We urge the Myanmaran government to respect the will of the people and hand over power to the new civilian government as soon as possible, so that for the first time in a very long time, the Myanmarans can get on with the business of salvaging what is left of a rich and beautiful country.

* * *

[Translation]

ARMENIA

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, today, the seventy-second anniversary of Armenia's independence is being celebrated throughout the world.

We are greatly honoured today in Ottawa by the presence of His Holiness Karekim II, Catholicos of the Armenian Apostolic Church of the Holy See of Cilicia. We wish him a cordial welcome and want to assure him of our prayers.

This people whose history has been one of tragedy and disruption has remained faithful to its culture, language and religion.

This evening, there will be a reception in the Railway Room from 5 to 7 p.m, during which His Holiness Catholicos Karekim II and the executive of the National Armenian Committee of Canada will receive all members of the House of Commons and the Senate who would like to meet His Holiness.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I have a question for whoever is acting as Prime Minister today.

The Prime Minister concluded this morning a series of meetings with all the provincial premiers on the matter of our present constitutional impasse. I would like to ask the acting Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister has found the basis in these discussions for a solution to this constitutional impasse and whether, in particular, as a result of these discussions he will now be calling an early First Ministers' Conference.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister had the opportunity over the weekend and this morning to meet with each of the premiers of Canada in an individual meeting. The discussions were productive and useful.

There still remains more discussion to occur. More needs to be done before we think it would be productive to convene the first ministers here. Those discussions are continuing.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is acting as Prime Minister today.

The Prime Minister is certainly aware, I am sure, of the requirement in Manitoba for public hearings in order to make a decision on any solution to the constitutional impasse, and Newfoundland has a requirement with respect to holding a referendum for that purpose.

I would like to ask whether the Prime Minister believes that there is enough time to put into effect any solution that will be reached to the constitutional impasse, bearing in mind the requirements of Manitoba and Newfoundland and the fast approaching date of June 23.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is yes.

Obviously there is not a lot of time. The hon. Leader of the Opposition asked the question whether the Prime Minister believes there is enough time. Assuming that there is the will to agree and assuming that that will to agree exists, we believe that an agreement can be achieved within the timeframe that is known to the House.

I repeat that while the discussions over the weekend were useful, there remains more to discuss and there are conversations that are continuing.

• (1420)

[Translation]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my third question is still directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As we know, this morning the Prime Minister concluded a series of meetings with the provincial premiers. I wish the minister would tell us what the Prime Minister specifically intends to do now with the provincial premiers, to seek a solution to the Constitutional impasse by June 23. What is the next step? And why not have a First Ministers Conference, now?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the conversations that took place on the weekend were useful. We must continue the conversations that were initiated with the premiers of certain provinces, and try to find the basis for agreement. The federal government and the Prime Minister intend to pursue these discussions. For the time being, we do not think there is sufficient consensus among the First Ministers, among the eleven governments, to call a First Ministers Conference. However, we hope we will continue to make progress.

[English]

TRADE

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, I will pose my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The final report of the trade panel on Canadian lobster exports to the U.S. has confirmed what fishermen and industry feared: Canada lost again. The Mitchell bill raising the minimum size of live lobster Canada can export to the U.S., a bill which the Minister for International Trade himself has said was a trade distorting measure, will be allowed to stand as a result of this ruling.

Will the minister not now admit that the dispute settlement mechanism of the FTA has once again failed Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, of course not, Mr. Speaker. I would not admit that because it would be false; it would be wrong.

The matter that went before the panel was a matter which in Canada's view was a trade distorting mechanism. That was judged by the panel and, as in every case, one side is upheld and another is not upheld. Our view of that particular measure was not upheld.

As the hon. member knows, there is now a 90-day period within which it is is possible for the parties to work out agreements dealing with areas that were raised by the panel decision. That process is being pursued.

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question which is to the same minister concerns those 90-day negotiations.

Will the government be insisting that the Mitchell amendment is still a trade-distorting measure and must be withdrawn? Failing that, will the minister commit today that his government will make no more concessions to the U.S. on the backs of Atlantic lobster fishermen?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government has not been making concessions of the kind described by the hon. member.

The discussions that will proceed now, following the decision by the panel, will have to do with negotiations between the parties relative to matters that were identified in the panel report.

Questions that are settled by the panel will be settled. Questions that are left open for negotiation will be negotiated.

* * *

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister.

In response to earlier questions by the Leader of the Opposition, I would like to pursue the topic further in that the Charest committee made all-party recommendations which were unanimous and were endorsed in this House. It is becoming clear, at least by the news accounts since we do not have any other information, that those recommendations do not seem to be a major part in the kinds of meetings the Prime Minister has recently held.

I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister today which parts of the Charest report are being discussed. Which elements of the Charest report are seen as being most important to address? Could he tell us, for example, whether the issues concerning aboriginal people and the north are on the agenda? What can the Acting Prime Minister tell us about what has happened to the recommendations of the Charest report in these discussions?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think all members of the House would agree that the work done by the Charest committee was extremely valuable work, both in terms of the agreements reached and of its place in the process of discussion.

We are now in a situation in which the Prime Minister of Canada met over the weekend with heads of the other governments who were party to the signature of the Meech Lake Accord. We are looking for areas in which we can find enough agreement for the 11 first ministers to agree again to sign the accord that was signed originally by the heads of government of the 10 provinces and the Government of Canada.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary questions.

The Charest report was intended to find some ground for a companion resolution, not to undermine the five principles that Quebec put forward but to find a common ground for a companion resolution that could go with Meech Lake to address some of the outstanding concerns in the rest of Canada.

Can the Acting Prime Minister tell us if a companion resolution is still on the table for discussion and exactly what elements would be in a companion resolution?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, not only is the House aware of the process that is under way now. The country is very much aware of that process.

The country knows that what has to be achieved now is the agreement of 11 first ministers to the Meech Lake Accord. That is what is being sought.

The discussions over the weekend were constructive. They did not narrow the area of disagreement sufficiently to allow us to proceed immediately with a First Ministers' Conference, but progress is being made, and progress is being made with respect to an approach that if we are successful will result once again in all 11 governments of Canada signing and approving the Meech Lake Accord.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the public is aware that there have been meetings behind closed doors with the premiers of the provinces. After these meetings the Prime Minister and the premiers came out and made a short statement. Members of the House and the public have some idea of what the positions are of the premiers of the province, but we do not have a clear idea of the position of the Prime Minister.

I ask the Acting Prime Minister to tell this House and to tell Canadians what is the negotiating position of the Prime Minister as one of the 11 first ministers?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the negotiating position of the Prime Minister is to secure the approval of the Meech Lake Accord. That was his position when he chaired the meeting that negotiated that accord. He has not changed his position. He will continue to seek agreement to persuade three governments that have departed from the agreement signed in the name of their provinces to affix their own signatures to that accord.

There are other activities that have to occur during the days immediately ahead. Senator Murray, for example, will be visiting Newfoundland for discussions with Premier Wells of that province, and other discussions as might be necessary will occur. As the Prime Minister has indicated, when there is information that would be helpful to the process of negotiation to express to the House, it will certainly be expressed to the House.

* * *

TRADE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Is it not time that Canadians were told what this government is up to in relation to talks among Canada, the United States, and Mexico on a North American trade agreement?

We have reports about the cabinet considering a paper, reports about the Prime Minister holding discussions with the Mexican President, and reports from Mexican diplomats that invitations will be offered on June 9.

Is this government going to involve this country once again in major trade talks without any mandate at all from this Parliament or from the Canadian people? Is it not time this government came clean and told Canadians what is going on?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what is going on is that there has been an interest expressed by the Government of Mexico in discussions of some kind of trading arrangement with the Government of the United States. That matter is being discussed between those two governments.

• (1430)

The Prime Minister of Canada has expressed some several weeks ago in this House when the matter was first publicised his admiration of the economic performance of the Government of Mexico, and of their willingness—

Mr. Barrett: Nonsense! That's not what the minister was saying.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Perhaps if the former premier of British Columbia has a question that he would like to raise he could stand in his place and raise it, or he could perhaps arrange for a microphone that he could affix to his chest—

Mr. Barrett: That's not what the minister was saying.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the right hon. minister could answer the question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): To return to the very reasonable question that was put by my colleague for Winnipeg South Centre, that is what is going on between—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, it is not every day that you get to be acting prime minister.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): As has been indicated in the House before, we will be watching discussions that might or might not evolve between the United States and Mexico to see if Canadian interests are affected. If it appears that Canadian interests might be affected, then we will consider what action it would be appropriate for the Government of Canada to take.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will just say to the right hon. minister that this is the second time he has had an opportunity to be an acting prime minister.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to get a very specific commitment from this minister on behalf of the government.

We want to have the assurance that this government will not commit Canada to any involvement in these discussions or negotiations until Parliament has had an opportunity to hold public hearings, have a public debate in this House and a mandate from this Parliament, if they so desire. Can we get that commitment today?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for some the opportunity to be an acting prime minister never comes.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We will certainly keep the House of Commons advised of any decisions that we think would be in the interests of the country to pursue with regard to any trade negotiations.

The hon. member will know better than most that when a Liberal government was in office and Canada entered into the GATT, that arrangement was carried out in absolute secrecy. The House was never told. There were not public hearings, there was not debate.

We followed a very different arrangement with regard to the free trade agreement.

If—and I underline "if"—a time arrives when we think that it might be useful to look at other kinds of trading arrangements, naturally there will be the fullest consultation with the House.

* * *

[Translation]

MULTICULTURALISM

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Following the cuts for cultural groups and the elimination of subsidies for heritage language schools, the minister ordered a study to analyse the possibility of creating a new national race relations network.

Can the minister explain the need for a new network to us? Is he afraid to hear criticisms from democratically elected community groups?

[English]

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today that we have been entertaining the ethnocultural lobby day and an opportunity to speak firsthand with some of the leaders of the community.

The minister has been travelling the length and breadth of this country seeking information. One of the priorities of the department is race relations.

He has learned from his travels and the people he has met that there are people who wish to contribute in a very meaningful way to this discussion. Because of that, a network has formed from the grassroots, from the community. A report has been issued to the department, for which the minister if very grateful.

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, "entertaining"! What an interesting word. The minister travels a lot but does not hear very much.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mrs. Maheu: The name of a former assistant to the minister, Ben Teitelbaum, was associated with a new task force on race relations that the minister established in Montreal. Is the minister trying to replace ethno-cultural groups with old friends and political employees?

[English]

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, the issue of race relations and racial discrimination in Canada is one of serious concern to each of us. When we have individuals reaching out to be partners with this issue, we welcome that. Not only is this loose network of grassroots individuals and organizations coming forth to assist in this issue, we are also reaching out to the chiefs of police on this issue. We are also in a contract with the Canadian Labour Congress in order that we can do everything we possibly can to eradicate racism in Canada.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice.

The record of this government in employing only 2.9 per cent visible minorities, compared to 6 per cent in the general workforce, is abysmal. The worst offenders are the Department of Justice, Correctional Services of Canada, and the Department of External Affairs.

In the absence of the Minister of of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship, I want to ask the Minister of Justice what action she intends to take to substantially increase the proportion of visible minority persons in the justice department?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice has an ongoing program to increase the representation of visible minorities among our workforce and it appears to be working very well. We think we can do better and we will do better.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the minister can praise that record when she has less than 2 per cent of visible minority people in her own department.

One of the worst examples of legislated racism in Canadian history was the Chinese head tax and the Chinese Exclusion Act. When will the government fulfil its promises to acknowledge these past injustices, while giving a very strong signal and a public message that racism in any form will not be tolerated in today's Canada?

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the comments of the member and her work in terms of assisting in stamping out racism.

We are doing everything we possibly can in terms of establishing the partnership within Canada in order that we can eradicate racism and we welcome the comments from the hon. member.

* * *

ROMANIA

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

On May 14, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources told this House that since the fall of Romanian dictator, Nicholae Ceausescu, there have been no military conscripts working at the Candu reactor site.

I have just returned from Romania where I had the opportunity to speak to several of these military conscripts. I can tell the House that, in fact, they are still working at the Candu site.

Given the fact that the minister seems to be totally uninformed about what is happening with AECL there, how could he possibly approve a $500 million loan extension for continuing this project?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the government has not made a decision on a request made by the Romanian government with respect to EDC or any financing for the completion of work at Cernavoda. I have explained that in the House previously.

I recognize that the hon. member and his colleague have just returned from Romania. I believe they were in Romania to observe the elections on May 20. My colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I have referred to that and both of us would be pleased, if our colleagues are willing, to sit down with them and to hear their views firsthand as to the conditions at Cernavoda.

• (1440)

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr Speaker, my supplementary is for the same minister. I thank him for his response because I believe that this requires the attention of the whole House.

If an agreement is reached with Romania, will the minister assure the House that conditions related to safety, to the workforce, and questions of human rights that have been raised here previously and not answered properly by the government, will be answered in any agreement, and that this agreement will be tabled in the House for discussion by all parties?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the member is willing to accept the offer made by my colleague and myself and I hope that the member for Burnaby—Kingsway will also will be able to join us in that meeting.

I want to make very clear to the hon. member that in any response there should not be any conclusions made on the EDC application.

Second, with respect to safety, this is the reason why I and others have been insisting that if there is any work resumption at Cernavoda we need control of it and that the safety aspects relative to AECL requirements, our signatories with the non-proliferation treaty, as well as our membership with the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna are met.

With respect to conditions in the workplace, we will obviously raise that as well and take a look at the changes that are necessary and the changes that are taking place within the Romanian society. I think he recognizes and I recognize that in those societies some issues relative to human rights are obviously different than the ones that he and I expect in Canada, but we are willing to discuss those as well.

* * *

TRANSPORT

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport advised the House on March 22 that security in our airports is working and is working safely.

On May 25 the minister reaffirmed and said that "we would never compromise on safety".

In spite of these two assurances, on April 1 manned security guard stations at Montreal and Vancouver air control centres, the very nerve centres of our airports in Canada, were removed.

How can the minister reconcile the statements given on those two occasions with what is actually happening, and put into effect as of April 1 of this year?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my friend that the security arrangements at all airports are subject to ongoing review.

While I have no knowledge of the actual condition that my hon. friend speaks of, I will certainly undertake to review it. As a matter of fact, I have a briefing on airport security tomorrow morning and I will raise subject.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary question, let me just read from the memo I have from the Acting Director General who states: "I am aware of my security responsibilities and have directed that immediate action be initiated to ensure continuation of an adequate but reduced level of security in these air control centres".

I will send a copy of this memo to the minister. How can we do this to the safety and security of our airports for the sake of saving just a few bucks in this area?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that when I visited the units that my hon. friend talks about, it certainly was not a matter of simply walking in. There were the security precautions that the airport personnel and the director of security felt were necessary.

As I said, I will certainly take this up with him and be prepared to report back to my friend.

* * *

PRESENCE IN GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the members' attention the presence in the gallery of Dr. The Honourable David Carter, Speaker of the Alberta Legislative Assembly and Chairman of the Second Commonwealth Parliamentary Seminar.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Acting Prime Minister. I am sure he is aware that the world's leading scientists have concluded that global warming has begun and that immediate cuts of more than 60 per cent are required for carbon dioxide, nitrous oxide and CFCs. All of those cuts are required to halt this dangerous process.

The call of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change is that we should not wait but we should make those cuts immediately and the ministers in Bergen, including Canada's representative, agreed to take action following the Fridays' release of the IPCC. Will the Acting Prime Minister today commit Canada to at least what was adopted in Toronto, a 20 per cent reduction from 1988 levels of carbon dioxide going into the atmosphere from Canada by the year 2005?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to confirm to the House that the government and the majority of nations participating together at the Bergen conference agreed, as a first step, that greenhouse gases should be stabilized from present levels by the year 2000.

I can also advise the member, as he and others know, that Canada has been a very important member of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. Our scientists have been playing a very leading role. We are looking forward to participating in the Geneva conference in November, at which time we will make known our commitment, our schedules, and our targets.

In the meantime, the Hon. Minister of the Environment today is in Halifax for the second of The Green Plan consultation meetings. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I were in Winnipeg for the first meetings on Thursday and Friday of last week. We look forward to working in co–operation with citizens from across the country and provincial governments in ensuring that the targets and schedules, when in place, will have the support of Canadians. It will be a very significant step forward in leading to the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Right Hon. Acting Prime Minister. I assume that Cabinet and the government have had a chance to think about the seriousness of global warming and the fact that conferences, one after another, have been calling for targets and timetables.

The Acting Prime Minister's government asked for time of the House and of the country until the IPCC reported. It reported on Friday and called for immediate cuts, not cuts in the year 2000, or 2005, but immediate cuts of 60 per cent of CO2, NO2, and CFCs.

Could the Acting Prime Minister tell us, is there going to be an announcement on targets, timetables, and schedules for these reductions, or does the government not take this global crisis seriously?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed there will be targets and schedules. They will be announced in the House well in advance of the meeting in November in Geneva, at which this country together with many other countries, will put in place firm schedules and targets for the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions.

[Translation]

TRANSPORT

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport.

Last week, the independent truckers of Abitibi-Témiscamingue paralysed traffic on Highway 117 in Louvicourt, in order to let the governments and companies know their demands and to make the public aware of their problems.

I went to meet the truckers twice on the weekend. Our discussions were positive and constructive and they decided to lift the road blockade on Saturday afternoon.

My question is: can the minister tell us the latest developments in connection with these demonstrations in Quebec and whether he promises that the Government of Canada will take part in negotiations with the independent truckers of Abitibi-Témiscamingue and Quebec, and with the Government of Quebec, so that all together, they can go over the contentious points as soon as possible and assess what can be done?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was asked to provide a representative to the provincial committee established by my provincial colleague, Mr. Elkas, and I shall do so.

The commitments I made to the owner-operators in Windsor will apply to all truckers throughout Canada. I shall meet Mr. Elkas in late June.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORTATION SAFETY

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I asked the Minister of Transport whether the government was considering a reduction in flight inspections, training for air traffic controllers, and other questions. He said that my allegations were completely unfounded.

Well, here it is, Mr. Speaker, the document itself. It is a Transport Canada plan, as the document itself proclaims, to determine areas of savings required to meet budget restraints.

Now that the minister can no longer deny the existence of the report, will he stand in his place and reject its recommendations?

• (1450)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government of Canada and Transport Canada, I make no apologies for making an effort to save taxpayers' money.

If my hon. member would read the entire transcript of Friday's exchange, he would see that I said that we would not compromise safety. It does not mean that one cannot find savings in expenditures and at the same time not compromise safety.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that just on Friday the minister admitted that he had no knowledge of the report, and today he is interested in saving Canadian taxpayers' money.

An official at Transport Canada's air navigation system tells me that the minister will be making a decision on the report by the end of this week.

Will the minister come clean and tell us that he has seen the recommendations in the report and that he will not slash costs at the expense of safety, as this report suggests he do?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will have continual briefings all week. I certainly would not want to miss the briefing with this particular individual. If the hon. member could give me his name, I would be glad to take it up with him.

* * *

TRADE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister stated that there is a 90-day period for discussion on the lobster fishing question. The minister also knows that during that 90-day period, one of the things that will not be changed is the Mitchell bill. That is firm for that 90-day period.

The lobster fishing season is now well under way. The lobster fishermen, who have had to suffer through abnormally low prices, are now faced with this restricted market.

What is the government going to do to help these fishermen? What is the government going to do to give these fishermen some confidence that their government is concerned about them? Will the government please do something soon, such as a price stabilization plan? This group of people is waiting for the Government of Canada to act on their behalf.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I think the hon. member knows, my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has already announced a program that, among other things, is designed to try to assist the marketing of Canadian lobsters overseas even more than has been done in the past.

We have encouraged the formation of the Canadian Atlantic Lobster Promotion Association for generic image and quality promotion. We intend to act in other ways that will help Canadian lobster fishermen find new and durable markets for their catch.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the lobster fishermen are into the season now. They are faced with this restricted market.

Also, this marketing program that the minister mentions applies to New Brunswick and P.E.I. It does not apply to Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. These two provinces are having a particularly difficult time right now.

At a time when the fishery in general is in difficulty, when the markets have been cut back, and when the prices have been low, why is the Government of Canada refusing to help these lobster fishermen?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as my previous answer indicated, we are not doing that; quite the contrary. We are faced with a situation in which we disagreed with the provisions that were being followed by the United States. We followed the options that were open to us. It happens that the panel that was established to hear this kind of matter ruled against us. There is a 90-day negotiating period that is now being followed.

In the meantime, my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, has announced a program that we think will be helpful to find new markets for Canadian lobster fishermen. We are pursuing actively actions that will help ensure new and durable markets for the Canadian lobster fishermen in consultation with representatives of that industry.

* * *

CHILDREN'S RIGHTS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in Canada there are 1.6 million children living below the poverty line. In Nova Scotia, not one child living on social assistance receives adequate food allowances to meet nutritional needs. In March, the government rejected a children's bill of rights.

Since the Prime Minister today signed the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, could the Acting Prime Minister tell Canadians just what his government's commitment is to adequate food, clothing, and shelter for children in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member finding an occasion to draw to the attention of the House of Commons the very important action taken today by the Prime Minister in signing the convention today on Canada's behalf.

The hon. member will know that, internationally and at home, the government has attached a very high priority, not only to the care of children, but also to the rights of children, as was indicated in this document.

She will know that among the actions that have been carried out internationally within the direct jurisdiction of the government have been a number of actions, for example, to contribute to the immunization of children against diseases. Prior to that program, those diseases had ravaged the lives of thousands of children in the world.

We are following similarly active programs at home to help Canadian children in need.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I think that the clawback on family allowances, the lack of a child care program from the government, the EPF transfer payments, and the cap on CAP—to name just a few—indicate just what a high priority the government puts on children's rights in Canada.

Will the Acting Prime Minister acknowledge that, in fact, signing conventions does not necessarily mean real action when it comes to the needs of Canadian children and would he tell us what he plans to do?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me speak for this party and this government. When we sign international conventions, we intend to follow up on them, and we do.

I can understand that question coming from a member of the New Democratic Party, because the New Democratic Party often talks about the importance of signing international agreements, for example, relating to trade. Yet, when those international agreements are honoured and a finding is made against Canada, the New Democratic Party asks us to ignore our international commitments.

Ms Langan: Answer the question about children, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If the House of Commons allowed me to use the word "hypocrisy" that is what I would apply to that kind of behaviour.

Mr. Speaker: It does not. The hon. member for Ottawa West.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister.

Numerous reports and the government's own statistics show that if you are not white, male, and able-bodied, you do not have an equal chance to be hired, promoted, and fairly paid in the Public Service of Canada.

Now, with Public Service 2000, the government is planning a complete revamping of the Public Service in everything from staffing to front-line service and it is not paying attention to the issue of unemployment equity.

Why is the government going ahead with this major overhaul of the Public Service and not even listening to organizations, such as the Canadian Ethnocultural Council and others, who know what the problems are and how to fix them?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the record of the government in improving representations within the Public Service of women and minorities is there and it is something all Canadians can be proud of. It is not as good as it should be. It is not as good as it is going to be. It is better than it was and we are making good progress.

As for Public Service 2000, I do not understand why the hon. member would be critical of this initiative which will help ensure that Canada has the kind of quality Public Service the country will need at the year 2000.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, if the minister honestly believes what he just said, it is appalling that he does not know the facts.

If you happen to be of a coloured skin, your chances of being hired in the Public Service of Canada are only 1 in 4, compared to an applicant whose skin is white. That is appalling. The government can turn a blind eye if it wants, but that would not be a wise approach.

Will the minister commit that the task forces of Public Service 2000 will not close out these people but immediately invite them in for their advice on how to fix the problems?

• (1500)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member was not implying that there is a built-in prejudice in the hiring process.

The Public Service that this government inherited had a very low percentage of minorities represented in it. We initiated a program and action to turn that around, and things are better than they were.

They are not as good as they should be, but it is improper—and I hope it is a mistaken tone on the member's part—to insinuate that somehow there is prejudice built in, a kind of prejudice that this government has put in deliberately. It is not there. There is certainly no deliberate action. We are taking all the action we can to overcome inertia and to ensure that the Public Service reflects the reality of this country.

* * *

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister.

The Minister of Finance has said to this House many times that the GST will not be an administrative nightmare for small business. That is certainly not the view of the Federation of Independent Business, which is the voice of small business in this country.

Consider the plight of Petland, a Winnipeg company with seven stores. The president of the company tells me that there is no way the firm can meet the January 1 deadline because of the difficulties in buying equipment necessary for the GST. He also says that the cost of the changeover to the GST is prohibitive.

If this government will not listen to Canadians and scrap the tax, how can it go on ignoring the pleas of small business?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business was widely consulted during the years preceding the introduction of the goods and services tax.

As a matter of fact, many of the changes that were made to facilitate small business was at its suggestion. The President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, John Bulloch, has not disagreed with the tax. He wants a national sales tax. He would support the GST if it was a national sales tax. He supports the principle of the tax. He has made that very clear.

We have been trying to negotiate an agreement with the provinces to get them to participate in a national sales tax system. I believe that will come about in the years to come.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands is rising on a question of privilege.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE MEMORANDUM

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege more in sorrow than in anger. The situation was brought to my attention by my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Kenora—Rainy River.

He has given me a memorandum that was sent by an official in the Department of National Revenue. The form is headed "Revenue Canada". I have sent Your Honour a copy of it. I have also delivered one to the government House leader in order to assist him. I assume he will be responding to this question of privilege.

The memorandum reads as follows, and I quote from the first paragraph:

> On January 1, 1991, the Government of Canada will replace the existing Federal Sales Tax with a new tax—the Goods and Services Tax (GST)—levied on the vast majority of goods and services consumed in Canada.

The memorandum is signed by one R. Lalonde, Chief, Registration. I presume he is one of the many tax police that the government has retained in order to enforce this tax.

In Your Honour's ruling of October 10, 1989, on a similar question of privilege raised by the right hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, who was then the Leader of the Opposition, Your Honour referred to the notice that had been published at that time. The notice read, and I quote from page 4457 of Hansard:

> On January 1, 1991, Canada's Federal Sales Tax System will change. Please save this notice.

I need not read the rest of it.

Very briefly, Your Honour then said, as reported at page 4460 of Hansard:

> In the present case, does the advertisement of the Department of Finance amount to a contempt of the House of Commons? The right hon. Leader of the Opposition argues that the advertisement in question is misleading in that it gives the general public the impression that this proposed change to the taxation system is a fait accompli and that Parliament has no role to play in examining and approving the changes. The effect of this may tend to diminish the authority of the House in the eyes of the public.

The words in the advertisement that was complained of last September and the words of this memorandum are one and the same. In other words, to quote Your Honour:

> The effect of this may tend to diminish the authority of the House in the eyes of the public.

The ruling continues, as reported at page 4461 of Hansard, where Your Honour said:

> However, I want the House to understand very clearly that if your Speaker ever has to consider a situation like this again, the Chair will not be as generous. This is a case which, in my opinion, should never recur. I expect the Department of Finance and other departments to study this ruling carefully and remind everyone within the Public Service that we are a parliamentary democracy, not a so-called executive democracy, nor a so-called administrative democracy.

Here we have a situation in which obviously the advice that Your Honour tendered to the Department of Finance has been ignored by the Department of National Revenue. This memorandum is clearly in contravention of the ruling that Your Honour handed down on this matter on October 10 last year.

It seems to me that officials in the department ought not to have said that this tax will be replaced. They ought to have said that it is proposed that it be replaced.

I submit that by using the words "will replace" these officials are in contempt of Parliament. The minister who is responsible to this House is in contempt of Parliament.

This matter ought to be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. If Your Honour finds that you agree with me on this point, I will be pleased to move the appropriate motion.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, my friend, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, neglected to mention that between your first ruling on an advertisement respecting the GST and today's question of privilege respecting this letter from National Revenue to the Township of Red Lake, an important event occurred—this House passed the legislation.

Mr. Boudria: Parliament hasn't.

Mr. Andre: I hear from the other side that Parliament has not—Parliament consisting of the Governor General, the Senate and the House of Commons.

I would remind hon. members of another point of order, when we asked the Chair in respect of some business vis-à-vis the Senate, the Chair quite accurately, quite properly and with no surprise, indicated that the Speaker of the House of Commons has no authority over the Senate, and presumably no authority over the Governor General.

What the Speaker has is authority over this House. How one can ask the Speaker to say the government is in contempt of this House when this House has passed the legislation is something upon which I think the hon. member should reflect.

More significantly—and I do appreciate the hon. member having sent over this notice to me during Question Period—I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to reflect on your own experience and recognize that in fact it is standard practice, and has been for decades, for budgets to be presented, for the House to pass them generally by way of approval of a confidence motion, to have specific legislation flowing therefrom preceded by a Ways and Means Motion and then have it proceed through the system. The Department of National Revenue commences very frequently collecting the tax that very evening or the next day. That is what our system is based on.

The hon. member seems to have our system confused with the American system where in fact they do not commence collecting taxes until the bill has passed all the way through the system.

The hon. member was not here, but one of the first pieces of legislation the new government elected in 1984 was required to pass was legislation concerning income tax amendments from a budget brought in by the previous Liberal administration.

Such is the nature of our practices in this country that for the hon. member to now stand up and say that this is a question of privilege is, I am sure, as he recognizes it, stretching things quite a bit. There is no privilege here. It is simply prudent public servants gathering the necessary information so that they will be in a position to implement the tax when it comes into effect, as is being planned, on January 1, 1991.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the comments of the government House leader. I am sure that Mr. Speaker has noticed by now that his comments have little, if anything, to do with the argument put very well by my colleague from Kingston and the Islands.

• (1510)

First, I do not accept the explanation offered by the minister in his reply, that in fact this House has now dealt with the matter and that justifies the government going ahead with this kind of information.

Nevertheless, I want to draw to the Speaker's attention that this memo is dated April 23, 1990. The bill was passed in this House on May 4, 1990, which is after April 23. Even if we were to accept the minister's argument, which I totally refute anyhow, it does not even make sense using his own criteria.

Notwithstanding any of that, this bill, if it has not passed both Houses of Parliament and been proclaimed, is not yet an act. If it is not act of Parliament, no one has any right to pretend that it is. You, Mr. Speaker, have indicated that to all of us before.

I am sorry to say that this government has not understood in the past the very worthwhile advice that Mr. Speaker gave. Not only that, the government still fails to do that even today.

Mr. Speaker: I have looked carefully at the document complained of. I have listened to the argument. I will consider the matter and report back to the House very quickly.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by numerous residents of various cities in British Columbia who are opposed to the goods and services tax.

This petition was sent to the right hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. I am pleased to table it on his behalf and on behalf of the numerous Canadians who have signed it.

They indicate that having had the present manufacturers' sales tax increased from 9 per cent to 13.5 per cent under the Draconian tax policies of this government, they feel it is unfair that Canadians be saddled with the additional burden of a tax on services, as proposed in the goods and services tax. They call upon Parliament to reject this unfair and discriminatory tax.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present another petition containing some 86 names, which I add to the thousands of names that I have brought before the House against this goods and services tax.

These people are from Hope, British Columbia, and from various places in the riding of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt. They call on the government to bring in a fair tax and do away with this particular tax that the government is now proposing.

They not have given up hope that this government will see the sense of ending this tax and bring in fair tax.

* * *

QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

—Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk—

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 287 will be answered today.

[Text]

ADVERTISING MAIL

Question No. 287—Mr. Caccia:

For each of the last ten years for which figures are available (a) were pieces of (i) unaddressed (ii) addressed advertising mail delivered by Canada Post and, if so, what number (b) were there revenues from each type of mail and, if so (i) what were they (ii) what percentage of total corporate revenue did each constitute (c) what was the cost of (i) a stamp for a piece of advertising mail (ii) a first-class stamp?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Please see attached.

	80/81	81/82	82/83	83/84	84/85	85/86	86/87	87/88	88/89	89/90 (4)
VOLUME (MILLION PCES) (1)
UNADDRESSED	1172	1217	1312	1614	2007	2097	2079	1809	2048
ADDRESSED	842	729	661	643	629	655	741	889	1017
REVENUE ($ MILLION) (1)
UNADDRESSED	59	67	88	110	134	145	151	139	165

	80/81	81/82	82/83	83/84	84/85	85/86	86/87	87/88	88/89	89/90 (4)
ADDRESSED	156	164	131	139	104	123	129	183	218
% OF TOTAL REVENUE
UNADDRESSED	3.9	4	3.9	4.6	5.4	5.3	5.1	4.4	4.8
ADDRESSED	10.2	9.8	5.8	5.8	4.2	4.5	4.3	5.8	6.4
COST OF A STAMP/PRICE (CENTS)
UNADDRESSED (2)	4	6	6	6.4	6.4	7.1	7.1	7.6	7.8	7.8
ADDRESSED (3)	9	13	13	13	13	15	15	17.5	20	21
FIRST CLASS STAMP	17	30	30	32	32	34	34	36	37	38

(1) BASED ON PUBLISHED ANNUAL REPORT.

(2) THE RATE REPRESENTS THE BASIC RATE AT A MINIMUM OF 50G AND WAS EFFECTIVE FOR MOST PART OF A FISCAL YEAR.

(3) THE RATE REPRESENTS THE NDG PRESORT RATE (MIN. WEIGHT OF 50G) AND WAS EFFECTIVE FOR MOST PART OF A FISCAL YEAR.

(4) ACTUAL VOLUME AND REVENUE FIGURES ARE NOT YET AVAILABLE.

* * *

[English]

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Starred Question No. 275?

Because of the length of the response, I ask that this question be made an Order for Return. If that were the case, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 275 be made an Order for Return?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[Text]

PUBLIC SERVICE

*Question No. 275—Mr. Fulton:

1. Do any public servants earn (a) up to $10,000 (b) $10,000 to $20,000 (c) $20,000 to $30,000 (d)$30,000 to $40,000 (e) $40,000 to $50,000 (f) more than $50,000 in excess of the basic salary paid to MPs and, if so (i) what number (ii) what is the total number for each department?

2. What is the (a) total number of staff in each minister's office, including the Prime Minister's (b) salary range in each individual case?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that all the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-69, an act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: There are eight report stage motions set down on the Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-69, an act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures.

Motions Nos. 1 and 2, standing in the name of the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam, will not be selected as Motion No. 1 goes beyond the scope of the bill and Motion No. 2 imposes a charge upon the Crown. It attempts to increase the contributions payable.

I refer the hon. member to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773, paragraphs (1), (7) and (8).

[Translation]

Motion No. 3 is also set down by the Hon. Member from Mission–Coquitlam. It is beyond the scope of the clause and of the bill. The amendment also tries to impose a new condition on all federal–provincial agreements.

[English]

Motions Nos. 4 and 8 are acceptable. These motions, both to be moved by the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam, will be grouped for debate as they both affect the coming into force of the bill. They will be voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 5 and 7 standing in the name of the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing cannot be selected. They are out of order as they attempt to amend sections of or add to the original or parent act.

In this connection I would like to refer hon. members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773, paragraph (8) which states as follows:

> (8)(a) An amendment may not amend a statute which is not before the committee.
>
> (b) An amendment may not amend sections from the original Act unless they are specifically being amended in a clause of the bill before the committee.

[Translation]

Motion No. 6 will not be selected as in the Chair's view it will impose a charge on the treasury beyond that contemplated by the Crown in the Royal Recommendation that accompanied this bill on its introduction. Hon. members will find the practice set out in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773, paragraph 7.

[English]

To recapitulate, Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7 will not be selected.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 4 and 8 will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

[English]

I just want to add that I am very much aware as the Speaker that there was some considerable discussion with respect to some of these motions. They were very carefully looked into, not only by the table, but also by the Chair again this morning. While it may be a disappointment to the hon. member, I hope the hon. member will accept that the matter has been looked at very carefully. I know the hon. member will accept the ruling.

I will now propose Motions Nos. 4 and 8 to the House.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam) moved:

Motion No. 4

> That Bill C-69 be amended in Clause 2 by adding immediately after line 17 at page 2, the following:
>
> "(3)(a) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, this section shall not come into force or effect until such time as the provinces as defined in subsections (1) and (2) are provided with one year's notice of the intent of the federal government with respect to payments to be made under the Canada Assistance Plan Act.
>
> (b) For further clarity, the passage of this Act shall not be considered notice for the purposes of paragraph (a)."

Motion No. 8

> That Bill C-69 be amended by adding immediately after line 15 at page 6 the following new clause:
>
> "8. This Act shall come into force and effect on February 20, 1992."

She said: Madam Speaker, as much as we wanted to see our amendments go through, we do accept the ruling of the Chair and the spirit in which it is given. We are very pleased that the Chair was able to rule in favour and allow debate on Motions Nos. 4 and 8.

• (1520)

According to Section 8 of the Canada Assistance Plan Act, one year's notice must be given prior to the changing of the terms of the agreement between the province and the federal government.

The federal government, by introducing Bill C-69, is attempting to unilaterally change the terms of the agreement without prior notice or consultation with the affected provinces.

The act in fact is very clear and specific. It states:

> —where notice of intention to terminate an agreement is given in accordance with paragraphs (c) or (d), the agreement shall cease to be effective for any period after the day fixed in the notice or for any period after the expiration of one year from the day on which the notice is given, whichever is later.

Section 5 of the act states that the federal government will pay to the province 50 per cent of the cost to the province, or through the province to the municipality where the latter administers social assistance programs, of social assistance programs as defined by the act.

This is a demand driven system in that expenditures are not discretionary. Expenditures must be made by the province to individuals deemed to be in need or likely to be in need. By limiting its participation to an increase of 5 per cent in British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario the government is in fact not abiding by the terms of the agreement.

The federal government constitutionally is obliged to consult with the provinces prior to changing the terms of the agreement. Constitutional convention demands as much, and the act has made this requirement absolutely clear.

The provinces should in their planning have every right to expect that the federal government will continue to pay its share of costs under the Canada Assistance Plan unless they have agreed to change the terms of the agreement.

The federal government by acting unilaterally is in fact threatening the welfare of the poor. Single parents, children, the disabled and those needing special care will suffer and will do so because the federal government has removed support for their welfare.

These amendments make clear the responsibility of the federal government to consult with the provinces before changing the terms of the agreement that it has signed with the provinces of Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia.

The government by making this unilateral move is threatening the whole concept of co-operative federalism which has driven the fiscal relations between the provinces and the federal government for much of this century. One must ask why at a time of national turmoil the federal government is intent on driving the wedge of division on this issue even further.

As more than half of the poor in Canada live in the three provinces affected by Bill C-69, this measure cannot be seen simply as a restraint measure but as a fundamental change in the responsibility of the federal government for the welfare of Canadians, particularly our children, and for the redistribution of income in Canada. Therefore consultation is not only morally necessary but is in fact required by law.

We have all noted that the Government of the province of British Columbia has indeed taken this matter to the courts, and we are awaiting a decision.

We have also noted that the department is in fact doing its own study on the effectiveness of the Canada Assistance Plan, on its costs and projections. We find it passing strange that the government is rushing through this piece of legislation before that report is finished. We suspect, and the proof will be in the pudding when the report is tabled, that in fact the government does not want to be told prior to it passing this legislation that the Canada Assistance Plan and the impact on provinces is so important to Canadians that it should not be amended in the way the government is planning.

In British Columbia we find that we have a government that in fact is not providing social assistance payments at a level that would bring families above the poverty line. We find in British Columbia that we have increasingly dramatically fast growing food-in-the-schools programs put together not by the provincial government, but by teachers and parents who are concerned when they see children coming to school hungry, when they see them falling asleep at their desks at 10 o'clock, when they see them increasingly having behaviour problems because they are hungry. What we find is a government that is not even meeting poverty level standards of social assistance in this country.

Now we have the federal government buying into that heavy-handed attitude toward the poor. The federal government has bought into it by saying: "It's okay. We will put a cap on it and then you will only have to increase it by 5 per cent and you can get off the hook".

That is not good enough for the poor in British Columbia. That is not good enough for the poor in Alberta. It is not good enough for the poor in Ontario.

Every group in this country that works for and looks after the needs of children will tell you that children who are hungry, children who are malnourished are children who will not have the opportunity to be full participants in this society. They will not have the opportunity to continue on in school. They will not function well and are, indeed, far more likely to be ill.

The Acting Prime Minister less than an hour ago stated in this House that children and their welfare are a priority of the government. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister today signed a document ratifying the UN Declaration for the Rights of the Child, and that if it is the policy of this government that the education, clothing, housing and feeding of the children of Canada is a priority, then I urge that the government very seriously re-think the passage of this legislation. It should pass this amendment, which would give an extra year to think about it, and withdraw this bill. This bill is the kind of legislation that flies in the face of the sanctimonious statements that have been made over and over again both in this House and out there in the real world by this government about how much it cares for children in Canada.

This legislation ensures that children in Canada are in fact not adequately funded. This legislation ensures that children in three provinces in particular do not enjoy the support of the federal government for programs pertaining to them. They do not enjoy the same support as children from the remaining seven provinces and the two territories.

What does that mean, Madam Speaker? Does that mean that the federal government cares less for the children of Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia? Or does that mean that the federal government cares more for the children in the other provinces? Or does it mean that yet again we have legislation that has nothing to do with the care or welfare of children and nothing to do with caring about the poor in this country but has a whole lot to do with a neo-conservative program that is an intricate network of neo-conservative amendments and adjustments in the world of this government?

I suggest that this government plans very carefully this kind of legislation. I urge hon. members to support the motions and defeat Bill C-69, or have the government withdraw it because it does not meet the government's stated commitment to the children of Canada.

• (1530)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak this afternoon to Bill C-69. I would like to start by telling the hon. member who just spoke that I agree all members in this House should deplore the fact that there are still people in this country who live in poverty. I myself come from a rural part of this country, and I have seen the situation evolve in recent years. I believe, Madam Speaker, that situations that have gone on for years and years cannot be changed overnight. As in every situation, I think we must look at how these things develop and then deal with the cause of the problems we are facing.

When we talk about poverty in Canada, poverty may be caused by a number of problems, but more often it is the result of loss or lack of employment. One subject—and the Prime Minister has repeated this many times here in the House—that has come up time and time again in this House is the state of family income in this country. However, the best social measure this government has taken in the past years was to provide Canadians with millions of jobs. Since we came to power, I believe 1,600,000 jobs were created. A government's top social priority, its first strategy to fight poverty in a country should be to provide employment, because employment will restore a person's ability to earn a living wage.

I wish my NDP colleague would listen to me as carefully as I did to her. Perhaps she and her party would then be able to go beyond their hollow rhetoric and look at what has been done in recent years and where this government wants to take Canada, Madam Speaker. What we have done since 1984, since the Minister of Finance gave his economic message in November 1984, has been to give this country a sense of direction. We realized that despite constant efforts, our debt levels had reached gigantic proportions, Madam Speaker. And we all found this very, very disturbing and we still do. We are afraid of a public debt growing at such an unbridled rate because it makes it more difficult to maintain and pay for existing programs and makes us apprehensive about the future for our children and grandchildren. When taxpayers' money, whether from taxes or individual and corporate income tax, is used more and more just to pay the interest, anyone can understand that. Canadians understand it very well.

However, we face a situation that has often rightly been called the "nimby syndrome", not in my back yard, because people never want any cuts whatever made in areas that affect them. We have noticed that and, as a government, over the years, especially in the last budget, we have had to make cuts that we too find difficult. Do not think that it is much easier for a government to raise spending by 20 per cent as the government that preceded us did for years, to increase spending by over 10 per cent, with frightful inflation rates of up to 10 or 12 per cent, which is absolutely intolerable for a country. So obviously, Madam Speaker, it was difficult—If I had been here in government in 1980, I would have found it hard to blame and criticize the provinces or Canadians for not controlling their spending when the government itself was unable to control its spending.

What we did, Madam Speaker, is simple. We began by cleaning our own house and, as we say back home, we began in front of the house and swept the porch. That is what we did.

We have kept the increase in our expenditures to a rate of 3.5 per cent over the past five years, and that is less than the inflation rate. By doing this we sent a very clear message to all Canadians, a message which read: "Reduce the rate of increase in your expenditures."

So, Madam Speaker, we find it difficult to accept or understand that some provinces get federal government transfers ranging from 20 to 46 per cent. When I say 20 per cent these are transfer payments which are included in provincial revenues, like 20 per cent in Ontario, 46 per cent in Newfoundland, and about 30 per cent in Quebec, if I am not mistaken.

So when the Quebec government unlocks the door on January 1, if I may put it that way, it knows for sure that close to one-third of its revenues will come through a federal cheque.

When Mr. Wells unlocks the door in St. John's on January 1, he knows exactly where nearly half of his budget will come from. He will get that income via a federal government cheque. Not bad at all.

I am not blaming anybody when I say that, Madam Speaker. Put simply, I am saying that not only the provinces but all other sectors as well, public and private alike, must take this as a signal from us. To a certain extent, Madam Speaker, we have just signaled the end of the school recess. It means we have capped our expenses at 3.5 per cent, so the provinces must reduce theirs, and the same thing goes for school boards, municipalities and Canadians generally. It is a clear signal to all Canadians, Madam Speaker.

Of course, we could analyse in detail the measures taken in the budget. Of course, we had to compromise on certain points. For example, it would probably have been unfair to penalize some provinces getting more from equalization and if we had done so, we could have been criticized for not maintaining a fair balance.

Madam Speaker, I think that the measures taken must be seen globally, as a whole. We wanted to ensure that the provinces which are the main beneficiaries of the equalization program continue to receive as much and we imposed on them an increase limit that is inferior to the one we imposed on richer provinces. This process has been accepted in the Canadian federation for many years and we maintained it in this budget.

Obviously, Madam Speaker, I think that the opposition amendments should be rejected because they all would just weaken or cancel the effect of this change.

The purpose of this change is to put the Canadian economy back on track, Madam Speaker. That is not easy, faced with a higher deficit, if we want to help Canadians maintain, as I said earlier, a standard of living and social and economic measures so that they can continue to prosper. Despite the fears raised by the crises we are going through in Canada, I continue to believe that Canada is still a relatively prosperous country by world standards, notwithstanding some well-known difficulties.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, since I think I have already gone a little beyond my allotted time, I would say that it is important for both the opposition and Canadians to support the measures we have taken. These measures simply ask Canadians to restrain their spending so that we can maintain the rate of prosperity we had over the past six years. The worst that could happen would be to find ourselves again in the spending-inflation spiral we had in the early 1980s. No one in this House would want to relive that period—as many, I would even say most, opposition members admit. The only thing is that they do not want to take action, difficult though it may be, to help the government get there.

• (1540)

So, Madam Speaker, I urge this House to support the bill as it was presented because I believe that it is good for Canadians.

Madam Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as folows: the hon. member for Gatineau—La Lièvre—the Environment; the hon. member for Cape Breton—East Richmond—the Scotia Synfuels projet; the hon. member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre—Agriculture.

Resuming debate. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Young).

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Madam Speaker, first of all, with reference to the two amendments proposed by the hon. member, I must say that we in the Liberal party are astonished that the New Democratic Party would even consider passing a bill that has the effect of freezing federal transfers to the provinces under established programs financing for the next two years and that would also put a 5 per cent ceiling, during the next two years, on federal transfers under the Canada Assistance Plan to Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta, and that it would consider passing amendments like the one proposed in Motion No. 4, and I quote:

> That Bill C-69 be amended in Clause 2 by adding immediately after line 17 at page 2 the following:
>
> "(3) (a) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, this section shall not come into force or effect until such time as the provinces as defined in subsections (1) and (2) are provided with one year's notice of the intent of the federal government with respect to payments to be made under the Canada Assistance Plan Act.

Madam Speaker, I think it is deplorable that the New Democratic party should agree to let this bill come into force provided notice is given. We in the Liberal Party want to make it quite clear that we cannot support this amendment, because it would have the effect of telling Canadians that a year from now, after notice has been given, all of a sudden it would be acceptable to impose a freeze and reduce funding directed to Canadians, to the provinces, for medical care and post-secondary education.

Motion No. 8 says the following:

> That Bill C-69 be amended by adding immediately after line 15 at page 6 the following new clause:
>
> "8. This Act shall come into force and effect on February 20, 1992."

Madam Speaker, we wish to inform our colleagues in the House that we do not accept this amendment and that we intend to vote against the bill, because we do not want it to come into force, not this year and not in January 1992. We must not fall into the government's trap and play a game that is disastrous today, that is unacceptable to Canadians today, and that in any event will be unacceptable a year or two from now because it would mean telling the provinces: "We are giving you notice, but there is no consultation, no consensus, and if the provinces don't agree, but the government will go ahead just the same." In this respect, Madam Speaker, I can assure you that the Liberal opposition will vote against these two motions which we feel are really deplorable, considering the fact that Canadians appeared before committees of this House, before the Finance Committee, to tell us that it was totally unacceptable. These people included the poor, people involved in health care delivery services, academics, students, CEGEPs, community colleges, all these people told us it was unacceptable and we agree.

Madam Speaker, to stress the fact that we will vote not only against the two amendments proposed by our colleagues from the New Democratic party but also against this bill, I would like to quote the current Minister of Finance.

In 1982, the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) thought that the federal government should not reduce the deficit at the provinces' expense. Obviously, he was speaking as a member of parliament and probably also as a Canadian citizen. He said at the time that cutting back on EPF transfers:

> —could have disastrous effects on the universities and on the colleges, on the hospital funding and on the operations of the hospitals. Let us not make hospitals, universities and colleges a battleground between the federal government and the provincial governments. Let us solve those problems outside of the arena. [—[

This is what the hon. Minister of Finance said on March 24, 1982, when he was a private member of this House.

All these arguments against cut-backs such as those proposed in Bill C-69 were also raised by the hon. Prime Minister. To put things into context, we are talking about high education. The Prime Minister went back once again on his word since he had personally promised, as almost every Canadian knows, a high quality education for young people.

This is what he said to the Conservative general council on August 25, 1989. Madam Speaker, not too long ago the Prime Minister said this, and I quote:

> Our government will support its share of the burden to provide Canadians with a high quality education that will enable them to meet international challenges.

Madam Speaker, enough is enough. When the Minister of Finance says one thing and proposes another, and when the Prime Minister of Canada promises a high quality education and puts forward measures that will have precisely the opposite effect, I think Canadians realize we cannot approve this bill today or tomorrow for this year, 1991, or 1992.

Here is what the Minister of State for Finance was saying about this bill at the beginning of the month and I quote:

> The deficit is a national problem requiring a national solution. In order to restore the finances of the country to good health, the provinces have to do their share, so that they will benefit from reduced inflation, lower interest rates and sustained economic growth.

I was listening to my hon. colleague the minister telling us today about the progress that has been made in this country. He mentioned job creation. Everyone agrees, Madam Speaker, that Canada's growth in the services sector has been quite phenomenal in the past few years. However, Canadian men and women working in that sector also know that wages, job security, working conditions and everything else are far from satisfactory. Those jobs generally pay less and are not very steady.

I would like to tell my friend the minister that this year the government's record regarding job creation is not as great as he would like us to believe. In the manufacturing sector, which was supposed to benefit from the Free Trade Agreement with the United States, 71,000 jobs were lost since January 1, 1990. That is to say that there are 71,000 fewer jobs in a sector of the Canadian economy where jobs have traditionally been steady and among the best paid.

It is very easy to understand, Madam Speaker. The Minister told us he was supporting this bill because the deficit was a serious issue. The national debt, as we know, has more than doubled since this government came to power in 1984. Our friends opposite often blame the previous Liberal government, Madam Speaker, for having left the country in shambles five or six years ago. But how does the minister explain the current high interest rate situation? Some 17 months ago, in January 1988, the interest rate in this country, as set by the Bank of Canada, was 8.63 per cent. That was three and half years after this Tory government came to power. Madam Speaker, these people claimed that they knew how to manage the economy, how to govern Canada and put it to work. The interest rate today has reached 14.05 per cent. Now, let us leave out the 1979–80 period and the Liberal blunders which resulted in well-publicized bankruptcies and job losses. Everybody can understand that. All the other industrialized nations were faced with the same phenomenon as Canada, and nobody can approve of that period because of the problems inflicted on all Canadians.

Madam Speaker, let us deal with the facts as they exist under this Tory government. On January 1, 1988, the interest rate was 8.63 per cent. After 17 months of good monetary and financial management, of job creation and all that, we faced, a few weeks ago an interest rate of 14.05 per cent, as set by the Bank of Canada. Who is responsible for this problem?

Madam Speaker, the amendments proposed by my NDP colleagues clearly reveal the government's irresponsibility in introducing such an unacceptable bill. We intend to vote against the amendments, and then against Bill C–69 when it comes up in the House for third reading.

• (1550)

[English]

Madam Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, I am glad to see that a minister has finally come into the House.

This is a major government bill. Bill C–69 deals with a major budget item—

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. member knows very well this is not a point of order.

Resuming debate, the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, I am happy to rise and discuss these amendments.

As we have heard, this is one of the most severe and deepest cuts to social programs that this government has made. It is a tax on funding for health care, post-secondary education and the Canada Assistance Plan in Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta.

We are faced with a bill that attacks the sick, students, and the poorest in our society. The government is attempting to reduce the deficit on the backs of the least advantaged in our society. Fully 70 per cent of the budget cuts in 1990 are to health and education programs and the Canada Assistance Plan. That is a record for which the government should be ashamed, and for which it will pay the price the next time Canadians have an opportunity to mete out justice at the polls.

We are faced with a bill which not only makes these severe cuts about which I will talk a little later, but does so in a way which is contrary to previous arrangements made between the provinces and the federal government and contrary to the federal government's own legislation.

We have seen the province of British Columbia attack the bill from two points of view; one, because the federal government is breaking its agreements with the provinces, and second, through the cap on CAP to the provinces such as Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario which do not receive extra funding from the federal government, it attacks some Canadians but not all and, therefore, offends the equality provisions.

We have concerns voiced against this legislation because of its constitutionality and its unfairness, and because the federal government is not keeping its promises to the provinces.

The provinces have organized their affairs in accordance with the agreements, and with the federal government cutting back and ignoring those promises we see the end of an attempt to deal with federal-provincial relations in a co-operative way. We see the end of co-operative federalism. Instead, at a moment's notice, the federal government tells the provinces what its commitments will be rather than allow the provinces to plan ahead and prepare their social, health and post-secondary programs for the coming years.

We need to plan our commitments to the poorest in our society, to students, and to post-secondary education. We need to plan our ways of dealing with health problems. This unilateral action by the federal government prevents the provinces from planning into the future and making use of available dollars effectively and efficiently.

The Conservative members showed very little interest in the committee hearings. At best they tolerated witnesses and at most they asked one or two questions in which they showed very little interest. There was not one witness at the finance committee hearings on Bill C-69 who was supportive of the legislation. Every witness criticised the legislation, pointing out the defects and problems to which it will give rise.

In the context of the cap on the Canada Assistance Plan, all the groups that work with the poorest in our society and do the best they can to support the poorest Canadians through their times of difficulty indicated that by placing a cap on CAP it will effectively put an end to reform of our social welfare system, and stop innovation and experimentation. In other words, it will put an end to efforts to spend social service funding more effectively and plan for the future. We are already seeing this in Ontario.

We heard from every witness who came to support effective funding for the health care system, for the post-secondary education system, and for effective funding for the Canada Assistance Plan, that this legislation in the name of restraint was short-sighted and would give rise to not only long-term economic and social costs, but to short term economic and social costs also. It would not serve the government's short-term or long-term purposes to save money but would add to the burden on our health care system. It would add to the burden on unemployment by not generating the sorts of skills and qualities needed for people to become effective participants in our economy.

We heard a great deal during and after the free trade debate about how we were scaring the Canadian public by pointing out there would be major cuts to health and social programs should the free trade agreement pass.

• (1600)

While it is not very comforting, it is clearly possible, and indeed proper, to say: "We told you so." The activities since the passage of the free trade agreement more than illustrate that we were right in pointing out its dangers to the agenda of the government on social programs.

This bill represents the largest single cut to social programs ever made. As I have indicated, the government's deficit-cutting measures here are almost exclusively based on cuts to social programs. That is in direct contravention of solemn promises made in 1988 prior to the election and, of course, in direct contravention to statements made by the government when we raised questions of attacks on social programs.

The fears that were expressed during the last election about the impact of the free trade agreement are coming to fruition and are being meted out on the poorest Canadians.

As my colleague for Mission—Coquitlam pointed out, this is not an economic measure. As the witnesses made quite clear at the hearings on Bill C-69, these are not economic measures. This is a philosophical commitment to cut back funding for post-secondary education and for services to the poorest in our society.

Before leaving this issue, I would be remiss not to point out that, while this is the third attempt by the Conservative government to cut funding to the provinces for health care and post-secondary education, the Liberals, when in power, also made cuts to those areas and, indeed, began most of the measures which the Conservative government is now pursuing. Both parties, of course, have a responsibility for the impact of those cuts in terms of over-burdened and inadequate health care facilities, and universities bursting at the seams and unable to provide the education that is needed. The witnesses from the university system—students, faculty, and university presidents—pointed out the enormous danger that that will result in to Canada's ability to compete in a world economy in the future.

In closing, I certainly do not support the amendments because neither I, nor my party, would want this legislation to pass. As I pointed out, it clearly is extremely dangerous and damaging legislation to both the social and economic fabric of the country. Rather, I do so because the commitment of the federal government under the Canada Assistance Plan is to negotiate with the provinces and to give the provinces one year's notice. Surely, it should be bound by its own rules and legislation, and should not blithely ignore commitments that it has made to the provinces which it has placed in legislation.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak this afternoon on this very important piece of legislation which has been much discussed in the House and other places.

I would like to be a little bit parochial this afternoon and speak about how this legislation affects my province of Newfoundland and Labrador.

It would be helpful to put a couple of things on the record at the very beginning just so that members in the House and the people who follow this debate, either on television or by reading Hansard, know exactly what the context is here.

In Newfoundland and Labrador the three major sources of transfer payments are the Canada Assistance Plan, EPF, and equalization. Through those programs, in 1989 and 1990, the Government of Canada transferred to the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador about $1.36 billion. As my hon. friend said earlier, that is about 46 per cent of the provincial budget. So, almost $1 of every $2 spent by the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador comes from the taxpayers who pay their money to the Government of Canada. It is money that is not spent in other areas in federal programming but is given to the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador, absolutely as it should be.

It is important to look at that number. It is about $1.36 billion for 1989-90 and for next year it will be $1.4 billion. That is an increase. The year after that, it will be $1.47 billion, another increase in funding that the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador can spend on programs. That is a growth of about 4 per cent which is about inflation and which, by the way, will be higher than the growth in federal government program spending.

Despite all the gloom and doom we hear about cuts to this and cuts to that, we in fact have growth higher than that in federal government spending programs.

I mentioned that in Newfoundland and Labrador it was about 46 per cent. In provinces such as Ontario it accounts for about 20 per cent of total revenues. The people in Newfoundland and Labrador, on a per capita basis, receive in transfer payments almost $2,500 and next year it will $2,570 per person. In Ontario it is about $960. That is the context of what we are talking about and that is the difference I am referring to.

Let us talk about some of the programs individually. I would like to touch quickly on CAP. The Canada Assistance program, for my province and the province of my hon. friend opposite is unaffected. Fifty per cent of the eligible costs incurred by the provinces will be covered by the Government of Canada next year and the year after, as they were this year and last year. It is untouched. Yes, there is no question, three of the more able provinces, with the greatest resources and those best able to help, are being asked to make a contribution so that their increases in the Canada Assistance Plan payments will not exceed 5 per cent.

That represents what some of us have been wanting to see for years, a moving away from blanket application of programs and from imposing one program on the country that does not suit the whole country. It is a recognition that some provinces have a greater capability to contribute than others and that some provinces continue to have greater needs than others.

When my colleagues from the Atlantic provinces saw the budget, they recognized that the government saw an opportunity not to demand universal solutions but to tailor the solution to the reality of the country, to reflect the ongoing generosity of the provinces that are able to pay—Alberta, British Columbia, and Ontario. That is something of which we are very appreciative, something which we respect, and we are glad to see it continue. They must continue because our needs continue.

However, in trying to come grips with this huge debt that the people of Canada are carrying on their backs and in recognition that there has to be some restraint, those of us in the Atlantic provinces were not asked to contribute under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Established Programs Financing increased 6.3 per cent this year. Twenty billion dollars supposedly goes to health care and post-secondary education. EPF funding has not gone to post-secondary education and health care exclusively since 1977. The program was established to fund that, but the government of the day, in its wisdom, decided that that funding need not be tied to those special programs. Maybe that was the right decision.

In recognition of the deficit and the contribution to be made we have said that the per capita rates in EPF will be held at the 1989-90 level. They will continue to increase as the economy increases. They will continue to increase as the population increases. It is expected that those funds will increase 1 per cent next year. That should be recognized as the contribution that we in Atlantic Canada make.

• (1610)

I would like to talk about post-secondary education. The contributions of the Government of Canada and the taxpayers from across the country to Newfoundland and Labrador, are not limited to EPF. It is a little known fact that 25 per cent of what ACOA is spending in Newfoundland and Labrador is being spent through post-secondary educational institutions. Not only are we helping the economy and supporting our youth and those who are in the education system, we are also supporting the system itself.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy has a myriad of programs. One of the great beneficiaries of these programs, over and above the people it is targeted to help, are the post-secondary education institutions. They do the training.

In my riding of St. John's East, we have been able to help keep the vocational school on Bell Island vibrant through supporting a new program in that school. Across the province of Newfoundland and Labrador, we use those institutions to provide the training and the education in the job development program, but most particularly in job entry. We have seen tremendous programs developed under job entry and innovations. That money goes straight to those institutions. It keeps their programming going. It keeps people in work. It keeps faculty hired. It keeps buildings occupied and rooms busy. It provides the training in skill development that we so badly need to help develop our economy and to help develop the people who depend so much on that economy.

I want to talk briefly about equalization. Newfoundland and Labrador and, indeed, all of Atlantic Canada receive much more through equalization than we do through EPF, almost twice as much. That is expected to grow and obviously it will grow with the economy, again at about 4 per cent or a little more. That is more than the rate of growth in government programming. In that program, in the case of Newfoundland and Labrador, we see a little over $900 million each year, untouched by the budget. It continues to grow. When we hear about cutbacks, let us remember that we are not talking about cutbacks. We may be talking about less growth, but we are not talking about cutbacks.

These three programs provide 46 per cent of the Newfoundland and Labrador budget. That is not to mention transfer payments to individuals—pensions, salaries, unemployment insurance, family allowance and things such as that—which are so vital, so right, and so important.

Remember that this year the Newfoundland and Labrador government came in with a surplus in current account. It has money sitting in the bank. The governments of other Atlantic provinces have balanced their budgets. That is good. That is a great credit to them, but they parade around the country talking about the federal government stealing money from them.

This is an important piece of legislation. These amendments add absolutely nothing to it and I encourage all of my colleagues to move quickly to support this legislation so that we can continue to build a strong country and be able to respond to the needs of Newfoundland and Labrador, and all of Atlantic Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Phillip Edmonston (Chambly): Madam Speaker, I should like to speak mainly to the proposed amendments to Bill C–69. I support my colleague's motion because I can see that this legislative measure is dangerous and unacceptable. As a member from Quebec who realizes that this is going to take away some $4 billion and that on a number of occasions even our premier denounced this action on the part of another government that keeps saying it is favourable to Quebec, which is completely false, I believe Bill C–69 sets an unacceptable precedent. The fact is that this move on the part of the government has been referred to the courts, therefore the government measure is sub judice, yet they have the nerve to ask the House to adopt the bill. Decency alone commands that the House should at least wait for a court ruling. What will the court decide? That is very important because that is why I believe this bill is very dangerous.

We try to tell Canadians that federalism is profitable and we seek to sell federalism, yet we are about to reduce the responsibilities of the federal government by giving less money to provinces such as Alberta, Ontario, British Columbia, and Quebec as well.

I will tell you something about a concept, and I am sure my colleague also understands the meaning of what is called a social contract. We have agreements with the federal government to the effect that it will provide us with some kind of security, but quite the opposite is happening in this case. People in Quebec—I see you understand French. I am glad my colleagues understand French. The social contract means that we should get some kind of protection from the federal government. But we did not get that protection. The Conservative government members think this is funny. I can understand why they feel like laughing today, but I believe they are laughing at Quebecers because they think that the way to defend the interests of Quebec is to cut $4 billion off the payments to the province. I do not see it that way.

I am sorry, Madam Speaker, but this bill is unacceptable to Quebecers. Why? When I talk about the $4 billion we will lose in the first year, where will that loss be felt? Very simple, the loss will be felt in health services, particularly health services for the elderly.

In my riding a lot of that money for health services is spent on seniors. I know. I have lived in the riding of Saint–Hyacinthe, and the same thing happens in other ridings. As far as we Quebecers are concerned, the government is showing that federalism doesn't pay. It's obvious and it's too bad. It's too bad because—

[English]

Let me say this in English to make sure that my hon. colleagues on the other side, both French and English, understand.

I know why the Conservative party is becoming an endangered species across Canada. It is because Canadians believe that the bill before us, Bill C–69, is unjust and unfair. They believe that our government is the architect of our misery in the sense of high interest rates, in the sense of free trade which, as we say in French——never deliver the goods. Excuse me, Madam Speaker, I heard some noises on the other side, among the Tories. I am sure hon. members will agree that even the media will tell them that free trade has not delivered the goods and that today, according to this government, $4 billion is to be cut from funding earmarked for Quebecers because the government needs this money to pay off the deficit.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I say that if we need this money because of the deficit, we should ask ourselves: "Are there other ways to get this money?"

Mr. Blenkarn: Raise taxes.

Mr. Edmonston: I hear some more noises from the other side that we should raise taxes. I don't think so. I think we should cut government spending. We have to. The federal government's expenditures can be cut in several places.

However, Madam Speaker, in concluding, I want to say that this is a bill the NDP, at this stage, wants to put on hold by proposing amendments. We want to wait one year. Otherwise we want to kill the bill outright because it is against the interests of Canadians and especially against the interests of Quebecers.

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the chance to speak in the House today on Bill C-69, an act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures. It may be more reasonable to say that it is an act to implement regressive measures against the people of Canada by the Progressive Conservative government. Let us take a look at what Bill C-69 is and does.

We talk about how legislation and various programs in this country impact on people. It is sometimes good but, with the Conservative government, it is usually bad. What is Bill C-69 and how does it work?

Bill C-69 attempts to change the framework of sharing between the federal government and the provinces on post-secondary education, health and the Canada Assistance Plan, which provides general assistance to people in need. We are talking today about legislation to change the framework of what we have developed in this country to try to ensure that Canadians can enjoy the kind of services that we have come to expect.

As many of these programs have developed the federal government, with its often considerable taxing powers, has stated, in co-operation with the provinces, the objectives it wants to achieve. It has asked the provinces to join with it once it has passed the legislation to implement those changes.

Bill C-69 is bad news for Canada. It is bad news for Canadians from coast to coast to coast. Let us look at the themes of Bill C-69, the themes of the Progressive Conservative government. This bill attacks the poorest of the poor. It sentences those on social assistance to two years and more of increasing poverty. It threatens the already over-taxed child care system. It means no new subsidized spaces for child care.

It clearly sends conflicting messages to the people of Canada about this government's interest in working with the provinces to try to improve our health care, a system which is already one of the best in the world, and about maintaining post-secondary education so that Canada can compete in that global market about which my friends across the way always talk. This bill abandons poor people and makes a mockery of the words of the Prime Minister when he talked about making education his number one priority.

The member for St. John's East talks about what the impact of this legislation will be in his province, and others talk about Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Ontario, or other provinces, or the Territories. People come into our offices saying that they are having trouble meeting their bills at the end of the month and asking what government can do to help, or what form of help they are getting now from government. It is legislation like this that changes the framework and impacts upon the people with whom we have come to work so closely in our riding offices who need the help so dearly. This government is avoiding the mandate that it has been given to help those people.

Let us take a look at what the accumulated impact of the cuts in this legislation will be in my province alone. Make no mistake, we are talking about cuts to post-secondary education and health care in Canada.

British Columbia is unique because we have a premier in British Columbia who has called for this kind of legislation. Yet, on the other hand, he has joined with two other provinces to challenge the unilateral movement by this government to cancel their agreements. At best, the premier of British Columbia is schizophrenic and really does not quite understand what is involved. Does he, as he said, want the federal government to cut back its spending and reduce its deficit? On the other hand, a minister of his own government is challenging this legislation.

You cannot have it both ways, Madam Speaker. The premier of British Columbia cannot have it both ways and he does not know which way he is going to have it. His actions are going to mean more damage to health care and post-secondary education in British Columbia than we have ever had before.

He has tried every party so far. He has been a Liberal.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): He is a Liberal.

Mr. Gardiner: He is a Liberal. He has been a Socred. He is now. I do not know how he votes federally. He is suing his friends in the federal government.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): He didn't vote in the last election.

Mr. Gardiner: My friend says he did not even vote in the last federal election and who knows what further we can expect. What will the impact be? The impact of this legislation is going to be over $3 billion worth of cuts to British Columbians. It makes a mockery of the attempts to develop the kind of post-secondary education system we need. We are hoping that legislation will be tabled this week in the provincial legislature to establish a university in Prince George to serve northern British Columbia. What kind of future does that university or other universities have when this government is cutting $3 billion from post-secondary education and health in this country?

I asked the Secretary of State questions about the block funding formulas that we have, which of course the Liberals support. I asked him to lay to rest the fears that we have had that funds from this government for education and health are spent paving highways in British Columbia. I asked whether he has done any studies on this and whether he can tell me that I am wrong. He did not answer the question. He said we had to trust him.

Canadians have found out what has happened when they place their trust in this government at the ballot box. We have seen an attack on the very programs that we have had to fight to develop in this country. They are being whittled away by the Conservatives, usually with the support of the Liberal party. I think we should make any effort that we can make with regard to Bill C-69 to see that those changes do not come about. All they ask for in the legislation is that the provinces be given notice about implementing changes. That was one particular part of the the previous legislation. It is incredible that we have the same kind of government. The Liberals brought in that measure in the first place. They are encouraged by this legislation. We have got to change it, stop it and ensure that we develop the kind of education and health programs across this country that the legislation that we have brought in and supported will guarantee.

• (1630)

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Madam Speaker, we are going to come back to reality for a minute after that speech.

I would like to point out what Bill C-69 is. It was introduced in the House of Commons on March 15, 1990. Its purpose is to implement key aspects of the expenditure control program affecting statutory programs proposed in the February 20, 1990, budget by finance minister Wilson. Combined with the restraint initiatives announced in December, 1989, this plan will reduce government spending by an estimated $3 billion in 1990-91 and by $3.8 billion in 1991-92. The federal deficit is projected to decline—

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, I know the hon. member is about to make a scintillating contribution to the debate; I just wish some of his cabinet colleagues were here to listen to him. This is—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member raised the same subject as a point of order earlier and was told that this is not a point of order. I would appreciate that we would continue with debate.

Mr. Richardson: Madam Speaker, before I was so rudely interrupted by the lone Liberal in the House—the only one who sits here in the entire House, and he wants to rudely interrupt.

Mr. Milliken: I was very polite.

Mr. Richardson: As I was saying, the federal deficit is projected to decline from $30.5 billion in 1990 to $28.5 billion in 1990-91 and down to $26.8 billion in 1991-92.

This bill affects four programs: the Canada Assistance Plan, the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program, the Established Programs Financing Arrangement and the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer. First is a summary of the restraint initiatives.

One, the Canada Assistance Plan: The federal government pays provinces half the cost of eligible social assistance expenditures under the Canada Assistance

Plan. These transfers have grown from $4 billion in 1984–85 to $5.5 billion in 1990, an average increase of 6.7 per cent. The amendments do not affect provinces which receive federal equalization transfers, as my hon. friend from St. John's was saying earlier. The federal government will therefore continue to share half of all the eligible expenditures incurred in these provinces. For provinces not receiving equalization, the bill provides for a maximum 5 per cent annual growth of Canada Assistance Plan contributions for 1991 and 1992. These provinces, Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia, are in a better fiscal position than the federal government to finance expenditures beyond the 5 per cent rate. Implementation of this measure will provide for resumption of the present regime on April 1, 1992.

The second program affected is the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program, CEIP. The CEIP provides a contribution of 30 per cent of the cost of mineral, oil and gas exploration financed with flow-through share arrangements. It was introduced in 1988 following the sharp decline in the stock markets and the subsequent difficulty of raising capital. It was the only remaining subsidy to business that is demand driven and, hence, open-ended. The government costs in 1989-90 are expected to exceed $160 million. The program was cancelled effective February 19, 1990, but with grant filing provisions in respect of written agreements entered into prior to February 20, 1990.

A third, and perhaps least understood, is the Established Programs Financing. Established Programs Financing is the single largest transfer program to provinces and has grown from $14.5 billion in 1984–85 to almost $20 billion in 1989–90, an average annual increase of 6.3 per cent. Under Established Programs Financing, the federal government provides equal per capita financial assistance to all provinces, through the transfer of tax points and cash payments. Historically, these transfers were undertaken to assist provinces to carry out their responsibilities in respect of health care and post-secondary education. However, since 1977, provinces have been able to use these transfers according to their particular priorities, rather than in the more restrictive fashion required by previous cost-sharing arrangements. The bill will hold the per capita EPF transfer in 1991 and 1992 to its 1989–90 level. However, total EPF transfers will continue to grow with the population increase of each province, or about 1 per cent nationally.

The bill provides for a resumption of EPF growth in 1992–93 at the rate of growth of GNP less three percentage points, which is consistent with the announcement in the April 1989 budget. The growth of the total Established Programs Financing transfer, beginning in 1992–93, will not fall below the rate of inflation. This change to EPF will have exactly the same per capita impact on all provinces and represents less than 1 per cent of provincial revenues in 1990–91. Low-income provinces will continue to benefit from the large and growing equalization transfers which have been exempted from the expenditure control plan.

The final program affected by these restraint measures is the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act. This act provides for the transfer to provinces of 95 per cent of the eligible federal corporate income tax paid by investor-owned electric and gas utilities. Total payments to provinces under the program during 1990–91 and 1991–92 will not exceed the amount paid in 1989–90, that is, in each year. The provinces will share in the control level of the transfer in 1991 and 1992, in proportion to their eligible claims, as determined by the existing rules of the program.

For further clarity, I would like to explain in more detail the Canada Assistance Plan. The Canada Assistance Plan was introduced in 1966, over 24 years ago, to help provinces with the cost of providing social assistance and welfare services to people in need. At the same time, it was recognized that the provinces have jurisdiction in this area. The Canada Assistance Plan cost shares 50 per cent of eligible social assistance and welfare service costs. Under the terms of cost sharing, the provinces make the day-to-day decisions about the design and delivery of their individual programs.

For example, they set benefit levels, they decide who is eligible, all within the legislative and regulatory framework for eligible support and services under the Canada Assistance Plan. About two-thirds of the $5.5 billion that the federal government now transfers to the provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan is for general cash assistance; that is the monthly cash support for basic needs like food, shelter and clothing and other items of assistance. The other third goes to welfare services of various types, including day care, counselling, assessment, rehabilitation and other services such as homes for special care or child welfare. While the federal government specifies the conditions for cost sharing, it is the provincial governments which are responsible for the design and delivery of programs to the public.

The budget measure continues to respect the provincial role in delivering and designing assistance and services to people in need. It also continues to assist provinces with the costs of providing that assistance. The budget measure protects the poor, equalization-receiving provinces from any change in the federal contributions. The budget measure applies only to three non-equalization receiving provinces. These three provinces, Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia, are fiscally strong and can therefore cope with a two-year restriction in the federal contribution under the Canada Assistance Plan. In those provinces, the federal government will continue to cost share Canada Assistance Program expenditures within a 5 per cent annual growth rate for each of the next two years, 1990-91 and 1991-92. We are not talking about cut-backs or, as the NDP says, "threatening the welfare of the poor". If a province does not increase expenditures by more than 5 per cent in each of the next two years, the ceiling will have no effect. For increases in expenditure above 5 per cent, the fiscally stronger provinces like Alberta are in a better position at this time to pay such costs.

• (1640)

The federal government's priority is to bring program expenditures in line with our capacity to afford them and to bring our deficit and debt down.

Some provinces are well placed to assist in this goal by absorbing a temporary limit on the growth in the federal contribution to them under the major federal transfers. The Canada Assistance Plan measure does this while still protecting the lower-income provinces.

I would like to conclude with a brief consideration of the effect on my province of Alberta of the proposed changes in Established Programs Financing.

The Established Programs Financing transfer to Alberta will be limited to the same per-person levels as 1989-90 for the next two fiscal years. Growth of transfers to Alberta under the Canada Assistance Plan will be limited by the 5 per cent cap on growth of these payments to non-equalization provinces. Alberta will only be affected by this lid on CAP if the province chooses to increase spending under CAP by more than 5 per cent. If it does so, then it should bear the extra costs as it is obviously more able to afford them than the federal government.

Despite these limitations on transfer growth, transfers to Alberta under Established Programs Financing and the Canada Assistance Plan are expected to rise from $2.3 billion in 1989-90 to $2.4 billion and $2.45 billion in 1990-91 and 1991-92 respectively.

Federal support to Alberta is going to continue playing a strong role in the provincial fiscal picture. Major federal transfer programs make up 22 per cent of total Alberta revenues. In summary, on a per capita basis the federal transfers are expected to amount to $972 for each Alberta resident in 1990-91 and $979 for the subsequent fiscal year.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to add my voice in opposition to the introduction of Bill C-69 and to support the amendments put forth by my hon. colleagues on the committee.

Bill C-69 reduces the Established Programs Financing. It puts a cap on the Canada Assistance Plan. It is a bad deal for Canada and a particularly bad deal for those so-called have provinces, British Columbia, Alberta, and Ontario.

There is an interesting little twist in all of this because the premier of my province, Bill Vander Zalm, invited this very action. In an address to the Union of B.C. Municipalities meeting last September he stated: "If the federal government will cut back on its expenditures then we, similarly, will have to give, not only on equalization payments, but on transfer payments as well".

This is where B.C. is doubly punished, not only by the federal government but also by its own provincial government. Another little quirk in all this, Madam Speaker, is that now the attorney general of that same provincial government has moved to sue the Canadian federal government in the B.C. Court of Appeal. It is challenging this cut on a constitutional basis, reminding the Canadian government of its constitutional responsibilities to transfer on a fifty-fifty basis to provinces the cost of such programs for social policies.

The same provincial government that invited these cuts is now attempting to sue the government for doing what it asked it to do. One wonders why people laugh derisively at the Government of British Columbia. Well, here is an example of why. The only people who are not laughing are the people of British Columbia, because they are being doubly punished by the initiatives of these two governments.

Nineteen billion dollars is transferred annually to the provinces under these plans. Under Bill C–69 that will be cut by $7.3 billion between now and 1994–95. That is a sizeable reduction.

What has happened and is happening is that the government's deficit reduction measures are almost exclusively based on the cuts to social programs. I know the ears will perk up across the way, but it all fits in.

It talks about the plan under the free trade agreement, the same free trade agreement that the government promised to the people of Canada would not cut social programs. The free trade agreement is behind all of this. The effect of Bill C–69 will be to cut that $7.3 billion. The free trade agreement, in keeping with this, is the whole backdrop.

The government says that it is cutting to reduce the deficit. I think everyone is in favour of reducing the deficit. We have our own suggestions on how that should happen. It has to do with a reduction in interest rates. What is really happening is that the cloak behind the cuts to social programs is deficit reduction, but the justification is really to get the government off the backs of business so they can compete with American companies. That is the link to the free trade agreement.

The government promised that the poor, the sick, and the elderly would not be affected by the trade deal. We see just the opposite. What the government promised in the election of 1988 is not what is occurring now.

This government, in keeping with that, is also on a privatization kick. This is once again where British Columbia is being doubly punished, because the same dynamic is occurring in British Columbia.

The free trade agreement provides for the U.S. to have equal access for private health care management services. We have in my province right now a deplorable lack of health care services, where people are forced to go the United States to receive emergency open heart surgery. This is the same government that invited these cuts to Established Programs Financing.

This reminds me of a quote from Oscar Wilde. I will paraphrase it. The government both in Ottawa and Victoria knows the cost of everything and the value of nothing.

Under the Canada Assistance Plan the federal government is required to provide funds on a fifty–fifty cost–shared basis. We in my party believe that the tax system should be a redistributive mechanism. We are committed to that. That is one of the reasons we are who we are. We believe in national programs. We believe in them being equitably distributed across Canada.

In this current constitutional crisis we are experiencing, we are the party that is most upset at what is going on, because it is the national programs and the financing of those programs that are in jeopardy if our country should fall apart.

The member of the legislature for my riding is also the finance minister for British Columbia. He is the guy who is implementing the cuts. He is readjusting his budget because of cuts to the Established Programs Financing and the cap on CAP. It is interesting because of what his premier, his boss, had invited. It is now causing him no end of torment because he is seeing the effects of the invitation. That is British Columbia politics for you, Madam Speaker.

• (1650)

I have a button that I sometimes wear given to me by the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam. It says: "Has the world gone mad, or is this B.C.?" It is the whole mindset of the premier saying: "You must do this in the interest of deficit reduction". Then when the government does it, they say: "Wait a minute, we didn't really mean that", and when it is followed through, the provincial government sues the federal government. It is like a Monty Python show.

As I said, the only people who are not seeing the joke of it all are the people of British Columbia. I hope they have the courage to junk the Socred government along with its idea of deficit reduction and elect the New Democratic Party in the next provincial election. That would go a long way to serving the interests of British Columbians because we have a plan. We know how to operate an economy in a much more responsible manner than the Social Credit government. The New Democratic Party also knows how not to invite disaster on our province, much like the premier of British Columbia has done.

Mr. Kempling: Kick them out.

Ms. Hunter: Believe me, we are working very hard to do that very thing.

My hon. colleagues who have worked on the committee studying Bill C–69 have put forth some very worthwhile amendments based on our belief that the Government of Canada has to live up to its contractual and constitutional responsibilities by consulting with the provinces prior to any changes to the Canada Assistance Plan. I think it only makes sense when we are talking about the whole constitutional crisis we have now. A little consultation could have averted a lot of this.

We are not talking just about the Constitution. We are talking about the way the government should be structured and the way its members should be talking to one another.

In conclusion, British Columbia is being doubly punished both by the federal government and by the provincial government. I hope that at the provincial level they will turf the Socreds out in the next provincial election and I hope that at the federal level I hope they will do the same thing to this government.

Mr. Pat Sobeski (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to stand here today and speak about Bill C–69, which was introduced in the House of Commons on March 15, 1990. The purpose of the bill is to implement key aspects of the expenditure control program affecting the statutory programs proposed in the February 20 budget by the finance minister.

The first thing I would like to talk about is the seriousness of the federal debt situation in relation to the provinces. One illustration of the seriousness of the federal deficit is the size of the federal debt charges in relation to those of the provinces.

For the fiscal year 1989–90, 35 cents of every revenue dollar collected by the federal government went to cover the cost of servicing the public debt. That left 65 cents for program spending before we got into adding to the deficit.

As a point of reference, back in 1968, the cost for servicing the debt was 12 cents of every tax dollar, which left the then Trudeau government 88 cents to use on program spending.

By comparison, debt charges last year in Ontario were 11 cents for every dollar of revenue collected. In British Columbia it was about 4 cents. In Alberta it was 8 cents. In Quebec it was 18 cents. In Atlantic Canada, 15 cents out of every revenue dollar, about one–half the rate of the federal government, went to debt servicing.

Despite our very difficult fiscal situation, the federal government continues to provide significant and growing assistance to provinces in the amount of over $35 billion. These make up a significant part of the revenues to provincial governments, ranging from a high of 46 per cent in Newfoundland to a low of just over 20 per cent in Ontario.

To give an overview, total federal transfers to the provinces, territories and municipalities again will exceed $35 billion in 1990–91. This includes cash transfers of $24 billion and tax transfers of some $11 billion. About 90 per cent of the over $35 billion in federal transfers involves three large programs: Established Programs Financing, $20 billion; equalization payments of some $8 billion; and the Canada Assistance Plan, over $5 billion.

Controlling the debt through deficit reduction is necessary to maintain social programs and a high standard of living for Canadians. If transfers to provinces were exempted from our government's efforts to reduce the deficit and control public debt, other federal programs would have to bear more restraint.

The size of the transfers to the provinces make them difficult to ignore. Again, $35 billion represents almost one–quarter of federal program spending. From the provincial point of view, federal transfers make up anywhere from 30 per cent to 45 per cent of the revenue to the less wealthy provinces and 20 per cent to the richer provinces.

These transfers have grown at an average rate of 5.8 per cent over the last five years, much more than the average annual growth in program spending of 3.6 per cent. Therefore, transfer payments cannot be ignored if further progress is to be made to reduce the deficit and get the public debt under control.

I would like to say a few words now about the Established Programs Financing. Historically these transfers were undertaken to assist the provinces to carry out their responsibilities in respect to health care and post-secondary education. Since 1977 provinces have been able to use these transfers according to their particular priorities rather than in the more restricted fashion required by the previous cost-sharing arrangements.

As a contribution to deficit reduction and debt control for this year and next year, per capita EPF transfers to the provinces will be held constant. This is one feature of Bill C-69. Under Bill C-69 total EPF transfers will continue to grow with provincial population, or about 1 per cent nationally. This measure will reduce federal cash transfers by $870 million in 1990-91 and by $1.5 billion in 1991-92.

Equalization payments represent the second largest transfer program. It totals about $8 billion a year. The equalization program provides provincial governments with sufficient revenues to enable them to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation. This year seven provinces are receiving equalization: the four Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan.

Strong growth in over-all provincial revenues, together with strong economic growth in Ontario, has substantially increased these payments from $5.5 billion in 1984-85 to over $8 billion in the current year.

That brings us to the effect of Bill C-69 on the province of Ontario where the riding of Cambridge is located. The Established Programs Financing to Ontario will be limited to the same per person levels as in 1989-90 for the next two fiscal years.

In addition, however, the growth of social assistance transfers to Ontario under the Canada Assistance Plan will be limited by a 5 per cent cap on the growth of these payments. Ontario will only be affected by the lid on CAP if it chooses to increase spending on social assistance by more than 5 per cent. If it does so, it should bear the extra cost, as it is more able than the federal government to afford them.

• (1700)

Despite these limitations on the transfer growth, transfers to Ontario under the EPF and CAP are expected to rise from $9.1 billion in 1989-90 to $9.3 billion and $9.5 billion in 1990-91 and 1991-92 respectively. While these increases are less than they were projected to be prior to the budget, they still represent annual growth of more than 2 per cent in each year.

Federal support for Ontario is going to continue playing a strong role in the provincial fiscal picture. In the next two years, the major federal transfer programs will make up more than 20 per cent of the total Ontario revenue. On a per capita basis, the federal transfers are expected to amount to $956 for each Ontario resident in 1990-91 and $963 in the subsequent fiscal year.

One could characterize this as very generous treatment on the part of a jurisdiction, the federal government, that is paying 35 cents on every revenue dollar toward covering the debt charges toward another, the province of Ontario, that pays only 11 cents per dollar toward its debts.

In conclusion, every time the Tories talk about cutting spending, we are criticized. Every group in every region and every opposition member pleads for exemptions. But as long as the country remains largely indifferent to the fiscal bind, which is a legacy of the 1968 through 1984 period, the political risks of attacking the problems remain great.

However, this current government is following, a consistent, comprehensive and far-reaching economic plan that started when this government took office in November, 1984. This plan is directed at creating productive jobs and a higher standard of living through sustained non-inflationary ways.

We hope to accomplish this first by continuing action to eliminate the deficit and reverse the growth of public debt, and second, by putting in place fundamental changes to the economy in order to free private initiative and eliminate the inefficiencies caused by government intervention.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this bill. This is the kind of bill that gives us an indication of what are, or perhaps I should say what are not, the priorities of this government.

This bill indicates whom the government thinks should bear the burden for its deficit reductions. You, Madam Speaker, are a compassionate person. If you were the person responsible for this bill, you would have those most able to afford it pay for any change in the funding structure.

This bill shows us that the government thinks the easiest place to get the money is from the powerless, from those who are unable to protect themselves. According to the government, British Columbia, Ontario and Alberta are provinces that are doing a little better economically than the rest of Canada. However, poor people in Ontario are the same as the poor in Saskatchewan. If you are poor in British Columbia, you feel it just as much as if you are poor in Alberta. This bill attacks the poor. It attacks the poorest of the poor because they are the people who depend upon the provincial government for the funding to make care available to them.

It also shows that the priority of this government is not to take care of the poor. Furthermore, this bill sentences the people who are already poor, who are already having problems, to at least two years of increasing poverty because the amount of money that the provincial government will have available to take care of them is going to be less each year.

We have had a child care system of a sort in Canada. This government promised that we would have a child care system that would take care of everybody. In fact, the government got as far as bringing legislation before the House. While it was not a particularly good bill, it showed that the government had some concern about this, at least before the election. That concern for child care disappeared some time during the election, and by the end of the election it was not there. This bill makes it possible, I suppose, for the government to say that now there is no money and we cannot expect it to have a further developed child care structure.

This bill does all of these things in a way which suggests that because Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario are a little better off, they can afford to dig deeper some place else and find money for this kind of care. That is not actually what happens. Since the problems of child care and poverty are not a priority for those governments either, consequently they are going to be affected by this change in the financing structure.

The Established Programs Financing originally did exactly that. It established financing for particular programs: health care, post-secondary education and so on across the board. Originally, that financing was on a dollar-for-dollar basis. For each amount the provincial government spent, it collected a matching grant.

The Liberal government of a few years ago decided that this was getting a little expensive and that it did not have the kind of control over it that it wanted, so it was changed to block funding for secondary education, health and other welfare structures of the provincial governments.

The impact was exactly what we in the New Democratic Party had predicted in those days, that if you take the responsibility for expenditures for the poor and give it to a Conservative or Liberal government, they will not make that a priority. If they are allowed to spend this money any they want, health care or education will not be a priority of a Conservative or a Liberal government, and it was not.

For instance, statistics today show that the province of British Columbia spends less than 1 per cent, in fact less on post-secondary education beyond what it should have or would have received from the federal government. Therefore, we cannot always trust the provincial governments to establish the kind of priorities which we think are important in the New Democratic Party, such as good health care, such as child care, such as care of those people who are unable to feed themselves and clothe themselves.

In 1986, this government further affected the Established Programs Financing by starting a reduction program which would reduce the amount of money that the provinces would have for health care, post-secondary education, and care of people who are poor.

• (1710)

Bill C-69 cuts still further into the kind of financing which we have been talking about here. Consequently, it undermines further the program's ability to improve the standard of living or the quality of life for the people across the country, which is what this established program was intended to do originally. It was already undermined to a certain extent by the Liberal government when it went from established program funding to block funding. The Conservative government further undermined it by reducing it in 1986, and here we have the final blow to this particular program which suggests that from now on $7.3 billion will be cut between 1990–91 and 1994–95.

The total amount in cuts from 1986 to 1995 is $29 billion. That is a considerable amount of money for the governments of the provinces to find. It is going to be particularly difficult for those governments of the three provinces that have been named in this particular bill, because they will find that instead of an increase in relation to the Gross National Product, they are going to have a less amount in relation to the Gross National Product.

The government's main defence of this bill has been that the Established Programs Financing will increase each year. While that is true, so will everything else. Consequently, the gap between what the provinces are able to spend on these programs and the money they will have available for these programs is going to increase. That is going to have a direct impact on health, post-secondary education, child care and poor people.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The hon. member for New Westminster—Burnaby.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise to support the amendments put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam.

What the amendments would do is require the Conservative government to live up to its constitutional responsibilities by consulting with the provinces prior to any changes to the Canada Assistance Plan.

Motion No. 4 requires the federal government to serve notice on the three affected provinces that it wants to change the level of federal contributions under the act. It also notes that the passage of this bill cannot be considered as notice as required by Section 8 of the Canada Assistance Plan Act.

Motion No. 8 simply delays the implementation of the bill until 1992. The provisions of Bill C-69 are such that the 5 per cent ceiling on CAP expenditures is for two years only and expires after the fiscal year 1991-92. The effect of this amendment would be to nullify the ceiling on the Canada Assistance Plan.

Whether or not the federal government can move unilaterally and change the Canada Assistance Plan is being considered by the British Columbia Court of Appeal. No action should take place before the court decides, and all appeals are dealt with.

This government often says that it does not want to comment on any issues that are before the courts. That is often what we hear on this side of the House when we question the government on various matters that are of importance to us. It will often say that it will not comment on anything that is before the courts. New Democrats feel that the government should not move on this bill until the court case has been dealt with.

The amendments would simply delay when this bill would come into effect. The amendments would give the provinces a year's notice and a chance for some consultation over the federal government's intention to slap on spending limits.

Bill C-69 is a devastating piece of legislation. It will put a freeze on the transfer payments to the provinces for health care and for post-secondary education.

In my province of British Columbia, day after day, we already see people on long, long waiting lists for hospital care, particularly for open-heart surgery. It is tragic to read stories in the paper about these people awaiting open-heart surgery and their families, and the stress they go through knowing how critically ill a member of their family is and who cannot get into the hospital in British Columbia to get the needed health care.

As a matter of fact, we are now in the incredible situation of Canadians in British Columbia and in other provinces attempting to get the needed health care, such as heart surgery, in the United States. Canadians have prided themselves for a long time on the level of health care in this country and on the fact that Canadians, no matter what their economic status, are able to receive the health care they need. That is changing and it is changing because of the attitudes of this Conservative Government and the Social Credit Government in British Columbia of Premier Bill Vander Zalm.

We also know that the freeze on transfer payments to post-secondary education is imposing undue hardship on the students of B.C. More and more young students are finishing their degrees at university with debt loads of $25,000 and $30,000. Students have come and told me that they are going to have to stop attending university because of the debt load and because they are not guaranteed a well-paying job when they finish their education. They are concerned about the amount of debt they are carrying to go through university. That is horrendous.

This legislation is only going to make far worse for those students and far worse for people who have lost their jobs because of cutbacks in the forest industry and other industries in British Columbia who are now attempting to get back in to the education system so they can be retrained and get another job. They cannot take the chance. They cannot carry that debt load. It is a disgraceful situation for those young people and for the older people who are trying to get back into the education system in British Columbia.

There are a number of devastating effects of Bill C–69 for the people of British Columbia, Ontario and Alberta, that are totally unfair. The poor in B.C. are just as poor as the poor in any other part of the country. I have been to the food banks in my community. I have been to the school lunch programs in my area. I have seen the people. No one in our society wants the humiliation of lining up, week after week, for a bag of free groceries, and even that bag is shrinking.

Some members on that side of the House seem to think that people are looking for free gifts. Those line–ups are long and the people in those line–ups to get those paltry bags of groceries are humiliated by those walking by and seeing them. They do not want to be there. If they had any other options, they would not be standing in a food bank line–up. I know that. There are now food banks in the Vancouver area simply for single moms and their children. It is shameful that this is happening our country, a wealthy country, a country that prides itself on equal opportunities for all its citizens.

The cap on the Canada Assistance Plan will affect a number of areas in our society. One of the things I hear over and over again when I question the government on its programs or, I should say, its lack of programs and lack of support for women who find themselves living in violent situations in their homes, is some kind of condescending pap from members on the government side. They tell me that they have appointed women to other positions in the government, that they have appointed women to other boards, or about the other appointments for women.

• (1720)

This cap on the Canada Assistance Plan will affect shelters for battered women. That is the federal–provincial funding mechanism for building shelters for battered women. This legislation will prevent more shelters being built and all the soft words and rhetoric of the government about caring for women who find themselves in battered situations, in violent situations, ring very hollow when looking at the real actions.

Another area that will be affected by the cap on the Canada Assistance Plan is child care, and other members have mentioned it here today. Child care is sorely lacking all across Canada, in particular in British Columbia. There are thousands of children who are not in child care situations that we know are safe and that we know have certain standards applied to them. The Canada Assistance Plan again is the mechanism for federal–provincial funding for child care and again we are seeing a limit put on that spending.

I said earlier that the poor of British Columbia are just as poor as those anywhere else in Canada. To put a ceiling on the Canada Assistance Plan is to deal a real blow to those folks. They are already living under the poverty line, already lined up at food banks, and already in a very devastating situation in their home lives.

Bill C–69 clearly shows all Canadians what the Tory agenda is. It is an agenda that we have seen over the past several years where the government has deindexed family allowances. For all its nice words about children, it has deindexed family allowances. Now it has put a clawback on family allowances and on old age pensions. Every single social program in the country has been under attack by the government. The Tory agenda is a very clear agenda. It is one that does not care about the average folks in Canada, the poor, the children, the battered and abused women and Bill C–69 points that out very clearly.

I urge all members in the House to vote against Bill C–69 and stand up for Canadians, stand up for the social safety–net that Canadians have prided themselves on for generations.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Madam Speaker, it seems every time one stands up in the House, one has to apologize to the Canadian people, on behalf of this Parliament, for legislation which this government has brought in and Bill C–69 is no exception to that. On that basis, I am only too pleased to be able to stand here and oppose it.

If we go back to the promises, promises, promises and the sacred trust—if anyone can remember them anymore—what we have here is the application of the law of the jungle to the sacred trust concept. What we have here is the tooth and the claw. The previous speaker and others have referred to the clawback. That appellation, I would remind the House, was put there by the government itself and it is certainly no accident that that was the case.

Bill C-69 is a way of circumventing something which the Finance Minister said was not going to occur when he brought down the budget. That is bringing the budget down, making all these changes to it and all the slashing of programs, on the premise of supposedly reducing the deficit and the national debt.

In bringing down the budget, the minister said that there were not going to be any cuts. Actually the quote is almost directly that the cuts are going to be exempted in major transfers to persons. What he failed to say, or maybe very conveniently forgot, was that there were major cuts already in the works from the previous budget, which had not even been implemented yet. I speak primarily of the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act and the clawbacks to which I have already referred.

These are going to add to the misery of people before Bill C-69 was even introduced. It is absolutely fatuous for the minister to have made those references that people are going to exempted from major cut-backs when he brought in the budget.

One of the best quotes—although I have heard it before—is certainly is something that we ought to be reminded of. My colleague, the hon. member for Saanich—Gulf Islands, said that the government really does know the cost of everything and the value of nothing.

We talk about the cuts in transfer payments to the provinces. Cuts? Well, they are frozen, are they not, for two years? One can just imagine the talks that must have gone on in deciding how to word the government's excuses for what it had done. "Freezing, of course, is not a cut." Of course, freezing is a cut because there is the matter of inflation and the increase in the cost of living.

Lately, many people are having tremendous difficulty getting into university. The previous speaker talked about the cost of financing a university education, but the cuts in the transfer payments have other devastating effects as well, not the least of which is the ability to even get into the university.

In the beautiful university city of Saskatoon, the university has the reputation of being one of the major educational institutions in the country. There have now been approximately 1,500 students unable to go to university in the last two or three years because there have not been the facilities or the finances in the university to accommodate them, either through the lack of physical facilities or the university's inability to finance enough professors to handle the teaching.

As a result, these people have been excluded by an increase in the academic standards which they have to attain in order to get in. I would suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that a good portion of the people who sit across the aisle who are responsible for the debt and the deficit, for the problems these people are having in Saskatoon and elsewhere in the country, would not be able to attain the academic requirements that these young people will have to attain in order to get into university. Here they are, responsible for the very problems that these people are facing. It is just an absolute disgrace that we have to raise academic standards and exclude people from university. Able people are being excluded because of the financial shenanigans of the government opposite.

It is not any kind of an amelioration to the problems of the people of British Columbia, Ontario and Alberta—to change the subject a bit and talk about the Canada Assistance Plan—to say that they are the richer provinces and it is only Alberta, B.C. and Ontario and not every province. Half of Canada's poor live in those three provinces. As was pointed out previously, whether one happens to live in Prince Edward Island or in Toronto, if one is poor, the effects of it are just as devastating. We certainly have a food bank in Saskatoon, something we did not have before 1984 when the present government came to power. It just boggles everyone's mind how this government can speak about the prosperity that this country is supposed to be experiencing while every day we see that the results are exactly the opposite. We see the results of the failed programs which this government has brought in to help the people of Canada. The problem is that at least 50 per cent of the Canadian population is feeling no positive benefits of the government's programs at all.

• (1730)

If one is unemployed, then the effects of the unemployment insurance changes which may or may or not come about—let us all hope that they do not—will be devastating to the provinces of Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario. They will be just as severe on the other provinces. The number of people who will be in the poorer categories of our society will increase, even on the basis of the government's own predictions. Last year we had an unemployment rate on average of 7.5 per cent. This year the government's own predictions are that it will be 8.2 per cent, while next year it will be 8.5 per cent.

We can see that it is absolutely senseless to say it is only three provinces out of the total. If you are poor, you are poor. If you are going to be suffering from the lack of income or the inability to purchase food, it does not really matter what province you are in.

I am certainly pleased to see that at least one province, with the co-operation of another, is taking the government to court on that matter. I can only wish them good luck because it is an abomination.

Similar comparisons could be made between the educational system and health care. The question of health care has a lot to do with free trade where we get the so-called level playing field with the United States, where those who can afford medical attention get it, and those who cannot pay when they enter the door, do not get it. That is precisely the kind of a situation we are getting into in Canada. There is no way that this government is going to be able to deny it. It is going to be a fact.

Madam Deputy Speaker: On a point of order the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, in light of the attention the hon. member's speech was attracting, I wonder if there might not be unanimous consent to allow him to continue.

Some hon. members: No.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the hon. member for Comox—Alberni.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Madam Speaker, I was interested in the comments made on this amendment over the last few hours in the House, particularly some of the comments coming from the Liberal side. I am under the impression that the Liberals intend to vote against this motion. I think it should be stated again exactly what this motion is designed to do.

It is designed to require the national government to give legal notice to the provinces before it imposes this bill. As the member for New Westminster pointed out, that will require well over a year, at which point this bill will cease to have any impact. In other words this motion nullifies the effect of the bill.

The Liberals intend to do it this way. They know that 100 per cent of the Tories are going to vote in support of this bill. Thus they are saying that they want it implemented immediately, which is stupid.

Mr. Milliken: We are voting against this bill.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): You are voting against it. They are voting for it. The bill is getting passed. What you are saying by not voting for this motion is that you are asking for it to be implemented immediately. I cannot figure out the logic in what the Liberals are doing except if you know a bit of the background, especially in British Columbia.

As was pointed out by some members, it has been the likes of Bill Vander Zalm, the Premier of British Columbia, and Mel Couvelier, the illustrious Minister of Finance of British Columbia, who have advocated a cutback in federal transfer payments to the provinces.

Let us look at the political history of these two individuals. Mel Couvelier is a former leader of the Liberal party in British Columbia, elected by all of those Liberals in B.C. He is the person advocating a cutback in federal transfer payments to provinces such as British Columbia.

Then there is Bill Vander Zalm. Bill Vander Zalm ran for the leadership of the Liberals in the province of British Columbia. I do have to give credit to the Liberals because when Bill Vander Zalm came out in favour of public floggings and hangings he could not get a bare majority to support him to be leader of the party. He had some strong support, but he could not get the majority needed to become leader of the party in British Columbia.

In British Columbia the Liberals have jumped into bed with the Tories, the Reformers, the Flat Earth Society and a bunch of other right wing crazies, basically on a negative program to keep the New Democratic Party, the largest party in British Columbia, out of power.

Mr. Milliken: They have succeeded abundantly.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): That is all this member is concerned about. This is Liberal type legislation. It is being demanded by two of the paramount Liberals in British Columbia, one a former leader and one an aspiring leader of the Liberal party.

I do not want to say that it is entirely Liberal legislation, because it is being presented by the Tories in the House today. In British Columbia the Liberals go to bed with the Tories in order to keep the NDP out of office. That is a bit of a problem, but here we are involved in a bit of a public dispute between the two parties.

The simple fact is that the Liberals and the Tories believe in precisely the same kind of attack on social programs and that is why they are going to vote against the motion that has been presented by my colleague from Saskatoon. They know that the huge Tory majority in the House is going to pass this legislation, and by voting against this motion, they are saying that once it is passed, it is going to be implemented right away.

That is exactly what members are doing by voting against this motion and they know it. I think they have received phone calls from Bill Vander Zalm and Mel Couvelier instructing them on this motion.

Mr. Milliken: How can you say that with a straight face? This is silly nonsense.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): This is dangerous legislation. We have always been told by the government opposite that we have to cut the deficit in order to protect social programs. The government says if we do not cut the deficit, if we do not cut the debt, we are going to constantly be paying out from the public treasury to the bankers, the bond holders and the people who hold the debt of this country and we are not going to be able to sustain the social programs at the levels and quality we want in this country.

The Prime Minister has called social programs a sacred trust. He says he wants to cut the deficit and the debt in order to maintain these social programs. He does not mean a word he is saying. The Tory program in this country has all along been absolutely identical to the Tory program of Margaret Thatcher. It has been identical to the mean-spirited Tory program of Ronald Reagan. There is absolutely no difference between this and the attack on social programs that has taken place in the United States under Reagan and in Great Britain under Margaret Thatcher. The real ideological movement behind Bill C-69 is that the Tories do not like social programs and that is all there is to it.

There are other methods of cutting the deficit and we have proposed some of them. Just the other weekend the Secretary of State for External Affairs suggested that maybe we should cut back some of the troops in Europe or cut back some of the armaments, those obsolete nuclear arms that are only designed to hit Poland and Czechoslovakia, countries who now suddenly find themselves on our side.

• (1740)

We could cut back on those things and save billions of dollars. Then we can maintain the social programs that we have to their present quality and extent and possibly even expand those programs so that they actually do the job they are designed to do.

My daughter is graduating from high school now in British Columbia. She is going to be going to university. Because British Columbia is not a major contributor to the cost of post-secondary education, the cost of going to university is going to be more than my daughter can afford. If she was going to school in Quebec she would be paying one-third of the tuition fees that she would be paying in British Columbia.

Now the government is freezing EPF funding so that there can be absolutely no increase in the amount of money going into post-secondary education in that province. More and more money will have to come from the students themselves and more and more students will fall below the cut-off line and will not be able to afford to go to university.

That is the kind of mean-spirited Tory policy that we see in this legislation. By passing this motion we will be able to delay this legislation long enough, especially if the odd sensible Tory member on the opposite side supports it, that it will be null and void and have no effect.

I come from the province of British Columbia which is having difficulties these days with its health care system. It is an absolute shame what the Vander Zalm government has done to health care in British Columbia. There are hospitals throughout the province that have all the equipment, all the facilities, and all the operating rooms they need. What they do not have is staff because the B.C. government, under Bill Vander Zalm, is against hiring people to work in hospitals or paying them decent wages. That is because he does not understand one thing in his Liberal-Tory mind. He forgets the fact that it is not buildings that care for people, it is not equipment that cares for people, it is people who care for people and he should be hiring people in those hospitals so that they can deliver the services.

It is necessary to send sick British Columbians across the border to Seattle and Bellingham in Washington and to Portland, Oregon, to get surgery when we have the facilities and the equipment. We just do not have a government with the right kind of priorities.

This is the kind of legislation that backs up the insane social policy of people like Bill Vander Zalm. I would encourage my Liberal friends to vote for this motion and against this legislation and to let us get on with developing quality social programs in this country.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I too rise with respect to this motion. This is an issue that is fundamental to this country. It has always been my impression, and I think it is the impression of many Canadians, that health and education are two of the most fundamental issues in our society today. When a government ignores those issues it does so at the peril of the future of this nation. What is a nation if we do not have a strong recognition and a strong desire to educate people to their best capability, to encourage the society to move ahead? In order to move ahead it needs a commitment by governments, both federal and provincial, to education.

Health as well is a fundamental issue to society. With the advances in technology and with the prospects for help in the future, it is necessary for a government to have a major commitment to health. Unfortunately, this government has fallen short on both counts.

Approximately $19 billion is transferred to the provinces each year, with roughly 70 per cent or $13.3 billion of that amount going for hospital insurance and medicare. The effect of this bill is to freeze at current levels funding for federal transfers for the next two fiscal years, 1990–91 and 1991–92. After that, the transfers will grow at the rate of the GNP, minus 3 per cent.

This is not the first time that this government has affected health and education in this way. Back in 1986 this particular government cut 2 per cent from the rate of growth in health and education spending. In fact, the government began declining its support in relation to the Gross National Product.

The effect of this bill will be to cut $7.3 billion from federal transfers between 1991 and 1994–95. When the effect of the 1986 cuts is included, the total amount cut between 1986 and 1995, as calculated by the Library of Parliament, will be something in the order of $29 billion.

What effect is that having? It is having some tremendous effects. I have been personally affected by a family in the riding, the Attfields who live in Lanigan, Saskatchewan. Mrs. Attfield has written a number of times and made comments publicly. In an article in the Lanigan paper not so very long ago she indicated that Princess Margaret Hospital in Toronto—one place in which life-saving bone marrow transplants are taking place—received enough cuts to force it to cancel 10 transplants in one year. Her husband, Kevin, had bone cancer and needed a transplant. Her husband, who was supposed to have a transplant in February, waited until July to have his transplant. During this period his condition went into an advanced stage and the bone marrow transplant did not work.

She wrote that oncology specialists in Saskatoon and Toronto told them that had his transplant taken place when it was scheduled, the success rate would have been much higher and the transplant probably would have worked. She wrote: "Because it was postponed, the leukaemia that Kevin is afflicted with will probably cost him his life".

This morning I phoned Mrs. Attfield to discuss this matter with her. I was advised that Kevin died this morning. It is a tragedy when something like that happens. You feel helpless as an elected member standing and talking to this Chamber. The need for a commitment to health care has to be there. The reality is there.

This is one situation of thousands throughout the country.

What this government has done by implementing and taking the action it has means that there will be a whole lot of other Kevin Attfields in this country in the future. It is not right or proper.

It is time that we as a legislative body think about the Kevin Attfields in this country. It is time we made a real commitment to health and education.

That is why this bill is wrong. I know, and we all know, that there are deficit problems. This is not the proper way to cut the deficit.

Surely members on the other side know that in their hearts themselves. To have something like this happen is simply tragic. It leaves a person speechless.

I want to close by saying that I hope that the government will change its attitude and start to commit itself to areas that really count in this country such as health and education so that similar problems will be alleviated in the future.

• (1750)

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The first question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of Ms. Langan.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

Madam Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

Madam Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

Madam Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Madam Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The second question is on Motion No. 8 standing in the name of Ms. Langan. .

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

Madam Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

Madam Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

Madam Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen

Madam Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on the report stage of the bill now before the House. Call in the members.

And the division bells having rung:

Pursuant to Standing Order 45(5)(a), I have been requested by the Deputy Government Whip to defer the division until a later time.

[Translation]

Accordingly, pursuant to Standing Order 45(5)(a) the recorded division on the question now before the House stands deferred until tomorrow at 3 p.m, at which time the bells to call in the members will be sounded for not more than fifteen minutes.

[English]

Is there unanimous consent of the House to call it seven o'clock?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Madam Speaker, I raised the matter of tire recycling in this House last week, referring, of course, to the fire in Saint-Amable and to the one in Hagersville a few weeks ago. They have been environmental disasters.

The problem is, Madam Speaker, that we know the danger they represent, but we do not know what to do with used tires. The technology exists however to recycle them or to burn them.

I had suggested that option in my supplementary to the Minister responsible. I have since been able to obtain more information.

On February 16, 1990, the Minister of the Environment told the House that Environment Canada had developped a program to establish and develop a recycling and energy conservation process that was going to be funded at the cost of $2 million.

According to figures I obtained from a departmental official, from $500,000 to $800,000 has been spent to date. But we must tell hon. members and Canadians that this program came into being 10 years ago, in 1980, under a previous government. It decided there was to be a program to investigate the possibility of recycling or burning used tires which, as we know, are piling up in many places across the country. The best known, of course, are Saint-Amable and Hagersville.

Madam Speaker, the purpose of this program established by the previous government was to help stimulate research into tire recycling. It was for projects to use tires in manufacturing and not to burn them right away to produce energy. The provinces have never licensed a company to burn tires. In 1983, the province of Ontario refused Canada Cement Lafarge a licence to burn tires, on the grounds that it was hazardous for the environment. But at the present time, with the little research I have done, we have a company in California.

[English]

It is the world's largest tire fired power station. It has been running successfully for the past two years, next to the world's biggest used tire dump in Modesto, California.

The plant burns 4.5 million tires a year and generates 15 megawatts of electricity, enough to meet the needs of 14,000 homes. Useful steel, zinc and gypsum are extracted from the ash.

Oxford Energy, the plant owner and operator, is building a second tire burning power station in Sterling, Connecticut with an input of 10 million tires a year and an electrical output of 30 megawatts. The company plans to build six to eight similar plants in the United States by 1995.

We have in Canada in the last years spent amounts of money and have one of the greatest research facilities at our disposal, the National Research Council. The technology exists to the south of us. That is the question I was aiming at last week. After the disaster at Hagersville how come we have not simply gone to see this technology that exists? Why do we not look it over, see what the environmental problems are, if any, and apply it here? We would save ourselves a lot of grief like we had in St-Amable and Hagersville.

I would like to know from the Department of the Environment what we are waiting for. Why not purchase this technology if we have to? God knows we could have saved ourselves a lot of money when we consider the disasters of St-Amable and Hagersville.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, that is basically all there is to it. What will Environment Canada do in the wake of these two disasters? Did it check out this new technology? If not, what is it waiting for? Did it call on the internationally famous National Research Centre, which has succeeded in solving a lot of problems? If they have found other solutions, we would like to hear them.

• (1800)

[English]

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I apologize to my hon. friend for my late arrival. I was anticipating this debate to commence at seven o'clock, so he caught me slightly off guard.

There are two or three points I would like to make in response to my hon. friend's questions and comments. First of all, I would certainly like to express my appreciation to the government of Quebec for the manner in which it responded to the fire and, particularly, for the very co-operative way in which it was willing to work with the Government of Canada and other jurisdictions.

As you may know, Madam Speaker, the federal government was involved from the very first instance on the day on which the fire broke out. We were able to be present and to monitor water, soil and air emissions throughout. We are continuing to do so. Certainly the good news is that the results to this point in time have been very encouraging.

I would also like to pay tribute to the skill of the fire-fighters who demonstrated that they brought to their task a great deal of expertise. Perhaps to some degree they learned from previous fires which have occurred throughout the country and in the United States. I was encouraged by the results as well.

As I think all members of this House know, the disposal of waste such as the tires in question falls within the provincial government's jurisdiction. Nevertheless, the federal government is very anxious to assist wherever possible, as we did in this particular case.

In addition, we are working with the Council of Environment Ministers, involving all jurisdictions across the country, in putting together an action plan which we hope will ensure that these types of fires are less likely to occur in the future and, when they do occur, that they will be less of a threat to those who live in the vicinity.

Part of the good news relating to the fire in Quebec which has just occurred was the fact that the tires were located in a less flammable manner than that which occurred in a previous fire in Ontario. While I listened with interest to what the hon. member has said in respect of new technology, I think more vigilance on the part of provincial governments and closer adherence to the existing regulations by the proprietors will ensure that storage facilities in the future will be safer than they have been in the past.

The federal government is very actively involved in the search for financially feasible recycling technologies. At the moment we have the capacity only to recycle a small percentage of tires available in Canada. When we look to the future we are going to have to see much more strict regulations in respect of the disposal of automobiles, tires, and parts thereof.

At the moment we are working to try to make such recycling efforts as profitable as possible and to encourage therefore less storage and more use. There is certainly some expense involved in that, but I think the manner in which the federal government and the provinces are working together in co-operation with the private sector will, if not ensure, at least alleviate the problem in the future. We may not be able to guarantee we will not have such fires, but I think we can guarantee that we will be in a better position to deal with them and there will be less danger of such fires because greater numbers of tires will be recycled in the future.

SCOTIA SYNFUELS PROJECT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Madam Speaker, on May 16, 1990 I put a question to the then Minister of Public Works with regard to the possible support of the Scotia Synfuels project to be located in Cape Breton Island.

At that time the minister responded to my question by giving the same sort of flippant answer that we have been receiving for quite some time: that the matter would be given due consideration and a decision reached at an appropriate time.

I wish to point out for members of the House that this particular project has been in the making for quite some time. In point of fact, there are 10 specific reasons as to why Nova Scotians and indeed Canadians would want to see this particular project proceed and proceed without delay.

The first point is that this would be a major job creator for the province for Nova Scotia. Over 2,000 permanent jobs, direct and indirect, would result if this project would go ahead. Approximately 500 jobs in the construction industry would result for the next three years alone.

It should be noted that unemployment in Cape Breton Island at the present time is exceedingly high. You may be aware, Madam Speaker, that the unadjusted rate in Canada today for unemployment is 7.7 per cent, while in the province of Nova Scotia it is 11 per cent. In the province of Ontario, the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate is 5.3 per cent, whereas in the Island of Cape Breton the official unemployment rate as of April 21, 1990, was 19.1 per cent.

• (1805)

We believe that to be an incorrect figure. We believe it to be substantially higher because hundreds of individuals have given up and thereafter do not report any longer to the local CEIC offices to register for employment in that they have lost all hope. The need is there, and these jobs would certainly be welcomed in that area of Canada.

The second reason for supporting this project is that there would be a new market for 400,000 tonnes of coal from the Cape Breton Development Corporation. That corporation produces a high sulphur coal. This would be a plus for this particular project and not a negative.

Third, it would be a generator of new business for suppliers of goods and services in the province of Nova Scotia. The capital cost of the project would be $450 million. There would be new tax revenues from municipal, provincial and federal governments.

Fourth, this is a proven technology. It is the same basic technology chosen by Husky Oil for its $1.5 billion upgrader in Lloydminster.

Fifth, it is environmentally the most advanced commercial technology for removing acid rain pollutants from coal and oil.

Sixth, more permanent employment would accrue as a result of this particular project than Hibernia, at a fraction of the cost of Hibernia.

Seventh, this project would produce 4 billion barrels a year of high value refinery feedstock for gasoline and diesel and also clean power utility fuels and by-products for pure sulphur.

Eighth, this could be integrated with the Nova Scotia power plant at Point Tupper to provide 150 megawatts of additional power at a rock bottom price.

Ninth, over $5 million has been invested to date in coal testing and feasibility studies, of which $2 million has been provided by the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia.

Tenth, the favourable economics of this particular project would be that capital costs have been reduced by 65 per cent, better economics than the federal government's supported megaprojects in western Canada, where commercial viability is dependent upon existing federal government incentives.

It is essential that if these 10 points are to be realized by providing employment in an area which has high unemployment and by providing a new technology which is environmentally healthy and safe for the residents who live there and elsewhere, it would deplete acid rain in a demonstrable way. If those goals are to be realized, the Government of Canada will have to come forward and support this project fully as it has supported other projects across the country. If it provides the tax credit that this consortium is looking for, most if not all the money will then be able to come from the private sector.

We have the state on the one hand being actively involved in pursuing economic activities for an area of this country which so desperately needs it, coupled with the private sector that will make financial contributions in order to realize this particular goal.

In terms of what is good public policy, this is certainly an example of what is good public policy. I would only hope that government members opposite, and indeed the spokesperson for the government today, would stand in their places and give unequivocal support to the Scotia Synfuels project. It enjoys the support of local municipal governments all across Cape Breton.

Something very unusual has occurred in the province of Nova Scotia as well. On April 18, in the Nova Scotia House of Assembly there was on all-party resolution. It was supported by the New Democratic party finally. It was supported by the Conservative party. The official opposition, the Liberal party also supported it. They all agreed to lend their support to the Scotia Synfuels project. They as provincial legislators realize the value this project could bring to Cape Breton Island in terms of new coal production, and environmentally safe permanent construction jobs. It would assist us in terms of our fight with regard to acid rain.

• (1810)

In conclusion, I ask that government members give serious and active consideration to a positive decision which must be reached and communicated to the consortium prior to the end of May of this year, or this consortium will walk away from the project it has been working at for upwards of six or seven years. I would hope that members opposite will understand the importance and value of this project to the economic opportunities which there could be in Cape Breton.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Scotia Synfuels proposal in Cape Breton has considerable potential to benefit economically the eastern Nova Scotia region.

I wish to reiterate some of the points which the minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency made last week in this Chamber.

The Government of Canada has been trying to enhance economic opportunities in the Atlantic region by considering every alternate employment opportunity that will help to diversify the economy. The creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is a manifestation of this government's commitment in that regard.

It should be pointed out that while the hon. member has pressed for the approval of an investment tax credit for the synfuels project, it is Industry, Science and Technology Canada rather than ACOA which has the lead role for the federal government in this project. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, as the development agency for small and medium size businesses, can play an advocacy role.

That being said, I wish to point out that federal officials have devoted a great deal of time to looking at the long-term economic viability of this project and its potential to create long-term employment. I also wish to point out that under the Canada-Nova Scotia-Straits of Canso area development subagreement ACOA and the provincial government together funded $650,000 or 50 per cent of the cost of the technical feasibility study completed in November 1989.

As has too often been the case prior to 1984—and my colleagues opposite just have to look at the track record of their party when in power to confirm this—governments have often been eager to invest in projects in the Cape Breton area simply as a quick fix. This government wants to be certain that an investment of public funds results in durable and viable jobs for the long term.

With respect to Scotia Synfuels, ACOA and Industry, Science and Technology Canada officials want to be sure that this project, valued at well over $400 million, is sufficiently viable to justify the substantial expenditure of public funds which would be required for an investment tax credit.

While the number of jobs this facility promises to create is certainly impressive, there is still more study required before any decision can be made.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question which I raised in the House on May 2, respecting the future of agriculture in this country. At the time I raised it there was a lot of concern in this country with respect to agriculture and the future of agriculture, particularly in western Canada.

I would like to highlight some of the areas where there are concerns. Farmers are concerned because of FCC rates. The so-called farmers' bank has increased rates a number of times this year, which is causing problems. High interest rates are a killer for producers as they are a major problem for businesses throughout this country. The Economic Council of Canada has predicted this year that incomes will be down by some 87 per cent. That is an increase from earlier predictions but a drop in income of 87 per cent, which is astounding.

The future of the Canadian Wheat Board is in question with respect to the movement of oats because of the free trade agreement and the fact that next year certainly grain and possibly wheat and barley will come cross the Canadian border unrestricted. We have the government failing to use Article 701.4 of the free trade agreement. Article 701.4 indicates that whenever either Canada or the United States is entering into agreements with third parties, that it is a violation if the agreement affects the ability of the country to trade.

• (1815)

Certainly, that has happened with respect to the U.S.S.R. and the announcement that the United States is going to sell some 12 million tonnes of grain to that country, subsidizing a third of that. This will have a direct impact on our sales to the U.S.S.R. Although the government has admitted it is a problem, it has not taken an extra step to put some muscle to the statement. It exists under the free trade agreement.

The U.S. farm bill continues to have a problem going through. The new farm bill will be virtually the same as the last farm bill. At the same time, we have a government that is cutting support for our producers. The at and east bill, dealing with export grain through the ports of Halifax and Saint John, has meant that Saint John has closed its elevator. Quite likely, Halifax will close as well.

As the Canadian Wheat Board indicated very recently, if this happens it will affect the sale of grain from western Canada to world markets. Lord knows, we need all the help we can get these days with the subsidization of grain through the United States and Europe. At the same time, there are all sorts of rumours, I believe well founded, that there will be an announcement in the fall that the crow benefit for farmers that exists now will quite likely be gone.

We have a situation in which western Canada is in dire straits. Agriculture across the country is having problems. In Saskatchewan, 70 per cent of the communities have lost population in the last five years. When a farmer goes onto the land to plant his crop, these are the items that he is concerned with. Farmers do not see the government addressing these problems seriously.

When I asked the question, the $500 million program had been announced but was still in limbo. Now that it has been announced that it will be going to the farmers, there is no indication what sort of detail there will be or what sort of form it will take.

There is a problem in western Canada with agriculture. There is a lack of confidence there in the direction that this government is taking. The last time I asked the question, unfortunately the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds answered with simple rhetoric. I hope the hon. parliamentary secretary will not resort to that.

Again, I would ask the question: Given this situation, the atmosphere that exists throughout the country and particularly in western Canada, and given some of the problems that I outlined a moment ago, what is this government doing to encourage a viable rural and farming sector? What is it doing to encourage farmers to look forward to planting a crop this season? What is this government doing that will make a farmer and the rural communities have some confidence in the government and that we will have a viable and healthy rural economy down the road?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has touched on many items, more than on just the initial pricing of wheat. I want to address the issue and indicate why the initial price of wheat had to be set where it was.

The hon. member knows that the Canadian Wheat Board's initial payments are set each spring in relation to anticipated conditions in the world grain market in the coming crop year.

In 1990–91, world production of wheat and coarse grains is expected to increase. Production of these grains might be able to exceed world consumption. That means there is a good chance that world grain supplies will be higher than they were in 1989. Therefore, grain prices are expected to be low.

Another result of the expected higher production is anticipated larger grain supplies available for export in the European Community and the United States. Both are expected to have more wheat to export. The EC is expected to produce more barley and it will be looking for export opportunities.

With more grain to export, both these major grain traders could be expected to increase their export subsidy levels. Again, this would keep world grain prices low.

We have seen over the last few years how the export subsidies used by the EC and the United States have driven down world grain prices and shifted world trading patterns. Ten years ago the EC exported just over 10 million tonnes of wheat. This year, it is expected to export more than 19 million tonnes. In 1988–89 the EC had 20 per cent of the world wheat market, compared with just 6 per cent 10 years earlier.

However, even with the high production and price-lowering subsidy practices of the EC and the U.S., low grain prices in 1990–1991 are not an absolute certainty. Conditions could improve and prices could rise accordingly.

World grain supplies at the end of the present crop year are expected to be at their lowest level, compared to world consumption, since the mid-1970s. With this low-supply situation, world grain prices will be extremely sensitive to weather conditions over the course of the next crop year. A drought or other weather problem which resulted in crop failure in any of the major grain-producing areas of the world would cause prices to increase.

The government will monitor world grain markets closely throughout the crop year. Initial payment levels will be increased if market conditions warrant an increase. This is not uncommon. In the current crop year, initial payments for spring wheat and barley were increased once to reflect changes in the world market. Initial payments for designated barley were increased twice in this crop year. Initial payments for designated barley were set last April at $115 a tonne. The current level, after the two adjustments, is $170 a tonne.

When initial payments are adjusted, this increase is paid to farmers on their grain deliveries since the beginning of the crop year in the form of an adjustment payment.

The setting of the initial payments has to be done cautiously. When the government sets these payments, it is trying to forecast developments in the world market for the next 18 months. The initial payments are guaranteed by the federal government. They cannot be set higher than what is realistic without risking a deficit in the wheat board pool accounts. Initial payments cannot be lowered once they are set for any particular crop year. Any loss must be covered by the federal government. Rather than risk such a loss the government will watch grain markets closely and adjust payments if conditions improve.

In the meantime the hon. member is very aware of the programs this government has brought forward, with the $500 million assistance program for this year and the provinces coming up with programs to help match that. We hope that will assist and give the farmers the confidence required to plant the crops that are so necessary this year and in anticipation that the prices will improve.

[Translation]

Madam Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.23 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 29, 1990

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to several petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[Translation]

CANADA–EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

TABLING OF REPORT ON EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34(1), I have the honour to table in the House, in both official languages, the Canada–Europe Parliamentary Association's report on the eighteenth annual meeting of delegations of the Canadian and European Parliaments held in Brussels and The Hague from April 23 to 26, 1990.

[English]

The main conclusion we came to, and I think it is very important to say it in the House, is that increased parliamentarian involvement is being requested by both this Parliament and the European Parliament which is having increasing significance as Europe forges ahead to 1992.

Clearly, we recommend that the Canada–Europe Parliamentary Association be more involved in developing with this government how to strengthen the agreement to find effective new ways to reach out to the new Europe.

Canada has a framework agreement with Europe, but as Europe changes toward 1992, members in this House should be involved in developing and making sure that Canada becomes part of the new Europe.

We can do this in several ways, and specific recommendations have been made in this report both for the Secretary of State for External Affairs as well as for the Minister for International Trade. I trust that these recommendations will be well received by both ministers, as well as the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology, because Canada must come to an agreement in science and technology with the new Europe.

Indeed, the Secretary of State for Canada, who is in the House today, as well as the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, will be pleased to know that the European Parliament wants to work with them as the new Europe for 1992 is developed. It brings 12 countries together. It wants Europe–Canada relations to increase in both cultural and educational training areas as well as in small business opportunities through the Business Community Network.

I urge the ministers and this government to work with parliamentarians in this House from all parties to enhance the relationship between Canada and the new Europe.

We have a great opportunity here, Mr. Speaker. I urge all of us to get involved and be involved in making this happen.

• (1110)

PETITIONS

FREEDOM OF CHOICE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 from a number of petitioners in central British Columbia from a variety of communities.

They point out that the choice to bear or not to bear children is a matter of personal choice and not of criminal law. They feel that criminal sanctions do nothing to address the reasons why women seek abortions or to reduce the number of unwanted pregnancies. Therefore, they are calling upon Parliament to refrain from imposing any criminal sanctions against abortion.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by a number of people from a variety of communities in central British Columbia who are opposed to the 7 per cent goods and services tax.

They are calling on the Liberals in the Senate to do the honourable thing, listen to the people of Canada and vote against the legislation as opposed simply to holding more public hearings.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from Kamloops and other parts of central British Columbia.

The petitioners are concerned about the future of passenger rail service and recognize that the government has cut back severely in terms of VIA Rail. They feel that this was exactly the opposite to what ought to have occurred, and are asking the government to invest in a decent passenger rail service for Canada because of its environmentally friendly nature.

CHILDREN'S BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): On another topic, Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from petitioners in Kamloops who are asking that the government consider introducing a bill of rights for children. They point out a whole variety of areas in which children are living in poverty by increasing numbers. They feel a comprehensive bill of rights for children would be the appropriate course of action to take.

[Translation]

FREEDOM OF CHOICE

Mr. Phillip Edmonston (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present a petition on behalf of residents of Quebec, and more specifically, of Montreal, Quebec City, the riding of Chambly and several other communities.

Your petitioners call upon this House to consider that the choice whether or not to bring a pregnancy to term is a personal choice and not a matter for the Criminal Code. Furthermore, your petitioners state that criminal sanctions fail to address the reasons why a woman wants an abortion and do not in any way reduce the number of unwanted pregnancies.

[English]

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I also rise under Standing Order 36 to present petitions to this House from British Columbia and from virtually every province in the country.

The petition states that the choice to bear children or not to bear children is a matter of personal choice and not one of criminal law.

It goes on to state that the Canadian Medical Association already has guidelines and regulations in place concerning abortion. Criminal sanctions do nothing to address the reasons why women seek abortion and do nothing to reduce the numbers of unwanted pregnancies.

These petitioners call on the government to refrain from imposing any criminal sanctions against abortion.

The total number of these petitions is 30. There are some 3,600 signatures altogether on them. The petitioners come from my riding of New Westminster—Burnaby and Surrey, B.C. There are 406 signatures from Kingston and the Islands. The other petitioners are from Toronto, Ottawa, Regina, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and from Nova Scotia.

Women and men across Canada who believe in women's integrity are all asking this government to refrain from bringing in criminal sanctions against women.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, I too have some petitions to present, which are duly authorized under Standing Order 36, from voters in Saskatoon who point out that the choice to bear children is a medical and personal matter and not a matter of criminal law.

They point out that the Canadian Medical Association already has sufficient guidelines concerning abortion. Criminal sanctions, they point out, have no reasonable effect on why women seek abortions and do nothing to reduce them.

They call upon the government to refrain from imposing any criminal sanctions against abortion.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition, which includes the ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance common to the petitioners.

What is said next in this petition is very important: "in certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy".

This petition speaks on the question of the right of a woman to choice in the matter of abortion. It reiterates that it is a matter of personal choice and not of criminal law.

It also indicates that the Canadian Medical Association has guidelines. In fact it states that there is nothing in the criminalization of abortion that reduces the numbers of unwanted pregnancies.

This petition comes predominantly from Saskatchewan and Alberta, from communities such as Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, and Calgary.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36 I have the honour to present a petition signed by 251 people in my riding who would like the government to withdraw the goods and services tax.

They feel that it is inflationary, that it is on the back of the consumer, and that it will diminish our capacity to be competitive on the world market. They also feel that it will hurt tourism in Alberta.

ABORTION

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions to the House today, both of which have been certified correct under Standing Order 36.

The first is a petition signed by residents primarily of Dawson Creek and Delta, British Columbia. They pray that Parliament refrain from imposing any criminal sanctions against abortions such as the legislation this House will be voting on later today.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is signed by Canadians from all across the country on the route of The Canadian. It was the route of The Canadian since it is no longer there.

These petitioners call upon Parliament to legislate and bring in programs and measures so that we can have an effective VIA Rail passenger rail system in Canada.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty under Standing Order 36 to present a petition on behalf of the people of Newfoundland who strongly oppose the goods and services tax which is an unprecedented tax grab from the pockets of Canadians. It will hit them not only with higher taxes but higher inflation, higher interest rates, and higher unemployment than already exists in Newfoundland.

They humbly pray that Parliament reject the proposed goods and services tax.

[Translation]

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Gaby Larrivée (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to table in the House, pursuant to Standing Order 36, a petition signed by about 2,000 young Quebecers. The petition supports the Meech Lake Accord, the Accord that meets Quebec's five minimum conditions and recognizes Quebec as a distinct society and one of the founding peoples of Canada.

These young people ask the government to do everything in its power to ensure that the Accord is ratified and, in the event the Accord is defeated, to undertake a complete review of the present political system since it will then be clear it is impossible to agree on improvements to the existing system.

TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I am tabling today a petition from Chibougamau in the riding of Roberval, concerning the recommendations of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas.

Your petitioners reject the conclusions of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas and ask that Chibougamau be recognized as an isolated area under the present tax benefits system.

• (1120)

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it is my honour and duty to present petitions from the Royal Canadian Legions of Tignish, Bloomfield, Ellerslie, Wellington, Miscouche and O'Leary which are upset that the veterans of Canada have fallen victim to the government budget cuts.

Royal Canadian Legionnaires believe that our veterans have already given service to this country and should not be targeted. They believe that these budget measures should be dropped.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured today to rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36 to present some 200 petitions which I think you will agree are very important and somewhat unique. I hope they will be treated very seriously by this government.

They are petitions that were signed in the Chinatown community of Vancouver by thousands of citizens representing many business people, shoppers, and concerned citizens of Chinese origin, as well as others who characterize our multicultural Canada.

The petition is in Chinese and English. We regret that there was some procedural difficulty as a result of this. Many signatures are written in Chinese characters, evidence of how very strongly these people oppose and are worried about the GST.

The petition states that the undersigned residents of Canada avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right.

It goes on to state that the 7 per cent goods and services tax will hurt small businesses, costs will go up, incomes will go down, and it will be an accounting nightmare. The tax will also hurt consumers as prices of thousands of items and services go up.

Therefore the undersigned petitioners call on Parliament and the Government of Canada to withdraw the goods and services tax.

I present these petitions with great concern from Vancouver East.

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 36 to submit to this House petitions with over 1,000 names which are over and above the 25,000 names that have been submitted on behalf of the people of London, Ontario.

These people call upon this government to withdraw its grief and suffering tax and essentially restore a fair taxation system.

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition on behalf of constituents in Newfoundland and Labrador. There are many hundreds of signatures on this petition.

These people are asking and begging this government to cancel the goods and services tax because it will cause serious and unfair hardship to low and middle income Canadians.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition signed by numerous Canadians from the London area of Ontario.

These petitioners are concerned about cuts to Canada's rail service. In their petition they indicate the importance of rail service for the tourist industry in Canada, as well as how important it is for rural communities in Canada. They also point out that it is the safest and most environmentally friendly mode of transportation.

They urge the government not to cancel in whole or in part rail passenger service in Canada.

Although the petition is an older one, and although the government has ignored the petitioners' request already, I am sure they would be delighted if the government would live up to its obligations and reinstate rail service in this country.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise today under Standing Order 36 to present three petitions from some of the good citizens of Newfoundland and Labrador.

It will come as no surprise to the government that they are petitioning the government with respect to its goods and services tax. It will also be no surprise to the government that they are asking it to rescind the goods and services tax since it will be completely unfair and regressive. They ask the government to go back to the drawing-board and come up with something fairer for the Canadian people.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise under Standing Order 36 once again to offer to this House a petition against the goods and services tax from people in various communities throughout British Columbia.

They are simply asking that the goods and services tax be rejected. They state that if reform is to be brought in, the taxation system should include an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations. They ask the government to cease with this present proposal.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present several petitions today with several hundred names on them from communities such as Espanola, Massey, Tehkummah, Webbwood, and other communities throughout the Algoma—Manitoulin area, in which the petitioners call on the government to reject the goods and services tax.

They point out that it will cause an onerous burden on small business, that it will be an unfair hardship to lower and middle income Canadians, and that it will have an adverse effect on inflation, higher interest rates, and higher unemployment.

Routine Proceedings

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 263, 272, 276, 277, 281, and 283.

[Text]

SEARCH AND RESCUE INCIDENTS

Question No. 263—Mr. McGuire:

From January 1, 1986 to January 1, 1989, were there any search and rescue incidents in the Halifax Search and Rescue Region to which aircraft from C.F.B. Summerside were tasked to respond and, if so (a) what number were there (b) were any of the incidents located closer to C.F.B. Summerside than to C.F.B. Greenwood and, if so, what number?

Hon. William Hunter McKnight (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes.

(a) 202.

(b) From January 1, 1986 to January 1, 1989, 152 search and rescue incidents, to which aircraft from CFB Summerside were tasked, were located closer to CFB Summerside than to CFB Greenwood. However, from 1981 to 1986, the reverse was true. The majority of search and rescue incidents were located closer to CFB Greenwood than to CFB Summerside. It should be noted that the average incident occurs over two hundred miles or approximately one hour flying time from either location. In addition, although CFB Summerside may have been closer to more incidents than CFB Greenwood, the average difference in distance between the two locations and these incidents is only 35 miles. This translates into approximately ten minutes flying time.

RACE RELATIONS NETWORK

Question No. 272—Mrs. Maheu:

Has a grant been awarded for a feasibility study on setting up the "Race Relations Network" and, if so (a) to whom has the grant been awarded (b) in what amount (c) will the study report be tabled in the House of Commons?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): No.

a) b) and c) not applicable.

CHEQUES RECEIVED BY PRODUCERS FOR DROUGHT ASSISTANCE UNDER THE CANADIAN DROUGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Question No. 276—Mr. Ferguson:

Have any producers received cheques for drought assistance under the Canadian Drought Assistance Program administered by the Department of Agriculture and, if so (a) what number (b) what number have received or will receive letters requiring them to reimburse some or all of those monies because of (i) a correction in the determination of eligibility due to changes in the so-called "trigger yields" (ii) a failure of the Department to correctly cross-reference the application and certification (iii) any other errors made by the Department and, if so, which ones (iv) other factors and, if so, what factors and, for each factor, what is the explanation?

Hon. Charles James Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Please see attached.

a) and b) On March 30, 1990 out of about 120,000 payments made there were 1,608 producers whose payment exceeded the amount which they were actually eligible for under the program. The following is a break-down of that number by reason for overpayment:

i) 1,320 due to a change in yield data supplied by the provincial Crop Insurance Agencies between the time of the interim and the final payment;

ii) 17 due to a failure to correctly cross-reference application and certification forms;

iii) 44 due to processing errors within the program administration;

iv) 55 due to errors made by producers on their application forms;

172 due to the fact that producer payments were less than what had been received under the greenfeed program (50 percent of payments made under the greenfeed program were deducted from CCDAP payments).

REMUNERATION RECEIVED BY THE GOVERNOR OF THE BANK OF CANADA

Question No. 277—Mrs. Sparrow:

Is the government prepared to disclose the details of the remuneration received by the Governor of the Bank of Canada and, if so (a) what is his basic salary (b) does he receive any tax-free benefits and, if so, what are they (c) does he receive any salary supplements and, if so, what are they (d) does he have a pension plan and, if so, is it indexed to the rate of inflation (e) does he receive an annual salary increase and, if so, at what rate?

Hon. Michael Holcombe Wilson (Minister of Finance): 1a. It is Government policy to release the salary ranges but not the specific salary of an individual.

1b. No.

1c. No. See also attached Sec. 6(3)(c) of the Bank of Canada Act.

1d. Yes. As an employee of the Bank of Canada, the Governor is a contributing member of the Bank of Canada Pension Plan. The Governor is treated according to the same rules as other members.

Any pension payments under the Bank plan are adjusted annually on January 1, by the average of the Consumer Price Index for Canada for each month in the twelve-month period ending on the thirtieth day of September in the immediately preceeding year.

1e. There is no statutory provision for automatic increases in the Governor's salary on an annual, or any other basis. (See attached Sec. 6(3)(c) of the Bank of Canada Act).

Article 6.3(c) of the Bank of Canada Act

6.(3)(c) The Governor and Deputy Governor subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, shall be paid such salaries as the directors determine, but no such remuneration shall be in the form of a commission or be computed by reference to the income or profits of the Bank.

RACE RELATIONS NETWORK

Question No. 281—Mrs. Maheu:

Was Ralph Agard of Toronto commissioned in recent months by the Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship) or his office to do a feasibility study on establishing a new race relations network and, if so (a) what were the terms of reference provided to him (b) who was responsible for setting the terms of reference (c) who did Mr. Agard consult (d) did the Minister, his office or the Secretary of State Department have any input into who would be consulted (e) what amount was Mr. Agard paid (f) were other costs incurred by Mr. Agard or any other persons on this project and, if so, what costs (g) since April 1, 1985, has he received any other contracts directly or indirectly from the Minister's office or the Department (h) will the Minister table the study report in the House of Commons?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Yes.

a) According to the terms of reference of the contract, the mandate was to give advice on issues relevant to both Departments (Secretary of State / Multiculturalism and Citizenship Canada) to ensure that the Minister is kept fully aware of all issues facing client groups of the Departments.

b) The Office of the Secretary of State and Minister of State, Multiculturalism and Citizenship.

c) See Annex A.

d) No.

e) $6,075.00

f) Yes. Travel cost of $790.

g) No.

h) This report does not constitute a document that is normally tabled in the House. However, subject to the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, it could be made available by placing a notice of motion for the production of papers on the Order Paper or pursuant to a written request addressed to the Department.

RESPONDENTS / RÉPONDANTS

1. Mr. Aziz Khaki, President
The Committee for Racial Justice
1414 West 12th Avenue
Vancouver, B.C.
V6H 1M8

2. Mr. Valmond Romilly, President
Harambee Centres Canada
3536 Point Grey Road
Vancouver, B.C.
V6R 1A8

3. Ms. Yvonne Blackwood, President
Tropicana Community Services
c/o Royal Bank of Canada
243 Laird Drive
Toronto, Ontario
M4T 3V5

4. Dr. Karen Mock, National Director
League for Human Rights of B'nai Brith Canada
15 Howe Street
Downsview, Ontario
M3H 4Y8

5. Mr. Fo Niemi, Executive Director
Centre de recherche-action sur les relations raciales
1650 Berri, Suite 220
Montreal, Quebec
H2L 4E6

6. Ms. Kamala Jean-Gopie, President
Urban Alliance on Race Relations
229 College Street, Suite 310
Toronto, Ontario
M5T 1R4

7. Dr. Suzanne Birks, President
Canadian Human Rights Foundation
3465 Côte des Neiges, Suite 301
Montreal, Quebec
H3H 1T7

8. Mr. Abayomi Coker, Executive Director
National Capital Alliance on Race Relations
150 Montreal Road, Suite 309
Ottawa, Ontario
K1L 8H2

9. Mr. Benjamin Teitelbaum
Acting National Chairman
Canadian Council on Minority Rights
3575 boul. St. Laurent, bureau 416
Montreal, Quebec
H2X 2T7

10. Dr. Marsha Haug, President
Citizens Against Racial and Religious Discrimination
4815 Maryvale Drive N.E.
Calgary, Alberta
T2A 3A1

11. Mr. Alain Jean-Bart
S.O.S. Racisme Canada
c/o CLSC Park Extension
469 Jean Talon West
Montreal, Quebec
H3N 1R4

INDIVIDUALS APPOINTED TO ANY REGIONAL ADVISORY COUNCILS OF THE FBDB BETWEEN SEPTEMBER 4, 1984 AND JUNE 1, 1989

Question No. 283—Mr. Boudria:

Between September 4, 1984 and June 1, 1989, were any individuals appointed to any of the Regional Advisory Councils of the Federal Business Development Bank and, if so (a) what are their names (b) (i) on what date (ii) to which Council was each one appointed (c) has any of them ceased to be a member and, if so, in each case, on what date?

Hon. Thomas Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Insofar as the Federal Business Development Bank is concerned, the response is as follows:

Provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island

Name	Appointment (d/m/y)	Cessation (d/m/y)
Frank Abram Moores	01-06-87
Frank William Nichols	01-06-87
Anna Albert Guimond	01-06-87
Michael N. Burge	01-06-87
Donna Marie Thompson	01-06-87
W.R. MacKinnon	01-06-87
Lloyd A. Diamond	30-10-87
Douglas Moores	01-06-87	22-03-88

Province of Quebec

Name	Appointment	Cessation
Claude Gérin	17-12-86	31-12-88*
Jacques Dumas	17-12-86	31-12-88*
Blair Touchie	17-12-86	31-12-88*
Raymond Mercier	17-12-86	31-12-88*
Luc Vaillancourt	17-12-86	31-12-88*
Michel Perron	17-12-86	31-12-88*
C. Dino Vondjidis	17-12-86	31-12-88*
Anne Dixon-Grossman	17-12-86	31-12-88*
André Létourneau	27-01-87	31-12-88*

* = Date of mandate expiry

Province of Ontario

Name	Appointment	Cessation
Daniela Anna Clara	01-06-87
John A. Elliott	01-06-87
Yavar Ali Khan	01-06-87
Bob Bohdan Leshchyshen	01-06-87
Aline Lévesque	01-06-87
Glenn Grice	01-06-87
Alex Christie	01-06-87
Barbara Molot Sugarman	01-06-87
Robin Jeffrey	01-06-87	12-09-89

Province of Manitoba and Saskatchewan

Name	Appointment	Cessation
Garth Walls	01-06-87
James F. Fairman	01-06-87
Penny Paget	01-06-87
Wilfried K. Eckl	01-06-87
John Gregory O'Hanlon	01-06-87
Gerald L. Dorge	01-06-87
Ralph C. Yapp	01-06-87
Donna-Marie Gurr	01-06-87
George H. Dram	01-06-87	05-09-89

Province of Alberta and the Northwest Territories

Name	Appointment	Cessation
Gabrielle Decorby	01-06-87
Chuck W. Newton	01-06-87
James Fredrick Kalmacoff	01-06-87
Richard C. Fraser	01-06-87
Rita Pasiciel	01-06-87
E.M. (Al) Davison	01-06-87
William R. Bauman	01-06-87
Richard Hobbs	01-06-87
Nels Nelson	01-06-87	29-01-89

Province of British Columbia and the Yukon

Name	Appointment	Cessation
Robert B. Leeson	01-06-87
Patrick James Lett	01-06-87
Dirk A. Yzenbrandt	01-06-87
Victor E. Kurceba	01-06-87
Olga Ilich	01-06-87
Milton H. Cook	01-06-87
Fred C. Garnett	01-06-87	02-02-90
James Frederick Butchart	01-06-87
Bill Tsakumis	01-06-88	08-09-88

 = Appointed to Board of Directors

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Miss Deborah Grey (Beaver River): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 52, I ask leave to move a motion that the House adjourn to discuss a matter of utmost urgency and importance, namely the constitutional crisis which is building and facing Canada.

There is less than one month remaining for expiration or ratification of the Meech Lake Accord. With a great many threats and predictions of dire consequences that may face Canada on June 24, 1990, I believe that there is need for this House to debate this constitutional dilemma rather than to remain silent.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Beaver River has applied under Standing Order 52 for an emergency debate on a matter which I am sure all members of this House agree is a very important one.

However I must point out that the matter is being raised on a daily basis. The hon. member has another course to follow by which she could debate the matter.

As a consequence, today I am not inclined to grant her application. It has nothing to do with whether or not the matter is serious. We all know it is serious. At this time, and I say at this time, I think it would be inappropriate.

I thank the hon. member for giving me notice, and I thank her for her intervention.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I find your ruling on the application somewhat strange because the question has not been debated in the House recently—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member for Calgary Northeast. It is not appropriate to argue with the Speaker's ruling.

At the time the reform committee considered the whole question of applications for emergency debate, it was recommended that the Speaker give no reasons at all.

All that the Speaker did in this case is remind hon. members that the matter has been raised continually, which of course it has been, and that there is for the hon. member another approach to the matter.

I have great respect for the hon. member, but he is not in order in arguing with the Speaker on an application for an emergency debate.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN RACE RELATIONS FOUNDATION

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): moved that Bill C-63, an act to establish the Canadian Race Relations Foundation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee. He said: Madam Speaker, two years ago this House unanimously adopted Bill C-93, the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. Since the passing of this landmark legislation, this government has shown again and again that it is committed to creating a society whose citizens will be judged not by the colour of their skin, but by the content of their character.

• (1130)

Two weeks ago this House sent forward the legislation to establish a department of multiculturalism and citizenship which is an administrative instrument to execute policies that will aid in nation building. Not too long ago, Bill C-37, an act to establish the Canadian Heritage Languages Institute received second reading and is now being considered by a legislative committee.

Today, it is with great pride that I stand to initiate a debate on the second reading of Bill C-63, an act to establish the Canadian Race Relations Foundation.

Before I go further, I would like to inform the House that before the end of the year I plan to introduce a new citizenship bill. Together, these pieces of legislation will demonstrate the continuing commitment of this government to ideals of multiculturalism and equality.

This legislation reaches the very heart of our identity as Canadians. The Canadian Race Relations Foundation is an initiative based on an unmistakably Canadian approach to the building of our nation. As a people we believe in the limitless potential of Canada and we acknowledge the vast richness our diversity brings. But we know the cultural diversity which we hold so dear is problematic, for the very elements of that diversity are used by racists to denigrate our peoples. That is why this government has given such a high profile to fighting racism and racial discrimination.

In any society plagued by racism and racial discrimination, the struggle against these evils is important. However, in a society such as ours, which has declared itself multicultural, the struggle becomes a moral imperative. Our history is filled with ideas and individuals who have striven to move us closer to realizing the multicultural vision of our country.

[Translation]

The origins of Canadian multiculturalism predate Confederation, with the aboriginal peoples. Subsequently, generations of people from all over the world chose Canadian citizenship over all others. These people, Canada's past and present, have worked hard to build this country.

[English]

Canada's democratic system of government has responded to the character of our diverse people by recognizing the primal importance of human rights. We have witnessed the evolution of citizenship rights in this country from the opening of our first Houses of Parliament, to Canada's first Bill of Rights in 1960 and, more recently, with the signing of our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and our Constitution.

Today, and every day, we must never forget that we are all citizens of the first nation in the world to enshrine the multicultural character of our country in its laws. As both a philosophy and a program, multiculturalism is recognized as a positive and progressive force in our nation building.

Within this multicultural framework, political unity and cultural diversity are both seen as priorities. Thus, through decades of legislative tradition and active Canadian citizenship, our dream for Canada has taken shape. Our dream is of a Canada where differences are respected, where all Canadians enjoy the same opportunities and are judged on their individual merits, where people of all origins can live together with dignity and hope. Yet, in spite of these laws, in spite of our good intentions, this vision has not yet been fully realized in our pursuit of a better society. Sadly, daily examples of these shortcomings are all around us. Racism and racial discrimination have been and continue to be a burden on the soul of this nation. It is a disturbing reality, entire cultures discriminated against, denigrated and exploited, Canadian men and women treated as second-class citizens, living lives filled with bitterness, frustrated hopes and sorrow or, worse still, accepting that they are somehow deserving of the dehumanizing wrath of racism.

Ask Donald Marshall and he will tell you of his years of pain.

[Translation]

Today, we are more conscious of the manifestations of racism around us. I am proud to say that this government leads the way in this new awareness.

We listened to Canadians of all origins and all walks of life, and we have taken their legitimate concerns to heart. In response to their appeals, we developed our multicultural policy, and we have struck out on a new path with new hopes for a more egalitarian Canada.

However, most important is that today we must realize that eliminating discrimination is one of the most effective ways to build a more tolerant society.

[English]

Implicit in our efforts is a faith in the power of the human intellect, in the ability of Canadians to seek and find the truth. In our desire to put the dead ideas of the past to rest and advance as a society, this is the process through which we will move forward into the next decade and shape our history.

We are entering a new era. More than ever before, Canadians will provide the most valuable kind of leadership, and all our leadership will be through the power of ideas. Our Canadian creed will be recognized as one of knowledge and understanding. It will reject the doctrine of racism with all its false assumptions. It will reject the pseudo-scientific concept of race.

Madam Speaker, this is not a minor or purely academic consideration. It is fundamental to our understanding of the truth. The idea of race is based on the long-held but discredited notion that cultural or physical differences are more than external, that they are biological, that a black person is inherently different than a white person, or an East Asian.

Of course, there are profound consequences to accepting that there is more than one race in the human species. When we accept this notion we tend to reinforce claims of biological superiority or inferiority. We make discrimination intellectually feasible. We make it seem rational.

There was never an Aryan race, only a German people living alongside a Jewish people, both members of the human race. Yet we know where this erroneous belief in two separate races eventually led.

Forty years later, in the nation known as South Africa, there is no white race living in the same territory inhabited by members of the black race—only black and white South Africans, equally members of the human family.

Geneticists and anthropologists have discarded the concept of race because they have found it a useless construct for meaningful analysis of differences between groups, yet racist myth-making abounds.

There are countless myths that feed on the same false premise of race. Our task then is two fold: first, to destroy the fraudulent foundation of "race" on which racism rests; second, to address the actual practice of racism—what we call racial discrimination. We must fight discrimination and prejudice everywhere it happens; in our places of work, our schools, our neighbourhoods and in our relations with each other. Without question, this is one of the principal challenges in Canada today. It is a challenge that cannot be met with old ideas, empty rhetoric or simplistic solutions. This is the weakest kind of approach, devoid of any sense of conviction.

• (1140)

Instead, our challenge must be met with measures to promote institutional change, public awareness and education. It calls for political will at all levels of government and, above all, the support of ordinary Canadian women and men.

The Canadian Race Relations Foundation is an essential element in this process of change. It will be an energy centre for our national efforts and I believe it will open the door to a better life for all of us.

[Translation]

The foundation will respond directly to the two areas of concern I described earlier, which are the concept of racism and its practice. Some of the most brillant minds in this country will be involved in studies that will shed light on the actual extent of these problems and help wipe out, once and for all, the false premises and myths used by racists to propound their theories. When we reach this goal, racists will be isolated and clearly perceived as frauds and shameless liars.

The foundation's research will not be of the "ivory tower" kind. In fact, it will generate concrete guidelines that will be useful to all groups concerned about racism.

[English]

These ideas will be circulated and shared and, as a result, the Canadian public will know more about this widespread problem. Yet, we also recognize that the practice of discrimination will persist. Racism will continue to claim its victims. For this reason, the foundation will have a distinctly pro-active mandate. It will help to develop concrete strategies to confront discrimination and conquer it.

Of course, the foundation cannot do it all alone. It will seek to forge partnerships with all segments of society. Programs and training approaches will be developed to assist business, labour and public institutions to free themselves from the web of systemic discrimination.

Madam Speaker, I have great hope for the Canadian Race Relations Foundation. Members of the House know that this foundation will not be a magical solution to bigotry, to prejudice and injustice, even if we would like it to be; but it will contribute to the solution. The foundation will complement the work this government is undertaking with all our partners dedicated to eradicating racism. It will strengthen our efforts to promote our most significant public awareness campaign, commemorated on March 21, the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. As well, the foundation will be a resource for community organizations working in support of equality.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, we Canadians have never been content to stand aside and let inequality, polarized situations, and unhealthy divisiveness take over our communities. We know that the social cost attached to any social injustice that segregates minority groups is very high.

With courage and confidence, we have opted for a common-sense approach to correct past injustice and advance our cause. The Canadian Race Relations Foundation will be a major milestone in our march towards the future.

As part of this continuum, the foundation is also concerned about the present. We could have chosen a better time to affirm ourselves as a diverse nation, to reject arbitrary divisions that separate us from our neighbours and to focus on the fundamental truth that all people on this earth are one.

[English]

I am proud to remind all members of the House of the commitment made by the Prime Minister in this Chamber on September 22, 1988. In the context of the Japanese Canadian Redress Agreement, the Prime Minister said, with the unanimous support of the House:

> We cannot change the past. But we must, as a nation, have the courage to face up to these historical facts—in commemoration of all who suffered these injustices, we will establish a Canadian Race Relations Foundation to foster racial harmony and cross-cultural understanding in Canada.

Madam Speaker, together we will embrace a new age of Canadian wisdom: a diverse Canadian people united as one nation.

[Translation]

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak on a subject I care about, namely Bill C-63 on the Race Relations Foundation.

I believe it is important that this foundation be established in the immediate future as a way to control rising racism. In a country that is looking more and more for scapegoats, ways must be found to increase tolerance among diverse groups.

Before continuing, Madam Speaker, I would like to clarify some points: first, the myth that racial discrimination does not exist in Canada. Unfortunately, that is totally false.

Increasingly, the media report conflicts in all areas of life, from the schools to the legal system and the working world.

Second, the myth that all Canadians are treated the same and that they all have equal opportunity. In principle, that is quite true—it is in the law. In practice, it is a different story.

Just try to rent an apartment if you have a different accent or are a different colour! Although not everyone is racist, there are still far too many racists.

[English]

We, in this society, have a lot to do and the government must show the way and promote inter-racial harmony. It must hire people in senior positions who know and understand what is happening. It must hire people from the milieu who can suggest means by which to create a climate of tolerance and harmony, not by noting the differences, but by accentuating the common grounds. It is only together that we can build a country. Individuals cannot make it on their own.

The aboriginal people of Canada face racial prejudice and discrimination on a daily basis. They are often denied their ancient right of self-determination. They represent but one group living discrimination on a daily basis. What is the present government concretely doing to correct the situation?

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, our society is increasingly uncertain about the future. Free trade, the GST, the Meech Lake Accord all get Canadians' adrenaline levels up. Many causes of tension and hostility are often taken out on the latest arrival, the person perceived as different, even if he or she was born here. Surely someone must be to blame for all our troubles?

No group is safe. Therefore it is important that the Race Relations Foundation not waste years studying the Canadian situation—I think that we all know what it is. From the first year of its mandate, it must be proactive, both by setting an example and by advertising in the media.

• (1150)

[English]

"Barriers between blacks and police must be understood before they can be removed," appeared in The Toronto Star on May 21; "Hate wave," The Ottawa Sun on May 22; "The spectre of racism," The Ottawa Citizen on May 17; "Canadian racism angers Apache," Time Colonist on March 16; "Racism by any other name," the Vancouver Sun on February 26; and, "Rally condemns silence on racial bias," The Edmonton Journal on March 25.

These are a few of the headlines we are reading in our newspapers throughout Canada. Racism is on the rise. It has been slowly building up in the last few years and is ready to explode as soon as a crisis occurs. Crisis situations are now part of our daily lives. The country has never been so divided, so lost, and so insecure. We can thank the Conservative government for that.

When children are showing contempt for other children because of a difference in race or culture, we have a lot of questions to ask ourselves.

[Translation]

Often without even knowing what they are really saying, Madam Speaker, children make statements which reflect the prejudice of the adults around them. I am not saying that all adults teach their children to be intolerant, although too many certainly do, but through their comments and jokes, they sometimes project a degrading image of all the men and women they feel are different. Their children are the adults of tomorrow and it is on the basis of the values they have received when they were tots that they will pass judgment on others later on.

Madam Speaker, there are already too many stereotypes and clichés we must seek to destroy and it is a task for pioneers. It is essential that the Canadian Racial Relations Foundation should act without delay. It should not follow in the footsteps of this government which, by failing to make a quick decision in connection with the Sikh turban issue, only succeeded in aggravating the situation. If the Foundation wants to justify its existence, it should go ahead and take preventive measures. It should not only react, because then it would already be too late.

Madam Speaker, I want now to read to you the mandate of the foundation, for it is very wide in scope and we should watch very closely to make sure that things are really happening, and that the Foundation is not satisfied only with drafting expert reports which will end up on shelves and represent its greatest expenditure.

The purpose of the Canadian Race Relations Foundation is to undertake research to further understanding of the nature, causes and effects of racism; to assist the public and private sectors in eliminating racial discrimination; to act as an information centre about race relations resources and establishing links with a great many educational institutions including libraries; to facilitate the exchange of information relating to race relation policies and programs; to assist in the development of professional standards; to increase public awareness of the importance of eliminating racial discrimination; to support the development of effective policies and programs for the elimination of racism and racial discrimination.

When we look closely, we see how easy it is to make a lot of nice speeches without actually doing anything. We must practice what we preach—first within the government, then within the Foundation—by putting into key positions members of every minority who know the problem and can suggest short-, medium- and long-term solutions. It is too easy to say we understand a situation when we have not experienced it. The Minister would probably reply that it is not necessary to be sick to understand the disease, but it is then easier to understand what is happening and to propose solutions to day-to-day problems.

It is those who have experienced prejudice and discrimination who can best come up with corrective and preventive measures.

[English]

Intolerance is on the rise. I would like to cite an article from The Toronto Star of February 23 that states the following:

> Many Canadians pay lip service to the ideals of tolerance to ethnic minorities while harbouring racist or discriminatory sentiment, a new poll suggests.
>
> "Reading between the lines, there seems to be a lot of bigots out there; it may be that up to one-third of Canadians are bigots" pollster Angus Reid says of the survey of 1,505 adults conducted in February 7-15.
>
> The Angus Reid-Southam News polls found that a majority of Canadians (54 per cent) believe intolerance toward ethnic minorities is on the rise and that recent incidents of discrimination are indicative of a darkening mood in race relations across the country.
>
> Generally, 60 per cent of Canadians accept the proposition that "treating minority groups with generosity" is a special and desirable aspect of the country's character.
>
> But when it comes to specifics an equal number, (59 per cent) say ethnic minorities should abandon their customs and language and become "more like most Canadians".

Up to now, the government has not done much to prove its commitment to racial harmony. It seems to regularly add fuel to the fire. The refugee backlog clearance program is but an example of their lack of commitment to those who wish to become part of our Canadian society.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, we are seriously wondering for whom the government wants to create the Canadian Race Relations Foundation. Does it want to award research contracts to certain people by taking budget funds previously given to support groups? Unless they have other funds available we have not heard about—

In this era of budget cuts, it is important that the money be allocated fairly and effectively, and not only to support researchers whose reports will be read then set aside for an indefinite period of time or will be used for speeches and conferences. The government must act now. It must bring the fire under control before it is too late.

The main purpose of this bill, Madam Speaker, is to establish the Canadian Race Relations Foundation with a view to facilitate the exchange, sharing and application of knowledge and expertise in order to contribute to the elimination of racism and all forms of racial discrimination in Canada.

I can only support such a bill while, at the same time, wondering when the government will take concrete action. When indeed will it prove to us that harmony within this country is a priority? When will the government consider important to invest in what is working well instead of making cutbacks? When will it understand that it is essential to work with the people in the field who are the real experts? It is certainly not through cutbacks that this government will show us its commitment to social peace. Or was that just more idle talk?

• (1200)

Madam Speaker, this government has not been sensitive to the problems of pay equity and discrimination in the workplace. A study published on March 21 by the Canadian Ethnocultural Council shows that only 2.9 per cent of the public service officers are from visible minorities. Such percentage is far from being representative of their place in the workforce, of which they make up 6.4 per cent.

Is that the example the government is setting? More to the point, how can a government preach something it does not want to practice? It seems to me that this is another case of double standards.

[English]

In its 1989 annual report the Canadian Human Rights Commission stated that visible minorities were underrepresented in occupations throughout the country and that hiring and promotion practices reinforced their present concentrations in less well-paying jobs.

What is the Conservative government doing to change the situation? Keeping people at a lower financial level of society does not enable them to feel pride in their work and in themselves. Ignoring this fact will not cause it to correct itself. I agree that there is a lot to be done, but saying it is not enough. It is high time the government makes a move to correct the situation, not in a year or so, but now.

What is the good of having a race relations foundation if we do not start doing what we can to cut off useless tensions? If the Conservative government cares about Canada, it will start by reconstructing the Canadian society by investing rather than cutting funds. It is not normal for a government that wants to be taken seriously when it talks about racial harmony to start by cutting funds to the Heritage Languages Program of Secretary of State.

This program was designed to promote racial harmony and national unity by providing an opportunity for the preservation and understanding of ethnic languages and cultures. Such actions promoted the positive values associated with cultural preservation and promotion and, moreover, heritage language training provides Canadians with a competitive edge in the global economy. The net result of a prosperous economy and high standard of living is greater unity and harmony.

In a time of hardship and social tension it is even more important to promote understanding and tolerance. It is not the time to cut and have people suddenly feel like second class citizens.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, we must change people's attitudes, and we cannot do this with words and reports. We must act. It is high time that all the media—radio, television and the newspapers—started reflecting Canada's cultural diversity and included more members of ethnic and racial minorities within their ranks.

The Conservative Government should start paying close attention to what is going on if it really wants a united Canada. It must show leadership. It must have more employees—in decision-making positions—representing these minorities. How can it ask others to do what it does not do itself? It must get an example.

Madam Speaker, if we want Canada to remain a nation, we must learn to live together. It is important that we learn to accept each others' differences and that we unite to create a positive force on whose diversity will make this country a better place to live. We must stop wanting to change everyone to correspond to our own image. We must be willing to discover, to assimilate and to share. A country can only survive when people live in harmony. Discord only breeds destruction.

Madam Speaker, the Conservative Government must invest in the human potential that exists in this country. The Race Relations Foundation is a first step, but from the very beginning it must be in touch with the support groups that are most familiar with the problems.

The foundation will only be useful if it is truly aware of the problems and provides short—and long-term solutions. It must be willing to look at the real problems and make a genuine commitment to implement solutions. Policies must be followed by concrete action. Otherwise, the foundation will be just one more agency receiving funds to write papers that will not be taken seriously by anyone.

In concluding, I want to say that while I accept the concept of the Canadian Race Relations Foundation, I think it is important to see what kind of concrete policies will come out of the foundation. Let us hope that this time, the Conservative government will make a real contribution to the unity of this country.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to stand today to speak on Bill C-63, an act to establish the Canadian Race Relations Foundation. We support this proposal to establish a race relations foundation in Canada, which was a part of the Japanese Canadian redress settlement. We must remember, as we debate this bill, the terrible injustices that were perpetrated against Canadians of Japanese origin during World War II. I want to take just a moment to quote from one of the summaries of the Council of Japanese Canadians.

> Between 1941 and 1949 the Canadian government forced 21,000 Canadian residents of Japanese ethic origin from their homes, confined most in detention camps, sold off all their real and personal property, and forced them to scatter across Canada or to be shipped to war-torn Japan. Over 17,000 of those victimized by the Canadian government were Canadian citizens. The government claimed that this denial of the civil and human rights of these Canadians was necessary to ensure Canada's security.
>
> Today, government documents show this claim to be completely false. They show that the treatment of Japanese Canadians during and after the Second World War was motivated by racism and political opportunism.
>
> They show ministers of the Crown used their emergency powers to achieve a political objective: the destruction of the Japanese Canadian community in British Columbia.

This is to the shame of all Canadians. For 42 years, victims who were scattered across Canada, families that were broken up and scattered because of these atrocities, tended to internalize their feelings of hurt and humiliation, while many Canadians added shame and stigma to these wounds. Their community in British Columbia, and in my riding of Vancouver East which was the heartland of the Japanese Canadian community, was never re-established.

In the early 1940s, CCF members of Parliament, particularly Angus MacInnis from British Columbia, spoke out against these injustices. They in turn received much abuse. The NDP continued to call for an end to the War Measures Act and continued to press for the need for an official apology and redress for these great injustices.

Prior to the last election and following the earlier United States settlement, the Government of Canada finally took action, and we supported it. Along with an official statement from the Prime Minister acknowledging the injustices, modest individual settlements were made to survivors. There was a commitment to fund community activities and $24 million for a new Canadian Race Relations Foundation was approved.

I was present at a number of gatherings of Japanese Canadians. They celebrated the redress and commemorated the events of the 1940s in such a way as to ensure that these injustices would never be forgotten or repeated. I was very moved by the feelings that showed in the faces of elders. I remember so many of the older women, who were undoubtedly widows by this time, sitting quietly around the walls of a large room. It showed in their faces that their pride was restored. The misplaced guilt, which we as a country imposed on them, was assuaged.

• (1210)

Their children and grandchildren, who are leaders in our communities today, had fought hard for justice and for redress. They established a very strong organization, the National Council of Japanese Canadians.

We must continue to recall this and other acts of racism and discrimination in our past, as well as in our recent history. It is important to do this in order to prevent such acts from ever recurring and to make people think more about the racist attitudes that are all too prevalent today.

On March 21 I said:

> History shows that racism has been a sickness in Canadian society and is a cancer that is growing. In 1914 East Indians on the Komagata Maru, who were British subjects seeking refuge, were turned away at the Port of Vancouver.
>
> Jews were refused sanctuary on our eastern shores in 1939 and many died in concentration camps. In 1885 racist legislation imposed a head tax on Chinese immigrants, followed in 1923 by an Immigration Act to exclude Chinese immigration altogether, and men who had built our railroads were isolated and deprived of rights.

They were deprived of having their families in Canada.

> Blacks who settled in Nova Scotia—

—who were among our earliest settlers were ghettoized and continue to be ghettoized. They suffer discrimination to this day.

> Redress for Japanese Canadians who suffered during World War II will not erase the hurt. But the greatest tragedy in Canada has been the treatment of aboriginal people who shared their land with us. They continue to suffer from institutionalized racism in every facet of their lives.
>
> Over the past year we have witnessed racial discrimination in our justice system in the case of Donald Marshall and Helen Betty Osborne. We heard Philippe Rushton's racist theories. There were frequent complaints about stereotyping in the media. There were ongoing protests against turbans in the RCMP and racist pins circulated from Alberta. And skinheads continued to recruit young people to facism.

Only this month we were deeply saddened and sickened at the desecration of Jewish graves and all that this symbolizes.

Fortunately, most Canadians abhor such racist acts that are, of course, perpetuated by a very small minority. We may abhor inside ourselves and within our circles of friends and family, but not enough Canadians express this abhorrence publicly.

I would like to come back to Bill C–63, which is to establish the Canadian Race Relations Foundation. As I said earlier, part of the funding, the $24 million endowment which is to be given to establish this foundation, was as a result of the Japanese Canadian community. I understand now that it is $12 million on behalf of the Japanese Canadian community and $12 million additional.

In his press release some time ago the minister stated that one of the purposes of tabling this legislation is that it underlines and strengthens the commitment to equality for all Canadians expressed in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Multiculturalism Act.

I would like to comment particularly on that point. I think it is very important, and I am sure representatives of many ethnocultural organizations across the country will agree, that this foundation, in conjunction with the government and all of us, must really work to strengthen our Charter of Rights and Freedoms to adequately protect minority rights. There is increasing concern about this across Canada. The Canadian Ethnocultural Council has presented this, as has a group called Coalition 33 which is working specifically on this. It is located in Vancouver.

There are concerns that minority rights are not adequately protected under the Charter. Some wanted Section 15, the equality section of our Charter, to be entrenched in Section 16 of the McKenna accord, which would reaffirm equality.

The Canadian Ethnocultural Council asked for entrenchment of multiculturalism in the body of the Constitution in the same way that the languages of the original two founding nations and the aboriginal peoples should be entrenched. They also call for reaffirmation of the Charter to be added to the McKenna accord and removal of Section 33, the notwithstanding clause.

Coalition 33 has said that Section 33 of our constitutional Charter permits the federal or provincial governments to ignore our basic rights and freedoms by using the notwithstanding clause. This is a very serious situation and I think they are doing an excellent job of beginning to document why they feel this way and why it is important to have some changes to protect minority rights. We cannot take this for granted.

I hope the foundation will research these questions and will recommend solutions, if we have not found solutions by the time the foundation is established, and that the federal government and First Ministers will ensure the protection of minority rights.

The minister also mentioned the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. I, quite frankly, do not see that this is a primary responsibility of the new foundation. As we have said repeatedly in this House, in committee and elsewhere, it is the responsibility of this government to adequately monitor and implement the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. It is particularly the responsibility of the Minister of Multiculturalism, who should be the lead minister in this regard.

I will not belabour the point, but that is why we felt it was so important to have this spelled out in amendments to Bill C–18, in the new Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship, particularly in the role of the minister. Unfortunately, this was refused. As I say, I will not dwell on that again, but this kind of abrogation of responsibility really creates cynicism in people. I hope very much that none of the disappointment will be repeated in this foundation as we move toward its implementation.

The minister stated in a press release of January 31 that the foundation "will play a vital role in the national effort to rid our society of the scourges of racism and racial discrimination by undertaking research, raising public awareness, and assisting business, labour and government and public and private institutions in their efforts in this area".

This is very, very important. First, let us look at research. One of the major areas in which the foundation could start is in analyzing the stereotypes and myths which exist in society today and are being perpetuated, often by the media I am sorry to say. They must document and present accurate facts.

It is important, for example, that we look at public attitudes to immigration where there is frequently an undercurrent of racism. We need to determine what these attitudes are, dispel the myths, provide accurate data about the positive effects of immigration in Canada and make positive recommendations in this area to the government.

I think of one other example of the kind of myths that are perpetuated. This often happens when there is stress in the community, as we have had in Vancouver with increasing immigration. It is grossly unfair that Hong Kong immigrants have been blamed for this.

• (1220)

When this issue was researched more carefully, we found that it was speculators who were escalating the price of housing; that sellers of homes, who wanted to get the most for their houses, certainly contributed to it; and that a lack of adequate planning, particularly on the part of the city, led to the so-called "monster houses" which were built, not by immigrants, but by developers. This shows how common myths need to be dealt with and facts presented in the process of increasing understanding and, hopefully, warm acceptance of immigrants. This is certainly a major role for the new foundation.

It would be extremely important that a foundation on race relations also work with aboriginal groups who have experienced the greatest degree of racism in all facets of their lives. There are many, many skilled persons and organizations available to assist in this process and to document facts. There are many skilled people from the aboriginal communities who have public relations skills and art skills who could help with public programs which would promote greater understanding.

Media watch programs are very important. It is very important that a new foundation would monitor and sensitize the media when there are incidents of stereotyping or discrimination. I could mention a number of them. I was involved in one myself when I was speaking in Saskatoon to the Chinese cultural society there. The headline in the paper the next day read: "Chinese say" so and so. Of course the people at that meeting were very offended because this was implying that they were not Canadians, not Canadians of Chinese origin, but that they were Chinese. It was very misleading. So the changing of media attitudes is very important, not only of reporters, who are often not at fault, but of the people who develop headlines as well.

Another function of the new foundation would be to raise public awareness. It is extremely important this new foundation work through existing networks, and organizations and the media directly. It is very important that this not be an isolated academic kind of foundation. I assume they will be contracting out projects as well. They need to consult with persons who are directly affected and people who are working with race relations.

I would like to mention two people whom I know. Sadie Kuehn in Vancouver and Olivia Chow in Toronto are both people who have worked, not only to document racism in their communities—the black community and the Chinese community—but have run as school trustees and worked to change the school system to have positive race relations. Those are the kind of people we need to have involved.

We need to encourage more action in the public as a whole and raise public awareness. I was reminded at a meeting on Sunday that it is not good enough just to be concerned, that it is not good enough for us just to speak out here in Ottawa. Individuals must write to the editors of our papers locally to counteract the racist attitudes that are often expressed. We need people phoning in to hotline shows where perhaps there is the worst kind of bigotry expressed.

Another objective of the foundation is to counteract discrimination in justice. I think we would all agree that it is very important to concentrate on early education. Teacher training and retraining must focus not just on facts, although any foundation could help to provide facts, but on cultural sensitization as well. It is very important that people be tuned in to the cultural sensitivities. To do that requires more than the help of a foundation, of course, but I am sure that could be part of training programs that they might stimulate. We need changes to the curriculum to ensure that accurate racial and ethnic history is taught, which is very important. And, of course, there should be many kinds of multicultural–multiracial events in schools.

Will the foundation that is being proposed be able to provide resources for schools and for this kind of pubic education? I hope it will. I hope there will be funds also to commission films and documentaries, particularly for TV, which will present positive images as well as accurate facts.

The foundation should also be able to contract out work to ethnic groups to produce accurate ethnic history with positive images. I am thinking particularly of the kind of thing that the black community does during Black History Month. This has been a very effective way, not only of bringing together the many diverse elements in their own community—and it certainly helps some of us to be more aware of the diversity within that community as well—but of making people proud of the contribution of black people in the early history of Canada and angry at the intolerance and racism that people have experienced.

I wonder if the foundation will also research past injustices such as the Chinese head tax, discrimination against Ukrainian, Italian and German Canadians and the Komagata Maru incident. There has been a lot of work done on this already and we do not want to delay government action in acknowledging particularly the Chinese head tax and the Inclusion Act, and its meeting with the Chinese Canadian National Council regarding its very modest redress proposals. However, while we do not want to delay government action, certainly a foundation would be concerned with such documentation.

The foundation will be a national resource located in Toronto. I would like to point out to the minister that some westerners, with our usual paranoia, usually paranoia based on facts and experience, may feel some concern that the foundation should be very much sensitive to racism as it is expressed in all areas of Canada and should not be just central Canada oriented. It is very important to have links to the different regions. In British Columbia, my province, racism has largely been related, although not exclusively, to Asian people. In Nova Scotia I am sure the concerns of the black community will be uppermost. Of course, concerns of aboriginal communities is a top priority.

The foundation, the minister says, will work with business and labour. I hope that this means they will look at job ghettos and the exploitation of visible minority people who work as domestics, as farm workers and in the garment industries. I hope it means that employers will be pressed again, although this is a government responsibility as well, into implementing mandatory meaningful employment equity.

I also hope that affirmative action will be encouraged in a different way within union leadership and membership. I have been at conferences where union leaders have asked how they can reach out more to minority people, both as members and in the community. The promotion of languages classes related to the workplace might be another thing that would be of concern to the foundation.

It is interesting that the government mentions government and public institutions as being another area of concern, but mentions it last. I would say that it should be first. We cannot continue to condone systemic discrimination in our public and government services. This is a job which, of course, is the responsibility of government and of the Human Rights Commission, which is grossly underfunded, but I am sure the foundation will also be concerned with this and, hopefully, will shame the government into some action since it does not seem to be able to take it on its own.

• (1230)

This bill will be going to committee. I hope that we will be able to ask more specific questions and have open discussions. I also hope that the minister will be much more open to the opinions of witnesses and the opinions of all of us on committee, all party members, and their suggestions. This has not been the case in the past unfortunately.

The answers to many of these questions will depend largely on the selection of the board members for the new Race Relations Foundation. It will depend on how they are selected, how they are appointed, and their links with the larger community.

If there are more political appointees by the Secretary of State and the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship, this will destroy confidence in a new foundation. It is unfortunate that this is the way this government acts. The minister himself has done some political recruiting of his own race relations network which develops cynicism in the race relations community generally.

They are quite capable of developing their own networks. They do not need the minister to recruit his friends to recognize and fund a network and take funds from legitimate existing organizations. I think it is an insult to autonomous organizations. We do not want this to happen in a new foundation.

It is very important that there be wide consultation, as the minister has mentioned, but it needs to go further than that. There need to be nominations of board members by groups that are concerned with racism and groups that have knowledge in this field, so that this becomes an objective group, not a group of political appointees.

Board members will include academics but should not be only academics. It should include on the board persons in the front lines who know the hurt of racism and whose anger demands action. It should include representatives of labour, business, ethnic communities, ethnocultural organizations, and human rights activists. These must not be partisan appointees.

If a race relations foundation is to fulfil its mandate, there must be a commitment to develop practical strategies for changing the racist attitudes in individuals, in communities, and in institutions. This is what would be useful to communities, not only academic studies.

The committee must look at all these questions. In particular, we must hear from Dr. Lloyd Stanford who, I understand, prepared an excellent report that went to the Department of Secretary of State, then was hidden. We have tried every means that we can think of to have access to that report, which I have been told by objective people is a very important report. We do not know why the government has repressed this information. Even the Library of Parliament has not been able to get access to it. It is very important that we hear directly from Dr. Stanford in committee.

In closing, I would like to quote an activist woman of colour, whom I mentioned earlier, Sadie Kuehn, who made the following statement. I think she was doing this in relation to art projects that might be developed in the school community. The title of the article is Racism Hurts and reads:

> Racism hurts the individuals who are subject to personal humiliation and pain, to insults and rejection, to stereotyping and name calling, the racist jokes and denial of opportunity, and sometimes even to physical violence—all because of the colour of their skin or their ethnic origin.
>
> It especially hurts children—young people seeking their way in the world, only to discover that many of the dreams open to their classmates are closed to them. During these formative years, such experiences can have a long-term impact, creating an acceptance of others having a right to treat them in unjust and degrading ways.
>
> But the hurt goes beyond individual victims. Racism poisons the entire community where it is allowed to live. A community riddled with hatred and fear can never achieve its potential in success and richness. Its culture will be inevitably distorted— either explicitly, or by omission of the contributions of those who would have a great deal to offer if circumstances allowed.
>
> If racism is a product as well as a producer of fear, how can it be challenged? What can be done?

I am sure that a foundation on race relations is not the complete answer. It is only people speaking out who can really make changes, each of us in our own hearts, in our attitudes, and in our communities. But certainly we support the proposal to establish a Race Relations Foundation. We hope there will be broad hearings that will allow people in different regions of Canada to be heard. It would be an excellent opportunity for a committee to go to different communities. I offer the support of our party in that respect.

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Madam Speaker, I rise in support of this initiative on the Race Relations Foundation. I say this with a little regret, because one of the reasons we support such a foundation is its obvious need, a need that is unfortunate simply by its identification.

As the member who spoke a few minutes ago indicated, in Canada there is in a different climate, an atmosphere that we as Canadians cannot take great pride in noting. In fact, as a writer in one of the local papers indicated the other day, there seems to be a resurfacing of xenophobia, a hatred, a fear of foreigners, "a state of mind that has been spreading with increasing speed in the so-called civilized west whose people are beginning to vent their anxieties in a variety of ways, and in the process an old historical verity is repeated that those who suffer first are the ones who are widely perceived to be as 'other'".

If this foundation is to address anything, it is to address that particular notice or identification of a state of mind developing in Canada, most unfortunate in its occurrence. I say that it is unfortunate because we have come slowly to a realization that the character of this country is in a state of evolution, a state of development, and a state of change.

Canada is first and foremost a multicultural country, a country that identifies itself as one, wherein all races and cultures of origin have an equality of position that suggests to each and everyone that there be dignity and a sense of pride expressed by each of the individual participants in those communities with a reciprocal respect by all other individuals from similar communities.

When I said I would support this foundation with some regret, it is because that need underscores the fact that there has not yet been an acceptance throughout all our country that the nature or fabric of our society is fundamentally, unequivocally, irrefutably multicultural.

We need instruments, symbols, and institutions that drive home the point that each and every one of us lives as individuals in collectives, all on our own in support of one another but always as Canadians whose rights are never in question because of our racial origin, our country of origin, our culture of origin, or our language.

I wanted to take a second look at this legislation and how and in what context we were establishing this type of a foundation. I went to the Statistics Canada figures for Ontario and Quebec, being from central Canada, and noted that in Ontario in 1986 the percentage of the population that identified itself as something other than French or English in origin was 62 per cent, and 34 per cent indicated multiple ethnic origin. There is already an evolving society wherein members are intermarrying and producing children who are no longer as attached to the past tradition or culture of their parents but one that is evolving and shaping a new Canadian dynamic.

• (1240)

In Toronto, the city where I come from, those figures are at least as startling. I am sure it would surprise many members in this House to know that in the population of Toronto, which is somewhat over three million, 70 per cent identifies itself as being neither French nor English and 28 per cent indicated a multiple ethnic origin.

Those figures are important for those of us who indicate, as did the previous speaker, that we have to consider this not only in the context of a multicultural act but also in the context of all constitutional debates, wherein we are seeing a debate centred upon two poles: anglophone and francophone, English Canada and French Canada.

We have an image of a monolithic society that is homogeneous in the extreme, but those statistics would suggest the complete opposite. In fact an entity like Ontario with a population of nine million plus is no longer so easily identifiable as a bastion of anglophone–English Canada but really a paragon of multicultural, multiracial society that should be viewed in the context of evolution toward a higher goal.

If I was able to quote those kinds of figures for Ontario, we can also take a look at Quebec. In Quebec, according to Canada Statistics figures, 17 per cent of the population identifies itself as being neither French nor English in origin, and 7 per cent of that population identifies itself as having more than one ethnic origin other than English or French. In Montreal, 36 per cent of the population is neither English nor French in origin.

That draws to mind that what we need to do in our country is to come to firm grips with the realities that the demographics now present us. We have not had that opportunity. Unfortunately much of the debate has centred around rights provincially and transferred on to race, culture, and language. In a truly multicultural society there should be no such threat. All cultures and languages deserve and indeed have a right to have the security of being able to generate the dynamics that are required for that culture or that language to continue to grow, to continue to develop in the context of a Canada in evolution, an evolution that takes into consideration the very valid, valuable construction and participation that have taken place in the past and continue to take place today.

As we look toward this foundation I recall what has happened over the course of the last several days in my own city of Toronto. I look again with regret that we need such a foundation in order to break down the walls of fear, the walls of ignorance, the walls of suspicion, and the walls of insecurity.

It is unfortunate that when we speak of multiculturalism the focus turns out to be one of racism. I say that knowing full well that the recent incident in Toronto that appeared to be racially motivated has now generated a series of very hostile reactions and very counterproductive comments by the press, officials and spokespersons from the various communities.

As my colleague from Montreal who spoke before me has indicated, what we need is a new direction that is positive in its promotion, in its engendering of those new symbols that hold Canada up as a land of tolerance, as a land of equality where we no longer simply pay lip service to these ideals but we live them out. We can only live them out if those symbols have the substance which many of us hold dearly and promote. If this bill is a small first step in that direction, it should be lauded.

I have some concerns that I hope the minister and his government will address. I am very concerned that this foundation not displace the rest of the advances that we are beginning to make in the whole concept of establishing multiculturalism as the ethos of this nation. In that light, I was disappointed some weeks ago when the federal government established a Heritage Languages Institute with a budget of a mere $6 million, but at the same time having a Department of Communications continue with a budget of approximately $300 million for the promotion of two official languages in areas outside of provincial jurisdiction. In the context of the figures that I gave a few moments ago, if we are to give substance to the principles which we espouse in bills such as this one, then what we need to do is put our money as well behind those symbols, behind those institutions.

It is very valid for this government or for any government of Canada to promote the two official languages. It is even more valid for that government to expend funds so that its citizens develop a sense of pride, a sense of belonging to a country that is of their making and theirs to hand to their descendants.

Last week we saw the establishment of a multicultural department mandated to promote "all" ethnic communities and yet retaining a minimal budget, just as it had when it was another department of the Secretary of State.

If we are going to give substance to those principles which we say identify Canada and its values, then surely we must put behind that the substance of dollars to indicate that we are serious.

Do not get me wrong, Madam Speaker, there is no one in the ethnocultural communities who is out there on bended knee, cap in hand, begging for money from the federal trough. That is not the case. My colleague, the critic for multiculturalism, has spoken eloquently on that. Rather, they are looking for substantive indications that there is an element of seriousness about where the government is going its policies, its programs and in the debates that affect the nation.

• (1250)

Today we are talking about establishing a foundation. Half the budget is going to redress the wrongs that the government on behalf of Canada has recognized were committed in World War II against its Canadians of Japanese origin. It is perhaps a first step, a very small first step to recognizing that, as a country, we have a great way to go to redress some of the errors that we as a society have perpetrated upon ourselves and people of other origins. I noticed that the previous speaker mentioned those of Ukrainian, Germanic, Chinese and Italian origins. Those are black marks on our history. We cannot rewrite history, but certainly we can make an admission of the errors that we no longer want to repeat.

In the whole context of establishing this new error free Canada, if you will, establishing a paragon of social organization, the one thing that is forgotten is the vision of Canada that people from ethnocultural communities present. Perhaps, as an aside, this debate gives us an opportunity to reflect on the fact that while the country is being torn by petty rivalries among the provinces and egos of politicians with respect to the Constitution, 40 per cent of the population in Canada have no part in rendering those kinds of decisions, those kinds of games and gamesmanship that is part and parcel of the Constitutional debate. Almost regrettably, a true vision of a united Canada, where all provinces and all peoples are treated with the kind of equality and deference that we would accord to ourselves, is coming from the ethnocultural and multicultural community.

I said that we need the symbols, we need the institutions that allow us to permeate these principles and these concepts throughout the whole gamut of society. Yet in a two hour program aired a week ago by CBC, a Crown corporation, discussing the question "Is Canada dividing itself?", a bare seven minutes made some reference to what the program identified as 40 per cent of Canadians being of origins non-Anglo, non-French. Not one representative from that 40 per cent of Canadians, who have a different view and a different vision, I dare say a very dynamic and energetic vision of Canada, was deemed worthy to be present in the debates. This in a two hour program by a Crown corporation that receives the bulk of its funds from the Canadian government.

Those are not complaints by the ethnocultural community. They are complaints of Canadians who want to see this country together, where people can live in harmony and in dignity, where no one suffers the humiliation of being scorned, being put aside or, even worse, discriminated against.

This foundation can take those first steps to help redress some of that. The onus is on the minister through his department and through the instruments of the Multiculturalism Act and the Department of Multiculturalism to be able to promote and initiate programs that are needed to have a change in the mindset that is tearing all Canadians apart. Never again should we be able to stand in this House and listen to errors and sins of commission and omission that the previous speaker indicated Canadians are guilty of having committed.

We have to generate a spirit of positiveness and security. Without that, we lapse into unease and unease translates into a heightened sense of nationalism and ethnicity, both of which breed xenophobia and bring with them racism and discrimination.

In Canada, we have the opportunity to meet a challenge and to forge a new direction that requires a change of policies, not only on multiculturalism, official languages, immigration and refugees, but we need instruments and leadership to convince all Canadians that multiculturalism is something to be proud of rather than to be feared.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? The hon. member for Vancouver East.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member if he thinks there is a connection between the increasing racism in society, particularly in Canada in the last few years, and the economic policies and the economic situation that we have all been very concerned about.

If we look at what is happening in Canada, particularly in the last three or four years, we find a society that is increasingly insecure. For example, people were very worried about free trade. People are becoming increasingly concerned as various social programs are cut: family allowances, pensions, the Canada Assistance Plan, unemployment insurance, the type of safety net that people have expected.

There has been a tremendous housing problem in some of the largest urban communities, certainly in his community and mine, Toronto and Vancouver respectively. The jobs of people who are living close to immigrants in some of the downtown areas, the inner city areas, are not very secure. Their parents are worried about the future for their kids and being able to get them into education, and education costs are going up and assistance is going down.

Does the hon. member think, as I do, that the economic situation creates insecurity in people and is responsible, to quite a large degree, for the fear of immigration which in turn translates into increasing fear of coloured immigration perhaps and other acts of racism?

Mr. Volpe: Madam Speaker, it appears that the hon. member is in sync with the realities that we promote on this side of the House. In a very brief answer to her question, the word is yes.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Would the House be in agreement if we were to call it one o'clock and allow the hon. member to be recognized after Question Period, instead of having him start over again?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Madam Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House met at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

RAOUL WALLENBERG

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the distinguished International Commission of Inquiry on the Fate and Whereabouts of Raoul Wallenberg has concluded, and I quote chairman Irwin Cotler: "the evidence is incontrovertible that he did not die in 1947 as the Soviets claim" and "we have a responsibility to humanity to determine the fate and whereabouts of Wallenberg who is credited with saving more lives during the Second World War than any single government".

The commission reviewed thousands of pages of evidence, documents Wallenberg's years of imprisonment, releases new information including eyewitness reports of his fate, and includes discussion with the late Andrei Sakharov who worked closely with the committee.

The report concludes: first, Wallenberg did not die in 1947; it is compelling that he was alive in the 1950s and 1960s and credible that he was alive in the 1970s and 1980s; second, the burden of proof is on the Soviets to rebut this evidence which they have not done; and, third, without contrary evidence, the committee must assume he may still be alive and should be released.

In welcoming President Gorbachev today, I ask the Prime Minister, in the interest of Canada's only honourary citizen, Wallenberg, to appeal to President Gorbachev for Wallenberg's release if he is still alive and, at least, to fully disclose the fate and whereabouts of this lost hero of the holocaust.

* * *

SOVIET JEWRY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham—Whitchurch—Stouffville): Mr. Speaker, I rise to salute and congratulate one of the true leaders of the world, President Mikhail Gorbachev. As a result of his introduction of glasnost and perestroika into the Soviet Union, breathtaking changes have occurred in the U.S.S.R. and, indeed, in all of eastern Europe.

As chairman of the Canadian Parliamentary Group for Soviet Jewry, I particularly want to thank Mr. Gorbachev who is visiting our country today for permitting thousands of Jews to leave the Soviet Union. In 1986, only 914 Jews were given exit visas. This year it is expected that 150,000 Jews will be allowed to leave the country.

I would, however, ask Mr. Gorbachev to do his utmost to condemn and eradicate the ugly anti-Semitic actions which are occurring in the U.S.S.R. While glasnost has meant a more open society where freedom of speech is more prevalent, it is most regrettable that it has given rise to increased anti-Semitic actions. We urge him to curb these insidious actions.

In closing, I salute Mr. Gorbachev for writing and orchestrating a new chapter of hope and good will for the peoples of the U.S.S.R. and many east bloc countries. The struggle has just begun and there will be many problems, but are on the right path.

* * *

[Translation]

COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications was given a petition with over 150,000 names yesterday asking the government to ban children's television programs that suggest violence as a normal way to solve conflicts. Almost all such programming comes from the United States. In that country, the average number of violent acts in cartoon shows was 41 per hour. The minister's answer was to refer the problem to the CRTC.

[English]

The Minister of Communications is all talk and no action. Here is what we propose to deal with this serious matter.

The Broadcast Act is at the report stage in the House. We are not going to deal with it until the fall. Therefore, let us amend it and give the CRTC the power and direction to Canadianize children's programs, that is, to make them less violent than the American programs.

S. O. 31

ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, one of the final statements by the former Minister of the Environment was to commit Canada to stabilizing carbon dioxide emissions by the year 2000.

On Friday, May 18, 1990, the Minister of Forestry reassured us all that the minister's commitment is a government commitment. However, last Wednesday, the Prime Minister waffled on the stabilization of carbon dioxide emissions. On Thursday, the new part-time Minister of the Environment repudiated the commitment, while on Friday, the Minister of Forestry recommitted the government to stabilizing carbon dioxide emissions. And the government wonders why Canadians are confused.

We urge the part-time Minister of the Environment to make a clear statement in the House and inform Canadians as to exactly where his government stands on carbon dioxide emissions.

* * *

BILL C-21

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, on November 6, 1989, the House of Commons passed Bill C-21 which incorporates the much needed amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

In particular, the changes include a 45 per cent increase in funding for labour force development. The strategy is to increase the quantity of training and skills development in Canada, as well as to increase the quality and relevancy of this training.

Yet, for seven months, the passage of this legislation has been the victim of a misguided political power play. Do those responsible realize that this delay is already having regional consequences?

In my riding of Sarnia—Lambton alone, assistance under the UI job creation program is in limbo, and the applicants under the self-employment incentive program are anxiously awaiting the passage of Bill C-21.

I say to members opposite and those in the other place: "Let's get on with it. Let's look at the big picture. There's much more at stake here than simple political gamesmanship."

[Translation]

GREAT BED RACE PUT ON BY THE CHRIST-ROI HOSPITAL FOUNDATION

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, on May 16, I had the pleasure to inform this House of an activity put on by the Christ-Roi Hospital Foundation, namely a bed race to raise money to upgrade the hospital's medical equipment.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it has been done!

Having participated in this bed race with 700 others, I realized how enthusiastic and eager people are when it comes to such a laudable objective.

Mr. Speaker, thanks to the hard work of 1,000 volunteers and the continual encouragement of 5,000 people all along the course, this event was a tremendous success.

As proof, the goal of $100,000 was reached.

Thanks go to foundation president Louise Roy and, on behalf of all users of the Christ-Roi Hospital, to everyone who made this project a reality.

Congratulations and be back next year!

* * *

[English]

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, last week, the Economic Council of Canada came before the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration to tell members that, although the data was not complete, the "economic benefits of immigration are really very small".

The subtle suggestion was that immigrants are not worth the perceived problems attributed to immigration: strain on the social infrastructure, depressed wages, competition for jobs, social tensions, increased education costs, and any other ills that a lethargic government looking for a scapegoat might wish to attribute to newer Canadians.

The data is there and it tells a different story. Total immigration in 1988-89 represented a mere 0.61 per cent of the Canadian population. For the previous four years, it was 0.59 per cent, 0.39 per cent, 0.33 per cent and 0.35 per cent respectively. When we factor out emigration from Canada, we see that net immigration for the last four years totalled only 350,000, less than 90,000 per year or a mere 0.35 per cent of the population.

The minister might well counsel the government to adopt a pro-active, energetic immigration policy rather than allow the dissemination of the view that immigration is a cause of problems facing Canada when an intelligent analysis sees them as a solution.

* * *

THE SENATE

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, recent events have clearly shown that Canadians reject the Senate's continuing battle to frustrate the will of the elected Parliament. Canadians reject the Senate's continued use of that place for repeated partisan purposes. I am sure that the people of Canada will also reject the battle being waged by a number of senators to maintain and enhance their privileges.

The resignation of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod has highlighted the desperate need either to reform or abolish the other place. At a time when all Canadians are being asked to accept restraint in government spending, it is shocking that the other place continues to guard jealously ancient privileges and spurn the introduction of modern management practices.

* * *

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, seniors across Canada have received an innocent looking leaflet entitled: The GST: Information for Seniors.

The leaflet states that 84 per cent of Canadian seniors will receive a tax credit of $190, paid by cheque four times a year, by filling out the GST credit form. It also reminds seniors that they will be protected by social programs fully indexed to the cost of living.

As a result of this leaflet, many seniors now believe that they will be receiving four cheques of $190 each year, and that the GST credit, like other social programs, will be automatically and fully indexed. This simply is not the case.

• (1410)

The GST credit will not offset the increased cost of the GST and $190 is not enough to compensate seniors for the GST they will pay. Because the GST credit is not fully indexed to inflation, fewer and fewer seniors will be eligible, even though they remain at the same fixed income. It is time that seniors learned the truth about the GST.

* * *

LITERACY

Mr. Willie Littlechild (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, the United Nations has declared 1990 to be International Literacy Year. The House of Commons Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs is committed to the objectives as set forth by UNESCO.

Canada has strong linguistic traditions, not only in French and English, but in the richness and diversity of the many languages spoken by native peoples. Unfortunately, it has been estimated that as many as 30 per cent of aboriginal youth, ages 16 to 24, do not possess reading and writing skills of a grade nine level.

Widespread illiteracy has profound implications for society as economic costs to Canadians run into the billions of dollars as a result of unemployment and the other consequences of illiteracy. The well-being of the family and an individual's feeling of positive self-worth are adversely affected by the poverty and social alienation associated with the inability to read and write.

The Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs will travel this week to four regions in Canada to meet with native leaders and educators. It is our hope that, by receiving information firsthand, the committee will be better able to make realistic and productive recommendations to Parliament regarding the most effective means of tackling this significant issue.

* * *

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend in Kanata I attended a powwow with hundreds of aboriginal people and other citizens sponsored by the Odawa Friendship Centre. I wish all members could have experienced the sensation of watch-watching these people, with their traditional dress, demonstrating their spiritual and cultural heritage, using their aboriginal languages. Both the young and the old were well represented. I experienced a sad realization that some governments and some of our political leaders fail to appreciate and to honour the distinct societies of the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

If there is a First Ministers' Conference to deal with the Meech Lake Accord, governments of the First Nations cannot be excluded and territorial leaders, who represent northerners, must be at the table.

I encourage all Canadians to honour our true heritage by welcoming aboriginal peoples to participate equally in completing the circle of confederation.

* * *

[Translation]

QUEBEC VILLAGE OF YESTERYEAR

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Village of Yesteryear, a historic site in Drummondville, will open again this year on Friday to receive many visitors throughout the summer season.

This educational and cultural tourist centre is the recreation of a village according to the customs of people who lived in Quebec between 1840 and 1910.

Dressed in period costumes and equipped with old-fashioned tools, the craftspeople perform all the trades a rural community needed to live in the last century. You can also enjoy the finest Quebec cuisine.

This year, nineteenth-century farming techniques will be highlighted.

Many Canadian, American and foreign producers regularly make films there.

Mr. Speaker, last year, more than 185,000 people visited the Quebec Village of Yesteryear. I therefore invite hon. members and all Canadians to come and visit this heritage village.

* * *

[English]

FOREST RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENTS

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, in Halifax the part-time Minister of the Environment said that the government was going to make Canada green. We all know that the best way to make Canada green is to plant trees, and that is exactly what this government is not doing.

Tree planting agreements worth over $1 billion have expired and, despite the Prime Minister's commitment on February 2 that they would be renewed, the Minister of Forestry has failed to deliver.

If we are going to develop environmental programs and have our forests protected, agreements in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec should be renewed now.

* * *

THE LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Harry Chadwick (Brampton—Malton): Mr. Speaker, Premier Peterson, the Liberal Premier of Ontario, should probably sue his own party's federal masters.

In their current long race to the federal leadership, and now in the provincial membership drives which anticipate an upcoming provincial election, it is my opinion that the Liberal Party continues to use members of the ethnic community for their own gain in respect of voting membership and delegates.

Several sitting Liberal provincial members, including the Solicitor General for Ontario, now find themselves in jeopardy of losing their upcoming nominations because of these questionable Liberal Party tactics. They can thank their federal counterparts for the example set by delegate voting practices in the federal leadership race. Indeed, it is a most irregular practice which questions the ethical integrity of the Liberal party and threatens the very core of our electoral process.

Overlooking the abuse of party membership and thus supporting the practice for their own gain will backfire in the end. The Liberals, Mr. Speaker, will ultimately reap the wild wind.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AGRICULTURE

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and relates to the visit to Canada of Soviet President Gorbachev.

As we said in a statement issued today, we in the Official Opposition welcome this visit and look forward to it strengthening relations between our two countries.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Canada's agreement for wheat sales to the Soviet Union expires next summer. Yet we understand that the Soviet Union has recently secured arrangements for the purchase of wheat from Argentina and the United States. The Soviet Union is one of Canada's most important wheat customers, taking one-quarter of our exports.

Will the Prime Minister of Canada and Soviet President Gorbachev be signing a new wheat agreement during the President's visit to Ottawa today and tomorrow?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I share with the hon. Leader of the Opposition the need to co-operate on a bilateral basis with the Soviet Union, particularly in the area of trade and cultural exchange.

We have had a ongoing trade relationship with the Soviet Union, particularly in the area of grains and oilseeds. The existing long-term agreement between Canada and the Soviet Union will expire on July 31, 1991. Preliminary discussions have already begun on renewal under the auspices of the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds, and obviously the Prime Minister will be raising this issue with Mr. Gorbachev during the bilateral exchange that will occur on the occasion of his visit.

[Translation]

ARCTIC ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question as well for the Deputy Prime Minister.

We know that Canada and the Soviet Union occupy a large part of the vast, ecologically fragile Arctic region.

We know that Canada and the Soviet Union last November signed an agreement on the Arctic environment that put sustainable development at the forefront of their bilateral relations.

Therefore, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us what concrete action has been taken since this agreement was signed and what will the Prime Minister of Canada actually do to protect the fragile Arctic environment and have true sustainable development in this important region of our world?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this was raised during the reception at the airport. When the President arrived he mentioned the importance of co-operation in Arctic matters, and particularly the enhancement and preservation of the environment in that very sensitive and delicate area.

This will obviously be a part of the bilateral discussions, as well as items such as the future of the European architecture, the Baltic republics, the ongoing bilateral relations that exist between Canada and the Soviet Union, the ongoing disarmament talks, and of course east-west relations in a general sense.

Obviously the point that the Leader of the Opposition makes is a very valid one. Both the Prime Minister and the President have indicated that this will be a topic for discussion.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister. When members of the Official Opposition were in the Soviet Union recently they were disturbed to hear reports of a possible decision by the Soviet Union to shift its nuclear testing to sites in the Soviet Arctic in 1995.

• (1420)

Will the Prime Minister of Canada request that the President of the Soviet Union publicly reject such a proposal because of the adverse effect it would have if implemented on the fragile environment of the Arctic, and because of the way it would contradict the stated Soviet view that there should not be further nuclear testing and, in fact, nuclear armaments should be reduced in the Arctic. Will this request be made?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, of course we are concerned about the possible implications of increased testing in the fragile Arctic environment, particularly at a time when we are intensifying environmental co-operation between Canada and the U.S.S.R. We obviously will be raising this issue and expressing our deep concern. This will be conveyed directly to the President and in other ways that will come to our disposal.

I can assure the hon. member we share his concern and that this matter will be taken up during the bilateral discussions today and tomorrow.

* * *

[Translation]

LITHUANIA

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my questions are also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who has to be aware that the Lithuanian community in Canada is deeply concerned over the changing situation over there. Will the Prime Minister raise this issue with his distinguished visitor and, more specifically, is the Prime Minister prepared to ask President Gorbachev to remove all sanctions which aggravate the conflict rather than solve it?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government of Canada has been made clear. It is to continue to ensure de jure non-recognition of the Soviet annexation of the Baltic states. Of course, we have urged, and will continue to urge, restraint upon the Soviet authorities in their actions against the Baltic states. We call on both Vilnius and Moscow to engage in productive discussions and negotiations in an attempt to resolve this matter.

As for Canada, we are considering ways and means in which we can support Lithuania and other Baltic states in this quest for greater self-determination. Those discussions will obviously be a very central part of the visit between the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the President of the Soviet Union.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—St-Michel): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will certainly know that there is a shortage of medical supplies because of the blockade, and I hope that the Government of Canada will find ways to help to alleviate such problems.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister a question on another point. He knows that next year the Soviet Government will host an international conference on human rights. As a prelude to this conference, is the Prime Minister ready to recommend to President Gorbachev that he take all necessary steps to relax general travel restrictions on all its citizens and particularly, to ensure that Soviet Jews can leave the Soviet Union without threats.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I should think that my colleague knows full well to what extent respect for human rights is a matter which the Government of Canada defends with utmost determination in all institutions.

As to the specific problem he has raised, he also knows that our government supports the notion that Jewish people should be free to leave the Soviet Union and that this issue will also be the subject of discussions later today between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his counterpart.

* * *

[English]

BILL C-43

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

If Bill C-43 passes today, this government will once again have relegated women to second class citizenship. Today a doctor in a Halifax hospital said that that hospital will no longer provide abortion services if this bill passes. Doctors in Winnipeg say they will no longer provide reproductive health services. Other doctors, afraid of criminal prosecution and jail sentences, will require signed statements, witnesses and expensive psychiatric evaluations. One doctor has said, and I quote: "What this law is doing is—"

Mr. Speaker: I am having some difficulty with the question. I would like the Leader of the New Democratic Party to put her question.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, doctors from one end of this country to the other have said that this law will cause—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to put the question.

Ms. McLaughlin: In light of the potential denial of basic medical services and dignity, will the Minister of Justice take the last opportunity to prevent this unjust violation of women's rights and see that the bill is defeated today?

Mr. Speaker: The minister, of course, can answer. I must say though that the question is speculative at the very least.

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, even a question that is out of order requires a response, I think.

A great many things have been said about the potential effect of Bill C–43, which may or may not be accepted by the House today. I will simply repeat what I said in the legislative committee, that no doctor who is practising medicine according to the canon of ethics of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons in Canada need fear anything from Bill C–43.

I also made it very clear that should the bill be accepted by Parliament, in the period between its acceptance by Parliament and its coming into force—which as the hon. member will be aware, will be some time, depending on the speed with which the Senate deals with the bill, were it to be passed because that is anticipatory—that I believe it is the obligation of the government to ensure that all people who are affected by the bill are clear as to its effect.

In my profession of law, we regularly have courses and opportunities whereby lawyers become aware of new obligations that may apply to them, et cetera. I believe that were this bill to become law, the government would have a similar obligation to make sure that doctors in Canada are aware of the genuine implications of the bill and not implications that have been communicated to them by scaremongers who wish to detract them from the ethical practice of—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Yesterday in Montreal, Dr. Jean Guimond, a spokesperson for the monitoring committee, talked about the impact Bill C–43 would have on women and on doctors. He said, "They are forced to lie, to distort reality, to say what is not true—"

My question for the minister is: What does she have to say to Quebec women who denounce this bill as sinisterly hypocritical?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said in English: No doctor in Canada need fear Bill C–43. What is described in the bill as legal conforms to the Canadian Medical Association's code of ethics. If the bill is passed by the House, I would assure all physicians in Canada that they have nothing to fear.

[English]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, this government has said that it cares about Canadian families. Yet we have over one and one–half million children in this country living in poverty. We have half a million children relying on food banks. The government says it cares about Canadian families, but only spends .0004 per cent on family planning and contraceptive research.

Why does the government not bring in a humane family policy which will feed our children, clothe our children, provide shelter for our children, instead of sending women and doctors to jail?

• (1430)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will be aware of the fact that the government has announced its intention to increase research and family planning and the dissemination of information with regard to family planning.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, members of the NDP ask questions and then they shout down the answers. Surely, they should give the House the courtesy of receiving the answers.

The hon. member should be aware of the fact that between 1984 and 1989 the child tax credit was increased by more than 50 per cent.

She should be aware of the fact that poverty, including child poverty, in Canada has declined.

She should be aware of the fact that the government made major commitments to dealing with issues such as child sexual abuse and family violence.

All these are initiative which show the commitment of this government to the family in Canada. They are important commitments. They deserve her support.

[Translation]

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Deputy Prime Minister deals with the meetings the Prime Minister had with his provincial counterparts in an effort to break down the resistance of those who oppose the ratification of the Meech Lake Accord.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister report briefly to the House and the Canadian people in general on the current negotiations and tell us if possible, if we can expect that a way out of the constitutional deadlock will be found soon?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I can add anything to that which was outlined to the House yesterday by the Acting Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, other than to say, as I am sure the hon. member is aware, that Senator Lowell Murray has travelled to Newfoundland to meet further with Premier Wells, the objective still being to narrow the differences, to try to bring about an appropriate process and to outline and explore what approaches might be employed in bringing those premiers who have not seen fit to support the Meech Lake Accord to do so.

As soon as we can report some definitive progress in that particular area, I am sure that the Prime Minister or someone on behalf of the government will outline that to the House. While progress is being made at the present time, it does not appear that sufficient progress has been made to call a First Ministers' conference.

It is fair to say that that would be the objective as we move toward ironing out some of the details which have been raised as a result of the bilateral meetings between the Prime Minister and the premiers.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the consultations have been going on for some time. Canadians are worried. They would like to have the assurance that the government is in control.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House if a federal-provincial conference of First Ministers will be held this week? Where will it be held, on what day and, if not, why not?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): I cannot answer that question precisely, Mr. Speaker. The objective, as I said and as the Secretary of State for External Affairs told the House yesterday, is to narrow the differences.

I think it is fair to say that progress is being made.

Senator Murray will return from Newfoundland later today. He will be briefing the Prime Minister on the results of his bilateral discussions. Perhaps some time later this week we can report to the House.

I regret that I cannot give him a definitive date at the present time.

* * *

INDUSTRY

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, since other countries do not allow their key industries to be taken over by foreigners, will the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology explain to us how Canada benefits when our key industries are taken over by foreigners?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that I do not have the same perception about foreign ownership in Canada as my colleague from Willowdale.

What I have to say is that foreign investors in Canada are welcome from the moment they are considered to be of net benefit for the country.

Canadians know very well that we need new technology and that we need to keep and develop our labour force.

Canadians also know that those foreign investors bring to Canada investment which will provide net benefits. I know that my colleague knows that very well.

If he were to compare the 1984 figures with today's, he would see that there is no comparison to when FIRA was in place.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, so much for the theory and the rhetoric.

Let us look at the facts, what the minister talked about himself.

First, research and development is on the decline under this government.

Second, in terms of the record number of takeovers welcomed by this government, we have now seen that 46 per cent of Canadian manufacturing is foreign controlled.

Some hon. members: Question.

Mr. Peterson: We have seen how Canada—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is setting the basis of his question. I think that that is done and that he should put his question.

Mr. Peterson: My question is this, Mr. Speaker. As his country has lost 107,000 manufacturing jobs since January of last year, when will the minister announce new measures to stop this job loss, to give Canadian manufacturers a level playing field?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as usual my friend forgets to refer to the jobs which have been created by foreign investors who have invested here in Canada. It is wrong for him to say that we have less money for research and development. But that has always been the song by the Liberal party.

When we consider the number of jobs created in this country since 1984, we see there is no comparison with what the Liberals did before 1984.

Once again, we are proud of what we have done in terms of job creation and industrial development.

We will continue to welcome investors from abroad, if they respect the net benefits for Canada.

We have many examples of success stories, something which he knows very well.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence.

I am hoping that the Minister of National Defence has had an opportunity to read the speech given by the right hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs on Saturday in which the Secretary of State for External Affairs said: "It makes little sense to retain nuclear weapons whose only target can be our new friends in Poland, Czechoslovakia and East Germany".

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: This sounds remarkably like something I said to the Minister of National Defence just last Thursday, something for which he felt it appropriate to ridicule me and to reject.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: Does the Minister of National Defence now agree with the view that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has expressed or is there some discrepancy which exists between himself and the minister? If there is no discrepancy, is he prepared to say today that the government is now considering cancelling testing of the cruise missile and refusing even to be asked to test any new delivery system for nuclear weapons?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to my colleague if he feels I was picking on him. I was just drawing to his attention the inaccuracies of a statement that he made.

Anyone who is concerned about the foreign policy of this government should read in its entirety the speech of the right hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would suggest that the hon. member read it in its entirety.

As I explained to the hon. member when he asked the question last Thursday, NATO is adjusting its military strategy. That was part of the meetings of the nuclear planning group which took place in Kananaskis, Alberta.

• (1440)

It was also part of the meetings of the defence planning committee which took place in Brussels.

I can quote to the hon. member from the communiqué issued by NATO, although I am sure he has a copy of it. It states that NATO is determined to make the most of the opportunities created by these developments and is adapting to the new conditions in Europe.

As always, NATO and the Government of Canada are prepared to change and adjust our strategies.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that when the Ministers of Defence came out of Kananaskis they said that it did make sense to continue to use these weapons. The minister said on Saturday that it does not make any sense.

I would like to know what the government policy is. Does it, or does it not make sense to retain these kinds of nuclear weapons? If it does not, and if the Secretary of State speaks for the government, then when is Canada going to announce a new policy with respect to cruise testing and, for that matter, with respect to forward defence, which is something else the Secretary of State for External Affairs says does not make sense any more?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the only inconsistency is that the hon. member has not read the speech delivered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Blaikie: You have not read it.

Mr. McKnight: Let me assist him in that. In the next paragraph, right after the one from which the hon. member has read, it states: "This is not to deny the continued requirement for prudent military stability at this time of historic change. Twelve months do not invalidate the lessons of history. The possibility of instability is there and the Soviet military capabilities remain substantial. Therefore a strong military mandate for NATO continues to be valid and a North American commitment to Europe represented by the presence of Canadian and American troops there is crucial as we strive for strategic stability at significantly lower levels of military force".

If the hon. member would read the whole speech, he would understand exactly what this government is about. This government believes there is opportunity for change. This government will take part in it.

I can only say that if the NDP happen to be government some day—God forbid—they would not even be sitting at the negotiating table.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FORESTRY

Mr. Réginald Bélair (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Forestry.

On December 19, and more recently in May, the minister received a letter from the Ontario Minister of Natural Resources in which she urged the government to negotiate seriously the renewal of the forestry agreement which expired over a year ago. The Ontario minister is troubled by the federal government's inaction.

Why does the minister keep blaming the province of Ontario for his own failure to renew the agreement?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is right. I do have a letter from the Minister of Natural Resources for Ontario in which she suggests that we begin serious negotiations toward a new forest resource development agreement.

I very much welcome this letter and the opportunity it will provide us to start negotiations with the province toward a future agreement.

However, I would also like to point out to my hon. friend that another of the minister's colleagues writes as well pointing out that there are difficulties in mobilizing the resources that would be necessary to meet the expectations about which my hon. friend asks.

Mr. Réginald Bélair (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister.

The softwood lumber industry is hurting very badly because of the 15 per cent export surtax on exports to the United States. Pulp and paper profits have fallen from $400 million in the first trimester of last year to $93 million this year. Both industries are now choking under the federal government's high interest rate policy.

When will the minister impress upon his colleague, the Minister of Finance, that the government's policy is devastating to the forestry industry?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I assume that my hon. friend knows that the tax that is being collected is returned immediately to the province from whence it came. One must assume that that province would return the windfall revenues that accrue back to where it belongs, perhaps in the form of planting trees or other silviculture activities which are urgent and permissible under the agreement.

* * *

TRADE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

When the President of the United States was asked by Canada to veto legislation regarding Canadian lobsters, he turned thumbs down to our request.

The decision taken by the free trade panel has once again ruled against Atlantic Canadian lobster fishermen. Decisions of this nature will only serve to enhance regional disparity in this country.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister take members of the House into his confidence and explain what Canada will be proposing during the 90-day negotiation period with our counterparts in the United States? What will the Government of Canada be suggesting to its U.S. counterparts in order for them to change their decision and rule in favour of Atlantic Canadian lobster fishermen?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows that this 90-day period is a period for the industry, the unions, and the government to talk about a new configuration.

During this 90-day period I hope that the hon. member will talk with the industry and help the industry. We are going to do that. The panel decision is simply a context for more fruitful discussions during the next 90 days.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am appalled. Atlantic Canadian lobster fishermen are appalled at the lack of leadership and concern being exhibited by the Government of Canada with regard to lobster fishermen in this country.

In view of the fact that $30 million will be drained from the pockets of Atlantic Canadian lobster fishermen, does the minister not think it only fair, equitable and good public policy to put in place forthwith a compensation package as it has done for other sectors of the Canadian economy?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the $30 million figure is certainly an oversized figure.

The hon. member knows that we have under way a number of promotional opportunities for larger sized lobsters in the United States. That will be a major marketing initiative of the government.

There are also a number of promotions that the industry, together with the government, will be undertaking around the world for lobsters. It will not involve $30 million. It will be considerably less than that.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is about the case of Mahmood Hassan Randeree who wants to stay in Canada where his parents and sister are citizens.

I would like to know why the government is so determined to have a South African activist of the African National Council leave this country. Why does the government want him to leave Canada for a country where he will be in danger?

Will the rejection of his refugee claim and the departure notice remain in effect? Or, will the minister consider issuing him a permit on humanitarian grounds?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the decision to give Mr. Randeree a departure notice—not a deportation notice—was made by an adjudicator after the adjudicator and members of the refugee determination board found that he did not have a credible claim. I know the hon. member believes in the case by case review as we do. The case has also been reviewed on humanitarian and compassionate grounds.

The departure order simply means that he can go to a country of his choice between now and June 10. It is not a deportation notice. The means by which he chooses to leave and the country to which he goes is up to him.

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the minister avoids the fact that Mr. Randeree's natural choice is Canada where his parents and sister are citizens.

If the minister feels that Mr. Randeree could return or be sent back to Germany, east or west—it is hard to tell which is which these days—will the minister table documents from the government of Chancellor Kohl assuring us that Mr. Randeree will be allowed some kind of permanent residence in that country and, if not, that he would not at some later date be sent to South Africa?

• (1450)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am given to understand that Mr. Randeree has a wife and child in Germany. We have been assured by the German authorities that there would be no impediment to his going there.

Because his father is a citizen of Canada and if he departs voluntarily, he will have the option of having his father sponsor him as an assisted relative. While there are not any guarantees under this program, it is certainly a legitimate way for him to come back to Canada, if this is his country of choice.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment.

Very important environmental programs were put into effect by the minister's predecessor and this government. I refer to the Environmental Partners Fund and the Mobile PCB Destruction Program. This program has been most useful in helping the citizens of northern Ontario address the problem of PCB storage and what to do with PCBs to make their future safe in their community.

Indeed many Canadians have used these programs and want these initiatives because they meet the concerns head on right in the communities.

Will the minister give an assurance to Canadians that existing programs, rich as they are and as helpful as they are to Canadians, will be available to Canadians?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the member for London—Middlesex regarding the very important role he has played in bringing together from June 11 to June 14, here in Ottawa, some of the world's most noted scientists and parliamentarians from 30 countries for a conference on the environment. I am looking forward to participating in this event.

I would like to assure the hon. member that the federal government has already set aside, as he knows, a $50 million Environmental Partners Fund over five years to help local groups take action in protecting, preserving, and enhancing the environment. We will continue along that same road. That fund is certainly in place, and we will continue living by it.

* * *

TRANSPORT

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport.

Yesterday the minister said that recommendations of a leaked Transport Canada report, which called for among other things a reduction in flight inspections and weather forecasting and cancellation of air traffic control training, would not affect safety.

Since the same report states that "budgetary cuts would have a substantial impact on air navigational systems", how can the minister say, as he did yesterday, that these cuts will not be made at the expense of safety?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will understand that from time to time literally dozens of reports are made within any ministry, and especially the Ministry of Transport. Those reports have to be actioned.

I asked this morning if such a report had reached the desk of my deputy minister for consideration. I was advised that the answer was no.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, is it not interesting that this document has been available since March of this year? The minister does not know what is going on in his own department. I have a supplementary question.

This leaked report, which I produced in this House yesterday, also cautions against any cuts in air traffic control training as "there are already too few controllers".

Will the minister now stand in his place and totally reject the recommendations in this report which has been available to him since last April or March?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no way I am going either to accept or reject the information in a report that I have not seen.

* * *

NATIONAL REVENUE

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue.

We learned today that the government is considering hiring hundreds of tax cops to review as many as 10,000 returns of individual Canadian taxpayers.

In 1984 the Conservative task force on Revenue Canada recommended that fishing expeditions be stopped "in situations where the minister had no specific reasons to believe that certain individuals had not complied with the Income Tax Act".

If fishing expeditions were wrong in 1984, why are they not wrong today? Or, is the minister saying he is as incapable of stopping overfishing as his colleague the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to welcome the hon. member back to the House of Commons. I think the last time I saw him was—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The minister's comment of course raises two questions: who was here and who was not. The hon. minister.

Mr. Jelinek: I think it was in the streets of Leningrad.

In any event, it is obvious that the hon. member does know that this is an old story, that the department is always looking at improving the effectiveness of collecting taxes.

The hon. member knows that it was the Auditor General who asked us to review these options on a yearly basis. In any event, this is for discussion purposes only at this point in time. We are not in the process of hiring any army of tax collectors or tax police for this, the GST, or anything else.

At all times we are looking at the possibilities of more effectively and efficiently collecting taxes on behalf of the majority of honest taxpayers in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the bill of rights for Canadian taxpayers which was adopted by this Conservative government includes a presumption of honesty. We are told that a taxpayer must be presumed innocent until proven guilty.

How can the Minister justify such a program which goes against his so-called bill of rights for the Canadian taxpayers?

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wish that had been the case in the 16 or 20 years of Liberal administration, which it was not.

In order to answer the hon. member's question, surely the Liberal party is not suggesting or recommending that the Government of Canada remove all auditors and all audit movements in Canada, whether it involves personal or corporate income taxes. If that is the position of members of the Liberal party, I would very much appreciate for them to come forward with that view.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture.

British Columbia orchardists are facing serious financial difficulties as they prepare for their 1990 crop season. As the minister knows, they have not received the cost of production for over a decade now and bankers are becoming quite twitchy because of the growers' financial uncertainty.

B.C. fruit growers have pleaded for financial help, but the Minister of Agriculture has not yet made any firm commitments.

Can the minister assure British Columbia fruit growers that financial help is forthcoming so that they can obtain operating credit? Can he also advise as to the specific dollar value of that financial aid? Last, can he confirm as to precisely when that aid package will become available?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the hon. member knows, this industry is the subject of a provincial commission of inquiry. In our discussions with the provincial government it was felt that it would be appropriate to await the recommendations which will be brought down by that very intensive inquiry.

We have indicated to the provincial government that we would be prepared to work with it in providing the kind of support programs—

Some hon. members: Time.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member's colleagues do not want to listen to the answer—

Mr. MacWilliam: I am listening.

• (1500)

Mr. Mazankowski: I appreciate that the hon. member is listening. Perhaps he can control his neighbours.

I can assure the hon. member that in our discussions with my provincial counterpart we indicated when the report comes down we will be prepared to sit down with him and look at an appropriate program of support, adjustment and restructuring as may be deemed necessary. I think it is important to await these findings.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister is aware that because the growers are right in the middle of thinning and preparing for the 1990 season now, financial assistance is required at this point. A bank draft cannot simply be signed on a lick and a promise.

I would like to ask the minister whether he would assure B.C. growers that if the special assistance is provided, it would at least cover the cost of production for the 1990 season so that the creditors can be assured that they will have some financial security to proceed with their operations.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows, I am sure, that the federal government has provided a great amount of support and assistance to the industry over the years.

We are prepared to continue this, but it is important to do it in an effective and balanced way so that it does provide stability for the industry in the future.

The hon. member is aware that a portion of the $500 million set aside for assisting the bottom line of the agriculture industry is available. We are engaged in bilateral discussions with the provincial government. We believe that the recommendation of the report of the commission of inquiry is imminent. We hoped that we can use that as a guide in terms of how we might design a program and for what period of time.

We do have some funding available for that purpose. As soon as we can arrive at an arrangement with the provincial government, hopefully it will provide a basis through which that industry can be supported.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that I must hear a question of personal privilege from the hon. Minister of National Revenue. I do not anticipate it will be long. We will then move to the vote according to the order.

PRIVILEGE

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE MEMORANDUM

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, indeed, I will be very brief on a personal question of privilege which stems from yesterday's question of privilege by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

If I may, in order to shed some light on the issue reads to read a communication into the record. It goes as follows:

Dear Mr. Speaker:

I have recently become aware that officials of my department issued a letter to a number of townships and municipalities in Northern and Eastern Ontario, the contents of which, were inappropriate given that the letter failed to reflect the status of bill C–62 respecting the proposed goods and services tax.

On my instruction, my officials are in the process of forwarding a modified letter to each of the recipients of the original letter, along with an apology from the director of the regional office involved. Copies of both letters are attached for your reference.

I regret the unfortunate wording of the original letter and assure you that in no way was it intended to mislead the public.

It is signed by myself, as Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I may say I am delighted that the minister has taken these appropriate steps.

Mr. Speaker: I think, under the circumstances, there would be no need for comment from the Chair except to say that the Chair and all hon. members no doubt appreciate the minister's speed in coming back to the House.

The Chair also appreciates the comments of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands who raised the matter.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, May 24, 1990, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Campbell (Vancouver–Centre) that Bill C–43, an Act respecting abortion, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: It being 3 p.m., pursuant to an order adopted on Thursday, May 10, 1990, the House will now proceed to the taking of the divisions on third reading motions of Bill C–43, an act respecting abortion.

[English]

This will be followed by the taking of the deferred division at report stage of Bill C–69, an act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures.

[Translation]

The question, therefore, is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mrs. Campbell) (Vancouver Centre) which was agreed to on the following division:

• (1540)

(Division No. 269)

YEAS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Atkinson	Attewell
Beatty	Belsher
Bernier	Bertrand
Bird	Bjornson

Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Boyer
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Chadwick
Charest
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Cole
Cook
Corbeil
Couture
Danis
DeBlois
Della Noce
Dick Dorin
Edwards
Fee
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Guilbault
Halliday
Hawkes
Hogue
Horner
Hughes
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Layton
Lewis
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
Mayer
McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)
McLean
Milliken
Oberle
Paproski
Plourde
Redway
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Shields
Sobeski
Sparrow
Tardif
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Valcourt
Vézina
Vincent
Wenman
Wilbee Assiniboia)
Worthy—140

Blais
Bouchard (Roberval)
Bourgault
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clifford
Collins
Cooper
Côté
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Dobbie
Duplessis
Epp
Feltham
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hockin
Holtmann
Hudon
James Joncas
Kempling
Landry
Larrivée
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lopez
MacKay
Marin
Masse
Mazankowski
McDermid
McKnight
Merrithew
Monteith
O'Kurley
Plamondon
Pronovost
Reid
Ricard
Robitaille
Saint-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Siddon
Soetens
Stevenson
Thacker
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Turner (Vancouver Quadra)
Venne
Vien
Weiner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—
Winegard

NAYS

Members

Althouse
Angus
Assad
Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)
Bélair
Benjamin
Bevilacqua
Blackburn (Brant)
Blondin

Anawak
Arseneault
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Barrett
Bellemare
Berger
Black Blaikie
Bosley

Boudria
Butland
Callbeck
Casey
Chartrand
Comuzzi
Corbett
de Jong
Dionne
Duhamel
Ferguson
Fisher
Fontana
Fulton
Gaffney
Gardiner
Gray (Windsor West)
Guarnieri
Harvard
Heap
Horning
Hunter
Karpoff
Keyes
Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)
Kristiansen
Laporte
Lee
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacLellan
Maheu
Marchi
Martin (Lasalle—Émard)
McGuire
Mills
Murphy
Nicholson
Nunziata
Ouellet
Parent
Peterson
Pickard
Proud
Riis
Robinson
Rodriguez
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Skelly (North Island—Powell River)
Speller
Stupich
Thompson
Vanclief
Vankoughnet
Waddell
Wappel
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—131

Brewin
Caccia
Campbell (South West Nova)
Catterall
Clancy
Copps
Crawford
Dingwall
Domm
Edmonston
Finestone
Flis
Foster
Funk
Gagliano
Gauthier
Grey (Beaver River)
Harb
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Jordan
Karygiannis
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Kindy
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacAulay
MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacWilliam
Manley
Marleau
McCurdy
McLaughlin
Mitchell
Nault
Nowlan
Nystrom
Pagtakhan
Parker
Phinney
Porter
Rideout
Robichaud
Rocheleau
Samson
Simmons
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stewart
Taylor
Tobin
Van de Walle
Volpe
Walker
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill concurred in, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, you have certainly noticed that I did not vote. I was paired—

[Editor's note: Some shouting in the Gallery]

Leave her alone!

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the Right Hon. Prime Minister who is currently busy with His Excellency President Gorbachev.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, you must have noticed that I also abstained. It was out of courtesy for the Minister of State for Finance who has been urgently called to Paris. But if I had not been paired, I would have voted against this bill, because I am pro-choice.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to your attention that after the first suspension during the taking of the vote, the member for Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle entered the House and then proceeded to vote when it came to his turn.

I would ask that the records be examined to see whether the member's vote should have been counted.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan has raised a point of order. The member for Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle wishes to address the Chair?

Mr. Moore: Mr. Speaker, indeed I did arrive late. There was a hold-up during the vote. I did everything I could to be here. I hired a helicopter. If I were to register my vote, it would be with the government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made it very clear that he did arrive late. I have to accept the point of order of the hon. member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan. The vote will be changed accordingly.

* * *

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, May 28, consideration of Bill C-69, an act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on Bill C-69, an act to amend certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures.

Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some hon. members: Dispense.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, the first question is on Motion No. 4, standing in the name of Ms. Langan.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 270)

YEAS

Members

Althouse	Angus
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)	Barrett
Benjamin	Blaikie
Brewin	Butland
de Jong	Fisher
Fulton	Funk
Gardiner	Harvey (Edmonton East)
Heap	Hovdebo
Hunter	Karpoff
Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)	Kindy
Kristiansen	Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte	MacWilliam
McCurdy	McLaughlin
Mitchell	Murphy
Nystrom	Parker
Riis	Robinson
Rodriguez	Skelly (North Island—Powell River)
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)	Stupich
Taylor	Waddell
Whittaker	Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—39

NAYS

Members

Anawak	Anderson
Andre	Arseneault
Assad	Atkinson
Attewell	Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)
Beatty	Bélair
Bellemare	Belsher
Berger	Bernier
Bertrand	Bevilacqua
Bird	Bjornson
Blackburn (Jonquière)	Blais
Blenkarn	Blondin
Bosley	Bouchard (Roberval)
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)	Bourgault
Boyer	Brightwell
Browes	Caccia
Cadieux	Callbeck
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)	Cardiff
Casey	Catterall
Chadwick	Charest
Chartrand	Clancy
Clark (Yellowhead)	Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clifford	Cole
Collins	Comuzzi
Cook	Cooper
Corbeil	Corbett
Côté	Couture
Crawford	Crosby (Halifax West)
Danis	Darling
DeBlois	de Cotret
Della Noce	Desjardins
Dick	Dingwall
Dionne	Dobbie
Domm	Dorin
Duhamel	Duplessis
Edwards	Epp
Fee	Feltham
Ferguson	Ferland
Finestone	Flis
Fontaine	Fontana
Foster	Fretz
Friesen	Gaffney
Gagliano	Gauthier
Gibeau	Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)

Gray (Windsor West)	Greene
Guarnieri	Guilbault
Gustafson	Halliday
Harb	Harvard
Harvey (Chicoutimi)	Hawkes
Hockin	Hogue
Holtmann	Hopkins
Horning	Hughes
James	Jelinek
Joncas	Jordan
Jourdenais	Kempling
Keyes	Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Koury	Landry
Langlois	Lapierre
Larrivée	Layton
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)	Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lee	Lewis
Lopez	MacAulay
MacDonald (Rosedale)	MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)	MacKay
MacLellan	Maheu
Malone	Manley
Marchi	Marin
Marleau	Martin (Lincoln)
Masse	Mayer
Mazankowski	McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)	McKnight
McLean	Merrithew
Milliken	Mills
Monteith	Moore
Nault	Nicholson
Nunziata	Oberle
O'Kurley	Ouellet
Pagtakhan	Paproski
Parent	Peterson
Phinney	Pickard
Plamondon	Plourde
Porter	Proud
Prud'homme	Redway
Reid	Reimer
Ricard	Richardson
Rideout	Robichaud
Robitaille	Rocheleau
Roy-Arcelin	Saint-Julien
Schneider	Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)	Shields
Siddon	Simmons
Sobeski	Soetens
Sparrow	Speller
Stevenson	Stewart
Tardif	Têtreault
Thacker	Thompson
Thorkelson	Tobin
Tremblay (Rosemont)	Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)	Turner (Halton—Peel)
Turner (Vancouver Quadra)	Valcourt
Vanclief	Van de Walle
Vankoughnet	Venne
Vézina	Vien
Volpe	Walker
Wappel	Weiner
Wenman	White
Wilbee	Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wood	Winegard
Young (Gloucester)—216	Worthy

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The next question is on Motion No. 8 standing in the name of Mr. Langan.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I suspect you would find unanimous consent to apply the last vote to this particular motion as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my vote to those of the Government side.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: So ordered. The House has heard the syggestion of the hon. member for Kamloops. It is agreed. Therefore, I declare Motion No. 8 lost.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 271)

YEAS

Members

Althouse	Angus
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)	Barrett
Benjamin	Blaikie
Brewin	Butland
de Jong	Fisher
Fulton	Funk
Gardiner	Harvey (Edmonton East)
Heap	Hovdebo
Hunter	Karpoff
Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)	Kindy
Kristiansen	Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte	MacWilliam
McCurdy	McLaughlin
Mitchell	Murphy
Nystrom	Parker
Riis *Robinson	Rodriguez
Skelly (North Island—Powell River)	Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stupich	Taylor
Waddell	Whittaker
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—39

NAYS

Members

Anawak	Anderson
Andre	Arseneault
Assad	Atkinson
Attewell	Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)
Beatty	Bélair
Bellemare	Belsher
Berger	Bernier
Bertrand	Bevilacqua
Bird	Bjornson
Blackburn (Jonquière)	Blais
Blenkarn	Blondin
Bosley	Bouchard (Roberval)
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)	Bourgault
Boyer	Brightwell
Browes	Caccia
Cadieux	Callbeck
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)	Cardiff
Casey	Catterall
Chadwick	Charest
Chartrand	Clancy
Clark (Yellowhead)	Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clifford	Cole
Collins	Comuzzi
Cook	Cooper
Corbeil	Corbett
Côté	Couture
Crawford	Crosby (Halifax West)
Danis	Darling
DeBlois	de Cotret
Della Noce	Desjardins

Dick	Dingwall
Dionne	Dobbie
Domm	Dorin
Duhamel	Duplessis
Edwards	Epp
Fee	Feltham
Ferguson	Ferland
Finestone	Flis
Fontaine	Fontana
Foster	Fretz
Friesen	Gaffney
Gagliano	Gauthier
Gérin	Gibeau
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)	Gray (Windsor West)
Greene	Guarnieri
Guilbault	Gustafson
Halliday	Harb
Harvard	Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hawkes	Hockin
Hogue	Holtmann
Hopkins	Horning
Hughes	James
Jelinek	Joncas
Jordan	Jourdenais
Kempling	Keyes
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)	Koury
Landry	Langlois
Lapierre	Larrivée
Layton	LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
Leblanc (Longueuil)	Lee
Lewis	Lopez
MacAulay	MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacDonald (Dartmouth)	MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay	MacLellan
Maheu	Malone
Manley	Marchi
Marin	Marleau
Martin (Lincoln)	Masse
Mayer	Mazankowski
McCreath	McDougall (St. Paul's)
McKnight	McLean
Merrithew	Milliken
Mills	Monteith
Moore	Nault
Nicholson	Nunziata
Oberle	O'Kurley
Ouellet	Pagtakhan
Paproski	Parent
Peterson	Phinney
Pickard	Plamondon
Plourde	Porter
Proud	Prud'homme
Redway	Reid
Reimer	Ricard
Richardson	Rideout
Robichaud	Robitaille
Rocheleau	Roy-Arcelin
Saint-Julien	Schneider
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)	Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Shields	Siddon
Simmons	Sobeski
Soetens	Sparrow
Speller	Stevenson
Stewart	Tardif
Tétreault	Thacker
Thompson	Thorkelson
Tobin	Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Québec-Est)	Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Turner (Halton—Peel)	Turner (Vancouver Quadra)
Valcourt	Vanclief
Van de Walle	Vankoughnet
Venne	Vézina
Vien	Volpe
Walker	Wappel
Weiner	Wenman
White	Wilbee
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Winegard	Wood
Worthy	Young (Gloucester)—217

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved that the bill be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Shall I dispense with the bells?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 272)

YEAS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Atkinson	Attewell
Beatty	Belsher
Bernier	Bertrand
Bird	Bjornson
Blackburn (Jonquière)	Blais
Blenkarn	Bosley
Bouchard (Roberval)	Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Bourgault	Boyer
Brightwell	Browes
Cadieux	Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Cardiff	Casey
Chadwick	Chartrand
Clark (Brandon—Souris)	Clifford
Cole	Collins
Cook	Cooper
Corbeil	Corbett
Côté	Couture
Crosby (Halifax West)	Danis
Darling	DeBlois
de Cotret	Della Noce
Desjardins	Dick
Dobbie	Domm
Dorin	Duplessis
Edwards	Epp
Fee	Feltham
Ferland	Fontaine
Fretz	Friesen
Gérin	Gibeau
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)	Greene
Guilbault	Gustafson
Halliday	Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hawkes	Hockin
Hogue	Holtmann
Horning	James
Jelinek	Joncas
Jourdenais	Kempling
Koury	Landry
Langlois	Larrivée
Layton	Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lewis	Lopez

MacDonald (Rosedale)	MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay	Malone
Marin	Martin (Lincoln)
Masse	Mayer
Mazankowski	McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)	McKnight
McLean	Merrithew
Monteith	Moore
Nicholson	Oberle
O'Kurley	Paproski
Plamondon	Plourde
Porter	Redway
Reid	Reimer
Ricard	Richardson
Robitaille	Roy-Arcelin
Saint-Julien	Schneider
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)	Shields
Siddon	Sobeski
Soetens	Sparrow
Stevenson	Tardif
Tétreault	Thacker
Thompson	Thorkelson
Tremblay (Rosemont)	Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)	Turner (Halton—Peel)
Valcourt	Van de Walle
Vankoughnet	Venne
Vézina	Vien
Weiner	Wenman
White	Wilbee
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Winegard	Worthy—143

NAYS

Members

Althouse	Anawak
Angus	Arseneault
Assad	Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)	Barrett
Bélair	Bellemare
Benjamin	Berger
Blaikie	Brewin
Butland	Caccia
Callbeck	Catterall
Clancy	Comuzzi
Copps	Crawford
de Jong	Dingwall
Dionne	Duhamel
Ferguson	Finestone
Fisher	Fontana
Foster	Fulton
Funk	Gaffney
Gagliano	Gardiner
Gauthier	Gray (Windsor West)
Guarnieri	Harb
Harvard	Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hopkins	Hovdebo
Hunter	Jordan
Karpoff	Keyes
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)	Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)
Kindy	Kristiansen
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)	Laporte
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)	Lee
MacAulay	MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLellan	MacWilliam
Maheu	Manley
Marchi	Marleau
McCurdy	McLaughlin
Milliken	Mills
Mitchell	Murphy
Nault	Nunziata
Nystrom	Ouellet
Pagtakhan	Parent
Parker	Peterson
Phinney	Pickard
Proud	Rideout
Riis	Robichaud
Robinson	Rocheleau
Rodriguez	Samson
Simmons	Skelly (North Island—Powell River)
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)	Speller
Stewart	Stupich
Taylor	Tobin
Vanclief	Volpe
Walker	Wappel
Whittaker	Wood
Young (Gloucester)	Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—104

• (1600)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

• (1610)

[Translation]

Mr. Danis: Madam Speaker, with your permission, I would ask the House for unanimous consent to return to presentation of committee reports. If leave is granted, I will table a report.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. minister have unanimous consent to table his report?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

PARLIAMENT OF CANADA ACT

PRESENTATION OF THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): I thank my colleagues in the House.

Madame Speaker, I have the honour to present the third report of the Special Committee on the Review of the Parliament of Canada Act. Also, Madam Speaker, if I again have unanimous consent, I would move concurrence in it.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): I move that the third report of the Special Committee on the Review of the Parliament of Canada Act, presented in the House earlier today, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN RACE RELATIONS FOUNDATION

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Weiner that Bill C-63, an act to establish the Canadian Race Relations Foundation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Madam Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at 1 p.m. the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had the floor.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise in the House today to continue debate on the introduction of the Canadian Race Relations Foundation. As members of the House know, this is a piece of legislation for which we in the opposition have been waiting several months. It was first promised two years ago and has finally worked its way to the House.

While I join with the members of the House who support this bill, because I think it is a very important step forward, I would like to take this opportunity to remind the House how much work has to be done in the area of race relations. I speak particularly from a perspective in the west.

As one generation after another have come to the west they have had to deal with incredible problems of racial discrimination. It began with the problems of the Chinese before the turn of the century when they came to work on Canadian railroads and had to deal with very severe immigration laws which worked against the reunification of their families. The fact that they have managed to survive and to flourish into a strong Canadian community is more a testimony to their own strength than to any Canadian legislation.

A second sad chapter, particularly in western Canada, but one which in fact led to the establishment of this Race Relations Foundation, was the treatment of Canadian Japanese on the west coast. It has taken close to 50 years since World War II to rectify one of the blackest moments in our history.

Third, the fact that our native peoples continue to be subject to racial discrimination throughout western Canada, and perhaps throughout the whole country, haunts all politicians and legislators in this country. I note that Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta are all carrying out judicial enquiries to rectify some of the conditions that exist within our legal system.

We hope that as this Race Relations Foundation evolves it will have an eye for what takes place in the different regions in addition to dealing with questions on a national scale.

One of the reasons I took a particular interest in the foundation when it was first suggested is that I thought this was an opportunity for the Government of Canada to show its commitment to regional development. In Winnipeg in the last five years we have lost a disproportionate number of jobs in the federal civil service. Some statistics show that one in five job losses in the federal government has been in the Manitoba region. The loss of 1,000 jobs in Manitoba could be partly compensated by placing an institute such as this one in a community which has shown more concern about race relations than any other in the country. While I appreciate that at first glance the problems appear to be more pressing in cities such as Toronto, Montreal and elsewhere where there are greater populations, Winnipeg has always been an immigrant city and therefore questions of race relations have been paramount in the minds of its decision makers.

The city of Winnipeg was one of the very first cities in the country to set up a race relations committee which meets on a monthly basis and brings together leadership from the different communities. Not only do we have traditional groups from eastern Europe and central Europe, we also have representatives from the newest of Canadians—the Caribbean community, the African community and the different Asian communities. The Canadian aboriginal communities also have representatives at these meetings to discuss issues.

We just finished a series of hearings in the city of Winnipeg on race relations and the police force. Again we see that at the community level it is really important that federal politicians lend support to working out problems among people who have to deal with it daily on the street.

Winnipeg would be an ideal place for the centre of such a foundation because Winnipegers have spent many years trying to work out relationships among these different groups so everyone feels comfortable, not only in this city, but across the country.

Before we give too much credit to the federal government for moving to establish the race relations foundation, we should put it in the context of what else this government is or is not doing. Time after time in the last 15 months the House has been reminded of the inability of this government to move quickly and without any hesitation on issues of race relations and human interaction. For example, on the issue of turbans, how many months did this government wait before it made a decision dealing with the right of Sikh Canadians to wear their turbans? By the time the decision was made members of this House had to deal with petitions from hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are concerned about the wearing of turbans.

Within the aboriginal community we have had ongoing difficulties in the judicial system. It is quite apparent at this point from responses to questions in the House that the government has no strategy for dealing with some of the fundamental changes that must take place in our judicial system to respond to the concerns of aboriginal peoples.

Instead, the last budget cut back on the ability of native people across this country to communicate. The reduction of the communications budget under the Secretary of State, which in the past assisted so many native organizations to communicate among themselves and with other Canadians, shows that when it really comes down to it this government is not committed to assisting native people. It may set up a race relations foundation which gives the public the impression that it is in favour and support of race relations and the public education thereof, but in reality in the activities that really count in these communities it is withdrawing services.

A second example that I would like to use, one that I think is very important and often overlooked in this House, is English as a second language. This government has constantly undermined the ability of new Canadians to learn English as a second language. It did it by first of all withdrawing materials available to organizations which teach English as a second language to Canadians when they first arrive in this country. Second, through other programs and through transfer payments, it has made it more and more difficult for the provinces to provide training in English as a second language.

This has to be discussed in the House as part of this package for dealing with race relations because it is very difficult for new Canadians, particularly those from Asian countries, to learn the language skills necessary to obtain the proper training to get themselves into a better paying job. It is not just a cliché, it is a reality of the workforce that when you first come to cities throughout this country you enter the labour market at the lowest wage going—somewhere around $4.50 to $5 depending on which province you are in. You can only get out of those jobs if you obtain skills, if you have access to better job markets, if you have access to language, if you understand how our system works. How can you do that if you do not have access to training?

We can talk in all our studies and everything we do about the willingness of the federal government to assist new Canadians, but when we apply the test of action rather than words we find that the immigrant communities in Canada are being underserviced. The basics that we thought were necessary a generation ago are being removed and they have been made more vulnerable.

• (1620)

That, of course, leads to tension in the street. One of the other members raised the question of the relationship between economic problems among new Canadians in their immigrant communities and the fact that there are rising rates of racism. One of the difficulties that young Canadians from families of new Canadians have is that without the language skills, the understanding of the job market, the need for training and the access to training, they cannot get themselves into the job market when they are 16, 17, 18 or 19, or into the community colleges or universities. They have watched their parents suffer year after year in jobs paying less than $5 a hour.

Street life is rough. It is rough in Winnipeg and it is rough in Toronto. We occasionally catch a glimpse of headlines which indicate just how rough it is.

If the government is not looking for ways to support the needs of people, it does not matter if we set up a foundation for public education. People are looking for reinforcement in their community, that we are there for them. At this time I just do not see how this particular foundation, unless strengthened immensely, is going to contribute to that need.

Recently the director of the race relations group within the city of Winnipeg requested that the city of Winnipeg now provide additional funds. The city of Winnipeg is still considering this request. I raise that with you as another example of the underfunding and the need, not for a central foundation, but, in each individual community so that people have the opportunity to talk with each other about the problems they are facing in the area of racism.

The establishment of a race relations foundation can become a hallmark of the commitment of Canadians to a better justice system that accommodates all Canadians. The public education components and the money available can be used wisely to ensure that we all understand each other's perspectives. I hope that in the choice of the board of directors the government is able to bring to bear all these perspectives which are so necessary to broaden our horizons.

This is also an opportunity for us to encourage academics and research organizations to think of race relations not as a peripheral problem, a minor problem to be dealt with by a few sociologists and a few political scientists, but as one of the mainstream problems of our society requiring a tremendous amount of energy to research and rethink how we should approach these problems. From that hopefully will come suggestions to this House in future years that will enable us to respond more positively and perhaps with more sensitivity to the needs of these new Canadians.

From the annual reports of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, from the reports coming out of the Donald Marshall Commission and from other inquiries across the country we hear how frustrated people are in trying to get this House to respond. Through the different committees of the House of Commons we all know that a race relations foundation could go a long way to marking a new beginning.

Thus, in the context of the government not doing very much in the past and making many mistakes in the last two years, I wish the new foundation the independence and the wisdom to contribute to this debate and to help us as legislators see better ways of serving new Canadians.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Madam Speaker, it is pleasant to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C–63, a bill to establish the Canadian Race Relations Foundation which, it should be noted, is a result of the Japanese redress settlement in 1988, one of the significant events in race relations in this country.

As you recall, Madam Speaker, as a result of the settlement signed with the Japanese Canadian community, that community received an acknowledgement of the injustice perpetrated upon Japanese Canadians by virtue of their incarceration, loss of property and loss of rights; compensation for those victims; a rectification of government records; a commemorative farm for the Japanese Canadian community and the creation of a race relations institute.

Of the $24 million provided for the initial endowment fund for the institute, $12 million is provided on behalf of and in recognition of the struggle of the Japanese Canadian community and its horrendous experience as a result of World War II.

I must confess that it is with a lack of enthusiasm that I approach this legislation for the creation of this institute because I am one of those who, over the last half century, have been involved in a struggle to eliminate discrimination in this country. Quite frankly, I thought we understood racism. We certainly understood, and I think we still understand, how we can eliminate in a nation the effects of racism. The latter is far more important than anything else because what people feel and think about other peoples, other races, can be changed if we change the way in which they treat members of minority races.

It is not too long ago that I stood in this House and noted the significant progress that had been made in this country over that 50 years. I said at one time that I could hardly have believed that I would stand in this House, an elected member of Parliament, given the experiences that I had as an Afro-Canadian boy growing up in southwestern Ontario. That we are now again faced with a variety of manifestations of racism in this country making it justifiable to have a race relations foundation is something that disappoints me very deeply.

Yet it is perfectly clear that we have learned very little. Even the literature of the 1940s or the 1930s could have predicted the events and the experiences of the Japanese at that time. Even then it was understood that exacerbations of racism and conflict among a diverse population inevitably result when there is some kind of crisis, as there was during World War II.

Others have mentioned that it was not only the Japanese who suffered during that period. The Ukrainian and Italian Canadians also suffered. This relates to another well understood aspect of racism. John Porter, in his The Vertical Mosaic pointed out quite clearly that racism is a function of belonging, the creation of "in" groups and "out" groups.

During World War II, in the great campaign to attain Allied victory, it was very easy to bind the country together in a collectivity identified with all the great things. But some were excluded, a significant portion of our own population was excluded. Japanese Canadians were not part of the "in" group because their colour identified them with another nation. Italian Canadians were members of the "out" group, not of the "in" group, because their language and appearance identified them with another nation.

• (1630)

One of the things achieved during the late 1950s, 1960s and the early 1970s was that we ceased talking as if this country consisted of only two peoples and began to identify Canada as a multicultural nation. Thus we defined a whole variety of peoples as belonging to the "in" group of Canadians. No longer was there a notion of bilingualism and biculturalism. It was bilingualism and multiculturalism, a diverse Canadian society made vigorous by its very diversity.

Another thing that John Porter and others who studied racism knew was that, to the extent to which a society in general is civilized and humane in its treatment of all of its people, one will thus encourage understanding and acceptance—not tolerance, but acceptance—as belonging.

This country, over the years, had built up a fabric of institutions, a social infrastructure, and a philosophy of social justice, which contributed as well to the creation of a nation in which diversity characterized the "in" group of Canadians. If Canada is experiencing an increase in manifestations of racism, perhaps we should look at the fundamental changes in the fabric of the country that have not just happened or evolved. These changes have been specifically imposed upon a nation not ready for such dramatic changes in the relationships among its peoples, its regions, and its linguistic groups.

Most Canadians have a sense that somehow the country is being changed by the government in ways that are terribly fundamental and threatening to their security. This raises another aspect of racism that is well understood and that is scapegoatism. When people are hurting or when they are threatened, they look around for someone to blame, someone accessible, someone vulnerable, someone who can be identified as in some way threatening the security of jobs, income, or whatever, of people. There is abundant evidence all over our nation that this is occurring. In my memory, there has not been so many outward and explicit expressions of antagonism of various sorts in the country before. And so, we are going to have a foundation to study the roots of racism, even though the roots of racism are well understood.

It would be better if more focus was placed on the inaction and the changes that the government has perpetrated, and what has contributed to those outward manifestations of racism and, my God, there have been many of them.

In Toronto, there is outrage in the black community over the shootings, over the last decade, of some four individuals by the police. There is a similar situation in Montreal. These naked facts are not in themselves all that significant, but when members of a police commission in Toronto say that the police are justified in attributing different characteristics with respect to law-abidingness to blacks or Afro-Canadians as compared to the general population and that these crises are justified on the basis of a generalization about the criminality of Afro-Canadians and other black citizens of Toronto, that bespeaks a very dangerous situation.

It is no less dangerous when pins, T-shirts, and posters are circulated with impunity to arouse the antipathy of Canadians towards Chinese, Asians, blacks, and others within our nation. To a very large extent, these are manifestations of the scapegoating that has occurred. That scapegoating is all too often contributed to by the ill-thought remarks and responses of politicians and those in leadership who should know better.

Racism is best attacked, not by study, but by action. Increasingly, there is disillusionment with the way in which questions of race and racial discrimination are being dealt with by this very government. There have been any number of examples.

The federal government has failed to implement adequately an employment equity program that results in an over-all performance with respect to the employment of minorities by the federal government. That program does not even compare well with private corporations that the government is supposed to be regulating, and does regulate with respect to employment equity through legislation.

Whereas, 6.4 per cent of the workforce available to federally regulated corporations and 5.7 per cent of the employees of those corporations are members of minority groups, the federal government has only 2 per cent in its employ of visible minority groups.

I would like to cite two examples of quite outrageously bad performances. One is in External Affairs and the other, in Correctional Services. I want to cite the latter, in particular, because last Friday I visited Kingston Penitentiary, Joyceville, and the Women's Prison in Kingston. There we heard testimony revealing an outrageous, tragic situation with respect to the treatment of black prisoners and native prisoners.

I asked whether any natives or blacks were in positions of significance in the prisons. Were there a significant number of native or black guards in those prisons? We are talking about a situation in which a far higher percentage of natives and a far higher percentage of those of African descent find themselves in prisons under circumstances revealed in the Marshall inquiry and other studies. Racial discrimination itself has lead to their disproportionate representation in those places. It is well documented that the legal system of the country is biased against native people and minority groups and the poor. Yet, Correctional Services of Canada has one of the worst records with respect to the employment of minorities.

With respect to the Secretary of State Department doing its job, one of the most important things in attacking racism—not in trying to understand it, but in attacking it—is to empower those minority groups that seek to bring about appropriate change in that regard. Yet, instead of engaging in legitimate consultation with affected minority groups in the country, we find that the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship and Secretary of State is contriving to create his own network of chosen Progressive Conservative minority members, rather than the legitimately chosen leaders of the variety of affected communities.

• (1640)

I am told that the commitment to a real attack on racism in the Secretary of State Department is revealed by an insistence that they be very careful even to talk about racial diversity in documents released from that department. I find this incomprehensible. Increasingly, there is an impression that there is a certain lack, if not of commitment, then of a structured, coherent, and consistent approach that can be respected with regard to the treatment of the issues—not the roots of racism, but the effects of racism.

The legislation would also provide the Race Relations Foundation with the means to consult with industry, government, and various other institutions and organizations with respect to how to eliminate racism. Yet, we have departments that are supposed to be addressing that issue. We have a Human Rights Commission which is a scandal in its ineffectiveness. We have the machinery in place, but now we are going to back up and start all over again to see if we can understand racism better.

I suppose the evidence is there that the government and other elements in our society, including the provincial governments, have utterly failed to understand racism adequately. Otherwise, after 50 years, we would have seen a deterioration in the attack on racism and its practice, racial discrimination. Instead, we find ourselves still almost at square one.

If we are back at square one, then we should do it and do it right. I hope it will be done right. I am not standing to oppose this legislation, because in principle it is fine. It just seems to me that it is a significant disappointment that we should have to stop and study, when by now we should have made so much more progress. Circumstances change and maybe this new foundation will permit the government to understand how it, itself, has contributed to the evolving situation in this country. There is an interconnectedness between racism and the whole sense and philosophy of what is a just and equal society, not just for minorities, but for everyone.

I hope when this bill goes to committee there will be wide consultation to reveal that within and among those who are victims of racism there is a clear understanding. If one has to have an institute to reach out to them so they will communicate their experiences and increase our ability to respond, fine.

Let me say one more thing before I close, because I know you are very anxious to hear the next speaker, Madam Speaker.

I hope that the board of directors of this institute will not be chosen on a political basis, as a vehicle for patronage. I hope instead that we will follow the lead of previous bills in respect of which there was agreement on all sides of the House about the legitimate nature of the institute or the centre that was to be established. Instead of patronage appointments of directors, it should involve an all-party agreement on the selection of those directors in such a way as to reflect the unanimity that ought to exist, and generally does exist in the House, about the tragedy and injustice of racism and the need to address it appropriately.

Madam Deputy Speaker: If I may, I would like to mention to the hon. member that my signals about time are simply to let him know how much time he has left so that he can complete his very interesting speech without me standing and abruptly stopping him. Of course, I will be listening to the next speaker with the same interest, but I did not mean him to cut his intervention short.

[Translation]

Pursuant to Standing Order 38, I must inform the House of the questions to be dealt with this evening at the time of adjournment: the hon. member for South West Nova—Fisheries; the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing—Health; the hon. member for Mackenzie—Agriculture.

[English]

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to rise and speak to Bill C-63, an act to establish the Canadian Race Relations Foundation. I support this bill, which is to contribute to the elimination of racism and all forms of racial discrimination in Canadian society.

On March 21, some two months ago, I urged the government to muster the political will to grant adequate funding for programs to combat racism and to promote racial harmony in Canada on the occasion of the celebration of the International Day for the Elimination of Racism.

Why did I urge the government at that time, Madam Speaker? It would give me the opportunity at that juncture to indicate to you that this government has failed fully to promote tolerance and to curb racism in the country.

Let me cite a few examples. The treatment of refugees by this government has created apprehension and mistrust of refugees among the Canadian population, thereby generating negative reactions on the part of the population at large to new immigrants and visible minorities in particular.

The failure on the part of the government to properly address pay equity in the workplace for visible minorities is another example. A March 1990 study by the Canadian Ethnocultural Council reported that only 2.9 per cent of public servants are visible minorities, whereas 6.4 per cent of the general labour force is made up of them.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission in its 1989 annual report stated that hiring and promotion practices reinforced the present concentration of visible minorities in poor paying jobs. This practice ought not to continue.

We have also witnessed the recent occurrences of racial discrimination within the Canadian justice system, particularly as it affects our aboriginal people.

Also, we have seen cuts of about $9.7 million to native programs, cutting their native communications program, native broadcast access program and native friendship centres.

The Heritage Languages Program is one of the recent calamities of this government. I submit that heritage language is a crucial factor in the maintenance of multiculturalism in Canada. Without such education, the rich multicultural fabric of our country is bound to fade into insignificance within a few generations.

What is more disturbing is that the notice to discontinue support for this program arrived at a school in my constituency on March 16, 1990, advising that support to the school would stop on April 1, a couple of weeks thereafter, making it very difficult for the school to search for alternative sources of funding.

The Liberal party has the excellent tradition of having started multiculturalism and continues to support it in heart and mind. In contrast, this government, instead of reacting to the turban issue with dispatch, waited almost two years and thereby negative reactions were generated across the country, instead of solving the issue promptly.

• (1650)

No wonder that in February of this year an Angus Reid poll indicated that the majority of Canadians believed intolerance is increasing. This state of affairs goes against the very fabric of our multicultural society.

I support this Canadian Race Relations Foundation based on the preamble that we will support and reaffirm our support for the international convention on the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination; that we will henceforth reaffirm our belief and support in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; that the Canadian Multiculturalism Act would assume greater and greater meaning.

I applaud the minister. I applaud the government for initiating this bill. But I would also like to challenge the government that to give teeth to this bill it must provide the funding necessary for the very problem that this foundation hopes to address.

Regardless of one's race, ethnic or cultural background, to participate fully and equally in all aspects of Canadian society economically, socially, culturally and politically is a natural aspiration of every Canadian.

Canada is one of the luckiest nations in the world. If we recall and imagine the African populations struggling to survive, of the Latin American and Asian countries threatened by civil wars, we in Canada as a nation are really lucky. But we must not forget that there continues to be concern. Recently we have seen the racist themes, the desecration of Jewish tombstones. All these are symbols or manifestations that show that we still have a lot of work to do.

Racism, as a sociologist defines it, "is the manifestation of one group's effort in a society to free itself from a feeling of inadequacy by casting another in an inferior light".

How does this happen? By prejudice, by having a set of negative attitudes in which another group is held unwanted, despite the absence of legitimate bases. Of course, racism by way of discrimination can also happen in a very overt way. It can also happen through institutions. When we examine some of our textbooks, for example, and they depict that non-whites are primitive, cruel and savage, we know that the result will be racism and discrimination.

Why do we need to develop racial harmony in Canada? UNESCO in 1967 stated: "It divides nations within themselves, aggravates international conflict and threatens world peace. Racism stultifies the development of those who suffer from it and perverts those who apply it".

We have to continue to remember that multiculturalism is not about allowing separation, but to be sensitive to the needs of others. It is not about the recent arrivals or even of those descendants of generations past. It is not about the shedding of symbols of our heritage, but freedom to exercise our heritage and still be able to participate fully in Canadian society. It is not about inferiority, but to affirm our commitment to excellence and merit. It is not about merely a condominium of cultures but a consensus and sentiment of national purpose.

Indeed, the focus and the challenge by the Canadian Race Relations Foundation truly would be in the hearts and on the minds of Canadians. Mayor George Ferguson, president of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, in a keynote address at "The Challenge of Municipal Race Relations" conference in November, 1989 stated:

> Social harmony cannot be created by posters, proclamations or literary contests or even by co-operation between business and government, or direct government action. The real challenge is in the hearts and minds of each of us as individuals.

In conclusion, I would like to remind my colleagues that the forces of discrimination and racism are by nature centrifugal in direction and, therefore, pull Canadians away from each other. But the forces of a national purpose are a cultural magnet that pull Canadians together.

As the author wrote in the book entitled Canada in the '90s, we need an élan vital, a mission, a statement, a national purpose. Why do we need it even more today? Because we see that there is a continental pull to the United States, as a consequence, I believe, of the free trade agreement that will pull our provinces apart. And, of course, there is the present constitutional impasse that threatens the unity of our country.

Third, and perhaps more important, are the demographic shifts in our country with the arrival of new immigrants. It is estimated that beyond the year 2000 we will see more and more immigrants from Asian countries which will thereby change the demographic composition of Canada as we know it today.

The challenge is to the minds and hearts to have that mission, that so-called élan vital, the psychological force that should drive citizens, countries and institutions together. When we have achieved that, then the meaning of the establishment of a Canadian Race Relations Foundation will truly be appreciated. We will truly support the concept of multiculturalism, the essence of which, I submit, is equality and dignity for all Canadians.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to discuss Bill C-63, an act to establish the Canadian Race Relations Foundation.

The foundation which will be established as a registered charity will facilitate the development, sharing and application of knowledge and expertise, and contribute to the elimination of racism and all forms of racial discrimination in Canada.

The preamble to this bill outlines the international and domestic obligations of the Canadian government to the protection of minorities and prevention of discrimination. Such obligations include one to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination which commits nations to the adoption of all measures designed to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, 1982 states that every citizen is equal and thus, the establishment of such a foundation will help bring the social and legal reality closer together.

The Multiculturalism Act attempts to bring about the participation of all Canadians in our society. In concluding the Japanese Canadian redress agreement, the government agreed to establish a race relations foundation.

The above obligations are attempts by the federal government, in particular past Liberal governments, to make a commitment to equality in Canada.

First, I would like to point out how unfortunate it is that in this day and age we even need a foundation to promote racial harmony and tolerance in our country. The fact that every day we see more and more evidence of racism is deplorable.

When I was reading the information for this debate, I could not help but think about how sad it is that we even need to take up time discussing racism in Canada. I could not help but ask myself, why can't people treat each other regardless of colour, religion, or language with the same respect every human being deserves. Unfortunately there are people in this world and in this great country of ours who are intolerant to minorities and who harbour racist discriminatory sentiments.

• (1700)

We see evidence of this almost daily now. Just last week I was one of many people who attended a rally in my riding of Nepean condemning vandals who attacked the Ottawa Jewish Community Cemetery, knocking over headstones and spray-painting swastikas and Nazi slogans on graves. I pointed out that Canadians everywhere joined together to voice our disgust about the barbaric action by a few individuals filled with hate.

Unfortunately, because of individuals like these who advocate intolerance, we are forced to stand in this House today to debate the establishment of a foundation to promote racial harmony and tolerance. The creation of institutions such as this one is important to the fight against racism. However, the creation of institutions is no substitute for concrete policy action and in this respect the present government has failed miserably.

The government's action concerning refugees and immigrants has created apprehension and deep mistrust of refugees among the broader population.

The government's lengthy delay with regard to a decision on the Sikh turban issue contributed to the rise of racial discord, particularly in western Canada.

This government has failed to adequately address the issue of pay equity and discrimination in the workplace for visible minorities. A Canadian Ethnocultural Council study demonstrated that only 2.9 per cent of the public servants were visible minorities. This figure hardly approximates the labour force participation rate of 6.4 per cent.

Numerous reports and the government's own statistics show that visible minorities have a one in four chance to be hired in the Public Service of Canada compared to an applicant whose skin is white.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission stated in its 1989 annual report that "systemic biases will no doubt be brought to light by serious employment equity analysis". The federal government must do more to prevent discrimination in testing and selection for federal public service employment.

Recent revelations about racial discrimination within the Canadian justice system have shocked many Canadians. The Manitoba Justice Inquiry, the Donald Marshall Inquiry, and various judicial inquiries have pointed to the existence of institutional racism.

The Department of the Secretary of State claims in a report to the United Nations on the International Convention of the Elimination of all Forms of Racial Discrimination that "measures have been adopted to protect and advance the special position of the aboriginal peoples in Canadian society".

In reality the department has cut funding totalling $9.7 million to native programs. Furthermore, 99 per cent of the total loss in departmental funding comes at the expense of native peoples.

Cuts to the Native Communications Program, the Native Broadcast Access Program, and the Native Friendship Centres have closed off avenues that would have led to the greater participation of aboriginal peoples in the Canadian mosaic.

The government, through the Secretary of State, has also decimated through recent budget cuts the Heritage Language Schools program. This program was designed to promote racial harmony and national unity by providing an opportunity for the preservation and understanding of ethnic languages and cultures.

Madam Speaker, at a time when racial intolerance is on the rise in Canada this government should be taking steps to promote and protect minorities.

Yes, institutions such as the one we are debating today are needed, but government action should reflect the will of those institutions.

The government cannot create an institution that promotes racial equality and then turn around and continue to discriminate in its hiring practices, and continue to slash programs set up to promote understanding.

If we want to eliminate racism and intolerance, we must begin to take down barriers to minorities. The government has a responsibility to be a leader in this respect and it has yet to take on that role.

I support the creation of the Canadian Race Relations Foundation because any and all steps to end racism must be taken. The hatred of racism must be extinguished. We can do this only through educating Canadians. Racism is not hereditary or innate. No man or woman has ever been born a hater of Jews, Sikhs, blacks, Chinese, or of any religion or race. It is not natural to hate, and every measure must be taken to show all Canadians that racism will not be tolerated in this great land. If the establishment of the Canadian race relations foundation can help to do this, then let us get on with establishing the foundation and putting an end to racism in Canada.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Madam Speaker. I congratulate the previous speaker on a very well expressed, deeply emotional speech.

I have received several letters from multicultural groups in Saskatoon concerning cuts in funding to the Heritage Language Program. I wonder if the member could elaborate on that.

Mrs. Gaffney: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to that. I briefly alluded to the heritage language schools in my comments.

As a matter of interest, some of my colleagues and I met with the leaders of the heritage language schools in the national capital region. We met with about 30 local people who were involved in the various schools—and we have quite a number of them, probably 15 in this area—for at least two hours in the West Block one evening.

There is great concern among the heritage language schools. They do not know how they will continue to operate. They are very dependent upon the few dollars the federal government gives them.

As I mentioned in my comments, the whole basis of these schools is to allow them to enjoy and expand upon their culture and to allow their children to be knowledgeable about their different backgrounds.

At the same time it allows you and I, who are not of their particular culture, to be informed as to what their culture can bring to our community. We are very fortunate to have so many different cultures in our community from which we can draw and to participate in their programs and cultural activities.

Every single one of the leaders from the heritage language schools in the national capital region said that it would be very difficult for them to continue to operate, that it could be the fine edge that pushes them over the brink and that they would not be able to continue.

We are only talking about a very basic amount of money, considering the major funds spent by the Government of Canada. Reinstating these funds would mean the difference between folding and not folding for these heritage language schools. I urge the government to reinstate these funds.

Mr. Phillip Edmonston (Chambly): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. colleague a question dealing with this law as compared with the government's lack of hiring visible minorities. Perhaps the hon. member could give us her thoughts on that. It seems to be an obvious contradiction. When we want to show that we are a multicultural country and have a desire to employ, and show that we have employed people from different cultures, we seem to be far off the mark. Once again I hear my Conservative colleagues speaking with a sense of irony or sarcasm, but the question has to be put. I would like my hon. colleague to tell me how this bill compares to the actions of the government.

• (1710)

Mrs. Gaffney: Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. It is very much a contradiction to stand here and talk about establishing a Canadian race relations foundation and then to look at the lack of initiative by the present government in bringing visible minorities up to the level of hiring or the level of visibility in the Public Service in particular. When we look at their six point, or whatever per cent it was of our population, we see that only 2 plus per cent are hired within the Public Service. I realize that there are many initiatives that can be taken to raise this average and I encourage the government to do so. Otherwise there is very definitely a blatant contradiction to what they are saying we must do and then on the other side of what they are actually doing.

Mr. Phillip Edmonston (Chambly): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill to establish a Canadian Race Relations Foundation.

Being an immigrant to this country and having lived in the United States during the heady days of the sixties where there was a great deal of work in this regard, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak. I worked in the field of race relations and was involved in working with groups trying to get blacks registered in the political process in the south. At the time they were called freedom riders. I have first-hand knowledge of how the question of race relations can be a volatile one, one which is very difficult for government to handle.

I may surprise members on the government side—I am looking directly at a couple of ministers right now who are in conversation—but I hope I am not surprising you too much by saying that this is legislation which does make some progress. It is progressive to a certain extent, although I have heard my Liberal colleague tell me how far short the government does fall as far as promoting race relations in Canada. This particular foundation is a good start.

If you look at what is a cause of racism, I am sure the two ministers would agree that one of the major causes is lack of knowledge and the lack of information as to the other side; that being the race that you have a tendency to perhaps joke about, the race that you are looking at in a sense of being somewhat inferior to whom you happen to be or a race which may seem to be responsible for your economic hard times. All of this comes about through a lack of information. I believe that this legislation would to a certain extent meet this problem of a lack of information.

I come from Montreal—as I say, I have emigrated from the United States—which is a city with many cultures. Before that I lived in Saint Hyacinthe, actually a small town called St. Barnabe Sud. I am sure, Madam Speaker, you are aware of it. I am proud of what I found in that small town in Quebec. I found a tolerance for people from other cultures. There is a tolerance for English speaking people and even for Americans, particularly for this American while he was learning his French.

By learning French and living with the people in that town of St. Barnabe Sud, Quebec, I learned less to fear making a mistake. I learned less to fear the French fact. Much more, I learned to respect the differences in other people. Surprisingly enough, I learned that as much as the English language versus the French language separates us, there is much more that unites us. To me it was an amazing discovery.

To this day I find that when I am speaking with my English speaking counterparts in Quebec, many times they do not have a full appreciation of what the Quebec government or Quebec itself is about or they do not understand what we are dealing with either in Meech Lake or in any other subject touching almost to the quick English speaking Quebecers. I find invariably that there is a lack of contact, a lack of knowledge, and a lack of living the French fact, really.

This exists between French and English in Canada. We see it not just in Quebec but in Newfoundland, in Manitoba, and in other provinces in dealing with Meech Lake. We have a failure to communicate, to borrow a phrase from the film Cool Hand Luke.

If this can happen just because of something that is recognized as French and English, imagine to what degree this occurs when a person happens to be black, wears a turban, or comes from Asia. It is far easier to hate people who you do not know than it is those who you know or those about whom you know.

I am not suggesting that we live in communes with everybody so that we can have one happy family. I do not think that is possible, but I do believe when we are talking about Canadian Race Relations Foundation that by facilitating the information and contact among groups we take a large step toward better comprehension among groups, a less volatile situation, and in the end we create understanding.

This is not a panacea to the problems we have today. Certainly it is not a panacea for some of the most outrageous images we see on TV that create tremendous amounts of friction among our different cultures. I was shocked and tried to understand when I saw the image of the Quebec flag trampled and walked upon in I believe Brockville, Ontario. The people of Brockville said—I believe them—that that was not their sentiment.

I am sure the minister on the other side would agree with me. I am sure he would also agree with me that by that time the damage had been done. I do not think the foundation can prevent that kind of damage, because we are always going to have hotheads and people who are going to be attempting to make a statement visibly with the media. Being a part of the media, many times we are part of the problem because we have a tendency to cover that which is exciting and explosive. By doing so we tend to create the situation. I believe that with the foundation we have an opportunity to give people a fair chance to learn about each other. By learning and understanding I believe we can reduce the number of such incidents.

• (1720)

I realize that the minister of state responsible for this legislation will have the right to appoint people who he thinks best represent the multicultural society in Canada. I wish him good luck because it will not be easy.

I ask the minister to be extremely careful and do something that we have not seen for a long time from the other side. I ask the minister not to appoint people for patronage purposes. He should not give this foundation a false start by appointing people who are more beholden to the Conservative party than they are to their own constituents. That would run counter to the foundation's objective and would destroy what confidence people could ever have in in it. That is the crux of the problem.

We ask the government to do something that is done rarely. We ask it to proceed with appointing directors to this foundation who will consider of primary importance the competency of the representatives they appoints rather than their political stripe. I hope and trust that the minister will do so. If he does not, people will quickly find that this is a $12 million boondoggle and only window dressing for the Conservative party. Canadians will see, once again, that there is no strong government initiative or even concern about racism in Canada.

It will reinforce this view, particularly as a result of what we have seen with the government dragging its feet on the question of turbans in the RCMP. The government has dragged it out, did not make a decision, and let tempers become inflamed. We have seen it in other areas as well.

If we are to get this foundation off to a good start, the only way to do so is to make sure the people appointed by the minister are bona fide representatives of their constituents and not people who have been receiving political pay-offs from the Conservative party.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Madam Speaker, on the matter of discrimination, the member has said that he is not a Canadian by birth. Has he felt, as someone who is not part a visible minority, any kind of discrimination?

[Translation]

Mr. Phillip Edmonston (Chambly): Listen, Madam Speaker, perhaps I am— It is not obvious that I belong to a minority in Quebec, but the moment I open my mouth people know that I am not a true-blue Quebecer like the hon. member for Chicoutimi may claim to be. I was not born in Quebec, I belong to the minority and, as a member of a Quebec minority I know I have some rights and I feel just fine. I can tell you that as a Canadian citizen and resident for 23 years I have never felt the least discrimination as an anglophone, and I am extremely proud of that, Madam Speaker, because I chose Quebec.

This was not an accident of birth. When I left the United States I travelled throughout Canada to see where I would want to live in this country, and I chose Quebec. I chose Saint-Barnabé-Sud, but it could have been Jonquière, Chicoutimi, Alma—I just love blueberries—but I picked Saint-Barnabé-Sud. The night I was elected in Chambly I wanted to stress the fact that Quebecers are very tolerant. We tolerate many things. But there are a few things that we do not tolerate, Madam Speaker. What struck me on the night of February 12 was the tolerance, the understanding and especially the warm welcome I was given by the residents of Chambly in spite of all the problems I experienced during the election campaign. I was deeply moved, and this is why I do not think that, basically, Canadians are xenophobic. I do not think so. When I converse with my American friends I get the impression we are less xenophobic than Americans. It does not mean there are no cases of discrimination and racism. I could tell you about it. There are exceptions, in Montreal Haitian taxi drivers have often heard people say they want a taxi, but not one driven by a Haitian. That is unacceptable. It is inconceivable that anyone would make such a request these days, considering the progress made to give everybody equal access to government services. We sought to give equal access to everybody, we sought to put an end to discrimination. But in our hearts we still harbour the odd prejudice. It happens.

But to get back to the question of my colleague, I find that —and all I know is Quebec—back home there is very little English-French discrimination, Madam Speaker. I am very proud to be able to attest to that here in the House, and to do so in both official languages.

[English]

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Madam Speaker, as I have travelled throughout Canada over the last couple of years I have noticed something rather upsetting to me. Perhaps it is because as a member of Parliament I am now getting out more and speaking to more people; I hope that is the reason. I have noted that there is less and less tolerance toward people of other races, colours, religions, and a lessening in the desire to understand the other cultures.

I applaud the idea and the thrust of this particular bill on the Canadian Race Relations Foundation, but I wonder about the record of this government in cutting funding for some of the past programs and projects and for various functions that had been set up as important and necessary. It has recognized in this particular foundation something that needs to be done. The research, the study, and the recommendations that hopefully will arise out of this committee will perhaps assure the tolerance and understanding that I alluded to earlier.

• (1730)

I am wondering if the way that this committee has been set up will really work, or is there a recipe for failure that this government can call upon if it is not very careful? In other words, is what we have here recognition of a problem with respect to which there will not be or may not be proper follow through and proper funding made by the government to this foundation? Is it window-dressing or is it something really concrete in the mind of the member?

Mr. Edmonston: Madam Speaker, I think that is a very appropriate question. It makes me go back to my days as a consumer advocate when we were coming to Ottawa on hands and knees asking for money in order to keep the consumer advocacy organizations going.

At that time a Liberal government was in power. We found that there were tricks that governments could use. On one hand they would talk about how much they were promoting a particular principle, they would create an agency and give money to it. Then the tricks would start because the government really did not intend to promote that particular principle or that particular idea in its entirety. It was just window-dressing.

What it would do initially, and I hope I am not giving the government any ideas—it has been done to us already by Liberals and I hope that the Conservatives would not attempt to do this with the race relations foundation—is put in place people to run the program who would be incompetent. They would be hired through patronage. They were taking their orders from the government, not from the people. Thus they were marching to a different drummer.

The first thing we found out in the consumer movement was that we at the grass roots who were manning the barricades, so to speak, were actually depending upon a government to follow through on what we were doing. The government, through the different agencies it had set up, had no intention of doing that.

We need good strong and independent people if this thing is going to work.

Next, there is the question of funding. Some $12 million is going to be spent on this foundation. As soon as we get into harder times the government is going to find that it does not have a sufficient amount. Where is the money going to come from? What will stop the government from saying: "We do not have enough money for this foundation. It was a good idea but it is gone"? We need a long-term commitment, one which is realistic, and then we can have a foundation.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to stand here today and speak in favour of the Canadian Race Relations Foundation for a number of reasons.

One of the main reasons has to do with the fact that we are not dealing directly with English-French. When I asked the member for Chambly whether or not he had experienced any discrimination, I was more or less referring to his being discriminated against on the basis that he was an American, not any kind of discrimination he may have experienced in the province of Quebec.

On that very issue I would like to add to what the member said in case there is any kind of misconception with respect to my question. It gives me the greatest pleasure in the world to stand here and say that since I first was in the province of Quebec in 1978, and I have been back there several times since, not once have I felt any twinge of discrimination. I have never been received with anything but kindness and accommodation. I do wish that more Canadians from elsewhere in the country who have never been there could visit la belle province. I am sorry I do not speak French, and I certainly feel a lack since I do not.

As far as the race relations foundation is concerned, I would like to try to broach the subject of why on earth there would be any kind of discrimination, person against person, race against race, at all. Although not all countries are homogeneous linguistic units and nations, it seems to be a universal truism that every religion has what we in the English-speaking world refer to as the golden rule.

To repeat myself, I think it is a universal truth that every one of those groups has the equivalent of the golden rule. The golden rule states: "do unto others as you would have them do unto you". If it is something that we all think and have as part of our culture, then why in the name of whatever deity one may choose do we find ourselves in this situation either in Canada or anywhere else in the world where there are such antagonisms and animosities?

It seems to me that we are simply going to have to expand our whole human consciousness on the subject.

It goes far beyond Canada, but let us at least start here, that, unfortunately, the golden rule as it applies to each of those units is viewed by each of those units as only applying to themselves.

Without getting into any specifics we can make the comparison to Swift. We have the example of the big Indians and the little Indians. It is okay for the big Indians to apply the Golden Rule to the little Indians but, by God, it is open season on the big Indians.

We have to expand what is commonly known as the Golden Rule to all of us and in all cases. That certainly applies in Canada where we perceive these differences rather than have them because at the basis of it all we are all human beings. That is precisely what the issue ought to be, not the colour of our skin, not the language we speak or what part of the country we live in or anything else.

I cannot help but go back to something I referred to when we were talking about the creation of the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship. That is the very emotional experience I always feel when I go to Citizenship Court as a member of Parliament. I consider it to be one of the major privileges of being a member of Parliament, and I am sure I will as long as I am a member of Parliament. There are several reasons for that, not the least of which is I can remember, as I am sure other members can, when there was a time when it was not possible to call oneself Canadian. That is slightly irrelevant, but I will get to the relevant parts of it a little later on. There was no such thing as Canadian citizenship.

From my point of view, remembering that and viewing Canadian citizenship now for all that it includes, it gives me a feeling of empathy and unity with everyone else who is in the country, those who came over before, because we related as nationalistic groups prior to that, and certainly those who have come since that time because they are Canadian citizens.

• (1740)

I have a rather personal stake in this whole idea of multiculturalism since my wife is not a Canadian. She is a naturalized Canadian of German birth.

I must say that I have benefited enormously by my association with my wife, someone from another nation, someone who spoke a different language and very, very little English when I met her. I have to admit that her cultural background has given an enormous amount of richness to what I now consider to be part of my whole cultural background, of my being a Canadian, whatever that means in total. It also includes part of my wife's German culture.

That brings me down to something more specific. I do not know if all Citizenship Courts are the same, but the clerk of the Citizenship Court to which I go emphasizes at every proceeding the number of different countries represented by those who are becoming Canadian citizens. It is very gratifying at times when we may have as many as 50 or 60 people taking up Canadian citizenship for the clerk to point out that those people represent as many as 20 or 21 different countries. It gives me a tremendous feeling of joy when I think of all these different people coming into this country who have chosen this country of which I am by birth a member.

There is an enormous amount of goodwill on the part of those people when they become Canadian citizens. If I feel joy at them becoming Canadian citizens, it is obvious. I am sure those who attend Citizenship Court would agree that it is an extremely gratifying experience, not to mention the joy experienced by the people who become citizens.

I am reminded as well by Judge MacPhail of the Citizenship Court as she makes her presentation that Canada does not have any linguistic unity, cultural unity or any geographic unity. In fact it may be that it is not possible to identify a unity which can be described as Canada. In light of what we are talking about, I think that may be precisely the case. That may be precisely what makes Canada the wonderful mosaic, the wonderful rainbow of a country that it is.

If I find that quotation, and if I ever get a chance to speak in the House on this subject again, and I may possibly do so, I am going to make sure that I get the quote verbatim because it is an extremely moving quotation.

As I say, there is the joy expressed by these different groups coming into Canada. They express a lot of that joy by a desire to maintain their heritage language. Canada has done up to now an admirable job of aiding those people to be able to maintain their heritage languages.

I am not sure that this was not implemented out of partially selfish reasons. It is an advantage for our country in many, many ways, not the least of which are economic, for these groups to be able to maintain their linguistic ability.

It is advantageous that people from Poland, for example, maintain the Polish language. In future years, as trade with the rest of the world develops, we will have people who are able to speak the language as a natural part of their personal expression.

The same could be said of any other group. At the present time, the most obvious example would be the maintenance of Pacific Rim languages as our relations with the Pacific Rim become much broader. I do not mean necessarily to point out those groups for economic reasons. I think it is absolutely essential that, as part of their humanity and their living in Canada, they ought to be able to maintain their languages.

The Saskatchewan Multicultural Council has written to me expressing a great deal of dismay at the cutting of funds to the heritage languages program which is so valuable. Unfortunately, that these cuts were announced during National Volunteer Week makes it particularly sad for two reasons. The first is that the cuts were made. The second is that these programs survived primarily on the basis of volunteers. Even though the government does put some money into them, it certainly does not go all the way toward being able to pay the costs of them.

I also have a letter from the Ukrainian Canadian Committee in Saskatoon.

One letter points out that, when the cuts were made to multiculturalism, they were only to the tune of 5 per cent. The letter states that in view of the deficit and so on it was essential to make these cuts and that everybody has to pay their fair share. That 5 per cent cut to multiculturalism was one thing, but the heritage language program was cut by 100 per cent. This means that in all probability it will not survive.

I even received a letter from as far away as Edmonton from the Edmonton Centre of Chinese Heritage and Second Language.

I also received a letter from the president of the Saskatoon Cambodian Society.

I refer to these letters just to give you, Madam Speaker, some idea of the variety of people who have expressed concern about this matter and the variety of people who have taken up Canadian citizenship.

I have two letters here from the Jewish community in Saskatoon who express as well their concern about the withdrawal of funds from the heritage language program. In the context of racism, the Jewish Centre in Saskatoon, of which the synagogue is a part, was desecrated recently. This demonstrates the depth of the problems that we are experiencing in Canada and the kinds of things which have to be worked on and alleviated.

I have referred to the cutting of funding to the heritage language program. In spite of listening to the minister making his statement on the introduction of the legislation, I can not help but feel that he believed everything he said. He made as impassioned an expression of humanity as any other speaker in the House has. My problem is that, when it comes to being a matter of translation into action, the government has not lived up to its promise, and I refer specifically to the heritage language program cuts. The government has not lived up to the promise and the commitment which I think the minister did feel when he was making his statement. I only wish that that were not the case, that the government would live up to the sincere expression that the minister made at the time.

• (1750)

The problem is that wherever we look within the government service the matter of employment equity has not been fully addressed. The member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair said he went into the prisons within his constituency and found a disproportionate number of our Canadian native people in those prisons in relation to the rest of the population. In addition to that, there was an absence of native people charged with the custody of those prisoners. That not only sends a very negative message to those people, but also indicates that there is a tremendous problem insofar as equity within the community vis-à-vis the native people.

One of the greatest travesties of Canadian society which illustrates again the government's lack of concern—I hesitate to use that phrase, but I do not know how else to express it—is the delay of the decision to allow members of the Sikh community to wear their turbans when they are in the RCMP. That was a horrific example of how justice delayed is justice denied. More damage was done by the government's indecision on that issue than by anything that has happened in Canadian society for a long while.

I suggest that had we had a decision quickly we would not have had those pins and those calendars. Even having said what I said, and believing the minister and his expressions when he introduced the legislation, I certainly do support the idea of the Canadian Race Relations Foundation. I just hope it lives up to its promise.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the contributions to this debate made by members opposite, particularly in the last hour. I find that there is general support for this initiative and the government is very pleased to receive that general support.

I did, however, want to set the record straight on two issues, and they emerged in the exchange between the hon. member for Chambly and the hon. member for Saskatoon—Dundurn in the previous question and comment period.

First, a question was raised as to the government's financial commitment to this particular project. I would draw to the attention of both hon. members that what we are talking about here and what the bill establishes is a foundation. The money goes into a trust fund which generates interest and the interest fuels and supplies the foundation.

The other question that was raised was with respect to the quality of the appointees to the board of the foundation. A number of members have raised that question today. The suggestion was made in the exchange I alluded to that the government might, for some reason, choose appointees who were incompetent and who would mismanage the affairs of the foundation and then it would wither on the financial vine and perish. I am not sure that that was the exact wording but that suggestion was made. I want to reiterate to hon. members the commitment made by the minister, when he first announced the project and the bill, that the foundation will be managed by a board of directors. It would be in the interest of no government to be neglectful in that regard, both as to the quality of the appointees and the diligence of those appointees once they were in office.

I would also underline that the minister said that when he recommends board appointments to the Governor in Council he will consult widely, taking into account Canada's multicultural character, to ensure that the board has the necessary skills and expertise. Knowing the minister as I do, I think we can expect him to recruit appointees of the highest calibre. Some of them might not even have any identifiable political stripe. It is possible when he consults widely that he may even carry his consultations into the environs of Saskatoon and Chambly.

Mr. Phillip Edmonston (Chambly): Madam Speaker, I would just like to add to what my hon. colleague opposite said. As I understand it we are looking at $24 million. I do not want to give the wrong impression. But I also do not want the Canadian public to have the wrong impression from what my hon. colleague from the Conservative side said when he said that the government has a tendency to get the best people.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I will have to interrupt the hon. member. He should be asking questions in reference to the speech of the hon. member from Saskatoon and not the comments made by the hon. member for Edmonton Southwest.

Mr. Edmonston: Madam Speaker, it was just a burst of over-exuberance, I am afraid.

Let me return then to my hon. colleague from the NDP. It was a pleasure to listen to my hon. colleague in terms of the passion with which he spoke as well as the way he put his argument. It was a pleasure to hear something that was not theoretical but which was quite practical.

I would like to ask my colleague a question. When he was talking about how people have a tendency to make quick judgements on the way other people are dressed, such as the turban issue and others, is he satisfied with the way the government, apart from this bill, has treated that issue and others much like it?

Mr. Fisher: Madam Speaker, unfortunately, the answer to that would have to be no. I am not satisfied. I guess to be a bit repetitive, with respect to the matter of the turbans, I and a good many other people are thoroughly convinced that had the decision been made post-haste we would not have had the tremendous backlash which I think we are experiencing now. We would not have had the calendars. We would not have had the issue of whether or not it is racist, whether or not it is a breach of the law to be making such things and to be wearing those things.

I have no idea why the government delayed so long. I am thoroughly convinced that had that not occurred we may not have to be speaking in these terms. We may not even have to be talking about a race relations foundation. It is a very unfortunate situation.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

• (1800)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, it is my first opportunity to rise and congratulate you on your appointment. I know it is late but I do wish you well.

On November 28, 1989, I rose in the House and asked the Prime Minister what action he planned to take regarding amendments to the Magnusson Act which had recently been enacted by the U.S. Congress. This law restricts the importation of certain sizes of lobsters, a size that is larger than a lot of lobsters caught for export in Canada.

The Prime Minister told me that he would be dealing with the issue on an impending trip to Washington to see President Bush. In answer to my supplementary question, the Minister for International Trade assured me that the President would be asked to veto the legislation. As it turned out, the president did not veto it, disrupting another sector of the already beleaguered Atlantic fishery.

As a result of these regulations, Canadian lobster exporters were left without their prime retail market, worth some $30 million annually. In turn, prices plummeted. In southern Nova Scotia, they fell to $2.50 a pound from $4.50, from the same time the year before. In the Gulf of St. Lawrence, it was worse, they fell to $1.75 per pound. Many lobster fishermen will not be able to survive such prices.

Apart from the obvious hardship these regulations impose on lobster fishermen, the government's handling of this issue has further educated Canadians on the application of the free trade agreement, the lesson being that Canadians will have to learn to accommodate U.S. trade law and that we cannot expect this government to stand up to the Americans and protect our legitimate economic interests.

Further, the free trade agreement does not provide the security of access that the government promised Canadians during the last federal election campaign. When the president declined to veto the new size, the government immediately sought a reference to a binational dispute settlement panel, under Chapter 18 of the free trade agreement.

Given the immediate economic effect of the offending size regulations, an accelerated schedule of deliberations was agreed to. In sum, the government's argument to the panel was the Americans had not enacted the size restrictions for conservation purposes, but rather as a way to restrict Canadian imports and thus protect their own industry. This is an interesting turn of the tables, when you remember the arguments presented to a similar Chapter 18 panel last year on the subject of Canadian rules regarding the processing of west coast salmon and herring.

As we found out last Friday, the final decision of the panel was in favour of the United States. Its management regime was endorsed, and the result was the same as last year: Canada lost. But the reasons were reversed. This time the American conservation regime was upheld and the economic result was also the same. The Canadian industry and workers have been harmed and left with an uncertain future.

How can we explain this decision? How do we explain the apparent inconsistency with the logic of the earlier ruling? True, our government and the United States can now enter a 90–day period wherein the two governments can negotiate a settlement. It is only fitting that this government would take solace with the prospect of more negotiations, since all around us we see the results of its belief that everything is negotiable.

I could not enumerate the areas where the government seems to try to negotiate its way through to policy. But, we have the free trade agreement which the Prime Minister insisted on negotiating from a position of weakness and with the predictable result. The Americans will be dealing from an almost unbeatable position of strength during the next 90 days. Why should they make any concessions when they know that at the end of 90 days their law will be upheld anyway?

• (1805)

Once again the government will have to bargain away more Canadian interests to achieve a negotiated compromise. We saw an example of this on the east coast with the scarce fish resources traded to France just to get that country to come to the negotiating table on the St. Pierre and Miquelon boundary.

Taking all this in combination with the Canadian defeat before the earlier panel decision, this latest setback should make it very clear to Canadians what the future holds under the free trade agreement.

In order to maintain the access they have to the American market, Canadians should prepare themselves to accommodate whatever new American trade regulations come into effect, regardless of how trade distorting they may be.

They can do this in the confident knowledge that they are backed up by a government willing to play "Let's Make a Deal" on any issue. In this case, the lobster fishermen on the east coast are the losers. As usual, the Americans are the winners. The free trade agreement that was negotiated by this government incorporates another area where they have not governed on behalf of Canada. Instead, they tried to negotiate away an area that is a natural resource.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Madam Speaker, this government believes that the free trade agreement, in providing an opportunity for both the U.S. and Canada to bring issues to the dispute settlement process, provides for a rational and amicable settlement of disputes more quickly and effectively than previously. We all know that.

The system was established to ensure full consideration of the bilateral implications of trade action by either country. On December 21, 1989 when the U.S. President signed what has come to be called Mitchell amendment into law, our Prime Minister wrote immediately to the President indicating Canada's intention to challenge the U.S. measure under the free trade agreement. A majority of those on the panel agreed with the United States' position that the Mitchell amendment was an internal measure rather than an import restriction.

The Minister for International Trade and the United States representative, Mr. Hills, have agreed to consider the report over 90 days. During that time, our two countries will seek to reach a mutually advantageous resolution of the issues concerning trade and lobster. The discussions will be based on continuing consultations with interested parties, including the United States, the provinces and the two lobster industries that have been supportive of our negotiations.

This government has recently been requested by fishermen and provincial governments to provide short and long-term solutions to high inventories of processed products. External Affairs and International Trade Canada has set up a lobster promotion campaign in more than 30 of our missions abroad.

As the fisheries minister recently pointed out, the marketing campaign is working because the $20 million inventory of frozen lobster present in January of 1990 has been currently cut to $4.5 million. Of course, this government is concerned with the implications of the decision, but is seeking, with our lobster industry, a mutually beneficial conclusion to this issue. There is nothing preventing us, should there be any outstanding lobster issues remaining after conclusion of negotiations within the 90-day period, from seeking the formation of another panel to deal with those issues.

HEALTH

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, in the last general election the New Democratic Party warned Canadians about the future agenda of the government.

We said that the free trade deal made between the Prime Minister and the United States posed a great threat to Canadian sovereignty and to our distinct political culture. In Canada, we have always cared for and protected the less well off members of society, whether disadvantaged because of poverty, race or region. We have a long way to go, but our orientation has been clearly towards equality.

On the other hand, the United States has quite a different political culture, emphasizing the individual, largely to the exclusion of society, and rejecting such programs as universal health care as being an unwarranted intrusion into the marketplace. The fact that 37 million people in the United States have no health insurance appears to be immaterial in that society. The sanctity of the market and the freedom of position to make as much money as possible appears to be the highest good. In the last election we stated that the provisions in the free trade agreement calling for harmonization of policy between Canada and the United States, the future random negotiations that will determine the definition of a subsidy, and the provisions allowing for open American competition for health services all pose a threat to the universal social programs that Canadians cherish.

• (1810)

Conservatives reaction to this argument was really quite vicious and, in the final weeks of the campaign, millions of dollars were spent telling Canadians that Ed Broadbent was a liar for claiming that social programs were at risk. But they never did refute our arguments or facts.

This tactic succeeded in many parts of the country but it did not succeed in Saskatchewan where my party won most of the seats, largely because of the opposition to free trade.

The same broad-based coalition opposed to free trade recently defeated the provincial government of Grant Devine in its attempt to privatize provincial utilities. The people of my home province are very sensitive to attempts to dismantle the social services system which has sustained them through bad times and to which they have contributed in good times.

A short time ago I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare what the future plans of his government were in regard to medicare. I asked if there were plans to privatize medicare and if the minister was opposed to privatization.

True to form, rather than pledge himself to protect medicare, the minister repeated the same charges his party made during the last general election. He accused me and the New Democratic Party of waging a fear campaign by "trying to scare the sick and the elderly and the poor by telling them they were going to lose their benefits". He said it was false then, and it is false now.

It took a lot of moxie for the Tories to say this during the last election, but it is beyond belief that the minister would repeat these same charges today. Will the sick lose their benefits? The government is in the process of cutting billions of dollars from medicare and hospital insurance with Bill C-69. In my own province of Saskatchewan from 1984-85 to 1994-95, more than a billion dollars will be cut, and in Canada over that same period almost $29 billion will be cut.

Will the elderly lose their benefits? The federal government has just passed a claw back of old age pensions and announced its intentions to increase charges to veterans homes.

Will the poor lose their benefits? The government has just cut its contribution under the Canada Assistance Plan by $150 million and broken a contract with three provinces in the process.

With the recent track record, with massive cuts to social programs immediately after making a solemn promise never to touch them, it is little wonder that many Canadians are not reassured by generalities from the government about medicare.

Contrary to what the minister said, it is clear that there is an agenda to privatize medicare and hospital insurance. The only question is the speed with which it can be accomplished. We can see that by looking at the recent record.

With Bill C-69, the federal government has drastically cut transfers for medicare and hospital insurance. Every province will be affected but particularly the smaller and poorer provinces that spend a higher proportion of their budgets on health care.

These provinces also depend on the federal government for a higher percentage of their health care expenditures. Therefore, a cut in transfers to all the provinces has a regressive effect as it punishes the less well off more than the rest.

When questioned in the House of Commons about these cuts, the Minister of Finance indicated that in his opinion, health was a purely provincial responsibility and the transfers to the provinces were simply sources of general revenue to the provinces, bearing no relation to the programs they were designed to fund.

Of course this ignores the provisions of the Canada Health Act which sets out several criteria that are necessary before federal money will be transferred to the provinces for medicare and hospital insurance.

The most important provisions for the purposes of today's debate are those outlawing extra billing, user fees, and private administration of health care. The Minister of Finance ignored these provisions because he is signalling to the provinces that this government has no intention of enforcing them.

If we look at the eventual effect of the successive cuts to health transfers made by this government, we see a scary end result. The most important effect is that the cash component of the transfer is shrinking rapidly, both in absolute terms and as a percentage of transfers made to the provinces.

The rest of the federal share of health money of course comes in the form of tax room. What the federal government does is agree to allow the provinces to collect certain taxes, mainly personal and corporate income taxes that the federal government could collect. Rather than collect the money and then give it to the province, the federal government has removed itself from the equation and allows the provinces to collect the money themselves.

The problem with this is that the provisions of the Canada Health Act enforcing the ban on extra billing, user fees, and private administration of health insurance only apply to the cash portion of federal transfers.

If the federal government continues on its present path, the time will soon come when the cash portion of the transfer will disappear. The federal government will have no stick left with which to enforce the act.

It is estimated by the Quebec government that the cash portion for that province will end within the decade and will end for other provinces soon after. Therefore, there will be no way to prevent the provinces from bringing back extra billing or user fees.

• (1815)

This gradual whittling away of medicare must stop. We have seen it in terms of social programs, with unemployment insurance, pensions and family allowance clawbacks, cuts to medicare, social assistance plan payments and post-secondary education. I challenge the government to either commit itself to medicare and provide the funding and legislative framework necessary to prevent the privatization of this essential service or to proclaim its allegiance to free enterprise medicine and let the people of Canada make their choice between competing visions.

In conclusion, Canadians are watching with horror at what is happening to their health care system. They see the impact of government policies, both federal and provincial. Canadians want the government to commit itself to using its powers to ensure that privatization of our health system is ended. Canadians have yet to hear this government make such a commitment and that is why they are worried. If the government is opposed to privatization in the health care system, it would be an easy and straightforward thing to tell Canadians. Silence speaks a thousand words.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the question raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing gives me an opportunity, on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to stress again in front of this House and the Canadian people that the government is opposed, both in principle and in practice, to the imposition of direct charges, especially extra billing and user fees.

The Canada Health Act contains the principles on which our health insurance system is based: public funding, comprehensiveness and universality. Extra billing and user fees are contrary to the principle of accessibility. The federal Health Act contains provisions to discourage such practices and studies have shown that direct charges on patients discourage the least advantaged segments of the population from obtaining the health care to which they are entitled. Imposing direct charges on patients for necessary medical services would lead us to a two-tiered health care system, which is absolutely contrary to the intentions of our government, the Progressive Conservative government.

Canada undoubtedly has an outstanding health care system. Our public health insurance system is based on the principle of universality and accessibility of care for all Canadians.

In Canada, access to health care does not depend on one's ability to pay. In the United States, however, more than 30 million people do not have health insurance.

In conclusion, as Canadians, we are proud of our health insurance system. Three years ago, in April 1987, direct charges to patients were finally eliminated. The commitment to respect the principle of universal access to care is as strong today as when it was implemented.

I hope my answer is satisfactory to the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, on April 11 I rose to find the details on the farm aid program that the minister had promised would be known before Easter. I did so on April 11 because that was the last day the House sat before the Easter recess. I was curious, as are farmers right across the country, as to what sort of aid package it will be to offset the disastrous fall in net farm income that is being felt on the farms across Canada, particularly on the grain farms and those producing fur in the country.

The Minister of Agriculture at the time indicated that he had initiated discussions with the provinces and that he was attempting to raise $1 billion by combining $500 million of federal aid with a hoped-for equivalent amount of money from the provinces. The expectation in the farm community and among the bankers of that farm community was that in the west, at least, this would translate into a package that would amount to somewhere between $8 and $10 per cultivated acre.

• (1820)

That was almost seven weeks ago, one day short of seven weeks, and farmers of this country are further enlightened very little as to what that aid package will entail.

We have been told there are tentative agreements reached with some of the provinces. We have the details of the agreement reached with Alberta as to how the sharing will occur in order to get $89 million of federal funds. The province of Alberta will add an additional $11 million of new money and will be credited with contributions from approximately $78 million of existing programs to assist the income needs of Alberta farmers in the past few months.

The total there amounts to approximately $190 million of which about $100 million will be new money into the pockets of Alberta farmers. So far we do not know how that money will be distributed even after seven weeks of going past the deadline the minister promised.

I remind the House and the country that that disaster or shortfall has been well known for sometime. It was before Christmas at the agriculture outlook conference that we first became aware that the crop year of 1990-91 would be one in which farm incomes would be below those of previous years, that we would drop from approximately $5 billion of net income to a net income now revised upward to something in the order of $2.95 billion; in other words a shortfall of about $2 billion. In response to that shortfall of $2 billion, the federal government offered about a quarter of the damage that has been done.

In his response to me on April 11 the Minister of Agriculture and Deputy Prime Minister indicated that Canada could not match the treasuries of some of the other countries. At one point in his answer he indicated that Canada was doing much better than the Export Enhancement Program in the United States, leading one to believe that the Export Enhancement Program in the United States is the only farm subsidy program offered to that country's farmers when in fact the minister should know—and most farmers and members of the opposition realize it—that subsidy programs in the United States are far more endemic and far more expensive than that. They amount to billions of dollars, not just a few hundred millions. A portion of that money is available in the farmers' pockets to assist with seeding. They have what amounts to an interest-free storage program and an interest-free advance program where they can lock their crop into storage at harvest and get the loan rate: no interest. If the price goes up they have the option of taking the grain out of storage and realizing the difference between the locked-in price and the current market price. The total farm program in the United States means billions of dollars and a much more viable farm operation than we maintain in this country.

The minister seems to be somewhat concerned, though he did not express it in the House but outside the House, about the OECD figures which show that Canada is close to being equivalent to the Americans and Europeans when it comes to subsidizing wheat production.

He looked at an OECD study that included a special grains pay-out of $1 billion and a write-off for that one year of three-quarters of a billion dollars on the deficit of the western grain stabilization fund. Farmers did not get any money out of that three-quarters of a billion dollar write-off, yet the accounting system used shows that we received $1.75 billion extra funds that year, over and above existing programs, through those two ad hoc measures.

The minister knows full well—and if he does not his officials will know—that that will not be repeated last year or this year and that a mere $500 million as opposed to $1.75 billion will still leave us much short of the subsidy levels that the Americans and Europeans are using.

I am concerned that after all these weeks farmers still do not know the details of the farm program. I am also concerned that trappers and fur farmers have no idea as to what is involved in the defer component of the program to which he also alluded.

The three minutes available to the parliamentary secretary would be a good opportunity to enlighten the farmers and trappers in this country as to just where the government stands with regard to this half billion dollar so-called aid package that has been offered to them.

What will be the amounts received? When will they get it? How much longer do they have to wait for details? How much longer after the details are known will they have to wait before the cheques are in their pockets?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, all members of the House have anxiously awaited the agreement by the provinces on the $500 million short-term farm assistance package.

As we know, on May 18, federal and provincial ministers of agriculture met to discuss this package among other things. It is also my pleasure to inform the House that at that meeting agreement in principle was reached on several issues. We have decided how the funds will be divided among provinces and the nature of cost sharing arrangements. Details are being worked on a bilateral basis between the federal government and each province. These negotiations are coming to positive conclusions.

The agreement on farm aid reached between the province of Alberta and the federal government was announced yesterday in Edmonton, and farm aid for Ontario was announced earlier today in Toronto.

Other bilateral negotiations are continuing. I am advised that we are close to reaching agreement with several other provinces. The government is very encouraged by the progress that has been made. Meetings will take place with each province so that individual federal-provincial agreements can be drafted.

The provinces have agreed to administer assistance to producers. This will allow them to direct funds to producers most in need. These mechanisms will be written into the federal-provincial agreements. Once the provinces have designed their programs, they will be able to determine their cash flow needs. When these are finalized federal funds will flow to the provinces. We are confident that all parties will now work fast to determine these last details.

In addition, the government is increasing the flexibility of the farm debt review fund which currently has $180 million available. It will be made more adaptable to current circumstances so that arrangements which farmers have worked out with the Farm Credit Corporation through the farm debt review process can be extended.

Farmers will also be able to build up funds for a down payment on a farm through an equity building fund. These measures will give breathing space to farmers whose arrangements with the FCC are expiring but who are not yet ready to buy back their land. This initiative gives farmers access to between $10 million and $15 million as well.

As can be seen, the federal government, in co-operation with the provinces, is endeavouring to get as much money as possible into farmers' pockets as rapidly as possible.

[Translation]

Madam Deputy Speaker: The motion that the House do now adjourn is deemed to have been adopted. Therefore, the House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.29 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 30, 1990

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture some time ago announced federal assistance of $450 million to Canadian grain and oilseed producers to help address the projected income shortfall caused by unfair foreign export subsidies. I congratulate the minister on his decision to turn these moneys over to the provinces so that each province can devise eligibility and delivery criteria that will best address the needs of its producers. Putting the province in charge of distribution should reduce the time delays inherent in national ad hoc programs.

Some $237 million of this federal money will go to Saskatchewan for distribution to producers along with whatever additional funds the province of Saskatchewan is prepared to put up. This assistance is further tangible evidence of this government's ongoing commitment to Canadian and Saskatchewan producers.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the government finally released the initial prices of Ontario wheat, affecting 18,000 producers. In spite of numerous requests from the Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board, the government should recognize its responsibilities in the international trade war which threatens to destroy Canadian agriculture and ensure an initial price for all Ontario wheat of $130 a tonne. The government has refused.

The government eliminated the at and east transportation program, the Advance Payments for Crops Program, and now the government has set the initial price at $20 to $30 per tonne below the farmers' actual cost of production. These initial low prices cannot be justified by the market when world stocks are at historic lows. An initial price for Ontario white winter wheat of $115 a tonne is unacceptable. This is a drop of $15 a tonne, a drop of 11.5 per cent.

I call on the government to respond to the international trade war, which has lowered grain prices by $20 to $30 a tonne, by implementing an export program for Canada's producers and restore the two-price wheat policy to ensure an equitable return for Canada's producers.

* * *

PRINTING INDUSTRY

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in the printing industry today, space-age satellite technology allows typesetting and film to be prepared offshore, usually in Pacific Rim countries, and then to be transmitted to Canada by satellite. Before the advent of this technology, when that work entered Canada, it was subject to duty. Today it is not. This means pre-press shops in Canada compete with firms in Hong Kong and Taiwan with wage scales two-thirds lower than ours. This is a clear case of public policy not keeping up with technology.

As a result of the free trade agreement, the hyper competitive Canadian print market has been opened to giant U.S. printing firms, squeezing the Canadian industry and limiting its ability to modernize. As well, a 25 per cent drop in Canadian print exports is a direct result of this government's high interest rate policy.

I urge the government to move to ensure this critical part of the communication industry remains healthy and viable.

S. O. 31

NATIONAL UNITY

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, Alice Linden of London, Ontario, says she does not want to tell her great-grandchildren she stood by in 1990 and did nothing to stop Canada from breaking up.

So, at noon today in London, she organized her own rally to send a message of unity to the people of Canada. In so doing, she awakened the sleeping giant in our community. Hundreds of Londoners, including John King and the students from Mountsfield Public School, used their lunch hour to stand up and be counted. Their message was simple. With hand lettered signs, and dressed in red and white, these people reached out in support and understanding to our neighbours in Quebec.

The people of London, in the heart of English Canada, want the rest of Canada to know that they will not sit quietly and allow a noisy minority to split the country we love. Alice and people like her are the silent majority in our country. With them, a powerful momentum is building in the hamlets, villages, towns and cities across our great land. It begs to be heard before it is too late. Keep Canada together. Gardons le Canada uni.

Congratulations, Alice. I call upon the silent majority of Canadians to break their silence and join her fight.

* * *

• (1410)

PRINTING INDUSTRY

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Printing Industries Association is meeting this week in Ottawa. Our printing industry employs 60,000 Canadians through more than 3,000 establishments, almost all of them Canadian-owned small businesses. Its sales are nearly $2 billion per year.

In 1989, the first year under free trade, our printing imports were up 20 per cent, exports were down 25 per cent, and Canada's trade deficit in printed materials skyrocketed 142 per cent.

One thousand Canadian printers lost their jobs last year. This sorry performance is a result of Tory government policies, high interest rates, a high dollar and a free trade deal that permits Americans to unfairly discriminate against our Canadian printers. When will the Government of Canada stand up for Canada's printers? When will the Government of Canada stand up for Canada's businesses? When will it stand up for Canada?

* * *

[Translation]

RAIL TRANSPORT

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of CN inter-office correspondence dated February 22, 1990, sent by Mr. Bourgeois, Director of Quebec City operations, to Mr. Boucher, Regional Director in Montreal, concerning two different scenarios for putting the Chapais subdivision, between Franquet and Chapais, back in service.

The first scenario would be to accommodate traffic if necessary—which implies that the section will be strictly used as an emergency detour—and the second, to put back into circulation a certain volume of traffic as specified in another memo.

In concluding, Mr. Bourgeois added the following: "If, as expected, we plan to put the section back into service, to be used only if necessary".

Mr. Speaker, once again, the President of CN and the big bosses in Quebec City and Montreal have blithely ignored the ruling by the National Transportation Agency of Canada on January 31, 1990, as well as CN workers and the various economic partners in Abitibi.

* * *

[English]

FORESTRY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the low value placed on Canada's forests by provincial governments has led to wasted resources and a poor return to Canadians. A classic example is the strong demand in the United States for recycled newsprint. Because of the ready access to under-priced trees, pulp mills in Canada produce almost entirely virgin pulp and paper, much of it for U.S. markets.

At a time when existing mills should be adding de-inking facilities to recycle newsprint and paper, and when new mills should be designing in recycling capacity, we see inaction.

The Canadian forest barons clearly intend to hand over the major recycling market to U.S. firms and to continue gobbling Canadian forests.

The former Minister of the Environment pointed out that 80 million trees, the entire annual cut of the province of Ontario, could be saved by setting recycling standards in Canada to that of Japan. We should not be filling our landfills with recyclable paper. Paper fibre can be recycled seven times, not once.

Forty per cent of the marine pollution in Canada is from pulp mills. It is time they cleaned up, reduced their cut and waste, and recycled their product. Canada needs law on recycling.

* * *

THE ARTS

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, I recently had occasion to go through Pearson International Airport's Terminal II which is presently undergoing renovations. I noticed that the terminal was sporting many cartoons and murals and had pamphlets with cartoon characters drawn by American Mad Magazine artist Don Martin.

Upon investigation it was discovered that the art was commissioned by Air Canada, a Crown corporation. While the characters are highly amusing, I could not understand why Air Canada would choose an American over a Canadian artist. There is a happy ending to this. Further investigation found that while the copyrighted figures belong to artist Don Martin, the layout and design was done by Canadian artists. In fact, I discovered that Air Canada has the largest private art bank in Canada and they are very involved in promoting young Canadian artists.

I would like to commend Air Canada on their role for the enhancement and the status of the Canadian artist.

* * *

SOVIET UNION

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to welcome the visit of Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and his wife Raisa to Canada. They have certainly impressed Canadians and we warmly wish this man of peace every success.

I would also like to take this time to urge our government to support President Gorbachev's efforts of reform. But, to do so, Canada must first increase its diplomatic presence in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Speaker, the opening of a new Canadian consulate in Kiev has been delayed. Canada should have a consulate in Leningrad. Our Moscow embassy is seriously understaffed. Stronger ties between the Soviet Union and Canada are impossible without a greater Canadian presence in the Soviet Union, including greater Canadian expertise in Soviet languages and Soviet affairs. Among other faults, the lack of Canadian personnel in the Soviet Union makes it unnecessarily difficult for those wishing to emigrate from the Soviet Union to Canada. We in the Liberal party believe in supporting greater Canadian-Soviet relations in areas such as economy, agriculture, Arctic protection, and the environment.

Therefore I urge the government to take the opportunity of Mr. Gorbachev's visit to secure Soviet co-operation, to proceed immediately with the opening of new Canadian consulates in the Soviet Union, and to increase the Canadian presence in our existing embassy in Moscow.

* * *

[Translation]

SOVIET UNION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, we have the honour and the privilege of receiving in Canada a great statesman, the President of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Mr. Mikhail Gorbachev, the man who ended the cold war.

Thanks to wide-ranging reforms that are taking place in Eastern Europe, a new era of liberalization, unification and openness is born.

Canada has its place in the history of this process. Last February, it hosted the first "Open Skies" conference, attended by foreign affairs ministers of the 23 NATO And Warsaw Pact countries.

During our Prime Minister's visit to the Soviet Union last November, 14 bilateral agreements were signed, on subjects ranging from international relations in the Arctic to the environment and trade.

President Gorbachev's visit to Canada will no doubt be an important event in the history of Soviet–Canadian relations. We must now look to the future and consider the major issues.

Mr. Speaker, once again, Canada and our Prime Minister are playing a leading role in achieving more peaceful relations between countries the world over.

* * *

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, the government's commitment to the environment does not stand the test. Salisbury, a community in my riding, is very disappointed at the lack of support it received from the government when it tried to participate in federal government environmental programs. Schools in my area are in need of federal funds to support their recycling projects.

[Translation]

Their students are not trying to collect money to pay for trips or the prom. These students are concerned about the environment. All they want is a small amount of money to help them carry out their project.

[English]

We are encouraging people to get involved, but we are not delivering at the other end. We are building support and commitment, but we cannot deliver at the program level. We have top down programs rather than bottom up. Without effective programs we will ultimately lose the support of the people and then we will lose our environment.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of most people responsible for economic policy, I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister whoever he or she may be.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Exporters Association both agree that the government's high interest rate policy as well as the exchange rate policy are creating a lot of problems for exporters in the country. As a matter of fact it is disastrous for the manufacturing sector particularly.

Is the government now prepared to listen to the manufacturing sector, the Canadian premiers, the Canadian Labour Congress, and consumers and change the disastrous monetary policy that is wrecking our economy?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asks about the level of the dollar and our manufacturing sector.

I think he knows that the World Economic Forum judged Canada the fourth most productive economy in the world in 1988. The study to which he is making reference was done in 1988. This was before the government was able to bring in the free trade agreement, which makes our manufacturing sector more competitive. It was also before we were able to bring legislation before the House to get rid of the manufacturers' sales tax, which is very important to the manufacturing sector.

• (1420)

More important, we have for example Chrysler's $400 million investment. We have Stelco expanding. We have the forest products industry expanding. We have CATO Industries expanding and a number of high–tech firms. There are endless stories of manufacturing investment increasing.

However, the most important point for the hon. member to remember is that recently we have some pressures on labour costs. They are starting to rise. This we must deal with, and that we are doing.

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, obviously the minister is not aware that as recently as this week the Canadian Exporters Association and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association both indicated that they are in a very precarious position as a result of the high dollar policy of this government.

There are studies that indicate we are at a 40-year low in terms of our competitiveness in the U.S. market. I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister or whoever is speaking for the government on economic matters today a question.

Do they not understand the depth of the problem being articulated by the leading Canadian business spokespeople in this country? Do they not recognize that they have to change their high interest, high dollar policy, or Canadian exports are going to face a disastrous situation from which they will not recover for many years, if ever?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that the way to be competitive is to control costs. Two absolutely essential ways to control costs is to make sure that labour costs are reasonable and that inflationary pressures in the country do not increase.

The two biggest threats we have to the structure of costs in the manufacturing industry are inflationary pressures that come from excess demands and excess credit. The Bank of Canada's efforts on the monetary side are helping with that. However, more important, we have a fiscal policy which has been responsible and which is also doing its bit to ensure costs are kept in line. This we must do. To lower the dollar would simply increase enormously input costs, especially for the manufacturing sector. That is not the way to go.

[Translation]

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, it is clear the minister fails to understand what all Canadians are trying to tell him. The budget brought down by the Minister of Finance on February 20 projected a bank rate of 11.1 per cent. The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce tells us this is out of the question. In fact, people have been saying this ever since the budget was brought down.

My question for the Acting Prime Minister is this: Considering that the bank rate will not be 11.1 per cent this year, and considering that our expenditures will be at least $2 billion more than was estimated in the Budget, will the government bring down a new Budget that reflects the current economic situation in this country?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that the Minister of Finance has said no to that proposition. He has also made it clear that income tax revenues are flowing a little better than expected. That helps to balance the pessimistic comments he made about interest rate costs.

However, more important, to artificially take the dollar or to take interest rates and lower them would simply chase investment out of Canada and increase enormously the cost of manufacturing inputs and all sorts of imports we get from other countries. This would simply lead to the kind of spiral we had in 1981-1982 when interest rates were 22 per cent and 23 per cent and inflation was running at 14 per cent and 15 per cent. This we do not want, and this is what we are fighting.

* * *

[Translation]

TRADE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister for International Trade, if there is one in the House. A report by the Canadian Printing Industries Association, published a year after the free trade agreement with the United States came into force, indicates there has been a 25 per cent drop in exports. Could the Acting Minister for International Trade inform the House what the government intends to do to stop a process that threatens the very existence of the printing industry in this country?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, there is probably no industrial sector in Canada more dependent on high cost machinery than the printing industry.

The government is trying to moderate inflation and to keep the cost of inputs and imports down. A large part of the imports in the printing industry come from offshore. We are trying to moderate inflation, to make sure those costs do not go up, and to make sure the price of imports do not go up. However, above all, by removing the manufacturers' sales tax, by removing the 13.5 per cent tax and putting in its place a tax which is virtually instantly rebated through input tax credit, is good news for that industry. I hope the hon. member will support us in that.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the minister says, free trade, the high dollar, the elimination of postal subsidy, and the GST are badly hurting the Canadian printing industry.

Maybe the minister should read the report from the Canadian printing industry so that he will realize the damage they are doing to the industry.

My question to the minister is very simple. Why does the government want to destroy the printing industry in Canada?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, if one takes the conclusions at which the hon. member has just invited the House to arrive with him, that first we should have a lower dollar which would increase the cost of machinery for the printing industry enormously, and if he wants to reinstate all the tariffs that existed before free trade and make sure we could not lower tariffs, that would increase the cost to the printing industry enormously.

If he is also arguing that he does not want the industry to look globally and in a continental sense, then he is asking for the very opposite of what this industry is asking for. It wants to be competitive, it wants a chance at world markets, and it wants low cost imports.

* * *

BALTIC STATES

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister or whoever is responsible for external affairs today.

Many Canadians have shown strong support for the democratic aspirations of the Baltic nations and for a peaceful resolution to the present crisis in that part of the world.

Will the Acting Prime Minister assure us that it has been made clear to Mr. Gorbachev that Canadians know his economic blockade of Lithuania runs contrary to his earlier assurances of no forceful intervention?

Given the conciliatory offers of compromise recently made by the Baltic negotiators, will the Canadian government urge Mr. Gorbachev to suspend the economic boycott of Lithuania and, particularly, the blockade of medical supplies which is now reaching catastrophic dimensions?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is aware of our policy, which has been consistent in this House, from statements made on several occasions by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. She knows perfectly well that our position remains the same. We have confirmed our position of non-recognition, de jure, of Lithuania's annexation by the Soviet Union. We urged the Soviet authorities to show moderation, and we condemned their blockade of Lithuania. We emphasized the need for dialogue, and that is certainly the message that has been transmitted to the authorities during their visit. We still think that dialogue and moderation are the best way to deal with this kind of conflict.

[English]

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is very brief.

Would the government be willing to provide advice and assistance to the Lithuanian Canadian community and others in Canada who are trying to find a way to get much needed medical supplies into Lithuania?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, we are of course very concerned about the situation in Lithuania, and we can assure Canadians that, should certain groups wish to send medical equipment or supplies to Lithuania, we would be willing to consider, assist and support this kind of operation. At the present time, however, we have not received any requests from official authorities in that country. We are prepared to consider any assistance offered by Canadian authorities or the Canadian public.

[English]

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, the government knows that the Baltic crisis should be resolved within the framework of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

The Baltic republics will be seeking observer participant status at the upcoming meeting on the human dimension in Copenhagen. Will the Acting Prime Minister give us her assurance that Canada will support that request?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows perfectly well that the President of the Soviet Union is still in Canada and that the talks are not over yet. I am sure that when the Secretary of State for External Affairs returns to the House, he will be happy to inform the House about the discussions that took place and various representations the Government of Canada has made to the Soviet authorities.

* * *

• (1430)

[English]

FISHERIES

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister who today answers for fisheries. The free trade panel has decided against Canada, a decision which will cost Canadian lobster fishermen $30 million. Will the minister now specify what financial assistance will be made available to Atlantic lobster fishermen to get them through this crisis?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, this is a trade question and the last time I looked lobsters were a commodity that this country trades.

On the question of the loss of trade through the decision made by the panel, I said yesterday that this gives us a 90-day-period for industry, labour and governments to get together to see what they can put together. The most important fact that this hon. member should be aware of is that we are promoting in a massive way the smaller lobsters in other countries as well as the larger lobsters in the United States, so much so that the original estimate of $30 million will certainly not turn out to be accurate. The promotional campaign is working very well. In fact, in recent months industry and the provinces have made a concerted effort to reduce inventories from $20 million in January to about $4.7 million. So we are having great luck with our promotion campaign.

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. The promotional package announced last week is not enough. Promotion will only sell lobsters bought from fishermen at $1.25 a pound. This is not good enough if they are forced out of business by this year's low prices.

Therefore, will the minister immediately commit his government to providing a price package to help lobster fishermen now?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will find this list of what the minister has committed long, but it is very important.

First, External Affairs and International Trade have identified lobsters to Canadian posts as priority fishing market items for this year. We have also encouraged the formation of the Canadian Atlantic Lobster Promotion Association for generic image and quality promotion. We have undertaken a world-wide survey of markets through Canadian posts with results that are soon to be released. We are working with the industry, the provinces and the associations directly to make officials aware of the many opportunities, opportunities which this country has not taken proper advantage of in the past to promote this product, not simply through grocery stores and restaurants but through trade fairs and other contexts.

We believe not just in subsidizing and subsidizing but in promoting, and it is working.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. The major environmental scourge in the Great Lakes is the zebra mussel, a parasite imported from Europe. It has already totally infested Lake Erie and Lake St. Clair, almost all of Lake Ontario, and it is now showing signs in Lake Huron and Lake Superior. It creates havoc for industry and for governmental agencies, especially municipalities.

The American government is committing $37.5 million to control it. Ontario Hydro is spending over $10 million and we do not know how much Ford is spending to correct it. Industries like Ford are spending millions. The only institution not doing anything effectively is this government.

Will the minister commit the necessary funds today to control the zebra mussel spread in the Great Lakes?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the question which the hon. member raises is very important. I want to reassure him by indicating that this government is working in close co-operation with the Ontario government, with American counterparts, with Great Lakes authorities and with the universities.

There are currently in place some 26 research projects which are designed to provide the science and technology we need to address the problem which already exists in the presence in the Great Lakes of the zebra mussels.

It is also very important, however, to understand that this government must continue with its actions of taking every step possible to ensure that ships coming into the Great Lakes from overseas waters are dumping their ballast at sea in order to ensure that no greater quantities of zebra mussels come into Canada than are already here.

We must continue to co-operate together in the future as we have in the past.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I asked what this government is doing that is effective. If the government was doing anything effective we would control the spread of the zebra mussel in Lake Huron and Lake Superior. We have to take immediate action today. We cannot wait two years to control the spread of the zebra mussel in the Great Lakes. If this government does something immediately we can control its spread in Lake Huron and Lake Superior.

What will this government do to correct the zebra mussel problem in these two lakes?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is important to understand that action for the sake of action is not always as productive as the hon. member suggests.

We are working in very close co-operation with the universities to ensure that we have the technology and science in place which will enable us to reduce the number of zebra mussels.

At the moment we are also considering using chlorine in water in those areas where intake pipes are being blocked by the zebra mussels. That is one action which is possible within a constrained area. However, it is also important to understand that you cannot put massive amounts of chlorine into water because that will create another problem.

The hon. member is suggesting that the work of scientists in Canadian universities is not important. I suggest to him that it is exceedingly important and the net result will be evident in the very near future.

* * *

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to whoever is the acting part-time minister of fisheries and oceans today. In 1987, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Government of British Columbia and the Alcan Aluminium Company signed an out-of-court agreement that will reduce the flows of the Nechako River, a major tributary of the Fraser River, by 50 per cent.

On Saturday, at a conference in Vanderhoof, B.C., a retired Fisheries and Oceans biologist reported that scientists in the department were put under political pressure to rationalize the diversion and justify their advice to the minister.

Is the minister, whoever that is today, aware of this evidence? Will he not investigate this serious allegation and report back to this House immediately?

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I hate to disappoint my friends opposite. The question that my hon. friend raises is one to which, at this moment, I cannot respond. I think he knows that the government is very concerned about fish habitat and the situation in British Columbia.

I undertake to get back to him directly on the matter and to respond either to him directly or to the House.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary should speak to his leader. In June of 1984, the then Leader of the Opposition, the present Prime Minister, said that this project would receive a full environmental review. The settlement that was eventually decided on excluded the company from any environmental assessment.

In light of expected environmental assessment legislation under the Green Plan, will the minister order a complete and full review of this project as promised by the Prime Minister when he was Leader of the Opposition?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could enlighten my hon. friend about this particular project. Of course there was an environmental assessment carried out at the time that the new arrangement was made.

In fact, the new conditions that are imposed on the company tend to enhance the environment of the area very significantly in the sense that it restores an old river bed.

• (1440)

If my hon. friend knew the area, as he should because he is the member from there, he would know that a river bed has been restored, that the temperature of the water can be regulated and that millions of dollars have been spent to improve the habitat of the fish. Every possible guarantee has been written into the agreement to make sure that actually happens.

* * *

TRANSPORT

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Last week the minister said that the independent truckers were satisfied with solutions proposed by him for the blockades and he said that the blockades would be lifted at international border points. However, several independent truckers in my riding and elsewhere say otherwise.

Can the minister now tell us precisely what he will do to assist the trucking industry and when he will do it?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the the Minister of Transport for Ontario, Bill Wrye, and I, did reach an agreement with the independent truckers vis-à-vis what would be done by the province of Ontario and what would be done by the federal government to assist their situation.

Specifically, we suggested that we would crack down on illegal cabotage. We suggested that we would take up with the Bureau of Competition their complaints about certain U.S. truckers. Third, we undertook to try together to find a more effective way of collecting both the federal and excise tax on fuel and the Ontario fuel tax. We both agreed that a better method was necessary. We also agreed to have federal officials liaise with the committee with which they have.

The independent truckers were satisfied. The blockade has been lifted and the work is underway.

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Why did the minister fail to notify the independent truckers of the so-called resolution to their concerns last week? Truckers at several crossing points, including Johnstown and the Thousand Island Bridge, were not notified.

Why were these independent truckers not notified at these border points?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, both the Ontario minister and myself put what we would do in writing and made every effort to communicate with the independent truckers. I think my hon. friend would understand that it is rather difficult to communicate without any organization being in place.

We made copies of my letter and that of Bill Wrye available to the Ontario Provincial Police. It is my understanding that through their network they were able to distribute it to the truckers.

[Translation]

MULTICULTURALISM

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship.

Yesterday the minister said that the government was committed to promoting interracial relations. Concurrently the Conservative government members on the legislative committee examining Bill C-37 have refused to hear evidence from Quebec witnesses and limited public representations to only four groups.

How can the government promote racial harmony when its members take such an aggressive position concerning Quebec witnesses?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, apparently the hon. member is talking about something that happened before the legislative committee.

The committee is the master of its agenda and I certainly do not have anything to say about whatever may have happened in committee.

[English]

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister could tell his committee that it would be too biased not to hear from Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member probably knows, as other hon. members know, that the questions that can be asked about what is taking place in committee are somewhat limited. The minister chose to answer, and the minister has given an answer. If the hon. member wishes to ask a supplemental I hope that she will keep in mind that it should be directed to the minister in an area in which he does have jurisdiction.

[Translation]

Mrs. Maheu: Mr. Speaker, my second question is for the same minister. The government claims it wants to promote tolerance throughout the country, yet the members refused to hear Mr. Bitton, a witness who is an advisor to the Quebec government.

Can the minister explain how he will address the distinct problems of heritage languages in Quebec without listening to the province's representatives?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker—

Mrs. Maheu: That is policy.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is asking a question of policy, that is one thing, but that question is going right back into the committee, and the hon. member knows that the Speaker will have to remind members that that is not a question that is appropriate for ministers. The minister, of course, can make a reply if he wishes, but I have to say that that question is going too far.

The hon. member for Saskatoon—Dundurn.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister, whoever he might be. Yesterday the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture learned of three serious cases of human rights violations at the Canadian Radio-Television and Communications Commission. It also heard for the first time that the chairman of the commission had just heard of these violations.

The management of the CRTC is refusing to comply with the ruling of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. Will the Acting Prime Minister tell us why the CRTC is forcing its employees to extreme lengths in order to seek basic justice? If not, will he undertake to fully investigate why the CRTC is refusing to comply with human rights rulings?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the CRTC, as the House well knows and as the member knows, is an arm's length agency. However, if the allegations are true, as the member suggests they are, and I have to accept his word for it at this point, I am sure the Minister of Communications will have the opportunity to relay the question to the chairman of the CRTC.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly appreciate if that were done because when an agency of the government forces its employees to go so far as to a tribunal in so far as the Human Rights Commission is concerned, it is unacceptable in Canada in 1990. Not only does that apply to the CRTC, it applies to the whole government service as well.

My supplementary question is addressed to the Solicitor General. Will the Solicitor General assure this House that he will not use the Section 59 discretionary loophole in the Human Rights Act and will prosecute cases if the investigating agency considers there is a basis for prosecution?

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think the parliamentary secretary to the minister has already answered the question completely.

* * *

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Western Economic Diversification. I have here a copy of a letter that was written by his colleague, the member for Portage—Interlake, to the Minister of Energy wherein he states his opposition to any further funding for the core area initiative in Winnipeg, a program which, as the minister knows, has generated hundreds of millions of dollars of private capital and has assisted thousands of businesses and individuals to help in the renewal of that city.

• (1450)

Will the minister give his assurance that this does not reflect the position of the Conservative cabinet of this government? Will the minister give his assurance that he will undertake to start serious negotiation with the city and the province for the renewal of the core area initiative? Particularly, will he reject the know-nothing opinions of his colleague from Portage—Interlake?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, I take the hon. member's representation. We are presently looking at the whole area of the limited amount of funding that we have to go around. I will certainly take his representations into view as we go through and complete the review.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, we did not get the assurances we need.

Why is it that when the Western Diversification Fund still has over $500 million yet unattached, it has not given its fair proportion to Manitoba? In fact, there have been cut-backs already for the cultural industries announced just last week by the Minister of Communications. There have been major cut-backs in transfers to the universities and hospitals. There has been a major cut-back on programs for research and agriculture.

Why is this government picking on Manitoba, denying it our proper share of regional development funds?

The member for Portage—Interlake may be an expert on art, but he knows nothing about regional development. Will the minister at least stand up for the province of Manitoba?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member looks at the record of the amount of money we have allocated to Manitoba on a proportionate basis relative to population, he will be interested to see that it is getting a little more than its share. So he is wrong there.

Second, I can recall about 10 years ago when that member was a member of the previous government. They went out to Calgary and promised a $5 billion Western Diversification Fund and we got little, if any, out of it.

We have committed over $1.8 billion to be spent in the west on regional development over a five-year period. We are on target for spending that amount of money. So far we have created something in the order of 25,000 permanent, diversified, quality jobs. That is a pretty good record in two and a half years as compared to what the previous government did. It did nothing except make big promises with a lot of zeros behind them and the result was zero as well.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment. Several task forces commissioned by the Minister of Employment over the last few years have recommended funding strategy for training that does not involve the complete destruction of the unemployment insurance system. All of those recommendations have been rejected. The latest of these is the one from the Canadian Employment and Immigration Advisory Council, which again recommends a refundable tax credit to finance training.

Since that recommendation allows the government to meet its funding obligations under the Unemployment Insurance Act and still allows for funding training for the government in its proposed labour force development strategy, why will the minister not accept that recommendation?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): The report was just tabled, Mr. Speaker. We will therefore need some time to examine the recommendations and then try to implement them.

We could take this opportunity to reaffirm our commitment, as a government, to those programs. Already, several millions of dollars have regularly been invested in order to subsidize training and considerable amounts have been made available to the programs.

Of course, we can expand the Labour Force Development Strategy and take into account all the recommendations submitted to us to allow for the flexibility required to improve our programs.

[English]

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the report has been released for at least one week. That advisory council also condemns Canada's monetary policy as a major contributor to manufacturing shut-downs, losses of good jobs, increases in the deficit and inflation, and the resulting high unemployment.

The unemployed are being made to bear the brunt of the government's high interest rate policy. Why will the minister not accept that recommendation? Further, why will she not ask the Minister of Finance why he insists on implementing policies that prevent her from fulfilling her mandate to the unemployed and to those whose jobs he is putting at risk?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, I think that, as a government, we certainly do not need to take any advice or lesson concerning the need to reform the labour strategy as required. Our strategy works fine and we have created the jobs needed. Women representation in the workplace has increased. The only thing left to do at this point, as far as I am concerned, is to ask the other place to approve expeditiously the reform we are proposing regarding the labour strategy and its improved programs. We will, of course, take into account the consultations made as well as the recommendations submitted and we will implement them according to our financial means.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to whomever speaks for the Department of Industry, Science and Technology.

In 1982, the federal government and the government of Ontario bailed out what has now become Varity Corporation, in the sum of $200 million. For that amount of bail out the company promised to produce 1,500 new jobs in Canada. This morning it was announced that Kelsey-Hayes, which was purchased by Varity, is closing definitely in August, in spite of government promises that it would stop this.

Now Varity says it is going to move its headquarters to Buffalo, in spite of a promise to the government that it would maintain its corporate headquarters in Canada. What is the government going to do about it?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister for Science): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the reports that Varity is considering moving its head office to Buffalo, but we have not been advised of any such move. I want the member to know that a letter has been sent by ISTC officials reminding Varity of the undertakings it has in the foundation agreement and that we expect Varity to live up to those agreements.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I think even this government might understand that if Varity buys a mansion in Buffalo that ain't a place for a summer cottage.

Is it the intention of this government, along with the government of the province of Ontario, to enforce the covenant and maintain corporate headquarters in Canada and save those hundreds of jobs in Windsor or not? Is it just going to be letter writing or is the government going to enforce the law?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister for Science): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague should know that there have been no changes granted by the Government of Canada whatsoever in the foundation agreement with Varity, and there will be none.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the government likes to pretend it can treat people, especially its own employees, like pawns on a chessboard and move them around and knock them off at will. A memo leaked from Transport Canada last week shows that the cut-back of 300 employees is going to jeopardize air safety and is going to increase contracting costs.

Now that the Minister of Transport has had time to look into this leaked memo, will he admit that these cut-backs are in fact compromising air safety and will he immediately stop any action on cut-backs?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is no question we are looking at ways to save money, but in no way do any of the efforts that we have made compromise safety. Safety is first and foremost.

There have been allegations from other colleagues on my hon. friend's side as to alleged reports, alleged cut-backs, alleged this and alleged that, but I have not seen any of the allegations.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the minister has had over five days to look into a report from his own department. It is no allegation. I will send it to him across the aisle.

• (1500)

This is the government that came to Ottawa promising pink slips and running shoes to public servants. It likes to pretend that it is only trimming fat in Ottawa when it hits Public Service employment.

Will the minister admit that, in fact, these 300 cut-backs are affecting jobs across the country, that it is 99 jobs lost in Atlantic Canada, 125 in western Canada and 60 in Quebec, and that these are not the kind of job cuts that should be hitting these regions of the country at this time?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): No.

* * *

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Revenue. The minister will recall that when the House of Commons increased disability benefits for people who were recipients of the Canada Pension Plan, provincial governments grabbed that money, and those disabled individuals did not receive an increase at all.

For those individuals who may be eligible for a refund under the GST, will the minister guarantee to the House today that provincial governments will not be permitted to grab those cheques off welfare recipients?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will know that the federal government cannot control the actions and activities of the provincial government.

On the other hand, the hon. member will also know that the legislation proposed in respect to the GST offers GST credits for low and modest income Canadians.

May I add that we have received over 10 million applications thus far. In fact, we are expecting now as we are monitoring them that well over nine million Canadians are going to qualify and start receiving those GST credits as of December of this year for them to keep.

[Translation]

POINT OF ORDER

NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED DURING ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My question today dealing with the heritage languages was meant for the Chairman of the Standing Committee and I thought that, in his absence, the minister responsible would reply. Under the circumstances, I hereby give notice of my intention to raise the subject matter of my question on the adjournment of the House.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I take note of the hon. member's request. However, I must remind her that in accordance with our Standing Order she must give the Speaker notice in writing not later than four o'clock today.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official, languages the government's response to 146 petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS—FOURTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver): Madam Speaker, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has the honour to present its fourteenth report.

I might add that, because this is a non partisan, all-party committee, this committee has filed more reports than any other House committee in the present session.

In accordance with its mandate under Standing Order 92(1), your committee recommends that the following items of Private Members' Business be designated as votable items.

There are four of them, Madam Speaker: Mr. Plamondon's bill to amend the Canada Labour Code; Mr. Boyer's bill to establish the Centennial Flame Research Award; Mr. Kempling's bill, an act to amend the Canada Pension Plan with particular regard to spousal agreements; and Mr. Proud's bill to mark the birthplace of Canada on the 125th anniversary of the 1864 Charlotte Conference.

FINANCE—SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Finance on Bill S-15, an act to amend the act of incorporation of Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[Translation]

STANDING COMMITTEE ON FORESTRY AND FISHERIES

CONCURRENCE IN MOTION TO EXTEND CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN VOTES

Madam Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 81(4)(a), the following motion standing in the name of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is deemed adopted:

> That, pursuant to Standing Order 81(4)(a), consideration of Fisheries and Oceans Votes 1, 5 and 10 of the Main Estimates for the year ending March 31, 1991, by the Standing Committee on Forestry and Fisheries, be extended beyond May 31, 1990.

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to table a petition signed by a number of residents of the riding of Hamilton Mountain who are so well represented in this House by my colleague. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the government's proposed goods and services tax which would be so damaging to the Canadian economy.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition on behalf of the veterans in my area. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject those budget measures that deprive veterans of proper services and increase their financial hardship.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I also have six petitions from the veterinarians in my area. They are calling upon the government to realize that veterinarians provide an essential service to Canada's livestock and poultry industry. They too will be hard hit by increased costs in accounting.

These veterinarians have gathered names from people in Alvinston, Petrolia, Watford, Thedford, St. Thomas, Forest, Arkona, Melbourne, Sarnia, Newbury, Brights Grove, Inwood, Camlachie, Glencoe, Wyoming, Strathroy, Pointe Edward, Clearwater and London, which shows the wide base of support and the level of concern among the petitioners who are represented here today.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the honour to table a petition today from members and friends of Branch 12 of the Royal Canadian Legion in Sydney, Nova Scotia.

There are over 300 signatures on this petition and in part it states that the Government of Canada has introduced changes that will reduce some home-keeping services to veterans and substantially increase the costs of long-term care. Whereas the veterans have already given service to this country and should not be targeted by these measures, the petitioners call upon Parliament to reject those budget measures which deprive veterans of proper services and increase their financial hardship. The Minister of Veterans Affairs has leaned a little to changing this but has not gone nearly far enough. This petition is requesting realistic treatment from this government.

[Translation]

TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Pursuant to Standing Order 36, Madam Speaker, I wish to table a petition from Chibougamau, in the Roberval riding, concerning the findings of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas.

The petitioners reject the findings of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas and ask to designate Chibougamau as an isolated community under the current tax compensation scheme.

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain. This is the latest in a long series of petitions from all over Canada. It is from communities like Hamilton, Ancaster, Caledonia and several other communities.

• (1510)

The petitioners are calling upon Parliament to reject this infamous goods and services tax which would raise taxes one more time. I support the petition wholeheartedly and ask hon. members opposite to give heed to the prayer of this petition which is representative of hundreds of thousands of people across this country, and I see some of them are beginning to listen.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I have the honour today to once again present quite a number of petitions with hundreds and hundreds of names, and a very unique petition in Chinese and English which was sponsored by the Chinatown Merchants' Association in Vancouver East. This petition includes names of Chinese customers and many consumers who are concerned about the goods and services tax.

The petition states that the 7 per cent goods and services tax will hurt small businesses, costs will go up, incomes will go down, and it will be an accounting nightmare. The tax will also hurt consumers as prices of thousands of items and services will go up. Therefore, the undersigned petitioners call upon Parliament and the Government of Canada to withdraw the goods and services tax.

[Translation]

PROGRAM FOR OLDER WORKERS ADJUSTMENT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Pursuant to Standing Order 36, Madam Speaker, I wish to table two petitions with 2,054 signatures concerning the Program for Older Workers Adjustment who ask that the minimum criterion of 100 employees for a business wanting to avail itself of this program be completely eliminated, and that all senior workers over 55 years of age who are laid off and cannot find new jobs be entitled to early retirements.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Pursuant to Standing Order 36, Madam Speaker, I have the honour and the pleasure to table in the House a petition signed by Canadian men and women who strongly oppose the proposed goods and services tax. Again, the petitioners ask the House to turn down the proposed GST.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty on behalf of a number of citizens of the communities of St. Gregor, Annaheim, Munster and Humboldt, to present a petition which calls upon the government to reject the proposed goods and services tax. The petition suggests that the minister's tax is unfair and there should be in place a tax which is fair to all Canadians.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present petitions which are not from my constituents. I presented a petition containing 15,000 signatures from my constituents, and these petitions are presented on behalf of the hon. member for Windsor West, the leader of the Liberal party. His constituents are very concerned about the effect that this new tax will have on Canadians, particularly low and middle-income Canadians who spend 92 plus per cent of their income on consumables, which will be affected by the goods and services tax, versus those of high income who spend around 50 per cent.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject this goods and services tax.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I once again present a petition with respect to the goods and services tax.

The people of various communities in Ontario in the area of Winchester state that the government has not addressed the unfair taxation system currently in place which permits wealthy individuals and corporations to pay little or no federal tax, while forcing lower and middle-income taxpayers to bear more of the national tax burden.

The petitioners are calling on this government to scrap this particular tax and bring in a tax that is fairer for all Canadians, particularly those who are lower and middle-income earners.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Madam Speaker, I am honoured and privileged, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present 12 petitions today. These petitioners are very aware that it is not over until it is over. They are sending us these petitions to put forth their voices in this Chamber in opposition to the goods and services tax.

This tax is a regressive tax. It will put an unfair burden on ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumptive tax instead of real tax reform. I urge members of this House to use every means at their disposal, including colleagues to my immediate right talking to their colleagues in the other place and asking them to kill the bill.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, I have presented petitions from thousands of my constituents and many more than that on behalf of Canadians objecting to the goods and services tax.

Now that this House has gone against the will of majority of Canadians, our constituents are not laying back. They are still objecting and hoping that the Senate will have the wisdom and the courage to reject on behalf of all Canadians this iniquitous tax.

I am pleased to table the names of 287 petitioners before this House.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I also rise today to place before this House a petition signed by well over 100 people from the riding of Moose Jaw—Lake Centre who are concerned about the goods and services tax. They are concerned because they see this tax as being a regressive tax, a tax that is unfair for average Canadians, a tax that is unfair for seniors, and a tax that is unfair for young Canadians.

They call upon this government to implement a fair and just tax system.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I also have a petition presented to me by a number of farmers and producers from throughout the province of Saskatchewan who are very concerned with the future of the Canadian Wheat Board.

They call upon the government to reinstate oats under the Canadian Wheat Board. They call upon the government to give oats and barley the same protection that wheat has under the Canadian Wheat Board. They call upon this government to do so today.

BALTIC STATES

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I too have the honour of tabling thousands of signatures in petitions on behalf of Canadians right across Canada.

Many of these signatories are demonstrating on Parliament Hill, together with thousands of other Canadians, giving President Gorbachev a clear message. I am proud to present them on the day that President Gorbachev is visiting our capital city. The message is to allow the three Baltic States their independence.

Canada never recognized the Soviet occupation of the three Baltic States. The petitioners are requesting that Mr. Gorbachev and the Soviet Union honour their independence.

* * *

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, if Question No. 271 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 271 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA

Question No. 271—Mr. Robinson:

Are any statutes passed by the Parliament of Canada in effect but not included in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, apart from those known in the rules of the House of Commons as private bills and, if so, which ones?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, I would ask you to be so kind as to call Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. P-17 in the name of the hon. member for Regina—Lumsden.

VIA RAIL

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all documents and studies prepared by or for the Department of Finance in the years 1988 and 1989 relating to VIA Rail and the level of subsidy VIA Rail would receive from the government between 1989 and 1994.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, this motion is acceptable to the government with the reservation stated in the reply and the documents are tabled immediately.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. P-21 in the name of the hon. member for Yukon.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all documents and correspondence between the government and other levels of government pertaining to the imposition of a goods and services tax.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, the documents requested were provided in confidence to the federal government by other governments and disclosure could be damaging to the conduct of federal–provincial relations. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw her motion, or perhaps in her absence we can transfer it for debate.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Transferred for debate.

• (1520)

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I ask that the other Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Shall the other Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CUSTOMS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): moved that Bill C–55, an act to amend the Customs Act, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to explain to the House very briefly Bill C–55, an act to amend the Customs Act. This bill proposes amendments to the Customs Act which will provide the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, with the authority to implement fully recent amendments to the customs tariff.

If I may, by way of background, on January 1, 1988 Canada and most of its major trading partners converted their tariffs to the harmonized system of which I believe all hon. members are aware. The change over was certainly not intended to cause financial hardship to Canadian businesses. However, this could not be guaranteed because of the complexity of the conversion at that time. Therefore, the new tariff included Order in Council authority to allow the government during an 18–month period, after implementation, to respond to requests to restore the rates that existed before harmonization; in other words retroactively. Rate reductions are usually made retroactive to January 1, 1988, as outlined in the April 1989 budget.

The new customs tariff that implemented the harmonized system on January 1, 1988 included Order in Council authority to allow the government, during an 18–month period after implementation, to respond to requests to restore rates in effect under the old tariff, that is to say until June 30, 1989. A recent amendment to the customs tariff extends this authority for a further 12 months to June 30, 1990.

Currently the Customs Act does not allow for these provisions to be fully implemented, given that the authority to refund duties does not cover the entire retroactive period provided for in the tariff.

As a result, without an amendment to the Customs Act, importers will be unable to obtain refunds of duties overpaid and payments of accrued interest for the full retroactive period.

To remedy this I am proposing this legislation which does the following. First, it will allow the refund of duties where the Governor in Council has ordered that lower rates apply retroactively. Second, it will provide for the payment of interests on these refunds. Third, it will bring appeal rights into line with the new provisions.

In a nutshell, the purpose of this bill is to ensure that the Canadian business community continues to benefit fully from lower rates of duty established by the Governor in Council and that all importers are treated fairly and equitably.

I therefore count on the support of all hon. members of the House to pass this bill in a timely fashion.

Mr. David Berger (Saint–Henri—Westmount): Madam Speaker, as the minister has explained very briefly, this bill extends as I understand it to July 1992 the date by which changes can be made to the Canadian tariff schedule to assist manufacturers or importers who were inadvertently injured by the reclassification of tariffs which came about as Canada moved to the harmonized tariff system.

As the minister explained, this will allow the government to refund duties retroactively in cases where these increased duties were brought about simply as a result of this reclassification. Similarly, as the minister explained, this bill allows payment of interest and appeal rights to importers or manufacturers.

This bill came about as a result of representations from business that it did not have enough time to assess the impact of changes arising from the reclassification of tariffs.

The bill is very straightforward. One cannot object to the help that is being provided to importers and manufacturers as a result of such a reclassification. On the contrary, I think we should support it. Our party is in favour of more liberalized trade internationally and this harmonized system of tariffs is indeed designed to ensure that there is more liberalized international trade.

While we can support the principle of this bill, it is appropriate to say that the government never hesitates to bring forward a bill to help businesses, but that it has failed to address the training and adjustment needs of Canadian workers adequately. It does not show the same haste and the same zeal when it comes to helping with the adjustment needs of workers.

I would like to remind this House and I would like to remind the minister that in 1988 the government established the advisory council on adjustment headed by Jean de Grandpré who at the time was the chairman of the board of Bell Canada Enterprises.

In a report tabled in March 1989 Mr. de Grandpré reminded Canadians of the abysmally low level of training done in Canada. In 1981, as incredible as it may seem, three out of four establishments in Canada did not provide any formal training to Canadian workers. These are figures that come from the de Grandpré report which was tabled in March 1989. In 1987, Canadian private sector expenditures on training were estimated at $1.5 billion, while American firms spent about $80 billion annually on staff training.

The de Grandpré commission had been set up in the context of the free trade agreement. In January 1988, at the time that this country was debating the question of free trade and liberalized trade, the government or the Prime Minister set up this commission in order to lead Canadians to believe that the government was actually serious about addressing the training needs of Canadian workers.

The major question that the council headed by Mr. de Grandpré had to address was: "Whether specific programs should be established to help Canadian companies and workers adjust to economic changes brought on by the free trade agreement".

The council decided that the answer to that question was no, that there should not be specific programs designed to address the effects of the free trade agreement because, the council argued, it is virtually impossible to attribute clearly and conclusively any particular economic event such as a plant closure solely to the effects of the free trade agreement. The same event might be attributed to global economic changes, to technological obsolescence, or simply to bad management.

Rather than recommending measures that were designed solely to help workers adjust to the effects of the free trade agreement, the council suggested policies to promote the swift reintegration into the workplace of workers displaced by changes of any kind. What they were talking about was the need for generalized policies. I do not think it is necessary today to go into any of the recommendations of the de Grandpré report in any great detail.

• (1530)

I would like to emphasize one such recommendation, which is that the government establish a corporate tax liability that would be offset completely if the firm provided a certain level of training to employees. It has now been over a year since the tabling of this report. It has been a year and a half since the free trade agreement came into effect and the government has failed to respond, to set up any generalized policies of this nature to correct the abysmally low level of training provided to Canadian workers by Canadian companies.

[Translation]

With respect to another issue, Madam Speaker, all members are familiar with the adjustment problems often experienced by older workers in our economy. A few years ago the government set up the Program for Older Worker Adjustment to help older workers who are victims of massive lay-offs. POWA provides support income to employees aged 55 or over who have been in the labour force for at least 30 years.

However not all workers are eligible under POWA, only those who are permanently unemployed as a result of a massive lay-off. Under the program such a major and permanent lay-off must have a serious impact for a significant number of older workers. Exhaustive analyses are made to determine whether workers are eligible under the program. Among other criteria, in a community of 500,000 or more people, in a major Canadian city like Montreal where I live the minimum number of laid-off employees must be 100.

Madam Speaker, you can appreciate the injustices likely to arise from this kind of criterion. A few days ago I met with spokesmen for 13 laid-off Dominion Textile workers who were left jobless when the mill closed in 1988. About ten of these people are over 55 and, of course, the criterion concerning a minimum of 100 laid-off workers makes then uneligible for this program. I have a hard time trying to explain to these people why they are not eligible, because they tell me that aged 55, 57 or 58 as they are they have just as much difficulty landing jobs as a worker who was laid off along with 100 or 150 others. The number of lay-offs in a community has precious little to do with the ease with which a person might find another job, although that may indeed be a determining factor in a small community.

But in a big city of several million people, this may not be the most important factor. This arbitrary criterion in effect excludes many people who have as much difficulty as those who might be affected, as I was saying, by a lay-off of over a hundred employees.

Madam Speaker, I just heard my colleague, the hon. member for Saint-Léonard (Mr. Gagliano), who tabled a petition here, ask quite simply that this criterion be abolished. I think this is perfectly legitimate because in my opinion, the criterion should rather be more subjective, relate to the need felt by the worker instead of the number of employees who may be affected by the lay-off.

[English]

Those are just two areas that I wanted to point out in my remarks on the bill.

As I said earlier, the objective of the bill is laudable, and we support it. But we would like to see the government show as much concern in addressing the needs of workers who are affected by liberalized trade and other economic conditions as it does when addressing the needs of companies that are affected by liberalized trade.

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Madam Speaker, contrary to the custom of this House to which I am trying to get accustomed, and unlike the previous speaker, I will attempt to speak to the bill. Having said that, I do not want to confine myself entirely to the rigidity of the tariffs.

The minister presents this bill as an innocent victim of a cabinet colleague. I hate to bring this out in public, but it is necessary to alert him to the fact that through this amendment he is sending a message to people that they will be able to filter through our borders with goods and escape paying their fair share of tariff.

Nothing is closer to the heart of the government than collecting every cent which it is due. Obviously, the purpose of this bill is to make amends for when the government has been over zealous and collected money it should not have collected. It will pay the money back, and it will pay some interest on it. That is laudable. I will not oppose that part of the bill, and I can tell the government it will not be defeated on the bill even if I do oppose it.

However, having said that, I want to bring to the attention of the House why this minister is being taken advantage of, unfortunately and without malice, by his cabinet colleagues.

On this quiet afternoon while the rest of Canada is fascinated with perestroika and glasnost, this little bill is called into the House not by design but by accident so that the Canadian people will not discover what is really happening with harmonization. The minister says he is very proud of the bill. When I am through, he will be shamed into altering some of it.

Now, I want to bring the minister's attention to something that is not allowing Canadian taxpayers to get their fair share of existing tariffs. That is not to say that we should work toward freer trade, but this government signed a free trade agreement, which was alluded to by the member who spoke previously. He also alluded to the de Grandpré report. May I say I agree completely with the previous speaker's assessment of the de Grandpré report. However, I will not make an analysis of that because I want to stick strictly to the tariffs.

• (1540)

As a consequence of the free trade agreement there are some businessmen who try to take advantage of loopholes. It is true, there are some business people out there who actually hire lawyers and accountants to seek out loopholes in legislation rather than pay their fair share. At this point I do not intend to name names but as a matter of philosophy, there are some members of the capitalist community who think nothing of their social responsibility in ensuring that every penny due the government is paid, so they hire loophole lawyers.

Mr. McKnight: Do you do your own tax forms, Dave?

Mr. Barrett: I do my own tax forms, Mr. Minister. I do not go to those tax companies. I have so little income that it does not really matter.

Having said that, I will give advice to my colleague, should he seek it, on a separate matter. I am not soliciting business through you, Madam Speaker, but should that be the case my fees are quite fair, and under this tariff legislation I would be able to give him loopholes like he has never seen before—big enough to drive a truck through, a big truck. A train!

What kind of opening does this loophole provide? This is an opening for the Maquiladora program. Is the Maquiladora a household word that would be accepted in this august Chamber? It is indeed. It is not a swear word, but it is becoming a curse to Canadian workers.

Madam Speaker, I want to tell you that the Maquiladora program is a device initiated by some business people who are interested only in maximizing profits and taking advantage of a gullible government and an exceptionally kind minister who thinks no evil of anyone even though they are skinning him alive and, as a consequence, skinning the taxpayers.

This harmonization will legitimize the ugly little practice that is taking place now under the free trade agreement and the Maquiladora program, and sanctify a loophole that will mean the Canadian taxpayers get hosed again.

How does this happen?

An Hon. Member: I don't know. Tell us.

Mr. Barrett: Well, I will tell you. I am glad you asked that question. I was not going to go into detail, but my colleague has asked me to do so. I know that some members of the House are breathless in anticipation of this big expose–today that will bring about front page headlines and perhaps cause the fall of this government. If it wasn't for Gorbachev's visit the government would be finished after my speech today.

Tariffs became a subject of great interest to corporations as they saw the advantages from the elimination of other tariff structures between Canada and the United States after the free trade agreement was signed.

They also closed down businesses here in Canada, wrote off the closures as losses, and then went down to the Maquiladora zone and started a plant to do the same jobs they were doing here in Canada. What would be the advantage of that?

The same job that was paying $12 or $14 to a Canadian working person is now being performed in the Maquiladora zone between the United States and Mexico at $1.60 U.S. an hour. Now, consider the Canadian framework to protect jobs through an inherited system of previous Liberal and Conservative administrations, God rest their memories, good or bad. The tariff system was structured in a way that gave some limited protection to Canadian jobs and Canadian secondary and tertiary manufacturing. But, this government, in its haste to embrace the American flag, and the desire of a lot of those members of Parliament to run for the U.S. Senate, abandoned their option of determining some limited protection for Canadian workers.

My good friend from Montreal gave an excellent presentation concerning the de Grandpré report. I listened with interest. He made an interesting proposition that is available to us all. Since we are losing all the jobs, the government should at least keep its word to the de Grandpré commission to look after these people with social safety nets. What my good friend was talking about was an aberration of the agreement that is forcing workers out of jobs and on to welfare and unemployment insurance.

Ms. Hunter: Tory planning.

Mr. Barrett: A correct analysis by my colleague, Tory planning.

While the workers in Canada have been shifted out of jobs, and we have entered into a free trade agreement with the United States, we still have tariffs under GATT to protect some of the Canadian markets in other countries with whom we have not yet signed a free trade agreement.

Mexico, Maquiladora. The United States government came to a deal to set up this free trade zone. Mexican workers come across the border, work for $1.60 an hour and make components for secondary and tertiary manufacturing in the United States. And this is the shocker, and I want you to hang on, put on your seatbelt, Mr. Speaker. The clincher on this is that the Maquiladora program, which is taking jobs away from Canadian working men and women, manufacturing components for American products to be assembled in the United States of America are not, in every case, being stamped "Made in Mexico".

Mr. Kristiansen: Why not?

Mr. Barrett: My colleague says, why not? It is to take advantage of a loophole. By not stamping "Made in Mexico", because the products are made in the Maquiladora program, they can then be inserted into completed U.S. products and brought into Canada to avoid the proper tariff.

Mr. Kristiansen: That is not fair.

Mr. Barrett: That is not fair.

Mr. Kristiansen: It is not honest.

Mr. Barrett: It is not honest. As a matter of fact, it is true and it is not legal. Yes, it is true. Because it is true, the department was alerted to this concern. The bell rang. So, what did the government do? Did it hire a whole slew of new tariff collectors or customs inspectors at the border since the free trade agreement and the Maquiladora development?

Any prudent, thoughtful, cautious government that wanted to protect the taxpayers, would want to ensure that every penny coming to the government would come back. The Tories, who bleat nationally about their prudence, their fiscal responsibility—and they even have a cabinet minister who will not buy a new pair of shoes to bring down his budget as a symbol that they are concerned about every penny—how many new customs officers have they hired in the last year to watch the slip-over out of the Maquiladora unmarked components going into U.S. manufactured goods and coming into this country with lower and lower tariffs, after Carla Hills and our own minister signed a new agreement to accelerate the elimination of tariffs?

Mr. Kristiansen: How many?

Mr. Barrett: Well, I will tell you how many. Was it one?

Mr. Kristiansen: No.

Mr. Barrett: Was it 100?

Mr. Kristiansen: One hundred?

Mr. Barrett: No. Was it 50?

Mr. Kristiansen: Maybe 50.

Mr. Barrett: No.

Mr. Kristiansen: What was it?

• (1550)

Mr. Barrett: Was it 25? No. They have hired less than one dozen new customs officers since the signing of the free trade deal and—

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt my hon. friend but I know that he is inadvertently misleading the House. When he talks about this specific issue, he will know that we have put in place a number of verification teams who go out on a regular basis, south of the border, to verify specifically—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ferland): I am sorry to interrupt the minister but I do not think this is a point of order. It is more like a matter of debate. The hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca.

[English]

Mr. Barrett: Thank you for your wisdom in pointing out that it was a matter of debate the minister wishes to enter into, not a point of order.

Since I am in order and I have assessed myself correctly—I have been in order ever since I came in here—I will continue with my comments. Yes, the minister in his interjection said they have assembled teams; I was coming to that and I am glad that he mentioned it. But that is not what I am talking about. What he has done is taken staff out of the existing staff complement—

Mr. Jelinek: I thought you were going to talk about the bill.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening and talking and watching. I have been like a ferret, watching this government allow its—

Mr. McKnight: A rattling rodent.

Mr. Barrett: —watching its sense of responsibility slip away because they have been awed by Uncle Sam. These long, lost, semi-nephews, who think it is their manifest destiny to bow in front of Uncle Sam, have not taken on their responsibility through these tariff openings to collect every penny that is due us. I do not mind having the uncle, but he should not be painted as a tightwad like this government is doing, in refusing to collect the money from our uncle.

I am talking about this bill very clearly. As I described to you, Mr. Speaker, and with your rapt attention, I know you understand fully the description I am giving. The fact is that the Maquiladora program is producing secondary and tertiary products as components for finished American goods. They are not stamped "Made in Mexico" and, even though he sends out his flying squads to check, how can you check if the plastic component has no marking of origin and it is in the finished American product.

He can have 20 of his minions standing around looking inside the bowels of a toaster. I warn them not to put the plug in while they are sticking their fingers in the toaster. Some of them, like the minister, are not fully trained in their job and I want to warn them to pull the plug out first because there are other ways to get burned, like the free trade deal. Nonetheless, having said that, there is no way to identify the components. His squad stands around, shakes the toaster, looks at it and says, oh, there are no Mexican components here, it was all assembled in the United States. Of course they can say that because they have no method of checking back on what the Maquiladora program is creating in certain instances.

Mr. Jelinek: If you shake your head, I can hear it rattle.

Mr. Barrett: My colleague, the minister, has a great sense of humour. He is the most trained minister that this government has.

Mr. Jelinek: You are skating around this.

Mr. Barrett: I made no illusion to his figure skating background, he did it himself; but in this instance, you are on thin ice because you are allowing this open door into this tariff escapement. As a consequence, the Canadian taxpayers are being taken for a ride.

I recommend that the minister hire more customs officers and have them on the Maquiladora border. As a matter of fact, I would feel more comfortable if the minister would instruct his customs staff to go down to the Maquiladora corridor and catalogue what is being made there as components for finished American goods so that they at least know ahead of time what to look for. They have not made one single assessment over there of what is going on in the Maquiladora program and the impact it has on Canadian tariffs. Not one. They have not done that.

Ms. Hunter: Negligence.

Mr. Barrett: No, I do not think it is negligence. Negligence means a wilful decision not to do something. No, they do not even know what to do, which is even worse than negligence. No one over there has ever thought to send someone down to the Maquiladora program and get an assessment or a study to find out what is happening in the Maquiladora program and see first hand, on the Mexican side of the Maquiladora program, what components are being made and installed in American finished products and trans-shipped into Canada.

Mr. Kristiansen: It is a good job you told them.

Mr. Barrett: I am telling them now, and if they follow my advice—

Mr. Jelinek: Send you.

Mr. Barrett: Send me? You come with me, we should go together. Mr. Speaker, I am not embarrassed, on occasion, to being seen in public with a Tory.

Mr. Jelinek: Especially a Tory like me.

Mr. Barrett: If the minister wants to go along with me to Mexico, to look into the Maquiladora program, I will go with him and we will show the rest of his colleagues how they are being loopholed into losing millions of dollars by not collecting tariffs on this. We will go together. Let it not be said that the barriers between politicians are so great that they refuse to go to Mexico together in January for three or four weeks.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I want to state that whether or not the minister and I go to Mexico together, he should at least send some of his staff down and come back with a catalogue of what is going on. They never thought of this. Do you know why they did not think of this? They have been so busy playing politics and trying to survive, which is something that is foreign to most of the imperative that drives the members of this House, because 99 per cent of the members in this House never think of politics, except on occasion. But when it consumes the government and it neglects to follow through on what is an open and obvious invitation for a loophole, the Canadian taxpayers lose again.

I do not blame this minister and I do not want anybody in the public to say that I am getting soft on this minister, but I think the real culprit is the Minister for International Trade, who is not available today. The free trade agreement is opening the huge loophole of the Maquiladora. We have records and analyses of the kind of subcontracting that is taking place in the Maquiladora program with cheap labour, and it is generally child labour, the unmarked components going into American goods and then trans-shipped into Canada without any tariff. Then we have this bill in front of us, with no assurance that the loophole is going to be closed.

I am not even debating the merits of free trade because that would be out of order. But, if I could debate the merits of free trade, I would point out, like other members of this House, what a very foolish agreement it was. I will not do that.

Mr. Kristiansen: I am glad you did not do that.

Mr. Barrett: I will not do that because I wish to maintain the dignity, the decorum, and the rules of this House.

Mr. Kristiansen: Right on.

Ms. Hunter: Laudable.

Mr. Barrett: Thank you. Having said that, I did want to bring to your attention that it was the passage of that disastrous legislation that allowed this to take place. When we talk of harmonization, we are not talking about walking hand-in-hand. With this government, it may be walking but it is someone else's hand in their pocket and the consequences of someone else's hand in their pocket is that the Canadian taxpayer loses.

I would like the minister, when he responds, to stand up and say that he confesses he was not aware that this possibility existed through the Maquiladora program. I would like the minister to stand up and say that he will invite himself and myself to Mexico, and short of that, he will send a team down there to find out what is going on, and that he will table a report in this House to ensure all Canadians that the loopholes that I have exposed will be closed.

I want to conclude by saying—

An Hon. Member: Conclude?

Mr. Barrett: —because I have other speeches to make. I mean, what is the obvious reason why I should conclude now? I have a few more speeches, if you—

An Hon. Member: But the government should have learned by now.

Mr. Barrett: What I am pointing out to you is, were this a Liberal administration, it would be just as bad.

An Hon. Member: No, no.

An Hon. Member: You're kidding!

Mr. Barrett: Yes, yes, I do not want anybody to get the idea that I am just beating up on Tories for being dumb-bells. The other side of the coin is the Liberals who allowed this mess to happen in the first place because for years their whole tariff structure had been ignored and they did not beef up the customs department.

• (1600)

I am not saying that they would not do it if they were re-elected. I do know that they probably will keep the free trade agreement. I want to warn Canadians about that.

However, that would be a political statement. All I will do is repeat it. I want to warn Canadians that the Liberals will probably keep the same loopholes and keep the free trade agreement.

My party will not blithely be going along on this quiet afternoon with this little piece of legislation that does not appear to mean too much.

Madam Speaker, to your great satisfaction and joy, you will know that our party will oppose but cannot prevent this bill from passing. You will know that I have informed the Canadian taxpayers of this major loophole. You will know that myself and my colleagues will continue this struggle against the loss of money. You will also be happy to know that I intend to take my seat, satisfied that I have done my duty by making the government aware of this loophole, earnestly hoping that within a matter of hours it will withdraw this bill and correct the error of its ways.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I want to make a few brief remarks on this bill because it would amend the Customs Act. There is presently a difficulty involving the Customs Act that has adverse effects on the constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. I want to assure the government House leader that my remarks will be very brief.

This is an important issue that involves the potential loss of 165 jobs in the constituency that I represent.

I wish to tell the minister that I received a letter from a company in my riding known as McIntyre & Dodd Marketing Inc. It reads as follows:

> I would like to draw your attention a loophole in our laws that an American company is making use of that if it continues may force us to close our Hawkesbury plant. Our plant in peak periods last year employed 165 people.
>
> As you may be aware, the Canadian government a few years ago changed the dollar value amount on parcels that enter Canada from the United States through the postal system to be duty free if the value is $35.00 or less.

I understand that this does not apply in the case of parcels that are shipped across the border by parcel express, Purolator or other such companies. Only Canada Post has that particular exemption.

The letter continues:

> The U.S. company in question, Direct Marketing Enterprises out of Westbury, New York, is using Canadian media to promote its mail order products with a return address in Windsor, Ontario. The orders are dispatched to a fulfilment operation in Detroit where the orders are processed and shipped to the border ready to be mailed at the closest Canada Post parcel centre. The average value of each parcel is under $35.00 therefore allowing the goods to be duty free.

I will not read the rest of the letter because I have made a commitment to the minister to raise this issue briefly.

However, I want to bring to his attention an ad that I have here in my hand from the French version of the TV Guide. It states, for instance, that a transistor radio is available for $14.95 and it describes it in the ad as follows:

[Translation]

"similar to those sold by other companies on television in the United States".

The implication is obvious, Madam Speaker. These companies advertise their products on U.S. television channels that are carried on cable, and then ship them to Canada duty free, making use of a loophole in the Customs Act that allows Canada Post to carry this merchandise from the other side of the border.

I know the minister is aware of this question, so I can be brief. However, I would like to ask the minister for a commitment to close this loophole, so that perhaps these jobs can be saved.

[English]

I am really looking forward to a positive response from the minister. Hopefully, we can save these jobs because there appears to be a loophole that enables these companies in the United States to utilize Canada Post—and I am not blaming the post office here although I do that on occasion in my capacity as postal critic for my party—in a clever way to ship parcels with a value under $35 across the border. They use this loophole in the law which is basically designed for families, I suppose, to send small gifts to relatives who live on the other side of the border.

These companies are benefiting this way and are causing a loss of jobs at Canadian mail order houses.

This company is located in Rexdale, Montreal and Hawkesbury. Its operations in my riding will be shutting down if this situation is not fixed rapidly. If it is not fixed it will create the loss of 165 meaningful jobs in my area where there is very high unemployment.

I thank the minister for staying a little longer than he intended. I am looking forward to his assistance.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to answer briefly the concerns of my hon. friend.

As he pointed out in his comments, it is true that I am very much aware of this growing problem. I say "growing" because this law has been in place for many years. It is apparent that there are some organizations south of the border that are starting to abuse what was initially a good law to benefit families and other non-commercial uses, as the member pointed out.

I have already met on at least two occasions, and perhaps more, with individual business people who have outlined exactly the same concern, the latest of which was just a couple of weeks ago. At that time I told them, and I give my hon. friend the same commitment, that I would begin discussions immediately not only with my officials but with officials from the Department of Finance to see how we could rectify the situation. I have brought it to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Finance, with whom the final decision rests.

I do agree with my hon. friend, the people he represents and others in that same position that there is a semblance of unfairness here and we are going to take appropriate steps to correct it.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I want to take a moment and thank the minister for his reply and indicate to him that I hope that among his colleagues and himself they can find a speedy solution. This is the type of thing which tends to move very quickly. The potential loss of jobs could occur very fast. I invite the minister either to review the legislation or the regulation, which may be necessary in this case, to change the rule in question and perhaps to ban the commercial usage of that provision.

I am not advocating that we create a situation which would make it difficult for families and so on to communicate with each other and to send a small parcel in the mail to each other.

If, for instance, the rule were changed in order to ban the importation of products using that clause for the purpose of resale, maybe that would accommodate what we are looking for and save these valuable jobs.

With that, Madam Speaker, I conclude my remarks. I thank the minister again for staying a little bit longer and providing this answer which I will take back immediately with me to my constituents with whom I am meeting tomorrow morning.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, like other members I do not intend to delay this particular legislation because it is a useful response to change.

I want to take this opportunity to point out how discriminatory the government is being between one set of Canadians who are affected by changes in trade law and others who are also affected but who will be receiving no adjustment, no compensation or no response.

The changes brought about in the trade classification system are as a direct result of public policy. That was a decision made by government. It had nothing to do with external factors or anything else. It was part of our decision as a public sector to make changes that had some benefit to them.

• (1610)

The government in this case is accurately and properly recognizing that as a result of those classification changes certain businesses were faced with shortfalls. They were faced with changes in the tariff classification which created discrepancies in their income. I have no quarrel with that principle. It is fair.

If that is true for a business that is affected by a tariff change, then should it not also be true for workers who are affected by tariff changes? Is it not just as important for individuals who lose their jobs, who are dislocated or lose pension plans? Should they not have the right to some direct response?

We have raised the issue in this House, saying that commitments were made by the Prime Minister for a massive adjustment program. We have said that there were recommendations made by the MacDonald royal commission, which goes right back to the original source of the trade agreement, that major adjustment programs have to be made. Every time that issue has been raised we have been told: "We do not need it. It is impossible to tell. We do not know what adjustments are required because we do not know what is a trade related impact or trade related effect".

Yet the government finds it possible in this case to make that judgment and evaluation when a business or a company is being affected. However, when workers are being affected, that is not the case. In fact, what we have done is quite the opposite. We have substantially altered the unemployment insurance program.

I do not want to bring Bill C–21 up. It has been long and arduously debated in this House and in the other chamber. Nevertheless, the unemployment insurance system was the cornerstore of our ability to provide adjustments. Yet we have had a reduction of several hundred million dollars in that program. The principles in Sections 38 and 39 have been changed. Most important, Madam Speaker, as you well know since you have heard the debates, there has been a withdrawal of direct participation of the government in the management of the UI program as a member of the commission. The government has turned it over to labour and business. Thus there is an abdication of public responsibility.

We are faced with an inherent contradiction wherein the government says: "We will use unemployment insurance to help compensate individuals affected by a public decision, and at the same time we pull out the membership of the public sector on the very commission that is supposed to provide the adjustments". The government is chasing its tail.

I simply want to refer the House to what I felt was an important report by the Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre. This is a group that is chaired jointly by Shirley Carr and Thomas D'Aquino. Never have two stranger partners been part of the same issue. However, both business and labour are part of the centre for labour productivity because they recognize that the investment in human resources is key to what we do in the country.

In this report is a whole series of recommendations about what the government should be doing to improve the IAS, the Industrial Adjustment Services, to provide new programs for adjustment through unemployment insurance and to provide assistance, none of which has been provided.

I simply want to point out to members opposite that there is an unfairness here. I am struck by the celerity with which the government responded to the problem of the business community affected by tariff classification but has been so reluctant, so slow, so laggard in responding to the changes that affect workers. Surely, there has to be equity. Surely, there has to be fairness in the way the two are affected.

I would suggest to the Minister of National Revenue, who can provide tax write-offs and tax changes, to help workers adjust and change. There are communities being shut down. There are families being disrupted.

I just came from my office where I met with a group of people from the printing industry who have indicated that they have lost 25 per cent of their business to the United States since the inception of the FTA—one-quarter of their business. That is part of the major rationalization. By rationalization they mean 500 workers have just lost their jobs at the Southam printing press in Toronto. That is being repeated across the country.

I do not know how many members have experienced in their own families the question of a lay-off or the loss of job, especially if it involves someone who is in their forties or fifties, an age when you have made your commitment to your profession for many, many years. All of a sudden that job can be pulled out from under you, not because you are a bad worker or because your company is inefficient. It is simply because of a change in Ottawa, a decision made by the government which it has a right to make, that all of sudden your livelihood is taken away.

For many workers—and I will go back to the old basic economic theory—the only investment workers have is their labour or what they have put into it over the years. All of a sudden it can be snatched away from them and the government in Ottawa will say: "We have no responsibility for that. We have no accountability. We have no special adjustment programs. We cannot determine whether it is trade related or not. I am sorry, you are simply going to have make do yourself". They are left on the scrap heap.

There are too many people on the scrap heap. We are facing a substantial build-up of those underutilized human beings in our society. I would think it should be a cause of some chagrin and embarrassment for our government to bring in a bill like this one which clearly recognizes its responsibility for one sector of the community and ignores the other sector of the community.

I simply wanted to use this occasion to make a plea on behalf of a large number of Canadians who are also affected by trade related changes, by reductions in tariffs, and by the new classification system. They are the people who work in those industries and who need some compensation or support because they have lost what is most precious to them. They are not the managers of big capital. The only real investment they have is the time, effort, and energy they have put into that job over the years. They deserve equal consideration, equal care and attention, and equal response and compensation by this government, something which it is providing for the businesses affected.

This is simply an argument based on the rightness of things. I ask the government to take into consideration that basic justice which needs to be met.

[Translation]

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Madam Speaker, without wishing to hold up the debate on this bill, I would like to make a few comments on the speech by the hon. member for Winnipeg—South Centre (Mr. Axworthy) and ask him whether he has any statistics on the number of companies that might benefit as a result of this agreement with the United States, as compared with the number of jobs that will be lost on Montreal Island, for instance, a question I have been asking this government practically every other week.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, unfortunately, there are no statistics on this particular question.

As you know, we suggested that the government set up a special commission to examine the problem of adjustment of Canadian industries to the impact of free trade. However, the government—the Minister for International Trade and others—said this was not necessary and that it saw no need for a study. Now we have a problem in this country. We do not know the extent of the impact of these changes on workers and industry. Perhaps the Minister of National Revenue has statistics or figures for specific industries. In fact, the problem was predicted by the Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre.

Unfortunately, we as members do not have the figures or sectoral studies for Canada. I think this is gross neglect on the part of the government because all the changes, all the layoffs we have been seeing for the past ten or twelve months since free trade are the result of legislation, and should therefore be dealt with by this government and Parliament.

• (1620)

[English]

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I would like formally to designate tomorrow an allotted day.

* * *

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Harvie Andre (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-58, an act to amend the Young Offenders Act and the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): As you know, Madam Speaker, the review of the Young Offenders Act has been a major priority of this government.

The government's objective in introducing this bill is to ensure that the Young Offenders Act, which was unanimously adopted by the members of this House in 1981, appropriately reflects the needs and values of all Canadians, including Canadian youth who come into conflict with the law.

The Young Offenders Act has come under criticism for its provisions for youth charged with violent offences, particularly murder. This criticism has come from the general public, judges, the provincial attorneys general, members of Parliament, and the media.

A few murder cases involving youths have attracted national attention and contributed to the public sentiment that the transfer mechanism and the sentencing in the Young Offenders Act should be revised.

More than this, these cases have called into question the integrity of the act as a whole and diminished public confidence in Canada's system of justice.

To respond properly to these concerns, a number of major steps has been taken in the past year. A comprehensive federal-provincial territorial study of youth charged with murdered was completed. It included a case by case study in four provinces of all the youth charged with murder from 1984 to 1989.

A meeting of ministers responsible for juvenile justice was held on June 9 and June 10, 1989 at which the provincial attorneys general and the Minister of Justice for the Northwest Territories unanimously endorsed a resolution that the Young Offenders Act be amended in a number of ways.

An extensive consultation process was undertaken. A consultation document was released to over 100 organizations involved with young offender issues and to the provinces and territories. Bilateral meetings with key organizations were held.

All jurisdictions responded in the course of the consultations. About 80 non-governmental submissions were received and a national seminar took place in Ottawa. As well, we listened to the concerns of members of Parliament.

Bill C-58 addresses the three aspects of the act which lie at the heart of the concerns identified in our consultations. The first is the test to be applied by the court in determining whether to transfer a case to adult court. The second is the sentence available in youth court for youth convicted of murder. The third is the sentence and parole eligibility period for youth who have been transferred to adult court and convicted of murder.

I would like now to speak to each of these points. Numerous cases have gone before the courts as to how the existing transfer provisions would be interpreted. The proposed changes to the test seek greater clarity and equality in the interpretation of the law. The proposal would require the court to consider the objectives of affording protection to the public and serving the needs of the young person and to determine whether those objectives can be reconciled by the youth remaining in the youth system.

Where the court determines that these objectives cannot be so reconciled, Bill C-58 states that the protection of the public is paramount and the youth's case shall be transferred.

This test, while remaining consistent with the principles of the act, provides clear direction for the court and states that ultimately the protection of the public is paramount.

The transfer test would be applicable to transfer applications for all offences. We believe that the changes to the transfer mechanism will result in a more uniform interpretation of the law.

Bill C-58 also proposes that the maximum sentence for youth convicted of murder in youth court be increased to five years less a day. The sentence would be comprised of a custodial period which could not exceed three years unless an extension is subsequently ordered by the court.

The grounds for ordering such an extension would parallel those in the Parole Act, that is, where the court is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the young person is likely to commit an offence causing death or serious harm to another person.

Where no extension is ordered, a review hearing will be heard prior to the completion of the custodial portion of the sentence so the judge can set conditions which the youth will have to abide by in the community.

Where there is a violation of any condition the youth could be automatically returned to custody.

Finally, the bill proposes that the sentence of life imprisonment be retained for youth convicted of murder in adult court, but that such a youth be eligible for parole at an earlier period.

It is recommended that the parole ineligibility period be set by the sentencing judge somewhere in the range of five to ten years.

As you know, Madam Speaker, this only speaks to eligibility. The decision to grant parole is still made by the Parole Board.

This recommendation to reduce the period of custody that a transferred young offender must serve before being eligible for parole is strongly supported.

While the life sentence remains, it is believed that the reduction of the period of parole ineligibility will lessen the disparity in consequences which currently makes the transfer decision so stark for judges. In this way the justice system may be strengthened by allowing the courts greater flexibility.

Bill C-58 does not address the concerns of appropriate facilities and programs for violent offenders in either the youth system or the adult penitentiary system. This issue is very relevant at the transfer hearing stage as the judge hearing the matter must determine which system is most appropriate in all the circumstances.

The resources in place in a given jurisdiction are a significant factor as individualized and well structured programs are viewed as a key to successful rehabilitation.

Beyond ensuring an appropriate response to youth charged with murder, many individuals and associations actively involved with youth have advocated a much broader based approach to violent youth. I whole-heartedly agree.

The first steps have been taken in the development of such an approach by inviting provinces and territories to join with the federal government in a collaborative study, the objective of which is to develop a systematic and financially viable approach to address violence by youth.

Hon. members may recall the Speech from the Throne in which there is a commitment to address not only the issue of violence but also the issue of treatment.

• (1630)

In fact, the issue of treatment along with issues pertaining to inadmissibility of evidence and custody have also been treated as priorities by the Department of Justice, the provinces and the territories. These issues were also the subject of consultations with the provinces, territories and non-governmental organizations involved with youth offender issues. There was not the same degree of consensus on what should be done. Therefore, more consultation with the provinces and territories is required.

In order to meet the federal commitment to respond to these issues, the Minister of Justice has proposed to her provincial and territorial counterparts that concrete proposals be put before ministers responsible for young offenders in June of this year in Niagara-on-the-Lake. I look forward to the tabling of the required legislative proposals in the fall of this year.

Bill C-58 will strengthen the justice system by allowing the courts to make the best decision in each case as to whether a youth should be dealt with in the youth or adult system. Also, Bill C-58 tries to balance the rights of Canadians to security with society's long term interest in rehabilitating young people.

Protection of the public and rehabilitation of our youth are the key objectives of this bill. I ask the members of the House to support Bill C-58.

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Madam Speaker, our party supports Bill C-58 and supports sending it to committee for study on possible amendments and new approaches that should be explored.

The basic theories of the bill are good. There is no question that public safety has to be paramount, as we have seen in other issues of criminal law administration. It has to be a major concern, but has not been so with this government. In the case of inmates in Corrections Canada's care, the paramountcy of public safety ranks about fourteenth. We are pleased to see, in this legislation, that there is a movement to have public safety paramount.

Also, it is laudable that the legislation is going to deal with the rehabilitation of young people. Quite frankly, our concern is that we are always dealing with half measures. As the former justice minister said: "This is a first step." We are continually taking first steps rather than taking all the steps that are necessary to deal with the problem. Dealing with young offenders is a major problem.

As originally introduced, the legislation was a progressive step in the proper direction. There is no question that it requires fine tuning. Why start with half solutions? Why not deal with all the problems? There is no question that the general changes dealing with criteria for applications to transfer to adult court from youth court are good.

There is no question that the change as far as the maximum period for incarceration for first and second degree murder is good; up from three years to five years. There is no question that early release and conditional supervision should be monitored more closely because of what we have seen in the past, particularly with the horrific situation in Scarborough.

There is no question that this legislation responds to the public outcry that has been generated by some cases. I know what effects public outcry can have. In my own area, I saw the effect of the escape of Allan Legere on the community.

This is a response to that. However, I think we have to go a step further and look at some other aspects. My colleague across talked about the unanimous resolution of the Ministers of Justice from the provinces. This bill has dealt with three or four of those recommendations, but it has left out a couple of important aspects. The Ministers of Justice or Attorneys General have asked that the act be amended to permit the admission of evidence of a voluntary statement. They have also asked for a greater flexibility to facilitate temporary release provisions to help rehabilitate young offenders. These are laudable objectives that have not been dealt with by the government.

Probably the more frightening aspect is this government's intention to get out of programs and to move away from financial commitments. The Attorneys General unanimously resolved that the recent unilateral decision to cap federal contributions toward provincial and territorial expenditures for young offenders represents a serious erosion of the federal government's commitment to the juvenile justice system in Canada.

It is interesting to note that there has been nothing done in this particular area to facilitate the operation of the system for young offenders. In fact, what we are seeing is a government intent on reducing its expenditures at the expense of young offenders.

It is time the government gets over this deficit-itis problem and moves toward dealing with juvenile crime, young offenders, and provides the necessary resources for the task.

There are other areas of concern with the legislation. As stated earlier, the Young Offenders Act amendments in Bill C-58 have not addressed the problems experienced by police in taking statements from young suspects and the evidentiary difficulties of introducing those in court.

Second, it has not dealt with the situation of the young offender being hospitalized for psychiatric treatment. The requirement of the legislation is that the young offender must consent. That obviously presents difficulties in the sense of trying to convince a person with those problems to consent to treatment. I do not think that is of any benefit at all.

We have to recognize in all this that habitual criminals, be they young offenders or otherwise, have to be dealt with firmly. Very serious crimes like first and second degree murder have to be dealt with, and dealt with firmly. But, we must, however, be careful not to overbalance our response in that area to the detriment of the youth of this country and the young offenders who are caught within the system.

We must have a renewed commitment to help the youth of the country so that they do not become young offenders. Perhaps the best way to spend our dollars in this particular area is to make sure that the systems of housing and the ability to respond to youth are in place and properly financed so that we do not force young people to a life of crime.

We are supportive of this legislation going to committee. We are supportive of the basic thrust but we believe that first steps are not enough. We have to view the whole problem and take more than one step. We must take all the steps necessary to deal with this situation, to deal with the hardened youth criminal and the youths needing rehabilitation.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to stand this afternoon to address the very important issues which are covered by Bill C-58, the Young Offenders Act.

I must say that I am disappointed to hear that the Official Opposition has decided to support the principle of this legislation.

The effect of this legislation will be to ensure that more young people are transferred into the adult prison system and ultimately ensure that the level of crime in communities across this land will increase as a result of the demonstrated failure of society to deal with the prevention of crime among young people, instead of just dumping them into the adult criminal justice system.

I think it is important that we look back on the history of the Juvenile Delinquents Act and the Young Offenders Act. I remember well the debate on the Young Offenders Act. I was here for that debate. I sat on the legislative committee that studied the legislation. We did a lot of work and we came up with a bill which, I think, moved the country forward. It was with a considerable sense of pride that we supported that legislation, as did all members of this House. That act was proclaimed in force on April 2, 1984. One of the most essential elements of that legislation, the Young Offenders Act, was a recognition that prison should be the last resort and that kids should only be sent to jail if there were no other alternatives. The idea was that sending kids to jail ultimately is an admission of failure.

• (1640)

Indeed, one of the most important aspects of alternatives to imprisonment is ensuring that there are resources in place, so that when a judge must sentence a young person there is that range of alternatives which are set out in the bill. I said on May 17, 1982, some eight years ago, during debate on the previous legislation on the Young Offenders Act:

> If this government is serious about improving and humanizing the system of criminal justice for young persons, it has to be prepared to put additional financial resources into the hands of provinces and territories to ensure that the legal framework which is established in the proposed young offenders act delivers a system which will indeed encourage young people to stay out of involvement with the criminal law. If indeed the federal government does not come up with additional resources, the provisions in the bill which provide, for example, for dispositions alternative to incarceration, will be redundant.
>
> The provinces will argue that they cannot afford these provisions, and what we will see is an increased number of young persons dumped into jails for children. That is effectively what detention centres are. There should be disposition before an actual court appearance; in other words, diversion away from the criminal justice system. This will not take place unless the federal government is prepared to ensure additional resources are made available both to itself and to the provinces.

That was eight years ago. The bill took effect in 1984. What has been the history of our treatment of young people in conflict with the law since then? It has been a sorry history. It has been a history which has resulted in an increase in the level of crime among young people. It has been a history which has resulted in deep concern in communities across this land, whether it be in rural areas or in urban areas.

One of the most serious results of this is a dramatic increase in the level of imprisonment of young people. A study which was conducted by Raymond Corrado and Allan Markwart from British Columbia, both very learned professors who looked at the effect of the Young Offenders Act, said this: "It is clear that under the Young Offenders Act, B.C. youth courts have rather dramatically increased their reliance on incarceration as a dispositional sanction and correspondingly decreased their use of community sanctions, probation. This change cannot be attributed to a more general "get tough" climate in the community that has affected the sentencing practices of the courts. There is evidence that not only are young offenders under the age of 17 years being dealt with more punitively than under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, but also that 17-year olds transferred to the jurisdiction of the youth court are now being incarcerated at a greater rate under the Young Offenders Act than they were in the adult criminal court."

That is the experience in the province of British Columbia. I am very pleased that the hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca is in the House today because one of the aspects of the New Democratic government from 1972 to 1975, under the leadership of that member, was a very enlightened approach to the question of young people in conflict with the law.

We recognized that we had to cut down dramatically on the use of jail as a sanction and indeed, former Judge Berger was appointed to head up a royal commission on the family and on children. He made some very progressive recommendations and I look forward to hearing from the member from Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca because I believe that probably his very first involvement with the political process was in the area of juvenile delinquents back in the early sixties. We have a great deal to learn from the experience of that New Democratic government of 1972 to 1975.

Instead, the experience under this legislation has been deeply disturbing. I mentioned the study by professors Corrado and Markwart but we do not just have to look at academic studies. Let us listen to what our judges are telling us as well, about the impact of this legislation. In a decision last year Judge Ann Rounthwaite of Surrey, B.C., refused to sentence a 13-year old girl who had an insignificant court history to a lengthy jail term in order to keep her off the streets until a bed became available in B.C.'s over-crowded Maples Adolescent Treatment Centre.

In other words, there was such a desperate shortage of beds in the Maples that the Crown was trying to put this 13-year old girl in jail until a bed became available at the Maples. Put her in jail.

Judge Rounthwaite refused to do that. The judge said that the Crown counsel and youth court workers have repeatedly asked her to store problem children in an open custody jail until they could be treated at the chronically busy Maples Centre.

These children are in desperate need of treatment and are often dangerous to themselves and others. They are not facing charges that would warrant the lengthy sentences necessary to keep them in custody until they could get into the Maples. Judge Rounthwaite went on to sentence the 13-year old girl to seven days in open custody and one year probation.

She talked of the despair that she felt, the fact that—and I am quoting from the judge now—a criminal court cannot use a sentencing process to make Holly Cottage, which is an open custody jail, an alternate to a residential treatment centre for adolescents with psychological or behavioural problems. Those branches of government responsible for providing such resources cannot shift their burden, difficult as it may be, to custody facilities or jail.

That is what we have been seeing happen across this country as provinces and the federal government refuse to accept their responsibilities to put in resources to assist young people before they get involved in criminal activity.

What has been the response of this federal government? Back in 1984 the Prime Minister answered a questionnaire from the Canadian Council on Children and Youth. He was asked about the priorities of a Conservative government in the area of young offenders and said: "The Progressive Conservative Party supported passage of the Young Offenders Act and continues to endorse its philosophy and principles. We are committed to assuring financial assistance to the provinces to allow for equal application of the law and availability of programs and services across Canada."

What has happened to that promise made by the Conservative Prime Minister of Canada? That promise has been broken. In May of last year the Conservative government unilaterally, without any discussion, imposed a cap on contributions to all of the provinces and territories under the juvenile justice services cost-sharing programs. Shameful.

Effectively, what this means is that for a five-year period the federal government is going to freeze its contributions at the 1989 level. That is a real cut every year for the next five years. And who is it cutting? It is cutting young people in conflict with the law.

Ultimately the results of these cuts will be a greater level of crime in each and every community across this country. This from a government that talks about its commitment to law and order. By cutting back on funding for juvenile justice programs, this government is abdicating its responsibility for assuring that young people do not come in conflict with the law and ultimately abdicating its responsibility for safer communities, both rural and urban.

Obviously this decision is a breach of the promise that was made in the past.

Premier Tony Penikett, writing on behalf of all the ministers responsible for social services, wrote to the justice minister in March of this year. He wrote in his capacity as chairperson of the 1989 Interprovincial Territorial Conference of Social Service Ministers. He expressed his serious concerns about the effect of this federal cut-back in funding for young offenders. He said while it is accurate that the federal Department of Justice contributes approximately $160 million to programs under the Young Offenders Act, this does not even represent 50 per cent of the provincial-territorial expenditures under the act.

• (1650)

Premier Penikett notes that it is absolutely crucial the federal contribution grow by at least the cost of living each year in order to prevent the erosion of current service levels and to ensure equitable access across the country for young offenders, who require the cost-shared programs under the auspices of the Young Offenders Act.

What Premier Penikett is saying is that the Conservative government has betrayed the promises made in terms of adequate levels of funding for young offenders in this country. That is certainly unacceptable to us in the New Democratic Party. I am surprised and disappointed that members of the Official Opposition, the Liberal party, have not indicated that they, too, are opposed to the cuts in spending for young offenders. Their silence can only imply that they agree with the cuts that have been made. I hope that perhaps one lonely Liberal member of Parliament will stand in his or her place and speak out for our young people, speak out against the federal cuts in programs to young offenders. I hope that one of them might stand and do that.

I see a member from Quebec. Let us look at the situation of young offenders in the province of Quebec. It is devastating. There are waiting lists of 22 months for boys who were sexually abused by up to 16 adults before they can get treatment.

Social workers in the Outaouais have pointed out that children who have been abused by their parents must wait while other cases take precedence because they do not have enough workers. In fact, the head of the agency has blamed the very serious delays on a logjam of cases and chronic underfunding.

The head of the agency has said that they have a choice between a 14–year–old and a baby. If we abandon the 14–year–olds, obviously, they will get involved in the kinds of criminal activities many of us are concerned about.

Earlier this spring, a report which was produced by Quebec's Youth Protection Committee condemned the Outaouais service for the lengthy delays and waiting lists that young people face before cases are dealt with. In fact, the president of the Youth Protection Committee in Montreal stated that Quebec society should feel a collective shame that the situation has been allowed to drag on as long as it has. Some 3,000 children in the province of Quebec are on similar waiting lists.

As Mr. Dowie stated, children need protection. You do not keep them on a waiting list for 22 months. You do not keep them on a list for five months. You deal with them now. That is why we have to talk about prevention instead of the kind of narrow approach of simply throwing more kids in jail for longer terms. We also have to recognize the other elements of prevention.

We have to recognize that far too many youths in trouble with the law have learning disabilities. It has been estimated that something like 70 or 80 per cent of young people involved in crimes and criminal activities have learning disabilities. What are we doing as a government to deal with that concern? Nothing, absolutely nothing.

What are we doing to deal with the problem of violence on prime time television and weekend children's television. Look at the cartoons. It has been estimated that the average child, during his or her childhood, sees something like 10,000 murders on television. What kind of impact does that violence on television have on the psyche of our young people?

The kind of aggressiveness, the Rambo mentality, which is all too common on television clearly must be reflected in the behaviour of our children. As a society we are failing our children by allowing that violence to continue.

The response of the government in this legislation is to make it easier to transfer young people to the adult courts and ultimately into the adult prison system. That is not the answer. We all recognize the concerns that people feel about violent acts committed by young people, particularly murder.

We all recognized the sense of outrage that the community felt at the Scarborough case when a young murderer was sentenced to a term of three years. After that, he was out on the streets. Obviously, communities do not accept that.

There is provision for transfer in the existing Young Offenders Act, and these provisions have been adjudicated by the Supreme Court of Canada. Indeed, the provisions for transfer can and should be used in appropriate circumstances. Because of some incidents that have given rise to understandable concern on the part of the community, it does not suggest that we have to change the test for transferring all young offenders. Surely, it is a step backward.

What it will do is dump more young people into adult prisons, not just after they have been convicted, but while they are waiting for trial. One serious concern raised by the Canadian Council on Children and Youth is the failure of this legislation to deal with the problem of young people who have been transferred to adult court who are awaiting trial and, while awaiting trial, are locked up in adult prisons. They can be locked up for months.

What does the government have to say about that? Nothing at all. What does the government have to say about young people who are 15, 16 or 17 years old, after being convicted, following transfer and serving their time in adult jails? Absolutely nothing. Apparently, it is acceptable to the government. It is not acceptable to New Democrats, and we intend to speak out on this in committee and when the bill comes back to the House. A number of my colleagues will be taking the opportunity to speak from a variety of perspectives.

The hon. member for Saskatoon—Humboldt, a rural community, will be speaking on the legislation from the perspective of a rural member. He pointed out when speaking very eloquently to other members of caucus that, in fact, in rural communities young people do grow up earlier. In many cases, they are out driving, working and playing a responsible role in the community at the age of 14 or 15. He urged all of us to recognize that we cannot necessarily apply the same standard to urban and rural communities. He is right.

The hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca pointed this out as well. We must respond to young people as individuals and deal with their tragedies individually. We should not follow the mindless trend of throwing them in jail for longer periods of time, or throwing them into adult jails.

Even the Chief of Police in Edmonton said in an interview just last year: "Increasing murder sentences for young offenders would be useless in dealing with youth crime." Chief Bob Claney of the Edmonton police force said: "The proposed changes are only a distraction and will not make a significant impact on the problem of teen crime." Chief Claney is on the front lines and is telling us: "Look, this is not the answer."

Instead, what does he say? He says that he would rather see the provincial and federal governments provide more counselling for the vast majority of young offenders rather than stiffer penalties for the tiny proportion who murder. I quote from Chief Claney. He says: "If we are successful with a youngster, he will not end up in adult court." He is right.

We cannot overestimate the impact of murder on our communities, whether it be a young person or anyone else. We also have to put it in context and recognize that murder is something like one-fortieth of 1 per cent of all the offences that are dealt with in youth court. In our understandable desire to respond in a serious and appropriate way to murder, we must not condemn hundreds of other young people to being dumped into the adult prison system and ultimately condemn them to a further life of crime. That is an abdication of our responsibility as a society.

What about a group of young people who are at risk more than any other? I speak now of aboriginal youth, native youth. We received a very powerful submission from the National Association of Friendship Centres. They asked us to recognize that this bill is not the answer to juvenile crime either among aboriginal youth or other youth. They give us some appalling figures around the area of aboriginal youth and crime. They point out that aboriginal youth are more likely to be charged by police for offences than are non-aboriginal youth, that aboriginal youth are more likely to plead guilty than non-aboriginal youth, that aboriginal youth are more likely to receive longer and harsher penalties, that aboriginal youth are more likely to be transferred to the criminal court system—and this bill will make that even easier—and that aboriginal youth are more likely to receive "secure custody orders", that being another term for jail.

• (1700)

Let us look at the figures for young aboriginal people in jail. The Manitoba Métis Federation reported that in Manitoba 92.8 per cent of the young women held on remand were native and 47 per cent of the young men held on remand were native. That situation is a national scandal. It has been described as a national shame by the chief commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission and this government is cutting back on funding for juvenile justice programs.

Let us look at some figures on secure custody and open custody. The open custody unit of the Manitoba Youth Centre held 87.5 per cent native girls and 55.5 per cent native boys. In the secure custody unit of that jail, 100 per cent of the young women were native. So this government comes forward with legislation that makes it easier to dump young native women and men into adult jails. That is not the answer. That is surely not the answer to the devastating problems that face our youth in this country, whether they be aboriginal youth or other youth.

There are answers. The Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science some years ago produced an excellent report entitled "Child at Risk". It pointed out that society can identify at a very early age those kinds of conditions which will lead to a life of crime. Yet we are cutting back on funding to respond to those concerns.

Child abuse has been recognized as a very significant factor in the development of violent criminal behaviour in later years, but in the past our society has paid more attention to cruelty to animals than we have to cruelty to children.

We have to deal with the question of child abuse. I have talked about violence on television. I have talked about the question of poverty. One of the most direct links that can be established between crime and young people is the linkage of poverty. In fact, the National Council on Welfare published a report in 1975 called "Poor Kids". On what it means to be poor in Canada the report says that to be born poor is to face a greater likelihood of ill health in infancy, in childhood and throughout your adult life. To be born poor is to face a lesser likelihood that you will finish high school, lesser still that you will attend university.

On that I might add that a young native person in Canada today has a better chance of going to jail than of going to university.

Mr. Barrett: Or committing suicide.

Mr. Robinson: Or of committing suicide, as my colleague from Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca says.

To be born poor is to face a greater likelihood that you will be judged delinquent in adolescence and, if so, a greater likelihood that you will be sent to a correctional institution. To be born poor is to have the deck stacked against you at birth and to find life an uphill struggle ever after. To be born poor is unfair to kids.

Well, Madam Speaker, they were right in 1975 and they are right today. Fifteen years later we still have over 500,000 kids in this country dependent on food banks in order to survive. We still have kids, not just in inner cities but in rural communities as well, going to school hungry. What is this government doing to respond to these concerns around child poverty? It is doing nothing, nothing whatsoever. What is it doing to deal with the problems of foetal alcohol syndrome? We know the impact that that can have as well on a later life of crime. The government is doing absolutely nothing.

We are presented with a bill by a government which says that this is its answer to the concerns around the question of young people and crime.

This is not the answer of the Canadian Council on Children and Youth. The Canadian Council on Children and Youth is a broadly based body which held extensive consultations around this legislation. It has come to the conclusion that the legislation is a step backward and not a step forward.

There are some elements of the legislation that we do support, there is no question about that. Under the legislation a young person who is transferred to adult court and faces a sentence of life imprisonment for murder will be eligible for parole anywhere between five and ten years after they start to serve their sentence. Under the existing provisions of the Young Offenders Act, a judge is faced with a very difficult choice; either treating such young offenders as young offenders in youth court with a maximum term of three years or transferring them to adult court, in which case there is a maximum of life imprisonment with no eligibility for parole for 25 years.

That was the trade-off in 1976 for the abolition of capital punishment. As a society we have to ask ourselves, not just in the case of young people but in the case of all prisoners, whether the price we paid was not too high and whether we should not be re-examining the issue of the date for parole eligibility because our prisons are filling up rapidly with people who have been convicted of first degree murder and are not eligible for parole for 25 years. Surely that is a concept that we should, in fact, re-examine.

I have touched on some of the issues that we as a party want to address. I have touched on this government's failure to adequately fund services to young people and on the question of prevention.

Another concern is that of prevention in terms of programs for young people who are involved in drug and alcohol abuse. You would think that governments, both provincially and federally, would be doing everything in their power to ensure that these programs were adequately funded. Yet we hear over and over again that there simply is not enough space for young people who are abusing substances, whether it be alcohol or drugs.

We are abdicating our responsibility to young people who have been sexually abused and physically abused. We are abdicating our responsibility to poor kids. We are abdicating our responsibility to kids who are involved in alcohol and drug abuse. Instead we are making it easier to transfer them into the adult prison system. Great answer.

We in this party believe that the emphasis must be, surely, as the Canadian Council on Children and Youth has focused, on rehabilitation of those young people who have come in conflict with the law but, most importantly, on doing everything we can as a society to prevent young people from coming into conflict with the law in the first place. To the extent that they do, they should be dealt with with compassion and with understanding, but also with firmness, because that is what our society asks for as well.

I could go on at some length about the absence of psychiatric services. I have spoken about the question of learning disabilities and the chronic shortage of psychological services.

Ms. Hunter: Adequate child care.

Mr. Robinson: Adequate child care, as my colleague from Saanich—Gulf Islands has pointed out, is another area which is of great importance. We are still waiting for the government to keep its promise for a national child care program. That as well would go a long way to assisting in reducing the level of crime among young people in this country.

I want to conclude by expressing some disappointment, first in the response of this government to what is clearly a crisis involving young people and crime in this country. It could have come up with a thoughtful approach that would emphasize prevention and rehabilitation which would not involve cutting funds to provinces and territories as it has done. Instead, it has put together this piecemeal approach, an approach which, unfortunately, is guaranteed to fail.

I am also disappointed that the Official Opposition, the Liberal party, is supporting this approach. Liberal members have stood in their place and said that they agree with and support these principles.

• (1710)

Where are the members of the Liberal party when it comes to cuts in funds for juvenile justice? Why are they not speaking out for more funding for juvenile justice programs, instead of supporting the Conservative government in its cuts?

These are some of the issues that I wanted to address in the few minutes that I have had an opportunity to speak on this legislation.

I want to close by reminding the House of the words of a very distinguished judge, Judge David Bazelon, who just recently retired from the United States Circuit Court of Appeal for the D.C. Circuit. He said this: "Children who come through the courts are living evidence of the failures of our society to provide the basic necessities of a healthy, mental and physical life for all too many of those we call society's most precious resource. If we refuse to invest in our children, we can only expect more of the same".

Let us listen to that message. Let us invest in our children. Let us not take a step backward with regressive legislation that will result in more children in adult jails and more crime in communities across this land.

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Madam Speaker, first, I want to compliment my colleague for making a very reasonable and emotional appeal combined in a very forthright manner.

I regret that this is not of paramount importance to every single member, but I know that every member considers it an issue that affects themselves and their communities.

One of the reasons in my opinion that this remains a problem in terms of having adequate services for children in our country is the simple fact that children do not vote. Another compounding factor is that rich children do not go to jail. Middle class children rarely do, but poor children go to jail frequently.

When I first entered politics 30 years ago, I had come to politics out of jail. I am the only politician who left jail and came into politics, instead of the other way around. But I want to confess that I worked there. I was not sent there.

I spent my life, up until I came into politics, committed to working in the corrections system. At a very early age, I was so employed and discovered that what I had been taught in university and what I had assumed was taking place in institutions was indeed what was really taking place. I discovered other things that shocked and motivated me to come into politics.

Since I only have a brief few moments, I want to share with this House what goes on with a child after an offence has been committed and understanding that there is no structure whatsoever mandating care, protection or counselling for the victim. Let us get that on the record. The focus is on punishment with absolutely no care for another child victim of a crime.

For those who suggest that an alternate plan to what the government is suggesting is bleeding heart, let me tell them that victims of crimes in this country, especially children, are the most abandoned group in our society. If this government were concerned about children, the first thing it would do is include in the act a guarantee that any child who is sexually abused, any child who is victimized physically or psychologically by anyone, young or old, is given by law a guarantee of the best possible services available to that child. Only then would I believe the motivation was totally in protection of the community.

It is on the record and we understand that the victims are only part of an ongoing system and have no care of real value in this whole process.

Let us take a look at the 16-year old boy who comes into court and who has been convicted of a violent crime after being transferred to an adult court. If that young boy has been in a remand centre for three or four months awaiting trial, then that child has already been the victim of gang rape.

This is not a very pleasant subject, but we should deal honesty with what takes place in our institutions. Any young boy who comes into an adult institution, either on the remand side of the institution or in the main population of the jail, or is exposed to the access of the main population of jail, is the victim of gang rape within a matter of weeks. Lots are drawn. This is the nature of the institution. These are not happy subjects, but this is the reality that members of this House should know so that they understand what they are doing when we pass this kind of legislation.

That young boy is guaranteed to be physically assaulted in that institution. That assault leaves indelible scars in the mind of that youngster forever. No matter what the system then attempts to do, let me tell you, Madam Speaker, that the indelible experience that that child had in the institution scars that person for life.

Recently we read about a 27-year-old who is a threat to society because that young man is a paedophile and there is no protection in our structures to ensure that the community is protected from such an offender. Once being a victim of that kind of crime, the victim turns into the offender more often than not. The state guarantees, because of the institutionalized structure and the experience, a supply of offenders. Having been victims leads to the offence.

I want to leave that aside because I only have about eight or nine more minutes. I want to talk about young women in our society and something that happens to young women who come into court that is not really understood by a large body of legislators.

Young offenders still can be charged with incorrigibility. Incorrigibility can cover range of behaviours that are unmanageable by society—a range of behaviours that does not lead to cheating on the stock market, a range of behaviours that does not lead to cheating on income tax, a range of behaviours that are snickered at by adults, but a range of behaviours by youngsters that are totally out of control that could not be applied as a measure of judgment to adults. Young girls, young women, are charged with incorrigibility by way of promiscuity. I have yet to hear of a young male who is charged with incorrigibility by way of promiscuity. It is a double standard in our society.

I want you to understand that quickly and clearly a male dominated society says to a young 13-year old or 14-year old girl that she may not be promiscuous, but that is not an attitude which is held in the case of a young boy.

That young girl, who is charged with incorrigibility by way of promiscuity, is institutionalized. She was institutionalized in my own province of British Columbia at one point in an institution called the Willingdon School for Girls—a young woman who is expressing severe emotional trauma in her own home situation or foster home situation, who knows of no way of dealing with it other than being a victim of crime, who has probably been sexually abused as a young child at the early age of four, five, or six in patterned behaviour that is indelibly imprinted on that child's mind and who assumes that is a normal pattern of behaviour that she must live through for the rest of her life.

Once placed in the institution she is not given access to the separate, individual, loving care that is necessary for any such child. Once placed in an institution she is grouped with other young women who have similar or more severe problems, and what appears to be an abstract problem for this young woman becomes the norm in the group that she is in.

No consistent treatment pattern takes place. As a matter of fact the kind of learning pattern that takes place in such institutions, duplicated not only in Canada but right across North America, guarantees a supply of chronic offenders who have been scarred in youth in these institutions.

I said in an earlier speech that at one time 60 per cent of the female population of the Kingston Federal Penitentiary were graduates of the Willingdon School for Girls in British Columbia. When the institution was closed there was a dramatic drop in repeated patterns of behaviour because the pattern of behaviour was not reinforced in an institutionalized setting for which the community was paying.

What were the options? We sought and purchased, case by case, the kind of treatment plan that was essential for each one of these young women. That is no longer available. As a matter of fact in the 30 years I have been involved in public life, with a concern, essentially my own private driven concern about why I am in politics, we have actually gone back. We have actually made the situation worse, not better.

• (1720)

Little did I think that I would be in a situation in 1990 dealing with a bill that again is a cosmetic to dampen political fears. It is a knee-jerk reaction to public outcries against violent crimes.

It is not a first step, as my colleague who is a Liberal member said. It is a continuous misstep of legislation that is often implemented on a knee-jerk basis without any sense of history, any sense of proportion, or any sense of what is happening to these young people. They are not rich. They are not middle class. They are poor children, essentially neglected and dropped into the institutions of our society, whether it be foster homes or the other kinds of institutions we have.

What we experience here in this country is minuscule compared to our neighbour to the south. But we have not learned, nor have they.

I know my time is almost up, but I want to say that we are culpable as politicians. We are the ones who are in effect the wrong ones. We are the ones who are making the mistake. We have an opportunity and a responsibility to protect our total society. The only way to protect our total society is to ensure that our children are protected—the criminal element and the victim. We turn the criminal element into a guaranteed supplier of violence. We turn the victim into a repeat pattern of that behaviour. None of this legislation deals with that.

Simply said, it does not take a genius to figure out when a child is in trouble. Any neighbourhood has parents who sit down at a table and say: "If somebody does not do something for Suzy or Johnny soon, they will be in trouble". Those parents are right. They are in trouble. This bill does nothing to stop that. This bill does nothing for treatment, nothing to protect the community, nothing for services to the victim. It guarantees a constant supply of adult criminals coming through this kind of system.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Madam Speaker, I think the House has been treated this afternoon to two very good speeches, one by the hon. member for Burnaby—Kingsway and the other by my esteemed colleague from Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca. Both of them have a fundamental understanding of the problem.

I know that our society, especially now, seems to be reaching out increasingly for simple solutions to very complex problems. I guess that is a human way to deal with a problem. You want the quick answer. There is no quick answer.

This bill is an attempt at a quick answer. What young offenders need is love and understanding. As a mother of two teenagers, it offends me that this is the government's response to the woes of young people in Canada.

I want to ask the hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca, with his vast experience in corrections and his esteemed reputation in the political field, if he would expand on the links between poverty and crime among young offenders.

Mr. Barrett: Madam Speaker, I want to say at the outset that I appreciate the hon. member's comments. I want to suggest to this House that nobody has a monopoly on what the answers are. I can repeat that the consistent answers have been wrong most of the time.

There is a distinct link between young people who end up in courts and the fact that they have very little financial backing. A wealthy person is not able to prevent a child from having aberrant behaviour but is able to mobilize the best possible services to protect their child when that child is confronted with the legal consequences of his or her actions.

In other words, if an upper middle class or an upper class child has committed an offence that warrants prosecution under legislation such as this, that child goes into court with the best possible back-up services of lawyers, psychologists and those people in the medical profession, the psychiatrists who claim to have some answers about child behaviour.

That array of service is not available to a poor child. That array of service is not even available, I regret to say, to a child who is a ward of the state, albeit in some provinces there is an effort to maintain a modicum of protection for that child who has been through perhaps 16, 17, or 18 different foster homes by the age of 12, 13, or 14.

That is the past of the individual child who is the ward of the state and appears in court. It is not unusual to have some children having been in 12, 13, or 14 different foster homes, not knowing one consistent set of parents. Let us extrapolate the situation to what my colleague said about the indigenous people. Let us look exactly at what we have attempted to do to those children who come into trouble with the law and our method of dealing with it.

We ignore the indigenous people's own inherited culture. We immediately take those children out of the only social experience they have. It may be one that we as Europeans make an abstract judgment about. Because it is a different culture and because it does not match our culture, we snatch the child. That was the exact word I heard as a young social worker. We "snatched" children from indigenous people. They are poor. Is my time up, Madam Speaker?

Madam Deputy Speaker: This being the period for questions and comments, I saw that other members seemed to be looking forward to asking questions.

Mr. Barrett: Madam Speaker, it will be my fault that I lose my whole 10 minutes, but I will go on with my train of thought.

An indigenous child is immediately extracted from the only culture that it knows, dumped into ours, brought into the courtroom, and dealt with either as a foster child or a ward of the state. If you expect that child to have a chance as my colleague asks on the basis of fairness, forget it.

It is not a story that I have made up. The statistics given by my colleague are absolute proof of what is going on for young women and indigenous children. They do not have a chance if they are poor and they appear in juvenile court in this country.

Granted, there are judges in juvenile courts who cry out for better services, who sit in judgment of these children and go on record day after day proclaiming their horror and shock at the absence of services for children. Those proclamations fall on deaf ears of legislators who have heard the tale of woe and respond only by this foolish legislation that is being presented now.

It is not the fault of the courts. Most people who work in the system understand exactly what is wrong and have said so in testimony to agencies and to committee, all to be ignored, and ignored again in this legislation.

What can I say? A rational, thoughtful, prudent government would gently pull the bill back and say that there is no excuse now to say that there will be parallel accords to this bill. There is no excuse now to say that at some future date we will deal with these problems. There is no excuse to suggest that this is a placebo. The reality is that we should have the whole package now. If we save one child it is worth the whole package, but we are not doing it and that is why we are opposed to this bill.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, I congratulate my colleague for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca for the usual passion which he brings to this House and his personal experiences which make the debate much more meaningful to everyone who sits in the House. I notice that a lot of people stop and listen for that reason, myself included. I have a great deal of experience as well with native children in the educational system and even though I participated on a daily basis with that kind of circumstance, I am still appalled and somewhat amazed that those kinds of statistics are staggering even to one who was involved in the situation.

• (1730)

My friend used the term "knee-jerk" reaction. My concern is that when the whole system is broken, I do not think you can tinker with it. I suggest that perhaps two years from now there will be a further tinkering to this system when, in fact, the entire system has to be reworked. It is like repairing an old vehicle, eventually there is a time when you must scrap the vehicle and start with a new one.

My question to my friend is, should all of the legislation be reviewed and rather than tinkering with the system, just change the whole process?

Mr. Barrett: I do not have all the answers. I do know that the current vehicle is the wrong vehicle and it is very expensive. If one wanted to make the case purely on money, throw out the current system. The money we spend to house a child in an institution ranges between $40,000 to $60,000 a year. We should spend that kind of money on preventive services for the children who are destined for trouble. A quick change would be to integrate preventive services into a day care program, into kindergartens and into grade schools.

Just as the health community is talking about AIDS education for children who are pre-teens, we can surely move into behaviour problems in pre-teens within the education system. The scourge of AIDS is forcing us to rethink our whole approach to education. I am not suggesting we see a similar scourge, but surely the consequences of neglecting our children and leading to the kind of patchwork of services that guarantee an adult population in our prisons should have the same dramatic scrutiny as the problem of AIDS.

I have some answers and suggestions. Mine may not be correct, but surely to goodness the one common thread that runs through all of our experience in this field is that the earlier you get to the child and his or her parent or parents and deal with the problems quickly, the less chance there is of that child growing up to be the menace to the community that he or she may be.

One last comment in that regard. When my colleague suggests, as the bill has, a provision to release people after five years or 10 years, it sounds humanitarian, but in many instances we wait until the end of the parole period before we release someone because their behaviour in the institution does not warrant it. I just want to address the logic of that for a moment.

The well behaved offender who is released early is not the person we are concerned about; it is the ill behaved offender who is not released because his or her behaviour in the institution is not conforming who we should worry about. If we are concerned about society, it is that offender who needs a supervised period in the community. To wait for sentence to be finished because the parole board says we cannot take the risk means that we are dumping high-risk people into the community and with no services whatsoever.

There is a whole range of recommendations, I would like to suggest to my colleague. All of this has been heard by parliamentary committees since 1936. It is all on the record of this Chamber and of parliamentary committees since 1936. I think the first one was the Archambault commission. It is all on record, all there, all documented, and all universally ignored.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate, the hon. member for Victoria.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to this bill as the assistant justice critic for the New Democratic Party and a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General. I will oppose the bill on second reading, as will the New Democrats in Parliament.

It is interesting and discouraging to me that it is clear that the Liberals will be supporting this bill. It is a bill which completely fails to deal with both the public concern and the reality of problems with young offenders, created in part by the Young Offenders Act. It completely fails to deal with the difficulties in this area.

It is of some interest and concern to me as well, if I can say in a preliminary way without breaching the rules of this House, to see the lack of interest in this bill on the government side and on the Liberal side in this House. I note that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice is in the House, but the tradition in this House has been for cabinet ministers themselves to attend, particularly the important second reading stage, a tradition which—I have not yet suggested there is an absence in the House—

Mr. Nicholson: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I do not think that a point of order by the hon. parliamentary secretary will be necessary.

The hon. member for Victoria started by stating that he knew what should normally be done in this House and then proceeded to do exactly the opposite. I think it would be better for the hon. member to continue with debate. The hon. member for Victoria.

Mr. Brewin: I appreciate the implied admonition Madam Speaker, and perhaps I can simply say that the tradition of having ministers here is a valuable tradition and is one which I know this House fully respects.

The public is concerned about young offenders and that concern in part has been generated by a few examples of horrible crimes committed by young offenders and for which the public sees insufficient sentences handed down. Those few cases have led to a strong feeling amongst the public that the law is "too lenient". This attitude has been reinforced by such organizations as the Canadian Police Association, which has expressed itself in forceful terms.

I have the communication from the Canadian Police Association dated October 3, 1989, which reports on the resolutions adopted at the Canadian Police Association convention in 1989. One of the resolutions specifically dealt with young offenders. Again, the Canadian Police Association was speaking to an entirely legitimate concern; it is the conclusion that has been misunderstood by the government. The resolution reads as follows:

> WHEREAS the Canadian Police Association, representing 32,000 police officers across Canada, believes that the Canadian people are not well served by some of the current provisions of the Young Offenders Act, particularly in the areas of transfer and sentencing of young offenders charged with murder, and other serious offences,
>
> AND WHEREAS a consultation paper dealing with possible amendments to the Young Offenders Act has been circulated by the Department of Justice,
>
> BE IT RESOLVED that the Canadian Police Association make representation to the Government of Canada to have the Young Offenders Act amended to better protect the people of Canada from violent young offenders.

The Canadian Police Association goes on to complain in another resolution about what it sees as the watering down of the mandatory 25-year sentence for murder. It, in fact, reaffirms its support for what it is pleased to call "the supreme penalty", i.e. the death penalty.

• (1740)

The fundamental error that the Canadian Police Association makes is to make the assumption that the law itself is the cause of the problems and, second, that amendments to the law can "better protect people from violent young offenders". It is disappointing to me that the police officers of Canada, as represented at least by their association, have not offered to the government the kind of lessons and experience that I know that police officers of the grass roots understand, which is that the causes of crime and particularly the cause of young offenders crime is far more complicated than is represented by the mere suggestion that amendments to the Young Offenders Act is going to help one way or the other.

The causes of crime by young people is at one level complex and difficult and is individual to each case; and at another level is a symptom of the illness in our society and our failure as a Parliament to require the government to show comprehensive leadership in the whole area of justice and social equity in our country.

Individuals who commit crimes, whatever age, have some responsibility for those acts. It is important as the parliamentary committee now known as the Daubney committee from the last Parliament noted, that offenders begin to understand the responsibility they have for their acts and take responsibility not only for their acts but for their lives.

Even more important is that the government and society generally must understand the responsibility that we have for the conditions which create crime. This is at both a macro and micro level. First, at the macro level, it is absolutely clear from study after study, from the experience of Canadians in all walks of life from police to clergy to teachers, as my friend from Sault Ste. Marie expressed, that poverty, child abuse, social injustice creates a climate that will invariably lead to crime.

Beyond that, we provide no services at the community level to isolate the particular cases at an early age that will lead to a "life of crime". We provide no services when first the signs and symptoms of social dislocation and difficulty appear. The services in regard to parental alcoholism are abysmal in this country. Family counselling, adequate housing, proper community development programs at the grass roots level, good community policing, are all hit and miss programs. This country and the government has consistently and persistently failed to address these issues.

As a result, invariably young people even by age six, seven and eight are beginning to show the signs of the pain and agony in their lives which eventually is expressed in violence against others in society.

Then we get to the time when the crimes of the young people become so serious that they come to the attention of the police and the police are left with no services and no system for responding and for heading off the increased problem.

We come to the situation where the criminal justice system, a system which the last Parliament invented, makes the problem even worse. We have the evidence of those who have been working with the Young Offenders Act over the last number of years that we have ended up with even more young people in custody.

The objective of the act was to reduce the number of people in custody in order that we could, hopefully, divert young people from more serious crimes and create a safer and more secure society. Now we have shifted to the point where there has been, after the first five years of life of the Young Offenders Act, even more young people in our jails, even more young people into those schools of crime, which is something no one in this country wants to see. The government, when pressed with the evidence of the complete failure of its work, tries to patch together a minimal solution.

There is one virtue in the bill before the House, but it does not proceed nearly far enough. The virtue is that it makes it slightly easier for a judge to conclude that he or she should keep the young offender in the young offender system rather than transfer the young offender to adult court when it comes to a very serious crime.

Under the Young Offenders Act as it is presently set up, a judge would be faced with a decision; a minimum sentence which he sees as too short, but if he agrees to the transfer to adult court, he is then faced with a sentence which he sees as too long, that is, a minimum 25-year sentence.

The flexibility that our system generally provides judges to come up with a punishment that not only fits the crime, but fits the circumstances of society and of the individual young offender is not in the law as it now stands. The one virtue of this bill is that it increases the minimum sentence from three to five years and reduces for young offenders transferred to adult court the minimum down to ten years.

As I suggest, the bill simply does not go far enough, nor does it deal in any comprehensive way with the real problems. It does not offer any leadership in this area. It has led me to wonder sometimes whether the problem is as much with the government directly or with the advice it is getting from the Department of Justice. Within the narrow scope of the government's particular response, the bill does deal with some of the issues. But the larger mandate given to the Department of Justice for coming up with a response to the rising incidence of young crime in this country is a complete, abject and utter failure, and nothing is more clear about the failure than the government's bill that is now before the House.

As has already been noted, the bill is opposed by organizations from across the country. None are more thorough and precise in this area than the Canadian Council on Children and Youth. This organization has prepared a paper which is 26 pages in length. I will not bore the House by reading the full 26 pages, but let me at least read the conclusion which states:

> —dispositional patterns in the youth courts must be carefully monitored. Of particular concern has been the increase in the use of custody and the apparent disparities in dispositional practices. It may in the future be necessary to consider further substantive legislative changes, or amendments to the Act's Declaration of Principle or the creation of sentencing guidelines, in order to ensure that custody is not used inappropriately or excessively.
>
> More fundamentally, it must be appreciated that the law is a blunt social tool, and can only have a limited effect on a complex problem like youthful criminality. The public is understandably concerned about the issue of violence, in particular among young persons. However, legislation, or changes to legislation, can only have a limited impact on offence patterns of adolescents.
>
> Significant changes in offence patterns are likely to require significant social changes. There have to be improvements in our youth corrections system as well. This is largely a provincial responsibility but the federal government can play a role.
>
> More fundamentally, our mental health, education and welfare systems must be made more responsive to the needs of youth; we need improvements in how we deal with such problems as drug and alcohol abuse, adolescents with learning disabilities, and visible minority youth, and with the integration of young persons into the labour force. Most basically, we must have a society that values its youth and recognizes their need for a nurturing environment.

• (1750)

Anyone who has spent any time in association with the criminal justice system and reviewing the working of the criminal justice system in the country will know that, once a young person has found himself or herself within the criminal justice system before the courts under the Young Offenders Act, the system has already failed.

We also know that once a young person is before the young offenders system, nothing in the legislation we already have will help, and nothing in the bill before the House will remedy the deficiencies in the act.

It is important that this bill go back for further consideration; that the House take a comprehensive look at the problems of youthful crime; and that, instead of offering further despair, we begin to offer the leadership of hope so that finally the pain of crime in this area can be eradicated.

Madam Deputy Speaker: On questions or comments, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, I congratulate my seat-mate. It is indeed an honour to sit beside him when he can come up with that kind of factual, practical, sensible, and yet emotional oratory.

He talked about societal problems. Again, I refer to my own setting in school. As a principal of an elementary school for the last 10 years or so, I spent most of my time, unashamedly so, in counselling. I do not use the term "guidance counsellor" because that always connotes preparing people for their vocation in life. The counselling was to assist young people in adjusting to the life-style they were dealt which in many, many cases was very difficult.

My hon. friend used the word "preventative" on at least one occasion. I want to use it several times. We use the word "prevention" in medicine and say that it will save us money. If we expend funds in fire prevention, that will decrease the cost of actually fighting fires. We talk about dental hygiene and the prevention of tooth decay. Even the dentists who can profit from bad teeth support this.

Yet, one has to wonder why we do not spend more money in crime prevention. It seems to be a very sensible and practical way of dealing with a very serious problem. Could the member elaborate on that concept of expending more funds before rather than after which, in fact, would be cost-saving?

Mr. Brewin: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the question. It is interesting for me particularly, because in the City of Victoria we have a program which has been noted right across the country in this precise area. That is a community policing program.

The City of Victoria Police Department, a few years ago, with the assistance of the Solicitor General's department, established a program of neighbourhood police stations which in a way is old hat. It is perhaps what the police used to do very well and it is taking that old idea and readapting into a modern urban setting.

Even in establishing the local police station there was a good deal of community consultation and preparation for that. Community committees were established and the community was asked to participate in the work of the neighbourhood police station. Much of the work was focused on the idea of the prevention of crime. I should add that there is also the need to deal with the prevention of the perception of crime. We now have five neighbourhood police stations in Victoria. So far all of them have appeared to be very successful in not only reducing the incidence of crime in the area, and particularly among young people, but also the perception of crime.

Surveys have shown that older people have the greatest fear that they may be subject to crime, and at the same time the surveys show that it is in fact young people who are the greatest victims of crime. Part of that is because crime in our urban society invariably happens at night, frequently associated with abuse of alcohol and drugs. It is quite a different pattern than one watches on television, and I think many of us get our images of crime as much from television and from the media as we do from the reality.

When one asks the police what is their busiest time of day, they will state that it is between 11 at night and four or five in the morning. Therefore, the work of the prevention of crime begins with the bringing into focus a real understanding of what crime is all about.

The government could do so much more than it has done in this area. It has given some support to some work in this area, but persistently when they get around to announcing what they are going to do, they have great press conferences, they produce wonderful books, they announce that the RCMP is going to get some extra people to go around and arrest some more people, and then they come up with flimsy bills like this that do not come close to addressing the heart of the problem, and they have shown no national leadership.

Even in the United States, the federal government has shown greater leadership in trying to develop effective and sensible programs for the prevention of crime. In Britain, if it is possible to imagine it, Margaret Thatcher has shown, finally, some understanding about the causes of crime and has given some assistance to some very good crime prevention programs at the local level.

My colleagues say that they cannot believe it. It is true. At least I am told it is true and my sources are impeccable in this area.

I see there is a minute or two left. I do not know whether my friends from any part of the House have further questions, but I will conclude in time for them to ask them if they do.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I want to thank my hon. colleague for an excellent speech, a very comprehensive speech. I know that many of my colleagues from other parts of the country also want to participate in the debate on this important legislation, and over the coming weeks and months we look forward to having those views expressed on this important legislation.

I wanted to draw to the attention of my colleague the fact that the acting police chief in Edmonton, Alberta, has stated that the changes which are proposed by the government in the area of the Young Offenders Act are only a distraction and will not make a significant impact on the problem of teen crime. My colleague referred to the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police and I wanted to draw to his attention the fact that at least one chief of police has said that this bill is not the way to go, that instead we should be looking at more counselling and more preventive programs.

I am pleased to draw that to the attention of my colleague and also to note the fine work that has been done in the city of Victoria in the area of crime prevention, as well as in the municipality of Burnaby which has an excellent young offenders advisory group. Under the progressive leadership of Mayor Copeland and the council there, and the progressive leadership of the mayor of Victoria, certainly we can do a great deal in the area of crime prevention, particularly involving young people.

I see it is six o'clock and I will draw my remarks to a close.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Do I understand that the hon. member wants me to call it six o'clock? The House is not ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Deputy Speaker: It being 6 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 31, 1990

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

• (1110)

[English]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government's response to several petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS

TABLING OF REVISION AND REFERENCE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a number of Order in Council appointments which were made by the government.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1), these are deemed referred to the appropriate standing committees, a list of which is attached.

* * *

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF ALL-PARTY DELEGATION TO INTERPARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE ON GLOBAL ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the report of the all-party delegation which attended the Interparliamentary Conference on Global Environment held in Washington April 29 to May 2.

* * *

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STRIKING—FORTY-THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the forty-third report of the Striking Committee.

BILL S-10—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the report of the legislative committee on Bill S-10, an act respecting the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, with amendments.

BILL C-26—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-26, an act to amend the Railway Act (grain and flour subsidies), as amended, known as the at and east legislation. In doing so, I would especially like to thank members on all sides who served on this committee for the interest and co-operation they showed, and especially to Mrs. Sirpaul, the clerk, and her capable staff.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

CROWN CORPORATIONS DISSOLUTION OR TRANSFER AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (for Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-73, an act to provide for the dissolution or transfer of certain Crown corporations and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the hon. member have leave to introduce the bill?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

PETITIONS

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure, indeed an honour, to present petitions pursuant to Standing Order 36 on three different topics.

The first topic deals with the goods and services tax. The petitioners from Kamloops and Chase, British Columbia are totally distressed with the government's continued determination to proceed with this 7 per cent goods and services tax and are calling upon the Liberals in the Senate to stop it.

Mr. Milliken: That is not what the petition states.

Mr. Riis: Actually, it is not what the petition says, Mr. Speaker, but it is what they are thinking. If I can be so bold to presume what the petitioners are actually hoping for, it is that the Liberal senators who dominate the Senate will vote it down this afternoon and end this threat.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, on another issue, petitioners from Kamloops are calling upon the government to re-invest in passenger rail service. They have looked around the world and they see that most countries our size have a first-rate passenger rail service.

They are asking the Canadian government to do what everybody else is doing: investing in passenger rail service as opposed to reducing commitments and investments in passenger rail service.

CHILD POVERTY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, petitioners from Kamloops, British Columbia point out their concern regarding increasing child poverty in Canada and the increasing number of children living in poverty.

They are asking the government to consider supporting a comprehensive bill of rights for children as a way of eliminating poverty among young people in our country.

[Translation]

FISHERIES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to present here in this House a petition that was presented to me at a public meeting in Shédiac attended by several hundred people, mainly from the fishing industry. They came from every community, from Baie-Sainte-Anne, Escuminac, all the fishing communities of Kent County, from Westmorland County, even as far as Cape Tormentine.

The petitioners humbly state that the present crisis in the fishing industry requires every one of us to help all the fishermen and all the working people in this industry which is vital for our economic survival.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, the petitioners humbly ask the government to present a recovery plan for this industry in co-operation with all concerned.

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to table a petition that follows the example of several thousand Canadians who are protesting strongly against the Conservative government's proposal to impose upon Canadians a further tax on the goods and services that they purchase starting January 1.

These Canadians—and there are hundreds of signatures in this petition—would like to state without a doubt their strong objection to the imposition of this unprecedented tax. The petitioners would also like to state that in their opinion it is an unjustified grab from the pockets of Canadians which will hit them not only with a higher tax load but with higher inflation, higher interest rates, and higher unemployment.

The undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier, I am pleased to table a petition signed by many, many Canadians who are also opposed to the government's proposal to introduce a goods and services tax and impose it on Canadians.

The petitioners indicate that they are concerned this tax will be hidden from Canadians and applied to virtually everything that Canadians purchase. It will create an onerous burden on small businesses across Canada. They are appalled, frankly, that the government would even consider such a tax, particularly after its ducking the issue during the last campaign and refusing to disclose the details of the tax before the campaign was launched.

They call upon Parliament to reject this unfair and inequitable tax.

• (1120)

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, lest the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue believe that they are somehow slipping from the acme of the attentions and concerns of the citizens of Edmonton and indeed Alberta, I would like to present today a petition signed by 1,221 people, mostly Edmontonians, which notes that the Minister of Finance's proposed goods and services tax is an unfair form of taxation because of its lack of regard for the taxpayers' ability to pay. It notes as well that the government has not addressed the unfair taxation system currently in place.

The petitioners call upon—and this is an interesting point—Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax. As we all know Parliament includes the Senate, so I interpret this to mean that the petitioners as well wish the Liberal majority in the Senate to kill the bill. In fact they want the Liberals to put their Senate majority where their mouth is.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and pleasure to rise, in accordance with Standing Order 36, to present a petition with 570 signatures.

In the last eight months I have presented 15,000 signatures from my riding, and I am still getting them in. I have run out of my own, so I am using some from our deputy Whip, the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

This petition contains 570 signatures. It notes that Canadian families with incomes of around $15,000 spend 92 per cent of their income on current consumption, while families earning $50,000 or more spend only 50 per cent on consumption. More than anybody else, they are concerned about the extra 7 per cent that they are going to have to pay if this bill goes to its finality.

They are very concerned about the effect it will have on them and on small businesses with that kind of income range. They humbly beg and pray, as my hon. friend says, for Parliament to cease and desist and not to pass this bill.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present petitions today from Legionnaires, both men and women, in Portland, Merrickville, Lansdowne, Rockport, Elgin, Toledo, Athens, Jasper and other communities in Leeds and Grenville, objecting to the cuts that the government has proposed to veterans services, particularly in the way of housekeeping costs for vets and additional charges for long-term care.

These vets are calling upon the government to reverse these budget cuts. They would like the government to remember them in a more positive way, instead of in the negative, twisted way which this government is seemingly determined to do.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition that has been forwarded to me from residents of the constituency of Etobicoke Centre, and some 581 people have signed this petition.

The undersigned petitioners are opposed to the closing of the Canada postal outlet previously located at the Grenview Home Hardware at 2918 Bloor Street West in the city of Etobicoke. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact a law opening a postal outlet in the vicinity of Bloor Street West, east of Montgomery Road and west of Prince Edward Drive.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and duty to present petitions under Standing Order 36.

The first of these petitions calls upon the Government of Canada to support Canada's aboriginal people in the traditional use of their lands. It calls on Canada to seek new initiatives for peace through common security and disarmament, rather than NATO–NORAD participation in deep strike attack capability building.

It calls on Canada to redirect NATO–NORAD funding toward enabling Canada's aboriginal peoples to regain control of their lands and livelihood.

The petitioners call on Parliament to oppose the establishment of a proposed tactical fighter and weapons training base at Goose Bay. I am sure they are happy that the base will not be built. Nevertheless, they would like to see the end of all low-level flight training.

NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by residents of La Ronge, Saskatchewan, calling on Parliament, and particularly the Minister of Finance, to reject the report of the task force on northern tax benefits, which eliminated 85 per cent of the communities in Canada from enjoying the benefits available to them under northern tax benefits, to recognize the high cost of living in northern and isolated communities, and to develop a fair and equitable tax benefits program for the north to enable those people to enjoy an adequate standard of living and develop their community.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, the third petition which I have the honour of presenting was signed by people from Shellbrook, Leask, and surrounding communities. It is particularly appropriate today when a report is out today saying that illiteracy remains a serious problem in our country.

The petitioners call on the government, particularly Parliament, not to consider, through the goods and services tax, the taxing of books, the printed word. In fact they say that the uninhibited dissemination of the printed word is a cornerstone of democracy, culture and education and that this would be negatively affected by the GST.

Therefore they call on the Liberal Senate to reject the GST and certainly to reject any tax on reading materials.

[Translation]

TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I am today tabling a petition from Chibougamau, in the riding of Roberval, further to the recommendations of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas.

The signers of this petition reject the conclusions of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas and ask that Chibougamau be recognized as an isolated area under the present tax benefit regime.

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 244, 280, and 284.

[Text]

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE TO INDIAN PEOPLE

Question No. 244—Mr. Taylor:

For each of the years 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989, for programs providing economic development assistance to Indian people (a) what amount of money was paid out (i) in total (ii) in Saskatchewan (b) was any part of the total paid out for projects originating in and operating on reserves and, if so (i) in total (ii) in Saskatchewan, what part?

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): I am informed as follows:

Insofar as Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is concerned:

Following is the report showing expenditures relating to projects that are identified as originating in or operating on reserves based on the legal status of the applicant. ACOA's records do not identify the aboriginal status of applicants as individual and therefore there are no projects identified as being with Indians apart from Band Councils.

INDIAN ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE FROM JANUARY 1, 1986 TO DECEMBER 31, 1989

INDIAN BAND COUNCIL

CALENDAR YEAR	NO. PROJECTS	ASSISTANCE AMOUNT
1989	1	14,000
Total for Indian Band Council	1	14,000

Insofar as the Department of Employment and Immigration is concerned:

a) Expenditures through the Canadian Jobs Strategy were estimated to be:

i) In total ($ millions)

1986–87	1987–88	1988–89	1989–90
$145.5	$127.1	$120.7	$137.8

ii) In Saskatchewan ($ millions)

1986–87	1987–88	1988–89	1989–90
$18.7	$19.1	$15.8	$20.9

b) When capturing date on CJS projects and activities, EIC does not track activities occurring on, or coordinated from, Indian Reserves.

Insofar as the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is concerned:

Total expenditures (including salaries and overhead) to provide economic development assistance to Indians, Inuit and Innu is as follows:

(a) FISCAL YEAR	(i) TOTAL	(ii) SASKATCHEWAN
1985–86	$83,738,616	$9,549,405
1986–87	88,818,820	10,633,593
1987–88	80,099,671	9,310,129
1988–89	79,049,262	8,896,423
1989–90 *	78,333,600	9,051,100

* Budget rather than expenditures.

b) (i) and (ii) Departmental records do not indicate wether the projects originated in and operated on–reserve or off–reserve.

Insofar as the Department of Industry, Science and Technology is concerned:

(a) & (b) All programs administered by DIST, regardless of their focus on Aboriginal People, do not discriminate between Status Indians, Métis or Inuit. The programs can also include assistance to non–aboriginal persons provided the benefits flow to aboriginal people. Other programs administered by DIST could also contribute economic assistance to status Indians but data in these cases are not available.

(a) FISCAL YEAR	(i) TOTAL	(ii) SASKATCHEWAN
1986–87	$72,890,283	$13,264,867
1987–88	72,285,632	7,315,198
1988–89	92,701,990	17,568,120
1989–90	67,554,999	10,415,026

NOTE: The figures provided above are for Aboriginal People only.

Insofar as the Department of Western Economic Diversification is concerned:

The department does not have the information requested.

The Western Diversification Program is open to all western Canadian business enterprises and viable commercial projects. The four western provinces are treated as a single geographic region, with the same guidelines applying equally throughout the area. Consequently, the department does not have information which explicitly sets out what portion of its funds have been accessed in the manner requested.

PAYING CONTRACTORS FOR TREE PLANTING

Question No. 280—Mr. Gardiner:

In the summer of 1989, did officials of Forestry Canada state that there were administrative problems in paying contractors for tree planting, and, if so, have any steps been taken taken to correct these problems and, if so, what steps?

The Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of Forestry): During the summer of 1989, the British Columbia Employment Standards Branch (Prince George office) received a number of complaints from tree planters. These complaints reflected an abnormal occurrence, due to the dissolution of a company in June 1989.

In 1989, Forestry Canada officials (Pacific and Yukon Region) investigated issues regarding tree planting administration under the Canada–British Columbia Forest Resource Development Agreement (FRDA).

It would be very difficult to relate the complaints generated by the dissolution of a company directly to administrative practices under the Canada–British Columbia FRDA. It was determined that administrative problems did not exist under the BC FRDA and, therefore, no changes were made to the administrative process.

Although the implementation of cost-shared programs under the FRDA and their adherence to the employment standards is within the jurisdiction of the provincial government, the federal government has advocated that the working and safety conditions of silviculture workers be improved.

The FRDA created much employment for silviculture workers in 1989, generating an estimated 14,000 person-days of employment to plant some 19 million seedlings on 7,000 hectares in the Prince George Region. However, with the exception of the one company which failed, the proportion of complaints to the Employment Standards Branch does not appear to be unusual.

CF ESTABLISHMENT/STRENGTH

Question No. 284—Mr. Manley:

As of December 31, 1989, for each rank from private to general (including naval equivalents), what is (a) the establishment (b) the actual strength of the Canadian Armed Forces?

The Hon. William Hunter McKnight (Minister of National Defence): See attached documents.

MILITARY STRENGTH
BY RANK
ESTABLISHMENT AND ACTUAL
EFFECTIVE DATE 31 DEC 89

RANK	ACTUAL *	ESTABLISHMENT	NOTE
GEN	1	1
LGEN	7	8
MGEN	32	32
BGEN	82	84
COL	366	361
LCOL	1,123	1,159
MAJ	3,537	3,833
SUB-TOTAL	5,148	5,478
CAPT	6,942	6,622
CAPT/LT		2,813	1
LT	1,460	65
SUB-TOTAL	8,402	9,500
2LT	167		2
OCDT	214		2
SUB-TOTAL	381
OFFICER-TOTAL	13,931	14,978
BASIC TRAINING LIST		2,258
SUBSIDIZED UNIVERSITY TRAINING LIST		2,226
CWO	921	895
MWO	2,480	2,450
WO	4,979	5,038
SGT	10,277	10,739
MCPL	11,933	12,677
SUB-TOTAL	30,590	31,799
CPL	20,032	10,098
CPL/PTE		22,953	1
PTE	11,528
SUB-TOTAL	31,560	33,051
NCM-TOTAL	62,150	64,850
BASIC TRAINING LIST		6,145
SUBSIDIZED UNIVERSITY TRAINING LIST		6

NOTE 1: These established positions require either one of two ranks.

NOTE 2: There are no positions that specify this rank.

* The "actual" figures do not include those members who are on retirement leave or on the medical patient holding list. The members in these categories do not normally return to active service. Also excluded are those on basic and university training.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

* * *

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Starred Question No. 253?

Because of the length of the response I would ask that this question be made an Order for Return and this return would be tabled immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House that Starred Question No. 253 be made for Order for Return?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[Text]

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Question No. 253—Mr. Edmonston:

Since July 1, 1987, have any Ministers of the Crown made speeches promoting the Meech Lake Accord and, if so, in each case (a) which Minister (b) on what date (c) before which audience?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Supply

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel) moved:

That this Chamber, recognizing the historical events taking place in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, regretting the lack of clear policy by the government in defining a new Canadian role in response to these events, noting the failure to address the serious issues of trade, commercial relations, Arctic security and agriculture agreements, and the confusion between the Minister of National Defence and Secretary of State on NATO, calls upon the government through open parliamentary consultations to develop independent, effective policy initiatives in foreign policy and trade to meet these new conditions.

He said: Mr. Speaker, today the Official Opposition takes this opportunity to present a motion of censure because we regret it has now become common practice to develop Canada's foreign policy on the sly, often without any public consultation, a policy that also seems more inclined to take its cue from our neighbours to the south, reflecting American interests instead of representing a genuinely Canadian position.

I may remind hon. members of the first meeting in Quebec City between Mr. Reagan and Mr. Mulroney, when our Prime Minister launched the initiative for negotiations on the free trade agreement with the United States, without prior consultation with the Canadian public. Worse, Canadians were constantly kept in the dark about developments in the course of these negotiations with the Americans, allegedly because we could not reveal our strategy and objectives to our economic partners.

• (1130)

The Americans knew exactly where they were going and had no qualms about saying so publicly, even tabling their action plan in the U.S. Congress. In fact, they were very successful, since they got us to abolish the Foreign Investment Review Agency, for their sake. We passed legislation that was favourable to their big drug companies. They obtained the deregulation of the transportation industry, which we now realize is heavily weighted in favour of American truckers and American railway companies. They obtained a guarantee from Canada that the U.S. could always count on access to our natural resources. Finally, they obtained the gradual phasing– out of all subsidy programs for Canadian companies and farmers. That is what they wanted and that is what they got. Unfortunately, we cannot say the picture is as rosy on our side. According to the Prime Minister, our main goal was to have guaranteed access to the U.S. market.

That was not achieved since we are still subject to retaliatory measures by the U.S. Congress. Now there is talk about a United States–Mexico–Canada free trade agreement, and it seems that negotiations will be starting very soon between the Americans and the Mexicans, our government also wants to get involved. Here again, there were no prior consultations, not even with our parliamentary committee, and certainly not with the Canadian public. In any case, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre will expand on this question later on in the debate today, when he will also mention other negative aspects of Canada's international trade policies.

I may recall, Mr. Speaker, that our Prime Minister decided that Canada would become a member of the Organization of American States, following his first meeting with President Bush. This decision took everybody by surprise. No one expected it, not even officials at the Department of External Affairs, who did not see this as a priority and who were not and still are not ready to tackle this new priority since they lack the budgets and staff to deal with the new responsibilities tossed their way by the Prime Minister, en route to Costa Rica.

What the Liberal Party of Canada said at the time is unfortunately, still true today. The Liberal Party feels that Canada's membership should have been subject to the following conditions: First, membership should not be a substitute for a valid policy in the region. The Mulroney government should make a formal commitment, through concrete action, to enhancing Canada's presence in Latin America and the Caribbean, both in the form of financial and human resources. Second, the government should start by formulating a set of priorities and principles to guide the activities of Canadian representatives at the OAS and in the region. For example, strongly promote respect for human rights and closely monitor situations that might lead to violations of these rights; provide effective aid, taking account of respect for human rights and the environment; increase efforts to solve the debt crisis, especially by restoring to their former level contributions to the Inter-American Development Bank and the Caribbean Development Bank; clearly state Canada's point of view on the settlement of conflicts in the region and promote the democratization of institutions and governments.

I must say that the government has not done much so far to meet these conditions.

Finally, the Minister of External Affairs, in a speech he gave at Humber College in Toronto on the weekend, just set forth Canada's new policy on Europe. Again, Mr. Speaker, there was no public consultation and the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade was not consulted either.

That is quite insulting, because since last September, the members of this committee have been dealing with the new situation in Europe following the political events in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe and especially with the emergence of the single market in Europe in 1992. We held hundreds of meetings and heard dozens of witnesses representing the opinions of Canadian and foreign experts on this subject. We have returned from a trip to observe and study the Soviet Union and East and West Germany and we are preparing to publish the results of our work in the coming days.

Now the minister, before this report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade is made public, tells us his new policy and rejects outright all these suggestions that may have been useful to him. I understand his not wanting the ideas and opinions of opposition members, but I remind him that over half a dozen members of his own party worked with us on these recommendations; they are being treated quite cavalierly and incorrectly by the minister.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I read the minister's speech and that I find it incredibly trite in some respects.

Having reminded us that, at Montreal's McGill University on February 5, he announced his intention to re-examine our European policy with a view to defining Canada's interests in that part of the world and implementing a strategy to serve these interests, he now states solemnly that, since trade accounts for 30 per cent of our GNP, the unification of the Western European market is of the utmost importance for Canadian employment and prosperity and that the huge untapped markets of Eastern Europe may also prove to be very promising in the long term.

Mr. Speaker, he did not really have to wait nearly four months to say that. Besides, I would suggest that his conclusions concerning NATO are unduly conservative.

Acknowledging as he does, that it is only natural that NATO should play a more political role which would mirror Europe's new reality and its declining military mission, and that NATO must seek security through arms control with as much energy as it sought security through military deployment, the minister concludes by saying that a strong military mandate for NATO is still valid and that the presence of Canadian and American troops in Europe remains essential.

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, our commitment towards Europe does not necessarily call for our military presence over there and, in that respect, the government will have to take a much more enlightened approach.

• (1140)

Speaking objectively, I must say the minister's proposals for the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe are interesting and certainly deserve to be vigorously promoted by Canada.

However, the minister also made a vague reference to a CSCE assembly of parliamentarians. I would have preferred to hear more about the European Council. I wish the minister would announce that Canada will apply for membership in the European Council and I that he will work on making the European Council the parliamentary wing of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

The minister also said solemnly: "Our interests in Europe are real, contemporary and imperative". Well said, but I may remind him there is a lack of resources. His department has been asked to scale down, and the Minister of Finance is putting tremendous pressure on his department to reduce spending. I think he may be biting off more than he can chew. How can the minister expect his diplomats to be everywhere at once? After all, they are only human.

The minister has just given us a major action plan for ensuring our future presence in Europe. I am afraid those objectives will not be met if we treat Europe the same way we treated the fourteen bilateral agreements signed by Mr. Mulroney in Moscow last November.

I think it is clear their operations are on hold, and I deplore the government's total lack of initiative and failure to do any follow-up on these issues. The Liberal Party of Canada issued a press release on the occasion of President Gorbachev's visit to Ottawa, and I would like to quote a few paragraphs:

> The Liberals feel that Canada can be of invaluable assistance in supporting President Gorbachev's efforts to reorganize the Soviet economy, provide for a more democratic political system and revitalize Soviet society.
>
> Our diplomatic presence in that country is a tangible symbol of Canada's commitment in this respect. However, this presence is not equal to the task. We are sorry to see that the Government of Canada has yet to open a new consulate in Kiev, and we deplore the fact that there is no consulate in Leningrad.
>
> We want to ask the Conservative Government to provide for a significant increase in the number of diplomats posted to Moscow. The present staff of fewer than 20 is not adequate, considering the very demanding aspects of Canadian-Soviet relations, and the impression is given that Canadian-Soviet relations are not a priority with the Conservative Governent.
>
> The Liberals feel this is an intolerable situation that should be corrected as soon as possible.
>
> In 1984, the previous Liberal government, under the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, signed an unprecedented agreement for scientific co-operation in the Arctic with the Soviet Union. The Liberals are happy to see that further agreements on co-operation in the Arctic were signed when the Prime Minister visited Moscow last November.
>
> As we said earlier, however, we are disappointed because implementation of these agreements is lagging, and we urge the minister to take steps to advance this dossier. We also regret that the Mulroney government is reluctant to engage in serious talks with the Soviet Union on security in the Arctic and arms limitation.
>
> Since 1988, we have proposed a multilateral arms limitation system for the Arctic, and as Liberals, we once again ask the Mulroney government to respond to Soviet indications of interest in arms limitation in the Arctic.
>
> Liberal Parliamentarians who recently visited the USSR were quite concerned when they learned that that country was planning to re-locate its nuclear test field in the Arctic as of 1995.
>
> We strongly urge President Gorbachev to publically refute entertaiming such a notion which we feel would jeopardize the Arctic's already fragile environment and which is certainly not consistent with the statements he has made himself on the opportunity to demilitarize the Arctic and to sign a general nuclear test ban treaty.

I suggest this is one of the main items in our relations with the USSR and I ask the Minister to make every effort to convince Soviet leaders to change their mind.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, may I say that our foreign policy as usual is an after-the-fact policy. We react to US iniatives or of necessity to major political changes. Our foreign policy is totally unimaginative. Canada is no longer at the forefront of the international political scene. We no longer influence the events; we simply react to them.

What is true of our foreign policy is also true in the areas of national defence and international development.

I need not tell you that we no longer have a defence policy. The White Paper tabled by the Minister of Defence is no longer relevant. It is just a pile of paper which the government has simply thrown into the waste basket. But it has done nothing to develop a new defence policy for Canada.

It is also true of the White Paper on international development which has never been implemented by this Tory government. Our international commitments to the Third World are nothing to be proud of and fall short of the proverbial generosity of Canadians.

In a little while, my colleague the hon. member for Northumberland will discuss in greater detail how this government has sold out the various groups of Canadians operating in under-developed countries and how two-faced the Tories have been in connection with the most blatant violations of human rights by several governments which are recipients of Canadian foreign aid.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is a member of the UN Security Council. Regretfully, it uses its position on the council with extreme caution. So much so that we can rightfully wonder if the government realizes that we have a major role to play and that we have the responsibility to present the Security Council with original, independent and somewhat liberal initiatives. That is what this government should do and is not doing.

That is why we have moved today this motion blaming the government.

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to discuss foreign policy in the House, although I confess to some puzzlement of both the timing and the content of the motion and indeed, some of the references of my good friend, the spokesman for the Liberal party.

The motion was about Europe. He spent a good part of his time talking about the United States. My colleague from Etobicoke—Lakeshore suggested perhaps we should send him a map. Obviously, relations with the United States are important, but I want to make a point to my good friend. The world is larger than the United States. This government has focused our foreign policy on the recognition that, as important as our relationship might be with our neighbour, we have a larger world in which we have to work. That has been a motive of our policy.

• (1150)

This motion alleges a lack of "effective policy initiatives in foreign policy". Yet, in just the last seven days, Canada has welcomed the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who came specifically to express his appreciation of Canada's contribution to that most central of the world's organizations. The vice-president of the European communities was here as part of a deliberate process of high level meetings between the Community and Canada, initiated by the government. Also we hosted the first visit to Canada in 19 years by a leader of the Soviet Union.

The world is changing dramatically—in the Soviet Union, in Europe, in South Africa, in Central America, in Cambodia, in Mexico, in Latin America at large—and Canada is pursuing an active, effective and distinctively Canadian foreign policy on each of those fronts. We will welcome suggestions from other parties as to other initiatives we should consider, but we do that against the background of a foreign policy which I am proud to defend anywhere in Canada, or the world.

Let me deal briefly with the reference to parliamentary consultations. I think governments traditionally make too little use of members of Parliament in foreign policy, and we have tried to change that practice. We will consider any serious proposals members might make as to how the role can be enlarged. I have just received my invitation from the standing committee to go before it to discuss the results of its deliberations. I actually look forward to doing that.

I have to note, Mr. Speaker, last week when I went before the committee, the hon. member was asking me why I was late in announcing my policy. Today, he asks me why I announced it so early. Also, I want to indicate an area in which he and I are solidly in agreement. He tells me that the diplomats in my department are overworked. They are overworked, but they are hardy people with great imagination, ingenuity and dedication to the country.

We believe, even in this period of limited resources, we have the capacities to be effective on a wide variety of fronts. If the hon. member is suggesting that the Liberal party has a list of issues from which Canada should back away, I would be prepared to look at that list but not, I must say, with a great deal of sympathy.

It was in the spirit of consultation with parliamentarians that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I met this morning with colleagues who had just returned from a visit to AECL facilities in Romania. As I said, I have accepted enthusiastically to meet members of the standing committee to discuss their recent trip to the Soviet Union. I can report to the House that last week the standing committee asked me if there could be increased contact between Canadian and Soviet parliamentarians to discuss Arctic matters.

I made that proposal to Mr. Shevardnadze on Tuesday, and he agreed immediately. This will augment the very active co-operation that is already in place including, in part as a result of discussions in the standing committee, a discussion of the implications, environmental and otherwise, of the shifting of a greater degree of Soviet nuclear testing into Arctic regions. I am prepared to act with similar dispatch on other practical proposals that colleagues might make.

Five central issues were discussed in the meetings by the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister and myself with President Gorbachev, Mr. Shevardnadze and the Soviet Deputy Chairman of the Council of Ministers, Mr. Maslukov.

First, was the high priority both countries assigned to enlarging our co-operation as neighbours and as nations sharing a widening range of common interests. The mutual priority is demonstrated by the fact that in the last seven months the Prime Minister and Mr. Gorbachev have held two sets of long, personal, face-to-face discussions. Mr. Shevardnadze has visited Canada for consultations twice in this period; in February and again in May. I have accepted his invitation to return to Moscow this fall to maintain that momentum.

Second, Canada affirmed our strong support of the profound economic and political reforms in the Soviet Union and discussed practical ways in which Canada can help in changing COCOM rules, in helping boost Soviet integration into the world economic system by more joint ventures to add to the 35 that have already been signed between Canadians and Soviets, by attractive arrangements to encourage immediate delivery of Canadian agricultural products and by the discussion of new agreements regarding fisheries, tourism, health and potentially, educational exchanges.

Third, we made the case that it contributes to stability throughout Europe to have a united Germany that is actively involved in institutions like NATO and the European Community. But we heard and we understand the case, that the Soviets need to see evidence of changes in NATO before they will believe that institution is adapting to the new realities of Europe. As the Prime Minister said yesterday, Canada will work to ensure that Article 2 of NATO, the political article originally proposed by Canada, becomes much more central to NATO.

Fourth, we discussed in detail measures which Canada and the Soviet Union agree to strengthen the process and the relevance of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe. Our two nations are on the outer ends of Europe. We have a special interest and we have a common interest in developing strong institutions that define and unite a large Europe from Vladivostok to Vancouver Island.

Finally, the Prime Minister and I both raised the serious situation in the Baltic states, and repeated our expectation that there would not be a crackdown, and that the issues whose sensitivity everyone acknowledges, will be resolved by negotiation. I welcomed Mr. Shevardnadze's assurance that the Soviet Union intends to seek political solutions to disagreements, whether those relate to matters they consider to be internal or external.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, 1989 was a year of revolution in Europe, and 1990 marks the beginning of reconstruction. New societies and new institutions must be built now, and that is just starting.

The 1989 revolution produced fundamental repercussions on all of the European continent and North America as well. Indeed, by its language, family and historical ties, our continent is a reflection of Europe across the Atlantic. That is why our government has undertaken a review of our policy concerning Europe.

Canada's interest for Europe is not motivated solely by historical reasons, nostalgia or the desire to be charitable. What is at stake is not only the prosperity of Europe, but ours as well.

However, our ways of pursuing those interests must change radically in order to reflect the new security environment which is emerging, the ever-increasing authority and unity of Western Europe as well as Canada's unique assets.

The link between us and Europe has been our contribution to the North Atlantic Alliance. That contribution involved stationing in Germany thousands of Canadian servicemen and women who have risk their lives daily in the name of freedom.

Our military contribution is bound to decrease.

The organization whose primary role has been to protect us against potential agression has to re-examine its role when such an agression becomes less likely. Under those circumstances, it is only natural for NATO to take on a more political role reflecting the new realities of Europe and a waning military one.

Canada fully supports such a change. It serves Canadian interests.

[English]

NATO must review urgently and comprehensively all aspects of its nuclear and conventional strategy. It makes little sense to retain those short-range nuclear weapons based in Europe whose only target can be our new friends in Poland, in Czechoslovakia, and in East Germany. It makes little sense to maintain a military strategy which is based on a scenario of a surprise attack across a front which no longer exists and where surprise is no longer possible. It makes little sense to continue to retain in Europe the largest peacetime deployment of military force in the history of the world.

This is not to deny the continuing requirement for prudence and for military stability at this time of historic change. The possibility of instability is there and Soviet military capacities remain substantial. Therefore, a strong military mandate for NATO continues to be valid and the North American commitment to Europe, represented by the presence of Canadian and American troops there is crucial as we strive for strategic stability at significantly lower levels of military force.

• (1200)

It is important that NATO become even more actively engaged in the dynamic new security dialogue.

In the field of arms controls and disarmament, NATO should develop an enhanced capacity and role in confidence-building and verification activities. Dedicated multinational forces on the ground might be deployed for this purpose. NATO should also look to the establishment of a verification centre to co-ordinate those activities.

In addition, NATO should move away from a rigid forward defence to a much more flexible approach involving mobile units, possibly including forces of a multinational nature.

NATO is of enduring value. But it has its limitations, a function of its mandate and its membership. There are other institutions whose role must be enhanced and transformed.

Central among those is the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe. Its membership is comprehensive, encompassing the nations of Europe, North America and the Soviet Union. Its mandate extends across the board.

The role of the CSCE must now be expanded so that it becomes the drawing-board for the new European architecture. As a complement to NATO, the CSCE can become a true instrument of co-operative security, one which would supplement deterrence with reassurance.

Until now, the CSCE has lacked the institutional framework now required for effective and ongoing co-operation and confidence-building.

Canada believes that continuing political direction from the highest level is required. Canada proposes that the CSCE should meet annually at the level of Foreign Ministers and every two years at the level of heads of government. This political body could serve as the beginnings of a council for European co-operation, a future permanent forum for dialogue on pan-European questions.

The CSCE should develop a forum to reflect the increasingly democratic character of its membership. Therefore, we also proposed the establishment of a CSCE assembly where parliamentary delegations from member states would meet on a regular basis to discuss issues of common concern.

In the security area, the CSCE will have a role in mandating a further round of conventional forces reduction talks. These talks should be conducted among all 35 members of the CSCE, rather than solely the members of NATO and the Warsaw treaty organizations.

The CSCE should also increase its role in verification and confidence-building, and in crisis prevention and conflict resolution. This could involve the creation of a mechanism to facilitate dialogue, to conduct fact-finding investigations if required and to recommend a strategy to resolve crises, whether it be mediation, arbitration or even peacekeeping. If the crisis develops into conflict, the CSCE should initiate mediation activities. These activities could be supported by a permanent institute for the peaceful settlement of disputes which could provide very valuable expertise.

Beyond the security field, the CSCE should build upon the other principles contained in the Helsinki Agreements. The essential structures of democracy should become a common commitment of CSCE members, including the right to free elections and the rule of law. Pluralism should also be legitimized throughout the CSCE process, as should the rights of minorities, freedom of religion and a prohibition on hate propaganda.

In the economic dimension, the CSCE may also have a valuable role in the future, building on the tremendous success of the recent Bonn Economic Conference. It was a success, by the way, because of the participation of a wide range of Canadians, including prominently those from the private sector, who made an important contribution. It should not duplicate existing and effective economic institutions. But there is room for growth in encouraging co-operation and dialogue. I believe a permanent CSCE forum for economic dialogue, supplementing the emerging work in the OECD, is worth very serious consideration.

NATO and the CSCE are complementary institutions in building the new Europe. But there is another institution, the European Community, which is central to Europe's future identity and prosperity.

The European Community is now a welcome and fundamental pillar of the international system. A uniting Europe is an engine of prosperity and a trigger to enhanced trade. Increasing co-operation in the political field and, eventually, the security fields will ensure European consensus and co-ordination in ways which can only enhance international stability.

But, Mr. Speaker, a wall dividing Europe cannot be supplanted by a wall around Europe. Two impermeable blocs cannot be replaced by one new bloc which, whether in trade or security or political matters, is less open to dialogue and co-operation than it is today. The new Europe must be an open Europe, open to the west and open to the east.

Of course, Canada is not a member of the European Community. But we are a trading nation. We have a profound interest in the questions of foreign policy which are increasingly the subject of European political co-operation.

It is for this reason that Canada is now proposing a new, more intense relationship between Canada and the European Community. We are proposing regular meetings between the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the European Council. These should be supplemented by regular in-depth discussions between the Canadian Foreign Minister and the Foreign Minister of each incoming presidency. There should also be regular meetings between experts on issues of common concern. In addition, we propose that there be an exchange of priorities at the beginning of each presidency which would set the agenda for the upcoming period.

Finally, I was very attracted by the proposal made by West German Minister Hans Dietrich Genscher for an EEC-North American declaration which would confirm shared principles and interests in openness and enhanced co-operation. Mr. Genscher made that proposal when he was recently here in Ottawa. Certainly, a broad reaffirmation of the trans-Atlantic relationship would, in our judgment, be useful.

In trade, the challenge for Canada is acute. The government has already announced its Europe 1992 strategy to help Canadian industry prepare for the opportunity and the demands which the single European market will present to all traders. However, I also believe there may be virtue at the conclusion of the Uruguay Round of trade negotiations in examining the desirability of a formalized, open trading agreement between Canada and the European Community, perhaps including the United States—or indeed other members of the OECD. We think that would be something worth considering at the end of the Uruguay Round.

A new direction for NATO, an expanded role for the CSCE and an intensified relationship with the European Economic Community—those are the institutional pillars of our new policy toward Europe.

But our policy toward Europe hinges, as does the future of the new Europe itself, on the continued success of the reforms now under way in the Soviet Union and in eastern Europe. Those reforms have a long way to go before promise becomes reality.

That, Sir, if I may say, is part of the reason that it was so important that the public reaction that was evident in the streets of this capital city when Mr. Gorbachev was here sent a message of encouragement and support from the ordinary people of Canada to a man who is undertaking extraordinary and extraordinarily difficult reforms.

When you think of it, the task of simultaneously constructing democracy and an open-market economy, and doing it from the ground up is unprecedented. The west has an abiding interest in seeing the east succeed. That is why Canada has actively supported Soviet integration into the western economic system. That is why the Prime Minister has proposed and other leaders have accepted that the chairman of each Summit meeting will debrief Mr. Gorbachev. That is why we have helped them achieve observer status in the GATT, and why we are looking at other ways in which they can become part of the international economic system. That is why Mr. Shevardnadze thanked me yesterday for Canada's support for Soviet membership in the new European Bank and our support for their observer status in the GATT. That is why, last year, we established a program to assist Poland and Hungary in their efforts at economic reform.

It is time for the international effort, focusing in the first instance on Poland and Hungary, to expand to include the other new democracies emerging from the European revolution of 1989. In the weeks ahead, the 24 countries which co-ordinated the program for Hungary and Poland will meet to broaden that effort to include these other countries. Canada will support that initiative. We will announce our own expanded national program in the short term. Canada is also participating fully in the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

• (1210)

Finally, we have established a Task Force on Central and Eastern Europe which will elaborate the details of our expanded assistance program, administer that program and co-ordinate private and public sector activities. This task force has begun an intensive series of consultations with Canadian groups and individuals, encouraging them to participate financially and in practical, concrete ways—and asking them for their advice on initiatives we might undertake.

Assistance to eastern Europe is not a matter of dumping large amounts of money into the hands of these new governments. What is more important and more effective is the provision of expertise, the training of managers, the training of decision-makers, the teaching of the tools of democracy and the encouragement of private sector investment in specific projects and enterprises.

In this task Canada has an asset available to no other nation. We have our multicultural community. One in ten Canadians is of Soviet or eastern European ancestry. They are a business asset. They are a trading asset for Canada. They know the customs. They know the decision-makers. They know the systems. They know the languages.

We want these Canadians to exercise their natural advantages, to tell us how we can help and how we can do what we do better—and to pursue this opportunity of a lifetime.

The policy I have outlined today addresses a Europe in transition. The policy itself must also evolve with the region it addresses. I look forward to the opportunity to discuss with members of the standing committee their specific proposals as to how that evolution should occur.

Europe is not static, and neither will Canadian policy be static.

Engagement with the new Europe is not a luxury for Canada; it is a necessity for Canada. Canada will be there, as we must, for our own sake, for our own security and for our own prosperity.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister has realized by now that we wanted to give him an opportunity to make the same speech here in the House of Commons that he made on the weekend at Humber College in Toronto. I am pleased to see that he took advantage of today's debate to go over the main component of the policy Canada is developing on the new situation in Europe. I believe it is absolutely essential to put this document before a public forum across this country. I also want to thank the minister for agreeing to continue the dialogue with members of the parliamentary committee who have been discussing what Canada's future policy should be vis-à-vis the new Europe.

I would like to ask a short question about the conversations the Secretary of State for External Affairs had with his Soviet counterpart, Mr. Shevardnadze. Did the minister raise the issue of current severe shortage of medical supplies in Lithuania? And could the minister tell us whether the Soviet authorities are prepared to let Canada ship drugs, hypodermics and all kinds of medical equipment that seem to be in very short supply at the present time?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I raised this matter with Mr. Shevardnadze. I said we had reports here in Canada that there was a problem about Canada being able to end medical supplies. I aked Mr. Shevardnadze to give some indication whether Canadians who want to send medical supplies to hospital in the Soviet Union, in Lithuania or elsewhere, would be free to do so. There will, of course, be the usual limitation such as tariffs and things like that, but there will be no unusual obtacles.

Interestingly, Mr. Shevardnadze added there might be other instances where Canadians might wish to send certain items to help certain groups in the Soviet community. He said that if there was a problem, he hoped we could discuss these directly, and he gave me his word that he would be willing to deal with such problems. I think Mr. Shevardnadze's answer was very encouraging, and I believe this is an indication of their determination to have an open and mutually beneficial relationhip between Canada and the Soviet Union.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): I have a question on this matter, Mr. Speaker.

The minister repeated the assertion that he has received from Mr. Shevardnadze on a number of occasions that there will be no crackdown.

The point I would like to have the minister respond to is: At what point does a blockade become just another form of a crackdown? It is one thing not to hit people over the head or employ military force, but if at some point they cannot heat their homes, refrigerate their food; if diabetics cannot get insulin; if people who need operations cannot have them, particularly if they are life-saving operations; and if there is a threat of infection, indeed even of epidemic proportion, then this surely must be called a crackdown of a different sort.

I would encourage the government to be as forceful as possible in saying that we, as a country, are not accepting the view that just because there is no military crackdown nothing unacceptable has happened.

I know that the government has protested the blockade, et cetera. I am just saying that it does become a bit strange after a while to be accepting their assurances about a crackdown while, at the same time, knowing what is going on.

I have been in communication with the Minister of Health in Lithuania and with another Lithuanian official from the health department who was here this week. The situation is becoming critical. No one has died yet as a result of these shortages, but this will happen if the blockade is not lifted or if it is not selectively lifted.

If the Soviets want to impress upon the Lithuanians their dependence on Soviet oil, that is one thing, but to create a situation in which diabetics cannot even get proper medication, proper needles, et cetera, is another thing altogether. It is bringing into disrepute the Soviet position with respect to its not wanting to do anything unacceptable in Lithuania.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. I know the hon. member in phrasing it, is concerned both to encourage satisfactory development in Lithuania and allow the Soviet Union to maintain the process of reform, something which he so actively supports.

I would make three comments. I agree absolutely that what we are seeking are undertakings of substance, not of semantics.

I cannot answer the question he poses as to when a crackdown becomes a crackdown, but the comments that I made were in the spirit of his question in the House.

Second, I regard it as quite significant that when I raised with Mr. Shevardnadze the concern that had been expressed to me about medical supplies, he said, quite clearly, that there would be no problem with Canadians sending to hospitals, anywhere in the Soviet Union medical supplies where needed. Naturally, I intend to follow that.

As I said to my colleague for Papineau—Saint-Michel, I was also encouraged by the fact that he then went a step further. He said that in the nature of a problem of this kind between the Soviet Union and Lithuania there are going to be other concerns that arise in a country like ours. He gave me his undertaking that he would work personally with me, when those matters were drawn to our attention, first, to see if we could agree that they are serious and, second, if they were, to try to resolve those kinds of obstacles.

Finally, the third point I would like to make on this issue is simply an impression that I have received. It is an impression that I think also reflects some of the public comments of Prime Minister Prunskiene after her meetings with Mr. Gorbachev. I think there is a profound agreement between the leaders of Lithuania and of the Soviet Union on the importance of the reforms the Gorbachev regime has undertaken. Mrs. Prunskiene is among their most active supporters. There is a recognition of a very real dilemma.

• (1220)

My impression—and I can only give it as an impression from the comments I had from the discussions the Prime Minister had with Mr. Gorbachev—is that the Soviets are looking here for some time in which this can be resolved. I found it interesting that yesterday at the airport Mr. Gorbachev made reference to the situation in Caledonia and the fact that that was a situation which evolved over a decade, that it did not evolve in 40 minutes or in a day. I think it is important that we seek further assurances that that is indeed the perspective in which they are approaching the evolution of Lithuania, but if it is, I think that is a far more hopeful sign than others we thought we had seen in recent days.

I hope that we can all maintain as close a co-operation on this issue as we have.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Secretary of State for External Affairs for stating his policy in a clear and concise manner in the House.

I would just like to ask what transpired in the discussions over the last few days with our friends from the Soviet Union with respect to grain sales and the grain contracts that will be forthcoming in July, I think it is, of this year. They are so important to the area the minister represents. They are so important to the St. Lawrence Seaway which is a vital transportation link in this country, and they are so important to the ports of Thunder Bay which are perennial winners in these contracts with our friends from the Soviet Union.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister and I and a number of officials had the opportunity yesterday for about two hours to hold very extensive discussions with Mr. Shevardnadze and with Mr. Maslukov, who is the Soviet Deputy Chairman of the Council of Ministers and intimately involved in their new economic programs, to discuss what they are trying to achieve, what obstacles they see, and how we might help.

As it would not surprise the hon. member, the Deputy Prime Minister, in his capacity as Minister of Agriculture, raised very vigorously the possibility of Canada looking at reasonable credit terms that could stretch over time that would allow the immediate sale of not simply Canadian wheat but potentially Canadian flour and Canadian vegetable oils that could be delivered more quickly to the Soviet Union, particularly to take account of some of the problems they are encountering as a result of the immediate public reaction to reforms that they have introduced.

Senior officials of the Soviet Department of Agriculture are being sent from Moscow and Washington to Ottawa to carry on those discussions under the direction of the Canadian Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity today to speak to this particular motion. It gives us a rare opportunity to talk at length about Canadian foreign policy in the House. In that respect I would like to begin by commenting on some of the claims made about consultation with members of Parliament or the lack thereof when it comes to the making of foreign policy.

I feel that the minister himself has had an intention, only partially realized, to bring members of Parliament more into the debate on foreign policy and also to take the House more seriously than some previous ministers of foreign policy we have known who tended not to make statements in the House in the way this minister has.

The fact remains that the external affairs committee, and Parliament in general, were seriously and justly aggrieved by the way in which the policy with respect to joining the OAS was arrived at, basically by executive decision with no parliamentary consultation whatsoever. I think what complaints we have as parliamentarians and as an external affairs committee come largely out of that experience and the knowledge that we are confronting a government which has the capacity simply to make a major foreign policy decision just like that, without ever even coming to ask us what we think about it at all. That remains an outstanding grievance.

The member for Papineau—Saint-Michel spoke in his earlier comments about the free trade agreement and other things that are not particularly relevant to the motion. I cannot resist reminding him that the preliminary discussions about the free trade agreement with the American ambassador at the time took place under the auspices of a Liberal government and that one of the main consultative processes with respect to the Canadian economy was headed up by a royal commission appointed by the Liberal government. The person who headed that up was a very prominent Liberal who ignored all the advice that the Liberal party came later to accept, allegedly, and recommended a free trade agreement with the United States. The culpability of the Official Opposition in what it now laments should not go unremarked.

Mr. Milliken: Utter gibberish.

Mr. Blaikie: I touched a nerve there, Mr. Speaker.

The part of the motion that I would like to address myself to first, has to do with a confusion in government policy that I think I have been a part of and may even be partly responsible for in terms of the questions I have asked in the House. That has to do with the confusion between what the Secretary of State for External Affairs appears to be saying about certain kinds of nuclear weapons in Europe and what the Minister of National Defence has said to me in the House just recently about the same matter.

Going from memory with respect to the minister's speech last Saturday, and he repeated it again today, he said: "Does it make much sense any more to have these short-range nuclear weapons which can only be aimed at the peoples of the new democracies in eastern Europe?"

This is a claim and a question shared by a lot of parliamentarians, including myself and many Canadians. It seems to me that when that kind of question is raised in the House we would be much more confident that what the Secretary of State for External Affairs says reflects government policy if the Minister of National Defence did not pour cold water on the idea and instead said something like "Yes, this is something that we see the logic of and we are considering" and so on, instead of giving us the standard NATO line about the mix of weapons that has kept the peace for 45 years, et cetera. You know the lines as well as anyone else.

What we are trying to establish here is whether this is now something that the government is seriously considering? It seems to me that the government, in doing so, could address some of the concerns that the minister has raised here today and some of the concerns that the Prime Minister raised in his speech yesterday in the presence of Mr. Gorbachev, when he spoke about the Soviet Union's security concerns and particularly the nature of and the future of NATO.

One of the ways in which the west, in this case, with some Canadian leadership could demonstrate to the Soviet Union that NATO is on its way either to becoming something else or on its way out, whatever the case may be, would be to make a decision, in this case a Canadian decision, not to be a part of testing these particular kinds of weapons.

We are talking here not only of the kinds of testing that has gone on so far, cruise missile testing and advanced cruise testing, but also the question of requests that may come in the future if NATO does not change its nature. I am referring now to the tactical air to surface missile and other potentially modernized nuclear weapons that may come into force to replace the ground-based missiles, both the Lance and its successor, which have been cancelled.

By doing that the minister could not only remove a thorn in his side with respect to public opinion and do something for which a lot of people would praise him. He could also give the appropriate signal to the Soviet Union. He could deal both with Canadian public opinion, which is not going to sustain support for NATO if there are not important signals about how NATO is changing its role, and also send an important signal also to the Soviet Union.

• (1230)

I say this also with respect to the question of forward defence which the minister also mentioned, because forward defence, as I understand it, is wrapped up in the whole question of low-level flight training in Labrador. We are at the point where we are no longer debating the location of a new NATO training base in Goose Bay, but the fact remains that all kinds of low-level flights will continue through the existing contracts with various NATO countries to do their low-level flight training there.

A lot of the training that goes on there has to do with the forward defence strategy of NATO. If this is a strategy that the government thinks ought to be phased out or abandoned as a result of the need for changes in NATO's posture, then it could also, it seems to me, show some leadership on this and not just wait until NATO says that they do not want to do this anymore. Canada should be in a position to say that this is something that we do not want to be a part of anymore because we have made the decision that the appropriate signals need to be sent to the Soviet Union and we want the low-level flight training that exists in Labrador over Innu territory to stop now.

Also, Mr. Speaker, with respect to NATO I would like to address the question of Germany in NATO. I listened carefully to what the minister had to say and it seems to me again that the signal that needs to be sent with respect to NATO is that NATO, to the extent that it continues to exist, exists in transition. That is why I was concerned when the minister said that NATO is of enduring value. I do not think any institution is of enduring value, except the church. Nothing else is of enduring value this side of the eschaton. So we should talk about NATO to the extent to which it ought to endure for particular purposes until such time as it can be absorbed into the new security architecture of Europe of which the minister spoke.

In that respect I do not accept the analysis that the CSCE and NATO are complementary institutions. I would have preferred to have heard the minister talking about the CSCE being one of the fora in which we will discover or create or agree upon the new architecture into which NATO will finally be absorbed and eventually disappear as we now know it.

It is a mistake to keep talking about NATO as a complementary or enduring institution without setting it in the context of a process by which you see it evolving into something else or evolving out of existence, because we do not even have the Warsaw Pact anymore, for all intents and purposes.

I would like to refer back to Germany, Mr. Speaker. As I have said before in the House, I think it is a mistake to discuss Germany by asking whether it should be neutral or whether it should it be part of NATO, because both of these ways of speaking about Germany assume a divided Europe. They are both captive to cold war language and cold war thinking in the sense that neutrality means being neutral between some opposite poles. This is what the language of neutrality assumes.

I think this is something that the Soviets have to think about too. It assumes the continuation of some form of polarization in Europe for a long time to come. To talk about Germany in NATO also assumes that same bipolarity. So both these ways of speaking are captive to post-war language. We are looking for post post-war language.

This, again, raises the whole debate about NATO, and about having a Germany in NATO. I accept the argument that it is in everyone's interest not to have a Germany sort of freelancing it economically and politically in Europe. We need to talk about the institutionalization of the new Germany within a wider European context. I do not think that can be done within NATO itself unless we are talking about a radically different NATO, or a NATO that is on its way to becoming something altogether different, a NATO that is on its way to being absorbed into some other common security structure for Europe, whether it is Vaclav Havel's European peace order or Gorbachev's common European home from the Urals to the Atlantic or, as the minister has now said, from Vancouver to Vladivostok.

I think this is the way we need to be thinking about the future of security arrangements in Europe. I hope that this is what the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have in mind and had in mind yesterday when they were reputed to be trying to find a way to satisfy the Soviet Union's security concerns vis-à-vis a Germany in NATO. That can only happen if the NATO we are talking about is fundamentally different in its military and political posture than it is now.

One of the ways in which that posture could be changed significantly would be to accept the recommendations that I have just made with respect to short range nuclear weapons and with respect to forward defence, recommendations which are not out of sync with what the minister appears to be thinking himself. I would hope that at some point the government would be able to make that kind of decision.

The Soviet Union's security concerns are deeply rooted in the psyche in the Soviet people. One of the things that I think struck all members of the External Affairs Committee—and I heard the Prime Minister refer yesterday in his speech to the way it affected him—was when we visited a cemetery in Leningrad where 600,000 people are buried, just in one cemetery. This is only a fraction of the people who were killed in the siege of Leningrad and these people are buried in mass graves of 50 to a grave.

One of the first things the young couples who have just been married in the Soviet Union do is to come to the monument and place flowers. That is not something you notice Canadian couples doing at the cenotaphs across the nation. One can pick up how rooted in the whole Soviet consciousness is the reality of war and the fear of war. I take them seriously when they say they do not want war because I think they know a lot about it. It is not something that we always appreciate here in Canada.

I just have one final comment on this whole NATO issue. We are now looking for a win-win situation in Europe. We do not want a situation in which there is an expanded NATO that keeps its aggressive political and military posture. We do not want an eastern and central Europe that is in a political security vacuum, so to speak, or incorporated in some way into the western community, with an isolated Soviet Union feeling that it has lost its buffer zone between the Soviet Union and Europe. That would result in a situation in which the Soviets lose not only what they won in the war, but become isolated politically, militarily and economically in the sense that the economic reforms are very difficult and will continue to be very difficult. They will be even more difficult if the west, particularly Europe, takes the wrong attitude toward the Soviet Union and simply says that now that there is a united Germany and Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and everybody is coming back into fold, to hell with the Soviets, let them stew in their own juices.

This is an attitude which we noted some people had when we were in Europe. It is a very dangerous attitude to say that we should let a country which has tens of thousands of nuclear weapons stew in its own juices. I do not want to see a country with that kind of military hardware in chaos, whether that chaos is provoked by economic adversity, ethnic rivalry or whatever the case may be. I do not think that would be in anyone's interest.

• (1240)

On the other hand, I think we need to see some of the events in the Soviet Union in a more positive way than they are sometimes portrayed in the media. For instance, just the other day when Boris Yeltsin was elected as head of the Russian Federation the news said that Mr. Gorbachev's "enemy" had been elected. This is Mr. Gorbachev's political opponent. If we are going to accept that we increasingly have democractization and political pluralism in the Soviet Union, we need to begin to speak of political events in the Soviet Union in a way that is much more comparable to the way we speak of events here, and not overly dramatize the fact that people in the Soviet Union do not agree with each other. In case anybody has not noticed, Canadians have not had a particularly great time agreeing with each other either in the last little while. So again, there is a need to change the way we perceive events in the Soviet Union.

I would like to say a word about the Arctic. We were all concerned to hear when we were there that nuclear testing was being shifted from Kazakhstan to a place called, I think, Severnaya Zemlya in the Arctic. We were even more disturbed to learn, after having looked into it, that tests have gone on there before, for something like 15 years until 1963, and most of them atmospheric tests.

This raises the whole question of a comprehensive test ban and the need for Canada to get much more on board than it has been with the nations of the world that are trying to get a conference together through the auspices of the partial test ban treaty to get a comprehensive test ban treaty. Without that, people will be testing to the north of us and testing to the south of us. We will be party to the accumulation of radioactivity on the planet for no good reason, as far as I am concerned.

I would urge the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs to use this new knowledge of what is going on in the Arctic to urge the Americans as well as the Soviets, because the Americans did not respond to the Soviet moratorium on testing when it was in place, to reconsider their views with respect to testing.

Also, naval arms control is an element of the arms race which so far has been neglected. It has not been completely left out of speeches but it has been neglected as far as any real political and international effort is concerned. I met with someone from Greenpeace just yesterday and I know that this is going to become more and more a focus of the peace movement in Canada, and rightfully so. I think that the minister can properly respond to this by using every opportunity that he gets to get naval arms control on to the arms control agenda. If we succeed in doing everything else and have the ocean teeming with submarines which are hard to verify and hard to detect but full of multiple nuclear warheads, we have not exactly increased the safety of the planet.

I see you making funny movements, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The funny movement is that your time has more than expired. I will have to ask for unanimous consent to allow the hon. member extra time. Is that agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Blaikie: I will just wrap things up, and you know how quickly I wrap things up, Mr. Speaker, right to the point.

The question of the peace dividend has been addressed by many people. We have to seize the opportunity in Europe and elsewhere to turn this new era for international co-operation and common security into a way of diverting massive resources which have been consumed for decades now in the building up of arms to the cause of saving the environment and to the cause of bringing the Third World out of the debt ridden and other negative economic circumstances in which it finds itself.

We need to liberate those resources which have so far been captive to the arms race, not because it is a luxury, to use the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but because it is a necessity. It is the only way that, as the human community, we are going to climb out of this hole that we have dug ourselves into over the last 40 years through the arms race, through environmental degradation, and through a global economic system that continues to disadvantage the Third World. We can either climb out of this hole or it can become our grave.

Governments, and particularly Secretaries of State for External Affairs, have tremendous responsibilities, but Canadian Secretaries of State for External Affairs have even more responsibility. Because of the reputation that Canada has in the world and because of the stature we have, we need not to just be peacekeepers, but peacemakers in the final analysis.

I think this new time in which we find ourself in history is an opportunity for Canada to really break out of the mould we have been in, to seize some elements of our tradition that are worthy in terms of external affairs, and to really get about the business of saying the things that need to be said about the way the world has to be changed and of helping those things to happen to the fullest extent possible. If that means being at odds with our friends or with anyone else in the world, then so be it, that is something we do for the sake of the future.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will make three very brief comments if I might. First, on the comprehensive test ban, I agree with the aspirations of the hon. member. Our disagreement with respect to the conference is whether or not that conference would be productive or counterproductive. But despite our reservation about that, we will be present at the conference and our representatives, and our ambassador will be there with instructions to do everything Canada can to make it constructive.

Second, I want to assure the member and the House that not only is the government considering the evolution of SNF policy to which I referred, but so is NATO as a whole. It was discussed at the recent meetings at Kananaskis in Canada. It was discussed at the meetings my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, attended in Brussels last week and it will be on the agenda in Turnberry, Scotland, for a NATO meeting on Wednesday of next week.

We will take part in those discussions, not by removing Canada from the alliance consensus, but rather by trying to shape and affect that alliance consensus. I repeat that I understand precisely what the hon. member is saying about Soviet attitudes. He said it eloquently and effectively. They need to have proof that the changes we are talking about in NATO are happening in fact. I think an opportunity for that to occur is the summit of NATO leaders that has been scheduled for early July in London. Certainly, the Prime Minister and our government are looking to that summit to try to give evidence of some of those kinds of changes.

Finally, on the question of the future of NATO, we believe very strongly and we talk deliberately about the two institutions being complementary. We think that NATO will be necessary and important for as far ahead as we can see. I do not want to get into discussions with a theologian about what is enduring and what is not. I would be interested and look forward to the opportunity to carry on discussions with the hon. member about that issue.

The point I would make is that obviously institutions can force and shape events, but it is very important that institutions not get so far ahead of events that they lose their effectiveness or that actions which are taken designed to be constructive have the opposite effect.

• (1250)

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, just to expand on the point I was trying to make about NATO's behaviour and posture, I think the minister in his remarks reflected that for the longest time we were wondering in the west whether the changes in the Soviet Union were real. I think everyone has come to accept that they are real. I think that the Soviet Union is in a similar position, only they are not quite at the point where they can believe that the changes in the attitude of the west toward them is real. I am suggesting to the minister ways in which we can convince them of this.

The minister uses the familiar argument that Canada wants to shape policy, et cetera, and not act on its own. The point that I would make in return is, why can the government not at least go so far as to say that it thinks that the testing and deployment of these particular weapons would be wrong and it is the Canadian goal to persuade our NATO partners that it is. Other NATO countries have done this over the years. They have taken positions. They may not win the argument, but they have made it clear to their own public what their position is. The public is much more ready to understand failure to persuade others than failure to take a position.

I say this with respect to the need for a continuing Canadian role in Europe. I accept the minister's analysis on that in so far as it is a claim that Canada cannot afford not to be related to Europe. I have this concern as a result of the increasing Americanization of Canada's relationships through the OAS, through the free trade agreement, et cetera.

I would like to see Canada maintain a relationship with Europe in order to balance some of the other foreign policy measures that the government itself has taken. But leaving that aside for a minute, continuing Canadian public support for a Canadian role in the new Europe is only going to exist to the extent that the Canadian public feels that that involvement in Europe is different from and goes beyond the old involvement. Right now I am sure that if you took a poll on whether we should take Canadian troops out of Europe and on policies such as those, they would get a lot of support.

If the minister is looking for continued public support for a Canadian role in Europe, he has to demonstrate to the Canadian public that our role is fundamentally different than what it has been up to this point. I do not think he has done that yet.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I think that my colleague and friend from the New Democratic Party raised an extremely important point concerning the future role, indeed the very existence, of NATO. If we follow the line of reasoning used by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, it seems obvious to me that NATO existed and had a military rationale when we faced an enemy; if, to use the minister's own terms, the Poles, Czechs, Hungarians and East Germans are now our friends and no longer a threat to us, the fundamental question we must now ask is whether we should continue to pretend or think that the Russians are still our enemies. In light of the Conservative government's initiatives, of the Prime Minister's visit to the Soviet Union, of the signing of 14 agreements, of President Gorbachev's visit here, I think that we should not consider the Soviets to be our enemies.

The basic issue is what NATO's present and future role should be. I know that the members of NATO insist that all alliance members act together in a co-ordinated fashion. The minister's reply to the question and comments of my New Democratic colleague was that the Canadian government did not want to isolate itself from its NATO partners. Again, I think that is a very conservative position. The government should have the courage to stand out and break new ground very clearly. I make these comments in light of Mr. Gorbachev's statements yesterday when he made a stern warning about a unified Germany. President Gorbachev warned the western allies that excessive pressure to bring a reunified Germany into NATO could compromise the new East-West relationship. NATO is certainly a major military and psychological barrier to the new friendly relations between East and West.

I would like the hon. member to say what he thinks the Canadian government's new attitude should be to these new developments in Eastern Europe in particular.

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I think in many respects I answered that question throughout the course of my speech. The Canadian position should be one of seizing new opportunities to have an independent policy within the limits that the government sees for itself in terms of its own policy obviously.

I do not accept the view that it can be a matter of policy never to disagree or never to take an independent position. The government might take independent positions that I do not even agree with, but I do not think it can be a policy not to have an independent position and to always only take the positions that when one takes totally in concert with others and totally behind closed doors, so to speak.

I think the minister has moved in that direction with the speech he gave on Saturday. I hope this is a sign of things to come. In the meantime, he has a problem with the Minister of National Defence, who does not seem to have cottoned on to this way of thinking. I would hope that very soon we will hear the government speaking with one voice and that one voice will be speaking in the new direction of the new thinking of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and not the standard old NATO routine that we still get from the Minister of Defence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[Translation]

TRIBUTE TO THE HON. MEMBER FOR OUTREMONT

Mrs. Marie Gibeau: Mr. Speaker, I am rising today to pay tribute to our colleague, the hon. member for Outremont, who was presented this morning with the 1990 Annual Merit Award of the Professional Corporation of Psychologists of Quebec for his "outstanding contribution to the development of psychology".

[English]

To mark the outstanding leadership of the member for Outremont in the field of industrial organizational psychology in the province of Quebec, as well as his numerous initiatives and accomplishments, which have contributed to the emulation of his colleagues' vocation and just as his dissemination has added prestige to the profession and enhanced the image of the psychologist, the administrators of the Corporation of Professional Psychologists of Quebec adopted to award him the 1990 annual merit prize.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, all of us in this House are proud of our colleague and congratulate him on this well-deserved award. You are a credit to our profession as parliamentarians.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

* * *

[English]

WORLD NO-TOBACCO DAY

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate World No-Tobacco Day. Tobacco is the leading cause of preventable disease in the world today. The World Health Organization estimates that if present tobacco use trends continue, 150 million children alive today will eventually die of tobacco induced diseases.

The theme of World No-Tobacco Day this year is "Growing Up Without Tobacco". It is essential that our children be protected from the detrimental effects of tobacco on their health. The vast majority of smokers in Canada started smoking in their teens. If we can prevent young people from starting to smoke, then one day we can eliminate tobacco from our society altogether.

The tobacco industry is attempting to encourage smoking by young people by packaging cigarettes in smaller and cheaper "kiddy packs", and most recently by developing a new type of do-it-yourself cigarette that, through a federal tax loophole, is taxed at a lower rate.

I urge the federal government to protect our young people by prohibiting the sale of tobacco to minors and by introducing measures to control vending machines which give children easy access to this deadly drug.

Our children's health and lives are more important than the profits of the tobacco industry.

S. O. 31

WORLD NO-TOBACCO DAY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the World Health Organization has designated May 31 as World Wide Day Without Tobacco. This year WHO is focusing on the threat to the health of children and youth and has chosen "Growing Up Without Tobacco" as the slogan for the day.

A quote from Travel Through the Interior Parts of North America in 1789 is indeed appropriate:

> They are seldom or ever found without a pipe in their mouths, a habit which they acquire in their very infancy. I was very much surprised upon going into one of their houses, in which there was a large family, mostly boys, to find that from the youngest up to the father, they all smoked; nay, one of three years old had a pipe in his mouth.

We have come a long way since 1789 in terms of health care and health promotion, but we still battle the health effects of tobacco smoking, even in 1990.

According to a U.S. study,"over 25 per cent of high school seniors, whoever smoked, had their first cigarette by Grade 6, over 57 per cent had their first cigarette by Grade 8 and 94 per cent had their first cigarette by Grade 11".

In 1988, "more than 35,000 Canadians died prematurely from diseases caused by tobacco". I would hope that the No-Tobacco Day will help raise the consciousness of our young people as it is much easier to not start smoking than it is to quit smoking.

* * *

MUSEUMS

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of Parrsboro and Cumberland County I want to recognize the efforts of the minister for culture, the Minister of Communications, the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Public Works who have arrived at a cost-sharing formula to provide the federal portion of funding for the fossil museum project in Parrsboro, Nova Scotia.

In conjunction with ACOA these three federal departments will provide federal funding to allow the project to proceed which, in turn, will be the foundation of a tourist industry. It will eliminate the need to send our unique fossils to the United States for research and it will provide employment in an area of limited opportunity. In my view, this will be the best investment the federal government ever made.

* * *

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the Canadian tourism industry and about the effect this government's policies, especially the pending goods and services tax, are having on the industry.

On May 28, in the consumer and corporate affairs committee a representative of the tourism industry of Canada said the industry will be heavily damaged by the implementation of the GST. Prices for hotels, restaurants, entertainment and sporting activities as well as tour packages will be forced up, causing fewer international travellers to choose Canada as a destination and pushing Canadians who want to travel on their holidays into the lower-priced U.S. tourism market.

He also said the industry was estimating a reduction of more than 25,000 tourism related jobs by 1993 because of the GST.

Mr. Speaker, since tourism means so much to the future of Canadian regional economies, like the one I represent in northwest Saskatchewan, I call on the government to scrap immediately the GST and provide the leadership and the support requested by those in this vital and potentially vibrant industry.

* * *

CANADIAN FIREFIGHTERS

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke–Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, drawing a line to determine eligibility is always difficult, but in the case of Canadian firefighters the disqualification of those who retired before August 29, 1985, from receiving the Exemplary Service Medal seems particularly unfair.

Creation of this medal was highly appropriate yet efforts to "grandfather" those who retired before 1985 has so far met no positive response from Government House. As a result some firefighters refuse to wear their medals, others have even returned theirs.

For this reason I have just tabled a motion, seconded by 20 other Progressive Conservative MPs and supported by many more, seeking the opinion of this House that the Governor General amend the regulations so firefighters with exemplary service who retired before 1985 may also be awarded such decorations.

* * *

BELL NORTHERN RESEARCH

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, congratulations are in order for Bell Northern Research. BNR recently completed a $30 million optoelectronics laboratory. This is one of the most advanced in the world and largest in Canada.

Construction of a $100 million laboratory expansion at Bell Northern Research's world headquarters in Nepean begins this summer. The facility will bring together some 4,400 BNR staff and will create a critical mass of research and development expertise unparalleled in the corporation's history.

BNR is already the world leader in several different areas, including the design and development of advanced telecommunications systems, microelectronics, photonics, digital systems and software. Four of the main product lines of the parent company, Northern Telecom, are number one world-wide and others are rising fast.

I am proud to say that BNR is located in Nepean and I am sure all Canadians are doubly proud of BNR's commitment to continued global product leadership through cost-efficient, market-focused research and development.

* * *

[Translation]

RIGHTS OF THE CHILD

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on May 28, the Prime Minister signed, on behalf of the Government of Canada, the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child in the presence of the UN Secretary General.

This convention was adopted by the UN General Assembly on November 20, 1989 after 10 years of preparation. It represents major progress in the protection of children's rights since it contains a number of general essential provisions which guarantee that their basic needs and interests will be addressed. It also provides for the protection of children in particularly difficult circumstances.

By signing the convention after actively participating in its development, Canada is confirming its support for this global cause.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Prime Minister of Canada as well as the provinces and territories for supporting the ratification of this Convention by Canada.

* * *

• (1410)

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, residents of Canada's smallest province would like to add their voices to those of the 72 per cent of Canadians who oppose this government's high interest rate policy.

Even at the best of times when interest rates are low, the Prince Edward Island economy is not all that strong and annual growth is unsteady. If you take away a major employer, like CFB Summerside, the economy really gets hurt. Add high interest rates and the situation could very well become critical. Farmers, fishermen, small business people and all Islanders, in one way or another, are affected by the hefty increase in the price of money which this government has allowed to take place.

I urge the government, on behalf of all Islanders who oppose this high interest rate policy, to see the financial and human toll its actions are taking and to finally act in this country's national interest.

* * *

WORLD NO-TOBACCO DAY

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, today is World No-Tobacco Day, a day organized by the World Health Organization to promote the idea of a world free from tobacco use.

Canada has been exceptionally active in instituting and implementing a national strategy to reduce tobacco use. As a result of this program, which includes increased taxes and implementation of two significant pieces of legislation, the Tobacco Products Control Act and the Non-Smokers' Health Act, tobacco consumption in Canada has declined by 6.8 per cent in 1989 and by over 20 per cent during the first third of 1990.

The former Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Hon. Jake Epp, is to be awarded the Award of Excellence for exceptional leadership in creating a tobacco-free Canada by the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health.

On World No-Tobacco Day, Canada can rightfully claim its place as a world leader in the control of tobacco use.

* * *

CORE AREA INITIATIVES PROGRAMS

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed in the member for Portage—Interlake. He condemned the Core Area Initiatives Programs without really knowing a great deal about them. If he had stopped to study them, he would realize that there are programs there to improve the educational and career aspects of natives, multicultural and multiracial groups, young children, senior and elementary students with literacy problems. These programs will be cut unless this initiative is renewed. This is going to be cut during the International Year of Literacy which I find completely appalling.

[Translation]

How very hypocritical, cutting programs this year! And the attack against the weakest and most destitute Canadians goes on. These programs should be re-instated immediately.

* * *

[English]

CORPORATE TAXATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the corporate welfare bum of the week features this week a two-time nominee, Alcan Aluminum Limited. Alcan paid only $39 million in federal taxes in 1987 after profits of $433 million and received a $6 million tax credit on $270 million in profits in 1986.

The second nominee is Goodyear Canada which got a tax credit of $1.4 million on $11 million in 1988.

The third nominee is Fletcher Challenge Finance which paid no tax in 1988 on profits of $24 million.

Now, for the winner. The envelope, please. And the winner is Alcan Aluminum. Alcan chief executive officer, David Culver, who led the corporate sector to fight for the free trade deal, made $1.4 million in 1988. Alcan found plenty of money to get the trade deal and to pay Mr. Culver, but not to pay its fair share of federal taxes. This makes Alcan the corporate welfare bum of the week.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, according to the latest Gallup poll, 54 per cent of Canadians are willing to pay a $100 income tax surcharge to help protect the environment.

This is good news for it indicates that there is a high level of public concern. The bad news is that the government might try to exploit the public's concern by levying an unnecessary green tax.

If the government had considered the environment in the tax reform process, there would be no need even to contemplate an environmental surcharge. Instead of the regressive GST, Canada should have a progressive tax system to encourage green consumption and production and to cut pollution.

It is not easy to be green, but so far the government has not even tried. When will the Minister of Finance see the green light?

* * *

COMMENTS BY MEMBER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, the statements made recently by the member for Saint-Maurice regarding the premier and the people of Newfoundland were unfortunate. I will not repeat the words here. It would serve no useful purpose.

Indeed, there is no place for that kind of language in a great national debate. The words were spoken with emotion and with anger. I want to say that the member for Saint-Maurice has demonstrated today the courage and decency required to apologize to the premier and the people of Newfoundland for those remarks.

I have known the member as a colleague on the transport committee for six years. I know the remarks he made were out of character for him, and I accept his apology.

With the national debate that will be ongoing in the days ahead, it is understanding and sensitivity that we must demonstrate for each other and to each other, not emotion and anger.

I hope the quick apology by the member for Saint-Maurice and the quickly accepted apology by the premier and I believe the people of Newfoundland for those words are an example to the nation and in particular the first ministers as they begin their important deliberations this weekend and in the days ahead.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister.

Today, the Minister of National Revenue unveiled a totally new proposal for collecting the GST from certain small businesses. In doing so the minister in effect admitted that the government's original proposal was an administrative nightmare for small business. In fact it was totally unworkable, but this proposal today does not really change any of that.

Under this plan the government wants to collect GST of up to 1.75 per cent from some grocery and convenience stores on all their sales. How can the government continue to say it is not taxing food when it wants to collect from some grocery and convenience stores a flat rate GST on all their sales including basic groceries?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition should read carefully the documents that were presented this morning by the Minister of National Revenue.

There is no way that food will be taxed, as the hon. member said. The fact of the matter is that some stores have only a proportion, from 25 per cent to 50 per cent, of food. We worked very hard to bring together figures and data to make sure we can help 800,000 small businesses to work in a better way with the GST. I think it is good news for small businesses. We have consulted those businesses and they are onside with us.

• (1420)

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister of National Revenue said outside the House and what the minister just said in the House is still not good news for consumers, because you will notice the minister did not say categorically that food would not be taxed. There is nothing in the proposal today to prevent any retailer covered by it from marking up all the inventory on his shelves by an amount equal to the GST that will be collected.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the government now tells us it intends to tax all goods sold in certain grocery and convenience stores, including foodstuffs.

So I am asking the minister whether he is prepared to admit that this new project is tantamount to slapping a tax on food?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker.

This is nothing more than a simplified process which has long been known to apply to stores whose sales do not exceed $500,000—

Mr. Fontana: What a bunch of bull! How can you believe what you say?

Mr. Blais: I wish my colleague would let me conclude my remarks. I was saying they will be able—

Mr. Fontana: Stop throwing bull and we might listen to you.

Mr. Blais: Because the government did listen to small businesses from coast to coast. We listened to small businesses telling us they had to have a simpler process to calculate the tax. Mr. Speaker, this simplified process will apply to stores where a given percentage of goods are subject to the 7 per cent tax.

In light of the surveys we made and the figures we have, we know it is possible to make it easier for these businesses to pay the taxes they collect to the government.

I might add that my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, is meeting with the Retail Council of Canada in Toronto. They are quite satisfied and approve of this measure taken by the government, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, again the minister has failed to even mention the Canadian consumer.

[English]

The proposal of the Minister of National Revenue today will not make the GST any easier for Canadians generally. They will still have to pay 7 per cent more on just about everything they buy.

What is worse is that businesses opting for the new scheme are being told by the Minister of National Revenue that they will not have to show the GST on their sales receipts or anywhere.

What happened to the government's commitment to visibility? Why is the government even ceasing to try to have the tax visible? Why is the government proposing a band-aid solution for an unfair tax that even major surgery cannot save? Why will the government not scrap this tax and go back to the drawing-board?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, what is particularly visible right now is the hypocrisy of the opposition parties who refuse to admit that the 13.5 per cent tax which has been levied for years was invisible.

Canadians are now beginning to appreciate this government measure which has rallied the support of the Retail Council of Canada and the Consumers' Association of Canada, Mr. Speaker. The consumer can see that the government is acting in the interest of all Canadians and that the opposition parties are behaving like hypocrites.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Minister of National Revenue has just admitted today that the GST is an administrative nightmare and that the government will be unable to collect it. How will convenience stores decide which GST rate is to apply to basic foodstuffs whether it is 1.75 per cent or 1 per cent?

Why does the government continue to make life difficult for the people who are creating most jobs in Canada?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, the measure which the government announced this morning was developed following consultations with small businesses across Canada. Far from being a nightmare, it is a dream. If my hon. friend took the time the check the documents which were distributed to all hon. members and which are now in his office, he would realize that it is meant to make computation a lot simpler. Mr. Speaker, it had been understood since last August that, following these consultations, we would take into account the representations made by the retail industry, and this is exactly what we are doing now.

By filing a simplified form, small businesses will find it a lot easier to submit a report every three months on the tax collected and send the money to the government.

It is a very simple process which the hon. member should be able to grasp.

[English]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance announced the GST he said that it was very important that the new tax be simple.

If the GST is a simple tax, why did the Minister of National Revenue today announce a flat tax rate method to remit the GST? Why does the government not listen to John Bulloch, President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business who said: "Scrap the GST"?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) and Minister of State (Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to provide some figures. It will be very easy for small businesses with sales less than $500,000. If they have more than 50 per cent of their sales—

Mr. Gagliano: Who will calculate the 50 per cent?

Mr. Blais: If the member would allow me to answer, it is very—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: When questions are asked, answers are expected and answers have to be allowed. The hon. minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I realize that for a government which never knew how to administer public finances, the difference between 25 per cent and 50 per cent in food sales may be difficult to understand. These people never knew the very basics of government administration. They find it difficult to understand. To conclude, may I say that small businesses told us what they wanted. We have responded today, and the Retail Council of Canada agrees and is most satisfied with the measure taken today.

* * *

[English]

TRADE

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

On March 19, the Prime Minister said in a speech to Commonwealth Caribbean leaders that he was keenly interested in the possibility of establishing a textile outward processing facility.

According to press reports today the Prime Minister continues to take a personal interest in giving away Canadian jobs in our textile industry—these are women's jobs, immigrant women's jobs—to other countries.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister today reassure these women that their jobs will not be given away, will not be sacrificed on the altar of the Prime Minister's trade agenda?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, absolutely, we can make that commitment. I might say that the recent report of the Canadian International Trade Tribunal which came down on tariffs on textiles in fact has helped the garment industry or will help the garment industry as those tariffs are brought down to a lower level. That was one of the major considerations taken into that report.

The answer is: yes, we will assure that the garment industry remains viable in Canada and that those much needed jobs are there.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the minister's response leaves me rather confused because it was only on March 19 that the Prime Minister made these remarks.

Many of these women are very proud of their jobs, and the Prime Minister does seem willing to give them away to other countries. If the Prime Minister has his way the alternative will be lower paying jobs, less satisfying jobs, or no jobs at all for these very vulnerable women.

How can the minister profess to be working for the best interests of immigrant women and yet, they are the first ones on the first line of attack when this government wants to give jobs away out of the Canadian market into the foreign market?

• (1430)

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the hon. member is basing her question on a newspaper article which I read today which does not name any federal official or say where the report is coming from, so to comment on something on like that would be foolish.

The Prime Minister of this country, in 1984, promised jobs, jobs, jobs. There have been 1,600,000 new jobs created in this country in that period of time, 60 per cent of which went to women, and 85 per cent of which are full time. That is performance.

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, is the minister denying that the federal government is now preparing terms of reference for a formal study into a system similar to the controversial U.S. system of shipping parts for assembly plants in the Maquiladora related to the garment industry? Is the minister denying that such a study is being prepared by this government?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I am personally not aware of any study of this sort, no.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it may very well be true that the hon. minister is not aware of it, but surely somebody in the government can give us an answer, and perhaps I can direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Can he confirm that the government, on the instructions of the Prime Minister, is preparing a reference to the International Trade Tribunal that would recommend a form of Maquiladora system which would in effect shift the jobs in the garment industry to the low wage jobs in the Caribbean specifically in the sewing area, but keeping the cutting jobs for males in that industry here in Canada.

Can we get some verification, some establishment of what is the government's position and what it intends to do about this problem. Let us get some answers on the table.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, if such a paper is being prepared, it would be referred to the Canadian International Trade Tribunal which would hold public hearings and give Canadians input into any discussions that were going on, if that was being undertaken at this time. Canadians from all walks of life, including the garment industry, would have ample opportunity to make representation on it, like they did when they studied the tariff schedules on textiles here in Canada.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say to the minister that he does not understand. This kind of proposal is creating enormous uncertainty for 120,000 workers in the garment industry in Canada, in particular when one considers that there is a real gender split between those women, mainly immigrant women, who work in the sewing part of the business, and those who work in the cutting part of business.

We simply want to know to end the uncertainty. Is the government proposing that kind of deal to set up a Maquiladora system in the Caribbean? If so, is it going to consult with the unions and the workers involved to give them some assurance that their jobs will not be lost and that they will not be thrown on the scrap heap like the government has thrown so many other workers under the FTA.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, we know the hon. member is still fighting the FTA. He lost that battle, but is still fighting that one.

Let me answer him directly by saying, yes. All those people would be given an opportunity to comment and make representation if such a proposal came forward. Absolutely, they would be given the opportunity.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for External Affairs. Yesterday, President Gorbachev warned the Western Allies that excessive pressure to have a reunified Germany join NATO could seriously jeopardize the new East-West relations. I suggest that Canada should be sensitive to the Soviet position and try to present a new and original Western counter-proposal. The minister is certainly aware that Messrs. Genscher and Mitterand have both drawn different scenarios.

Could the minister tell the House what he thinks of them and whether he is now convinced of the need to develop a new compromise which is not exactly what the West has been proposing since the discussions started concerning a reunified Germany?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think there is no question that there is very evident concern on the part of the Soviet Union, the people and the Government of the Soviet Union, with regard to some of the external implications of the unification of Germany.

As the Prime Minister said yesterday in his remarks at the luncheon with Mr. Gorbachev, it is important that those sensitivities be understood and be responded to.

It is our considered view, that an important step toward resolving that question would be for NATO to take actions that demonstrated that the reform in NATO that we have been talking about is in fact being achieved. That path is being pursued and was pursued by colleague the Minister of National Defence and his colleagues during recent meetings both in Kananaskis in Canada and in Brussels. They were discussed yesterday by Mr. Gorbachev and the Prime Minister. They were discussed today in the debate provoked by the hon. member's motion.

We believe that those kind of actions, if they are reflected in the summit meeting on NATO in early July in London, can make it more possible for the concerns of the Soviet Union, which we understand, to be met.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the minister on another aspect of the discussions between President Gorbachev and the Prime Minister of Canada. It concerns Lithuania.

Yesterday, President Gorbachev said that the USSR would solve the Lithuanian crisis in its own way, which did not exclude the strictest measures. Does this mean that the Canadian government asked the Soviets to lift the economic blockade which, as we know, was decreed over a month ago? Might the President have rejected this suggestion?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are two comments that I can make that may be helpful on this question.

Both the Prime Minister and I raised very directly the question of the approach of the Soviet Union to Lithuania and indeed to the Baltic States.

Mr. Shevardnadze said to me, as I reported earlier to the House, that it was the intention of the Soviet Union to resolve all disagreements by political means, whether those were disagreements concerning matters they regarded as internal or external. That was a comment made in the context of the discussion of Lithuania.

I raised with Mr. Shevardnadze the question as to whether or not there was a blockade particularly of medical supplies. He said he thought there was no blockade but he gave me the understanding that if Canadians wanted to send medical supplies to any hospital anywhere in the Soviet Union, including in Lithuania, there would be no unusual obstacles put in the path.

He went on to say, and I appreciated it particularly, that if other concerns of this kind regarding commodities other than medical supplies arose that he thought the quickest way to deal with them would be for himself and myself to establish an arrangement by which I would bring those concerns directly to his attention and he would try to have them resolved.

* * *

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Toronto Better Business Bureau, supported by the Vancouver Better Business Bureau, have said that the Government of Canada is using radio advertising to hawk its GST which they describe as false and misleading and of a kind that would not be tolerated in private enterprise.

When is this government going to stop behaving like a snake-oil salesman, withdraw these ads and be honest with the Canadian people?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I read Mr. Paul Tuz's letter and accusations with great interest. It is obvious, after reading what he has written, that he does not understand the manufacturers' sales tax that we have in this country today, how it operates, and how people in the service industry are paying that tax and passing it on to the consumer. There is a manufacturers' sales tax in the service industry.

What we are saying in our newspaper advertising and our radio advertising, which is not misleading, is that we are replacing the manufacturers' sales tax with a federal sales tax. We are replacing one with the other. It is not a new tax.

• (1440)

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, this minister is no more likely to fool me than the rest of Canada when he says that there is no new tax, no additional tax.

I want to know who would buy a used car from a government that says a new tax is not a new tax, that new revenues are not new revenues, that new taxables are not new taxables? When is the government going to come clean and give the true story to the Canadian people, at least not try to fool them?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, unlike the New Democratic Party, the Conservative Party will never nationalize the auto industry, so they will not have to buy used cars from us. They would from the NDP though, that is for sure.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago we rose in the House and we asked the government to withdraw its misleading radio advertisements on the GST.

My question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Today, the Better Business Bureaus in Toronto and Vancouver, are also asking that the government withdraw these ads, calling these ads offensive and inaccurate. They have now sent a letter to the CRTC asking that they take action to have an extremely misleading advertisement removed from the Canadian airwaves.

Will the minister take action and withdraw these offensive and inaccurate ads?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Once again the Liberals have been scooped by the NDP. But the answer is no, we will not withdraw those ads because they are accurate, we stand behind them, we are prepared to give accurate information to the Canadian public, and that is what we are doing.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I do not know about scoops, but I stood here two weeks ago and asked the same question.

The minister does not listen, the government does not listen to Canadians. Why are Canadians forced to pay millions and millions of dollars for misleading and offensive GST propaganda?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): First, it is not misleading. Second, the Canadian people have indicated to us loud and clear that they want information.

We get about 7,000 calls a day on the line asking for information on the GST and we are prepared to give it to them. No, we are not going to withdraw the ads at all. As a matter of fact, we are going to continue to accurately inform the Canadian public on the GST. Somebody has to tell the truth.

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, perhaps I could put my question to the Minister of External Affairs, since he had the personnel in Cyprus increased. For the first time, Christian, Moslem and Lebanese religious leaders representing a dozen denominations, Mr. Speaker, are joining together, which is unprecedented, to plead for the refugees. I therefore ask the minister whether it would be possible to reconsider re-establishing the special Lebanese program, which was interrupted in 1987, and to increase the staff at the immigration bureau in Cyprus.

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. I would answer him, though, that Canada is the only country to have taken special measures to help its citizens bring their relatives from Lebanon. We are the only country. Since these measures took effect, more than 18,000 Lebanese have arrived in Canada.

Compared to other countries, Canada provides the most services to meet the needs of Lebanese arriving in Cyprus. Up to March 22, 1990, visa officers in Cyprus had issued 6,041 immigrant visas, 709 visitor visas and 195 ministerial permits.

I think that Immigration Canada has done an excellent job, under the circumstances.

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, I raised the matter because somewhere, someone is not doing his job. There is a serious problem, and people are starting to protest. That is why we have raised the issue. Religious leaders have also asked the government to stop deporting Lebanese nationals to the United States. I therefore want to ask the minister whether he could respond to a request by religious leaders for a meeting with the Minister of Employment and Immigration to settle this matter, which is merely a question of providing a humanitarian solution.

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the hon. member that, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I will take note of his question and transmit it to the minister. I am sure she will answer the hon. member's question as soon as possible.

* * *

PRESENCE IN THE GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I welcome this opportunity to draw the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of the Hon. Denis Rocan, Speaker of the Manitoba Legislative Assembly.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

* * *

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister is aware that the Ontario Minister of Culture and Communications, Christine Hart, was forced to resign yesterday because of the influence involved by Cantel Rogers in her campaign for her nomination.

In view of the fact that those same companies have targeted federal Cabinet ministers in their election giving at the last federal election, can the Deputy Prime Minister answer whether or not the government will have an inquiry into the pattern of giving by those companies?

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out, first of all, that in the preamble to the hon. member's question, his facts do not reflect the situation as reported in the press. There were people representing a number of companies active in the communications industry. Second, I can assure the hon. member that any questions from the industry are first dealt with by the CRTC, and that Unitel's request will be the subject of a broad public debate in this country. I can assure the hon. member that the government tends to observe the full integrity of the public process initiated by this Parliament.

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the government has overruled federal tribunals in the past.

Mr. Andre: Make a charge!

Mr. Murphy: My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is the following. Does the government approve of a selective pattern of giving of money to cabinet ministers which—

Some hon. members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: I am not quite sure where the second question of the hon. member is going to lead us. I would ask the hon. member to be very careful that he is not straying into that difficult area of using a preamble in place of a charge. I know the hon. member knows of what I speak. I would ask him to be careful in putting the question.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to be careful in asking this question. It is very difficult with the unwarranted heckling from the other side. My question is this, does the government—

Mr. Speaker: I have heard a lot of heckling on both sides of this place and much of it unwarranted. I thought I had interrupted to assist the hon. member. The hon. member will put his question.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I can guarantee that I did not consider your reaction and response part of the heckling.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I want to point out what has happened. Rogers, for example, gives one-third of its total giving to the Conservative party directly to the campaigns of cabinet ministers. That is selective giving.

Will the government investigate this pattern of selective giving to people who obviously have a strong influence on government decisions which affect those companies directly?

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: The question is close, but I will allow it. The hon. minister will respond.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, legislation was passed by this Parliament in both areas. We have the Canada Elections Act and provisions dealing with donations and how Canadians can contribute to the democratic process of this country through their political parties. This Parliament has also passed legislation concerning telecommunications and the conduct of public hearings. If the hon. member has any charges to make in this respect, he should be specific and do so at the appropriate venue.

* * *

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On Monday, the Minister of the Environment said that there would be a full environmental review of the proposed Point Aconi power station by the Federal Environmental Assessment Review office.

He said that he was doing this because he received the go-ahead from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, but the department states that it has not recommended one way or another about this public review to the minister. So, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans could not have given this approval.

Has there been a recommendation? Has there been a request to carry out this study? Is the government asking for the study? Yes or no.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, on Monday the Acting Minister of the Environment indicated that the EAR process would apply to Point Aconi.

As the hon. member knows, that is a three-step process. First, there is the initial screening which determines whether or not the relevant department would do an initial assessment. Second, the initial assessment having been done, a recommendation is made to the Minister of the Environment.

We are now at a stage, as I think most members in the House know, where the initial assessment is being completed by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. When that process is completed, there will be a recommendation one way or another to the Minister of the Environment with respect to whether or not the full independent panel should be struck and public hearings held.

On Monday, the Minister of the Environment made it very clear in his statement that he made no reference whatsoever to the need for a full independent panel and public hearings. What he did indicate and make perfectly clear—although, apparently, not well understood by those who were present—is that the EAR process is currently being applied.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the government cannot even say whether or not it has made a decision. Fisheries and Oceans knows what it wants to do. It has the technology to go ahead with the recommendation.

My supplementary is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will he not agree that in Cape Breton a project that employs 200 people and safeguards another 1,000 jobs is important? Will he also not agree that this question is time sensitive because the site preparation has already started? Will he not undertake right now, if there are environmental concerns, to call a public review to save time so that we do not lose this very important project?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I find the hon. member's comments somewhat interesting. Not too long ago in the House one of his colleagues seemed to be pushing for this process to be applied. Indeed, we went ahead and we have done that.

Mr. MacLellan: You don't even know what you have done.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): If the hon. member will listen carefully, there is a three-step process. We are now nearing the end of the second step in that process. Whether or not the third step is applied will depend upon the recommendation which is made to the Minister of the Environment. That recommendation can not yet be made because the initial assessment has not yet been completed.

* * *

TRADE

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Recently, a U.S. beer company launched a trade action claiming Canadian provincial liquor laws are protectionist. We have already lost one GATT dispute over this matter and we are now obligated to remove those interprovincial barriers.

At the meeting with the U.S. trade representative, Carla Hills, the Minister for International Trade said that the company had a "good case against Canada and we should observe our trade obligations".

Will the minister convince Carla Hills to drop this action because the provinces are in the midst of negotiating such an agreement?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, right now we are trying to work with the industry. We will consult with the provinces and the industry.

As a matter of fact, there is a meeting today between my officials and the provincial officials to try to find a way to deal with that issue. Second, a task force official has set out a plan which will address our international obligations. Third, a report on the outcome of the negotiations is expected by the end of June this year.

I think my hon. friend understands that the government wants to work with the provinces to deal with the problem of barriers, particularly in that industry, between the provinces and to do the best to give a better chance to Canadian companies.

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister.

Ministry officials met with provincial representatives yesterday and, in fact, tabled a report which the liquor boards and the provincial trade ministries are looking at.

Could the minister table that report today in the House? Second, if the agreement with the provinces is so crucial, why has the government not proposed an adjustment assistance package to cushion the potential loss of thousands of jobs that would follow the removal of these interprovincial barriers?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first, I will not table a report I am unaware of.

Second, my friend proposed that we intervene immediately with labour adjustment programs and so on. There is a dynamic approach between the provinces and the federal government at that level. When we deal with the provinces in a sector of their jurisdiction we have to do so the way we do presently. In particular, we have international obligations under the GATT rules and the provinces have to make the decision themselves to abolish the problems in controls they have between themselves.

We prefer that approach and I am sure my friend understands that is the best way to respect the jurisdiction of the provinces.

* * *

ROMANIA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for either the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of Energy. I understand that, by now, members of cabinet may have had an opportunity to speak with the members of Parliament who went to Romania and concerned themselves with the reactor site in Romania.

Is the government now prepared to announce that it will be initiating an inquiry into the entire history of AECL's involvement at that site and its amazing ability not to notice the terrible things that were going on there?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I had the opportunity to meet with the member for Burnaby—Kingsway and the member for Winnipeg North Centre. We listened to them. We covered a number of the issues that have been in the public domain relating to the history of the project, safety factors, the publicity surrounding a possible EDC application, and, as well, working conditions at the plant.

They gave us a number of suggestions. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and I took those recommendations. We will examine them and, when decisions are made, we will announce those later.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, concern has increased in the last 24 hours as a result of the earthquake which occurred in Romania. We have read that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was assured by AECL officials recently that Romania was not in any kind of earthquake zone, and there was nothing to worry about. The fact of the matter is that AECL has been deliberately blind and stupid for years, whatever serves their need to market nuclear reactors, and it is about time we had an inquiry into that particular Crown corporation. The situation in Romania points up exactly how deliberately blind and stupid they have been for years. We want an inquiry, and we want it now.

• (1500)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I said, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I met with the two members.

Mr. Blaikie: It didn't happen then.

Mr. Epp: But did you understand? They were moderate, they gave good points of view. This is an hon. member who is respected in the House but keeps making charges which are unfounded.

First, back in the latter part of the 1970s when an agreement was to be signed between the government of the day and the Romanians, one of the questions that the government of the day put forward through AECL concerned seismic studies and the earthquake zones. There was an earthquake in Romania in 1986 which did not affect Cernavoda. But, the point that also has to be made; is AECL biased and should there be an independent report? In fact, there was an independent report done at that time which also backed the work of the government of the day.

Mr. Blaikie: It didn't happen then.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had as many brains as he has heat, he would probably be smart. I am simply saying to him—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. minister concluded his remarks?

Mr. Epp: I am saying to him that there was an independent pier review done in respect to seismology and with respect to the earthquake situation. The hon. member should go back to what was done in the latter 1970s and not make charges which simply are not true.

* * *

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is customary on Thursday for the opposition to ask the government the traditional question about the business of the House for the coming week. I wonder if the Leader of the Government could tell us what bills he intends to bring before the House tomorrow and next week.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow it is my intention to call Bill C-54, the joinder of counts. I would like to designate Monday, June 4, as an allotted day. Tuesday, I hope to call report stage of Bill C-26, the Railway Act amendments. At this point it would be my intention to designate Wednesday, June 6 as an allotted day, but the formal designation should follow soon. Thursday of next week I will be calling the second reading of Bill C-54, having to do with Hibernia.

Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet, may I also say that there have been discussions among the parties, and I think you will find an agreement to move to Statements by Ministers with the usual understanding that whatever time is taken up by statements and responses will be added to the normal day which is an allotted day. I believe there is unanimous consent for that.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my discussions, and those of Senator Murray, with the premiers over the past week or so have made progress in narrowing the issues that divide us on the Meech Lake Accord.

Those contacts with the premiers demonstrate, of course, that crucial differences remain. However, all believe that a meeting of First Ministers is now necessary. I do not want to underestimate the divergences on the remaining issues. They are there and they are serious. But what is in dispute is extremely modest when compared with what is really at stake. What is really at stake is Canada.

[Translation]

While I do not want to underestimate the divergences on the remaining issues, what is in dispute is modest when compared with what is really at stake.

What is really at stake is Canada.

[English]

Failure would compromise our capacity for living together in unity and diminish our capacity to maintain the kinds of prosperity that Canadians have enjoyed over so many decades. It would waste an opportunity to close a chapter in our constitutional history with the full partnership of all the provinces in our Confederation, including the assent of those provinces who were partners when Confederation began.

It would curtail opportunities for constitutional change, in such important areas as Senate reform and aboriginal rights, for the foreseeable future. I believe it would send a very damaging signal about Canada to the international community with consequences for our national well-being.

[Translation]

Ratification of the accord, on the other hand, would mean that we could turn the page of constitutional reform and get on with other unfinished business also of great importance to Canadians.

It would allow us to build together on a solid foundation of national unity.

[English]

It would send a signal of stability to the international community, ending the consternation in many parts of the world about what is going on in Canada. It would end the puzzlement why anyone in such a respected nation would fail to appreciate the value of its strength and prosperity to the world community. People across the world are genuinely troubled about why anyone would fail to understand the magnificence of this great country, Canada.

Elsewhere, political repression, poverty, famine, natural disasters, not arcane constitutional debates are the stuff of national turmoil. Canadians are looking to their First Ministers for leadership and action now.

[Translation]

Elsewhere, as I was just saying, political repression, poverty, famine and natural disasters, not arcane constitutional debates, however important, are the stuff of national turmoil.

Canadians are looking to their First Ministers for leadership and action now.

Canadians are looking not for fine words but for common sense and responsibility.

[English]

Canadians are looking not for constitutional niceties but for common sense and responsibility. As Premier Ghiz, leader of Canada's smallest province said: "Canadians are saying, 'Save Canada. Make it work'." I believe when Premier Ghiz said: "Save Canada. Make it work," he was speaking for millions of Canadians who want Canada to make it work.

If there is the political will to break the impasse, surely there is a constitutional way. I am inviting First Ministers to a working dinner on Sunday evening to find out if sufficient political will truly exists. If our discussions go well, we will continue at a First Ministers' Conference to begin the next morning. Our dinner will take place on June 3, three years to the day, I believe, when I, along with 10 premiers representing four different political parties, signed the Meech Lake Accord. That same accord was overwhelmingly endorsed by all three parties in the House of Commons on two different occasions.

• (1510)

I give Canadians my commitment, and I know I speak on behalf of all members of the House of Commons, to make every effort to produce an agreement. Once we have that agreement I give my commitment to Canadians to persevere on outstanding constitutional issues such as Senate reform and aboriginal rights, so important to so many Canadians across the country.

This country will not realize its unparalleled promise until all Canadians believe that their Constitution affirms their rights and reflects their values. That is why Quebec's voluntary endorsement of the existing constitution will make it a vibrant document of unity and hope for Canada and the future.

[Translation]

It is a golden opportunity! Since Quebec has affirmed its faith in a united Canada, it is a golden opportunity for Canada to find in its heart and soul the ability to say yes to Quebec; it is time to build a completely unified country once and for all.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, we have inherited a great land built on the tolerance, vision and labour of generations of Canadians before us. Many of the members on all sides of this House of Commons are sons and daughters of immigrants. When the Leader of the Opposition rose in this House on another occasion he made a most moving address about his own personal experience. I thought as I listened to him that day a few months ago what a magnificent and splendid country this is, where in all parts of this country and all parts of this House, in one generation alone, the children of immigrants have risen to positions of great authority, making it clear to all the world that this is truly, in the very best sense of the word, a civilization that represents the fundamentals of a genuine democracy.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: And so we have inherited a very great land, a truly great land, all of us in this House of Commons, members from British Columbia to Newfoundland and Labrador. It is now our responsibility to turn Canada over to our children and eventually our grandchildren undamaged and undiminished, and to bequeath them a nation that stands proudly united before history and before all humanity as one of the world's privileged lands, blessed as it always has been, our Canada, by the hand of God.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we of the Official Opposition have been calling for a First Ministers' Conference as a way of breaking and finding a solution to the constitutional impasse for some time.

It has been our belief that it should have been called by the Prime Minister before now and that he should not have waited until today to call a First Ministers' Conference.

I know that the Prime Minister has been concerned about the risk if there is such a meeting and it is not a success. But, Mr. Speaker, there are also risks, perhaps even greater risks, if such a meeting is not held at all.

The provincial premiers themselves have been calling for such a meeting for some days now, perhaps the strongest argument why the Prime Minister should not have waited until today to make his announcement.

The Prime Minister today said that he is "inviting First Ministers to a working dinner on Sunday evening to find out if sufficient political will truly exists". He went on to say: "If our discussions go well, we will continue at a First Ministers' Conference to begin the next morning."

Mr. Speaker, this is certainly a step in the right direction and a step that we welcome. It is, in a sense, more than simply a step, because for the first time since Premier McKenna proposed a companion resolution, the Prime Minister is agreeing that there should be a dialogue involving the Prime Minister and all the provincial premiers around the same table. This kind of dialogue involving all the First Ministers and giving all of them an equal opportunity to discuss this matter, a matter crucial for the future of our country, is what has been missing until now.

I must say that I have some concern that there is a firm commitment from the Prime Minister so far only to a working dinner. I think Canadians would have got more reassurance from his announcement and would have preferred if it was a firm commitment for a First Ministers' Conference as well.

There are important questions to deal with: Senate reform, aboriginal rights, the rights of language minorities, the rights of multicultural groups and others.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we co-operated with government members on the Charest Committee because the Liberals wanted to resolve the constitutional deadlock, and it is our earnest wish that the discussions with the Premiers will be a success, a success that will benefit all of Canada.

[English]

We want to see steps as a result of the discussions announced today, and Canadians want to see steps as a result of these discussions that will confirm the future of our country.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians generally should recognize, and I think most of them do, that the success we have had as a country is substantial compared to most of the other countries of the world. Canadians generally want this success to continue and to increase.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we want this success to extend to these discussions, for the future of our country and all Canadians.

[English]

We are concerned about the future of our country. We must work together to ensure it continues strong and prosperous for ourselves and future generations.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, we, too, welcome the announcement by the Prime Minister that there be a meeting of First Ministers. I think that this is the time to set aside our normal partisan concerns and wish all the First Ministers well when they meet here Sunday.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: We hope that the accord does not die quietly at the dinner table and, if there is a new deal, that the Prime Minister will inform and involve the Canadian people in as much and as reasonable a way as possible throughout the process.

The issue at stake is the unity of this country and the winner, in the end, must be Canada. This could be the most important meeting that the First Ministers of this country have ever held in their 123 year history of Canada and we must set aside partisan concerns to make sure there is an agreement.

I suppose I only have two messages at this time, Mr. Speaker. One is to the premiers. I realize the premiers are premiers of their own provinces from different parts of this country but all premiers must never forget that first and foremost they are Canadians and the interests of Canada must come first.

• (1520)

Second, I say to the Prime Minister of Canada that the Prime Minister must be the Prime Minister. He must be the one who leads and speaks out for all of Canada. The Prime Minister must be the one, on behalf of all of us, who rises to the occasion to find the accommodation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, to Quebecers it is important that the rest of Canada accents Quebec as part of Canada, while acknowledging that Quebec is different and that it has a special place within our country as a distinct society.

Mr. Speaker, it is now time to put the interests of our country ahead of the interests of the parties in this House.

[English]

Finally, in addition to the five important proposals from Quebec that all parties in the House endorse and have endorsed on more than one occasion, it is also important, as the Prime Minister said, that we address the other concerns of equally tremendous importance. The concerns of aboriginal rights, the concerns of the multiracial people and those of multicultural background in the country, the concerns of northern Canadians to make them a full partner within Canada and the concern in many parts of the country for real and genuine reform of the other place, the Senate, must also be addressed. As well, we must address the concern of having constitutional change evolve in a really democratic and open process. Many people complained in the past that that was not there.

There are many other concerns to address such as the ongoing concerns of minority groups and women in the country. I, along with everybody else in the country, hope for success on the weekend. We welcome the fact that there will be a First Ministers' meeting, and we hope that, when the agreement comes—I say when it comes, and I am sure it will come—it will be an agreement that will unite Canadians, bind them together and make us proud of our Constitution and country.

[Translation]

I wish the federal and provincial First Ministers good luck!

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by 15 minutes. Therefore, Private Members' hour will begin at 6.15 p.m. Orders of the day.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I believe the House leader has a point of order he wants to raise.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member on a point of order in a moment.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RESIGNATION OF HON. MEMBER FOR SAINT-MAURICE AS ACTING SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately, it is my duty to make the following statement to my colleagues in the House of Commons. I have received a message from the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Pronovost), who has submitted his resignation as Acting Speaker.

[English]

There were remarks made earlier this afternoon by the hon. member from Newfoundland concerning certain remarks made by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice. The hon. member for Saint Maurice said to me that, under the circumstances, he felt the importance of the position of Speakership was such that, despite the apology he made and which was generously remarked upon earlier today, he has submitted his resignation.

I know that all hon. members will know that he has taken this decision in the interests of this place and our country and while we may very well regret the event, we can, I think say that we admire his decision under a situation of some considerable stress.

I have nothing further to add and I am quite sure that at the appropriate time certain announcements will be made to find a replacement.

[Translation]

Again, I very much regret having to make a statement like this, but I well know that all hon. members understand the situation exactly and also, probably—

[English]

—take the decision that has been made in the very best spirit and tradition—in keeping with the great tradition of the House of Commons and of our country.

[Translation]

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I did hear the Deputy Speaker say he was moving to Orders of the Day and I wondered if we had passed beyond Routine Proceedings because I did have a Private Member's Bill to table.

Mr. Speaker: I would say to the hon. member that I do not think the consent is there.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, while every member of this House is likely focused on the great debate going on inside our boundaries about questions that both unify us and divide us, there is a big world out there which is also going through its own volatility and incredible forces of change and development.

[Translation]

Like all other members of this House, I hope that we will have a meeting next Sunday to unify the country and especially to consider the interests of all the regions and to find a way to solve the problems in the country.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we have a very important opportunity to establish a new international role.

[English]

The purpose of the very important proposal put forward by my colleague, the member for Papineau, is to bring to the attention of this House many of those issues. The world impinges upon Canada, perhaps to a far greater degree than ever before in our history. The real test is how do we respond. What is our answer? What direction do we take and what kind of—to use an over-worked word—vision do we have about the role we will play in this rapidly changing world where the earthquake of revolution takes place every single day of the week.

I would like to stop for a moment to share an experience that some members of the committee had when we were travelling in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union a few short weeks ago.

We had the privilege of being in Berlin on May Day, a remarkable day. The wall had come down and thousands of people were walking back and forth. During the course of conversation a young woman who was our translator was talking about the incredible change that had gone on three or four months ago when the secret police and the police dogs had been guarding the boundaries. All of a sudden there was a Woodstock atmosphere where there was beer, sausages, and rock bands playing on the streets.

• (1530)

This young woman who had been a participant and was an active member of the crowd that gathered around the church last November 9, which was the spark that brought down the dictatorship in East Germany, said something very important that I do not think I will ever forget. In talking to her about what she would be doing, and she knew we were politicians from Canada, she said: "Please don't take away from us what we won at the church that day. Don't usurp the kind of achievement and the change that we want to bring about".

What she was talking about was the end of military alliances, the end the confrontation, the end of conventional cold war thinking and actions which have so dominated this world for the past 40 years. It was interesting to note that that heartfelt cry made by that young woman was repeated the next day by the newly appointed Minister of State for Foreign Affairs in the East German Government, a young man by my standards. He said that it was time to get rid of the old, conventional ways of thinking. He saw the unification of Germany as a way of breaking out of the Warsaw-NATO kind of confrontation that had been around for so long. He said: "We must apply our energy and our thoughts to what is new. How do we bring about a new synthesis in Europe to respond to this?"

When I was watching the news last night I was thinking about the faces of the people of Ottawa gathering around Mr. Gorbachev as he walked up and down the streets. In effect the people of this city, perhaps on behalf of all Canadians, were saying the same kind of thing. There was hope in those faces. They were not simply attracted to Mr. Gorbachev because he is a celebrity. I think they also saw him as a symbol of real change. They saw him as someone who in his own right and in his own country, had initiated an incredible revolution of thought and action. They were reaching out with those hands, not just to the man but to what he represented.

The debate that we have to focus on today concerns how we can ensure that those hopes and expectations of that young woman in East Berlin and of the people of Ottawa are not usurped, not taken away. The response of the politicians, the diplomats, the officials, the bureaucrats, and the people in power with authority must be to understand that kind of undercurrent, that strong willingness of hope and expectation is running around and is oftentimes in danger of being kidnapped by those who have vested interests in keeping things the way they are.

The contrast to that reaching out of the people on the streets of Ottawa was the results of what we saw in the discussions between our leaders and those of the Soviets which once again was in cold war language. Our people say: "We want NATO". Mr. Gorbachev says: "We cannot get into NATO". All of a sudden we were pulling back, were retreating from the impulse and incredible momentum that had been started on the streets of eastern Europe, aided and abetted by policies. I think of the progress that has been made in reducing arms and looking toward new accommodations which is in danger of regressing. It is in danger of being pulled back by those who have power and authority.

I address these remarks to the members of this House because I think we all share the hope that that will not take place but understand the threat that is there.

I want to address for a moment the question put forward in my colleague's motion about the incoherence and the sense of confusion that sometimes exist in our own government. I do not blame a government for being caught unawares by these changes. Goodness gracious, no one pretends that they have omniscient wisdom about what was going to take place, but I think we can honestly say that we expect a little more than what we received.

On the one hand, we had the Minister of National Defence as part of a NATO meeting out in Alberta a couple of weeks ago endorsing the concept of maintaining nuclear weapons in NATO and saying that that is the way it is going to be. On the other hand, last Saturday night the Secretary of State for External Affairs was saying: "Maybe we shouldn't do that". Who do we believe? Which minister is speaking for the government? It is hard to determine.

When questions were asked in the House by the member for Papineau—Saint-Michel, the House Leader and others, we could not get a clear answer. They did not seem to know who was speaking for the country.

That is not uncommon, but this is too critical a situation in which to play the normal kind of political games. Surely, it is up to members on this side of the House, and I would say to members of the Conservative caucus, to say: "That's not good enough. That doesn't meet the expectations of the millions of people around this country who want something different".

I point out to you as well, Mr. Speaker, the other kinds of issues that have emerged recently. Look at the opportunity that we have had as a country to start building some bridges. What is clear in the debate so far, the debate we have heard in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, is that we cannot presume that we can maintain our way of doing things, our structures, our alliances and say to the Soviet Union: "Sorry, you lost the game". This is not some kind of football match where there are winners and losers. We have to find a way of some common interest.

I suppose one thing that is most vivid in my memory of my trip to the Soviet Union is how deep the feeling is about the impact of the Second World War and the deep need for security. Part of the whole movement in eastern Europe for the past 40 years has been how to defend themselves against a reoccurrence of the Second World War. For a moment we have to put ourselves in the shoes of the Soviets to say: "How do they gain that security when they see a unified Germany joining NATO with the presence of nuclear weapons on their soil? How can we give them a sense that it is not happening all over again?" I know it may be irrational and emotional, but the fact of the matter is that it is real. It is not good enough for our leaders to say: "Sorry, that is the way it is going to be".

We are making a plea, as the member for Papineau—Saint-Michel said this morning, to look at this thing in a new light, to have a sense of new understanding of what is going on.

There is a need for a new architecture of political structures around the world, but particularly in eastern Europe. I take at face value Mr. Gorbachev's proposal that he wants a home that stretches from the Soviet Union right to North America. It is clear that we need structure to make that happen and it is not in place.

I accept with some credit the proposals put forward by the government that perhaps NATO can only be a transition phase. That is good, but let us go one step beyond and say that it will be a transition to something that will represent a larger scale collective security organization covering the Soviet Union, eastern and western Europe, and North America, where we share collective security and not where we are divided by it. I think that is the statement that the Soviets are waiting to hear from western leaders. We must add our voice in our own councils of the NATO Alliances, the OECDs, the summit meetings, and so on.

Canadians have a particular opportunity, not that we are going to be the major players. When we start to look at how to put the building blocks of that new structure together there are ways of doing it. We have seen it in front of us.

Surely, one of the most critical areas of concern that we share with the Soviets, the Americans, and many European countries is our Arctic. In 1987 President Gorbachev issued the Murmansk declaration stating that we should have some kind of treaty for the Arctic. When we were in the Soviet Union we had a response from people saying that we could have that. Members of the Arctic Institute in Leningrad said that there should be a denuclearized treaty for the Arctic. There is some common ground to build upon.

However, Mr. Gorbachev has come and gone from Ottawa with no mention of that proposal. No significant steps were taken toward negotiations or discussions on that very significant initiative.

Mr. Milliken: What did they discuss?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Well, that is part of the problem.

We know that Ottawa is famous for its hospitality and its restful, calm, tranquil atmosphere. It is a wonderful place to get rid of jet lag, but when you have the President of the Soviet Union here you expect more than a good night's rest.

I would say that here was an opportunity to demonstrate our interest and willingness to build some bridges, to put together new building blocks that would have helped on the security issue and one that would have helped us. I am not talking about being altruistic with the Soviets. Goodness knows that our security interests are directly in the Arctic. That is where U.S. and Russian submarines are playing tag all the time and where we need some kind of arrangement.

• (1540)

I see by today's The Financial Post that my view is shared by Allan Fotheringham who says that great minds think alike.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I say that with tongue in cheek, Mr. Speaker.

The fact of the matter is that we have a real interest in developing these building blocks. In the area of the economy there is an enormous opportunity to develop a whole set of relationships in the Soviet Union, a country desperate for transfers of technology, trade, and investment. The expectations of that country were raised during the last prime ministerial visit by the signing of a number of agreements. Almost a year later, nothing has been done. We have not lived up to those agreements.

Some of the problems are those of the Soviets and many of the problems are our own. The fact of the matter is that we can say without any contradiction that our ability to meet the demands emerging in the Soviet for building a new set of relationships is not being met.

I will tell you one of the reasons why. Let us just take a look at one simple statistic. The Department of External Affairs has 30 posts in western Europe, but just six in eastern Europe, including the Soviet Union. How do we expect to begin to manage a whole new set of relationships, economically, culturally and politically, when we are totally understaffed, under-resourced and do not have the capacity to do it? Claims may be made for budget or restraint reasons, but how can we argue for budget reasons that we are maintaining a corporal's guard in the fastest changing, most dynamic area in the world when everyday we are losing all kinds of opportunities?

Let me give one example. I was sitting at a Kiwanis club dinner a week ago with the president of a lumber firm in Manitoba who talked about trying to negotiate a lumber agreement between the Soviets and Canada. They would use a barter system to bring certain kinds of wood into Canada that are not available here. We know in western Canada that we have to start purchasing more from the Soviets in order to maintain the balance because of our grain trade where we have by far the greatest surplus on the trade side.

As he said that getting somebody to help him to work through the red tape and to get the front-end logistics in place was just not possible. He has given up. It is a small example, but I am sure members in this House can repeat the example a hundredfold from their own ridings. We are simply not equipped to meet the demand. We are simply not there in the numbers or in the capacity that we need to respond to those kinds of changes.

I would like to point out another area where we are not providing the leadership in that building block. We have heard in the House today and in the last couple of weeks about the growing problem dealing with nuclear energy. In our country, the Soviet Union, and eastern Europe peaceful uses of nuclear energy is one of the most important areas of common concern.

What would happen if we proposed that there be a common agency which would look after standards, investment, safety and health problems between the Soviet Union and Canada? In part, we would help them with the enormous clean-up problems they have with Chernobyl. We would deal with the problems of the Candu in Romania. We could all of a sudden, I am sure, find some common ground. We could find an area where we can share common interests. It would be the kind of agency that would give us a working relationship in a new area but one vital to our economies and our inter-relationships. We could establish once again a new kind of foundation, putting another block in place that would lead to the new structures and architecture that would bring together the east, the west, and North America.

I think back to when I was still going to university. I read about the theory of Jean Monet in starting the European Common Market. He said that it should be started with functional agencies and then you build from functional agencies into some kind of political agencies to the point where they now have the European Common Market. They started that way. They had the steel authority. Then they started working on transportation and coal. The thesis was that this was a way to get to know one another, to establish some common lines of communication and interest. From that you start to build up the super-structure.

Are we not in a similar condition today? Are we not as Canadians, in a position to take those initiatives where there is such a direct and close common interest between the two?

That is what I think the member for Papineau—Saint-Michel means in his motion when he says that we need a coherent policy. We need some direction. We need some creative thinking in this area.

In particular, we need it in terms of our own domestic opportunities. One of the great assets we have as Canadians is that we have a population built upon many Canadians whose origins are in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. I think of my own city of Winnipeg where we have a Ukrainian Canadian community of great strength and vitality, as well as Poles and Russians and Germans and all the rest. They understand the culture and the language and have relatives in their home land. There is an enormous sort of criss-cross of connections, people who are anxious at the present moment to go back to the homeland, to go back to where their relatives are to establish commercial or business relationships.

In speaking to many of them they say that they do not know who to talk to, they do not know where to go. Even if the Prime Minister was to designate one member of the cabinet and say: "You are responsible for the Soviet Union. You bring together private business. You bring together the regions. You bring together the cultural groups".

Let us talk about language training in Canada. Let us talk about new transportation links into the Soviet Union. Let us talk about how we get some investment guarantees, whatever it is that will provide some kind of focal point for all those groups to come together. We have this incredible resource in our own country that will give us an enormous sort of outreach into the Soviet Union and eastern Europe and we are not utilizing it.

Many of them are doing it individually, but many are being frustrated because they will arrive in Kiev and all of sudden say: "Who do I talk to?" It is clear to us from our own examination that one cannot find answers immediately in the Soviet Union. There are a lot of complications. Many smaller businesses do not have the front-end capacity to do it. That is where the Government of Canada comes in.

When we spoke to the West Germans about the commercial side they told us that when the Soviets sit down and talk about providing credit of a billion dollars on a big project, the West Germans say that in return they want some understanding that there will be no red tape. They get their business done that way. You need somebody who has got that eye on the sparrow, who knows where they are going with that kind of direction.

We are suggesting in this motion that we have not tapped into that well of Canadian interest, those resources, and have not even drawn upon members of Parliament in terms of an open consultation. The member for Papineau—Saint-Michel said very properly this morning that it is a certain insult to this House that the Secretary of State for External Affairs started to announce a policy when he knows full well that the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade has been working on one for close to a year and he has not had the courtesy to wait a couple of weeks to see what it is going to say.

What is the point? Why have 14 members of Parliament spend almost a year working at this and then rush ahead to the finish line? It is not a competition. We are not in a race with the Secretary of State. We are not out there to win the red ribbon. We want to help. The fact of the matter is that it creates enormous complication by doing that.

What we are trying to condemn the government or tell it to get its act together. It must understand that this is one of the most important moments in our history. If we do not do it right we are going to find ourselves isolated. We are going to find ourselves pushed out of Europe. We are going to find ourselves without the connecting links into the Soviet Union. We will not have the kind of influence that we should have.

Without proper action we will not be able to build upon the assets that we have, which includes a good reputation, a population in Canada that is ready and willing and has the attributes based upon their own culture and language to help. This is simply because we have not focused on the problem. We do not have a policy. We do not have a direction. We are not mobilizing the resources of this House and all the people within it to try to bring together a common front. This is not an issue that necessarily divides us as parties. We are all interested in recognizing this enormous challenge and at the same time the opportunity it represents. We are all here to help, but it is the government that has the responsibility to provide the ability for that help and that co-operation to be targeted at this very important part of the world.

• (1550)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments, the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso.

I would just like the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to know that I appreciate him taking all the time in the House that he would like, but there are other colleagues of his who also would like to speak.

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I just want to echo that sentiment. I was fascinated by the hon. member's remarks.

Having heard him before on international questions, particularly Canadian foreign policy questions, he is one who could be allowed to extemporize even longer than the allotted 20 minutes.

I would like to give him an opportunity to embellish on some of his remarks, particularly in light of his recent visit to the Soviet Union. I would like him to comment upon the reaction of Soviets there to what I consider to be the rather timid response of the Canadian government to the events which are taking place there and, principally, the fact that so little has happened since the Prime Minister's visit to the Soviet Union last November. There appears to be, at least from here, a lack of initiative on the part of the Canadian government in taking advantage of opportunities to co-operate with the Soviets and eastern European countries in furthering the major reforms which they have courageously embarked upon.

I would just like to ask my colleague if he could say a little bit about the reaction he received when he was in the Soviet Union concerning Canada's role and how we can be more supportive.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question.

Their reaction in some cases was puzzlement. There had been an enormous sense of optimism built around the trip last year of the Prime Minister, followed by the Speaker of the House, which I think established a set of relationships and expectations. Agreements were signed. As I say, almost a year later we are waiting for some delivery. There is a feeling of disappointment that many of these kinds of developments have not taken place.

I do not say this to be critical, because I think there is a problem on both sides. They are afraid of being caught up in a kind of diplomatic minuet that oftentimes takes place.

As people from the Arctic Institute said, there was an Arctic environmental agreement signed. The scientists were in agreement. But it seems that somehow the officials got in the way and nothing has been done in this crucial area.

Here we have, as we discovered, the prospect of the Soviet Union initiating nuclear tests in the Arctic. This is an area about which there should be a very major outcry. Because there is no commission in place—we have not even appointed the commissioners yet to make it work—the forum has been lost. We have not had the opportunity to create the very essential dialogue that is needed.

I would also like to comment, if I may, on the agricultural area. We were asked, again during the visit of the Prime Minister, and proposals were put on the table, that we help set up a series of model farms in the Soviet Union using Canadian technology, fertilizers and methodologies as a way of demonstrating a new way of productivity in the agricultural area. Land was being offered. The invitation was there. Yet we did not take them up on it. Now the Dutch and the Italians are doing it and we are not in the marketplace. We asked why. They said: "Well, we did not have the resources to bring it together. We did not have the capacity to do it".

Again, I want to express as a western Canadian that when we say we do not have the resources, I must think of the enormous resources we have in my own City of Winnipeg to have brought that kind of thing to fruition. Somehow it fell in a hole. It just did not materialize. It is those kinds of disappointments that are there which I think are creating wonderment as to whether we are really as serious as our statements claim.

I would have to speak of my own personal disappointment with what has transpired in the last 24 hours. I think the occasion of Mr. Gorbachev's visit here was an opportunity to pin some of these things down, to clear away some of the brush, to get away from some of the red tape and to pin-point some of these problems, whether on the Arctic treaty, nuclear testing, or on commercial agreements. Yet we did not seem to come out with very much.

As I have not seen anything in the papers, I do not even think we got a commitment on a new agreement on wheat, which has been a kind of bedrock of our relationship with the Soviet Union for the last 20 years.

It is those kinds of things that we are concerned about which show a lack of energy, a lack of focus and a lack of direction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am glad we are having this thorough airing today of Canadian foreign policy in central and eastern Europe. The hon. member's motion which has brought us into this, is predicated on the allegation that there is a lack of initiative and some confusion. I would like to pick up on that in my remarks and refute it with some of the evidence of what has been going on.

Before getting into that I would like to say that just as this debate is timely, following on the heels of the visit by both Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze, last Saturday in the Etobicoke—Lakeshore constituency which I represent, we had a one-day policy forum on Canadian policy in central and eastern Europe. It was an opportunity for an exchange of views and information, participated in by well over 400 Canadians, many of whom have been not only to the Soviet Union but in Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and so on, actively engaged in education, in trade, in cultural activities, in business opportunities and so on.

It was there that the Secretary of State for External Affairs made the remarks that he did, outlining some very important new directions in Canadian foreign policy in that area, the burden of which he carried through on in his remarks here this morning to the House.

I would like to elaborate on some of the points which the Secretary of State for External Affairs made in the general framework by giving some specifics. If foreign policy exists, it is not only in general principles and broad terms but it does come to earth in specific applications. That is what I would like to talk about. In so doing I would like to indicate that Canada is moving in a new and uncharted area with some foreign policy successes.

I think that the speech given by the hon. member for Winnipeg Transcona, typically for him, was both informed and informing. He took a very thoughtful and balanced approach on this.

I know that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre said that we should approach these issues beyond party lines and try to work together. I think that is the important spirit.

I heard the member for Papineau—Saint-Michel talking this morning about a lack of initiatives, yet in the same sentence he mentioned that the Prime Minister had signed a major accord in Moscow last November. The hon. member from Winnipeg said that a year has passed since that was signed, while in fact it is only half a year. I heard the member for Papineau—Saint-Michel talking about a lack of initiative and lamenting that Canada has no consulate in Leningrad and in the same sentence he talked about the opening of a Canadian consulate in Kiev, I really think—

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): It's not open yet.

Mr. Boyer: No, it is underway.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): They told us 1992.

Mr. Boyer: The fact is that all these initiatives are taking place. Canada is supporting a new and active working relationship with the reformist central and eastern European countries. We are assisting, along with other western countries, in the process of revitalizing this region. It is a very hard task because they themselves have a lot to sort out. They are in transition. I think that anyone who is honest with himself would not be so critical about the Canadian response as to look for it as having no contradictions and as being completely developed even while the situation there is still developing. We should be open, frank, and non-partisan in this area, and recognize that we are in a world of change and that Canada is responding in that area.

• (1600)

At the economic summit in Paris last July, Canada joined with the other nations in the G-7 in supporting the reforms in Poland and Hungary and in pledging to support the transformation of those economies in a durable manner with both economic assistance and other means. This is something on which we have followed through in a positive way.

The opposition asks about initiatives. Here is some Canadian action. We have created a $42 million assistance package for Poland and Hungary. This package was announced last November and it has three major elements to it.

First, $12 million has been spent in emergency food aid. This food was not just purchased in Canada and taken to Poland. More important, it was sold there and the equivalent of $6 to $8 million in Polish zloty was earned for a jointly-administered counterpart fund that is today funding developments in rural parts of Poland. That is very important.

A second element was the $20 million revolving short-term export credit insurance that was established for Poland. There has been no lack of initiative at all.

A third element is the clear initiative of putting in place $10 million over five years for economic development.

I will give you six or eight examples of Canadian foreign policy success to show what we are doing to help with economic development. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars has gone to the International Management Centre in Budapest to create the Canada Fund which supports management training. In fact, the dean of that school will be a Canadian. This is beyond the stage of putting money into countries, money which is in short supply here. That, moreover, is not what they need. They need, want, and are seeking from us assistance in such things as management training and restructuring of government. There is one very positive example of an initiative in that area.

Second, two contracts with the Canadian Executive Services Overseas are now providing 41 volunteer professionals in both Hungary and Poland who will work as industrial and business consultants. That is another positive initiative along the same theme.

Third, a Canadian company is doing an evaluation study of possible new and upgraded edible oil processing plants in Poland.

A fourth initiative is a $2 million training program for Polish farmers in livestock and farm management. This is really a creative initiative. This summer over 100 Polish farmers will be coming to Canada for intensive courses at a training institute. They will get practical experience on Canadian farms.

A fifth example of an initiative is the $1 million program of support for the Warsaw Agricultural University and three associated institutes involved in training and research for Polish agriculture.

The sixth example in just this one element is the assistance in establishing the English-French Language Training Centre. Its curriculum focuses on language proficiency but also on the principles, in the course of that, of representative government, democratic processes, local administration, and human rights.

I can go on, Mr. Speaker. There are a lot of these initiatives. There is a grant to York University School of Business Administration to establish a nine-week course for 40 middle managers this summer. Again, that will include attachment to a Canadian firm for practical experience. There is funding for a Canadian expert who will serve as an advisor on privatization to the Government of Poland.

How can anyone sincerely say that there is a lack of initiative? These are very good examples of Canadian foreign policy success, the kind of things that our country is sought out for and appreciated for in the councils of the nations. Canada does not go to other countries with a blueprint of how they should run themselves. We go and work co-operatively with them. They know what their needs are and we have practical experience and technical assistance, as well as financial aid, that can be supportive of what they are doing. We support what they are doing because for years we have sought it, we have urged it, and we have worked for it. In this transformation, we are seeing countries going from totalitarian regimes to democratic regimes, from communist one-party states to pluralistic multi-party states, from the command economy to the market economy, and from harsh militarism and cold war division to a new era of exchange, dialogue, and common security. That is the transition and it is a transition in which Canada is playing an important role as a partner.

We have assisted the central and east European countries in becoming integrated into western markets. We are actively encouraging Canadian trade and investment. Last Saturday, at the Etobicoke—Lakeshore conference on eastern Europe, a number of examples were given of Canadians who are over there doing just these things.

The member for Winnipeg South Centre lamented the difficulty of dealing with bureaucracies. That is a very real problem and no one is underestimating that. It takes a lot of time to place a phone call, let alone to get governmental decisions. But these are things that, in the more traditional areas of trade promotion, we are continuing to pursue very actively. These are positive initiatives.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs hosted a series of joint venture and investment seminars on Poland. He held them in Montreal, Toronto, and Calgary in January of this year, following through on the arrangements made in November in Moscow when he and the Prime Minister were there. There is no lack of action and no lack of initiative, but a methodical, consistent effort to move on in this era of transition.

The department is getting very practical in this area. It has produced a very useful booklet. I do not know how many members who are criticizing the government for lack of initiative have read it. It is called: A Guide to Business Opportunities in Poland. This is exactly the kind of thing that the former minister did not hear when the Secretary of State for External Affairs spoke. He is not hearing it now because, where there is no willingness to hear, there will be nothing heard.

Canadians are actively pursuing opportunities in eastern Europe, whether it be through education, new economic activity, business opportunities, supporting democratic reforms, or working within NATO and other organizations for military climate change. Those people do know. We have passed beyond rhetoric to bringing in an new order here.

We have signed or are signing double taxation and foreign investment protection agreements with countries in eastern and central Europe in order to promote further Canadian investment. The negotiation and signing of those treaties is a response. That is a Canadian initiative.

So, let us not hear any more from those who are timid in their evaluation of Canadian effort. There is nothing wrong with what we are doing, other than our perpetual Canadian capacity to sell ourselves short and to see the glass as being half empty instead of half full.

We have extended the general preferential tariff status to countries like Poland, Hungary, and Romania to help them get better access to the Canadian market. These are initiatives. This is positive action by the government facing the new realities in central and eastern Europe.

The Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs held meetings with 35 Canadian business leaders at the end of April, continuing the process of implementation and carrying through, in order to signal our government's intention to expand the program in this area. That is what we are doing.

The member said there is no way that Canadian effort is being co-ordinated. Has he not heard of the formation of the task force on central and east Europe? It is not sitting at External Affairs over in the Lester B. Pearson Building on Sussex Drive, but right here in downtown Ottawa where other departments can be readily involved in its activities and where Canadians from across the country and foreign visitors who are here can deal with it. This is a great effort to bring together, in a concerted way, the initiatives that we are taking.

• (1610)

At the meeting at the end of April, it was agreed that the Canadian government should concentrate on technical assistance and management training, exactly the things I have been mentioning. It was also agreed that we should take a prudent approach at this time and avoid committing large sums of money. Rather, we should facilitate a program that will develop all kinds of connections and linkages between Canadians and the people in those countries, not just government to government, but individual to individual and organization to organization.

The work of the York University Professor Michel Chevalier in developing twinnings between Canadian community colleges and regions in eastern Europe and the U.S.S.R. is very important for the technical training of people. The Fund for Democracy, developed by a number of people of Czechoslovak background who are now Canadians, has gathered from the private sector across the country funds, supplies, and teachers who are in Czechoslovakia teaching the English language.

Last Saturday at the conference in Etobicoke—Lakeshore, one of the organizers of that Fund for Democracy explained that over $7 million in goods and services have already been made available in Czechoslovakia. It is not only the governments but many other organizations that are developing this entire network. That is the strength of relations at many levels between sovereign countries. The network we are weaving together is fundamental and it is certainly a good example of the many initiatives which our government is taking. It is a positive response. For once let us, as Canadians, start to celebrate some of the successes of our foreign policy.

I am not sure how much time I have left, Mr. Speaker, but I have been informed that the parliamentary secretary would like to raise a point of order at this time. I will yield the floor to him.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUPPLY PERIOD—EXTENSION OF SITTING HOURS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the hon. member's comments, I am sure that the House would be happy to give him quite a bit more time. He has made very interesting remarks. I apologize for interrupting him with this point of order.

Mr. Speaker, I believe you will find unanimous consent for the following three motions as there, have been discussions among the three parties. I move:

That the number of allotted days for the Supply period ending on June 30, 1990, be reduced by one.

I also move:

That Monday, June 4, 1990, be designated an allotted day; and Wednesday, June 6, 1990, be designated as the last allotted day for the current Supply period, on which day the provisions of Standing Order 81(16) shall apply.

I move further:

That, effective Thursday, June 7, 1990, and for the subsequent nine sitting days in the month of June, 1990, the House sit the following hours:

Mondays from 1 o'clock p.m. to 10 o'clock p.m.;

Tuesdays and Thursdays from 11 o'clock a.m. to 10 o'clock p.m.;

Wednesdays from 2 o'clock p.m. to 10 o'clock p.m.;

Fridays, from 10 o'clock a.m. to 3 o'clock p.m.;

Provided that on such Tuesdays and Thursdays the House will not sit from 1 o'clock p.m. to 2 o'clock p.m., unless Ministers' Statements and replies to them have extended the morning sitting; and on Wednesday, June 13, 1990, at 5 o'clock p.m. the House adjourn any debate then underway and then the House stand adjourned until 11 o'clock a.m. on Thursday, June 14, 1990; and following adoption of this Order, a motion pursuant to Standing Order 27(1) and (2) not be receivable.

Further, Mr. Speaker, there has been agreement among the three parties that there will be no quorum calls or dilatory motions between 6 p.m. and 8 p.m. on any of the days that the House is sitting those extended hours.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the motions that the parliamentary secretary has just presented to the House are indeed agreed to by all parties.

I want to say on behalf of the Official Opposition that, notwithstanding the excessive use of closure and time allocation throughout this Parliament we have, for the last several weeks, witnessed very considerable co-operation on the part of both this party and the New Democratic Party in assisting the government with its legislative program. Indeed, that co-operation has been shown throughout the Parliament. In spite of that co-operation we have been met with closure and time allocation time and again.

I am delighted to see that the government has changed its ways and has apparently given up on this abuse of our rules and is now proposing a series of proposals for hours of sitting which will effectively wrap up the business of the session, we anticipate, by June 20.

I want to thank the parliamentary secretary for his co-operation in the negotiations that we have carried on together and say that we are pleased that we have been able to achieve agreement on these motions. I know all members will be delighted with the results of the changes and that we can get the business wrapped up in a timely way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Saanich—Gulf Islands on the same point of order.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. For the viewing audience, I think what the previous speaker meant was, we agree. And we also agree.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think there is any necessity for another shot, but I will listen to the hon. member on the same point of order.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I would not take a shot at the hon. member. I wanted to confirm the agreement in respect of the dilatory motions and quorum calls between 6 and 8 p.m. on the days when the extended sittings are held and the fact that there will be none permitted.

I do not disagree with what the hon. member for Saanich—Gulf Islands has just said. Indeed, I hope that my comments indicated our agreement. I thank the parliamentary secretary for his efforts in this regard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motions. Does the hon. parliamentary secretary have unanimous agreement to move the motions?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motions agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet.

Mr. William Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the previous speaker to comment on any political changes that may have taken place over the past year or several months leading up to it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We are going to questions and comments now because the hon. parliamentary secretary's 20 minutes have terminated. The hon. member for Victoria—Haliburton has just asked him a question.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, you have put such clarity into our proceedings at this juncture that no one could be misguided as to where we are.

In answering the question from the member for Victoria—Haliburton, I would like to say that it is very important that we do look at the political changes as well as the economic changes. It is a fundamental part of Canadian foreign policy that we see political rights and economic changes as being very closely linked.

Just a year ago in China, for example, after a decade of economic change but a failure to have the political change and the individual rights going along with it, there was a real problem because reform and progress cannot march on one leg, it must march on the two together.

In the political changes as well as the economic changes, Canada has been quite actively participating in central and eastern Europe. We are developing a political co-operation program that will ensure that the democratic gains can be sustained in this period of turbulence and radical transformation in a lot of these countries where there have not been free elections for half a century or more.

We are looking at the judiciary, law reform, elections, human rights and the media. Again, these are areas where Canada can provide some specific technical information, assistance and support. Other areas include co-operation on financial planning, health services, environmental concerns—which is desperately needed—and telecommunications, another area of great Canadian strength.

• (1620)

Beyond that there are a lot of really specific detailed initiatives that we have taken to see that Canada is in there and working where it counts, supporting those countries which need the help and responding to their requests. The $40,000 which has gone to Radio-Canada International for equipment and training for the radio networks in Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland would be one example. Another would be disposable syringes and further medical supplies to meet the immediate health requirements of Romania. We provided over $500,000 worth of that. Elections Canada provided over $200,000 of financial assistance to Czechoslovakia for the holding of their free elections.

The member for Victoria—Haliburton would also appreciate knowing that we have done little things like providing a $7,000 computer in Bulgaria to help them run their election. We even provided the paper for it. These things may seem pretty trivial when we are talking about some of the global changes, but in fact that is once again where Canadians come through; with the specifics on time, in place and where they are needed. That was the same reasoning that led us to put $10,000 worth of books in the main library at Bucharest University to help replace a lot of the collection that had been destroyed by fire during their revolution in December.

There are programs of training and information exchange on parliamentary procedures. This is something of interest again to all members of Parliament. The Speaker of the House of Commons has been having interns from some of these countries come here to observe the procedures and methods that we follow. The first of these programs was with Poland in March of this year. Our Speaker is currently arranging to have a group from Czechoslovakia following their election on June 8.

These are further examples of the positive initiatives that cause me to say with pride that, yes, Canada is responding in a way that is consistent with the long-standing foreign policy of this country to help other countries help themselves.

Again, we do not have a blueprint of how others should run themselves. We are happy to work with them and provide real support to go beyond nostalgia to a new order.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary has just given us, I would say, a puffed up list of things that the government has been doing. He has addressed particularly the situation in eastern European countries and almost totally neglected in his litany what Canada might be doing in the Soviet Union.

He criticizes us on this side of the House for talking about a glass being half empty rather than half full, saying that we were taking a negative perspective of things. I have returned from the Soviet Union and the feeling there that was expressed to us was that the half glass has evaporated.

I wonder, just as a beginning point, what this government is considering doing with our diplomatic presence in the Soviet Union. Obviously to be more of a presence to the Soviet Union and to help them we must have more of a presence within the country and exhibit in that way our commitment to a relationship with the Soviet Union.

It was most unfortunate that when the President of the Soviet Union, President Gorbachev, was here, he did not address this House. I wonder if he felt that he did not know what to address. His comment when our Prime Minister was there was, "What kept you? Why weren't you here before?" The sense there is that there is a lack of communication, there is a lack of commitment. We have made overtures but they have resulted in nothing. I do not know what the parliamentary secretary would have to respond to that.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member talks about lack of communication following two days of discussions between our Prime Minister and our Secretary of State for External Affairs with President Gorbachev and Foreign Secretary Shevardnadze here in our capital. I do not know what she wants in the way of communication that would surpass that. That is at the highest level but it reflects that there is, throughout the system, an awful lot of discussion and dialogue taking place that two years ago no one even contemplated.

The business council between Canada and the U.S.S.R. was specifically created by our government's initiative not to see the Canadian government doing everything there but to put in place a framework where Canadian business people and entrepreneurs could themselves move into that situation. Just as they have found abysmal failure in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe with state directed economies, we have long recognized the importance of the market economy and having our entrepreneurs there. So our government is creating the framework for Canadians to be in there.

The list of specific examples that I was able to give could have gone on but we all speak under time limits here. If she thinks that is a puffed up account, then I am really going to listen with great interest to the substance of her speech which the House will be hearing in a few moments, because I really do lament that someone would look at the specific examples that I have given of Canadian public servants, Canadian business people and educators who are over there. They are travelling as well as the member to the Soviet Union and to places in eastern and central Europe. They are doing a great deal. A lot of them spoke with the eloquence of practical action about the things that they are doing.

To answer the final point of her intervention on diplomatic representation, Canada is very well served by our representatives at our embassy in Moscow. We are looking to expand that with the full service of the consulate in Kiev. The progress in opening that has not been as rapid as any of us would have wanted and we are redoubling our efforts on that.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps nothing better demonstrates to any of us how difficult it really is to move on the ground in some of these countries than the amount of time it has taken to open the consulate. We are committed to doing that. It will happen, there is no doubt about that, but it is not the same as opening a business office in Vancouver. We are dealing with a very different set up and arrangement on the ground. There are a lot of problems that any Canadian would not think would even be a surprise. There are real problems and we are working to overcome them.

I hope that members of the Canadian Parliament would find it in their hearts to be encouraging and supportive so that the real progress is recognized. Let us have more ideas about the next steps to take rather than lamenting the good steps that have already been taken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Erie on a very short question or comment.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I want to pose a question to the parliamentary secretary. Our government has been admonished by not only this Liberal member but by the member for Winnipeg South Centre. I want to deal specifically with agriculture initiatives. The member for Winnipeg South Centre indicated that the Dutch were into one of the countries and had a model program going there.

Will the parliamentary secretary give the House a bit of detail on how many farmers will benefit from the initiative that our government is taking. How many farmers will benefit from that program and about how many Canadian dollars are being spent on those kinds of agricultural initiatives?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, the question sounded specific enough but the answer, I am afraid, has to be fairly general because we are talking about initiatives in a lot of different countries. For example, a number of Polish farmers will be coming to Canada this year for training, the cost of that being absorbed by the Government of Canada. There is obviously some economic benefit from that. I think that is almost secondary to the training and experience those farmers will get.

• (1630)

If you look at it the other way, what we have been sending to Poland in terms of food aid, while there is a specific figure in the amount of $12 million, the money spent here on such things as pork, canola seed, oil, wheat has gone to the market.

The Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds is currently leading a delegation of industry representatives to Moscow and Geneva to discuss these issues. He will be looking at the terms of grain sales agreements between Canada and the Soviet Union. The member for Winnipeg South Centre dismissed any government action. In fact, here is a trade mission on its way to deal exactly with what the Secretary of State reported progress on this morning.

The existing agreement calls for a minimum purchase of 25 million tonnes of Canadian wheat and feed grains over a five-year period. It can be seen from that alone that there is significant continuing activity.

Not only the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds, but the Minister of Agriculture was in Poland some weeks ago—and with a name like Mazankowski, I think we are all proud to have our agriculture minister go to Poland—when it was announced that Canada would be sending food aid in the amount of $72 million through the stabilization program for Poland.

There are a lot more details and I am glad to have a chance to provide a few of them. The story is a good one. My plea is a simple one. There are successes in Canadian foreign policy in this area and it is high time we all recognized that fact.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to stand today to speak to the motion of our party before the House.

I want to address the events taking place in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. I regret the lack of clear policy by the government in defining a new Canadian role in response to events there.

I want to confine my remarks to defining the new Canadian role in response to events taking place in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

I begin my comments this afternoon by stating that, with other members of the external affairs committee, having studied Canada's relation to east Europe and the Soviet Union, I am particularly concerned with Third World affairs, but very interested in the changing role of Canada in the world vis-à-vis east Europe and the Soviet Union. I came away from meetings on my recent trip to the Soviet Union and the Germanys with the sense that the world is wondering what Canada is doing.

Although many Canadians are not that aware of it, the world knows what is going on in Canada. Very often throughout our questioning of newly elected deputies in the Soviet Union and East Germany, many of the questions that we had about unity, disunity, coming together, falling apart, in some instances came back to haunt us. The east Europeans said "Well, what are you doing in Canada?" Canada is the country that is supposed to be exemplar in the world, that brings together so many cultures and religions and has lived harmoniously. They know what is happening here. They look to us for an example. I hope in the coming days we will not prove them wrong.

Besides wondering what is happening within our country, there is a sense of wonderment beyond that. There is a sense that Canada has lost its prestige in the international world, that Canada is becoming marginalized, that Canada is a spectator rather than an actor in what is happening on the world stage, that Canada is not being as creative, visionary and responsive to changing circumstances as it could be. These facts I listen to and watch. I believe that there is quite a bit of truth to them. It is very important for Canada to define a new role in response to events that are occurring around this world, particularly in east Europe, the Soviet Union and with the unification of the Germanys. We are lagging behind and must do more to show our commitment to the change that is occurring and to help to ensure that that change is for the benefit of all of the people of those countries and regions of the world.

I would like to quote from the speech by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that was alluded to by my colleagues earlier. I think it brings to us as Canadians many points with which I can agree. There does seem to be a lack of coherence in government policies addressing many of the points that he raises.

In his speech in Toronto of last Saturday, he said: "Virtually no other nation possesses the web of intense personal connections to eastern and central Europe which we have in Canada. That gives us a special interest and a special capacity in helping those societies become prosperous and free."

After visiting the Soviet Union, you realize just how much we share in common with the Soviet Union with it being a multicultural, multi-ethnic, a country of many diverse religions such as we have in Canada. Through their lack of freedom, however, they have not had the opportunities to express the tolerance that we have in Canada. We are a diverse society. For example, Canada has the largest Ukrainian population outside the Soviet Union.

This week we met with Armenian Canadians. We have some Canadian citizens who understand the culture and the language that is represented by the many republics in the Soviet Union. Canada should take advantage of these characteristics and promote relations in as many diverse ways as possible. This is something that Canadians we do not recognize and are not taking full advantage of.

"Canada's stake in Europe should not be taken for granted", our Secretary of State for External Affairs went on to say. This is certainly the truth but what we are doing in actuality would not suggest the veracity of this statement. As said before, there is a feeling in the Soviet Union and the Germanys that Canada is sitting back and waiting to see what is going to happen before taking sufficient action.

The minister went on to say: "Canada's wishes will not necessarily determine Canada's role. Powerful new economic and political forces are at work, forces over which Canada has limited influence." Canada has the potential for much more influence in the situation in east Europe and the Soviet Union than we exhibit by our actions right now. Because of our characteristics and because of our training capacities in many areas, we can contribute.

I come back to some of the specific ways that the Soviet Union and the Germanys asked us to become involved; some of the ways that were expressed to us and some of the ways that seem obvious to us where Canada could improve its role. I go back to my critical remarks about our diplomatic presence in the Soviet Union. I raised this yesterday in the House in a standing order. I recognize that our embassy in Moscow has gone through difficult times with the recall of nine staff people who were well qualified.

• (1640)

With no more cost whatsoever involved, our government ought to make a commitment to putting personnel into our embassies who are fluent in Soviet languages, not just one Soviet language but Soviet languages. If we cannot communicate with people on the street, if we become isolated in our embassies and within the diplomatic community, we are going to be unable to influence change in the Soviet Union as is required.

Without language, without knowledge of Soviet culture and Soviet ways, we simply cannot succeed. When meeting with people in the Soviet Union, they spoke to us of the different ways in which they felt Canada could become involved. As one steps off the plane in the Soviet Union, the very first thing that confronts you is the environment.

It is interesting that the first words we heard President Gorbachev speak when he arrived in Canada was how clear our air was. He suggested that our Prime Minister ought to tax it. I was very happy to hear that our Prime Minister had no intention of doing that. But I found it very telling that that would be President Gorbachev's first perspective of our country. In reverse, my first impression after arriving in the Soviet Union was the awful environmental problem they have.

The very air one breathes is obviously polluted. In fact, we learned of the very few people we have in our embassy in Moscow, there are two adults who have been there a year and a half and have developed allergies. These people who never had allergies before. This speaks, from their point of view, of the dreadful situation of pollution that exists in that country.

Pollution is in the air and in the water. It is obvious it is there, but the impact of the environmental degradation is not really appreciated or studied. Certainly, the average person in the Soviet Union does not seem to be aware of the environmental degradation.

The main problem in the environment to which they allude with some regularity is the Chernobyl disaster and its massive negative impact on their society. However, even acknowledging the environmental disaster, there is a frustration on behalf of the Soviet people about dealing with the situation. In fact, the tendency appeared to us to be more one of wanting to ignore the problem and get on to other issues which were seen to be more significant.

My impression was that there was a lot that Canada could do to work with the Soviet Union to try to help those people overcome their environmental problems. At the same time, it would help us, as was mentioned by a previous speaker, to be more aware of our own environmental problems. Through co-operation, we could achieve a better environment for the whole world. As we all know, environment knows no borders. When one sees what is happening there and know that the same degradation can be affecting the quality of our life here, it behoves us to urgently address the situation.

We were specifically asked for assistance in agriculture. The thought was that the agricultural system in Canada is excellent. President Gorbachev visited Canada previously in his capacity as Minister of Agriculture and was very impressed with what we were doing. It was felt that in the areas of food distribution and processing, we would have a lot to offer to the Soviet Union.

Having visited the market in Kiev, where one was beginning to see a slight move to the free market economy in terms of being able to sell excess produce, one realizes what a difficulty they had with food distribution. Some of the sellers in the market had travelled 6,000 kilometres by plane with lemons and oranges from the south to sell at 5, 7 or 10 roubles each. They were able to bring the fruit in suitcases by plane and make a profit. There were serious problems there. We were devastated to hear that the Soviet Union was contemplating nuclear testing in the north. It requested economic assistance and assistance with joint ventures.

The parliamentary secretary has talked about what is being supposedly supported in this country in terms of joint ventures in the private sector, but we know that there are many industries and businesses in the private sector in Canada that have tried unsuccessfully to negotiate business in the Soviet Union but have felt that Canada has not provided sufficient seed money or guarantees to make business possible. There is much more we can be doing in this way.

Human resource development is seen as a priority and a must particularly in management no matter what the business is, including agriculture, but there is the thought that management development should be linked to joint ventures so that the management training has discipline and focus to it.

We talked to many newly elected deputies who spoke to us of their bewilderment about Canada's role within their country, being aware of the fact that our Prime Minister had visited the country and had signed 14 agreements. They seem to have gone into limbo as far as they were concerned. The half glass of water had evaporated. They were asking us what had happened.

There is a definite lack of communication between this government and the governments of the Soviet Union. There is a lack of communication and a lack of consultation and certainly we in this House have felt that lack of communication and consultation as well in terms of eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

We hope that our study of the last year will have an impact on what our policies will be in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe, but there should be regular consultation and communication on a regular basis between parliamentarians and the Department of External Affairs.

One of the concerns I have is Canada's difficulty in defining a new role in response to the events there. We have within our own government conflicting views of what we should be doing. Recently we have noticed this conflict in regard to NATO. The Minister of National Defence responded to questions during Question Period of May 17 as follows:

> As a mix of deterrents in the defensive alliance, NATO, we have to maintain the mix that has been successful in keeping peace in Europe for 45 years.

That was the Minister of National Defence. Yet, we have the Secretary of State for External Affairs saying that NATO must review urgently and comprehensively all aspects of its nuclear and conventional strategy.

It makes little sense to retain nuclear weapons whose only target can be our new friends in Poland, Czechoslovakia, and East Germany. It makes little sense to retain a military strategy which is based on a scenario of a surprise attack across a front which no longer exists and where surprise is no longer possible. It makes little sense to continue to retain in Europe the largest peacetime deployment of military force in the history of the world.

We have conflict among the departments of this government in terms of defining our Canadian role in response to changing events in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. We cannot possibly develop the proper policies when we have these conflicts that the government itself is not resolving. Certainly there is a lack of coherence in policies among departments. My studies in the area of international human rights have certainly highlighted this.

One of the issues that I would like to address briefly before leaving this subject is security and Canada's relationships with eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. We all realize that the military security risk has diminished tremendously with the new peace initiatives glasnost and hopefully perestroika in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe. However, we hope that with the diminishing of the military security risk east-west, there will be peace dividends deriving from this in a north-south direction.

The security issue is now north-south rather than east-west. The world must recognize that as much effort must be put into keeping peace in a north-south direction where it is not so much arms—but that is not out of the question—but poverty which is a security risk, the new greatest threat to our world, and environmental degradation which we are all so concerned about derives from poverty. There are many ways that Canada can define its role with changing events in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. We must not be the lazy fat cat that sits back watching what is going on. Rather, I believe Canada can be the mouse that roared.

• (1650)

An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. We must act now to help move toward peace and security with changes in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe right now by doing everything we can to hasten that process.

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment my colleague on an excellent address which covered many of the aspects of our relationship with the Soviet Union and eastern Europe.

It is clear that her recent visit to those countries has been a source of enrichment in terms of her understanding of the problems confronting them and how Canada can effectively contribute to their solution.

I would like to ask her to draw upon her experiences during her recent trip to comment on a few specific aspects, particularly in light of the comments during debate today, about the Canadian presence in the Soviet Union not keeping up with the new demands that have been placed upon it.

Based on her recent trip and her observations made in Moscow and other parts of the Soviet Union, what new demands are being placed on our diplomats and foreign service people in the Soviet Union? Where is the most urgent need for us to beef up our presence and facilitate the transition which is taking place in that country?

Mrs. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. Other than the environment being one of the first things that struck us on arrival in the Soviet Union, the second was that we had so little staff in our embassy there. We were very grateful for their gracious hosting of our group and for their great effort to make us comfortable and to make our meetings and visit profitable. I believe that happened.

However, we also felt that they were working under severe neglect and circumstances that could be corrected. It is very difficult to go into a situation such as exists in the Soviet Union and integrate oneself, make valuable contacts, and be able to negotiate with the people if one cannot speak the language and does not fully understand their culture.

We do know there was a diplomatic furore some months ago which caused some well qualified people in our embassy there to leave the country. I think that our Department of External Affairs should look at the qualifications of staff going to our embassies and consulates.

There is supposedly a consulate opening in Kiev. It has been delayed, but I have a sense from talking to people in the mission there that perhaps the necessary aggressive action was not being taken on the part of our government to push for the opening of that consulate.

It was also obvious that we needed a consulate in Leningrad, one of the chief economic regions of the Soviet Union. We heard earlier from another colleague of the general lack of consulates and embassies in east Europe and the Soviet Union.

There was the sense in West Germany that Canada could be doing a lot more in East Germany through West Germany. In that embassy we need a lot more Canadian facilitators who speak German and who speak languages of east European countries. We have those resources in our country because of our multicultural nature. Mr. Speaker, you know those resources are here. We should be capitalizing on them to augment and improve our way of relating and carrying on business in that part of the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Erie.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the applause. It should encourage me to deliver a speech today that will be earth shattering, people moving, and whatever else goes with it.

I am grateful for the opportunity to address the House today on the very topical question of east Europe and our policies in defence, trade, and foreign affairs. I do not think any members of the House have been anything short of captivated by the startling events which have swept through the Soviet Union and eastern Europe.

I listened fairly closely to the speeches delivered by the hon. member for Northumberland and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Though I want to develop my speech today around defence issues primarily, I want to touch on a couple of economic issues.

I brought with me two or three news releases. This is something the House is already aware of. It is history, but I want to bring forward that these are initiatives that the government has taken. We have not been asleep at the switch:

> Minister Signs Protocol with the Soviet Union
>
> Ottawa, Sept. 11, 1989—

I am reading from the press release:

> —Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture, Don Mazankowski today officially concluded negotiations under the Fourth Canada-U.S.S.R. Mixed Agricultural Commission—in Moscow—the focus of the 1989 MAC was decidedly commercial—While we are anxious to transfer our technological expertise, our business community must take the lead in determining the conditions of the agreement.

Another one reads:

> Deputy Prime Minister to Lead Business Delegation to Poland
>
> Ottawa, March 27, 1990—Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture—will lead a delegation of senior Canadian business people on a trade and investment mission to Poland, April 4-7—
>
> "Our primary goal for this mission is to develop economic and trade co-operation—and to encourage a broader range of contacts—

Then the April 2, 1990 press release reads:

> Mayer to Discuss Trade Issues in Moscow and Geneva
>
> —Grains and Oilseeds Minister—Mayer is leading a delegation of industry representatives to Moscow and Geneva to discuss trade issues this week.
>
> Mr. Mayer will be in Moscow until April 4—

The conclusion of that page reads:

> Accompanying Mr. Mayer in the Soviet Union are Bill Reid of Canadian Bronze, Pat Shimbashi of Diamond S Products and Paul Klein of the Winchester Group.

This indicates to all of us that there have been economic initiatives by the government to see that there will be trade with what has been known as the Warsaw Pact countries. Initiatives are being taken. As a result of this there are and will be tremendous opportunities available to Canadians. I think it is important that we put that on the record today.

I want to read in part the opposition motion today which says that it regrets that there is a lack of clear policy by the government to address the serious issues of trade, commercial relations, and agricultural agreements. What utter nonsense for the opposition to make statements like that when we have the proof positive right here. The proof is in the pudding and we have it. We have been taking initiatives.

One is absolutely right if someone is going to ask: "Have you done all you can do?" Absolutely not. There is much more that can be done. That is a big piece of geography. We are looking at a population in eastern Europe that would give us a tremendous amount of opportunity for us to sell our products and sell our expertise. I know that as Canadians we are going to accept that challenge.

• (1700)

The member for Northumberland had charged us with not being responsible for filling the need for diplomatic officials in Russia and in some of the other countries. I think that is true, but we have not been asleep at the switch. I was pleased that she had the honesty to say that we have to bear in mind that some of these officials had to leave Russia. It is going to take time for us to fill those vacancies and I know we are going to follow through. We also need to put that in the context of the dramatic changes that have taken place in eastern Europe which have happened so quickly.

I would differ with the opposition motion not only in those initiatives that we have taken in agriculture and other commercial initiatives, but with the claim that the government has not been clear in setting out the impact of these momentous changes on Canadian policy.

I would submit that Canada, acting in concert with NATO allies, has been consistent and constructive in adapting our policies to those recent developments. The changes which have transformed eastern Europe and the Soviet Union just over this past 12 months have truly been startlingly.

In essence, the process of foreign and domestic policy reform in these countries will redraw the political landscape of Europe as we have known it since 1945, four and a half decades. There are new governments in Poland, East Germany, Hungary and Czechoslovakia. We have witnessed the fury of the Romanian revolution which deposed the Ceausescu regime.

Finally, there is the prospect of German reunification, possibly the most concrete sign that the cold war is fading into the annals of history. Far from being unsettled by these developments, Canada and the other alliance countries are encouraged by the spread of democracy and political independence to the eastern European countries. These recent developments have the potential to bring to fruition NATO's long standing goal of a more genuine and lasting peace on the European continent.

For the NATO countries, an essential part of this more stable peace lies in the speedy conclusion and implementation of an agreement on conventional forces in Europe currently under negotiation in Vienna, the so-called CFE agreement.

The impact of this agreement and its accompanying regime of intrusive verification on European security will indeed be enormous. Once implemented, the prospective CFE agreement will drastically reduce the possibility of surprise attack and large scale offensive action, something which has been a fundamental NATO arms control objective from the very beginning.

Although both sides have made much progress toward an agreement, some important issues remain to be settled and the NATO countries call on the Warsaw Pact nations to work with the alliance in resolving these remaining issues.

Canada also believes that the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe should play a much larger role in facilitating a more just and a more stable peace on the continent. As my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, noted in a speech at the University of Toronto last weekend: "The role of the CSCE must now be expanded so that it becomes a drawing board for the new European architecture. As a complement to NATO, the CSCE can become a true instrument of co-operative security, one which would supplement deterrence with reassurance". Similar sentiments on the role of the CSCE were expressed by the NATO defence ministers in their final communique of the recent Defence Planning Committee meeting in Brussels.

It is precisely because the events of the last 12 months have been so fundamental in their impact that we are able to contemplate these happy prospects. At the same time, we must be realistic about some of the dangers which still face us. There remain aspects of the European security environment which call for us to be both prudent and deliberate as we contemplate how we might change the structures of western security, structures which have served us so well over the past four decades.

First of all, it is important to remember that even after the implementation of a CFE agreement, the Soviet Union will retain the most powerful conventional and nuclear forces in Europe. We need to remind ourselves of that fact. This underlines the need for western countries to continue the type of successful collective defence arrangements that NATO has embodied for this past 40 years.

Certainly no one will lament the passing of the cold war, but drawing down the military stand-off in Europe will require a disciplined, co-ordinated effort on the part of the NATO countries so that at each stage of this process, the alliance can retain military forces which are adequate to its security requirements.

In the wake of the CFE agreement, some reduction in defence spending can be expected, and NATO recently decided that its long-standing goal of having alliance defence budgets grow at an annual rate of 3 per cent is no longer appropriate. However, although the precise levels will vary with national circumstances, the determining factor for the alliance countries will continue to be the ability to field forces which are adequate to NATO's missions of deterrence and of defence. We should also remember that there will be substantial costs attached to the verification and to the implementation of the CFE treaty itself.

To return to the speech of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on May 26, I quote: "Twelve months does not invalidate the lessons of history. The possibility of instability is there and Soviet military capabilities remain substantial. Therefore, a strong military mandate for NATO continues to be valid and the North American commitment to Europe represented by the presence of Canadian and American troops there is crucial as we strive for strategic stability at significantly lower levels of military force".

Beyond the need to maintain a stable military balance in Europe, it is important for us to remain aware that rapid and fundamental change, the sort that we are witnessing today in Europe, can be an inherently unstable process. To ensure that the changing nature of European politics remains on a peaceful path, NATO can and indeed should remain a cornerstone of European security, providing a body where some difficult western security issues, from arms control to German unification, can be dealt with in a co-ordinated fashion.

In summary, the alliance has committed itself to seizing the current opportunities to further its long-standing goal of a more stable peace in Europe, one where military forces are required only to prevent war and to ensure self-defence. NATO will retain its general principles of deterrence and defence, but will do so with the lowest possible force levels and a strategy which is appropriate to the new circumstances.

Thus, when representatives from the alliance countries convened the recent nuclear planning group meeting at Kananaskis, Alberta, they reaffirmed NATO's need to base its security on an appropriate mix of nuclear and conventional forces. I must emphasize that throughout the troubled history of East-West relations, nuclear weapons have provided a very powerful inhibition to military conflict, and in my view, the alliance is correct to retain nuclear weapons as an integral part of its deterrent posture for the foreseeable future.

At the same time, however, the alliance agreed that the recent developments in Eastern Europe, coupled with the improving prospects for conventional arms control, suggested a diminishing need for NATO to field short-range nuclear forces. Consonant with this perception, Canada and the other alliance countries welcomed the Bush administration's decision to terminate the modernization of nuclear artillery shells deployed in Europe as well as the development of the follow-on-to-Lance missile.

• (1710)

The nuclear planning group communique welcomed the accelerated timetable for negotiations to reduce land-based short-range nuclear missile systems deployed in Europe, which should commence after the signing of the CFE agreement. As the Soviet Union enjoys a substantial superiority in these systems, NATO reiterated its call for the Soviet Union to carry out substantial reductions in these systems.

At the recent defence planning committee meeting in Brussels, the NATO defence ministers noted that the radical changes in Eastern Europe made it essential that the alliance review its broader military strategy. This review will assess what NATO's defence posture should be in terms of force levels and operational doctrines.

In their final communiqué the defence ministers went on to say the following:

> The alliance is entering a new decade in which it will face unprecedented change and opportunity. In the midst of change, the need for an established and reliable system of collective security will remain undiminished. We shall therefore hold fast to the basic principle of war prevention through deterrence and defence. In adapting our defence efforts to meet the needs of a changing world, we shall ensure that the levels, structures, and operational concepts of our armed forces continue to evolve in a positive and constructive way.

The alliance has already begun to move in this direction. This year's NATO summit, to be held in early July, will consider NATO's role in the transformed Europe of the 1990s. At a more concrete level, the alliance has taken a number of steps which will lower the peacetime readiness of its forces, including changes in its training programs and significant cuts in the size and number of military exercises. Quite apart from the confidence-building effect these measures will have, they will also reduce the impact of NATO's military forces on the public, benefit the quality of life, and protect the environment. I think hon. members will agree that these are important components of the much discussed peace dividend.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, this demonstrates that the alliance is adapting with both prudence and with vision to the sweeping changes in Eastern Europe and the uncertain future of European security. In responding to these new developments, NATO does not simply seek to jettison the past for the sake of public relations. Instead, the alliance seeks to adapt its existing policies, those which have provided for the successful management of western security for the past 40 years, in ways which will allow it to contribute to the forging of a more stable and a more lasting peace. Canada, we are proud to say, has been an integral part of this process and fully supports these recent NATO initiatives.

In conclusion, I want to emphasize that, contrary to the erroneous suggestions of some observers, there is no disagreement between the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs on these issues. Canada will continue to play an active role in the alliance as it adjusts to a changing Europe, and every attempt will be made to harmonize Canada's contribution to NATO with the events in Europe and the defence policy review currently under way.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, it was hard to believe in some instances that we were together on a trip to the Soviet Union and the united Germanys because the way we approach the issue is so different.

My esteemed colleague referred so often to Canada's role in the alliance as if there was to be no change there. Yet what we heard about was the new glasnost, the desire for perestroika, the desire for changes did not include the emphasis on military security and new alliances.

I would like to ask my colleague if he does not agree that our emphasis should be on trade, commercial relations, Arctic security, agricultural agreements, and the many issues that we talked about when we were overseas. We talked about the need for parliamentary exchanges and that even parliamentarians could learn from each other. In particular, new deputies in the Soviet Union were making this request.

It seemed to me that security in the world today derives from civil, political, social, and economic rights and does not come from the end of a gun. Could my esteemed colleague respond to my reflections?

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the hon. member for Northumberland. Perhaps our differences are not so pronounced after all, for I agree with much of what she has said. We need to consider civil rights and we need to have parliamentary exchanges. That is a tremendous way to acquire an education, to learn to meet people's needs, and to understand each other. That is so very important.

Glasnost is occurring. We are now able to see into countries of which we had only a wee glimpse before. Now the doors and windows are opening. I agree with her on all those comments.

Perhaps where we may have some disagreement is that I believe we, as a government and in NATO, know that the U.S.S.R. is still the world's strongest military nation and has this means at its disposal.

History has proven over the last four and a half decades that we have had the preservation of peace in Europe because NATO has been there and we have been strong. We want that peace to continue. Yet, we know that the amount of military forces there will start to diminish. Those numbers will decrease and we welcome that. However, for us immediately to dissolve NATO—and I am not sure that is what the hon. member is suggesting—would not be an honourable or wise course for us to take.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question for the hon. member who just spoke and who obviously spoke on behalf of the government. He and I went to the Soviet Union and Germany, and I think he saw for himself how limited the resources of the Department of External Affairs really were. I would like to ask him why, considering increased demand in Soviet Union, our staff, which is barely twenty strong, has not been increased. There was some talk of reassigning certain postings in Western Europe to Eastern Europe. I don't think that is enough, and it's not the right way to proceed. We need additional staff. If Europe 92 is important to the Conservative government, the people who are already there should be left in place, and transfers to Eastern Europe should involve people from headquarters at External Affairs here in Ottawa, if we are to respond to these new demands and obligations.

The hon. member and I also went to Berlin, and we all know that the new dynamics at work in Germany will require particular attention. A number of Western countries have already increased their diplomatic commercial contingent in Berlin.

• (1720)

Unfortunately, Canada has done nothing so far. The number of Canadian representatives posted in Berlin to deal with our needs is still the same as it was several months ago. We are still treating Berlin as an exclusively military mission. I fail to understand this government's failure to respond energetically to new obligations and new trade opportunities for Canada in Eastern Europe and especially in Germany, via Berlin. Could the hon. member give us some good news in this respect or will he at least make a commitment to join me in urging the minister to increase our diplomatic staff in eastern Europe as soon as possible?

[English]

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the hon. member for Papineau—Saint-Michel. He has raised some very important and vital issues that our government and Parliament need to address.

Regarding limited staffing, he is absolutely right but, as I indicated to someone else, we need to put that in context. When we look at the events which have unfolded in eastern Europe so quickly in the past 12 months, surely we are not going to be able to respond that quickly to all those changes. The hon. member is aware that some of the diplomatic corps and staff had to leave the U.S.S.R., but that should also be put that on the record as well.

There is no doubt that 1992 is an important year. The possibilities for trade in Europe will be unlike anything we have ever seen before. We as a government need to do everything we can assist people involved in business and people who want to travel. We need do everything we can to see that we get our share of that huge market.

The hon. member mentioned East Germany. It is absolutely going to be a dynamic market for the investment of other countries. We know that. East Germany is going to flourish very quickly because of the reunification and what will take place on July 2 regarding their fiscal agreements.

The returns will be much faster in East Germany. We need to make Canadian business people aware of the tremendous opportunities. In fact, the Germans told us to come into Germany and invest and the returns will be fast.

It is not so in the rest of eastern Europe. The returns there will be much slower. They will be perhaps 10, 15, or 20 years for the returns on investments.

Having been there, I certainly accept the challenge of the hon. member for Papineau—Saint-Michel to make my wishes known to the responsible ministers that we have more people in Europe. We need them. In that regard, I agree with him.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am going to use this opportunity to speak on foreign policy—a too infrequent opportunity in the House to focus on this topic of major concern to our country and to the world—to make a plea for a more coherent foreign policy, and also a plea that Canada take a more activist, internationalist role.

At least the last portion of this debate has focused on our relations with eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. Of course, that is where all the action has been in the last year. There have been unbelievable developments in that area. But what we have to remember—and this is why I want to talk about the coherence of foreign policy—is that we have gone way beyond our ability to compartmentalize the world. When events happen as they have done in the Soviet Union and in eastern Europe the implications are global. Canada has an absolutely pivotal role in affecting those events and the implications that flow from them.

Canada has a reputation second to none on the international front. Canada has disproportionate influence because of that reputation. There are some, and I consider myself among them, who think that reputation is more as a result of history than as a result of action, at least in the last decade.

As someone who has been active in international development and interested in international affairs for a long time, I feel a good deal of frustration that Canada does not use the influence she has.

I remind the House that Canada is a member of the Commonwealth; the Francophonie; the G-7, the most powerful countries in the world, and has a seat on the UN Security tCouncil. We are the only country in the world that has those kinds of links. We are unique. We are a very humble country, in spite of all this, and I think too humble. We use our influence to too little effect.

On this Liberal opposition day, I hope that my contribution to this debate will be to urge Canada to be more activist and more coherent in the development of foreign policy.

Canada should be using its role as a bridge between the developed world and the developing world. As someone who has had the opportunity to travel more in the developing world than in the developed world, I can tell you that Canada has a glowing reputation. I agree with what the Prime Minister said today in his address to the House on the crisis that is confronting us, that the rest of the world looks in amazement that we cannot sort out our own problems.

If we could just step outside ourselves and look at Canada through the eyes of someone from Sudan, Brazil, or El Salvador, the pride that we would feel in what we have achieved would be a motivation to solve our current impasse. But I digress.

Canada should be using its role much more effectively as that bridge between the developed world and the developing world. This is really a global village. When one talks about security and environmental issues, we are in this together and Canada, with its reputation, should be using all those seats, in the Commonwealth, the Francophonie, and the G–7, to a much greater effect.

Our Minister of Finance sits on one of the major councils, the International Monetary Fund. As someone who is on the subcommittee on international debt, I know the kind of influence the International Monetary Fund has in international development and in foreign policy. Foreign policy cannot be distinguished from economic policy or from trade policy. They are all together. That is why I plead for coherence.

We need a vision of what Canada is and of what the world can achieve. This is what I see lacking in Canada now, a lack of vision and direction in foreign policy. It is a tragic loss of opportunity, not just for Canada, but for the world. Canada should be using that role to become not just a peacekeeper. We have a very good reputation in that role. There are many people from my constituency who have served with the armed forces with great distinction in a peacekeeping role; Cyprus is one example. I am not trying to denigrate that role in any way when I say that, but we should be extending ourselves beyond peacekeeping to peacemaking.

• (1730)

With all the influence that I know Canada has, this is what we should be doing, peacemaking. We talk about the peace dividend or the sort of economic benefits that will naturally flow from the decreasing tensions, from the lowering of the walls and from the growing sense of trust. Mr. Gorbachev just left our country yesterday and it was like a love–in with him.

We should be using that greater sense of trust to achieve the economic benefits, the peace dividend. What should we do with that peace dividend? We should be developing environmental policy, not just for Canada—of course we should be doing it in Canada—but we should be looking globally to see what we can do internationally because we are a shrinking world.

One trillion dollars per year is spent on arms. That amount defies the imagination. I know it is an awful lot of money. Stephen Lewis, the distinguished former UN ambassador has pointed out that 5 per cent of that trillion, or $50 billion, would permit doubling all health care expenditures for the four billion people of the developing world. We could provide universal immunization for the six deadly preventable diseases for every single infant on the face of this earth.

We talk about environmental degradation and over–population. We know the causes of those. It is because people do not have choices. Canada has the ability to contribute to the expansion of those choices for people. We know that population growth and the reasons behind it is, first of all, you have to improve the status of women. Women have to be given choices over the size and spacing of their children. That is a rather ironic thing to say, considering what this House did just this week regarding the choice for women.

It is also the environmental degradation that accrues from over–population. There are nearly six billion people on this planet and projections for population growth are quite horrific. In Canada, we think that we have limitless places to go, and we do, but we do only on the understanding that the environment stays as it is. I also sit on the environment committee and I can assure you the environment is not staying as it is, it is going down the slippery slope very quickly. The advent of global warming is a crisis. The oceans are rising. This will mean that there is going to be millions of environmental refugees, at a time of burgeoning population growth.

I do not want to be too catastrophic in my descriptions, but we are facing a real crisis. Canada, with its reputation in the Commonwealth, in the Francophonie and in the G-7, should be taking a more activist role. The finance minister and the International Monetary Fund also should be taking a more activist role because people in the developing world have no choice. The reason that their choices are limited is because we, in the developed countries, are not allowing them the choices. We are insisting that because they have this debt, they should pay it. I know I have some friends in the gallery from the banking community. They know, and I know, because I used to work in the banking community myself, that it takes two to make a loan. It takes two to make a bad loan. When a bad loan is made it is not just the debtor who pays, the creditor has to take responsibility as well.

We in the north are partly responsible to the south for our actions. The international debt crisis is not just a Third World problem, it is our problem. It is a world problem and we are all suffering from it. It is not just economic policy, foreign policy, trade policy, finance policy, they all have to be interlinked. I urge this government to have a coherent policy, to have a vision of the world and our place in it and where we can go.

The kind of peace dividend we should consider is one which would help stop the destruction from arms expenditures, the $1 trillion a year in arms expenditures. A number of those dollars go to finance wars in the developing world. Of the 22 million human beings—nearly the population of Canada—killed in warfare since 1945 have died in regional conflicts, many of them in the Third World. This is why Canada has a role.

When Stephen Lewis, our former ambassador to the UN travelled across Canada, he spoke passionately about the importance of the United Nations in a peacekeeping and a peace-generating role. We have to shore up the UN and our international reputation could be used to great effect in that way.

We have a seat on the Security Council. We sought that seat, we bargained for that seat. When I was at the UN last fall many representatives of developing countries spoke to me about their hopes that Canada will use that seat to voice their concerns on the Security Council. They voted for Canada to be on the Security Council. They did so out of a sense of hope because they know that Canada can act as the bridge between the developed and the developing world.

We can do it with overseas development assistance which still is not up to what we promised, .7 per cent of the GNP.

We can take a more activist role in the international debt crisis. We can use Canada's role to a greater effect on the environment. We can be strong in the international fora which our represents attend. We will be listened to and respected. We are not a bit player on the world stage, we are a major player. We have to use that reputation to a much greater effect.

In conclusion, there are few things we can do. We can increase overseas development assistance, use Canada's reputation to solve the international debt crisis, and concern ourselves with the environmental degradation of our world. We can use our reputation and technical abilities to that end and use Canada as a peacemaker rather than a peacekeeper.

• (1740)

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, it is always difficult to get this Parliament, and I am not blaming anyone in particular, to have a wide-ranging debate on international affairs. I have noticed that members seem to be somewhat reluctant to show a concern for international problems, as if these were not important to their constituents. That is why I want to say to young Canadians who are listening to us today that in a country like Canada, any federal member of Parliament who is worth his salt should be concerned about the international situation. After all, isn't that what federal members are for?

[English]

Our esteemed colleague said that we should be more active in an international role. I wish we had, as members of Parliament of Canada, an international activist group of people. I assure her that I will buy the first membership card.

Mr. Gorbachev came to Canada in 1983. I had the honour to chair the first meeting on foreign affairs and national defence with Mr. Gorbachev. I say things today that may sound unusual but I had to twist many arms, in a friendly way of course, to make members attend that meeting. It turned out to be one of the most successful meetings to have ever taken place. In my view, it was because of the personality of Mr. Gorbachev. Yet, at that time, so many people tried to block that meeting. I am not mentioning any party in particular or any individual.

I had a close friendship with the Soviet ambassador, Mr. Yakovlev for ten years in Canada. In the early 1970s, people were afraid to be afraid, security services were afraid to see you too often with people who were not considered to be too kosher. I say this to please my friend, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship. But, some members at that time dared to be different in foreign affairs.

I rejoice today when I see what is taking place between east and west. I rejoice at what I see taking place in South Africa, even though I believe officially, at the risk of being embarrassed, that we should now reach out to the Government of South Africa, to encourage them before this becomes an explosion of hate; hate between white, hate between black, and hate between black and white. That is what I predict could happen. The time has come for all parliamentarians who dare to reach out even though some say it may not be the right time.

[Translation]

This Saturday, I will speak at Lafontaine Park in Montreal, together with a number of people we French Canadians in the Quebec Liberal Party do not meet very often. The will include Mr. Larose of the CSN, Ms. Harel, a member for the Parti Québécois, Pauline Julien and several others. There are going to be quite a few speeches. Mine will be about a subject that is rarely mentioned in Parliament. I see my hon. friend to whom I referred earlier, and I can look him straight in the eye and tell him that as far as I am concerned, in the past 25 years one of the last powder kegs remaining on this planet is the terrible situation in the Middle East. However, when a member of Parliament admits to concerns of this kind, you know how they are treated in this country. I say this publicly and with regret, because I believe that if the State of Israel exists, it has a right to be secure. But I also think that if we have the kind of vision the hon. member for the NDP mentioned earlier, we must consider what the threats are to this state's security. What can threaten its security is a refusal to seek solutions to the incredible problem of the Palestinian community—I am not going to get controversial today—of those Palestinians who are a living unit.

Oh, these feelings of hate that keep getting worse! Hate between Israelis—I mentioned earlier the hate between Blacks and hate between Whites in South Africa, and hate between Blacks and Whites—well, I have seen this happening for a long time. I have said it so many times, and sometimes I feel as though I am the only one who realizes that it is these long standing feelings of hatred that have caused the whole tragedy that is Lebanon.

I knew Lebanon when it was a paradise on earth. However, and I am getting to my question, they didn't want to deal with the problem at the time, and today, there seems to be the same reluctance to resolve this problem of hostility between the State of Israel and the Arab countries and between Israel and the Palestinians, and now between Israelis and between people who live in Israel.

I wonder why Canadians are so afraid to react. I could go on for hours on this subject. I would like to ask the hon. member whether with all her importants concerns—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope that the hon. member would put his question. If there is no one else who wants to ask a question, I will allow the member a supplementary.

Mr. Prud'homme: In all the preoccupations that you have expressed, of which I am well aware, is that part of the world also one of your preoccupations when you tell us that we should be more active in international affairs?

Ms. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I think the events of today absolutely demonstrate what I was saying. There is too little opportunity to speak about foreign policy. What happens is that we try to lump it all together, and I am as guilty of that as anyone else.

What we have to do in this country is realize that we are living in an evolving world. I am not just talking about foreign policies. I am talking about words as well and redefining what security means. What does security mean? It does not mean more armaments in Palestine and Lebanon. It is not making them more secure. It does not mean more armaments for South Africa or southern Africa. That is for certain. It does not make any of us feel more secure.

I do not want to get too cerebral here, but we are talking about a way of looking at ourselves as world citizens, just as we have managed with the Charest report to put aside partisan interests. On a world scale, we should be able to put aside national interests when we are talking about the environment or peace. I think we are capable of getting there. There is hope—I am an optimistic person—that is out there with respect to the events of last year, extending through this year. It shows what we are capable of. In Canada, we should be using our position to more greatly affect bringing that kind of world vision to fruition.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I will try to make this short.

I think my colleague will agree, but I want her to comment. One of our concerns with the détente occurring in the east-west and the lessening of the military threat is the transfer of arms trade from east-west to north-south. There has been far too much of the arms trade north-south. I am wondering if she is equally concerned about the change, our government not specifically addressing it but suggesting that our own arms industry should be converting to peaceful measures, such as technology for the environment.

Second, when she referred to coherence in policy with the government, one of my major concerns—I still get questions about this—was the specific situation of our Prime Minister going to the Caribbean and forgiving Caribbean debt. There seemed to be no coherence on the government side when that was done because it has caused so much negative opinion in this country against foreign aid. I wonder if the hon. member could comment on that.

• (1750)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Succinctly, in two minutes.

Ms. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, it is a very complex question for two minutes, but I will do my best.

I absolutely agree with the hon. member for Northumberland. think that the reaction to the ARMX exhibit last year in Ottawa is really instructive to the government about what Canadians are willing to tolerate. We are not willing to tolerate militarization and economic development through military might. ARMX was an absolute anachronism. We are not willing to be part of that little game with the arms traders. It is not a little game, it is a rather large game.

Regarding the forgiveness of debt, this is what I was trying to address in the body of my speech. When you talk about forgiveness of debt, it cannot just be giving alms to the poor. It is not like that, as I pointed out. It takes two to make a debt and irresponsibility on our part and irresponsibility on the part of the other. It takes two. We are not giving charity. The kind of assistance that we should be giving is helping people to develop themselves. That is why, in my final few moments, I would like to make another plea for coherence in foreign policy. It is not evident yet, but I am still hoping.

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, before I begin, I would like you to know that some of my colleagues would also like to say a few words. Do I understand that this debate will end at 6.15 precisely?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes. If nobody is going to ask you any questions or comments, then I think we could get two speakers in, if you want to split your time. You have 22 minutes. Govern yourself accordingly.

[Translation]

Mr. Assad: Mr. Speaker, when I saw today that the House would consider an opposition motion by the hon. member for Papineau—Saint-Michel and discuss some of the world's serious problems, I read the motion and I said to myself that the first spot that comes to my mind is the Middle East.

I agree there have been important events in eastern Europe, with all these unexpected changes that have suddenly revolutionized the political face of Europe, in a way we have not seen for over 50 years. But as the hon. member for Saint-Denis pointed out, if there is any spot that is like a volcano—

Mr. Prud'homme: A powder keg.

Mr. Assad: —a powder keg about to explode, it is certainly the Middle East. Anyone who is at all concerned about human rights and humanitarian considerations and who looks at what is happening in the Middle East finds it very difficult to accept what is going on down there.

I will just give a few examples. Mr. Speaker, Canadians who are listening to us, especially, as the hon. member said earlier, young Canadians, should have an interest in these issues because we are living in a rapidly shrinking world. As members of a federal Parliament, we have a duty to look at what is happening on the international scene because if we believe in human rights, in the rights and freedoms of the individual, we cannot ignore, in fact we must be on the alert for violations of those rights. I will give you an example, and I must say that this particular situation is an extremely difficult one and that it is regrettable that so many people in this country prefer to ignore it. They refuse to fact the facts.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, look at occupied Gaza and what has happened over the years, how Lebanon has been torn apart by the Syrian and Israeli armies inside its territory which they cannot seem to get rid of. There have been many years of occupation. Who have been the victims? The Palestinians.

Everybody expresses concern and sympathy for the Palestinians, and yet this goes on to no end. There are violations that we have not seen since the Second World War. For example, there have been school closures in the occupied territories which are illegal under the Geneva Convention. The Palestinians in the occupied territories have not been in school now for 30 months. That is one of the worst violations.

There has been demolition and sealing of homes, and over 1,400 curfews that lasted weeks where 600,000 people were confined 24 hours a day, five days a week.

Dr. Israel Schack of Israel, a most outstanding scholar, a man who survived the Warsaw ghettos and the concentration camps was in Canada last week. This man has the courage to bring up the violations of his government. He spoke of the uprooting of olive and citrus trees which the Palestinians need to survive. Since the intifada started, 180,000 trees have been deliberately uprooted by Israeli forces. That is unbelievable. Can you imagine ripping up by the roots the livelihood of a people?

Is there anything more precious in the Middle East than water? The day will come when water will be more important than oil. It is already a cherished commodity in the Middle East. Yet there is illegal use of resources of occupied territories, forbidden under the Geneva Convention. The use of water by the Palestinians has been frozen at the 1967 level.

The 1988 water census shows that 1,100,000 Palestinians in the occupied territories were allowed to use 17 per cent of the total annual amount of the underground water and—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Erie on a point of order.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, my point of order rests on whether or not the information that is being shared by the hon. member, which may be of interest to all of us, has anything to do with the motion that is before the House today. I question whether the topic he is discussing has anything to do with the motion and I suggest that he be brought to order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): My understanding is that it is a matter of foreign policy but I am sure the hon. member will be getting closer to the motion as he carries on with his speech.

Mr. Assad: Mr. Speaker, it concerns general foreign policy and –I am sure that if the hon. member knew the facts of what is going on in the occupied country, as a decent human being who believes in humanitarian rights, he would be one of those protesting this violation against human rights.

Mr. Fretz: What has it got to do with Canada's foreign policy?

Mr. Assad: That's your narrow view of things in the world. Continue with your attitude and you will see where it will lead us.

Under international law and the Geneva Convention confiscation of land is prevented by an occupying power. Yet, 54 per cent of the west bank has been confiscated, and 40 per cent of the Gaza land has been confiscated. There have been 900 Palestinian casualties, more than 200 of which were children, and 80,000 injuries.

• (1800)

As some members have said, Canada's role has a disproportionate influence in the world regardless that we have a population of only some 27 million. We can influence certain events. We can appeal to other countries on humanitarian grounds to protect peoples under occupied territories who are suffering, are being deprived of their livelihoods, and are under strenuous conditions.

I am hoping that in the weeks and months to come the Liberal party will be more active in the House during Question Period concerning international affairs and this situation.

We are all aware of eastern Europe and what has been developing there. There is no problem. They do not have armies of occupation in their territories.

What we need here from the Canadian government is a persistent demand to the authorities in Israel that we are aware of the violations of human rights, that we are aware that there are Palestinians who are suffering difficult times, and that we feel that our Canadian government should intervene.

I am sure that all Canadians would like to know the facts about what is going on in the Middle East. It is a very volatile situation. As long as these atrocities continue and as long as this situation is permitted, what can we expect? Do we expect that the Palestinians are going to come out of this after thousands are dead and say: "Well, those are the fortunes of war"?

There is going to be vengeance and that is what we want to avoid. We want this country to intervene to make sure that this comes to an end, to make sure that they are forced to sit down with the Palestinians and give them their rightful place in the Middle East.

This is a subject about which we could go on for hours. It is regrettable that we have to raise a subject that is so important for world peace and for the nations that are occupying those territories, be it in Lebanon, and for the Palestinians—

Mr. Prud'homme: And to be interrupted.

Mr. Assad: Yes, to be interrupted by somebody who is supposed to know better.

Nevertheless, the time has come. We have to look at the facts and at reality and point out to the world who are the guilty parties.

[Translation]

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to address this House, although briefly, on such an important question as Canada's foreign policy, especially as it concerns the countries of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

Since I have long had a keen interest in this subject, I am sorry that I cannot go into it as deeply as it deserves. Since I was elected to this House, Mr. Speaker, I tell you that in the world today and especially in Canada, our relations with other countries and especially with such an important one as the Soviet Union, as shown by Mr. Gorbachev's visit among us yesterday and the day before, will interest me even more, among my other concerns. I am grateful for the privilege to be able to talk about it briefly today, at least for starters.

[English]

I will make a few brief, general remarks which will be more impressionistic than factual in their content about the subject before us today.

The first remark has to do with leadership. I would like to contrast the style of leadership which has emerged in the events that have been taking place in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union with the style of leadership which has been manifested in the reaction to those events in the west. I believe they are telling for us as Canadians and for those living in the western industrialized world as to the kind of way in which we are going to have to react diplomatically to circumstances and to events which will be taking place in the years ahead.

It has been said that the revolution taking place in the Soviet Union has been a revolution from the top down. Clearly there is no doubt that what has captured the imagination of the world has been the style of leadership manifested by Mr. Gorbachev and others who have emerged in the Soviet Union during these last several months to transform the economy, the society, and, indeed, the entire world by the events which have taken place there.

What has characterized the leadership as we have seen of Mr. Gorbachev, which is so much in contrast to traditional diplomacy, has been his willingness to forgo the established patterns of the past, to take amazing political risks, to move forward on all fronts, and to be prepared to risk all, knowing that the transformation of his society really had to take place all at once. We have seen that Mr. Gorbachev has been working feverishly. He has captured our imagination by his ability to do something which no one else has been willing to do. He has been carried forward by events.

I think that is one characteristic which has been manifested in the nature of situation taking place in the Soviet Union. The force of his personal leadership, as well as those of others who have come forward throughout the Soviet Union from all walks of life, has propelled the events that we have seen.

Another aspect of the leadership in the Soviet Union and in eastern Europe is that it has come from unpredictable places. We all know that the origins of many of these events can be traced to the early 1980s in Poland. Who is the person who has been most identified with those events? A shipyard worker, Lech Walesa, who came from nowhere to guide and move the events in Poland through the difficult decade that emerged last year in the democratic reforms which have taken place in that country.

We have seen in the western press observing events in that country just how that particular personality has been transformed by the momentous changes in which he has been involved producing.

If we turn to Czechoslovakia we see that a playwright is now president of that country, someone who has been in exile and in prison for many years under the previous regime. The examples could be multiplied.

What this has shown is the fluid and totally new styles of leadership which the kinds of events taking place in Europe have demonstrated. What has been unfortunate is the cautious, timid reaction in the west. It is more serious than simply wanting to watch and see how the drama in eastern Europe is going to play itself out. It has been marked by an inability to comprehend the complexity of the events taking place in eastern Europe. Perhaps more than typical has been the reaction of Canada which has been so slow in responding to the events that have taken place.

• (1810)

The Prime Minister's visit last November is illustrative of that, if not merely for the fact that it took him so long to get there, a fact which was remarked upon by Mr. Gorbachev himself. He and this government have been so slow to respond to the initiatives which have taken place as a result of that visit.

We are only seeing now the Secretary of State for External Affairs finally coming to grips with charting Canadian foreign policy to react to those events. It is moving in a piecemeal, step by step fashion which does not do justice to the times in which we live. That is characteristic of the western response which has taken place to events in eastern Europe.

We know now that with the rapid integration of the world in which we live that we have to rethink completely our notions of diplomacy, reacting to external forces, participation, and leadership.

That is the basic message I want to bring here today. I realize this debate will go on far beyond this day which we in the Liberal opposition have initiated.

Canada has much to offer the Soviet Union and eastern Europe in this time of rapid change. We have many interests in common. There are ways in which we can be more pro-active and more aggressive in articulating abroad our interests, our concerns, and our willingness to participate in changing the planet toward a direction in which it is already going. These are ways which are consistent with the values that Canada has always stood for: the values of tolerance, democracy, freedom, enterprise, and a certain civility which is now starting to be manifested in these countries. It is something which is so long overdue.

I urge this government and all of us in this place to be willing to expand our horizons, to think in new ways, and to take a lead from some of the events which are taking place in these countries and from some of the leadership that is expressed there.

We should be more bold in our initiatives. Whether those initiatives be in terms of collective security, Arctic co-operation, new environmental concerns, or the new environmental imperatives which we now realize are the major issues confronting the planet in the future, we must be prepared to rethink our approaches in a dramatic way. We must be prepared to take our lead from what is taking place in eastern Europe, particularly with the leadership that has been coming out of those countries.

That is my message for our debate today. I would urge the government to be more assertive and daring in its approach to foreign policy as this policy review is being designed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 6.15 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 81(17), proceedings on the motion have expired.

[Translation]

The House will now deal with Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[Translation]

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu) moved that Bill C-201, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (scabs and essential services), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to start the debate on second reading of Bill C-201, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (scabs and essential services). The purpose of this bill is basically to prohibit Crown corporations from using the services of a person hired for the sole purpose of performing the duties of an employee who is on strike or locked out.

The bill was first tabled in 1987, but unfortunately was not among the winning numbers in the parliamentary lottery during our government's first term. That is why I had to table the bill again in April, 1989.

When the bill was first tabled, it was intended as a way to avoid a recurrence of strikes as problematic and painful for this government as the strikes by letter carriers and postal workers in the spring and summer of 1986. You will recall that at the time, the Canada Post Corporation resorted to hiring scabs right across Canada, mostly young unemployed Canadians, to replace its employees who were legally on strike. This had the effect of worsening the dispute and led to increasingly tragic scenes of violence.

We saw innocent youths enduring insults for the sake of working under terrible conditions for a higher salary than regular employees. It was certainly not an edifying sight to see the lowest paid workers in our society fighting each other for the sake of a temporary job. These scenes, reminiscent of the 30s and the Depression, are completely out of place in the 90s.

Although it has now been nearly three years since these unhappy events took place, I think that now, more than ever before, the federal government desperately needs an instrument that encourages negotiation instead of confrontation. At a time when the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is being held high as an example, we have a duty as a government to put an end to situations that are an affront to human dignity and human rights.

The endless dispute at Voyageur, a federally-regulated transportation company but not subject to the Quebec Labour Code or Quebec anti-scab legislation, recently provided us with one more reason to acquire as soon as possible a flexible yet effective instrument for limiting disputes. This particular dispute was settled not long ago, but it went on for more than two years.

This Canadian antiscab legislation stems basically from Clause 97(a) of Bill 45 to amend the Labour Code which was introduced by Pierre-Marc Johnson, the then-Quebec Minister of Labour, on July 29, 1977.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to summarize some of the arguments in favour of these antiscab provisions about which so much was written about 13 years ago.

These provisions were meant to eliminate one of the major bones of construction in some labour disputes and one of the most apparent sources of frustration and violence during work stoppages. The history of Canadian Labour disputes shows that the systematic imbalance of the parties quickly results in frustration for one of the parties, even both, and ends up in verbal or physical abuse.iolence.

Since the Labour Code granted the right to strike, was it not normal to expect this right to imply the protection of the jobs with which it is associated?

Of course, a small minority of employers use scabs. But to tolerate the backward behaviour of this minority would mean in fact a denial of the basic right to strike.

• (1820)

The data obtained between 1972 and 1980 by the Centre de recherche et de statistiques sur le marché du travail and which can be found in the report entitled Les briseurs de grève et le Code du travail which this Quebec organization published in March 1982, clearly demonstrate that the implementation of the Quebec antiscab legislation had a deterrent effect on employers.

Between 1972 and 1977, fewer than 3 per cent of the disputes in Quebec had seen the hiring of scabs. Bill 45 caused this proportion to fall by half to less than 2 per cent. The data concerning these disputes indicate that among these remaining 2 per cent, employers were mostly ignorant of the legislation and rarely acting in bad faith.

Among federal institutions, it is mostly Canada Post which used scabs over the past ten years. In addition to lowering for long periods of time the level of postal services which the Canadian people had every right to expect, these strikes were a major traumatic experience for Canadians. For a great many senior citizens and people living alone, their mail carrier provides more than a simple service, he is a friend, a witness of better or worste times, a smile which brightens their daily routine. Several of them felt that, when a scab was delivering their mail it was a betrayal of their mail carrier! And yet, waiting for their cheques for some of them might often have been the only adventure in their lives!

Upon reflection, I feel that it would be advisable to extend the application of this future federal antiscab legislation not only to Crown corporations, but to all federally incorporated businesses. This might prevent the deterioration of disputes, as in the case involving the Voyageur Transport Company in Montreal or the Hudson Bay's a few years ago.

It is well known that the Quebec law not only limited the number of conflicts involving strike-breakers but also appreciably reduced the average length of strikes involving scabs. The above-mentioned report points out that since Bill 45 took effect in Quebec, the average duration of these conflicts has fallen from 171 to 111 days, a decrease of 35 per cent, which is quite considerable.

This law has also reduced the number of man-days lost as a result of work stoppages and thus the impact on workers' jobs.

The shorter a conflict, the less likely it is to be violent and lead to a strained atmosphere unsuitable for solving conflicts. When the employees go back to work, the climate will therefore be more serene and thus help operations resume more quickly.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that Bill C-201 is in no way meant to prevent the provision of essential services or to prevent companies from continuing operations, but rather to make these essential services more humane.

This bill will not prevent employers from trying to run their business with management personnel or non-striking employees or from calling police or security agencies to protect their property and facilitate access for managers and other employees to the premises.

However, any employer who violates a federal anti-scab law would be liable to a fine of $20,000 to $100,000 per day, while employer representatives who agree to use strike-breakers could be fined from $10,000 to $50,000.

Some might fear that under such a law, some companies would have only two choices: to close down or to accept the union's demands. The Quebec experience shows that this argument is invalid, since those companies that closed following legal strikes did so not because they did not call upon strike-breakers but for many other reasons.

I think that our government, just like the Quebec government in 1977, should give labour relations in federal institutions a new orientation. Despite the fears of some, the purpose is not to favour one party over the other, but rather to eliminate as best we can, with the means at our disposal, those things most likely to cause conflict and tension in labour-management relations.

Mr. Speaker, these provisions are meant to protect those who are out on the street to legitimately exercise their right to strike. They protect the dignity of our workers, but their main purpose is to try and put an end to the sorry spectacle of companies who would hire other workers to replace those who are exercising their legal rights.

By restoring a certain balance between the parties and by obliging them to pursue their negotiations in a calmer atmosphere, the government is playing a leading role in changing attitudes.

Too many employers have been negligent about maintaining this balance during negotiations, an attitude that has not worked out to their advantage.

After all, for an employer the purpose of collective bargaining is to know in advance under what rules and criteria his company will operate during the next two or three years. A collective agreement means that for two or three years, the employer has the assurance he will be able to operate without any problems extraneous to the production process that will prevent his company from functioning properly. Employers who failed to accept these elementary rules of the game have found to their sorrow this has been counter-productive.

At a time of increasing references to new agreements between management and employees, to co-operative management and participation by all workers in company operations—at a time when the emphasis is on the need for providing mechanisms for permanent negotiations; at a time when we try to get everyone more and more involved as employees and as citizens aware of the national issues, I think it is urgent to stop this medieval, outdated procedure of resorting to use of scabs.

In the recent debate on national issues like free trade, the deficit or the new goods and services tax, this government has tried to involve all citizens in a public consultation process so that all Canadians will participate in Canada's economic renewal.

It is with this attitude in mind that we should consider the need for federal anti-scab legislation. If we want Canadian workers to have confidence in their government, we must be able to preserve the most precious attribute they have: their dignity. The right to strike was acquired over the years thanks to the courage of many workers and to their faith in human dignity. It was acquired after bitter struggles, won at great personal cost. It is this fundamental right that is challenged by the use of scabs. By allowing this to happen, the government is indirectly undermining the workers' right to strike. The hiring of scabs in some disputes might jeopardize the right to strike, because a party refuses to accept the rules of the game and tilts in its favour the normal balance of power.

I do not think that the government wishes to rewrite history. Quite the contrary, our government wants to move forward, toward creativity, technology, and well-designed and more modern management methods.

Far from ruining the good relations between the parties, this bill is meant to re-establish order and strike again a new balance between them.

The parties are responsible for this balance and the success or failure of the bargaining process will hinge on the way they use it.

As I was saying earlier, most strikes and lock-outs end up in service agreements, without the employers using scabs. In a sense, this antiscab bill is more provocative than coercitive.

The purpose of this bill is also to prevent situations from deteriorating and striking workers from breaking material and causing injuries out of frustration.

As I said, the idea is not to go to war against employers, but to impose humane and reasonable conditions during disputes, to create tools to make it possible for striking workers to calm negotiate during strikes and lock-outs without fear of losing their jobs to scabs.

• (1830)

What is important is for the duration of disputes to be restricted so as not to unduly penalize the public, the workers and the corporation. Statistics show that all disputes in which scabs were used lasted a very long time, much too long, Mr. Speaker.

I hope that the House will be interested in this bill and that most members will support it on second reading.

[English]

Mr. W.C. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton) Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak today on Bill C-201, introduced for the consideration of the House by the hon. member for Richelieu. The bill is a detailed account that reflects the concerns of the hon. member in dealing with an important subject with both economic and social ramifications.

The bill before the House proposes a number of changes to the Canada Labour Code, Part I, Industrial Relations. Its over-all objective is two-fold. First, it seeks to prohibit the hiring of persons to replace the employees of a Crown corporation who are on strike or are locked out. Second, the bill proposes changes intended to ensure that essential services are maintained in the event of a strike or lock-out in Crown corporations.

I share the sentiments of many members of the House who hold the view that good industrial relations is an essential element of our economic and social fabric and that it can make a meaningful contribution to our economic performance. The preamble to the Canada Labour Code, Part I, Industrial Relations, makes reference to the significance of good industrial relations practices to the economy. It indicates a commitment by Parliament:

> —to support labour and management in their co-operative efforts to develop good relations and constructive collective bargaining practices, and deems the development of good industrial relations to be in the best interests of Canada in ensuring a just share of the fruits of progress to all.

The preamble to the code makes clear that there is not only an economic significance to industrial relations but, also, that there is a larger impact that extends to the common good of Canadian society. This is declared in the first paragraph of the preamble which affirms that:

> There is a long tradition in Canada of labour legislation and policy designed for the promotion of the common well-being through the encouragement of free collective bargaining and the constructive settlement of disputes.

One of the important elements of the bill before us is the fact that it proposes to make changes to some important industrial relations practices in several industries under the Canada Labour Code, but only to Crown corporations. We must appreciate that the spectrum of industries under the jurisdiction of the code is very broad in scope and covers a wide range of economic and industrial activity.

The range of industries covered by the code's jurisdiction encompasses the different modes of interprovincial and international transportation, including railways, airlines, trucks, and bus transport. Encompassed, as well, are the telephone, telegraph, and cable systems; shipping; longshoring; broadcasting; banking; pipelines; ferries; tunnels and bridges; primary fishing; and most Crown corporations. Also included are certain undertakings that have been declared by Parliament to be for the general advantage of Canada, including grain elevators, uranium mining and processing, and flour and feed mills.

This is not to suggest that we should want to see the measures before us applied to all federal jurisdiction industries. On the contrary, measures proposed in the bill present a number of practical difficulties that require the scrutiny of members of the House. But I have to question, in light of the wide range of industries under the code, why Crown corporations should be singled out for special treatment.

I feel certain that significant inequities would arise in the application of our labour relations laws as they apply to industries under the Canada Labour Code if the bill now before us were to be adopted. For example, labour relations at Canadian National Railways and VIA Rail fall under the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code and would be encompassed under Bill C-201.

Canadian Pacific Railways is also under the code, but it is not a Crown corporation and would not be covered by the bill. As a consequence, the provisions of the bill would have us accept the view that railway operations under Canadian National are essential while those under Canadian Pacific are not essential.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is another example. It is also a Crown corporation, as we know, with labour relations under the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code. Collective bargaining at the CBC would be affected by the proposals included in the bill. Limits would be placed on collective bargaining at the CBC that would not be felt in negotiations at the CTV Network, the Global Television Network, Télémetropole Inc. and other radio and television broadcasting companies under the jurisdiction of the Code that are not Crown corporations.

Miners working for the Cape Breton Development Corporation are under the Canada Labour Code and would be affected by Bill C-201, but workers in similar jobs in the mining industry working for Denison Mines or Rio Algom Mines would bargain under different collective bargaining laws if the bill were adopted. Workers in one company would be treated differently from workers doing similar work in another company in the same industry.

I would submit for the consideration of hon. members that the bill contains an element of arbitrariness in its coverage and that this would create an inequity in the application of the laws governing collective bargaining among workers and employees in the federal jurisdiction under the Canada Labour Code.

Another factor I believe should be considered in this regard is the fact that collective bargaining can take place on an industry-wide basis involving one union representing employees working in two or more companies. The most important example that comes to mind would be Canadian National Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

These two companies have frequently bargained on a joint basis in past negotiations with nine unions represented by the Associated Railway Unions. Although the approach to bargaining in the railway industry can vary from one round of bargaining to the next, the decision by CN and CP and the union to bargain jointly in this case was in all likelihood taken by the parties in the interest of reaching a collective agreement in the most expeditious manner possible.

The provisions of Bill of C-201, however, would change the framework within which collective agreements negotiations take place and, in doing so, could adversely affect the conditions for determining the most expeditious approach to collective agreement negotiations.

I suggest that we should not want to interfere with the options and the flexibility of the collective bargaining process now available to the parties through the provisions of the Canada Labour Code.

I would like to conclude my remarks by saying that I appreciate the efforts taken by the hon. member in preparing and introducing this bill, and acknowledge the serious attention that he has given to the matter. However, there remains some practical difficulties which will require careful consideration.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I was asked a short while ago by my colleagues on this side of the House to respond to Bill C-201 and to tell the mover and drafter of this bill our thoughts with respect to its implementation.

First, let me say that as we go through labour codes and legislation as they surround the rights of labour and employers in the country on the federal scale, we find very quickly that there is a great deal of legislation already in place. One wonders if perhaps the legislation that we are considering today is not duplicated in some other act, for example, the Canada Labour Code, in Sections 2, 4 or 5; the Public Service legislation; or other acts that respect and honour the rights of labour and corporations in the so-called conflicts that always seems to exist between employers and employee in the workforce. I want to compliment the member for having the foresight to bring it forward in this House. He stated that he commenced the movement of this bill in 1986 and for many reasons it did not get to the House. Just recently, in April of this year, he again won the lottery and has the opportunity now to speak to it.

• (1840)

The operative section is Clause 1. I will come back to that in just a moment. The other operative sections support Section 89 (1.1) right through to Section 90.6. Those and Clause 3 on page 4 of the bill are really the operative sections. Section 100 on to the end of the proposed changes that he is suggesting to the Canada Labour Code are the remedial or penalty sections in this bill. I will come back to section 89 in just a moment.

What is the purpose of the legislation? Obviously this is a bill which is, as it states, to prohibit the hiring of other employees during a strike to replace those employees who are on strike and, second, to ensure that essential services in this country are maintained during the course of a labour dispute. That is the purpose of the legislation and I will refer to that in just a moment or two. However, we do not talk about what is defined as an essential service.

What is this member really trying to do? What mischief is he trying to correct through the introduction of another section of the Labour Code? What is he attempting to make easier within the labour movement and within the structure of our labour-management agreements in this country?

Simply put, this piece of legislation, with which we on this side of the House do not disagree, refers to the problems that were caused in two incidents in the last year or year and a half. One was the post office strike of approximately a year ago. The post office mail carriers had decided to go on strike and the post office started to consider hiring outside people in order to fill the jobs of the letter carriers who were on strike.

The other piece of mischief which I think this bill is trying to correct is what we dealt with in this House in December of this year when the Coast Guard went on strike, prohibited the shipment of grain and caused the closure of the St. Lawrence Seaway approximately 12 or 14 days before the end of the shipping season which prevented all of the grain from the port of Thunder Bay from moving down into the seaway and into the terminals at the downriver ports. As a result, it had to be shipped through the winter by rail at the expense of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. Those are the two incidents of mischief which I think prompted this legislation and which this legislation is designed to correct.

With respect to the Coast Guard strike, Bill C-49, which was passed a short while ago, has corrected that situation. As you will recall, that is back-to-work legislation that was put through this House some 10 or 12 days after the Coast Guard had gone on strike and which returned it to work.

Labour law in this country deals with applications for certification, the certification process itself, the designing and the making up of the bargaining unit and the right to a collective agreement. All of those processes are designed to be embodied in a dispute resolution mechanism that is designed to protect the rights of both the employer and the employee. The basis of that is that every right held by an employer is granted either through the act or through the negotiating process to the employees or the bargaining unit of the employees through the contractual process and then embodied in the collective agreement.

If we do not have the collective agreement in place, we know we do have in our legislation the right of the first contract. Once we have that in place we have another whole dispute resolution mechanism through the grievance procedure, the arbitration and the final award.

With all this legislation, we still have problems. The language of every act has to be so precise, because when it gets to the arbitration process, the whole course of an arbitration can be turned on the wording or interpretation of one section of the act.

If we have any question about this legislation before the House today, it is the imprecision of some of the wording in Bill C-201. I would like to refer to some of these imprecisions. We do not oppose the concept and philosophy of what our colleague is trying to pursue, but we do oppose some of the wording in this bill. We suggest that it should go back to a legislative committee for more in depth study and research.

Let me just draw to your attention one of the items that is missing out of the labour code, but which is embodied in the Public Service Staff Relations Act, and that is what we term as a designated employee. When we talk about a designated employee we mean that employee who is responsible for providing essential services within the Canada Labour Code. Section 78 of the code says: "Pursuant to this section the employees or classes of employees in the bargaining unit in this act referred to as designated employees whose duties consist in whole or in part of duties, the performance of which at any particular time, or after any specified period of time, is or will be necessary in the interest of the safety or security of the public."

In my opinion, that is something which should be embodied in the legislation so that we know what we are talking about through this proposed change, that is, what is an essential service. Section 89(1.1), the first part of this proposed legislation, tries to determine what an essential service is but falls a little short of that. Again, that is why I am suggesting that this act should go to a legislative committee for further study.

Another problem that I am having with the interpretation of this act is that it only refers to Crown corporations. As you stated when you were not occupying the chair, Mr. Speaker, and as I have said in my remarks, I suspect that if we pass this legislation or embody the change in the Canada Labour Code, there will be many other corporations put to a disadvantage.

I know my time is running short. Let me just make the point that the other agencies that would be put at a disadvantage would be the other departments of the government that are not Crown corporations, the other agencies that work within the government that are not Crown corporations and the other corporations which are affected by the Canada Labour Code. These include CTV, CPR Rail and so on. Those agencies would be put at a definite disadvantage if this act passes. Therefore, it should go back to the legislative committee for further study.

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer some observations on the bill before us involving the maintenance of essential services and the prohibition of the hiring of replacement workers where Crown corporation employees are on strike or locked out.

The present bill provides that where the Governor in Council is of the opinion that a strike in a Crown corporation might endanger the public health or public safety, the Governor in Council may, by order, on the recommendations of the minister, require the maintenance of essential services in the case of a strike.

The concept of danger to public health or public safety can readily be seen to apply to such activities as health, fire and police services.

The Crown corporations that are covered by the Canada Labour Code, Part I, are primarily commercial enterprises, in contrast to the situation provincially. With most federal sector disputes, including those involving Crown corporations, the public consideration is mainly economic in nature.

• (1850)

The impact of work stoppages in such federal Crown corporations as Atomic Energy of Canada, Canadian National Railways, VIA Rail, Cape Breton Development Corporation or the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority would, of course, be evident in terms of the country's or a region's short and long-term economic interest.

The Canada Labour Code sets out a framework which provides mechanisms to minimize work disruptions in industries of national importance, both private and public. Federal undertakings under the code include interprovincial, international rail, road and pipeline transportation; shipping and longshoring; air transportation; telephone, telegraph and cable services; banking; broadcasting; most federal Crown corporations and certain industries declared to be to the general advantage of Canada.

As members of this House know, there have been times when it has been necessary to introduce special back-to-work legislation to end disputes in key areas of economic interest. Such action was taken as a last resort when it became clear that legislative efforts were necessary to provide for the continuation of services essential to the economy.

I will return to the issue of essentiality in a moment, but I would like to explore the implications of the bill proposed to amend the Canada Labour Code which would ban the hiring of replacement workers during strikes or lockouts.

The Canada Labour Code does not prohibit the use of replacement workers in the event of a work stoppage. However, the code does provide certain protective measures for employees affected by labour disputes. Workers engaged in legal strike action cannot be permanently replaced and have the right to return to their employment after a strike in preference to anyone hired to replace them. As well, the code prohibits an employer from disciplining an employee who refuses to perform the task of another who is engaged in a legal work stoppage.

Under the provisions of the Canada Labour Code, the parties are provided conciliation and mediation assistance as required and where appropriate in the interests of dispute resolution. They are encouraged to bargain in good faith and to assess their bargaining priorities in the light of their relative economic strengths and interests.

One of the features of collective bargaining under the code, for both private employers and Crown corporations, is the knowledge of employees and union negotiators, that in the event of a strike, the employer may continue to operate. Such knowledge has a restraining effect on the use of the strike weapon. In the same fashion, the employer seeks to avoid having to deal with disruptive effects of a strike.

It is fundamental to collective bargaining that the parties are encouraged to negotiate and compromise when the facts warrant. In this fashion, tests of economic strength are only used as a last resort. When the union is aware that the employer is not going to be able to maintain operations during a strike, the element of compromise is weakened. On the other hand, if the employer is insured of a minimum workforce, his need to compromise and make concessions is reduced. In effect, the relative power equation is distorted and the carefully balanced approach established under the code is undermined.

In the final analysis, what is at the root of this bill is the question of what in fact is an essential service in the context of the bill and what should the Parliament of Canada do when faced with an important disruption in its area of jurisdiction?

Parliament has adopted the Canada Labour Code which provides for free collective bargaining in federal jurisdiction industries. With this legislation comes the right to engage in legal work stoppages, be it strike or lockout activity. As already noted, the provisions of the Canada Labour Code, which regulate labour-management relations in the federal sector, place great emphasis on the negotiated resolution of labour disputes. The right to strike or lockout is only acquired after meeting all the dispute resolution requirements of the code.

On those occasions where disputes having major economic importance for Canada cannot be resolved through the normal dispute resolution procedures, the government assesses the facts and circumstances and decides on an appropriate course of action. In the process of analysis, the competing interests of the parties and the public are weighed in the light of the over-all interest. This approach, I believe, is most appropriate for the scope of enterprises covered by the Canada Labour Code.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this bill. I want to congratulate the hon. member for Richelieu on it. It is a very precise bill. It deals with a number of issues about the effectiveness of the Canada Labour Code which have been of concern and in need of action for a long period of time.

I cannot agree with the previous speaker that the labour code has established a balance which is acceptable to both the employer and employee in all circumstances. It has a built-in structure which has allowed the less public of the corporations to take advantage of even the definition of essential services.

We are dealing with this bill now at second reading, which is to give it approval in principle. I must again congratulate the member for putting his finger on those items in this bill that do need some review and are of concern to negotiations between management and labour in many circumstances. The precision of the wording indicates a basic knowledge and understanding of the effects of the labour code, both positive and negative. Again, I congratulate the member for Richelieu for bringing this forward.

The main thrust of the bill is that it is anti-scab labour. It is against the opportunity of hiring scab labour. In other words, it does not allow the bringing in of strikebreakers. The implication of the previous speaker was that this was in place, but it is not in place. If an employer wants to use management to keep the operation going, that is well within the structure of the present code. The code has allowed the bringing in of strikebreakers under certain circumstances. This bill would limit that entirely, and that is the basic direction of the bill.

I cannot argue against that. I think it is a necessary change to the labour code and should be supported by all people in the House who have some concerns about the quality of labour and management relations. This bill would balance the power of the two groups a little more.

• (1900)

There is a second section to this bill with which I had some concern. The second section uses language which gives to the cabinet or the Governor in Council that which those of us who have worked near, with and beside, and in some cases against labour unions recognize as giving power which they have not had in the the past but would get under this bill. Consequently it would be less acceptable than it might have been without those changes in the wording.

I refer to sections 90.3 and 90.9. section 90.3 deals with the establishment of essential services. This is not too objectionable in that it does establish a negotiation process between the union and the employer before it gives power to the cabinet or the Governor in Council to take action.

Section 100 fractures the structure that we have known and accepted as the basic structure of the negotiation process. What it does is give to the cabinet the power to disallow a strike.

My point is if you certify a union, you accept its structure and its operations. It has the right to strike and it operates as a union in the negotiating process. The minister may suddenly say: "Under a particular circumstance this particular union will not be able to strike". All of us in this House have been brought back on occasion, working either for or against the passage of a bill to put people back to work. We passed one not too long, Bill C-49. That process has worked in the past. The reason for the back-to-work is brought forward publicly and discussed. That is an adequate process. Section 100, which gives this power to the Governor in Council under certain circumstances, is degrading the process of negotiation as far as the union and employer is concerned.

I appreciate the fact that this brings in a kind of anti-scab, anti-strikebreaker legislation. It deals effectively with the establishment of essential services. There is one concern which should be dealt with in a legislative committee, that is to allow cabinet power to eliminate the possibility of a strike under certain circumstances, power which the cabinet does not now have. Therefore, I say that is an unacceptable approach.

I also have concern as to the breadth of it, the fact that it is limited under certain circumstances. This is the kind of anti-strikebreaker legislation which we think should be an across-the-board code and should be available as protection to employees in all kinds of industries.

• (1905)

I hope that when this bill passes second reading, it goes to a legislative committee that will look at the wording, the concern as far as power that the cabinet has with the wording and to give the unions and employers, the corporations, the ability to come before the committee and say: "Yes, we agree," or "No, we disagree with certain parts of it." We can then bring forth better legislation than we might otherwise.

Mr. Ken James (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I rise to join the debate on the proposed legislation before us, Bill C-201, an act to amend the Canada Labour Code.

As has been discussed, this bill is targeted at federal Crown corporations which fall within the jurisdiction of the Code and provides for a prohibition on the hiring of replacement workers during work stoppage, and also that essential services would be maintained in the event of a work stoppage in a Crown corporation specifically.

The bill contains interesting proposals but also raises some questions. One question arising from the proposed legislation is that it seeks to change the current industrial relations system in existence under Part I of the Code at a time when the current procedures appear to be functioning quite well. I hope hon. members will not interpret the introduction of Bill C-201 as meaning that the present framework for collective bargaining under Part I is not working. In fact, figures from the federal jurisdiction indicate that the settlement rate for cases handled to the final stage without resort to work stoppage action remains above 90 per cent. In addition, the reliance on formal third party intervention in labour disputes at the conciliation commission level has decreased very dramatically over recent years, with only one case accorded such assistance during the 1989-90 fiscal year.

The figures I have quoted reflect a philosophy and a continuing commitment toward promoting a responsible and responsive bargaining framework. The policy is designed to encourage the parties, with their intimate knowledge of the issues in dispute, to resolve their own differences and conclude a mutually satisfactory collective agreement. As hon. members will appreciate, an agreement concluded by the parties themselves is much preferable to one forced upon them through arbitration or some other statutory means.

If I may for a moment, I would like to briefly review the provisions currently found within Part I of the Canada Labour Code. Part I of the Code establishes the framework for industrial relations and regulates the conduct of collective bargaining in the federal private sector. This jurisdiction covers the operations of enterprises that fall within the definition of a "federal work, undertaking or business" and includes interprovincial and international rail, road and pipeline transportation, air transportation, shipping, longshoring, grain handling, banking, broadcasting, and certain Crown corporations.

The Canada Labour Code requires that the conciliation process be exhausted before the legal right to strike or lockout can be exercised. Normally, this process involves the appointment of a conciliation officer, but it may also involve the additional efforts of a conciliation commissioner or conciliation board. Following the termination of conciliation and the acquisition of the right to strike or lockout, the minister may appoint a mediator to further assist the parties in negotiations.

As I indicated earlier in my remarks, the use of the more formal conciliation commissioner option has decreased in past years with an increasing onus being placed on the parties themselves to deal directly with the issues and not look to shift the responsibility for settlement to an outside third party. I understand that in those cases where a dispute is not settled at the conciliation officer stage and the repercussions of a work stoppage would have serious economic consequences, the situation is weighed carefully before a decision as to the appointment of additional assistants is taken.

• (1910)

It is however of interest to note that while the use of the commissioner option has decreased, the settlement rate without work stoppage in the federal jurisdiction has remained in the 90 per cent range and the incidence of work stoppages has remained relatively stable.

An excellent example of this renewed reliance, which the Minister of Labour is placing on the parties to deal with the issues in dispute and arrive at acceptable compromises, was the most recent contract settlement involving the grain handlers in the port of Thunder Bay.

Negotiations between the Transportation and Communications International Union, Lodge 650, and Lakehead terminal elevators to renew the collective agreement which expired on January 31, 1988 received the assistance of a conciliation officer from Labour Canada over a 10–month period before the talks broke down.

After a careful assessment of the various factors involved in the negotiations and of the economic impact of a work stoppage at that point in time, a decision not to appoint a conciliation commissioner was taken. The parties were notified of the decision and some weeks later resumed direct negotiations. These proved successful and a tentative settlement was reached which was subsequently ratified by the union membership.

Another situation in which the onus was directed back to the parties to deal with matters in dispute arose in the 1989 negotiations between the Council of Marine Carriers and the Canadian Merchant Service Guild representing tow boat employees on the west coast. Again, the parties were initially assisted in their discussions by a conciliation officer over a four–month period.

However, bargaining broke off and the Minister of Labour was faced with a decision as to whether further assistance in the form of a conciliation commissioner should be provided. Following a thorough assessment of this situation, it was decided that a conciliation commissioner would not be appointed to the dispute. Instead, the assistance of a mediator from Labour Canada, fully versed in the issues in dispute, was provided to the parties and a tentative settlement was arrived at shortly thereafter in the mediation proceedings.

Another concern which I have about the proposed bill before us relates to what might be termed a piecemeal approach to dealing with legislative amendments to this very important code. Part I of the Labour Canada Code has proven over the years to be a fair and equitable statute in dealing with industrial relations in the federal jurisdiction and has like most federal legislation periodically undergone extensive review and evaluation.

What the hon. member is proposing through Bill C–21 deals with only one specific segment of the federal jurisdiction universe, namely Crown corporations, and with issues which are complex in nature such as essential services.

I would suggest that changes such as those proposed in the bill before us should be considered as part of the total review of Part I of the Canada Labour Code and not in isolation from the other provisions of the legislation. What we have here is a proposal from the hon. member to amend comprehensive labour relations legislation in order to deal with certain concerns specific to a particular segment of the total federal jurisdiction universe.

In dealing with the topic of replacement workers, I should point out that we should study this particular legislation to some extent before voting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)): I wish to inform the member that his time has expired.

The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 93, the order is dropped to the bottom of the list in order of precedence on the Order Paper.

It now being 7.15 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 7.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 1, 1990

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers

[Translation]

PRIVILEGE

HON. MEMBER FOR SAINT-MAURICE—APOLOGIES TO THE PEOPLE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Denis Pronovost (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today on a question of privilege, and I regret having to do so, but it is also a matter where my honour as a member is at stake.

Wednesday I was interviewed by telephone on radio station CHLN in Trois-Rivières, and this interview subsequently raised a great deal of controversy.

My comments regarding the Premier of Newfoundland, Mr. Clyde Wells and the citizens of that province were excessive. Today, I wish to take this opportunity in the House to make a public withdrawal and offer my sincere apologies to the citizens of Newfoundland.

[English]

From time to time politicians try to find excuses when they make an error. I do not choose that way. I recognize today that I made a human error. That is why I apologize fully for what has been said.

I do not try to escape my responsibility as a member of Parliament. That is why I would conclude by saying that Canada does not need more oil on the fire. The time is for hope and optimism. I want to be a part of the solution, to find a new way in order to keep Canada united forever.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank my colleague for his statement.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. William C. Winegard (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-54, an act to amend the Criminal Code (joinder of counts) be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I rise today to speak on this short bill which repeals paragraph 230(d) of the Criminal Code and amends Section 589. As you know, Madam Speaker, Section 230 of the code now provides that culpable homicide is murder where a person causes the death of another while committing or attempting to commit one of a number of crimes such as treason, sabotage, hijacking, sexual assault, hostage taking, robbery, breaking and entering or arson.

• (1010)

Under paragraph (d) of Section 230, if a person uses a weapon or has it upon him or her at the time he or she commits or attempts to commit an offence, or at the time of flight after committing or attempting to commit the offence, and death is a consequence, it does not matter whether or not he or she meant to cause death or knew that death was likely to be caused to any other person. Very simply, the ordinary mens rea requirement need not be met.

We are quickly approaching the centenary of the adoption by this House of the Criminal Code of Canada. What are now paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) were a part of the original 1892 code. In 1947 paragraph (d) was included. At that time Senator Hayden said that the intention behind the amendment was to curb "the reckless disregard of life that seems to imbue to those who carry weapons when they embark on unlawful enterprises."

In 1982, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms came into force. Five years later, on December 3, 1987, the Supreme Court of Canada gave its reasons for decision in the case of Regina v. Vaillancourt. In that case, the accused challenged the constitutional validity of paragraph 230(d). Mr. Justice Antonio Lamer ruled in the Vaillancourt case that the presumption of innocence in paragraph 11(d) of the charter is infringed when an accused may be convicted despite the existence of a reasonable doubt as to the presence of an essential element of the offence. Justice Lamer found that where Parliament substituted proof of a different element, as was the case in paragraph 230(d), such substitution is constitutionally valid only upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt of the substituted element in lieu of proof of an essential element.

Speaking for the majority of the court, Mr. Justice Lamer held that an accused cannot be found guilty of murder absent proof beyond a reasonable doubt of at least objective foreseeability. Accordingly, a murder provision such as paragraph 230(d), which allows a conviction in the absence of proof beyond a reasonable doubt of at least that essential element infringes Sections 7 and 11(d) of the charter.

The Supreme Court also found that paragraph 230(d) could not be saved by Section 1 of the charter. The Vaillancourt case struck down, therefore, paragraph 230(d) of the Criminal Code. The bill now before us recognizes and responds to the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada by repealing this provision.

The unfortunate fact remains, however, that there are a significant number of cases of murder each year in which a victim is stabbed or shot or beaten to death during the course of the commission of another serious crime, such as sexual assault, robbery or break and enter. The present Section 589 of the Criminal Code presently prohibits the joinder of any other count to a count of murder.

For example, while a person may be charged with murder and also separately charged with sexual assault, the murder and the sexual assault cannot be tried together. As the murder charge must proceed first, and a conviction for murder results in a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment, a prosecution for the other offence does not take place unless there is an acquittal on the murder charge. A trial for murder usually takes a long time to prepare and conduct and there may be appeals. It is therefore not unusual for a murder case not to be disposed of for several years and it is only at this time that the trial for the related offence may be commenced. By that time, memories may have faded and witnesses may have died or their whereabouts may not be easily ascertained.

One amendment to Section 589 will provide that all offences arising out of the same incident may be tried together. As a result the fact finding process will be much improved and justice will be better served since the possibility of delays will be greatly diminished.

It will interest you to know, I am sure, that this amendment was proposed by the criminal law section of the Uniform Law Conference in 1988. As well, this recommendation received the support of a federal–provincial working group on homicide in its interim report in 1989. Furthermore, the Law Reform Commission of Canada also proposed that Section 589 be amended.

A second amendment proposed to Section 589 will permit the joinder to a charge of murder any other charge of an indictable offence if the accused agrees. This was also recommended by the federal–provincial working group on homicide.

By encouraging the joint trials of charges where an accused consents, the interests of justice as well as those of economy for both the state and the accused will be served.

It is our view that this bill respects the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Finally, these proposals do not affect a judge's right under the general provisions of the Criminal Code to order separate trials for an accused.

In summary, by repealing Section 230(d) and by amending section 589 of the Criminal Code as is proposed, the justice system will be strengthened by reducing unnecessary delays in the administration of justice, modernizing the law in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, allowing for the giving of evidence while witnesses' memories are still fresh, reducing administrative trial costs, and helping to ensure that the constitutional rights of Canadians are safeguarded.

The federal government is committed to ensuring that Canadians are better served by the justice system. Bill C-54 is a part of that commitment. I ask the support of all members in the House in seeing that this bill is passed into law.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to debate second reading of the two proposed amendments to the Criminal Code.

I am moved to preface my remarks, following the eloquent statement made by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice, with the wish that every member in the House had an opportunity to express him or herself fully on the issue of national unity in these days. I will not be able to do it quite so eloquently as the member for Saint-Maurice, but I want to echo his words that all of us in this House care very deeply about the unity of our country and wish for the ultimate in success from the continuing negotiations in relation to the Meech Lake Accord.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lee: To return to what must surely appear to be more mundane matters, Bill C-54, as proposed by the government, proposes two changes to the Criminal Code. They are seemingly minor in nature, but they deal with very important issues in relation to the criminal justice field.

This is not the first or the last time this House in this Parliament will attempt to reform the Criminal Code and criminal procedure laws on a patchwork basis. I for one am uncomfortable with the history that has given rise to that. I feel that it is an inefficient, unfortunate piecemeal way to approach an issue that has relevance for all of us. It was only a couple of months ago that we had to address the reform to the foolish old section which described the arson offence.

• (1020)

In committee this week a number of members dealt with a miscellaneous statute law amendment act which included other relatively minor amendments to the Criminal Code as well.

The current section 589 which states the ability of the court or the policing authority to join counts basically prohibits the joinder of any count charging murder to any other offence. This reflects a state of the law which goes back many years. To paraphrase the quotes of a professor at the University of Ottawa, this current state of the law "seems to violate the rule against absurdity".

The current state of the law has derived itself from a state of affairs many years ago when there were many more offences which called for the death penalty. I suppose, in a sense of British fairness, it was felt to be unkind and unfair to load an indictment with more than one offence when one of those offences could bring about the death penalty.

In any event, nowadays there are virtually no offences which call for a death penalty in this country. We believe we have the ability to deliver fairness in a better procedural way to our accused.

In a relatively recent, high profile case which occurred in the nation's capital, there was a murder offence and other offences committed at the same time. Those other offences involved unlawful confinement and assault and involved more than one accused. In that process, because of the state of the law the Crown could only proceed with the murder offence in one indictment. The factual circumstance giving rise to the charge involved a lot of people—authorities, civilians, military, and the like—and as a result it was extremely expensive to put together two trials: one for the murder and one for the other offences.

I believe it is important for the judicial system to respond to all offences committed. I do not think it is appropriate for the authorities to simply charge the indictment involving murder and walk away from all the other charges.

The amendment in the way it is worded now will permit joinder of the indictment charging murder with a non-murder offence where the non-murder offence arises out of the same factual circumstances. We have to address the issue of fairness because the issue of fairness was the reason for the old rule against joinder.

We have to point out two things: first, the law in relation to fairness dealing with an accused has developed considerably over the last few decades. The courts and the procedures by their nature lean toward fairness. There are principles of common law built right into the code which lean toward fairness to an accused. Also, we now have our charter. The accused in any circumstance will still have access to the severance application procedure found in Section 591, subparagraph 3, of the code.

There is a wealth of case law developed, thanks to the perseverance of our legal profession. There are pages and pages of case law developed around the fairness principles permitting the severance of counts in any circumstance where it would be unduly unfair to an accused.

In summary, we want to support this amendment based on the principle that an accused should have a fair trial, where the procedures are both efficient and economic and where we avoid a multiplicity of trials and procedures. The taxpayers of the country have an equal interest in both efficiency and fairness—and I do not put priority on either one of those—but efficiency and fairness are what the citizens of Canada are entitled to. I believe the amendment proposed to section 589 does that.

The second portion of the bill repeals Section 230. I believe my colleague speaking for the government has adequately outlined the background of that repeal. It is based on a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Vaillancourt case. I have very little to add to the comments of the hon. member who discussed it.

There were two events this week that highlight the significant need to pursue criminal procedure reform and reform in the area of corrections. One of the events occurred on Parliament Hill when a number of people who were or represented Victims of Violence appeared before the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General in relation to an issue surrounding the escape and the subsequent killings perpetrated by Daniel Gingras in the province of Alberta.

The second case is a current issue involving an individual in custody who is about to be released and in relation to whom the authorities state that he is predisposed to committing crimes of the same nature for which he has been imprisoned. He will be with us shortly, out on the street in society.

The taxpayers of the country do not care which jurisdiction is responsible for taking care of this kind of business. They do not care whether it is the federal government, the provincial government, the metropolitan government, the regional government, or the city. What they want to see is the justice system and correction system working for them; not for the bureaucrats, not for the politicians, not for the ministers, and not for the people who are incarcerated.

The justice system is there to work for society as a whole and that is what our citizens, our taxpayers, want to see. I believe our piecemeal approach to reforming the Criminal Code, the patchwork every two or three months of deleting or adding a section, is not the way to go. It is going to take five years to catch up to reality if we keep on this way.

I want to note in the area of reform that the government has not responded to the report of the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General on the areas of sentencing, detention, interim release, and the like.

After two years of study and intense effort by the committee with solid dedication on the part of its members, many of whom are still with us in this Parliament, the report was submitted in 1988. It has been two years since it was submitted. Ordinarily, for the benefit of the public who may be viewing the proceedings, a report submitted by a standing committee is to be responded to by the government within 150 days. As a result of the prorogation of Parliament and the election of 1988, the government was not obligated, strictly speaking under those procedures, to respond to that report.

• (1030)

However, the government has a moral obligation, to which it has admitted, to respond not only to all of that effort, but to the issues that are raised in that very comprehensive report. I know the government has stated to the committee that it will respond. Myself and the other members of the committee are, of course, anxiously awaiting that because the response to that report will in part determine the agenda of that standing committee for the next year or two or three.

We are anxious to proceed. The taxpayers and the citizens are anxious to proceed. They want to see movement. They do not want to see little pieces of reform here and there, the want to see the entire issue redressed because, I think they believe that the system is not being managed properly and in their interests at this time. There are cracks and there are loose ends. Some of those cracks and some of those loose ends result in further crime, violence, death and suffering for innocent victims.

In conclusion, I want to encourage the government to get on with comprehensive Criminal Code reform. The Minister of Justice has asked the committee to address recodification of the general part of the code. The committee is about to do that. I am very happy to be on the committee and to play a role in that. However, I want to light a fire under the government, I want the government to get on with it.

I want the government to take some courage from the progress and the co-operation shown on this side of the House and in committee. It can take courage from some of the successful efforts in Criminal Code reform that have occurred in jurisdictions outside of Canada. I want the government to put to use the efforts of the Law Reform Commission of Canada manifested in a proposed new draft code and dozens of other initiatives and working papers.

The work of the Law Reform Commission, in fact, seems to be forming the basis of a lot of the piecemeal reform we are addressing. We are going to end up with a patchwork quilt if we are not careful. I want to make sure that the government knows that we on this side of the House are prepared to address that and get on with the reform that is so badly needed.

To repeat my earlier remarks with reference to what has become known as the Daubney Report, the report of the standing committee, we want to see a response to that at the earliest possible date so that the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General can get on with its efforts.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Madam Speaker, perhaps I could join with my friend from Scarborough—Rouge River in taking this opportunity to speak to the issue that is before the country this weekend and to share his views of the fine statement by the member for Saint-Maurice. I am very pleased and proud of the statement he has made and I join with my friend in congratulating him for the position he has taken.

One of the privileges members of Parliament have is that we get a particularly unique perspective on this country. We are able to share very closely with members from all across Canada the human wealth of this country. We all send our heartfelt best wishes to the First Ministers for this weekend. I am sure that they will be able to come to some agreement, but I certainly urge them on their way.

We in this corner of the House will be opposing the bill before us on second reading. We particularly oppose on fundamental principle the second part of the two-part proposals here, the joinder of offences.

On the deletion of Section 230(d), our position is that it simply does not go far enough. If a bill does not go far enough, that is always a difficult position to be in. But in this case this represents the government's response to the Vaillancourt decision on constructive murder. We think that it is a fundamentally flawed response and one which should be rethought. Therefore we will oppose this bill on second reading.

The first part concerns constructive murder. First, it is important to review Section 230, which is the constructive murder section, which provides that someone who does not actually commit the crime of murder can still be convicted of murder through some association with the crime. The part which is being deleted is subsection (d) which provides that a person is subject to being convicted of murder if the accused used a weapon or had a weapon on his or her person while committing or attempting to commit the offence, or while fleeing the scene and death ensued as a consequence thereof.

The section also provides in effect for constructive murder in a number of other circumstances. It is those sections which will remain in the Criminal Code following this amendment to it. Our objection is to the failure of the government to remove the other sections.

I should first state the principle. I can do no better than to quote Mr. Justice Lamer of the Supreme Court of Canada who stated in the Vaillancourt case:

> I am presently of the view that it is a principle of fundamental justice that a conviction for murder cannot rest on anything less than proof beyond a reasonable doubt of subjective foreseeability.

That is a judge's way of saying that the crime of murder which carries with it the penalty of life imprisonment should only fall on a person who had a clear, formed intention themselves to commit the crime of murder. If someone with whom they are associated commits the crime of murder, even if they themselves are party to the criminal transaction that leads to murder, then they themselves should not be subject to a conviction for murder. They may well have committed other very serious crimes and should stand trial for them. But, given the particular place of murder and the consequences of a conviction for murder, the law should very clearly provide that the individual so charged should have had himself or herself the clear intention to commit the crime.

This principle was supported by the Law Reform Commission and was really the principle behind the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Vaillancourt. In its 1984 working paper entitled: "Homicide (Working Paper 33)", the commission stated on page 51:

> To treat an unintentional killer as though he intended to kill involves the criminal law in artificiality and fictions and in the injustice of not treating significantly different cases differently.
>
> We think that constructive murder should be abolished, that the rules contained in paragraph 212(c) and section 213 [now paragraph 229(d) and section 230[should have no place within our criminal law, and that killings where death is neither intended nor foreseen should be excluded from the category of "intentional" homicide whether or not they are brought about in furtherance of some other offence.

• (1040)

The commission went on to make the recommendation that flowed from that reasoning. The recommendation was that intentional homicide should apply only to killings done with actual intent to kill, and cases of constructive intent should be excluded from this category.

As the parliamentary secretary and the House will know, there are a number of cases already before the courts heading toward the Supreme Court of Canada which cast doubt on the constitutional validity of these other sections. It seems to me and to our party that the government would have been better advised to come to its conclusion as to the constitutionality of those provisions and to the principle underlying those provisions before it brought forward this bill. It is not just a question of constitutionality, but as well the principle underlying those sections in view of the comments made in the Supreme Court of Canada. If the government had done that, then, in my view, it would have reached the conclusion that all of Section 230 should have been repealed and perhaps a broader view of manslaughter taken.

I am indebted to the law firm of Rosen Fleming, in particular John Rosen of that firm, who has provided us with a very comprehensive review and critique of Bill C–54. I expect and hope that should this bill pass, despite my eloquence on the subject, that Mr. Rosen would be invited to appear before the legislative committee to give his views because they are very comprehensive and well thought through.

In the course of a written review given to us, which I believe he also made available to the Department of Justice, he noted, it seems to me, the incontrovertible point, that a person who participates in one of the enumerated offences but does not participate in the homicide may still be liable for murder, if he knew that it was a probable consequence of the commission of the common purpose that the principal would cause some bodily harm to the victim.

Given this fact, even if the principal did not have the intent to cause death or serious bodily harm that would be necessary to constitute murder under Section 229, then the accomplice could be convicted. The net effect of all that is, the less stringent requirements of Section 230 to prove murder against the perpetrator of homicide are further watered down as against the secondary party to the underlying offence, for example, the driver of the get–away–car or whatever. It is therefore, in our view, a wrong principle that murder should be the crime for which such an offence is characterized.

Let me move to the second part of the bill before the House, that is, the joinder of counts. I have not had the depth of experience as my friend from Scarborough—Rouge River has had in the criminal courts, but I do understand the proposition that when one is joining, as this bill does, various other offences to the count of murder, that conceivably adds to the prejudice that an accused for murder would suffer before the courts.

This point of view was captured in comments by the Law Reform Commission under another paper, Working Paper 55, published in 1987, entitled: "The Charge Document in Criminal Cases". It states as follows:

> [The] flat prohibition may be unfair to both sides.

That is the flat prohibition against the joinder of counts in a murder charge.

> The offences of manslaughter, attempted murder and criminal negligence causing death are often linked to an allegation of murder, but the present rule forecloses the possibility of joinder. We would relax the rule to permit joinder of this nature—Furthermore, we see no cause for objection to the joinder of any other charge capable of being tried by a jury with that of murder, where the accused consents and the court is of the opinion that the interests of justice would thus be served.

Having gone that far, which is obviously the rationale for the bill, the Law Reform Commission went on however to make some cautionary comments to which the government apparently has not given any weight.

The commission notes that Section 518 of the Criminal Code regarding joinder of another charged with murder should be amended to allow the joinder of the crimes of manslaughter, attempted murder, or criminal negligence causing death. Furthermore, in the interest of justice, any juryable crime should be joined with the consent of the accused.

It is important to note that the commission limited the number of offences which could be joined. It therefore puts the commission's recommendation at variance with Bill C–54.

Bill C–54 makes no distinction between the offences of manslaughter, attempted murder, and criminal negligence and other offences that may be charged by a jury. Nor would it make joinder conditional upon the accused's consent in all cases involving offences triable by jury.

In fact, it can be argued, when one marries this section to other sections, that the change places the onus on the accused to persuade the court that there should be no joinder. In an already difficult situation, that adds to the burden placed on someone accused of murder. In all of the circumstances of the potential liability, this would seem to us to be unfair.

We suggest that the views of the Law Reform Commission should have been given greater weight by the government.

I would like to make some closing comments on related matters arising from the Vaillancourt matter. They have to do with those now in our penitentiaries and prisons who would not be there had the Vaillancourt decision been understood to be the law when they came to trial.

I understand that there are many people in jail in Canada who would not be in jail if the Vaillancourt principle had been understood and if, in fact, this bill were law. All this bill does is incorporate the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada as to what powers Parliament had.

The government, as far as I can understand it, has not responded to the injustice in that situation. Representations of various kinds have been made to the government that there should be a clear survey of those within our penitentiary system to find out who fits into that category and some effort made then to have them released, through pardon, clemency or some other system as is available.

I hope that in the course of this debate, in the discussion of this bill, or at the earliest opportunity, the government would indicate that it is prepared to act on this injustice. The government should not leave those in jail who would otherwise be released, and ought to be released, if the country is to have its proper sense of justice.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

• (1050)

Mr. Nicholson: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that if you canvass the House you will find unanimous consent to move directly to Private Members' Business.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion made by the Parliamentary Secretary. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: Madam Speaker, I think you will find unanimous consent to have Mr. Tétreault move the motion on Bill S–15, in place of Mr. Fontaine.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

ACT OF INCORPORATION OF DESJARDINS MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jacques Tétreault (for Mr. Fontaine) moved that Bill S-15, an Act to amend the Act of incorporation of Desjardins Mutual Life Assurance Company, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jacques Tétreault (for Mr. Fontaine) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: Madam Speaker, I believe there is another Private Members' Bill that may be called for consideration, Bill S-10.

Madam Deputy Speaker: That bill can be brought before the House only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

CANADIAN INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Jacques Tétreault (for Mr. Dorin) moved that Bill S-10, an act respecting the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, as amended, be concurred in, by unanimous consent.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Tétreault (for Mr. Dorin) moved that the bill be read a third time and passed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Nicholson: Madam Speaker, I think you will find that there is unanimous consent to suspend the sitting of the House until 11 a.m.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The sitting of the House is suspended until 11 a.m.

The sitting of the House was suspended at 10.54 a.m.

[Translation]

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 11 a.m.

Madam Deputy Speaker: It being eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 30(5), the House will now proceed to Members' Statements pursuant to Standing Order 31.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[Translation]

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, in its May 1990 bulletin, the Royal Bank of Canada reviewed the impact of the free trade agreement since it came into force a little more than a year ago.

According to this review, supporters and opponents of the agreement tend to justify their respective positions by pointing to plant openings or closings, but in most cases, making the agreement alone responsible for recent reactions by large companies would be oversimplifying the issue.

In fact, companies develop strategies and plan their activities in terms of a large number of factors, including prospects for economic growth, inflation, interest rates, exchange rates, salaries, trade policies, technology and competition.

Madam Speaker, this thoroughly researched document indicates that during its initial year, the free trade agreement caused no dislocation of Canada's economy, as some would have us believe. On the contrary, a 2.8 per cent increase in exports to the United States was recorded during the first nine months of 1989.

[English]

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Madam Speaker, Better Business Bureaus in Toronto and Vancouver have added their voices to the growing number of citizens and organizations objecting to the government's deceptive methods of promoting the GST.

In contradiction to what the ads are saying, most Canadians realize that the GST is, indeed, a new tax.

When is the government going to regard the GST for what it really is, a new additional tax that is going to have very devastating effects on the economy of Canada?

* * *

GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY AGREEMENT

Mr. Ken Atkinson (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, as part of its recently released biennial report on Great Lakes water quality, the International Joint Commission pointed out that progress has been mixed in reaching the goal of restoring and maintaining the environmental integrity of the Great Lakes.

The report calls upon the United States and Canada to commit a level of resources congruent with the admirable pledges each nation made in signing the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement.

As we proceed with The Green Plan consultations, I urge the government to keep the recommendation in mind and include these matters in the final document.

The report also calls on the parties to encourage others to accept their responsibilities to implement the agreement. These include state, provincial and local governments, as well as non-governmental organizations and individuals.

We must all work together to restore and maintain the Great Lakes, and ensure that we protect the health of all those who live in the Great Lakes basin.

* * *

HOUSING

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, apparently the Conservative government is ridding itself of the responsibility of housing Canadians at a time when 1.2 million households across Canada are paying more than 30 per cent of their income for rent. My own riding of Northumberland has seen increasing numbers of people dependent upon food banks as a result of the high cost of shelter. Low income families often have little money left over for other necessities of life after the rent has been paid.

The cap on funding of the federal-provincial non-profit housing program has resulted in a serious reduction in the number of unit allocations available under the program, and is having a devastating impact on non-profit housing production across Canada.

I ask the government to heed the resolution passed by the city of Toronto and endorsed by the council of the town of Campbellford and other councils in my riding of Northumberland, urging a renewed commitment from the government to improve the availability of non-profit housing units. The councils further call on the federal government to reinstate full funding and the number of unit allocations under the federal provincial non-profit housing program, to index this funding, and to increase funding for the federal co-operative housing program to allow the production of at least 2,000 housing co-op units annually.

* * *

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, although Canadians recognize that increased expenditure in scientific research and development is an investment in our future, federal expenditures on R and D are, embarrassingly, one of the lowest of all industrialized nations.

It is high time this government demonstrated its commitment to Canada's scientific community through a substantial increase in federal funding.

The government has a golden opportunity to do so through support of the proposed KAON project at the Tri-University Meson Facility at the University of British Columbia. The project is a world-class particle accelerator that would launch Canada into the frontiers of nuclear physics and allow Canadian scientists to explore the fundamental nature of matter. TRIUMF-KAON is science that will change the world.

It has been endorsed by leading scientists throughout the world as well as Canada's 10 premiers, and supported financially by the governments of British Columbia, the United States, Japan, Korea, and members of the European Community.

The Canadian and international scientific community now await Canada's decision to help put it all together.

* * *

[Translation]

NATIONAL UNITY

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, allow me today to point out the important initiative taken by the Prime Minister of Canada in calling together the First Ministers of the country for a working meeting on Sunday evening to break the present constitutional deadlock.

Madam Speaker, need I remind you, as well as my colleagues and all Canadians, of the serious issues at stake, namely, national unity and Quebec's place in the Canadian federation.

The Prime Minister said recently that he wanted Quebec to have a place in the sun and I am sure that a few days before the June 23 deadline, all the First Ministers in Canada will join together to say yes to Quebec.

In any event, whatever comes of these discussions, no one will be able to accuse the Prime Minister of not having tried everything, done everything up to the last ounce of his energy, for national reconciliation.

Therefore let us hope that this meeting, which has been called "the last chance", will elicit understanding and goodwill from the dissenting provinces so that an agreement may be reached for the greater good of Quebec and Canada.

* * *

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, at the recently concluded Bergen Conference in Norway entitled "Action for a Common Future", Canada with 33 other nations agreed to accelerate progress on reducing the use and emission of hazardous substances that are toxic, persistent, and bio-accumulative.

The ultimate aim is to phase out uses which cannot be adequately controlled, and by 1993 to set timetables for such phasing out for the protection of human and ecological health.

In addition, it was agreed that disposal at sea, whether by dumping or incineration of wastes, should not be allowed unless such disposal poses no threat to the marine environment in accordance with the London dumping convention.

It is good that Canada supported this message. But how can this government be taken seriously on new international commitments when it refuses to ratify old ones.

Once again we urge the government to regain credibility and ratify the Law of the Sea. Forty-three nations have done so but 60 are needed to bring the law into force.

* * *

JUSTICE

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Supreme Court of Canada upheld the law which makes it illegal to communicate, or appear to communicate, for the purposes of prostitution. I am pleased with this decision.

It sends a strong message that street solicitation for the purposes of prostitution is not to be tolerated. My very first statement in this House upon my election in 1984 was on this subject. It was an important concern to the people of Niagara Falls and I was pleased that our government brought in Bill C-49 which became law in 1985—no thanks to the NDP, I might add, who fought it all the way.

I can tell this House that this legislation has helped significantly. The street congestion, the noise, oral harassment of non-participants, and general detrimental effects on bystanders, especially children, made the bill necessary and yesterday's decision welcomed.

* * *

[Translation]

CLOTHING INDUSTRY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Madam Speaker, in March, the Canadian International Trade Tribunal recommended the gradual reduction of Canadian tariffs on overseas textile imports for the benefit of Canadian consumers and the Canadian clothing industry.

I have had representations from three Canadian companies located in my Montreal riding, namely Robin International on Jarry Street, Majestic Industries on Jean Rivard Street and Daimor Limited on 19th Avenue, urging me to ask the Minister of Finance to accept the Tribunal's recommendations.

I am especially pleased to do so because I consider the present duties excessive. In fact, the customs paid by Canadian companies are 50 per cent higher than those of their American competitors.

The garment industry is important not only in my riding but also for Montreal and the province of Quebec. Some 65,000 people work in it. Therefore I strongly hope that the minister will protect this industry by implementing as soon as possible the duty reduction proposed by the Canadian International Trade Tribunal.

* * *

• (1110)

[English]

INTERNATIONAL LITERACY YEAR

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Madam Speaker, the House will know that 1990 has been designated International Literacy Year. All members should be concerned about the results of the recent Statistics Canada study which revealed that approximately 38 per cent or 6.6 million Canadians, between the ages of 16 and 69, have difficulty with common reading tasks.

A Southam study a few years ago predicted that 100,000 illiterate Canadians are being identified each year. With the rapid pace of technological change taking place today and our reliance on a more information based society, literacy skills are becoming more and more important in the workplace. Only 2 per cent of occupations require no reading and writing.

A study by the Canadian business task force on literacy estimated the annual cost to Canadian society to be $10.7 billion. We know that illiteracy is linked to poverty, it is linked to high national school dropout rates and has marginalized workers into low-paying jobs with little chance for advancement. There are literacy groups across the country, staffed with volunteers battling this problem. They need help. More volunteers are always needed but literacy agencies need long-term core funding to—

Madam Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, the hon. member's time has expired.

* * *

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge): Madam Speaker, there are approximately 170 countries in the world, and the vast majority have several ethnic, religious and language groups. In many of these countries the political leadership has been unable to reconcile the differences, with the result that the countries and the citizens have never achieved their full potential. Indeed, many today are killing each other solely because of differences in religion, culture or political beliefs.

Canadians have these same differences, yet the political leadership has always been able to reconcile the differences with compromises which preserved Canada. As a result, we are a fabulously privileged people and are highly respected around the world. Indeed, millions of people want to join us in our exciting creation of a decent society.

The vast majority of Canadians ask the Prime Minister and premiers to reflect on the past compromises of past leaders, almost all of which involved personal hatred and ridicule from a part of the population, and to rise up to this crisis in our national life. It is time for generosity of spirit and the putting aside of partisan and personal interests in favour of a greater interest, the continuation of Canada as a whole.

* * *

TERRORISM

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Madam Speaker, I am sure that every member of this House was deeply disturbed by the recent action of the mentally unstable individual in Israel and the reaction it provoked. There are still those forces willing to callously and diligently plan violent, cold-blooded attacks, such as the attempt this week by Palestinian terrorists to attack Israeli civilians on a beach in Tel Aviv. This was not the action of a disturbed individual, but rather of an organized, armed terrorist unit, a constituent of the PLO.

Canada must condemn those who plan and organize such atrocities. We must tell them that their acceptance and respect in the western world is not merely based upon lip service to a renunciation of terror, but rather upon their deeds. Finally, we must hope once again that violence will not be the chosen response to tensions in the region, so that some movement toward peace can be achieved.

* * *

MANUFACTURERS' SALES TAX

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Madam Speaker, today I rise to quote from Hansard, a member of Parliament who spoke in the House on May 26, 1926. He said:

> Mr. Chairman, under this item I wanted to bring a matter to the attention of the minister which I cannot see any way of doing otherwise. A couple of years ago the minister put a tax on dies, patterns and tools made in the manufacturer's own plant. These the manufacturer never invoices and never sells, but under the law tax is collected upon them. He gets his money out of the work produced by those dies, patterns and tools. Under the law a great many manufacturers are being made to pay the sales tax twice, once upon the equipment and again upon the goods therewith produced. Their competitors pay no such tax; you do not reach any of them in the United States, England or anywhere else with that tax. In short, you are putting a direct double tax upon the Canadian manufacturer. I do not know why it was done; I do not know how much the minister makes out of this tax, and I should like to get some information about it. It was first done in 1924.

Madam Speaker, this member of Parliament was my grandfather, the Hon. James D. Chaplin from Lincoln. The tax was bad then, the tax is bad now.

* * *

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Madam Speaker, yesterday's Supreme Court decision recognizing aboriginal fishing rights has been hailed as a major victory in the struggle for aboriginal rights.

The ruling allows native people's first claim to resources to be limited only if there is sufficient evidence of the need for conservation. This unanimous ruling shows that the aboriginal peoples have been right all along. The government has failed to listen to the native peoples of Canada on questions of title and treaty rights. I am hopeful the federal government will listen to the Supreme Court and immediately suspend enforcement of legislation which may curtail native rights.

This decision combined with the Huron Treaty ruling last week are indeed positive steps for our first peoples. Although the ruling is a significant advance, there are still many issues to be resolved before Canada's founding peoples are made equal partners in Confederation.

Today is a great day for Canada's first nations, but we have miles to go before we sleep. I urge the First Ministers to be mindful of this when they meet this weekend.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister.

Yesterday, Statistics Canada released a report that said that economic expansion is near zero. Ruth Getter, senior economist with the Toronto-Dominion Bank, linked this to high interest rates and said: "Overall, there are serious weaknesses in the economy and they're going to show up more in the coming months". I ask the Acting Prime Minister, when is the government going to realize that its economic policies have pushed the country to the brink of recession? When will it bring in policies to help us avoid a recession rather than pushing us into one?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, as Acting Minister of Finance—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: —let me say that contrary to predictions by many, including the opposition, the real Gross Domestic Product continued to expand, albeit at a low rate. The monetary policy the government has been following is an effort to control the rate of inflation, and we are encouraged by the recent decline in the CPI.

The reality is that there are still underlying inflationary pressures. Were the Bank of Canada to increase the money supply, which is the only way that short term interest rates could be brought down, that would contribute to these inflationary pressures, leading inevitably to higher interest rates in the future and a more serious economic difficulty for the country. That is not wise economic policy and that is why we are not following it.

[Translation]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, Canadians will be surprised and disappointed to hear that the government is pleased that we have had practically no economic growth. I repeat, Statistics Canada indicates that economic expansion is near zero. According to a poll released by the Conference Board of Canada yesterday, the confidence index of the business community is at its lowest level since this government came to power. I therefore want to ask the minister this question: Doesn't the government realize that the business community has lost confidence in its policies? When will the government introduce policies that will help avoid a recession instead of creating one?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, the policies we have been following consistently since 1984 have given Canada one of the best records of the western industrialized nations. They have increased our competitive position according to world economic fora from eleventh place to fourth, internationally.

To ensure that that kind of progress continues, it is necessary that we defeat the underlying inflationary pressures, particularly on the wage front. For example, we still have figures showing that wages are increasing much faster than the economy, particularly in the provincial administrative section where wage rates in March were going up at 9.2 per cent. That contrasts with the federal sector where they are going up at 4.2 per cent. Those kinds of demands on the economy which are not matched by productivity result in inflation. Feeding that inflation through relaxed monetary policy would be precisely the wrong thing to do for the long-term economic health of this country.

• (1120)

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary is for the same minister. I do not know why the minister does not realize that business in Canada has looked at this government's policies and said they are a failure. Isn't that what it means when the Conference Board of Canada said yesterday that its survey of businessmen shows that business confidence is now at a record low, compared to what it was some years ago.

Plants are closing all across this country. The Andrew Malcolm furniture company in Listowel is closing. Its president said that the government's free trade deal is a consideration. The Kelsey-Hayes plant in Windsor is laying off 241 employees indefinitely due to slumping sales to the auto industry.

Is it not time that this government brought in economic policies that will not drive this Canadian economy into a recession and will not help Canadian plants to close and workers to lose their jobs. Why will it not it reverse these harmful policies it has in place now, bring in policies that help plants to stay open and workers to keep their jobs?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, the artificial short-term measures are, as the hon. Leader of the Opposition seems to be suggesting, the kinds of things that lead to the horrendous difficulties Canada faced in 1981 and 1982, with enormously high interest rates, a stagflation which took the country several years to recover from, and left all kinds of economic corpses in its path. We do not want to see that happen again. Holding the line with the kind of responsible policies that we have been following is the proper route for Canada.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition talked about weaknesses in the auto sector. In fact, the figures to which he alluded in his opening question show that there was a surprising strength in the auto sector last month, contrary to what the hon. Leader of the Opposition just said.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Revenue. It concerns the $14 million advertising campaign to promote the much dreaded GST.

Yesterday, Mr. Paul Tuz, president of the Better Business Bureau of Metropolitan Toronto, in a letter addressed to the Canadian Radio and Television Commission, asked "to have the extremely misleading advertisement removed from the Canadian airwaves."

I now ask the $14 million man, will he do the right thing and remove the extremely misleading advertising from the airwaves right away?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I must apologize for the loss of my voice but there was so much praise heaped on this government yesterday as a result of this simplified accounting that I have been overcome.

Further to what my colleague, the Minister responsible for Privatization, stated yesterday in this House on this matter, I simply want to add for the interest of the hon. member and all members in this House that the GST is not a new tax, even in the service sector. The service sector industry—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: They ask a question and do not listen for the answer. The service industry pays federal tax on delivery vans. The barber pays federal tax on equipment such as clippers, electricity, hair spray or whatever. There is a federal sales tax that is going to be replaced by a much better tax.

What the hon. member and members opposite, and I suppose many Canadians do not realize is that every Canadian pays an average of $700 a year in federal sales tax. They don't even know it. I think that is unfair. When the GST comes into place, everyone will know exactly what they are paying.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, what the minister and government will not realize is that 80 per cent of Canadians are against the tax.

[Translation]

I would like to put my supplementary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and it concerns the misleading propaganda used by the government to sell the GST. Mr. Tuz, President of the Better Business Bureau of Metropolitan Toronto, also said yesterday that if ads of this kind were used by the private sector, there would probably be charges of misleading advertising. Is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs prepared to tell the House today that he will ask for an investigation of this practice of inserting misleading ads indulged in by his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue?

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, we analyzed these ads very carefully prior to making them public, particularly after the Speaker's ruling some months ago about another ad of which the hon. member is well aware.

There is no need for an inquiry of any sort into the advertising. It is not misleading. The GST replaces an existing sales tax that is unfair, regressive and that does not allow our Canadian producers, manufacturers and exporters to compete internationally on a level playing field.

When the GST is implemented on January 1, 1991—which it will be—Canadians will realize that we will be better off as a result.

* * *

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, it was interesting to hear the Minister of National Revenue explain that his voice was tired from acknowledging praise for the GST.

My question is for the Acting Prime Minister. He knows the New Democratic Party has welcomed the First Ministers' Conference to resolve the impasse on Meech Lake. At the same time, because of the necessity of having the meeting behind closed doors and because of the nature of the constitutioned leadership across the country, it is limited to a small number of people.

We would like to know what steps the government is taking to make sure those groups that are concerned about what is happening with regard to Meech Lake, aboriginal Canadians, women, residents of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, are not left out of the last round of negotiations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member and the House know, there have been extensive consultations, particularly over the last several months.

There was a companion resolution first proposed by the premier of New Brunswick. It was the subject of extensive public hearings by a very successful and representative committee of the House.

Also, the hon. member knows the situation has now reached a point where, while there has been a narrowing of differences, there are still very serious differences remaining. We believe these differences can only be resolved in a First Ministers' Conference.

As the Prime Minister said yesterday with, I believe, the general support of the House of Commons: "What is at issue here is Canada." I know the hon. member shares with me and other members in the House a determination that we resolve the Meech Lake Accord question on a basis agreeable to the 11 governments which brought that agreement into being. That is the process being followed now. There will be consultations that continue.

The hon. member knows his own leader and the Leader of the Official Opposition will be meeting the Prime Minister in 15 minutes for a personal briefing as to the status of the discussions as they are seen by the Prime Minister. I know the hon. member hopes, as the House does, that the process of discussions beginning Sunday night will be successful.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, the right hon. Acting Prime Minister is correct that we do hope for successful discussions on Sunday and presumably on Monday as well.

I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether or not there will be only representatives of 11 governments, or will the Prime Minister make a special effort to include the representatives and leadership from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories because their item is very important. They should be at the table when that is being discussed. Will they be invited?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, obviously one of the important questions that has to be resolved in the process of negotiations, which can be achieved if Meech Lake succeeds, has to do with questions relating to the future status of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

What has been convened to this point is a dinner on Sunday night. That is a dinner of heads of government. The Prime Minister naturally hopes that there will be discussions that night which make it possible for there to be a full-scale Conference of the First Ministers whose provinces signed the Meech Lake Accord after that dinner.

• (1130)

We cannot be sure what will occur at that dinner until the 11 First Ministers have had the opportunity to sit down together to share their evaluations of Canada and to share their views as to how the interests of Canada can best be achieved.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, it is not only the 11 First Ministers; it is the whole nation that is concerned with what is going to happen.

Recognizing not everybody can be invited for dinner, the question is: Can we have the reassurances of this government that the leaders of the two territories will be involved in the discussions that relate specifically to them either on Sunday or on Monday? Will they be invited?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the question of participation at a First Ministers' Conference depends upon agreement of the First Ministers.

If the hon. member is asking me whether or not there will be the fullest possible involvement of the heads of Government of Yukon or the Northwest Territories, I can answer that in the affirmative. I am sure other governments would agree, but even if they did not, the Government of Canada would ensure that there was the fullest possible consultation with them.

If he is asking that at this late stage in the discussions a process that has been difficult enough with 11 First Ministers should contemplate the invitation to those discussions of the heads of the Governments of Yukon and the Northwest Territories, I think he would agree that that would be an unnecessary complication in the process.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I assume that there is an interest here on the part of members of the New Democratic Party in achieving an agreement that will allow us to approve the Meech Lake Accord.

I do not like to see thumbs down by members of the opposition on a matter of this importance.

We are trying to proceed step by step toward an arrangement which will achieve constitutional agreement in the country and, by doing that, allow us to get on with other essential items on the nation's constitutional agenda. I hope that has the support of all members of this House of Commons.

* * *

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, in bringing in his new quick method for accounting on the GST, the Minister of National Revenue effectively admitted that the GST was so complex that a new simplified method had to be found. In doing that they had to sacrifice the promise that the GST was going to be visible.

I would like to ask the government, through the Acting Minister of Finance, what other promises about tax reform are going to be given up on by this government by the time the GST is implemented?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member had followed the process for the preparation and implementation of the GST, he would know that I as the minister responsible for administering this tax have stated for well over a year that we will continue to work with the business community, particularly the small business community, to look for and add any new options that could reduce some of the complexities that exist, particularly for the mom and pop type of operations that do not have the resources to do any additional calculations.

I confirmed that fact in the Standing Committee on Finance not too many months ago and stated that I would be making an announcement in the not too distant future.

This announcement has been welcomed by most of the organizations across the country, including the Retail Council of Canada, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and others.

From the standpoint of being a hidden tax, let me confirm to this House what the technical paper and the bill outline. It is that in no way, shape or form is the GST going to be a hidden tax with or without the quick method or simplified accounting, as is the case with the existing federal sales tax.

Every Canadian will know exactly how much they are paying for every element of the purchase of their goods, whether it is groceries, if it is zero rated, or if it is taxable. The merchants can include the price in their products, but if they do so they will have to mark very carefully the fact that a GST of 7 per cent is included in that price so that the consumer will be made aware of it prior to the purchase.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): We have the admission, Madam Speaker, that the amount of GST paid at the point of purchase will not be displayed to the consumer.

Having given up on visibility, as the minister has just admitted, and having admitted that it was too complex to administer the way it was originally proposed, will he now admit to the House that his department is incapable of implementing this tax as from January 1, 1991 and, if they push it through on that date, the only reason will be to hope that the people of Canada forget about it in time for the next election?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, it is very obvious that the hon. member does not understand business practices. I speak from experience as a businessman most of my life.

First, I refute completely the hon. member's suggestion that I admitted to the complexity of the tax. I can assure this House that there will be no bureaucratic nightmare once this tax is implemented. It is a hell of a lot less complicated than the federal sales tax which has 22,000 exemptions in it and confuses the bejeesus out of everybody right across the country.

Second, if I may correct the hon. member, I in no way admitted that the consumer will not know that there is a GST on the price of the product. Every store which includes the cost of the GST must mark on their shelves, on their cash registers, and on their receipts if necessary, the fact that 7 per cent GST is added to the cost of that product. That is a great improvement on the federal sales tax.

* * *

TRANSPORT

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Again this week we learn of jobs leaving Canada for the United States because of unfair competition. Independent truckers recently blockaded Canadian borders demanding fairness in the trucking industry. This week in Windsor another blow was suffered by truckers with the announcement that the Canadian Transport Group is closing its Sprint operations in southwestern Ontario.

Does the minister realize the devastation that this government's inaction is causing? Will the minister immediately act to restore fairness for independent truckers and for the Canadian trucking industry?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour and Minister of State (Transport)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member across the way is no doubt aware that the vast majority of the truckers' concerns are related to matters that come under provincial jurisdiction.

Nevertheless, the Minister of Transport was able to meet a large number of independent truckers earlier this week and discussed the matter with them. Certain aspects of their demands concern areas under federal jurisdiction. They agreed to have the Minister of Transport discuss the matter with the provincial ministers concerned, and this satisfied the truckers who attended this meeting.

[English]

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister.

Competitiveness for Canadian business is not only a problem for truckers. During finance committee hearings in May we listened to businesses besieged with taxes, exporters grappling with an overvalued Canadian dollar, industry faltering with free trade, and literally every economic sector suffering from high interest rates.

Will the minister tell this House and Canadians that the government will listen and will stop these unfair initiatives in taxes, trade, and interest rates? Will he do this for Canadians?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, of course we will listen to Canadians. Of course we have and will continue to act in the best interests of Canadians and the Canadian economy.

The hon. member's picture of doom and gloom is not evidenced by the figures on growth and the fact that CPI rates are coming down. As I indicated earlier, the policies this government has been following since 1984 have led to Canada leading the western world in terms of growth.

• (1140)

Every outside observer including the OECD and the International Monetary Fund that has looked at Canada's policies has pronounced itself well satisfied and said that we are following precisely the right policies.

What is a mystery to this country, of course, is what policies the Liberal party has on this subject.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The Department of External Affairs employs only 1.8 per cent visible minority employees compared to 6.4 per cent in the general workforce. Therefore, it has failed to enforce employment equity and to prevent internal discrimination against persons of colour.

I ask the minister to indicate what plan of action he has to counteract this kind of systemic discrimination or in fact racism. I would also ask him to show his commitment to employment equity by arranging alternate employment for Mr. Idris Ben-Tahir, a public employee of 27 years, whose health was affected by job stress and strong feelings of discrimination in the passport department.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, there are three comments I want to make.

The first is that I am very much concerned about the success with which my department has been able to respond to requirements that are in the nature of Canada with respect to visible minorities and also, if I may say so, with respect to the de facto equality of women in the department. I am discussing that matter with senior officials now. It is a question which I think the hon. member knows I take seriously myself, and I intend to have my department reflect that in all of its behaviour.

Second, the proportions she has cited while low are nonetheless an improvement. They are better than they were, and we intend to continue on that course.

Third, with respect to the particular case that she raised, I must say I am rather surprised that a particular case would be raised on the floor of the House of Commons. It is better for all concerned, including the individual in question, if matters of that kind are discussed directly.

I think the hon. member and others in the House know from their experience with me that if they raise questions of that kind with me privately, I will keep the question private and I will do everything that is possible within our system to ensure that justice is done to all concerned.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister.

The two worst government departments with respect to hiring practices of visible minorities and natives are the Department of Justice and Correctional Service Canada. It is not irrelevant that two royal commissions have found that racial discrimination against visible minorities and natives is a serious question in the criminal justice system in this country.

Today, as an example of what results from the kind of employment pattern we have in those two departments, we have a guard in Kingston Penitentiary sporting one of those racist pins from Calgary, and the management has been unable to do anything about it. I wonder if this government will.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the specific question that was raised by my friend from Windsor is new to this Question Period. I will look into the matter. The ministers responsible are not in the House at the moment, but I will look into it and I will have a response quickly.

With regard to the more general question, that was raised with the Minister of Justice the other day. She replied in the House of Commons with regard to the commitment of herself as minister and of her department to ensure that the statistics referred to by the hon. member change.

* * *

NEW HORIZONS

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Seniors, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or the President of the Treasury Board. In their collective absence perhaps I could direct it to the Acting Minister of Finance.

For the past several weeks we have been told that the New Horizons Program budget has been put on hold pending departmental review. Could the minister advise the House when this review will be completed, the money released, and whether or not the review's findings will be made public?

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is aware of our very strong commitment with regard to seniors in this country. The moneys that have been allocated in this year's budget are being spent as—

[Translation]

—as planned at the beginning of the fiscal year.

[English]

So, there has been no change.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the answer of the minister surprises me in light of the difficulty that seniors groups across Canada have had in accessing these funds. They are told that the funds are frozen and will not be released.

I wonder, in light of the circumstances that it appears that in certain provinces there is no freeze and in others there is, would the minister undertake to ensure that any freeze there may be in place in all those provinces is lifted until a review is completed, so that the provinces and territories where there appears to be a freeze, according to the seniors groups, will in fact receive their money immediately?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, I would like to assure the hon. member that the money budgeted for the New Horizons Program is in fact being spent as planned so I do not see where he got his information. This year, we will have spent over $200 million since the program was launched so I do not see the basis for his questions. I can assure the hon. member that if there ever was a problem in some provinces, we would seriously look into it then.

* * *

[English]

LITERACY

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the federal government's National Literacy Secretariat has stated that Canada cannot eliminate illiteracy by simply teaching reading and writing. The government must attack the country's fundamental social problems, such as the growing number of poor in Canada.

They have identified approximately four million Canadians who are at risk and who could be added to the five million who are functionally illiterate now in this country and who cost the nation roughly $10 billion a year.

What is the government going to do to respond to these four million Canadians who are at risk, and how will it do that?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Madam Speaker, it should be remembered that it was under this government's leadership and this Prime Minister that we brought forward a very important and impressive literacy initiative.

It gives me an opportunity to reflect on the very effective work of the National Literacy Secretariat, a small group of people who work in a dedicated fashion, and how they have been able to reach out across the country and build partnerships with every single province and territorial government in the country and with the people who have worked in the field for countless years, for tens of years and some for hundreds of years. The literacy movements of Canada are finding new partnerships in the voluntary sector and in the business community.

There are many solutions that have begun to show up. There is nothing like having more people come to the cause to eradicate what is indeed a very desperate problem for this nation.

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, since the minister wants to talk about the current initiative, let me ask him the following supplementary question.

[Translation]

There are now about five million functional illiterates in Canada and they cost the country over $10 billion. How many fewer functional illiterates will there be at the end of the literacy programs implemented by the government? Or is it only or mainly a political gesture or a public relations gesture? How many fewer will there be afterwards?

[English]

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Madam Speaker, the study that Statistics Canada brought out this week is a benchmark study because it gives us a continuum of the literary skills. It gives an individual a means of showing what progress he or she makes in terms of the acquisition of the reading skills that are so necessary to be able to function today.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I see the desire of all Canadians throughout the country to get involved, as I know the hon. member is himself. This year, which is International Literacy Year, I want to take part in all the activities. Every week, I will be involved at least two or three times with community groups and individuals like Peter Gzowski, who has done outstanding work, even made it his cause. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been raised in this effort. As I said, this is a year to reflect and to show all Canadians how we would gain by eliminating this plague, this scourge that affects our country. We already have plans for next year because we will not give up until illiteracy is beaten.

* * *

• (1150)

[English]

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Madam Speaker, my question was for any one of the three ministers of agriculture, but since none of them are here I will direct it to the government bench generally.

The minister announced yesterday a payment to the farmers in Saskatchewan. There is still a bit of concern because the Saskatchewan government, which is only putting in $39 million, indicates that it does not know where that $39 million is going to come from.

Could anyone on the benches across indicate if this is going to slow up the payments to the farmers? When can they expect some assistance from this program?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am not particularly aware of the problem the member is talking about. It was May 31 that that agreement between the federal government and the provincial government was announced. The federal contribution to the program is $238.3 million. The province is coming up with substantial amounts of money to match that program as well.

I am sure that the farmers of Saskatchewan must be very pleased because they are receiving the largest portion of that $500 million program and it has to be coming at a very appropriate time.

The province will be making the payments to the producers. How soon that is going to be, I do not know, but the program has to be developed for distribution of those funds.

Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Madam Speaker, the program was announced as pre-seeding assistance to farmers so that they could have money for seeding. For 80-cent-per-acre assistance from the Saskatchewan government, the federal government has forced these farmers to wait for over two months.

Is there any reason the government did not put out this money and collect from the provincial governments later?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, as I am sure the member knows well, it takes time to develop a program and deliver that program. As I said before, we will get that program out through the provinces post-haste.

* * *

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and increase employee premiums, has not yet been passed by Parliament. Could the minister tell us by what right the deductions on paycheques of federal employees have been increased?

[English]

Hon. Paul Dick (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for the question and to inform hon. members that the deductions that are taken off employee paycheques are taken off in accordance with the regulations and the law that is in place right now. The new law she is talking about, of course, is being held up by her party in the Senate.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the minister might wish to clarify his answer because we have been informed that the new premium rates were implemented as of January 1, 1990 for all federal government employees.

I ask again on what authorization those deductions are being taken off.

Hon. Paul Dick (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, under the present law, a premium rate is announced every year. At present, the legal rate is $1.95. An adjustment was announced late last year by the hon. Minister of National Revenue, who made it clear that it was voluntary pending passage of C-21. The recommended rate is $2.25. We are making the deductions in accordance with the law and regulations in place now.

It would be very nice if the Senate would pass the bill which it is holding up so it would be much easier for more Canadians to get further training, and it would be better for the smooth running of that program.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to whoever is answering for the Minister of Justice.

On May 10, the principal of McGill University wrote to the Minister of Employment and Immigration to express his deep concern regarding the major reduction in funding for the Challenge '90 program. Last summer, 95 positions for students at McGill were funded. This summer, only 63 positions will be funded.

Will the minister restore funds to McGill and to other universities across Canada which have seen similar cuts in their funding and which mean far fewer opportunities for students this summer?

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is well aware that the total funds for the Challenge '90 program have been increased from $198 million to $218 million. That is the first point.

The second point is that we have re-allocated within the total component of the Challenge program a certain amount from the SEED component to a Stay-in-School initiative to help high school students and to prevent drop-outs. Surely, these students are the most at risk in our society, and surely the hon. member would not be against that, would he?

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Madam Speaker, I would ask the hon. minister to meet with the principal of McGill, with the faculty and students who were counting on this funding and who do not agree with his assessment of the situation. Perhaps he can explain to them how less means more.

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons)): Madam Speaker, I repeat that we have increased the amount for Challenge. The hon. member says we have decreased it. That is false. It has been increased from $198 million to $218 million.

If the hon. member wants to set up a meeting with Mr. Johnston of McGill University, I would be very pleased to accept, at his his invitation, any time.

* * *

SEX OFFENDERS

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I am glad of the opportunity of asking questions so that the Solicitor General will be able to acknowledge his presence here today.

Mr. Dick: Less than 10 per cent of the NDP is in the House.

Mr. Brewin: Thank you for your intervention.

My question is addressed to the ever present Solicitor General. The Solicitor General and the House will be aware of the increased renewed public concern with the complete failure of the administration of justice to deal with the problems of sex offenders in our society arising out of the Timothy Garland case. While it is acknowledged that this case does not directly come within federal jurisdiction, it does give me the opportunity to raise with the minister the report on the management and treatment of sex offenders which his department and he made public on March 8.

Can the minister tell the House what steps, if any, he is taking to implement the recommendations of a report about which, frankly, all we have heard so far is deafening silence?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the concern of my colleague to underline my presence in the House. I am usually around, as he knows.

Perhaps some of the functions of the Solicitor General require a low profile, but I will try to enhance my presence or be more vocal in the House, so that even my own colleagues know that I am around.

With respect to the very important issue which my hon. friend raises, and it is an important issue, my hon. friend knows that on March 8, 1990, I did release the report on the management and treatment of sex offenders. I indicated at that time that it would be part of the broader task force on mental health.

I understand that all those recommendations are before my senior officials right now. I intend to look at those recommendations as soon as they are given to me.

I can assure this House, as I indicated on March 8, 1990, that that is not a report that will be accumulating dust on shelves.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Madam Speaker, while I appreciate the comments of the minister, there are a number of specific recommendations in that report which he could proceed with forthwith. The report makes it very clear that within Correctional Service Canada there are only 200 places in treatment programs for sex offenders and there are 1,400 sex offenders in our federal penitentiaries. Not only does the public safety require that immediate action begin in this area but so, too, the rights of sex offenders themselves. They desperately look for treatment when they are in our prisons.

• (1200)

Can the minister give us his personal assurance that he will proceed, right now, with some steps in this regard?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the report was released on March 8. There is a comprehensive task force with respect to mental health of which this report is a part. Some measures are already in place and others will continue to be put in place.

I would like to pick up on one comment I heard this morning in the debate on a specific piece of legislation. Someone complained that we should not be proceeding with piecemeal legislation. We are looking at a comprehensive review here and will be dealing with it globally.

* * *

CORRECTIONS CANADA

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General.

The Privacy Commissioner has stated that he did not censor the Legère and Gingras reports and that he had no problem with their release. The Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General has requested the production of the uncensored reports. There is a clear indication that there are major systemic and administrative problems at Corrections Canada and that a program of weed and feed is necessary there. In light of all this, is the minister prepared to produce these reports immediately and to undertake an independent and comprehensive review of Corrections Canada?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, again I want to thank another one of my colleagues for doing everything in his power to underline my presence in the House today.

With respect to the specific question of my hon. colleague, I believe he is referring to the Privacy Commissioner's presence before the justice committee earlier this week. I understand that the chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General will provide me with the specific motion some time next week. I am aware of the motion. I have also been made aware of the comments of the Privacy Commissioner.

I would ask my hon. colleague to check with the chairman of the justice committee who, I understand, has received a letter from the Privacy Commissioner clarifying quotes apparently taken out of context with respect to that specific report to which my hon. colleague refers.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PARLIAMENT OF CANADA ACT—TABLING OF FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to table the fourth report of the Special Committee on the Review of the Parliament of Canada Act. With leave of the House, I intend to move for concurrence in this report later this day.

I ask that the House dispense with reading of the report by the Clerk at the Table.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Does the minister have the consent of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

STRIKING COMMITTEE—FORTY-FOURTH REPORT

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the forty-fourth report of the Striking Committee.

* * *

[Translation]

PARLIAMENT OF CANADA ACT

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Marcel Danis (Minister of State (Youth), Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House): Madam Speaker, with leave of the House, I move, seconded by Mr. Milliken and by Mr. Murphy, for Mr. Gauthier, that the fourth report of the Special Committee on the Review of the Parliament of Canada Act, tabled in the House today, be concurred in.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Does the minister have the unanimous consent of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present today relating to the tax benefit for northern Canadians.

The petitions state that, whereas the residents of northern Canada need a real tax benefit to recognize the high cost of living and working in areas described as northern or isolated, and whereas the report of the Task Force on Northern Benefits was released Friday, October 27, 1989, and it fails to address the needs of these communities, the undersigned call upon Parliament to reject the recommendations of the report and to develop a fair and equitable tax benefit program which recognizes the financial needs of the people in northern and isolated areas.

I would like to point out that residents of the following communities in my riding of Churchill have signed this petition: The Pas, Grand Rapids, Snow Lake, Moose Lake, Cross Lake, Cormorant, Sherridon and Thompson. There are also the signatures of people from Winnipeg and other communities including Terrace, B.C., and, from Newfoundland, Carmanville, Aspen Cove, Main Point, Ladle Cove, Deadman's Bay, Templeman, Noggin Cove, Lumsden, Valleyfield, Musgrave Harbour, and also the community of Fredericton.

A number of communities obviously want the government finally to come up with a northern benefits package which benefits and helps the people who live in northern and isolated communities.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, I have a petition certified as correct from the members and friends of the Ashby Branch 138 of the Royal Canadian Legion in Sydney.

There are almost 600 signatures on this petition and in part it states: "The government of Canada has introduced changes that will reduce homekeeping services to veterans and substantially increase the costs of long-term care. Whereas the veterans have already given service to this country and should not be targeted by those measures, the petitioners call upon Parliament to reject those budget measures which deprive veterans of proper services and increase their financial hardships.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs has made some movement away from this very Draconian position, but he has not gone nearly far enough. The position of the government is still grossly unfair to the veterans of the country.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise to present a petition on behalf of numerous Canadians who are opposed to the goods and services tax.

Canadians by the hundreds have taken the trouble to sign this petition. They indicate their displeasure with the unfairness of the government in introducing this tax on virtually everything they purchase. They object to the fact that this is replacing the manufacturers' sales tax. They object to the fact that the government has already introduced 31 tax increases before the imposition of this particularly wicked and hard tax and they call upon Parliament to reject the goods and services tax.

[Translation]

TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I am tabling today a petition from Chibougamau in the riding of Roberval. Your petitioners reject the conclusions of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas and ask that Chibougamau be recognized as an isolated area under the present tax benefit system.

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions pursuant to Standing Order 36. These petitions all urge the government to reject the GST.

It is interesting that when petitions are taken in Victoria, being the tourist destination that it is, petitioners come from all across the country, particularly from British Columbia. There is still, and continues to be, widespread public opposition to the GST and I have the honour to present these petitions to the House to that effect.

MINORITY LANGUAGE RIGHTS

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Madam Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition today that was organized by Mrs. Dorothy Macdonald of my riding, and signed by herself and many residents of the Ottawa area.

They petition Parliament to promote tolerance by acting to uphold the right to freedom of expression of the French-speaking minority in Ontario, and to uphold the right to freedom of expression of the English-speaking minority in Quebec.

• (1210)

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, once again I have the honour to present a petition with many signatures in both Chinese and English showing how strongly people from the Chinese Canadian community in British Columbia and merchants in Chinatown itself feel. It states: "The 7 per cent goods and services tax will hurt small businesses, costs will go up, incomes will go down and it will be an accounting nightmare. The tax will also hurt consumers as prices of thousands of items and services go up."

"Therefore, the undersigned petitioners call upon Parliament and the Government of Canada to withdraw the goods and services tax." I only wish I could say it in Chinese as well.

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Madam Speaker, I have a couple of petitions here today asking the government to reconsider its position with regard to the goods and services tax.

One petition in particular emphasizes the negative effects this tax will have on young athletes in sports organizations, something very vital to young Canadians. They are asking the government to take the unfair, unnecessary tax and reconsider its passage.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions today.

One is from seniors in the Trenton area of my riding who object to the government's policy of clawing back old age pensions. They ask the government to reconsider its policy with regard to this and reinstate old age security at its full value.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, as well, I have the honour to present a petition from people across the country who are concerned about the goods and services tax to be introduced in January, 1991.

The petitioners find it an unfair and additional tax which makes the burden of taxation in the country absolutely impossible. They ask the government to reconsider and withdraw the legislation.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present two petitions pursuant to Standing Order 36.

The first petition is signed by over 200 people from different parts of Alberta, as well as from people in the Hamilton area of Ontario. It calls on the government to end low-level flying in Canada. These people object to low-level flights disrupting the hunting and traditional ways of the Inuit and other native people in Canada.

They are happy that the low-level flight training centre at Goose Bay has been cancelled. Nevertheless, flights are still escalating, and these people would like to see an end to it.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): The second petition I have is signed by people in my constituency from La Ronge, Stanley Mission, Ile à la Crosse and other northern communities.

Like 80 per cent of Canadians, these people object to the imposition of the goods and services tax. They point out that it has a particularly negative impact on northerners who have already a much higher cost of living and pay much more for their goods and services.

Therefore, the petitioners call on Parliament, and in this case I presume members of the Liberal caucus who sit in the other place and have the power to do so, to bring an end to the goods and services tax.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Westminster—Burnaby on a point of order.

Ms. Black: Madam Speaker, I ask if it is possible to receive unanimous consent from the House to revert to Introduction of Private Members' Bills because I have a bill that I want to introduce.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the motion as presented by the hon. member. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

DAY OF NATIONAL MOURNING ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-306, an act respecting a day of national mourning.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Shall the hon. member have leave to introduce the bill?

Some0z Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Black: Madam Speaker, I thank you and members of the House for agreeing to revert to Introduction of Private Members' Bills.

I rise today to introduce my private members' bill that would commemorate December 6 as a national day of mourning in memory of the 14 young women who were massacred in Montreal.

I envision this day of mourning also to be a day of action. Every day of the year, small committed groups of women carry the entire load for helping survivors of violence and educating the public.

I want to see the public at large become involved in working to stop violence against women, and I believe that this day of mourning could be a focal point for that kind of action.

I really do believe that this bill can obtain all party support and I certainly do hope that that is the case.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nicholson: Madam Speaker, I think you will find there is unanimous consent in the House to call it three o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Would there really be unanimous consent to call it three o'clock? I think even the Pages agree.

It being three o'clock p.m., the House stands adjourned until Monday at one o'clock p.m., according to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 12.17 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 4, 1990

The House met at 1 p.m.

Prayers

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—BILLS

[English]

FRUIT, VEGETABLES AND HONEY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands) moved that Bill C-222, an act to amend the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act (country of origin), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I want to begin debate on Bill C-222 by explaining to the House and to the viewing public the kind of tortuous process that a private members' bill goes through.

This bill was first put on the Order Paper over four years ago by the hon. Jim Manly, since retired, who was the member of Parliament for the then riding of Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands, portions of which are now in my riding of Saanich—Gulf Islands. It has been on the Order Paper for four years, and it has only now been drawn. For the people out there who wonder about the haste or the speed of government, they have cause to wonder.

The intent of Bill C-222, an act to amend the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act (country of origin), was to address what I consider a major flaw or an omission in that act that countries of origin be made clear.

My amendment is that no person shall sell or offer for sale any produce unless the country of origin is shown clearly and legibly on the produce or the packaging thereof or on a sign placed near the produce.

• (1310)

Not only is the private member's bill a tortuous process, but the way this bill has come forth is also somewhat tortured. Until the end of last week we did not know whether the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act actually existed or whether it had been repealed. There was conflicting opinion as to whether or not it existed. Just 10 minutes or 15 minutes ago the Clerk of the House of Commons approached me in the corridor and assured me that yes the bill that I was seeking to amend did exist. Therefore I do not have a procedural hurdle to go over.

I ask the indulgence of the House and of the viewing public because this is complex but it is important for people to understand the route of bills through all devices of the House and how we get to where we are.

Right now the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act, first passed in 1935, is in effect but on February 15, 1990 the government tabled the Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment Act and referred the bill to that act. It has been put in a hopper. It is a house cleaning measure. It knows that it has the Canada Agricultural Products Act passed in August 1988, but as a means of trying to house clean the statutes the government has put the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act in the Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment Act.

The intention was to repeal the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act and to give force of the bill to the Canada Agricultural Products Act. This is why there is confusion and this is why the Clerk of the House was good enough to confirm with me that there is a bill which I am now attempting to amend.

There were a number of people in the House who were asking me whether or not I was going to ask for unanimous consent to withdraw this bill, but I felt it was important to speak on it to let people know the kind of Byzantine structures that exist here. What I want in this bill, that is that no person shall sell or offer for sale any produce unless the country of origin is clearly or legibly shown, is important.

Canadian consumers want to know the country of origin of the produce they buy for a variety of reasons. I will get into those a little later. The state of flux that I refer to on the whole mess that we are dealing with will be absolutely gripping television. People will be sitting on the edge of their chairs for the rest of this hour making sure they know all they want to know about fruits, vegetables and honey.

Obviously the country of origin was a concern of the government. The new Canada Agricultural Products Act under Section 32(i) provided for a way of looking at country of origin, but it is far too weak for my liking. It says:

> 32.(i) providing for systems to ascertain the places of origin or destination of agricultural products;

We can see that the language is not quite as clear as what I have proposed in Bill C–222. I think it is in need of clarification because there is a lot of confusion not just about the country of origin but also about the kind of regulations which attend that.

There is lack of clarity regarding regulations. First, as to fines in the original Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act, there is provision for fines of up to $50 for violations of the act. That must really scare people away. Firms like Loblaws or Save–On–Foods in my riding must be really scared of a $50 fine if they do not label certain products. There is also confusion about the kinds of produce subject to the labelling requirement.

In the regulations there are 27 listed products, whereas the Minister's office states there are 29. We are talking about products available both in Canada and elsewhere, such as apples, apricots, asparagus, beets, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, cantaloup, greenhouse tomatoes, and so on. There are 27 products listed in the regulations and 29 according to the minister's office. Therefore Bill C–222 makes it clear that it is important for people to know the country of origin.

My former colleague, Jim Manly, was motivated to introduce this bill over four years ago for three very important reasons; health, politics and the environment. I am not trying to say there are artificial divisions between those three but I use them as categories for reasons which will become apparent.

Concerned Canadians want to know where their food is coming from. If they participate in a boycott of a product or country, it is important for them to be aware of its origin. If a store carried Chilean grapes labelled when the Chilean regime was particularly repressive people could opt not to purchase those grapes.

Political boycotts of products can only be successful if such products are clearly identified. The present set–up appears to be ad hoc at best. There are only 29 fruits and vegetables now required to be labelled. The 29 are all products which are also grown in Canada. Bill C–222 is an effort to broaden that list.

I want to go back for a moment to grapes. Grapes are an important example because it was not just Chilean grapes that people wanted to boycott, it was also California grapes. This is where the health and environmental questions come in. I think the grape example embodied all three reasons why naming country of origin is important.

Consumers are bombarded with information with respect to the harmful effects of pesticides and chemicals. In Tulare County in California, the heart of the grape–growing region, over five million pounds of toxic pesticides are used annually. It is estimated that this is only one–third of the annual amount used as growers are only required to register certain pesticides. Companies do have an obligation to ensure the safety of the products they produce, but, unfortunately, this is not always the case. I think history has confirmed that we cannot always depend on an agri–food company to give us all the information we require.

I want to give some startling statistics regarding the whole grape question. Since 1986 in the community of Earlimart, California, five children have been diagnosed with cancer. In McFarland, California, 14 children have been so diagnosed. State medical officials claim that these figures represent a percentage per capita which is 12 times higher than national standards. What is interesting about these sad cases of childhood cancer is that the parents of all of these children worked in the vineyards. Several of the mothers of these children were working in the vineyards while they were pregnant.

• (1320)

We have some rather horrific statistics and data to back up the concerns. Five compounds, captain, pyrethrum, methylbromide, dinoseb and phosdrin, have been targeted for immediate ban. All of them are still being used in Canada. Many of these compounds are carcinogenic and have been identified as being particularly harmful to children when they are still in the womb. Also, pesticide residue is likely to show up in 20 per cent of the California grapes coming on to the Canadian market.

Consumers do require more information when they are buying products. One thinks of the five million pounds of toxic pesticides that are used annually in the California grape market, which only represents those pesticides required to be registered. Canadians should be aware that this is happening and this is the intention of Bill C-222.

I like to buy Canadian produce if I have an option. Obviously, if I want to buy a mango or a papaya, the likelihood of finding a Canadian product like that is rather remote. In wintertime we enjoy eating Granny Smith apples. I would like to know whether or not they are coming from a country such as New Zealand, which I would like to support for a whole range of issues, or whether they are coming from a repressive country.

New Zealand has an admirable record on many things, particularly its anti-nuclear stand. As a consumer, I would like to use whatever impetus I have to boost its economy. If it means buying a bag of Granny Smith apples, so be it. That is my way of supporting that kind of political development in New Zealand. The intent of the bill is to be able to show support for a country as well as to boycott one. If I want to purchase produce from New Zealand, I can do that. If I want to avoid purchasing goods from Romania, I can do that as well.

This bill is very timely. I know the Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General is examining what to do with the Fruits, Vegetables and Honey Act in light of the Canada Agricultural Products Act. I urge my colleagues in the House to send a message to those people who are reviewing this legislation that the indication of country of origin is important.

I urge support of this bill for the political reasons I have outlined, so people can boycott or support certain brands of politics. I urge its support for environmental reasons, to show concern for the kind of pesticides used and concern for the health of the workers involved in the growing of produce. This is something that is concurrent with Canadian values.

Also, regarding environmental concerns, as a world we know we are one. The degradation of agricultural land by overuse and misuse of pesticides does not only hurt the area that is involved, it hurts us all because there is a decreasing amount of arable land. The more land goes down to the devastation of agricultural degradation, the less arable land we have. In conclusion, I urge the House to support Bill C-222 so that Canadian consumers can see clearly the produce they are purchasing and where it comes from, so they can make informed judgements when they are purchasing fruit, vegetables and honey.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say that the government believes that all Canadians should have the right to information about the food they buy, including the geographic origins of fresh produce.

The bill before us today recognizes that right and attempts to enforce it. The problem is that this legislation is not necessary. Laws and regulations requiring country of origin declarations for fresh fruits and vegetables are already in force.

Bill C-222 attempts to amend the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act, first passed in 1935. This bill proposes to amend that act which prohibits the sale of fruits and vegetables unless their country of origin is shown on their container or on a sign nearby.

The Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act was amended in 1942 to prohibit imports of produce which the importer purchased later than 24 hours after shipment from the point of production. Not only did this promote a more efficient use of rail cars during the war years, but it also effectively controlled the consignment selling of fresh fruits and vegetables in this country.

When the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act, the CAPS act, was introduced in 1955, it consolidated a number of existing acts, including the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act. However, the import provisions contained in regulations pertaining to consignment selling, Sections 56 and 57 as they were commonly called, were not consolidated but remained under the original act.

For over 40 years these regulations controlled imports on as consignment basis. In other words, imports could only enter Canada under a prior-purchase agreement.

However, in January 1983, the Standing Joint Committee for the Scrutiny of Regulations examined the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act. It ruled that the act did not have the enabling authority to regulate consignment selling.

During the following five years there was no attempt to enforce the regulations. During the summer of 1987, it quickly became apparent that Canada's fresh fruit and vegetable markets were vulnerable to surplus products from abroad. These surplus products are sold on consignment and can be sold at depressed prices, in direct competition with Canadian production and pre-purchased imports.

Without controls on consignment selling, produce can be imported without firm purchase agreements. Distressed or spoiled produce can enter the market, causing price disruptions in a market that is already price-sensitive.

In order to assist the Canadian horticultural industry, amendments to the CAPS act were brought before this House in June, 1988. With widespread industry support and all-party agreement, a new act, the Canada Agricultural Products Act, CAP act, received swift passage.

Statutory authority for regulations to control consignment selling of fresh fruits and vegetables was restored. Swift passage of the bill was important to the entire agri-food industry. However, it was especially crucial to Canada's horticulture sector. The Canadian Horticultural Council and the Canadian Produce Marketing Association considered the new CAP act essential to continued orderly marketing of their products.

Two years ago the remaining two sections of the fruit, vegetables and honey regulations made pursuant to the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act were entirely replaced by the Canadian Agricultural Products Act. The regulations were recently revoked and the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act is in the process of being repealed through the Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment Program.

There are 14 different regulations made pursuant to the CAP Act. The fresh fruit and vegetable regulations relate to the marketing of agricultural products in import, export and interprovincial trade, provide for national standards and grades of agricultural products and for their inspection and grading.

Marketing is defined in the act as, among other things, the preparation and advertising of agricultural products. Preparation in turn is defined as including processing, slaughtering, storing, inspecting, grading, packaging, assembling, pricing, marking and labelling.

• (1330)

Similar authority to regulate the marking and labelling of agriculture products was contained in the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act and was the authority under which country of origin labelling requirements were written into the regulations.

The CAP Act, however, as I previously reported, replaced the CAPS Act and indicated the government's desire to regulate specifically country of origin labelling when it provided in paragraph (1) of Section 32 the authority for the Governor in Council to make regulations that provide for systems to ascertain the places of origin or destination of agricultural products.

Specifically, it is paragraph 38(1)(F) of the fresh fruit and vegetable regulations which requires a country of origin declaration on shipping containers for bulk produce, and paragraph 38(2)(B) for consumer-sized prepackaged products. The fresh fruit and vegetable regulations made under the new CAP Act prohibit the import and interprovincial trade of 29 fresh fruit and vegetables grown in Canada, if the country of origin is not declared on the packages.

We are, however, expanding this labelling requirement. Within the next few months, through a regulatory amendment to the fresh fruit and vegetables regulations, the country of origin labelling regulation will be extended to all fresh fruits and vegetables. This regulatory amendment is one of a series being processed by the government to bring about greater uniformity in the regulation of all commodities regulated under the CAP Act.

Following the final promulgation of the amendment, the country of origin regulation will apply to all types of fresh fruits and vegetables, nuts, and edible fungi. This amendment will not only bring country of origin labelling to all these products, but it will also permit inspectors to examine, analyse and take regulatory action as required.

This will ensure that imported food products are safe, wholesome and free of contaminants for the Canadian consumer. This is something that Canadians have come to expect from their government, and we have committed ourselves to this endeavour.

In addition to the Canada Agricultural Products Act, many provincial laws regulate the sale of fresh fruits and vegetables at the retail level and call for country of origin labelling. For example, Sections 12, 13 and 14 of the Ontario Farm Products Grades and Sales Act and regulations state that there must be a declaration of country of origin on all fresh fruits and vegetables sold in bulk at the retail level. Sections 18, 19, 21 and 22 of the Quebec regulations contain the same requirements. There is also Section 7 of the Fruit and Vegetable Sales Act, Regulation 222/84 in Manitoba; Section 7 of the B.C. fruit and vegetable regulations; as well as Section 11 of the Natural Products Grades Act, Regulations 81-56, are administered by the province of New Brunswick.

We do not disagree with the idea of Bill C-222. Canadians should be informed about where their fresh produce is grown. But the fact is we do not need to amend this legislation. The right of Canadians to know is already fully protected by existing federal and provincial laws and regulations.

[Translation]

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, as assistant critic for Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I am pleased to speak on this bill, since I am extremely interested in regulations on labelling.

[English]

Bill C-222 is a Private Members' Bill to amend the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act of 1936. The act does not provide for the country of origin, something that is extremely important for Canadian consumers. The Canadian consumer is now extremely learned.

[Translation]

He knows what he wants, he knows his product. Canadians today are aware of chemicals, they know about pesticides and they would like to know what there is or what was used that could affect the fruit, vegetables and honey sold.

The proposal—

[English]

The bill proposes:

> No person shall sell or offer for sale any produce unless the country of origin is shown clearly and legibly on the produce or the packaging thereof or on a sign placed near the produce.

[Translation]

I find this proposal very reasonable. It refers to legislation—

[English]

—a law which is soon to be repealed, the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act, which does not talk of the country of origin as far as labelling is concerned.

In the case of there being no grade established, there is tropical fruit, for example, which comes into the country ungraded and, therefore, unregulated.

As the member who spoke before me said, there was an act passed in 1986 called the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act, but this particular act does not cover ungraded produce. For example, Canadian apples are regulated and graded. If apples come from outside the country, they would be similarly graded. But there is produce that comes from other countries, is not grown in Canada, and does not need to be graded. Therefore, it is not marked as to the country of origin.

I would also like to refer to the basic labelling requirements under the Food and Drugs Act and the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act. While country of origin is required on such items as clothing, it is not required for food. Food is extremely important for the Canadian consumer. We are not any longer the consumer of the 1930s. The consumer of the 1990s is extremely literate and aware of the affects of pesticides and chemicals in food or on food. As a very literate consumer community, we want to know what is in the food, what has touched the food, and where the food comes from. It is a reasonable amendment to ask that the country of origin be included.

Perhaps the member should have added to the labelling requirements the question of meat. One million pounds of beef comes into the country in carcass or package form that is not graded. It is not marked as to the country of origin. This has resulted in the destruction of our beef industry in Ontario, causing the closure of six packing plants last year.

I have in my hand a well-illustrated brochure put out by Canada Packers Incorporated. It shows two pictures of striploin. It states:

> The striploin in picture #1 came from a carcass similar to this.
>
> It graded Canada Grade A. To receive that Grade from the Federal Government grader, it had to meet these specifications.
>
> a) Youthful—Youthful carcasses mean tender meat. Notice the smooth shiny bone texture. A sure sign of youthfulness. Tenderness is the #1 quality criteria by which consumers judge your meat.
>
> b) A minimum fat cover of not less than 4mm and not more than 19mm—a certain amount of fat coverage is necessary to ensure good quality beef.
>
> c) Meat that is firm—to provide a pleasant texture for the consumer.

On the other side of this brochure it states:

> The striploin in picture #2 came from a carcass similar to this—

That refers to the first picture on the front of the brochure.

> Notice the porous hard texture of the bone. This animal was not youthful—the meat would look fine, but generally be tough to eat.
>
> This cow carcass in Canada would grade D or may not be graded at all.
>
> In the U.S. the carcass would often become "No Roll" boxed beef.
>
> Consider these facts!
>
> 1) There are no government quality standards for "No Roll". The packer can use whatever he wants including cows!
>
> 2) Over one million lbs. of "No Roll" product is ending up in Canadian establishments like yours every week!
>
> 3) Consumer studies prove that on average only one in ten unhappy customers complain to their restaurant or store, however they do tell numerous friends and associates.

• (1340)

I am thankful to Canada Packers for informing the consumer community. I wish that the Canadian government would respect Canadian consumers as much and publicize the differences between these meats.

[Translation]

So, Mr. Speaker, I note that it is necessary to indicate what country a certain product or meat comes from. I would also mention that I would even have added "meats" to the amendment.

The NDP member mentioned other reasons, political, working conditions, etc. I would simply say that we have many new Canadians here; of course, we also have many Canadians who might want to encourage buying products from some countries and maybe also discourage buying certain products, but all Canadians would have a choice if they knew the country of origin because it was indicated.

In conclusion, I sincerely and strongly support this motion to indicate the country of origin on the label of all products sold in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in the debate on Bill C-222 which was presented by the hon. member for Saanich—Gulf Islands.

I have always had a very keen interest in food production. Certainly, the consumers of the country would want to know that their health interests are protected by the rules and regulations imposed by the government. I can tell you, Sir, that there are probably not too many other countries that have the standards that Canada has.

My association with exporting products has been one that has certainly made me proud to be a Canadian. We have set some of the very best standards in the world, not only in terms of what we import but also in terms of what we export. I can assure hon. members that the government needs take no direction from the other side of the House with respect to the things it has done to continue that tremendous tradition.

Let us just look at a few ideas that were put forward here this afternoon. My colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary, brought forward the fact that we are repealing the old act that was in place and replacing it by the Canada Agricultural Products Act. Even while we are sitting, activities are taking place to improve the quality and the standards that we have set with respect to goods and food products from other countries.

As a matter of fact, if the hon. member had done her research, she would have considered the fact that in the next 12 months, according to the new act, all fresh fruit and vegetables sold in Canada will require a country of origin declaration. That is the thrust of her bill. Had she looked at that, we would not have had to detain the House for a whole hour on a Private Members' bill that is totally redundant, in effect, because its concerns are being looked after.

The government did not sit back and do nothing, as was often the case in the past. It has taken measures that are strengthening the consumers' concerns with respect to the importation of foodstuffs.

We brought forward—

Ms. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to point out that the hon. member is talking about regulations. The intent of my bill is to place such a measure in the act itself so that the Parliament of Canada would be responsible. The regulations may do that. It is important that consumers be given that protection in the body of the act itself, something with which I think the whole House agrees.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): With respect, I should tell the hon. member for Saanich—Gulf Islands that she has had her time during this hour. She is now bringing up a matter for debate.

I will turn again to the hon. member for Portage—Interlake.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to enter into a direct debate. I am here to inform Canadians and this House about this bill. Although I think most people will agree it has some credibility in terms of the hon. member's desire to show that she is concerned, and she illustrates that it in the form of a bill, all too often the New Democrats throw everything including the kitchen sink into a private members' bill and hope something gets drawn. Often, they do not do their research. In fact she should have withdrawn this particular piece of legislation. Yet here we are discussing it.

Ms. Hunter: So says you!

Mr. Holtmann: So says the whole side of this House, because we know that this government has taken very concrete steps and measures that have improved quality controls.

If the hon. member would look at the actions we have taken with respect to some of the chemicals used in this country, she would see that we withdrew Alachlor. This probably was not in the best interests of farmers, but we as a government felt that its withdrawal was necessary to protect consumers. If we are doing it here in Canada, we certainly would not want it to be used anywhere else. We do import goods and products from elsewhere. The Department of Health is very much up on the concerns in these situations.

Under this particular legislation we are looking at trade marking grade names to make Canada's inspection system even more effective and credible. The new act will benefit the consumer by ensuring consistent quality of safe agricultural products.

In the past, the Government of Canada did not have the right to go to foreign countries to look at their processing centres to investigate and to ensure that their products were handled in a correct and hygienic fashion and packaged correctly. Under this act, that is now possible. Consequently, the consumer can be reassured that this government is not sitting on its laurels, but is looking at matters of deeper interest and concern, of which the hon. member obviously was not aware. Had she done a little more investigation as to what the Canada Agricultural Products Act is doing she would have seen that within the next 12 months all fruits and vegetables will be identified by their country of origin. It seems to me that is pretty strong wording. It is a pretty strong commitment by this government. I am sure the member would want to applaud that particular action.

Could it have happened sooner? I suspect that may be a case in point. The fact is that it is moving right along, and I think Canadians ought to know that.

The legislation opens up to us the establishments where products are being prepared. We can now see for ourselves whether the places from where we buy our food abroad meet our manufacturing and sanitation standards.

In fact, this is not just taking place with fruit and vegetables. It is also taking place in the slaughterhouses of South America from where we may be bringing in meat supplies, as well as in the United States and Europe. We go right in there and they have to meet our standards. In most cases I suspect our standards are far higher than in those countries. Consequently, we have the right to restrict product coming from those particular areas.

Let me talk about the violations. The law has been strengthened in terms of the penalty. It is interesting to note that anyone who abuses Canada's law with respect to the issues we have talked about face a penalty which has gone from $2,000, an insignificant amount, to $100,000, which strengthens the fact that we mean business. Who knows, maybe that is not high enough yet. But it is certainly a tremendous improvement over what we have had in the past.

• (1350)

The CAP act also gives us the authority to regulate consignment sales of fresh fruit and vegetables. As I have said, the CAP act is addressing the food safety concerns of Canadians. At the same time it is helping the country's fruit and vegetable industry. Because we do have high standards and because Canadians do want quality products, Canadian standards are the ones we use with respect to what we import.

As the hon. member knows, these producers are vulnerable to surplus products sold on consignment. Without controls on consignment selling, produce can be imported without firm purchase agreements and spoiled products can enter the market.

The controls that we have put into place are there to assure Canadian consumers that this government has acted in the best interests of safety and health standards. Clearly, we have to be vigilant at all times because we are a large importer of fruit and vegetables due to our climatic conditions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)): I thank the hon. member for Portage—Interlake, who came in just under time. To take us to the top of the clock I recognize the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I find it very ironic that the House is debating amendments to the bill before us. As was mentioned by the hon. member for Saanich—Gulf Islands, the justice committee is also considering the fruit, vegetables and honey act. It was referred by this House to that committee in February. The committee is not trying to amend it. It is trying to repeal it.

The bill before us today is not necessary. As was mentioned earlier, this debate is not exactly gripping television drama. Given the problems faced by our country these days, we should be putting our time to a lot more productive use.

The fact is that the amendments found in this bill are redundant. They are already covered in the Canada Agricultural Products Act. That is why proposals have been made to repeal the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act through the Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment Program.

The Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment Program was established about 15 years ago in 1975. Since then five acts have been enacted.

This program permits minor amendments to be made to a number of federal statutes without having to wait for the particular statutes to be opened up for more substantial changes. This program is a means of correcting anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms and errors in federal statutes. Enactments that have expired, lapsed or ceased to have effect can also be repealed through the program.

Anyone may propose amendments for possible inclusion in a set of proposals. However, most of the current proposals come from government departments or agencies.

The legislation section of the Department of Justice is responsible for receiving and reviewing proposals. As well, it prepared a document entitled "Proposals to Correct Certain Anomalies, Inconsistencies, Archaisms and Errors in the Statutes of Canada" to deal with other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature therein and to repeal certain provisions thereof that have expired or lapsed or otherwise ceased to have effect.

This document is tabled by the Minister of Justice in the House of Commons and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. The proposals are also tabled in the Senate and referred to its Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Consideration of the proposals by these committees has always been thorough and conducted on a non-partisan basis. I would like to emphasize that if any member of one of the committees objects for any reason to a proposal the proposal will be dropped.

After the committees prepare their reports a miscellaneous statute law amendment bill is prepared. This bill contains only the proposals which are unanimously approved by both committees. Historically, the bills have been passed quickly, given the usual understanding that they will receive all three readings in each House without debate.

The discussion of these proposals is usually completely uncontroversial and a routine process. This is partially due to the fact that there are strict criteria for the types of proposals that the committee will consider. For example, the proposal must not be controversial, involve the spending of public funds, prejudiciously affect the rights of persons, create a new offence or subject a new class of persons to an existing offence.

Essentially, the proposals under the Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment Act represent an attempt at legislative housekeeping. Members from all parties are in agreement with the process.

Last February when the former justice minister stood in this House to table a proposal, the member for York Centre, a member of the Official Opposition, commented on the useful nature of the process. Because I notice he is listening very intently I will quote him accurately from page 8349 of Hansard of February 15 where he is reported to have said:

> I consider it a very useful device for achieving necessary changes in the laws of Canada of a non-controversial nature and also reflecting legal advice and second thoughts about certain clauses of the legislation. I have always regretted that the miscellaneous amending process is not used more openly and more generously than it is.

After that hon. member spoke, the hon. member for Burnaby—Kingsway representing the New Democratic Party stood up to agree that his party was also in favour of the proposed process. He indicated that it could be extended and used successfully to eliminate sexist language from legislation.

This year the justice committee is considering some 75 different acts that have been proposed. Up for repeal, for example, is the Trade Marks Act, overseen by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Paragraphs 45(4)(A) to (C) of this act were excluded from the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985 because they deal with the renewal of the registration of trade marks that were registered under various predecessor acts of the Trade Marks Act. These paragraphs require that registration of a trade mark under the predecessor acts be renewed under the Trade Marks Act not later than July 1, 1979.

Once renewed under the Trade Marks Act, the registration of a trade mark is subject to renewal within a period of 15 years after the last renewal. As the renewal of the registration of trade marks is now governed entirely by the Trade Marks Act, there is no need to retain these transitional provisions, which are now spent.

Another statute up for repeal under the current proposals is the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act. This act meets all the criteria for consideration under the Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment Program. It is not controversial. It does not involve the spending of public funds. It does not prejudicially affect the rights of persons. It does not create a new offence.

In fact, the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act does not do anything anymore. It has been replaced by the regulations made under the Canada Agricultural Products Act. Therefore it is not necessary to pass these amendments.

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, the bill we are debating today unnecessarily proposes to legislate the declaration of country of origin for fresh fruit and vegetables. This requirement already exists in the Canada Agricultural Products Act.

As members of the House may know, Canadian fruit and vegetable producers are protected in other ways.

During the drafting of the free trade agreement, this government negotiated special measures to help Canadian fruit and vegetable producers compete. The free trade agreement provides for the elimination of all tariffs between Canada and the United States by 1998. In view of the sensitivity of the horticultural industry to import competition, tariffs on fresh fruit and vegetables are being eliminated in 10 equal stages.

A special safeguard provision was negotiated at Canada's request to protect fresh fruit and vegetable producers from abnormally depressed prices. Article 702 of the free trade agreement allows both Canada and the United States to impose temporary or snap-back duties in addition to any applicable FTA customs duty up to the most favoured nation rate of duty in effect.

Certain conditions must be met before the mechanism can be triggered. Import prices must, for five consecutive working days, be below an historical average and planted acreage must not have risen above—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)): I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Simcoe Centre. However, it now being 2 p.m. the House will proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 31.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[Translation]

ENVIRONMENT WEEK

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, this week is Environment Week, and more than 500 community events will be organized across the country.

My region is one of those that pioneered recycling in this country. Selective garbage collection, recycling at source and many local initiatives have made Bois-Francs and the riding of Lotbinière leaders in protecting the environment. Involving residents, elected members of government and local leaders is essential to save our planet and meet the environmental challenge.

The Green Plan tabled by this government is intended to meet the most pressing needs of Canadians. It is meant as an instrument for permanent change, to protect our environment and our heritage. It will also help Canadians make wise decisions relating to the environment.

* * *

[English]

MARK STRAND, U.S. POET LAUREATE

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, during the past week a former Canadian and former Prince Edward Islander, Mr. Mark Strand, was named Poet Laureate of the United States of America. Born in Summerside, P. E. I., Mr. Strand lived the early part of his life there before moving to the eastern United States.

The inspiration for much of his early work came during his youth spent in Prince Edward Island and from summer visits he made to Prince Edward Island and other parts of the Maritimes with his parents.

Mr. Strand holds degrees from Antioch College, Yale University and the University of Iowa. In addition to his long and distinguished career as a poet and short story writer, Mr. Strand has held teaching positions at a number of prestigious American universities, including Yale, Columbia, Princeton and Harvard. At present he is Professor of English at the University of Utah.

His work has brought him recognition and awards from the American Academy and Institution of Arts and Letters and the Academy of American Poets. He has also been a Fulbright scholar, a Rockefeller fellow, a Guggenheim fellow and a MacArthur fellow.

Mr. Speaker, it is with pride that we recognize the contributions of this former Islander to the world of literature and we congratulate him in his recent appointment as U.S. Poet Laureate.

* * *

GUATEMALA

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, human rights abuses in Guatemala are once again on the rise. Allegations of corruption and misuse of development funds raises grave concerns about this government's decision to renew bilateral aid to Guatemala.

The militarization of Guatemalan society extends to army control of economic growth and planning. Development projects must fit into the army's counter-insurgency plans and the need for a cheap labour force for export crop production.

Amnesty International reports that humanitarian workers, trade unionists, clergy and academics have faced an escalation of abductions, disappearances and killings over the last three years. Increased activity of the notorious death squads further demonstrates that the current government has failed to break the military stranglehold on power in Guatemala.

Resumption of Canadian bilateral aid to Guatemala at a time when human rights violations are rampant is counter to stated Canadian policy. We must find a way to assist the oppressed without giving legitimacy to a corrupt and vicious regime.

CHARACTERS INCORPORATED

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton—York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, in New Brunswick we have many wonderful ways to express our feelings for our province and our country. One of the most inspiring and entertaining expressions is being delivered these days by a group of young performers called Characters Incorporated.

This singing and dancing group of students from high school and university classrooms in Fredericton has for the past years been proclaiming, in both official languages, the joys of being Canadians. They are truly les jeunes ambassadeurs du Nouveau-Brunswick.

Characters Incorporated attained national stature when they stole the show at the 1989 Jeux Canada Games in Saskatoon. This year, in fact this month, they embark on the international stage representing Canada in Czechoslovakia and in Holland. In July they will perform at Walt Disney World in Florida. I ask this House to wish them well in the weeks ahead, and before this year is over I hope to recruit the help of many honourable colleagues to bring Characters Incorporated to Ottawa where we all may witness their moving expressions of pride, joy and love for our great nation.

* * *

ENVIRONMENT WEEK

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, this week is Environment Week. During the past year, we watched public concerns and demands for action escalate. When we look to the government for leadership on environmental legislation, we are told to wait.

The government has stated over and over again that it will show leadership on the environment, but Canada is far behind other countries. When will this government focus on Canada's environment?

Canada needs to take firm action on the clean up of the Great Lakes and toxic waste dump sites, air and water quality and chemical spills. It's lack of regulation and enforcement, not cost, has been the major reason for these environmental problems.

The environment embodies many issues such as public health and safety. The threat is real. People are demanding action.

We need strong federal regulations, national standards and a change of focus now. Previous legislation has been reactive. Canada must now adopt a proactive environmental policy. As the theme of Environment Week states: "It's in our hands."

* * *

[Translation]

ENVIRONMENT WEEK

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Canadian Environment Week started yesterday, a reminder that more than ever before, the environment is our business. This year, the emphasis is on increasing public awareness of everyone's ability to contribute, in the course of their daily lives, towards improving the environment. Considering the astronomical quantities of waste we throw in the garbage and down the drain, there is certainly room for improvement.

In my riding, Louise Boyer of the Amos Standing Committee on Environmental Protection is one of those people who stopped to think how their way of life was aggravating environmental problems, and who are now trying to do something about it. This week, her project will be to show the people of Amos how to separate their garbage into vegetable waste and dry matter, and thus add composting to the recycling operations of Contrex, a local company.

Mr. Speaker, we must realize that the environment is an integral part of our lives and that we are each responsible for protecting that environment.

* * *

[English]

FINANCE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, once again the Mulroney government has stalled the long promised financial reform legislation; this time until fall or more likely next year.

This is the same government that gave the giant U.S. corporation, American Express, licence to become a bank in Canada and do the kind of business our own Canadian banks, under Canadian laws, are not permitted to do. At that time, our banks were promised that legislation would be forthcoming very soon to make things even.

The Conservative government's stalling tactics tell our banks to go outside the laws of Canada and engage in business not previously allowed. Financial reform in Canada is to be achieved by Canada's banks deregulating themselves, or through the provinces.

This is shear incompetence on the part of the government and shows it has no more business running a corner grocery store than it does running a government.

* * *

LIBERAL CONVENTION

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, not to be outdone by the NDP micro-electronics geniuses, the Liberal party will allow hidden microphones at the Calgary leadership convention.

But, there is a catch.

At the Liberal leadership convention, if you are wearing a hidden microphone, you must wear a special hidden microphone wearer badge identifying that you are wearing a hidden microphone.

That all sounds reasonable enough.

Potential hidden microphone wearers are not being told what the hidden microphone wearer badge will look like for fear of phoney hidden microphone wearer badges appearing all over the convention floor.

Mr. Speaker, can you imagine a cacophony of Liberal conventioneers in Calgary trying to separate the phoney hidden microphone badge wearers from the real hidden microphone badge wearers?

The job would be just as confusing as trying to choose from among the hidden messages being handed out by the Liberal leadership candidates on the ballot.

It is all enough to make the member for Regina—Qu'Appelle wonder whatever happened to free speech.

* * *

CHINA

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, it has been a year since the world witnessed the horror of the massacre at Tiananmen Square, and the news of the latest wave of repression in China is a cause of tremendous sadness for us all.

It is a great shame that while the rest of the world is celebrating the joyous outbreak of democracy that these changes are not being mirrored in China. All of us remember watching the faces of the student protesters and listening to their optimistic opinions on the future of their country.

• (1410)

These were not the voices of violence or subversion as the government tried to portray them. These were the voices of young people who in their desire for change showed themselves to be the truest patriots of all.

The courage of the demonstrators in the face of guns and tanks sends a strong signal to all repressive regimes that the spirit of man's desire for freedom can never be broken.

Mr. Speaker, Canada should demonstrate its solidarity with the victims of Tiananmen by continuing to pressure the Chinese Government to right the wrongs of 1989.

We must keep the memory of Tiananmen alive.

* * *

CEREBRAL PALSY

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, last week I received a letter and a summary of a survey that was conducted by the Cerebral Palsy Association of Alberta. The letter emphasized concerns that those who are physically challenged have about employment and independent living.

I found the survey to be both encouraging and discouraging. It is discouraging in that it expressed the frustrations and the challenges facing those inflicted with cerebral palsy; they expressed loneliness, isolation and frustration with the limited opportunities that are available to them.

It was also encouraging in that almost all respondents expressed a desire to be more independent and asked for the opportunity to work and to contribute. This survey complements the kit that was distributed to all members of Parliament last week by the Secretary of State promoting June 10 to June 16 as National Access Awareness Week.

As the minister said members of Parliament are in a unique position to make a difference, but we have to understand the problems, and I thank Mr. Keith Branall for helping me understand.

* * *

CHINA

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, a year ago today the world witnessed the massacre in Beijing's Tiananmen Square when the Chinese government turned against its own people, opening fire on the best of its own youth. Civilians were slain because they dared to stand up for political reform, for increased funding for education, for open dialogue and for personal dignity.

In response the Chinese government ordered the students machine gunned and tanks were allowed to run over innocent citizens.

That event still horrifies us in memory. Families still search for their loved ones.

I therefore urge the government, as Canada marks the first anniversary of that tragic day, to continue with the policy it boldly took then. The Chinese martyrs found courage then to take a public stand. Today, Chinese pro-democracy citizens continue to do so.

Canada cannot do less. Canada cannot turn a blind eye to what it has seen and to its own democratic principles. Appeasement in the name of trade is a betrayal of democracy. Let us by our action continue to give the Chinese people hope that they may conquer fear and persist in their struggle for democracy.

* * *

NATIONAL CHESS COMPETITION

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, several months ago over 10,000 students across Canada entered a national chess competition to help raise money for projects in the Third World. This year the funds will go to Sister Mona Kelly, a nurse from New Brunswick, to help disadvantaged children in Brazil.

On the Victoria Day weekend in May, the winners from each province played off and national champions were declared:. Grade 1—Andrew Ho of Vancouver, B.C.; Grade 2—Lefong Hua of St. Laurent, Quebec; Grade 3—Erez Davy of Windsor, Ontario; Grade 4 -Jonathan Beer of Madoc, Ontario; Grade 5—Anthony Castillo of Longueuil, Quebec; Grade 6—Jean-François Gratton of Laval, Quebec; Grade 7—Radu Butan of Toronto, Ontario; Grade 8 -Alexandre Marcil of Longueuil, Quebec; Grade 9—Martin Glass of Westmount, Quebec; Grade 10—Luc Tran of Chicoutimi, Quebec; Grade 11—Leonard Morrissey of St. John's, Newfoundland, and Grade 12—Thanh-Nha Duong of Anjou, Quebec.

The Quebec team won the over all championship for the second year in a row. Congratulations to all of the participants and the good work they do for the disadvantaged children of the world.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ROUTE CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister concerning the privatization of what is now Route Canada.

Four years ago, in 1986, the government sold Route Canada, the trucking arm of Canadian National, to a man who did not have the financial backing or reputation to be able to get a credit card. At that time there were 3,400 people working for Route Canada. A year and a half after the sale the company went bankrupt, and 1,900 people were out of work. The company was sold after the government did a financial check.

Will the government please explain to the people of Canada and to the people who lost hundreds of thousands of dollars why this government went ahead with this deal?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend's fancy was caught by a headline rather than the facts. In actual fact when the company bought Route Canada the financing was done through the Fingold brothers and not through the individual to whom my hon. friend refers.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the records clearly show that the government was discussing the sale of Route Canada with Manfred Rhuland a month and a half before it discussed any question of Route Canada with the Fingold brothers.

It is obvious that Manfred Rhuland was the first person the government discussed this issue with, a man who owed money to five financial institutions and who had already at one time declared bankruptcy.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Ruhland and his associates purchased Route Canada without paying a cent of their own money.

I want to ask the minister this: Why did the government pass an order in council to authorize this million-dollar sale, when it was well aware of the suspicious financial past of the buyers?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend made a bit of a slip there. He realizes full well, I am sure, that this was a subsidiary of CN and was not privatized by the government. It was sold by CN. The market value of the assets was $55 million. In true Liberal tradition, at the time it was losing $40 million a year and it was sold for $29 million.

Is my hon. friend suggesting that the government should have continued to lose that kind of taxpayers' moneys as did former Liberal governments, or should we have devolved it the way we did?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the assets alone of Route Canada were worth $80 million.

The Minister of Transport says that the government did not do anything because it was a subsidiary of Canadian National. If the government didn't do anything, why did it pass the Order in Council approving of the sale by CN to the Fingolds and Manfred Rhuland?

The government was concerned enough about it that just before the election, when the truckers were on the Hill demonstrating and threatening to follow the Prime Minister during the election campaign with their trucks, it had CN open negotiations with the workers. Those negotiations, unfortunately for the workers and strangely enough, ended a few days after the election campaign was over without anything for the workers.

I want an explanation from the government and the Minister of Transport in particular of why the government did this. What explanation does the government have for the 1,900 innocent victims of this scam perpetrated by the government?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows full well that there were four offers to buy the assets. It was sold on an arm's length transaction with advice coming to the government from CN as to the best offer.

It doesn't quite compare with the government of which my hon. friend was a member in the Maislin loan transaction where $34 million of the taxpayers' money was wasted on a loan to the Liberal party's friends. It doesn't compare that way at all, and that is what bothers my friend.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

CN Route was sold for only $29 million, although it was worth somewhere between $75 million and $80 million. It was paid for by leverage wherein a company buys itself out from its own resources. CN Route raised the $29 million by mortgaging the bonds and assets of the company. It is really a junk bond type of transaction and a bad financial deal. The tragedy in this whole affair was that 1,500 to 2,000 employees were fired prior to the transaction taking place.

• (1420)

How could the government approve such a sale where at least 1,500 employees were fired on the spot in order to conclude the deal?

Mr. Crosbie: It's all history.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before my hon. friend came along with his business experience I should tell him that it was Liberal party practice to pour taxpayers' money into losing propositions.

My hon. friend knows that if he had an asset worth $55 million and was losing between $30 million and $40 million a year on it, he would get rid of it darn quick for $29 million as we did.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

In all transactions such as this there is only one eventual loser, and that is the employee. We have been fighting for the employees of CN Route since the deal collapsed.

Mr. Lawless, Chief Executive Officer of CN, said when he was before the transport committee that CN's people are its greatest asset.

Will the minister confirm to this House today that he will start to treat poor employees from CN Route who have lost their jobs like employees of CN with full pension benefits and the rights of all CN employees?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there were two options available to the government: close the company down or sell it to the person with the best offer, and that is what the government did.

Mr. Peterson: They don't care.

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend is suggesting that the Canadian taxpayer should have continued to lose between $30 million and $40 million a year. I do not think that is a viable proposition for any government, and definitely not ours.

* * *

CHINA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Last year all parties in the House supported a motion condemning the brutal use of force and the repression of the Chinese peoples. Canada subsequently placed a number of limited sanctions, but one year later it does seem that it is business as usual between Canada and China. Trade and imports are up.

What is the government doing now to put continuing pressure on the Chinese government to democratize further and to end the repression in China?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what we are doing now is following the policy I outlined on June 30 last year in response to the events in Tiananmen Square which were, as the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party indicated, roundly condemned and deeply regretted by all members of the House.

There have been important changes in the rules with respect to export development credit assistance, with respect to the activities of the Canadian International Development Agency, and with respect to the level of visits and contacts between Canada and China.

If the hon. member on behalf of her party is changing her party's position and is suggesting that the government should act to isolate a country which contains one-quarter of the world's population, that would certain be interesting news to members of the House. She may change her policy. We have not changed ours.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question which the minister did not answer was simply: What continuing pressure is the government prepared to put on the Government of China? I will ask it again. Amnesty International has released a report indicating continued human rights abuses. It seems to me this should be of some concern to Canada. I am sure it is of concern to the minister.

What is the Canadian government policy to deal with the continuing human rights abuses in China?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are very much concerned about the continuing human rights abuses in China, and they do continue.

There has been some improvement in at least the legal regime that is being followed in China since the events of a year ago, but it would be misleading and wrong to suggest that there has been a marked improvement in the human rights situation. We continue to make representations as effectively as we can.

I think it is also worth mentioning that while there has been a marked deterioration from the situation in China before the events in Tiananmen Square, there has not been a return—and we think there will not be a return—to the anarchy that marked the situation in China which contributed so much to the threat to human rights that occurred during the period of the cultural revolution.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I think the people of China and those in Canada of Chinese origin would like to hear the minister say something specifically regarding his concern and his government's concern about human rights abuses in China. I will ask another question of the same minister.

[Translation]

It is reported that Chinese students who are waiting for an immigration permit are subject to intimidation by representatives of the Chinese government. Could the minister allay the fears of these students and give them the assurance that they will not be forced to return to China?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are aware there is a possibility that Chinese students may have been subject to a kind of pressure that is not acceptable, and we have indicated to Chinese officials that Canada will not tolerate this kind of pressure being put on Chinese students. There is a dilemma here and I believe parties on all sides of the House will appreciate the problem. We want to keeps putting pressure on the system in China. However, we also want to keep certain avenues open so that the West, including Canada, can have a positive impact on events in China. It is clear that one of the factors that helped liberalize the situation in China, and which contributes and can contribute to improving the situation, is contacts with the West. We have to strike a balance between our determination to show the Chinese that their actions on Tiananmen Square are not acceptable and keeping certain avenues open so that we can have a constructive influence on the situation.

* * *

[English]

IMMIGRATION

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration and deals with the same subject of China.

Last year the minister assured us that Chinese citizens in Canada as visitors and as students "need have no fear that they will be asked to leave Canada as long as the situation in China remains threatening for them."

Will the minister today renew this commitment by providing the necessary visa extensions and work permits for Chinese visitors and students in order to be assured that no one will be forced to return to China until we are absolutely sure of their safety?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member raises this issue because it is something that we have been following very carefully ever since we announced the suspension of removals, which was our initial announcement on June 16 last year.

The vast majority of Chinese nationals who were in the country at the time did apply not just for an extension of their visas that was intended to give them some time in which to determine what they wanted to do permanently for their futures, but also to ensure that if they decided they wanted to stay in Canada they would be permitted to do so.

We have had 8,700 applications from Chinese who were in the country at the time to remain permanently. Some 8,175 of them have had interviews and there have been 7,666 positive decisions. There are still some cases pending, but I think it is a record that all Canadians can be proud of.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister.

Although the record in the past year may be sufficient and may please the minister, there is still an ongoing concern. My question was not about what has taken place in the past year. I will ask the minister directly in the House whether or not she will provide the same guarantees into the future since we are not yet sure of the safety of these people.

• (1430)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, since the numbers I spoke about did incorporate virtually all of the Chinese nationals who were in Canada at the time, people who came in since then would come in through the normal way, applying for refugee determination and so on. They are in a slightly different position than the people who were in Canada at the time of those very sad events in Tiananmen Square.

It is very difficult for me to make the kind of commitment the hon. member is asking for because people are in different situations. I do think that Chinese nationals who have found themselves in these difficult situations have been treated with great sensitivity. They will continue to be treated with great sensitivity, but it will be on a case-by-case basis since they are in a different position than the others.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Last Thursday the Supreme Court ruled that the aboriginal peoples have the right to fish in areas not specifically stated in treaties. The Woodstock Maliceet Band in New Brunswick currently has a case in specific claims which was to be settled, that is, until the dollar amount became known. The Department Indian Affairs and Northern Development then changed its position.

In light of the Sparrow ruling of last Thursday, will the minister now recognize that the band had a right to the resources of the fiddleheads and fishes of the Saint John River area and assure the Maliceet that they will be duly compensated for the loss of these resources?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court decision of last Thursday in the matter of Sparrow versus the Crown has indeed a major significance for the question of aboriginal rights, and the settlement of aboriginal claims in the future of our nation.

We are studying this finding very carefully. It has significant implications. The court sought to offer guidance in the conduct of our negotiations of specific and comprehensive claims but specifically to provide guidance in the matters which were brought to the Supreme Court under appeal. Given that they have been referred to retrial, it would not be appropriate to speculate on the specific application of the Supreme Court decision to this or other cases.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, that answer is simply not satisfactory. The facts of this case are very well known.

My supplementary question is for the minister. The two recent Supreme Court rulings in favour of Conrad Sioui and Ronald Sparrow insure that aboriginal rights will be upheld. That is very clear. I therefore urge the minister and his department to act now, in a timely and just manner, to settle the Woodstock band's long outstanding validated claim and not force this band to have to go to court, because the minister and the department know they do not have the resources to take it to court.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose, here in the House of Commons, to intercede in matters which are the subject of negotiation under our specific claims policy. I think it is important that all members recognize the guidance that was given by the Supreme Court of Canada in the carrying out of this government's commitment to resolve claims, both comprehensive and specific, in accordance with the provisions of Section 35(1) of the Constitution of Canada which guarantees aboriginal rights.

Ms. Blondin: You just don't want to settle it, that's all.

* * *

ROUTE CANADA

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I want to refer him back again to the affair of CN Trucking and the "Road Warrior", the other name by which Mr. Ruhland is known.

According to information from Canadian National officials, at least two credit checks were ordered on the buyers, including at least one of them initiated by the cabinet. The government had to know that it was jeopardizing the fate of the company and of the latest 1,900 employees to be terminated, and yet it did nothing to keep a watching brief on the affairs of this company despite the fact that it knew its track record.

What will the minister do to assure Canadians that such fire sales—nothing down and nothing later—of Crown assets will not happen again in the future? Will he assure the latest 1,900 workers who have lost their jobs that they will not have to pay the price of his government's fiscal mismanagement and bad business deals? Will he launch an immediate inquiry to assure that no more "Road Warriors" become highwaymen?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that when we have been directly involved in privatization of Crown assets we have done reasonably well.

This was a subsidiary of CN which was losing some $30 million to $40 million a year. It was sold to a group of people on the basis of the credit of the Fingold Brothers and not the individual to whom my hon. friend refers. We received $29 million for it and, as a result, the employees retained their jobs.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I hope those 1,900 people who have just lost their jobs have listened to the minister and know that everything is okay and somehow they have kept their jobs. I know he can pull off a lot of magic tricks, but that is not one of them.

In its indecent haste to sell off Crown assets the government approved the giveaway of this trucking company to this man who had declared bankruptcy in 1981, a man who had defaulted on loans to four banks and one trust company and who could not even get a credit card. Now the company is defunct, creditors are owed millions and 1,900 more people are out of work despite the so-called assurances of the minister.

Will the minister explain how these 3,400 jobs and $100 million in Crown assets, including some of the most valuable downtown real estate and property in Canada, were given away to a bad credit risk and why nobody paid any attention? It is not enough to issue credit checks, Mr. Speaker, somebody has to read them.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is fairly clear that Canadian National wanted to stop the haemorrhaging of the taxpayers' money at the rate of $30 million to $40 million a year. There were two options as far as the employees were concerned; first, to shut down the operation and lay them all off or, second, to sell it as a going concern to the company that bought it for $29 million, and that is what they did.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I have here a letter from Mr. Gordon Fairweather, the Chairman of the Immigration Refugee Board, wherein he admits that the decision taken by that board that rejected the refugee application of Mr. Mahmood Hassan Randeree, a member of the African National Congress, is based upon a mistake in assessment of Mr. Randeree's nationality.

In view of Mr. Fairweather's own recognition of the board's mistake and the appeal of over 40 human rights, church and social organizations across this country asking that the case be reheard, will the minister recognize that there has been an error of justice made in this case and undertake to order a new hearing into the Randeree case?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am always quite prepared to take new information and look into any case that requires some additional consideration. If Mr. Fairweather, who is an independent chairman of an independent board, believes that the case deserves another hearing, I am sure that he is in a position to ask for that hearing himself.

When I responded to a question on this person in the House last week I said that there are two other ways in which this particular person can seek entry into Canada, and I encouraged him to do that at that time.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister understands that her unwillingness to intervene in this case, which the Immigration Act gives her full powers to do, will have the impact of tarnishing Canada's international reputation as a being a supporter of the fight for democratic rights in South Africa and that this has implications for the visit of Mr. Mandela in the future and our fight against apartheid. As a part of this government which has led that fight, I think the minister has a responsibility to intervene.

• (1440)

Would the minister undertake at least to have a personal meeting with Mr. Randeree, legal representatives and the coalition dealing with apartheid to listen to their evidence, as she said, to see if there are new facts that can be put on the table? She can then decide whether in fact a mistake has been made and undertake, with the rights and power she has under the act, to correct a serious transgression of justice against this individual.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very well aware of what my rights and powers are under the act and I have always tried to deal with them with enormous sensitivity, as I think the hon. member knows.

This government has been particularly sensitive to the issues of people from South Africa. I have said to the hon. member that if new information is presented to me I am always prepared to look at it.

The man in question has a wife and child in Germany who also must be given some consideration, and he has family in Canada who are in a position to sponsor him. So, while I have expressed some surprise that he has chosen to come to Canada by this route, I am quite prepared to look at the case again.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Thousands of immigrants from eastern Europe were sponsored to Canada under the designated self-exiled class. This is a very successful program with no cost to the government or to the Canadian taxpayer to settle these immigrants in Canada.

The minister has been approached on various occasions to clarify the continuation of this program. What exactly are the changes to this program and what is being done with those applicants that have already been accepted within the self-exiled process?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to correct the assumption that there is no cost to the government for people who are settled this way. Even with private sponsorships the government pays a considerable amount of settlement costs for people who come under the designated class. We are always happy to do so because we believe that private sponsorships are an excellent way for people to be settled within communities in Canada. There is an open-ended demand for this which we have supported.

In response to the substance of the question, we have not reached any decision on changing the designated class. I think the hon. member knows that with some of the changes that are going on within eastern Europe, once it is determined as a foreign policy matter that those countries are becoming more democratic in a stable and permanent way, we would want to look at how we view immigration from those particular countries. But we are not in a position at this point to have reached a decision on it.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister to investigate then why the local immigration officers are denying extension of visas to the cases that are being processed so that they cannot even be called for an interview but are asked to return to their country of origin.

My supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given that the political climate in eastern Europe has moved toward democratic forms of government, as we have already heard from his colleague, and that people coming to Canada in the future from countries like Czechoslovakia, Poland and Hungary may no longer qualify under the designated self-exiled class, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs agree to establish full service visa offices in these countries without delay for normal processing of applications for immigration? As he knows, Canada has not one such full service office anywhere in eastern Europe or the Soviet Union.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows and as was discussed during the hearings of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade last week, we are now actively reviewing how we can move around manpower, persons employed in the Department of External Affairs in Europe. There is no question that we need to put more people into the Soviet Union and into eastern and central Europe. There is also no question that we have very little fiscal flexibility and we have to do that by moving people from another part of the world into those areas.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Hire some more.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The NDP suggests we should hire some more. Their solution to every problem is to spend money we do not have. That is not an option that is open to reasonable people.

We are going to be looking at the reallocation of our personnel. I hope that either the Minister of Employment and Immigration or I will be able to make an announcement in the near future that will satisfy him.

* * *

PRESENCE IN GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the members' attention the presence in the gallery of His Excellency, Sir Shridath S. Ramphal, Secretary General of the Commonwealth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who, in spite of her protests to the contrary, has made a decision which to many appears lacking in humanity, compassion or understanding in that it will result in the departure of an ANC refugee to East Germany. This decision threatens to become a cause célèbre just as we are about to welcome Nelson Mandela to Canada.

Before making this decision, did she engage in any kind of consultation with the Secretary of State for External Affairs about the implication in terms of Canada's position in its fight against apartheid in this whole scene?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that the person in question has been given a departure notice. That means that he can go to any country of his choosing. He is not being deported; he can go to any country of his choosing. It is a departure notice, not a deportation, and it was a decision that was made by an independent board.

If the head of the refugee board feels that this is worthy of another look, I am sure that he will do that. I would remind the hon. member that this is a quasi-judicial process.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, among the countries to which he might go, and which the minister has mentioned, is East Germany where his wife has no rights as a citizen and where Fascist, racist reaction has made it very difficult for people of Randeree's origins.

My supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This ANC refugee is the son of an ANC activist with close connections and friendships with the ANC leadership. Has the minister reflected upon the impact of removal of this refugee, should this arise during Mandela's visit, particularly when Mr. Randeree, Mahmood's father, has written specifically to Nelson Mandela to ask for his intervention?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my colleague has indicated to the House on several occasions that there are options open to the individual. She has also indicated to the House, in response to a question from the member from Winnipeg South Centre, that if there is a recommendation by Mr. Fairweather that will be considered very seriously.

Now the hon. member is putting forward a quite remarkable proposition in the House, that is, that the policy of Canada should be changed to take account of the situation of people who are welcome visitors to the country. That would be an absurd proposition and certainly not one that we would want to follow here.

* * *

[Translation]

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In the past few months, I have sought several remedies in the House of Commons, in the form of petitions and motions, to advance the payment date for the September family allowance cheque and give Canadian families much-needed help just before school starts.

Mr. Speaker, my question is this: Could the minister tell the House today whether his department is prepared to allow this change this year, as part of the family allowance review plan?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his question.

I am very much aware of this issue, but although the proposal has its merits, I am not prepared to introduce the change at this time. However, I can assure the hon. member that the proposal will be subject to a cost-benefit analysis as part of the review plan for income security programs.

* * *

• (1450)

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. What concrete and specific commitment did the Deputy Prime Minister receive from the president of the U.S.S.R., Mr. Gorbachev, last week, with respect to renewing Canadian wheat sales?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that issue did come up in the course of the discussions with the Soviet delegation. We were very encouraged by the prospects of renewing the long-term agreement. We are also encouraged by the fact that they expressed an interest in some immediate additional purchases which members of the Soviet delegation will be dispatched to discuss with officials here in Canada.

We hope that, not only will we be able to negotiate a renewal of the long-term agreement, but we might be able to orchestrate some additional sales at the same time.

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. The minister will know that the Americans concluded a massive sales deal with the U.S.S.R. over the weekend. In fact, it is for 50 million tonnes over five years. He will know as well that Mr. Gorbachev really had very little choice if he was going to get most favoured nation trade status, and he may not yet.

What impact will this particular sale have, coupled with the impact of the U.S. Export Enhancement Program, which provides huge subsidies to U.S. farmers, on our own wheat and other grain sales to the U.S.S.R.? Is the Canadian farmer gradually, little by little, being squeezed out?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member talks about a massive sale, and then he talks about a massive contract for a long-term agreement. They are two quite different things. What is negotiated under the long-term arrangement are the minimum sales.

We have had long-term agreements with the Soviet Union for a long, long time. We are considered as one of the reliable suppliers to it. It likes doing business with us. We will be seeking a continuation of that long-term agreement, hopefully in an expanded form.

As I indicated to hon. member, we were encouraged by the response of the Soviet Union. We have done business with it in the past. We are doing business with it now and we are going to continue to do business with it in the future on behalf of the Canadian farmers.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Acting Minister of the Environment, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

In 1987, both the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Environment endorsed the report of the United Nations World Commission on Environment and Development. The keystone of that report was that there be full public review of the environmental effects of government policies.

How can the government justify then exempting government policies from its own environmental legislation, legislation that has already been too long in the waiting?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment is in Toronto today officiating at the celebration of Environment Week. At that event he is pointing out once again the importance of international co-operation in meeting the objectives that need to be met and the Canadian government's commitment to the international accords that have been signed.

As well, my colleague is in Toronto to point out to Canadians how important it is that each individual gets involved in environmental questions. My hon. friend can take from that that consultation with Canadians is high in our priority before we begin arbitrarily to legislate targets that cannot be met.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, back to the question. It is nice that the minister is off celebrating, but it would be better if he was back here doing something about the environmental assessment legislation that we have been waiting for for years.

I will give the minister another chance to answer the question. The question is quite simply this: Given that we have been waiting years for environmental assessment legislation, given the rumours that it is being watered down from even the present guidelines, and given the fact that the government has totally ignored three court decisions that told it what its duty is for environmental assessment, how can the minister or anyone else expect Canadians or international governments to take this government seriously when it wants to exempt itself from the very requirements it is going to put on everybody else?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I had to assume that my hon. friend was in the House often enough to know that the minister, on many occasions, pointed out that the environmental assessment legislation is in the final stages of preparation and will be introduced in the House, hopefully before we recess for the summer less than a month from now.

Surely the hon. member can have patience. She should restrain from making negative comments until she sees what is being tabled.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Latest Statistics Canada figures show that from 1986 to 1989 the Canadian dollar rose some 16 per cent against the U.S. dollar, making Canadian purchases in the United States increasingly lower in price. During that same time, the number of Canadians travelling to the United States on same-day visits surged by 54 per cent. The correlation of a high Canadian dollar to this surging exodus of Canadian consumers is not merely coincidence.

Is the minister prepared to acknowledge that the Bank of Canada's high interest rate policy, which has artificially inflated the value of the Canadian dollar, has in fact driven Canadian consumers south of the border causing severe haemorrhaging to our national economy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to debate the point that the hon. member has made. However, the hon. member has to consider the alternatives. Do we let inflation just run away with itself? Do we ignore the problems of increased unit labour costs that are going to undermine our competitive position as a country? Do we ignore the fact that that is going to cost us jobs which will cost us business and result in a much less healthy economy? These are the questions that one has to consider when one makes these bald, very narrow minded statements about the impact of the Canadian dollar.

It is important to understand the reasons behind the policies that the government is following. Our policies are designed to improve the health of the Canadian economy, which health has been demonstrated over the last five and a half years as Canada has been second only to Japan in economic growth in the major industrialized countries.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is about the same question but is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

A case in point is that British Columbia dairy farmers are losing more than $20 million a year due to B.C. residents buying inexpensive milk products in the United States. In the Okanagan Valley alone, the loss is approximately $2 million a year.

In light of our high interest rates and our over-valued Canadian dollar, what steps is the Minister of Agriculture prepared to take to curtail this loss to the dairy industry in particular resulting from Canadian purchases of U.S. products?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that has been looked into by a task force. An assessment has made in the province of British Columbia, one has been made in the province of New Brunswick, and one is being completed in Ontario. It is hoped that when all this data is gathered we will be able to sit down with the industry to see if in fact any steps can be taken.

I want to remind the hon. member that if there was to be a severe tightening up at border checkpoints, it would cause a great deal of congestion. Those are the kinds of things that would have to be taken into account. I do take the hon. member's representation seriously and, as I have indicated, we are acting in that regard.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The minister will know that there is an ice blockade on the Labrador coast at the present time preventing fishermen from fishing, yet their unemployment insurance ran out on May 15.

Mr. Crosbie: Happens every year.

Mr. Rompkey: It doesn't happen every year as the Minister for Trade says. That is inaccurate.

Some Hon. Members: C-21, C-21!

Mr. Masse: Talk to the other side.

Mr. Lewis: Walk down the hall.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will put his question.

Mr. Rompkey: The level of concern is impressive, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister intercede—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): With Allan MacEachen?

Mr. Rompkey: You're holding the purse strings.

• (1500)

Will the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans intercede with his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, to extend unemployment insurance along the Labrador coast. Or will he take responsibility within his own department, as he did last year, to take special measures, a special emergency response feature, for those fishermen who cannot fish, through no fault of their own, and who cannot collect unemployment insurance? Will he do that?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and I have worked very closely for the last couple of years on solving some of these problems in the Atlantic fishery. We have come up with a very expensive and useful package to help the fishery throughout Atlantic Canada and that is something that the hon. member should be applauding.

If he wants to talk about the specifics of unemployment insurance, I would suggest that he talk to the people in the other place.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary.

* * *

FISHERIES

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Minister of Fisheries to do something he can do.

Will he allocate a special capelin quota to the coast of Labrador, as has been requested by fishermen there? Will he do that, so that they do not have to depend on the other place or handouts of any kind, but can earn income on their own? Will he allocate a special capelin quota?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I guess he is right, he should not rely on the other place because they will never do anything for the fishermen of Atlantic Canada.

As for the request—

Mr. Rompkey: Just call the election.

Mr. Valcourt: In three years time you will get it and you will have fun.

[Translation]

You see, Madam Speaker, they ask questions but they don't want to hear the answer.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

CANADA PENSION PLAN

TABLING OF REPORT OF ADVISORY BOARD

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 32(2), I wish to table, in both official languages, a report by the Canada Pension Plan Advisory Board entitled: Reports of the Retirement Benefit Committee on the Level and Structure of CPP Retirement Benefits.

Point of Order

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-307, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Langelier.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member have leave to introduce the bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. DeBlois: Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Langelier and Minister of State (Finance), Mr. Gilles Loiselle, has asked me to table this bill. Its purpose is to change the name of the electoral district of Langelier to Québec and thus make the name of the riding more representative of the communities which together form the City of Quebec. In fact, my own riding is right next door. I welcome this opportunity to table this bill.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Madam Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-308, an act to change the name of the electoral district of Selkirk.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bjornson: Madam Speaker, it is a great pleasure to stand for the first time as a new member to present a private members' bill. This bill is important because we wish to change the name of the electoral district of Selkirk.

What we bring to this recommended name change is the feeling that everybody who is within what is now called the electoral district of Selkirk has the ability not only to deal with their member of Parliament but with their whole community. So I am looking forward to debate when this does come up.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

POINT OF ORDER

NOTICES OF MOTIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order regarding notice of a motion appearing on the Order Paper for Monday, June 4, on pages 12 and 13, under the item "Motions".

Madam Speaker, the Official Opposition maintains that the motion is erroneously listed under this item and that in doing so the government has made use of an unusual and possibly irregular procedure. I will give a short explanation, Madam Speaker, of my reasons for making this claim.

The notice of motion concerning the appointment, by the Minister of Justice, of two individuals, one as Information Commissioner and the other as Privacy Commissioner, was given, at least publicly, on June 1, last Friday. This notice of motion appears on page IV of the Order Paper under the item "Notices of Motions".

Madam Speaker, it is customary when the government tables motions for these to be transferred to government orders. I made a quick search, and I can say that although the Standing Orders were amended in 1987, if I am not mistaken, the old Standing Orders provided that when a notice of motion given by the government was called, the Chair was to transfer the motion to government orders.

Since 1987, this has happened automatically, unless—and that is the point I wish to make—the government decides to proceed by notice of motion, under the item "routine proceedings", which is now before the House. To us there is a rather considerable difference, which may cause a number of problems. I would like the Chair to reflect on this procedure and inform me of its decision as soon as possible.

• (1510)

Is there a difference? Madam Speaker, I would say there is a substantial difference. Why did the government decide or insist on having these two motions for approval of the appointment of two individuals to two important positions— Why should these two appointments come under Routine Proceedings? According to us, Madam Speaker, the appointments are intended to fill two positions of officers of Parliament. The words "of Parliament" are the key words. By listing the motions under Routine Proceedings, the government approached the question as though these people were to be officers of the House. A distinction should be made between an officer of Parliament and an officer of the House.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, I believe the government used Standing Order 67 (p), which I will read to you and which refers to motions that are called for debate.

> 67. (1) The following motions are debatable:
>
> (p) such other motion, made upon Routine Proceedings, as may be required for the observance of the proprieties of the House, the maintenance of its authority, the appointment or conduct of its officers,—

The rest, Madam Speaker, is not relevant to my case.

Standing Order 67 (p) provides that the appointment of an officer of the House of Commons may be debatable. This is the argument the government is using today to bring this proposal before the House. According to us, Madam Speaker, these are not officers of the House but officers of Parliament. In other words, this House will express its position on the appointment or the proposal to appoint these two people. The Senate will also have to give its opinion. After this debate, there will be an Order in Council to appoint these two individuals. And after that, Madam Speaker, the Order in Council will come before the House for referral to and consideration by a committee, if the committee deems such is appropriate. As we know, the Standing Orders were amended some time ago, in accordance with the suggestions and proposals for parliamentary reform made by the McGrath Committee. Therefore, any order in council appointment is considered by committee, if the committee deems such to be appropriate.

Madam Speaker, the question before the House is quite clear. Once these appointments have been approved by the House of Commons and the Senate, once these two people have been appointed as officers of Parliament, are they responsible to Parliament or to the government? Madam Speaker, with respect, I submit that these two people are officers of the Parliament of Canada and not, strictly speaking, of the House, and certainly not of the government. My point is that they should have been transferred to Government Orders, so that the question could be debated under a quite different item.

Madam Speaker, the difference is quite substantial. I was looking at precedents, and I went back to 1983 to see what the procedure had been for appointing the two people who had occupied these positions until June 1, this year. At page 5929 of the House of Commons Journals of May 26, 1983, we find:

> The following Notices of Motions, having been called, were transferred to Government Orders for consideration later this day or at the next sitting of the House,—

This was done—

> —in accordance with Section 53 of Schedule II of an Act to enact the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, to amend the Federal Court Act and the Canada Evidence Act— this House approves the appointment of John W. Grace, Esquire, as Privacy Commissioner.

The motion, once transferred to Government Orders, was called for debate on May 27, 1983. The debate appears at page 25796. It was initiated by the government, on motion of the hon. Mark MacGuigan—

[English]

—Mark MacGuigan, Minister of Justice, who moved then, in accordance with Section 54, that these people be named. There was a debate. The Hon. Walter Baker, the former member for Nepean—Carleton, took part in the debate, even seconded the motion. The debate was quite prolonged and interesting. Svend J. Robinson for Burnaby spoke for the NDP. The motion was adopted and we proceeded with these nominations. By order of this House, under orders of the government, that is Government Orders, a debate was held and the nominations were made.

Today we have a different procedure. We have under Routine Proceedings a situation where the government is treating these two positions as agents, officers, if I may use the word, of the House of Commons. They are not, Madam Speaker, I humbly submit to you, officers of the House of Commons. They are officers of Parliament.

The government has given notice under Standing Order 67(1)(p) which, in my view, is not in order. I humbly submit that we should scratch or eliminate that reference in our Routine Proceedings and also on the Order Paper and that the proper procedure be used, that the government transfer these two nominations to Government Orders as required, in my view, by the importance of the nominations, by the impact they will have, and also in my interest and this caucus' interest in our willingness to try to get the government to give an opportunity to Parliament to discuss all appointments, as we do today. I would like to see that done in the near future, Madam Speaker.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, it was precisely for that purpose that we proceeded in this way. The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition seems to imply some sort of conspiracy here or some attempt to bypass in some irregular way or some such notion. I suggest that he is perhaps thinking back to practices of previous governments because no such thing was intended.

The law in respect of both of these appointments requires a resolution of this House so as to make it clear that these individuals when appointed are not public servants in the same sense as being accountable to the government. The government does not have the authority under the law to direct or order those individuals. They are like the Auditor General. They account to this House for their actions and report through the appropriate committees. Yes, there is a minister who has responsibility administratively.

The Governor in Council appointment of these individuals, after resolutions of this House and the other place, is almost in the sense of a formality to give them the legal rights to collect salaries and have offices. But, in fact, these individuals are officers of this Parliament. What we sought was an appropriate means to get a resolution of this House. Standing Order 67(1)(p) states that such motion dealing with the appointment of officers of this House is appropriate. So we moved forward under that heading to get a resolution of the House.

Why the hon. member thinks that a resolution of the House is somehow more sanctified if it comes as Government Orders, making it clear that we are talking about a government directed government decision, as opposed to having a resolution of the House under something that is not so clearly Government Orders but in fact a reflection of the House is beside me. Why he should get so worked up about it is ridiculous.

It would seem to me more appropriate to have under a provision of the House as opposed to Government Orders this motion coming forward because the individual is an officer of this House and of Parliament, not an officer of the government, not a part of government.

In Government Orders we bring forward things that the government wants to do for the benefit of the government, motions and otherwise.

• (1520)

This being an allotted day, I do not want to cut into the time of the opposition by proceeding with this. It seems to me a bit of a silly point since all that is being sought is compliance with the law that requires a resolution of this House and a resolution of the other place. How that resolution is done does not matter in terms of the law. This seemed an appropriate way. If it is not, there are the usual channels where we could discuss this and we need not further waste the time of the House.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the government House leader would treat this matter in such a cavalier way. I will be very brief because I recognize we are taking up time on an important debate concerning the role and responsibility of the other place to which I know the government House leader will want to contribute.

Nevertheless, there are some sections of Beauchesne's that are relevant and that in considering this matter the Chair will want to have regard to. I refer to citation 361 of the sixth edition which states:

> The motions allowed under Routine Proceedings are those relating to the business of the House or to the discussion of committee reports.

It has nothing to do with the appointment of officers of Parliament. But I want to stress "relating to the business—"

Mr. Andre: A resolution of the House.

Mr. Milliken: Obviously the government House leader did not hear me read this. I will read it again, Madam Speaker.

> The motions allowed under Routine Proceedings are those relating to the business of the House or to the discussion of committee reports.

The business of the House means the hours of sitting, the order of business and so on. It has nothing to do with the appointment of officers of Parliament.

I refer also to citation 560 of the sixth edition of Beauchesne's which states:

> Pursuant to Standing Order 56, Government notices of motion are placed on the Order Paper as an Order of the Day under Government Orders.

I am asking that the Chair, as did my friend, the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier, direct that these notices of motion be transferred from Routine Proceedings to Government Orders where they would be discussed.

While the government House leader may say that this is unimportant, the significance of it is great in that the time for the discussion of those motions will be under Government Orders and are government business and not under Routine Proceedings. It is my submission that that is where the motions ought to be placed on the Order Paper in light of the words of the Standing Orders and in light of the citations in Beauchesne's. My hon. friend for Ottawa—Vanier has given you the words of the Standing Order and I have invited the Chair to have regard to the citations in Beauchesne's to assist in that decision.

[Translation]

Madam Deputy Speaker: The procedural point raised by the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is very interesting. I thank the government leader and the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands for taking part in the debate. The Chair will examine the question, consider all points raised by hon. members, and get back to the House as soon as a conclusion has been reached.

[English]

PETITIONS

CANADA POST

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure, duty and responsibility today to table, pursuant to Standing Order 36, a petition signed by residents of Watson, Saskatchewan. These petitioners are anxious to save our national postal system.

The petitioners from Watson, Saskatchewan, say that rural post offices not only provide the service that is needed but also offer an important federal presence in rural communities.

They call on the House of Commons and Parliament to insist that Canada Post end its shameful practice of opening retail postal outlets in communities where, as they say, perfectly good federal post offices exist. They also state: "We did not ask them for retail postal outlets. We do not need them and we certainly do not want them".

The petitioners call upon Parliament to refrain from putting retail postal outlets where there are existing post offices.

[Translation]

TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Pursuant to Standing Order 36, Madam Speaker, I present a petition from Chibougamau in the federal riding of Roberval concerning the recommendations of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas.

Your petitioners reject the conclusions of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas, and they ask that Chibougamau be designated as an isolated region under the terms of the existing tax benefits system.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise on behalf of a number of Canadians, many in my riding, who bring to the attention of the House the plight of a Canadian citizen and taxpayer, Mr. Yih-Sheh Leo, who is also a citizen of Taiwan, who was arrested and is being held in prison in that country.

The petitioners urge the government to issue a public statement expressing Canada's concern over the violation of the rights of a Canadian citizen, to appoint a lawyer to handle the case, and to request Canada's allies, who have direct relations with that country, to intercede on his behalf.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise to present two petitions today. The first is a petition from residents of the riding of Moose Jaw—Lake Centre who are concerned with the goods and services tax that the government is jackbooting through Parliament. They call upon this government to immediately withdraw the GST and to enter into proper tax reform in this country that is fair to all Canadians, and certainly average Canadians.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): I also have a petition from a number of farmers in Saskatchewan who are concerned about the way this government is handling the Canadian Wheat Board. They are particularly concerned about the withdrawal of oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and they call upon this government to immediately reinstate oats and give oats and barley the same protection that wheat has under the Canadian Wheat Board, namely, that before it can be changed it has to come in front of this House to be debated by this House to protect farmers of western Canada.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise to present a petition signed by numerous people in Hamilton, Ontario, who express their opposition to this government's taxation policies, particularly its thirty-second consecutive tax increase in the form of the goods and services tax.

These petitioners indicate that they feel they are paying far too many taxes to this government already and that their moneys are being wasted. They ask that the government and this Parliament reject the goods and services tax.

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81-THE SENATE

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca) moved:

> That a message be sent to the Senate reminding the Senate that it has the constitutional right and the power to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons.

He said: Madam Speaker, I want to begin my comments on this very important motion by gently rereading the motion which states:

> That a message be sent to the Senate reminding the Senate that it has the constitutional right and the power to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons.

One could reasonably ask why I would sponsor such a motion, considering that in the years past and to this very moment my position on the other chamber is to abolish it. However, since no previous government has taken my advice or direction on this matter, I am now forced to debate this issue in a new context facing us in this country with a number of crises that we have on our hands.

There are three crises facing this country. One is the Meech Lake Accord, one is the free trade agreement, and last, but not least, is the infamous goods and services tax.

Earlier today we heard the Minister of Finance suggest incorrectly that Japan and Canada have the same economic performance, or relatively the same. That was part of his answer in Question Period.

• (1530)

I would like to refer to a report in today's edition of The Financial Post. Why am I referring to it in the context of this motion? I want it clearly understood that if there were ever a time for the Senate to prove to the Canadian people that its existence served some purpose in the context of the crisis I am going to outline in a few moments, this is the time for the Senate to kill the goods and services tax.

I want to alert my colleagues on my right in more ways than one, since they currently dominate the other place by way of appointment rather than by election. If they were serious about stopping the goods and services tax, they would not only support this motion but they would immediately call a joint caucus meeting and instruct their colleagues to block the GST in that chamber.

There are some cynics out there and some cynics in this Chamber, particularly on the government side and some of my colleagues, I must admit, who suggest that the Liberals really want the goods and services tax, that the Liberals are happy that the government brought it in, that the Liberals do not want to impede its progress, and that the Liberals want it to pass so that if and when the Liberals win the next election they will wring their hands in mock anxiety and say: 'Oh my goodness, we have inherited this terrible tax. The only way we can improve it is by bumping it from 7 per cent to 9 per cent".

Far be it for me to suggest nationally that the Liberal party would do such a thing. It would only do such a thing if it thought it would have a chance to do it. I do not suggest that the Liberal party has been absent of any sense of responsibility. Its own record does that, but I am concerned Canadian people will get the impression that the goods and services is a fait accompli when indeed we know for a fact, based on the research I did on this motion, that the Senate could stop it.

How could the Senate stop it? By a simple vote in the chamber. How could it get a majority for a simple vote in the chamber? Simple, it is a Liberal dominated other chamber. If it is temporary or not, let the government be responsible for its own actions. I know my colleagues over there are hurting because they supported this legislation and they do not like to set up someone else for a victory out of their initiative. If they were serious Liberal senators could publicly come out and say: "We are Liberals and we are going to kill the bill". I do not think they are going to do it.

An Hon. Member: You don't?

Mr. Barrett: No, and that goes back to my earlier comments about abolishing the Senate.

I believe when we really get down to it, as much as I regret to say this after my many years of public service, there is really no difference between the Liberal party and the Conservative party.

An Hon. Member: You're kidding.

Mr. Barrett: No. I know that there are some differences. The most glaring difference is that one party is in and the other party is out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Barrett: I am not a very good dentist, but I will keep drilling anyway. Perhaps I have touched a nerve. I notice how quickly they respond. The fact is that they both serve the same master, only some are on the job a little while longer than the others. What has happened throughout history is that Liberals have been able to fool more people more of the time than have the Conservatives and that, no question about it, is another aspect of the difference.

Through this motion I want the Canadian people to understand if the Liberal party is truly opposed to the goods and services tax. We know where government members stand. They have decided to take the bull by the horns or whatever part of the anatomy they play with bulls with and push this bill forward. They have done it and they have used a lot of bull materials to push the legislation.

Nonetheless, the fact is that in a legislative order it is now in the other place and could be stopped there. Do you think for one moment, Madam Speaker, that a party as hypocritical and as cynical as some historians suggest the Liberal party might be would even dare to say to the public that its position is pure, decent, and honourable and that it will have the Senate kill the bill.

I have not heard Liberals say it. This is their chance. This is their time to go on record and say everything we said in committee, everything we fought against when we went to public demonstration, every speech we made on free time on CBC, and every memorandum of intent we have sent out to the voters. As we wait with bated breath for a new leader of the Liberal party, their first pronouncement will be to instruct their colleagues in the Senate to stop the goods and services tax.

Voters who are seriously intending to reflect on the next election and place their support with the Liberal party, contrary to their instincts toward the Tories particularly in some areas of Ontario where it is tweedle-dee or tweedledum, should do so.

An Hon. Member: Tweedledumber.

Mr. Barrett: Tweedledumber, yes. Your chance may come. Yes, that's right. Tweedledumber, your chance may come indeed.

Besides that comment why should this be done? I want to refer to a newspaper clipping which indicates that Canada's global economic standing has slipped a critical notch according to new rankings published by the International Monetary Fund on Friday and that Canada has slipped behind Italy into last place in the G-7 quota ratings. Even the Liberals who have a great deal of ability to mess things up are not capable of doing this. It also indicated that at the IMF meetings in Washington last month the brouhaha about ranking was focused on some of the other G-7 nations. The U.S., all agreed, would stay number one, but Japan's surging economic power meant that it would jump from fifth into a tie for second with West Germany in the IMF quota arrangements.

We should keep that in mind as we reflect on an answer given to a question from a colleague of mine about where Canada is in terms of the economic scale. We heard the Minister of Finance say today in the House that we were equal to Japan's growth.

An Hon. Member: Did he say that?

Mr. Barrett: That is what he said, but here is what the newspaper said: "Japan's surging economic power meant that it would jump from fifth place into a tie for second. That meant that Britain and France were forced to refight another position. But a funny thing happened to the bottom line. Canada has gone to seventh place, just behind Italy".

One reason we have slipped is the goods and services tax and the inflationary impact it will have on this country.

• (1540)

I want to suggest that it was not just the sell-off of the CN assets that gave us this mess.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Barrett: As I was about to say before I was rudely interrupted in this Chamber—and the other one has not even had the chance to interrupt—Canada's economic performance is going down. The inflationary impact of the GST by the government's own statistics is a point and a half.

An Hon. Member: Tory times are hard times.

Mr. Barrett: Tory times are hard times, and Liberals only compound it. The fact is that the inflation rate will probably be more like 4 per cent or 6 per cent.

This is wreaking havoc on the poor Canadian taxpayer, the small business person, and the outside investor who wants to take a look at some rational, thoughtful, longer term investment in the country.

Canadian people expect leadership. Canadian people expect some sensitivity. The words being used on the other two crises are flexibility, thoughtfulness, compromise, and reasonableness. There is no flexibility on this one. There is no reasonableness, no compromise. It is full steam ahead into a course that is going to do more damage to this country than the other two crises.

An Hon. Member: It is extremism.

Mr. Barrett: It is extremism, my dear friend. I hasten to reiterate what my colleague said, but with chagrin I say that it is extremism. It is an almost semi-paranoid commitment to extremist philosophy which has no bearing to the situation we are currently in.

We are behind Italy for the first time ever. We have fallen to seventh place. The only reason we did not slip right off the board is simply that the chairman is a member.

There are a lot of people out there who are not interested in politics. They just want to get on with their lives. They will never be members here, and they will not be members in the other place. If I have my way the other place will be a memory.

If the other place has any validity at all to defeat my arguments on why it should not exist, this is the challenge. This is the issue. I have an open mind. I am a reasonable person. I am flexible. I believe in compromise.

Everything is not written in stone. I would be the first one impressed if I heard the Liberal party members pledge that they will instruct their Liberal senators to block the GST and that they will insist upon it as a political party. I have not heard the Liberals do that. They are even more cynical than the Tories are. At least the Tories have taken the heat because of their ideological commitment.

Sitting over there giggling, snickering, chuckling, chortling, happy with the turn of events is the Liberal party because it knows that it can have it both ways. That is what I am trying to prevent. The Liberals are schizophrenic enough without being able to talk out of both sides of their mouth and smile in both conversations. This is a move to demonstrate—and I have the support of all the Tories in the Chamber—that politics cannot override responsibility and that the other chamber will be instructed to block the GST. I have thought about this a great deal, this one last appeal, as I reach the twilight years in my political campaign, this one last appeal to reasonableness, to sensibility, to fairness, and all I get is laughter from the Liberals.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Barrett: It hurts me to the quick.

Mr. Kaplan: Even your own members are laughing.

Mr. Barrett: It hurts me to the quick, Madam Speaker, to have to go back to the Canadian people and tell them that they are getting fooled again by the same group that says one thing when they are in opposition, thirsting and lusting for power. They will say anything. They get back into power and laugh and giggle that they got the GST and they are going to keep it.

I am sorry that it is still early in British Columbia. I hope my grandson is in his afternoon nap. I do not want my grandson, like another generation of Canadians, to be a witness to how cynical the Liberal Party is. But, so be it, Madam Speaker, that is the case.

An Hon. Member: It is extremism.

Mr. Barrett: I will conclude my comments, and I welcome questions and requests for interpretation, because I certainly will do that. Many people have asked whether there has not been enough debate about this. If it were a simple matter, there would be no point in bringing forth this resolution. If it were a simple matter, if it is a fait accompli, there would be no point.

I want to make an appeal beyond what we have heard so far. I want to make an appeal to those people in the other chamber, should they hear my voice, or should I put it in writing that their colleagues who have subscribed to a non-elected chamber, who have packed that chamber with their political supporters, now call the chit and demand that they stop the goods and services tax.

If we see no evidence of this it will be proof positive of the thesis that I present today. It will be proof positive to every Canadian who is opposed to the goods and services tax that it is a shell game. It will be proof positive that the Liberals have only been playing games and the only real opposition to the goods and services tax is by my party, and I am proud of that.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca.

I would like to remind him that the New Democratic Party constitution in Article 5.2 states that the convention shall be the supreme governing body of the party and shall have authority in all matters of federal policy, program and constitution. Let me remind him of the resolution the party adopted in the federal convention in 1981 where it was stated "Be it resolved that the NDP will continue to fight for the further changes, including the abolition of the Senate".

When the hon. member was running for the leadership of his party, on December 1, 1989 in Winnipeg, a press report stated "I'm for a Triple-A Senate", said B.C. MP Ian Waddell 'Abolish, abolish, abolish."

Another article states: "Front-running contenders Yukon MP Audrey McLaughlin and B.C. MP Dave Barrett agreed: 'Abolish the Senate and use the savings to clean up the environment', said McLaughlin. 'The Senate should and must be abolished', said Barrett."

Madam Speaker, when the hon. member was a member of the legislative assembly in British Columbia, he said on December 11, 1980, in the British Columbia Hansard:

I will never give approval to appointing people to legislative bodies that have no accountability to citizens through the democratic process.

Speaking of the premier, he said: "He supports the continuation of an appointed Senate—an anachronism in this day and age of a sovereign nation. The Americans did away with it, as my colleague reminds me, in 1913. Why we have fostered and continued that hotbed of irrelevance, that hand-picked retirement bone-yard for old party hacks, and call that a Senate in terms of response to the electoral needs of the people of this country, I don't know. But when you ask me to pay tax dollars to keep that Senate going, when I've never had a chance to vote for them, then I say nay, nay, nay—never!"

• (1550)

What he should have said afterwards, in anticipation of this day, is, "Unless, of course, I saw some partisan advantage for the New Democratic Party". That he might have said.

I can go on at length to quote from that party but I know it is unparliamentary to use that famous word that starts with H and ends with Y and rhymes with"pocrisy". When the hon. member was talking about comparisons to Italy, he reminds me of a fellow who said, "Well, Mussolini at least got the trains to run on time". The Senate at least can kill GST. He is willing to make a pact with the devil if there was a partisan advantage. Could the hon. member stand up and tell us the difference between him and Dr. Faust?

Mr. Barrett: My dear friends, may I respond to the last question first. Dr. Faust wore no clothes and, like this government, is easily exposed. If members wish for me to go on in poetry, I can think of other ways to do it. However, I am glad my friend, the hon. minister, reminded the House again of my position, which I will restate. I want the Senate abolished; the sooner, the better.

I am not in power. I hope some day, in my lifetime, that social democrats are in power. However, if it is my hon. friend's position and the Liberal Party's position to keep the Senate, then be responsible in your request if you want it to work. Is it just a burying ground for old political cronies? Is it just a place to pay off political debts, like I have always felt?

The simple answer is to prove that it has some worth and not so much for the Tories but for the Liberal Party who has consistently fought and packed the other Chamber which I oppose. They cannot have it both ways. They cannot say in this Chamber they are opposed to the goods and services tax and sit back without a Liberal Party commitment to attempt to coup it within law that exists in this country.

Madam Speaker, the Senate exists.

Mr. Andre: Do you believe in democracy?

Mr. Barrett: My dear friend, if you want to elect the Senate, that is another argument. But it is not elected, it is appointed and they do have influence.

What is the philosophy of those appointees? If it is the Liberal Party philosophy, then we expect consistency. I am glad my colleague entered this debate. I am glad my colleague reminded the Canadian people of my position. My position has not changed.

If they have the legal power, and if that Party over there supports the concept, which I do not, then prove once and for all that the reason the Canadian people support the Senate is because they want to see it act and they want to see it act consistently with their position. The hon. member talks about the word beginning with H and ending with Y. You cannot have it both ways. I say we should abolish the Senate. It is there legally and I do not have the legislative authority to abolish it. You justify it and you want it, so I say to the hon. member, "Don't kid the troops".

An Hon. Member: Maybe the Tories should abolish it.

Mr. Barrett: They won't. The fact is we are seeing a political game here and I do not think it is very healthy.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, I hope to seek the floor to make an address myself. I am not going to be as tough on this question as was the minister from Calgary Centre, because I am willing to allow the hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca to walk both sides of the street. Let him call for the abolition of the Senate and let him also call for the Senate to fulfil this remarkable role that he chooses to lay out for it.

I am glad he mentioned that he hoped his grandson was sleeping while he was making this speech and while this debate was going on. The question that went through my mind and that I wanted to address to the hon. member when I read the resolution put forward in the hon. member's name is, "Where is Shirley"? Was Mrs. Barrett in town when the hon. member drafted this resolution? I hope this question will not be ruled out of order, but she is a sensible, intelligent woman and I am wondering whether such a mischievous and pointless resolution was put forward after some family consultation?

Mr. Barrett: Madam Speaker, normally the House does not permit us to refer to spouses but in this case my colleague is correct. He knows I do consult my wife on almost everything I do, including the amount of the allowance that I get. In this case, she agrees completely. This is the only way I could word the resolution to put the Liberals on the hook. I consulted with her, we sat down, and I know that she is going to send me a bill for her consultation. I know she is going to send a sharp letter of reprimand to my good friend, maybe in Chinese. None the less, my wife and I agree the Senate should go, but as long as it is there and your parties justify it, then make it work. I suggest to the Liberal Party that it be consistent about how to make it work.

This is the closest I could come in the resolution and stay in order. They would not allow me to be any more specific at the Table. I do not blame them, they are hide-bound by 400 years of rules that do not permit clear-cut language to interfere with politics in this Chamber, so I had to explain what I could not put in writing. It is up to you Liberals. If you really mean it, tell the senators to kill the bill. I do not think you mean it; I think you have been playing politics. That is okay for a few things but not this issue. The convention is coming up. The Liberals will not bind their leader to cancel the GST, not a fig of it. My wife agrees with me on that one.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately, the hon. member's time has now expired.

[Translation]

Pursuant to Standing Order 38, it is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duhamel)—Government funding: the hon. member for Nepean (Mrs. Gaffney)—Fitness and amateur sport; the hon. member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins)—Public accounts.

Resuming debate. The Minister of State for Finance.

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to tell you that of course I oppose this motion and also to give you the reasons why.

[English]

I think that we have just witnessed a magnificent demonstration of the NDP's great capacity for principles. The hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca said that he was flexible. He has given us a very good demonstration of his flexibility and, on matters of principle, I would suggest to him that this is a bit dangerous. I could quote from him when he said, some months ago, that, "The Triple E Senate offers no hope for worthwhile changes and the Senate should and must be abolished". Therefore, it is with some dismay, I must say, that we see this motion before this House because there is here a danger to democracy.

• (1600)

The hon. member said he felt the need to use this motion in order to fight a measure, the GST, and that we had the economy all wrong. He quoted from an article which stated that Canada now ranks behind Italy, and so on.

It seems to me that the NDP fails to understand anything about the economy. He was referring to the quotas set up for different countries. We are very close to Italy, with a population less than one-half of that of Italy. The performance of Canada is strong and getting stronger, but the hon. member gets everything mixed up so that we do not really know where we are.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I strongly disapprove of the message that the authors of this motion are trying to put across. What is the message? Very simply, that they think it is quite all right for a non-elected unrepresentative Senate to oppose as it pleases the decisions of the elected body, the House of Commons of Canada.

We must be very clear on this. For decades, the Upper House served a very useful purpose by studying proposed legislation in advance and by sharing its concerns with us in the form of committee reports, but never interfering in the legislative process itself. Over the last several years, though, this useful non-confrontational approach has deteriorated and we are left with a situation marked by confrontation and polarization. The motion before this House today not only endorses this unfortunate trend but seems to want to perpetuate it.

This motion must be examined in the light of the situation today and the way our parliamentary system works. For example, we must consider it taking account of what the Upper House is today, a body of appointed individuals who have no constituency and therefore no mandate from the Canadian people.

We must also consider this motion without forgetting that it was presented by a party whose goal was to abolish the other House, as we were reminded so well a few moments ago. They are not even interested in reforming the Senate. They only want to abolish it once and for all.

Finally, we must examine this motion in the light of the reasons given to justify some actions taken there. This motion seeks to support the action taken by the Upper House when it considered Bills C–21 and C–28 and the action it is threatening to take when it considers Bill C–62. It seems that polls are their only justification since they indicate that these bills are not popular with Canadians and were not part of the government's platform during the last election in 1988.

[English]

I would like to go into some detail. If we were to accept these premises, that position would make it impossible for any government to take unpopular actions.

To take a non–partisan issue as an example, I remember that members of the party opposite were strongly in favour of the abolition of capital punishment. They voted that way in the House even though the polls showed clearly that a majority of Canadians were against abolition.

Should the unelected chamber have opposed the will of the House of Commons in that case? Those opposite would have been livid at such a move because they, and many other members of the House, believed this policy was right. This motion, however, would have encouraged the Upper House to do just that, and that we cannot have.

Also, the position underlying the motion seeks to change our present parliamentary system. Representative democracy, as opposed to direct democracy, recognizes that one cannot function on the basis of daily or weekly referendums on every policy and decision. When fundamental change to the nature of a country is at stake, or when society is equally divided on an issue, then direct reference to the people may be necessary. But the basis of our system of government is that governments are judged at elections, on the basis of their past actions and their proposed policies. If the people do not like what they see, then they will elect another party to power.

By supporting the actions of the unelected second Chamber, on the basis that specific policies are unpopular, this motion seeks to bootleg into our system of government what amounts to a system of referendums. If those opposite want to change the system, then that is their privilege. But they should do so openly and clearly, and in a fashion that permits a debate on that particular subject to take place. They should not be trying to change our system of government in this way.

Finally, in terms of the context in which this motion is being put, I want to consider the moral authority behind these policies. After all, the basis for the actions the other place has been taking, or is threatening to take, is that the people do not want them because of what polls tell them. Our system of government relies on the concept that platforms are presented at general elections and that the people judge those programs. I have heard it argued that the policies in these bills were not before the people in 1988 and therefore it is legitimate to hold them up.

In fact, these policies—not in their details but in their principles—were an integral part of the policies before the people in 1988. They are firmly based in the economic actions we took from 1984 to 1988. They respond clearly to concerns we have had since 1984 and which were before the people in 1988. I cannot accept that the results of the election of 1988 had nothing to do with our economic record and our approach to economic issues.

As I have said, there are three specific pieces of legislation at issue right now. In concrete terms they are what this debate is about. Their measures respond to urgent needs. They were developed as part of an over–all economic strategy we have been following since 1984, and which has already met with some success in strengthening and energizing the economy.

Let me look briefly at each of these bills from the viewpoint of economic policy.

Bill C–21 carries out badly needed reforms in our system of unemployment insurance. The system we inherited in 1984 was in desperate need of changes—everybody admitted that. We proceeded carefully and on the basis of consultation. In Bill C–21 we proposed a set of changes to the system which makes it more flexible and more responsive to the concerns of those who really need it.

At the same time we were able to redirect some of the resources in the system to enhance the role of retraining and education. Part of our economic reality is that there is a need for people to gain new skills and to get better training. That is the key to higher employment and greater prosperity. By delaying the legislation as it has done, many individuals have been deprived of benefits and opportunities to which we believe they are entitled.

Bill C–28 implements the Income Tax Act related amendments from the 1989 budget. I want to recall that one of the greatest economic challenges we face is inflation. The damage it does to the economy and to individuals is something we experienced in the early 1980s. We do not want to go through that again.

Since 1984 our government has been engaged in a battle with inflationary pressures. One important way in which we have done this is by working to lower the deficit fairly and acceptably. Right now, as a result of the size of the debt and the deficit we inherited, as well as the effects of compounding interest on the debt, 35 cents of every revenue dollar must be spent on paying that interest.

• (1610)

Limiting government spending and increasing revenues are the two ways in which the deficit can be brought down. We have moved on both fronts. The measures in Bill C–28 are part of our over–all policy to fight the deficit in as fair a way as possible. This policy has met with some success. We have moved from the 1984 situation, where spending on programs exceeded revenues by $16 billion, to the situation outlined in the February budget, where revenues exceeded program spending by $10 billion last year. If we are to build on this progress, however, we must continue the battle. By delaying the implementation of the measures in Bill C–28, the other Chamber is harming and not helping this effort.

The third piece of legislation in question is Bill C–62, which implements the goods and services tax. I want to remind all hon. members that this is not a proposal suddenly produced out of the blue in 1989. Tax reform was urgently needed by the economy, and our government's concern about this has been known from the beginning of our term of office. Initially, we proceeded by closing loopholes and administrative reform, while a larger reform of the system was studied. We proceeded with stage one of that reform after a great deal of consultation before the 1988 election. We have continued to work toward a better system of taxation for Canada.

[Translation]

We have also made it clear from the start that the manufacturers' sales tax reform was an integral part of our tax reform. The flaws of that antiquated tax were pointed out time and time again. They have been disclosed on many occasions both within and outside this House. We indicated clearly that the second stage in this tax reform would involve the transition to a different system, with as wide a base as possible. Once those provisions were made public, we stayed tuned into the public and made a number of changes based on the needs that were expressed to us.

The principles that were going to be used were laid out in the Budget in 1987 and 1988. This motion seeks to encourage the other place to withold, amend, or, better still, reject the provisions of Bill C–62 without any regard for the principles of electoral democracy. It jeopardizes the economy of this country.

I would also like to ask those who support this motion to tell me where all this will lead us? We have three bills in abeyance. All are very important for the economy as well as for the well–being of Canadians. All are an integral part of the economthe elected governement of this country. Still, if that motion were to be taken seriously—there are times when one wonders—all bills passed in this House, even uninanimously, would be dealt with the same way. We would convert to a system where the legislators elected by the people would systematically clash with a body of non elected individuals that does not have a comparable moral authority and does not have to account for its actions.

[English]

The motion therefore seeks to undermine the principle underlying our system of elections and responsible government. It ignores the fact that the measures which they oppose were part of the election platform of the government in 1988, and that this government won re-election on the basis of that platform.

I stand in favour of the elected House and its historic rights. I stand in favour of the government elected by the people of Canada. I stand in favour of the economic policy presented to the people in two successive general elections and approved by them.

[Translation]

On the other hand, Madam Speaker, I must say in concluding that I object to what the non-elected members of the upper House have been doing and to the role they have given themselves. They should never have taken on such a role, which they had never sought to play until these past few years. I object to them claiming a moral authority equivalent to that of this House. Finally, I oppose this motion whose purpose is to legitimize their actions and alter the very nature of our system of government.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, in principle, we must always take seriously the resolutions that are presented and debated in this House. With this in mind, I would like to discuss the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca. Since it is very short, I would like to start by reading it:

> That a message be sent to the Senate reminding the Senate that it has the constitutional right and the power to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons.

But, Madam Speaker, with all due respect for the Order Paper and resolutions, I stress that this resolution is not to be taken seriously, as I believe our New Democratic colleague himself admitted.

[English]

This resolution is a piece of mischief which is designed as a matter of NDP strategy to make it look as if the Official Opposition, of which I am very proud to be a member, is in favour of the free trade agreement and the goods and services tax.

You have to go a long way to try to make an argument like that. I want to suggest that the resolution that has been put before us just does not do it. It is not a resolution that can be taken seriously in any sense of the word.

It is ironic that a joke should be put on the Order Paper of the House of Commons at a time when there are so many serious things to discuss about the Senate and about the relationship between the Senate and the House of Commons.

We are sitting in this House doing our work, knowing that the more momentous events of today for the future of our country are taking place across the street. They are in the hands of the duly elected representatives of the legislatures of the provinces of our country, and of our national government, who is not a Liberal but a Progressive Conservative, who are working across the street to try to find a solution to the constitutional impasse that faces us. That is where the important things are happening today.

But if there is going to be light at the end of the tunnel, it is bizarre and ridiculous, and I am not going to put it any higher than that, for the New Democratic Party to take today to tell us that the Senate should be abolished and to remind senators that they have the constitutional right and power to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons. What does that have to do with anything?

What I want to reflect on today in these brief remarks is what we should be saying about the Senate, what we should be asking about the Senate. Starting from a very simple first principle—

Madam Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. However, I recognized him on question or comments.

Mr. Kaplan: I am sorry, Madam Speaker, I thought I had the floor.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I think there was someone rising on questions or comments. I should recognize him and then I will come back to the hon. member for York Centre.

The hon. member for Edmonton East.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I must admit that hearing the hon. member launch into his speech has whetted my appetite for the question and comment period following his remarks as well.

However, to return to the hon. member on the government benches, he noted during the course of his remarks—and I was taking this from the translation and believe I got it correct but I may be out a bit—that the motion seeks "to undermine our system of elections and democracy". He said that about half way through his remarks. Toward the end of his remarks he said that the motion seeks "to change the very structure of our system of government".

• (1620)

I am wondering if by this he means to imply that the Constitution of Canada, which provides this power and authority to the Senate, seeks "to undermine our system of elections and democracy", and that the Constitution seeks "to change the very structure of our system of government". If so, how does he propose to make sense out of that contention?

Mr. Loiselle: Madam Speaker, I do not mean that the Constitution of Canada would in any way threaten our system.

What I said was that this motion threatens to legitimize a process which we in this House agree would not be acceptable, that is to say the supremacy of an unelected House over an elected one. Nobody would agree on that.

This motion seeks to confer and to get the authority of the elected House of Commons to approve the Senate in this kind of action, something which is totally unacceptable. Statements by members of his own party have been quoted at length indicating that to them the very existence of that House is an abomination. I could quote the former leader of the NDP, Mr. Broadbent, who said that it is an abomination.

Yet hon. members of the NDP forget that, switch to the other side, channel 2, and still say that it is an abomination. It is as if they are saying: "We are against nuclear arms, but until such time as they are abolished, use them". This is the consistency of the NDP. This is the party of great principle. I feel today very relaxed in the knowledge that principles may not be on the your side of the House.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I would also like to ask the minister a question.

If the minister agrees, as I believe he said, that "the Senate has no moral authority" to veto any action by the House of Commons, will the government now agree, or will he agree to recommend to the government that it should introduce a motion to remove the legal and constitutional authority of the Senate to pass on the decisions of the House? The Prime Minister himself hinted that he might be prepared to do just a couple of years ago over another issue when the Senate was balking at the action taken by the House of Commons. Surely, the Senate should not have the constitutional right and power to do what it has, in the minister's words, "no moral authority to do".

Mr. Loiselle: Madam Speaker, I would tell the hon. member, as was stated a little earlier by my colleague from the Liberal party, that we have at present here in Ottawa very important discussions going on. An item of these discussions, as we are led to believe, is the Senate. It is hardly the time to come up with these kinds of ridiculous discussions.

Maybe I have not taken the motion too seriously. With this type of motion coming from an NDP member, one wonders if it is not done in a way that is not very serious. Of course, maybe the timing makes it particularly unpleasant to deal with. I do not think when it was introduced that it was meant to be this way. However, I think we should discuss these problems where they have to be discussed.

What I do not like about this motion is that it would give the appearance of support from an elected House, which is this House, to powers that we do not recognize in the Senate. The tradition, which is very important in our British parliamentary system, has to do with what the powers of the Senate are. We have seen them over the years, and we may not like them. But we must not want to diminish or abolish them while at the same time wanting to make them greater.

Madam Deputy Speaker: If there are no other questions or comments, resuming debate with the hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, I will spare the House a repetition of the brilliant remarks with which I opened my intervention. I would like simply to pick up on the question asked by the NDP member who rose to ask the minister a question. He asked him to admit that under our Constitution the Senate has the power, as the motion states, to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons. The answer to that question is, yes, the Constitution does give that power to the Senate.

But that is not the end of the issue, as the minister pointed out. Unfortunately, to the NDP that does seem to be the end of the issue. Let me tell him and the other members of the NDP that our Constitution needs to be updated. It needs to be updated in more ways than one and in more places than one. If he would care to pay some attention to the national debate that is going on in the country, nowhere is there more dissatisfaction than there is with the place of the Senate in the Constitution of Canada. We want to do something about that.

As I mentioned, while we are sitting here, the constitutional impasse which is labelled "Meech Lake" may be working itself out. If I can give some more news to the NDP, one of the great benefits is that then we may be able to do something to reform the Senate. We may be able to make out of it an institution which a democracy will recognize as having a legitimate function that it can exercise.

It is in an awkward situation now because, unlike a lot of anachronisms, this anachronism is a living organism. It is an organ of Parliament. It is composed of well-meaning Canadian citizens determined to do their duty for their country, hidebound somewhat by the inappropriate amount of power that is awarded to them under this anachronistic and hopefully soon to be revised constitutional aspect of Canada.

I have had the pleasure of being a member of Parliament during the time when our party was in power and in control of the Senate by having a majority of members of the Senate also of our party. I have also served in this period when we are in the Opposition in this party but in the majority in the Upper House.

That exercise of constitutional rights of the Senate, under those circumstances, in every case and on a wall to wall basis of agreement with what the Opposition in the Lower House would like would defy a basic requirement of a democracy.

I do not like to admit it with members of the Conservative party present in the room, but the Liberals were defeated in the last election. I see nods of agreement. We were defeated in the election of 1984. It is very important that that be recognized in the way that Parliament operates.

Members of the NDP say that the Liberal party, in spite of having been defeated in 1984 and in 1988, has this anachronistic, constitutional power to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons, and that we should do it or else we are not being true to our principles. Our basic principle is democracy. We have to accept the will of the people.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Like with the UI bill in the Senate right now?

Mr. Kaplan: I want to make two more brief points and then I will be very happy to have questions from my hon. friend.

My first point is how can we operate in those circumstances where the majority of members are Liberals, where they do not agree with the GST, the free trade agreement, or with a government which is trying more and more to eliminate the middle class and to divide Canadians into a two-Canada idea of a rich powerful centre tied very closely to the United States to the exclusion of the rest of the world and the regions of the country which are to be, in its way of looking at it, a source of population flows into the greater populated areas of our country. That is its vision. It is proud of it. It has people in the country who support it and who help it to achieve those objectives. We do not. It is not for the Senate, although controlled by a majority of Liberal members, to contradict the result of the last election.

• (1630)

I did not vote Conservative in 1984 and I did not vote Conservative in 1988. But, enough Canadians did vote Conservative to put this House under the authority of that party. In the Senate, where there are a majority of Liberal members, I think they have been very creative, very respectful of the democracy which is Canada, and I think they have achieved a lot. They have spoken as an Upper House in a federal system should for those who are not fairly represented by the basic application of one person, one vote. They have spoken for depopulating regions of our country where industries are being pulled out by the government, or are being pulled out by the operation of the so-called free market established under the free trade agreement. They have spoken for the francophone minorities in parts of the country where they do not represent enough of a population to have a real democratic voice. They have spoken for cultural minorities. They have spoken for aboriginal people. They have spoken for the poor. They have spoken for religious minorities within the country. And in each case they have not said, as it states in the resolution "We have the power to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons and we intend to do it". They have said "Look again at what you are trying to do". They have said to Canadians "Look again at what this destructive government is trying to do to our beloved country". That has been the role of the Senate under present arrangements.

If there is light at the end of the Meech Lake tunnel, the light is that we can develop and I am confident that we can do it. I hear so many talk about the obstacles and the vested interests. I do not believe it. I believe there is a great will in this country to have a Senate that will work for us.

A lot of people believe that Ontario and Quebec will never relinquish their control of the Senate in terms of the numbers of seats they have in relation to the other regions of our country. Madam Speaker, I know it is not news for you, but I think it is news for a lot of Canadians to know that that is just not true.

The number of seats from Ontario and Quebec do not constitute a majority of the number of seats in the Senate. They constitute less than a majority and, speaking as a member from Ontario who has watched the Senate over the years, I cannot remember when it was significant in any of our decisions that the Ontario delegation was more substantial than the delegation from two or three other provinces put together. That is not the way the Senate was inclined to operate.

I want to talk for a moment about some of the evidence that did not get the attention that it should have, that was brought before the committee chaired by the hon. member for Sherbrooke on which I had the great honour to serve, about some of the interesting features of the Senate. Ontario now has 24 seats. If you go by population, it should have 37. I would like to say, if I may interject, that this is evidence given by a lawyer from Winnipeg, Patrick Riley. These are statistics that can be confirmed.

Quebec has 24 seats; by population it should have 27. So already the two big provinces are disproportionately under represented. The Senate is a legitimate voice for more than just rep by pop. British Columbia has six; it should have 12 by population. The reverse. Alberta has six; it should have ten by population. Manitoba has six; it should have four. Saskatchewan has six; it should have four by population. Nova Scotia has ten; it should have four. New Brunswick has ten; it should have three. Newfoundland has six; it should have two. P. E. I. has four; it should have one by population. Then, the Northwest Territories and Yukon, by population, should not have any seats; they have two. I do not agree that this is good advice. I do not think what the composition of an improved Senate should be. I am very taken with the idea of equality. The triple E is one that I am anxious to know more about and to discuss. But here are the facts.

When we are looking at what will follow Meech Lake, we should be looking at things like this. We should not be looking at the historic and anachronistic fact that in 1867 a deal was made on the establishment of the Senate which, even then, was the most controversial issue in the formation of Canada. There were more arguments about how the Senate should be formed and what delegations should come from each province than there were about almost any other issue, including the place of minority language rights in our country.

We have been complaining about our Senate for 120 years. Here is a member standing up, wanting us to pull the trigger that the Constitution gave us 120 years ago, over the democracy which we have built by having senators who have been restrained, discreet, intelligent and effective when they have chosen to speak up for interests that this government has cared so little for and has done so much to abuse.

I know this motion is not coming to a vote. I am hoping, as much as a patriotic Canadian can hope, that the serious issue of Senate reform is soon before us because it will mean that we are moving ahead in building our country not moving backward, as the NDP wants to suggest for a cheap political shot.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the hon. member.

Among those instances of admirable reticence, judgment and calm deliberation which he claims characterizes the work of the Senate, would he number the instance in 1988—I believe it is in the order of 20 instances in the history of the country when the Senate has defeated a House of Commons bill—when his own retired leader directed the Liberal majority in the Senate to hold up the free trade agreement, let it go nowhere and make it the subject of an election as an example of the polite and retiring reticence he thinks characterizes the Senate's work? Or would he number the current activities of the Senate with regard to the unemployment insurance legislation in which they have rejected outright certain aspects of the government bill that has passed the House of Commons as an example?

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, I am not going to fall into the trap of saying I agree with every single thing that the Senate has ever done, and that it always acted in a way which he and I would have agreed appropriate in a particular case.

Mr. Harvey: Are you repudiating what you said?

Mr. Kaplan: No, no. I do want to tell the hon. member that the story is not over on a lot of these very important matters that are before the Senate.

The Senate has heavy handed tools to use to achieve the subtle goals and objectives that I suggested. I think one of the Es to which we will want to move—

[Translation]

—would be to find ways whereby the Senate could more moderately, if not make specific changes in the legislation, at least clearly show the people that the opposite is unacceptable and on every issue ensure that Confederation represents the interests not only of those in large numbers but of minorities and takes account of their demands.

[English]

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Madam Speaker, I would like to follow up on the point that the hon. member for Edmonton East was making. He referred to 1988 when the Senate refused to abide by the government timetable on the free trade agreement, thereby letting the people decide how they felt about the free trade agreement and how each party behaved during the campaign when they did not make the free trade agreement a centrepiece of their election campaign, as the Liberal party did.

The hon. member said that this motion is a cheap political shot by the NDP. I would like to know his thoughts about how the New Democratic Party behaved during the last campaign when it had an opportunity to defeat this government. The free trade agreement, this legislation, the GST, UIC, VIA Rail and all these things we are now dealing with, and which it purports to be so much against, would not be with us at all if it had fought on the side of the Canadian people in 1988. It would have saved us a lot of heartache since then.

• (1640)

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, my hon. friend has made a very good point. It is not required for us to even make the allegations. The history is out now and enough stories have been told by insiders about the NDP strategy to make it clear that there was a critical moment when it had the opportunity to save our country from the free trade agreement and it chose another course. It puts in doubt, if one wants to challenge credibility, their own credibility about where they stand on the free trade agreement.

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, I have a point of order. I am just wondering if we could have agreement among the members in the House and the parties, that future speakers might divide their time 10 minutes and 10 minutes, with five and five when it comes to questions and comments, rather than each speaker having to take the entire 20 minutes. It may facilitate further, provided that they give notice of their intent to the Speaker prior to the commencement of their first speaker.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Would there there be unanimous consent for that? The hon. parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Nicholson: Perhaps the way we could do it is if the members of the NDP would like to do that. I know a number of speakers on our side were prepared for 20-minute speeches. Perhaps we could agree for the members of the NDP and if the Liberals are interested in doing that. We will continue as we have been on this side of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: There is no problem, Madam Speaker. The Official Opposition began that practice a good many years ago already. As long as the member says so at the beginning of his or her remarks, I think that the Chair, being aware of the situation, can take the appropriate measures. Each member must make clear that he or she intends to share the time with a colleague, otherwise it will not work.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. Member. Indeed, if each member advises the Chair at the beginning of the speech the Chair can keep track of the time. Otherwise the Chair simply cannot signal members, or we will end up in a situation where a member will exceed the allotted time and we will no longer know where we stand. I quite agree, provided of course each member tells the Chair whether he or she will take only ten minutes. There is no problem if the allotted time runs to 20 minutes.

Resuming debate. The hon. member for Edmonton East.

[English]

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, at the outset, let me say it is my intention to speak only for 10 minutes, perhaps less. I am sure that will come as a source of considerable joy to the members here today. My colleague from Okanagan—Shuswap may also get in on the debate. I consider it, let's say, an indulgence in the desires of the House.

I would like to say at the outset that like my hon. colleague, the member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca, I too will attempt to avoid the use of the h word. It is not going to be easy but I want you to know that I am going to do my best to avoid that word in addressing what is in fact the nub of the matter before us today. That is, can the Canadian people trust the Liberal party to put their Senate majority where their mouth is. That is the only question before the House today, although for the purpose of the observance of the parliamentary niceties, it was necessary to draft the motion in a somewhat less straightforward fashion.

I would like to suggest that the Canadian people are finding out that no, they cannot trust the Liberals where they have the ability to abolish the GST to do so. They can trust the Liberals to rail against it impotently in the House of Commons but they cannot trust the Liberals to use their Senate majority to defeat the GST in the other place. We know that for a fact because of May 3. May 3 was the day on which the other place passed the GST bill at second reading. That was the day on which the Senate, in which the majority of members are Liberals, approved in principle the GST. That is something that all Canadians should remember.

Mr. Horning: There were headlines in The Toronto Star.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I wish that were the case. I wish I could have surreptitiously sneaked into the House this afternoon and could have stood here and held up, although I know it is against the rules of the House, a copy of The Toronto Star with a 96-point headline on the front page stating: "Senate Liberal Majority Approves GST". It grieves me deeply that I am unable to do that because to the best of my knowledge no such 96-point headline was ever featured in The Toronto Star.

Why that is, of course, must remain a matter of speculation. What must not remain a matter of speculation, however, is the performance of the Liberals in the Senate. They had the chance on May 3 to defeat the GST and let it slip by quietly, rather like a weasel nosing around the chicken coop at night.

There are some in this Chamber who believe that the New Democratic Party seeking the action of the Liberals in the Senate to defeat the GST somehow constitutes an abandonment of the party's principled opposition to the Senate. I would like to assure the House of two things. First, the NDP is in no way lessened in its absolute and fundamental opposition to that other unelected, undemocratic—I must stop myself before I get into territory of perhaps unparliamentary adjectives, Madam Speaker, suffice to say that the NDP remains absolutely opposed to the current other place and given a day's chance would abolish it.

What comes after? What form might some subsequent second house in this Parliament take? That is a matter for legitimate debate. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, as I believe to be the case in other caucuses in this House. In the NDP caucus there is a wide variety of opinion as to what form some future second chamber might take. There is no wavering in our caucus in its absolute opposition to the current nonsense that we call the Senate.

People are having trouble this afternoon getting around the fact that we can both favour the abolition of the current Senate, acknowledge that it is there, and call upon it to do something the overwhelming majority of Canadians want done.

I would remind the Liberals that when they held up the free trade agreement in 1988, they did so when public opinion polls showed, roughly, on a good day that 50 per cent of Canadians were in clear opposition to the deal.

I have not seen a poll of Canadian public opinion with regard to the unemployment insurance bill. My guess is, as sad as it is to have to admit it, that the majority of Canadians are unaware of that bill now before the Senate. Yet it is being made the subject of rigorous action by the Liberal majority in the Senate.

With the GST we have a tax initiative by the Conservative government that is opposed by up to 80 per cent of Canadians. In the last poll I saw a clear majority, in excess of 50 per cent, wants it defeated in the Senate. It does not trouble them.

In an attempt to clarify the question of how one can both favour the abolition of the Senate and at the same time favour the current Senate's destruction of the GST, I would like to give the House a little analogy. I am hoping this will make it a little easier to understand.

Let us say you just bought yourself a house. It is a nice old house. It has clapboard siding, solid hardwood floors, high ceilings, and a big backyard. It is a beautiful place, but in the middle of that big backyard is the largest damn crab apple tree you ever saw in your life. You have nothing against crab apple trees, Madam Speaker. The little old couple next door when you were a kid used to give your parents delicious crab apple jelly every fall. There is lots of fun to be had in climbing big, old crab apple trees.

• (1650)

However, the trouble with this crab apple tree is that it is so huge and so obstructive that nothing much can grow in the backyard. It shades virtually the entire area, making a vegetable garden impossible, and its root system sucks virtually all the water and nutrients out of the soil so that not even a lawn can grow well.

As much as you do not mind crab apples, you resolve to tear this tree down. You want to put in a vegetable garden. You want a nice lawn. Having decided that you are going to get rid of the big, old crab apple tree as soon as you can get the money and time together to do so, are you being somehow dishonest, unprincipled or two-faced if you take advantage of the crab apple tree in the meantime?

Are you going to ignore the crab apples that the tree produces and just let them rot on the ground, or are you going to eat a few and maybe try your own hand at making some crab apple jelly? Are you going to tell your kids: "No, no, you cannot play in that big, old tree because some day we are going to get rid of it."? Are you going to refuse to seek shelter in its shade on blistering hot days? Of course not. That would be dumb as a bag of hammers.

In doing any of those things you are in no way abandoning your long-term goal of tearing down the tree and replacing it with a nice vegetable garden and a lawn. "Aha," some may say, "but what if in using the crab apple tree as it stands you get to like it or even cherish it so that finally all thought of tearing it down disappears," to which sensibly, Madam Speaker, you would reply: "Sure, I might like it, but I know I will like having that vegetable garden and that nice lawn a whole lot more. If I really got to like having a crab apple tree around, hell, I will plant a new one, but it will be smaller and in a different location."

It is just so with the Senate. The fact is that it is there. We can ignore it, but that will not make it go away. We can offer our perfectly reasonable and long overdue arguments to the effect that, in its present form at least, it ought to be abolished, but at present we do not have the power necessary to effect that policy. In the meantime it is there. In fact it does not matter a tinker's damn what we think of the Senate. It is there.

The only question is: It being there, will we call upon it to do the right thing for the people of Canada, an overwhelming majority of whom have identified a clear wish regarding the GST? Or, will we confuse principle with wishful thinking and try to pretend that the damn tree is not even there?

The alternative to myself and my colleagues in the NDP is clear. Again let me state and close with the obvious. The Liberals have a majority in the Senate. They can use that majority to axe the tax, to kill the bill, to get rid of the GST. Their failure to do so—I predict that it will be a failure to do so—can only in future be seen by Canadians as a clear statement by the Liberal party that they favour the GST.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I am always astounded by the intellectual elasticity of my NDP friends. How they can whistle and suck at the same time is beyond my understanding.

Nevertheless I want to ask a question. We have a motion before us today that says that the Senate should defeat any bill including the GST, the clawback, and the pension bill. The Senate should have the authority to defeat any bill that comes before the House. Then we have on page xiii of today's Order Paper a motion in the name of the hon. member for Kamloops opposing the estimates. It says:

> Notice is hereby given of opposition to Vote 1, in the amount of $27,605,000 under Parliament—The Senate—Program expenditures—

In other words, on May 31, two or three days ago, the New Democrats wanted to take all the money away from the Senate. Today they are telling Canadians that they want to tell the Senate to defeat the bill.

Where do members of the NDP stand? I know they do not have much of a stand on anything. We always think they are either coming or going somewhere, but are they for the Senate, for the Senate's money or not? If they are not for it, okay. If they are for no budget, how can you operate without any money? If they are not for having a budget how can we have this motion today, which would be consistent? How about some consistency in the debate for a while?

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East)): Madam Speaker, I am indebted to the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier for raising that most cogent and praiseworthy motion by our hon. House leader to abolish the budget of the Senate. It is utterly consistent with the policy of the New Democratic Party which is to abolish the other place as currently it stands. I do not want anybody in this House to harbour any doubts in this regard. The NDP unequivocally favours the abolition of the current Senate, without any exception or reservation whatsoever.

In this as in so much else we have, it must be admitted, experienced a wee bit of difficulty in convincing the rest of you of the wisdom of this position, the case in point being the fate of that very motion at the end of May. We are left trudging along with this sclerotic, nonsensical other place for the time being. That being the case, let me say again that the point of the motion has much less to do with the Senate and much more to do with the Liberal party. As I said at the beginning, what it boils down to is: Will the Liberal party or will the Liberal party not put its Senate majority where its mouth is?

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Madam Speaker, I would just like to read some quotes to show the elasticity of the NDP's position. The hon. member for Edmonton East says that it is utterly consistent and absolutely in favour of abolition. I would like to refer to an magazine article in the Alberta Report magazine which reads:

> Many in the western wing of the NDP recognize there is widespread popular support in their region for an elected, equal and effective Senate. And Saskatchewan NDP leader Roy Romanow now concedes there is an alternative to abolition.

That is how utterly consistent they are. It goes on to say:

> Mr. Romanow, among the four western NDP leaders, seems most willing to consider some kind of Senate reform as an alternative to abolition. But the others appear willing to listen, at least. "I am open to ideas on (Senate reform)", says Mr. Doer.

There are two NDP leaders in the west who are not in favour of abolition but in favour of reform. It goes on to say:

> —Mr. Waddell professes to be a Senate abolitionist, but he too concedes that reform is worth considering. Some NDPers are coming to accept that it looks like the Senate is going to be around for a while longer, so we might as well have one that does something.

And it concludes by saying:

> Mr. Romanow clearly understands these political realities as well or better than most. "Let's face it", he says, "I've been in politics in Saskatchewan for a long time, and the name of the game is more of a voice for the West".

I would like to have the hon. member respond to these utterly consistent remarks that the NDP has made on this situation.

Madam Deputy Speaker: It will have to be a short rebuttal from the hon. member for Edmonton East.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, as I was to the previous Liberal speaker, I am indebted to this one for raising the obvious fact. I will repeat it, and I hope it sticks this time. The NDP is absolutely, utterly, without exception, consistent in favouring the abolition of the current Senate. What is to replace it? That is a matter of debate in our caucus, as in yours, and as in theirs, but the question of the current Senate in its current form, no.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I would just like to read the motion to get us back on track:

> That a message be sent to the Senate reminding the Senate that it has the constitutional right and the power to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons.

There are many divergent opinions in terms of the relevance or irrelevance of the Senate and the future of that body. That argument, itself, is irrelevant to this currrent debate. The fact is that we do have a duly constituted body with certain legislative authorities, and we are calling on that body to exericse those legislative authorities.

Canadians throughout this country I think honestly believe that the GST is now essentially a fait accompli and that they have no more room to manoeuvre, to debate, or to discuss. The fact is that the GST still can be stopped.

• (1700)

The Senate is currently studying this legislation. Not all Canadians realize that the Senate has the capacity not only to recommend changes, not only to study the bill, but to kill the legislation, to stop it DOA. The Senate has a legitimate role in our parliamentary system and this is one aspect of that legitimate role.

I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that it is a role that has become increasingly relevant because of the very unparliamentary jackboot tactics that have been used by this government in ramming some of the legislative initiatives down the throats of ordinary Canadians. It has used closure well over a dozen times in only the last legislative sitting.

Peter Hogg has written in The Constitutional Law of Canada, 1985 that the Constitution Act, 1867, gives to the Senate the same powers as the House of Commons except that money bills must originate in the House of Commons.

Essentially, the Senate has the same legislative authority as has the House of Commons. One might ask if the Senate ever before defeated legislation from the House of Commons? In 1920 the Senate rejected measures that were forwarded to it by a minority Liberal government. Between 1925 and 1930 no fewer than 48 bills were amended by the Senate and 12 bills were rejected. In the 1930s five bills were defeated by the Senate.

So legal precedents have been established which ascertain the Senate's authority and capacity to deep six bad legislation. The Senate has a responsibility to act. It has established that responsibility and it should exercise that responsibility.

Why do my colleagues and I call for Senate action? The fact is that this government has used every opportunity available to it to shut down the democratic process, to deep six any real debate going on in this country about the goods and services tax. It has used closure time and time again and has essentially disenfranchised opposition members of Parliament from carrying out their duties in bringing forward the concerns of their constituents.

Mr. Barrett: And illegal closure in committee.

Mr. MacWilliam: As my colleague from Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca adds, illegal closure at the committee stage of the GST legislation.

This is why we are asking the Senate to exercise its due authority. We are asking the Senate to kill the bill and that request is not at odds with any perception of whether the Senate should be reformed or abolished. That argument is irrelevant. We are asking it to do the job that it has authority to do right now.

We have called for the Senate to study the bill. To allow it to study the bill and do nothing about it would be hypocritical. If you are going to give the Senators the bill to study, you have to give them the authority to defeat the bill if they so desire. Asking the Senate to defeat the bill could, certainly, provoke a constitutional crisis. Well, so be it. That constitutional crisis may hopefully provide some initiative for real Senate reform.

The Liberals want to rag the puck on this one, make no mistake about it. Have a look at the numbers. The Liberals now dominate the Senate with 54 seats. The Conservatives have 33 seats, there are four independents, 1 independent Conservative and 12 vacancies. The Liberals are just trying to rag the puck until this Tory government comes in and stacks the deck so it can ram through the GST legislation and the Liberals can stand back and say: "Gosh we tried to defeat it but those nasty Tories went and stacked the deck against us. How could we defeat the legislation when that nasty Tory government came in and stacked the deck by appointing new Tory Senators? We could only do what we could."

The Liberals want to see this legislation passed. Their leadership candidates have been strangely quiet on this. They have been rubbing their hands in glee just waiting for the Tories to come in and stack the deck in the Senate so that they can ram it through. They want to let the Tories take it on the chin for bringing in the GST and likely go down the tubes as a result of it, then they can sit back and become the beneficiaries.

I have criticized this government many times, but at least it deserves credit for sticking to its ideology. The Liberals have had no ideology on this except the raw pursuit of power. They have been laying in the weeds on this one. They have been praying that the GST comes through and that they can capitalize on it in the long run. The Liberals should not be allowed to fool the Canadian people.

This Liberal dominated Senate has a duty to the people of Canada, and that is to kill the bill now. The people should be encouraged to write their Senators, to write the Liberal leader and urge the Senate to block this GST legislation. Better yet, perhaps the people of Canada should call the toll free number to the Senate: 1-800-267-7362.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): What was that number again?

Mr. MacWilliam: 1-800-267-7362. Anybody in Canada can call that number.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I am sorry, I didn't quite get that.

Mr. MacWilliam: My colleague asks for the number again. It is 1-800-267-7362. Pick up the phone, dial the number, tell the Senate to kill the bill.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? The hon. member for Scarborough—Rouge River.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Madam Speaker, my colleague with the New Democratic Party is surely trying to sell water beds to the House of Commons. The motion placed before the house is also—I do not want to use the word "misleading"—but I think doing a disservice to the Senate. The Senate is there to refine, review and modify legislation that has been passed by the House of Commons. It is not there to kill anything. It never was there to kill anything. My friend in the New Democratic Party does a disservice to the Senate by suggesting that its role is to kill anything that has been created by us in this House of Commons.

I would like him to square what they are really after here with the reality of the function in the Senate. If there were, by happenstance, a member of the Senate here in the gallery of this chamber watching, he or she would be aghast at the perception of the Senate perpetrated by the member representing the New Democratic Party here. I think that is very unfair to the Senate. The knowledge of the Senate by those on that side of the House is perhaps too sophisticated by half. Their ignorance is showing through here this afternoon.

Would the member offer the Senate something constructive that is in keeping with the Senate's own function?

Mr. MacWilliam: Madam Speaker, when legislation is debated fully in any parliamentary procedure it is not done with the threat of closure used not once, not twice but over a dozen times. It is not done with the threat and, in fact, the sanction of illegal closure at the committee stage of legislation, as was the case with this legislation.

We are saying that because this government has abrogated the responsibilities of this chamber by the illegal use of unparliamentary procedures, it has in fact disenfranchised the vote of every Canadian taxpayer out there. Because of that we are saying that the Senate has at this point become the locus of democratic dissent in this country. The Senate should carry out its responsibilities because of the fact that this government has not allowed full democratic participation. Use the Senate to kill the bill.

• (1710)

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Madam Speaker, does the member truly believe that if the Liberal Party wanted to kill the GST it could kill it in the Senate? Are there precedents for this? Could they not be instructed, as Liberal appointees, to do what they say they want done? In light of the fact that they acknowledged in this House in the earlier debate that closure was the wrong thing to use in committee, that closure was the wrong thing to use in the House, is it not logical that they would follow through? Give the members one or two precedents to ease their conscience.

Mr. MacWilliam: Madam Speaker, my colleague for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca has waxed eloquent once again in terms of the real essence of the issue. Precedence was established many years ago for using the Senate to kill bad legislation that has been brought to the other Chamber by the House of Commons. As I indicated earlier, from 1925 to 1930 the Senate rejected 12 pieces of legislation. During the 1930s no fewer than five bills were defeated by the Senate Chamber.

I say to you, Madam Speaker, and to my colleague, that legal precedence for the Senate's authority and capacity to deep six legislation has been well established.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate, the hon. member for Jonquière.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, I rise in the House today to respond to and comment on the motion of the hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca which says the following, and I quote:

> That a message be sent to the Senate reminding the Senate that it has the constitutional right and the power to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons.

Madam Speaker, first of all I must say it is passing strange that a representative of a party that has constantly demanded the abolition of the Senate in its present form should move a motion supporting the constitutional right and power of the Senate to shoot down a bill coming from the House of Commons.

It should come as no surprise that I wondered whether we should take this motion seriously. Especially, Madam Speaker, when we consider that at this very moment, eleven First Ministers are meeting a few streets down to try and resolve the constitutional impasse and save a country that is on the verge of breaking up. One of the strategies of the 11 First Ministers is to reform a Senate that no longer meets the demands and needs of the day. In fact, all members of this House know perfectly well we must proceed with a number of changes.

However, I had only a brief moment's hesitation, since the motion of the member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca is certainly an opportunity to discuss a number of very interesting constitutional issues which may have eluded the understanding of the hon. member for the New Democratic Party. It would be a big mistake to hesitate, and it will be interesting, Madam Speaker, to see how the Liberals in the House will vote when the question is put on the motion.

Madam Speaker, like all our activities in the House, this is a proposal that should be approached with the same care as any other measure that concerns the proper operations of government. My concerns in considering the motion are above all practical, especially with respect to C-21 which is now being held up in the Senate. I know perfectly well that the purpose of this motion, Madam Speaker, was to deal directly with C-21, the bill on unemployment insurance reform which has now been shuttling between the Senate and the House of Commons for several months, although we all know the bill should have come into force on January 1 this year.

It is obvious that there has been sufficient debate on the constitutional rights and powers of the Senate. In fact, some people might even wonder why we are talking about this.

All partisanship aside, Madam Speaker, does anybody in this House seriously believe that our responsibility to the people of Canada must be undermined by a non-elected and non-answerable assembly? Yet this protracted exercise has been going on for months, has drawn the attention of Canadians from coast to coast, and even forced the Speaker of the Commons to make a ruling.

Our Speaker's judicious admonitions notwithstanding, the game is still going on and our parliamentary system is paralyzed. Democratic precedents, public opinion, common sense, in short everything seems to indicate that the Senate cannot block government legislation, especially when it has an impact on public expenditures.

But it has become obvious that we are in a situation which simply does not relate to democratic principles nor even common sense. For the past few years we have been up against systematic abuse of power on the part of the Liberals.

Today's motion is the latest example of the incoherence and opportunism which have been the highlights of the debate. I say incoherence because even such Liberals as Senators MacEachen and Frith once stated that the Senate should yield to the House of Commons, thus acknowledging a parliamentary principle established some 80 years ago.

I would not want to create the impression that the Senate does not have a role to play, but I am sure a distinction must be made between constructive criticism about bills and the weakening of the fundamental rights of the elected House of Commons. The Speaker drew attention to that fact when referring to the important powers the Senate would take away from the elected Lower House.

In his ruling of April 26 last the Speaker recalled a number of precedents in that respect. The non-elected Senate simply does not have a mandate to thwart the adoption of bills to allocate public funds. To try to have such a motion passed is potentially disastrous not only administratively but for the Canadian people and for our democracy as well.

In spite of the attempts made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration so that the concerns of the Senate be taken into account in the bill, the Liberal senators keep interfering with the business of this elected House. The dead-end created by such tactic has serious implications for the Canadian workers across the country.

As the hon. members know, Madam Speaker, Bill C-21 is an integral part of the Labour Force Development Strategy based on the establishment of partnerships with the private sector to maintain a training tradition in Canada and to promote the betterment of our human resources skills. As long as Bill C-21 has not been passed, such urgent business will in large part be left in mid air.

In times of technological evolution and increased international competition, Canada can not afford to delay even very slighly the implementation of the Labour Force Development Strategy and other initiatives related to human resources planning.

To delay a bill providing for additional unemployment benefits and training resources may be of no consequence for the Liberal senators, but things are quite different for millions of Canadians.

I should like to point out to you, Madam Speaker, that the members of the Senate are paid every week, their salary is garanteed, and that they do not have to account to the public for anything since they have been appointed for life, while the members of this House must face the public every four years and account for their decisions. That gives you an idea of the difference between us, who must make decisions while taking the Canadians into consideration, and that other group of individuals who is not accountable to the people.

To give you an idea of the implications of the Senate's conduct as well as to show clearly what this motion seeks to do, allow me, Madam Speaker, to take a moment to set some elements of Bill C-21 in the context of the Labour Force Development Strategy.

• (1720)

Madam Speaker, I am talking about Bill C-21 since I travelled across Canada with several of my colleagues to hear what Canadians thought about it.

If Bill C-21 is passed, the government will be able to implement substantially extended human resources planning programs in co-operation with industries throughout the country.

If Bill C-21 passes, the funds available would allow us to launch employment equity initiatives having a direct effect on native people, women, the handicapped, new Canadians, as well as older workers.

Bill C-21 would also help young Canadians by improving entry-level skills development.

Under the Labour Force Development Strategy, students could learn the basic skills needed to enter a complex and rapidly changing labour market.

Bill C-21 also provides for the allocation of several millions of dollars, including $50 million to the Community Futures Program so vitally important for the small communities and rural areas of this country.

In addition, under the Labour Force Development Strategy, the government wants to double the funds earmarked for the industry assistance program which helps employers and workers adjust to change.

Older workers, who find it particularly difficult to secure a new job, would also benefit, Madam Speaker, from this Labour Force Development Strategy. These workers would have access not only to other retraining programs but also to $100 million in additional funding for training, if Bill C–21 is passed.

Of course, Bill C–21 would play a considerable role in changing the present unemployment insurance plan into a more constructive and effective tool that can help Canadians at a key turning point in their life.

Bill C–21, Madam Speaker, provides $1.4 billion taken from the $12–billion regular UI fund. This $1.4 billion is being re–allocated, $800 million for worker training and $600 for new services, including twice as much maternity leave, better training, UI benefits for people over 65 and other similar improvements for all Canadians.

If Bill C–21 is passed, some 60,000 people will be able to receive training while they collect UI benefits. This bill would release $350 million to give Canadians the skills they need to find challenging and lasting employment.

Moreover, additional funds would be available to help social assistance recipients escape the trap which social assistance benefits represent.

Yet, because of this non–elected Senate's fault, all these essential initiatives have been pending since January last, as well as the crucial training agreements between the federal and provincial governments.

Madam Speaker, this short summary of Bill C–21 should clearly demonstrate to all the Members of this House and to the Senate just how disastrous an additional delay could be.

This summary of Bill C–21 should also demonstrate how absurd the Hon. Member's motion is on the Senate's right to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons. The expression "any bill" is vital, because it means the money bills as well as the other bills with no expenditures of funds.

That, Madam Speaker, is what the House of Commons cannot accept and has always rejected for the past 80 years. It is not merely an abstract constitutional issue; the very survival of our country is at stake. Yet, as Bill C–21 has made it plainly obvious, the Senate's interference with the rights and privileges of the House is leading this country straight to political stagnation and senseless waste.

Madam Speaker, it is not the first time that the Senate with a Liberal majority has blocked the progress of this government's bills.

Let us just think for instance of Bill C–22, the Pattent Act, as well as the Free Trade bill which forced the Government to call an election because the Senate was adamantly refusing to adopt it in an effort to block the free trade agreement. Other bills, such as the one dealing with day care have been blocked by the Senate. There was another bill for which a Member of the Senate felt the need to put his life on the line in an effort to stop the government from cutting Katimavik. Senator Jacques Hébert was ready to die to salvage Katimavik. And yet, today, there is not a single man or woman in Canada who remembers Katimavik. Nobody ever mentions it.

This gives you an idea how far some people will go when they are not accountable to the voters and when they are sure to collect their salaray. These people tend to abuse their power.

Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member aware that the amendments to Bill C–21 the Liberal Senators insist upon would mean $1,75 billion per year in additional costs for Canadian taxpayers?

Is the Hon. Member aware that by defeating Bill C–21 the Senate would cause the Canadian taxpayers to pay some $2 billion in additional costs?

Is the Hon. Member who moved this motion aware that the proposed amendments would cause an imbalance in the Ways and Means approved by this duly elected House of Commons?

How can anyone be so stubborn, confused and irresponsible to come up with such a motion? If we are completely incapable of answering the hon. member from the New Democratic Party, I am confident that my constituents will remind him that the elected representatives of the people are expected to account for the use made of public money.

Those are its rights, Mr. Speaker, by virtue of the Constitution and of our own rules, as well as by centuries of parliamentary tradition during which precedents, practices and decisions have confirmed that the House of Commons is responsible for government finance matters.

It stands to reason, even for Canadians who oppose Bill C–21 but who have not given up on the underlying principles of the Constitution in a futile effort to gain short term support and who are appalled to see the Liberal dominated Senate, which is not even elected, throw sand in the democratic machine.

If anyone needed further evidence of the intellectual depth the NDP has reached, here it is. As I said, Mr. Speaker, I am curious to see how the members from the Liberal Party will vote on this motion. That should be something to see.

Maybe we will see them do a "flip flop", like some candidates to the direction of the party are doing regarding their position on the Meech Lake Accord. One day, they are against the agreement as it stands, but toward the end of the race, they start mellowing. Flip one way, flop the other way. That is interesting.

The member opposite suggests, let us not forget it, that the Senate has the power and the right to defeat any bill as it pleases. That is what it says. Members of this House will not be surprised to hear such a statement from a member of the New Democratic Party, because many of them doubt that party is committed to the principles it claims to defend.

What a shock it must be for other members of this House who believed the NDP was committed to democratic principles.

The opposition's statement is also preposterous, Mr. Speaker, because it applies to any bill even those our country needs the most. Legislation that could help the unemployed, Canadian workers, people on welfare, older workers and those who would like to get better training, as I say, any bill!

A vote for the motion of the New Democratic Party would be the equivalent of transferring our powers as elected representatives to the Upper House, to people who have not been duly elected by the people. To vote for such a motion would even mean renouncing our responsibilities and it would be a nonsense.

• (1730)

Bill C-21 is such a measure and its basic principle, training UI recipients with UI funds, has the support—Listen to this, opposition members. According to a Decima poll published on May 14, Bill C-21 was supported by two thirds of Canadians. Therefore, the hon. member does not seem to care about the needs or desires of the people with respect to this bill, if we go by his motion.

According to this motion, centuries of parliamentary tradition count for nothing. But the case that concerns us today involves more than disrespect for parliamentary tradition; it shows disrespect for Canadians who expect all elected members of this House to do their job, which is to govern the country.

That is exactly what the government is trying to do with our bill and the Labour Force Development Strategy is a key element. Mr. Speaker, we are convinced that Canadians agree with us on these matters. If they do not, they can withdraw their support from us, unlike the senators, at the next election. That is how parliamentary democracy should operate. Only the elected members of this House and not the senators are answerable to the Canadian people. Suggesting that it might be otherwise, as the motion under consideration does, is unacceptable for all who firmly believe in the integrity of our political system and our democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I know that my time has already expired, but I think that it is important today to tell this House that the motion before us is unacceptable and that it should never even have been introduced. I think it is irresponsible to Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite is a valued member of the House of Commons. He has ample experience in the business of the House and, to some degree I suppose, in the business of the other place. He has, I think, properly described the substance of the motion put forward by the New Democratic Party as being ill-founded and in many ways misconstruing the role and function of the Senate in Parliament.

In criticizing the New Democratic Party and others in such a way as to perhaps make the other place the whipping boy of Canadian parliamentary democracy, the member has failed to touch upon constructive initiative for reform of the Senate, which I think almost everyone in this House agrees should be initiated.

I know the hon. member will say that Senate reform is a viable, legitimate item on any reform agenda in this House and in the other place, but that perhaps some of us would prefer to postpone it until after June 23.

I suggest that the reform of the Senate is a very important issue. It is certainly a big enough issue to consume us here this afternoon.

I would like the hon. member to address, if he could, the initiatives that his government is prepared to take in terms of suggesting reforms and commencing a true debate aimed at reform of the other place.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, first of all, to respond to the hon. member's comment about initiatives for Senate reform, I may point out that at this very moment, 11 First Ministers are meeting a few streets down to try and ratify the Meech Lake Accord, which was duly signed three years ago by 11 First Ministers, with five minimum conditions, to get Quebec back in the Canadian Constitution. The first step towards Senate reform is to make Quebec part of the Constitution, a full-fledged member of the present Canadian federation.

Until Quebec is back in the constitutional fold, any future reform of the Constitution will be practically impossible. Mr. Speaker, Senate reform is necessary, and I think all of us here in the House have seen for ourselves, what is happening to our bills and how the Senate is holding them up, and I think we all realize how pressing and urgent this reform has become. As you know, within our country, various First Ministers have entirely divergent views on what the Senate reform should be. You may have heard some Ministers talk about the Triple-E Senate. You may have heard other ministers saying it should be different. Our first step, however must be to bring Quebec back into the Constitution and make people understand that Quebecers within Canada form a distinct society, and it is that major step that must now be taken by all eleven First Ministers, and three in particular.

Senate reform will be next on the menu because, as we all know, Meech Lake provides for annual constitutional conferences. And I wish the hon. member would make it clear to one of his party's leadership candidates who is now playing with our country's future to clean up his act and send messages to Mrs. Carstairs, Mr. Wells and Mr. McKenna that they must approve Meech Lake as is. That would be an excellent thing to do for Canada, to make this leadership candidate, who is flip-flopping all over the place, understand that Canada is far more important than his own political aspirations.

[English]

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the debate on this motion concerning the Senate. I can only say how amazed I am that the New Democratic Party would put forward this kind of silly nonsense in a motion. No one can dispute that the motion is correct. But the fact that the New Democratic Party, of all parties in Canada, would today come up with a motion urging the Senate in effect to exercise its undoubted constitutional rights and powers is simply beyond belief.

I took a look at some old speeches made by New Democratic Party members in the past. I want to remind the House of some of the words that have been uttered in this very Chamber by some predecessors of the current membership of that party. Some of those people would be absolutely astounded that their party was putting forward such a silly motion as this today for discussion in this House.

Some of the members must be ashamed even now. I am sure that someone in the leadership of the party got away from things on Friday afternoon and this silly motion got stuck on the Order Paper so that it could be discussed in this House. Now they have got themselves in a bit of a jam.

Let me read from April 6, 1964, as reported at page 1804 of Hansard. I have here a speech made by Mr. Stanley Knowles. I notice that that gentleman, who is normally sitting in this Chamber, has absented himself today. I can understand that when he would have had to listen to the drivel that we had to listen to from the hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca when he was making his speech earlier. He was trying to cover all bases at once, as these New Democrats are wont to do.

Mr. Knowles on this day in 1964 had brought in a bill to abolish the Senate and he stated:

> Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to implement the fundamental principle of democracy that the laws of a country should be made only by the elected representatives of the people. Its aim is to remove the possibility of the legislation enacted by the elected representatives being interfered with or delayed by a body of persons which has no mandate from the people of this country. The Senate being such a body this bill proposes its abolition.

That is what Mr. Knowles said in 1964.

I have more. In 1965, Mr. Howard, who was then a member of the New Democratic Party caucus, and as I recall the member for Skeena if I am not mistaken in my recollection, went on to discuss the votes for Estimates. The House was discussing Estimates and he was opposed to the Senate getting money. As reported at page 13154 of Hansard the former New Democratic Party member, Mr. Howard, stated in 1965:

> Mr. Chairman, before you put the question on this particular item—

It was the administrative vote on the Senate.

> I should like to make a few comments. It applies to the operation of what is politely or impolitely, depending upon the mood of the individual, referred to as the other place. This has always seemed to me to be a strange way to refer to it and I prefer to refer to it as the Senate because that is what it is, and it is almost always referred to in that way.
>
> The program of the New Democratic party, as was the case with our predecessor, the C.C.F., includes the abolition of the Senate. As that is one of the things we would like to see accomplished I cannot in conscience lend my support to the item before us for the simple reason that by so doing we would be running counter to our belief. We cannot support an item which tends to perpetuate a structure that we would like to see abandoned and cease to exist.

• (1740)

In 1971, as reported at page 10651 of Hansard, Mr. Knowles—and I stress his absence because of shame at this party introducing such a silly resolution—brought forward a motion and sought the unanimous consent of the House so that he could discuss a motion to abolish the Senate. He sought unanimous consent, but he did not get it.

As reported at page 10616 of Hansard on December 20, 1971, Mr. Broadbent, the former leader of that party on my left, came up with this point. He stated:

> I will come quickly to the point. In view of the speed with which the Senate is processing the bill, would the Prime Minister take steps in the early future that would result in the abolition of this absurd and undemocratic institution?

I am sure those words were out of order, Mr. Speaker, and why he was not called to order on the point I do not know. But, nevertheless, it reflects the attitude of the party on my left.

On October 30, 1970, as reported at page 758 of Hansard, Mr. Knowles stated:

> The hon. member is asking about some of my friends up there—

—referring to the Senate.

> All their lives they have been in favour of abolishing the Senate, and I trust they still are. After they have been there a while they will probably be more in favour of doing so.

In other words, his attitude had not changed from 1964 to 1970. He still believed in the abolition of the Senate.

As reported in Hansard on June 4, 1971, Mr. David Orlikow, then member for Winnipeg North, moved that a special committee be established to look at the Senate. In the course of his speech, as reported at page 6396 he stated:

> Mr. Speaker, it will come as no surprise to hon. members that I am personally of the view that the Senate plays no useful role in the political life of Canada and that it ought, therefore, to be abolished.

That was in 1971 and I can understand why the electors in Winnipeg in 1988 realized that they had been duped by the New Democratic Party. They threw them all out, and for the simple reason that these people say one thing and mean another.

On the one hand, they say that the Senate is undemocratic and should be abolished, and on the other hand they say that the Senate, as undemocratic and bad as it is, should block these bills. That is what this motion we are debating today states. They are saying to us that we as a Liberal caucus ought to direct our Senate colleagues to block bills passed by this House.

It was not a matter of asking. The hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca demanded that we do this and that we should insist that our caucus colleagues in the Senate block these bills.

We have never assumed such power over our Senate colleagues. Even before the last campaign when the former right hon. Leader of the Opposition, the member for Vancouver Quadra, asked the Senate to delay the free trade legislation so that the Canadian people could speak on the issue in an election, he did not demand or insist.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): He instructed.

Mr. Milliken: He asked. Read the press releases. He said to the Canadian people, "I have asked my colleagues in the Senate to hold up this bill". He did not say, "I have instructed them". He did not say, "I demand that they do so". He is not Caesar. He is not the government House leader. He is a Liberal and he believes in the democratic principle, unlike the members of the New Democratic Party. They have stuck that name in their party's title to remind people that they are democratic because they are so undemocratic in their activities.

This motion is proof positive of a lack of democratic feeling on the part of that party. The motion states:

> That a message be sent to the Senate reminding the Senate that it has the constitutional right and the power to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons.

Let us go back to some of the other motions that the New Democratic Party has put before this House more recently.

[Translation]

In this House on March 11, 1985 the hon. member for Oshawa introduced a motion concerning the Senate. On page 2885 of Hansard he moved this motion, and I will read only the last paragraph, as follows:

> This House urges the Government of Canada and the Governments of the provinces to act as expeditiously as possible to abolish the Senate of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): An excellent motion.

Mr. Milliken: That is what Mr. Broadbent stated in 1985. The hon. member for Edmonton East applauds, yet his party policy has changed. He should watch out.

Mr. Harvey: (Edmonton East) The party policy is exactly the same.

Mr. Milliken: The hon. member for Edmonton East must have been away. I will correct his misinformation now. He says that the party policy is just the same, that it is to abolish the Senate. Well, we have words to the contrary from the hon. member for Kamloops, who spoke in this House on May 7, 1990. I questioned him at the end of his speech, but he did not answer my question particularly He did say this, and I would like to quote him. Maybe the hon. member for Edmonton East was not at the convention that elected their new leader. Apparently this is where this change of heart took place. Like St. Paul on the road to Damascus, the New Democratic Party apparently saw lights that it had never seen before.

As reported at page 11075 of Hansard for May 7, 1990, the hon. member for Kamloops stated:

> New Democrats watched intently the assault on democracy which took place last year—

Now they are participating in it, but we will leave that aside.

> We exercised our democratic rights within our own party and voted at our December convention to change our party policy on the Senate. Whereas once we were satisfied that the Senate had to be abolished, and that was it, we are now in the process of looking at a variety of options to provide and promote better regional representation in the Parliament of Canada, including but not limited to, proportional representation, an elected Senate, and other options.

Ho, ho, ho, Christmas time was good to the New Democrats. They got off the hook. They got rid of their policy of abolishing the Senate. Then they come up with this kind of silly motion in June. Six months later they have scrapped all their principles, they have scrapped all their policies and they have gone the non-democratic route. It is not the New Democratic Party, it is the non-democratic party of Canada we are dealing with in this House today.

Some Hon. Members: hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: I do not want the government members to think that I am defending their position in this matter. I hear applause from the other side. Of course they have no respect for the Senate. At least we in the Liberal party hold the senators with reverence and awe; experienced, seasoned politicians who have participated in the democratic process in this House and elsewhere in Canada, who have the capacity for sober second thought and the opportunity to review and pick up faults and errors in government legislation.

We do not urge on them the stopping of bills. We do not say that the Senate should can these bills. We recognize that the elected majority in the House of Commons has its responsibility and it fulfils that responsibility. But, when it comes down to it, we expect that there will be amendments sent back from the other place that may make significant change in some of those bills, because certainly many of the bills this government introduces are seriously flawed.

We try to point out the faults in this Chamber. Sometimes we are successful and sometimes we are not. With the majority the government has, if it is as pig-headed as it often is, it votes these bills through. The Senate then is left to try to pick up the pieces. At least we do not, like the New Democratic Party, urge the willy-nilly defeat of bills in the Senate, saying that the Senate ought to cross the will or wish of this House as expressed by the elected representatives of Canadians, and that I think that is significant.

Let me go on with some of the other quotes from some other members of the New Democratic Party, because there are so many. In 1985, the hon. member for Oshawa again made comments about the Senate.

[Translation]

I believe it was during the March 5, 1985 Question Period, on page 2741. Mr. Broadbent asked the following question, an I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, given the views of the Minister of Justice—I am trying to be very temperate—on this institution, and the well known views of the Deputy Prime Minister and, I dare to say, hopefully half of the Cabinet, not to mention 80 per cent of the people of Canada who correctly see the Senate as being useless and costly simultaneously, and since it takes the same section of our Constitution to abolish the Senate as it does to provide any other amendment of substance, will the Prime Minister give us his assurance today that he will propose to the provinces the correct, democratic action, which is to abolish this abominable insitution?

• (1750)

In light of such remarks concerning the Senate, Mr. Speaker, I am fascinated by the thought that the New Democratic Party would support a motion such as the one we are considering this afternoon. On January 23, 1981, as recorded on page 6533 of Hansard, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, said something else in a debate on the length of the senatorial mandate, and I quote:

> —that there is no place in our parliamentary democracy for a body that is not elected, not responsible to anyone and that as the Senate now stands it should be abolished.

[English]

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: The hon. member for Edmonton East applauds and yet his party has changed that position. I presume he was in the minority that opposed the change in the position at the convention. I do not know how that all got away from the New Democratic Party at that time.

The other amazing thing is at the convention they changed their policy and yet the hon. member for Kamloops, who announced the change of policy in this House on May 10, has a motion on the Order Paper which was put there on April 4 of last year. It states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of abolishing the Senate—

It is still sitting on the Order Paper waiting to be discussed. The hon. member for Kamloops now apparently supports his party's ridiculous position where they really do not know what they are doing. They are looking at the options, as it were. They got rid of their policy of abolition and they do not know what else to do.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): What is the Liberal policy?

Mr. Milliken: Our policy has been for an elected Senate. The hon. member for Edmonton East wants to know the Liberal policy. It has always been perfectly clear. We have always had that policy.

I want to go on with other quotes. I could quote the hon. member for Churchill.

[Translation]

During a debate on the Senate in this House on March 12, 1985, the hon. member said on page 2958 of Hansard, and I quote:

> The image of overpaid Liberal and Conservative fund raisers, campaign managers and defeated or retired candidates who "work"—and I put that word in quotation marks—three days a week and do very little of value, is not too far from the truth. Not too many people realize that in an average week the Senate only sits three days. An average day is usually not a full day.

On the next page of Hansard, he goes on to say:

> —To then create another body to control the elected representatives of the people of Canada is completely and obviously undemocratic.

That is the opinion of the hon. member for Churchill. Where is he today? Did he participate in this debate? No, because he clearly disagrees with this motion.

[English]

He would clearly disagree with this motion. He would not have supported this based on his previous statements in 1985. The hon. member for—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Schneider): On a point of order, the hon. member for Edmonton East.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I do truly hesitate to interrupt the flowing waters of the hon. member, however I feel that I really must object to his imputation of opinion to the hon. member for Churchill, especially when that imputation is that he would somehow disagree with the action being brought forward today by his own caucus.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Schneider): While on my feet, I will acknowledge the fact that it is an established practice that we have agreed not to point out individual members when they are not in the House of Commons and to that extent, I thought the hon. member was rising on a point of order. Other than that, the hon. member will have his time extended by 30 seconds.

Mr. Milliken: It was a phoney point of order, Mr. Speaker, but I appreciate the hon. member's concern. It gave me an opportunity to have a drink of water. I could quote from the hon. member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill, as he then was, who is now the member for Winnipeg—Transcona. Again, I have the French Hansard here.

[Translation]

As reported on page 2273 of the Debates of the same date in 1986, he said, and I quote:

> The best thing we could do would be to abolish the Senate.

And on the following page, he added:

> The traditional NDP call for abolition is based on the fact that it is not a democratic institution.

[English]

Now we have that same party saying that this undemocratic institution should block government bills. I could read the statement of the leader of the New Democratic Party which spouted this heresy in Montreal, but I think it would be wasting the time of the House to come out with that.

I have another authority that I want to quote. I want to cheer up the government benches with this one because it is written by one of their own senators. In case the government feels that it ought to ignore the Senate or that the Senate is not doing the constitutionally right thing, I want to read from one of its appointees to the Senate, the Hon. Gérald Beaudoin who has written a book—

[Translation]

La Constitution du Canada.

In fact, I believe he is considered as the government expert's in the other place on constitutional matters and powers of the Senate.

I have read some of the speeches he has made in the other place and I must say that if he is their constitutional expert, I wonder about the value of his book because his arguments in the Senate concerning constitutional and procedural matters are somewhat questionable.

Nevertheless, on page 98 of his book La Constitution du Canada, he wrote, and I quote:

> With these three qualifications, the Upper Chamber enjoys the same powers as the elected House of Commons. Theoretically, it can even reject a budget or any ordinary legislation.

[English]

I see the hon. government House leader is nodding his agreement with his colleague in the Senate. I am delighted to see it after the rantings and ravings we heard the other day from him on the evils of Bill C–21 and what the Senate had done to it. He went on and on saying how dreadful this was. I am glad to see that he agrees that the Senate has the power to block any of these bills. It is quite true, they do.

The good senator in his book clearly says that the Senate has the powers that the New Democratic Party mentions in the motion. The surprising thing is that it is the New Democratic Party that is pointing these powers out to the other place. It is pointing them out and encouraging them apparently to use them, indeed calling upon the Senate to use them.

Just to show how inconsistent the members of that party are, I invite Your Honour to look at today's Order Paper. Here we have notice given by the hon. member for Kamloops, the House leader of the New Democratic Party in this House, of a motion to reduce the Senate's program expenditures. It states:

> Notice is hereby given of opposition to Vote 1, in the amount of $27,605,000, under Parliament—the Senate—Program expenditures, in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1991.

Here he is calling on the Senate to block the bills, and then on the other hand he wants to take away their money. How inconsistent can you be? The New Democratic Party has to make up its own mind. It has to make up its mind which way it is going. Either support the Senate and say that it is an important part of our Parliamentary government, or else abolish it. They cannot have it both ways. This motion indicates that they are trying to have it both ways.

Madam Deputy Speaker: On questions or comments, the hon. minister.

• (1800)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, that was one of the more lucid speeches I have heard from the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. Most of the time his contributions are more what one might describe as pat. On this occasion he had some actual useful contributions to make. If I sound surprised, you will understand why, Madam Speaker.

I heard earlier when the motion was introduced by the hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca that this had to do with the GST. NDPers were still opposed to the Senate but in this case they were willing to make a pact with the devil, as it were, to accomplish their goal presumably because Shirley Carr demanded it of them or something. I am not sure of the reason but whatever it was, and as pointed out most eloquently by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands and others, they are straddling both sides of the fence. Hopefully it is painful.

The hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca talked about the GST and said that it concerned him. His party's finance critic, the hon. member for Yorkton—Melville, led the battles for his party on the GST. He was there with his pillow and teddy bear and blanket on the overnight filibusters and fought the good battle. Unlike his colleagues back there who gave moral support but went home to bed, he was there all night along.

The following is what the finance critic of the non-democratic party had to say in The Globe and Mail of March 28, 1990 when speaking on Bill C-62, the GST legislation: "I believe the Commons should have the final say. I do not think the unelected body should usurp the elected body".

An Hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Andre: The finance critic of the New Democratic Party.

An Hon. Member: Did he really?

Mr. Andre: The man who fought the GST. The fellow who gave his all to this battle but at the end of the day said: "But I am a democrat, I believe in democracy". Is it a coincidence that he has not been here to participate in this debate this afternoon? I think not. He is probably at home ashamed of his colleagues over there.

I have not seen the House leader of the New Democratic Party either, the member for Kamloops.

An Hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Andre: There were some quotes from him. You may recall, Madam Speaker, the debate on Bill C-22 of the last Parliament, the pharmaceutical bill, when the hon. member for Kamloops, as reported in The Ottawa Citizen on October 30, 1987, said: "Quite frankly I am very disappointed with the Senate because I do not think it has the right to be holding up legislation".

An Hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Andre: This was the House leader of the New Democratic Party.

Isn't it interesting how the more experienced, the more senior members such as the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands quoted the former leader Mr. Stanley Knowles and others? One wonders what happened to that formerly great party to have thrown its principles out the window in that fashion for short-term political gain.

I would ask the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands who is an expert on the rules to comment on Standing Order 80(1) which reads:

> All aids and supplies granted to the Sovereign by the Parliament of Canada are the sole gift of the House of Commons, and all bills for granting such aids and supplies ought to begin with the House, as it is the undoubted right of the House to direct, limit, and appoint in all such bills, the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants, which are not alterable by the Senate.

I realize they are talking about appropriations, but the GST is certainly in that category. I wonder if the hon. member would comment as to whether this resolution is not tantamount to being out of order by virtue of being contrary to this Standing Order of the House?

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the government House leader has raised a very good point. I had my book open at Standing Order 80, but I ran out of time in my 20-minute speech and I could not get to this point.

I am delighted to have the opportunity to say that it is quite fortuitous that he has pulled out this rule and read it to the House. I need not read it again. Certainly the rule is one that we in this party have supported, as the hon. member knows.

He knows that on Bill C-21 for example, we argued vigorously that the bill was not one affecting aids and supplies and that therefore the amendments were in order. He will recall that discussion. I am glad he has raised it again today. I hope he now agrees with our position on that.

In any event, it is quite true that the situation is covered in Standing Order 80(1) and 80(2). I am tempted to read Standing Order 80(2) to the House. I may in a minute. It clearly indicates that this House in terms of money bills and in terms of bills that grant aids and supplies to the sovereign—and taxation falls into that category—are ones that are not alterable by the Senate.

Standing Order 80(2) says:

> In order to expedite the business of Parliament, the House will not insist on the privilege claimed and exercised by them of laying aside bills sent from the Senate because they impose pecuniary penalties nor of laying aside amendments made by the Senate because they introduce into or alter pecuniary penalties in bills sent to them by this House; provided that all such penalties thereby imposed are only to punish or prevent crimes and offences, and do not tend to lay a burden on the subject, either as aid or supply to the Sovereign, or for any general or special purposes, by rates, tolls, assessments or otherwise.

In other words, the House tries to co-operate with the Senate when it does propose reasonable amendments to government bills. Certainly we feel that the amendments proposed by the Senate to Bill C-21, for example, are reasonable. I want to take the opportunity to do that. I know the government House leader does not share my view, but I hope he is coming around.

However, with respect to the motion that is before us, we have what the New Democratic Party is suggesting in a statement by its leader, of all people. Obviously the others on the front bench are not particularly supportive of that, except the hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca. The message from their leader is that the Senate should stop the GST legislation, and that is what I find so extraordinary. This appears to be what is intended to be stated in the resolution.

While the difference of opinion there may be very great between the New Democratic Party and us on one hand and the government on the other, we as Liberals at least recognize that the majority wins the day in the House. We have not demanded, as has been suggested by the hon. member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca, that our Liberal senators block this bill. We have said: "Look at it. Study it. You may end up blocking it, but it is your decision to that extent." Certainly we hope some amendments will be considered to this legislation that will make it less pernicious.

We would like to see the legislation done away with. We have urged the government to stop it. Through petition and through speech in the House, we have urged the government to stop it. We have been deprived in large measure of our opportunity to discuss the bill as a result of the tactics adopted by the New Democratic Party in stalling the House so that we could not have free debate and discussion.

Madam Speaker, you know this. The hon. government House leader knows it. We are all aware that there has been a real attempt here to stifle discussion in the House to prevent the Liberal party from expressing the valid criticisms of the legislation. The NDP was so bankrupt of ideas on how to criticize it, it did not know what to say.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, my heavenly day, certainly there is great deal to be gone through here.

First, I would like to disabuse the House of any suspicion it may have with regard to the attendance of the hon. member for Yorkton—Melville. I am not certain, but I believe that since he is a member of the Charest committee he is closely following the developments in the Meech Lake discussion. The hon. member for Kamloops is currently in Kamloops where his mother was admitted to hospital this afternoon.

Mr. Milliken: I am sure he is also embarrassed.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Yes, quite. There is more than one cause for embarrassment in the House this afternoon.

I would note that it would be less than reasonable for us to attempt to take lessons in policy consistency from members of a party that campaigned vigorously against wage and price controls in 1974, only to impose them after they became government, and that campaigned vigorously against increased in gasoline taxes in 1980, only to impose greater increases when they became government.

I am not certain the moral authority assumed by the previous speaker is all that warranted. However, let me try one more time to point out to him the consistency of the NDP position. It is this: the Senate, as it is now constituted, should be abolished, done away with. There is no reason to retain that place.

• (1810)

Second, having abolished it, it is perfectly reasonable to inquire as to what might thereupon replace it. It is a simple problem. You can try to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, but once you have that silk purse you don't have the sow's ear any more; you have done away with it. That is exactly what we propose to do with the Senate.

I would only ask the hon. member by way of question: Why is it that he is incapable of understanding this simple distinction?

Madam Deputy Speaker: A very short rebuttal from the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, this is simplicity itself, apparently, to the hon. member for Edmonton East. I am a simple lawyer. I only read the words that are put before me. I heard the hon. member for Kamloops make this speech. He said: "We voted at our December convention to change our party policy on the Senate, whereas once we were satisfied that the Senate had to be abolished and that was it we are now in the process of looking at a variety of options."

In other words, the abolition policy is out the window. This motion clearly shows it is out the window. If it should be abolished, you do not urge it to do something.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I must interrupt the hon. member. His time has expired.

Resuming debate with the hon. member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate.

There is a number of ways a member of Parliament gets elected to this House and there is a number of ways in which he gets re-elected. Most important, of course, is to say what your party is going to do and, if you are as fortunate as we were in 1984 to be elected, to be able to run on what your party has done. Certainly we have done that in all areas.

I remember the pamphlets in 1984, as I am sure other members in the House remember. Jobs, jobs, jobs was right on the front of the Tory pamphlet. We passed out thousands of them in Niagara Falls. As all members of the House know and as you know, Madam Speaker, we delivered on that promise. Those were things that helped me as a member and I am sure other members of the Progressive Conservative Party, in being elected in 1984.

In 1988 we ran on our record. As I have said in this House on a number of occasions, it is always one of the things that defines and helps mark the difference between a Liberal and a Progressive Conservative. Progressive Conservatives are always proud to talk about their record in office. The Liberals always say you are being unfair if you bring up matters when they were in power. That is just a fact, but those of us on the government side are proud to talk about what we did between 1984 and 1988, and it helped get us re-elected.

Mrs. Browes: Excellent record.

Mr. Nicholson: Many of the things we have done since then we certainly talked about during the election campaign. I can tell hon. members that I remember on a number of occasions—in fact every public forum I was at—people challenging me with comments made by the member for Mississauga South on the subject of the GST. It was certainly discussed during that election campaign. We have gone forward and implemented those measures.

Those are the things that I think helped. At the same time, if you are lucky you get help from the members of the opposition. That is one of the reasons like the NDP. It is certainly one of the reasons I am pleased to participate in this debate.

Today we got a little bit of help from members of the NDP. For that I know I can always count on them. They have introduced a motion that a message be sent to the Senate just to remind the members of the Senate that they have a constitutional right and the power to defeat any bill coming into the House of Commons. That is what they have asked us to do.

What I find interesting about it is that this is what as known as an opposition day. The members of the New Democratic Party could have chosen any topic to discuss, anything at all to discuss.

Mrs. Browes: Something relevant.

Mr. Nicholson: They chose this motion, calling on and reminding the Senate to fight, to reject, to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons. Quite apart from anything else, it was very unfortunate for them to do that. The country is involved with very serious constitutional debates in the city of Ottawa right as I speak. Instead of addressing themselves to those vital national concerns, the NDP decided this was the day it would decide to champion Senate rights. I think that is unfortunate. NDP members could have talked of any number of issues. They could have talked about their ideas for cutting the deficit.

That would be a very short debate and this debate is scheduled to last four or five hours. We do not want to talk about NDP ideas to cut the deficit.

An Hon. Member: Ideas on anything.

Mr. Nicholson: The member for Mississauga West says, "Ideas on anything". Well, this is what the NDP have chosen. They have chosen to talk about the rights of the Senate and championing the cause of the Senate to defeat House of Commons bills.

They could have talked about the environment. The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State knows as well as I and other members on this side of the House what a vital concern this is to Canadians from coast to coast. There are so many different aspects of the environment, so many different ways in which the House could be a positive force. The NDP could have chosen to talk about that. But, no, not a word about the environment. They decided to take up all of Parliament's time today to talk about the Senate.

Mrs. Browes: They could have talked about the Rouge Valley.

Mr. Nicholson: They could have talked about the Rouge Valley and all the efforts made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State. They could have talked and commended her for all of her efforts in championing that cause in Scarborough. That would have been worth a debate. I would be pleased to have government members discuss for four or five hours her efforts to preserve that part of the environment within Metropolitan Toronto. But no, they chose not to discuss that.

They could have talked about the problems in Canadian agriculture. I see a former agriculture minister from the former Liberal government. I am sure he would have been pleased to say a few words on the subject of agriculture. There was nothing about that from the NDP.

They could have talked about the problems in the fishing industry. There are many areas of concern and interest to Canadians, but they chose not to talk about any of them.

The NDP decided to talk about what they could do to encourage the Senate to deny, to hold up, to defeat, and not pass the laws of this democratically elected chamber.

An Hon. Member: That they agreed were necessary. Tax reform they said was necessary.

Mr. Nicholson: Well, they chose not to talk about it today.

It should be made clear that this is a reactionary measure. I cannot help but think that former Leaders of the New Democratic Party would have very strong words to say today if they knew that the party they led in the House had now taken on the mantle of Senate rights. I think many of them would be very surprised.

One of my colleagues was talking about J. S. Woodsworth, a former Leader of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Lewis and T. C. Douglas. I do not even think you have to go back that far. I believe that the Hon. Ed Broadbent would be very disappointed if he knew the direction that the party had taken on this particular issue and I do not think you have to go back in the history—

An Hon. Member: How does Audrey feel about it?

Mr. Nicholson: My colleague asks how Audrey feels about it. It looks like it is every person for himself in the NDP these days on issues like this. They argue among themselves. The House Leader of the NDP said one thing on Senate reform, and the member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca is obviously championing it. The member for Edmonton East is against it. Maybe that is a sign of the new leadership in the New Democratic Party: if they speak in three different voices on the subject of the Senate, somehow that is going to win them friends across the country. I do not think so.

• (1820)

I see the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands in the House. I enjoyed his comments, but there is one thing on which I disagree with him. He called this a silly motion. I will always ascribe sincerity to the individual members who put forward these motions, so I certainly do not want to be associated with the comment "silly". I believe the NDP is very sincere on this, and in fact on all the motions they put forward. Other than that, I certainly enjoyed his comments.

I think this is a pattern we have seen in the New Democratic Party over the years. I do not think a motion like this should be viewed in isolation. We have seen a number of tactics and directions like this taken by the members of the New Democratic Party. I am sure members in the New Democratic Party will remember some of their comments about the post office.

If there is any suggestion of technological change at the post office, I think we can all be assured that the members of the New Democratic Party will oppose it. I think that goes without saying. When the government suggests that we remove trade barriers in Canada, Madam Speaker, you can count on the NDP to oppose it. The facilitating of movement goods and services across international borders is an idea that is accepted even by socialists in Europe, but no, members of the Canadian New Democratic Party can be counted upon to fight it.

One member of the NDP thought he could pin me down and said: "Don't you know that your party used to stand in favour of trade barriers? The national policy under Sir John A. Macdonald was based on trade barriers." For heavens sake, that was in the 19th century. Has anybody over there up-dated their view of economics? I would like to hear more about some of the ideas that have found a home in the New Democratic Party. I would like to know how they feel about the Divine Right of Kings. That does not get talked about too often. On the next opposition day, let's get into a discussion about it.

An Hon. Member: Not a bad idea.

Mr. Nicholson: I think there is a lot of these floating around in the NDP.

We talked about the hon. House leader of the NDP. One day, he had a private members' motion called Magna Carta Day. In fact, he said that the barons had forced the king to sign this document. When he introduced it into the House, I assumed he thought it might become a national or international celebration some day. I am not so sure any more. Maybe he thinks King John got a bad deal. Maybe that is what he wanted to talk about.

Certainly, I am going to be watching the Private Members' hour. I would be very interested to hear the comments of the New Democratic Party on that subject.

Today, the NDP brings forward their concerns about the rights of the Senate and what the Senate should be doing. I have indicated that I am disappointed that they had nothing to say about the rights of the House of Commons. Could the members of the NDP not have made a couple of speeches about the rights of a democratically elected body?

I have heard no comments at all about the rights of democratically elected members of Parliament to pass legislation. There were no comments about our power to review legislation.

Mrs. Browes: The will of the people.

Mr. Nicholson: The will of the people. Where in the discussion do we hear about that? No. Championing the cause of non-elected members of the Senate. That is what they have chosen. I am disappointed.

The hon. members say that the senators have the power. Yes, they have the power. I have seen the British North America Act and, with all respect, it says: "All power is vested in the Queen." As important as the monarchy is to Canada, who in the Chamber would suggest that it would be constitutional for the Queen's representative, the Governor-General, to hold up or defeat any legislation? I suppose the members of the NDP say: "He has the right and the power." Yes.

When I was at school, I remember a professor talking about the rights and the powers of the Senate that the NDP is talking about today. The professor made a comment about the Canadian Senate. He said: "If the Canadian Senate ever exercised the theoretical powers that is given to it under the Canadian Constitution, there would be such an uprising in Canada that it would very shortly lead to the abolition of the Senate".

I guess we are still waiting for the national uprising, the coalescing of national opinion on this but we know some of the problems this House has had with legislation. I could go back to the free trade legislation or to the day care bill that was before the Senate and did not get passed prior to the 1988 election.

There were delays on the pharmaceutical bill from the last Parliament. I hope Canadians will pay more attention. If I see that professor again I will tell him that he was not only premature on what public opinion might be but I am sure he would have never guessed that, of all political parties, it would be the NDP that would come to the defence of a non-elected Chamber vis-à-vis the wishes of an elected Chamber.

The members of the NDP have chosen to spend their time this afternoon on this subject. I can tell them that I think it is important for all Canadians to know exactly where members of the NDP stand. I want to make the pledge to them and to the members of the House that I will do everything possible, everything within my power as a member of Parliament, to see that the views of the NDP on this get wide viewing and a wide range of distribution in my riding of Niagara Falls.

I sincerely want all the people of Niagara Falls to know exactly where the members of the NDP stand on this. I will do my very best to get the message out for them in my riding of Niagara Falls as I am sure other government members will do across the country.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a short question of the hon. member who contributed so magnificently to this debate. I think all members would appreciate the fact that the debate has managed to cause a considerable amount of merriment and good feeling, as well as spreading a great deal of long-deserved enlightenment on the issue of the Senate, its powers, and what it ought to be doing to earn its keep.

I would like to comment first on one phrase that the hon. member used when he said it was difficult to get the coalition of public opinion necessary to abolish the Senate. I just want to put the proposition to him that what we are doing in this debate is killing two birds with one stone. We can serve the interests of the vast majority of the Canadian people who have demonstrated over and over again that they want to axe the tax, kill the GST, by persuading the Senate to fulfil its constitutional authority and responsibilities, and to put up or shut up and earn its keep. We may then be able to serve their desires and interests while enlisting the Conservative Party to the cause that we have held for years and continue to hold, which is that the Senate ought to be abolished.

If we can accomplish those two things at once, we can give the friends of our colleagues in the Liberal Party to our right their well deserved reward and put them out to pasture, without having to pay for it, and still accomplish the objectives of Canadians and the long-held objective of the New Democratic Party to put an end to that body which has sat in the other place without making a major, concrete contribution to the body politic for many years.

Mr. Nicholson: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to comment on the hon. member's comment.

He said that we are having a hard time getting a coalition concerning the abolishment of the Senate. My comments were that I would like people just to be aware, to begin with, of what the Senate is doing so they can make up their minds as to whether they agree with having it or not, or whether they agree, in today's debate, with what the NDP is suggesting that they should do. This is one of the reasons I said at the outset that I was pleased in one respect that the NDP brought this forward. I think all Canadians should know exactly what the NDP has to say on this. So, I am very pleased with that aspect of it.

• (1830)

What I think what the hon. member is getting at is this. The New Democratic Party has ended up third in every election.

Mr. Milliken: Not always.

Mr. Nicholson: Excuse me, I should not say that. The hon member for Kingston and the Islands is a student of Canadian politics. Quite properly, he would correct me by saying that the Social Credit Party has ended up third in most of the elections in which it ran—perhaps not in most, but in several elections. So, the NDP sometimes runs fourth.

Mr. Horner: Never a silver medal.

Mr. Nicholson: But sometimes bronze.

Mrs. Browes: Usually last.

Mr. Nicholson: I think the point that the NDP is trying to make is this. It must be very frustrating to lose an election. It must be frustrating to be always at that end of the Chamber. It must be frustrating to have 18, 28, or 40 members in the House of Commons. If one cannot do it by the democratic process, maybe there is some other way by which the NDP can accomplish what it is it wants to do to Canadians.

It has been pointed out very well that for years the NDP fought against the Senate. The concept of an undemocratic upper Chamber was fought by the NDP. It has changed its mind on this and I think I know the reason. That frustration that builds up election after election—

Mr. Duhamel: They are progressive, that is why.

Mr. Nicholson: That was not the word I was going to use.

The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands called it the non-democratic party. I was going to use the term the new dinosaur party, but I think I like his suggestion better.

In a way I can understand the frustration of the New Democratic Party. But that does not change the fact that the people of Canada sent the Progressive Conservative Party in overwhelming numbers to this Chamber on two different occasions in the last two general elections. We have every right to bring in the proposals that we talked about during the election. The members of the New Democratic Party, or anyone else, do not have the right to thwart that.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the hon. member's speech. I wanted to ask him a sort of hypothetical question, which I know he will want to answer.

One of the things that has happened in my observation over the years is that the New Democratic Party is forever claiming credit for various policies introduced by Liberal governments. One would always think, listening to its members, that somehow they had instituted all the social programs that in fact the Liberal party has introduced and that the Conservative party has tried to break down or curtail in various ways at various times.

The fact is of course that there has never been a New Democratic Party government in Canada. For example, its members have said by suggestion that if there had not been a Liberal minority government we would never have had Petro-Canada. We hear New Democratic Party members claiming that they are responsible for Petro-Canada because they supported a Liberal minority government.

Surely, if we accept the position of the New Democratic Party today that the Senate should block any bill that it wants, then had the Liberal government wanted to stop Petro-Canada and had not been supportive of it, it would have had the Senate block the bill based on the urgings of the New Democratic Party. Its members would have said: "Yes, here in the House of Commons we will vote for Petro-Canada with the NDP and get it set up over the cries and hoots of the Conservatives who oppose these good things. Then, when it gets to the Senate, we will use our majority there to kill the bill." After all, this is what the New Democrats are urging in their motion today.

Does not the hon. member who just spoke feel that perhaps the New Democratic Party in putting forward this motion is defeating the claims that it has asserted in the past, that somehow it is responsible for the good works of Liberal governments?

Mr. Nicholson: Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Mississauga West has cautioned me not to get involved in a lovers' quarrel.

Let me see if I can follow the reasoning of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. He said that the members of the New Democratic Party say that they are the ones who suggest pubic policy in Canada. The Liberals say that, no, it is their ideas and they are implementing it. The only thing I know for sure is that we are the ones who end up paying for it.

I was not in the Chamber when the National Energy Program came in. I do not know whether it was one of the great ideas of the Liberals, whether they were cheered on, or whether it was suggested by the NDP. Some members who have been in the House longer than I would perhaps know who exactly should get all the credit. Perhaps it should be the hon. member for Edmonton East.

Mr. Horner: Who should take the credit for FIRA?

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member asks who should take the credit for FIRA. Was this a great idea that the Liberals came up with on their own without any help from anybody else? Is the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands nodding his head? Was this just a great idea from the Liberal Party?

Mr. Milliken: I wasn't even here.

Mr. Nicholson: Well, deficit financing was definitely a Liberal policy but, to give the New Democratic Party its due, I know its members cheered them on. They were egging them on to spend more and more money that the Liberals did not have.

I say they are equal to what they have done to the country. All I can say is that we on this side of the House will clean up what they have left.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on a topic which makes me a little uncomfortable. I think that those who put forward the motion, in their eagerness to blacken the noble record of the Liberal Party, have decided to use the Senate as a vehicle to pretend to Canadians that the Liberal Party has failed to provide the leadership and the traditions that have assisted the country to address the challenges of this century.

We have all heard many references to a triple E Senate, one that would purportedly be equal, effective, and elected. I know what elected means. I do not know exactly what equal means. Equal to what? Are we talking about equality as between provinces? Are we talking about equality as between regions? There are many other aspects of the country at which we can also look for equality.

None of these concepts have ever been ironed out, analysed, and developed in a cogent and cohesive manner to allow the House and the party in power to put forward a proposal for reform that has a chance of succeeding.

By way of our Constitution, we have in effect divided the constitutional pie into a number of segments; some portions federal, other portions provincial. Each jurisdiction is supreme in its own field. There are a few areas of shared jurisdiction.

I have to note that no provincial legislature makes use of a second body in their parliamentary process, yet each province enacts legislation fully as important as that of the House of Commons. The House of Commons and each legislature in its own field deals fully and completely with its own aspect of the constitutional field. That makes me wonder why a Senate has a role in Parliament. If the provinces can get along just fine without a Senate or an upper House, why can the House of Commons not get along without a Senate? I have not found an answer to that.

• (1840)

I cannot say that the Senate does not perform a reasonable and effective function in many of the tasks that it undertakes in dealing with legislation. It does initiate some pieces of legislation. I have seen Senators of great repute, great experience, and great intelligence undertake tasks of significance to the provinces that they represent and great importance to the country, and carry out those responsibilities with great effectiveness. They have made a significant contribution to the development of legislation and policy in the country.

Yet, members of the New Democratic Party come forward today with a motion that pretends to endorse the functions of the Senate. But they are not being honest with themselves and they are not being honest with the House. The entire thrust of the New Democratic Party, for as long as I can remember, has been to abolish, to kill, to trample, and to change things so rapidly that it is prepared to throw the baby out with the bath water. When has the New Democratic Party ever given the Senate any credit for any of the work it has done?

The only fault the Senate bears is that through tradition in Canada the Senate has not been an elected body. I suppose many of us regret that. If it were an elected body, we would not have so many of the difficulties we now have in trying to determine its proper role.

I have made reference to those non-policies and destructive suggestions of the New Democratic Party, which from time to time are rooted in real democratic initiative. However, I feel they fail to recognize some of the good things we have here in this country. Not only does the NDP take that approach, but the Progressive Conservative Party in its own way has also failed to address Senate reform in the way it should have.

The Progressive Conservative government over the last half dozen years has spent its time cutting deals with Washington rather than trying to reform and to improve mechanisms of legislation in Parliament. It abandoned the Senate long ago. It did not give a care about the Senate. Its goals were expedience and quick fix. I am disappointed in that.

What we have to show for it is a half finished free trade agreement. I say half finished because we have not finished negotiating subsidy. We have a challenge of constitutional reform which has been left for three years. As I stand here, we are now negotiating—truly at the eleventh hour—to put together some rational constitutional reform which has emanated out of the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord.

I want to conclude by speaking in opposition to the adoption of the motion put forward by the New Democratic Party. It is a motion that is devoid of any real substance and any real constructive initiative to reform the Senate. It is one that attempts to show our party, a party that I am very proud of, as one that has not done the work that it was elected to do over the last several decades.

I challenge the NDP to abandon its bankrupt approach to Senate reform and address solid, positive, constructive constitutional and Senate reform in the months to come.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I was quite interested in my hon. friend's comments. Does he think a joint convention between the Liberals and the New Democratic Party might help them to resolve this impasse in policy between the two parties?

Mr. Lee: Madam Speaker, in the absence of cogent leadership in constitutional and Senate reform on the part of members opposite, I think it might be fun to address that issue with our brothers and sisters in the NDP.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, as I was listening to my friend and neighbour from the Liberal party I could not help but note that he and his colleagues have made it very clear all afternoon that the Liberal party in the Senate has absolutely no intention whatsoever, and never will have any intention, of axing the tax, of using the legitimate authority and power vested in the Canadian Constitution within the Senate, which is a reality, to kill the GST. Every one of their speakers has made that abundantly clear.

The New Democrats and the Conservatives pay strong attention to the principle that we ought to receive value for moneys expended. Therefore, what is the rationale for the large expenditure of public funds currently being contemplated by the Liberal majority in the Senate in order to go across the country to hear Canadians tell them what they have been telling all of us for months and months, that is, to kill the GST, if they have absolutely no intention whatsoever of using the authority that the Constitution gives them and their friends to put an end to that bad legislation?

Mr. Lee: Madam Speaker, my friend has just exhorted the Liberals in this House to do with the Senate what the labour unions have been doing to the NDP for years, that is, telling the NDP what to do in the House of Commons. Every member in this House knows that it is inappropriate for the people in this House to tell the other place what to do. I am sure the members who sit in the other place will undertake their constitutional role, albeit a little old and cobwebbed, to review all aspects of the GST legislation in the responsible way they deal with all other legislation that is sent there.

No one in the Liberal party in this House has stated what the Senate is going to do with the GST legislation. That is up to the Senate. It is clear that the Senate will undertake to study it, review it, listen to Canadians and report back to the House of Commons. It was always going to be that way. Suggestions by the New Democratic Party that the Senate was either going to vote to kill it or do nothing are wrong. The New Democratic Party in this House ought to wait until all the members of all parties represented in the Senate deal with that piece of legislation and return it to the House.

• (1850)

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I guess this is an afternoon to hear of changes in party policy. I thought I just heard the hon. member say that the Liberal party would not presume to tell the Senate what it should do. I know that is a change of policy for sure, because hon. members in the Liberal party will remember their former leader making it very clear just prior to the last election what it was he thought the Liberal Senate majority should do. He told them what to do. That is what was done then.

Would the hon. member not agree with me that this change of policy in the Liberal party has nothing to do with respecting democratic ideals, but has more to do with the fact that their next leader, Mr. Chrétien, knows that the MST is very bad for Canadians and he sees this as a opportunity to replace that bad tax with a much more fair tax? Is this not what this is all about? Would the hon. member comment on that?

Mr. Lee: Madam Speaker, there is virtual paranoia developing here at the prospect of Mr. Chrétien becoming leader of the Liberal party. He is one of four excellent contenders for the leadership of the party—

Some Hon. Members: Five.

Mr. Lee: —and I am sure in due course the members opposite will have an opportunity to deal with whoever the leader of the Liberal party will be.

In any event, I reject the proposition of the hon. member for Niagara Falls. I challenge him to—

Mr. Nault: Go to the polls.

Mr. Lee: That is a possibility.

Mr. Valcourt: Are you not going to answer the question?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I have another question that I thought I might address to my hon. friend.

He will know that in the 17 years of Liberal administration from the 1960s through to 1984, when common sense prevailed, that the Senate under the control of the Liberal party used to indulge in pre-studies of bills in an effort to make the work of the House of Commons, the duly elected representatives, flow quickly once the bills got to the Senate. The Senate abandoned that once the Conservatives gained control of the House of Commons.

I wonder if my hon. friend could comment on what caused this change of policy in the Senate and whether or not he thinks it is legitimized at all.

Mr. Lee: Madam Speaker, it seems to me that if there existed a valid, workable, effective institution procedurally at the time that the Progressive Conservatives came into power in 1984, it would only seem appropriate that they exercise leadership and judgment in pursuing that kind of a process. In fact, if that process fell into disuse, I would have to suggest that it was a result, not of the failure of the Senate which does not lead legislation in this country, but of the Progressive Conservative government to make use of processes and of an institution that had validity, and of people who had experience simply because it looked to them like the Senate was filled with Liberals and they did not like Liberals. So they stayed away and they failed to use a good procedure that was there in existence simply out of partisanship.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I would like to begin the approximately five minutes that are left to us in this evening's debate by reading the eloquent motion put forward by my colleague from Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca earlier this afternoon. It states:

> That a message be sent to the Senate reminding the Senate—

And it needs reminding.

> —that it has the constitutional right and the power to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons.

At the beginning of this debate my colleague from Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca made it abundantly clear why this particular language was used. We have been listening for months now to representatives of the Liberal party railing against the goods and services tax, this aberration of progressive taxation from one end of Canada to the other. Quite frankly, we thought it was time to call their bluff.

The Constitution says that the Senate has that authority, it has that power and it has that responsibility. We in the New Democratic Party have said for years that it ought not to have that power but the fact remains that it does have it. We also believe that we ought to get value for moneys expended. The long and excellent financial histories of NDP provincial governments across the country are adequate testimony to that.

Mr. Manley: What are you wasting money on this for?

Mr. Kristiansen: We will debate that some other day but the press has already agreed that the facts are on my side and I will not deal with that any further right now. It is not necessary. The facts will speak for themselves.

By this motion we want to ensure that those thousands of Canadians who may appear before the Senate as it travels from one end of the country to the other to hear testimony, give serious consideration and sober second thought to this question of the goods and services tax, this fundamental rearranging of Canada's taxation regime, know that it is a sham, that it does not mean a thing.

One after another my Liberal neighbours have stood up today and said they have no intention, either as Liberals or as members of a Liberal caucus, of having the Senate impose its will on the Parliament of Canada. So it is a non-starter.

To go back in history a little bit, the Senate was set up as the protector of corporate rights, the protector of private property against those radicals who wanted to democratize society. The Senate has many times in Canadian history used its power, its responsibility and its authority to stop good laws. We are asking the Liberal party to request their fellow Liberal caucus members to use their constitutional rights and authority within the Senate of Canada to put an end to a bad law.

In 1926 the old age pension bill was introduced by a Liberal government after the signed commitment received by J.S. Woodsworth and A.A. Heaps in 1921. It took them a little while but they brought in a bill and the action of the Senate was described as its most notorious act of defiance. The Senate killed the popular policy, the aim of which was to supplement the income of all people 70 years of age or over to $365 a year. The Senate killed a good law.

In 1926–27, the Senate twice rejected a bill to repeal section 41 of the Immigration Act, which permitted the deportation of British subjects not Canadian citizens without trial. The Senate feared its passage would encourage communist infiltration into Canada.

In 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929 and 1930 the Senate consistently refused to pass measures to repeal section 98 of the Criminal Code enacted in 1919 to deal with unlawful association. The majority of the Senate held that communism was still making headway in Canada and if the clause were repealed there would be no provision in the Code to deal swiftly with agitators seeking to overthrow the government. Those were provisions that were opposed by every Canadian who was concerned about civil rights. They stemmed from an incident in the Winnipeg general strike in 1919. Madam Speaker, the Senate uses its authority—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately, I must interrupt the hon. member. It being 7 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 81(17), proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise in this Chamber today to address a number of points which I believe are of critical importance, not only to my colleagues in this Chamber, but to the people of Canada.

Some of you will recall that I had asked when and why this Minister of Finance and his government decided to change their position on the reduction of the deficit, that is their position was predicated on the basis that they felt that there were other ways besides reducing transfer payments to health and education.

I want to quote what the minister said. In 1982, the Minister of Finance said:

> The reductions to federal funding of health and education could have disastrous effects on the universities and on the colleges, on the hospital funding and on the operation of the hospitals. Let us solve those problems not on the backs of the hospitals and universities; let us solve those problems outside of that arena.

That is what the minister said then, but what is he doing now? Supposedly they were not going to touch that formula, supposedly not. They reduced it by 2 per cent in 1986 and they reduced it for two years. They have now frozen it from $86 to $95 billion. There will be $31 billion fewer dollars for health and education. That is just one reduction.

They have reduced funding for training and retraining when they said we would have the best programs in the world. They have done that on the backs of the workers and on the backs of the small business people and other business people of this nation. They have reduced the funding for science and technology by $39 million. You will recall that they said they would double research and development. It used to be at 1.40 per cent gross domestic productivity, half of what it is in the United States, Japan and a number of European nations. It is now 1.32. It has slipped even further.

The minister's response, I contend, is one that most individuals would agree to be somewhat misleading, to say the least. Some people would even say it is farcical. Some people have even told me it was somewhat machiavellian, but I wonder if it would not be better to say it is "Michaelvellian" or perhaps "Michaelvillain".

Let us go on to the second part of the question. The second question was would he please agree with me and confirm my contention that transferring cash and transferring tax points were actually quite different. Will the minister please tell the whole truth about cash and transfer payments? That is what I wanted to know.

He gave tax points away, or the government of the day did, 10 years ago and he is still claiming them for himself, for his government. They gave points, not dollars, and there is a difference. I can give you 100 points tonight but I must tell you it is not going to buy you a whole lot for dinner. The minister and his government take credit for points which were transferred over a decade ago, and yet the provinces raised the taxes. Surely that is something that needs to be said and a point that needs to be recognized.

During the last two years the tax point credits were greater than was the cash transfer. Manitoba will have no more cash from transfer payments for health and education by the year 2003 to 2004. I think that is really quite unfortunate. This is what the minister said in response to my question, quite apart from being rather flippant and a lot of puffery surrounding all of this and I think rather insensitive: "The tax points and cash transfer are equally important to the provinces because in an equal way they provide cash to the provinces."

• (1905)

Here is what an expert, Tim Sale and Associates, from Winnipeg, Manitoba, had to say about tax points.

"Tax points" is jargon which means that the provinces got the right to levy higher rates of personal and corporate income tax in return for agreeing to the federal proposal. In turn, the federal rates were lowered. Provinces raised their personal income taxes by 12 points (each point is one per cent of the federal tax level), and their corporate rates by 1 point. The federal government could still claim to be funding medicare, but at a lower direct cost to their budget each year. The political price for higher taxes was paid by the provinces.

I could go on and I shall use a couple of other quotes.

> The federal government shifted some taxation to the provinces—gave provinces the right to raise their taxes. But the federal government still counts the money that is raised by those provincial tax points as federal dollars.

And it goes on and on and on. The point is a very simple one. The transfer of tax points is not the same as a tax transfer of cash. It is simply not the same. I thought the minister on that particular day had been somewhat arrogant, somewhat pretentious, somewhat pompous and insensitive to the point that I was trying to raise. If that minister discards what I am saying, let him consult with my experts. Let him consult with the Canadian Association of University Teachers, the Canadian Association of Community Colleges, and I could name several others. We can listen to what they have to say. I would be quite willing to settle with their conclusion.

If the minister is so sure of himself and the points that he makes, I wonder why he did not accept my October 13 challenge, which was to discuss the importance of education and transfer payments for health and education throughout the country. In an exchange here in the House one day, I said to the minister that I would love to debate this issue with him throughout Canada. He said he had checked Hansard and he could see no indication that he had undertaken to do that.

The points are very simple.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, it is because I had adressed two extremely important issues. I was brushed off by the minister, and I believe he was less then honest with me and my collegues. Tonight, in the House, I ask that someone should explain to me why he believes he is right, when I contend I am the one who's right.

[English]

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the hon. member's question that he put to the Minister of Finance on March 13, 1990.

This government inherited a large deficit, a debt problem, in 1984. The federal government at that time was living far beyond its means. It borrowed $16 billion just to cover the difference between the money spent on programs, services, and the revenues that were collected. It built up a $200 billion debt, a mountain of debt that generated more than $22 billion of annual interest charges.

When we came to power, we launched a broad and sustained attack to reduce expenditures and restore our fiscal house. This was part of a long-term plan. We terminated special tax breaks, closed loopholes and increased revenues. The results speak for themselves. We turned an operating deficit into an operating surplus of $10 billion. Progress on these programs of deficit reduction have been made and the growth of the federal program spending has been held below the rate of inflation.

As a share of the economy, our spending is at the lowest level in 20 years. But more needs to be done, we know that, because of the huge deficits built up before 1984. Public debt is still growing faster than the economy, faster than our ability to pay, and this year alone interest payments on our debt will cost almost $40 billion. That is 35 cents out of every dollar collected as federal revenue, or it means $1,500 for each Canadian.

• (1910)

The best way to reduce debt is to reduce spending. The federal transfers to provinces are simply too large to exempt from spending restraint. Major federal transfers to provinces have grown by 6.5 per cent annually over the last five years. This is well in excess of the 3.6 per cent average annual growth of federal program spending over this period. Cash transfers alone represent 24 per cent of total federal program spending.

Therefore, the budget proposes to hold per capita Established Programs Financing transfers constant for the next two fiscal years. Total transfers under the Establish Programs Financing arrangements will continue to grow with the population, or about 1 per cent annually.

The impact of this measure will be spread broadly and equitably across all provinces and will represent less than 1 per cent of provincial revenues.

Federal program spending will increase about 3 per cent in 1990–91. Our transfers to provinces will also increase by about 3 per cent next year. So we are requiring no more of the provinces than we are willing to bear ourselves.

It is important to remember that in addition to Established Programs Financing, the federal government provides substantial additional assistance to the lower income provinces through the equalization program.

I want to mention particularly to the hon. member that this helps provinces provide better public services in health care and education and that equalization transfers have been exempted from the restraint measures announced in the budget.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Madam Speaker, on May 24, 1990 I asked a question of the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport concerning the devastating effect the proposed goods and services tax will have on amateur sport in Canada, and in particular minor hockey.

The minister responded by saying that the Sports Federation of Canada is very pleased with the provisions of the GST to amateur sport. However, a report produced by Douglas A. Rollins of Nepean suggests that any provisions the government has put forward do not go far enough to address the problems of a GST on certain amateur sports in Canada.

To better provide evidence of my belief that the GST will have a negative effect on minor hockey in Canada, I will read verbatim from Mr. Rollins' paper:

> This paper has been researched and prepared to assess the impact of the proposed Goods and Services Tax (GST) on local minor hockey associations across Canada, and of individual teams and officials operating in such an association. The purpose of the paper is to provide a clearer understanding of this tax, and to make recommendations as to how these associations could arrange their affairs so as to prepare for the GST.
>
> This paper has been prepared as a "case study". It examines the operations of the Nepean Minor Hockey Association, and of the teams and officials in it. This was a deliberate choice, since by examining the GST and its impact upon one specific organization, other similar organizations would be able to clearly identify the underlying principles of law, and relate these principles to their own particular organization. This would then fulfil the objective of the paper; to provide a clearer understanding of this tax for all.

Material was gathered through examination of existing federal sales tax law, through review of Bill C-62, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act, and discussions with officials of the Nepean Minor Hockey Association and tax policy officers with the Department of Customs and Excise, and Finance.

It must be clear at the outset that the material presented in this paper, because of the nature of the subject, cannot be considered as definite. This is because the goods and services tax has been introduced into the House of Commons as Bill C-62 but is not a law at this time. Also, in certain of the more technical aspects of the application of GST there is no policy. What is presented is the likely direction such policy will take. These areas of uncertainty have been identified in the body of the text.

Despite these considerations, what is presented here is the first detailed look at this tax and its specific implications for minor hockey.

• (1915)

I do not have the time to read the background and methodology of the report, but I will read the executive summary.

The GST is intended to eliminate many of the flaws and inequities which exist in the current Federal Sales Tax. The vast majority of goods and services in Canada will be subject to this tax, which is essentially a 7 per cent tax on personal consumption. It will require all businesses and organizations in Canada who have annual taxable sales in excess of $30,000 to register for and collect this tax.

The Nepean Minor Hockey Association, like all other hockey associations in Canada, will be affected by this tax. As the organization providing a minor hockey program for players between the ages of five and 19 in the city of Nepean, the NMHA in 1989-90 operated with a total budget of $402,000. The vast majority of these funds come from the sale of memberships to individual players. In addition, other revenue comes from the rental of practice ice purchased from the city, the proceeds from a bingo, profits from a used equipment sale, sponsor contributions and tournament revenues.

It is concluded that the NMHA, given its current operations, would have a total of $206,500 in taxable sales annually. This would require the NMHA to register for GST and collect some $14,020 in taxes yearly. However, by taking eligible input tax credits of $10,185, the net amount of GST to remit would be a total of $3,935. While the NMHA is a non-profit organization, it will receive no special funding, unlike certain other organizations engaged in organizing amateur athletics.

In addition to the amount of GST required to be added to its sales, the NMHA will be forced to absorb a total of $20,406 in GST on its purchases. As a consequence, the NMHA will face a total GST related increase of $24,341. This represents a 6 per cent increase.

There are ways of reducing the NMHA's total amount of taxable sales to less than $30,000 per year, but this would only save some $3,935 in GST annually. This is due to the fact that the NMHA, being a non-profit organization, does not mark up purchases subsequently resold to any significant amount. By not being registered, by being below the $30,000 threshold, they would not have to keep books and records, and file periodic tax returns, but would save relatively little money.

Individual teams in the NMHA would not be registered for GST as long as their operating budget does not exceed $30,000. In a similar manner, referees, timekeepers and instructors would be below this threshold.

I filed a copy of this report with the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport at the time I asked the question. I hope the parliamentary secretary or whoever responds will have had the time to read the report and to specifically refer to the items that I mentioned.

This report was very well thought out and researched. Even after it took into account all the provisions that were supposed to help non-profit amateur sport, an increase of 6 per cent to an organization such as the NMHA still exists. This could have an extremely negative effect on minor hockey in Nepean and, as is probably the case, all of Canadian minor hockey.

In response to my initial question in the House, the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport praised the Minister of Finance for doing a tremendous job for amateur sport in the GST legislation and stated he should be congratulated. I say to the minister, come on. Put your helmet on and get into the game. Your praise of the Minister of Finance is eloquent but makes no sense. In hockey terms, you do a lot of dazzling skating and shooting but no scoring.

Your answers to my questions deserve a misconduct and I am sure you will be cut from the team when Canadians vote in the next election.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the hon. member's concerns.

I want to make very clear that the Government of Canada has no intention of scrapping the goods and services tax. We all know the GST is an important part of the government's economic plan. It is a crucial element that contributes to making the economy stronger and more dynamic, to restoring the country's financial health, and to improving the fairness of the tax system.

The proposed tax will correct many of the flaws of the existing federal sales tax. It will remove the existing tax burden from many Canadian exports, eliminating the bias in favour of imports by applying a uniform tax rate to imports and domestic goods and services. It will provide a more reliable source of revenue and thereby contribute to efforts to reduce the national deficit.

• (1920)

With a uniform rate of 7 per cent applied to most goods and services, the GST will provide a less complex system for government and businesses to administer. In strengthening the competitive position of Canadian producers, the GST will stimulate economic growth, encourage investment, and create jobs.

Insofar as the amateur sport community is concerned, let me remind hon. members that non-profit organizations as a whole are not now given special status under the existing FST. As a consequence, such organizations currently bear an element of sales tax on their purchases, which presumably they are required to factor in to the cost of the programs they provide.

In developing the GST proposal, the government recognized that, given the broader GST base, such organizations would generally incur additional costs. As a result, important features of substantial benefit to charities and non-profit organizations have been incorporated into the proposed system.

First, government grants or subsidies available to charitable and non-profit organizations in order to carry out their activities are not taxed. They are ignored for GST purposes.

Second, charitable and non-profit organizations which produce taxable supplies will be able to claim full input tax credits on their purchases.

Third, to further mitigate the impact of the GST, charities—and this includes registered Canadian amateur athletic associations—will automatically be entitled to a 50 per cent rebate on GST paid on purchases for non-commercial use, regardless of the amount of funding they receive from governments. Organizations which do not have charitable status, but which nonetheless are substantially funded non-profit organizations, that is, those whose revenues comprise at least 40 per cent in government funding, will also be able to claim a 50 per cent rebate of GST on purchases of goods and services for which they are not entitled to an input tax credit. This places them in a better position than under the current federal sales tax.

There are a number of other features which have been built in to the design which will benefit sport and other non-profit organization. Among others, these include the provision of an optional simplified accounting method to reduce any additional compliance burden, the exemption of sponsorships from tax, and a special exemption for recreational programs designed for children primarily under the age of 14.

The former Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport helped to facilitate representations by the Sport Federation of Canada before the Commons Finance Committee last fall and also facilitated key meetings between that organization and the Department of Finance. At the present time, officials of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Branch are working with the Sports Federation and Revenue Canada to ensure as smooth an implementation of the GST for the sport and fitness communities as possible.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Madam Speaker, I rise as chairman of the Public Accounts Committee to raise an item once again that was first raised in the House on October 23, 1989.

The purpose of the Public Accounts Committee is to study, as thoroughly as it can, the annual report of the Auditor General of Canada tabled in the House each year during October or November. It is the committee's job to study the items in that report where the Auditor General finds weaknesses in financial administration or areas of government that should be corrected. We have hearings and, after those hearings with civil servants and senior officials from government departments and agencies before us, we table our report in the House, not only stating our findings, but also making recommendations on the cures.

On October 23, I raised an issue in the House because the Deputy Prime Minister had sent out letters to all the chairmen of committees of the House of Commons, asking them for suggestions as to how the deficit could be decreased. But he forgot to send one to the chairperson of the Public Accounts Committee.

I raised that in a question in the House and the Deputy Prime Minister gave me a very good answer. He said he was willing to co-operate with us. In a second question to him, I said the Auditor General's report will be tabled in the House tomorrow and it will be permanently referred to the Public Accounts Committee. I asked if he would assure us that no roadblocks will be put in the committee's way as we witnessed, to a degree, in the early stages of this Parliament. The Auditor General's Report was tabled the next day on October 24, and these points were raised:

> In 1989-90 we had planned to conduct a government-wide audit of expenses claimed by ministers for travelling on government business. In our opinion, the Auditor General has clear statutory authority to audit these expenses.

• (1925)

The Auditor General went on to say in his report:

> We requested access to receipts where ministers had followed Treasury Board's advice to retain them. The Government told us that even if receipts existed they would not be made available to us.

In other words, the government refused access to those ministerial receipts to the Auditor General of Canada who looks after tax moneys given to the government on behalf of the people of Canada.

On October 24 in the House, I rose again and said:

> Today we learned that the Auditor General tried to do an audit on ministerial travel, but he could not perform it because he could not get any receipts from any ministers in this government and therefore could not do an audit of the cabinet of this country. Surely the Deputy Prime Minister does not consider this to be co-operation.

The President of the Treasury Board replied:

> I can assure you that this government is totally committed to accountability and openness.

Madam Speaker, on November 10 in The Globe and Mail there is a report of one of the public accounts committee meetings and it states:

> Paul Tellier, Clerk of the Privy Council and secretary to the cabinet, testified yesterday before the House of Commons public accounts committee that the Auditor-General of Canada will not have access to receipts for government-paid trips taken by ministers.
>
> He said it is up to each minister to decide how to spend his or her time and it is not the role of the Auditor General to pass judgement on where the minister goes or why.

That was not really the purpose of it. It was a request for information for the purpose of bringing forward an audit.

Time went by and the President of the Treasury Board gave us a commitment that he would bring back a report on this.

On February 8, not having a report, I wrote to the President of the Treasury Board and asked him for his report. I said:

> At a meeting of the Committee with the Comptroller General on February 8, 1990, it was brought to our attention that two reports on the above subject are presently in your hands, one is entitled: "Report to the President of the Treasury Board on the accounting for the Administrative Flight Service provided by the Department of National Defence"; the other is a report on ministerial travel.

We asked the President of the Treasury Board for that information. He replied to my February 8 letter on March 13. He said:

> The Comptroller General's study has been provided to me just recently and is presently under consideration. As you know, I promised to table this document in the House and will do so early in the new fiscal year. At that time, it will be available to the Public Accounts Committee.

In other words, Madam Speaker, hurry up and wait. On January 17, I received a letter from the Auditor General. I will quote a paragraph from that as follows:

> I thought your Committee might appreciate knowing that the government of the Province of Manitoba has very recently moved away from an honour system for accounting for ministerial travel expenses to a system requiring receipts. The significance of this development is that it leaves the government of Canada as the sole jurisdiction where Ministers' travel expenses are accounted for on an honour basis, i.e. receipts are not required.

It is now June 4. Parliament will be rising this month. This issue that started on October 24 last fall and our public accounts committee still does not have an answer from the President of the Treasury Board. We still do not have an answer from the government.

Madam Speaker, I want to state very clearly that the public accounts committee studying matters of inefficiency and bad expenditures in government can only operate if we get the full co-operation of the government. I want to point out, as chairman of the public accounts committee, it is obvious that on this item we are not getting co-operation, either from a senior official or from the government itself. I would like the government to tell us why and when we are going to get it.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I would first like to point out to the hon. member that when he raised this question on October 23, the Deputy Prime Minister did apologize to him for not sending a letter and wanted to assure us that the government wants the public accounts committee to be the watch-dog committee of the public purse.

As well, the committee can expect the same freedom and independence it has always exercised. Furthermore, as the committee continues to fulfil its important role, we would welcome any ideas, suggestions or otherwise to assist the government and the country in reducing its national debt.

I know the hon. member shares the view that we must find ways to reduce duplication in government and to find efficient methods to meet the program demands of Canadians. We as a government are constantly searching for ways to improve the delivery of programs. But, as he well knows, when an operation the size of the federal government spends approximately $100 billion annually, it has an obligation and a duty to promote efficiency in our spending.

The Public Accounts Committee, which the hon. member chairs, is tasked with reviewing federal government spending and with providing alternative ideas and new opportunities. I know the hon. member will be doing just that.

However, we should take time to look at our record. If we take away government spending to service the Liberal national debt, we will find that that the government has gone from a $16 billion operating deficit in 1984–85 to a $25 billion operating surplus in 1990–91.

That sounds impressive. The deficit will drop to $28.5 billion this year. It will be cut to $14 billion in three years and reduced further to $10 billion in the next years.

Given these facts, I want to congratulate the Public Accounts Committee for its hard work in helping to achieve this impressive turn-around. In the same view, I know the hon. member who chairs the Public Accounts Committee would want to congratulate the government for providing leadership in getting government spending under control.

[Translation]

Madam Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 7.32 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 5, 1990

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to five petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the third report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

This is an interim report on demography and immigration levels.

[Translation]

The interim report was tabled at the specific request of the minister, to indicate what immigration levels in Canada should be during the next five years.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-309, an act to change the name of the electoral district of Surrey—White Rock.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have leave to introduce the bill?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, this is the bill I wanted to submit last Thursday and time is catching up on me now.

It is a bill to change the name of my constituency from Surrey—White Rock to Surrey—White Rock—South Langley. It is incumbent upon the name of the constituency to reflect the geography and the population base of the riding and until now a certain large proportion of my constituency has been left out of the name. I would like to have the constituency name reflect the population of the area. Langley has been left out, therefore I would like to have South Langley included in the name.

• (1110)

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I see what point we are at in Routine Proceedings. I was inadvertently held up and have a Striking Committee report which relates to a couple of committee meetings later this afternoon. I wonder if I could have unanimous consent to table that report.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to table the report?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Routine Proceedings

STRIKING COMMITTEE

PRESENTATION OF FORTY-FIFTH REPORT

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the forty-fifth report of the Striking Committee.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[Translation]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-310, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Laval.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have leave to introduce the bill?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table a bill that would allow me to change the name of my riding to Laval West instead of Laval.

The purpose of this bill is to give the western part of Laval more prominence—to enable people to identify more readily with their riding, because at the present time, the riding of Laval logically would mean the entire island, although there are actually three ridings on Laval Island. I therefore would like to see the western part identified as Laval West.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[English]

PETITIONS

DETROIT AIRPORT EXPANSION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, today, I have the honour to present a petition signed by almost 8,000 people from the city of Windsor, Ontario.

This petition has been duly certified by the Clerk. The petitioners call upon Parliament to direct the federal government through the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Transport to take all steps within its power to protect the interests of the residents of Windsor, Ontario who would be adversely affected by a proposed expansion of Detroit City airport and who were adversely affected by last year's expansion, including using Canada's sovereignty over its own air space through which any additional flights using an expanded Detroit City airport would go, to ensure that no such expansion takes place that creates noise or other pollution, brings about deterioration of the quality of life, and creates risks to the health and safety of the Canadian residents in question.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present two petitions.

First, I present a petition from approximately 200 residents from the riding of Moose Jaw—Lake Centre and from people in other parts of Saskatchewan who are concerned about the goods and services tax.

The petitioners call upon the government to enact some laws that will provide fair taxation for Canadians. They call upon the government to deal fairly with average Canadians and with those who are having difficulty making it through a difficult time in Saskatchewan. They want the government to introduce a fair tax system in the country.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of farmers in Saskatchewan.

The farmers call upon the government to reinstate oats and give it the same protection under the Canadian Wheat Board that is now enjoyed by wheat. They have a concern over the future of marketing boards and the orderly marketing system in the country.

The petitioners call upon the government to reinstate oats and barley, and to give them the same protection that wheat has now under the Canadian Wheat Board.

[Translation]

TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I am tabling today a petition from Chibougamau, in the federal riding of Roberval, as a result of the recommendations of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas.

Mr. Speaker, your petitioners reject the conclusions of the task force and want to see Chibougamau recognized as an isolated area, as defined under the present tax benefit system.

[English]

ABORTION

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, despite the vote taken in the House a week ago today, I would like to present a petition signed by 215 residents of Edmonton, almost all of whom are women, that points out that the choice to bear children or not to bear children is a matter of personal choice, not criminal law.

The petitioners point out that the Canadian Medical Association already has guidelines and regulations in place concerning abortion and that criminal sanctions do nothing to address the reasons why women seek abortions or to reduce the numbers of unwanted pregnancies.

Wherefore, the petitioners call on Parliament to refrain from imposing any criminal sanctions against abortion.

I present this, Mr. Speaker, because I am certain the matter will return to the House.

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it is a pleasure to rise in the House to present a petition signed by Canadians who are opposed to the government's GST proposal.

Your petitioners call upon this House to reject the GST proposal again, as soon as it comes back to the House.

• (1120)

[English]

VIA RAIL

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some pride to present a petition on behalf of over 200 Canadians and others from around the world. They have forwarded a petition pointing out that the city of Revelstoke, as a result of the abandonment of the VIA Rail The Canadian train through the Rocky Mountains, has become truly isolated due both to winter closures as a result of avalanches and the fact that there is no scheduled air service to that community.

They point out that the discontinuance puts more vehicles on the Trans-Canada Highway through Rogers Pass. This highway is already close to capacity in summer months and will require twinning, at great expense to the people of Canada.

They further point out that the discontinuance will put more vehicles on highways passing through Glacier and Mount Revelstoke National Parks causing great environmental damage to these ecological reserves. They further point out that the discontinuance will deny that community in the province of B.C., revenue from the tourist traffic the passenger train carries.

Mr. Speaker, I point out that in addition to almost 200 signatures from throughout the west Kootenays in British Columbia, there are further signatories from Grey Town, New Zealand; Perth, Australia; Nabari City, Michigan; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Washington, D.C.; New York, New York; London, Ontario; Alberta, throughout Saskatchewan; Seattle, Washington; and Portland, Oregon. There is a great demand for this service and the petitioners ask that that rail line through the Rocky Mountains be re-instituted.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to table again today a petition signed by several Canadians from Newfoundland who would like to tell the House how they would not like to see the goods and services tax imposed by the government. The tax will impose upon all Canadians an extra 7 per cent on all their goods and services purchased after January 1, 1991.

They would like to tell the government and Parliament that they object strongly to this imposition on their goods and services and that they believe it is an unprecedented tax grab from the pockets of Canadians. This government has already increased taxes 31 times since it took power and the effect of this new tax will cause higher inflation, probably higher interest rates than we have at this time and most likely, higher unemployment. They would like to see this tax scrapped absolutely.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty, as the elected member for Hamilton West, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present to this House a petition that is certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions. It is signed by thousands of residents who reside in and around Hamilton.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to revise the laws of Canada to replace the Young Offenders Act with an updated Juvenile Delinquents Act with a lowered maximum age of 13 years.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, today I stand to present a petition signed by 150 residents of Cavendish, Newfoundland. They are extremely worried about the proposed goods and services tax. They ask that this government reject it. They feel that it is extremely regressive and that the regions of this country will suffer far more than some of the other more centralized regions. They ask that the government go back to the drawing board and come up with something that is far more equitable for all the people of Canada.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present a petition which has been certified correct under Standing Order 36. It is signed by 41 residents of Newfoundland, from Islington, Whiteway and Heart's Delight.

These Canadians are complaining about the government's plans with respect to the goods and services tax. They recognize, notwithstanding the denials from the Minister of Finance and his colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, that the goods and services tax will not affect the price of food, but in fact that it will affect the price of food in their communities because of transportation costs. They object to this tax and call upon Parliament to reject it.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of presenting a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of 34 residents of Sunnyside in the great province of Newfoundland. They call upon the Government of Canada and the Prime Minister to withdraw the goods and services tax. The residents of Sunnyside in the province of Newfoundland believe the tax is a hidden tax and proposes a huge new tax burden, in particular, on middle and low-income Canadians. The tax is inflationary and is neither in the best interests of Canada nor its citizens.

The signatories in question ask the government to withdraw this tax immediately.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present petitions from over 1,400 individuals from the Dartmouth, Eastern Passage, Preston and Coal Harbour area of Nova Scotia.

The petitioners ask the government to withdraw its regressive, ill-conceived goods and services tax proposal. These Canadians feel very strongly that this tax, which is a hidden tax, is unfair to low and middle-income Canadians. They believe it is a very regressive and unprecedented tax grab and urge the government to withdraw this measure immediately and to come forward with real tax reform which helps all the people across the country.

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition on behalf of several residents of Newfoundland, pursuant to Standing Order 36, whereby they request that the government scrap the GST which will be applied to virtually everything they buy. Now we have just found out that it will be applied to everything they buy, including essential food items in smaller stores. The tax will present an unfair hardship on low and middle-income Canadians.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Bob Wood (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege this morning to present a petition from the residents of Nipissing pursuant to Standing Order 36. The petitioners are upset that the government has seen fit to introduce charges that will reduce housekeeping services to veterans and subsequently increase the cost of long-term care. There are over 150 signatures. They feel that the veterans have already given service to this country and should not be targeted by these measures.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, question No. 290 will be answered today:

[Text]

DRILLING OPERATIONS IN ECUADOR

Question No. 290—Mrs. Stewart:

1. Is Petro Canada exploring for oil in the Ecuador Amazonian rain forest and, if so, for each oil well (a) what is the composition of the drilling muds, including all additives (b) what were the results of the chemical analyses (i) of the sediments settled out from the drilling muds and the formation water in the sumps (ii) of the formation water pumped into the sumps (iii) after water treatment and release from the sumps (c) were the sediments tested for heavy metals and if so, which ones (d) what was the ph readings and oxygen content of the water released (i) how do these readings compare to baseline studies of streams in the vicinity?

2. Is a fish impact study being conducted at a well, and if so, when will it be completed?

Hon. Arthur Jacob Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada reports as follows:

1. To date, Petro-Canada has drilled two wells in the Oriente Basin in Ecuador. Both of these wellsites were constructed and operated according to industry approved, environmental standards which are accepted internationally.

1. (a)—(b) During the drilling operations at both sites all fluids and drill cuttings were contained in drilling sumps dug into laterite clay and lined with an impermeable plastic liner. The management and testing of the mud system was carried out by a leading international mud service company, according to standards which are among the most stringent in the world.

In some cases, geological formations contain low concentrations of heavy metals. However, analysis of the drilling mud and sumps at both locations show the absence of these metals.

Government standards determine the concentration of chemicals that can be released with the fluid portion of drilling muds from the sump into the surrounding environment. If these fluid components do not meet the necessary standards, the sump is chemically treated to neutralize or precipitate out the offending chemicals. The sump is then dewatered, again according to standards, to prevent site erosion, disturbance of local vegetation and pollution of surface water sources.

Following the dewatering of the sump, the remaining mud and cutting components, contained in the liner, are covered over and the sump is capped and contoured to prevent erosion and invasion of surface water.

The procedures described above, including the sump construction procedures and chemical analyses of the mud, were carried out at both sites. One sump has been closed in and the wellsite restored to facilitate natural revegatation. The other sump remains open and secured as Petro-Canada develops their plans for potential further work at the wellsite. Once these decisions are made and necessary work is conducted, this second sump will be restored.

2. Petro-Canada continues to study natural revegetation as well as fish and water quality in nearby local streams to ensure that the corporation's programs are successful.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

RAILWAY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Railway Act (grain and flour subsidies), as reported with an amendment from a legislative committee.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: There are seven motions on the Notice Paper for the report stage of Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Railway Act (grain and flour subsidies).

Motions Nos. 1, 3 and 6, standing in the name of the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex, are in order and will be grouped together for the purposes of debate.

[English]

The intent of these motions is to continue the charge already provided for in the present or existing legislation, namely, Section 281 of the Railway Act, for another five years.

A vote on Motion No. 1 will be applied to Motions Nos. 3 and 6.

A motion similar to Motion No. 2 was moved, debated and negatived in the legislative committee which considered this bill. The intent of this motion in amendment is to continue a charge presently in the statute law with respect to the ports of Halifax, Saint John and West Saint John. This was the principle and intent of the amendment moved in legislative committee.

• (1130)

Thus, I must say that, pursuant to Standing Order 76(5), this motion cannot be selected.

Motions Nos. 4, 5, and 7, standing in the name of the hon. member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre, delete Clauses 2, 3 and 4 of the bill. Such motions are in order at this stage of our proceedings and these three motions will be grouped for debate.

A vote on Motion No. 4 will be applied to Motions Nos. 5 and 7.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Speaker: I will propose Motions Nos. 1, 3 and 6 to the House.

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-26 be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 5 to 27 at page 1 and lines 1 to 22 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"1.(1) Section 281 of the Railway Act is amended by adding thereto, immediately after subsection (2) thereof, the following subsection:

"(2.1) Subsection (2) expires on April 1, 1995."

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-26 be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 23 and 24 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Section 281 of the said Act is repealed on April 1, 1995."

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-26 be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 14 to 18 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"4. Sections 2 and 3 shall come into force on April 1, 1995."

He said: Mr. Speaker, these amendments at report stage of Bill C-26, the at and east legislation, if passed, will delay the removal of this program until 1995. This will fulfil several objectives. It will allow those organizations which are dependent upon these rail rates to plan rational alternative routes and methods to export grain and flour in order to maintain both an equitable return and their competitiveness in international markets.

This bill, as it stands, would adversely affect both the returns of producers and their international competitiveness. In fact, this has already happened. The benefits of the at and east legislation were withdrawn a year ago. The harvest of wheat will start less than one month from now in Essex County in southwestern Ontario. This has left the Ontario Wheat Growers Marketing Board and, indeed, the wheat producers of Canada in a very difficult position.

The government has chosen to withdraw the legislation without any thought to the circumstances or the difficulties it has imposed upon the producers and the local elevators, and the ability of the Ontario Wheat Producers' Marketing Board to move that product into the market during the year.

In the past, the Ontario Wheat Producers' Growers Marketing Board, through its pooling system, would purchase the wheat from the farmers, giving them an initial payment upon delivery at the elevators. It would then store that wheat for a number of months if necessary in Bay Port elevators at Georgian Bay. This would allow them to supply Atlantic Canada with wheat or flour during the winter months when the seaway was frozen up and also to export.

Consequently the elevators at Halifax and the port of Saint John have been adversely affected by this legislation as well. The domino effect or the chain reaction to this withdrawal has vibrated across the eastern prairies and all of eastern Canada.

It is ironic to note that the government is now talking about an alternative program, but it is too late. If it was going to have an alternative program, it should have been in place before the legislation was withdrawn. In the meantime we see elevators being demolished or slated for demolition in the Georgian Bay area in Port McNicoll, Midland, and Owen Sound. While these elevators may have been built a long time ago, the one at Port McNicoll in particular, they are still state of the art in terms of their ability to unload large volumes of grain and load it onto rail cars in very short order.

It is interesting to note that of all the witnesses who appeared before the legislative committee, not one agreed with the withdrawal of the legislation. Yet, when the minister appeared before the committee he stated: "Well, the wheat still moved last year." What was not considered was the fact that it had to move at a price which resulted in a lower price to the producer through the pooling system. This impact, when spread through the whole system, is very large. To top it all off, the government announced that the initial payment prices for wheat for this year at approximately $115 per tonne.

So again, the withdrawal of the legislation has been another kick in the pants to producers who are already down with returns that will not result in a profit on investment, management, and risk. The government is withdrawing it without a full examination of the widespread impact it is going to have on our total Canadian economy.

Once those Bay Port elevators are demolished, they will be gone for all time. Consequently, we have to move very quickly. Delaying the implementation of this bill until 1995 may put a hold on that demolition and put the legislation back into place to enable us to move our product into export position, particularly to supply the Caribbean market in the winter months. That market has been held by Canada to a large extent for many years.

The Ontario Wheat Board alone moved between 150,000 to 200,000 tonnes under this legislation. That amount of product moving through the Atlantic seaports ensured the viability of those port elevators and also the flour mills.

• (1140)

One of the witnesses pointed out that, without CP Rail's main line which services the Saint John grain elevator, "not only the grain elevator would be finished but also many of the facilities that move product in and out of the port of Saint John".

This is another one of the domino impacts of the withdrawal of the at and east legislation. It will put additional hardships on the port of Saint John. Without the movement of grain through it, it may no longer be a viable port. Port officials pointed out that they intend to mothball their grain elevator. Anyone with any experience at all in the industry will know that an elevator can only stay in mothballs for approximately two to three years before it deteriorates to the point where it is no longer a serviceable working grain elevator.

Consequently, the port authorities are quite correct when they point out that this could very well be the death knell for the port of Saint John which has been exporting wheat for a couple of hundred years.

The port of Halifax and its flour mills are also very upset and concerned about the end of the at and east legislation. With these amendments before us today we are responding to their request to keep it operational, not only to maintain its status as a viable port but on behalf of the flour mills there which produce flour for export as well as domestic use.

Therefore, I am putting forward these amendments to delay the demise of at and east programs until 1995. If the government is sincere about coming up with alternative programs, perhaps this will allow it the opportunity to do that and to undo the damage done by the withdrawal of this legislation in the budget of April, 1989.

A tremendous number of jobs have been lost. In addition to those lost in rail transportation, there have been jobs lost in the elevators in the Bay Ports on Georgian Bay, and in Saint John and Halifax. There will also be jobs lost if the flour mills are forced to close.

The United States has indicated its intention to subsidize the export of about 3 million tonnes of flour this year. Their Export Enhancement Program is undermining the price of wheat on the world markets. The price of wheat does not reflect that world supplies are at the lowest level since 1971 to 1973. Yet, we in Canada are having to bear the brunt of that, not only with the lowering of world prices but also as a result of the government withdrawing the programs that made this a viable industry in Atlantic Canada, central Canada, and the eastern prairies.

Therefore, I urge the House to support this amendment to assist the people across Canada and maintain the flows of product that we have been accustomed to in the past.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak in favour of this motion. It is clear through the work of the legislative committee on this bill that the government has not done a proper study of the impact of this legislation, it has not looked at what will be the full implications not only for the maritimes but for the whole grain industry in this country.

We had a number of groups before our committee, including the Minister of Transport and representatives from the Department of Transport. It was very clear when they were before this committee that they had not done a full evaluation of the reports that had been in front of them. They said unequivocally, in fact, that there had been no reports that were unfavourable to the government's position.

In fact, as has been said many times before, as early as 1985 the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission put an alternative before this government. It said that the at and east must be changed, that the at and east was not adequate as it was and that there should be some changes, that although the ultimate purpose it was serving was valuable it was actually costing the government too much money. It put a proposal in front of the government, not once but twice in 1985. Upon asking the departmental representatives what sort of evaluation they had done on it, they admitted that they had taken only a very cursory look at it and in fact they had not even had the courtesy to respond fully to the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission.

The fact is that the removal of this program is going to have some wide implications. That has been very clear. We had Dover Flour Mills before our committee. It is the only flour mill on the Atlantic seaboard. To make things clear, this bill is affecting Dover Flour Mills. Dover Flour Mills has no intention of shutting down. It is a very efficient mill and should be commended for the work it is doing to maintain that mill in Atlantic Canada. But as a result of this bill it has lost a commercial export market. Its domestic market is still doing very well but it has lost a commercial export market. Its profits have been eroding and it does rely on the Halifax elevator remaining open in order for it to remain open.

The loss of the at and east, combined with the loss of the feed freight assistance on mill feeds, has had a major impact on the whole agriculture industry in the maritimes. When the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission was before the committee it highlighted again the fact that it was going to cost Atlantic Canada $27 million and hundreds of jobs and that it was going to have an impact on diversification in the maritimes.

We heard from people in the agricultural industry who indicated that the loss of the Halifax elevator would have a devastating effect on the whole livestock and poultry industry in the maritimes.

The city of Saint John was before the committee and outlined some other concerns. The fact that the Saint John elevator has already closed has cost a number of jobs in that city. The line that was used to haul grain to Saint John is becoming more and more questionable. We in the west have experienced rail line abandonment for some time and the maritimes are now starting to experience that same problem. If that line to Saint John is removed, and it is becoming less viable for the railway, it will have a major impact on the city of Saint John.

The port of Halifax appeared before the committee and expressed similar concerns about the loss of the at and east program and the possible closure of the Halifax elevator.

The longshoremen appeared before us. They are very concerned because their workers are losing jobs. They have workers with families who are trying to make ends meet who simply do not have work. It is not because they do not want to work, it is not because they are not ready to work, it is simply because the jobs have disappeared because this government, without thinking, has removed a program and is affecting the livelihood of many people in Atlantic Canada.

• (1150)

The Canadian Wheat Board was before us and said that the loss of the ports of Halifax and Saint John will mean the loss of the only ice-free ports on the Atlantic seaboard. If those ports are lost it could mean the loss of sales. As the representative from the Canadian Wheat Board indicated, countries with warm climates and warm waters do not want to go up the St. Lawrence during the winter to the St. Lawrence River ports because they do not want to deal with the ice. In fact, they like the idea of coming to an ice-free port because they are not used to dealing with ice and they do not want to deal with it. If they have the choice of going to an ice-free port or dealing with the St. Lawrence River, they may well go somewhere else.

The Canadian Wheat Board has expressed that the loss of these ports takes away one marketing element that it uses. As we know, this country needs all the help it can get in marketing grain. The Canadian Wheat Board, which is an institution that has done wonders for the Canadian grain industry needs all the help it can get.

The issue boils down to the elevators at Saint John and Halifax. The question that must be asked is if the government is going to remove this program what is it going to put in its place? It has offered nothing. It did not listen to what the APTC had to say. It has offered nothing to put in its place.

I have found this experience very frustrating because the government, despite being hit over the head with information, ignored it and bullheadedly moved ahead with its agenda, which is not always clear to all Canadians.

One thing that was satisfying was that the work we in the New Democratic Party and others have done on this bill has forced the government to recognize the devastating impact that this bill is going to have. As a result, it has appointed a study to look at the future viability of the elevators at the ports of Halifax and Saint John.

It is great that the government is concerned about the elevators at Halifax and Saint John. It is too bad that it would not have been interested about 18 months ago and looked at some real alternatives to this program so that today, instead of debating the demise of the elevator at Saint John and the potential closure of the elevator at Halifax, we could be debating the very logical and well thought out proposal put forth by the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission. A vast majority in each party in this House would favour that sort of proposal. Instead, the government is being bullheaded and is going ahead without any real thought for the consequences of its action.

It is only the work of members of this party, the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission and others, that has forced this government to realize that the passage of this bill will have a devastating impact on regional development. The promotion of agriculture in Atlantic Canada is important to its economy. At least we got the government to recognize that. It is really sad that the Saint John elevator is already closed. By the time this study is finished Halifax may be closed. Everything is in limbo. Everything is up in the air.

I want to remind the government that we have to keep in mind that regional development is an important factor in this country. It has been a factor since Confederation. If the government is not going to consider regional development, if it is going to consider only the bottom line, we are going to have problems in Atlantic Canada, Saskatchewan and other regions of the country that do not have a great population base but are part of this Confederation and deserve the consideration of this government.

In closing, I would like to remind the government that it has a duty to all regions of this country to make sure that there is a fair opportunity for all, to make sure that every Canadian, no matter where he or she may live in this country, has the opportunity to work, to raise a family, to make a living and to live in a way that is satisfactory to all of us in Canada.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, I also want to contribute to this debate and I am not happy to do so. Frankly, it is a little embarrassing.

I listened very attentively to the remarks of the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex in explaining his amendments. For members on all sides who do not appreciate the history of Bill C-26 and the effect of the amendments, what the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex said in very even, objective, non-provocative prose is absolutely correct. The member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre, who a little younger and a little more partisan, got pejorative. He said things that could excite one and perhaps the facts would cause one to get excited. I certainly do not take exception to anything he said.

That is the dilemma that this member and, frankly, all Atlantic members are in. Bill C-26 is a retroactive piece of legislation which I guarantee 90 per cent of the members in this House do not even pretend to understand. It is about something that we have heard of from time to time, the at and east. It is to do with the compensatory rates at and east of the port of Buffalo. I do not have all of my file here, but I was here in the opposition when a fellow called Pickersgill, whose name is now used in the great constitutional debate, spoke on something called the National Transportation Act which set up the Canadian Transport Commission. He became the first chairman of that commission. I remember him here in the front row of this House explaining the fundamental implications of the National Transportation Act on the Canadian Transport Commission.

People think he comes from Newfoundland. He was the member for Bonavista—Twillingate but he was born and grew up in Manitoba. He became the private secretary to Mackenzie King. That was really his interesting contribution to the politics of this country long before he came out of retirement and has been vocal in certain issues that are presently confronting our First Ministers at the Conference Centre.

Mr. Pickersgill, the Minister of Transport at the time, right in that debate said that the National Transportation Act will do many things and he appeared before the committee. We have written into it a little clause, Bill C-26, a simple little amendment to the Railway Act which in effect helps to pay for the export of flour and grain through Atlantic ports. It helps to pay by giving the difference between the compensatory rate and a rate frozen at that time. The history has been that this is a subsidy of somewhere between $25 million and $30 million without taking into account all the multiplier effects and benefits to the ports which the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex mentioned and/or the ports of Atlantic Canada, the elevators and the employment there too.

I have to restrain myself because I am very bothered and somewhat embarrassed that we are proceeding with this bill when even government members admit now that the Department of Agriculture is going to have a study of the Halifax and Saint John ports to assess, through the representatives of the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission and Grains 2000, what effect the removal of this subsidy is going to have on Atlantic Canada. As has been mentioned here already, the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, knowing full well that there might have been more economical ways to get export flour and grain off-shore, years ago suggested changes to the Railway Act.

• (1200)

My problem and I would think the problem of any Atlantic Canadian member is that since 1985, the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission in a very unrestrained, unprovocative way has been in communication with the Department of Transport and/or the Department of Agriculture on something called offsets. They have said: "Look, we will agree. We understand the need to change the program because times have moved on. If there are offsets, then we really cannot fight too hard the removal or change in the at and east subsidy."

When the last program was brought before the Standing Committee on Transportation in, I think, February of this year, the suggested change was going to be about $10 million. In effect, it said: "Give us $10 million and we can still make sure we have the export of flour and grain at the ports of Halifax and Saint John. All the ports and elevators along the way will stay in operation." The problem now is that while the bill has the very invidious retroactive effect of July 1989, the government admits through a press release of May 18 that it is going to have a study.

Without getting too provocative at this stage in terms of all that has happened with at and east and all the offsets, the amendment of the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex to put this off until 1995 would give time for all the studies that should have been made before the decision to cut the subsidy.

The only real way to get to members in the House and the bureaucracy—hopefully many of them are watching this debate—is this. What happened is that some bureaucrat in the Department of Finance who was looking for fiscal control and subsidy reduction picked on something that no one really understands.

Mr. Speaker, I know you hail from west of the lakes. You have that great bread basket of grain between the lakes and Alberta. Then, you go into the lowlands of Alberta where they grow grain and raise cattle. There are the Rockies, which are beautiful. The country is beautiful.

In a budget bill, without consultation with affected parties, a Minister of Finance would not dare to attack, reduce and/or eliminate—which is what is being done with at and east—the Western Grain Transportation Act. The only way to put this into perspective is to state that this is our mini "western grain transportation act" in Atlantic Canada. It has been there for more than 20-some years.

Why should we accept this quietly as fiscal control and deficit reduction when there is another subsidy program for western grain going to Thunder Bay and in particular to the port of Vancouver? Nothing is being done about that, except that it is being studied. At least it is being studied. Of course, under the act it has to be studied before the government moves. There may be very necessary changes made.

Anyone involved in that debate knows there has been a continual question of whether the money should go to the railways or to the farmers. At least it is being studied.

My time is pretty well up. We are moving retroactively with this bill. This amendment will just delay the matter for two years while all the studies are being completed. It should have started anyway.

Certainly, I fully support the amendment and hope that other members will too. Quite frankly, it fits in with what the government is thinking. It is not a great defiance of a government. We should sometimes have cross court and cross aisle areas of concern where members from a region can join together. The easy thing is for a member to avoid the vote on this measure. As members know, one takes parliamentary flu from time to time to avoid a vote on a matter of general interest where perhaps one is not settled in his or her mind. On something that is so precise, that so affects Atlantic Canada and also transportation, with which I am somewhat involved, I cannot stay silent on this bill. I support the amendment and certainly intend to vote for it.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, if you would like, I would be happy to sit down and allow my colleague, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley—Hants, to carry on for a while because he certainly made a lot of sense.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Dionne: In any case, this is not a joking matter. It is a matter of very serious concern to Atlantic Canadians. Before the smoke clears, it will be a matter of very serious concern to this government, particularly members on the government side from Atlantic Canada who have not stood up and fought against this silliness. In fact, it may even be more cynical than that, it may be the punishment that this government wants to subject upon Atlantic Canadians because of the way they voted in the last election.

I had the opportunity to speak on second reading of this bill some months ago. I simply want to reiterate some of what has been said with regard to the importance of the at and east to Atlantic Canada. We had two grain elevators in Atlantic Canada, one of which has now been mothballed because of the action of this government with this legislation. We have one elevator left in Halifax. It is the only source of flour milled in Atlantic Canada. Without it, it is at least highly unlikely that there will be any milling of flour in Atlantic Canada.

The livestock industry in Atlantic Canada is vital to the agricultural sector. Without elevators or access to those elevators for western grain, it is highly unlikely that the beef and dairy industry will remain as we know it in Atlantic Canada. We do not yet have sufficient grain productivity in Atlantic Canada to meet our needs. I am talking about feed grains, not just flour. The government is hitting us with a double whammy. Not only is it going to destroy our elevators and flour milling operations, but it will very likely destroy the feed grains production in Atlantic Canada and perhaps the beef and dairy industry.

There are very heavy implications, yet this government took absolutely no notice of those implications in its head-long and foolish attempt to do more of its cost cutting in the area of Canada where the last thing we need is cost cutting.

I want to read a small quote. This was said before the committee by Mr. Keith Russell, Director of Atlantic Farmers Council. He said: "Mr. Chairman, the organization I represent is a co-ordinating regional organization representing the four provincial federations of agriculture and the agricultural co-operatives in Atlantic Canada. As such, we can speak for more than 80 per cent of the livestock and poultry producers in the Atlantic region which is an industry with a farm gate value of $500 million in 1989."

• (1210)

Mr. Speaker, $500 million is a lot of money to Atlantic Canadians. That might not seem too much to Ontario or some of the other industrialized areas, but $500 million is vital in Atlantic Canada. It is even more vital now that this government has decided to cut back on its regional development efforts and on other subsidies to Atlantic Canada.

I want to read another quote: "I am told that the elimination of this subsidy could mean a loss to Canada of something in the order of $28 million worth of value-added processing activities or a total economic spin-off of something in the order of $65 million."

That statement was made in this House on March 29, 1976, by none other than our esteemed Deputy Prime Minister, who ought to know something about grain production, farming and the terrible disservice that this proposed legislation will do to Atlantic Canada. I am making a plea today to this government. If it has any sense of propriety left, if it has any sense of fairness left, if it has any thought at all for Atlantic Canada, it should withdraw this stupidity and go back to what we had in terms of elevators and in terms of grain movement in this country and stop trying to destroy the grain, poultry, livestock and flour industries in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise for a few moments this afternoon to address Bill C-26, which would eliminate the at and east grain subsidy.

Some members may wonder why somebody from the mountains of British Columbia is speaking on this subject. Quite frankly, my own area of the Kootenays was brought into Canada by a contract with the people and the Government of Canada at the time of a strong secession movement. The West Kootenays were going to follow the normal flow of our economics and were seriously considering joining with Spokane and Washington state. There was an agreement to build the Crow's Nest railway and to have certain rates apply in order to keep us as a part of this country so that we could make our contribution to this act of political will that was and still is called Canada.

This is not a dissimilar sort of situation. Once again we see this government with its dogmatic theology of the private market that, come hell or high water, is determined to let loose those private economic forces to do what they will regardless of the impact on the regions of this country and the very fabric of this nation.

To briefly explain to anybody who happens to be listening, Bill C-26, the at and east freight assistance program, pays a subsidy to the railways on export grain and flour moving by specified routes through eastern Canadian ports. The rates paid by the shipper have been frozen since 1960 with respect to export grain and 1966 with respect to flour.

At the next stage in this discussion my colleagues in the New Democratic Party will be moving an amendment to this bill to set the freight rates for grain and flour shipments to Halifax and Saint John, New Brunswick at 5 per cent higher than the rate for shipments to Quebec City. This is similar in effect to a proposal made by the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission. The idea is reducing the cost of the program while ensuring the ports of Halifax and Saint John remain competitive.

The amendment currently before us on behalf of our colleagues in the Liberal Party is calling for the at and east to be left as is. It puts me in mind of the Liberal attitude to almost everything else around here, which seems to be: "Don't touch a thing, don't make a suggestion, feel no sense of responsibility to do something to bring costs a little more in line, don't have any innovative proposals or compromise proposals, just say no". That attitude is as unjustifiable in this case as it is in the case of the goods and services tax. If people want to say no, they have some responsibility to come up with some alternatives. My New Democratic Party colleagues will do that later in this debate.

Back in the real world outside this Chamber, just what is happening? Since the at and east subsidy ended on January 31 due to one of the provisions of the bill which ends it retroactively, the grain elevator at Saint John, New Brunswick closed on February 28 with a loss of 90 jobs. The elevator in Halifax is in trouble and may be forced to close. The closure of the Halifax elevator will affect the economy of the Atlantic region in several ways.

First, the Halifax elevator plays a vital role as a grain storage facility. Without it Dover Flour Mills, the only flour mill in Atlantic Canada, would probably be forced to close.

Second, without the Halifax elevator shipping feed grains by lake vessel through the port of Halifax, the only competitive alternative to rail transport, would no longer be available. Based on past experience this would result in an increase in the rail rates for domestic feed grains that livestock and poultry producers in the maritimes depend on.

Third, local breweries will face similar problems as they will no longer be able to use water transport for malt barley.

Closure of the grain elevators alone will result in the loss of 573 jobs at the ports of Halifax and Saint John. In Saint John 90 jobs; Halifax, 483 jobs. Another 250 indirect jobs may be lost as well. The closure of Dover Flour Mills would result in another 45 jobs being lost and the loss of a local market for producers of milling wheat.

Livestock and poultry producers in the maritimes are already at a disadvantage when competing with Ontario and Quebec producers. In the opinion of the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission any feed cost increases could place those industries in jeopardy.

What has been the government's response? In response to political pressure from many sectors, including the New Democratic Party but certainly not solely—a lot of people have been involved, particularly many from Atlantic Canada—the Deputy Prime Minister and the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board announced on May 16 that Agriculture Canada would conduct a study on the future of the grain elevators in the Atlantic region. The study will look at the Halifax elevator, the Saint John elevator, a proposed elevator in Summerside, and how they can be made more viable.

When he appeared before the committee on May 30, the Minister of Transport stated that the alternatives to eliminating the at and east put forward by the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission had not been studied. They had not even been studied and still we are getting this legislation in spite of the fact that they had been received over a year ago. He also refused to commit the government to any measures to offset the effects of cancelling the at and east.

There is also an impact on western Canada if this bill should go ahead. The loss of the at and east will mean higher freight rates for western Canada in grain, and flour mills outside central Canada will be hard hit because they will no longer be able to take advantage of the program to ship their flour.

At a time when we have the first ministers and the Prime Minister meeting just a few blocks away to try to salvage something of this dream called Canada—this active political will from the last century called Canada—it simply does not make sense for us to pretend that this country was ever a "natural economic unit".

This nation was built in defiance of all economic reality based on the classic definitions of a market economy and how it works. Hopefully some day, with changing demographics and population, it will be easier to service all our parts and give us all a chance at a good and productive life without subsidies.

• (1220)

However, you cannot take a small number of people spread over 4,000 miles or 5,000 miles in a narrow ribbon and expect to operate in the same way as if you were shipping from Chicago to New York, both major population areas. That is not what this country is about.

It appears that this is simply one more action of a government which, whether it is dealing with Canada Post or dismantling the social safety net with the scrapping of unemployment insurance, the ending of VIA Rail facilities, or the dismantling of the Crow rate without anything viable to take its place, is determined to put doctrine before reality and to put blind faith in Friedmanite economics ahead of the welfare and the survival of this nation. There is too much at stake with all the discussion going on today, as I said, just a few blocks away.

It is about time we realized that there is more to this country than a dollar and cent sign. We believe we can build and maintain a country that is worthwhile living in, that has room for some compassion, and that believes not only in equality but that there ought to be more equal treatment of all Canadians and the several regions that make up this country.

We will support this amendment by the Liberal Party, even though it offers nothing new. We will be proposing our own amendment today, depending perhaps on how the debate goes, in order to try to bring some kind of modification and keep the basic system alive while adjusting to some current economic realities.

This is an important bill, probably much more important than the public recognizes. The issues central to this bill are the same issues that are central to the existence and the survival of Canada. That is why we will oppose the bill, that is why we will support any amendment that attempts to stop it, and that is why we will be proposing our own suggestions to keep this program alive, to keep these communities alive, to keep the regions alive, and to keep Canada alive.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I rise again to participate in the debate, this time at report stage of Bill C-26, the at and east legislation.

When I spoke the last time I clearly articulated, after much research and listening to a lot of people in my region, the economic impact of the loss of the at and east on the ports of Halifax and Saint John. In addition, a tremendous economic dislocation will take place in the agricultural industry and related shipping industries in the port of Halifax and the port of Saint John.

I was here today to listen to the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley—Hants. It would do well for all members of this place to sit down and listen to a member of his stature when he speaks on such issues and when he appeals to the House for some cross the centre aisle exchange when bills are bad bills and affect people across this country negatively.

I was exceptionally happy to see him holding firm to the position he espoused in the House the last time he spoke on this bill. Unfortunately he was not here for the vote that day. I hope he will be here for the vote today, because what he said is that this government has missed the mark when it comes to dealing with the at and east bill. More important, I believe he said that he would be supporting the amendments we are currently debating because they are good amendments.

Since the government introduced the regulations which would have done away with the at and east subsidy in Atlantic Canada in June 1989, the government has been so hell-bent on going through with its proposals, no matter how badly flawed they are and no matter where and how poignant the responses are in the communities affected, that it just steamrolls whenever it can.

When I participated in debate the last time, my hon. colleague from Halifax West took exception to the fact that I thought his comments expressed the certainty this bill would pass anyway so let us just deal with the consequences. I did not hold that view then and I certainly do not hold it now. This is not a fait accompli. This is a parliamentary democracy and in a parliamentary democracy the government introduces legislation.

After full and thorough debate the bill goes into committee and the committee reports. Hopefully, if the bill is flawed, it will be amended to make it better legislation. The hon. member for Halifax West does not particularly like the fact that government legislation might be flawed and that even members on his own side of the House can agree with the amendments that have been put forward by my colleague. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley—Hants who happens to be the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport agrees.

The effect of this amendment is basically to rescue the government. In 1985 the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission sent some unsolicited proposals to the government because it heard rumours that the at and east legislation was going to be gutted and that the subsidy would be done away with. Being responsible and trying to ensure that its industry was not terribly dislocated by such an action, it sent some information to the government about some potential offsets.

When the hon. member for Annapolis Valley—Hants spoke last, just a few weeks ago, he indicated that five years later the government had not even responded to the submission from the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission. It talked about possible offsets for the at and east. Indeed, on February 19, the Commission slightly revised what it had given to the government in 1985 and sent it in. At the time he spoke about April 30, the government still had not responded.

We went into committee and we heard a lot of individuals during the proceedings. One of the things that we found surprising was that the industry members who were most affected had no question about the negative impact that was going to take place with the sudden loss of the at and east legislation without any consultation by the federal government.

The federal government did not come in and say: "Look, we are rethinking our national transportation policies, and we think that because the at and east is flawed it must change or go." It did not say that. What the government did was come in and say: "It is gone." The hon. member for Halifax West said it best. He said: "It is a fait accompli. Whatever this government wants, it gets." That is what was said. It is in Hansard. "It is a fait accompli." If the government wants it, the government gets it.

The effect of these amendments is to try to rescue the government. What the government did was show government at its worst: it came in with legislation that is fundamentally flawed. It has not undergone the test of consultation with the industry sectors affected, and now it is trying to play catch-up.

It was pretty clear. During the committee hearings I asked Mr. Armitage from the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission: "Do you believe the loss of the at and east and the resulting traffic loss may have an impact on the viability of the main line of CN?" In his response, which is in the Minutes and Evidence of Proceedings, he said: "I do not think it is going to jeopardize the line, but it will certainly have an impact on the viability of that line."

We talked to Mr. Doering from Dover Mills and asked him whether he was consulted prior to the loss of the at and east. Dover Mills is the only flour mill in eastern Canada. Mr. Doering said: "In terms of what it has done for Dover Mills, first of all were we consulted? No, the industry was not consulted."

I asked Mr. Russell from the Maritime Farmers' Union specifically, because of the lack of consultation and the sudden withdrawal on July 15, 1989 of the at and east regulations, what it would do. I said: "What is it going to do to the grain elevator in Halifax?" We already know that the grain elevator in Saint John has had to close with the resultant loss of jobs and moneys from the local economy there. I said: "Will there be an effect on the agricultural industry in Atlantic Canada?" He said: "I guess the breaking point for us would be if the situation reached the point where the Halifax elevator had to close. It would be Doomsday for us."

Mr. Speaker, 65 per cent of traffic through the very elevator in Halifax, which Mr. Russell says if closed would spell Doomsday for the agricultural industry in Atlantic Canada, is as a result of the at and east legislation and subsidy. What does the government do when it gets itself caught in the wringer—and I will not say any more than that in this place—it comes out with a study. It came out, I believe sometime in March, with a press release. After five years from the point in time that the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission stated that if this was going to be eliminated they would have to have some offsets and they would be a leader in this case. Five years after, in an effort of damage control, we have a news release from the Communications Branch of Agriculture Canada which states that we are now going to study it. It states that the study will address concerns about the future of grain handling facilities in the Atlantic region.

• (1230)

This is certainly what you call closing the barn door after you have let the horse out. We heard from witness after witness at the committee that by the time the government has decided to study it, we have already had untold economic devastation in Atlantic Canada. We have already had a grain elevator close in Saint John. We have already lost at least $15 million from the Port of Halifax economy as a result of what it has done.

We heard from Mr. Russell. Mr. Russell says that if the Halifax grain terminal closes the agricultural industry will be put on its knees, and this all after the fact. The government states that it is going to study the impact. It is a little bit of face saving. It is trying to recover some of the negative publicity that it is getting from the sectors down there that are being devastated by this short-sighted piece of legislation.

My colleague has brought forward the three amendments that we are debating today. The effect of the amendments is to further save the government from its own devices, from its own incompetence in this particular case. The effect of the amendments is to make sure that the at and east grain subsidy is still in place for the next five years, so that the government has a chance to do what it should have done back in 1985 when the letter first went in with the proposals from the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Council, and that is to sit down and study the offsets.

It is not good enough, almost a year after it has cut the subsidy, to say that now it will look at the economic consequences. We know what they are. They are devastating. Once a flour mill or a grain terminal closes, or a farmer goes out of business in Atlantic Canada because he does not have access to the same-priced feed, it is too late six months after that to come and say, "My goodness, boys, we made a mistake. We should have put the offsets in before we took the subsidy away".

The other thing that is particular galling to me as a member from Atlantic Canada is that this government is still absolutely hell-bent, whenever it wants to cut, to snip down east first. I guess it wants to see whether, after all the cuts, we still have any blood left in us.

In effect, by putting this at and east legislation through, the government has cut over $40 million. That sounds like a lot of money. The government said it had to get rid of subsidies in the interest of deficit reduction and better management. While I am not suggesting that it should impose cuts elsewhere, it did not treat the rest of the country and the rest of the transportation infrastructure the same way. It did not mention once that it was going to do anything with the Western Grain Transportation Act which has subsidized the movement of grains in the western part of Canada to the tune of over $860 million. Once again, we from the east have to bear the brunt of this government's cuts.

In conclusion, I would urge those from the other side of this House who have listened to the impassioned plea of the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants to do the right thing for once and vote in favour of these amendments or to defeat this bill.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise and speak for a few minutes on the report stage of Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Railway Act.

I rise principally in support of my colleague, the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex, who knows infinitely more about this subject than I do and than do most members of this House. As a matter of fact, I would go so far as to say that he knows a fair amount more about it than the man who happens to be current minister responsible for this bill.

My colleague, the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex was all too briefly Minister of Agriculture. Had he been able to stay there longer, this entire business would be in much better shape than it is in today.

I sense that some of the government members are rousing themselves to the importance of this particular bill, and that is encouraging. I say to my friends opposite that they would do well to have a look at today's Order Paper and to read the good sense which is embodied in the three amendments put forward by my friend from Lambton—Middlesex, the essence of which would be to delay this entire bill.

In the circumstances, it is a very good idea that we at least put this legislation on hold for four or five years. After all, let us keep in mind that in the last two or three weeks the government itself has seen fit to launch a study. Why prejudge the results of that study by acting precipitously here at this particular time? Why not follow the advice of my friend, the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex, and put this whole proposal on hold, at least until we hear the results of the study, but more to the point until 1995.

An hon. member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: The member will realize that after we hear the study and there is some burning and pressing reason to move it forward, it is a very easy matter to bring a bill such as this back into the House. That is all these amendments would do today and I cannot see anybody wanting to vote against these three very sensible amendments.

The hon. member for Annapolis Valley—Hants takes the right view. If more people on that side listened to him more often they would be in a lot fewer problems than they are there these days. The amendments would simply delay the removal of this program until 1995. That would assist the organizations concerned that are dependent upon rail rates to plan rational alternative routes and methods to export grain and flour in order to maintain both an equitable return and to maintain their competitiveness in the international market. We all know that the bill as it stands now would adversely affect both the returns of the producers and adversely affect their international competitiveness.

Where is the compassion of the government? For example, government members keep telling us that when the goods and services tax is implemented the government is going to help everybody. I happen to doubt that, but that is another debate for another time. I use it by way of example to show that if this government is so seized with helping people, it has here a golden opportunity to help some people maintain their position as producers and maintain their position of competitiveness internationally. It can do it with one stroke of the pen, by simply withdrawing this crazy bill altogether. But if it does not want to do that, it could have its cake and eat it too by legislating in accordance with the bill but putting it on hold until 1995.

These amendments put forward by my friend, the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex would have the effect of allowing the government some time to develop the alternative programs it has announced for the ports of Saint John and Halifax, rather than abandoning these ports and the livelihood of the individuals affected by the removal of these rail rates while it determines what it ultimately plans to do.

• (1240)

These amendments would also give the government an opportunity to be consistent with the testimony of witnesses who appeared before the legislative committee during committee stage. Witnesses stated that there may be inefficiencies in this legislation but urged, in essence, that rather than eliminating the program and then assisting in an ad hoc manner certain parts of the puzzle, it would have made more sense to have the alternative programs for all groups affected in place before eliminating the existing programs.

Since that makes very good sense one must ask why the government persists in pushing this legislation through before the time is ripe?

It is worth reviewing again the process that we go through in this House to ensure that our legislation is good legislation which serves the common good. We have had first reading and second reading of this bill, after which, it went to a legislative committee. We are now, in effect, debating the report of that committee. At this stage we are entertaining amendments which have come forward as a result of the testimony of witnesses before the committee. In short, at this stage we ought to be deciding whether the legislation is no good at all, whether it is perfect as is, or whether we must find ways to improve it.

My colleague, the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex has found two or three ways in which this legislation, as bad as it is, could be salvaged and be improved upon, or at least a way in which we could buy some time for the people who are going to be adversely affected if this bill passes unamended.

Therefore, we must ask why the government persists in doing something like this, having been told the havoc it will create and the damage it will cost in economic terms for a lot of people across this country. That is the question.

The answer lies in this almost glazed over messianic zeal that we get from those members on so many initiatives these days, whether it is on the goods and services tax, closing of rural post offices, or the attacking of the rural way of life generally. That is an issue that I could talk long and hard about. It shows that we have a government that has stopped listening to the Canadian people and one of the sad results of that is that we are getting some very bad legislation in this Parliament.

Any draft bill is subject to the whim of the drafter. That is why we have this process in this House, so that by scrutiny in committee and in this chamber we can find the flaws in the legislation and cure those flaws. We can nip them in the bud, before they are perpetrated in legislation and before they affect the lives of people across this country. That process breaks down completely if there are people who are not listening any more. Someone once said that none is so deaf as he who will not hear. That is what we have on our hands right now, a government that will not hear. The government has stopped listening to the Canadian people whether on the issue of this bill, the goods and services tax, the closing of rural post offices, or so many other issues that I could mention if I had the time.

According to your signal, for which I thank you, Mr. Speaker, I see that my time has run out.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to say a few words at the report stage on Bill C-26, an act to amend the Railway Act.

With regard to the at and east rate, Subsection 281(2) of the Railway Act reads as follows:

> (2) For the purpose of encouraging the continued use of the Eastern ports for the export of grain and flour,
>
> (a) rates for grain moving in bulk for export to any Eastern port from any inland point over any line of a railway company subject to the jurisdiction of Parliament shall be maintained at the level of rates applying on November 30, 1960 to the movement of that grain to Eastern ports; and
>
> (b) rates on flour moving for export to an Eastern port from any inland point over any line of a railway company subject to the jurisdiction of Parliament shall be maintained at the level of rates applying on September 30, 1966 to the movement of that flour to Eastern ports.

Therefore, we are really talking about grain being maintained at the 1960 level and flour being maintained at the 1966 level. The impact of this is not only on western grain producers shipping to European, Mediterranean, and North African customers. There is also a spin-off advantage for the local grain producers in the Atlantic ports of Saint John and Halifax.

There is an advantage for western producers of grain, wheat and barley, as well as oilseed crops. They are facing a serious drop in income this year. Even with the recent adjustments in net-farm income, Saskatchewan goes from a minus $9 million net-farm income this year to minus $116 million, which is a drop of 87 per cent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you, as Speaker, with the very large special allowances provided to Speakers had to suffer an 87 per cent reduction in your income, it would practically destroy the financial and fiscal integrity of your whole operation, or for that matter, the operation of any other hon. member of the House.

Yet, at a time when farmers in Saskatchewan are facing a loss in net-farm income of 87 per cent in this calendar year, the government is removing its support program of the at and east rate which amounts to some $50 million. It is inconceivable that, at a time when we are facing the most outrageous international trade war between the United States of America and the European Economic Community for those markets for grain around the world, we are reducing our export support programs for grain. In fact, the United States has increased its support programs for exports of wheat and a whole range of agricultural commodities from some $600 million last year to $900 million this year. It is subsidizing wheat sales at the rate of $20 to $40 a ton.

• (1250)

At the same time, we are removing an integral support program for our wheat producers in western Canada to ship grain at the 1960 rate for wheat, barley and oats, and moving that up to the current day rate. The impact will be really tremendous, not only for those producers, but for Atlantic Canada in total and those grain elevators in the Great Lakes ports in the area around Georgian Bay.

Our complaint is that, at a time when we are facing a very serious trade war in agriculture commodities, we are unilaterally disarming. The Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence say that we have to maintain our support and our strength for NATO, although they have not actually done that. Surely, if that is important in a military context, then it is important in a trade context that we do not unilaterally disarm our farmers and our producers of grain at such a time. That is essentially what we have done.

In his 1989 budget, the Minister of Finance removed support programs for Canadian agriculture producers of about $500 million. Some of those budget cuts did not actually trigger in until January 1, 1990. However, the at and east rate, which provided some $50 million of support, was triggered last year. That amount of support and encouragement for export of our chief agriculture exports, wheat and oilseeds, was triggered last year. But that is only one. What has to be understood is that there is a whole range of programs: the at and east rate; a reduction in crop insurance in that 1989 budget of $200 million; a reduction in the rail line rehabilitation program of some $50 million; and a reduction in the gas tax rebate.

What does the gas tax rebate mean? Last week, I was talking to a group of grain producers in the southeastern part of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Some of those producers were talking in terms of a fuel tax rebate loss of some $3,000.

The government talks about its grand schemes of a $500 million program to support western agriculture while it glibly overlooks that one year earlier in April, 1989 it reduced support programs to Canadian farmers by exactly $500 million. Essentially it is refunding, with a grand sweep of the pen, support programs. This at and east rate, Bill C-26, is to implement the reduction the government made in 1989.

I believe that the amendment that the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex has introduced into the House is a good amendment, because the government obviously did not know what it was doing. A few weeks ago, it announced that it was going to put in place a special commission to investigate how to support agriculture because it was removing this support to the grain elevators and the at and east rate to Atlantic Canada. Surely, delaying the removal of this rate for five years would allow the government an opportunity to find out what it is going to do to support agriculture as a result of this ill-conceived project to remove the at and east rate.

I would hope that hon. members, especially on the government side, would look very closely at the hon. member's amendment for the at and east rate, so that it would not be implemented for five years. Perhaps by that time, the government either will be out of office or will know what it is doing with this ill-conceived removal of the at and east rate as proposed under Bill C-26.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I rise to debate Motion No. 1 which would have the effect of delaying this particular action to do away with the at and east rates until April 1, 1995.

This motion makes some sense, given the recent actions by the government in a couple of instances when it has indicated that it is prepared to restudy this issue. That leaves the impression that the budgetary move to cancel the at and east rates without any discussion has created some problems which the government is apparently now talking about redressing.

For instance, on May 16, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds announced that the federal Department of Agriculture would conduct a study on the future of the grain elevators in the Atlantic region. The study will look at the Halifax elevator, the Saint John elevator, a proposed elevator in Summerside, and how they can be made viable. There is not much point in having such a study, if there is no method or means of getting the grain to those elevators. Therefore, it makes eminent good sense to delay the implementation of this government proposal to cease the movement of grains in that direction and to look at other options.

There have been options put forward by my colleague for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre, one of which would have the effect of raising the transport rates from Quebec City further east. This would not have cost the government as much money in subsidizing the rate. It would have saved about $10 million, would have provided an opportunity for Atlantic Canada to get used to slightly higher rates, and very likely would have kept the flour mill now faced with closure in Atlantic Canada in business. It would have kept in business the two terminals that are at risk, the one at Saint John which has announced that it will be closing if the program does not go forward, and the one at Halifax which has a very shaky future now that at and east rates have been discontinued.

The impact of the policy change stretches beyond just terminal operators and the jobs that will be lost there which are quite numerous. We understand that the closure in Saint John which occurred February 28 meant a loss of 90 jobs. There is a possible loss of 483 jobs at the Halifax terminal with the termination of this program. As well, the closure of Dover Flour Mills, which is expected if this program goes into effect, will mean 45 more jobs lost and something in the neighbourhood of 250 indirect jobs in those cities, all due to the closures of these fairly major employers.

Further to the government announcement on May 16, there is the statement by the new Minister of Transport on May 30 when he appeared before the committee. He stated that the alternatives to eliminating at and east rates that were put forward by the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission had not yet been studied. The government has taken its initiative, stopped the program without any consultation, and has not even looked at alternatives presented by the region affected.

Mr. Speaker, I see your signal. It is one o'clock. I would like to continue after 3 p.m..

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member will have six minutes remaining in debate on this motion after three o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

WOMEN'S PROGRAMS

Mr. John E. Cole (York—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, this weekend I had the pleasure of officially opening a job entry program for women of the York region who are presently receiving social assistance but wishing to gain the experience and necessary skills to move into the workforce and be fully contributing members of society.

The program called Alternative Paths for Women is funded by the federal government and operated by Lumbers Cuts of Aurora, helping women in the York region wishing to earn and to learn.

This program provides job training, work habits, life skills and other aspects, such as filling out job applications, acquiring a professional attitude in the workforce and general self-confidence to these women. Basic furniture refinishing skills were chosen as the medium for the employment skills training. However, it is not the intent to provide qualified refinishers but rather to produce qualified workers. Lumber Cuts are already at their maximum number and are having great success in developing the skills necessary for these women to re-enter the workforce and prepare them for entry level positions in private industry.

This type of program exemplifies the intention of Bill C-21 and I would hope the other place will pass this bill soon so that many more similar programs can be set up throughout the country to produce more qualified workers.

* * *

NATIONAL UNITY

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, June 3, some 250 residents of the Fallingbrook community in the Orleans area of the national capital region held a march for a united Canada.

This march was held to show their commitment to a tolerant Canada and a respect for Quebec and its place within Canada.

[Translation]

At this gathering, the First Ministers were urged to concentrate on the principles of tolerance, respect and mutual trust that are the very foundation of this country.

Furthermore, these citizens expressed their respect for the people of Quebec and their culture, language and institutions.

Finally, the gathering asked Canadian municipalities to stand together to show their love for their country and their respect for a dynamic Quebec within Canada.

[English]

This march had the support of the mayors of eastern Ontario, municipal politicians, especially the members of the Cumberland Township Council.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I strongly congratulate the citizens who organized this spontaneous gathering, which I believe represents the feelings of a growing number of Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the hon. member for his comments on a subject that is so important to all members in this House.

[English]

I thank very much the hon. member for his intervention which is important, not only to members here, but to our entire country.

[Translation]

Mr. Bellemare: Mr. Speaker, I thank you from the bottom of my heart for those kind words.

* * *

BILL C–21

Mr. Jean–Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to condemn the attitude of Liberal Senators to Bill C–21 which was to come into force on January 1 this year.

The uncertainty caused by the present deadlock is intolerable. Postponing passage of the unemployment insurance legislation is causing considerable harm and is very costly for Canadians.

I regularly receive complaints from my constituents who would be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits under the provisions of Bill C–21 and who are now in financial difficulty because they must wait until the bill is passed.

Bill C–21 provides that $800 million can be spent on skills training for workers and $600 million on new services such as better maternity leave and unemployment insurance benefits for persons over 65.

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce which represents 170,000 businesses has recommended the immediate passage of this bill.

A recent study indicated that two–thirds of Canadians are in favour of the government's proposal for changes in the unemployment insurance system.

I therefore ask the members of the other place to act promptly and pass Bill C–21.

* * *

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, this week is Environment Week, a time to remind ourselves of the importance of reducing the environmental impacts of our individual, collective and governmental activities.

In the energy field, Canadians can do a lot more for their environment. For example, individual Canadians can conserve energy and install more efficient lighting fixtures. Corporations can do the same and electric utilities can promote conservation among its customers.

The federal government has a major responsibility in the area of energy and the environment, but it is not living up to it. This fall the energy minister is expected to unveil his new energy efficiency and diversity program, which hopefully will repair some of the damage done by his government's neglect of this area in the past.

I urge all Canadians, and especially this government, to make every week Environment Week in its policies and in its actions and not just in its words.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, Varity Corporation received a $200 million bail–out from the federal and Ontario governments. That assistance was successful, it had a $90 million profit last year, but it seems to have no hesitation about biting the hand that fed it.

Varity executives are now musing about moving the company to the United States, a move that would violate the covenant it signed with the taxpayers of Canada. So what, it has already broken the agreement it made to create and maintain 1,000 permanent jobs in Canada by May 1, 1989. In fact, it is 450 jobs short. The taxpayers can bite back. Under the terms of the covenant, the federal and provincial governments can fine Varity Corporation $30,000 per job that it has failed to create.

I challenge the federal government to levy the fine, collect the money and pay it to the workers who have been laid off or who are about to be laid off at Varity's Kelsey–Hayes subsidiary in Windsor. Better still, use it to save Kelsey–Hayes and save those jobs. It is time that this government showed some teeth.

* * *

HEALTH

Mr. Harry Chadwick (Brampton—Malton): Mr. Speaker, Hollywood creates heroes. Remember Gary Cooper in The Lou Gehrig Story? But in everyday life disease creates the real heroes. I met one of those everyday heroes last weekend in my riding. His name is Donald Glen.

Like the real Lou Gehrig, Mr. Glen has Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis, or Lou Gehrig's disease as it is more commonly known. It is a devastating disease of the nervous system which destroys the voluntary muscles. Average life expectancy after diagnosis is 2.5 years.

Hollywood will never make a movie about Donald Glen and that is probably okay by him, but it is important to Mr. Glen that Canadians become aware of this disease so that the chances of beating it are better.

Mr. Speaker, there is no cure because doctors and researchers do not know the cause. Today, on behalf of Donald Glen and others across the country who suffer from ALS, I urge Canadians to contact the ALS society in their community and give their support. With the right team effort, we can pull together and help strike out this disease.

* * *

• (1410)

FISHERIES

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a letter which says in part: "I have two beautiful children, I am five and a half months pregnant. I have no job, no income, no future, neither does my husband. How are we supposed to feed our children?"

That letter, like many others I receive, comes from a woman who used to be a fish plant worker until her fish plant closed. Her community, like so many others, is in total collapse because of the situation in the inshore fishery in Newfoundland.

Small fish plants in communities like Picadilly, Rose Blanche, Belleoram, and many others by the dozens have been closed because of the failure of the inshore fishery. This failure has nothing to do with another problem we have been hearing much about in the House, the northern cod stock issue. Fishermen cannot go fishing because there are no fish to catch in the seas off those communities and the plants are closed because there are no fish to process.

The Minister of Fisheries will know that his program of aid some weeks ago did not address the situation as it relates to these communities. I call upon him to come forward with an aid package and do it now while there is still time.

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, last night, like many francophones in this country, I turned on my television set to find out what was happening with the Meech Lake negotiations.

Unfortunately, I was sorry to see that the French CBC channel was not providing live coverage. So I turned to the English All News Channel and saw that English Canadians had the privilege to get all this information live from Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, my fondest wish and that of all French Canadians is that the President of the CBC will file a proposal with the CRTC as soon as possible so that we too can have an all-news channel in our language.

* * *

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, today is World Environment Day and the first anniversary of the release of the New Democratic environment task force report, "Toward a Sustainable Future".

While the government was busy talking, New Democrats were busy travelling across the country listening to concerned Canadians and developing our own green plan for action on the environment.

Today, one year later, New Democrats released the green report card, grading the government on 10 key recommendations. For its ability to produce hot air and lots of environmental rhetoric the government gets an A-plus. For reneging on its commitment to reduce greenhouse gases, for skimping on foreign aid, for allowing toxic discharges into waterways and for ignoring pleas for help in upgrading municipal infrastructure, the government gets an F-minus. For its lack of action in protecting forests, cleaning up hazardous discharges and developing conservation and alternative energy, the government gets failing grades and a recommendation from the teacher for remedial classes on the greening of Canada.

BILL C-21

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend I found more casualties of the refusal by the other House to pass Bill C-21.

At the Fisher River Indian reserve, 100 fishermen are facing the bleak prospect of welfare because of the refusal of the Senate to pass Bill C-21. What is even worse, these fishermen were fed Liberal Party propaganda telling them that Bill C-21 would force them all into the poor house, but the fishermen are not so easily misled.

These fishermen have asked me to tell the senators in the other place to pass Bill C-21 so they can restore some order to their lives. If the members of the other place are not willing to pass Bill C-21, then the fishermen of Fisher River have an alternative. They will sit in the red chamber and pass the bills while the Senators go out in their boats on Lake Winnipeg. The fishermen of Fisher River will not even suggest that they receive the $150 a day pay.

* * *

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, confusion over the proposed goods and services tax continues. The government maintains that this is not a new tax, that it is revenue neutral on housing costs and that it is simple.

Yet the business community is outraged over the propaganda campaign. Home builders testified that housing prices will increase. The Canadian Federation of Small Business calls it an administrative nightmare. If, as claimed, it is so simple, why is the government using a band-aid approach to stop the haemorrhaging by introducing a new flat tax for small business?

Last week, the minister apologized for the loss of voice due to being overcome by praise heaped upon the government. The minister would be well advised to use his ears, not his mouth, to listen to Canadians. He would be speechless when he heard what Canadians truly think of the GST. You can be certain that it is not praise they are heaping.

S. O. 31

HEALTH

Hon. David MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, today, I rise to announce that members of the parliamentary ad hoc committee on AIDS will be holding a press conference tomorrow at 1 p.m. at the National Press Theatre to release its report.

The report will include recommendations to the Minister of National Health and Welfare for the upcoming National AIDS Strategy, which will be announced later this month.

Members of Parliament from all three parties, and Senators, have been working on a voluntary, non-partisan basis for over a year to confront one of the most serious global epidemics that we are facing today.

Since the first case of AIDS was reported in Canada in 1982, at least 3,735 Canadians have been diagnosed with AIDS. More than 2,300 of those have died. Estimates show that between 25,000 and 50,000 Canadians may already be infected with HIV.

It is with this sense of urgency that the committee began holding public hearings in March and will officially release its report to the Minister of National Health and Welfare tomorrow.

* * *

HOUSING

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, once again, federal funding cuts are going to have a negative effect on the low income people of Manitoba.

This time, low cost housing is on the Conservative chopping block. The federal government has informed Manitoba and other provinces that there is going to be at least a 15 per cent reduction for social housing in 1990.

Private and public non-profit housing, rural and native housing for communities under 2,500 people, urban native housing, rental supplements and funding to rehabilitate urban housing will all suffer, thanks to these cuts.

The backlog of housing in our communities will only increase. At a time when it is harder and harder to afford shelter, this government is taking the mean-hearted step of turning its back on the people who need help the most.

Instead of the promised programs for housing for average and low income Canadians, we are witnessing a total retreat by the minister. The flurry of public relations press releases are cold comfort to the thousands of Canadian families sharing crowded homes or living in substandard houses.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

The provincial premiers and the Prime Minister are now in the third day of discussions to find a way out of our current constitutional impasse.

To say the least, Canadians are very interested in what is happening. They are concerned about the future of their country.

Under our system of government, the Prime Minister has an obligation to report to Canadians through the House of Commons on these matters.

Therefore, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will bring the House and Canadians up to date now on the progress of these discussions.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that this morning the First Ministers spent a good deal of time considering a number of options for an amending formula as it relates to the Senate.

I am advised that the spirits are very high. It is a very constructive session. There are many suggestions. The atmosphere is friendly but very frank and business-like. All First Ministers are working very hard toward coming to a satisfactory conclusion.

I know all members of the House would want to join in expressing our very best wishes for success.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we want to see these discussions succeed in a way that will assure the future of our country.

The press has reported in some depth on a detailed, four-stage proposal that the Prime Minister is said to have presented to the provincial premiers yesterday.

If there is one thing we have learned from the recent impasse, it is that Canadians believe they have a right to be kept up to date in a meaningful way on the progress of constitutional discussions as they occur.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will table today in the House the federal proposals that have been reported to be presently under discussion between the premiers and the Prime Minister.

• (1420)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. Leader of the Opposition would understand that there are many proposals being considered and, yes, there has been what I understand to be a framework paper put forth for discussion purposes. The bulk of the time spent this morning was in respect of the pursuit of an amending formula, particularly as it related to the Senate. My understanding is that there are many suggestions being advanced. The session is very constructive. I can only presume that at an appropriate time this information will be released. Since the mood of the session is such that all premiers are working toward making some progress in this particular area, it would seem to me that that would be the most appropriate course of action for the present time.

[Translation]

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, someone has obviously shared some presumably specific information with the news media. However, I think that the Canadian people are entitled to be informed of matters involving the future of their country. I therefore ask the Deputy Prime Minister: What will the government do to make these constitutional discussions more open and more accessible to the Canadian public?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. Leader of the Opposition would agree that much of the discussion that is taking place revolves around the technical aspects as they relate to an amending formula. As I said, suggestions are being put forth. There is a frank and friendly discussion taking place. It is very business-like and obviously, at an appropriate time, the session will become a public session. I think it is incumbent upon all of us to put our faith and our trust in the First Ministers, who are working and who are talking in a very business-like manner, with the hopes that progress will be made. At the appropriate time, I can assure the hon. member that the discussion will be made public.

* * *

[Translation]

STATUS OF WOMEN

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the status of women and concerns the report on poverty among working women. The number of working poor has increased five times faster among women than among men. Six hundred thousand women in the labour force in Canada have incomes below the poverty line and they have 1.6 million children. How does the government intend to end the segregation and discrimination in the labour market that keep working women poor?

[English]

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the report to the Advisory Council on the Status of Women was released this morning. I have not yet had an opportunity to read it, but I am certainly looking forward to the recommendations as I know they will be helpful to us as we move forward to deal with this very important problem.

Obviously, as a government we have undertaken a variety of initiatives to address the issue of women in poverty, including the first employment equity legislation, the first pay equity settlements and examples which are going to be important as we work together with provincial governments and the private sector to address these issues. I am looking forward to receiving these recommendations and working with my colleagues at the federal and provincial levels to redress this issue and ensure that all women can achieve economic equality in this country.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I think we all received the report at exactly the same time and it points out quite frankly, Madam Minister, that the economic status of women in Canada is a national disgrace and that women are getting poorer not better off, despite what the minister and her colleagues constantly claim. The recommendations are nothing new, Madam Minister. You have heard them all before and yet, still, nearly half of the single mothers are poor and their children are poor. These women are poor when they get old because they have never had a chance to earn a decent salary and to build up a decent pension.

Will the minister take responsibility personally for ensuring that her colleagues address these long-standing issues, end discrimination, end segregation, provide decent child care, provide decent working conditions for women, and make sure that women who are working are able to put food on the table and clothing on the backs of their children?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence and Minister responsible for Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that my hon. colleague is aware of the statistic that since this government took office in 1984 there are some 760,000 Canadians who have escaped poverty. In fact, the poverty rates have declined during these years.

Obviously more needs to be done, and I can assure my colleague that I am working closely with my colleagues and in meetings last week with my provincial colleagues on the issues of pensions and child care.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Today is World Environment Day. There can surely be no greater threat to the environment of the world than continued nuclear testing and continued emphasis on nuclear warfare and improving nuclear weapons. In fact, while the cold war is ending, the environmental problems in the north are not, and I speak of the north as the Arctic.

The Soviet Union recently announced that as of 1993 it will re-establish nuclear testing on the Arctic island of Novaya Zemlya. This particular site has been used in the past.

Given the prevailing spirit of co-operation we saw with Mr. Gorbachev's visit last week, and the comments he made about a zone of peace in the Arctic, my question to the minister is this. Could he share with us what the Prime Minister conveyed to Mr. Gorbachev about the Arctic and in particular was a circumpolar treaty on the Arctic discussed with President Gorbachev?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Leader of the New Democratic Party for returning to a question which was raised by her colleague and spokesperson on foreign policy in the recent committee hearings on external affairs.

As a result of those discussions, as I reported to the House a few days ago, I raised the question with Mr. Shevardnadze with respect to the shifting of the emphasis of Soviet testing to the Arctic and expressed Canada's concern about the environmental consequences of that testing. I indicated to him that we were particularly aware of the fragility of the ecology there and wanted to ensure that the co-operation established between Canada and the Soviet Union on Arctic matters could apply to co-operation with respect to testing.

I would be prepared to give a fuller briefing to the hon. member or to her colleague from Winnipeg on those discussions if she desires.

[Translation]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same minister.

The minister is of course aware that Canada is not the only source of the pollution that is destroying the Arctic. The Soviet Union also produces a great deal of pollution.

Canada has the necessary technology to reduce these dangerous emissions, but technology exports to countries in Eastern Europe are controlled by a NATO treaty that dates back to 1949.

What does the minister intend to do to enable Canada to export this technology to all countries?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the regulations in question do not apply exclusively to NATO. The arrangement involves NATO members but also other countries like Australia and Japan.

Discussions are now under way to change these regulations in order to provide for a broader exchange of expertise and technological skills with the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact members.

This is one of the questions that was discussed when Mr. Gorbachev and Mr. Shevardnadze were here, during their visit. I am informed that it was also discussed in Washington. Tomorrow, I will be in Great Britain, where I hope to have an opportunity to talk to my fellow NATO ministers and find out whether we can make a little more headway on the COCOM system.

• (1430)

[English]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the minister's comments, because it is clearly madness that the health of Canadian citizens is being affected by pollution which Canadians could assist to reduce in another country except for a military treaty.

I would like to raise as well with the minister low-level flights over Labrador. As we know, according to NATO, the plans to build a base at Goose Bay have been scrapped because of the ending of the cold war. However, fears still exist that these flights will not diminish but increase. In fact figures by officials of the department indicate as much as a doubling.

How does the Secretary of State for External Affairs feel about such increases, in view of his comments a week ago about NATO's forward defence strategy and the need to rethink that strategy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that question is being considered, as the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party suggests, in the context of general discussions that are occurring within NATO.

I am not sure that the specific question of the pace of low-level flights will come up in the discussions in the next two days. I rather doubt that. However, the general question as to the over-all configuration of NATO and indeed the orientation of NATO will be discussed.

If I may refer briefly to the earliest question posed by the Leader of the New Democratic Party with respect to the north, one of the suggestions that has been made by members of the standing committee is that it would be useful for parliamentarians from Canada and the Soviet Union to meet more regularly to discuss matters of common interest in the north.

I made that proposal to Mr. Shevardnadze who immediately accepted. I hope it will be possible through the intermediary of the standing committee to make arrangements for that kind of practical co-operation by elected representatives of the Canadian and Soviet people.

* * *

ROUTE CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): My question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday the Minister of Transport tried to tell us that the sale of Route Canada was an arm's length transaction between the buyers and Canadian National, with no involvement whatsoever of the federal government, although we know that before the sale could take place there had to be an Order in Council by the federal government approving the sale. Also yesterday we found out that CN did not even know that Manfred Ruhland, one of the three purchasers, was actually involved in the deal.

Why does the federal government not admit that it was the government, not CN, that put this deal together? Who else could have sold the company to three people, one of whom did not have the financial stability to get a credit card, and the other two known Tory contributors?

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour) and (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Transport was very clear yesterday.

CN Route is a subsidiary of CN. CN asked for offers from the private sector to get rid of a company that was losing $30 million to $40 million per year. It got four offers and accepted the best offer because it represented a possibility that the company could be reactivated, made profitable again, and save the employment of 2,300 people.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, in the sale of the company the federal government got $29 million and then proceeded to give the company $40 million through CN actually to retire 1,500 of the employees, leaving the remaining 1,900 completely adrift.

Why does the government not admit that it did not care what happened to Route Canada? It just wanted to get rid of the company. It just wanted to slough off its responsibility to the employees. Why does the government not admit that and be frank about it?

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour) and (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat that CN had two choices: either to shut down the operation of CN Route immediately and put 2,300 people out of work or to accept an offer which provided a possibility that this organization could be made profitable again and save some employees. I think CN did the proper thing.

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Minister of Transport suggested that privatization of Route Canada was a good deal. In light of the fact that 1,900 employees have lost their jobs, that $40 million was paid in severance pay, that employee contributions to pension plans and Revenue Canada were used by the company, that $60 million is owed to creditors, and that the government only received $29 million, would the minister admit that the only ones to benefit from this sweet deal are friends of the government?

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour) and (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, any interpretation can be made by the opposition, but the facts are that CN was losing $30 million to $40 million a year through the operation of CN Route. It was faced with two possibilities: either to close down the operations completely and put 2,300 people on the street or to try to sell the organization to a private company that could possibly make it profitable again. It asked for offers. It got four offers and accepted the best offer it could get at that time.

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General.

Over two years ago government briefing notes indicated that the RCMP commercial crimes unit would be completing an investigation of this matter in nine months. Almost three times that length of time has passed, and we still have nothing.

What excuse does the Solicitor General have for the delay and when will justice be done?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the investigation will be completed soon.

* * *

ROMANIA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It deals with the issue of seismic studies that were conducted while AECL was in the process of selling Candu reactors to the Ceausescu regime in Romania.

On March 14, in an answer to a question I placed on the Order Paper, the minister replied, and I quote from page 9286 of Hansard:

> Studies as to the likelihood of seismic activity or earthquakes occurring around the Cernadova site in Romania were conducted by the Romanians.

Because of this AECL could not release the studies to me or to other Canadians.

Yet, last Thursday, May 31, the minister replied to another question by saying, and here I quote from page 12119 of Hansard:

> I am saying to him that there was an independent pier review done in respect to seismology and with respect to the earthquake situation.

Was the minister referring to the same studies in these two answers? Was the study conducted by the Romanians the same as the independent pier review?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, no, I will repeat the answer that I was giving.

The question first arose as to whether there were any seismology studies in the earthquake zone in which Cernadova was located. Those studies were done by the Romanian authorities, and this is on the public record. In fact the hon. member put that into his question today.

Commissioned by the Romanians and available to AECL was a pier review, a second study done by a company from Belgium. That information is in the hands of the Romanians. I wish it could be released. It is Romanian property and it is for that reason that I cannot release it.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

If these two studies existed, why did the minister not make this clear in March in his answer to my question on the Order Paper?

Would the minister not now agree, given the uncertainty that seems to exist around the studies, uncertainty which has been reflected in the minister's own answers, that it is time for the minister to put aside his attachment to nuclear power as an option, and indeed for me and others to put aside our opposition to nuclear power, and have an inquiry to determine whether or not it is appropriate and in the Canadian and global interests to have that reactor proceed in Romania?

Let's have an independent inquiry, let's settle all the facts with respect to studies, and let's have full answers from now on in the House of Commons.

• (1440)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, when I answered the question in March that information regarding the independent study done in Belgium was not available to me. I was not aware of it.

As the hon. member will know, when his colleague, the member for Burnaby—Kingsway, and the member for Winnipeg North Centre returned, they made the point about seismology. It was with further discussion and further review that that issue came to my attention. That is the background.

Second, in terms of an independent study I reviewed that with his colleagues. I appreciate the spirit in which he mentions both his perspective on nuclear energy and mine. We are looking at what kind of a study could be put into place to meet the requirements of both the government and colleagues. Quite frankly, in terms of the need to have an independent airing there is really not a lot of difference between his colleagues and myself.

* * *

PRESENCE IN GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of members the presence in the gallery of the hon. Maj-Lis Loow, Minister of Immigration of Sweden.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

The minister has now had 24 hours to review the evidence dealing with the Randeree case, in particular the error in judgment that was made by the refugee board. Also evidence has been submitted to her demonstrating that Mr. Randeree has no status whatsoever in Germany, neither has his wife, and therefore he would be a stateless person without documents.

Taking into account that kind of evidence, is the minister prepared to use her discretion and authority under the act to redress this unfair decision and allow Mr. Randeree to stay in Canada, the country of his choice?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to table in the House today, at the appropriate time, the letter that was actually sent by Mr. Fairweather, which does not in any way suggest that the decision was erroneous.

It does suggest that it was not appropriate for him to discuss the correctness or otherwise of the decision. Mr. Fairweather made a suggestion similar to what I suggested in this Chamber on two separate occasions, that Dr. Randeree consult a lawyer and might also consider assisting his son as an immigrant under the family reunification provisions of the Immigration Act.

Having said that, I have said that I will review the case and I am in the process of doing that. I am disappointed that the hon. member, who in a previous incarnation had some interest in this portfolio, has chosen to use the letter in this way.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to read the excerpt from the letter from Mr. Fairweather which directly contradicts the statement of the minister. Mr. Fairweather says:

> The documents set out in the material you sent to me support your son's position that he is a national of South Africa and not a national of India.

The refugee board made the decision on the grounds that he was a national of India. Mr. Fairweather says the documents support the opposite. Therefore the minister is not prepared to look at the proper evidence and is clearly rejecting her responsibility and authority in sending Mr. Randeree back to a situation—

Mr. Speaker: That all may be. Would the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Is the minister aware that by sending Mr. Randeree back to the Union of South Africa the Government of Canada will be totally transgressing its responsibilities under the convention for refugees? Is she aware of that responsibility and the change of policy that she has directed?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there is no one who is more aware of our responsibility to refugees than I am. I am sorry that the hon. member is less aware of what those responsibilities are.

As I explained to the hon. member yesterday, in addition to being perfectly aware of what my responsibilities are I am quite prepared to review this case. If the hon. member is not satisfied with that, I am sorry with his impatience.

* * *

COURT CHALLENGES PROGRAM

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship. In December of last year the Standing Committee on Human Rights tabled a report on the Court Challenges Program strongly advising its continuation but also recommending a review and possible change of the non-government administering agency. To date, to the detriment of the program, the minister has not given a response about the administering agency.

Will the Secretary of State tell us today which agency is going to administer the program and, if not, why not?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, we have an ongoing agreement with the Canadian Council on Social Development for the administration of the program until the end of July.

I have also indicated publicly before the standing committee that I was quite prepared to look at other options if they exist. I have recently written to the Canadian Council again to determine their availability and their desire to continue and under what parameters we would want to continue with a further discussion of some of the criteria and some of the work that they were doing.

Indeed, I have also investigated another option. At a very near date in the future, after I have had a chance to consult with my colleagues, we will be able to make that public.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same minister. The Court Challenges Program comprises two panels, one on equality and one on language rights. It goes without saying that one of the serious problems today is legally binding interpretations of minority language rights in this country.

Will the Secretary of State with his government find additional funding for the Court Challenges Language Rights Program?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): No, Mr. Speaker, the announcement that was made recently was quite clear on the parameters of the program and both the Minister of Justice and I made that clear in a recent announcement before this House and outside this House.

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and it concerns the government's proposed appointment of the Prime Minister's former director of communications, Bruce Phillips, to the important position of Privacy Commissioner.

This morning I spoke with Canada's internationally respected privacy expert, Professor David Flaherty of the University of Western Ontario, who said he was "disgusted by this appointment". He went on to say: "The appointment ruins the integrity of the office—"

Some hon. members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Just a minute. What has it to do with the question? If the hon. member wants to put a question, put it. To use as a preamble somebody's view of somebody else who is not even in this chamber is, it seems to me, stretching the tolerance of the whole place.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, this is not just somebody's view. This is the view of the leading expert on privacy in Canada.

Some hon. members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. In the interest of order I have asked the hon. member to co-operate. The hon. member will please put his question.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, will the minister now recognize that this office, which must be recognized as vigorously protecting the privacy of all Canadians in areas such as random drug testing and AIDS, must not be used as a patronage plum for the Prime Minister? Will she cancel this proposed appointment?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am quite astonished at the hon. member's comments because it seems to me that the career pattern of the current nominee for Privacy Commissioner is very similar to that of the current incumbent, Mr. Grace. Both have had very distinguished careers in journalism, both being award-winning journalists. The current nominee, in fact, was involved in assisting the member of this House who brought the access to information legislation before this House. Both the current incumbent and the nominee have served in the public service. I do not think that the current incumbent would be offended if I were to point out to the House that he, by his own admission, is a very close friend of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. I do not think anyone in this House would suggest that that in any way disqualifies the current incumbent from holding the job.

• (1450)

People who work in Ottawa develop personal relationships and friendships in political life. They also occasionally spend time working in the public service—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Crosbie: What about Broadbent? What about the rest of you socialist horde? What about what's his name, Lewis, who we appointed to the UN? What about that turkey? You don't protest about him. What about buddy down on the civil service board? What's his name? Ian Deans, what about him? That was all right. If Phillips was a socialist it would be all right.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will put his question.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, obviously Canadians expect the Privacy Commissioner to be an effective watch-dog, not a lap-dog for the Prime Minister's Office.

In view of the deep concerns that have been expressed by Canadians over the appointment of Bruce Phillips who, by the way, unlike John Grace was in the Prime Minister's Office—

Some hon. members: Order, order!

Mr. Robinson: They're a little sensitive, Mr. Speaker. And in view of the shabby treatment of Inger Hansen as Information Commissioner, will the Minister of Justice refer the proposed appointments of John Grace and Bruce Phillips to the Justice Committee in order that that committee can hold full hearings before this House is called upon to vote on these appointments?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is perfectly aware of the procedure involved in making these appointments. These are appointments that are made by a resolution of this House.

Although the hon. member's party does not have a realistic prospect of forming a government, I would hope that that scintilla of expectation that resides in all of his party members would lead them to recognize the logical conclusion of stating that anyone who takes a break from a private career to serve in government, whether it is in the office of the Prime Minister or any other office, is forever tainted. That is a notion that has very serious implications for the integrity of the Public Service.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Agriculture. It concerns feed grains and the substantial financial looses. Suffered by feed mills, especially those in Quebec, as a result of changes in shipping rate subsidies made several months ago.

Could the minister tell the House and people in the farm business community about the measures he intends to take to remedy the situation?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds has pursued consultations and studies on shipping rates. Changes have been made to the subsidy rates. Regarding the particular question raised by the hon. member about corrective action resulting from these changes, I am consulting with my colleague the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds, and 10 days from now, Mr. Speaker, we should be able to reply and announce the kind of corrective action that will be taken to deal with the situation.

* * *

[English]

JUSTICE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. I want to ask her a question concerning the decision in the Ontario high court relating to the Finta case, which was the first case brought under the war crimes legislation.

Does the government intend to appeal the acquittal obtained in this case?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we are still reviewing the case. The transcript of the trial is not available at the moment. The judge has asked for an opportunity to review it before it is released. The transcript is not ready.

As the hon. member will know, it was a very complex case and it involved very extensive charges to the jury. We are reviewing the case, but no decision has been made at this time.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question, will the minister assure the House, bearing in mind that in a number of such cases both in the United States and West Germany lower level cases were lost and on appeal decisions were often reversed, that this decision of this court will not deter the government from bringing forward and continuing to promote this policy in justified cases?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy to reassure the hon. member of that. Each case is assessed on its own merits. Clearly we will be reviewing this case to determine whether it is appropriate for appeal and what we can learn from it. We are committed to continuing to enforce those provisions of the Criminal Code.

* * *

LITERACY

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship. Last night more than 60 national and regional groups representing business, media, labour, community and literacy met to deal with the fact that over 30 per cent of Canadians have trouble reading or writing. This group reached a consensus that combating illiteracy must become Canada's priority.

What is the government going to do in order to ensure that Canadians are not left behind?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, it is a major social illness but, as the press and others have said, it is curable.

In the previous study, we had divided the world into the literate and the illiterate. While that was a very important opportunity to evaluate Canadian skills, the more recent examination carried out by Statistics Canada gives us a continuum of literacy skills. It gives us an idea of how we can evaluate Canadians in terms of their individual abilities.

It showed that 62 per cent of the population have no trouble at all in the reading skills. It also gives us a complete understanding of where the troubles exist. Now, with our very effective program under this government's leadership and our National Literacy Secretariat, we are building partnerships with Canadians right across the country with every provincial government and in the private and public sectors. We have a plan and we appreciate the assistance and participation of all Canadians.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister would agree with me that the $10 billion cost to our society is a hell of a lot of money when you consider that the deficit is $30 billion.

Would the minister not agree that the best way to deal with this issue is by setting national standards for literacy? Would the government make a firm commitment today to put these standards in place?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, this government was the first government to even mention literacy, which it did in its Speech from the Throne in 1986. The Prime Minister and this government brought forward a program of $110 million over five years. We have used that program in a very effective manner to build partnerships.

This International Literacy Year is a year to reflect on the tremendous contribution being made by Canadians in all walks of life. Once and for all we intend to eradicate this situation in Canada.

As I said last Friday in the House in response to a question from one of his colleagues, nobody should rest while there is even one person who is not able to read or write and function properly in our society.

* * *

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, because the Minister responsible for the Status of Women has not read the report from the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, I would like to put my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

His government has been responsible for clawbacks to family allowance, clawbacks to pensions, the cap on the Canada Assistance Plan and a failure to deliver child care programs. Just what is the minister responsible for social assistance programs prepared to do to help women who are finding themselves in ever increasing poverty in this country pull themselves out of that poverty? What kind of support services does he propose?

• (1500)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, possibly the hon. member overlooks some of the facts, for example, the fact that the government this year will be spending about $1 billion on child care in Canada and that we have a commitment to introduce a full program during the life of this Parliament. She overlooks the fact that the child tax credit was increased by more than 50 percent between 1984 and 1988. She overlooks the fact that there has been a significant drop in poverty in Canada during the tenure of this government and that trend continues. She overlooks the initiatives that have been taken by the government in terms of encouraging training for women and in terms of encouraging opportunities for women.

I would suggest to the hon. member that, if she wants her questions to receive the attention they deserve, she should do her homework with regard to the progress that has been made to date.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Ms. Langan: Can you believe that?

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I would suggest that the Minister of National Health and Welfare do his homework. I would suggest that the minister look at the reports about women and poverty in the country that come in consistently. I would suggest that he give us a plan. I am asking for that.

Will the minister give women in the country a plan to help them pull themselves out of poverty, not just so many words about programs that may or may not come along in the term of this Parliament, such as the one for child care?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member finds it incredible that I would ask her to do her homework. I do not think that is an unreasonable request to make of her.

The hon. member should know the fact that between 1984 and 1988 there was a significant decline in poverty in Canada across the board. Instead of the hon. member simply attacking the government with regard to child care, she should be aware of the fact that this year the government will be spending about $1 billion on child care and is committed to increasing that during the life of this Parliament.

If she is serious about being concerned about the role of women in Canada, she should be supporting these measures and working with the government in order to improve the lot of women in Canada.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister, on a point of order.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

TABLING OF LETTER

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hereby table the letter to which I referred in Question Period.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

RAILWAY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C–26, an act to amend the Railway Act (grain and flour subsidies), as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee; and Motions Nos. 1, 3, and 6 of Mr. Ferguson (p. 12266).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock the hon. member for Mackenzie had the floor. The hon. member has six minutes remaining.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At one o'clock I was pointing out some of the effects on various regions of the country and on various sectors of the economy that this move by the government to discontinue the at and east rates to Atlantic Canada is having.

The poultry and dairy industries in the Maritime provinces will no longer have access to as much feed grain and will have to pay a higher price for their feedstuffs, putting those industries at risk in terms of continuing to be competitive. Those commodities produced under supply-management systems are the stand-by and the backbone of the agricultural community in Atlantic Canada.

As well, the decision has meant the complete writing off of capital investments in two or three major points in the country. The terminal at Port McNicholl has now closed down. That terminal was a very low upkeep kind of facility that did not require a lot of maintenance. There are big, concrete silos that require virtually zero maintenance and that will probably stand for another 50 to 200 years with very little extra investment. The belts that take the grain from the bottoms of those silos have been running for 50 to 60 years without maintenance and appear to be ready to continue for many years to come.

The effect of the decision has been to make this investment worth absolutely zero, in fact less than zero. The owners of the property will now have to blow up the silos, clean off the property, and make it available to use for something else. Doing that takes away a storage facility that could be made available on a surge capacity basis for grain and oilseeds producers in southern Ontario. This option is now closed off and forestalled.

The farmers in Ontario are going to have to spend more money either directly themselves or through the commercial grain handling part of the agricultural supply chain. They are going to have some new investments in storage capacity for grains and oilseeds in southern Ontario.

Similarly, in Saint John, New Brunswick, there will be no more grain storage silos left in a few years. There is no reason for those terminals to exist any more, and they will probably be torn down as well. Again, this takes away any further option of moving grain, other than through the St. Lawrence system. In fact, it makes it more difficult to even out the flow of feed grains and flour grade wheat to the maritime region because it will reduce the amount of storage available.

While the intention is not to close the storage facility at Halifax immediately, the future of that terminal is very much in jeopardy with this decision.

The final effect is that not only are western grain producers losing another shipping option that has been available to them, but the users are going to have to change their pattern of operation. Some of them are going to be forced completely out of business, even though their facilities are good for another 50 to 200 years. The whole thing makes very little economic sense.

The government would have been well disposed to have negotiated a different arrangement such as that suggested by my hon. friend from Moose Jaw—Lake Centre. He proposed adding 5 per cent to the freight rates from Quebec City on to the maritime region. This would permit the traffic to flow on a need and called for basis. This would have permitted the continuation of hundreds of jobs and lessened the negative impact on the agricultural production sectors in maritime Canada. It would have very likely kept the flour mill in that part of the region in operation as well.

In closing, I urge the government to reconsider its move to close down the at and east rates at the end of the last crop year. Instead, I urge it to permit the program to continue until April 1, 1995, as this motion requires, so that there can be adequate time for the kinds of studies that the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds are now saying should have been done.

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, we all know that today we are continuing to participate in a parliamentary charade.

The legislation that we have been debating here has been in effect since last July. We have gone through first and second reading. We have called in witnesses at great expense. We are going through report stage now. We will go through third reading tomorrow. The bill will be sent to the Senate. There will be Royal Assent and proclamation. We are going through the motions to legitimize a government action, which has no legitimate reason to be in a policy, that has been in effect since last July. That is supporting a parliamentary dictatorship. We are trying to expose what the government is doing to the Canadian people.

• (1510)

The elevator at the port of Saint John has been closed because of this legislation. The work force at the elevator in the port of Halifax has been severely reduced. Already we have 1,000 jobs lost in the Atlantic area.

The chairman of the transport committee, even though he is sympathetic to what we are saying on this side of the House, will have no effect on changing the government's mind regarding the withdrawal of this bill.

The amendments of the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex are a valiant attempt to make a disastrous bill a little better. The government will railroad this bill through without amendments. As a matter of fact, it has already announced a study into the effects of the bill, a bill which has been in effect for almost a year. This is totally unbelievable. The government has implemented a policy and has now announced it will study the effects of the legislation. It will end up re-implementing a very similar program to the at and east grain and flour subsidy after destroying it.

The government already knows the disastrous effects the bill will have on Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, but, it will kill the bill anyway and then re-implement a similar program. The reasons for the policy in the first place have not changed. What was the purpose of the at and east grain and flour policy?

I would like to quote from a witness at the legislative committee from the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission as to the purpose of the flour and grain subsidy:

> The "At and East" Grain and Flour Subsidy program was implemented in the mid-1960s to ensure that eastern Canadian ports could compete with United States east coast ports; and to enable the Ports of Halifax and Saint John to compete with the St. Lawrence River ports.

The reason for the subsidy has changed somewhat in that eastern Canadian ports can now compete with the United States ports. The second reason for the program, to enable the ports of Halifax and Saint John to compete with the St. Lawrence ports, is still in effect. The fact is that the Atlantic ports of Saint John and Halifax cannot compete. To the detriment of Halifax and Saint John, the ports in Quebec City, Baie Comeau, and other St. Lawrence River ports will benefit at the expense of Atlantic Canada.

I would also like to refer to the minister who implemented that at and east program, the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill. In 1966, referring to the reasons for the at and east program, he said: "According to the Board of Transport Commissioners these rates are already unremunerative—We decided to keep those rates at their present level and to pay compensation for doing so. This is because we feel there is an equal obligation in this field to the obligation with regard to the Crowsnest. The purpose of this is to ensure that we will have rates which will provide some inducement and incentive to shippers to use the facilities of the Atlantic ports".

Basically, these are the reasons why the minister, Mr. Pickersgill, implemented the program. He viewed it as an equal obligation to the western program of Crowsnest.

In 1975, the program was extended to include the Ontario wheat growers. This was for the purpose of storing grain in the Georgian Bay area and then shipping in the winter, once prices had stabilized, to the export ports in the east. As the board states in their objectives in using this program:

> The At and East has allowed the board to put in place an effective and orderly marketing process.

There was an additional reason for this program and it was that it created an efficient marketing program for the wheat growers of Ontario.

The abolition of the at and east program will severely hurt Atlantic Canada. I would like to refer to some statements that Mr. Keith Russell, executive director of the Atlantic Farmers Council, has made to the legislative committee. Mr. Russell represents about 80 per cent of all farmers in the Atlantic provinces, in that the federations of agriculture from Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland are represented by this co-ordinating body which they call the Atlantic Farmers Council.

According to Mr. Russell, the livestock and poultry industries in Atlantic Canada require about one million tonnes of grain per year. The Atlantic provinces are growing about half that requirement, that is about 500,000 tonnes. That means they are importing about 500,000 tonnes from western Canada.

At the same time they are not allowed to even investigate—I suppose they could investigate—but they are not allowed to purchase grain from the European Common Market or from the eastern United States, because in order to do so, one needs a licence from the Canadian Wheat Board and it refused to give one. We are caught in a position where we have to buy our grain from western Canada and from Ontario and we are going to have to buy it at a much increased price. Because of the increased cost, it is going to detrimentally affect our livestock and poultry producers in Atlantic Canada.

The main beneficiaries of this program, in addition to Atlantic Canadians, are the wheat and grain producers of western Canada and Ontario. This program is now costing farmers an additional $25 to $30 a tonne in transportation costs of grain coming into the region. This is going to have the effect, according to Mr. Russell, of cutting the number of livestock and poultry growers in half. If this is not going to be a disaster to the Atlantic provinces, then I do not know what it is going to take to show this government that this bill is a piece of ill-advised legislation.

In conclusion, I implore the government, on behalf of the livestock and poultry producers of Atlantic Canada, to withdraw this bill or at least to agree with the member for Lambton—Middlesex to not implement this program for at least a five-year period so the farmers of Atlantic Canada will have an opportunity to make adjustments to the withdrawal of the program.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if you would allow me a few moments to respond to at least some of the comments and statements that have been made in support of this particular amendment and the other amendments proposed to Bill C-26.

I do not think it is too much to say that the amendments are virtually and entirely without merit. I say this for historic reasons. We have heard many times in this debate that the subsidization embodied in the at and east rate was created in the early sixties and affirmed in 1966 as a provision of the Railway Act of Canada. The purpose of the subsidization was to ensure the flow of grain and grain products, including flour, to the east and particularly to the east coast ports of Halifax and Saint John.

• (1520)

Simply on the passage of time and the changes that have taken place over the past 25 years, the subsidy requires some form of re-examination. This re-examination did not start yesterday, it started in 1984 when the government reviewed all the expenditures that were part of the massive deficit that the previous Liberal government had incurred over the years and piled into a $200 billion national debt. I do not think anybody would ever fault the government for reviewing each and every item of federal expenditure.

Of course, subsidies were one of the items that came under review. The question was asked as to whether this form of subsidization was accomplishing a useful purpose, bearing in mind the cost to the treasury that exceeded, in some years, $40 million and was capped in one particular year at $40 million. It is understandable that the subsidy was reviewed and found at fault. This review took place in the mid-80s and the at and east subsidization program was under attack from 1985 onward.

The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission recognized that fact and came forward in 1985, making some suggestions for change. It knew that the at and east subsidy was not fulfilling its purpose, was not cost effective and was not producing all the results that effective government assistance can produce.

All these matters were considered by officials, whether letters were answered or not does not matter. The matter was on the table, it was fully considered, but no positive recommendations were made. No authoritative body, provincial government, railway company, shipping company, or elevator company came forward and said, "Here is exactly what we want to replace the at and east". So a decision was taken in April of 1989 to cancel the at and east subsidy.

That decision was taken in the budget and the legislation embodied in Bill C-26 simply implements a budget decision taken in April of 1989. And here we are, years later almost, debating what is a fait accompli. The members opposite knew in April of 1989 that the at and east had been abolished. They know that in July of the same year, transportation of grain through the system embodied in the at and east rates stopped. They know that all subsidies terminated in January of 1990. They know that grain is not now flowing eastward as a result of the at and east subsidy. They know the game is over. They know fini has been written to the book and now it is time to write a new book on grain movements to the east coast. Now the time has come—

Mr. Benjamin: Like what?

Mr. Crosby: And so the member for Regina—Lumsden, who is not involved in the port of Halifax nor in the port of Saint John, says, "Like what?". Well, now what do you do? Do you start writing a new program before you have terminated the old? Can you have two kinds of subsidies arguably in effect? No, what you have to do is terminate the subsidies and then take the positive attitude toward what might be an appropriate replacement.

You have to listen to organizations like the Halifax-Dartmouth Port Development Commission which has suggested unit trains and are conducting a study to determine whether unit trains can be used to carry grain from western Canada directly to the ports of Halifax and Saint John.

Look at those kinds of suggestions and examine them carefully, not sit in the House of Commons and use arcane arguments to support a policy which has already been eliminated. What, indeed, is the purpose of that? Do they really think they are helping the longshoremen in the port of Halifax? Do they really think they are helping the operators of the grain elevator in the port of Halifax? Do they really think they are helping Dover Flour Mills, by arguing against a matter that has already been clearly established and is now a matter of history? What is the point of that? Are members of the House of Commons, allegedly acting in the interests of the people involved, the people of Nova Scotia, the people of New Brunswick, the people of Atlantic Canada, simply going to stall this bill so that no resolution of the problem will ever occur?

Is that your purpose? Is that what you want to do for the people of Atlantic Canada? Or do you want to get to work and find replacement policies and programs that will mitigate any damage caused by the elimination of the at and east subsidy? Is that too much to ask members from Saskatchewan to do? Is that too much to ask of members from Ontario? Is it too much to ask members from Nova Scotia to put aside the political rhetoric, and to recognize that a decision has been taken by government and that decision is part of history and to go on to resolve the problem? Is that too much to ask? Is that what they enjoy?

Is it their purpose in life to sit here and involve themselves in useless political rhetoric when there are people at work in the country trying to resolve the problems? They want help from members of Parliament. They want support, but I do not know anybody who appeared before the legislative committee who said: "Preserve the at and east." Since 1985, the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission has admitted that the at and east rate is ineffective and that we must move to some other form of assistance.

The members from the New Democratic Party say: "We agree with the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission. We support their submissions." They say: "Keep the at and east and then we will see what else we can get." That is not going to work. They know it. They are just taking political advantage. They think somebody in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick might be listening to them and actually believe that they are acting in their interests instead of putting roadblocks in the way of the resolution of the problem.

I have lived in the port of Halifax all my life. My grandfather served in the House of Commons before me. I do not think anybody can doubt my motives in trying to assist the port of Halifax. Yet, they come here from Regina, Saskatchewan and say: "No, no. Don't eliminate the at and east. Keep it in force. Let's go on for another six days. Carry it over the summer. Don't solve it until the fall." How is that going to put in any alternate programs of the kind recommended by the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission? How are we going to act upon any of their suggestions unless we deal with and finalize this matter here in the House of Commons?

I appeal to members to put aside the rhetoric and the partisan, infantile policies. Let us get the bill passed. This will allow us to go on in a positive way to implement some of the recommendations of the Halifax–Dartmouth Port Development Commissions and some of the recommendations that flow from the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission. It will allow us to look at the possibility of unitrains and the cost factors involved, to preserve the elevator, to implement the study that has been undertaken by the Minister of Agriculture and the task force to see if we can preserve the grain elevator, to help the longshoremen and the employees in the port of Halifax to gain other employment.

They do not want to listen to you people. They want jobs. They want the grain elevator operating. They do not want to listen to you. They want some hope for the future and you are not giving them any while debating this bill and stalling it in the House of Commons. I wish my colleague from the city of Dartmouth was here to argue against me and to tell me that the people in the port of Halifax want the at and east rate stalled in the House of Commons.

They want this matter decided. They want to go on. They want hope for the future. They do not want your empty rhetoric any more.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I wish I lived in Halifax so I could run against the hon. member.

In all the years I have been here, I have never heard a member betray his own region and his own city with the kind of garbage to which I have just had to listen. The hon. gentleman forgets that something like the at and east freight rates affect us all from Moose Jaw to Halifax. From where do you think you get that high quality milling wheat? From where do you think you get that high quality feed grain?

Do you think it grew up in the middle of the St. Lawrence River? You do not know a damn thing about grain and grain movement. You do not know anything about it. The hon. member talks about jobs. This bill has already put over 100 people out of work. He talks about making jobs. The hon. gentleman submits that they are going to replace this. Well, the one thing you do not do, if you are any kind of a government with a handful of brains, is cancel a program until a replacement one is agreed to and ready to put in place. These guys have got nothing.

• (1530)

The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission has made proposals which the government has refused to accept. When we get to Motion No. 2, which is a proposal of the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, I wonder where the hon. member will be. He will be out behind the curtain, hiding. He will not have the courage to vote for his own city and his own port.

We will support Motion No. 1 of my colleague the Liberal critic because, if nothing else, passing this motion would give the government time to come up with its replacement program that the hon. member for Halifax just talked about. Obviously the hon. member and the government do not have a replacement program. That will give the government a year or two, as long as they are going to last, to come up with their replacement program. They have not got one yet and they will not listen to the people from the Atlantic provinces who have made proposals which the government refuses to act on or even listen to.

The worst tragedy of all is that this is a total emasculation of the parliamentary process. I know Mr. Speaker ruled on the question of privilege of my colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre. He ruled under the rules of Parliament that the legislation was in order. Mr. Speaker frankly said that he did not want to rule on a constitutional matter, that that was to be dealt with in some other place. The problem is, Mr. Speaker, who has the money to go to the Federal Court and then the Supreme Court? I do not, and I doubt if the Standing Committee on Transport can get a budget for it.

In any case, what has happened has happened before and the Federal Court threw the government out of court. The government had to fork over $100 million in storage payments to the Canadian Wheat Board. Why? Because the government tried to make legislation retroactive. That was a Liberal government. This government is doing exactly the same thing. It is giving legislative effect to a bill that has not even passed Parliament. If that does not violate a parliamentary democracy and violate our Constitution, I do not know what does.

No self-respecting democratic institution should allow the government of the day, any government of any political stripe at whatever level, to bring into legislative effect and legislative force legislation that has not been dealt with and passed by Parliament and received the signature of the Governor General.

This law has been in effect and enforced since July 1989. The least the government could do is say that the law does not take effect until the day of Royal Assent, and then it would be doing the right thing in terms of parliamentary process.

This amendment gives the government some time. It can keep this at and east rates legislation in effect for a year. If it has an alternative program, fine, bring it in and the legislation to cover it and then repeal the at and east rates. Instead of that, the government just repeals it. It is perfectly understandable why it is done that way. The government does not want to spend any more money. It has no intention of bringing in a replacement bill.

We have moved an amendment, which we will discuss a little later, that implements a request of the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission. The government will not listen to them. The government has heard them but they did not listen, and for the amount of money that the government thinks it is going to save, it is going to end up costing the Government of Canada more money by the cancellation of this program.

It is going to cost the government in lost jobs, lost income, and lost income tax. It is going to cost it in the lack of a grain handling facility in Saint John, which does not do much for Canada's export position, whether it is for flour or grain. It is likely going to cost it most, if not all, of the operation of the grain terminal in Halifax. Then the hon. member for Halifax states that these people want jobs. Of course they do, so why is he supporting a bill that does away with their jobs? Where does the hon. member for Halifax stand on the jobs that the people in his city want when this legislation is causing them to lose their jobs?

If and when the Dover Flour Mill shuts down, that will decrease our export capacity of flour. More significantly, the feed grain users in Atlantic Canada depend on that terminal to store the feed grain.

The hon. member for Halifax talked about unit trains. I do not know where he has been. The issue of unit trains from Thunder Bay to Atlantic Canada has been studied ad nauseam every year since I have been here, and the costs are pretty high. The government of those days and the government of today does not want to spend any more money and ergo unit trains are not being used. They should be in the winter months. In the summer months we can use the Seaway.

The hon. member is talking about using unit trains. What would you do with 100 cars at 2,000 bushels per car, 100 tonnes per car, and a 100 car unit train that arrives in Saint John? Where are you going to put it? The grain terminal is closed. It arrives in Halifax, where are you going to put it? The aftermath of this legislation means forget about unit trains. Dover Flour Mill will have to bring in just sufficient flour or milling grain to see them through month by month. That is about as much as they can store.

It is going to be a jerk-water operation. It hurts the shippers of malting barley. It hurts the brewery industry. It hurts the shippers of malting barley in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. It hurts the shippers of high grade, high protein milling wheat. It decreases our export capacity and capabilities. We lose what we used to have, a flour and feed grain market in Cuba. Cuba sent sugar and rum to the Soviet Union, and the Soviet Union paid us in cash. It was a neat three-way deal. It was in place for about 18 or 20 years. That is down the drain.

There is the whole Caribbean and central American region that is there for us, and what do these guys do? They scrap it. They scrap what we do have, and goodness knows it is little enough.

I do not understand any self-respecting member from Atlantic Canada from any party supporting this legislation. It passes beyond all understanding. I suspect that any member from Atlantic Canada who supports this legislation and all the implications there are to it will rue the day. I can tell them one thing: Do not be a Tory candidate in my part of Canada. You will have to answer for this one, as well as a number of others.

• (1540)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I put the question, a vote on Motion No. 1 will be applied to Motions Nos. 3 and 6.

The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

We will now go to Motion Nos. 4, 5 and 7.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-26 be amended by deleting Clause 2.

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-26 be amended by deleting Clause 3.

Motion No. 7

That Bill C-26 be amended by deleting Clause 4.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to debate those motions. I note that Motion No. 2 was ruled out of order as it had been dealt with substantially in committee. However, the purpose of the motion was to introduce the option that had been put forward by the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, the proposal that has been discussed many times in this House.

I would like to turn for a moment to another area. In fact, the effect of the motions would be to kill the bill and leave the status quo. There is another area that has only been touched on briefly with respect to this issue, and that is with respect to the transportation system in this country generally.

It has been asked a number of times in this House why the government persists in pushing this legislation through. It is clear on the face of the bill and all the evidence that has come forth from the committee and through the House that this bill makes no sense.

However, it does make sense in terms of the government's over-all agenda. It is a private agenda, an agenda that has not been discussed openly, but it is there and it can be seen if one looks very closely. That agenda that the government is coming forth with will change the whole face of agriculture in this country, and it will change the face of the transportation of grain in this country.

The elimination of the at and east grain transportation program is simply a rehearsal for the removal of the Crow benefit that is now being enjoyed by western farmers. It is clear that the government is determined to completely dismantle the grain transportation system in this country as we now know it. The elimination of the at and east program is only one item on the government's agenda in its plan to dismantle our grain transportation system and to reintroduce the Crow debate.

This fall we are going to be into the real Crow debate. This is simply, as has been determined before, a mini-Crow debate. We had a Crow debate in the early 1980s. Many members who are here today, my senior colleagues, were part of that debate and did an admirable job with respect to that. That is the issue that is in front of us. What we are facing is the whole dismantling of the way we transport grain, the way agriculture survives in this country and the way it is progressing.

There is no consideration for the survival of the family farm. There is no consideration for the survival of the economic regions of this country. There is simply a concern for bottom-line economics which is coming forth.

This Tory government is very good at tactics and strategy. It has a strategy and it is putting it forth step by step. It was very clear in part of this bill the strategy that was taking place. It is a strategy that is very concerning. What was happening is that some of the members on the committee were falling into that trap.

The hon. member for Halifax stated in committee that if this subsidy goes it is unfair to the maritimes, because the western farmer still has the Crow benefits, still has the Western Grains Transportation Act and the benefits under it. She said that if the maritimes lose the at and east why should western Canadians keep the Crow benefit? That is a dangerous trap. That is the trap that this government wants people to fall into, the talk of the so-called level playing field.

That is not the case. The reason that we have those benefits in the first place, the reason that we have had the Crow rate and now the Crow benefit, and the reason that we have had the at and east program was to allow the regions of this country to develop. That was the purpose of it.

They are removing the Crow benefit. That is not going to help the terminal at Halifax. It is not going to help the terminal at Saint John. It is not going to help agriculture in the maritimes.

When grain is shipped through Halifax and Saint John, it already gets the benefit of the Crow benefit because that benefit applies to Thunder Bay. Grain for export goes from the prairies to Thunder Bay, and then from there on through Halifax and Saint John. The at and east was simply another program to encourage the use of the elevators at Saint John and Halifax. Now that the at and east program is gone those elevators are in deep trouble. We have seen that one has already closed, and the elevator at Halifax is also in a shaky position.

If the Crow benefit goes, that is not going to benefit the maritime farmer. It is simply going to hurt further the average producer, the average family farm in Saskatchewan, in Manitoba, in Alberta, and in parts of British Columbia. What this government has done is laid the groundwork for the removal of the Crow benefit. It is laying a foundation. It is laying a trap which some people are walking into and which we must be very careful that we do not fall into.

If this Confederation means anything to us, if this country means anything to us—and there is a lot of debate about that these days—we have to pay attention to the regions. There are regions that do not have the same advantages as other regions.

We in Saskatchewan know what it is like to live in a province that does not have some of the economic advantages of other provinces. Certainly under a Tory government, which we have suffered for the last eight years, we now are a have-not province. We know what it is like to be from a region such as the maritimes because we are experiencing that situation now. This is a government that is not planning to better our lot in life. It is not planning to help the average Canadian. This is a bottom line economic government that is simply wanting to cut the deficit. It is simply looking after the interests of corporations.

What we have had since the Second World War is a de facto agricultural policy that has seen the family farm struggle. It has seen rural Canada disintegrating. Right now we have a severe crisis in rural Canada. Many of the same problems that exist in rural Nova Scotia are exactly the same problems that exist in rural Saskatchewan. The only difference in some cases is that the economic base is different. In some parts of rural Nova Scotia and the rural maritimes, fishing is the economic base and the same is true in Newfoundland, whereas in Saskatchewan the economic base primarily is agriculture.

The fundamental issue that we have to keep in mind—and I remind members to keep it in mind—is that this government has a strategy. It is a strategy that is going to be turning full force in the fall on to the western producers. We will be having a major change in transportation policy. We will be having a major change in support programs for the western farmer and a whole new attitude toward agriculture. I feel very concerned about that. I feel very concerned for the future of my province, for the future of western Canada, for the future of the maritimes, and for the future of Newfoundland. By passing this legislation the government is simply laying the groundwork.

• (1550)

I call upon members to do what they can to keep the issue alive and to show the government up for what it is doing. The government knows that this is its plan and does not hide it. One can see that it exists. It is there to be looked at.

In conclusion, I would remind members that we are simply beginning the debate. This a mini-Crow debate. The real Crow debate will begin in the fall when the government finishes its work on the transportation system and the movement of grain in Canada.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I say to my friend for Fraser Valley East that I was here this morning, as was he, at which time I was speaking in support of three amendments put forward by my colleague from Lambton—Middlesex. Now I am delighted to rise and support a set of amendments put forward by the gentleman from Moose Jaw—Lake Centre.

I am surprised the amendments got by the Chair because the effect of the amendments, without telling the Chair how to do its job, as I understand it, would be to negate the bill effectively. There is another way to do that, simply by voting against the bill, but we will not be choosey on this side of the House. If we can beat some sense into the government by whatever means, we intend to do it.

That brings me to what I thought was a courageous move earlier today by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley—Hants, a gentleman who is normally in support of the government. He is a Conservative. He has run and been elected many times under the Conservative banner. He and I disagree on many issues, and that is as much to his credit as it is to mine, I am sure. However I do not want to talk about our differences today. What I want to do is salute him and the courage he exercised earlier today. I am sure he will follow through with a vote against the bill later on today.

The gentleman from Annapolis Valley—Hants, although he bears the same party label as those who have sponsored this bill, although he is normally a supporter of the Conservative government in this Chamber, gave notice today—and it took courage; I congratulate him—that he would be voting effectively against the government in this measure which is now before the House.

By way of contrast to what the gentleman from Annapolis Valley—Hants did, it is instructive to recall what the gentleman from Halifax West did, he who has stevedores, longshoremen, elevator operators, and other people in the dozens in the port of Halifax who are his constituents. We have in the one case a gentleman from Annapolis Valley—Hants who does not have very many constituents whose livelihood is directly at stake, although in fairness to him he does have some farmers whose feed prices will be adversely affected if this bill goes through.

An hon. member: Once the beef prices go up.

Mr. Simmons: I do not know how much they are going to go up. Did I suggest to the gentleman that I knew how much they were going to go up?

Mr. Hughes: Nobody was suggesting that you know what you are talking about.

Mr. Simmons: The gentleman from Macleod shows signs of stirring and having some interest in this particular matter. We welcome him to the debate. It is by far his best contribution to a debate during this entire session.

I say to both friends opposite that I do not know in dollars and cents terms how much will be the difference. I know that the impact will be adverse. One does not have to be terribly bright to figure that out. The impact will be adverse.

I also listened to the representatives of those farmers and those grain elevator operators who came before the committee during committee stage. One only has to read the transcripts of the committee hearings, which I have done, to find that people like Mr. Keith Russell, Executive Director of the Atlantic Farmers Council, told the committee as recently as May 17 when this bill was before it that there is a fair degree of concern among farmers in Atlantic Canada about this matter.

I was anticipating the next question as to why it is that I from what is essentially a fishing constituency am standing here right now talking about an issue that is essentially a farm and transportation issue. There is a very simple answer to that question.

While it is true that almost every one of the 151 communities that make up the riding of Burin—St. George's have an involvement in the fishery and are currently being devastated by the downturn in the fishery both inshore and offshore, it is also true that there are three important farming pockets in the riding of Burin—St. George's.

There is the very fertile Codroy Valley. Those of you who have gone to Newfoundland by Port aux Basques will be aware that after getting off the ferry in Port aux Basques and driving the Trans-Canada Highway across the island, within 20 miles of leaving Port aux Basques you will pass on your left particularly, but on your right as well, the very fertile and very picturesque Codroy Valley. It has a farm community which has thrived over the years and which will be hurt by the obvious increase in feed prices to be triggered by the bill now before the House should it pass.

There is a second pocket of farmers a little farther up the highway in what we know as the Robinson's area: the communities of Robinson's, McKays, Jeffries and so on. There is a third pocket on the Burin Peninsula centred around the community of Winterland.

Just a little footnote here for the benefit of my good friend from Macleod: between 1934 and 1949, during that 15-year interregnum there was no elected government in Newfoundland. The democratic government, a Tory government by the way, which had been elected in 1932 suspended itself and in effect voted itself out of office. That must have been the one and only time that a Tory government ever did that. It invited in a British appointed Commission of Government to run things. A governor plus six commissioners were appointed by the British government, three Britishers by birth, three Newfoundlanders by birth, plus the governor who was normally a Britisher by birth.

That seven-member commission was the government for a 15-year period, known as the Commission of Government. It did a lot of clumsy things, a lot of inefficient things, and a lot of undemocratic things. One of the better things that the Commission of Government did during that period was to encourage farming in Newfoundland, in particular to set up a number of farm communities for returning veterans, people who had come back from the Second World War. One such community was Winterland in my riding of Burin—St. George's, as well as some others.

Do I understand that my time is so soon running out, Mr. Speaker? There are many more things I would like to say about these particular amendments. In my digression I wanted to talk about the particular import of this bill to the farm community in Newfoundland, the three pockets in my riding, as well as other farm pockets not in my riding but elsewhere in Newfoundland.

• (1600)

Since time is running out, let me say in conclusion that we are against this particular bill and we are going to try and defeat it in any way we can. We believe that by voting for the amendments of the hon. member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre we can send a signal that we are against the principle and the substance of this bill. I intend to do that.

I believe the gentleman from Fraser Valley East is almost persuaded he ought to do likewise. If so, that will be to his credit, unlike the gentleman from Halifax West who not only betrayed the workers in his riding who are depending on this at and east, but never had the courage to stay in the House and register his vote at the end of the discussion.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I am just going to take a few minutes. I think the member for Halifax West made an attempt to defend himself in the eyes of his own constituents. In the process, he attempted to make it seem that the benefit of this bill is not for Halifax and the east coast but for inland Canada and for the prairies. While there is some benefit as far as western Canada is concerned, the amount of grain that we ship through Halifax and Saint John is minuscule compared to the over-all shipment of grain.

The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, regardless of what the minister has attempted to put before us, made a number of attempts to have the government hold off on this bill until a number of problems have been solved. The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission is not a fly-by-night group. It is a well established and respected organization representing a cross-section of Atlantic Canada and its transportation needs.

It pointed out in its presentation to the government and the committee that the total identifiable cost of the elimination of these particular rates in the form of wages paid to the people of the community is something over $34 million. They consider this to be a fairly conservative estimate.

Furthermore, it recognized the considerable spin-off activity in the community relative to the at and east rates. This bill will result in the elimination of a source of economic activity for Halifax and Saint John, as well as a source of materials of feed and grain that has allowed them to make use of Canadian products.

These motions, if passed, would keep the bill in place, since it appears the government is intent on eliminating these rates. This would give the commission an opportunity to see what must be done before this bill is put into effect. It has made a somewhat ridiculous suggestion considering that we want to make Canada secure in food products and that Canada buys Canadian products as much as possible. It says, "Okay, if we cannot have western or Ontario barley, give us the right to buy our barley from France". In other words, instead of shipping our grain to the maritimes, we should buy barley from France and other European countries, ship the barley to the east coast of Canada and use it there because it is cheaper to ship it across the Atlantic Ocean than it is to ship it by rail, if the at and east rates are disallowed.

The second suggestion was that if it could not buy the western products, then the federal government should possibly eliminate the countervail duties on American corn so that instead of buying the Canadian feed it could then buy American corn at a cheaper rate and use that instead of the western or the Ontario grain.

The third possibility which it suggested should be explored was changing the structure of moving grain by rail, gathering up unit trains in the west and moving directly to Halifax by rail, thereby bypassing the seaway and possibly bringing that grain to the east coast at a cheaper rate. If economic, this proposal would require federal assistance. Government-owned hopper cars which are presently used in the west would then be used to travel further eastward. These are all ideas which the Atlantic transportation commission suggested should be considered.

The two groups of amendments we are looking at today attempt to allow the maritime provinces time to carefully examine these proposals to determine how the legislation will work, or whether we should return to the old structure and make as much use as possible of the at and east rates to allow the elevators to continue to operate and to allow the flour mills, the port, and the livestock operators to keep operating as they have.

Mr. Speaker, I speak in favour of these motions which have the effect of leaving the bill as it was before, that is, keeping the status quo. I suggest that if we vote for either group of motions, or both preferably, we would give the maritime provinces an opportunity to examine their own situation, an opportunity which they have not had until now.

• (1610)

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to participate again today in this debate at report stage on the latest series of amendments.

I could not help but listen from behind the curtain to my colleague from Halifax West in his passionate plea of ignorance on the entire issue of the at and east freight rate subsidy. Unfortunately, the Member for Halifax West, or perhaps we should now call him the member from fait accompli, because every time we are faced with this particular piece of legislation and its negative effects, he throws his hands up in the air in a fit of not being able to do anything and says it is a fait accompli. I hate to tell him this but this is not an executive democracy, it is a parliamentary democracy.

We know full well that the government opposite has seen fit in its wisdom, or more particularly lack thereof, to introduce this piece of legislation last June. Because the regulations went into effect July 15, the hon. member for Halifax West would have us just sit on our hands and button our lips and not speak for the people of Atlantic Canada.

It is very clear that if Bill C-26 goes through, this abomination on the grain transportation industry in Atlantic Canada, there will be untold havoc in our agriculture industry. The hon. member for Halifax West may think that we have to adjust, and I heard him address this particular issue in his speech and say very clearly that the stevedores in Halifax just want to get rid of this and get on with it. That is simply not true. The stevedores in Halifax have been saying that if the at and east bill is flawed, if we have to reduce subsidies, then we have to look at the alternatives, and consider them first, not after you let the horse out of the barn and close the door.

According to the committee hearing of May 17, the hon. member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre questioned Mr. Russell from the Atlantic Farmers Council. He asked about the effect of no consultation, no remedial measures, and no new programs on trying to offset the negative effects of the loss of the at and east:

> If there is nothing to replace this program, what does that do to the potential growth of agriculture in the Maritimes?

Anyone in this House who claims to know anything about agriculture knows that the Atlantic agricultural industry is one that has a great deal of difficulty. It is far away from the larger markets. We have smaller farms to work. We know these facts exist for the agricultural industry in Atlantic Canada. Mr. Russell from the Atlantic Canada Farmers Council said that if this bill went through:

> It would set it back two to four years while we made a readjustment.

This is not rhetoric from the other side. This is coming from an individual who represents, and represents very well, the agricultural industry in Atlantic Canada.

Every piece of documentation that the committee heard while coming to its report, every piece of evidence it was given said that if this bill goes through at this particular point in time, it will cause untold devastation not just in the shipping industry, not just for the grain terminals, not just for the Dover Flour Mill in Halifax, but potentially could be disastrous for the competitiveness of the Atlantic agricultural industry.

If the member opposite needs more evidence then perhaps he should reread the evidence presented to the committee.

The only thing we can do is to ensure the bill does not pass. The government seems to be concerned. It is johnny-come-lately on this, in a conversion on the road to Damascus. If the bill does not pass the government will be able to sit down and talk to the industry. It will be able to look at the proposals set forward by the Atlantic Provinces Agricultural Council for input and changes necessary to ensure that the adjustment which would take place with the reduction of the at and east over a period of time would not lead to a lessening of competition in the Atlantic agricultural industry and we would not see the economic devastation that we currently see with the grain elevator that is now closed. We are not going to get the one in Saint John open again. The 65 per cent reduction of traffic through the Halifax grain terminal not only jeopardizes the future viability of the Halifax grain terminal, but also may jeopardize the future viability of Dover Mills, the only flour mill in Atlantic Canada.

I urge all my colleagues to listen to the member for Annapolis Valley—Hants. My goodness, he is a veteran of this place and he has fought many partisan battles. They should go back and listen. They should call up his speech today on Oasis and listen to what he said. They should listen particularly to the member for Halifax West, a senior colleague from his home province. He said that sometimes the government must listen to the other side of this hall. It must look across and try to get the good out of the debates that take place in the House. If it did that, he said that it would do what he is going to do. It would support at least a five-year hold on the effect of the bill coming into place, or indeed can it.

* * *

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate has passed Bill S-16, an act to amend the Act of Incorporation of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

[Translation]

It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Comox—Alberni—Fisheries; the hon. member for Parkdale—High Park—External Affairs; the hon. member for Ottawa West—Transport.

* * *

[English]

RAILWAY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-26, an act to amend the Railway Act (grain and flour subsidies), as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 4 (Mr. Laporte).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 4, standing in the name of Mr. Laporte, and applies to Motions Nos. 5 and 7.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at the report stage now before the House.

The first question is on Motion No. 1, standing in the name of Mr. Ferguson, which applies to Motions Nos. 3 and 6.

Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 273)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Blondin
Brewin
Callbeck
Crawford
Dionne
Ferguson
Fontana
Gaffney
Gardiner
Harvard
Heap
Hovdebo
Kaplan
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
MacDonald (Dartmouth)
Maheu
Marleau
McGuire
Milliken
Nault * 18Nowlan
Parker
Phinney
Prud'homme
Robichaud
Simmons
Speller
Taylor
Volpe
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—68

Arseneault
Benjamin
Boudria
Butland
Catterall
de Jong
Duhamel
Flis
Foster
Gagliano
Gauthier
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hopkins
Hunter
Keyes
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
Lee
MacLaren
Manley
McCurdy
McLaughlin
Mitchell
Nystrom
Peterson
Pickard
Rideout
Rodriguez
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stupich
Vanclief
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

NAYS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Blais
Bouchard (Roberval)
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Charest
Cole
Cook
Corbeil
Couture
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Desjardins
Dobbie
Dorin
Epp
Feltham
Fontaine
Gibeau
Guilbault
Hawkes
Hockin
Holtmann
Horning
Hughes
Johnson
Kempling
Layton
Littlechild
MacDonald (Rosedale)
Malone
Mazankowski
McDougall (St. Paul's)
Monteith
Nicholson
Plamondon
Pronovost
Ricard
Saint-Julien
Shields
Soetens
Stevenson
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vincent
White
Assiniboia)
Worthy—112

Andre
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Boyer
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Côté
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Danis
de Cotret
Dick
Domm
Edwards
Fee
Ferland
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Horner
Hudon
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Langlois
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Marin
McCreath
McKnight
Moore
Oberle
Plourde
Reid
Richardson
Schneider
Siddon
Sparrow
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Valcourt
Venne
Weiner
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost. I therefore declare Motions Nos. 3 and 6 lost.

The next question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of Mr. Laporte. The vote on this motion also applies to Motions Nos. 5 and 7.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think you will find there is a disposition to apply the vote taken on the prior amendment to this one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 274)

YEAS

Members

Althouse	Arseneault
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)	Benjamin
Blondin	Boudria
Brewin	Butland
Callbeck	Catterall
Crawford	de Jong
Dionne	Duhamel
Ferguson	Flis
Fontana	Foster
Gaffney	Gagliano
Gardiner	Gauthier
Harvard	Harvey (Edmonton East)
Heap	Hopkins
Hovdebo	Hunter
Kaplan	Keyes
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)	Kristiansen
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)	Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
Laporte	Lee
MacDonald (Dartmouth)	MacLaren
Maheu	Manley
Marleau	McCurdy
McGuire	McLaughlin
Milliken	Mitchell
Nault	Nowlan
Nystrom	Parker
Peterson	Phinney
Pickard	Prud'homme
Rideout	Robichaud
Rodriguez	Simmons
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)	Speller
Stupich	Taylor
Vanclief	Volpe
Whittaker	Wood
Young (Gloucester)	Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—68

NAYS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Atkinson	Beatty
Belsher	Bernier
Bertrand	Bird
Bjornson	Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais	Blenkarn
Bouchard (Roberval)	Boyer
Brightwell	Browes
Cadieux	Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Cardiff	Casey
Chadwick	Champagne (Champlain)
Charest	Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Cole	Collins
Cook	Cooper
Corbeil	Côté
Couture	Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)	Danis
DeBlois	de Cotret
Desjardins	Dick
Dobbie	Domm
Dorin	Edwards
Epp	Fee
Feltham	Ferland
Fontaine	Gérin
Gibeau	Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Guilbault	Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hawkes	Hicks
Hockin	Hogue
Holtmann	Horner
Horning	Hudon
Hughes	Jelinek
Johnson	Jourdenais
Kempling	Langlois
Layton	Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild	Lopez
MacDonald (Rosedale)	MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone	Marin
Mazankowski	McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)	McKnight
Monteith	Moore
Nicholson	Oberle
Plamondon	Plourde
Pronovost	Reid
Ricard	Richardson
Saint-Julien	Schneider
Shields	Siddon
Soetens	Sparrow
Stevenson	Tétreault
Thacker	Thompson
Thorkelson	Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Québec-Est)	Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Turner (Halton—Peel)	Valcourt
Vankoughnet	Venne
Vincent	Weiner
White	Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)	Worthy—112

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost. I therefore declare Motions Nos. 5 and 7 lost.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, maybe someday I will win one. On this one again I suggest that you would find a disposition of all members to apply the vote on the amendments to the concurrence motion, in reverse, unfortunately.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I missed the first vote, but I would like to have my vote included with those of the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 275)

YEAS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Atkinson	Beatty
Belsher	Bernier
Bertrand	Bird
Bjornson	Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais	Blenkarn
Bouchard (Roberval)	Boyer
Brightwell	Browes
Cadieux	Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Cardiff	Casey
Chadwick	Champagne (Champlain)
Charest	Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Cole	Collins
Cook	Cooper
Corbeil	Côté
Couture	Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)	Danis
DeBlois	de Cotret
Desjardins	Dick
Dobbie	Domm
Dorin	Edwards
Epp	Fee
Feltham	Ferland
Fontaine	Friesen
Gérin	Gibeau
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)	Guilbault
Harvey (Chicoutimi)	Hawkes
Hicks	Hockin
Hogue	Holtmann
Horner	Horning
Hudon	Hughes
Jelinek	Johnson
Jourdenais	Kempling
Langlois	Layton
Leblanc (Longueuil)	Littlechild
Lopez	MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)	Malone
Marin	Mazankowski
McCreath	McDougall (St. Paul's)
McKnight	Monteith
Moore	Nicholson
Oberle	Plamondon
Plourde	Pronovost
Reid	Ricard
Richardson	Saint-Julien
Schneider	Shields
Siddon	Soetens
Sparrow	Stevenson
Tétreault	Thacker
Thompson	Thorkelson
Tremblay (Rosemont)	Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)	Turner (Halton—Peel)
Valcourt	Vankoughnet
Venne	Vincent
Weiner	White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)	Worthy—113

NAYS

Members

Althouse	Arseneault
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)	Benjamin
Blondin	Boudria
Brewin	Butland
Callbeck	Catterall
Crawford	de Jong
Dionne	Duhamel
Ferguson	Flis
Fontana	Foster
Gaffney	Gagliano
Gardiner	Gauthier
Harvard	Harvey (Edmonton East)
Heap	Hopkins
Hovdebo	Hunter
Kaplan	Keyes
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)	Kristiansen
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)	Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
Laporte	Lee
MacDonald (Dartmouth)	MacLaren
Maheu	Manley
Marleau	McCurdy
McGuire	McLaughlin
Milliken	Mitchell
Nault	Nowlan
Nystrom	Parker
Peterson	Phinney
Pickard	Prud'homme
Rideout	Robichaud
Rodriguez	Simmons
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)	Speller
Stupich	Taylor
Vanclief	Volpe
Whittaker	Wood
Young (Gloucester)	Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—68

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[Translation]

THE ENVIRONMENT

INDOOR AIR QUALITY

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should implement a national strategy for reducing the threats posed by exposure to contaminants in the air indoors that would include a national research centre, technology development programs, a set of national standards on indoor air quality and an information campaign designed to raise awareness of and provide advice on indoor air contaminants.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this afternoon to present this motion on indoor air quality.

[English]

This is an issue of which many Canadian citizens are acutely aware because of the effect it has on their personal health. I do not think any incident could better give people the understanding of how important the issue of the indoor environment is than the story of the events that transpired in Pennsylvania in 1976.

At that time there was a retired air force captain, Ray Brennan, who was 61 years old. He had been retired for a few years and was having a few heart problems, but he was a keen Legionnaire. He was the bookkeeper for American Legion No. 42 in Towanda, Pennsylvania. As his sister said, all he lived for was to go to Legion conventions.

He set off for Philadelphia in July 1976 to attend a state Legion convention, an affair which typically consisted of lots of good times for people who had fought in foreign wars. He came home a bit tired, his sister recalled, and three days later he had chest pains, a fever, and some difficulty breathing. His sister said he did not want to go to the hospital. "We had to fight him all the way", she said. That very night, with his lungs filling with blood, Brennan died of an apparent heart attack.

That was July 26, 1976. Brennan was the first. Three days later in Clearfield, Pennsylvania, Legionnaire Frank Aveni, 60 years olds, died in much the same way. So did three other Pennsylvanian veterans. On Sunday, August 1, there were six more ranging in age from 39 years to 82 years scattered in towns all around the state of Pennsylvania. All of them had just one thing in common. They had all attended the Legion convention held in Philadelphia from July 21 to July 24, 1976. All of them came down with the same signs and symptoms: headaches, chest pains, high fevers, and lung congestion.

It seemed as though the terror spread without any rhyme or reason. Charles Seidel, an 82-year old World War I veteran from Reading, Pennsylvania, died. People in Williamstown were surprised when John Ralph, 41 years old, suddenly died. People did not want to go to his funeral for fear that they were going to catch something.

Then all of a sudden it seemed to level off. There were no instances of victims passing on this disease to any of their families or friends, so the initial fears of some kind of rampaging epidemic were quelled. In the end, 34 people who had attended the Legion convention in Philadelphia in July 1976 died.

As we all now know, they died of what has become known as legionnaire's disease. A bacterium, now called legionella, was the cause. The transmission of that disease is still not completely understood, but we do know that it is caused by inhalation, not consumption, of small particles of contaminated water or even soil. If you were to drink contaminated fluid it would not affect you, but if you inhale little particles of it it could.

The story of the tragic events that unfolded in 1976 in Pennsylvania where legionnaire's disease first occurred highlights as well as anything the fact that the indoor environment is intricately connected with the health and well-being of people who live, work, visit conventions, and do all of the things that are a part of normal modern life indoors.

The motion that I propose is that the government implement a national strategy for reducing the threats posed by exposure to contaminants in indoor air. This strategy would include a national research centre, technology development programs, a set of national standards on indoor air quality, and an information campaign designed to raise awareness and to provide advice on indoor air contamination.

We do not have to look to the United States or further afield than Canada to find examples of important, well-known government programs to deal with indoor air problems. The most recent one in the federal experience was the program a few years ago that assisted homeowners who removed urea formaldehyde foam insulation from their homes. It was a program that the Government of Canada assisted in to ensure that money was available to people who had to incur the cost of removing this foam from their walls and buildings because it was believed that improperly installed the foam insulation was causing health problems in people who lived in close proximity to it.

The fact is that North Americans spend over 90 per cent of their time indoors, either at home, school, or work as well as inside recreation and transportation facilities. Some people have estimated that in Canada this figure is as high as 98 per cent because of our more inclement climate.

• (1710)

Prompted by the energy crisis, construction techniques have tended to focus on airtight buildings with a dependence on mechanical ventilation systems. There has been a tendency to view the operation of ventilation systems solely in the context of economic efficiency, that is cutting energy costs, and rightly so.

However, more and more people are becoming aware of the untoward health effects that living and working in these airtight energy efficient buildings can have on them, either because of the lack of ventilation or some of the construction or paint materials that surround them all the time.

More and more consumer and office products are made up with a complex array of synthetic chemicals. These products include the furniture that we use and sit on, the paint on the walls, and the materials that are used in insulation.

We now have for the first time something known as the sick building syndrome. It is the term that is being used to describe large outbreaks of a whole range of illnesses that occur from irritations of the eyes, nose and throat, to major respiratory problems and even in some cases cancers. These health problems ultimately contribute to productivity loss in the workplace and greater allergic sensitivity in the home and in the workplace. In the case of some indoor pollutants, long–term physical impairment can result.

People who live in the national capital region, particularly those who are employed by the federal government, are well aware of the problems that have occurred at the building complex within sight of here across the river at Terrasses de la Chaudiere in Hull, Quebec, known affectionately in English by those who work there as Terrasses de la Shoddy–Air.

This huge new building was leased in the late 1970s by the federal government. Complaints began almost as soon as people began to occupy that building. Unions and researchers indicated that 97 per cent of the workers in that building reported a deterioration in their general health since they had been located there. Some 54 per cent reported more fatigue, 46 per cent experienced frequent headaches, and 43 per cent reported chronic dryness of the nose and throat.

In 1981 about 300 employees of a Ford of Canada assembly plant took sick after returning to work after a nine–day shutdown of the plant. Pumps for fluids used to cool machines were shut off when the plant closed and bacteria in the coolant had multiplied during the shutdown and spread through the air when the machines started up again.

This is similar to the problem that was ultimately identified as the cause of legionnaire's disease in Philadelphia where the ventilation system connected to the air conditioning system was the source, through the contaminated water that was around it, of the spread of the legionella bacterium among the people who were attending that convention.

The Public Service Alliance of Canada has identified a number of buildings in different places in Canada as problem buildings where their members are frequently experiencing problems related to the sick building syndrome including Terrasses de la Chaudiere, the Portage IV complex, the Harry Hayes Building in Calgary, the Taxation Centre in Winnipeg, and the RCMP buildings in Corner Brook. My staff complain in the West Block on Parliament Hill from time to time.

These are problems that surround us. They are common, everyday problems that workers in Canada are dealing with. They are health problems. They directly affect the productivity of our workers, and they are meritorious of the urgent attention of the Government of Canada.

What are some of the causes of the pollution? One that is of very great importance is radon. Radon, as I am sure you know, Mr. Speaker, is a colourless, odourless gas that occurs naturally. It occurs through the deterioration of natural materials. It causes no problem at all in very low quantities but when it gets trapped in a building problems can be significant. In fact, it is believed that it is second only to cigarette smoking as a cause of lung cancer, with some estimates being as high as 5 per cent to 20 per cent of lung cancer being caused by radon being trapped within residential buildings because they are not properly sealed.

There is a series of concerns about biological contaminants. There is carbon monoxide which at low levels causes fatigue and headaches in healthy people. It can cause chest pains in people with heart conditions and can be fatal at high doses.

There is nitrogen dioxide which results from various kinds of heaters and unvented gas stoves. There are problems of organic gases often resulting from paint, paint strippers, solvents, aerosol sprays and so on which result in eye, nose and throat irritations. They can result in loss of co-ordination, damage to liver and other very serious ailments.

There is formaldehyde, which results from pressed wood products, and UFFI, as well as environmental tobacco smoke, asbestos and lead. These are all common, everyday materials that we know about and hear about which are causing problems for the people of Canada in their places of residence and work.

I suggest that the time has come in Canada to address these problems in an organized and concentrated fashion. That is why I have suggested that by way of a national strategy the government take on a number of initiatives. I do not think these involve great direct expenditure of public money, but I do think that there will be direct benefit to the economy of Canada if we address these problems. Benefit will be realized through increased productivity in the workplace and increased job and worker satisfaction.

It is also important that we recognize the interrelationship of so many aspects of our lives, that we begin to realize that environmental problems exist at all levels. Global environmental problems, of course, concern us all. In fact, the ability of mankind to survive depends on addressing some of those important issues.

Recognizing the importance of integrating mankind with the environment in which we live is also of great importance, whether that is the natural outdoors environment or the indoors environment. It is also important, as a matter of health policy, that we not merely look to find cures for ailments but rather that we look repeatedly to the causes of ailments to see whether we cannot remove some of those. Some of them require us to address these important environmental issues.

The federal government is already involved in some of these issues through the National Research Council which devises the building standards for Canada, through CMHC and through involvement, as the largest employer in Canada, with its employees and the unions that represent them. So I suggest that it would not be too much for the government to co-ordinate, through a national research centre on indoor environmental issues, the research that is currently being done in the federal government; to put together a set of technology development programs; to devise national standards on indoor air quality and to begin to raise the awareness of people of the importance of these problems and help individuals, employers and building owners to understand how they can contribute to the solutions to the problems that are created by indoor air contamination.

• (1720)

[Translation]

Therefore I propose that the government implement a national strategy to reduce the threats from exposure to contaminants in the air indoors.

I believe that this is a very important health problem for all Canadians, and that as a matter of health policy, all governments, not only the federal government but also the provincial governments, must take an interest in these problems and find solutions to the medical problems caused by environmental factors indoors.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt the member, but it is better that I interrupt him before he begins his remarks than during his remarks.

There have been discussions among the three parties and I believe you will find consent for the following two motions.

The first one is:

That, from the date of this Order until June 30, 1990, notwithstanding any Standing Orders, whenever the House sits beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment, calls for quorum and dilatory motions shall not be receivable by the Chair between 6 o'clock p.m. and 8 o'clock p.m.

The second motion is:

That, further to Order made Thursday, May 31, 1990, on Wednesday, June 6, 1990, recorded divisions requested on any motion in that day's Supply proceedings up to 9.45 o'clock p.m., be deferred until 10 o'clock p.m., provided that, if debate on motions numbered 1, 2 and 3 is concluded prior to 9.45 o'clock p.m., Members may be recognized for the purpose of debating the motion for concurrence in the Main Estimates standing in the name of the President of the Treasury Board.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Members have heard the terms of the motions. Is that agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motions agreed to.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

INDOOR AIR QUALITY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Manley that:

> In the opinion of this House, the government should implement a national strategy for reducing the threats posed by exposure to contaminants in the air indoors that would include a national research centre, technology development programs, a set of national standards on indoor air quality and an information campaign designed to raise awareness of and provide advice on indoor air contaminants.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House draws attention to a very important national issue which concerns all Canadians. Whether we are in the home or the workplace, the quality of the air we breathe has a direct impact on our health. With our cold climate and the time that we spend indoors we could say that indoor air quality is very much a Canadian concern.

The importance of programs related to this cannot be over-estimated. Over and above the health concerns there is the enormous economic aspect of this issue. There is convincing evidence that employers can enhance the productivity of their employees by providing them with a well-designed and ventilated workplace.

Efforts to address this challenge on a national scale are certainly vital and the government recognizes this fact. The hon. member's motion is seriously flawed in that he ignores and downplays the important work that is already underway and the major contribution that is already being made by scientists and engineers across Canada.

Many government departments and agencies, as well as private sector institutions, are working together on this problem. There are clear responsibilities and recognized leadership roles, and I would like to speak specifically about the National Research Council of Canada. I feel that the motion is a swipe at the NRC and the work of the people at the NRC's Institute for Research and Construction. By calling for the creation of a national research centre and technology development programs, the member shows that he may not be fully aware of all of the programs and the role that is already being played in this field.

In fact, the NRC's Institute for Research and Construction already is the national research centre for the Canadian construction industry. NRC engineers, scientists, architects and technologists at the institute pool their professional talents to develop cost-effective technology for safe, durable construction.

An important part of this work is related to indoor air quality. The institute helps building owners and managers across the country address ventilation and air quality problems through new engineering systems and other technologies related to employee safety and comfort. IRC also performs its own research to improve ventilation as a means of achieving good indoor air quality in projects of benefit both in the home and the workplace and it is specifically concerned with airtight construction techniques.

As we all know, airtight construction measures can save energy but they also create indoor air quality problems and magnify the effects of emissions from new construction materials. Last year, for example, the institute's researchers made important strides in this field by developing reliable procedures for studying the airflow patterns in apartment buildings. This work will help engineers and scientists identify air leakage characteristics of buildings and this, in turn, helps in defining the ventilation needs of newly constructed buildings.

The institute is working with the Canadian Home Builders' Association in this and other work and it is thus truly linked to the national effort. An example of the national scope of this work is a recent NRC collaboration with the Home Builders' Association to survey the airtightness of hundreds of homes across the country. This survey and other studies will help define the need for mechanical ventilation systems in homes.

In the future the NRC institute will be developing computer models and other information systems to help transfer technology about physical and human performance associated with indoor air quality. This information will be made available to building operators in all parts of Canada to use as design guidelines that link the physical attributes of space to its intended use.

This work is definitely tied into a national strategy as it and all of the Institute for Research and Construction is overseen by the nationally representative Canadian Construction Research Board. This board includes the leaders of the construction industry and the unions as well as public sector executives from the provincial and federal departments and agencies and universities with an interest in this field.

Furthermore, the NRC, under the terms of its act, has an important national leadership role in all areas of national construction standards as it is responsible for the development of the national building fire codes. The NRC's national codes are praised world-wide and reflect the state of the art in construction regulation.

The code development process is reviewed for its consultative approach which involves over 300 volunteers across Canada. The institute's employees are working constantly with the code committees and with the provinces and territories to harmonize regulations across this country and to help ensure quality construction techniques on national standards.

The success of the institute's approach to the national public building codes has been recognized in many awards and citations. Last year, for example, the prestigious Royal Bank Award was presented to Dr. Robert Leggett, the first director of the NRC's division of building research and the man who guided the code process for more than 20 years. Clearly, we have a well established and widely supported system for setting national building standards that does not need to be duplicated or undermined by a new one.

The hon. member's motion also advocates a national information campaign. He is clearly unaware of the efforts being made by the NRC and the Institute for Research and Construction to make technology transfer a part of all research programs. For over 25 years the NRC has been presenting an across Canada seminar series called Building Science Insight. Last year, for example, about 1,400 professionals in 14 cities attended that conference. In these seminars, technical experts provide authoritative answers to a host of issues such as material selection, design details and maintenance practices.

The institute also spreads information about its research through hundreds of scientific papers and reports as well as in newsletters distributed across the country through the regional chapters of the Canadian Construction Research Board. The institute also spreads the word about the latest building technologies through its key role in scientific and technical training. An increasing number of young researchers are learning their trade with NRC. They then take their knowledge of the latest technologies in indoor air quality and other areas with them to careers in industry and government.

• (1730)

Information on air quality techniques and other new building technologies are also passed on through NRC's construction technology advisory network.

Thirty-six advisers, with about 700 years experience in total, serve clients across the country. The advisers help local building industries through technical advice and guidance on the evaluation procedures of NRC's Canadian Construction Materials Centre. They also help firms access NRC's vast store of technical expertise and even arrange support for air quality research and other projects under the NRC's Industrial Research Assistance Program.

In conclusion, I would like to commend the hon. member for his desire to draw attention to the indoor air quality issue and for his support of scientific and technical approaches to the problem. However, I believe that we should not ignore the tremendous contribution already being made in this field. There are excellent programs under way at Health and Welfare Canada, CMHC, private sector institutions, and the National Research Council's Institute for Research in Construction.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to engage in the debate today. I want to congratulate my colleague from Ottawa South for bringing this motion forward.

The subject of indoor air quality, whether at home, in the industrial workplace, in aircraft, or in any other area, is one that is topical. It has been for some years and, as yet, has received rather scant attention from government and industry.

In 1981, May Britt Carlson, who was the labour attache to the Swedish embassy, travelled for years from one end of Canada to the other addressing labour, schools, workshops, and senior public servants from departments of labour and departments of health in various provincial jurisdictions. She tried at that time to draw attention to the major problems being created and the major health risks caused by poor indoor air quality, particularly in offices and in industry across Canada and around the world.

While there has been some research and there have been some laws passed, and some enforcement, the degree of concern necessary to do something serious about the problem of indoor air quality in Canada has left a lot to be desired.

The motion before us, and I will read it into the record, states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should implement a national strategy for reducing the threats posed by exposure to contaminants in the air indoors that would include a national research centre, technology development programs, a set of national standards on indoor air quality and an information campaign designed to raise awareness of and provide advice on indoor air contaminants.

It is a worthwhile motion. I am glad it is here and hope it is not talked out. It will serve a major purpose in helping to focus attention on the problems of inadequate laws and particularly inadequate enforcement.

While the intent is proper and laudable, there is a problem in the attitude, and that is an attitude prevalent in almost all law-making institutions in Canada. It is kind of a legal mind-set that, if we change the law or educate ourselves, then something will happen. It is my experience, and the experience of literally millions of Canadians in industrial workplaces across Canada, that no matter what laws one has and no matter how much education one has, if you do not have enforcement mechanisms—whether they be public enforcement or self-enforcement—in the work place, then nothing worthwhile is going to be done.

I want to give an example of this. I will not take my limited time to illustrate all the kinds of sickness hazards that exist due to poor indoor air quality. I think those are well known. They can be looked up by anyone with an interest.

I want to refer to one classic example in my own province of British Columbia that shows how a vague law can be much more worthwhile than a law that spells out everything. What is important is that the government has the political will to see that something actually gets done in the workplace and in homes where it matters to people.

In the late 1960s, some of us in the B.C. forest industry discovered a dilapidated old copy of something called the Factories Act. This was legislation stemming from the early 1930s. About all it had to say about air quality was that the air should be clean and that there should be a healthy work environment. It lacked any specificity at all. Because of that and as soon as we had a government that was prepared to act—unfortunately it was there only from 1972 to 1975—suddenly we had major clean-ups in factories all over British Columbia without a sentence of law being changed.

I want to say exactly what the situation was. We had this law on the books. When we phoned Victoria in the late 1960s, no department of government could tell us which department was responsible for the legislation or who had to enforce it. Later when we—the NDP—went into government, we found out when the government changed that there were only two people in the entire province on staff to enforce that law. They were supposed to inspect annually every factory—old and new—and every industrial undertaking in the province before it opened. We asked them: "How did you do this job?"

They said: "We did telephone book inspections." We asked: "Do you mean to say you just phoned companies and asked them if they were in compliance with the law?" They answered: "No, we did not have time to do that. We just wrote the names in the telephone books into our annual reports." That was a classic case of lack of political will. We did not change an item in that legislation. Because we had inspectors in every region of the province that co-operated with both labour and management and went around the work sites, we had major clean-ups far more than anybody had ever dreamed, and without compulsion.

Even if we could pass this motion, there has been a total lack of political will evidenced on the other side of the House. It is six years, almost to the day, since Bill C-45 was passed to look after the occupational health and safety interests of employees of the House of Commons. Part III would set up joint health and safety committees with some teeth and influence in this place so that we could clean up the problems in the Wellington and Confederation Buildings having to do with asbestos.

People are working in asbestos and do not know it. They do not know what to do about it when they do find it, and nobody makes them do anything about it even when it is discovered. This government has simply refused to proclaim Part III which it, we, and the Liberal Party all passed almost six years ago to the day. That shows the kind of lack of political will there is here.

While I support wholeheartedly the motion of my colleague from Ottawa South, until we get a government with some political will, I doubt that it will do much good. I think the hon. member for Ottawa South will probably agree with me when I point out that we do not even need a new national research centre. I think the member would probably agree that the Canadian Centre of Occupational Health and Safety might be a good place from which to start.

After a great deal of pressure from this side of the House both from our party and the Liberal Party, the government has finally agreed in a half-baked sort of way to do what it can to keep the centre limping along at least until the next election. That is the hope of all of us. By giving them this job to do we could not only have some excellent expertise readily available, but we could give that institution a new lease on life by giving it another major project that they already have some experience in to be able to conduct some work on behalf of all of us.

• (1740)

I said that I was not going to comment in detail on many of the specific problems, but I would like to urge all hon. members and anyone in the public who is interested in the air quality in their homes, their factories, or their workplaces, to see a Public Service Alliance of Canada film that I attended the première of a few months ago on the sick building syndrome. Watching a few minutes of that video would do more to convince all of us how serious these problems really are, not just for our employees or for employees generally, but also for those of us who work or live in buildings that are still not healthy places.

The Public Service Alliance of Canada did a commendable job in producing a film that the layman can understand. Again I urge all members to view it. I will not say any more at this point except to say—and I am not giving any hints to people out there in the workplace—that we know of the sick building syndrome in Ottawa and of some of the towers that we have had here, resulting from the energy crisis and the NEP related laws a few years ago.

Sometimes I think that a sledgehammer through a few windows around this capital would do a lot more to clean up and create a healthy workplace than lobbying for laws and enforcement to get some fresh air into some of these buildings. Better that than wait months and perhaps years more before we finally get a government with the gumption and the nerve actually to do something about its problems.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Tétreault (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I am thankful for the opportunity to provide this House with an update on recent and current initiatives undertaken by Health and Welfare Canada to maintain and improve the health of federal government employees. Not the least of these is the department's ongoing investigation and monitoring of indoor air quality in facilities where its employees work. However, experience has shown that problems of indoor air quality often arise in conjuction with other problems in the work environment. And so, before speaking specifically of recent actions connected with indoor air quality control, I think it would be opportune to situate those activities within the broader framework of the department's overall approach to maintaining a healthy workforce. I am certain that the hon. member, given his obvious interest in the health and well-being of public servants, will find the following thumbnail sketch of Health and Welfare's activity in this important area both valuable and informative.

Health and Welfare Canada is fully cognizant of the threat posed to the health of its employees by exposure to contaminants in the air inside office buildings and has, for some time now, been taking countermeasures to ensure against this potential danger. This mission is carried out by the Public Service Health Directorate of the Medical Services Branch, which provides a high quality and comprehensive program of occupational and environmental health services to client groups. These services consist of health protection and promotion activities designed to support and enhance the physical, mental and social well-being of clients, and include: environmental and health surveillance that focuses on the health and well-being of the individual and the physical environment where people work; education and health promotion activities aimed at encouraging healthy living and working habits and the reduction of detrimental or hazardous activities in the workplace, at home, and in the community; counselling and employee assistance services to assist, support and enhance the ability of federal public servants to carry out their activities and responsibilities in the workplace in a safe, healthy productive manner; and consultative and advisory services to federal departments concerning the health of employees in the workplace.

The Public Service Health Directorate is responsible for providing these services to federal public servants, people working in federal facilities, residents of Indian communities, the travelling public, V.I.P. visitors to Canada, and in the Yukon Territory, for the provision of environmental health services on behalf of the Yukon Territorial Government. It is also worth mentioning that the Public Service Health Program co-ordinates these activities and services with other departments and agencies of the federal government and other sectors of the Canadian health care system.

The Public Service Health activity maintains an occupational health program for more than 240,000 employees in the Public Service of Canada. Its tasks are to promote occupational health and safety; to provide health services designed to ensure the health and well-being of all federal employees, regardless of location; and to minimize the incidence of work-related illness. These tasks are carried out by a variety of professional staff including Environmentel Health Officers, Occupational Health Nurses, Employee Assistance Advisors/ Consultants and licensed physicians. The Public Service Health Program also operates a clinic in Ottawa which is the main vehicle for providing health services to federal employees in the National Capital Region and the foreign service. There is also an Occupational Health Unit which is responsible for the provision of consultative, field and analytical services to regional personnel concerned with occupational and environmental health programs.

The Employee Assistance Program, which is part of the Public Service Health Program, is designed to help organizations implement procedures to effectively prevent employee problems from affecting their job performance and to create a route whereby employees with a problem are referred to the best professional resource available. In compliance with the Treasury Board policy of 1977, Employee Assistance Services are available at every federal government worksite.

Pre-employment and periodic health examinations are conducted on many occupational groups of federal public servants in order to protect their health and safety, that of their co-workers, and the general public. A major review of this activity, with participation from other federal departments including the Department of National Defence, Corrections Canada and Transport Canada is scheduled for completion in 1990. Among other things, there will be an attempt to replace routine annual examinations with screening examinations tailored to the needs of specific occupational groups.

The Occupational Health Unit of the Public Service Health organization provides analytical and field services which includes special investigations and studies of specific work sites; analysis of data, samples and specimens; remedial recommendations, where appropriate; educational sessions for occupational health staff and employing departments; plus technical support for professional staff in the field. Assistance is also provided to regionally based Environmental Health Officers across the country who deal with environmental conditions and hazards to the health of public servants in the workplace. They provide services which include monitoring, surveillance and educational services to all federal facilities and workplaces.

It is the Environmental Health Officers who carry out investigations of air quality complaints, normally at the request of federal government departments. They can request a stop work order if a serious hazard is found in a public service workplace and will make recommendations to correct the problem or remove the risk. They liaise with other departments and agencies such as Labour Canada, Public Works and Environment Canada. They co-operate in solving problems and exchange professional information about areas of mutual concern.

They work closely with departmental managers and health and safety committees.

Having described the program structure by which Health and Welfare Canada carries out its health in the workplace responsibilities, I would now like to mention a few of the more outstanding examples of indoor air contaminants investigations recently carried out, since it is this particular area of this activity that interests the hon. member.

On October 29, 1988, the Department of National Defence closed its Lancaster Park Supply Depot in Edmonton, Alberta, following an epidemic of complaints from employees of stuffiness of the nose, itching and irritation of exposed skin, and soreness of the eyes and throat. An extensive survey was carried out by PSH staff in order to identify the problem and make recommendations to DND officials. Following a survey and examination of employees by occupational health nurses, and physicians, and where necessary, dermatologists, and an environmental survey by Environmental Health Officers, it was recommended that the warehouse air be humidified, avoiding chemical irritants in the atmosphere and that adequate dust control with particular reference to fiberglass be instituted; and that vigilance concerning asbestos be maintained.

• (1750)

A full cleanup operation took place in May, 1989. All staff returned to work and the warehouse is now operational. Further steps were taken to promote the health and well-being of the workforce such as promotions and presentations on lifestyles and health; occupational cancer and diseases associated with asbestos.

No discussion of indoor contaminants would be complete without mentioning tobacco smoke. According to studies done by Health and Welfare for the period 1984-1989, tobacco smoke was identified as a primary culprit in the contamination of indoor air. Until roughly 1987, environmental tobacco smoke was ubiquitous in Canadian federal workplaces, and was accepted by most investigators as a normal constituent of indoor air that did not merit comment in reports. More recently, perceptions of Health and Welfare Canada investigators have changed. By 1987, some of them considered environmental tobacco smoke to be a significant contaminant. By 1988, for a number of reasons, smoke-free federal workplaces were being seen. On January 1, 1989, a smoking ban in all federal workplaces came into effect.

From what I have said, I think it is obvious that the federal government has been implementing a national strategy for reducing the threats posed by exposure to contaminants in the air indoors. Of course, more can always be done, and this is happening as well. Right now, Health and Welfare Canada is assisting in the financing and promotion of the Fifth International Conference on Indoor Air Quality and Climate: Indoor Air '90, which will take place July 29 to August 3, 1990, in Toronto.

[English]

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I want to start by thanking my colleague from Ottawa South for his motion and for the non-partisan and thoughtful way in which he has brought to the attention of the House a serious problem that needs to be addressed.

I was concerned to hear the parliamentary secretary refer to some suggestion that perhaps my colleague might have been critical of the NRC in his comments, that he might have been unaware of the work the NRC is doing in this field, and of the efforts being made to make their work available, known and used by building owners and managers throughout the country.

I think the comments were entirely unwarranted. No one who has sat in the House for any period of time and listened to the debates can be unaware that my colleague from Ottawa South has been instrumental in bringing to the attention of the House, the government and the public, the very serious damage being done to the National Research Council and to its contributions to science and technology in this country, and his very strong defence of the role of the National Research Council in all aspects of its work.

One would normally think that when a group of employees move to a new building, and in the case of many public service employees from temporary buildings that had existed from the time of the Second World War, that those employees would be just delighted with their new accommodations, happy to settle in, to have straight and even floors for the first time in their working life. In fact, that is not what happened. From the minute certain buildings in the national capital region were opened and occupied, there were persistent and serious complaints from employees about the effects on their health from working in those buildings.

I do not think people moved into those buildings and suddenly starting looking for something to complain about. If anything, at least superficially, their working environment had been substantially improved and normally they would be overjoyed.

It has been a long effort to bring to the attention of employers the problems of the buildings in which they work. I do not intend to repeat the excellent information that has been put before the House by my colleague, but in 1988 the Public Service Alliance of Canada eventually out of frustration went to the point of actually producing a rather thick document for its members. Because the normal process of trying to bring their complaints to the attention of management simply were not being dealt with, they literally put out for their members a manual on how to deal with their complaints, how to identify the problem, how to document those problems and how to get action on those problems.

The manual they put out for their members outlines quite clearly that we are dealing with "sick buildings" and that the effect of working in sick buildings is sick people. The symptoms worsen during the day and as the week progresses and most disappear on the weekend. There has been some tendency on the part of management and government to think that they are dealing with a group of hypochondriacs, and to take these problems less than seriously. I do not think any responsible employer can believe that a group of employees suddenly turn into hypochondriacs overnight. These are very real problems, they are not unknown to the international scientific community and they deserve the very serious attention of government.

As well, people not working for government are subject to the same problems as we try to control our use of energy, make our buildings more airtight and produce a more controlled environment. Apparently we have also produced very sick environments. We seem to be less aware of it in North America. Already in Europe some governments have made significant progress in determining the causes and solutions to the sick building problem.

My colleague from Ottawa South has brought forward a motion which hopefully will improve our knowledge of this problem, and make us aware that solutions must be found. I am sorry that the government members have decided that this is a bill that should not be voted on because I think it is one that is eminently in the public interest.

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to discuss the subject of indoor air quality.

The public has always been concerned with air pollution but until a short time ago the focus was mainly on outdoor air quality and the release a chemicals into the atmosphere. It is now recognized that non-industrial indoor environments can contribute significantly to human exposure to airborne pollutants. The Department of National Health and Welfare has been involved with indoor air quality for at least a decade and remains active in this area.

In 1980, through the federal-provincial Advisory Committee on Environmental and Occupational Health, a working group on indoor air quality was established for which the Department of National Health and Welfare provided support.

In 1987, the Department of National Health and Welfare published, on behalf of the advisory committee, exposure guidelines for residential indoor air quality which presented guidelines and recommendations on 18 substances or groups of substances. To our knowledge, these were the first guidelines on indoor air quality established in any jurisdiction in the world. This year the guidelines have even been expanded to include radon and a new edition is now being published. Work in the department is continuing to identify other contaminants of concern which will be included in future editions of the indoor air quality guidelines.

Also, in 1987, the department published a report entitled Significance of Fungi in Indoor Air—A Report of a Working Group. This document, prepared by a departmental working group, reviewed the emerging issue of moulds and fungi as indoor air pollutants and potential hazards to health.

The current indoor air quality guidelines are restricted to residential buildings. The quality of air in many offices though falls within the responsibility of provincial governments to monitor and regulate. Unfortunately, many of the most conspicuous problems have to do with air quality in non-residential settings, namely offices, schools and public buildings. As a result, a new federal-provincial working group has been formed to investigate these problems.

• (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 96(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing order 38 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I asked a number of questions a few months ago now, I think on December 8 in the case of one and January 23 in the case of the other, of the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs and the hon. Minister of Fisheries of the day. My questions concerned the seizure of two Canadian fishing vessels, the Fonzie and the Viscount within Canadian waters on July 5, 1989. Those fishermen were accused by the United States of fishing above what is known as the A-B line, which is the boundary demarcation between Canadian waters on the one hand and Alaskan waters on the other.

The fishermen themselves had the A-B line programmed in their loran, so they were aware that they were fishing in Canadian waters, but in order to avoid a dispute with the American Coast Guard, which had been harassing Canadian fishermen in the area at that time, they steamed south farther into Canadian waters to avoid contact with the United States Coast Guard.

Nine hours later, the U.S. Coast Guard came into Canadian waters, far into Canadian waters in what they called "hot pursuit", although it could hardly be called "hot pursuit" nine hours after the initial contact with these two fishermen. The Coast Guard steamed into Canadian waters and seized those Canadian fishermen inside Canadian waters.

When the boats were seized, or boarded by the U.S. Coast Guard, the Canadian fishermen contacted External Affairs through the local fisheries officer and were assured that Canada would provide legal assistance to the fishermen. If they simply surrendered to the U.S. Coast Guard, they would get legal assistance afterward.

In fact, they were seized and after their boats were taken to Ketchikan, Alaska, they were unceremoniously thrown out of the United States until their hearing, and these fishermen got absolutely no assistance from this government. In fact, they had difficulty getting the government even to answer their letters concerning the assistance promised by Coast Guard radio.

What a way to treat Canadian fishermen, legally fishing in Canadian waters, doing what Canadian fishermen are permitted to do as a consequence of their licences and their Canadian citizenship.

After the seizure of the boats, the federal government refused to help. It was only after lobbying from the Pacific Trollers Association, the fishing organization that represents the two fishermen on the west coast of British Columbia, and only after representations from members of Parliament in this House and the two questions that I asked, one on December 8 to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and one on January 23 to the Minister of Fisheries, that the government promised some assistance.

The provincial minister responsible for fisheries in British Columbia also came to their assistance. As a result of these combined lobbying efforts, the Minister of Fisheries and the Secretary of State for External Affairs decided to come down with a paltry $25,000 supposedly to help these fishermen pursue their case in Alaska.

Because of the small amount of the aid, these fishermen could not pursue the case and had to drop the case. As a result, they lost a part of their catch and a substantial amount of fishing time. One of the fishermen who lives in my constituency may be forced to give up his house because he mortgaged his house in order to finance his boat, his fishing and also to finance his legal fees. The federal government, although it had promised assistance, never delivered the required amount. As a result, at least one of these fishermen has ended up bankrupt.

The concern that fishermen have on the west coast is that they are wondering if this government is going to defend the right of Canadian fishermen to fish in Canadian waters.

• (1805)

Is this government, having promised to provide legal assistance to fishermen who get into problems with the United States Coast Guard, which is known to harass Canadian fishermen fishing from Canadian vessels inside Canadian waters in order to try to advance their territorial claim in Dixon Entrance south of the A–B line, going to protect those fishermen? To date this government has not shown the backbone or the courage to do that and now many fishermen on the west coast feel that if you want to get protected by the Canadian government when you are fishing legally in Canadian waters, it is probably better to have a United States passport.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I want to thank the hon. member opposite for bringing this forward again in this House. I must say that in listening to his remarks, I could not disagree with him more fully.

Yes, it is true that on July 5 of last year, two Canadian vessels the Fonzie and Viscount were arrested in the Dixon Entrance, one and a quarter miles south of the A–B line in an area that is claimed by Canada and the U.S. It is alleged that they were illegally fishing earlier that day in the undisputed U.S. waters. Both captains deny that they had crossed the boundary into the disputed U.S. waters in Alaska.

At the time of the arrest, the fishermen sought advice from the government. The statements that were made by the Canadian Coast Guard radio led the fishermen to believe that they had received an undertaking from the government for legal assistance.

From the time of the incident, the government has worked continually to persuade the U.S. authorities to drop the charges because the arrests were a violation of an understanding between Canada and the U.S. on mutual restraint in the disputed area. Legal assistance was provided through diplomatic channels and the provision of advice to aid their case. The Canadian Embassy in Washington twice protested the arrests of the Canadian crews and vessels by the U.S. Coast Guard in Dixon Entrance and requested their immediate release and the dropping of charges. The arrests were also protested in Ottawa by the Department of External Affairs to the U.S. Embassy at the level of senior officials.

In addition, Canada's concerns over these incidents were raised repeatedly at bilateral enforcement meetings. During discussions with senior U.S. officials in Ottawa on August 2 and September 25, and again in Washington, D.C., on December 18, we requested that the civil charges against the vessels be dropped. In April of this year, a tentative out of court settlement was reached with the Alaskan government. The agreement should be finalized imminently.

The government provided all forms of legal assistance in this case normally provided to Canadians facing charges outside Canada. Moreover, in view of the exceptional circumstances that existed in this particular case, financial assistance in the amount of $25,000 was provided to the Pacific Trollers Association to contribute to the association's efforts to help the Canadian fishermen operate in the disputed boundary areas off the B.C. coast. These efforts should ensure that fishermen have a better understanding of the legal and enforcement issues in the disputed zone in Dixon Entrance in order to prevent such incidents as occurred last summer.

Newly developed guidelines for fishermen concerning the disputed zone in Dixon Entrance are now available from the department. Guidelines for use by the Canadian Coast Guard concerning boundary incidents will also be finalized shortly.

I want to make it abundantly clear that the Government of Canada is concerned. The A–B line constitutes the international boundary for all purposes in Dixon Entrance and the government is determined to ensure that Canadian fishing vessels have unimpeded access to all Canadian waters, including Dixon Entrance.

In this regard, a public meeting will be held on June 21 in Prince Rupert with fishermen's groups, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the External Affairs officials to discuss issues related to the boundary in Dixon Entrance.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on December 7 of last year, I rose in this House to ask the Prime Minister, in the wake of recent reforms and economic hardships in the Soviet Union, when he was going to help President Gorbachev, give him something tangible to enable him to meet the population's expectations.

My question was responded to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and with all due respect, I did not receive a satisfactory response. Maybe the Parliamentary Secretary today will give me a better one.

• (1810)

The Prime Minister had recently returned from a trip to the Soviet Union where he claimed that "in terms of bilateral co-operation the visit marked a watershed in Canada-Soviet Union relations. We signed 14 bilateral agreements—more than had been signed in the previous 20 years—on subjects ranging from international affairs to Arctic co-operation, to the environment, to military and cultural co-operation, to investment protection".

Since that day, which was November 27, 1989, as this House knows we have had various visits from Soviet officials, parliamentarians such as today's parliamentary delegation of the Supreme Soviet led by Mr. Rafik Nishanov and most recently, of course, Mr. Gorbachev himself. I have yet to hear any details as to whether there has been any progress or success with respect to these 14 agreements.

I cannot help but feel rather cynical about the intent of the government when it signs such sweeping agreements, all-encompassing agreements, especially in areas where the government's own commitment is highly questionable. Examples would be the agreements on the Arctic and on the environment.

It was brought to our attention in the time leading up to the recent summit on the environment that Canada had made a behind the scenes deal with the United States and Britain to veto a proposal offered by several other countries on the levels of reduction for CFs. Such behaviour truly undermines any effort we may want to make internationally on any given issue. At home we are not even able to get an already watered down green plan off the ground.

Ideas are great if they are followed by substantive goals and objectives which can be measured by results within time frames by successive re-evaluation, re-examination, revision.

We have the same problem with PCBs in our food chain in the north. Granted, there seems to be a will to do something. The Prime Minister himself on that same day offered an endorsement by President Gorbachev toward co-operation in the Arctic with respect to this very issue, but there is a long distance between endorsing and doing something about it. What guarantees did we get that this would become a priority for the Soviet Union?

We are fast losing any influence that we may have had on events around the world. What Canada says these days is met almost with a polite impatience as we self-importantly and self-righteously condemn or congratulate as we see fit.

When we get assurances from the Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union that medical supplies are reaching and will continue to reach Lithuania, and they do not, we seem surprised and almost shocked, as if we had done something wrong. I am not surprised or shocked, because for the last six years, I and my colleagues on this side of the House have watched this government become merely a shadow and a voice piece for the Government of the United States.

The opportunity to show leadership has risen again. The changing face of eastern Europe and the Soviet Union has presented Canada with a rare chance to take the initiative in the inevitable changing role of NATO.

Yet what do we hear? On the one hand, we hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs propose a new direction for NATO by rejecting the policy of maintaining nuclear weapons in Europe. On the other hand, we hear senior External Affairs departmental officials say that Canada continues to support the strategy of maintaining a mix of nuclear and conventional weapons in Europe. I thought it was the politicians who set policy and the bureaucrats were there to administer it. It seems it is the other way around here.

For once I think that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is moving in the right direction. The time has come for NATO to take up responsibilities that better represent and better serve the present day realities.

Were NATO to become less threatening by giving up on the traditional argument of nuclear weapons as the ultimate deterrence, we may find the Soviet Union less paranoid of a united Germany and more willing to dismantle its forces, other than as we heard Mr. Gorbachev say when he left the United States that this could lead to another cold war if we insist that the united Germany be a member of NATO.

I truly feel that isolating the United States, Britain and France, the only members of NATO who are developing air-launched nuclear weapons to replace land-based nuclear missiles and artillery, and showing them up as countries with misplaced and outdated policies will serve to further the call from the international community to re-evaluate global priorities.

I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs first to clarify his position—and I hope that his position is that of rejecting current policy—and stick to his proposal during his meeting on June 7 and June 8 of the North Atlantic Council so that we are allowed to play a central role as NATO transforms itself and so that Canada can be free to promote peacekeeping processes, peacekeeping forces, and become truly a nation that can once again make peace a priority as it did under Liberal governments under Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Pearson, St. Laurent, et cetera.

• (1815)

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am glad I am in the House because I think some of the points that have just been mentioned by the hon. member do require a response. I would like to say that I recall his question in this House last December very well. In fact, as reported at page 6612 of Hansard for December 7, 1989, the hon. member stated that the Prime Minister "has just set back the termination of the cold war for another 10 years".

The overstatement and the hyperbole involved in that assessment is unfortunately typical of the strain that is carrying through some of his assessment late this afternoon in his continuing review of the many different facets of what is happening in eastern and central Europe, the Soviet Union, and the Canadian response to it.

He wound up, with his heart covered, almost with a Liberal Party appeal to the memory of Lester Pearson and Pierre Trudeau and Canadian policy in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union in those days. There is not a person on this planet who does not recognize that there has been a change in the relations in those countries.

We have seen a shift from totalitarianism to democratic regimes. We have seen a shift from the Communist Party domination to multi-party states. We have seen a shift from centrally planned economies to the market economy. We have seen the cold war ending in place of pursuit of collective security and dialogue. The very kind of meeting that was held in this city last week between our Prime Minister and Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and between our Secretary of State for External Affairs and Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze give clear evidence of the highest attention that is being paid to the continuing evolution of Canadian policy in that region.

The hon. member, as he is his party's critic for External Affairs, has touched many different aspects and issues in his brief remarks, too many to respond to in total right now. However, I would refer him to the excellent discussion and debate which we had in this House last Thursday on the whole question of Canadian foreign policy in eastern Europe. There was a lot that was put on the record, to which I would refer him, at that time showing how in very specific ways the government is continuing to follow up on these agreements that were assigned last November in the Soviet Union. The Prime Minister suggested that the Soviet Union have observer status at GATT. Since the Prime Minister made that suggestion, the GATT has agreed to grant the Soviet Union observer status.

I could go on as I did last Thursday when again then you had to cut me off, Mr. Speaker, but the list is so long of positive action that I commend it to the hon. member for close study.

TRANSPORT

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak again on an issue of very serious concern to the business community of the national capital region, and that is the lack of direct air service from this region to the American midwest. It is having a serious effect on business in this region and on the attempts of our local business community to diversify the economic base, which have met with substantial success, and to become part of the growing market from here to the year 2000 for tourism and conference business.

The business community of Ottawa-Carleton, and of the entire national capital region, are not asking for any preferential treatment. They are simply asking for objective and fair treatment of the government to ensure that they are able to enjoy the kind of access to their markets and to their customers that is enjoyed by virtually every metropolitan region in the country.

The national capital region is the fourth largest urban metropolitan area in Canada, and yet it is the only major urban centre in Canada—the only one—that is discriminated against in this way. Under the bilateral air agreements between Canada and the United States it is the only urban centre specifically denied the right to direct air service to the American mid-west. This situation has existed since 1966 and has been ignored in one subsequent round of negotiations with the Americans on the bilateral air agreement.

• (1820)

The business community has proposed a simple solution. It has documented the need for the service. It has secured the support of American officials for a minor change. It has convinced American Airlines to provide this service on a regular daily basis between the National Capital Region and Chicago, providing access to its markets and customers in the American mid-west. It has documented the harm being done to the local business community because this service is not available.

The solution is quite simple. The service that is now available between Montreal and Chicago can be extended by declaring Ottawa a co-terminal with the Montreal airport. That would allow the airline to simply service Ottawa as well as Montreal as part of the same route.

An even simpler solution has now been proposed to the government by American Airlines and as yet has not been responded to.

I want to address briefly some of the important impacts the lack of this service is having on the business community locally.

First, I want to quote from a letter from the Minister for International Trade, who was then Minister of Transport, to Len Potechin who is now Chairman of the Ottawa Economic Development Corporation and is a past chairman of the Ottawa Carleton Board of Trade. In that letter, the minister agreed that Ottawa should have more international flights and suggested that "the real challenge is to persuade Canadian and foreign airlines that Ottawa is a market worth serving". The minister also states, "It is hoped that business leaders like you will continue to try to attract international visitors to Ottawa, as it is only through traffic demand that international service will be developed".

The local business community did indeed do its homework. It spent substantial time and substantial amounts of money documenting exactly what the minister asked it to do in April, 1987.

I want to put a bit of an historical perspective on this. In the early 1970s, Ottawa as a community and the entire region faced the need to start diversifying its economy and becoming less dependent on the federal government for employment. It did that. It developed a strong and reasonably stable, but still fragile high technology base that has become the core of the high technology industry in Canada. It developed a conference and tourism business and invested in a conference centre specifically to attract international business which is going to be the bulk of tourism business by the year 2000.

It has become the economic hub of eastern Ontario as conjunction with its sister city, Hull, was to western Quebec, an area that is recognized as an economically disadvantaged region not only in Ontario but in Canada.

Now we find that many of our high technology companies, in order to service their clients, are having to establish offices in the United States. It is simply not productive for business people, who could normally take a two hour flight to be at their business destination, to have to leave Ottawa for Toronto in order to reach American markets. We know that Toronto is congested and delays are extensive and frequent because of the over-crowding and the safety measures that have had to be taken at Pearson International to restrict the number of flights landing at any given period of time. These delays have often meant missed flights. As a result, a business trip that could take place in one day often requires an overnight stay, extra expenditure, and extra wear and tear on extremely valuable and talented personnel.

• (1825)

The community has documented the need for this service. It did exactly what the Minister of Transport advised. It had a very extensive survey done. In fact, it used the results of that study to persuade KLM to provide direct regular service to Amsterdam, which is now happening. It used it to persuade Wardair to provide direct and frequent service to Gatwick Airport in London.

The Government of Canada is the only party it is unable to persuade that these studies are valid, the services needed, and would produce economic benefits not only for the urban area but for the entire region, and with respect to the high technology sector, for the entire country.

The community is upset that the government has said to open up trade, to go out and compete and then ties one hand behind their back. It is concerned that in a deregulated atmosphere when it is now dealing with private air companies, it is giving preferential treatment to airlines in Canada, protecting them from competition on a route that they do not want to service.

Why is the government putting the interest of a private airline and its profits ahead of the interests of an entire business community? That is the question the business community of the National Capital Region is asking.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my remarks address the hon. member's question about why the government has not approved the proposal by the Ottawa–Carleton Economic Development Corporation for a new Ottawa–Chicago air service. As was stated in the House on February 19, by the former Minister of Transport, this government has been sensitive to the request but the proposal posed certain difficulties.

Air services between Canada and the United States are governed by bilateral air agreements, particularly the Main Air Services Agreement of 1966 which the member opposite mentioned, last revised in 1974. There is no provision in this agreement for an Ottawa–Chicago service. The inclusion of a provision for an Ottawa–Chicago service in the agreement would require that the agreement be amended to meet the requirements of the National Transportation Act. Amendments normally come about through government–to–government negotiations.

Therefore, the government cannot unilaterally approve the service in question, even if the proposal made by the Ottawa–Carleton business community contemplates service by an American carrier.

More importantly, Canada prefers a broadly–based pro–competitive approach that seeks to provide efficient air services to all our communities and opportunities for our air carrier industry. This cannot be achieved on the basis of piecemeal negotiations focusing exclusively on the needs of a single community.

When negotiations are undertaken with the United States, they will have to take an account of the national interest, including the aspirations of other Canadian cities that have made representations for improved services, and here I am thinking of Halifax, Edmonton, Calgary, Winnipeg, to name but a few.

Let me assure you that Ottawa's request, along with those of other Canadian communities, has been given serious consideration. The government, however, is not prepared to take actions at this time on behalf of a single community which could jeopardize Canada's ability to pursue a broadly–based re–negotiation of the Canada—U.S. air relationship on terms favourable to Canada and to all interested communities.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion that the House do now adjourn is deemed to have been adopted. The House therefore stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.29 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 6, 1990

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

IMMIGRATION

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the Minister of Employment and Immigration to halt the deportation of Mr. Jayantha Ilanderidewa, a refugee claimant from Sri Lanka.

Sri Lanka is one of the most violent countries in the world. As many as 20,000 people have been killed in that country in the last year. Many areas, particularly in the south where this man comes from, look like ghost towns.

Five members of Mr. Ilanderidewa's family have already been killed in the strife in that country. He has lost two brothers, two uncles and a cousin for their involvement with the JVP, the People's Liberation Front.

A Sri Lankan M.P. and human rights activist was recently shot dead outside the Canadian embassy. He was calling to arrange a visa for a speaking trip to Britain and North America.

The government should not be deporting people to Sri Lanka. I ask the minister to reconsider her decision.

* * *

D-DAY

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of the House that 46 years ago today was D-Day in Europe. June 6, 1944, D-Day, will always remain a memorable date in the history of the world.

Canadians can take pride in the knowledge that our services were a major part in this largest ever armada. Over 15,000 Canadians, a fifth of the total allied invasion force, established themselves on the Normandy beaches. Our army, the Royal Canadian Navy, and the Royal Canadian Air Force all played notable roles in the invasion.

As a country we can also take some comfort in the knowledge that the lessons learned during the disastrous Dieppe raid saved many lives on D-Day.

Canada suffered over 1,000 casualties on D-Day. The 5,400 Canadian graves in Normandy tell of the tough times that were to follow during the inland drive.

Mr. Speaker, 46 years ago the prospect of freedom came ashore in Normandy. Let us never forget those who were there for us on that day.

* * *

LITERACY

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, in 1987 the Southam Literacy Survey found that 45 per cent of those 65 or older have low literacy skills.

Although this is a shocking figure, we learned last week that the problem is much more serious. Statistics Canada revealed that 65 per cent of older Canadians have only fair to poor literacy skills.

Illiterate seniors may not be able to understand the directions for taking their medication. They may be unable to find the right bus, or an important phone number in the telephone book, or be unable to manage their own bank accounts.

Illiterate seniors must rely on a network of friends and family for assistance. When the support network breaks down they may find themselves unable to cope with their daily survival, resulting in premature institutionalization.

Why this lack of literacy skills among older Canadians? Not because they are unable to learn, Mr. Speaker, but because existing literacy programs too often neglect the special needs of older learners.

We have a responsibility to our seniors to address their specific literacy needs. One Voice, The Seniors' Network, is developing a national literacy strategy for older Canadians to be completed by the fall.

I urge this House to ensure the implementation of that strategy.

* * *

[Translation]

LE PAVOIS

Mr. Marcel Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, to many of us, schizophrenia means little, but it is a very serious illness whose causes are insufficiently known, and it creates tremendous problems for its victims and their families.

It is an illness that many people do not understand and it is also frightening, and because of that, people are reluctant to get involved with those suffering from schizophrenia.

Last week, in my riding of Québec-Est, I visited a new community agency founded by a woman directly concerned by the problem of mental illness, who works very hard to rehabilitate patients.

Le Pavois is, first of all, a psycho-social club where a person suffering from this disease can meet fellow sufferers. Together, under the skilfull direction of a social worker and three specialized group leaders provided under the federal government's Job Development Program, these people work to regain the self-confidence they have lost as a result of their illness, and they learn skills that will eventualy help them return to the labour market.

Mr. Speaker, this work deserves our admiration and should be supported in every way possible.

* * *

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the proposed goods and services tax will apply to public utilities commissions, thereby adding an additional 7 per cent on electricity bills. Canadians view electricity as a right and not just as a service. Electricity is as much a necessity as water, groceries, sewer services and garbage collection and, therefore, should not be taxed.

Public utilities commissions have predicted that the proposed goods and services tax, combined with their normal rate increases, will push electricity bills up by 15 per cent or more in 1991 in the riding of Kenora—Rainy River.

Consumers will already be faced with a barrage of increases as a result of the proposed goods and services tax. As a basic, necessary service, electricity should be exempt from the proposed GST. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the goods and services tax should be scrapped entirely.

I call on the government to scrap the proposed goods and services tax and if it refuses to do the honourable thing, then I would suggest that it identify electricity as a necessity of life and therefore exempt it from this inflationary tax.

* * *

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, even as I speak Canada's Prime Minister and the 10 premiers are meeting in a last-ditch effort to resolve some of our constitutional differences. Most Canadians are conscious of the dangers that face our country should these 11 leaders fail in their task.

However, one of my constituents, Don Armstrong, Secretary-Treasurer of the Boissevain Legion, perhaps said it best when he in a recent open letter implored me to do my personal utmost "to halt the current trend toward the disintegration of Canada". He went on to state: "Stop those who are doing so from only thinking and talking in terms of deadlines, 'inevitable results' and 'regional realities'. Stop them from thinking in terms of re-election and party policies. Rather, publicly encourage the idea of Canada the nation, Canada the strong, united country, a world symbol of opportunity, bounty and tolerance."

• (1410)

In closing, I want to add my voice to those thousands of others who plead with those meeting just a few hundred yards away to remember that they must be Canadians first and politicians second. The future of Canada depends on those who lead today.

NUTRITIONAL HEALTH

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, this morning I had the opportunity to meet with members of the Canadian Dietetic Association which represents more than 4,500 dietitians dedicated to helping Canadians toward better health.

They are concerned that Canadians are faced with food insecurity through shortages and limitations of choice. The CDA made hunger a priority issue. Food banks are the best evidence of food shortages.

According to the report released yesterday by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, there are 2.8 million adults, many single-parent families headed by women, and over one million Canadian children living in poverty in 1986.

The CDA points out that there is a lack of information regarding many different aspects of the nutritional value and food intakes of the poor.

There is a growing recognition of the role of nutrition in the promotion of health and treatment of disease. Limited access to food can have a detrimental effect on physical and mental health.

I urge this government to take immediate action to adopt and promote the goal of food security for all Canadians and to combat the growing feminization of poverty.

* * *

[Translation]

PARTAGE HUMANITAIRE

Mr. Jacques Tétreault (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, on May 29, more than 1,200 people attended the annual benefit supper of Partage humanitaire. Established in 1971, this non-profit agency, the oldest local agency of its kind in Laval, focuses exclusively on senior citizens and the handicapped. Mrs. Pierrette Patenaude, member of the Laval executive committee, was one of the agency's most committed and energetic founding members. General manager of Partage humanitaire from 1982 to 1990, Mrs. Patenaude is now honorary chairman, leaving Mrs. Carmelle Lefebvre as general manager.

The services of this agency, enjoyed by more than 1,000 people in 28 institutions, are provided by 16 group leaders and about 350 casual volunteer workers—that in a nutshell, represents Partage humanitaire and its community involvement during the past year.

I am proud to see that the federal government supports this outstanding humanitarian cause through its job development programs.

Thank you, Partage humanitaire, and our thanks you to all those who make it possible!

* * *

[English]

THE SENATE

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, I must voice my profound frustration with the actions of the Senate. Prior to 1984, there was only one incident of Senate obstruction. Since 1984, the Liberal-controlled Senate has blocked two supply bills, held up drug patent legislation, refugee legislation and a copyright bill.

More recently, the Senate has delayed the passage of the unemployment insurance bill for almost seven months. It has delayed the passage of Bill C-28 for close to six months. When the Senate received the GST bill, it decided to take a three week vacation. I have no doubt that with its return, active stalling will begin in earnest.

As part of the elected Parliament, I feel it impossible to fulfil my duties to my constituents when my attempts to carry out their wishes are continually frustrated by the other place. There must be Senate reform and it must come soon.

* * *

SOVIET PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Spasibo, Mr. Speaker.

I rise to welcome the parliamentary delegation of the Supreme Soviet led by Rafik Nishanov, Chairman of the Soviet Nationalities of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

This visit is part of a regular exchange program between the Parliament of Canada and the Supreme Soviet. It follows the visit of last August to the Soviet Union by a Canadian parliamentary delegation led by the Speakers of the House of Commons and the Senate.

I am particularly pleased to welcome the delegation because, together with my colleagues on the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, I visited Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev a month ago. During the course of that visit, the committee was treated with the greatest warmth and hospitality. Moreover, we found that our often probing questions and critical comments were responded to with openness and candour.

I think I can speak for all my colleagues in the House of Commons when I say that we applaud the new era of glasnost and perestroika in the Soviet Union. Moreover, we recognize the obligation to undertake the new thinking about relations between our two countries, the future of east-west relations and our common responsibility for the fate of the planet. Again, a warm welcome to the House of Commons and to Canada.

* * *

CORPORATE TAXATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, we have a first for the corporate welfare bum of the week. A winner by acclamation. It is the privatized Route Canada, and its friends in the Conservative government. The Mulroney government sold the $100 million company for $29 million in 1986.

Route Canada was sold to Manfred Ruhland, the Road Warrior, and Dave and Paul Fingold, capitalists without capital. The cabinet knew that Mr. Ruhland was such a credit risk that he could not even get a credit card. The buyers of Route Canada never put up a penny of their own money. They just took out a mortgage on the land owned by the company. Soon after buying the company without spending a penny, Mr. Ruhland went on a spending spree, using Route Canada money to send his family to Austria and his mother's dogs to Italy.

The company went bankrupt 20 months after the sale. For throwing 1,900 people out of work, Route Canada is the corporate welfare bum of the week, with credit going to the federal cabinet.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

It was reported today in The Globe and Mail, "Report on Business" by Ken Romain that, "shackled by high interest rates which are biting deep, car sales by the North American manufacturers fell by 22 per cent" in the month of May, compared to a year ago. This is the fourth straight month that auto sales have declined.

Why will the Minister not recognize that the automotive industry, a key sector of our economy, is being seriously damaged by this government's economic policies? When will the minister bring in policies that will reverse this decline, rather than encourage it and make it worse?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member would do the country a greater service if he would point at what the true causes of the interest rate policy that we have been following are. That is the underlying cost pressure in the economy, as set out yesterday in a study from Wood Gundy, which is very consistent with the message that I have been making to the House through committees and speeches across the country. We must get our underlying cost structure under control.

I remind the hon. member that in 1989, our unit labour cost, which is the broadest measure of our competitive position, increased by 4.9 per cent at the beginning of the year and by 6.9 per cent at the end of the year. Throughout 1989, the American unit labour cost increase was 4.9 per cent and it was a good deal less in Japan and Germany.

These are the things we are faced with. We must get these competitive cost structures under control in order to save jobs in the country.

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this same Wood Gundy report pointed out that the government's high dollar policy is one of the key reasons for any loss of competitiveness we are suffering. The government's own policy is causing the problem.

Auto makers like Bill Atkinson, vice-president of sales at GM Canada, are pointing the finger at the government's high interest rate policy. He said that "because of continued high interest rates, GM had expected a further softening of the market."

Othmar Stein of Chrysler Canada, said that interest rates and the softening economy are "spooking car buyers—Canadians are getting nervous, and they are hedging their bets."

Why does the Minister want to see automotive plants like Kelsey-Hayes in Windsor shutting down? When is he going to bring in economic policies that will create automotive jobs in Canada and not destroy them as his policies are doing right now?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to take exception and correct what the hon. member said in the preamble to his question. He said that the primary reason is the increase in the Canadian dollar. That is not so. That is not what Wood Gundy said.

They point out that compensation per person/hour rose by 8.2 per cent last year, a 6.5 per cent point premium over productivity gains, and the growth gap widened noticeably in 1989. They point out that the gap between compensation and productivity has widened steadily since 1985.

• (1420)

Throughout this whole report, the focus is the cost increases, not the level of the Canadian dollar. They talk about an alarming loss of competitiveness. This continual higher cost growth in Canada has led to a dramatic decline in our competitiveness. For the business sector as a whole, Canada's advantage in U.S. dollar denominated unit labour costs has shrunk from nearly 20 per cent in 1986 to only 5 per cent in 1989. It is—

An hon. member: We can read.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The hon. member says he can read. I would hope that he would read and learn.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I quote from the Wood Gundy report:

> The rise in the Canadian dollar has, of course, heightened even further the difficulty in which Canadian business now finds itself.

The minister wants to make the situation worse by the added cost to the economy of the GST.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the government wants Canadians to believe that the economy is in good shape. However, our manufacturing sector has lost 70,000 jobs since January. Last year, our trade surplus fell by more than 50 per cent. Finally, during the first quarter, the bankruptcy rate rose by 29 per cent.

I have the following question for the Minister of Finance: When will he introduce economic policies that will boost the economy, not strangle it?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if we listen very carefully to what the Leader of the Opposition said, he was drawing conclusions based on the symptoms of the problem. I do not question the symptoms of the problem. Our job as a government is to deal with the cause of the problem.

An hon. member: You are the cause of the problem.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The cause of the problem as set out very clearly by the Wood Gundy study is the growing loss of competitiveness in the Canadian economy. The loss of competitiveness is related directly to the increasing cost structure, primarily wages, in the Canadian manufacturing sectors.

Since 1986, manufacturing costs in Canada have risen 10 per cent faster than in the United States and Germany, and 20 per cent faster than in Japan. If we do not get these costs under control in Canada, we will suffer a further loss.

* * *

[Translation]

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, as my leader did yesterday, to keep us and the nation informed of developments at the Conference Centre with respect to the constitutional question.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, and as was indicated by all first ministers coming out of their sessions yesterday, there has been some progress on a number of issues. There still remain a number of difficult issues to be undertaken. While there has been progress on some individual items, it is such that, until such time as there is a broad agreement on the package, the deal will not be consummated.

The report I received just before coming into the House is that the work is ongoing, the mood is excellent, and the First Ministers are working hard. It is hoped progress can continue today. At an appropriate time, when all the issues can be agreed upon and a package consummated, hopefully we will then be able to accept the good news. That is our hope.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, fully understanding the reservations that the Deputy Prime Minister has and the reasons for them, I want to ask if he can nevertheless give some details about any agreements which may have been reached about the possible composition of a reformed, elected Senate?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can only refer to the statements made in the press which I believe are a fair reflection. It would be inappropriate for me to comment on any one specific or given issue because I think it is fair to say that, until such time as there is agreement on a broad range of issues, all First Ministers are not prepared to sign any package.

While I would like to be as helpful as I possibly can, I think the hon. member will realize the dynamics of the discussions are such that things change minute by minute. But, I repeat, there is a very firm and strong commitment in that room to put the unity of the nation first. The negotiations are going very well. They are working very hard and I am confident, given the mood I discern, that there will be a successful outcome. I am sure that is a view shared by all hon. members of the House.

* * *

SALARIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, the minister said "we must all fight inflation by reducing underlying cost pressures that push up prices. The greatest of these pressures by far is wage costs".

Why is the minister attacking wage costs, which actually fell in real terms by 3.4 per cent over the 1980s, instead of going after bonus increases of $40,000 to $80,000 to senior executives in crown corporations such as CN or instead of attacking Governor Crow's increase of $40,000 to $93,000? Is it right that the rich get so much richer and the poor, the working people of the country, get hammered again and again?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the hon. member's attention the level of salary increases throughout the Public Service. The broad averages have been 4 per cent to 4.2 per cent, as well as in the senior levels of the Public Service, the deputy minister level. Ministers and members of Parliament have had salary increases of 1 per cent less than the inflation rate during the last seven, eight, or nine-year period. The federal government itself, I believe, has shown very clear leadership in the battle against inflation.

The hon. member has referred to certain Crown corporations. He knows quite well that the rules for increase in remuneration of Crown corporations are related to the comparability of the senior employees of those crown corporations to the private sector. They are subject to review by an appointed advisory committee that has been in place for the last eight or ten years. I believe this is a legitimate way of arriving at salary levels of senior executives of crown corporations.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the point. If we look, for instance, at a recent study by Towers Perrin of top executives throughout the world, we see that, in fact, Canadian top executives are the second highest paid throughout the world with an average salary of over $400,000 per year.

[Translation]

I want to ask the minister whether he thinks it is fair to put the blame on Canadian workers, when such high salary increases are being given to people in the top jobs in this country. I think the minister will agree this is not fair.

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not attacking Canadian workers. What I am pointing out to all Canadians is that if we allow our cost structure as a country to get out of line in relation to our main competing trading partners, then it will cost us business—business in the export markets and in competing against imports.

I am only making this point to draw to the attention of Canadians that if our competitive position gets out of line, we will lose business, and as we lose business we will lose jobs.

It is in the interests of all Canadians to contribute to getting our cost structure in line with our competitors so that we can have a healthy outlook for our economy, create more jobs, create a better standard of living and create a better way of life for Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Why doesn't the Minister of Finance object to the salary increases paid executives like the President of Bell Canada Enterprises, who got a 9 per cent increase, or $100, 000 per year, and the President of Alcan, David Morton, who got a 15 per cent increase or $152,000? Why do workers always get the short end of the stick?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think if the hon. member had listened carefully to what I said, he would understand that I have been talking about the over-all cost structure. That includes wages, salaries, the salaries of people at senior levels in these corporations, as well as pricing policies. It is important in all elements of the cost structure of the economy that we take into account the fact that over the last two or three years we have become less and less competitive. Until we get that competitive position in line with our major competition, we are going to suffer as a country because of the fact that we will be losing jobs and business. That is certainly not in the interests of any Canadian.

* * *

ROUTE CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): My question directed is to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Before he was given Route Canada by the government, Manfred Ruhland did not have the financial stability to get a credit card. Yet, after he was given Route Canada by the government, within a week he took his family on a $17,500 vacation to Austria, paid for by Route Canada. Following soon thereafter were more vacations, expensive cars, two boats and a $3.5 million plane, all paid for by Route Canada.

Why did the government give Route Canada to Manfred Ruhland when it should have known that by doing so these abuses would occur?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is straight out of The Toronto Star, and my hon. friend knows it.

He knows that the assets were sold by CN after an investigation of the financial abilities of the Fingold brothers. That is also in the records, if he wants to check.

There was no gift, none whatsoever. It was sold as a going concern to the Fingold brothers. That is exactly the way it happened. Any other suggestion is absolutely incorrect, and my friend knows it.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, Manfred Ruhland talked to the government a month and a half before the Fingold's came into the picture. The government did a credit check on Manfred Ruhland before the sale. The government passed an Order in Council approving the sale.

Some hon. members: Shame!

Mr. MacLellan: CN did not put this deal together, the government did. CN did not even know that Manfred Ruhland was involved.

Why does the government say that the employees of Route Canada who lost their jobs—and many of whom lost their homes, their trucks and their futures, not to mention the taxpayers of Canada—have no right to know why the government gave this company to Manfred Ruhland?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the government sold assets with a market value of about $50 million to $55 million, and received $29 million for them. Those assets were producing a grand loss per year of $30 million to $40 million. You can only do that for so long before you run out of taxpayers' money.

Therefore it was sold by CN as a going concern to a company formed by the Fingold Brothers in an effort to make those jobs continue. The jobs did not. They went bankrupt, and that is a fact.

My hon. friend knows the matter is being investigated by the RCMP. I am sure the allegations that he made earlier will be investigated by the RCMP. When the report is finished action will be taken, if there is action to be taken.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same minister.

The employees of Route Canada relied on the integrity not only of the president of CNR but their employer, CNR, the largest Crown corporation in Canada. They relied on the integrity of the cabinet for fairness. They relied on this government which has a positive duty to each employee affected by this aborted transaction.

When will the government acknowledge its responsibility to the employees of Route Canada, reinstate them to their former employment, pay those employees their back wages and bring back the pension benefits which most of them have lost?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, now I know why my hon. friend got out of business and went into law.

You can only lose $30 million to $40 million a year for so long, especially if your asset base is only worth $55 million. It was worth $55 million. We got $29 million for it, giving those employees an opportunity to continue working.

The company went bankrupt. Unfortunately, those are the facts of life. If my friend has any other information to bring to bear on the matter, he should phone the RCMP and give them that information.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, just to answer my friend, sometimes I wonder why I got out of business and went into law.

This transaction is truly a fraud on the Canadian taxpayer. Mr. Ruhland brought no cash to the table. He walked away with a $100 million company. In 20 months he destroyed a $100 million company by buying boats, airplanes and first class trips around the world. To add insult to injury, his mother's dog, whose name is Garci, is treated better than the employees of the company.

When will the minister take it upon himself to look after the employees who are affected by this aborted transaction?

Mr. Ferguson: The government is going to the dogs.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows that if anything was going to the dogs it was a company losing $30 million to $40 million a year. The taxpayers do not have that kind of money.

The Liberals used to think they had that kind of money. They used to think they would make it up on volume. But that does not happen any more. That is why we sold the assets.

* * *

FISHERIES

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Mike Hunter, representing the processing industry of B.C., told the fisheries committee yesterday that the disastrous effects of the Canada sell-out of the west coast salmon and herring on the altar of free trade are just beginning to be felt.

Does the minister agree that the B.C. processors reflect the reality of the free trade ruling, namely, that the future of the industry has been thrown into serious compromise?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not agree.

• (1440)

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, the minister does not agree but the Prime Minister does. The Prime Minister, speaking at a press conference on February 23, 1990, said: "We want to do everything we possibly can to help the British Columbia fishery".

Can the minister give us any details, such as dates of implementation, estimated costs, nature of programs, with respect to the salvation promised by the Prime Minister just three months ago?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must be pleased to see this council coming to Ottawa complaining that money should be thrown at the problem because money is being thrown at the problem everywhere.

The reality is that this ruling to which the hon. member refers under the free trade agreement reached between Canada and the United States forces not one fisherman—not one—in B.C. to sell to the Americans. Do not forget this.

* * *

JUSTICE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice.

Evidence is piling up in the David Milgaard case. There is mounting evidence that there was a terrible miscarriage of justice when Milgaard was sentenced for murder 20 years ago.

A second forensic report, this time from the chief medical examiner of Manitoba, seriously questions the only physical evidence that linked Milgaard to the crime. Yet all we get from the Department of Justice is foot dragging and silence.

When is this minister going to take her responsibility seriously and decide what she is going to do about David Milgaard?

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is hard not to be cross with the hon. member—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): —who has questioned me on this issue at great length before the standing committee, and who has been given an explanation as to why it has taken some time for the Department of Justice to deal with this.

He knows perfectly well that that delay results not from delays in the Department of Justice but from the applicant himself, whose counsel has brought forward continuing pieces of new information that he wishes to have considered on behalf of his client.

I think it would be extremely negligent of the Department of Justice to rush this process and to tell Mr. Milgaard's counsel that there is an arbitrary deadline beyond which he may not bring new evidence forward to be considered.

In May of this year the applicant retained the services of Manitoba's chief medical examiner to provide a report on a previous forensic report that had been commissioned. That report has now been received by the Department of Justice. It is being reviewed and will be part of the considerations on which I will make my decision.

If Mr. Milgaard's counsel comes forward with more information, I am prepared to wait until I can consider that as well so that he may have the fairest possible hearing based on the fullest possible information that he can provide to us.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Solicitor General.

For 20 years Milgaard has denied consistently his guilt. For that he has paid a high price. He has been denied parole—no confession, no parole. Just today, he was scheduled to appear before the Parole Board.

Given the unique aspects of this case and given the fact that there is a possibility of a wrongful conviction, would the Solicitor General be prepared to recommend a full parole for Milgaard?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague the Minister of Justice, has just indicated that she is looking into the question, awaiting further information apparently from Mr. Milgaard's counsel. Therefore, I think it is being handled in the appropriate way by the Department of Justice.

[Translation]

NEW HORIZONS PROGRAM

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Seniors) and concerns the freeze on the New Horizons Program.

Last Friday, in response to my question, the deputy leader of the government denied there was a freeze.

The Minister of State (Seniors) told the Standing Committee on May 22 that one-quarter of the funds allocated had been withheld. Who is telling the truth?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, one thing is certain: programs for seniors are being maintained. You read the Estimates, and you know this year's budget is the same as last year's.

What we must not forget, here in the House, is that the New Horizons Program has been in existence for several years. We are now in the process of evaluating the program, and we have withheld $4 million so that during this year, we will be able to introduce new initiatives following the results of our evaluation which we intend to submit in the next few months.

[English]

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, it appears, contrary to what we were told on Friday, that there is in fact a freeze of $4 million of that program. I would like to restate my questions from Friday and try to get an answer from the government.

Will the minister tell us when the review will be completed? When will the frozen funds be released? When will the review's findings be made public, or will they be made public?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of consulting seniors to make sure that the programs meet the needs exactly. We say that funds are available to seniors and we have an office that answers all calls. Once the evaluation is done, I will be very pleased as minister responsible for seniors to let you know our recommendations and, if there is room for new initiatives, to implement them.

* * *

[English]

PRESENCE IN GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of members the presence in the gallery of Mr. Rafik Nishanov, Chairman of the Soviet of Nationalities of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

* * *

ROUTE CANADA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the question of Transport Route Canada.

I want to say to the minister that what we are debating here is not the wisdom in the first place of the privatization but the question of the relationship of trust between Canadians and a government which sets a certain series of events in motion.

The government cannot deny that it was as a result of its policy that these workers were turned over to a particular series of events that resulted in them losing their jobs, their pensions and their benefits.

I want to ask the minister this. Does he not see the dimension of elementary justice involved in this issue? Does he not see the obscenity of what has happened to these people as a result of the events which this government set in motion? Will he not at least give a commitment to these people that at the appropriate time the government will make good what these people lost as a result of its policy?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, CN was losing some $30 million to $40 million a year on this proposition. It felt that with the refinancing brought to the company by the Fingold brothers, and some reorganization, that the company would have the ability to turn things around. Unfortunately, that did not happen.

Everyone in this House regrets the fact that those jobs were lost. The question is whether or not there is any responsibility on CN. CN sold the company, sold the assets. The taxpayer was thus relieved of a burden of a loss of $30 million to $40 million a year. Unfortunately, as things turned out, it was not possible to make a profit and the company went bankrupt.

If there are any illegalities, they will be taken into account, I am sure, by the Superintendent of Bankruptcy and the RCMP in the course of their investigation.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister if he recalls occasions on which he has risen in this House and made the distinction between a legal responsibility and a moral responsibility. What we are claiming here and what we are asking the minister to recognize is that the government, through CN has a moral responsibility to the people who lost their jobs as a result of this very, very botched privatization.

The very least the government could do would be to make a commitment, as I asked the minister before, at the appropriate time, whenever he feels that the investigation has gone far enough, to make good what these people have lost as a result of a train of events that this government, and not only CN, through its privatization plans set in motion.

• (1450)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, CN sold these assets with the expectation that with the refinancing and with the effort that the Fingold brothers said they would put into it that the jobs would continue. After all, these assets were bringing a loss of $30 million to $40 million a year. They felt it could be turned around. Unfortunately, it was not turned around. I am sure they made an effort to turn it around.

I am sorry, but CN's responsibility was terminated when it sold the assets to somebody who tried to make a go of it. Businesses succeed and fail every day in this country. This, unfortunately, is one that failed. We all regret that. I am sure CN does, too.

* * *

RADIO LICENSING FEES

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. It deals with the outrageous and ill-conceived radio licensing fees that he has imposed on municipalities and emergency services right across Canada.

There are literally thousands of volunteer and municipally-operated fire departments that simply cannot afford these fee increases, and in some cases they will either have to decrease service or put off the acquisition of much-needed emergency vehicles.

Is the minister prepared today to respond to this issue which could affect public safety and announce that fire departments and other emergency services will be fully exempted from these fee increases?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to be asked that question today because it has been public knowledge for months. I recently had the opportunity to meet the leaders of the Canadian Municipal Association and they agreed it is normal for all governments to share equitably in both spectrum management and the public costs of its operation, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister.

The issue has not been before the public for only a matter of months. The issue, indeed, has been before the public for a matter of years.

I would like to quote from December 1, 1986, the previous Minister of Communications, the Hon. Flora MacDonald, who said in the House of Commons in reference to Bill C-3: "The changes as they affect municipalities and volunteer fire departments will not be proceeded with".

Why has the current minister broken this government's stated commitment to exempt all fire departments from the Bill C-3 schedule of fees? Will he now finally see that the reasons for which fire departments were exempted in 1986 are equally valid today in 1990?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, quite simply, we agreed that there should be some equity among users of the frequency spectrum and governments, be they departments of the federal or provincial governments or even municipalities.

[English]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

The GST advertising campaign is extremely confusing and misleading to Canadians. Since last fall the government has embarked on an $11 million advertising campaign, a campaign that has been filled with inaccurate and incorrect information because of change after change.

Now, new brochures, and millions more must be spent, to attempt to correct the information already sent out to the Canadian public.

How much more money is being spent on this advertising propaganda program?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the description the hon. member uses.

I have received a lot of very good comments from people—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —who have received the most recent tabloid which responds to specific questions, questions that we have monitored on the phone lines, the 1-800 numbers. We have had somewhere around 250,000 to 300,000 calls.

We have taken the calls that have come from those 1-800 numbers and put the answers to the questions these Canadians have asked us in a tabloid which cost, I think, less than 10 cents a copy.

These questions respond specifically to what Canadians are interested in knowing, information that they have been asking for about the goods and services tax.

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister.

The tax went from 9 per cent to 7 per cent. There has been a total change in small business advertising.

Will the minister promise that they will get their act together here today, stop wasting money on propaganda campaigns, inform the Canadian people properly or take the tax back?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the language that the hon. member has used.

The tabloid that we have just sent around to some 10 million Canadian homes responds specifically to questions that have been asked of us again and again through the 1-800 number, the information number. The responses that have been given are straight, direct responses. They are not propaganda in any form. They are specific responses to questions that have been asked by 250,000 Canadians.

The responses that I have had as a result of this tabloid have been very good. People have said: "That is exactly the information that we want to hear about the goods and services tax".

* * *

FUR INDUSTRY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture.

Yesterday when the Deputy Minister of Agriculture appeared before the agriculture committee, he informed us that the fur component in the $500 million Supplementary Estimate is to be aimed at fur farmers and that fur trappers will not qualify for assistance to counteract the 50 per cent decline in fur prices due in part to the European boycott.

Will the minister reconsider this decision and include trappers who have also suffered from the price decline and have traps, vehicles, cabins and other equipment to pay for and maintain, as well as families to support?

Mr. McDermid: Why not talk to Greenpeace? They ruined the bloody trade.

Mr. McKnight: Are you supporting sealing now?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that this assistance package is one that was designed with the help and support of the provincial governments. It was in that context that the program was put together.

The funds will be distributed by the provinces. They are closest to the scene and in the best position to design the program in the most effective way so that it is targeted to the area that is in most need.

I will certainly take the hon. member's question as a representation and raise it with the provincial counterparts. If there is a disposition on their part to provide the assistance in that manner, I will certainly make that representation on the hon. member's behalf.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, since trappers have recently had to invest in heavier equipment, heavier traps to meet the humane component of consumer demand, and since they are suffering from virtually the same negative income that Saskatchewan farmers are suffering, will the minister change the federal component of the program and make it available to fur trappers, which is not now the case, so that the provinces can pick up on that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that it was through the provincial representation on behalf of the fur industry that the federal government responded.

As I said, I will certainly take his question as a representation. But we felt that because they were closest to the scene and identified the area of need we, in a generous fashion, responded, which this federal government has done in the past.

We can only hope and trust that the provinces will design their program in such a way that the industry that is affected in all its elements will be supported by the results of our joint efforts.

* * *

• (1500)

THE ESTIMATES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications.

Can the minister tell us if he is going to support the vote as proposed by the chairman of the finance committee to cut the budget of the National Gallery of Canada by $1.8 million?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question, and there is going to be a lot of debate and a lot of anxiety. I hope the hon. member will be here this evening to see the last instalment of this drama!

Mr. Speaker: I have a request from the hon. member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead to raise a question of privilege.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

HON. MEMBER FOR MÉGANTIC—COMPTON—STANSTEAD—DENIAL OF ACCREDITATION WITH RESPECT TO THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, at noon I went to the Conference Centre where the First Ministers' meeting on the constitutional question is being held. I was denied the necessary accreditation to enter the building, unlike over 100 reporters from across the country, members of provincial legislatures, and leaders of provincial parties, including opposition leaders like Mrs. Carstairs and Mr. Doer. Members of the House of Commons were also there. I asked why I, as a member, could not go in. I was told it was since I had not been a member of the Charest Committee and was not on the list of a recognized party, either the government party or one of the opposition parties.

I know other members who were denied the same accreditation. Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a very important conference, and I wanted to express my objections to the fact that this important question is being discussed behind closed doors. Quebec's return to the constitutional fold will not only be without honour and enthusiasm—but they are now trying to do it in secret.

Mr. Speaker, my rights and privileges as a member of this House have been breached. Surely, a member of the House of Commons has the right to be admitted as an observer to the Conference Centre, as much, if not more, so than the people representing the media.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member has raised a very important question of privilege. I hope the Chair will, as usual, give it prompt consideration, as it has always done in the past.

I do not agree with everything my colleague said, but if there is one thing that must be perfectly clear it is that there can be no difference between members, whatever their political affiliation, whether it be an official party or not. When the Chair considers this very important question, and there may be other precedents, I hope it will take all the time required to do so. My colleagues and I will listen very attentively to the Chair's ruling on this question of privilege.

I must say that I was not aware of the situation, but I immediately and instinctively thought that we do not make distinctions between members of the House in matters such as this one.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, to be very brief on this issue, I am not aware of the details and certainly would want to have more information before being absolutely definitive.

It is the nature of these kinds of situations that there is limited space and limited ability for people to observe. In this case, of course, we are talking about a conference that is closed and there is no opportunity for anybody to participate.

The way we have handled that is to have representation from the parties in the House based on the proportion of their membership in the House, rather the same way we do with any delegated operation in the House, be it a committee and so on.

We have always had a problem on how to deal with Independents. The question is one of wanting to be fair to Independents but by the same token recognizing that it would be equally inappropriate to give Independents an opportunity not available to every member. If you open things up to every member, is it possible to have some delegation from this institution as opposed to everyone in the institution participate?

Without knowing the details of what is involved, I would humbly suggest that it might be something like that. Certainly, I will undertake on behalf of my party to examine and ensure that there was no overt attempt to exclude anybody by virtue of them not being a member of an established party in the House. That, I am quite certain, is not the intent, but I will look into it and inform the Chair if I find out differently.

[Translation]

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, I want to support the question of privilege raised by the member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead.

I believe that members elected to the House of Commons are here to represent their constituents, and they all have the same rights whether or not they belong to a political party.

I think it is inconceivable that a member sitting as an independent should be subjected to flagrant discrimination. Mr. Speaker, I hope you will take these points under consideration. I know you have excellent judgment and I hope you will respond to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead.

M. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the position of the member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead although I have, as a member of the Charest Committee, been accredited for the congress.

We were 15 members on the Charest Committee, but the issues we dealt with concern all the hon. members of this House. Of course, the independant members were not appointed by the three parties as members of the Committee.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, and also because of the fact that there are so many people from the media and so many provincial members and because of the importance of this issue affecting not only the members of Parliament from the province of Quebec but all Canadians, I hope that the Chair and the government House leader will consult each other and give their support to the position of the member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead.

[English]

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to repeat comments made by other members on the matter of principle and privilege, but what is important in this particular instance is the fact that access to the meetings may become an issue which detracts from the debate itself that is taking place.

If the member feels that he was denied access, that indeed could be misinterpreted by the Canadian public in terms of access to process, which is already a question relative to the accord itself.

I urge that the member and any member who wishes, as a duly elected member of this Chamber, to be present at any meetings that are open to any elected person be given absolute access. Without that we develop a side issue that becomes a separate story that does damage to the process rather than allow us all to participate without an easy excuse that there was no access to anybody who wanted to go.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I have listened very carefully to the concerns that have motivated the hon. member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead and the others to take that stance.

[English]

I think it is a very helpful suggestion from the government House leader and I will look into the matter further. I treat it as a matter of some concern.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

NOTICES OF MOTIONS—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On Monday of this week the opposition House leader, the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier, rose on a point of order concerning two items which the government placed on the Order Paper.

One was for the appointment of an information commissioner and the other was for the appointment of a privacy commissioner. The opposition House leader contends that the government erred in requesting that these items be placed under the rubric "Motions" in the Order Paper. He believes that they should have been placed under the rubric "Government Notices of Motions".

• (1510)

[Translation]

Several members, including the government House Leader, contributed to the discussion of this interesting point of order. The Chair thanks all hon. members for their contributions. I am now prepared to address the concerns raised and render a decision.

To many persons in our listening audience, it may appear irrelevant as to where a notice of motion is placed on our Order Paper and Notice Paper. It is important to note, however, that these categories have been developed over a lengthy period of time in order to respect the organization of the business of the House. Some categories are uniquely reserved for the government or the opposition, whereas others are reserved for private members and some very special categories are reserved for items which affect the transaction of the routine business of the House.

[English]

To illustrate matters, motions to amend or suspend the Standing Orders, to appoint special committees, to concur in committee reports, to instruct a committee to divide or consolidate bills are moved under the heading "Motions" and are often adopted by unanimous consent.

By contrast, motions to deal with matters of substance or government policy are moved under the heading "Government Motions". For example, motions to advance government bills or to adopt resolutions are handled under this heading and are usually adopted on division after extensive debate.

At this point I wish to refer to a decision I delivered on June 13, 1988 relating to a similar procedural problem. At page 16377 of Hansard I explained:

> —a "Government Notice of Motion" is any motion that the Government gives notice of. In other words, a "Government Notice of Motion" is not based on the content of the motion, but rather upon the mover. In many cases, therefore, a notice of motion could go under more than one heading and it is up to the Minister giving notice to decide which heading should be chosen. Clearly a "Government Notice of Motion" can only be moved by the Government, but the Government can choose to place it either under "Motions" or under "Government Notices of Motion".
>
> This concept is borne out in a ruling on May 16, 1985, by Speaker Bosley. He was called upon to rule on whether a time allocation motion had to be moved under "Motions" during Routine Proceedings or whether it could be placed under "Government Notices of Motion" and then transferred to "Government Orders" His decision was that it could be proceeded with in either way and that the choice was up to the Minister moving it.

[Translation]

A key element in the government House leader's argument concerned a definition of what items are permitted to be placed under the rubric "Motions". While no specific Standing Order enunciates exactly what should or should not be included under this rubric, Standing Order 67(1)(p) gives us a partial list. It reads, in part:

> — [motions] as may be required for the observance of the proprieties of the House, the maintenance of its authority, the appointment or conduct of its officers, the management of its business, the arrangement of its proceedings, the correctness of its records, the fixing of its sitting days or the times of its meeting or adjournment.

[English]

From this the opposition House leader and hon. member for Kingston and the Islands suggest that it is inappropriate to file a motion for the appointment of the Information Commissioner or for the Privacy Commissioner under the rubric "Motions" because these appointments are for officers of Parliament rather than for officers of the House. This rubric, the opposition House leader contends, should only be reserved for officers of the House.

A review of precedents reveals that previous appointments to these positions were moved under the rubric "Government Motions". However, the question still remains: because that route was followed in the past, can we logically conclude that this route is the only option open? The Chair is not persuaded to that conclusion. Instead, as in the decision of June 13, 1988, the Chair concludes that the government has the option of choosing to move such a motion under either heading.

Several hon. members have pointed out that the Standing Order refers to the appointment or conduct of the House's officers. I have been unable to find anywhere a precise definition of who fits into that classification.

Taken in its widest sense, an officer of the House could include such positions as diverse as the chair occupants, the House leaders, the Clerk and the Sergeant-at-Arms and the other officers reporting to the House through its Speaker. Some of these are appointed by resolution of the House, but many of them are not. Unless the House directs me otherwise it is this broad interpretation that I intend to be guided by.

As to the distinction that the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands attempted to make between an Officer of the House and an Officer of Parliament, I have not been able to accept his reasoning on that issue, although I must say it is an interesting if not ingenious argument.

It is my view that the Auditor General for example could be considered to be either an Officer of the House or an Officer of Parliament.

In conclusion, the Chair judges that the government has liberty to move the appointment of the Information Commissioner or the Privacy Commissioner either under the rubric "Motions" or under the rubric "Government Motions". The motions as they now stand on the Order Paper under the rubric "Motions" are regular and can be proceeded with.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS

TABLING OF APPOINTMENTS AND REFERENCE

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table, in both official languages, a number of Order in Council appointments which were made by the government.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1) they are deemed referred to the appropriate standing committees, a list of which is attached.

* * *

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I would like to table in both official languages, the government responses to six petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[Translation]

FISHERIES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Fisheries Act and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. minister have leave to introduce the bill?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jacques Tétreault (Laval-des-Rapides) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-311 intituled "An Act to change the name of the electoral district of Laval-des-Rapides".

Mr. Speaker: Shall the hon. member have leave to introduce the bill?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Tétreault: With the leave of the House, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce a bill to change the name of the electoral district of Laval-des-Rapides to Laval Centre, in order to better represent the communities in that riding. In fact, my riding extends from the rivière des Prairies in the South, to the rivière des Milles-Îles in the North, through Laval-Centre and takes in the areas formerly occupied by the towns of Laval-des-Rapides, Renaud, Vimont, Auteuil, as well as Sainte-Rose which is celebrating this year its 250th anniversary.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

* * *

• (1520)

[English]

ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS

APPOINTMENT OF PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved:

That, in accordance with subsection 53(1) of the Act to extend the present laws of Canada that protect the privacy of individuals and that provide individuals with a right of access to personal information about themselves, Chapter P-21 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, this House approves the appointment of Bruce Phillips as Privacy Commissioner.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. One of the important elements of parliamentary reform in this House some time ago was the opportunity for the appropriate parliamentary committee to consider proposed government appointments, to interview and scrutinize with care the qualifications of the proposed appointee and then to report back to the House.

The procedure which the minister is following in this particular case, while it may be strictly legal according to the provisions of the act, clearly flies in the face of the intent of Parliament in allowing parliamentary committees to conduct this form of scrutiny.

I want to raise this point of order and ask whether the minister might be prepared to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General in order that we might conduct the kind of careful scrutiny that is required before an appointment of this nature is made.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to make exactly the same point of order. I think of all the appointments that one can imagine, the appointment of a Privacy Commissioner is one in which the government should have made the greatest possible effort to obtain agreement among all parties about the choice of a candidate. To my knowledge, there was no consultation at all about this appointment, at least not in the form of trying to find someone who would be acceptable to all parties. We know there are many, many Canadians, even for this difficult position, who would have been acceptable to all members of the House.

I would ask the minister, as my colleague from the NDP has done, before proceeding to enforce strictly the rules of the House, to consider referring this nomination to a committee and the choice of the justice and solicitor general committee is an excellent choice before the appointment becomes final. It may well be that the minister herself will find that process useful in making her own decision about the correctness of what it is she is proceeding to do for the first time, I believe, as Minister of Justice.

I would urge the minister not to proceed to force a nomination on the House, knowing in advance the position of the opposition parties, without at least the opportunity for the candidate to present himself to a parliamentary committee and to let us hear from him about his qualifications.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, these points of order are more in the form of representations to the government to put aside the procedures in the law for the appointment of these positions which call for a resolution of this House and resolution of the other followed by a Governor in Council appointment.

Mr. Speaker, I will allow questions, which seem to be behind this, to be debated during the debate period. At this point in time my response to the representations from the opposition parties is no, we intend to follow the procedure as laid out in the law. There will be ample opportunity because of parliamentary reform and the ability that committee and others have to call people forward to go on whatever witch hunts members might want.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one or two comments. I find it shocking that the government House leader would use that kind of approach. Indeed, he is pre-empting debate on a very important matter, that is, our last allotted day in this period where we want to debate certain important matters such as finances, housing, and other very important financial questions.

I respect the decision the Chair made at 3 p.m. but it suited the government's purpose just beautifully, to move the motion at this time and then spare us the obligation to ask it to have the decency of referring this to a committee, which is a reasonable suggestion made by all parties on this side—the opposition parties in particular.

I think it would be in the interests of democracy and good debate that the whole issue be sent to a committee for study and consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have raised a matter under points of order which amount to a suggestion, or perhaps a complaint, to the government as to the procedure on which it has decided to use this afternoon.

Whatever merit lies in those suggestions, it is certainly a matter of legitimate discussion, I think it is really a matter of debate. I am bound with the rules as they are. It was pointed out by one hon. member that the government is proceeding strictly legally, although there is dispute within the Chamber as to whether it ought to be proceeding this way at this time.

But, the government has so chosen to proceed, and I must say that the procedure is in order. I will now recognize the hon. Minister of Justice for debate.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I made my point, and I want to raise another point of order.

Today is the last allotted day in this period where the government has before us expenditure plans for the coming year. If we do not reach Orders of the Day, the government loses its day. If the government loses the day today, and loses the Estimates, I hope it does not come to us crying that it missed the boat on this one.

If the government cannot figure this out, I am telling you right now that we are going to debate this one until 10 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kamloops, and then I want to come back to the hon. leader of the government.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to support the point just put forward by my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier.

This is the last allotted day, and as you see by the agenda it is a very full day. We have been looking forward to this day for some time.

The government has decided to proceed this way on an important motion, and we have a number of speakers who wish to speak to this appointment motion. I am seeking clarification.

If, in fact, we do not get to Government Orders because of our interest in speaking to this government motion, what happens to the final allotted day? Can you give some guidance on this, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I may be able to give the hon. member some guidance. I would suggest that he speak to me in a few minutes.

Strictly speaking, the question is hypothetical, and I do not think it is appropriate for the Chair to rule on it. I would be very pleased to discuss the matter with the hon.

member or with any other hon. member in a few minutes.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. members will know, when there is an Order in Council for this appointment, it will be referred to the standing committee for 30 days for discussion. The standing committee is always free to call forward the person nominated to discuss the nature of the appointment.

As Some hon. members will know, the seven year appointment of the Information Commissioner and the Privacy Commissioner expired at midnight Friday, June 1, 1990. Under the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, commissioners are appointed by the Governor in Council under the Great Seal: "after approval of the appointment by resolution of the Senate and the House of Commons."

We have given notice of the two motions we would like to move today in the Notice Paper.

As the hon. members already know, the Privacy Act provides for the appointment of a Privacy Commissioner by Governor in Council under the Great Seal after the approval of the Senate and the House of Commons.

To obtain the House's approval, we put the following Notice on the Motion Paper on May 31, 1990:

> That, in accordance with subsection 53(1) of the Act to extend the present laws of Canada that protect the privacy of individuals and that provide individuals with a right of access to personal information about themselves, Chapter P-21 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, this House approves the appointment of Bruce Phillips as Privacy Commissioner.

• (1530)

[Translation]

I am sure that Mr. Phillips is not unknown to you, especially through his work as a Member of the Parliamentary press gallery. If I may, however, I should like to give a brief rundown on of Mr. Phillips' career to assist the House in its consideration of this motion.

[English]

For 35 years Mr. Phillips has been a nationally-respected, award-winning journalist. He became a familiar face to Canadians when, in 1969, he joined the CTV Network as its Ottawa Bureau Chief. Previous to that, he undertook assignments with Canadian Press, The Calgary Herald and Southam News Service.

Through his work as a journalist, Mr. Phillips has demonstrated a deep commitment to Canada and what it stands for. In the early 1960s, he received the prestigious National Newspaper Award for a series of articles on the attitude of Quebec towards Confederation. He was also the recipient of the Bowater Award for journalism for a series of articles on the Canadian economy.

In 1984, Mr. Phillips agreed to set aside his distinguished career in journalism to serve as the Minister for Public Affairs in the Canadian Embassy in Washington, D.C., and from April, 1987 to February, 1990 he served as the Prime Minister's Director of Communications.

[Translation]

In February 1990, his appointment as Assistant Privacy Commissioner made it possible for him to embrace with his usual vigour the cause of the individual's right to privacy. Working closely with the Privacy Commissioner, Mr. Phillips made a significant contribution to the study on Drug Testing and Privacy whose findings were tabled in the House last Friday.

[English]

Because of his distinguished journalism career, Mr. Phillips brought with him both knowledge of and experience with the delicate and difficult problem of balancing the public's right to know and the individual's right to privacy. He also brought with him the persuasive communication skills and independence of mind of a journalist.

This combination served the first Privacy Commissioner and the interests he advanced extremely well, as his seven year term attests. That they are shared by Mr. Phillips augurs well for the cause of privacy and the challenges which will face him as Privacy Commissioner.

Mr. Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question. I notice that the government, through the Minister of Justice, has moved one motion ahead of the other. In the Order Paper for today, Wednesday, June 6, we see that the Minister of Justice's motion approving the appointment of John Grace as Information Commissioner came first. Yet, the minister chose—in her own judgment, or she was coached by somebody—to move the second motion wherein the Minister of Justice asks for approval of the appointment of Bruce Phillips as Privacy Commissioner.

We have no objection at all to John Grace being appointed as the Information Commissioner. Why the did minister not call that appointment first and get it over with?

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I wanted the hon. member to have an opportunity to debate while he was still fresh.

Mr. Gauthier: That is a very fresh remark, Mr. Speaker. However, the question is a serious one.

Why is the government not proceeding with something it knows it can get? It knows that it is going to prejudice the appointment of Mr. Grace by delaying it until, perhaps, later this month? Why is the government not proceeding now with Mr. Grace's appointment which causes no difficulties?

We know Mr. Grace, his reputation is well-known, and he has been seven years in the position of Privacy Commissioner. We are asking the government to give us the appointment now and we will approve it now.

Ms. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member objects to the particular order. As I say, if this appointment is one that will be debated and is contentious in the House, then I think it is appropriate to deal with it first so that we can have as full a debate as is possible and is appropriate.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice to respond to the concern that has been raised regarding the appointment of Bruce Phillips, precisely because he did, in fact work directly in the office of the Prime Minister as the Prime Minister's Director of Communications. The minister has pointed out that other public officials, including John Grace, have distinguished backgrounds in journalism.

Inger Hansen, the former Information Commissioner, certainly has a distinguished background. She was previously Privacy Commissioner and, during part of that time, Commissioner of Corrections. I might say that the treatment of Inger Hansen by the government is appalling and unacceptable in the way that it has just dumped her without any form of respect or consideration. But that is a separate question.

I want to ask the Minister of Justice to respond to the specific concern that it is fundamentally important that this office, which after all is an officer of Parliament, should be seen by all Canadians as being completely independent. By appointing an individual who has been working directly in the office of the Prime Minister she taints that independence. As Professor David Flaherty has indicated, this completely diminishes the significance and the importance of this office.

Could the Minister of Justice respond to that particular concern about the close previous link between Bruce Phillips and the Prime Minister's Office? Does she not recognize that it is that link, in the eyes of the public, which disqualifies him from being seen as completely independent in this very important position of Privacy Commissioner?

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think the link depends to a great extent on the characterization and the hon. member chooses to characterize it in the worst possible way, in a way that I do not think is fair.

As I pointed out yesterday, the current incumbent of the office of Privacy Commissioner was appointed by a previous Liberal government. He was appointed by a Liberal government to the CRTC and has close personal ties with senior members of the Liberal Party. It has never occurred to us that in any way impaired his ability to perform in a professional fashion. I have the good fortune to know him personally. I would be very surprised if he votes for my party, but that has never impaired his ability to perform in a very professional way. I have never assumed that reports coming from his office that were critical of our government were motivated by any partisan considerations at all.

I want to point out the implications of somebody in Mr. Phillips' position spending time in the Prime Minister's Office.

When I was executive director of the premier's office in British Columbia, we had a press secretary director of communications who was not a journalist. The members of the parliamentary press gallery complained because, notwithstanding that this person was an enormously able and pleasant individual, her lack of journalistic credentials meant that she did not understand the constraints under which the press gallery worked. They complained quite severely about this. They felt that the premier should hire a journalist to do that job, someone who understood how they work and how they should be served. The director of communications in the office of a first minister is someone who is a liaison between those whose beat it is to cover the first minister and Parliament, who requires quick access to information, and who requires the provision of certain kinds of services and, of course, the first minister himself or herself.

After the premiership changed in British Columbia, the current premier in fact did hire a professional journalist to perform that job. Previous to Mr. Phillips taking that job in the Prime Minister's Office, as we know, Mr. Gratton held that position.

It is extremely important that members understand that that is a position that requires professionalism. It requires someone who understands how journalism functions in this country. If we are to say that any professional journalist who takes that job is thereafter tainted and cannot either, as Mr. Gratton did, return to journalistic life or take some other position without being tainted by what is in fact a very tiny part of his or her career, as opposed to the broad bulk of that career which has been an unimpeachable and award winning career in journalism, then I think that has very, very negative implications for the ability of governments to have the highest quality people serving them. Therefore, it is incumbent on those who wish to impugn Mr. Phillip's ability to provide some kind of evidence that he is not able to act with independence.

I would point out that in the period of time that he has been Assistant Privacy Commissioner, he has participated in putting together the report on drug testing that is very critical of the government. Mr. Phillips has clearly found it quite within his capability to take an independent view and provide and participate in the creation of a report that is critical of the government. Unless hon. members have some firm reason for suggesting that Mr. Phillips is unable to revert to that kind of independence—

• (1540)

Mr. Gauthier: His record is surely not very good. Look what he did during the election. He was a Tory hack and you know it.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): When he worked in the Prime Minister's office, he was loyal to his employer and he did that job. The fact of the matter is that he has had a distinguished journalistic career for which he has been recognized by his peers in journalism. He has now moved on to a different stage in his career.

Mr. Milliken: Keep him moving!

Mr. Gauthier: Send him to the Senate.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): I am sorry, but the hon. member's party has already filled up most of the seats in the Senate, so the Senate is not available.

Mr. Gauthier: There are 12 vacancies.

Mr. McDermid: He has a lot of nerve talking about political hacks.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): In addition to being highly knowledgeable about the journalistic approach to information in need of secrecy, as is the current incumbent, he also has a very clear understanding of the government perspective as well. I think that balance will serve him well in the position.

It is extremely unsavoury to listen to members of the House of Commons impugn someone's character. As I mentioned yesterday, the hon. member for Burnaby—Kingsway's party probably does not have a realistic hope of forming a government, but those sitting right across from me do harbour that hope. The ability of a government to retain the services of professionals and to invite people, many of whom serve with great cuts in pay in order to provide public service. If everyone who comes to work for a government has to take with them the partisan label of that government, the pool—

Mr. Gauthier: He is working for Parliament, not government. That is the point.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): I am speaking of Mr. Phillips' tenure in the Prime Minister's office. If everyone who agrees to work for government has to take with them the partisan taint of that government, the pool of people who would be willing to make their services available will be small and it is the people of Canada who will suffer as a result.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): One very short question from the hon. member for York Centre, and that is it.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that this will be a brief question.

In the decision about Mr. Phillips' candidacy for this office, were other possible government patronage appointments considered? Was he offered any other government patronage appointments? Did he ask for any other government patronage appointments?

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, if I were in a courtroom, I know what I would say about that question. In the House, I will simply say that it is impertinent and insulting and I do not think that I will dignify it with a comment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are terminated. The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There is such an amount of interest in this nomination, and we know the minister would like to answer further questions. I wonder if there could be unanimous consent to allow more members to ask more questions of this minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for York Centre has the floor on debate.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about the appointment of Bruce Phillips, but I cannot resist replying to the minister for Brantford—

Mr. McDermid: Brampton! Get it right, if you are going to insult me.

Mr. Kaplan: —for Brampton who often comments that I find myself in the gutter when I take on the government. Well, I do find myself in the gutter when I take on the government because that is where the government operates.

Those questions that were asked during Question Period today about Route Canada, the questions that we have raised and that I am very proud to have spent a lot of effort raising, deal with one of the most fundamental weaknesses of the government. That is the government's lack of class and its repeated insult to the Canadian people in the way in which it has exercised, in so many respects, its high office and the high responsibilities of its office.

It must be a great personal disappointment to the Minister of Justice to have to identity herself on her first assignment in nominating an officer of Parliament to have to choose Bruce Phillips who is unsuited for this job.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense! That's your opinion.

Mr. Kaplan: As a matter of fact, I was quoting from a newspaper headline. It is an opinion that I share, but it is also an opinion that is widely held across the country.

In saying that, I want to say that Bruce Phillips is a very competent individual. I have no qualms about recognizing his competence, his great ability, his distinction as a journalist, and the service he performed for his country and for his government with distinction in Washington. I do not want to take any of that away from him. He is one of the able people in this country and he is the kind of person we want to see take part in the public life.

What I think the minister really recognizes and why she must surely find herself in a difficult position is because she has to take this individual who has served his government well, who has served his Prime Minister well, and make him an officer of Parliament in a job which should not be filled by an individual with the background of Bruce Phillips in the office of the Prime Minister during the last election campaign.

This country is not so small and there is not such a shortage of qualified, competent people that we could not have in this House agreed upon a proper candidate to fill this office of Parliament. If an effort had been made—

Mr. McDermid: That would rule out Derek Burney as Ambassador to Washington then.

Mr. Milliken: He's not an officer of Parliament.

Mr. Kaplan: Derek Burney is doing a good job in Washington. He is a competent person to be down there.

Bruce Phillips played a highly partisan role in the Prime Minister's office in the last election campaign, to put it mildly. Someone had to do it. I am not saying that there is anything wrong with doing that. People do it. We have partisan people on our side, you have partisan people on your side.

The insult to the office of the Privacy Commissioner and the insult to Parliament is to take that individual and appoint him to a position where he now has to be a watchdog on the government, a watchdog on his pal for whom he fought so hard and in such a partisan way to keep in the office of Prime Minister of this country. That is what is unacceptable.

I cannot believe that the Minister of Justice does not recognize that. I am confident that the Minister of Justice wishes she had a better case to put forward than the case that this individual should now become an officer of Parliament, to stand up as a watchdog against abuses by the government of the very important achievement that we have in this country in our strict rules of privacy.

The Privacy Act, a very important and progressive piece of legislation in this country, is meant to ensure that the government does not abuse the privacy of individuals.

We know governments collect more and more information on individuals. The government knows about every person in this country through records that are part of the public domain, whether they have been seeing a psychiatrist, whether they have ever had venereal disease, whether they have ever had an abortion, whether they have ever been charged with any offence, acquitted or convicted. There is a lot of information out there.

As the computer age has progressed, governments have come to know more and more. However, we have developed a wise policy, as expressed in our Privacy Act and other acts, which is designed to make sure that all of this information against every one of us is not used by government or by others to abuse those individuals. To put it in a sentence, the law requires that information which is obtained by the government or which comes to the government for one purpose cannot be used, even by the government, for another purpose. It is the high calling of the officer of Parliament who is the Privacy Commissioner to ensure that no such abuse occurs.

• (1550)

I think that our Prime Minister could have come up with an individual more at arm's length from the success or failure of himself, from the hurly-burly of politics and of the government than Bruce Phillips.

I know the government could have come up with a half a dozen or a dozen people who would have been acceptable to us on this side of the House. The government did not try. As much as I respect Bruce Phillips, what is needed for this job is a person who will not be identified with the political success of the government and of the Prime Minister to the extent that Bruce Phillips is.

St. Francis Xavier University is not the largest university in the country. I know the Prime Minister favours its graduates. Even if he had just looked at graduates of St. Francis Xavier University, he could have found some among that number who would not have been so intimately identified and so committed to the personal success of the Prime Minister in his political life and to the success of the government, who could certainly have done the job just as well.

The Privacy Act is meant to provide individuals with access to their personal information held by the federal government. It protects their privacy by limiting those who can see that information and it gives individuals some control over the government's collection and use of the information.

I do not want the House to misunderstand what I am saying about Bruce Phillips. I am not suggesting that we will have an individual in Bruce Phillips who will deliver personal information about individuals to the Prime Minister for political use. I am not suggesting that he will do that. I take him to be a man of integrity. The problem is that he will have access to all that information. He will know and he will be able to find out personal information about every political enemy of the Prime Minister in this country, of every political adversary.

Mr. Crosby: Give us some examples.

Mr. Kaplan: Examples are not hard to draw. I am not going to give examples. But the Privacy Commissioner is in a position to have the most intimate details about the life of every Canadian, those in public life, their families, those not in public life. So whether the character of the individual is such that he will run to his former boss and deliver the goodies on people the Prime Minister may like to embarrass is less the issue than the issue of the appearance that he is a person with that kind of a close, intimate relation to the Prime Minister and with a commitment to his political success. That is why we are entitled to worry about this appointment.

I cannot believe that the Minister of Justice does not see the sensitivity of this particular mistake and perhaps has not advised the Prime Minister that it is a mistake to take such a close buddy, someone who has been so identified with the career of the Prime Minister, with the success of that career, with the political campaign of that career and put him in a position where ordinary Canadians are entitled to be suspicious that abuses may occur.

Choose another person. Give us the opportunity to examine some other names from St. Francis Xavier University, or elsewhere. It is not only a matter of being a Conservative either. There are lots of Conservative appointments that this government has put forward of which we have approved and that we have acknowledged are good appointments. But this is not the job for a person who has had the background in the last few years that Bruce Phillips has had.

I urge the government to consider it again. I assure the government that every member of the opposition will be voting against this appointment. I ask the government to take our opinion seriously.

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment on the hon. member's statement. I have never heard anything so replete with innuendo and character assassination.

It is very difficult in this city to work without developing relationships with people who are elected members of Parliament. The hon. member has suggested that there is something about Mr. Phillips' relationship with the Prime Minister, as a result of his having spent about three years as a paid employee of the Prime Minister's office doing a job that directly related to his professional function, the career in which he spent most of life, that would in some way lead Mr. Phillips, who he regards as otherwise a man of integrity, to betray a lifetime of integrity and to betray the office of an officer of Parliament by providing what he describes as his "close buddy" with information to which the "close buddy" is not entitled.

I find that an absolutely extraordinary assertion. I would point out again that the current incumbent of that office is a close and intimate friend of the recently retired leader of the hon. member's party, a close intimate friend who probably wished well—

Mr. Gauthier: Was he in his cabinet?

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): The hon. member is suggesting that somehow this close intimate relationship with the Prime Minister, the commitment to the success of the Prime Minister, would lead someone to behave in a highly unethical fashion.

Mr. Mills: Not unethical, but partisan.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): What I am saying is that there are many close relationships in this city that do not lead people to betray their integrity, just as it has never occurred to anyone in this House to suggest that the long, close personal relationship between the current incumbent of the office of the Privacy Commissioner and high profile, partisan people in this town would in any way compromise his ability to conduct the job with integrity. In some ways, perhaps it is better to have someone's relationships open and above board, because it makes it easier for the standing committee to subject them to scrutiny and to test them.

No one in a million years would suggest that there was ever any basis on which to impugn the integrity of Mr. Grace, and the relationship between Mr. Phillips and the Prime Minister is of so much less significance and importance. Mr. Phillips had a paid position in the Prime Minister's office. He has left that paid position. The Prime Minister is no longer his boss. He has shown a great ability already to be independent of mind in acting as assistant Privacy Commissioner in his participation in the recent study that has come out.

The hon. member's speech was an absolutely consummate example of character assassination by innuendo. It is very important to understand that, in this House, unless there is evidence to the contrary, we assume that people have integrity. Mr. Phillips has shown no evidence of not having integrity. In fact, the hon. member has said he believes he is a man of integrity.

We all change hats and we all have people who work for us with different perspectives who then go on and do other things. I have many people in my department who support me very strongly in what I do. I do not believe they necessarily vote for me, but they are able to make a distinction between the demands of their jobs and their personal alliances. I believe that we should expect no less of Mr. Phillips.

Mr. Kaplan: I would be happy to take some time, if it was available, to show the difference in the relationship between John Grace and John Turner, on the one hand, who as far as I know, have had no political association, although they have been friends through life, and on the other hand the relationship between Bruce Phillips and his career and his relationship with the Prime Minister.

As far as I know, John Grace has never worked for John Turner. I do not even know if he is a member of the Liberal party.

Mr. Gauthier: He's not. He's a Tory.

Mr. Kaplan: I would probably know by now.

I am accused of character assassination and maybe the minister thinks I am the only person who feels this way about the appointment. If that is the way her mind is working, let me just take a moment to quote very briefly from an article by Frank Howard that appeared in the The Ottawa Citizen. The whole article is under the heading "Bruce Phillips unsuited for job". So it is not just Kaplan in the gutter here, who thinks this is a mistake. There is a national concern about the motion the minister has moved in the House today. The article stated:

> The person who is put forward as the candidate for the privacy job should look like—

• (1600)

We are talking about appearances here, not the character or integrity of the individual only, but appearances.

> —he or she could stand up to the government of the day, not like somebody who is being rewarded for loyalty to the PM.
>
> The bureaucracies of the two offices, privacy and access, need a standard bearer, not a spin-doctor.
>
> On the level of appearances mainly, his appointment will demoralize the post and perhaps the office. Morale may or may not suffer, but the high moral purpose of the office will be less obvious.

Surely the minister sees that.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I might just note that in addition to the fact that the personal friendship between John Grace and John Turner is totally irrelevant to the issue of Bruce Phillips' previous employment in the office of the Prime Minister, there is another issue and that is that the member for Vancouver—Quadra is not the custodian of government information. Quite clearly, one of the reasons that concern has been expressed about the appointment of Bruce Phillips is that the Privacy Commissioner is an advocacy role and on more than one occasion he will be in a position of having to challenge directly the office of the Prime Minister with respect to either policies of the office of the Prime Minister or with respect to particular practices of that office.

The fact that Mr. Phillips was an employee of the Prime Minister, whether or not objectively he is tainted in that way or not, in the eyes of the public the perception—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope the hon. member would comment on the speech of the hon. member for York Centre and ask him a question.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the member for York Centre would comment upon my observation with respect to the ability of the Leader of the Official Opposition to disclose information under the Privacy Act.

While he is on his feet, the member for York Centre might as well want to clarify the current position because the Minister of Justice has not yet indicated what the current status is of both John Grace and Bruce Phillips. As I read the Privacy Act, and as I read the access to information legislation, the government does have the power, technically, to appoint these individuals for a term not exceeding six months even before Parliament has considered and adopted the resolution.

The hon. member for York Centre might want to comment on this and indicate whether, to the best of his knowledge, the government has gone ahead and appointed Bruce Phillips and John Grace without even listening to the concerns of Parliament on this issue.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, these are excellent questions. I gather this will be a lengthy debate. I hope that during the course of the afternoon and evening we will have answers to those from the government which really is more in a position to answer.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment in relation to the remarks of the hon. member for York Centre.

As I read the Privacy Act, it is all about the processes involved in the disclosure of information. It is not about the exact carriage of information. The member gave the impression to those who were listening that the Privacy Commissioner delves into banks of information and transmits information to other people. That really is not, in any serious way, the role of the Privacy Commissioner. The Privacy Commissioner looks at requests for information that is held in the banks controlled under the Privacy Act and decides whether those requests shall or shall not be granted.

To see the Privacy Commissioner as someone who, in his or her own personal capacity, has information at their disposal is wrong because in fact this information is gathered by other Crown officers. It is gathered by heads of departments and held in privacy banks and the Privacy Commissioner is not the only one with access to that information.

If the member's concerns were legitimate, he would be concerned with every person in the Public Service who has access to the information, not just the Privacy Commissioner. In that respect you have to rely on the honour and integrity of everybody involved in this system, not just one person.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree. I hope I did not create the impression that the Privacy Commissioner is a collector of information. Take, for example, a former inmate in a who prison wants to know whether his cellmate made certain statements about him which are on the records of Corrections Canada. I am speaking here of things I know from my own personal experience as a former Solicitor General. The Privacy Commissioner can go through the record of what stool-pigeons inside the prison have told officials about the the former inmate who is asking for the information.

So it could well turn out that the Privacy Commissioner will find out that a former inmate engaged in certain activities inside the prison. This may be someone who is pardoned now and that information, in some circumstances, can be of political interest. That is my point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the hon. member for Victoria.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my friend from Burnaby—Kingsway, who would normally be our first speaker on this, permitting me to put my remarks on the record on this absolutely outrageous set of appointments.

The issue is not so much Mr. Grace's personal appointment, which this House can approve, but the effect this has on Inger Hansen who has served the position and the country well in her present position and has not deserved the treatment she has received from this government.

Far more outrageous is the appointment of Bruce Phillips and the way in which the government has been handling this. First of all, let us go back to 1983 when the appointments of both of these people, Inger Hansen and John Grace, were put to this House and received the unanimous consent of all parties.

In Hansard we see the late Walter Baker speaking enthusiastically on behalf of the Conservative Party for both of these appointments and my friend, the present member for Burnaby—Kingsway, speaking on behalf of our party. These appointments were made not only in consultation with all parties in this House, but with the agreement of all parties in this House.

The Minister of Justice will know from her experience in British Columbia that when it comes to the appointment of an ombudsman, the unanimous consent of even the fractiously partisan legislature of British Columbia is sought.

Here the government not only tries to foist its own particular view of who should have this job, in the name of Bruce Phillips, but the minister's justification indicates that she clearly fails to understand the importance of this position to the people of this country and to this Parliament.

The former minister of justice understood his responsibilities as Attorney General of Canada when he outlined the basis and rationale for the appointment. He exhibited his awareness of the extraordinary sensitivity of this position when he commented, in addressing the House on the appointment of the information commissioner, as follows:

> The Access to Information Act provides that any Canadian who has been denied access to a document he has requested under the Act, who has failed to obtain the requested document within the prescribed time, or who feels the fees charged are excessive, may lodge a complaint with the Information Commissioner—I believe that this will happen in most cases and that no longer being required to institute an action at law will save Canadians both time and money. It will always be possible to appeal to the Federal Court in those cases where the problem has not been solved.
>
> Of course the Information Commissioner is an officer reporting directly to Parliament. Being entirely free of the executive, the Commissioner will be at liberty to recommend release of government information, criticize the actions of the executive taken under the Act, table her recommendations in Parliament and take government institutions to court herself to obtain the release of information.

Those comments were made by the Hon. Mark MacGuigan on May 27, 1983. He went on to note that the Privacy Commissioner had precisely the same responsibilities. In fact, the Privacy Commissioner took precedence over the Information Commissioner when it came to a difference between the two.

This appointment is of an officer of Parliament. It is as important as the Speaker. It is as important as a judge. It is as important, if I dare say it, as the chair of the Security Intelligence Review Committee, another appointment which this government botched because of its failure to consult.

• (1610)

Now it treats this as a common patronage appointment. It does so without any genuine consultation with the other parties in Parliament and it does so now without the approval of Parliament. It does so by moving a motion in a way which reduces the rights of Parliament to comment on the Estimates as they come through and to have a full discussion of those matters.

We then have the minister trying to equate this appointment with the friendship of Mr. Grace with the Leader of the Opposition. As my friend the member for Kingsway—Burnaby has pointed out, this dramatically underscores the complete failure of this minister to understand what she is doing in moving this motion. It is a terrible appointment that the minister is trying to foist on this House.

I do not know Bruce Phillips. I think that before this appointment should even come to this House it should go at least to the justice committee so that we have an opportunity to ask about and make some judgment about Bruce Phillips so that the House has the benefit of the views of the justice committee on this subject. If the minister prefers, let us have a special committee that can review it.

When the government is trying to ram through, with its majority, a partisan appointment of a very sensitive position of this kind, I would think it would at least give its own back-benchers an opportunity to put questions on Mr. Phillips' background.

What is Mr. Phillips' sin? It is not that he is a Conservative. I do not even know whether he is a Conservative. He has no sin at one level, but at another, for this particular position, he has served as the Prime Minister's communication director. He has helped the Prime Minister try to get elected. And in that position he allegedly played dirty tricks against the member for Vancouver Quadra during the last election. He apparently, according to a comprehensive story in The Globe and Mail, provided reporter friends of his with details of friends of Mr. Turner whom they could phone and find out what the gossip was about Mr. Turner during the election campaign.

That may be fair ball if you work for the Prime Minister during an election, but it is not the kind of conduct one would expect from someone who is going to be an officer of this House, reporting to this House on what the government has done.

Let us be absolutely clear what the Privacy Commissioner does. The Privacy Commissioner stands for the people of Canada in protecting their privacy against improper government intervention. That is a very sensitive position. The people of Canada are entitled to have in that position one of the 26 million or 27 million Canadians who at least all members of this House trust to do the job. We do not trust Mr. Phillips to do this job. That is why we are opposing it and it is wrong for the government to put him in the position.

The other side of the coin is what this government is doing to Inger Hansen. Inger Hansen is a distinguished Canadian public servant. Let me quote from the comments made by Mr. MacGuigan when he was moving her appointment, comments which were concurred in by all sides of this House. I quote from page 25797 of Hansard of May 27, 1983:

> Today, Ms. Hansen has earned the right to call herself Canada's senior ombudsman, having been in the field for ten years. In addition, she has built a solid international reputation for herself and for Canada in the ombudsman and data production fields. Over the past several years she has been active in the International Ombudsman's Association as a member of its planning committee. She is also a very active member of the International Association of Data Commissioners. She has chaired two of the latter group's recent annual meetings: in 1980 when Ms. Hansen hosted the meeting in Ottawa and again, by special request of the conference, in London this past summer. In all, Inger Hansen legitimately lays claim to a vast national and international network of friends and associates.

Mr. Baker was equally effusive. The member for Burnaby, as he was at that time, was equally effusive.

Inger Hansen, however, has apparently irritated the Prime Minister. She, in her job, has said that the government has failed to do its job under the Access to Information Act. As a result, not only was she not reappointed, according to public statements she was not even given the courtesy of a telephone call. She simply ran out her term. This government has failed to deal honourably with someone who has served this government, the people of Canada, and this Parliament for 18 years.

This is a bad appointment. The government should withdraw the bill and should engage in a process of fair and genuine consultation with all parties in this Parliament before proceeding further.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. member. Since partisanship makes it impossible for people to be even handed later on, how does he feel about the appointment of Ed Broadbent and Ian Deans to two very important positions in which they are expected to be impartial and to fulfil the responsibilities required of them under the mandate of their particular agencies?

What qualities does he believe they have that enable them to put their partisan pasts behind them and operate in an even handed fashion fulfilling their responsibilities which are somehow unavailable to those who might attach their allegiances to this party for some brief period of their life?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, the intervention from the House leader demonstrates the government's complete blind spot on this point.

No one would suggest for a minute, nor is this House suggesting it, that Bruce Phillips could not handle a hundred different jobs for the people of Canada. That is not the issue. He worked for the Prime Minister however, and he is now being put in a position in which he is expected to be critical of the government on behalf of the people of Canada and of this Parliament.

If the House had been asked about the appointment of Mr. Broadbent and there had been significant disagreement, perhaps that appointment should not have been made. If the House had been asked about Mr. Deans and there had been significant disagreement, the same may be true. However that is not the issue. They are not servants of Parliament. They are appointed by Order in Council to particular positions established under legislation.

This position is a position of Parliament. The precedent was established in 1983 that it was a unanimous appointment of this House. That precedent was a sound one, and it should have been followed in this case.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I do not see the connection of trying to link Mr. Grace and Mr. Phillips together. Mr. Grace was appointed seven years ago. Mr. Turner was not even a member of Parliament at that particular time. He came from the post of editor of The Ottawa Journal which certainly was not considered a Liberal newspaper. The fact is that he had that one appointment.

Here we are talking about Bruce Phillips. The Minister of Justice says that we have been hard on Bruce Phillips. I have not heard anyone being hard on Bruce Phillips. No one is questioning his integrity at all. In fact everybody is going overboard to be extra nice to Bruce Phillips.

The fact is that he has worked in the Office the Prime Minister. He has also received an appointment from the government to our embassy in the United States. This would be his third government job, and the idea that this will leave in people's minds is of very great significance.

Could the member for Victoria and his constituents actually look upon Bruce Phillips as a person who could carry on the job without any shadow of a doubt of a legacy with this government?

• (1620)

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. My constituents and people right across Canada will see this as a bad appointment, in part because we are making an issue of it. It is appropriate for us to do it because this appointment was not the subject of effective consultation and agreement on all sides of the House.

It seems to me important that all sides agree on a position as sensitive as this of an officer of the House. Only if we cannot agree after some extensive period of consultation on an appropriate name to go into this office should the government be forced to use its majority to ram somebody through.

However, we have not gone through that process. There has been limited discussion. The government said: "This is the appointment. Take it or leave it". Does the minister have an intervention or is she just mumbling to herself?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The minister does have an intervention. The Minister of Justice on a question or comment.

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria. I am very pleased to hear that everybody is in consensus on Bruce Phillips' integrity.

I would also like to make a comment about Inger Hansen. The hon. member has suggested that the decision to appoint an Information Commissioner is in some way an offence to Inger Hansen. I think that is a very wrong conclusion to draw. Inger Hansen is a very distinguished individual. She is from British Columbia, and I can remember hearing her speak a number of years ago at UBC when she was the Privacy Commissioner. She served as Privacy Commissioner and then Information Commissioner.

I hope it is not a reflection of the fact that there was a shuffle at the end of February that the appropriate representations have not been made to Ms. Hansen about her service. From my perspective or that of any government members that I know of there is certainly no intention to be in any way disrespectful of her.

I do hope the hon. member will recognize that it is a prerogative of this House and governments to renew and change appointments. Mr. Grace is following in a sense the same path that Ms. Hansen took: to be first Privacy Commissioner and then Information Commissioner. I would not want to leave the House with the impression that anyone on this side of the House considered Ms. Hansen to be anything but a very distinguished Canadian and a very distinguished public servant.

As she has said herself recently, she is still young and full of energy and eager for new challenges. I hope that she will continue to have opportunities to express herself in ways that are of benefit to the Canadian people and fulfilling to her as a human being.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the hon. member for Victoria like to rebut?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the comments the Minister of Justice has made about Ms. Hansen.

I may say frankly, and I hope it does not sound churlish, that it is long overdue. There have been questions about her reappointment for sometime. There were questions reported in The Ottawa Citizen. Frank Howard commented on it a week ago. It has taken until now for the minister to make the statement. Perhaps it is an oversight in the busy life, but now that they are on the record I am sure it is appreciated by Canadians that she finally made those fair and appropriate comments about Ms. Hansen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the member for Dartmouth, and then I will recognize the hon. member for Burnaby—Kingsway.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that this is an inappropriate appointment. I think the member for Victoria said it clearly. On the one hand we have somebody in the person of Inger Hansen who did her job as the Information Commissioner and was critical of the government. She appeared before one of the standing committees of Parliament last year and was extremely critical of the government for not allowing the spirit of the act to come through in the actual actions of the government.

The person who did her job, who was independent from the government, and who was protecting the public interest does not get her term renewed. In effect she gets canned for doing her job. That is what the government did.

At the same time as the government is trying to tell us that these appointments are all above board and that there is absolutely no scent of political interference, after it kicked Inger Hansen out of her job, which most Canadians thought she was doing quite well thank you very much, it plucked from the trough Bruce Phillips.

I am not going to be as gracious as my colleague for Cape Breton—The Sydneys. Bruce Phillips may be the nicest man in the world; he might be one of the best journalists in the world, but the fact is that this is the third time that he has changed troughs. He was in one with the Prime Minister's Office where he was basically the propaganda officer for the Prime Minister.

The Minister of Justice said it. She said that Bruce Phillips, when he was in the Prime Minister's Office as the communications officer—and I am quoting and you can check it in Hansard tomorrow—"had a commitment to the success of the Prime Minister".

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): I didn't say that, I am sorry. Your own colleague said that and I was quoting him.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Our colleague, the member for Victoria, indicated that Bruce Phillips was most recently a communications officer down in Washington, again a political appointment. Now he relies for his third job, on another political appointment by the Prime Minister of Canada. This time it is a political appointment as an officer of Parliament.

Does the member for Victoria agree that just as the old adage indicates, which I am just going to change a little, that these officers of Parliament, in this case Bruce Phillips and the office he has now been appointed to as the Privacy Commissioner, must not just operate outside the sphere of political influence but must also appear to operate completely outside the sphere of political influence?

Is that the primary concern of my colleague from Victoria? It is not so much that Bruce Phillips in this position is going to be spreading secrets and looking into personal files, but that as an officer of Parliament he must command the respect of the Canadian public to do his job as the Privacy Commissioner?

Is the member trying to say that he is a little concerned that some Canadians are going to find it very, very difficult to believe the line of the government that this is an independent appointment clear of politics?

Mr. Volpe: Yes will do.

Mr. Brewin: It is suggested, Mr. Speaker, that my reply should be a simple yes. I am going to add a phrase however because I do not entirely agree.

I am not simply concerned with appearances. I am concerned that we do not know enough about Mr. Phillips to justify the appointment. I believe that because he served in the Prime Minister's Office there is a very serious likelihood that he is not qualified for the position, because of this connection. However I do not know that for sure, and I believe the appropriate action is to have this matter referred to the justice committee.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I wanted to ask the hon. member to comment on the concerns that have been expressed by perhaps one of the most respected international experts in the area of privacy. I am speaking of Professor David Flaherty of the University of Western Ontario.

The most recent report of the Privacy Commissioner, John Grace, refers to him as an internationally recognized authority on data protection who served as consultant to the justice committee in its review of the Privacy Act, who has been quoted extensively, and who has written extensively on this subject. Quite clearly Professor Flaherty is recognized as Canada's leading expert on privacy. He has no political axe to grind whatsoever.

Professor Flaherty has indicated that he is disgusted by the appointment of Bruce Phillips. He says that the appointment ruins the integrity of the Office of the Privacy Commissioner.

That is not the word of a member of this House; that is the word of Professor David Flaherty who as I say is a respected individual and probably knows more about privacy than anyone else in the country.

I want to ask the member for Victoria to comment with respect to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now expired. I believe the hon. member has made his comments.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among House officers and I believe you will find agreement to adjourn now by consent the current debate on the motion to appoint Mr. Phillips and to resume the adjourned debate tomorrow during Routine Proceedings on Motions. That debate plus the debate, if there should be one, on the appointment of Mr. Grace to the position of Access to Information Commissioner will be terminated no later than 1 p.m. tomorrow.

• (1630)

Mr. Milliken: With one additional caveat. It is understood that members of the opposition alone will be recognized in debate for the two hours. If the government wishes to participate, we requested additional time. There was an indication there would be no government members rising in debate during the two-hour period tomorrow morning.

Mr. Andre: Hopefully, you are not expecting that hon. members will not have an opportunity, during the question and answer period, to ensure that the public has an accurate picture and to straighten out the misinformation that is presented during the debate.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, certainly I was very careful in saying "rise in debate". Of course, I would expect members of the government to try to defend the indefensible and to try to twist around the straight-talking words of the members of the Opposition in putting the truth before the people of Canada. I was very careful in choosing my words, and I think that is the additional understanding in the circumstances.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): So ordered.

Routine Proceedings

PETITIONS

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36.

The petitioners are from Kamloops, British Columbia. They point out their concern about the government's intention to proceed with the proposed goods and services tax in spite of the incredible opposition, and state a number of reasons why they oppose this tax.

I know they would want me to mention that they would like to call upon the Liberals in the Senate to do the honourable thing and defeat this tax in the Senate. After all, if the Liberals in the Senate wanted to defeat the GST, they could do so this afternoon. Apparently, they do not want to do that. They would rather vote themselves an increase of $153 of incentive funds to go to the Senate.

The petitioners are asking Parliament to reconsider supporting this, and they ask the government to go back to the drawing board and start all over.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, today, it is my pleasure to present a petition to Parliament, pursuant to Standing Order 36, signed by residents of Atlantic Canada, and more particularly, from various parts of Newfoundland.

The petitioners stand four-square and opposed to this government's proposed 7 per cent goods and services tax. They join over 750,000 people who have petitioned this Parliament for the same reason, to tell this government that the proposed goods and services tax is a tax that they believe to be unfair. They believe it to be a hidden tax, and they believe to be a gouge and screw tax on the taxpayer.

The petitioners are asking the government to, at once, reconsider this very regressive tax and go back to the drawing board.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and honour to rise under Standing Order 36 to join my friend, the hon. member for Dartmouth who presented a petition, and present a petition from my riding. I am going to join him to get the numbers up from 15,000 to 16,000.

These are constituents from Spaniard's Bay, Bay Roberts, Harbour Grace, Clarke's Beach and that area of Conception Bay north. These people are very concerned about the goods and services tax adding to the already dismal burden of Newfoundlanders, with the various economic downfalls and dismal outlook that we have for the next year or so.

They are particularly concerned because, as middle and low income earners, they spend over 90 per cent of their incomes on consumables. They are looking at higher income Canadians who spend less than 50 per cent, and they really feel this is unfair. It is another addition to the already 31 taxes that have been levied since 1984.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions on two different subjects.

First, these are petitions which have been signed by hundreds of residents of Burnaby—Kingsway and elsewhere in British Columbia, concerning a tax by the Conservative government on railway passenger service in Canada.

They point out that railway passenger service, as carried on by VIA Rail, is essential for many Canadians and has been a part of Canada for more than 100 years. They express their concern about cuts by the Conservative government of over $500 million in its operating grant to VIA. They point out that the effect of these budget cuts is to eliminate one-third of our national passenger railway system.

They therefore call on Parliament to maintain the existing VIA Rail network, to upgrade VIA equipment and to guarantee VIA sufficient support to carry out its mandate to provide passenger service.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the second group of petitions, again signed by a wide variety of residents of British Columbia but particularly signed by hundreds of residents of my constituency of Burnaby—Kingsway, are petitions relating to the proposed goods and services tax, proposed by the Minister of Finance.

The petitioners point out that this is an unfair form of taxation because of its lack of regard for the taxpayers' ability to pay. They urge the government to come to its senses and reject the current proposal for a goods and services tax.

They urge the Senators in the other place to wake up and take their responsibilities seriously on the goods and services tax. I am sure they would urge that. That may not be explicit, but I am sure it is understood. They finally urge the government to cease its proposal which would shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform. I hope that the government would heed the plea of these constituents and put an end to the goods and services tax.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition signed by numerous residents of the province of Newfoundland.

I may say that the petition was gathered by my honourable and gallant colleague from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception and I believe that many of the persons who have signed this petition are constituents of his and they object to the goods and services tax.

They point out in their petition that this government has increased taxes 31 times since it has assumed office. As he so eloquently put it a moment ago, they, as residents of Newfoundland, have suffered unduly at the hands of this government that they look forward to the return of prosperous times with the election of a Liberal government in the forthcoming federal election. They call upon Parliament to reject the goods and services tax.

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I too rise, pursuant to Standing Order 36, with a duly certified and correct petition both as to form and content.

This petition is from hundreds of residents of Newfoundland, from Carbonear, Harbour Grace, Spanish Point, Gull Island, Victoria, Rooche's Line, Spaniard's Bay and Bristos Hope.

They call on this Parliament to urge the government to withdraw the vicious goods and service tax, a tax which is going to wreak havoc on the economy of an already depleted region of Canada and will impose a very serious and grievous burden on those who are unaccustomed to paying an additional tax on services.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHT TRAINING

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition, in accordance with Standing Order 36, from residents of Regina, Toronto and Calgary who are concerned with the government's carrying on of war training in Labrador and eastern Quebec.

They urge this House to join with the Assembly of First Nations and the Innu of Labrador and other aboriginal peoples of northern Canada in opposing the use of their lands for NATO and NORAD attack training. They demand that the Canadian government end all the NATO and NORAD low-level flight training in Canada, and they ask Parliament to redirect Canada's NATO and NORAD funding toward enabling Canada's aboriginal peoples to regain control of their lands and their livelihood and toward promoting sustainable development for all Canadians.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it is my duty and honour to table more petitions on behalf of Mr. Leo, who has been arrested in Taiwan illegally for speaking out on human rights issues. These are additional petitions to what I tabled back on January 24, and March 5, 7 and 28.

Mrs. Leo, the wife of Mr. Leo, and the petitioners, are asking the government and the external affairs department to treat this as a human rights case, not a legal case.

• (1640)

They cannot understand why the government is referring this to the Canadian Trade Office and the Chamber of Commerce in Taiwan to monitor the case. These two organizations are there to further trade between the two countries. They will not get involved in any human rights issues.

It is frightening to think that a Canadian can be arrested and jailed for speaking out to uphold human rights principles. Yet, his country does nothing to help get him out of jail.

I appeal to the government. Mr. Speaker, you know the government must respond to these petitions within 45 days, and it has responded to every petition that I have tabled since January. Unfortunately, every response is identical, which means that the government has done nothing in six months.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the government House leader, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 273, 286 and 296.

[Text]

SSEA—EXPORT CONTROL LIST

Question No. 273—Mrs. Stewart:

For the years 1988 and 1989, did the government authorize permits for the export of goods falling under Section 7 (military goods) of the Export Control List for any country and, if so (a) which countries (b) in each case, what was the total value of such permits?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): For the years 1988 and 1989, export permits were authorized for the export of military goods as described in Group 7 of the Export Control List (Group 2 of the new List as of spring 1989).

The following is a list of countries for which export permits for military goods were approved. As export permits are often issued in advance of sales contracts being negotiated and thus resulting in many permits not being used, the values are not representative of actual exports. For this reason statistics are not maintained on the value of permits issued.

AUSTRALIA
AUTRIA
BANGLADESH
BELGIUM
BRAZIL
CAMEROON
CHILE
COTE D'IVOIRE CUBA
DENMARK ECUADOR
EGYPT
FINLAND FRANCE
GREECE
GUYANA
HONG KONG
INDIA INDONESIA
ISRAEL
ITALY MOROCCO
NETHERLANDS
NEW ZEALAND
NORWAY
OMAN
PAKISTAN
PERU PHILIPPINES PORTUGAL SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
SOUTH KOREA
SPAIN
SRI LANKA
SUDAN
SWEDEN
SWITZERLAND
TANZANIA
THAILAND
TOGO TRINIDAD

JAPAN
KENYA
KUWAIT
LUXEMBOURG
MALAYSIA
MALI
MAURITANIA MEXICO
TURKEY
UNITED ARAB EMIRATES
UNITED KINGDOM
VENEZUELA
WEST GERMANY
ZAIRE
ZAMBIA

GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY

Question No. 286—Mr. Caccia:

With respect to each of the five general and twenty-two specific recommendations set out on pages 53 to 58 of the International Joint Commission's Fifth Biennial Report on Great Lakes Water Quality, is the government prepared to make a response at this time and (a) if so, what is it (b) if not, at what time will it be made public?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Part I of the Commission's report describes aptly the public concern about the future of the Great Lakes and the high priority put on meeting the objectives of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. The Government of Canada shares these concerns and is fully committed to achieving the purpose of the revised Agreement.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has asked his officials to study the five general and 25 specific recommendations to governments outlined in Part II of the Report. A detailed response to these recommendations will be provided at the end of this year in the second Canadian Report to the IJC on the implementation of specific annexes to the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement.

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE

Question No. 296—Mr. Edmonston:

With regard to the Champlain Bridge in Montreal (a) for each of the last ten years, is the government aware (i) of the global annual cost of operating and maintaining the bridge (ii) in detail, what the money was spent on (iii) the annual revenue obtained by tolls on the bridge (iv) the annual deficit registered and, if so, what were they (b) over the past ten years, was there an accumulated deficit and, if so, what was it (c) for the next ten years, has the government forecast major expenses associated with the bridge and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Transport): The Jacques Cartier and Champlain Bridges Incorporated, a subsidiary of The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, advises as follows:

a) (i to iv) Yes, the government was made aware on an annual basis. See below.

b) Over the past ten years, there was an accumulated deficit amounting to $10,582,970.00.

c) For the next five (5) years, the government is forecasting major expenses associated with the Champlain Bridge. In its latest Corporate Plan, which was submitted to the government, the Corporation is forecasting a major maintenance program for the years 1990–91 to 1994–95 amounting to $69,131,000.00. Of this amount, a total of $32,625,000.00 is for that replacement of the main span of the Champlain Bridge.

THE JACQUES CARTIER AND CHAMPLAIN BRIDGES INCORPORATED
CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE
STATEMENT OF OPERATIONS
FOR THE YEAR ENDED MARCH 31

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	Unaudited 1990	TOTAL
	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
REVENUES
Tolls	5,254,475	5,500,478	5,458,613	5,641,056	6,028,129	6,515,257	6,948,975	7,642,908	7,874,963	7,978,204	64,843,058
Interest	669,741	610,277	426,468	280,614	316,187	260,720	264,453	224,100	319,887	324,503	3,696,950
Other	67,167	49,384	61,418	67,791	92,891	104,189	136,014	99,284	104,790	142,310	925,238
	5,991,383	6,160,139	5,946,499	5,989,461	6,437,207	6,880,166	7,349,442	7,966,292	8,299,640	8,445,017	69,465,246
EXPENSES
Operation	2,357,026	2,882,121	3,176,823	3,208,538	2,778,888	2,862,485	3,075,752	3,344,251	3,240,883	4,104,499	31,031,266
Maintenance	3,008,217	1,990,097	2,366,539	1,544,095	2,053,484	3,337,889	3,027,467	3,782,671	6,891,857	9,107,955	37,110,271
Administration	802,025	1,015,044	1,070,669	1,140,463	1,180,563	1,232,322	1,479,589	1,558,813	1,542,354	1,551,523	12,573,365
Depreciation	1,026,012	1,040,188	1,040,808	1,042,917	1,045,096	1,038,888	1,031,781	1,042,939	1,052,230	1,048,217	10,409,076

Employee termination benefits	37,854	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	37,854
Interest	2,812,673	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	2,812,673
	10,043,807	6,927,450	7,654,839	6,936,013	7,058,031	8,471,584	8,614,589	9,728,674	12,727,324	15,812,194	93,974,505
NET LOSS	4,052,424	767,311	1,708,340	946,552	620,824	1,591,418	1,265,147	1,762,382	4,427,684	7,367,177	24,509,259
PARLIAMENTARY APPROPRIATION
–Operation	220,885	(402,685)	658,327	(73,579)	(390,834)	506,995	250,078	735,746	3,338,642	6,270,041	11,113,616
WRITE-OFF OF INTEREST	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	2,812,673	0	0	2,812,673
NET DEFICIT	3,831,539	1,169,996	1,050,013	1,020,131	1,011,658	1,084,423	1,015,069	(1,786,037)	1,089,042	1,097,136	10,582,970

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, again on behalf of the government House leader, I ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all Notices of Motions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—CONCURRENCE IN THE MAIN ESTIMATES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1987

Hon. Harvie Andre (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1991, laid upon the Table Thursday, February 22, 1990 be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since today is the final allotted day for the Supply period ending June 30, 1990, pursuant to order made Thursday, May 31, 1990, the House will go through the usual procedures to consider and dispose of a Supply bill.

In view of recent practices, do hon. members agree that the bill be distributed now?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 75—DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS

Hon. Harvie Andre (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Vote 75, in the amount of $90,704,000 under the Department of Communications—National Museums of Canada— Operating Expenditures, in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1991 (less the amount voted in Interim Supply), be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, when we get a copy of the bill, we could probably comment on it.

An hon. member: We have a few opposition motions to be moved too.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I can hardly wait for the opposition motions.

I am just waiting for the bills to be distributed so the hon. members will have an opportunity to debate. Is the House ready for the question? There is nobody rising on debate. I am going to have to put the question.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, to make sure that I understand the proceedings, I do not see any number but I assume the Supply bill would have a number. Could the Table please inform me of the number of that bill? There is no number yet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The bill will receive a number when it is introduced the first time. Question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

Hon. Harvie Andre (for Mr. de Cotret) moved:

Motion agreed to.

CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 1—PARLIAMENT

Hon. Harvie Andre (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Vote 1, in the amount $27,605,000 under Parliament—the Senate—Program Expenditures, in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1991 (less the amount voted in Interim Supply), be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I take it the bill before us has been put to the House and has been printed and circulated.

The first question to be put was on the first proposed motion. I do not see the member for Mississauga South whose name was on the Order Paper as opposing the item. I would like to know if we are now going to proceed with that item at this time, or has he withdrawn it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We have just proposed that motion and it was carried on division. Now we are on debate. The hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I am actually looking forward to the debate on this issue, particularly from my hon. friend, the government House leader, who is suggesting that we provide funding for the Senate to continue its business. I find it to be most intriguing that, after days, weeks and months of bad-mouthing the Senate and criticizing what the Senate is doing, now the government is going to spend $27 million to allow it to continue.

I am looking forward to my hon. friend's presentation, and perhaps a number of presentations, to explain, now that the government has been given the opportunity to curtail the Senate's work—to bring it to an end, to cause it to wrap up, to eliminate the Senate in terms of being able to function—why the government is now enthusiastic and wants Parliament to concur in spending millions and millions of dollars to allow the Senate to continue.

Worse than that, we have had another blow just in the last few hours. The Senate has said: "We need an incentive to go to work". I have heard of a lot of incentives, but the Senate is saying: "We need an incentive now to go to work. We need to be encouraged and bribed"—I guess I cannot say "bribed", that would be in poor taste—"encouraged to go to work. We need $153 a day or else we will not go to work anymore. That is on top of all of the other benefits that we receive."

The government can say no to this today. The government can say, no, it is not going to provide $153 a day as an incentive for the Senators to go to work. After all, they do work very hard. They actually work three days a week now and, most days, they work two or three hours a day when they do work. I think it is up to 76 days a year that they actually manage to get a quorum to continue business. But that is not enough, so they need an incentive. I suspect with the incentive we will find the Senate holding committee hearings on Monday, and probably Fridays as well to round out their work experience. This is incredible.

Some days back when, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I gave notice of opposition to this vote in the amount of $27,605,000 in the Main Estimates to enable the Senate to conduct its business, I asked why we would want to do that. Why would we want to allow the Senate to continue doing what it does? I thought we would ask what the Senate does do. What is it that the Senate does on our behalf allegedly?

This is where I have to come to some difference with my Liberal friends in the House of Commons. A few weeks ago my leader asked Mr. MacEachen, the leader of the Liberals in the Senate, to do the honourable thing now and defeat the goods and services tax.

I think it has become clear across the country that, in spite of what virtually every Canadian is saying, the Conservatives are saying: "We are going to go ahead with this tax anyway. We are going to jam it down Canadians' throats, whether they want it or not." That is what they are doing. I am sure my hon. friends do not think it is a good idea, but for some reason they are surging along here and going ahead with the 7 per cent goods and services tax on virtually everything that we find in our society. It is going to cost Canadians a lot of money and Canadians are against this tax—60 per cent, 70 per cent, 80 per cent, and up to 90 per cent in certain communities across the country. Does the Conservative government listen to that? Oh, no, it knows better than that.

I listen carefully and my hon. friends in the Liberal Party say: "We join with the New Democrats. We oppose this tax. We are not like the Conservatives." I listened carefully and, as individuals, they probably do.

An hon. member: We even have alternatives.

Mr. Riis: And they have alternatives, as we do. When the Liberals got together in caucus and came to the position that they oppose the GST, a lot of us made the assumption that they meant all Liberals—not just the ones in the House of Commons, but also included the Liberals in the Senate.

• (1650)

My leader then said to the Liberals in the Senate: "Listen, since the Liberals oppose the GST, why don't you folks in the Senate—because you have a nice majority at the moment—do the right thing and defeat the tax this afternoon? Or next week, or in the next couple of days, but do it soon."

The Liberals in the Senate say they want to hold hearings. Hearings into what? Whether this is a good tax or not? I thought we had months and months on that decision. It is perfectly clear what Canadians feel. So, the Liberals want to hold hearings. They want to collect $153 a day, because they know they do not defeat bills and they do not pass bills now. There is a whole pile of them in the Senate. They study them. They look into them. They hold hearings. They go on and on and, with a $153-a-day incentive, they may be inclined to go on for months studying this legislation.

I do think we have seen a change of heart here, at least, in some of the Liberals. While the Liberals in the House of Commons certainly oppose this tax, their Liberal colleagues in the Senate seem to like this tax. They seem to want this tax to go through. So we have to ask ourselves: "Do we want and do we need the Senate of Canada?" I think not.

It costs the taxpayers of Canada $40 million each year to support the senators. Just think what $40 million a year could do in terms of child care centres and day care spaces. Think what it could do to help a lot of small businesses across the country launch into new ventures and hire more people. Think what $40 million could do to enable women's shelters across the country to expand. Think what it could do in terms of programs to combat drug and alcohol abuse. Think what $40 million could do in terms of literacy programs to assist those who are struggling with illiteracy in our country. Think what it could do to reforestation programs or to help municipalities develop their municipal infrastructure to have better sewage and water facilities. We could think of a long shopping list of how to spend the $40 million it costs now to keep the Senate in place. I cannot figure out what on earth the Senate does for us.

What it does is it creates a lot of jobs. Jobs, jobs, jobs, for certain folks. There are 33 Conservatives in the Senate now, and they will soon be joined, I suspect, by 12 new ones because there will be some opportunities to make new appointments. A number of people will find new careers in Canada's Senate, at least until we have a chance to reform it.

Looking back at the record we see that between 1960 and 1982 the Senate addressed 1,000 pieces of legislation. That is the number of pieces of legislation moved from the House of Commons to the Senate. Mr. Speaker, do you know how many it amended of those 1,000 pieces of legislation from 1960 to 1982? It managed to provide amendments to 35 of those bills. Thirty-five out of over 1,000 pieces of legislation the Senate actually amended. The House of Commons accepted 30 of those. Of course, as far as I am able to determine, the Senate did not defeat any legislation in that period at all. They do have the constitutional authority to do so, but they did not.

I could go on and talk about the Senate. As we go through these estimates today, we have a chance to send a very clear message to the Senate as to what we think. The government on many occasions has raled on about how the Senate is holding up legislation, such as changes to the UI legislation and the clawback provisions where the government now has abandoned universality for pensions, and so on. They are holding up progress on quite a list of legislation.

The government gets aggravated and says that the Senate should not do this. The government actually introduced legislation some months ago to limit the power of the Senate. I thought for a moment that we were now going to get serious about dealing with the Senate. The government actually tabled legislation, but what happened to the legislation? It went nowhere. It disappeared. It was never discussed in the House again.

When the government says that it wants to reform the Senate, curtail what it is are doing or change the Senate, I say: "When you actually introduced legislation to do that, you ignored it."

Here, we actually have a chance today to end the Senate. We can say to the Senate that it can pass all the little goodies it wants, pay itself $153 a day, or $553 a day—it doesn't matter. We are not going to give it the money to do it. That will send a pretty clear signal to the folks in the other place.

We look at the actual cost of the Senate and find, although it only sits the odd day a week, and just for an hour or two a day on average, that it costs the taxpayers $40 million a year which comes to about $435,880 per Senator. When we consider what that $40 million would provide to the people of Canada in real service, or to reduce the debt of the country on a regular basis, we would be hard pressed to find out why we should do this, why we should follow the government's advice and give these millions of dollars to allow the Senate to continue.

I think it is appropriate for me, Mr. Speaker, to take my seat shortly to allow my colleagues on the government side particularly to indicate why it is they want to move on this motion today and provide these millions and millions of dollars to allow the Senate to continue. I would ask my hon. friend, the government House leader, that the government reconsider this position that it is taking now and send a clear message to the Senate. Tell them: "We have had it with your antics. We have had it with what you are doing. We do not feel you are doing any good any longer because–"

Mr. Milliken: How can you say that?

Mr. Riis: My hon. friend asks how I can say that. I thought we could give them a chance to show they are worth something, that they are actually representing the people of Canada on a very important issue. We chose the goods and services tax because it is virtually unanimous in opposition across the country. We said to the Liberal-dominated Senate: "Will you do the right thing, defeat this legislation, and kill this bill?"

Mr. Mills: You have to do it responsibly.

Mr. Riis: You have to do it responsibly, my hon. friend from Toronto says.

Anyway, what became clear is that the Senate has no intention of killing the GST legislation. The government has no intention of not supporting the Senate. Why is it dragging out the agony? If it was determined to do that, it would. But I have a sneaky feeling, Mr. Speaker, a sneaking suspicion, that the Liberals are trying to get it both ways. They can give the illusion that they oppose the GST, but given due time and so on, the old Senate will let it through around Thanksgiving. The tax will be in place and the old printing press, the old gravy train is there for taxation. Maybe some day in the future, if and when the Liberals ever return to office, this whole process would be done. Who would take the flack? Well, the government would take the flack. The Conservatives would take the flack for introducing this. But who would have introduced it? The Conservatives would have introduced it and passed it through the House of Commons because of their majority. They have already passed it at second reading after a very short debate. That is the principle of the bill. At second reading we discuss whether or not we believe in the principle of this bill.

I note with interest that the Liberals in the Senate agreed with the principle of the bill. They said: "Yes, we agree with a goods and services tax of 7 per cent on principle." All I am saying is that is what we have seen so far, agreeing in principle. Yes, it was quickly done, with very little debate. Now we have to allow a little bit of time so that the Liberals can get a new leader in place and so on. Then we will let this thing slip through a little bit later.

That is why I think we should forget the bloody Senate. What have they done for us anyway? This is our opportunity, not only to forget the Senate, but essentially to abolish the Senate by not giving them the necessary operating funds to allow them to continue. That is what this initiative has done on behalf of the New Democratic Party, and I am proud of it. They have demonstrated clearly that they are not operating in the best interest of Canada. They are accountable to no one. They are an aberration in a democratic society. They are a parliamentary obscenity when you look at how this process operates. This is the chance to not support this motion by my hon. friend, the Conservative House Leader, to allow the Senate to continue indefinitely or at least give them money for another fiscal year.

• (1700)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of State and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, there are all kinds of ironies in this motion. The hon. member has been around for a while. He may recall where this procedure of objecting to a particular item in the Estimates arose. Then the President of the Treasury Board is obliged to bring forward a motion specifically identifying the vote to which objection has been raised.

He may remember that the government House leader at the time this procedure was devised is currently the leader of the opposition in the Senate, the famous Senator MacEachen.

I may have a point of privilege here. Here I am, forced by procedure invented by Senator MacEachen to move on behalf of my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, a motion to restore the funds they need for their operation.

If ever a minister or member of Parliament deserves accolades for duty above and beyond the call, it is for having to undertake these actions. I am almost speechless at having to ask the hard-working taxpayers of this country to give up $27 million of their funds in order to provide Mr. MacEachen and his friends with the comforts to which they have become accustomed. It is one of the toughest things I have ever had to do.

I do have a question for the hon. member for Kamloops, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, who talked of his contempt for the Senate and how he thinks that we should deny them funds. Of course last Friday—mind you he wasn't here and I would have been away too had I been in his position, too embarrassed to be here—when his colleague the member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca moved a motion suggesting that we send a message to the Senate asking that it kill the GST legislation.

On the one hand he wants to deny them the money needed to operate, but on the other hand wants them to operate in a way that frankly is unconstitutional. I wonder if the member for Kamloops could tell me when he went through the change of heart, or change of mind, and when his party changed its policy. In the fall of 1987 when we were debating C-22, amendments to the Patent Act respecting pharmaceuticals, there was a lot of opposition in this House and when the bill was sent to the other place the Senate refused to accept it, amended it, and kept sending it back. It was doing much the same as we are doing now with C-21.

At that time the hon. member for Kamloops was asked for a comment by a reporter and as reported in The Ottawa Citizen of October 30, 1987, he said: "Quite frankly I am very disappointed with the Senate because I do not think it has the right to be holding up legislation."

Now could the hon. member tell me what has happened over the last three years to cause his judgment to so fail, his principles to so desert him that now he would be calling upon the Senate to in fact kill legislation currently before it? What has caused this once fine, upstanding commitment to democracy as demonstrated by this quote of October 30, 1987, to have so deserted the hon. member that he would now stand up and proclaim the appropriateness of the other place taking the kinds of unconstitutional, immoral action he seems to be asking of them.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to my hon. friend and say that he ought to consider what action would occur if the government did not move on the motion before us.

Mr. Andre: We wouldn't get the appropriations bill.

Mr. Riis: I know he has an obligation to bring it forward, but does he have an obligation to actually move on it and support it? I raise it as another question for him. My hon. friend has referred back to last Friday when we called upon the Senate—

Mr. Milliken: On Monday.

Mr. Riis: Excuse me. —on Monday of this week when we called upon the Senate to kill a bill. We filed the motion on Friday reminding the Senate that it does have the constitutional authority to reject, to kill legislation, to kill bills. I do not believe we should have a Senate with its present powers, answerable to no one, accountable to no one. That is my personal sort of point of view. We should not have the Senate at all.

Mr. Boyer: Sort of view; that's right. Sort of view.

Mr. Riis: I will take back the sort of—we should not have the Senate at all making these kinds of decisions. It has no place in a democratic society. However, the reality is we have a Senate. There are a lot of things that I do not care for. There are a lot of things the government does that I do not care for, but we have to live with these things. We have to live with the Senate. So, let us give the Senate an opportunity to prove itself. It has the constitutional authority to kill legislation. That is reality. I might not like it, I might not endorse it, I might not support it, but that is reality.

My leader asked the Senate to do something responsible for once and rather than simply review legislation, hundreds and thousands of pieces of it, do something that the people of Canada want it to do as senators, and defeat the goods and services tax. It failed to do that. It is not doing that. It gives no indication that it has any intention of listening to the people of Canada. That is why, today, we bring forward this motion which states we should not provide funding to allow the Senate to operate any longer. In other words, not give it the $27-plus million they require to carry on.

This would essentially abolish the Senate. Nelson Riis today, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, is putting forward this initiative to abolish the Senate. We cannot be any clearer than that in terms of how we feel when it comes to this particular Senate and the way it operates. The reality is that it exists and I am providing an opportunity for my friend, the government House Leader, and for the government, to do the right thing and not concur in this motion to provide operating funds to allow the other place an opportunity to continue for another fiscal year.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, to say that I was amazed in listening to the hon. member for Kamloops would be putting it mildly. I can only say how glad I am he has come back to the Chamber. I know he was away Monday when the motion his party put forward was debated. I looked forward to his participation in that debate.

The hon. member is now saying he wants to abolish the Senate. He now says that is party policy. Yet, on May 10 in the House, he told us the NDP policy had changed. He made an announcement that apparently at the December convention the NDP decided to scrap the policy of abolition. The hon. member for Edmonton East apparently had not grasped that fact. That became obvious on Monday. There may be dissension in the NDP about what their policy really is. Some seem to think it is still abolition, some say it is not. It is a personal view of his that abolition is still—

Mr. Boyer: It is a personal view.

Mr. Andre: It is a personal sort of view.

Mr. Milliken: The government House leader says it is a personal sort of view. But, somehow, we do not know what NDP policy is on this.

An hon. member: You never do.

Mr. Milliken: On the one hand they say "we want to abolish the Senate". Some of the members seem to think that. Apparently their official policy is to look at other options. That is what the hon. member for Kamloops said on May 10. On Monday they were saying how the Senate really was very important and should exercise its constitutional rights and block government bills willy-nilly. It was right there in the motion.

I am sorry the hon. member for Kamloops did not participate in that debate because I am sure he would have supported that motion. It was his party's official position. Or, perhaps the hon. member Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca went off on his own and dumped this motion on the Order Paper by mistake on Friday afternoon. We do not know what happened, but I wish the hon. member for Kamloops had clarified that for us in his remarks on the Senate. We would appreciate hearing his views. Nevertheless, having moved this motion on Monday saying that it supports the Senate, today we now have the hon. member for Kamloops trying to take away the Senate's money so it cannot do what the NDP wanted it to do on Monday.

• (1710)

What is the NDP position? What is the hon. member for Kamloops really saying? Are some of the members of the NDP in favour of abolition and others not? Do some think the Senate should block this legislation and some not, or is he simply playing a game and trying to blame the Liberal Party for the passage of this bad tax that this Tory government has introduced? Is that what he is really trying to do? If so, does the New Democratic Party, being a party of principle, not think that politics is a naughty thing to do and it should not be engaging in such silliness?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, imagine politics in the House of Commons. What is going to happen next, politics in the Parliament of Canada? I guess I have to admit that, from time to time, politics does rear its lovely head in here.

In response to my friend, I have two points. Yes, I was trying to point out the fact that the Liberals in the Senate are passing the GST. I must confess to that. They are passing the GST, just like the Conservatives in the House of Commons passed the GST. To clarify for my hon. friend, the motion on Monday read as follows:

> That a message be sent to the Senate reminding the Senate that it has the constitutional right and the power to defeat any bill coming from the House of Commons.

Anybody who understands how Parliament works would agree that the Senate has the authority to do just that, so that is a given. It is just a reminder, I suppose, to my hon. friend that that is the reality of our parliamentary system, that the Senate has the power and the authority to defeat any bill.

All we were asking on Monday was that the Senate do what we would expect it to do, in terms of listening to the people of Canada and defeat the bill. The Senate has failed to do that. We have given it ample time to indicate if it intends to defeat the goods and services tax, but the Senate obviously does not. The Liberals in the Senate plan, as they already have voted in favour of the tax once in the Senate, to take a little bit of time but eventually pass it one way or the other. Probably a lot of people will be sick on that day, or away or whatever and their incentive plan will not work to bring in the senators. Eventually they will muster up a majority and probably pass it on division so it will not be clear who it was who supported it, but it will pass the Senate.

To answer my hon. friend's question: What is the NDP's position in terms of the Senate? I will read, specifically, from party policy, because I think my hon. friend asked a very important question. As far as the Parliament of Canada is concerned, it states that "The NDP will continue to fight for further changes, including the abolition of the Senate". As of the last party convention in 1989, Motion 30 reads, "and that the proposed committee on the Canadian Constitution examine options to promote better regional representation in the Parliament of Canada including, but not limited to, proportional representation, an elected Senate, a House of the provinces and territories, as well as the abolition of the Senate", in other words, a number of options.

All I can say is that the NDP has been consistent. We do not change our policy by the day. We develop our policy at the grass roots at party conventions and we support that. What we are doing is completely and totally consistent with party policy; it is totally consistent with initiatives that we have taken on Friday of last week, on Monday of this week and certainly today when we have asked for the abolition of the Senate.

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to have an opportunity to make a few remarks in this debate. I have given a great deal of consideration as to how I might usefully contribute to the discussion. However, after listening to my hon. friend opposite, the hon. member for Kamloops, I must confess I am left a little bit confused as to exactly where the New Democratic Party stands with respect to the subject of democracy. If I understand correctly, what I have just heard the hon. member calling for is the other place to defeat legislation that, in the case of the GST, has been approved by this House. He is calling for the other place, the non-elected other place, to defeat that legislation and I find that a remarkable bit of confusion.

The hon. member says that that defeat should take place because of democracy, I believe that was the term; that the will of the people should prevail. I have lived with the understanding, perhaps it is a delusion, that the way we practise democracy in this country is that every so often Parliament is dissolved and we have an election and the people make their choices. It is, I believe, what is referred to as a representative democracy. Both in 1988 and in 1984 the people of Canada made their choice and gave an overwhelming mandate to this government to govern the country. Indeed, during the course of doing so, the government, through its elected representatives in the House of Commons, reflecting the perceptions of the will of the people, brings forth legislation that addresses the serious problems of this country and attempts to prepare Canada to move into the 21st century.

That is precisely what this government has been doing and has done in introducing the GST. My goodness gracious, changes in taxes are not popular things but sometimes they are necessary in a democratic country. We need a government that has the courage, the integrity, the honesty and a mandate from the people to get on with the business of the nation. I hear my hon. friend opposite suggesting that a non-elected body should stop the will of the people, the will of the people as freely expressed in a democratic way at the polls.

We have had, in my opinion, an absolute travesty of democracy for the last several months in this country as we have seen the other place not once, not twice, but three times flaunt the will of the elected people of this country in passage of Bill C–21. This bill is a long overdue revamping of the unemployment insurance system in this country, a bill that is in fact going to take our unemployment insurance from being a passive approach to making it an active approach. Among other things, it is going to make changes that are tremendously beneficial to the people of this country.

Thinking in terms of my own South Shore riding in southern Nova Scotia, I think of the crisis that we are facing right now because of the downturn in the Atlantic fishery. I think of the fact that fish plants are closing far more frequently than we might want.

Thanks to the fact that C–21 is not in place, those people now have to work 20 weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance. If they would get that bill through, the number of weeks required to qualify for unemployment insurance would be down where it should be. Seasonal workers like fish plant workers would benefit because the repeater provision of the unemployment insurance system would be removed. Yet the other place, ignoring democracy, has refused to pass that legislation. That is something which should be a matter of grave concern to Canadians.

We have now passed Bill C–43 dealing with the contentious issue of abortion. That has caused anguish to Canadians from coast to coast in this country. What are the senators saying? They are not sure what they are going to do about Bill C–43. Perhaps they will hold public hearings on the subject. Goodness, gracious, is there anything left to be said on that particular subject and can we not get on with the governance of this country?

I must not allow myself to get waylaid by the confusion as to what democracy is or is not in the minds of what is called euphemistically the New Democratic Party. I must get on with my own comments about the other place. I happen to think it is a tragedy that the other place has strayed from what it was supposed to be. If we think back 125 years to the origins of our country, and we think of the concept that existed at that time, of modelling a separate chamber, a chamber, if one reads the confederation debates, one sees was intended to provide what is referred to as a sober second thought. One does not know exactly what the state of sobriety that always might have existed in that or any other place, but nevertheless, the idea was that you had the elected people who essentially were charged with the responsibility of legislating for and governing the country, but you had this second body that would provide a second look that could enhance and contribute to the legislative process in Canada.

The idea was that very distinguished Canadians would be identified and asked to serve in that other place and that it would be a showcase of outstanding Canadians. I was perusing the latest issue of, I forget what it is called, something like the parliamentary guide. It gives little biographies of all the members of this Chamber and the other. I could not help but think to myself that indeed, sitting in that other place are a number of very distinguished Canadians; people who hold the Order of Canada and people who represent various vocations and professions in this country. I was thinking to myself what a tragedy it is the way that place has been abused, the way the credibility of that place, as an institution that could contribute with great value to this country, is being destroyed in the minds of Canadians.

• (1720)

Indeed, it is being destroyed in the minds of all people who believe in the democratic process and who believe that representative parliamentary government is the basis of democracy as we approach the end of this century.

Instead, what we have is gamesmanship being played by people of the Liberal Party who once sat in this place. I think of the distinguished gentleman who for many years represented my province in this place and now sits in the other chamber as Leader of the Opposition. I cannot help but wonder what he would have said when he sat here as House leader or Deputy Prime Minister. What would he have said if the opposition in the other place had done with his legislation what he is now doing with legislation that has been brought in after careful consideration to benefit Canadians from coast to coast? What a tragedy.

What has it come to? Where is it leading? In this country for the last several weeks, and in particular for the last three or four days, we have seen intensive discussion on the subject of Senate reform. We should not need Senate reform. The Senate is not what it is supposed to be. The people there are distinguished Canadians who do not recognize their proper role.

As my hon. friend from Kamloops said, legally and technically the Senate has the right to block legislation here. We also have convention. I am mindful of 1981 and 1982 when constitutional changes, on which there was failure to receive accord of all the Premiers of the country, were being proposed. Contrary to the convention of this country, the government proceeded without the support of the province of Quebec in implementing the constitutional changes of 1982. This is, perhaps, one of the main reasons that we find ourselves in the state in which this country has been for the last few months.

Convention allowed Quebec to oppose that constitution. Propriety and wisdom would have said: "You do not do it until you get everybody to come together." We now have the same attitude, value and ethic being used in the other place, not surprisingly, by the very same people who had no more respect for propriety and convention when they sat over here than evidently they have in the other place today. In my judgment, that is a most regrettable thing.

The outcome of all of this, in my opinion, could be that increasing numbers of Canadians will end up drawing the same conclusion as the conclusion my hon. friend from Kamloops suggested. In fact, it is the position of his party, that is, that the Senate should be abolished.

Clearly, if the Senate is unable to perform the valuable role it can play for this country and if the role of the Senate de facto is going to be to disrupt the carrying on of democracy, then indeed there is no alternative except to get rid of it. I, for one, think that would be a most regrettable state of affairs if that happened.

Instead, I would rather see the other place and the leadership of the Liberal Party in the other place recognize the difference between propriety and abuse of position. I would rather have it recognize the will of a democratically elected government in this country with the courage to lead and the common sense to get on with what the needs of Canada are for the 21st century. Then, Canadians would be well served. Indeed, all members of this House would be most enthusiastic in supporting measures that will provide the financial basis for them to operate in the other place.

I do not want to transgress for too lengthy a period of time on the House, but I will say in conclusion that I urge all members of the House, and in particular I urge all members of the Liberal Party in the House to go to their colleagues up the hall and tell them that it is time they had respect for the democratic process of the country. It is time they had respect for propriety and convention, so that the country can get on with its own business as it should. Canadians would have confidence in parliamentarians at both ends of this hall, as should be the case.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I have just a very brief comment.

I listened with great intensity and interest to the hon. member from South Shore. I am sure what he had to say was technically correct, but he glossed over a few points which I think I should certainly raise.

Whether it is in defence of the Senate or not, my particular issue is with some of the comments he made on Bill C–21, which is an issue of some concern to those of us on this side of the House and particularly those of us from the Atlantic region.

My hon. friend talked about the extension beyond the usual 10 or 12 weeks, whatever it is in the particular UIC region that has been charted out, up to as high as 20 weeks in my riding from 10 to 14 weeks. I am sure anybody watching this debate on television would have been very conscious of the comment that was made by the hon. member for South Shore.

Just to refresh his memory, Mr. Speaker, unemployment insurance was brought into this country about 50 years ago by the Liberal Party as a protection for those who did not have jobs and could not find jobs in tough times so that they would not be hungry.

It was a practice by both governments since 1977 to pass what was called a variable entrance requirement. This, in effect, recognized the areas of higher unemployment, reduced qualifying time, and gave extended periods of benefit in accordance with the requirements and in direct relationship to the rate of unemployment.

This happened every year since 1977 on an annual basis and almost as a matter of course and, I believe I am correct in saying, almost without debate, until Bill C–21 was introduced in this House last April by the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration, debated in the House of Commons and, indeed, debated across the country.

Bill C–21 included the variable entrance requirement. Without using unparliamentary language I think it is safe to say that Bill C–21 was held hostage, as was indeed the variable entrance requirement, to the whole procedure. In other words, the drill was if you do not pass C–21 you will be punished and you will not get the variable entrance requirement.

The other place being discussed here in very negative terms, the place of second sober thought, had the wisdom, foresight, integrity, and courage just before Christmas last year, in fact moments before this House adjourned for the Christmas break, to reintroduce Bill S–12. This was the variable entrance requirement, the very measure that the hon. member talked about so despicably and which he voted against along with his other members.

How can he possibly blame the Senate for that? In fact, I hope he will remember that he voted against this when we break during the summer because people will remember.

I just want to wrap this up by saying we talk about democracy. A great man, Abraham Lincoln, talked about democracy as being "by the people, of the people, and for the people".

Well, I have to remind you, Mr. Speaker, 300 committee items, various people, teams, individuals, appeared before groups of the Commons committee and the Senate committee when they went across the country. Ninety-five per cent of those disagreed with Bill C–21 and, indeed, 90 per cent were very much against it.

That may be democracy "of the people" but I do not think it is "by the people" and it certainly is not "for the people".

Mr. McCreath: Mr. Speaker, I am more than pleased to respond to my hon. friend though I must confess that I think the House has seen an absolutely extraordinary thing happen here. We have invoked the name and the distinguished Gettysburg Address of Abraham Lincoln, the sixteenth President of the United States, to defend the absolute abrogation of propriety and democratic principles by the people up the hall.

My hon. friend knows perfectly well that he speaks with his tongue in his cheek when he says what he has just said in this place with respect to Bill C–21 and the variable entrance requirement. It is interesting.

• (1730)

I call to his attention what happened in this very Chamber in 1977 when Bill C–27 was moved by the previous government. It was a bill not dissimilar in much of its intent to Bill C–21. It brought in a number of changes. In fact it was the one that introduced for the first time the variable entrance requirement.

It brought in a number of other similar changes. It was hotly debated in this Chamber. In fact the government of that day, which by the way was a government formed by the same people who now sit on the other side of the floor in this Chamber, brought in time allocation to impose that bill on this House at that time.

I wonder what they would have thought if the people down the hall had said: "We are going to take our time with this piece of legislation". Interestingly enough, many of those same principles were debated before that bill had been put through this place with time allocation. What happened to that bill when it got down the hall? The bill was introduced on August 2, 1977 and reported without amendment the following day, August 3, 1977. What of the principles in the other place? The same people had the majority in that place. It is interesting to check the record.

We see that the following year Bill C–14 was introduced in this place dealing with the subject of unemployment insurance and a number of very contentious issues including, I might point out, that it would result in a saving of $885 million in UI benefits, a remarkable achievement. What happened to that bill? That bill was similarly dealt with in a very contentious manner in this place. What happened? Were they worried about it in the other place? It passed through the other place and received Royal Assent in one day, on December 22, 1978.

Our friends down the hall, with respect to Bill C-21, said they had to go out and hear from Canadians. Yet if my hon. friend would check the record, and I invite him to do so, it is interesting to note that as they went on their grand tour of Canada to hear witnesses they heard from 54 of the same witnesses who appeared before the C-21 legislative committee of this House.

While I enjoy my friend's eloquence, as always, I am not sure exactly what his question was. His question had to do with a bill originating in the other place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the hon. member for North Island—Powell River has a question for the member.

Mr. Raymond Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am astounded not only at the activity in the House right now but by the hon. member's incredible speech in that it totally missed the point of the motion. I am not surprised he did not understand the question from our Liberal colleague. It is my hope that the member for Kamloops can stand up once again and with more patience and concern draw the hon. member a picture so he understands what is going on.

My colleague from Kamloops, through his motion and debate; painted a picture of the hypocrisy of the Liberal Party in the other place and of its candidates for leader who want to pass the GST.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is one thing that we in the House must do. It is to have a little more respect for the other place, whether we like to or not. It is in the rules. I hope the hon. member will have a little more respect for the other place and will direct his comments to the speech made of the hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Thank you for your kind and judicious guidance, Mr. Speaker.

Did the hon. member completely miss the point? The concern was the fact that the Liberals in the Senate do wish to pass the GST, but they do not wish to appear as if they want to pass the GST.

The member argued in his speech that it was some nefarious act to block and oppose what 90 per cent of Canadians want destroyed, that is the GST bill.

What we need here is a comment. This is no longer a representative government. Its popularity is now lower than the interest rate.

Will the hon. member admit that if the popularity of his government and the Prime Minister drops below the level of his IQ his party has lost its right to rule?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for South Shore has a minute left in questions and comments.

Mr. McCreath: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whose IQ my hon. friend was referring to, so I will not of course comment on it.

I realize that the time is nearly done. I think it is interesting that the New Democratic Party believes that the Government of Canada should be driven not by the needs of the country, not by what is right for Canada, but by the public opinion polls of the day.

I can go on at some length describing to him the fact that, for example, 85 per cent of Canadians once supported capital punishment at a time when his party totally opposed capital punishment. Where do we stand?

To come back to the remarks of the hon. member for Kamloops, it seems to me the bottom line is that a democratic system is one in which the people elect governments and they elect governments to govern.

What I hear from my friends in the New Democratic Party is that they want the non-elected, appointed people to make the decisions, to reflect the will of Canadians, when in fact Canadians have spoken. Canadians have spoken in 1984. They have spoken in 1988. They have made it plainly clear in which group they have confidence to govern this country. I invite my hon. friend to wait until 1993 when he will find for the third straight time that this party will be re-elected.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to enter the debate this afternoon, especially before the member for South Shore explodes.

For people who are watching today on television and for those in the gallery, the debate that we are seeing among the Liberals, the Conservatives, and the New Democrats is interesting. The debate is on where these various parties stand on the question of the Senate.

The New Democratic Party's House leader, the hon. member for Kamloops, made it very clear in reading our party's policy from our recent convention in Winnipeg, at which we elected our new leader, the member for Yukon, that the New Democratic Party has always had a strategic and forward thinking policy when it comes to the Senate.

Why do I say that, or why can I say that? The reason I can say that is that we do not have the hidebound approach to dealing with the Senate of our friends in the Liberal and Conservative parties. Let us take a look at history. Let us look at the historic debate that we are having today, that we had as well on Monday, and that the First Ministers are having down the street today.

We all know the history of the Senate. All those who go through school and university have probably written at least one essay on the Senate and how it should be abolished. It represented the classes with property. It gives a sober second look at legislation from the House of Commons, from the commoners. Property was a requirement to be appointed to that place. I believe, if I have my history right that, the right hon. member for Yellowhead was the Prime Minister who appointed one of his friends to the Senate who had to buy a condominium in Ottawa in order to be eligible to accept his appointment to the Senate.

I recall debate in the House at one time when the current Prime Minister asked in this House the then Leader of the Opposition, the right hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, if he would agree on the spot, that day, to legislation to abolish the Senate. We agreed. Our leader, Mr. Broadbent, the former member for Oshawa, agreed with the Tories that day that the Senate should be abolished then and there.

However who was it, which party was it that refused the necessary consent to abolish the Senate that day? You guessed right, Mr. Speaker. It was the Liberals again. Why?

It is pretty clear from the debate today and the debate we have heard in the House, particularly over the goods and services tax, that the Liberals are in favour of preserving the Senate as much as the Conservatives are. Of course the debate around that has been around the goods and services tax.

It was revealing when our House leader just mentioned to this House that in fact Liberal senators of the Liberal dominated Senate have actually now given second reading to the goods and services tax legislation. It is on its way to becoming law. It is becoming law with the co-operation and assistance of the Conservatives in the House of Commons and the Liberals in the Senate.

• (1740)

It is clear from the attitude exhibited in the House by the Liberals that they feel confident that they are going to walk into office in the next election, just as the Conservatives feel so confident that they will be able to pull it off at the last minute and get re-elected. However the Liberals want to try and have it as many different ways as they can. When that legislation goes through—and all Canadians know the kind of tax grab the goods and services tax is—the Liberal Party of Canada cannot wait to get its hands on that money.

We know as well that even the leadership candidates for the Liberal Party are not clear on where they stand on the goods and services tax. We have had a couple of alternatives put forward from the Liberals. There has been the flat tax proposal.

Mr. Mills: The single tax.

Mr. Gardiner: The flat earth proposal. The New Democrats have presented clear and consistent policies when it comes to alternatives to tax policy in this country.

Today we are giving the Liberals and the Conservatives the opportunity in this House to join with the first ministers in starting to take a look at what we should do with the Senate.

Monday was an historic day. We said in our policy that it is a tool that can be used. We said: "If you are so opposed to the GST then stop the legislation now. Use your power now to do that".

What did they do? We know what is happening with the Liberals senators and the GST. They are trying to pass it.

The motion today gives a chance to government members to send a clear signal to the Liberal senators: "Stop delaying our legislation. We have a right to pass it". The Conservative members should vote for our motion, thereby doing in the Senate which can then go along and pass the legislation.

They can give it a try. We will oppose it in this House as we always have. Here is the chance for the Conservatives to send a very clear signal to the Senate of Canada to understand the importance of the kind of legislation it will or will not support. I think that is the importance of this motion today.

Let us look at what the Senate does. It cost taxpayers $40 million a year for that unelected body, our senators. They work Tuesday through to Thursday. They have an 800 number so that Canadians can give them a call.

In my province, in my area, if we closed down the Senate for five years we would come close to having enough money finally to plant some trees. I think we could do more good for British Columbia and our environment by planting some trees rather than keeping the Senate going for a couple more years when who knows what it is doing.

The motion put forward by our House leader, the member for Kamloops, is part of a strategic policy platform. It is a forward thinking policy that our party has had, a policy which developed out of our convention in Winnipeg. We foresaw the debate that is going on now with the First Ministers with respect to how to change the Senate. Is it going to be changed or abolished? What are we going to do with the Senate? We are waiting just as all members and all Canadians are, to see what the first ministers come up with on the Senate.

We do not know what is going on, of course. It is a closed shop debate right now. I think we would all be interested to see exactly what the future of this country is going to be.

I wonder if the members of the Conservative Party in this House really know that their Prime Minister is saying down the street with the First Ministers. I wonder if they know what the Prime Minister is talking about when it comes to the Senate. Probably not. We have already heard some interventions by members to get in there and state their views, which is what all Canadians are arguing for.

These are historic days for the Senate in terms of its reform or its abolition. As well, I think that the motion that we have brought forward here today sends out a clear signal. My guess is that the Conservatives will probably be supporting our motion today because they want to send a clear signal to the Liberal-dominated Senate as well. I think we will have some support from the Conservatives with our motion so that we can send that signal.

In conclusion, politicians being what they are in their various chambers—and I suppose we and the Senate are not alone, and nor are other legislative chambers—sometimes cause Canadians to wonder about what it is we are doing. The latest example will become a new symbol. It is a $153 symbol just for showing up for work, on top of your normal pay because you show up for work.

The next button that will be a best seller in Canada will be a button showing $153 with a red line through it. It will become a symbol of exactly where we are with the Senate. Canadians are going to be outraged by that particular measure. They are going to be outraged by senators who now suggest that they need another $153 a day just to show up for work.

As the member for Kamloops said, maybe we will actually have a couple of extra days when senators will show up in Ottawa. Planes will be full of senators rushing back to Ottawa to try and collect their $153 a day. It has become an important symbol.

Before I sit down, and to put that symbol into meaning, I move:

> That the motion be amended by deleting the sum of $27,605,000 and replacing it with the sum of $27,604,847.

That motion symbolizes that $153 the senators now want to pay themselves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The hon. member for Halifax West on a question or comment.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, let me first tell the hon. member—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Kamloops is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend for Prince George—Bulkley Valley just presented an amendment to the motion. Perhaps we should determine whether that is in order before we proceed with questions and comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): He did not do the amendment.

Mr. Riis: We were waiting for a Page to come to pick it up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I will accept the amendment.

There will be questions and comments first. The hon. member for Halifax West—

• (1750)

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I have a question of procedure here. Since there is a new motion before the House put by the previous speaker, the floor now belongs to someone else to discuss that motion. I do not think we want to put questions and comments to a speech on something else. I just wondered if we could have a decision on that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley has lost his turn as far as debate is concerned. However, we will allow questions and comments on the member's amendment and his speech.

The hon. member for Halifax West.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and then a question.

First, I want to tell the hon. member, because he mentioned tree planting in British Columbia, that this very day my son is in Prince George—Bulkley Valley planting trees on behalf of the people of Canada.

Dealing with the motion respecting the vote for the Senate, I think the member probably realizes that there is a constitutional obligation on the Parliament of Canada, the House of Commons, to provide funding for the Senate. This method of undermining the Senate would not really be acceptable, but I think members know that. That is why I want to ask the member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley this question. It is becoming very apparent from the dialogue that this is really an argument between the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party and has very little to do with the vote for the Senate.

As I understand it, the New Democratic Party is saying: "You cannot trust the Liberals. They are in fact in favour of the GST and are going to approve the GST through the instrument of their majority in the Senate". The New Democratic Party is just pointing out to the House of Commons and to all the people of Canada that the Liberals are less than honest about the position on the GST.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: They actually think it is a beneficial tax, one that will provide viability and fiscal capability for Canada for many years in the future. You might say in that respect that they agree entirely with the government party that the GST is basically an appropriate instrument of taxation and one which they really in fact support despite their posture in the House of Commons, and that it will be approved in the Senate.

I gather that is the point that the New Democratic Party is making. Of course, on the other hand it is continuing its unrealistic opposition to the Senate. As the member for Kamloops said, he has to deal with reality. I never thought I would hear a socialist say that they would have to deal with reality, but the reality is that the Senate is there, and members of the New Democratic Party recognize that. They have made this arcane appeal, knowing that the appeal is going to be denied and that the GST is going to be approved. It is simply to show that the Liberal Party in fact supports the GST.

Could I ask the member this? Have I understood correctly the position of the New Democratic Party?

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the member's son is out planting trees in the great north of British Columbia. A number of other members have sons and daughters doing just that. We are glad they are making that contribution to the country.

The hon. member got part of the message right, not the whole of it. We are saying in this debate, as we have throughout all of the debate on the goods and services tax that, in the member's words, the Liberal Party has been less than honest about its real intentions on the goods and services tax.

It has already passed second reading the Senate, as you know, Mr. Speaker. I think most Canadians will be surprised to hear that that has actually happened.

Yes, part of the message in the debate we are having today is about the honesty of the Liberal Party on the GST.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for my friend.

During his speech he made the comment that we sometimes do things in this House that Canadians must wonder about. I realize that it is the New Democratic Party's opposition day. But, as the member from Halifax mentioned earlier, by constitution we must at this point in time let the Senate carry on. I am not going to get into whether I am for or against the Senate at this moment, but I will tell hon. members what really irritates me. The hon. members has pricked my conscience when he talks about Canadians wondering what we do here.

By the way, the Senate has not passed the GST. It is going to committee now. Do not mislead the people of Canada by saying that the Senate has rubber-stamped or passed the GST. But that is not the point I want to make.

The point I want to make is that I really think that we in this House today must look like idiots. Interest rates are going through the moon. There is a housing crisis. There is a crisis of confidence in this country. Yet we have spent the last three hours talking about the Senate of Canada. We should be using this place to focus on the real problems that exist in this country.

Mr. Boyer: He is grandstanding for the cameras.

Mr. Mills: I am not grandstanding. I am telling hon. members right now that this is enough to drive people crazy. There is a crisis of confidence in this country right now.

Now I will turn to my question. The hon. member referred to doing things here about which Canadians must sometimes wonder. Would he not consider that the way we are carrying on here today about the Senate and this $27 million might also qualify in that category?

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate some of what the member for Broadview—Greenwood has had to say. I think we all know what is going on in the Liberal Party now. I guess some of us know, or we read between the lines. The member has made some sincere attempts to convince his leadership candidates of some of his proposals and ideas. I would say that that is probably good. Most of the leadership candidates have been a little loosey-goosey when it comes to saying exactly where they stand on some of their policies, particularly the GST.

I know my hon. friend has been pursuing one particular tax policy idea, to his credit. He is working hard at trying to convince his colleagues to adopt that approach and policy.

He expresses some chagrin about the debate in the House today. I would say very sincerely that from time to time, as I said earlier and he agreed, that Houses such as ours, and others, do things or debate issues about which Canadians might wonder.

Mr. Speaker has been quite helpful for the people who watch our proceedings on television. From time to time he takes a second or two to explain exactly what we are doing.

What we are doing in the House is using opportunities to debate issues, which is what we are doing now. This is not a frivolous motion. The debate about the future of the Senate is as serious in this Chamber now as it is down the street where the First Ministers are having their say about the future of the Senate.

We are talking about a motion which concerns $27 million or $40 million a year. What will be even sillier is that some time tonight we are all going to say yea or nay to this vote. By our yeas or nays we are going to pass over $27 million with nary a debate. I am thankful that our party had the forethought to bring this motion before the House today so that we could have some debate about the future of the Senate.

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask my colleague a question. In his speech he made a number of comments about the position of leadership candidates of the Liberal Party and the Liberal Party itself on the GST. Several spokespersons for the Liberal Party have clearly indicated our opposition to a regressive tax. We know that the Senate is indicating very clearly that it will provide Canadians with an opportunity to review the tax, because there are many changes occurring in this tax, even since it was passed by this place. The Senate will be providing that forum for Canadians.

• (1800)

I have a specific question for my colleague. He has grave concern for positions and alternatives to the government proposal on GST. Both the Canadian Labour Congress and the New Democratic Party, in briefs presented to the Standing Committee on Finance of the House of Commons, indicated that they sought a royal commission and that there should be tax reform based on a royal commission. I wonder if my colleague would be kind enough to explain why the NDP puts forward the thesis that it has a position on the goods and services tax if it is asking the people of Canada to foot the expense for a royal commission to find an alternative to the government proposal?

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to respond to that question because it is an important one. I hope and trust that my reply will give an indication of just how seriously we have thought out the approach which we want to take to taxation policy in the country.

First, yes, we have made allegations about Liberal leadership candidates and how loosey-goosey they are when it comes to GST policy and other tax policies. They are playing politics and some of the front-runners do not want to be pinned down to one particular policy or another because then immediately positions are formed up. We all know in the House what that is all about. I guess it is about how sincere one is going to be and what about those frontrunners and exactly where are they going to stand. Our friends in the Liberal Party have tabled petition after petition calling on the Conservatives to stop and end the GST now.

Suddenly, the GST legislation is in the Senate. It has passed second reading and it is on to committee. Why are they not now urging and encouraging the Senate to stop the GST legislation right at this moment? There are some serious questions that people have raised about Liberal leadership candidates and whatever their strategy is when it comes to the goods and services tax.

The question from the member about a royal commission on tax policy is a good one. Our proposal is a package of 18 to 20 significant alternatives and suggested tax measures dealing with the goods and services tax. One of them is the call for a royal commission into taxation policy. Aside from, along with, and parallel to the tax measures that we are suggesting, it is important to bring in the Income Tax Act every now and then, put it up on the hoist and take a good look at it, quite like we are supposed to do with the Bank Act. We have reached a pivotal time for tax policy and a good close look at our taxation policy should be taken. We have suggested that it should be done through a royal commission. I think that is a credible and responsible approach to take and this would include our other tax policies, when it comes to alternatives to the goods and services tax.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I was sitting here and minding my own business—

An hon. member: I don't believe that.

An hon. member: He was minding the nation's business.

Mr. Rodriguez: I was minding my business. My friend, the hon. member for Broadview—Greenwood, pricked my conscience. I have great respect for him. He is a thoughtful member of Parliament, very thoughtful. He puts it all on one page. Any member of Parliament who can put all of his thoughts on one page, I respect.

He suggested that with the big issues facing the nation, Canadians must be wondering what we are doing in the House talking about the Senate and they must think we are crazy. He is absolutely right.

I want to tell him and all Canadians that Canadians right across this land who are not wealthy are absolutely shocked that an unelected group of people can sit over there and vote themselves a $153 a day. That is to show up. They still get their $62,000 a year along with their $10,000 tax-free allowance. They now get $153 a day tax free to show up. It is absolutely outrageous. Do you know that there are poor people in the country who live for a week on $153?

Of course, they need an incentive to show up for work. God knows they find very little time to show up. A $153-a-day incentive. Do people understand the estimates that we are voting today? I tell my hon. friend from Broadview—Greenwood to look at what I see in expenditure: $1,525,000 for the construction of committee rooms in the Senate.

This is a time when we are asking Canadians to tighten their belts. We are asking them to make sacrifices. We are asking them to pay taxes on taxes on taxes. When it is not the federal government reaching into their pockets, it is the provincial governments, the school boards, municipalities, or hydro commissions. Everybody is into their pockets.

Is this not important to Canadians? Already I have received phone calls in my riding office because people heard on the news that the Senators voted themselves $153 a day. To whom are the senators accountable?

I was invited into a school the other day to talk about government. Here is a question that young people posed to me: What does one do to get into the Senate? There is a tough question. I really have to think about that one.

First, one has to go to St. Francis Xavier University or the same kindergarten as the Prime Minister. The only way to get into the Senate is to be a friend of people in high places. The Senate is a resting home for all those who have served the Conservative Party and Liberal Party well. The Senate has become a hiving ground for all the flicks, flacks, and hacks of both the Conservative Party and Liberal Party. That is how one gets into the Senate.

This Senate is not elected. Therefore, there is no accountability. Lo and behold, senators can actually vote themselves $153 tax-free.

An hon. member: That is for showing up.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is the incentive. The other thing is this business of a $1.5 million to renovate the committee rooms. If they show up, Madam Speaker, there has to be committee rooms for them.

The other question that the young people raised was: What does a Senator do? I have never been able to answer that question in all the 17 years that I have been involved in federal politics. Quite frankly, I have never seen a real live senator. In fact, the other day the cleaning people were cleaning up, a senator was there and he keeled over. She said: "Oh God, he is dead." She ran out to get the head of the cleaning staff who said: "Don't worry. He has been dead for years. He has been sitting there." I do not know what a senator does. I really don't.

The Senate is supposed to be a Chamber of sober second thought.

An hon. member: Does the NDP want the Senate to hold up the GST? That was your policy yesterday.

• (1810)

Mr. Rodriguez: We will get to that.

What we have is a second chamber, not elected, not accountable, and suddenly now revived. The Senate became the issue around which the future of Canada was to be decided. Can you believe this moribund place suddenly became the focus around which the future of the country would be decided. I cannot believe it.

I think our proposal is a very simple one. If the government supports the motion of the hon. member for Kamloops to eliminate the $47 million, voilà, the problem is resolved. The government's headaches are finished. The solution is one of the hitches in the Meech Lake Accord is eliminated. Then, without a Senate, we can start to look at how to reform the House of Commons on a proportional representation basis. We can build into the elected chamber representation from the regions of the country, over and above the elected members.

An hon. member: You were doing well until a minute ago.

Mr. Rodriguez: No. If you follow me. I really—

An hon. member: The responsibility is over there at the railway station.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, the responsibility is ours, right here. We are faced with an opportunity to resolve it.

I heard the government House leader the other day when Bill C-21 came back to the House. He made a speech in which he raled against the fact that the Senate was unaccountable and dominated by ex-Liberals who got a second coming over there and somehow are dictating policy for this House. I heard the government House leader say that.

An hon. member: They are still Liberal die-hards.

Mr. Rodriguez: They are still Liberals, yes, in different clothing. But there they are over there. I heard the government House leader rale against the Senate because of what it did to Bill C-21.

The obvious solution to that problem is not to stack it with more Tory hacks to outvote the Liberal hacks. The solution to the problem is to cut the tree down. Go right to the roots and pull it out. Take it right out. That is the solution to the problem. We, today, have given the government an opportunity to solve its headache. Just think about it. If the government does what we ask it to do, it solves it here and it solves it across the street, in the Conference Centre. It is simple. No problem. No problem at all.

On the other hand, I am caught on the horns of a dilemma because I do recognize that a Senate can be useful. I know the problem. Even we sometimes would want a Senate where we could put all the people who give us particular problems in the NDP. Then, the question logically extends, do we really need to have them here on the Hill? I do not think so. We could set them up in some sort of a hole and send the cheques. We do not have to ring bells for them. We do not have to have people come knocking on our door here to invite us down. We do not have to have all of that stuff.

Now, what is rumoured from across the street? They want to increase the numbers in the Senate. They want to increase them.

An hon. member: There is an opportunity.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am not preaching for a call, brother. I am quite happy here.

The problem that we are trying to help the government through is to pass the motion of the hon. member for Kamloops. I do not think that one can justify to the Canadian people an unelected body which thwarts the wishes of the elected members of Parliament. That is my position. That is our position. We believe that. But if the government persists in supporting the Senate and you want to keep it on our backs, then for heaven's sake we are going to use it against you. We are prepared and have put it in writing that if you want to cut it out, we will cut it out. But if you vote us down and foist this unelected group of party hacks and flacks on us, then we are going to use them. Why not? Absolutely, we should use them.

We socialists not only have principles, we are practical. And if you do not like those principles, we have others.

Madam Speaker, how can we be practical? I think the best way is to vote for the motion of the member for Kamloops and cut off their money supply.

The point is that this is our principle, to kill the Senate. We put a motion to do that. Now if the government votes it down as we know they will, I hope you vote with us and if we are defeated, so be it. We have achieved a policy that our party has established in convention, the elimination of the Senate.

