Mr. W. L. Brown addressed the meeting on the subject of "Smut and Chessa in Wheat," a vote of thanks being tendered to the lecturer at the close of the address.

The election of officers resulted: President, John Elliott, Westminister; vice-president, Joseph Wheaton, Thorncliffe; secretary-treasurer, Archibald Murdoch, Uxbridge; William Grieve.

Delegates to Central Farmers' Institute, Toronto: S. B. Gornell and Joseph Wheaton. Directors for township of Dorchester: Messrs. Ed. Beattie, R. Venning and D. R. Thompson.

Missionaries Wrecked. ROSSHAU, Ont., Nov. 27.—The passenger steamer Sunbeam, en route from Fort George to Rossau in command of Commander Ferguson, with a party of missionaries, ran on Renshaw's Reef, one of the unknown shoals in the lake, last evening. The passengers were rescued by a passing steamer.

Suicide at Ingersoll. INGERSOLL, Nov. 27.—The quiet peacefulness of Ingersoll's everyday life was lately disturbed Saturday evening when it became known that John Avery, one of its respected residents, had committed suicide. The deceased, who was a painter by trade, had lived in Ingersoll for a number of years, and by his exemplary habits earned the respect of all his associates.

How She Became a Missionary. "I'm doing missionary work a good deal of the time," was the reply of one of the most charming women of New York, to a friend, who asked how she busied herself. "I see by your looks you wonder what I mean by that. I'll tell you. A few years ago life was a burden to me. I had been a victim to female weakness of the most aggravated character for a long time, and the doctors failed to help me. Experience was a long, steady, terrible torture—a lingering, living death. One day I saw Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription advertised in the newspaper. Something in the advertisement impressed me favorably. I caught at the glimmer of hope that shone at a straw. Still, I did not give up hope. But I got the medicine, and behold the result! I feel so well, so strong, and so thankful, that I go about telling other women what saved me. In no other way can I so well show my gratitude to God, and to the man who has proved such a benefactor of women, and my love for my suffering sisterhood."

Don't delay, ladies. Christmas is nearly here. You will receive lots of pretty presents by buying your teas, coffees, baking powder, cocoa, chocolate, pepper and mustard from Empire Tea Company. Presents with every pound. Twenty-six pounds of granulated sugar for $1 upon purchasing system. Great stoves, great stoves, immense business. EMPIRE TEA COMPANY, three doors from King's Hotel.

You've never had a good photo of yourself. That should not be. Mackie can make it for you. None but the most finished and artistic work will leave his studio, southwest corner Dundas and Richmond streets, over C. P. R. ticket office.

TASTE IT NOT. A Practical Discourse on the Benefits of Total Abstinence.

By Rev. Thor. Cullen—An Interesting Phase of the Temperance Question Ably Discussed.

Most of the discussion which has so far taken place upon the prohibition pleads to be directed towards pointing out the enormities of the liquor traffic. In the Askin Street Methodist Church Sunday morning Rev. Thomas Cullen viewed the question from an altogether different aspect. He devoted himself to defining the beneficial results attendant upon total abstinence. The large audience present were delighted with the vigorous and clear exposition of this phase of the controversy.

Mr. Cullen chose as his text Jeremiah, xxxv, 18-19. His theme was "The Rechabites' Reward," and he drew from the passage the strong lesson that total abstinence principles had here been strikingly rewarded. Mr. Cullen divided his address into seven propositions. They were as follows:

1. Total abstinence is a safe practice for any man to follow. "If you do not drink you cannot get drunk" seems to be a trite utterance. Yet it is as true as it is simple, and as sublime in its simplicity as it is simple in its application. 2. Total abstinence is a respectable habit. In an intelligent community, who ever knew an honorable citizen to suffer loss of character because he was a total abstainer from all kinds of narcotics? No man! The common sense of humanity is in favor of the practice of legitimate self-denial on the part of man, either for his own sake or for the sake of his fellows. In many instances even the victims of unnecessary stimulants themselves respect the men who will not follow their example and decline to become their associates in so-called moderation and dangerous self-indulgence.

3. Total abstinence from strong drink preserves and improves health. Without it the highest physical development cannot be reached. Tom Sayers, that king of English pugilists, never touched spirits, ale or porter when training for a prize fight. He revealed in cold water and in dumb-bell exercise. Cold water made him a Samson. Alcohol killed him. Both in the frozen regions of the north, in those dangerous exploring expeditions, and in the sweltering heat of the tropics, total abstinence has proved its superiority over moderate drinking. From India's battlefields the praises of "Havelock's Saints" who were always sober, come to us in sweet remembrance, even in this far-off time. And the men who will yet brave the dangers of polar seas and of Arctic frosts will but confirm the social and scientific testimonials already given in favor of total abstinence.

4. Total abstinence from alcohol prolongs life. Man's marvelously constructed frame thrives on good treatment. Good food and plenty of it, wholesome and nourishing drink in abundance, man needs in his daily life. This God has provided, and desires him to have. But he must not put into his stomach anything that may not with safety become incorporated into his system, or that will war against the law of his being. Alcohol refuses to assimilate and to build up. If a man would be good to himself let him abhor unrequited stimulants. The man who does not know the value of a strong drink has a better knowledge and a purer taste than the man who is a connoisseur in every department of brewing and distillation.

5. There is money in total abstinence. A man rarely drinks himself rich. But abstinence usually tends to wealth. It saves time; and time is money. It also saves money. The healthy brain can best determine what to do with gold honestly earned. Wholly abstinent men are the root of all evil, and while there are many total abstainers who make a god of it and lose their souls for its sake, yet money itself God gives as a blessing to men. "It is the Lord thy God that giveth the power to get wealth." Total abstinence prevents idle habits. It makes a man diligent; and "the hand of the diligent maketh rich." It keeps a man at home with his family when his day's work is done. Here he can encourage, cheer, comfort, and correct, as may be necessary, and supervise along with his faithful wife the efforts of character-building in his home. It never takes him to the public house to spend his evenings. It keeps him in a condition in which he can use all his faculties and make the best use of his every talent.

6. Total abstinence exerts a good influence. It places no stumbling block before the weak. Moderate drinking may be criticised, and by many condemned. But total abstinence is not open to criticism, nor can any sane man condemn it. He who so lives as to place no stumbling block in the path of his fellow, does good not only negatively but preaches also a plain, strong, positive gospel. 7. Total abstinence from this alluring cup pleases God and is honored of him. This but reaffirms the substance of the text. Some men may be moderate drinkers all their lives. Others cannot be. He who can take a glass or two of it alone, as far as he himself is concerned, and who will not abandon it for the sake of his weak brother can lay no claim to self-denial, and must be the occasion of sorrow to his fellow. He who destroys his weak brother, for whom Christ died, I take this Scriptural ground because every man ought to love his brother, and in some sense his brother's keeper. If every man recognized these principles, and acted upon them, there would be total abstinence for our own sakes, and prohibition for the sake of our fellows. Let us carry this matter to the ears and hearts of both young and old by the loudest persuasion and faithful effort, and to our God in prayer. We cannot conquer without him. With him we are invincible. We have undertaken a great work, the obtaining and enforcement of a prohibitory law. We can conquer through God, and not without him. Let those who best know the firmness with which the drink traffic has entrenched itself in the laws, habits and social customs of our country remember that God is on our side. It is said that the night before the battle of Arlesia Alexander the Great heard two mutinous soldiers discussing the impossibility of 20,000 Greeks on the morrow successfully meeting 600,000 Persians. He boldly entered the tent and asked them, "For how many do you count me?" With such a commander it was no marvel that the Greeks were victorious. In this fight with wrong "for how many do you count God?" Let London and Ontario ask and answer this question believingly. God speed the right. God bless you all. Amen.

JOSEPH TAIT, M.P.P. Toronto's Genial Politician on Platform and in Pulpit.

Addresses a Large Crowd of Men in Victoria Hall—Preaches Twice in King Street Methodist Church.

"If there is one thing that Christianity needs to-day more than another it is men. These words were uttered by Joseph Tait, M.P.P., Toronto, as he gazed around him in Victoria Hall Sunday afternoon at the large crowd of men gathered there. "We need men who are Christians every day," he testified. "Not Christians in the prayer meeting only, but Christians in the workshop; not Christians on Sunday only, but Christians every day during the week. And I have an idea that the Y. M. C. A., by the amount of work that they call forth on the part of the young men and those who are not so young, are doing more to promote this kind of Christianity than any other influence that I know of. If I was going to hold up an illustration of what Christianity ought to be, or what they ought to do, I am not exactly sure that I would pick upon the example generally held up. I would be inclined to go back in history a good while and remember those four Jews who brought the poor paralytic to Christ and lifted him up and carried him to the top of the house and let him down and accomplished their purpose. And what we want are Christians who don't simply seek to amuse themselves with Christianity, but who mean to work it. Speaking on the temperance question Mr. Tait said he was not as qualified to dwell on that subject as Mr. Hector. He had taken the pledge when he was twelve years old and had never since, so he was only acquainted with one side of the question. It had been said that keeping one's mouth shut would save them from the evil consequences of liquor. It had been stated that people could not be made temperate by acts of Parliament. But Mr. Tait's own son who never tasted liquor in his life was nearly killed three years ago on account of a drunken man. Were they then to keep their mouths shut? Mr. Tait then told the story of a Christian slave whose master wanted him to work on Sunday. He argued with him that even the Bible said if a man's ox fall in a pit on Sunday he should be helped out. "Yes," answered the slave, "but if the ox fell in the same hole Sunday after Sunday I would fill up the hole on Saturday night." This answer was the logic of the whole temperance question. It was a dangerous thing to have the traffic as a temptation, therefore have it put out of the way. Miss Jennie Bishop, "The Black Jennie Lind," sang "There is a Green Hill Far Away" in a very sweet voice. Mr. C. R. Sayer occupied the chair.

IN THE PULPIT. The anniversary of the King Street Methodist Church Sunday will long be remembered by those who attended the services. Mr. Tait delivered two instructive discourses, in the evening taking as the subject for consideration a portion of Romans, viii, 11. The speaker said that he desired to hold up as a mirror before the congregation the experience of the Apostle Paul, into which all were invited to look and examine themselves. Had their experience been anything like Paul's it would be well. The apostle, in reviewing his own experience looked at the present, past and future. There were the same three periods in our life before we enter into eternal rest, and there was life in a look at the Crucified One. The question was also often asked why mankind went down the broad way in such an unconcerned manner, thus rendering the turning point in life so difficult; but to this question no answer could be given, as in these days of Sabbath schools and Christian Endeavor there should be an ever increasing number in our midst.

S. & J. "LOVELY!"

Is the unanimous verdict of all who have examined our beautiful display of beautiful tints for evening wear. For weeks we have looked forward to the day when our large show windows would be available for a magnificent exposition of our delicate evening tints. They are so lovely that we knew the ladies would enjoy the poetic sight, for such it is. Those who stopped on Saturday had the first peep at it, but it will be continued today. The expressions of pleasurable surprise heard on Saturday warrant us in supposing that there never was a prettier or more delicate arrangement of tints shown in London, and it is really hard for us to conceive that a more beautiful collection or arrangement could be shown anywhere. However, it is very gratifying to know that our efforts to cater the finer tastes are so heartily appreciated. We expect to have a large demand for these dreamy, fairy fabrics during the season. Our selection of evening shades has been most happily made, and there is no taste however fastidious that we cannot please. These tints blend like unto harmonious notes in a song without discord. In the display are:

- Creon Heliotrope Poppy Blue Fern Pearl Gray Persian Black Canary Buttecup Pink Cardinal Navy Tobacco White

The whole forming in marvelously delicate array. The materials are: Wool, Crepon, Silk and Wool Crepon and Japanese Silk. These fashionable materials, made up with rhythm and grace in every fold and drap, make pretty women prettier. S. & J. know what is choice and what looks well. Consult our dressmaker.

SELF-WILLED.

"Phillipa, you are a bird of ill omen. You are a revere croaking over a churchyard. What have I done that you should point it in such doleful colors that it frights me! I am half inclined to register now that for all my days I will have nothing to say to you. As if, as you say, I should go to sleep and I might make that with safety. Love—I shall never hear word without a shudder! No, Phillipa, the same! No wind-tossed sea for me, heaven! No!—she stops, and Phillipa, lifting her eyes, sees, with much astonishment, that the bright orb confronting her is dim with unshed tears, that the face is pale, and the red lips quiver.

CHAPTER XI. It is the evening of the 16th, the evening of the regimental ball, and Thorpe Hampden and his neighborhood is in a pleasant state of excitement. The ball—for it is in one which in a way more broken, general, and is the greatest event in the lives of the inhabitants of Malford; the same white spot, the one red letter, is the night in a gray and gloomy year.

On this one night, gentle and simple, lords and commoners meet, if not quite equal, at the same dance. To miss the regimental ball means calamity and disappointment. Mr. Harrington, who lives only on a farm and regards balls and such-like parties as sheer waste of money, and who is compelled to put on an ancient, well-worn coat and escort his two daughters.

He protests against it every year, makes an annual vow that "this shall positively be my last time, Phillipa!" but the protest is uttered in vain, and when the night comes round again the girls invariably insist that she will not go without him, and that if she stays at home it will break her heart, and, therefore, that her duty will be to go, with much grumbling and sundry expressions of impatience at the whole business, he is getting into the carriage, and is getting into the carriage, and is getting into the carriage.

Now as she stands in the middle of the room, her tall, slim figure, robed in shimmering satin and creamy lace, her hair braided in curls, her eyes fastened, her face flushed with excitement, she is content with an old and somewhat dilapidated one, and she looks at it with a certain interest and curiosity.

"Do you really think I should be so dissatisfied to-night?" asks Carrie, positioning. "Don't you think I should have been wiser to have chosen something with a little more color and warmth; how red and hot and Maydayish one's face looks above the delicate cream and white!" "My dear, you are—yes, Carrie, opening and shutting her eyes, and regarding it meditatively. "But that's impossible, of course, seeing the number of grandees that will be here. I dare say Constance Bellairs, for instance, will have a costume from Worth."

"Probably," assents Phillipa. "And carry a jeweler's shop of diamonds, lost certainly." "To say nothing of the Donomores, from the Hall, and the rest of the aristocracy. After all, do what one will, one cannot look dressed, really dressed, beside such people. Phillipa, I detest aristocrats."

"Especially when they are attired better than yourself. You seem in an amiable frame of mind. Perhaps you had better stay at home, my child!" Carrie laughs absently. Then she glances with a curious interest at her sister, who is attempting the impossible feat of leaning the back of her head by looking in the glass over her shoulder.

"Phillipa, I wonder whether Lord Cecil is going, after all?" she asks, with an elaborate air of careless indifference. "Can't say. I should imagine that he was; but he says that he won't." "I don't remember. He wouldn't say anything." Phillipa laughs.

"There will be some disappointment if he should not," she says, "seeing the number of cards, the pack of cards, that have been sent for him since Lady Bellairs discovered that he was here. I fancy that he is rather discontented, and will shun the festive scene." "Will he?" says Carrie, and there is the faintest, the very faintest tone of disappointment in her voice. "Well, no doubt it is wise. After all, the game isn't worth the candle!" Phillipa stares with unfeigned astonishment.

"Since when have you discovered that, my child?" she demands incredulously. "You have talked of nothing else but this ball for the last week, and now—oh, it is rather too good, your pretense of indifference. 'It is true, I've half a mind to stop at home.' 'And two-thirds to go,' said Phillipa. 'As for your dress, you know that it is as nice as it could be, and that it becomes you as if you had grown into it. Willie will simply fall at your feet in a fervor of adoration.' 'Willie is an idiot!' says Carrie, shortly. 'Now you girls!' comes Mr. Harrington's voice up the stairs. 'Aren't you nearly ready?' 'The father's father,' says Phillipa. 'Poor father! This is his one night of martyrdom, and he bears it nobly. Come, Carrie, and Carrie takes up her train in her hand and slowly sweeps down the stairs, followed by Phillipa, but Mr. Harrington has gone out into the courtyard to inspect upon Giles, who is in attendance on the fly, that he is sure to be at the door not later than 2 o'clock, and the two girls stand for a minute awaiting him.

Mr. Poirer gives strong and convincing testimony in favor of Paine's celery compound, that it has no virtues or life-giving powers. You have heard what Paine's celery compound has done for your friends and others; your duty is to follow their example and drive away disease. For the benefit of Canadians Mr. Poirer presents his testimony as follows: "It gives me very great pleasure to say something in favor of Paine's celery compound. My object is to let others know who are afflicted with dyspepsia and nervous debility. For years I have been a victim of these dreadful troubles, and have suffered from time to time. I have tried various medicines, but all failed to give the desired results. I fortunately gave your medicine a trial some time ago, and quickly found I had got hold of a valuable and honest agent. It soon commenced to do me good, and after using it for a time it has cured me."
