Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can report favourably on the progress of the negotiations with the western producing provinces. We have had regular meetings. The last one was this week. More will be scheduled. We are also, at the same time, meeting with representatives of the Governments of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. There is a meeting under way today with the officials of Newfoundland on the Atlantic accord.

In terms of a deadline, we have set ourselves a working deadline of January 31 to make progress, and we are confident that we will make progress. We will be proceeding with some of the very important issues as long as it takes to come to an agreement.

EMPLOYMENT

PROVISION OF FUNDS TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Can he reconcile the musings of the Minister of Employment and Immigration with the statements of the Minister of Finance? The Prime Minister will know that his Employment Minister has stated that the $1 billion allocation for job creation has been money reallocated from within the Government. The Minister of Finance has stated in the supplementary information, and I quote very briefly, Mr. Speaker:

—it is possible to begin to provide some support for the creation of new employment opportunities . . . Specifically, the Government is providing a special budgetary allocation of $1 million in 1985-86 primarily for this purpose.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is so clear to me that it does not need any further clarification.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SOURCE OF FUNDING

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): If it is new money, Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether the new money will be found by raising the taxes or increasing the deficit? Will he clarify that for Members of this House, because this is an urgent matter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the first thing we will do is look in the closet that Mr. Lalonde opened last summer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: We are also going to deal with the question of government expenditures. My right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, has already referred to billions of dollars in waste. We are looking at that and at the excellent initiatives undertaken by my friend, the Deputy Prime Minister. We are looking to attempt to exercise prudence and frugality in the utilization of public funds. Altogether this is where my hon. friend, the Minister of Employment, will find the money that she requires to be so helpful to the unemployed.

HARBOURS AND PORTS

KENORA AND NORTH BAY

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, may I thank you for identifying me correctly for the first time. I know how tough it is to tell those bearded fellows apart.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Parry: My question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Transport in the sure knowledge that his answers will demonstrate some of the horse sense his colleagues can only talk about. In a recent report prepared for the Ministry it was suggested the Ministry should move to divest itself specifically of two public ports, Kenora and North Bay. Can we have the Minister's assurance that this recommendation will be given the most careful determination before any action is taken?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): I will take the Hon. Member's representations into consideration, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Parry: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

May I ask the Hon. Minister whether there will be a series of public consultations before a decision is made?

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: I will take the Hon. Member's suggestion into consideration as well, Mr. Speaker.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Since the textile industry in Canada, and especially in the riding of Drummond, is an integral part of the economy and a major source of jobs, I would like to quote a few statistics that speak for themselves. In 1980, there were 80,706 jobs in this industry, while in 1983, there were 75,900, representing a loss of 4,806 jobs—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Question Period is not for reading information into the record. It is for asking questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, considering these facts, could the Minister inform the House whether he intends to propose the introduction of global quotas and controls on increases in the volume of imports, so as to create an environment that is more likely to attract investment in this industry, and give the industry a chance to restructure, to adjust and to streamline its operations so that it can continue to survive in a very competitive market?

● (1450)

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the Hon. Member for Drummond, I should like to assure him that the situation with respect to the textile industry is one of the higher priorities in our Department. The statement made by the Prime Minister when he was in Sherbrooke on July 26 of this year, setting out 10 points which our Government would follow, is certainly what we are now concentrating on. I can only assure the Hon. Member that we have already met with representatives of the textile industry to work out a long-term plan for that industry. I think all members of the industry, including its workers, will be very pleased with it.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

ACTIONS FOR DAMAGES FOLLOWING VALLEYFIELD BRIDGE MISHAP

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Would he confirm that literally dozens of notices of legal action have been served on the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, totalling millions of dollars, and citing the Authority for negligence and improper maintenance in the breakdown of the Valleyfield Bridge? While he is on his feet would he inform the House what discussions, if any, have taken place with Stelco in Hamilton to guarantee an alternate supply of iron ore, in light of the fact that seven shiploads of iron ore are tied up in the St. Lawrence Seaway system at a critical time for Stelco? What is being done to prevent further lay-offs?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the fact that there are intentions by the shipping companies to take legal action. Legal counsel has been appointed. We will be dealing with it in the appropriate manner.

In so far as the other part of the question is concerned, as I indicated yesterday, officials of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and my Department are doing everything possible to restore normal service. The best we can do at this particular time is to try to get the bridge in operation, and that is what we are doing. Some of the other points which the Hon. Member made are somewhat hypothetical. We will try to get the bridge operational as quickly as possible.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SOLAR ENERGY INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is not taken from the Toronto newspaper that has been quoted many times today.

My question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon). The Minister is aware that the solar energy industry, consisting of a number of small Canadian-owned companies, is in a crisis situation as a result of the Government's budgetary cutbacks.

In the days to come, many of these companies will have to decide whether to lay off employees or simply to close down.

Mr. Speaker, my question is quite straightforward: What does the Minister intend to do?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as has been indicated in the House on previous occasions, the decision to terminate the special program designated to alternate energies does not in any way inhibit the solar energy industry, or any other alternative energy industry, from coming to the federal Government with reasonable applications for support under a number of other available programs.

Mr. Berger: The Minister knows that that is totally impractical for many companies which had approved contracts that have been stalled by the Government.

REQUEST FOR TRANSITIONAL ARRANGEMENT

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister provide some form of transitional mechanism, a grandfather provision, if you will, so that the industry is not left high and dry like the aeronautic industry when a previous Conservative government decided to shut down the Avro Arrow?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the connection drawn by the Hon. Member is totally specious, as he realizes. Indeed there is money available through the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the National Research Council, and other agencies. If proponents of projects in the solar energy industry would wish to come forward, their application would be considered alongside that of anyone else's. Following 10 years of funding under the existing program, which was already grandfathered for a second five-year period, we are not sufficiently convinced of progress to the extent that special allocated funding should be continued in this area.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

TAPING OF MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER OF FINANCE AND MANITOBA MINISTER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he now confirm that an official of his Government secretly and deliberately taped the meeting between the federal Finance Minister and the Finance Minister of the Province of Manitoba? Most important, could he explain why it was done?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that a young man on the staff of the Minister of Finance indeed taped, without permission, part of the meeting. It was improper and unacceptable. It was a mistake made by an over-zealous young person. I don't know that you would want to say any more about it than that. The Minister has acknowledged the error and indicated publicly that it will not happen again.

Mr. Murphy: The Prime Minister is correct in his answer.

REQUEST FOR GUIDELINES TO PREVENT RECURRENCE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. He started his Government with a promise of honest and open communications. In keeping with that trust, will he confirm or promise that there will be guidelines for political officials so that this never happens again?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't introduce new guidelines to save my soul.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: You shall never see another set of guidelines around here. I may tell my hon. friend, as I think we all recognize, that there was a mistake in judgment by a young person.

Mr. Deans: A very serious mistake.

Mr. Mulroney: It was serious. I suspect that all of us at 22 or 23 years of age have made mistakes. In fact I know of some people in here who continue to make them, and fortunately we're forgiven.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—CONSIDERATION OF COMPENSATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. Last week he denied in the House that a chair of Japanese studies was being contemplated as compensation for that community. However, he later admitted it in an article in The Toronto Sun. Now I have received reports that a million dollar institute is being created. Given the fact that he promised throughout the campaign that a committee including Japanese-Canadians would monitor all alternatives for compensation, why are these considerations being undertaken in isolation from the Japanese-Canadian community?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member is getting his information from. Certainly if I were him I would go back and check my sources, because his question was not right. I can only reply to him that the matter is under active consideration by the Government at this time. He will be one of the first people to know about the decision when the Government makes it.

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is quite correct. Nonetheless, in keeping with those comments, will the Minister tell the House today that he will maintain the promise to establish a committee? Will he give us its terms of reference and its membership, immediately?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will get the information when the Government has made the decision, and not one minute before that.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF ENGLISH RIVER SYSTEM—COMPENSATION SOUGHT FOR INDIAN PEOPLES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, Great Lakes Forest Products has already been brought to the attention of the House today by my colleague from Thunder

Bay-Atikokan. The company had acquired, at Dryden, a mill which poisoned the English River system with mercury emissions. The question of compensation for the White Dog Indian Band has been a matter of controversy in northwestern Ontario for years.

In the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, will the Minister of the Environment ensure that Great Lakes Forest Products, which has been holding back on making compensation, will do so forthwith before any of its funds leave the country for investment in the United States?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the Hon. Member's question as noticed I shall reply as soon as possible, after consulting with my colleague who is responsible for Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose to my distinguished colleague the usual question posed on Thursdays about the business of the House for next week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, after that comment I am almost prepared to say that anything the Liberals want they can have, but I will not go that far.

We have had the usual amicable discussions between House Leaders. I have indicated to them our intentions with respect to House business of which I would now like to advise the House. There will be a change in the business this afternoon. After Routine Proceedings, we will proceed with the consideration in Committee of the Whole of Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes. If debate on Bill C-7 is concluded, we will then move to the consideration in Committee of the Whole of Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff. Should consideration of Bill C-9 be completed, we will then return to consideration at second reading of Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority.

Tomorrow the order of business will be the same, Bill C-7, Bill C-9 and Bill C-11 at whatever stage they are then at.

I want on this occasion to designate this coming Monday as the fourth allotted day in the current supply period.

On Tuesday the first order of business, due to a great deal of public demand, will be Bill C-6, an Act to amend the Saltfish Act. It is my understanding that there is agreement among the parties to deal with this Bill at all stages in the House on Tuesday. If the Saltfish Bill is passed before the end of the day, we will return to the consideration of Bills C-7, C-9 and C-11, in that order.

On Wednesday the order of business will be the following: Bill C-7, if not previously disposed of, followed by Bill C-9, followed by Bill C-11. If the Bills that I have enumerated have been disposed of, the House will at that stage commence consideration of Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

We will observe the progress of the House with respect to the legislation that I have enumerated. It is always subject to a change in the order of business, depending on the progress and circumstances.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader indicated the intention to return to Bill C-11 upon the completion of Bills C-7 and C-9. As the Government House Leader knows, my colleague from Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) moved an amendment yesterday. In an effort to expedite the passage of that legislation and other legislation, I would like to ask if it might be possible to arrange for some meetings between my colleague and the appropriate finance personnel to discuss the possibility of reaching a compromise on the amendment that we offered yesterday for the consideration of the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, we are very much interested in discussing the matter and seeing what proposals the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has on behalf of his Party, as we will be glad to consult with the appropriate spokesperson for the Official Opposition. We will be prepared to enter into discussions to see whether we can expedite the affairs of the House of Commons at any time.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, in an effort not to hold up the passage of that or any other legislation, would it be possible for the Government House Leader to make an effort to have those discussions take place prior to the calling of the Bill for further second reading debate? It may be possible in the intervening time to come to some understanding and to eliminate a lengthy debate.

Tabling of Documents

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I will do my best on that. As I indicated, and I do not think the Hon. Member will mind if I mention this publicly, part of the difficulty in having a meeting today is that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is not in Ottawa today. Quite frankly, I have not had the opportunity of discussing the matter since the meeting of House Leaders with my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). I can assure him that we will do our best to get these discussions on as soon as possible.

CORRECTIONAL INVESTIGATOR

TABLING OF 1982-83 ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the Annual Report of the Correctional Investigator which covers the period June 1, 1982 to May 31, 1983.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the document which has just been tabled by the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay). I note that this document covers the period June 1, 1982 to May 31, 1983. As I understand it, this is an annual report and the requirement is that it be tabled annually. I would like an explanation from the Solicitor General as to why there is such a lengthy delay in tabling this particular document. Surely that kind of delay is not acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to allow a question by unanimous consent. As to whether there is a requirement, I am not sure that that is a point of order. The Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) may want to comment.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, that is a very legitimate question. A similar report will be tabled very soon. It seemed there was no particular virtue in delaying this one. I wanted to table it as soon as it seemed appropriate. If I have been delinquent in tabling it up to this point, I certainly apologize to the House, but I do not think there was any harm done.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 58, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

House in Committee on Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes—Mrs. McDougall—Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes. Shall Clause 1 carry?

Clauses 1 to 15 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 16—Idem

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to hold up the progress of this Bill, but it just occurred to me that it might be helpful to the Committee if the Minister would draw to the attention of the Committee any divergences in this Bill from the Bill presented by the previous government. I think it important to have confirmed on the record that the Government finds that the legislation presented by the last Liberal government is the best thing it could come up with at the beginning of its mandate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, as always, I am prepared to join issue on matters raised by my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor West. As the Hon. Member will know, we are very much interested in cleaning up a lot of the legislative items that were not addressed by the previous government. My colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, will point out the details with respect to the specific inquiry made.

We are interested in proceeding with these items at an early date for a very good reason. It has been recognized by the Government, and the Minister of Finance will address this, that after a Budget is brought down there is some uncertainty with respect to the specific legislation that will be passed by Parliament to bring into effect items specified in the Budget. We have brought these matters before the House as a result of the Budget which was brought forward by our predecessor government in February, 1984. We have done this at the earliest possible date with a view to bringing clarity and certainty to the people of Canada regarding the Budget that did pass.

My colleague, of course, will address the specific question. However, I did want to put on record that we are beginning to clean up the matters left hanging by the previous government. There are great and better things to come.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, there are six essential differences in this Bill from the Bill that was presented before. The first change clarifies the timing surrounding the small business tax simplification measures. These measures will be effective for 1985 and subsequent tax years in an effort to provide greater certainty for taxpayers by defining the date precisely.

The second change is that the small corporation test for eligibility for the 35 per cent rate of credit on research and development and for the 40 per cent rate of refundability of the investment tax credit for an extra month to pay any balance of tax is now to be based on taxable income for the preceding rather than the current tax year. This is also a clarification to provide more certainty and more precision in that planning.

In addition, the special rule to prevent corporations from obtaining the low rate when they are controlled by means of options by public corporations or non-residents is being deferred to apply beginning in 1986 rather than in 1985 so as to provide taxpayers with adequate time to rearrange their affairs.

The exemption from foreign property penalty rules for registered pension plans created for the exclusive benefit of non-residents employed outside Canada is being extended to other plans which, although not created for that purpose, in fact operate for the exclusive benefit of such persons. The proposal of last February to increase from 90 days to 120 days the time to file a notice of objection is not being proceeded with, due to more efficient procedures being introduced at Revenue Canada. As a result, the motion for this measure has been dropped.

There was also a proposal in February which would require the Minister of National Revenue to accept satisfactory security for disputed taxes. That is not being proceeded with in view of the work which is actively under way which will allow for the postponement of payment of such taxes until there has been a court resolution of the matter.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister some questions regarding her last two points. Could she explain to the Committee what are the more efficient procedures that have been introduced by Revenue Canada which will no longer make it necessary to allow taxpayers 180 days to file a notice of objection as proposed by the previous government?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the efficiencies are being introduced at the time of the assessment and before the assessment so that the procedure can move much more quickly than it has in the past.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, would the Minister be able to tell us what are these procedures and what recourse the taxpayer has if, in spite of these procedures, the taxpayer is unable to get the information together to prepare a sound notice of objection within 90 days?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I cannot tell the Hon. Member precisely what are the procedures. I know that the taxpayer can then discuss with the Department the next stages. The taxpayer should be in a position, as far as the Minister of National Revenue assures me, to have an answer.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, the Minister indicated that her Government had dropped the proposal of the previous government to allow a taxpayer to give securities satisfactory to the Department, and if that were done payment of taxes could be deferred until an appeal was disposed of or had been dropped. I would like to ask the Minister, what is the exact situation today if the proposal to accept security has been dropped? What is the Department doing at the present time? Is it insisting on immediate payment once an assessment has been decreed? What is happening exactly?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the subclause does allow the Minister to accept security should that be necessary.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister a question regarding the provisions of Bill C-7 with respect to taxable capital gains for farmers. Is it exactly as was outlined in the Budget statement of the previous Minister wherein a farmer would be able to transfer $120,000 from taxable capital gains over a 12-year period—and I believe it was from 1971 to 1983—into a registered retirement savings plan, which would effectively be $240,000 of capital gain? Does this Bill implement that provision of the Budget exactly as it was proposed by the previous government?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, it does.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, in the Budget of Mr. Lalonde there was a provision wherein the allowable limits of the registered retirement savings plan would be increased from the $5,500 per year for a self-employed person to, I believe, $15,500 by 1986 or 1987 and that it would be cumulative. That is, if a person who was engaged in farming did not use the allowable limit each year but then subsequently sold his holdings and realized a capital gain, it would be cumulative. Does this Bill provide for that escalation over the period of the next three or four years, and will it be cumulative for taxable capital gains for farmers?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, it does not provide for that. In terms of the changes which relate to RRSPs, some of those are under consideration.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, in the original Budget of the former Minister of Finance, that was only proposed as a procedure, and the actual Budget Bills did not provide for that. Is that correct?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, is it the view of the Government that it would want to proceed with that proposal, as the legislation becomes necessary, in order for it to be implemented? Is it the intent of the current Government to increase the allowable limit for RRSPs to the proposals in the Budget of Mr. Lalonde, which I believe was to increase it to $15,000 over the next three or four years? On that basis does the Government intend to implement that proposal? Is that the policy of this Government?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance has indicated that he will be reviewing this before the next Budget is brought down.

Clause 16 agreed to.

Clauses 17 to 34 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 35—

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I would like to amend subclause 35(5). I move:

That the French version of subclause 35(5) of Bill C-7 be amended by striking out line 35 on page 48 and substituting the following:

"de l'avis d'un médecin, la personne"

The Chairman: Shall the amendment to subclause 35(5) carry?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: Yes, the Hon. Member for Windsor West on a point of order.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I am given to understand that the motion to amend in this way should be moved by another member. If I am wrong, I will gladly withdraw the question, but I wonder if you can advise us on that.

● (1530)

The Chairman: The Member is correct.

Mrs. McDougall: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that was not our understanding.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Chairman, I would move:

That the French version of Subclause 35(5) of Bill C-7 be amended by striking out line 35 on page 48 and substituting the following:

«de l'avis d'un médecin, la personne».

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could ask the Hon. Minister to put on the record the reason for the amendment.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the amendment was necessary because in the original version the French and English were not precisely the same. The change was made so that the French version reads the same as the English version.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 35 as amended carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 35, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 40—

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister whether, under the provisions of this clause, it will be permissible for people like doctors, lawyers and accountants, to mention just three, to qualify as small business people and therefore pay taxes at the rate of just 25 per cent?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, this will bring these professionals into line with other professionals who are taxed at the small business rate. I might add that this rate only applies as long as the money stays in the business. If the money is withdrawn, then there is another tax, which means a normal rate would apply.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I do not claim to be an expert in taxation but I do not understand what the Minister is saying. I am asking a very simple question. Will doctors, lawyers, accountants and, I suppose, engineers be able to classify themselves as small business people and therefore pay income tax at the 25 per cent rate rather than, let us say, 35 per cent, 40 per cent or 50 per cent if their income puts them in that classification?

Mrs. McDougall: I apologize, I thought I had answered the question. If those people incorporate, then the corporation pays the small business rate of tax so long as the funds remain in the corporation. When the funds are withdrawn so that the professional takes them into income, then they are taxed up to the higher level. It only applies to an incorporated professional when the funds remain inside the corporation.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, here we have a government with a phobia about the deficit. It says to Parliament and the people of Canada that we have to cut various essential services because we cannot afford them. We have this tremendous deficit. Mr. Chairman, a big part of the reason we have these tremendous deficits is that the Income Tax Act is riddled with hundreds of sections which permit special groups to get special consideration so that they pay less than they should be paying. We have the banks, the most profitable corporations of this country, paying a smaller rate of tax than the bank teller pays in income tax. This goes all through the system, and I think it is time that the Government and Parliament faced up to this.

We learned something from a royal commission appointed by an earlier Conservative government under Mr. Diefenbaker, the Carter Commission, which brought down a report which said some very fundamental things about income. A dollar of income is a dollar of income regardless of how you get it. It is just dead wrong to assess people whose income is earned through wages or salaries at one rate, and assess people with income from investments at another rate.

Let me give you one example, that of the child tax credit. A person is permitted to deduct up to $1,000 in child expenses. That is a gift to the rich, because the person with a high income will save $500, a person with a medium income will save $250, and a person with a low income who has the expenses will save virtually nothing. I raise that as just one illustration of what is wrong with the tax system.

I know I speak for all members of my Party when I say I object very strenuously to this clause which will permit doctors, lawyers, accountants and other professionals this tax break. They do very well, better than most Canadians. They are in the highest income brackets in this country, and I object very much to a proposal which will permit them to pay tax at a lower rate than others.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I think I have already answered the question. This measure brings these professionals in line with other professionals. They were actually discriminated against before. I will take the Hon. Member's point of view under advisement.

Mr. Brisco: I do not want to delay the proceedings but I want to engage very briefly in the debate and say how delighted I am to hear the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North speak about all these middle-class people who are supposedly receiving an enormous tax benefit from the child tax credit. I think all the tradesmen and labourers at Cominco and various sawmills in my constituency are going to be very interested in that statement, particularly their wives. I think the Hon. Member is out of touch with reality when he raises that point.

I would conclude by saying that I am a professional and I pay my full share of taxes, whether it be 40 per cent or 50 per cent, and I am incorporated. I know a lot of professionals who are in the same boat. I am not afraid of paying my fair share of taxes, and the Hon. Member is not accurate in his assessment on the basis of current facts.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I want the record to be quite clear. I am not objecting to a tax credit for the person working in the forest industry with an income of $20,000 to $30,000, or whatever it is. Until we have a universal daycare system I believe people should have a tax credit. I am objecting to the fact that the people with incomes of $75,000 to $100,000 can get more in the way of tax credits than forest workers, and certainly more than a person working in a hospital in my city. That is what I am objecting to. I want fairness, Mr. Chairman. When the Government introduces legislation which provides for fairness in the tax system, we will support it, but not until then.

Clauses 40 to 44 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 45—

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister would explain what this section does.

Mrs. McDougall: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I have lost track.

Mr. Orlikow: Is this the clause which refers to share purchase tax credit? If so, what does that mean?

Mrs. McDougall: These are essentially technical amendments, Mr. Speaker. It has to do with the fact that the tax credit can be viewed as a benefit conferred on the beneficiary that arises as a result of the existence of the trust. This clarifies the matter by preventing the trust from allocating the credit. It has no revenue implications. It is really a technical amendment.

Clause 45 agreed to.

On clause 46—

Mr. Orlikow: Does this clause refer to the scientific research tax credit?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it does.

Mr. Orlikow: Is this the provision which the former government estimated would cost taxpayers $100 million and which has now given credits of well over $1 billion with another $.5 billion coming through the pipeline?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, this is the basic part of that legislation, but these are simply technical amendments. They do not really change the status.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Minister should be able to tell us whether this is the section in the Bill which was so miscalculated by the former government, which the then Minister of Finance said would cost $100 million and which has now cost the people of Canada over $1 billion and is still rising. I would like to know from the Minister if this is the section of the Bill which provided for that.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I answered that. I said that this is the section of the Bill which applies to that. It is the section on which a moratorium has been taken. However, these amendments do not relate to that part of it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, if this is the section, why can the Government not act to plug the loophole? There have been innumerable reports which indicate that this provision, which was supposed to encourage Canadian companies really to move on research and development, has in fact not brought new money into research and development. It has been used as a tax scam by corporations wheeling and dealing. Instead of the $100 million which the then Minister of Finance indicated it would cost the Treasury, it has cost well over $1 billion. We have been told by the Minister of National Revenue that because so many of these agreements are being processed, he cannot do anything about it and we are probably going to lose another $500 million in the interim period. Why can the Minister and her Department not take steps to stop that kind of raid and theft on the public Treasury?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, there was a moratorium taken on October 10. This is the section. There was action taken by the Minister of Finance to end those parts that were not meeting the intent of the Act. These were debt flips where people were simply exchanging tax credits in a way that was not appropriate. That was stopped on October 10.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, the Minister says that this was stopped on October 10. That sounds very good, but from questions which have been asked in the House and the answers from the Minister of National Revenue we know that it has been stopped except for the fact that those that were already started cannot be stopped. I am saying to the Minister that that is a very expensive situation. According to the reports which we have been able to get we are looking at a loss of a further $400 million to $500 million. The Government is going to tighten the rules on unemployment insurance and tell people who are unemployed, almost all of them through no fault of their own, that they are going to receive substantially less in unemployment insurance benefits. There is something wrong with the scale of values of the Government and its ability to act.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I think that the question part of that statement related to the grandfathering provisions. It is entirely appropriate and certainly with many precedents that arrangements which are substantially in progress, or near conclusion, should be allowed to go through. We cannot ask taxpayers to negate their planning to the extent the Hon. Member is suggesting.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 46 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause 46 carried on division.

Clauses 47 to 50 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 51—

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I note that, among other things, this clause provides some exclusions from co-operatives being considered as corporate citizens. Would the Minister give us the basic logic or rationale that is used for these exclusions so that we can understand what role is expected for co-operatives? Could she give us some guidelines as to what the rule is within the Bill for these exclusions?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, this clause applies to private Canadian controlled corporations. Co-operatives are not, by their nature, the same thing as private corporations. They are essentially on the same footing in terms of taxation.

Mr. Althouse: I think I may be one or two clauses ahead of myself here. I wonder how the Act views co-operative farms. We have had some difficulty with the National Revenue Department interpreting co-op farms as being very like the small corporately held farms. Yet it seems that the proposal in Clauses 51 and 53 may in fact have the effect of excluding those who choose to form a co-operative farm from the right to roll over their property from one generation to the next.

The Minister will be aware that Revenue Canada says at the moment that when four or five family members form a co-operative, it is virtually impossible to turn the land in that co-operative over to the next generation on a roll-over basis. The Department deems the operators in that case not to be actively involved in the farm.

I want to make certain that co-operative farms operating under those conditions will get the same changes that are proposed in this Bill as are being offered to those who have chosen to set themselves up as small corporations, at which time the shareholders are considered to have been active farmers. Therefore, they have earned the right to turn over their shares in the land to the succeeding generation. I want to make sure that co-operatives are not excluded from that right.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, this section does not deal with the roll-over problem. In another sense, it does bring the two closer together. The co-operative corporations can obtain the benefit of the 35 per cent rate of investment tax credit and can obtain the right to a refund of 40 per cent instead of 20 per cent of any unused investment tax credits.

I would be happy to take the roll-over provisions into consideration. Apparently, it is not easy. It is a point well taken.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 51 carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clause 52 agreed to.

On Clause 53—

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, this is the clause that I believe deals with the capital gains for farmlands. I take it from Clause 5.4(b) at page 78 that the amount that may be transferred to the Registered Retirement Savings Plan of farm capital gains is $10,000 per year for the period from 1971 to the end of 1983.

We are almost at the end of 1984. The scheme is very straightforward if one is dealing with that period. The maximum amount is $120,000. As we move into 1985 and beyond, with respect to the total amount of taxable capital gain that can be transferred to an RRSP, after that 12-year period, do you add the $5,500 as the amount that can be put into an RRSP by any self-employed person? Is that just a window in time that does not extend beyond the end of 1983?

Would the Minister indicate what happens if someone sells his farm at the end of 1984? Is the maximum that can be transferred to an RRSP the taxable capital gain on $120,000 over that period, or is it the $120,000 plus the $5,500 that any self-employed taxpayer can put into an RRSP?

Mrs. McDougall: The amount, $120,000 being the maximum, is reduced by the amount of income you would put into an RRSP. As far as ending in 1983, the Minister's intent is to introduce some changes to pension legislation early in 1985 in which this will be taken into consideration and become part of a broader and more comprehensive pension legislation.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I was rather surprised when this tax provision was introduced. According to the economic statement, the whole question of capital gains on farmland was supposed to be referred to a parliamentary committee.

I just wonder if the Government is adopting the former Liberal government's policy with regard to taxable capital gains on farmland, whether it is being adopted in Bill C-7 and perhaps further amplified on the basis of the report of the parliamentary committee, or is this the Government's position with regard to taxable capital gains on farm property at least for the first 12 years following the implementation of the capital gains tax?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I think we should keep it in mind that this will help the farmers. There are other plans under way concerning farms and pensions. These matters are being studied, but they take longer. In the meantime, this is intended to help the farmer until those broader issues are resolved.

Mr. Foster: I want to be quite clear that when a taxable capital gain is realized under this scheme it would not matter whether the farm property was continuing agricultural production. Is that correct?

As I understood the Conservative campaign literature, the scheme was that capital gains on farm property would only be non-taxable as long as it stayed in agricultural production. I want to be quite clear that if there is a capital gain under this scheme and the farmer takes advantage of it, the land can be sold for urban development or whatever.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the property can be sold to anyone for whatever purpose and it will apply.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I have a series of questions on this clause. First, as I understand it, this is not doing away with the capital gains tax which was discussed during the election. This is simply a continuation of the Liberal promise in the previous budget, is it not?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes.

Mr. Althouse: Therefore, for a retiring farmer to take advantage of it, he must buy 12 $10,000 RRSPs and bring that back into income in the future. It is not an avoidance of the capital gains tax, it is simply a way of stretching income from that capital gain into future year's income. Is that correct?

• (1600)

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, a farmer can buy one or 10 RRSPs. A farmer can buy as many as he likes. The funds will be taxable. It stretches out the tax and gives him or her a steady source of income. Whether he does that in one plan or 40 plans is up to him or her.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to make it clear that this was not a way of doing away with tax on capital gains, but simply a way of delaying the capital gains tax into future years.

I want to deal with the definitions on qualified farm property found on page 77 and the full-time farmer definition found on page 78. These are the sections where we get into the problem that I had alluded to earlier with farmers who have chosen to set themselves up under a co-operative structure. I should get clarification from the Minister since she has her experts with her.

Does this description of a taxpayer in a corporation in paragraph (b) on qualified farm property include the type of co-operative that I was talking about just a few moments ago where the property is either held under a co-operative in fee simple in title or, which is the more likely case, the land is held by individual shareholders in the co-operative and they have chosen instead to operate a farming co-operative. This particular aspect of the Bill deals with qualified farm properties. This would affect those properties where the land is owned by the co-operative. Are those properties also eligible to be rolled over to the next generation through a transfer of shares? Are they eligible for the RRSP benefit, or have they been missed?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, could we have a little time to double-check this? I do not think it qualifies, but if the Hon. Member could give me a minute or two, I could give a better answer.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Yes.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, as this is drafted, we believe it is intended to incorporate definitions in this section all related to a family farm and whatever its definition is. We are checking right now with the Department and we will tell you later in the debate, if that is satisfactory. I know the point the Hon. Member is trying to make and I am doing my best to answer the question. Obviously it is not clear from this.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I have a few more questions along these lines. Perhaps when we finish with the questioning we could stand the clause and go on with other parts of the Bill. I am curious as to whether the definition of a full-time farmer would include a farmer operating along with a group of farmers in a co-operative. This is the other side of the coin to the first question. Revenue Canada has not done a very good job of addressing this matter and that is partly the reason I am raising it today. I have written letters to Ministers of Finance and I believe to the Secretary of State for Finance as well concerning this issue. What happens is that Revenue people tend to see farmers operating together in a co-op mode as being neither fish nor fowl. They are not able to transfer their property under the roll-over provision because the Department says they must be actively farming the land they are proposing to roll over to their sons, daughters or grandchildren. The requirements of Revenue Canada now are that the land must be farmed for two or three years by the donor or two or three years by the receiver prior to the roll-over provision taking place. Because co-operatives have been omitted from the Act, anybody engaged in that sort of farming is not permitted a roll-over. Consequently, many co-operative farms are having to die after the current generation of farmers reach a retirement age simply because there is no easy way for them to transfer the farm to their children.

Similarly, I want to be quite sure before we pass this Bill that we do not also discriminate against co-operative farmers who want to sell out, whether to their children or to others. I see no reason why they should be discriminated against when they are now permitting people who have structured themselves in a regular corporate manner to have access to these RRSPs and to delay paying capital gains over a period of time that way.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the question refers essentially to whether that qualifies as a share of the capital stock of a family farm.

Mr. Althouse: It relates to whether they are actually farmers?

Mrs. McDougall: It relates to whether they are actually farmers. This is defined in the Act in paragraphs (b) and (c) of Section 70 which, by some strange coincidence, I happen to have in front of me. Under this section it would appear that, yes, they would qualify under the definition as a full-time farmer. Does the Hon. Member want me to read it to him? Would he like to hear the Act?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I want to hear from the Act. What I have had, though, is a couple of cases where Revenue Canada did not interpret it in such a way that those people were actually farmers. I assume Revenue Canada officials read that section of the Act before they made that interpretation. While we have the Act open, it seems to me that it might be more useful to all concerned if co-operatives were designated quite clearly in this section of the Act. Where we put a corporation we could perhaps say "or a co-operative", and do that same sort of amending all the way through this particular section just so that we make it very clear what Parliament's intention is and what the Minister's intention is. I have not asked that. I assume it would to be fair and equitable to all types of family farm operations whether they had set themselves up as a co-operative or a corporation.

Mrs. McDougall: We have discussed the possibility of bringing some further technical amendments to the Income Tax Act. I would be very happy to take that back and consider it at that time.

Mr. Althouse: I have a further question just for clarification.

Under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act farmers who have left their farms to earn other income due to bad crops or a start-up situation are often declared to be not farmers at all or to be part-time farmers. I am wondering who is a full-time farmer as is indicated here. Is there any way of taking into account those people who have had to work off their farms for some of their income during the 12 years with which we are dealing? Will those partial years be recognized, or will the years that a farmer has been designated a part-time farmer be written off and lost to him for the purposes of setting up an RRSP?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the intent is not to disallow farmers who have been faced with difficulties and forced to try to earn income from other sources. The intent of the definition is to eliminate all those Bay Street lawyers, who seem to be the butt of so many examples in the House, from going out and treating themselves as full-time farmers.

Mr. Althouse: For the purposes of clarification, for a farmer who decides upon the RRSP option and has been designated by the Department for one or two of those 12 years to have been a part-time farmer, or perhaps he has even received the hobby farm designation, which of those years would be deducted? For which of those years will he be made ineligible to declare an RRSP? Would it be only for the hobby farm designation? Would part-time farmers be able to call it a full year of farming and be fully eligible to apply a $10,000 RRSP for that year?

Mrs. McDougall: I think the Act says that a full-time farmer also includes any individual actively engaged in the business of farming. Then it goes on to deal with sections which are not as relevant. The hobby farmer is excluded.

Mr. Althouse: He would be excluded?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, so it is in a way the reverse of the Hon. Member's definition.

Mr. Althouse: In order to be more specific, perhaps we could have an interpretation of what is meant at the bottom of page 78 where a restriction seems to be placed on who is a full-time farmer. It indicates that a full-time farmer would be an individual who in that year was actively engaged in the business of farming in Canada. Then subparagraph (iii) continues as follows:

—(other than an individual who in the year had or would, if he had sustained sufficient losses from the business of farming, have had a restricted farm loss for the year).

Does that not exempt people who have had restricted farm losses from using the RRSP option in the year in which they had restricted farm losses?

Mrs. McDougall: The answer is yes, and that is directed at the hobby farmer. That is specifically for the hobby farmer.

Mr. Althouse: As I understand it, there is also an in between designation where restricted losses are permitted for tax purposes. However, I think they would not be considered farmers for the purposes of using the RRSP option in this Act when they sell out. I want to be fairly clear on that so that people in that position know what they are getting into.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I am not making myself very clear on this point. I am really trying to. The definition of restricted farm loss is the restricted farm loss referred to in Section 31. All other farmers are included in this, but that specific term refers to specific farm loss as defined and applied to Section 31.

Mr. Althouse: Only the hobby farm designation?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes.

Mr. Althouse: This will apply only to what is colloquially known as the hobby farm section?

Mrs. McDougall: Yes.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, could we stand this clause for the Minister to review the question of co-operative production units? Perhaps she would be prepared to move an amendment to make it very clear that those who chose to set themselves up as co-operative farmers would not only have qualified farm property under the first part of this section but would also qualify as full-time farmers. Then we could pick it up at a later stage.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, you are saved by the fact that the answer has just arrived. To the extent that a farm co-operative otherwise qualifies as a family farm corporation, for example, if all the co-op assets are farm assets and if the taxpayer or his spouse or his children were engaged in the business of farming, co-operatives will qualify for both the RRSP treatment and the roll-over. It used to be that they did not qualify if the farm was leased to a co-operative. If that was the only hitch, one would now qualify.

Mr. Althouse: Perhaps the Minister could tell us whether that comes about simply by a different interpretation within the Department, or whether there is now some change in the law which requires this.

Mrs. McDougall: There is a technical change in this Bill which makes a leased farm qualify for the roll-over.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 53 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration in Committee of Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes—Mrs. McDougall—Mr. Charest in the chair.

On Clause 54—

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, with great honour, I present the following motion:

That the French version of clause 54 of Bill C-7 be amended:

(a) by striking out line 34 on page 81 and substituting the following:

"droit de déduire une somme désignée à"

(b) by striking out line 47 on page 81 and substituting the following:

"1983 tout en ayant reçu, en 1984, à titre de béné-"

(c) by striking out line 7 on page 82 and substituting the following:

"calcul de la somme désignée, être une"

Amendment agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 54, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 54, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 61—

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, can the Minister explain at what level of income people will now qualify for not having to pay quarterly? The clause states that people whose income is less than $1,000 a year will no longer have to file quarterly returns.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, it depends on the family circumstances and so on who will have less than $1,000 and not have to pay quarterly. It is a relieving measure that affects a large number of senior citizens. It is a relieving measure for them.

Mr. Orlikow: I know, Mr. Chairman. I am sure every Member of Parliament has been approached at one time or another by pensioners in particular who have quite a small income. Their tax is not very much, yet they are required to file quarterly returns and to pay quarterly. Often a very substantial part of their income is interest on Canada Savings Bonds, which they do not receive until November. Many times they are required to file and pay income tax on income they have not yet received. This is a very good proposal. I would like to know at what level of income an individual is not required to file quarterly under this provision.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, essentially the income can be at any level. It depends on the income, the number of exemptions, the number of deductions and what is the ultimate taxable income figure. You can start at any number, depending on your family circumstances, the sources of income and so on. I do not think there is any way of assessing what that would be. It does help 100,000 senior citizens and raises to 350,000 the exemption of seniors from the possibility of having to make instalment payments. Many of those will have incomes at a large variety of levels.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 61 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 61 agreed to.

Clauses 62 to 69 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I heard the Minister's reply that somehow or other the efficiency of the Department makes it unnecessary to increase the appeal period from 90 days to 180 days, as was proposed in the previous Ways and Means resolution. That answer just does not make sense. An individual taxpayer who has been assessed wants to have 180 days rather than 90 days to file that appeal, consult with an accountant and so on. The efficiency of the taxation branch does not have anything to do with the appeal period. The convenience is for the taxpayer. The taxpayer has more time to review the situation, to consult and to decide whether he or she wants to appeal. I do not see what the efficiency of the tax branch has to do with this appeal period. The provisions in the previous Ways and Means resolution were more helpful to the taxpayer who wanted to appeal than the provision in the Bill before us this afternoon.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, apparently part of the problem with the 90 day objection period in the past was that the notice from the tax branch was either cryptic or inexplicable. The taxpayer took up a good deal of the 90 days trying to find out what the tax branch wanted. There have been better lines of communication with the tax branch. The explanations given initially are more detailed, more reasonable and written in language that people can understand. I am sure that the Minister of National Revenue could go into this in considerably more detail. Those are two or three examples of why he feels this period to be adequate.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, is that period of 90 days to mean 90 days from the day the assessment is mailed to the taxpayer? Does the taxpayer have 90 days from that time to file an appeal, or does he have 90 days from some other point in time? It seems to me that the clock starts ticking from the moment the notice of assessment is sent out. We do not know how rapidly those notices are received. It does not seem to me that that really matters, but what does matter is the amount of time that the taxpayer has to decide whether or not to make an appeal and to gather sufficient information concerning his tax liability to know whether or not he should appeal.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the notice of objection is a fairly simple notification and does not require a lot of intricate legal preparation. We are talking about a three-month period, not about a matter of days or even weeks. If the taxpayer gets off to a better start by understanding what his tax assessment is telling him about what the problem is, then there is no reason why he should not be able to have his case ready within a three-month or 90-day period. It is a fairly simple procedure to file a notice of objection.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 70 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 70 agreed to.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85 (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Riis (p. 694).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words about the amendment which was proposed by the New Democratic Party and about the borrowing authority Bill. I would like to refer to a policy statement which was made by the Government regarding Canadian fishermen, in which it proclaimed:

—Canadian fishermen and companies must be encouraged and assisted to modernize their boats . . . A Progressive Conservative Government will promote the orderly development of a middle-distance fleet and the present 65-foot upper limit on longliners will be removed.

At various times, prior to the Government coming into power, the Progressive Conservative Party stated its intention to deal fairly and, certainly as it has stated, in a better way, with fishermen than did the previous government.

In looking at the policies which were outlined by the Government, one wonders when they will be instituted. Certainly, they will cost a lot of money. There have been various actions announced by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser), as well as the various actions which were contained in the Economic Statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

For example, fishermen will now be charged for the maps they obtain from the federal government which show the coastline. There was a statement by the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) which indicated that persons would be required to pay for their calls to the weather office. Then the Minister of the Environment clarified that by saying that fishermen would be excluded. In other words, there would be certain occupational groups—because they need weather forecasting information, sometimes on an urgent basis due to ever-changing weather patterns—who would not be charged for the telephone call. It is another policy to the detriment of the fishermen, because they will hesitate before contacting the weather office in their area.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans also announced that berthage fees would be doubled. Not only that, but as I understand it after checking with the Department of Fisheries, in areas where the berthage fee was not previously charged it will now be charged on an equal basis right across Canada.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) announced that there would be no special program for fishermen who had a bad fishery this year. Those fishermen went out day after day looking for fish but they could not find the fish. Eventually, when the fishermen realized that the Government was not going to have a special program, such as the one that the previous government had last fall, they kept going out day after day until they had obtained enough fish to get low unemployment insurance stamps. A great many of them will live throughout the winter receiving welfare along with low unemployment insurance.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans then announced that the vessel insurance plan would be discontinued. Sometimes cuts are justified in government Departments. We certainly need more policies from the Department of Fisheries, which are to the advantage of fishermen. However, certain cuts are announced and decided by someone who looks down from on high and who thinks that an insurance shceme which is run by the government should really be run by private enterprise. Many arguments cannot be put against that philosophy. However, if we examined why the policy was implemented in the mid-fifties, we would discover that it was brought in for one reason. That reason is that there are certain types of fishermen in Canada who do not qualify for private insurance schemes. I suppose that anyone could qualify if they were willing to pay the money. It depends on how high the rate is. But a fisherman with a small boat which is tied to a wharf on the northern peninsula in Newfoundland will not qualify through a private insurance company.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of Finance have to realize that they should have consulted with the provincial governments, provincial loan boards, processors, the fishermen's union of Newfoundland, fishermen and the insurance companies before they decided to cancel this scheme. The reason is quite simple. The reason is that fishermen who have insurance policies through the federally-run vessel insurance plan, must have those insurance policies before they can obtain loans through provincial loan boards. That insurance must be in place. The money must come out of the fisherman's pocket. It is not a part of the loan which is granted by the local loan board.

The effect of this measure, which was ill-conceived and implemented without consultation with the people involved in the fishery or the insurance companies, will be that over the next couple of weeks each provincial loan board will have to decide what it will do when the insurance is cancelled, because a condition of the loan was that the fishermen involved must have that insurance policy.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans would be well-advised to have that consultation now and to adjust the program to meet the needs of the fishermen. There are a great many problems in the fisheries. If the solution to those problems is to get rid of the fishermen, then this is a great way to do it.

There has been much discussion in the House since the debate began on borrowing authority concerning social programs and the actions of the Minister of Employment and Immigration as they relate to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. There has been much discussion regarding the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and its claim that it has identified 170,000 jobs which people in Canada could fill. One has to look at the people who draw unemployment insurance and understand their problems before initiating a policy which will drastically affect them, Mr. Speaker.

• (1650)

Of all the jobs available to people drawing unemployment insurance, there is only one sure thing available right now, the 700 investigators' jobs announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration to try to take people off unemployment insurance. These being the only available jobs that I know of, I suggest that everyone on unemployment insurance write to the Minister and apply for one of those jobs. Surely the Minister would look favourably upon some of these applications because someone doing that kind of investigation should have experienced being on uenmployment insurance.

There are various reasons for the attitude on the part of the Government and a great many Canadians that people drawing unemployment insurance are ripping off the system. That is the attitude of a great many people, including some Members in this Chamber.

I suppose that if you look at the Auditor General's reports you will find some reason to justify that opinion. For example, a Member said this morning that there were several hundred thousand people who had quit their jobs and then drew unemployment insurance. In the Auditor General's report, where most of these figures are found, you see reference to this enormous number of people who had received overpayments or to the UIC paying out X number of millions of dollars when it should not have. You have to realize, Mr. Speaker, that included in that group is a very large number of people who received unemployment insurance because the UIC made a mistake. It is the law in this country that if the UIC makes the mistake, the person has to pay the money back. If the employer made the mistake, the person who received the money must pay it back. If you leave your home community and go some place looking for work and the UIC was not notified, and you are found out, you also have to pay back your benefits for that period of time. Included in that group of people who received unemployment insurance and should not have were those who had helped someone build their house or, if it is a fisherman, who had built a boat during the winter. That person was found out by one of the UIC investigators and he had to pay back all the benefits he received during the entire winter. So, Mr. Speaker, when you look at the figures you have to realize what these cases are, how these overpayments were created, and why that person owed the money to the UIC.

We have seen countless thousands of cases over the last few years of people who received benefits but were then declared not entitled to them by the Commission or its investigators. These people then go before a board of reference and they have the right of appeal to a deputy minister, or to the federal Court of Canada if it is a determination of a question by Revenue Canada, or to an umpire who is also a federal judge.

When you go over some of these cases, Mr. Speaker, you will discover extreme hardship cases. There are people with absolutely no income, and now they owe the federal Government a large amount of money. Those people are included in the figures tossed about by politicians, the business community and advocates of cutting back unemployment insurance. There are countless cases involving people who, through no fault of their own, have to pay money back to the UIC after receiving it for several years. If there is any humanitarianism in the system at all, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister has any sympathy for these people at all, there is a section in the Act which says that in cases of hardship the Commission can give the money owed to it. It would do far more for the Canadian people if the Minister were to examine that option rather than announcing that she is going to cut $200 million from unemployment insurance and hire 700 people to find low paying jobs for the unemployed.

Another question comes to mind, Mr. Speaker. These low-paying jobs that I referred to are just that. They have to be low paying because the Federation of Independent Businesses claims that people on unemployment insurance are too comfortable, that they will not accept jobs that pay less than unemployment insurance. Well, you get 60 per cent of your earnings while drawing unemployment insurance. An Hon. Member referred the other day to the fact that the average pay-out to a person on unemployment insurance is $155 a week. He was wrong because it is $155.88 a week. That 88 cents means an awful lot to a poor person sitting in a high unemployment area, and that is all the income he or she gets. The average period of time that someone receives unemployment insurance in Canada, as any Hon. Member knows, is 24 weeks, not a year as was intimated in the statement by the business community the other day. What I am getting at is this. If you are going to put these people into the low paying jobs the Federation is talking about, then you are discriminating against the younger person who has no income at all. You are discriminating against the person who is looking for work and not collecting unemployment insurance. The Minister could turn around and say: "Oh, no, we are really going to be trying to put these people as well into those jobs". Well, if so, the Government is not going to save the $200 million that the Minister talked about. She cannot have it both ways. It is one way or the other.

Mr. Orlikow: But she is going to try.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, if it were not so tragic, it would be humorous that the Government of Canada is trying to do two things with its job creation program. The Minister is going to have more people than ever before working on what I call "Section 38s". She will have more people than ever before doing this at the same time that these very poor people are being discriminated against.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING MAXIMUM SECURITY PRISON FOR THOSE SERVING LIFE SENTENCE

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing a maximum security prison in a remote region of the Northwest Territories or on an island off the Coast of Canada, for those sentenced to life imprisonment and who are deemed to be an ongoing risk to society.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I shall not waste the time of the House by re-reading this private Member motion. One never ceases to be amazed at the surprises one gets in the House. We had a draw a couple of weeks ago and I was the one hundred and fifty-third person on that draw. Lo and behold, by last night my turn had come up. I was rather pleased because the subject matter of this motion of mine today is very germane to the public concerns regarding the state of our criminal justice system in Canada. I am very pleased that we are able to discuss this motion for an hour tonight. I hope that Opposition and government members will see fit to allow this motion to pass.

I would like to discuss this subject under four main headings. The first will be the background to the motion. Second, I will deal with the two principal objectives that such a maximum security prison would serve. Third, I will discuss the justification and feasibility behind this proposal. Fourth, I will discuss why I feel the Government should allow this to be approved and passed today.

I will first discuss the background behind todays private Members' motion. Members of the House who have been here for approximately 10 years will recall that back in 1976-77 and prior to that there was a lot of unrest in our prison system. As a result, the government of the day set up a special subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to study the penitentiary system in Canada. That committee had 13 members. If Members here are interested in the average life expectancy of a Member in the House of Commons, of those 13 Members only two are left; the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) and myself.

We presented that report in 1977 to the Solicitor General who had commissioned it. It dealt in some detail with the problem of the criminal justice system in Canada and changes that should be made. The committee made 65 recommendations, which were subsequently studied by the officials and the Minister. This report was unusually well received across the country and abroad. We have had requests from outside the country for copies of this report. I feel it had a very enlightened approach to the subject of prison reform. Some of the recommendations were far-reaching. In fact, they were too far-reaching for the officials in the correctional service of Canada at that time. I might add that they are still too far-reaching for the present thinking of many of the officials in the CSC.

I will read recommendation No. 63 which is germane to our discussions today. It stated the following:

The Canadian penitentiary service should carry out an in-depth study of the feasibility and viability of penal communities in reasonably inaccessible areas as an alternative to confinement in conventional institutions for inmates serving long sentences without eligibility for parole.

This recommendation, along with the other 64, was studied from time to time by the various governments since 1977.

Between 1977 and 1981 no less than seven progress reports were issued. I have copies here of five of the progress reports and summaries of the others. It is curious to read these in retrospect because each one says almost the same thing as the last one. They are going to do a study. They are going to do more research. They are going to consult with this body or this country. It is an ongoing litany of what looks, in retrospect, to be attempts to put off a decision in this particular area.

It has become so ludicrous, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to read from two of them. I will first refer to the progress report dated November 1, 1979 made by the Solicitor General of the day, now the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence). It reads as follows:

Research into this concept has been conducted and the major difficulties faced are the still relatively small numbers of inmates serving long sentences without eligibility for parole—

Parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, that may well have been true then. I dare say it was, but it certainly is not true now. Times have changed since 1979. The report goes on:

—coupled with the unknown factor of public acceptance of the concept itself.

I will address that in my remarks as I go on. The report continues:

In the meantime, individual programs are designed for and with each such long term offender. This will provide us with experience and knowledge upon which a viable program could be presented with the hope of obtaining widespread public support for its implementation.

I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that public support has now arrived. I will now quote from the final progress report on the implementation of the parliamentary sub-committee on the penitentiary system in Canada prepared for the former Solicitor General. It is dated June 5, 1981. I would like to read again under the heading "Recommendation 63". It reads as follows:

At the same time, the Service has co-operated in the formation of a Ministry Committee whose task it will be to direct and co-ordinate research and information-gathering on the various aspects of long term incarceration. This committee will give consideration to the advisability of conducting further research into the concept of penal communities.

In 1981, after having the original report for over four years, they are still saying that they are going to conduct further research into the concept of penal communities. They may well have been conducting further research, but I can assure you that we are not seeing the products of it at the present time. That suggests to me, Mr. Speaker, that we have a problem in the House of Commons. Indeed, we have more than one problem with the way this place runs, but during the existence of this report from the special sub-committee we have had no less than five Solicitors General in a seven year period. That is not even one and one-half years per Solicitor General. We wonder why we are not coming to grips with the prison system in this country. The current Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) has only had a couple of months in office and I do not expect he will have been able to get a handle on the matter. Even so, imagine having four Solicitors General in a period of seven years and still not being able to finalize the research! They were talking about research at the beginning of this whole thing and were still talking about it in 1981 when we got the last report. We do not know what has become of that to this date.

On the subject of the background, we have recently had a rash of murders in the country, especially murders of policemen. We have had six or seven murders in the last two or three months. Unfortunately, one of those murders was in my constituency of Oxford in the City of Woodstock. It was in consequence of a similar murder one or two nights before in Montreal allegedly by the same suspects. There is a great deal of feeling, not only in my riding but across the country, about what we are going to do with the kinds of offenders who are in the mood, from time to time, to murder other law-abiding citizens, whether they be policemen, prison guards or whatever. Something needs to be done.

In an attempt to assess the problem in my constituency, I discovered that many people like myself do not support capital punishment, although a great majority of them are in favour of it. I also talked to Ruth Ross, who is the widow of OPP Constable Jack Ross who was shot in Woodstock. While she is sympathetic to the possible need for capital punishment, she is also very sympathetic to changing our criminal justice system in this country.

Recently she was interviewed by the Woodstock Sentinel-Review, which is the daily paper in our constituency. It was a rather lengthy interview which was conducted only two weeks ago, on November 15. I have been attempting to arrange a meeting between Mrs. Ross and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) so that she could relate some of her feelings as a widow. As a matter of fact, the Primer of Ontario is also trying to arrange such an appointment for Mrs. Ross here in Ottawa.

The article states:

> Mrs. Ross said she would attempt to bring to Mulroney's attention an immediate need to tighten the country's parole system.

It goes on to quote Mrs. Ross as follows:

> "Nobody gives a thought about the victims (of serious crimes)", she said. "Serious crimes are happening every day".

Finally, it states:

> Mrs. Ross said she strongly believes hard-core criminals in Canada's penal system: "Will never be rehabilitated".

Nowhere in that article is there any mention of capital punishment. While she had some sympathy for those who want capital punishment when I talked to her, she saw no reason to raise it in this interview. This suggests to me that many Canadians are looking for alternatives to capital punishment. I suggest that the motion before the House today offers that kind of alternative. Let me outline the two objectives behind the establishment of such a maximum security prison. The primary objective, I suggest, would be the protection of society.

I believe that incarceration institutions in our society serve three main purposes. The first is to protect society. The second is to serve as a form of punishment, and the third, but not necessarily the last, is, hopefully, to assist in rehabilitating an inmate to become a good citizen in our society.

Let me deal with the first objective of protecting society. I briefly described the incident in Woodstock which has put the need for protection for society into perspective for people in my area. At the present time there are hardened criminals serving time in our institutions alongside those who are less inclined to have a criminal type of personality. However, due to the overcrowded conditions, they are exposed to hard-core prisoners when this should not be the case. The time has come for us to relieve the pressure of overcrowding in prisons while establishing a type of prison for habitual criminals or those sentenced to life that is located in a remote area, such as this motion provides for.

The second objective of this motion reflects the need to improve the criminal justice system in this country. Members are aware that we are currently unable to keep certain prisoners incarcerated once they have served their sentence. While there may be a good reason for that, the inadequacy of our present laws allows people to leave prison when we know they may commit further and usually more serious crime than the first offence.

The overcrowding also leads to unrest and an increased level of violence in the prisons. This is a deterrent to those prisoners who want to be rehabilitated, and we must find a better way than these special handling units for segregating these people. There should be another mechanism for segregating hardened criminals from those who want to learn to help themselves while at the same time providing the degree of protection that Canadians are seeking.

In the time I have remaining let me say a few words about the justification and feasibility of the concept behind this motion. I have suggested there is an urgent need to deal with this issue as a result of the unrest in our prisons and in our society owing to the number of homicides that we are witnessing today. There is also a need to show people that we are concerned about what is happening. This concern could be expressed by the establishment of such an institution in a remote area, whether in the Northwest Territories or on a remote island. The reason for putting a prison in such an area is that the environment itself would act as a perimeter control. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) could attest to the fact that if anyone escaped from a prison in the Northwest Territories he would either freeze to death in the winter or be eaten by bugs in the summer. If the prison is situated on a remote island, the same environmental control would exist by its very nature. Such a prison would allow us to segregate hardened criminals from those who are hoping to establish themselves back within society.

Another consideration for such a prison is its cost effectiveness. The amount of security required would be much less in a remote area than at Millhaven or prisons in other highly populated areas.

Another compelling argument is its humaneness. I doubt that there are five Members here who have gone inside a special handling unit in one of our maximum security prisons. Our committee examined the prisons of this country. A special handling unit is a cell that does not have a window and may have one light. There is not even a window in the door. It is a desperate situation for a human to be in.

Studies have shown that that sort of inhumane treatment can be avoided in these special type of prisons. Those prisoners have more opportunity to move freely. In fact, there are some cases in which there are colonies where families can live with these prisoners. At the same time society is protected from those who will be desperate if they get out again.

Let me close by dealing with something which I, as a private Member, believe to be almost even more important than the subject matter of this motion. It concerns the reason why I believe the Government should accept this motion today.

There are basically three reasons. Without a doubt, I think that all of us in the House, including the Government, agree that our criminal justice system is inadequate. I think this has been expressed by the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General. While they may have different approaches to the subject, they have acknowledged the need to study the criminal justice system.

We are now getting increased pressure from the public to make such a review. This is evident in my constituency and it is evident in the House from a number of private Members' Bills calling for a return to capital punishment.

I think it is time that Parliament did something to indicate our concern about what is happening in the criminal justice system and recognized the need to tighten certain aspects of it.

The second point I want to make, which I believe was alluded to by the Leaders of all Parties during the election, is the need for greater authority and recognition to be given to private Members in the House. It is time that private Members were listened to more often.

I can see no harm in allowing an innocuous motion like this that only calls for the study of the feasibility of doing something. It does not permit the Government to do anything except study something. If that kind of motion cannot be accepted, then I am concerned about the role of the private Member in this House.

Finally, if I may have half a minute more, let me say that in this motion we have an opportunity for this House and the Government, if it will accept and pass it, to study some alternatives to capital punishment, for example, the establishment of an institution in some remote area where the public of Canada will be protected.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate but I am somewhat concerned about the resolution. I recognize that the Hon. Member in his proposal is very sincere and that what he is advocating, in his own words, is only a study and there is no harm in doing a study. I am nevertheless worried about the signals put out by this kind of study which may result in the construction of something which is a crossbreed between Alcatraz and Siberia. It is something that frightens me as a Member. It signals that we are losing faith that we can ever rehabilitate prisoners. I am frankly very worried about that thought.

Another question comes to mind, and I see the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) here in the House and he must be worried: Does this mean that if someone is undesirable to one section of the country, we can send him off to another part thus indicating that that part of the country is less worthy? Does this mean that if we choose an island, say in the riding of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), Belle Isle or some other place, that that would indicate the same message for that part of the country or any other island or remote area? I am worried about doing anything that would be that kind of signal.

We have to think why we incarcerate people. Is it solely to punish them? If the answer is yes, then surely our penal system would look different from what it is today, not that it is the greatest right now, but I would suggest that if to incarcerate people is only to punish them, we would probably still be whipping prisoners, cutting off arms, and carrying out capital punishment. We have decided as a society that that is not what we want to do with human beings. We have decided that we do not want to put people away forever and throw away the key. Even contemplating such an idea would indicate that we are abandoning the hope of rehabilitating people and that we have decided life has no value for certain human beings. In my view and belief, that is very wrong.

One could say that I am a soft touch or that I have a bleeding heart, but I am of the view that there is no life not worth saving. There is value in each and every one of us. If there is such a value, as I believe there is, then we need not think any further whether or not this scheme is feasible or whether we should study it any further.

I say no to capital punishment. I say no to throwing away the key. I say no to any kinds of schemes with similar results. I say yes to reform of our penal system. I say there is a better way. But the ultimate objective of that better way is surely not to dispose of human beings, it is to make them more worthwhile. It is to make things more meaningful for them and eventually for all of society.

That is the extent of my remarks. They are brief but they are heartfelt. I do wish that all Members of this House would consider the signal and the objective of a resolution such as this.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), I want first to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for the outstanding record he has in this area. I have had the privilege of working with the Member as a member of the Justice Committee for the last five years. I know that before that time, my colleague, the former Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam, the former justice critic for my Party, Stuart Leggatt, worked very closely with the Hon. Member for Oxford and always spoke very highly of him.

In his capacity as justice critic, Mr. Leggatt had an opportunity to serve on the subcommittee on penitentiaries, which has already been referred to by the Hon. Member for Oxford. I think it is important in addressing the substance of the motion today that we examine the content of that subcommittee report and also look at what has happened to the report since it was tabled in 1977.

That report arose from the work of the unanimous and non-partisan work of a group of Members of Parliament who were appointed to look into conditions in the Canadian penitentiary system because of some very serious incidents of violence in the system. These incidents occurred in a variety of areas whether Kingston, Laval or other areas. The subcommittee found that the penitentiary system was in a state of crisis at the time they reported. The sub-committee said that unless its recommendations were acted upon and acted upon urgently, that state of crisis would continue.

I think the Member for Oxford has clearly documented the fact that unfortunately a succession of Solicitors General did not act upon those fundamental recommendations. I will mention Attorneys General as well. I refer to Attorneys General because surely one of the most fundamental recommendations made by that subcommittee was a recommendation that first and foremost in the Canadian criminal justice system we must look at alternatives to imprisonment. That recommendation has been shown to be so very true. The recommendation which that committee made six or seven years ago has been clearly brought out by the experience we have seen since that time. I deeply regret that governments, and I must say governments both Liberal and Conservative, have failed to respond to that very fundamental recommendation.

If we are going to be serious about reform of the criminal justice system and reform of the penal system, we must recognize that our prisons are far too crowded. There are literally thousands of people in the Canadian prison system. Instead of serving time behind walls, they should be repaying their debt to society in other non-custodial ways. There are many reasons for that. One can look solely at it from an economic perspective and note that last year the statistics show that in the most recent year for which there were comprehensive statistics, that is 1980 to 1981, governments collectively spent some $845 million on the delivery of adult correctional services.

What is the comparative cost of imprisonment as opposed to non-custodial forms of supervision, community supervision, for example? The per capita cost to Canadians was nine times as high for imprisonment as it was for non-custodial forms of supervision. These alternatives to imprisonment could include fine options, fines geared to income, and community work service. Instead of the community being required to pay some $40,000 to $50,000 per year to incarcerate an individual, he is repaying his debt to society. It can include restitution to the victim of the crime.

There are a variety of other options to imprisonment. We have seen in the country partly as a result of the mandatory 25-year provisions, the compromise made at the time of the debate on capital punishment, prisons which are rapidly becoming overcrowded institutions; indeed, they already are far too crowded. We will have to come to grips with the reality that 25-year minimum sentences will have to be re-examined. If they are not, I predict that we will see serious problems in the very near future.

Overcrowding has a devastating impact on the prison system. We have already looked at the implications of double-bunking within the prison system. We have seen a dramatic rise in violence within the prison system over the last couple of years, whether it be suicides, violence by prisoner against prisoner or indeed violence by prisoner against guard. We have seen the tragedy of Archambault where a number of guards were killed. The level of that violence will surely increase unless we in this Parliament come to grips with the fact that the prison system in Canada has failed.

In the future, in 10 or 20 or 30 years, Canadians will look back on the prison system as one of the most dramatic failures in the criminal justice system. We will ask ourselves as citizens how it was that we could possibly tolerate a system which so demonstrably failed to meet its objectives. We know all too well that there is no serious attempt to rehabilitate in many institutions.

Another critical recommendation of the subcommittee was that there should be meaningful opportunities for work in institutions. I believe a national prison industries program was suggested. That recommendation has not been implemented by a succession of governments. Instead of incarcerating people for lengthy terms without any possibility of rehabilitation, we should be looking at the opportunity for meaningful and effective work for people who are in fact imprisoned.

The motion before the House arises as a result of the recommendations of the subcommittee on penitentiaries in 1977. Indeed it is similar to—although it is not in the same terms—recommendation 63 of the subcommittee. I have listened with great interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for Oxford and of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) on this motion. I think a number of very important concerns were raised. In proposing the adoption of this motion, I believe the Hon. Member for Oxford said that there were two primary motives. One was the protection of society, and the second was the need to improve the criminal justice ssytem. I do not think any Member of the House would disagree with those being fundamental objectives of the criminal justice system and the penal system in the country.

We have to ask ourselves carefully whether the implementation of this motion would achieve those objectives and, if so, what would be the other implications of the motion. One of the concerns I would raise with respect to the motion and the way in which it is framed—and I know the Hon. Member is aware of this—is that in many instances prisoners sentenced to terms of life imprisonment are in fact the least disruptive or the best prisoners, in a sense, within institutions. I have consistently heard from guards, wardens and indeed other prisoners that lifers recognize that they have a term of life imprisonment. Life means life. There are many misconceptions about that. It means that after a certain term of years one is eligible for parole. That is all it means—eligible for parole. In most cases these people simply want to do their time quietly and without causing disruption in the institution. It is some of the other elements in prison—at Kent Institution, for example, the elements they call the bikers, the punks and people serving terms of shorter duration for break and enter and crimes of that nature—who have tended to be more involved in violent and disruptive acts within institutions.

To suggest that those people who are sentenced to life imprisonment might pose a greater threat to society—I do not accept that the evidence bears that out. If we are talking about the protection of society, I believe those people are serving their terms within maximum security institutions. I do not think that moving lifers to another part of the country, whether it is the Northwest Territories—and I am sure we will hear a word or two on that suggestion from the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson)—or another area, will result in enhanced security to the community. By and large they are not the people who would pose a threat to the community in the institutions in which they are presently located.

What about the second objective, the need to improve the criminal justice system? Will this in fact achieve that objective? I have some serious concerns about that. In effect, we are banishing these individuals to a term of imprisonment in a remote area. Having said that, I recognize the intent of the Hon. Member's motion. I think the intent is worthwhile. I believe it is that in that kind of environment the opportunity would be greater for the individual not to have such a restrictive environment.

The Hon. Member asked how many Members of the House have actually been inside a cell in a special handling unit. I have certainly visited special handling units. They are inhumane and degrading institutions which I do not think play any part in a civilized criminal justice system. The motive of the Hon. Member in seeking to replace those institutions, those wings or those special handling units, with another type of institution is good. I share the concern which he has expressed with respect to those institutions. However, I wonder whether we are in fact adopting the correct approach by substituting banishment to a remote area for those admittedly defective institutions.

As well, I wonder about the implications in terms of support networks for prisoners. Even though they may be serving terms of life imprisonment, there is an opportunity for some of them—and we do not know how many—to be released on parole at some point. If they are to be released, surely the kind of support networks which are essential for release must be present. They must have a network which is not literally thousands of miles away but which is closer, whether it be family, friends or an opportunity for half-way houses. I suppose the Hon. Member might argue that individuals in that category could presumably be transferred closer to their families and closer to the communities in which they would ultimately live. I would certainly want to see that element studied carefully before such a proposal were to be adopted.

Ultimately, I believe that what the Hon. Member is seeking is not unreasonable. He is seeking an assurance that in dealing with the small number of prisoners within the federal system who are presumably designated by institutions—and in some cases presumably voluntarily—as people who will likely be serving lengthy sentences, those sentences should be served in the most humane manner possible. I remind Hon. Members of the House that the sentence is to deprivation of liberty. So often we forget that that is the sentence, that we should not be going beyond that and depriving prisoners of their other human rights as well.

Let me say in closing that the motion calls upon the Government to study this question. That is very much in keeping with the suggestion of the subcommittee on penitentiaries in 1977. As long as it is clearly understood that what we are seeking is a study and that many of the questions which have been raised with respect to this proposal will be addressed, I certainly think that such a study would be appropriate. I do not belive that it should in any way be construed as the first and most important priority in the criminal justice system, but in so far as it attempts to deal with the problem, which is a serious problem, it is worthy of support.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this opportunity to speak to the motion, but first of all, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) for drawing the attention of the House to the problem of prison inmates with long-term sentences, including those sentenced to life imprisonment. My government is aware that this particular group of inmates, whose numbers are growing, is becoming a difficult issue for Canada's Correctional Service and for the penal system in general. Although the problems are complex, they are not always clearly defined, and as a result, they will not be as easy to solve as the motion may lead us to believe.

Of course, long-term offenders and those sentenced to life imprisonment have always been a part of prison populations, in Canada and the rest of the world. However, since they were incarcerated, they have never been deemed to be a specific risk or particularly dangerous. On the contrary, Correctional Service authorities have found that in their experience, "lifers", as they are commonly referred to, are among the most settled and stable elements of the prison population. In fact, it is often said they have a stabilizing effect on younger and less mature inmates.

Mr. Speaker, exhaustive studies conducted both in Canada and abroad have regularly demonstrated that the conditional release of inmates sentenced to life imprisonment involves very little risk. Recently, the National Parole Board published the results of a study which followed the progress of 308 paroled lifers for twelve years, from 1970 to 1981.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Burnaby, on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for interrupting the Hon. Member but I would like some clarification. I realize the Hon. Member is new to the House, but nevertheless I believe there are rules about reading speeches. I know we are allowed to use notes, but I think this should be pointed out, Mr. Speaker. I do realize the Hon. Member is new—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member is a new Member. She is looking at some notes to get her speech in order.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, the study showed that out of 308 lifers given full parole for the first time, only 20 per cent were incarcerated again for committing new offences, none of which involved any loss of life. The failure rate was only 6.5 per cent, less than half the average rate of 15 per cent.

These conclusions do not diminish the seriousness of the crimes of which these individuals were convicted, nor do they question the appropriateness of the severe sentences they were given. However, they do indicate it may not be advisable to earmark what would probably be very considerable sums of money for the construction of maximum security penitentiaries in remote areas, specifically for this group of inmates.

With respect to the small minority in that group of exceptionally dangerous inmates, the Correctional Service has very appropriate means to control their behaviour. Canada's maximum security institutions are second to none in the world. Using modern technology, the Correctional Service has improved or will soon improve security around the main institutions. In addition, the establishment of special detention units is one more way to isolate and control the more violent inmates in an institution.

Even though it is not urgent at this time to take special security measures concerning lifers and other inmates serving long sentences, the Solicitor General's department remains concerned about their particular needs and the problems they cause.

The question of long jail sentences was the focus of attention in 1976 after the adoption of Criminal code amendments and the introduction of the concept of first- and second-degree murder.

As Hon. Members surely know, first degree murder now results in a mandatory life sentence, with the possibility of parole after 25 years.

As to second-degree murder, it also calls for a life sentence, but in that case the inmate may be paroled after a minimum of ten years, although the courts can raise that minimum to 25 years.

Mr. Speaker, such lengthy jail sentences have given a new dimension to the correctional system. Before that, an inmate would seldom serve that much time behind bars. It seems that those sentences might have a new impact on both the inmate population and the correctional system.

Some people have been wondering whether long sentences might not make inmates desperate and more dangerous since they would conclude that since they have nothing to lose, they can resort to violence in the institution or even attempt to escape. Fortunately, I can say with confidence that, so far, nothing has given currency to that belief.

On the other hand, some people fear that such harsh sentences, whether they are served by lifers or by inmates with long sentences of limited duration, might have demoralizing consequences on prisoners on the psychological, social and even physical levels. That issue has been under consideration and research is continuing, although the findings so far are equivocal: although they do not dismiss the possibility of demoralizing consequences, they do not confirm that they are inevitable, nor do they predict their exact nature.

We are therefore faced with many important questions which still remain answered about the nature of the problems these inmates will have to face in the prison system. These questions will become increasingly relevant as the number of prisoners, especially lifers, increases as it certainly will. Since it is inevitable that the number of lifers will increase, our prisons should house at least 2,000 murderers in the first degree by the year 2000.

The Government, and especially the Solicitor General, is considering these issues actively as well as some initiatives which would solve problems before they occur. Special establishments with limited access and high security or simply specialized correctional facilities, are among the options available. We shall continue to examine schemes such as those mentioned in the motion, but for the moment, we are far from being in agreement about the merit of such an approach.

The Department of the Solicitor General has created a departmental committee on lengthy incarceration made up of representatives of the Correctional Service Canada, the National Parole Board, as well as the Research and Corrections Policy Divisions of the Ministry Secretariat. This committee must consider every operational alternative. In addition, it coordinates the extremely varied activities of the Department with a view to studying the problems facing this group of inmates and to take the necessary action to prevent and solve these problems. The committee will publish, in the very near future in fact, its first working paper which for the first time will give out information on this group of inmates and which will be used to develop the necessary guidelines and programs. I also wish to draw the attention of Hon. Members to the October 1984 issue of the Canadian Criminology Review. That special issue deals exclusively with present research on long-term imprisonment. It reflects the interest generated by the review the Solicitor General initiated. The articles and studies in that periodical provide useful information on that very important matter and remind us that we have still much to learn.

In the Department of the Solicitor General, research is made on various important points, namely the adjustment of prisoners to long sentences, their behaviour in jail, the problems they face, the difficulties met by institutions which must make proper programs available to lifers and possible housing alternatives within institutions and special facilities.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of those efforts, steps will be taken to continue to protect the public, and the staff and prisoners in Canadian penitentiaries. If special facilities such as those mentioned in the motion or any other kind of institution are felt to be necessary, action will be taken in due time, but that time has not come yet.

I suggest that this interesting proposal put forward by the Hon. Member be considered as an alternative by the government. Considering the research and the high costs involved by such a proposal, it should not be considered offhand as the only alternative available.

• (1750)

[English]

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my comments will be brief because I understand that a gentleman from the other side of the House also wishes to speak on this issue. I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) for bringing this very interesting idea forward once again. As he said in his introduction, it is not something new.

I think the difficulty that we have in putting something like this into operation is that it entails a radical change in thinking. The traditional Canadian point of view was expressed very well by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Had we in Canada the same type of penal traditions as exist for instance in the U.S.S.R., our attitude might be different and we would not have these half-studies that recommend that the thing be put on the back burner for a while.

Apart from that mind-set, there are some other difficulties with this idea. One of those difficulties is the issue of costs. There is a very small local jail in Frobisher Bay. I believe it costs something like $150 a day to keep someone in that minimum security facility. There are many transportation costs involved in taking prisoners and staff back and forth. There is the cost of heating to be borne if we are to keep prisoners in the manner to which they have become accustomed in southern Canada. Another difficulty that is encountered is the matter of staff. If there were to be a facility in a very remote location, presumably we would have to take staff in for a week and then back out for a week.

Whenever a penitentiary is proposed for a certain location, whether it be in southern or northern Canada, the natural reaction of the local population is to say: 'No, we do not want all these guys in our community'. The initial reaction to this idea in the Territories is not in any way any different from the reactions in southern Canada. When some thought is given to the matter in a little more detail, as has happened in a couple of communities, the attitude changes somewhat. What I would really like to do is to put on the record the requests made by a couple of communities in my constituency that are actively looking at the idea of soliciting a federal penitentiary for their areas.

The first such town is Fort Smith in which there already is a territorial jail for females and a facility for young offenders. The people of Fort Smith have the support base in that there is a college there and the area is semi-remote. They do have a daily jet service and there is a road that goes to Fort Smith, so we are not faced with the difficulties of a very remote location. If the population could be assured that such a facility would be a secure facility, they would likely welcome the idea. As I said before, they are accustomed to penal institutions and there is a very small economic base in the community. They would like to encourage that type of thing.

The second location that has expressed an interest in having a federal penitentiary is the Town of Pine Point. The Chamber of Commerce, under the presidency of a gentleman by the name of Mr. Ward Lynds, to whom I was speaking only a few days ago, is actively pursuing the idea and would like it to be discussed by the municipal authorities so that it will eventually have the support of the entire community. That is another location which is what might be called semi-remote. The local Chamber of Commerce presents a very good argument as to why a federal penitentiary should be built in that location.

In order to allow my friend on the opposite side to make a few concluding remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will thank you for the opportunity to make my views known and will resume my seat.

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I will begin by applauding the Hon. Member who moved the motion for his position on capital punishment. I appreciate that the intent behind his motion is to find an alternative to capital punishment. I would like to state for the record that I am unequivocally opposed to capital punishment and I share my friend's concerns with respect to the inevitability of the return of capital punishment if the matter is brought before this House again. In fact, I fear that if the matter were voted upon in this House, the motion would carry. Accordingly, I think we ought to do everything possible to find some alternative to capital punishment.

There is no question in my mind that it will be a very sad day indeed for this nation if capital punishment is returned to the law books of the country. It will set our country back and will indicate to the world that we are returning to the law of the jungle and that this country is uncivilized, indecent and inhumane. I certainly urge Hon. Members to give it some very lengthy thought before they speak quickly and advocate the return of capital punishment.

The Hon. Member is suggesting that a penal institution be established in a remote area of the country. I have some serious difficulties with respect to the Hon. Member's logic, although I do not for one moment question his sincerity. On the one hand, he speaks of the protection of society and the rehabilitation of inmates. I cannot imagine how a penal colony in some remote portion of the country will assist in the rehabilitation of an inmate who is serving a lengthy sentence of life imprisonment. I agree whole heartedly with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), who says that life is sacred. Human life is sacred, and to banish semone to a penal colony would eliminate any hope that that person might have of some day resuming his or her law-abiding life.

I do not quarrel with the spirit of the Hon. Member's motion but, once again, I have very serious difficulties with respect to its logic. The Government ought first to determine what is the purpose of incarceration. It seems to me that the paramount purpose of incarceration is the protection of society. The second purpose of incarceration is the rehabilitation of the inmate.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that the time has expired. I would urge Hon. Members not to support the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

RESEARCH—PROPOSED TOXICOLOGY CENTRE PROJECT. (B) CONSULTATION QUERY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on November 26 I put a question to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) concerning the decision of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), announced in his Economic Statement, to cancel the construction of the Toxicology Centre at the University of Guelph and the University of Toronto. I asked the Minister why the centre, which is so important to the development of new information, research in toxicology and to the training of people in Canada would be cancelled by the Government.

This centre has been in the making for some ten years. A sub-committee of the National Research Council and an associated committee on toxicology have been working for ten years to put together an independent centre which was to be jointly sponsored by the federal Government, the provincial Government and industry.

In responding to my question, the Minister indicated that the cost of the centre had gone from $32 million to $50 million. She suggested that it was a capital cost, and that it was the federal Government's cost. In fact, those figures are not correct. The cost to the federal Government was to be $16 million, $10 million for capital and $6 million for operational costs, and the same cost would apply to the Province. Private industry was to provide $3 million for capital cost and $5 million over a five-year period. The actual capital costs are estimated to be between $20 million and $23 million. Those figures have remained fairly constant. It was to be a centre of excellence for toxicology research and training. It was associated with two universities in order that post-graduate degrees in toxicology could be provided.

There is massive concern in the population with respect to toxicology and toxins associated with cancer. Dr. Emmanual Farber, Chairman of the Board at the University of Toronto Toxicology Centre, is a pathologist in cancer research. When we turn on our television sets we are informed about concern with insecticides and with toxic chemicals in the Niagara River. The Government had a chance to spend $10 million in capital and $6 million in operating costs over a five-year period and, together with industry, the province and two universities, would have made a world-class facility. It is simply criminal that the Government took this decision.

The most disturbing part is that the Minister obviously had not read her briefing notes and had no idea about the whole project. The figures she used were erroneous. If the figures are not right, then we can question whether the Minister really tried to fight for the institution. It was not only a federal decision, it involved the Province, universities and the private sector. The Government talks blithely about involving the private sector. The private sector was willing to provide substantial funds for this project. We must wonder whether the Minister knew about the project.

We note daily on our television sets concerns regarding toxins in health, consumer products, industry and manufacturing. The Minister suggested that $700,000 was being spent on research into toxicology. The people I talked to at the University of Guelph said that they would be surprised if there was even 10 per cent of that amount. There may be $700,000 in research but certainly not $700,000 a year for research into toxicology.

This Government blithely talks about consultation. I defy the Minister to say there was consultation with the University of Guelph, the University of Toronto, the Province of Ontario or private industry before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stood in his place and cancelled this institution. There simply was no consultation.

When we combine the cut-backs in the Canadian Wildlife Service and the cut-backs in monitoring of toxins in Lake Ontario and other places, Mr. Speaker, we see a government which is not dedicated to preserving the environment. Certainly it is not interested in the development of the University of Guelph or the University of Toronto in that regard. It is certainly not a friend of those universities or the City of Guelph in this whole matter because there were some 160 jobs involved in this project over the long haul. I just hope the Minister will reconsider this action and re-establish this institution.

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity of responding to the Hon. Member opposite. I stand by the figures I have indicated to this House these last few days, and here are additional data that certainly should be of interest to my hon. colleague.

In its 1982 study of federal programs on toxic chemicals, the Treasury Board made known the following facts: During the fiscal year 1981-82, more than 2,600 person-years and $143 million were committed, of which 450 person-years and $20 million were for research purposes.

Twenty four government departments have undertaken research work on toxic chemicals in compliance with 58 acts of Parliament.

One item that was criticized by the study was the lack of an overall, consistent program in that area. There was concern among other things about work duplication, and apparently no overall policy or priority had been developed in that respect.

Major recommendations were made in that study, namely the need for a consistent, coordinated and efficient harmonization of efforts, through the establishment of a Canadian inter-departmental committee on toxic chemicals.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, this Government has absolutely no intention of withdrawing from or relinquishing its important role in the area of studies and research on toxic chemicals.

But again let me say that the $16 million the Canadian Government would have invested in the building of the Guelph Centre were indeed millions of dollars that would have been going into construction work rather than into actual research activities.

Therefore, it is false to suggest that Canadian research and expertise on toxic chemicals are reduced by such a cut. Quite the opposite, we are still increasing our funding for the building of such expert research facilities, and we are committed to increasing that research expertise on toxic chemicals, despite the difficulties resulting from the current economic situation.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, there should be an end to all that ideological nonsense with respect to that matter, and there should also be an end to the efforts to scare Canadians into believing this is being curtailed.

• (1810)

NATIONAL PARKS—EMPLOYMENT AT KOUCHIBOUGUAC NATIONAL PARK, N.B. (B) INQUIRY CONCERNING EMPLOYMENT FOR LAID-OFF WORKERS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question on November 16 of this year was directed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment and concerned employment at Kouchibouguac National Park.

The Park's history goes back several years, when, in order to create the park, it was necessary to expropriate some 200 families, and subsequently force them to move. Mr. Speaker, this was not a very happy time in our history. Of course, compensation was received for loss of property and for moving expenses, but more important, promises were made and especially a commitment that things would improve. Commitment is the key word here. A commitment was made to create jobs for these people who had been forced to move out. Since then we have been able to employ about 200 people every year, and I am referring to seasonal workers, not to the government employees responsible for park administration. Seasonal employees are mostly engaged in various construction projects such as walkways to the beaches, nature paths, camping and picnic areas, ski huts, and so forth.

Much remains to be done. Work on park facilities is still going on. In fact, we could employ about 200 seasonal workers for several years more, and seasonal jobs are very much in demand. Kouchibouguac National Park is the main employer in this area and has been for some time.

Since work on the park was started, some 200 families have depended on this seasonal work. But now, all of a sudden, the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is announcing cutbacks that will affect the work on facilities in national parks.

When I asked the Hon. Minister of the Environment how these cutbacks would affect the people in my riding, I was told that not only will seasonal workers be affected but also that her Department intends to cut 305 person-years in the Department itself. I was also told that seven people in my riding will be losing their jobs, and I am referring to people working for the Canadian Wildlife Service in Sackville, but I will get back to that later. I must say the people in my riding are getting a pretty rough deal!

To get back to the jobs in the National Park, I am very disappointed with the Minister's reply. If the Government persists in cutting these jobs, it will be putting these families in a very difficult, not to say untenable situation, but it will also mean failure to meet commitments made to these people, commitments we have met since the Park's inception. No other sector in our economy can provide jobs for these people if they are not rehired. Even if the Hon. Minister claims that her Department's prime objective is not to create jobs, I would urge the Minister to review her position on cutbacks in national parks.

The commitment made by the Government to the people of Kouchibouguac, a commitment to maintain employment levels, must be met. Mr. Speaker, in doing so, the Hon. Minister would be keeping a promise made during the election campaign, which was to create thousands of jobs.

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): In answer to my colleague, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the first election promise we must keep is to reduce the huge deficit we are carrying and which will weigh heavily on our children and all future generations. We are going to have to tighten our belts to balance the budget and everybody will feel the pinch. I am sure that some people in the riding of my colleague will also have to suffer.

As far as the Kouchibouguac Park is concerned, we have actually spent more than $25 million to develop, maintain and operate the park since it was first opened 15 years ago. At this point in time, most of the development projects have been completed. Sure enough, lots of jobs were available last year at Kouchibouguac, but they did not have anything to do with environment programs. For instance, they were created under Unemployment Insurance Act Section 38, the Environment 2000 program—a pilot project which has now ended—Canada Works and the summer employment program.

My department now expects to open up 73 jobs in the Kouchibouguac Park next summer, 56 fewer than last year. But other jobs will be available under job creation programs as they are announced. My colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has already announced that funds have been set aside for job creation, and I am sure that some of that money will be spent in the riding of the Hon. Member.

CHILDREN—SEXUAL ABUSE—BADGLEY COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS. (B) GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on this occasion to follow up on questions I raised with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on November 8 with respect to the implementation of the recommendations of the Badgley Report on the sexual abuse of children.

The Badgley Commission was appointed in December of 1980. The report which was released in August of 1984, after over three years of study, documented what was unquestionably a national tragedy. Unfortunately, it is a national tragedy in which the victims are too often silent and traumatized.

The terms of reference of the Badgley Commission were to document the extend of child sexual abuse and recommend how young victims could be better protected; to consider how juvenile prostitution could be prevented and to determine the extent of the making of child pornography. After very extensive research, the committee came up with some very disturbing findings. I would like to take a couple of minutes to document the most serious of those findings.

For example, the committee found that at some time during their lives, about one in two females and one in three males have been victims of one or more unwanted sexual acts. These acts included being exposed to, being sexually threatened, being touched on a sexual part of the body and attempts to assault or being sexually assaulted. About four in five of these unwanted sexual acts have been first committed against these persons when they were children or youths. Four in 100 young females have been raped. Two in 100 young persons have experienced attempts or actual acts on unwanted anal penetration by a penis or by means of objects or fingers.

Acts of exposure constituted the largest single category of sexual offences committed against children. Cases were documented where such acts were followed by sexual assault.

The other major findings included the fact that three in five sexually abused children had also been threatened or physically coerced by their assailants. Young victims are as likely to be threatened or forced to engage in sexual acts by persons relatively close in age as by older persons.

A few young victims were physically injured but substantially more suffered emotional harm or trauma. About one in four of the assailants was a family member or a person in a position of trust. About half were friends or acquaintances and about one in six was a stranger. Virtually all of the assailants were males while one in 100 were female.

The final major report was that over two in five of all sexual assault homocides are committed against children 15 and younger. Children are the victims of three in four convicted sexual offenders found to be dangerous on sentencing by the courts.

This is a shocking report in the extent to which it documents child and sexual abuse in Canada. It is a 1,300 page indictment of governments, both provincial and federal, for having failed to respond to what is clearly a national tragedy.

It is particularly appropriate as we approach the international year of youth that this government be called upon to make a commitment, a commitment to Canada's young people, that this problem, this crisis of child sexual abuse will be dealt with, and dealt with in a serious and responsible way. The extent and scope of the problem has been clearly and eloquently documented by the Badgley Commission. They have made a number of recommendations which touch on both provincial and federal jurisdictions, Mr. Speaker.

I was most disappointed to note that the Throne Speech made no reference whatsoever to the report of the Badgley Commission on Child Sexual Abuse. I can only hope that the rather more general commitment in the Throne Speech to assistance to victims of family violence will also include immediate attention to the victims of child sexual abuse.

One of the most urgent recommendations of the Badgley Commission Report is the establishment of the office of a special commissioner who would report directly to the Prime Minister. Similar offices have been created in response to concerns in the areas of human rights and the status of women. The Government of Canada has established special bodies to respond to concerns in that area. The Badgley Commission Report recommended that the Government of Canada should establish an office of the commissioner reporting directly to the office of the Prime Minister which could be assigned the authority to review the many recommendations of the Badgley Commission Report, and basically serve as an agency which would initiate and co-ordinate the reforms which are called for at the federal level, and also ensure that both provincial governments and municipal governments respond as is appropriate.

In response to my question, the Minister of Justice indicating that he would be meeting with his colleagues at the provincial level in St. John's, I believe, on November 23, and meet they did. Arising from that meeting with his colleagues there was no reference whatever in the communique, certainly no public reference, to the very serious problems which were documented by the report of the Badgley Commission.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Speyer) will rise and give the House some indication of what the response will be of the Government both to these recommendations and the urgent recommendation with respect to the establishment of an office of the commissioner to co-ordinate the Government's response at the federal level.

This report cries out for action, and action now. There are no children in the House of Commons, but we have a special trust and a special obligation to speak on their behalf, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Sexual Offences Against Children carried out a great deal of work in preparing its report which, as the Hon. Member indicated, was published on August 22, 1984. The committee was chaired by Dr. Badgley of Toronto. In fulfilling its mandate it met with concerned groups and received over 250 written submissions, as well as conducting a research program which included national surveys on sexual child abuse. I do not think the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) overstates the case when he says the report is highly disturbing to anybody with any sensitivity.

Given the multi-faced dimensions of its terms of reference, this inquiry required contributions and co-operation with the provinces, with the municipalities in the legal and social fields.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby asked what we are going to do; what this Government plans to do about the problem and the recommendations submitted to the Committee? The answer is relatively simple. The Government is going to take steps to deal with the problem and to make Canada a safer country for children. But effective changes involving many disciplines and requiring close co-operation of the three levels of government cannot take place overnight, as desirable as that may be.

For example, consider the total number of recommendations made by the committee. There are a total of 52 recommendations, of which at least 30 call for a potential federal legislative response. Changes to the Criminal Code and to the Canada Evidence Act are the responsibility of the Minister of Justice. Before these can be acted upon, it will be necessary to review each proposed change with the provinces, the Crown prosecutors' office, the defence bar and the police community. Action will be forthcoming. It will be forthcoming promptly.

Several recommendations call for the strengthening of services to children. While most of these require provincial leadership, in the case of victim compensation there is a clear overlap into federal jurisdiction. It is imperative to recognize that implementation of these recommendations is a complex undertaking. With this fact in mind, a number of steps have already been undertaken in relation to the committee's findings.

The Departments of Justice and National Health and Welfare, the Ministries of the Solicitor General and Secretary of State, and Status of Women of Canada have formed an interdepartmental committee to co-ordinate the federal work. Officials of my Department consulted with the Canadian Council on Children and Youth in August, and a national consultation day in association with the Fifth International Congress on Child Abuse was held in Montreal in September. The response of non-governmental child care organizations in the provinces is being followed up by officials in the Department of Justice. Many other actions are being taken.

Essentially the Member's point is correct. Badgley and his recommendations deserve to be treated swiftly. It is an incredibly disturbing report, and I recommend that all Members do read it.

Adjournment Debate

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.26 the House adjourned.

PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the people of Laval-des-Rapides, I wish to express before the House my indignation about some comments made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) before members of the National Editors and Writers Society in Toronto last week. According to reports, the Minister of Finance asked the media to apply restraint in their articles on the Government's intentions to cut back social programs, so as to avoid creating a panic among recipients of family allowance and old age security payments.

Is the Minister now going to ask the media not to publish information on cutbacks in equalization payments so as not to create panic among provinces receiving such payments? If the information media and even parliamentarians no longer have a right to comment on the Government's policies, I wonder what kind of information the public will receive. Not the press but the Progressive Conservative Government decided to make cutbacks in social programs. It is clear that the Government wants to tamper, either directly or indirectly, with the universality of social programs, but it would prefer to keep it a secret.

If the Minister of Finance wants to reassure Canadians and allay the very real fears he raised among those benefiting from social programs, all he has to do is say publicly, and say it now, that universality will be fully maintained and that the Government does not intend to tax all benefits received, and then Canadians will breathe easier. Then there will be no question of creating panic among senior citizens and other beneficiaries of social programs, and the media will be able to do their work unhindered.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PLEA ON BEHALF OF LAID-OFF WORKERS IN BARRIE, ONT.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise to draw to the attention of the House an unfortunate situation which must be reviewed if the unemployment insurance system is to be considered fair and just to all workers. I refer to reports that the Commission's office in Barrie, Ontario, intends to appeal decisions of the local board referees interpreting the vacation pay, lay-off notices and unemployment insurance provisions in favour of the workers at Black and Decker.

The Liberals put into place a system and a mind set which consistently denied fair interpretations without the realization of a basic fact, that when a plant closes down completely it is not a case of a worker trying to beat the system but a case where the system must start working for the worker.

That same nonsense occurred in Midland, Ontario, when the RCA plant closed in 1982.

I ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) who, the House knows, dislikes technicalities which persecute the unfortunate, to have her officials investigate this fully before the Government takes any further appeal procedures.

I also ask the Minister, who, I know, is concerned about the shambles in which the Liberals left the system, to consider a complete review of the vacation pay, lay-off notices and unemployment insurance provisions.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

DELAY IN PROCLAIMING HEALTH AND SAFETY REGULATIONS—IMPACT ON PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express concern on behalf of 250,000 employees of the Government of Canada over the Government's decision to delay the proclamation of the health and safety provisions of the Canada Labour Code until March or June of 1986. This decision will have the effect of continuing to deprive these public employees of any legislative health and safety protection. I am particularly concerned because even 1986 is not given as a firm date.

These employees were to have been brought under the Code, according to the amendments. I believe that the delay is a breach of faith by a Government which promised consultation and co-operation when it was campaigning to become the Government last summer.

The present situation is a grace and favour relationship in which less than 10 per cent of federal employees, I am told, have an effectively working health and safety committee, because of the refusal of the Government and the Treasury Board, as the employer, to implement a decent system of health and safety.

In regard to its own employees, I suggest the Government should be a model of progress and not a model of looking to the past. The current situation has proven that a voluntary system from the Government is not workable, and when all Parties agreed last June and endorsed Part IV of the Canada Labour Code that would give this protection to federal employees, it is wrong for the Government to delay its proclamation.

I call on the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) and the Government either to proclaim the protection now—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ROLE OF WOMEN IN THIRD WORLD DEVELOPMENT

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, in 1975 the United Nations officially opened the International Decade for Women by highlighting the problems of women in the Third World. Unfortunately, as the decade draws to a close, many of the problems persist.

An area of particular importance is the role of women in development. If effective and lasting development is to take place in the Third World, women must be integrated into the process. For example, many African agricultural training projects fail, simply because they focus on men, ignoring the fact that women do 70 per cent of the agricultural work. In addition, while two-thirds of the world's 800 million illiterate are women, women are often left out of literacy training programs. This can no longer go on if proper and dynamic development is to take place.

Fortunately, some positive steps have been taken. The OECD has established guidelines that strongly remind member agencies to treat women in development as the major issue. In Canada, CIDA and Match International have also played a significant role in encouraging development initiatives by women.

Progress has been made, but the problems of women in development, and indeed the problems of development as a whole, if not dealt with more effectively, will be with us long after the decade of women is over.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

IMPORTATION OF BEEF FROM DENMARK AND IRELAND—EFFECT ON CANADIAN FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, this fall, millions and millions of pounds of subsidized beef have been dumped on the Canadian market by countries in the European Economic Community, such as Denmark and Ireland. Over 45 million pounds of beef, subsidized up to 50 cents a pound, are driving down the price that our Canadian beef producers receive for their product.

The Government promised in the election campaign "an effective fast track tariff policy, so that responsive action could be taken to protect producers by imposing import restrictions when necessary". Yet today, Mr. Speaker, there is not a single piece of legislation to implement this election promise or any other Tory election promise for agriculture, on the Order Paper of this House.

A recent report of the Farm Credit Corporation showed that 39,000 farmers across Canada are under serious financial stress this winter due to low commodity prices, and 1,700 are actually facing total financial collapse. Mr. Speaker, the Government was elected three months ago but has still not taken action to stop this dumping of subsidized beef by the European Economic Community countries. The Government must move immediately to stop this unfair practice which is driving more and more of our Canadian beef producers into bankruptcy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN DIPLOMATIC PRESENCE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on his apparent active inquiry into Canada's need for direct representation in Nicaragua.

As the only Member of this House to witness the November 4 election held in Nicaragua, I assure my honourable colleagues that that election was a genuine, democratic act of choice by the people of Nicaragua. It was not perfect, as elections in Canada are not perfect. However, it formally confirms what has already been plain to observers—the fact that the Government of Nicaragua is controlled by nobody but the people of Nicaragua.

As a sovereign state, engaged in desperate defence against the most powerful state in the world, Nicaragua has sent an ambassador to Canada, and deserves to receive an ambassador from Canada. Therefore I welcome the Minister's report inquiry into the pros and cons of establishing permanent representation there. The Globe and Mail today sums it up well:

The establishment of a permanent Canadian "presence" there is highly desirable—

The absence of an embassy in Nicaragua leaves Canada dependent on the U.S. for more than information. Canadians resident in Nicaragua are asked to register with the American embassy. If there were an invasion, Canadians would have to rely upon the invader's embassy to co-ordinate their evacuation. That should be an embarrassment—to Joe Clark and to Canada.

I urge the Minister to act soon to help head off the dangers of war in Central America.

EXTERNAL AID

PLIGHT OF JEWISH GROUP IN ETHIOPIA

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, a large number of my constituents would like to commend the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for his prompt and exemplary action in delivering aid to Ethiopia amounting to $50 million.

There are some sectors of the Ethiopian Community, however, which require prompt and immediate action, particularly the Falashas, one of the oldest Jewish groups, which faces the possibility of ceasing to exist as a cultural entity.

A group of my constituents who recently returned from Ethiopia, reported that Canadian aid was being hampered due to the civil war raging between the Ethiopian, Eritrean and Somalian factions. Consequently, I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to direct the Secretary of State for External Affairs to instruct our Ambassador to the United Nations to seek an emergency session at the U.N. in order to propose an immediate 30-day truce during the upcoming holiday season, among the warring factions in Ethiopia so that Canada, in concert with other nations, could quickly organize an airlift and food drops to the inaccessible and war areas of Ethiopia to avoid an even greater disaster.

INCREASED ALLOCATION OF FUNDS FOR MIRAMICHI RIDING

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, Northumberland-Miramichi is the largest geographical riding in New Brunswick.

Since the mid-1970s there has been a prolonged pause in the Miramichi region's economic development and growth. Poor market conditions throughout North America for pulp and lumber have been responsible, in part, for the closure or reduced operation of many of our pulp mills and paper mills.

The Miramichi must now be considered a problem area in economic terms; unemployment hovers around an astounding rate of 40 per cent; over 12 per cent of the population receives some sort of social assistance.

Against this dire picture enters the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that very few people on the Miramichi enjoy being dependent on Canada Works grants. There is little permanency. There is never enough money to satisfy the demand.

But having said that, let me here and now acknowledge that the plight of our situation was recognized by the Hon. Minister and, of the projects which had been processed by the previous Government, not a single one had been terminated by her. Compassion, concern, and sensitivity to personal need were more important than partisan politics.

This year the amount of money allocated under Canada Works for Northumberland-Miramichi has more than doubled over the previous initial allocation, to $2 million.

In thanking the Hon. Minister, I assure her on behalf of the people of Miramichi that the money will be well spent—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

BUDGETARY CUTBACKS—EFFECTS ON QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to have the Minister of Finance with us again, and we are relieved he did not forget any briefs in Washington.

Mr. Speaker, on November 8 of this year, the Minister of Finance announced a series of budgetary and extra-budgetary cutbacks, as well as increases in user costs for certain Government services. The cumulative effect of these decisions means that Quebec will be losing about $770 million of its total requirements. Considering the fact that many regions in Quebec have an unemployment rate of over thirteen per cent, could the Minister inform the House what measures he intends to propose to compensate for this loss to Quebec's economy?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member if he would outline what the $770 million is for and where he says that job loss will originate. I want to underline the fact, as I have said many times in the House, that if we are to achieve the benefits of a reduction in the deficit, which will be felt in the Province of Quebec as well as in other parts of Canada, there have to be individual spending reductions in parts of the country. That has been spread equitably across the country. The benefits from the increased confidence and the job creation by the private sector which will result from that, will also be felt right across the country.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT ANALYSED IMPACT ON QUEBEC NEEDS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is unparliamentary to send the Minister a study I made of these cutbacks. If not, I could send it to him separately.

However, considering the impact of these cutbacks on Quebec's economy, could the Minister inform the House if his Department has made a study of the impact of these budgetary cutbacks on Quebec's overall requirements and also on the number of jobs that may be lost?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said to the Hon. Member in my first statement, we have tried in a very careful way to have an equitable sharing of the impact of the reductions across the country, by region as well as by individual groups of Canadians. There have not been individual impact studies done because of the fact that the impact will be shared right across the country. However, I underline the fact that it is very important for all of us to understand that there will be positive benefits in the increased business confidence. As the Leader of the Opposition has said many times in the past, confidence is a very important element of job creation. That will come, and that will be shared right across the country.

MONTREAL-QUEBEC GAS PIPELINE—CANCELLATION OF BRANCHES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Minister that this confidence must be achieved in the private sector. And speaking of the private sector, did the Minister consult with the Government of Quebec and the private sector before cancelling construction on branch lines of the Montreal-Quebec City gas pipeline, a cut that will have a direct impact on levels of confidence in the private sector, which had already started to plan a number of investments in connection with the availability of natural gas?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the Government of the Province of Quebec as well as with Governments of a number of the other provinces. I have been quite encouraged by the degree of support which has been given to me and to the Government to continue the direction in which we have been going in reducing the level of the deficit.

I think the Hon. Member is well aware of the benefits which can be gained by reduction in the deficit. I would encourage him to speak out and to encourage Canadians to accept the broad benefits from the reduction in the deficit as they will affect all Canadians, and not get deflected by the individual spending cuts. Sure, they are going to hurt in individual cases, but I am convinced that they will be more than offset by the broad benefits.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

REPORTED DEVELOPMENT OF CRUISE MISSILES FOR DEPLOYMENT ON SOVIET SUBMARINES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A report in the Soviet News Agency Tass indicates that that country has now completed development of a long range cruise missile and plans to deploy such missiles on its submarine and bomber fleets over the next year. The Minister will understand the staggering implications that has for the whole North American Air Defence system, and the prospect it holds out for major investments in restoring that system to a point where security can be maintained. Have we had discussions or consultations with the United States concerning this very major new development? What response is the Government planning to take in relation to the major disruption this will cause to the North American security system?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think everyone in the House shares the concern expressed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry about the development of that capacity in the Soviet Union. We are having discussions with the United States about the modernization of our air defence systems. One factor we are taking into account in those discussions is to ensure that any defence that might be mounted to a cruise threat from the Soviet Union would not involve Canada in other aspects of defence systems of which we might not approve.

SUGGESTED BAN ON DEPLOYMENT OF CRUISE MISSILES BY U.S. AND U.S.S.R.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs recognizes that the best defence against that development would be a ban on the use of the cruise missile throughout.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Members of this House do not take this question too seriously. I am surprised at the attitude of Members of this House on such an important issue. I would ask the Minister whether we have made representations both to the United States and the Soviet Union, to include on the agenda of the arms talks to begin this January discussion of a ban of the deployment of the cruise missile in an attempt to provide for the best security, which is not to have the missile around for use at all.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not made that sort of representation, but since it has been raised in the House of Commons we will consider putting that suggestion forward. I am very pleased to note that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry shares our view that the only effective way to deal with these matters is through consultations with the superpowers, and that a unilateral action by Canada would have no effect.

ADVICE GIVEN TO MINISTER PRIOR TO TALKS WITH MANITOBA COUNTERPART

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I think he will understand when I say I welcome him back from his interesting trip, and I hope he did not lose his briefs on the way to Question Period today. My question pertains to that very important subject matter. On Tuesday I asked the Prime Minister, with reference to the documents that were inadvertently left in the hotel lobby in Winnipeg on Monday, whether he would tell the House what the harsh measures referred to in that document were and which are to be kept, for the moment, away from the Government of Manitoba. The Prime Minister said that he was not sure to which document I was alluding. I am sure the Minister does know. Will he now tell the House what are those harsh measures?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me first advise the Leader of the New Democratic Party that there was no reference to harsh measures in that particular memorandum. Either he is pulling something out of context, and I am sure he would not want to do that, or twisting something to his benefit. As he is quite aware, there is a certain degree of opposition to some of the measures that were taken in the economic statement as they affect the Province of Manitoba. The suggestion was made, as I am sure he will recognize: Don't hit any harder than is necessary in the discussion of the equalization statement. I would say to the Hon. Member that there was nothing in that memorandum which was not discussed. The tone of the discussion with Mr. Schroeder was perfectly consistent with the memorandum, and Mr. Schroeder appreciated that.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister picked up on the words that I used being "harsh message". According to the news story, the wording that is attributed to the document is "harsh message", as opposed to "harsh measures". If the Minister is saying that neither phrase was used, then we will accept his word for that.

I would like the Minister to clarify for the House of Commons and for the people of Manitoba whether or not the Government has reached a decision on the important matter of equalization as it affects the Government of Manitoba, as was promised by a number of Conservative Party candidates who were seeking office in the Province of Manitoba during the recent election.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there has been no decision reached on the question of equalization, as I told Mr. Schroeder, and as I said publicly on at least two occasions. When I was in the Province of Manitoba I proposed to discuss this matter with all provincial Finance Ministers before reaching a tentative decision on my own. Because any change in the equalization measures would require an Act of Parliament, I said that I would then have to discuss it with my colleagues in Cabinet and the matter would then have to be brought before the House of Commons. No decision has been taken, and I indicated to Mr. Schroeder that no decision would be taken until early in the new year at the earliest.

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—EFFECTS ON MANITOBA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, dealing with another aspect of "harsh messages", quite apart from the equalization formula as it affects Manitoba and, indeed as it affects a number of other provinces, I would like to ask the Minister if he brought to the attention of the Government of Manitoba the exact impact of the cut-backs in Manitoba that he announced in the House not too many days ago. Did he say concretely to the officials of Manitoba what those cut-backs would be for that province? Will he tell us what their effects will be on the other provinces?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one of the matters which I did discuss in some detail with Mr. Schroeder, as well as with the Deputy Premier of Manitoba, was the very serious state of the financial position of the Government of Canada as we found it when we took office after the election. That is understood by Mr. Schroeder as well as by the Deputy Premier, and it is in that context that we must review equalization and the other particular elements of the spending reductions in the November 8 statement. We did not get into a full discussion of the individual items. We did talk at some length about the Institute of Technology. However, Mr. Schroeder did not ask me to participate in a broad discussion of every item that was contained in the statement of November 8.

TRADE

SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for International Trade. Yesterday the Minister announced that the period of extension of the shoe quotas has been reduced by four months. Has the Minister done this because the Government has already made up its mind to reduce the existing extent of protection and assistance for the Canadian shoe industry and its 20,000 workers from what it is at present?

Hon. Jim Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the Hon. Member that the Government has not as yet made any policy decision with respect to increasing, reducing, or in any way amending the quotas presently in effect. We have extended the period of existing quotas for one year, and have referred the question to the Anti-Dumping Tribunal for a thorough review of the industry. It will hear from all parts of the industry, from the retail market and from the consumers. Upon receiving that report, hopefully in early June, it will be referred to Cabinet. At that time a decision will be made on what the future policy will be.

LENGTH OF QUOTA PERIOD

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the announcement which was made yesterday indicated that the Government had decided to shorten the extension so that it would run from December 1 to November 30, 1985. I would like to ask the Minister why he has created uncertainty by making the announcement before a new policy was in place, and before there had been full consultation with the 20,000 workers and the communities which are affected.

Hon. Jim Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I said in response to the first question from the Hon. Member, there has not been any change made. The only reason that the period was reduced from 16 months to 12 months was to fit in more completely with the business year of the industry so that it would cause less disruption. Second, it would allow for a shorter period within which to implement any new recommendations which may arise as a result of the Tribunal's findings.

REGULATIONS APPLICABLE TO BURNABY, B.C., WORKERS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On February 1, 1985, some 400 employees at the Sears catalogue warehouse in Burnaby will lose their jobs and become eligible for severance pay and early retirement packages. I would ask the Minister how she could possibly justify the Government's proposal, which was contained in the recently tabled economic statement, which would cut significantly the monthly benefits that are available to these workers and their families in the months after they lose their jobs.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the Hon. Member that there have been no changes made to the regulations at the present time. We have said, and we continue to say, that the objective of these measures is to treat all income for unemployed persons in a fair and equitable manner. Because that is the principal key to the situation, we will take whatever time is necessary to ensure that that objective is implemented.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, there is no fairness or equity in these proposals for working people.

IMPLEMENTATION OF GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very serious effects of these proposed cuts, not only on my constituents but on thousands of workers throughout Canada—cuts which total some $90 million—will the Minister assure the House that, in the spirit of equity and fairness, she will delay the implementation date of these harsh measures, at least until there has been a more careful and comprehensive study of the serious impact they will have on working people and their families?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have already assured one of the Hon. Member's colleagues that I will take into consideration proposals which are made by various Members of Parliament. I assure him that I will give consideration to the proposals which he puts forward.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR TRUMP PROGRAM DETAILS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services.

His Department is responsible for a major refit of Canadian warships known as the Trump Program.

Could the Minister inform the House of the status of this program and, especially, whether the contract will be awarded to a company that has already qualified for this contract, namely, the Chantiers maritimes de Lévis?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that that is certainly the recommendation which I and my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, intend to make. There are negotiations currently taking place, and I hope that within a very few days there will be news which will be favourable to the Hon. Member and his constituents.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

WORK OF REVIEW COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Government has announced its intentions to make extensive cuts in all sorts of programs that are delivered to the people of Canada. I would ask the Prime Minister why the review committee which is responsible for deciding where those cuts will be made, is concentrating solely on programs delivered to outside users—to the taxpayers—while leaving untouched the vast administrative components, for example, Treasury Board and the Office of the Comptroller General, which serve purely bureaucratic ends.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, since that is a specific responsibility which the Prime Minister has devolved upon me, I can assure the Hon. Member that the premise of her question is quite wrong. It is a broad government review, not for the purpose of cutting but for the purpose of identifying programs that overlap and programs that are duplicated. It is intended to eliminate the overlaps and duplications, and to determine the efficiency of the delivery of the programs, both externally and internally.

COMPOSITION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Deputy Prime Minister for that answer. May I ask him then does he intend to restructure his advisory committee as to reflect the mandate he has just described, because his advisory committee now includes some people who are extremely well qualified as administrators, but does not include people who are qualified to judge the quality of services?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. lady has given me the opportunity to report progress on this very important work. I stated before that the process is ongoing. There are well over 300 national organizations in this country, and before the work of the task force is through, it will probably have occupied at least 70 per cent of the resources of those organizations.

Most recently coming on board will be the Conseil du patronat. I will be speaking this afternoon with representatives from Groupement Québécois d'entreprises. Next week I will be speaking with Mr. Laberge of the QFL. There will be others as the work progresses and as the study teams go into the various Departments.

ALLEN INDUSTRIES—REGULATIONS APPLICABLE TO LAID-OFF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Can the Minister ensure the 126 long-time workers of Allen Industries, whose employer has decided to close the Canadian operation and move to Mexico, that they will not be detrimentally affected by the proposed changes to the unemployment insurance program which will require them to use their pension and severance pay before they can qualify for unemployment insurance?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned to the Hon. Member for Burnaby, the changes to this program have not been finalized. I would be glad to hear from Members of Parliament the way in which they think the regulations should be amended, and the timing that should be involved in carrying that out.

PLIGHT OF OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister accept the representation that the timing should be never? She should recognize that the benefits which those individuals get are benefits for which they worked during their working lives, and that most of them are in an age bracket in which they cannot find alternative employment.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would emphasize that what we want to do is to treat all income in the same way for the purposes of unemployment insurance payments. We want to do it in a fair and equitable manner. We think that is only fair to both employers and employees. We are studying the best way that this can be implemented. I can assure the Hon. Member that when those changes are made they will be fair and equitable.

PORNOGRAPHY

IMPORTATION OF MATERIAL DEPICTING CHILD PORNOGRAPHY

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. I am sure that Canadians were shocked and appalled by the news in the media this morning of a report from a U.S. Customs Commissioner of increased traffic in child pornography into the United States. Can the Minister assure the House that there are adequate measures in place at this time for his officials both to identify and classify materials, whether written or video tapes, in order to ensure that this kind of material is not coming into Canada? Can the Minister, as well, advise us whether he has had reports of any increase in materials from Europe, particularly from the Netherlands, Denmark and Sweden, of material depicting child pornography?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that there has been no identifiable increase in terms of the quantity of this material being shipped commercially into Canada. However, one of the problems of my Department, in terms of intercepting shipments, is that usually when this material is imported into Canada it is done so privately by individuals. Often the material weighs less than 500 grams. Consequently, it is considered a letter under the regulations of the Canada Post Corporation Act, and there is no authority to open the mail without the addressee being present.

As a result of this, we do not have a clear understanding of the volume of this sort of material coming in. Clearly, if commercial shipments were intercepted coming into Canada, this sort of material would be considered improper and would be banned from acceptance by Canada.

SOCIAL SECURITY

BENEFITS FOR WIDOWS AND WIDOWERS AGED 60-64—EXCLUDING SINGLE, DIVORCED AND SEPARATED PERSONS

Mr. Speaker: —Malépart! I am sorry, this is the second time I made that mistake.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

In the Throne Speech, the economic statement and the speech by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, legislation was announced to extend the spouse's allowance to widows and widowers aged 60 to 64. I would like to know why the Prime Minister's Government has chosen to discriminate against those who are single, divorced or separated and who have the same needs.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the previous Government flatly refused to help widows and widowers aged 60 to 64, or veterans, for that matter. This Government, despite the tremendous financial problems it has inherited, has committed itself to quickly bring in legislation to help these people.

Mr. Malépart: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The Prime Minister knows perfectly well that by proposing this measure he is saving money, because between twenty and thirty per cent of the people who will be eligible for the spouse's allowance are now receiving welfare payments. I think the Prime Minister ought to make sure that the money thus saved will be used to help people living alone, and who are in need, whether they are single, separated or divorced, in order to remove the discriminatory effects of this measure.

Mr. Mulroney: I can inform the Hon. Member that our objective is to help those people in our society who are most in need, and I think that is the basic purpose of any decent social program in this country.

Mr. Speaker, we believe there is a real need for such measures among people between 60 and 64, and also that our veterans who have done so much for this country deserve special recognition, despite the precarious state of the nation's finances.

UNEMPLOYMENT

ALCAN—IMPENDING LAY-OFFS IN KINGSTON, ONT.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the laying-off of 485 Alcan workers in the Minister's riding of Kingston over the next 18 months. Since the Minister made a commitment to this House last week to talk to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business about these 170,000 jobs it said were available, I wonder whether the Minister, since she has had a week or so, can report what progress she has made, and can tell us what hope she has that some of those workers in Kingston who are about to be laid off can find some of those jobs.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to report to the Hon. Member that I have discussed the situation with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. I have also discussed the local situation in Kingston with the Alcan company, with the consultative committee set up by the union, by the company, and by the CEC office, to help redirect, retrain and replace those workers in other jobs. I have, indeed, had a number of consultations, and I will continue to do so.

MINISTER'S CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister can tell us the results of her discussions with the business organization? How many of those jobs actually exist? In the meantime, could the Minister guarantee us that the $300 million worth of cut-backs in the unemployment insurance plan will be delayed until the Minister finishes with her review and consultative process across the country? Or, indeed, are these consultations really just a sham?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my consultations begin on Monday with officials and with Ministers of the Government of Ontario. The discussions will continue with members of the business community, members of labour organizations, members of women's groups, indeed, with members of a variety of groups, during the next two months. I do not consider these discussions a sham at all. I am not going to them and saying, "these are the answers and you have to take them", as did the previous Government. I really do want to see these consultations work.

When it comes to numbers of people who are either to be placed in jobs or are looking for jobs, for every single individual whom we can help place in a job, that is one person whose dignity we have helped to restore—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

EXPORTATION OF WEAPONS TECHNOLOGY—INVESTIGATION REVEALED

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I asked the Solicitor General whether it was the policy of his Government to reveal and comment on criminal investigations prior to charges being laid. This was asked specifically in relation to an RCMP investigation into allegations of the shipment of weapons technology to China. The Minister replied: "I believe it has been the tradition to confirm, when asked, that an investigation was under way. That is all the information that was given". Mr. Neil MacDonald, a reporter with the Ottawa Citizen, confirmed to me that the Solicitor General was not asked whether an investigation was under way. In fact the Solicitor General volunteered and revealed, without being asked, not only that an investigation was under way but he also volunteered, without being asked, the names of the companies under investigation, and the nature of the investigation. Will the Solicitor General clarify for the House this obvious inconsistency and misstatement of fact?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite and his colleagues will have to make up their minds. On the one hand we are constantly harangued about being too secretive. On the other hand, we are now being castigated for being too open. I repeat my answer to my hon. friend opposite and assure him that the information which I provided, as far as I am concerned, was proper and in order.

Mr. Nunziata: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

FINANCE

EMPLOYEES OF SIDBEC-NORMINES AT GAGNON, P.Q.—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Considering the fact that over 600 Sidbec employees living in the Prime Minister's riding will soon be out of work, which will indirectly do away with 200 more jobs, I am sure the Prime Minister would like to cushion the impact this is expected to have on the entire community of Gagnon.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to take steps to ensure that Sidbec employees will not lose part of their unemployment benefits because of severance pay or other compensatory payments?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows perfectly well that the main shareholder in Sidbec-Normines is the Government of Quebec, that the company has been facing tremendous problems due to competition on international markets and that the city of Gagnon has been severely affected by all this. In fact, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has been of great assistance to the population. And I may add that the Minister of Finance has announced tax measures that will provide further relief for people in remote areas, especially in our Canadian North.

I think two important steps have been taken towards providing a measure of justice for those Canadians who live in our remote and distant regions.

Mr. Speaker: A very short question, please.

• (1150)

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that much of the severance pay, as the Prime Minister knows from when he closed out the iron ore mine at Schefferville, comes from—

Oral Questions

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

VALLEYFIELD BRIDGE BLOCKAGE—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO MAINTENANCE PRACTICES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It is with regard to the Valleyfield Bridge blockage in the St. Lawrence Seaway. Over 100 notices of legal actions have been served on the Authority. There were reports yesterday that some of the shippers, both domestic and international, are considering alternate routes for next year. Will the Minister of Transport, in the interest of reassuring both Canadian and international shipping industry interests, consider establishing a commission of inquiry into the maintenance and operating practices of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at the present time the Government's main preoccupation is to restore services to the St. Lawrence Seaway system. I think the sort of things which the Member has suggested could be considered when we have restored services in the normal way. It is clear that every effort is being made to restore those services. I can advise Members of the House that the schedule for repairs is on target. Work is being carried out on a double 10-hour shift. All things being equal, the bridge should be operational by December 6.

RESTORATION OF SHIPPERS' CONFIDENCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer. Would he not agree that since transportation methods for next year are being decided this year, it is important to move immediately, not only to restore the service but to restore confidence that the Seaway system is efficient, will work well, and that people can count on the St. Lawrence Seaway? It is not the Panama or Suez Canal. Would he not agree that it is important to move now to restore confidence which is shaky at the moment?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the best way to restore confidence is to restore the operations of the bridge on the target that was suggested. As I indicated to the Member, we are on target.

With regard to the other point which is being made by the Member, we should consider that this is an unprecedented accident. It has never occurred before. Naturally, the Seaway Authority will be examining its maintenance practices. If it is necessary to consider a further investigation, that will be taken into account after services are restored in the normal fashion.

DELAY IN PROCLAMATION OF HEALTH AND SAFETY REGULATIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Canadian working people who come under federal jurisdiction waited for five years for the previous Liberal Government to pass legislation improving health and safety laws. Yesterday the Minister announced another two-year delay before he will bring in this new law. Could the Minister explain why he is not going to proclaim immediately the changes to the health and safety legislation, since most of those measures could be introduced and proclaimed tomorrow? Why wait two years when most of it could be done right away?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Member, as I did in committee yesterday, that the rationale for the delay in the proclamation of Part IV of the Canada Labour Code is apparent. There are some 21 sets of regulations that must be drafted to reflect the intent of the legislation. The intent of that legislation must be apparent. Consultations in all areas with employers, employees, and those affected, will be reflected in those regulations. We have no intention of proclaiming regulations that are imperfect and have not been the subject of consultation with those who are very seriously affected by them.

EFFECT ON GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that this delay will leave some 300,000 federal government employees with no legislated health and safety protection? Since the Government is the employer, will it either proclaim the sections for health and safety to cover those employees, or take alternative action to give them health and safety protection effective now?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with regard to my hon. friend's preamble, the employees of the Government of Canada are now covered by occupational and health safety measures. Those measures are not as acceptable as the new measures within Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. If there is any doubt in the minds of either of the hon. gentleman, or of anyone else in the House or outside it, as to the necessity to study and consult on these regulations, in the spirit of openness which the Government believes in, I would ask that they consult my officials. I will make them available so that these people can also understand the necessity for consultation in forming these regulations.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

ANNOUNCEMENTS OF POLICE INVESTIGATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. I would like to congratulate him warmly on his assumption of that very important post. My question arises out of his response to my colleague, the Member for York South-Weston.

Would he review the practice of his Department, and perhaps his own approach to investigations, by re-instating the practice that used to apply in this House, and I believe still should, reflecting the principle of presumption of innocence until proven guilty? He must realize the reflection that announcements of investigations may have on private reputations, and should refuse to reveal whether an investigation is in progress by the police unless and until charges are preferred.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question from the distinguished Leader of the Opposition, a former distinguished Minister of Justice. I certainly will take his representation very seriously.

RAILWAYS

ATLANTIC LIMITED—REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transportation. One of the most significant pledges that the Government made to southern New Brunswickers was to restore the Atlantic Limited and put it back on the track. Would the Minister please advise what progress has been made and when this vital service will be restored?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the recently established Rail Action Force is, among other things, mandated to look into the restoration of rail passenger services that were unilaterally discontinued by the previous administration. I can assure the Hon. Member that the restoration of the Atlantic will be considered within that context.

ABELLA REPORT—OUTREACH PROGRAM RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. By now the Minister will have had time to study the Abella Report which points out that the Outreach Program is the most likely way for native people to be employed by her Department which leaves them with no job security, lower pay, and no benefits. Is the Minister prepared to act on the recommendation of the report that Outreach workers should not be hired on short-term contracts but should be made part of the permanent government Public Service?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that I will be presenting, along with my cabinet colleagues in the social policy committee, the Government's response to the Abella report as quickly as possible. I have been asked by the Prime Minister to play the lead role in that and to work with other Ministers to prepare a response to the over-all 117 recommendations. I cannot at this point single out one specific recommendation and give a precise answer. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that we will be dealing with it very expeditiously.

MÉTIS AND NON-STATUS INDIANS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. Will the Minister act to remove the double discrimination faced by Métis and non-status Indians who face discrimination in getting employment and yet do not receive federal government help for post-secondary education? Will she urge upon her Cabinet colleagues that Métis and non-status Indians should receive the same kind of help for post-secondary education that Inuit and status Indian people do?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very sympathetic to the Hon. Member's proposal. I will certainly convey that to my colleagues and discuss it with them. I can tell the Hon. Member that, with regard to programs such as Canada Works, the Métis and non-status Indians will not be discriminated against.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 29, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Riis (p. 694).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I believe I had approximately a minute and a half left from yesterday's sitting. Perhaps I can sum up, in outlining the two policy decisions of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of Employment and Immigration, by asking the respective Ministers to consult with the fishermen. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) did not even consult with the provincial governments, the unions, or the Fishermen's Loans Board. After making the policy decision to cancel the fishing vessel insurance plan, he should now go back and consult with the fishermen affected so that they will not lose their boats in this transition.

When announcing a policy to cut back $250 million in unemployment insurance benefits, I would also ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) not only to consult with the provincial governments, the business community or even the unions, but to consult with the unemployed people in this country who will be affected by that measure. If those two Ministers went back and consulted with the people who are affected, I believe they would cancel those policies which were announced by the Minister of finance (Mr. Wilson).

I am sorry that I do not have the time to go into the discrimination in hiring practices as I said I would at the beginning of my address.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is a little out of the ordinary but I do not think the House has had the opportunity of congratulating the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) in his capacity as Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House. The thing that draws this to my attention is that he is today in the chair so resplendent in his new costume that I was drawn to recognize him and, on behalf of all Members of the House of Commons, to congratulate him for looking so good.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not know where you got your tailor, Mr. Speaker, but I want to congratulate you on your new streamlined look in the House and to say that the affection that we all hold for you is now reinforced by an awesome respect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I want to thank the Hon. Members. Now that I have my uniform, I hope that I can direct traffic accordingly. I am glad that enough material was found to make this uniform. I recall that the last uniform I had was in 1954 when I played for the Edmonton Eskimos.

I will do my most humble best to look after you in the Chamber. Thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker)?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, in his remarks the Hon. Member stated that the Government applied some discrimination against certain people in regard to hiring practices. However, he did not elaborate on that. Would he explain what he meant by this discrimination in hiring practices?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I had indicated that I did not have time to go into that issue. The point is that when preferential hiring regulations are introduced into the system, they sometimes discriminate against the most needy.

I am pleased that the Minister of Employment and Immigration is in the House to hear what I have to say. Let us examine the two employment programs and their hiring regulations which the Minister announced to the House.

According to the Canada Works Program, first, one must run out of unemployment insurance in order to qualify for that first category to be hired. One has to be drawing unemployment insurance in order to qualify under the second category. Those regulations were brought about because of the NEED program which was established in consultation with the provincial governments. Second, according to Section 38, one must be drawing unemployment insurance in order to be hired on one of those projects.

Under the new direction that the Department is now taking in an attempt to save $250 million through increased interviews for placing people into jobs, as the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Employment and Immigration have said, there would obviously be preference given to those people who are drawing unemployment insurance in placing them in those jobs.

I recently had a case of a widow with one daughter and two sons. The widow works one week out of a month at a corner-store. She cannot get hired because she is not drawing unemployment insurance, but she has worked in the previous eight weeks, which is another condition for hiring. The daughter graduated from trade school after a secretarial and bookkeeping course but she has never drawn unemployment insurance before and, therefore, is in the last category for hiring under any works program.

This widow also has two sons at home who are aged 18 and 21. Since they have not worked before they do not qualify for those programs.

The Minister says that the business community has identified approximately 170,000 jobs so far. If the Minister wishes to take people off unemployment insurance and save $250 million, it will be necessary to have an unemployment insurance officer send notices to those people indicating where those jobs are. Again, there is that built-in discrimination against first time workers or people looking for a job.

This is a very serious situation because we must realize that when someone reaches 18 years of age the family allowance payment stops. Furthermore, in most provinces, those who are 18 or older and living at home cannot even get welfare. This means, in the case of the widow with the daughter who just graduated from trade school and the two sons at home, that she is stricted to the small amount of income that she gets one week out of a month, plus the widows' allowance in Newfoundland on which even one person cannot live, let alone support three children.

Restricted hiring practices have evolved over a period of time because of various inputs, primarily by provincial governments that were more interested in work programs and getting people off welfare than in anything else. This is built into the system. The new measures introduced by The Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of Finance in saving the $200 million will now really drive in a wedge and create poverty and give no hope for that time fellow or girl looking for the first job. It is outright, plain discrimination. There are no other words for it.

The Government should change its mind. The people which the Government consults are not these very people. The people the Government consults are perhaps the stiff-shirted, carpeted-up-to-your-knees people who think they have the answers to everything. The Government has to turn around and change direction. It should not be saving money on the backs of the poor. It should not have promised the world to these people in every single Department. There were 388 financial promises made. Perhaps two or three of those promises have been kept, but then the cuts came which affected only the poor people. The people will not put up with it. They will not put up with the investigators which this Minister of Employment and Immigration is going to send out to Manpower offices across this country.

Borrowing Authority

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) is rising to ask a question?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I thought I heard the hon. gentleman refer during his remarks to the fact that the special program for fishermen was cancelled this year. That is not what I understood. Could the Hon. Member explain what he meant?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): A brief answer, please.

Mr. Baker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister stood up in the House the other day to answer a question I had asked. He said there was no such thing as a special program, that perhaps I was referring to the extension of unemployment insurance in the spring. That is not what I was talking about, Mr. Speaker. Whoever wrote the response for the Parliamentary Secretary in the Department of Employment and Immigration should have his head examined. He must have a short memory, whoever it was. It had to be a senior public servant. There was a special program, $15 million was allocated, $9 million was spent. It cost much less. In my riding alone of Gander-Twillingate some $3 million was spent on that program to bring fishermen and fish plant workers up to their ten weeks of unemployment insurance so they would not have to go to the welfare office to get money for the winter. The fishing season is worse this year, but the Minister of Employment and Immigration says there is not going to be any special program. We will increase Canada Works funding up to $3 million in each riding when the very ridings affected were already up to $3 million. That includes even Tory ridings, Mr. Speaker. The worst problem is in the Tory ridings. I am surprised that some of the PC members are not after this Minister of Employment and Immigration to get her to do what the Liberal government did last year and what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says is "throwing money at problems". Yes, Mr. Speaker, throwing money at problems, but those are problems that affect the poorest people in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated. The next speaker is the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your finery and wish you well in your new office. I am sure you will be an adornment on the throne.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: I am rising to speak on the legislation which is currently before the House, namely the borrowing authority Bill C-11 whereby the Conservative Government is seeking authority to borrow some $7.3 billion in the present fiscal year 1984-85, and, going beyond that, to borrow some $16 billion for fiscal 1985-86.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), on Wednesday last moved a reasoned amendment, which was accepted by the Chair. The substance was to call upon the House to recognize in effect that what the Government is seeking is the authority to borrow money far beyond what is reasonable in the circumstances. The amendment proposed by my colleague, the finance spokesman for the Party, reads:

> That this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than the amount which is required to meet the Government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle—

The amendment goes on to suggest that the House should not give second reading to Bill C-11.

It was not particularly surprising that that reasoned amendment was found to be in order by the Chair. That motion was identical to the motion which was proposed by the Conservative Party when it was in Opposition in 1982. On July 19, 1982, the Official Opposition moved the very motion now before the House.

We have seen in the course of the last seven or eight weeks some very dramatic reversals of policy by the Conservatives now that they are in government. Surely one cannot imagine a more dramatic reversal than what is now happening in this House when the Conservative Government comes before Parliament and says to us effectively, "Give us the money that we need. Let us borrow money, not only for the current fiscal year up to March 31, 1985, but give us an extra $16 billion on top of that for the next fiscal year. We are not going to tell you how it is going to be spent". We all know that the Main Estimates are not tabled until next spring. "We are not going to tell you how it is going to be spent" effectively says that the Conservatives want us to trust that they will spend that $16 billion wisely and with care.

In assessing the request of the Government to trust it, in assessing the Government's request for an additional $16 billion in borrowing authority in the fiscal year 1985-86, I suggest it is appropriate that we look effectively at the requirements for this fiscal year and look at the Government's policies with respect to expenditure, cuts in programs, in services, in increases in taxes for this fiscal year. Then, as Members of the House, we should ask ourselves whether that record warrants the kind of trust we are being asked to give to this Government and whether it gives rise to the confidence that the Government will spend that money wisely.

I suggest the opposite is the case, Mr. Speaker, that the fiscal record of this Government so far is quite the reverse. We should be extremely concerned, if this Government is to be granted that kind of authority, whether it will spend wisely, because we believe the Government will spend according to the priorities of its friends in the corporate sector in the business community. If we need any evidence whatsoever that the big business community is leading this Government around by the nose and effectively calling the economic tune for this Government, we do not have to look further than the announcement made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) who said that the changes which this Parliament passed to the Canada Labour Code, which would ensure conditions of work are safer and healthier, are not going to be implemented for another two years. That is a shameful decision by this Government and a denial of the rights, not just of 300,000 public servants who have no protection whatosever but of many, many other thousands of workers within federal jurisdiction.

It is quite obvious that the reason for that decision was the fact that the corporate sector fought this Bill when it was presented to Parliament. The corporate sector fought it when the Bill went to committee, and now it has found some allies on the government side of the House. It does not take two years to draft regulations. It does not take two years to draft regulations that would require employers to ensure that working conditions are safe and not hazardous. That is the Government which is asking us now to trust it, to trust that it will spend the $16 billion it is asking for wisely.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is not in the House at the present time. At the time the Conservative Party proposed the amendment which is now before the House in identical form, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said:

> The first amendment we offered was to decline second reading of this Bill. There is a well established principle that Parliament only provides sufficient borrowing authority to a Government to allow it to finance its operations within the current fiscal year. It is clear from the figures in the bill and from the statement by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) in response to my question yesterday that the government has every intention of this borrowing authority spilling over into 1983-84.

> This is all the more reprehensible because the government has not given us any projections about what will happen in 1983-84.

What has changed? What has been the dramatic change from the time when the Conservatives were in Opposition, when what was being done was reprehensible and breached all the finest traditions of Parliament, to today when the Conservatives come before Parliament and propose exactly the same thing?

There are no projections whatsoever as to how this money will be spent. Indeed, we in this Party have asked repeatedly not only for projections with respect to how the moneys are to be spent in the next fiscal year, but for statements of the impact of the decisions which have already been announced by the Government. I suspect that this impact will be very severe on my constituents and on the constituents of all Members of the House, and so it will be with respect to jobs and cuts in services. The impact will be devastating.

The Government comes before us and says, "Forget about what we said in Opposition, forget about our principles and everything for which we stood when we were in opposition. We are in government now and those principes do not matter any more". That is the kind of action which brings the promises of politicians into disrepute. There have been a number of similar actions by the Government which I believe are most unworthy of a Party elected on a mandate of change, a mandate to provide jobs or a mandate which indicated that job creation would be the top priority.

What has happened to the top priority of job creation? It has been transformed into a very different priority, that is, this Government's slavish obsession with the deficit, with cutting the deficit.

During the federal election campaign, far from dwelling on the deficit, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated that his top priority was job, jobs, jobs. Yet that priority appears to have vanished in the economic statements of this Government in recent weeks. According to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), it is now clear that we have a new priority, and that priority is cutting the deficit. This is somehow supposed to be the panacea. Cutting the deficit will be the great panacea which results in restoration of business confidence, which in turn results in more investment, which in turn theoretically will provide jobs. It just does not work that way. We do not have to look very far to see the evidence that that kind of economic theory, that discredited economic theory, is totally unworkable in practice.

That theory has been implemented in my own Province of British Columbia with a very dramatic and harsh impact. Thousands of people have been thrown out of work, both those in the Public Service and others. Services have been cut. In many cases essential services have been cut. There are line-ups at food banks in British Columbia; 2,000 to 3,000 people are lining up for food in that province. That is from a government that has the same basic economic thrust as the Conservative Government is presenting to Parliament and for which it is requesting support. The old trickle-down theory that somehow if we reduce the deficit in turn the additional moneys which are liberated will be spent by the corporate sector to create jobs, was discredited in the 1930s during the depression. In fact, it was the implementation of similar theories which led to the worst depression in modern economic history. A whole generation of Canadians were unable to find work. We know very well what happened to the government of R. B. Bennett for its ineptness in handling the crisis of unemployment in the 1930s.

It is interesting to note that in its obsession with the deficit, the Government is ignoring the fact that a number of jurisdictions have increased the deficit on a short-term basis with the objective of providing jobs for their people. That has been done in a successful manner. Instead of this obsession with the deficit, the Government should look far more closely at its fundamental priority, as stated during the election. Surely that priority must be the creation of jobs for some two million Canadians who are without work today, half of whom are young people. Rather than that priority, we hear the Canadian Federation of Independent Business suggesting that there are 170,000 jobs in Canada just waiting to be filled. I suggest that the Federation should get serious. If it really believes that there are 170,000 jobs out there, employers who claim that they cannot find people to fill those jobs should come forward and give the details of those jobs, because I suggest they would be flooded with applications from many desperate people who are trying to find work.

Members of Parliament should visit Canada employment centres in their communities to see the long line-ups of people, many of whom are desperate, are losing hope and would take virtually anything in order to survive. We are not just talking about the economic hardship of being out of work, but the loss of dignity involved as well, the lack of self-respect and the feeling which are part and parcel of losing a job in today's society.

During Questions Period today I raised a question with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) about the fact that the Government, in its new-found obsession with the deficit, intends to reduce the payments made available to individuals who lose their jobs and have negotiated some form of severance pay package or early retirement scheme. In my constituency of Burnaby, almost 400 people will be thrown out of work at the end of January. Fortunately they were able to negotiate some form of early retirement benefits or severance benefits, which after all is just a form of deferred income. The Government is saying to those 400 men and women, many of whom are in their fifties and will find it very difficult to find alternate employment, that their monthly pay package as a result of its program will be cut dramatically. I do not believe that is a just and fair program. I do not think we should be attempting to cut the deficit on the backs of working people or people who have been thrown out of their jobs and are attempting to survive and to feed their families. We did not hear anything about that during the last election campaign. Instead, we heard talk of jobs, jobs, jobs. However, that has been abandoned by the Government.

We know as well that women are being disproportionately affected by the crisis in unemployment. With the advent of new technologies, women are being increasingly relegated to the role of part-time workers. There are serious cut-backs in access to child care, which has a devastating impact upon the ability of women to participate as equal partners in the work place. Increasingly we are hearing the cry that somehow women are secondary wage earners. Surely in society today women must be accepted as full partners economically, socially and in every other way. The effect of this Government's economic policies is particularly harsh on working women as well as on single parents who are struggling to survive on incomes which are often below the poverty level.

If the Government were serious about its commitment to job creation and its commitment to reducing the deficit in a manner which is sensitive to human needs and concerns, why does it not take a look as well, at the possibility of increasing revenues? There is a great opportunity to do so by ensuring that the taxation system is fairer and more equitable. There are far too many loopholes which allow Canadians with incomes in excess of $70,000, $80,000 and $100,000 per year to avoid the payment of any income taxes whatsoever.

We all remember the promises of the Prime Minister, in response to the prodding of my own Leader, that he would introduce a handsome minimum tax. While we must accept the principle of a minimum tax, we have to look beyond that and fundamentally restructure the taxation system in this country. We have to look at an elimination of some of the glaring loopholes that favour the wealthy as opposed to the poor. We have to look at making sure that the corporate sector pays its fair share of taxes. Its share of the over-all tax burden has dropped dramatically since 1950. We must look as well at the whole question of tax exemptions and the regressive nature of many of these tax exemptions. A child tax exemption is of far greater benefit to someone earning $100,000 a year than it is to a single parent who, as I said before, is struggling to survive.

This Government is asking for a blank cheque. I do not believe that its policies as enunciated to date are such that we should trust it with the extra $16 billion that it is asking for in the next fiscal year without any projection whatsoever as to what it will be spent on. We do not know, for example, whether it intends to cut back on equalization payments to the provinces in the areas of health care, legal aid and post-secondary education.

We have seen the devastating effect in the Province of British Columbia of cut-backs in post-secondary education. Far from reducing equalization payments to the provinces, we should be ensuring that the money which the federal Government designates to the provinces for health care is in fact spent on health care, and money which it designates for post-secondary education is spent on post-secondary education.

In the whole question of cutting the deficit, we have to look as well at the sacred cow of military expenditures. Somehow or other when we ask people to make sacrifices, equity is lacking. We do not ask that sacred cow to make sacrifices, but we do ask the poor, those without work, and the powerless in society to make the sacrifices. Any notion of equity and fairness surely requires that those most able to bear the burden of sacrifice are called upon to bear that burden first.

I see that my time for my speech on this Bill is just about up. I appeal to government members to recognize that what is being asked for in the proposal before the House today was deemed by them to be unacceptable, reprehensible and wrong when they were in Opposition. I appeal to those Members to explain to this House how what was wrong, reprehensible and unparliamentary in 1982 when done by a Liberal government can suddenly become acceptable and justifiable today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) as the House examines this borrowing Bill. I will only make a comment in joining this debate.

The Hon. Member raised in his speech the question of the reversal of principle and contends that there has been a change in the position of the Progressive Conservative Party from when it was in opposition to the position it has now taken in government and underscores this as somehow being inconsistent. I really find these remarks somewhat incredible in terms of the inconsistency that the Hon. Member and another spokesman for his Party, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), were talking about. There is profound inconsistency in their position.

No one in the Government is happy to see this Bill come before the House. We would love to be in the position of not having to borrow further funds. The reality that we encountered, however, was a massive and growing federal deficit. Direct steps have already been taken to cut that deficit so that the amount that has to be borrowed for this year and for the coming fiscal year is less than it otherwise would have to be.

Spokesmen for the New Democratic Party have been extremely outspoken in their criticism of efforts by this Government to make cuts in wasteful public spending and to reduce the deficit. Try as we might and hear the criticisms as we might, there is still a gap. We cannot turn things around overnight. We cannot eliminate the deficit by cutting everything immediately. That Party would protest most if that were tried.

We are approaching this with a measure of realism. There is no inconsistency in what we said before and what we say today, because we have several long-term goals, including a deficit reduction. We are doing it in a manner that is fair and equitable. As we proceed along that line, it is still necessary to borrow funds to fill that gap. That is why this Bill is before the House. The Hon. Member should recognize that there is consistency and a fair-minded approach here. The Canadian people certainly recognize it.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member who just spoke was not present in the House when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) railed against this practice. Perhaps he was watching the proceedings on March 7, 1984 when his colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), said the following with respect to precisely the same proposal which the Government now has before the House. He said:

> It is unconscionable. It is improper. It cannot be supported by any thinking Member of the House. This House should rise up, Sir, and demand an end to this, not only on behalf of us as Hon. Members and of our constituents, but on behalf of our children, our children's children and our children's children yet unborn or even thought of.

Either the Hon. Member has selective amnesia or he is making an incredible suggestion as regards consistency. It was precisely the practice of the previous government in coming before this Parliament and saying, "Let us borrow not just for this fiscal year, but let us borrow as well for the next fiscal year". When Members opposite were in Opposition, they said that that was wrong because the government was asking for a blank cheque. They said the government was asking them to trust it, and they did not trust it. Now they have the audacity to come before this House and say the same thing. That certainly is not consistency and certainly will not be accepted by the people of this country.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). With regard to the concern he has expressed concerning the blank cheque for which the Government is asking, does he think that it might consider using some of that money to put the Canada Labour Code into practice or does he think the Labour Code will cost so much that it has just ignored it?

I wonder if the articulate Member is aware of the comments in this morning's Globe and Mail where the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) is quoted as announcing yesterday the Canada Labour Code amendments approved unanimously by Parliament last June will not be brought fully into effect until June 1986. That is possibly at the earliest. I bring to his attention the fact that the Minister told the Labour Committee last night that the delay is caused by the drafting of very complex regulations associated with the legislation, and the objections by the business community are absolutely not the reason for this delay. I find that interesting and I would like to hear his comments in that regard.

It would be of great interest to the women of this country and people in general to know that the amendments outlaw sexual discrimination in the work place, extend and broaden maternity leave, and impose new health and safety regulations to which he alluded in his remarks.

It is obvious that those measures would be costly, but not as costly as the health of the people, particularly those working today in the new high technology fields where there is definite proof that there can be impairment of health of those who are pregnant and perhaps impairment of eyesight as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognize the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mrs. Finestone: I have not completed my observations, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member does not complete them shortly, the Hon. Member for Burnaby will not be able to answer her.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for asking her very important question. I must note that had the Liberal Party when it was in government moved much more quickly to implement these proposals, we would not be at the mercy of a Tory Government today.

Having said that, I think the Hon. Member has certainly made an important point. There is no evidence whatsoever that the Government is serious about the commitments that were made at the time this Bill was passed with respect to maternity leave, increased protection against sexual harassment and occupational health and safety. The Government is asking us to grant it some $16 billion in supplementary borrowing authority for fiscal year 1985-86 the day after it came before Parliament and said it intends to break a promise which it made to working people of the country, and particularly to working women, that they would be entitled to safe working conditions and that working women would be entitled to proper maternity leave and not to be harassed on the job. A government which breaks a promise to working Canadians in that way has no right to ask Parliament to trust it with the expenditure of $16 billion.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that this law was passed in June. I believe the goodwill and good intention of my Party was implicit in its having proposed the Act.

Mr. Robinson: It should have been done long ago.

Mrs. Finestone: Nonetheless, I would like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member the fact that although this Code applies only to the 600,000 workers who fall under federal jurisdiction, it serves as a model for other jurisdictions and will influence collective bargaining between unions and employers. This then becomes all the more important.

The changes approved in June and proclaimed into law by the former Liberal government have not as yet been applied but they include mandatory payment of union dues. That should interest the Hon. Member a great deal, and I am surprised he did not comment on it. I would also like to bring to his attention the fact that the delays that are being considered can really harm the people of the country. When the Minister of Labour surprised the Labour Committee by announcing these lengthy delays in the implementation, arguing that these detailed regulations were necessary, he left the door open to delays beyond June 1986 by saying that the new timetable involved only target dates.

I wonder if it is not very important in the Hon. Member's view to note that the change to add 24 weeks of unpaid maternity leave to the current 17 weeks of paid leave spelled out in the Code and to allow either spouse to take advantage of the extension will be put off until the following year. I find it anathema that this Government, which supposedly finds great comfort and some direction in the Abella report, which offers some degree of commitment to equality in employment and which recognizes the contribution of women to our society, does not recognize that women also contribute to the growth and development of the future of society. By denying these very simple—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry. The time allotted for comments and questions is now over.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Bill C-11 which has been presented before the House. To begin with, I must say that the borrowing of this amount of money is of some concern to me personally and goes against the principles in which I believe. I believe we should be spending only that money which is already collected. I would like to refer to the people of the riding of Scarborough Centre who have common sense and do know the importance of spending money after they have it in their pockets.

We have a deficit that has escalated to such an extent that it has put us on a dramatic rollercoaster course. This escalation is of great concern to me. The people of Canada have been burdened with numerous taxes including property taxes, sales taxes and tremendous income taxes. Although the people recognize that taxes are necessary for the government and society today, they do have the sense that this money is not being used as wisely as it should be.

I recognize that there are services to be provided. On the other hand, the importance that is put on wisdom and efficiency in the spending of that money must not be underestimated. Common sense and efficiency in spending is what we are looking for.

Canadian people voted for a change in what had been happening to the administration of Canada for the past 20 years. Canadians wanted a dramatic change. In fact, this change has been so dramatic that it has even changed the weather in Ottawa. Instead of having already suffered through one month of winter, we have beautiful sunny weather which we are enjoying immensely.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Browes: Canadians voted for a change on September 4 and positive, progressive change is well under way. For the first time in many years, Canada has a Government that is realistically facing our nation's serious financial problems. We are telling Canadians in an honest and responsible manner that this country can no longer run up massive deficits year after year.

The facts are quite simple. By the end of 1984-85, the net public debt which is the accumulation of past budgetary deficits, is likely to reach nearly $190 billion, an incomprehensible amount. The national debt is growing faster than the economy. In relation to the size of the economy, net public debt will have increased from 16.6 per cent of GNP in 1974-75 to 45.2 per cent in 1984-85. In simple terms, our budgetary deficit is more than 7 per cent of Gross Domestic Product and has grown tenfold since 1967. In addition, one-half of current government borrowing is earmarked for interest payments alone.

In its September issue of Observer, the OECD assessed Canada's deficit as being uncomfortably high. It went on to say that the priority of Canada's Government should now be to reduce the federal deficit.

Our Party realizes that we must bring down the deficit in order to bring down interest rates, which would bring down the unemployment rate. We all know that as the deficit rises, so do interest rates. For each one percentage point increase in interest rates, the public debt charges rise nearly $1 billion. Thus we have a vicious cycle. This ever-increasing debt load is shattering confidence in our economy and suffocating growth and job creation. By successfully combatting the deficit and opening up investment opportunities, we will be continually fighting unemployment.

We have a Government that wishes to consult with the people. I would like to report to the House that in Scarborough that consultative process has already begun. The four Members of Parliament from the City of Scarborough who are sitting on the government side have been consulting with local politicians, the mayor, the controllers and the aldermen to look at ways and means of getting people back to work. The Mayor of Scarborough called me on September 5 and asked when we could get together to have that consultation. We have met on several occasions.

The people of Canada and the people of Scarborough want to be heard and want to be heard in the House. My hon. friend said that only the people who are up to their knees in carpet are being heard. That is not true. The people of Canada are being heard through their representatives on this side of the House.

People want to work. Young people and those people who are mature workers have lost their jobs because of interest rates, businesses going out of business, bankruptcies, lay-offs and investment which is flowing out of this country. This Government has a determination to develop inner confidence and a sense of purpose. With that sense of purpose and that confidence, we will make Canadian people winners by maintaining security with meaningful employment.

We must demonstrate to entrepreneurs and to investors that Canada is ready for business once again. Above all, immediate measures must be taken to stimulate economic growth and job creation. How can we do this? By reducing the deficit in a fair and honest manner. I would like to read a recent editorial from the International Herald Tribune which contrasts our approach with the approach taken by U.S. President Ronald Reagan. The aricle is dated Saturday-Sunday, November 17-18, 1984 and reads as follows:

> Prime Minister Brian Mulroney has denounced the huge budget deficit in the most explicit terms. His finance minister, Michael Wilson, warned last week that Canada cannot expect just to grow out of it. "The simple fact is," he said, "that the mounting federal debt has become a powerful obstacle to growth and to private-sector job creation." That touches a couple of points upon which President Reagan and his secretary of the Treasury, Donald Regan, remain conspicuously ambivalent.
> Another difference: Mr. Mulroney has gone to some lengths to assure Canadians that he is not going to try to knock holes in their comprehensive, extensive system of social benefits. There will not be anything like Mr. Reagan's raids on the food stamp money. Mr. Mulroney thinks that the Canadian government has become too big, but he keeps repeating that fairness will be the criterion for the cuts.

The article continues:

> Mr. Reagan is trying to cut the American budget by imposing his administration's own values on everybody else. It does not seem to be working. Mr. Mulroney is going to try another method, a series of consultations throughout this country to work toward a common purpose.

Through the process of co-operation, planning, consensus and understanding, the Government is prepared to take on the serious economic challenges that face our country. By working together, Canadians can make this country work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the remarks which were made by the Hon. Member with respect to the consultation which is allegedly taking place. I would like to ask her, before cancelling the 1986 census with whom did the Government consult? Did the Government consult with women's groups? Did it consult with big business, which has called for the reinstatement of the 1986 census? Did it consult with academics, who have also asked to have the census retained? Did it consult with the Province of Ontario? I believe there has been a severe tongue-lashing administered by the province to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for cancelling the census because the data base which the census provides is used by the province in calculating the size of its equalization grant. Perhaps the Hon. Member could tell us about the consultation that went on before the cancellation of the census took effect.

Of course, using her words, the intent of this Government is to consult with everyone so as not to offend anyone. The Hon. Member has stated that the Government was very sensitive and wanted to act in such a way that any moves it made would not be arbitrary but would be made in the spirit of consultation. Perhaps she could explain to the House how this consultation process took place. She will undoubtedly want to enumerate all the groups which were consulted with respect to this particular cut.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, the census is an item which I particularly like to speak about because it reminds me of 1961, when I was one of the persons in the City of Scarborough who visited the homes as a census taker. I know the importance of that being done every ten years. It is something which we have done and will do every ten years. The census is a very important aspect of this Government. However, Canada had a government in place over the past 20 years which put us in the position—

Mr. Boudria: We never cancelled the census.

Mrs. Browes: The Hon. Member may not have been here, but he is part of it. The point is that it has left the people of this country in the position where our children and grandchildren will be burdened with a tremendous deficit and the interest on that deficit. There has to be a beginning to bring this deficit under control.

I want to tell the Hon. Member that the Government is consulting. If he polled each person on this side of the House, he would realize, as we have in our ridings, what the feelings are and comments which we are hearing about the direction this Government is taking. It is a new direction. It is a new era. Confidence is being instilled in Canadians once again. They are confident that they will have a job and that they will be able to bring up their children. They have the confidence that they will be able to buy a house once again. It is an excellent direction and it is an excellent era that has begun in Canada today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments will continue at two o'clock. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes) had completed her remarks before the luncheon adjournment. We were five minutes into the question and comment period. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) for a question.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, just before the luncheon adjournment I had asked the Hon. Member what consultation process had taken place before the cancellation of the census. I am sure you vividly recall that discussion, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member replied that the consultations which had taken place were in respect of the deficit. I do not quite understand what the answer had to do with the question. Perhaps when the Hon. Member replies to my next question, she can also tell this House about the consultations concerning the census.

I would like to know from the Hon. Member with which agency the Government consulted before cancelling the $9.6 million which was provided through the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation in subsidies for public housing projects in conjunction with the provinces, municipalities and non-profit and co-operative agencies. I would like to know specifically, did the Government consult with the co-operative housing groups before cancelling the social housing program? Did it consult with the non-profit housing groups? And did it consult with the Canadian Federation of Municipalities? If that consultation took place, I wonder if the Hon. Member can indicate the view of those agencies which are going to get their funding cut off; how did they like it?

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's questions. The fact of the matter is that the people who were elected to form this Government have been consulting with the Canadian people for some time. The period of July and August of 1984 was a very intensive time of consultation with the Canadian people. What we were hearing was a very loud and strong message. The Canadian people wanted a change, Mr. Speaker. They wanted a change from what had been going on for the past 20 years. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member's own Party said about the deficit.

On August 13, 1969, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau said, "We would be on the road to financial disaster if nothing was done to bring spending under control". That was the beginning of his term in office, and we saw where the deficit went from there. On May 6, 1972, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said, "The bare fact of the matter is that we cannot do everything at once. We simply do not have the resources. There are limits to the scope of fiscal policy. There are limits to stimulus and readjustment". That fact was recognized some years ago, Mr. Speaker, and the Government of the day did nothing to try to contain the spending which had been going on for a good number of years.

With respect to the census, as I stated, we are maintaining our constitutional responsibilities in terms of the census every ten years. In 1955, the mid-decade census was taken. We are at this point in time, Mr. Speaker, maintaining those constitutional responsibilities of a census being taken every ten years. However, the Hon. Member must keep in mind that after consulting with the Canadian people in a very intensive way for some 60 days or 65 days during the election campaign, we received a very strong message that we had to make a start to resolve our financial problems. And that was one of the initiatives we took.

The Hon. Member spoke about the housing situation. I am very interested in addressing the problem of the women in this country being on the lower level financially, and we are addressing that problem. But we must tie this in with the deficit. We have had a very intense, comprehensive, consultative process in order to resolve these problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner).

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, you have always been a man of distinction in my mind, with or without your new uniform.

I am pleased to speak on this Bill today. The substance of it will provide for $7.3 billion of additional borrowing authority for fiscal 1984-85, of which $2 billion may—and I stress the word "may"—be carried over for fiscal 1985-86. The $2 billion reserve is designed to provide flexibility in the event of large, unpredictable changes in financial requirements. For example, foreign exchange operations to stabilize the dollar can alter the financial requirements of the Government. I see nothing wrong with this, Mr. Speaker.

As the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) said in her address to the House on this Bill, it could be money for a rainy day. The fiscal weather has been pretty lousy in Canada during the last decade. I remind the House that the Minister also stated that previously issued debt is coming due and must be refinanced. These are debts for which we are not responsible. I would like to take the House on a trip down memory lane for a few moments.

On October 22, 1968, the Hon. Edgar Benson, in his Budget address said:

> We intend to continue severe restraint upon those direct expenditure programs under the Government's control, eliminating what is obsolete, and permitting only the degree of growth that is essential.

Severe restraint, Mr. Speaker, in a year with a $404 million surplus.

On June 23, 1975 in his Budget address to the House, the Right Hon. John Turner said:

> The Government proposes to set an example of restraint in this regard by imposing strict control over its activities and programs.

Some example, Mr. Speaker.

On November 16, 1978, the Hon. Mr. Chrétien in his Budget address to the House said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I would hope that Hon. Members would not mention names of individuals but rather use their proper title.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I quote the former Finance Minister on November 16, 1978. He said:

> There can be no weakening in our determination to keep expenditures under tight control.

Tight control Mr. Speaker, some control. The deficit that year was $12 billion. In his October 20, 1980 Budget address to the House, the then Minister of Finance said:

> In order to achieve the essential reduction in the deficit, great restraint over expenditures has therefore been required.

Great restraint over expenditures, Mr. Speaker, some restraint. It gets better. On November 12, 1981, the former Finance Minister, in his Budget address to this House, which we all remember very well, said:

> This budget has three themes: restraint, equity, and economic renewal . . . For our part, I believe we must reduce our deficit and our borrowing requirements substantially.

Some restraint, some reduction, Mr. Speaker. The deficit that year was $15 billion. In 1981, we slowly slipped into the worst recession in our country's history.

On April 19, 1983, in the Budget address to the House of Commons by the then Minister of Finance, he said:

> This is a fiscally responsible budget.

Some budget, Mr. Speaker, some responsibility. The deficit that year was $31.8. That is the end of our little walk down memory lane.

This summer during the election, Barbara Frum said on The Journal, "There seems to be a fundamental flaw in our economy". Mr. Speaker, she was dead right. Our nation's affairs have been seriously mismanaged and this has put us in the bind we are in today. We are living with the tremendous government waste of past administrations. Need I remind the House of Consolidated Computer at $125 million, or Maislin Industries at $34 million, or Canadair and many others?

I have received representations from business leaders, interest groups and individuals in my riding. I sense that a new air of optimism has blown across the country. Our chariot of fire has been lit by people from all regions, from all towns and cities in every Canadian province. This is what we as a Government can now build on. We cannot do it without some fiscal manoeuvrability. The federal deficit and the accumulated national debt has reached unmanageable proportions. Never in Canadian history has so much been owed by so many to so few. We have inherited this and we will have to make some difficult decisions to manage it effectively. As the House knows, we have already made some decisions and we will have to make some more.

On May 7, 1984, Professor Lipsey, senior economic adviser of the C.D. Howe Institute, gave a speech at the Conference Board of Canada financial conference in Toronto. He said:

> The best contribution that public policy can make to removing unemployment is, first, to get the deficit quickly under control so that a better balance of less expansionary fiscal policy and a more expansionary monetary policy can be adopted.

Professor Lipsey went on to say:

> Once we realize that cutting public sector deficits allows easier monetary policy we will have taken a fundamentally important step towards creating a more receptive climate for investment and risk taking.

The House knows that our priority is to reduce the federal deficit, and we will. We will target our talent and dollars at winners or potential winners to help our lost generation of young people find jobs. To do this we will need the co-operation and support of the private sector. In my opinion, there is nothing wrong with that.

The Premier of Ontario, when speaking of the deficit recently, said, "You cannot take more out of something than you put into it". We are now trying to right the wrongs of Liberal pasts.

Since 1980, the investment, tax and energy policies of the former Liberal government have caused a flight of job-creating capital from this country that is without precedent in our history. Seventeen billion dollars of direct investment capital has left Canada which could have been used to strengthen our capital base and create jobs. Liberal programs such as the national energy policy and the Foreign Investment Review Agency were catalysts which set off a chain reaction of destruction throughout our economy, helping to turn a global recession into a made-in-Canada catastrophe.

In 1980, the Liberals told Canadians they would buy back Canada, that foreign investors were no longer welcome. They did not really buy back Canada, Mr. Speaker; they borrowed it back, replacing foreign equity with foreign debt. That huge outflow of equity, much of it Canadian, has been a major reason why our dollar has fallen from 88 cents to 75 cents American since the 1980 election. That outflow of equity is also one reason for our high interest rates. If Canada had not offset that outflow of cheap equity with an inflow of expensive debt, our dollar would have sunk like a stone.

We now have a wonderful opportunity to show domestic and international investors that Canada is still an excellent place in which to invest. In short, encouraging investment in this country is a top priority for our Government.

However, I ask the House to be patient. I believe the borrowing authority Bill we are discussing today is essential. If we do not borrow these funds, the Government will be forced to break its undertaking to Canadians and to Canadian institutions. We have financial, legal and moral obligations. If we do not borrow these funds, then I ask Hon. Members opposite to tell the provinces, the welfare recipients, the old age security recipients that they will not get their cheques or to tell those on unemployment insurance that the well is dry.

There is no question but that we must borrow this extra money. The kinds of programs that we are embarking upon now will ensure that three, four or five years from now we will not have to do this again.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated that the Government has a financial, legal and moral obligation to pass this bill. Does he not believe that there is any obligation to the House to indicate the nature of the spending rather than simply asking us to sign a blank cheque without knowing full well the particulars of what we are approving?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker I do not have to remind Hon. Members of the condition the fiscal affairs of this country were in when we took office. I recall asking the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) about the condition of the books, and he said that I would not like to see them. We are coming to grips with these concerns which are the result of a Government that has been living beyond its means for a very long time. It had to stop.

We are doing everything in our power to make intelligent, honest and rational decisions that will benefit the people of this country from coast to coast. Therefore, we must ask for financial support from the House so that we can make the kind of decisions that will allow us to implement programs that will get us all back to work soon.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the financial statement of the Government would indicate that cuts are being made in a number of areas which affect the Hon. Member's constituents. In this Bill, the Government is asking us to approve $16 billion in expenditures for the fiscal year 1985-86. One area of concern for us is the effect this will have on public servants. The Hon. Member represents a constituency in which there is a large number of public servants. Would he indicate whether he agrees with the decision of the Government to postpone, to use its words, the implementation of those sections of the Canada Labour Code which would provide protection to employees of the Government under federal jurisdiction, including public servants and others, with respect to maternity leave, occupational health and safety and a number of other important areas? Does he support the decision of his Government in this respect?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his excellent question. I am not entirely familiar with the Canada Labour Code. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is correct in saying that many of these cuts will affect my riding, but I think that the cuts that are being made will affect all ridings across the country without exception.

I have had representations from public servants in my riding who are concerned that they will be directly affected by some of these cuts. I can assure the Hon. Member and the House that the Government is doing everything it can to make sure that those who are directly affected by the cuts will be given first priority to relocate either in other Departments or in the private sector.

Mr. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, I support my colleague's endorsement of Bill C-11. I share his interest in receiving so many calls from the private sector and small business supporting the direction in which the Government is heading.

I am surprised at the responses we have heard from Members opposite with respect to this Bill and the consultative process. They appear to be shocked by our consultative approach.

I would suggest that the speeches that have been made by our Ministers have clearly indicated that people have responded positively to this process upon which we have embarked. For example, there are representatives from the municipality of London in my riding who are here to consult with the Government about the future of our municipality and, indeed, the future of the country.

As a new Member of Parliament, it is a new experience for me to be part of a Government that indeed wants to ask people what went wrong in the past and to ask for their input to help make a better future for all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) wish to reply to that comment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have no comment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct another question to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner). The Government is asking for permission to borrow $16 billion for the next fiscal year, beginning April 1. Can the Hon. Member cite a precedent or give any authority the Government can use for asking for borrowing authority prior to bringing down a budget?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I personally cannot cite a precedent.

Mr. Nickerson: The Government did it last year.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): However, I believe that members of the Official Opposition have been setting such precedents in the House for many years.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to my previous question. Perhaps the Hon. Member did not understand the nature of the question.

Of course, I assume that as a representative of Ottawa-Carleton he would have some interest and awareness of the Government's decision with respect to the proposed changes to the Canada Labour Code that will affect 300,000 public servants, a good number of whom live in his constituency. I find it incredible that the Hon. Member can rise in his place and say he does not know what those changes are. I assume that he did not understand the question. Is the Hon. Member aware of the Government's decision, through the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), to put on the backburner changes to the Canadian Labour Code affecting federal employees in the area of occupational health and safety, maternity leave and sexual harassment? If he is not aware of it, why on earth not? If he is aware of it, does he support that decision?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to represent the people of Ottawa-Carleton. I always thought that a Friday afternoon in the House was a day of relaxation, but I am quickly learning that that is not the case.

I am not entirely conversant with the issues which my friend, the Member for Burnaby, has raised. However, I take note of his excellent suggestion and I will meet very soon with the Minister to seek more clarification on those concerns.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, my remarks pertain essentially to the comments made a few moments ago by the member from the Official Opposition—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. Questions should be put to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner). If the Member would like to address the Chair and address the question to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner), I will accept it. Otherwise, I will have to recognize someone else.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be advisable for the Hon. Member to read this morning's Globe and Mail. He would be able to inform himself about the consequences, dire consequences, with respect to maternity leave, paternity leave and adoption. Canadians who are rebuilding the Hon. Member's future and the future of his constituents might be interested in knowing that the maternity provisions were forged in a very hard and difficult battle. They are vital to the well-being of the future of our country, although the business community—and I know the Hon. Member has a particular interest in the business community as I do, but not to the detriment of youth and children in our future—tried to block all this advanced legislation, these new social roles and the important equal opportunities for women.

I would like to suggest that since all the Parties in the great big pre-election atmosphere accepted these rules and new laws, the Hon. Member might see to it in his own caucus that they are put into application. How does the Hon. Member feel about that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner).

Mr. Benjamin: Let the Hon. Member answer. There is unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) to answer the last question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, there is not unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner).

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Bill C-11. I have been hearing since early this morning about the devastation that we have caused and the way we have wreaked havoc on the entire community. All we have asked for is a time for reflection to consider what has taken place. Since 1968, the good old days when we used to run surpluses at the end of each budgetary year, we have somehow been able to change the whole pattern of development. We are now running massive deficits approaching some $35 billion. We changed this pattern with the assistance of many Finance Ministers all of whom talked about restraint.

Deficits and jobs are of grave concern. I come from a riding that is 50 per cent ethnic in its nature. These are people who have come to Canada, many first generation newcomers from different lands. We have representatives of 39 ethnic communities. We have many visible minorities. They cannot quite seem to grasp what is going on. They came here filled with high hopes and aspirations, expecting a land of milk and honey. But now we have massive deficits and there are no jobs. We cannot keep spending as if there were no tomorrow. At some point we have to cause an interruption in that rapid growth that has been taking place, one that would run us right off the map.

A recent study in Ville St. Laurent, one of the two important cities that comprise my riding, showed that in some 100 ethnic families with an average of 5.2 members per family there was an unemployment rate of 72 per cent. This is appalling. They live in abominable conditions, conditions that are sub-human, and they have an income of $1,100 a month either through welfare or whatever other source. They want answers and they want answers quickly. Certainly they want job creation, the young people, the older people, and the rest.

I think it was a good beginning. We came to grips with the deficit. We are saying that before we allow any further growth in the deficit, let us control it, let us stop it. Let us take a look at what we are doing. Let us look at the high unemployment and inadequate investment. We must take a look at the erosion of confidence that has taken place and all of the personal hardship. How are we going to restore some confidence into this community? What are we going to do?

We have to begin with a proper program of restraint. I heard about the devastation we are causing. I can only assure the Hon. Member who has brought this matter to our attention that everything I have heard so far in the first few months is that everyone will be treated with fairness. We cut $1 million from the budget of the National Film Board, which caused some hysteria. We asked the CBC to take a cut of $75 million, and the CBC instantly wanted to cut out some vital program.

I think those of us who ran hard this past year ran hard so that we can get here to create some accountability and responsibility in government. What we are really saying is: don't affect the services. Let us look at the way these services are being administered. Let us come to grips with the large bureaucracies, those 300 or 400 agencies that have never had any accountability and whose books have never been opened to public scrutiny.

Mr. Benjamin: Like the Prime Minister's Office.

Mr. Weiner: It is about time that those things were made a matter of public record. There are people in my community who have trouble finding work and paying taxes. In general, one out of six heads of households is out of work. They do not understand how we can continue to spend as if there were no tomorrow. Therefore, let us control our spending, put it on hold, while we consider ways of putting more people back to work. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the business community has already shown tremendous interest and confidence in what we have begun to do. This will be shown by a renewed investment in our community by the creation of jobs.

As some Hon. Members will recall, Parliament has already granted borrowing authority amounting to $24.6 billion for the present year, an amount based on the previous government's requirements of $25.5 billion. However, we inherited financial requirements of $29.9 billion. This sorry plight, the mess left us, requires us to have supplementary borrowing authority for the current fiscal year. In addition, the new expenditures and the tax initiatives which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced bring our projected requirements to $29.2 billion, $6 billion higher than estimated last summer.

What we are trying to do is to become a little more cost efficient. We want to make sure that there is an importance to what we are doing. We want to minimize the changes taking place in the community. There is a need to put our house in order. We have to limit the debt in order to do that. We have to reverse our direction and what effect it has had on our confidence and growth.

We have come through an era where government has played a very implicit role in the handling and management of business. It has been too involved. Many of us would like to see a little less government involvement. We would like to think that we can somehow get the government out of our bedrooms and put the initiative back into the private sector. Small businessmen are already burdened with far too much red tape and far too much bureaucracy. There are people who are innovative. Some of us are prepared to take risks. We have the competitive spirit. We feel the reins should be loosened somehow. This is the kind of view that is being taken in this reflective period.

What we promised through the summer campaign and "the time for change" on which we all ran, is that we would be in constant communication with our communities. In other words, we would listen before we would act. We are doing what we promised, that is, getting involved in consultation, meeting with municipalities and the different constituents who elected us. I feel people are quite happy to participate in this type of change and they want to have input.

If we did nothing and caused no change then, of course, by the year 1990 we would be looking at scandalous deficits and at unemployment perhaps getting even worse. It is very, very difficult to have to continue to finance debt charges. My own feeling is that whatever we are asking here is very legitimate. It is necessary to continue the orderly progression which has already begun. I take pleasure in rising to support it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: The Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner) spoke about the concerns of his constituents in terms of job creation and the fact that a very large number of them were out of work. I am sure a significant number of families in his constituency have children who are students in post-secondary educational institutions. How can the Hon. Member possibly justify the decision of his Government to eliminate the Summer Canada Program for student employment?

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, we have just come into a period now where we have implemented the Canada Works program. We know that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is looking at other aspects of what we would consider to be more long-term programming. Those of us who have worked in the municipal sector are especially fed up with the type of programming which previous governments have given us. They were piecemeal and offered only little bones for very short periods of time. There was no concern for whether there was a need for the program in the community. I am thinking of a particular drop-in centre which was allowed to be funded. They never came to the municipality to ask whether it was required. They allowed this particular project to be set up for a very short period of time. When the project wound down or when the funding wound down, they then came to the municipality expecting support. I think this is the time to reflect and to think seriously of job-creation programs which are not for six to twelve weeks. We need ways of putting people back to work for three to five years.

Mr. Robinson: What about Summer Canada?

Mr. Weiner: The student program is of particular interest. I have two children who fit into that category. I am very hopeful that the Minister in this particular period will find a program which can be of a long-term nature and would suit the needs to which the Hon. Member referred.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner) mentioned high unemployment in his riding. How does he justify the initiatives of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) which chopped $200 million from the unemployment insurance fund? The means by which she will do that is the hiring of 700 investigators to disentitle claimants. How can the Hon. Member justify his concern for his constituents with the direction the Government has taken?

Mr. Weiner: By hiring 700 people, I think we are already taking 700 people off the unemployment rolls. I have seen nothing to indicate that there is not a strong need to tighten up the entire bureaucratic structure by which the employment operation is being managed. There have been far too many abuses, far too many examples of individuals—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Weiner: —who have not been able to find jobs in particular sectors and have been unwilling to move into any other area of endeavour. I think it has to be part of a comprehensive program. I think the Hon. Member is taking something out of context. When a program is put into place, it has to be one where we can direct and retrain the individual. There is no point in having a person on the unemployment rolls and forcing him to go on welfare before being prepared to put him through a retraining process.

The knowledge we have acquired which is more than five to eight years old is antiquated. Some 10 years from now most of the workforce will have to be completely retrained. We have an excellent opportunity right now to put into effect programs for the unemployed which will put them back to work in a very honest way.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) concerning the student program next summer—and I listened attentively to what he said—the Hon. Member said that he was sorry to a certain degree that this was announced but that he was sure the Minister would find a summer program. I may agree with him that perhaps some part-time jobs may not be the best. For those who have none, they may be the best. However, summer jobs are part-time. Why should we worry hundreds of thousands of young people who are already preparing themselves for summer employment? Usually good, young Canadians start preparing themselves now. I do not mean to be politically partisan, but it worries me because many young people used to start preparing themselves now for the coming summer. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Weiner) indicated that he hoped the Minister would do something. Why cancel a program only to announce something which would be totally similar?

Since the Member and I share Ville Saint Laurent, I ask him on behalf of millions of people to stop referring to non-francophones and non-anglophones as ethnic. If my name was "Prud'hommeski", as I have been saying for 20 years, I would be fed up with hearing francophones and anglophones talking about ethnics. He referred to his district, which is similar to mine, as having close to 39 ethnic groups. I do not know where he fits in, by the way, but as far as I am concerned, I think there are only two kinds of Canadians—the Canadians who are Canadian citizens and the landed immigrants. The Hon. Member will discover in his own district how much the young Canadians of parents who are other than francophone and anglophone resent being referred to as ethnics. This is not a criticism. It is my 20 years of experience with them which makes me even now change my own vocabulary and not use the word "ethnic" in reference to others.

Mr. Weiner: I will begin by commenting upon my hon. friend's suggestion on the Summer Works Program. Those of us who came here on September 4 were almost astonished how we continued to put into effect the same type of programming to which the previous administration was a party by allowing Canada Works or Programme Canada au Travail to go through. We did not necessarily have time for it to be a product of our own development. One would expect this to be something that we had to accept and something we were happy to do, because we knew that the unemployment rate, which was in excess of 11 per cent, would have been much worse by January. At 11 per cent it was already intolerable. We took the bulk of the money, those of us in our own ridings who share my hon. friend's concerns, and put together citizen advisory boards, precisely for the reason that we did not want any political or other patronage factors to be involved. We wanted members of the community to be able to benefit most from them. We are actually allowing them to become the advisers on what can go through.

Mr. Prud'homme: How different could the program be?

Mr. Weiner: Because we only had two months, we accepted the program already put in place by a previous administration. However, to continue that type of piecemeal, part-time program would be illogical.

Mr. Prud'homme: Summer employment is part-time.

Mr. Weiner: I am sure the summer program will be addressed in proper order and a program will be devised which will be much more ongoing, will have permanence for the community and will conform to the needs and concerns of the community.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, let me say this. I have been somewhat chastized for using the term 'ethnic' to qualify first or second generation members of visible or cultural groups who have come to Canada from other countries. They are very proud Canadians. I include myself among them. There was no harm. We are Canadians. We have integrated very well into society. We have come to accept, respect and love this country, but we all have ties to another country. The rich heritage, culture and tradition we brought with us are transmitted to our children for future generations. We are proud to be identified as members of an ethnic group.

[Translation]

We are all good Quebecers, but I have no reason not to think that a certain number in our riding . . . it is 50 per cent, we are ethnic groups. There is nothing unthinkable in that and I, for one, Mr. Speaker, am always prepared to be included in ethnic groups because we practically form a majority in our riding.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on Bill C-11. I am very concerned when I see a Bill to borrow $16 billion which fails to give any detail as to how the funds will be used. I am further concerned when I hear that part of the funds may be carried over to the next fiscal year. This disturbs me. As some Members may know, I was in another legislative Chamber, the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. Those kinds of actions concerned me there, and now they concern me here. I see that a Member opposite agrees that there is something here to be concerned about.

In the last few days we have seen the Government introduce such measures. Not long before, we saw a budget disguised as an economic statement. It should more appropriately have been called a cut-back statement. All it did was to cut back jobs and programs that the previous government had announced.

This Government said it would be more accountable. I am sure Hon. Members recall this vividly. During the election campaign I heard speech after speech from my Conservative opponent, as I am sure others did, on how the previous government had not been as accountable as they would like. They stated that if they had the opportunity to be in power, they would be far more respectful, accountable, and all the other adjectives. They patted themselves on the back for all the good things they would do if given the opportunity to be in power.

They were given that opportunity on September 4. What do we see from this Government that is supposed to be accountable? It introduced tax measures almost immediately, without the approval of Parliament. Parliament had not yet been recalled when those measures were introduced. This is from a Government that purported to be accountable.

We waited a few more days. A budget was introduced, but it was called something else. That is not a sign of a government that wants to be accountable. They said they would be open. We all remember that. The only thing that we have seen open in the last few days is the briefcase of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). That is all that has been open, save and except the tape recorder of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) with cassettes seemingly falling out all over the place, ending up in radio stations here and there.

An interesting cartoon appeared today in the Ottawa newspaper Le Droit. It depicts the open briefcase, things falling out, and it is entitled "Open Government". It is most appropriate. The only problem is that nothing else is open.

We have not had this open government, the spirit of co-operation, this government that is going to co-operate with everyone as referred to by the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes). Who did they consult with before cancelling the 1986 census? Did they consult with the Status of Women group? Surely not. Did they consult with the handicapped? For the first time the 1986 census was going to include a question on the handicapped.

Did they consult with the Home Builders Association? We hear that this Government is a friend of business. Surely one would have thought it would consult with the Home Builders Association. Not so. The Home Builders met with members of our caucus only a few days ago to tell us they had not been consulted. They were against cancellation of the census. This is from the government of consultation, a government that was to be open and accessible and accountable. Did they forget that? Did this sudden realization of having power make them forget their election promises? I would hate to think that has actually happened.

Who promised that they would enable women to participate fully and equitably in the economic life of this nation? It was none other than the Conservative Party. What did it do? The data base to establish affirmative action programs is the census, and it has cut that out. It cut the head off the program.

The Government says it is open and accountable. Accountable to whom? To itself? It seems it is accountable to no one else. All those whom we have consulted on this measure stated that they were not consulted. The Government is not accountable to this House or to the people. It does not consult with anyone. Is this a Government of consultation?

This Government said it would be thrifty. It said the previous government was wasteful. What did it do? It started off with 11 additional Cabinet Ministers. That is a bit much for a thrifty group. To go with the 11 Cabinet Ministers, you buy, lease or otherwise obtain a bunch of limousines, at least one each for those very important people. In order to have someone in the limousines to accompany the Ministers, you hire political commissars at $80,000 or $100,000 each. You hire 40 of them. Who pays for all this? It is you, I and the rest of the citizens of this country. This is done so the Government can hand over a lot of jobs because it has a lot of elected Members.

Perhaps I am forgetful, but I do not recall my Tory opponent ever stating during the election campaign, "Vote for me and we will buy a bunch of limousines. Vote for me and we will hire a bunch of commissars". I never heard that. Perhaps my Tory opponent forgot. Perhaps other Conservative candidates said, "Vote for me and you will be fired". Many of my constituents are in the process of losing their jobs because of the actions of this Government. I do not recall my Conservative opponent raising that matter.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner), a neighbouring Member, may have campaigned on that theme, although I would be surprised. Had he done that, I do not believe he would be here. Surely he did not neglect to tell the truth, the absolute truth to his constituents. I would never accuse anyone of doing that. I can only assume that the Hon. Member was forgetful.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would inform my neighbour that I campaigned on a theme of change, which this country got severely on September 4.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for stating that was not a point of order. We are discussing the Government's borrowing and what it intends to do with those funds. I was explaining that I do not think this Government is using those funds properly. I was saying that government members surely had not campaigned on this theme during the last election campaign. I do not believe anyone campaigned on the platform of "vote for me and you will lose your job". That, however, is the cold reality of the outcome of having voted for that Government.

• (1500)

Thousands of my constituents are losing their jobs because the Government has decided to snip away at the programs that the previous government had had established for years. The Government decided to cut away at programs like the home insulation program, a program that was beneficial to the low-income people of my constituency. It was beneficial to senior citizens who were trying to upgrade their homes with no other money to do so. The Government cut that out.

The Government cut youth programs and the Summer Canada Program. Did government members campaign on this platform? Were young canvassers who worked for Conservative members made to say at the doors of constituents: "Vote for our Party and we will cut off the grants to everyone including me"? I wonder if any young Conservative canvassers campaigned on that platform.

Later when it comes time for comments, perhaps some Hon. Members could rise and tell us that they campaigned on the platforms of firing their constituents, of cutting off pay cheques, and of buying more limousines. If any Hon. Members had campaigned on those platforms, I would doubt very much that they would have been elected in the last election. Instead, we heard things like the following: "We will assist Canadians who are unable to provide for their own needs". That was a Conservative promise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I am glad to see that some Cabinet Ministers and some Hon. Members are applauding this Conservative promise that I have just read into the record. Now let us see what the Government did because it is very important to hear not only the rhetoric but the cold reality as well. The hard fact is the following: the Government cut $30 million from the employment pension income program. Where does this fit in with assisting Canadians who are unable to provide for their own needs? I would like to see where the promise coincides with the reality.

It seems to me that the document entitled Expenditure and Program Review written by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) must have been written by someone who was out of the country during the election campaign for it does not contain anything that we heard during the election campaign. It certainly does not contain anything regarding the social programs of the Government.

Let us take a look at another election promise. I am sure all Conservative members of the House will recognize the following promise: "We will recognize the multicultural diversity of Canadian society". It would be nice if Hon. Members applauded this one as well. This is also one of their campaign promises. We all know, of course, the importance of that program and that Conservative candidates campaigned on this platform. They received votes presumably giving them a mandate to implement those programs that they had advocated. Now what has happened?

There has been $9.8 million cut from the Department of the Secretary of State for grants and contributions to general cultural activities. How does this coincide with that promise? It does not. It is a striking contradiction. Surely there is an explanation for this. I would hope that the Conservative member who speaks next will explain to all of us why it is that Conservative members promised one thing and delivered the opposite.

Mr. Nunziata: They hoodwinked us.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member says that they hoodwinked us. That is exactly what happened. However, we will not be hoodwinked any further. There is a by-election taking place in the constituency that I represented at the provincial level. The Conservative candidate in that riding had better be ready to answer not only for the Premier of the province and his shortcomings in the past but for the shortcomings of his federal Conservative friends as well, for they have disappointed the people of the great riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

[Translation]

As you undoubtedly know, Mr. Speaker, the local Conservative candidates promised that the National Capital Commission would extend the Eastern Parkway eastward to eliminate bottlenecks in the Ottawa region and east of the city. What do we hear? Again recently we heard . . . it is indicated in the same document I quoted earlier, "Expenditure and Review Program", that the Eastern Parkway project has just been cancelled.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) failed to mention that in his remarks, a parkway which runs along his riding, surely something very convenient for his constituents and mine who drive to the national capital. What do we hear instead? We hear the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) say that she is in favour of building a bridge across the Ottawa River. We do not have roads to get into the city, yet the Hon. Member wants a bridge which will not even link up with a road! It is rather remarkable that her colleague, the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) does not want that bridge, for she can appreciate that a bridge without an access road is useless.

Mr. Speaker, the government has charged ahead without consulting, it is a bourgeois government, a government which lives in a world of its own, which looks after itself first, ever unmindful of Canadians and their aspirations, without any concern for the constituents of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, without any concern as well for all other Canadians.

An Hon. Member: Just like the Liberals!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the government should spend the next few days thinking about doing something to spur the economy. I would suggest some small industries which might be opened up. For instance—

[English]

In the riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, we could start up a new factory to build automatic file retrievers. There is a great deal of demand for that kind of equipment. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) could use it, as could other Cabinet Ministers. Automatic file retrievers would be very handy.

We could also start up a factory to produce tape erasers. That would be very, very handy for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). A tape eraser would be a very hot item. If given the proper grants from the Government, we could sell those. Finally, but not least important, we could start up a factory to make tape recorders that do not beep. They would also be very useful.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). When he commenced his presentation this afternoon, he complained about Conservative tax measures. I would like to review some of the tax measures that have been put into effect since the September 4 election and get the Hon. Member's ideas on them.

First there was the sales tax increase. This was put in place to finance the Special Recovery Project, something that had been brought in by the previous Liberal government. The money had already been spent. The previous government was trying to buy itself back into office and it left us to pick up the bill. The legislation had been brought into the House previously and, in a despicable manner, allowed for the spending of that money first while the tax was to come into effect retroactively after the election. That is precisely what happened.

The petroleum compensation fund, that great Liberal deal to tax people from the West in order to subsidize oil consumption in the East, was $1 billion in the hole. That needed to be fixed up. Again that was a result of Liberal and not Conservative initiatives.

Look at the unemployment insurance premium increases. They had to be put into effect because again, the previous Government refused to do it when it was required by law to do so. That was another Liberal initiative. The only Conservative tax initiative that has been put in place since the election is the three cents per litre fuel tax rebate for farmers, loggers and miners. That is the Conservative tax policy—the reduction of taxes. Let it be upon the head of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell if he is against that fuel tax rebate for the farmers in his constituency.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the Hon. Member brought up the issue of the increase in the sales tax which was introduced. I would remind him that it was introduced without a Ways and Means motion from a government which said it was going to be accountable to this assembly. It is important for us to remember that. It is further important for us to remember that one Party in the last election campaigned on the basis of not increasing the sales tax. That was not the Liberal Party, it was the Conservative Party. What did it do immediately after the election? It broke the first promise that it had made. I am pleased that the Hon. Member brought that up, as I forgot to raise that matter myself.

With respect to his statement that no tax measures have been introduced since the election, I would remind him of the tax measures which were introduced by another name in the Expenditure and Program Review. Several examples are the $32.3 million which will be raised in the agricultural services area by fees; the extra $22 million in radio licences; the $39.7 million of new taxes in the area of consumer and corporate affairs; the $4.4 million in immigration and social insurance number documentation; the $10.5 million in increases in the weather services area; the $6.3 million in inspections, licences and service fees in the fisheries sector and in the oceans sector, and the $0.8 million for divorce registry. As if this Government is not trying to capitalize on the misfortune of others!

To continue with other indirect taxation, $13.5 million will be generated by increasing rates in the area of accommodation and marine services. That is an increase in levies which the taxpayers will give the Government. Proofs and certificates of new citizenship will provide $1.1 million to the Government. The taxpayers will also provide $4 million in security clearances. There are pages and pages of new taxation which has been introduced by the Government under another name. Again, I would thank the Hon. Member for bringing this subject to my attention.

[Translation]

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I have indeed a question for the Hon. Member. I wonder why he does not feel utterly embarrassed with having to speak on a bill designed essentially to wipe out debts incurred by the Liberals.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if he does not feel embarrassed with the disastrous situation in which this country led by his party, and his rhetoric on the matter smacks of intellectual acrobatics, if not merely of bad faith. I would feel embarrassed if I were in his shoes, and this is my question: does he not feel ill at ease when debating the issue, when we as a Government are simply striving to pay the bills, to pay your debts?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am not at all embarrassed with having to express the views of the constituents of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. I take pride in doing it! My constituents deserve having someone to speak on their behalf in this Parliament. I have done so since I have been here, and I will do so in the years to come. The hon. member will have to get used to that!

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to return for a moment to Bill C-11 and the amendment thereto. There have been several speakers in the Liberal Party since my colleague from Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) moved his amendment yesterday. I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he could tell the House what are the intentions of he and his colleagues in the Liberal caucus regarding that amendment. Do they intend to vote for it or against it? Whatever their intentions, could he explain to the House the reasons behind those intentions?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member asked that question. Our Party is concerned with the fact that this Government has decided that part of the borrowing which it wants is for the next fiscal year. As a Party we intend to vote in such a manner as to ensure that the borrowing of this Government is only for the current year. Of course, we recognize that the Government must continue to operate; however, we must express our reluctance at giving the Government money when we realize some of the things it is doing with this money. It is important for each and every one of us to put those things on the record.

The Government has no right to money. The money is given through the House of Commons. The Government has no money of its own. Therefore, we have the duty to ensure that the funds provided are properly accounted for and used in the best possible manner.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member stated that he wants to ensure that the Government does the best thing with the money which is available and that the Opposition does not want to give the Government more money. Does he realize that of the total spending of the federal Government, all but approximately $1 billion or $1.5 billion of spending relates to programs which were put in place by the previous government, or programs which have continued over the past number of years? If he does realize that and if he wishes us to cut back, would he tell us where he is proposing we should cut back?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, perhaps it was because the Minister arrived only recently in the House, but I did not state that the Government should not be getting money to pay the invoices. I did say, however, that we must ensure that the funds which the Government is getting are used in the best possible manner and that the Government should not borrow for the next fiscal year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I recognize the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments regarding Bill C-11 which is before the House today. First I would like to provide some explanation to the questions which were asked this morning by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). He was complaining about the fact that we were asking for borrowing authority for the 1985-86 fiscal year, despite the precedent which was set in the House earlier this year by the Liberal Party when it tried to do exactly the same sort of thing. So there is a well-established precedent.

The Hon. Member gave some moral arguments against it, but I want to tell the House the real reason the NDP brought in this amendment. The real reason is that they want to recycle speakers. There are very few Members on that side of the House, and rightly so. The electorate of Canada has seen to that. The reason they introduced the amendment was so that they could recycle speakers over and over again.

I would like to speak about the Bill in a non-partisan way and look at it as objectively as possible. I have to admit that I am not particularly proud of the Bill we have before us today. The reason we are saddled with it is because of the previous administration. It resulted from the activities and mismanagement of the previous administration. It is hard to turn things around financially within a limited period of time.

I sometimes look upon the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, as being something of a sausage machine. Material is fed into it, the handle is turned, but it might be six months or a year before anything comes out the other end. In the meantime, what one is dealing with is material which had been introduced by a previous government. We have already heard an explanation of this phenomenon with respect to the tax measures which were dealt with early in the life of the new Government. The tax measures resulted from proposals which had been made and laws which had been passed when the previous government had been in office.

Under this Bill, the Government is asking for a considerable amount of borrowing authority. We would like it to be much less than it is. We would expect that as our policies are carried into effect, as confidence grows in the country, as investments are made, and as jobs are created—and they are being created now—the amount of money which will need to be borrowed will become progressively less.

I feel it is important, Sir, that Parliament be vigilant in these affairs. One of the most important tasks before us as parliamentarians is the guardianship of the public purse. I welcome a reasonably long debate on this issue. I do not believe that the Government of the day ought to try to rush through borrowing authority Bills, as the Liberals did in the past. We on this side are prepared to debate this issue for as long as necessary. We must deal with it in a timely manner, but we are prepared to devote the necessary time in order to listen to what other Members of Parliament have to say on the issue. It is important that they be heard.

In a debate of this nature there is an opportunity for the Opposition to do its proper job, to fulfil the role expected of it by the Canadian public. Unfortunately, however, in listening to the Hon. Members of the Opposition speak on this matter, it does not seem to me that they are doing their job that well. I listened very carefully to the speeches which have been presented and all we have heard is criticism, on the one hand, for requesting too much borrowing authority and, on the other hand, criticism for looking after the public purse and cutting down on areas where expenditures are not really necessary.

We are criticized for dealing with the nation's finances in a prudent fashion. The Opposition cannot have it both ways; it cannot chide us for spending too much and condemn us for spending too little. There is a duplicity in ideas which is very apparent when you listen to Hon. Members opposite. There is a lack of perspicacity in their argument. I would hope that as time progresses and these important financial subjects come up again, the quality of debate from the other side of the House will improve.

There has been some criticism with which I would have to agree in that it might have been advantageous for certain documents to be tabled at the same time as this Bill was brought before the House. But if one listened carefully to the presentation of the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), one would find that most of the figures which are needed in order to make a rational judgment of the merits of this Bill are included therein. However, it might have been better if these could have been consolidated on paper.

What Hon. Members of Parliament would undoubtedly like to know when they are discussing a matter such as this is the number of presently outstanding borrowing authorities and where they stand. They would like to see a computation of the financial requirements of the Government and to have available to them a synopsis of the existing debt of the Government of Canada. I am sure those Hon. Members would like to have some idea of the Government's borrowing plan for the months ahead. Therefore, my request of the Minister of State for Finance, when these types of occasions arise in the future, would be that this information—which is undoubtedly readily available in published form somewhere—be brought forward at the time of debate and presented to Members of Parliament so they will better be able to exercise their judgment when it comes to voting on the issue.

I would like now to examine the Bill and consider dispassionately what it requests in the way of borrowing authority and whether these requests are reasonable under the circumstances. In Part I of the Bill the Government is requesting the additional borrowing authority of some $7.3 billion to the end of this fiscal year. The best estimate — and it can only be an estimate — of the financial requirements to the end of March, 1985 is some $29.9 billion, within an existing borrowing authority of $24.6 billion. That would give the total of $31.9 billion. Therefore, the Government is requesting total borrowing authority of $31.9 billion. It has demonstrated financial requirements of some $29.9 billion. This gives the Government some $2 billion of leeway. I believe it is called "reserve" in the official terminology. When I sat on the other side of the House, I used to call it the "slush fund". However, under the circumstances, Sir, I do not feel we can say that that request is in any way unreasonable. I feel it is necessary to have some amount of reserve and $2 billion is certainly not unreasonable.

Nor, Sir, is it unreasonable that the request be made that that borrowing authority carry over unexpired at the end of the fiscal year; that it not lapse at that time. I would object, and have objected in the past, if the Government of the day asked for excessive amounts of reserve or excessive amounts which could be taken over the financial year end and used in the new year. But $2 billion can in no way be considered an unreasonable amount. It is very obvious that if we are going to plan ahead the amounts of money we will need to borrow in April or May, we must have that leeway.

Part II of the Bill requests an amount of $16 billion borrowing authority for the following fiscal year. If one looks at the projections, as far as they can be put together, this should hold the Government over until some time in the fall of next year; that is, if the projections are reasonably accurate. Let us hope, Sir, that we will not require that amount to tide us over until October or November of next year. Let us hope that the Government will not fully have to utilize that borrowing authority up until that time.

The idea in the Bill is not to preclude Parliament looking at necessary borrowing authorities again for the 1985-1986 fiscal year, but to allow the Government to go ahead and conduct its borrowing in an orderly way in the market-place until the end of summer. Then when Parliament comes back in September, the aditional borrowing authority for the balance of that fiscal year—which will undoubtedly be required—can be dealt with at that time and the matter will again be brought before Parliament. Hon. Members opposite and on this side will then have a chance to zero in on the way the Government is conducting its affairs. They will be able to say whether, in their opinion, the requested amount is unreasonable.

I have no hesitation in supporting Bill C-11 which has been brought forward today. I would hope that when we are discussing this matter again this time next year, the requested amounts will not be as large as those which are before us today. I have every expectation that because of the policies being pursued by the new Government and the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), capably assisted by the new Minister of State for Finance, this will indeed be the case and the request at that time will be for a much lesser amount than that requested today.

If we get back to discussion on the main motion I will have the opportunity again to speak on this matter. There are two other areas which I would like to address. One is borrowing requirements with regard to capital amounts versus current account amounts. I would like to discuss when it makes sense to borrow money and when it does not make sense. I would like to look at the Government record with regard to borrowing for current account purposes.

The second matter which I would like to address in the future is that of foreign borrowing. In the speech of the Minister of State for Finance it was noted that some $1 billion had been borrowed in foreign currencies. There may be some danger in that type of borrowing activity. The amount at the present time is not really that great, but we do not want to follow the same route as some foreign countries have. They have borrowed very heavily in denominations of currencies not their own. That is just a matter of advance notice, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak on Bill C-11 this afternoon.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in the last Parliament the Hon. Member, faced with a similar Bill introduced by the Liberals, took an entirely different tack. That Bill called for authority to borrow spilling over into the next fiscal year. The Hon. Member and his Party castigated the government for that spillover into the next fiscal year. How can the Hon. Member get up and make a speech like that? How does he reconcile that? Is it not rather like sucking and blowing at the same time? Now that he is on the government side his tune has changed. How does he reconcile his speech with the reality of his performance in the last Parliament?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the greatest difference between the situation then and the situation now is that then there was a government in which I had no confidence, nor did the vast majority of other Canadians. That government could not be trusted. Today the situation is entirely reversed. We have a Government which has the confidence of the great majority of Canadians. It holds 211 seats in the House of Commons. Who could not trust the Minister of State for Finance or the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of which side of the House you sit on but a question of principle. I would like to quote the comments of the present Minister of Finance who at that time was the finance critic. At the time when they were debating the similar Bill he said:

> There is a well established principle that Parliament only provides sufficient borrowing authority to a government to allow it to finance its operations within the current fiscal year. It is quite clear from the figures in the bill and from the statement by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) in response to my question yesterday that the government has every intention of this borrowing authority spilling over into 1983-84.

It is not a question of power, Mr. Speaker, it is a question of principle. I should remind the Hon. Member that in this House might is not right. Perhaps they should think of might for right.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) wish to comment?

Mr. Nickerson: No.

Mr. Benjamin: What can he say?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question and comment period is now terminated. Order, please. Would the Hon. Member please be seated. I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) that I had not seen him rise to be recognized. I had recognized the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) as a speaker for the Opposition. I must go to two Conservative members. Therefore, I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins).

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to speak today in support of Bill C-11, the borrowing authority Bill.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to have clarification of your statement that you must recognize two Hon. Members on the government side. I thought that according to procedure, especially Beauchesne's Citation 141 of the Fourth Edition, the Speaker normally tries to alternate between the pros and cons in a debate. I am surprised by your statement that you would make it a practice to recognize two Members on one side of the House and only one on the other. Could the Speaker clarify this point?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) brings up the point of recognizing Members from either side. I have been watching the debate very carefully today and over the last couple of days. I have noticed that there are not always Members rising from the Parties of the Opposition. Therefore, it is pretty hard for the Chair to try to recognize Members from that one Party or the other Party. Therefore, I must use discretion and am doing so. That is why I am recognizing the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins).

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I agree with the situation the Chair may find itself in when there are few Members in the House, especially when Members are not rising on either your left or right hand. However, I thought that at one time Your Honour was saying you would have to recognize two government members. I think you have clarified this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Hon. Member will know that I have always been for the underdog. I will naturally be recognizing people from both sides of the House. I think if he will be patient with the Chair he will find things will even off. The Hon. Member for Capilano.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, I am pleased to speak today on Bill C-11, the borrowing authority Bill. Before I start my comments I would like to say that as a new Member I find that speaking in this great House is perhaps a little different than expected, particularly on a Friday afternoon. It is interesting to see that the benches of the Opposition are as bare as the fiscal cupboard which we inherited from them.

Mr. Robinson: How about yours?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Hon. Member must remember that she should not comment on the number of Members in the Chamber.

Mr. Robinson: Especially when you have none here, Mary.

Mr. Benjamin: Where are all the Tories?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes) spoke this morning on this Bill. I agree with many of the points she made. As the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) indicated, we do not really like the idea of borrowing. That is not the way we would like to see the Government operate ideally. No one likes to borrow but we recognize that it is necessary at times. In fact, at this particular time we realize that we are atoning for the fiscal irresponsibility of the previous government which ran up this deficit. It allowed it to increase as it allowed spending to increase with unbridled passion.

We are familiar with the figures. The deficit of $190 billion has been accumulated at $34.5 billion a year. Just as in our private lives or business lives, we would not go to the bank to borrow money unless we understood how we would repay it. We realize that in the long term that is the kind of government we need in this country. We need a government that is fiscally accountable and fiscally responsible. We have not had the opportunity to see such a government for many years.

Indeed, if we were to follow the practices of the previous government, the accumulated debt by 1990 would reach such an extent that each family in this country would owe $54,000. Consider what that would mean to every man, woman and child in this country.

Last weekend, I went to my constituency to discuss our plans for economic renewal and our agenda for the future. Many of my constituents told me that they know some changes will hurt but they supported the Government one hundred per cent. They said that in fact they would like to see us go even further. Some people came to me and asked if there was not a way that we might even be able to develop a concept whereby that debt could be repaid now so that, as individuals or families, we could repay that debt which is owed to this country as a result of the previous fiscal irresponsibility.

I believe that Canadians—certainly the people in my riding—are behind the changes we are making. We know that it will not be easy and that we will have to begin saying no to many things in the next four years. That is the responsibility of our Government and that is the direction in which we must go.

I believe Hon. Members would agree that within government spending there is overlap and duplication. I spent many years working for a provincial government and I know from my own personal experience that there is waste aplenty. I know from my years in the private sector dealing with government that there are many examples of waste and overlap with provincial jurisdictions.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said on July 25 of this year that there are programs that are duplications and programs that are wasteful. He said that there are programs that are no longer useful, programs which no longer serve a purpose and that there is administration that is wasteful. He said that he would cut them down. Fortunately, he has not had that opportunty. We inherited that responsibility and we recognize it.

This afternoon the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) spoke to this Bill. He might be surprised to learn that I share with him his concern for social justice. I am sure there will be many occasions when we will have similar point of view on matters coming before the House.

However, I do not agree with him on his approach to economic renewal. I suppose that is part of the fundamental difference between Members on different sides of the House. I believe that in order to be fiscally responsible we must have to stay "stop". We must say no to further increases in government spending and take control of the situation. In my opinion, that is not only the moral and ethical route to take, it is also the correct economic policy.

Mr. Benjamin: Let them eat cake.

Mrs. Collins: I would like to ensure that every man, woman and child in this country at least had the opportunity to eat cake, but my approach would be quite different, if I may respond to the Hon. Member.

Obviously, we are saying in our economic agenda for renewal that job creation is the number one priority. But we differ from our colleagues about the appropriate way to create jobs in this country.

Personally, I am a great advocate of small business. I believe Hon. Members would agree that small business is a major contributor to the benefits that we enjoy. Companies with less than $2 million of sales—which is one definition of small business—comprise 96 per cent of the total number of businesses in this country. They employ between 4.5 million and 5.4 million Canadians. They are the largest employer of Canadians. We know that women are one of the largest generators of new small businesses in this country. When we encourage the small business sector we are also assisting women in greater numbers.

The measures which we are proposing and implementing now are measures which will support small business. It is not government that creates jobs. That is the wrong approach. It is Canadians who create jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: I know from my own experience and from talking to my constituents that Canadians will not do that unless they feel there is an opportunity to enjoy the benefits if they take such a risk. They are tired of the constraints that were put on small business by the previous regime. They want a system which will provide more opportunity to make investments, take risks and employ people in this country and thereby add to a healthy economy that we all hope to enjoy.

These are the little people of this country. These are the people whom this Government wants to support. They are the people who run the restaurants, the dry cleaning shops and have new ideas for the development of new applications of software.

Whenever I visit my riding, men and women come to me with ideas for small businesses they would like to begin. As I said in my maiden speech a few weeks ago, they are not asking for handouts. They only want to know if the Government will create the kind of climate in which they can be free to operate and employ people. That is the approach that this Government is taking in the fiscal scheme of our economic agenda.

I believe that our concept of responsibility is also consistent with the approach of our Government. We want to encourage individual responsibility and corporate responsibility in this country. In order to do that we must enable people to be free to accept that responsibility.

For example, let us consider family life. How can we expect our children to accept responsibility if they are given a new car or brand-new clothes when they turn 16? I believe they must have a sense of realism just as others in this country want to have a sense of realism.

During the past number of years people have come to believe that the Government, through its industrial grants and so on, would provide things for them. I would like to see some of that changed. This can be accomplished when our major emphasis is on providing a sound economic climate in which people are free to make investments and create economic wealth.

I believe that the measures that have been put forward in our economic agenda and in Bill C-11 are based on a society which encourages strength, freedom, responsibility and challenge. We are giving a challenge to all Canadians in these next four years. We are saying that we are ready to accept our responsibility to be more fiscally prudent. We are asking Canadians to take this opportunity and we are counting on them to create the jobs and the economic wealth in this country.

While we recognize the need to borrow these funds at this time, I look forward to the time within the next four years when Canadians will have taken the initiatives, made the investments and created the jobs. In the future we will be in a position to say that our borrowing requirements will be dramatically diminished and that our economy is healthy once again.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, if small business is to have the kind of confidence that the Hon. Member indicated small business looks for in the way government operates, does she think it is wise for the Government to ask for borrowing authority for the next fiscal year when it has not presented its budget or spending plans for the next fiscal year? Does she think that is a responsible way for an individual or business to conduct their affairs?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, obviously we know in general terms what the budget will be for next year. We do not have all the details but these will be presented to the House in due course. But we have a pretty good understanding of what some of the fiscal requirements will be. It is prudent to have in place now the mechanisms by which we are ensured that we can have the money which, unfortunately, we will need to provide those services. I believe under the present circumstances, circumstances which we inherited and which I hope over the next four years will change, that we must take this action at this time.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins).

[English]

In prefacing my question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member, a fellow British Columbian, on her election.

My question concerns the policies of the Government of British Columbia and their relationship to the policies of this Government. We have had much of the same rhetoric, if I may use that word, from the Social Credit Government of British Columbia at the time it brought forward its economic master plan which resulted in terrible hardship for British Columbians, as the Hon. Member is well aware, in terms of loss of jobs and cutbacks of essential services. There is a great deal of increased hardship and suffering. There are line-ups at food banks in British Columbia like we have never seen before. That was a policy which put the deficit first and said that we had to restore business confidence, we had to cut the deficit, and then we will look after the unemployed. They were the same priorities that appear to be the priorities of the federal Conservative Government.

Does the Hon. Member support those policies of the Province of British Columbia? If not, can she indicate any distinction between those policies and the policies which her Government is now pursuing?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question by my near neighbour and colleague from British Columbia. As the Hon. Member knows, I am not privy to any of the policy-making discussions in British Columbia. I do not know the basis on which that government made its decisions.

I do not agree with the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on the reasons we are experiencing such economic difficulties in British Columbia. To my mind they are not coming about as a result of the government's policies, although the media might have people believe that. The difficulties we are experiencing in British Columbia are because of some fundamental difficulties in the resource industries which have traditionally been the basis of our economy, the forest industry particularly and the mining industry. As a result of lower international prices for our products, our inability in some cases to be competitive, we have not seen the kind of growth we should have. In fact we have seen the opposite. We have seen major cutbacks in those industries.

Perhaps my colleague recalls the report made by the B.C. Central Credit Union recently which indicates that the future for those industries still does not look too optimistic. We really cannot count on those industries to create the new jobs in British Columbia. Therefore, we must be looking at the development of alternatives, new kinds of industrial approaches, and new kinds of services.

The approaches that we are taking as a federal Government in cutting back and being fiscally responsible will send those signals to the private sector in British Columbia. This will assist private businessmen. They come to me every week when I am out there. They are the ones who will start to create those jobs and alternative industries in British Columbia which I hope and pray will bring back economic health to our province.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I am not asking the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) to comment on internal policy decisions by the provincial government. The Government of British Columbia has well known public positions with respect to its role in the economy and with respect to economic policy. I am asking the Hon. Member a straightforward, simple question. Is there any difference in theory or practice between the policy and philosophy of the Government of British Columbia and the policy and philosophy of the federal Conservative Government?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can elaborate. I am not familiar with the philosophy and policy of the Government of British Columbia as I am not privy to the discussions that go on in that sense. I will say to the Hon. Member that there is a vast difference in the approach, certainly by our Government, and I think that reflects back on our commitment to consultation. We have said that in the next four to five months before announcing any major changes in our policies with respect to our budget for next year we will be consulting all of the sectors of the economy which have an interest in, and will be affected by, such changes, the outline of which was given by the agenda of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for reform.

I have undertaken that in my constituency. I am consulting with the people involved in big business, small business, labour unions and women's groups to get their input and understanding of what direction we should be going as a government. That is the kind of approach we are taking as the federal Government which I think is vital to the success of our endeavours.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). First I agree it is true there is often waste and there is always a time to perfect what we already have in place. I believe her observation in that regard is sound. Saying no and saying stop under any and all circumstances merely to reduce the impact of the deficit is, I think, a very worrisome approach.

I suggest that not all women are in a position to start businesses or to find risk capital. I suggest the majority of women are working women. Does the Hon. Member not believe that the social costs of ignoring the Abella Report and establishing a policy of equality and employment is much more important in order to get people working than it is to reduce our deficit? We will then have increases in revenue through taxes.

Mrs. Collins: I would like to thank my hon. colleague, Mr. Speaker. She shares my great concern for the economic equality of women. I do not find the two principles inconsistent. I am as committed to ensuring there is economic equality for women in this great country as I am to ensuring that we have a fiscally sound government. I think we can work in both directions at the same time. I am presently reviewing the Abella Report. There are many excellent ideas that have been put forward. I am not sure which of those should be implemented first. I think there will be a period of study and discussion with women's groups across the country as we proceed. I know we share the basic and same premise of working toward the advancement of women and the equality of women in all sectors of our economy.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, while the Hon. Member for Capilano is in the process of studying the implications and the application, I hope, of the Abella Report, would she not perhaps see to it that a better application of existing law might be put into effect, particularly with respect to the study that was done and with respect to the pilot projects undertaken by Treasury Board? These indicated that with mandatory affirmative action one can see better results in government.

Mrs. Collins: That is right, Mr. Speaker. I will be glad to discuss these issues with my colleagues in the Ministries and to assure myself of what is the most appropriate way of going forward. As I have mentioned before, I am not a great advocate of legislated or mandatory affirmative action. I would like to see us working toward a co-operative approach with agencies, but if that does not work and there is a true indication that nothing will happen, obviously we will have to look at alternatives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now terminated. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). However, it is now four o'clock, and it being four o'clock the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Member's Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. 24, stand by unanimous consent.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) were present, I think we would be prepared to go ahead with his Bill dealing with the National Capital Commission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) is not here. Therefore we will just carry on. No. 25, stand by unanimous consent; No. 26, stand by unanimous consent; No. 27, stand by unanimous consent.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) were present and wanted to go ahead with his Bill, I am sure that the House would be delighted to deal with it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) is not in the House. Therefore we will carry on.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would request the unanimous consent of the House, in order to facilitate matters, that we proceed at this time to Bill C-201.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is private Members' hour and it is just a travesty to call off these items. It is my information that there is no other Private Member's Bill ahead of mine which is prepared to proceed. I certainly accede to the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) that, regardless of House Leaders and Parliamentary Secretaries, the time will not run out before I am able to have the floor and the question will be deferred under the provisional rules until Monday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I agree with the Hon. Member but there is not unanimous consent. I will ask for unanimous consent again. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), for his own gain on his own Bill, has decided to force us into a position on which there had been some agreement among House Leaders, I propose that we continue on in the orderly disposition of the business until we reach his Bill, Bill C-201. He is the one who has caused this, not I.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. 51, stand by unanimous consent.

Mr. Benjamin: Dispense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. 52, stand by unanimous consent?

Mr. Nickerson: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. 56, stand by unanimous consent?

Mr. Nickerson: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. 57, stand by unanimous consent.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I think this is really an abuse of the time and the procedures of the House. The Government has said that it would consult. It is a great one to say that. It has not consulted with its Members. We are prepared to go to Bill C-201 instead of being so silly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have no choice but to carry on. No. 57, stand by unanimous consent?

Mr. Nickerson: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. 58, stand by unanimous consent?

Mr. Nickerson: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. 59, stand by unanimous consent?

Mr. Nickerson: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. 60, stand by unanimous consent?

Mr. Nickerson: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. 61, by unanimous consent; No. 62, by unanimous consent; No. 63, by unanimous consent; No. 64, by unanimous consent; No. 65, by unanimous consent.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If it is in order, I move that we now proceed to Bill C-201.

Mr. Rodriguez: I second it.

Mr. Benjamin: It will be seconded by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member please give the Chair the motion in writing?

Mr. Dick: That will be a debatable motion, of course.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A government which is committed to parliamentary reform and to recognizing and enhancing the rights of Private Members is making a travesty of those rights this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. There is a motion in front of the Chair. It is moved by Mr. Benjamin, seconded by Mr. Rodriguez, that the House proceed to debate Bill C-201. All those in favour, please say "aye".

Some Hon. Members: "Aye".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those against, please say "nye"—nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Motion (Mr. Benjamin) agreed to.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I will be fairly brief.

Mr. Dick: No, no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member speaks, he closes off debate.

Mr. Dick: We have a speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. We can tell that this is Friday. Just one moment, please.

THE OFFICIAL DESIGNATION OF NOVA SCOTIA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, November 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nowlan that Bill C-201, an Act respecting the official designation of "Nova Scotia", be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) will be recognized.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great honour this afternoon to take part in the debate on this very important Bill C-201 which was introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan). To deal with such an important matter as the official designation of "Nova Scotia", I should first like to congratulate the Hon. Member on introducing this very important motion. Mr. Speaker, I know that you have had a very long and hard week, but I should like to describe to you how important this motion is.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It does not surprise me, but I am a little bewildered. When I had the floor, I asked that you read the Orders of the Day seriatim and you then could recognize another Member to speak on the Bill on which I asked to have the debate continued. It is my adjourned debate. I fully understand that if I speak, not to tie up the House but to speak for another three, for four or five minutes, I will close the debate and, therefore, the motion will be put. Under the provisional rules, the vote will take this motion is referred to the Justice Committee. You, Mr. Speaker, recognized me when I stood. You did not recognize the Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). Therefore I am very upset.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I appreciate what the Hon. Member is saying but the Table had not read the motion. I regret that. If there are other Members who wish to speak on this Bill, I must recognize them. If I have caused the Hon. Member any problem, I regret that. Other Members should have an opportunity to say a few words on this Bill. Therefore, I have recognized the Hon. Member for Timiskaming. I was reading off the other Bills and noticed the Hon. Member. How can I not notice the Hon. Member? I hope the Hon. Member will allow other Members to participate in this very important debate.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, Nova Scotia is my homeland. It is the area where I was born. My roots are there. I now live in the great riding of Timiskaming. When we talk about Nova Scotia, we talk about an area of the country that has a heritage and roots that I would like to describe to Hon. Members.

Northern Ontario is very much like Nova Scotia. In Nova Scotia there is coal mining, agriculture and forestry. There is also the fishing industry. It is an important area.

In 1947 I came into this world in Cape Breton, Inverness County, Port Hood. At that time my father had started his livelihood as a coal miner in the great Province of Nova Scotia. It is heartening to see a Member who has such great thoughts of his great province, who wants to make sure that his Bill is brought before Parliament to ensure that Nova Scotia is designated officially.

It is hard to start out on such an emotional debate, to be able to be here and to go back to my roots. So many people from Cape Breton and other parts of Nova Scotia over the years have had to leave their homeland to go to other parts of the country such as Toronto, Timiskaming and other parts of Canada. They never forget where they came from, they never forget their homeland. That is why it is so important for me today to speak to such an important motion.

This country is vast. Each one of us has a duty to work and to help. It is a pleasure to be here to help my colleague on such an important issue.

The great, great land of Nova Scotia has heritage and history. A great parliamentarian came from Nova Scotia, I. D. MacDougall, a great relative of mine. Needless to say, the area of politics and the MacDougall clan have been there for many years.

Mr. Cook: Tell us about MacDougall, MacDougall.

Mr. MacDougall: He was a great parliamentarian, an individual who fought for the beliefs of Cape Bretoners, the people of Nova Scotia and eastern Canada.

An Hon. Member: Was he a fisherman?

Mr. MacDougall: He was not a fisherman. He worked the land. He tried to bring his beliefs to the problems of the great area of eastern Canada.

Many individuals have had to leave the eastern part of Canada because of economic times to move to such places as northern Ontario. I know of the major problems in the coal mining industry over the years. Many people who worked in the coal mines had no choice but to move to northern Ontario, whether to the great riding of Nickel Belt, represented by my colleague opposite, Timmins-Chapleau, represented by my colleague to my left, or the riding of Timiskaming where gold, silver and nickel mining play such an important part. I know of the hard work and dedication of those miners over the years. They come from a great part of eastern Canada where the hard work of coal mining was so important and so vital to the area.

There are other areas of concern such as the tourist industry. The Cabot Trail plays an important part in the economy of eastern Canada. There is the great island of Cape Breton which we all like to visit once a year. If we are fortunate, we experience the great weather of eastern Canada.

It is a pleasure for me to speak today to Bill C-201. It shows the concern which my colleague has for his great province. It also give me an opportunity to speak on what I feel is an important part of Canada. I still have the blue blood of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton.

A couple of weeks ago I received a letter from a young constituent in Cape Breton, Port Hood. She is a Grade 11 student. She is very interested in the goings on of the House of Commons, the day to day activities, the committee work and the constituency work of a Member. I had the opportunity to draft a nice letter explaining how Members have to work in order to get elected, the eight-week campaign leading up to September 4, the opportunity to come into the House where for the first time in history we have 211 Members in the government Party. I indicated that there are 40 liberal members and 30 members of the New Democratic Party. I explained to her the duties we have to perform to bring around the economy of this country. I explained the detailed job we have to do because of the disastrous job done by the Liberal government.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am very glad that I have the assistance of my hon. friend, a transplant from Nova Scotia. However, I would like him to focus on my Bill, which is one paragraph. Is he in favour of the Latin name "Nova Scotia" or not?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is a point of debate.

Mr. MacDougall: I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to my colleague that I get emotionally caught up in this. It is not too often I have the opportunity to go back through history to the time when I started my life and developed my future the way I have. I would certainly be willing to support the Bill and emphasize my strong feelings in regard to it.

• (1620)

I would like to end by saying to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is very important for our young people to be able to communicate with each Member of Parliament. I say to each Member here today, on this last afternoon of the week, that if they have the opportunity to speak to a constituent from anywhere in Canada who is interested in the history and the day-to-day activities of the House of Commons and its committees or is interested in how Members have the opportunity of being elected, they should take the time to speak with them. We must remember that the young people of today are the Members of Parliament of tomorrow.

Mr. Nunziata: Liberal members.

Mr. MacDougall: I heard someone say "Liberal members". I am afraid to say that it will be many years before we see too many more of those on that side of the House.

In closing, I would like to say that it has given me great pleasure to be able to be present today, my duty day, to take part in debate on such a very important Private Member's Bill as the one presented by my colleague. I fully support Bill C-201 and hope it will pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognize the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), on a point of order or debate?

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): On debate, Mr. Speaker. I too rise in support of Bill C-201 put before the House by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan). The Bill should be referred to an appropriate standing committee.

Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) be now heard.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Benjamin: The motion is not debatable.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not believe that motion can be put until the completion of the speech of one speaker and prior to the recognition of a second speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: That was me. I was recognized.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must recognize that the motion is in order. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? All those in favour say "aye".

Some Hon. Members: "Aye."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those against say "nye".

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

In view of the fact that only two Members have risen, I find the motion defeated. Motion (Mr. Benjamin) defeated.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Your "ayes" rhyme with your "nyes".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No one asked for a division. Five Members did not rise.

Mr. Althouse: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. We thought you said the "ayes" had it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I said the nays had it. It is therefore—

Some Hon. Members: Re-do it!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have already done it. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin).

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It seems to me you must say to the House: "In my opinion, the nays have it".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I already said the yeas and the nays. I do not think we should be playing with semantics on a Friday afternoon. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Charlevoix.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The whole purpose of my Bill is semantics and the proper use of semantics, the proper use of language—

Designation of Nova Scotia

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that that is not a point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I have made a decision.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It would appear that there has been some difficulty with the transmission of sound in the Chamber. This is perhaps a question of privilege. The sound which I heard when the Speaker announced the motion was either that the "nyes" had it or that the "ayes" had it. I am not sure which it was but it was unclear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I did not say that. You might have misunderstood me but that is too bad. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I concur with the thoughts of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I too heard "nyes" and I was not clear as to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. I have already ruled. I would like to call upon the next speaker, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, some Hon. Members may not be overjoyed at hearing a discussion on semantics, a subject so dear to the heart of the Hon. Pat Nowlan, and which has a number of dimensions that are relevant to this country's official languages. To me, the word "Nouvelle-Écosse" has been a very real part of my vocabulary since my very early years, and when we were at school, "Nouvelle-Écosse" was a reality we knew. Of course, the Hon. Member, Pat Nowland, has this very interesting plan to use the latin word "Nova Scotia" and he is—

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I simply would like to remind the Hon. Member very gently, after all it is my birthday today—I hope you do not mind my saying so—but in any case, when referring to another member of this House, one does not use the Hon. Member's name but one says: the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The point is well taken. I would like to wish the Hon. Member a very happy birthday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Hamelin: Thank you. I am sure that in time, I will have your experience, and as they say, a man's worth does not necessarily depend on his years, and I expect to have plenty of opportunities for learning the rules of the House, and learning by heart—

Mr. Prud'homme: They also say that silence is golden.

Mr. Hamelin: Well I hope to speak often in the House and be elected as many times as I can, a bit like you yourself, sir—

To get back to Bill C-201, Mr. Speaker, which is aimed at substituting for the word "Nouvelle-Écosse", whenever it appears in statutes, regulations, reports, contracts, leases, permits, licences or other documents, the word "Nova Scotia". I think the repercussions are far greater than my hon. colleague would have it seem. I think it would be a very significant change for Quebecers and for all Canadian Francophones. Some terms are easily interchangeable, but, as was pointed out several times in the House in the course of the debate on the Hon. Member's bill, the term "Nouvelle-Écosse" has become part of our vocabulary and our whole way of life, and frankly, I think it would sound very odd to say that we were going to spend a holiday in "Nova Scotia", a term which for us has become associated with English, a language we respect and for which I have a great deal of admiration as a Canadian. I think that is basically where the problem lies.

There are indeed a number of terms that in the course of time have become practically bilingual. Others, however, have become associated with one language rather than another. As far as French Canada in general and Quebec in particular are concerned, I can assure the Hon. Member that the term "Nouvelle-Ecosse" is as firmly rooted in our vocabulary as Nova Scotia probably is in yours, because as far as I know, Anglophones do not refer to "New Scotland". In fact, the Latin term, and Latin is in fact an off shoot of Sanskrit from which Greek is derived and so we finally get to Latin which has provided the basis for our two languages . . . I would remind the Hon. Member that in the English language, for which I have a great affection, about seventy or eighty per cent of the words are French, although pronounced differently. And so we have here a Latin name which as a result of history has to all intents and purposes become an English word.

I repeat to my colleague that as far as we are concerned, "Nouvelle-Écosse", in French is the official name. This is one of the things we learn in school. It is in our history books, and there is nowhere any reference in our community or in our language, to "Nova Scotia". But there is reference everywhere to the beautiful province of "Nouvelle-Écosse".

I would ask my colleague to consider that, in effect, this is more than a simple semantic issue in Canada. If, in the past, in some of the English-speaking provinces certain geographical names have been in French, in most cases this has come about through a consensus, whether it is in the United States or in any English-Speaking province of Canada that such French names have survived. This has been done out of habit. It is part of the heritage of those communities in areas with such specific names.

Therefore, in our view, which surely is shared by all my French-speaking colleagues from Quebec, and probably from elsewhere in Canada, the name "Nova Scotia" could definitely never be substituted to the French name "Nouvelle-Écosse" in our language.

Let me stress that I appreciate the reasons why my colleague from Annapolis Valley-Hants introduced Bill C-201. I appreciate that it is important to him, in his language, that the name "Nova Scotia" be enshrined. However, it is my feeling that actually, in practice, it would be impossible for us to use in French the name "Nova Scotia", at least within the short term.

This Bill aimed at preserving the Latin name "Nova Scotia" is a little amazing to me. I would have no objections, my dear colleague, to using for instance another name in your language, were this to be the will of your constituents, of the people, in other words, or their tradition in your area. But as far as French-speaking people are concerned—on that Bill that points to the linguistic duality of our Canadian context and this is important—I must tell you that although I appreciate your reasons, and notwithstanding the use of other designations, either in French or in English, that may have been discussed in the past in this House, I feel that there are no grounds for suggesting that the name "Nova Scotia" might very easily be used in French. This would fly in the face of the historic evolution of our language and the name "Nouvelle-Écosse" is to us a commonly used name that we find in our dictionaries, in our tradition and in our ways of speaking.

However, I can somewhat understand the rationale for your presenting such a Bill. I believe that your intentions are serious, that this might be a way for your community and your province to assert their identity. I am quite certain of this, but in view of the basic Canadian duality and the absolute need to respect this French and English duality in Canada, I would invite you to reconsider your proposal and to be very noble about it. I also invite you to apply the principles which inspire our new administration, this new Government elected last September 4, responsible for promoting a spirit of cooperation and reconciliation. I believe that this major reconciliation will occur among French and English-speaking Canadians—

[English]

All together. We will work together. We want to work together.

[Translation]

And I believe that the participation of my hon. colleague is important. I quite understand his firm desire to assert the cultural identity of his province. I understand this quite well, I accept it and I find it meaningful, encouraging, and—

An Hon. Member: You are being very nice!

Mr. Hamelin: I thank you for these words. In addition, Mr. Speaker, and of course I must always address you, but I am learning quickly, I see a Member who was not here a while earlier. In any case, I shall learn quickly, Mr. Speaker. But there, he has left. That is too bad; I could have shown him how quickly I am learning. Nevertheless, I can wish him a happy birthday. Today was his birthday. He has probably gone to celebrate.

To come back to my colleague, who wishes to assert this important cultural identity, we have an opportunity with 58 Members from Quebec and other French-speaking Members from other provinces to achieve this impossible dream—

[English]

The impossible dream.

—which is Canada. This is an impossible dream, an ideal to be attained and we have the good luck to be members of a truly national party where we shall all respect one another, and I am certain that you yourself will make the necessary effort to ensure that this linguistic duality will become something positive and important for our community. I believe that you shall make the necessary efforts, and we shall do the same in spite of our own will to assert ourselves.

I want to point out that my position is also positive. I want the term "Nouvelle-Ecosse" to be kept in my language. This is now part of my culture. You are from "Nova Scotia", from "Nouvelle-Ecosse", but for me, you are part of Canada and of my culture. Indeed, it seems to me that there are people in your region—

Forgive me, Mr. Speaker, my comments are addressed to you. However, my colleague for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) is showing so much understanding on this issue that I cannot avoid thinking occasionally that he must appreciate my comments on his Bill. As I was saying, there are also francophones in Nova Scotia, and during the all too few trips that I have made to this province I have noticed that French-speaking people in the area also use the term "Nouvelle-Écosse". They do not say "Nova Scotia", except when they switch languages and speak English. They also do the same in English, or at least a few of them do because there are still many people who speak like that.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a great pleasure for me to speak to this motion, for I appreciate indeed the relevance of the nearly cultural remarks made on this subject by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants. Instead of voicing my opposition, I would again extend to him an open and cordial invitation so that we might all work together. I repeat, for once we have a unique opportunity.

History will record that outstanding reconciliation endeavour, perhaps through the expression "Nova Scotia", but the French words "Nouvelle-Écosse" will add a new dimension, and I should say to my colleague that his remarkable understanding of this issue will enable all of us—

Mr. Prud'homme: I do have that impression.

Mr. Hamelin: —will enable all of us—my Hon. colleague from Saint-Denis will have to admit that I am improving, Mr. Speaker—to live together through a unique experience in the next twenty years, all of us together in a better Canada, in Nouvelle-Écosse as in all the other provinces of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Richelieu.

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): I would like to stress that taking the floor after my colleague who spoke with such eloquence is somewhat of a challenge for me, because he has summed up exactly how Quebecers feel about this bill. Since time immemorial, we in Quebec have used . . . I can still recall grade school when we used the name "Nouvelle-Écosse", because in the beginning, in the 17th century, many francophones lived there and still do now, and they are as attached to that name as they are to the region, their religion and their mother tongue, and many memories were passed from father to son. They were educated in French. They still are, and they still claim rights which will eventually be given to them. Those people of Nova Scotia, those residents of Nova Scotia who speak French see a very close link between their existence and the French name "Nouvelle-Écosse." Naturally, the Hon. Member who moved this motion wants to keep the Latin name. Unfortunately, if we were to use the latin name — for francophones, it happens to be the same as the English name — we might very well raise serious doubts about our lengthy struggles for bilingualism and the mutual respect of two peoples that are beginning to live in harmony, I think, as the previous speaker so aptly emphasized.

I have often visited that beautiful province as a tourist, on holidays, and even some anglophones I met would use the French name when referring to Nova Scotia, claiming that the French name was the one they had heard first. This, of course, serves to remind our students, at least in Quebec, that the majority of the people living in that province at one time spoke French . . . many Canadians who speak only French, in Quebec and some parts of Ontario for instance, always say "Nouvelle-

Écosse" and do not even know the expression "Nova Scotia". The use of this new name for them would therefore be felt as a sort of reconsideration of bilingualism, as my hon. friend said earlier; not only a reconsideration, but a step backward. They would understand that something is being taken away from them, a name which belongs to their heritage, which is part of their culture, which their families use in their daily lives, although the argument on the basis of the Latin expression could be justified. Many Canadians who do not use English at work and in their daily life would therefore be surprised to be deprived of the French name, and I am not sure they would understand that the idea is to return to the Latin name.

Your fine province might even suffer economically as a consequence of the elimination of the beautiful French name "Nouvelle-Écosse", because many tourists visit your area every summer to enjoy your magnificent beaches, just as I did myself on three of four occasions.

Many Quebecers travel to that province to visit members of the armed forces who are stationed there in large numbers. They might find the change of name disturbing. Tourism might be adversely affected, not to mention the economy.

I ask you to reconsider your objection as did my colleague earlier. Some people like the French name of your fine province. They are more familiar with that name in my own province. They have been used to it for years. They would not understand a return to the Latin name since the name "Nouvelle-Écosse" does not take away anything but gives to your area the additional characteristic of a bilingual name which makes people from both cultures feel at home. Not only would that bill be prejudicial to francophones in your own province, it could create an unfortunate impression with the French-speaking population abroad. In addition, it could have a negative effect on the people of Quebec who travel to your province each summer.

I think that there are sufficient grounds to review the bill and to withdraw it. It would be considered a significant move by French-speaking Canadians, and it would be harmful to that fine policy of bilingualism in effect for several years. When I am in Ottawa, thanks to simultaneous translation, I can hear distinguished speakers quote Shakespeare as well as former prime ministers such as Macdonald. I am pleased that you allow me to speak sometimes and quote Molière and Racine, the great French authors as well as some comments by Hon. Members from Quebec. This sacred advantage should not be weakened. Such action is not perceived by me as being directed against us but it could be in some quarters. I feel that it is too touchy an issue dealing with bilingualism when a new party has just come into power with a majority in the ten provinces. A majority for the same party in the ten provinces is an unprecedented record!

There is a national consensus whereby this party represents a change, a new direction in the way this country is governed. Should this bill pass, it might jeopardize this whole policy, which could be construed as a division, perhaps, within Parliament. I think we have worked together for too long, I would even say that we have fought together for too long in order to enjoy two cultures, so that our children may be educated in both official languages and appreciate Shakespeare as much as Molière, as I said earlier, which has not been the case for us.

I dare not speak in English in this House yet for fear of offending a few ears, but thanks to the English classes I take regularly, you can be sure that within a year, I will be pleased to address this House in your language, the same way almost all the English-speaking members take French classes in order to communicate better. There is a will, a reality, a desire to be friendly and to live together, and we should ensure that such a small incident, for instance, like trying to change the French name of such a beautiful province as Nova Scotia may be wrongly interpreted by the public or by some people in the province, even in Quebec. Indeed, changing that French name would probably be considered a regressive step as far as bilingualism is concerned or the respect for both our communities which get along together in this House as well as throughout Canada, willing to carry on in this way for many years to come.

Therefore I ask you, my dear colleague, to reconsider this proposal to change, to remove the name "Nouvelle-Écosse", and to continue to live in harmony with those beautiful designations we have for this province.

The experience we have been living for a few years with bilingualism, with the reform of the Constitution which was achieved, demonstrates a desire throughout Canada to see, as my colleague said, both cultures thrive as equal in the greatest respect. Again such a little incident could be misinterpreted.

Even if I understand very well the mover's motives, I would like him to reconsider this proposal.

I will not take any more of the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, to enable other Hon. Members to express their views. I know that many speakers want to do so on this Friday afternoon, and I will give them a chance, but I wanted to indicate that I disagree with that proposal to remove the designation of "Nouvelle-Écosse", precisely to avoid affecting the beautiful link which unites both cultures represented by the majority in this House.

[English]

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity to speak for the first time in Private Members' hour in the Thirty-third Parliament. I would like to thank my friend and colleague, the Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), for giving me this opportunity.

Last year about this same time I was fortunate enough to be in the House when the Hon. Member brought forward a similar Bill. I was impressed then by his eloquence and the deep feeling with which he spoke of his province and how he felt it was so important to bring this particular Bill forward. I was impressed by his logic. I was impressed then and I am now. I was not in the House this year but I did have the opportunity to listen to his speech on the television in my office. I listened carefully because he argues well and with passion.

It may well be that many Members of the House are not familiar with what the Bill is all about. Perhaps, with the Speaker's permission, I could read the contents of the Bill. First, it is in the first session of the Thirty-third Parliament. It is a very small Bill, only two paragraphs, but it is an important Bill. The Bill is entitled Bill C-201, an Act respecting the official designation of "Nova Scotia". It reads:

> Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:
> 1. This Act may be cited as The Official Designation of Nova Scotia Act.

Clause 2 is the meat of the Bill. This is what is intended by the Act. It reads:

> 2. In every place where the words "Nova Scotia" appear in any Act, regulation, statutory instrument, report, contract, lease, licence or other document the proper designation of such name in both official languages is and shall be "Nova Scotia".

This Bill may be short but it is very far-reaching and has great significance. I feel that I have an appreciation of the problems involved. I do not come from Nova Scotia like the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). I come from a place called the Okanagan Valley. We have heard from central Canada, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces on this issue, so I think it is time we heard from western Canada on this Bill.

The Okanagan Valley is in central British Columbia. The Hon. Member comes from the Annapolis Valley. These places have two things in common: they both grow very good apples. The Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants is nodding. At one time he had the courtesy to say that, although we both grow apples, perhaps we make better apple cider. I hope all Members have an opportunity to test that observation some day. Therefore, I feel I have some right to speak on this Bill this afternoon because we have that much in common.

Perhaps we have more than that in common. My children's maternal grandparents both came from Nova Scotia. Their maternal grandfather came from Antigonish. That is the home of the very famous university, St. Francis Xavier. I am proud to say that two of my children have gone to that university. I have some more interesting facts. My children's maternal grandfather began a newspaper called the Casket. It still exists and is the local newspaper in Antigonish.

The Member for Timiskaming spoke about Cape Breton earlier. My children's maternal grandmother came from an unlikely place called Myra's Gut. I see the Member is nodding. He recognizes that as a very fine small community. Therefore, with some justification and authority I can speak on this Bill because I too have a great love and affection for Nova Scotia, as I am sure all the Members of the House have. It has played a very important part in our history.

However, while I agree with the content of the Bill, it does not go far enough. The Hon. Member who spoke earlier mentioned the cost. This Bill proposes to change the name in every Act, regulation, statutory instrument, report, contract, licence, lease or other document. The cost of that would be prohibitive. We are now in a period of restraint. We are all being asked to cut back and put up with a little less than we would normally have. That is why we are doing the Member a service by postponing this Bill until another time when we are better able to bear the underlying cost which is inherent in the Bill.

I do not want to go into the constitutional problems, but I am sure that my friend from Annapolis Valley-Hants is aware of the difficulties in that regard. Mr. Speaker, I note the time and I would call it five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' business has now expired. May I add that November 30 is a memorable day. As the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert used to say, Parliament lives.

It being five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—BUDGETARY CUT BACKS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques) moved, seconded by Mr. Ouellet:

That this House regrets that, after less than three months in office, the Government is in growing disarray as demonstrated by its harmful, inadequately considered and irresponsible cuts in government services of importance to the economic and social development of the regions and of individual Canadians as well as by Ministers' apparent inability to manage their departments and their relations with the provinces and with the public.

He said: The Opposition motion you just read, Mr. Speaker, and you did so very well I may add, may seem unduly severe, condemning the Government for various measures taken since it came to power, during the three months it has been in office.

I, for one, do not think the motion is too severe, and I shall try to demonstrate that during the few minutes I am allowed.

This morning, I would like to show the House the dire results of the last three months, which have brought us a succession of cutbacks the magic word which, according to the Progressive Conservatives is supposed to be the cure for all our ills, but unfortunately, has brought no positive results and has managed to please no one.

In my comments, I also would like to mention the negative impact of several of these cutbacks on Canada's remote areas which, for the most part, are economically vulnerable and stand to suffer most from the budgetary cutbacks of this Government.

I shall also comment on the inability of some Ministers to manage their departments and finally, about the impression given that some Ministers are resorting to all kinds of tactics instead of dealing with the problems confronting Canadians.

I shall also comment briefly on this Government's less than satisfactory record in its relations with the provinces of our Canadian federation.

Finally, I intend to prove that to this day, Canadians have not been able to benefit from a single measure introduced by this Government. Canadians have been told to wait and that better days will come tomorrow. Meanwhile, cutbacks are the order of the day.

Suppose we consider the past three months. First of all, we have a Government that promised Canadians the earth, making about 338 promises during the election campaign, and that has now failed to come up with any concrete measures to keep those promises, a Government that, it must be said, was elected with a tremendous majority and now resembles an elephant that has been incapable of bringing forth so much as a mouse.

None of the promises the Government made are so much as starting to materialize, and the people who gave this Government a blank cheque are wondering how it is going to proceed to keep some of its promises.

Mr. Speaker, this is a Government that has resolutely turned its back on many of the ideas it was championing when its Members were crisscrossing the country during the election campaign, telling Canadians, for instance, that social programs would be protected, that it was a "sacred trust", as they said. Now nothing is certain. Cuts have been made in programs like housing which are certainly social in nature. We are not sure what this Government is going to do to the universality of social programs, and in the final instance, this so-called "sacred trust", which was one of the cornerstones of the Progressive Conservative program, may not be so sacred anymore.

This Government talked constantly about open government. They told Canadians: Get rid of the Liberals who put a veil of secrecy over everything. And where is this open government today? I will get back to that later. We have now reached a point where the Progressive Conservative Government, after promoting open government, is now keeping everything under wraps. Practically no announcements are made, and guidelines have been issued that have made public servants feel less free to communicate with the media and with Canadians in general.

Finally, we have here a political party that during the last election campaign made employment and job creation one of its main themes.

We now find ourselves in a situation where funding for job creation programs has been slashed. As far as the jobs are concerned, we will get them next year, they have been promised for fiscal year 1985-86. I should think that most Canadians, particularly the unemployed, realize by now that the new Conservative government is like a balloon that burst, it did not simply deflate, it burst. The government appears to have a secret agenda, and that ought to worry all Canadians. What we already know is bad enough, but we are more concerned about what we do not know and will never know, since public servants can no longer speak as freely as they did before. In a nutshell, so far the government has given every indication of being totally confused, disoriented and unorganized. Let us hope it will soon get back on the right track.

The one thing we know for sure, Mr. Speaker, is that the government has decided to make drastic cutbacks in public outlays. Unfortunately, such cutbacks are bound to hurt and, for now, the outlook is not very promising for unemployed Canadians, nearly bankrupt farmers and small and medium-size businesses which had expected the new government to help them be more productive and more competitive. Those cutbacks are particularly distressing for young people, for example, because the new Conservative government had raised their hopes by promising to find jobs for them.

What kind of scenario have we had since the Conservative government took office, in the three months since it has taken over?

First, the Summer Canada job creation program for youths will not be funded next summer. That was one of the most constructive measure to create temporary employment needed by students during summer. No, Sir, that program no longer exists, it has been cancelled, as were others which gave young Canadians a fighting chance to retrain and try to land a job. Similar existing programs have also been shelved. That is a rather sad comment on a government whose priority was to create jobs. The way I see it, they are doing the exact opposite of what they had promised. And young people are not alone in this predicament, for cutbacks strike elsewhere. Let us take environment, for example. The Canadian Wildlife Service budget has been reduced considerably and this issue has been raised several times in the House by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who usually sits to my immediate left, in questions to the Minister of Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), but unfortunately they have remained unanswered.

And then, the budget of cultural organizations which have been the prime target of the new Conservative government. As we know, the CBC will have to do with $75 million less. What needs to be emphasized, Mr. Speaker, is that the $75 million cutback is for 1985-86 alone. It is not a $75 million reduction spread over the three-year Conservative mandate. In answer to one of my questions a few days ago, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) did say that the smaller CBC budget for next year will be the starting point for the following budgets. In other words, we are looking at a $75 million cutback in each of the three years of the Conservative mandate—which, hopefully, will not be extended—or $225 million less for the CBC over a three-year period.

Hon. Members are aware as well that other government organizations—The National Film Board, the Canada Council, the CRTC and the National Arts Centre, four organizations which have had their overall budgets reduced by $10 million. Here again, of course, those $10 million are for the coming year, but since the Minister of Communications has confirmed that those cutbacks are likely to be a permanent fixture, we are in fact talking about $30 million less for those four organizations during the mandate of the government.

A word now about programs designed to promote social housing. Is there something more necessary in our society, something more helpful? For instance, residential rehabilitation, low rent housing, the survival and development of cooperative housing projects . . . the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation will have to manage with $47 million less. Needless to say, Hon. Members have been getting phone calls from people in every region of Canada who have a direct interest in social housing and who are deeply concerned about those cutbacks.

Cutbacks have also taken place in the field of health research. I have in my hand a list which comes from a well-known Canadian business newspaper but because it is in fine print and therefore it would take more time than I have available to me. Instead, I shall let my seatmate read it while I make my comments.

There were some very important programs designed to save money to individuals and to conserve Canadian oil supplies. For instance, as of next January 1 there will be a cutback in the Canadian Home Insulation Program as well as in the Oil Substitution Program which offered grants to assist homeowners in their conservation effort switching from an oil heating system to electricity, natural gas or other types of fuel. These were extremely useful programs in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) decided in his wisdom that cuts and reductions should be made. In fact, these cuts will affect everyone especially middle income Canadians.

Moreover, the government will not stop there. It seems that more bad news are in store as a result of the announcement made by the Minister of Finance that further cuts should be expected in his budget, which is to be brought down either next spring or next June: the exact date has not been set yet. However, we already know that there will be more cuts. In other words, the worst is yet to come.

[English]

The worst is yet to come. What this Government has done, after promising jobs during the election, has been to start with several cuts in job creation programs and then promise a billion dollars in job creation. We do not know how that will be spent; we have no details so far. After having read the documents and listened to the Minister, we know that this billion dollars will be spent next year. In other words, job creation programs are now being cut. This will put more people out on the street. People are being told to tighten their belts now and that they will get a job in a year from now. That is not being serious, especially for a Government elected on a job creation mandate.

The worst of it is the fact that the impact of these cuts will be felt in the regions, and this will occur in many fields, especially the field of culture which I mentioned earlier, the research activities of the Wildlife Service, and so on. Let us look at the CBC cuts, for instance. We already know that these will affect regional and local programming, which has always played second fiddle in any case. We are all aware that the bulk of CBC expenditures goes to major urban centres in Canada, such as Toronto and Montreal. Therefore, any cuts will greatly affect the regions.

The regions will also be affected by cuts being made in the area of transport. We already know that certain ferry services will be reduced or their schedules shortened for the winter months in the Maritimes, and we all know what is the situation in Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, which are isolated islands in need of such services. I find this absolutely awful, especially since the government certainly did not brag about taking such action during the election campaign when its representatives, led by the Prime Minister, went to the Atlantic Provinces and made 338 promises to the residents of that region.

Let us now examine the case of Quebec. The critic for the Treasury Board has already stated that those cuts will cost about $700 million to Quebec. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) did refer to this during the oral question period and he is reviewing the issue. The people of Quebec will not be able to absorb the costs of these cutbacks. This is why one of the questions that we ask the government is this: Where can we find the money to replace these lost funds? And what I am asking myself is this: What will the 58 new Progressive Conservative Members from Quebec do to ensure that the economic position of Quebec is protected?

Will they let this Government slash to that extent the major grants and expenditures intended for Quebec that are now being cut? They are rather silent, except to applaud when their party's tenors rise in this House. I look forward to hearing what those Members, those new Members from Quebec, will do in defence of the people they represent.

One of the things that strike me most is the difficulty some ministers seem to experience in managing their departments and putting forward certain programs and proposals. It is not for lack of advice because each and every ministers' office has a "super executive assistant", a so-called political advisor who would be better named "political commissar", with a salary reaching up to $80,000 a year. Hence we would have thought that the ministers would be expertly advised, that their departments would be efficiently managed and that everything would run better than under the previous government, which the Conservatives are constantly criticizing. However, we cannot say this Government is any great shakes. With officials who can no longer communicate with the people, nor the media . . . We have seen the guidelines which require an official, when giving information, to be quoted by name. This is a pretty way of imposing the rule of silence. And they went to the trouble, Mr. Speaker, of having a press conference just for that in the Press Club across the street! Really it takes gall, under the guise of providing a new access to information, to put forward—in a clever way I must admit—guidelines designed to restrict the already restricted freedom of officials to give information to the media and the public.

Interestingly, maybe that was the reason why the Prime Minister last Friday went out of his way to have lunch in the Press Club. I saw him, I was there. It was probably in an attempt to bridge the chasm that the new Conservative Government has opened between itself and the media with those new guidelines. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if the Government were more open with the people, the Prime Minister would not have to resort to flirting with the media at the Press Club. It is not by having lunch there and being all smiles that he will manage to be in the best of terms with the media people. All they are asking for is clear information on the Government's intentions. If they get that, there will be no need to go and wheedle them. They will be satisfied with the Government. However, that does not seem to be forthcoming.

When information comes to the surface and gets to the public ear, it is because of errors. When, for instance, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) forgets a file in Winnipeg. Then we learn something of the Government's intentions, but this is by no means with the Finance Minister's agreement. Under a government that is committed to openness, we now have to rely on accidents in order to be informed of the Government's intentions. By accident, such as when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) sends out a cassette on which he had dictated in his office that we learn what is going to happen in Central America.

It certainly is not through well-established Government policy that we get information, but by accident. At times we get it at the wrong moment. We have a Solicitor General who gives out details of an investigation that is under way, and then rises in this House to say he never did so. One of my colleagues has already asked questions on that matter, and he will surely do so again. Then they volunteer information at the wrong moment and when people require information, they cannot make up their minds to say what they intend to do. I think I know why, Mr. Speaker; it is because these people have no clear idea of what they are going to do. They wonder how to go about implementing what they promised during the last election. And this is why they hide everything under the veil of secrecy.

I wonder, for instance, what will happen in the area of federal-provincial relations. I wonder whether the episode with the Manitoba Minister of Finance is just a sample. Our minister met his counterpart, the Manitoba Minister of Finance, to review the transfer formula. As I said earlier, by accident we heard that the Province of Manitoba would probably lose its $72 million in transfer payments. And better still, when that meeting was held, it was taped by someone in the Minister's Office. Can you imagine that? I suggest this government's manipulation of information is unacceptable and a source of great concern. I shall leave to some of my colleagues to examine in depth a number of its actions.

For now, I pause and urge my fellow Canadians to think it over and ask themselves whether this government, from the moment it assumed power and started to operate, has been delivering to them what they should rightfully expect. To me, the answer is a clear and resounding no. I urge them also to watch this government closely to make sure that it keeps its election promises and that it is truly addressing the problems we are faced with. In the meantime, I cannot help but be dissatisfied with this government, and that is why I have moved today this motion which at first sight might seem harsh but which will receive the support of many Hon. Members of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member?

[Translation]

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) claimed at the beginning of his remarks that the government had made major and even drastic cuts in the social programs. He mentioned, among others, those in the area of social housing. Could he name the other social programs where cuts have been made?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, in order to enumerate these programs, we must rely on the information provided by the Government. I must say that the information has been rather meagre. I indicated in my speech that one of our greatest difficulties with this Government is trying to find out what is going on. So far, in the long list of cuts which I have here, the only sure thing with regard to social programs is the $47 million cut in the area of housing. We are experiencing much difficulty trying to ascertain what is going to happen to the rest of them, although when we examine the total envelope which the Government has at its disposal, we realize that $4.2 billion must be cut and as the Government is already committed to cutting transfers both to individuals and the provinces in the area of established programs, it is operating in a sort of straight jacket, and if it wants to cut $4.2 billion, it will have start somewhere. We expect the Minister of Finance will provide us with full details . . . I already have tons of information in several areas, but I do not have quite as much in the social area. All I have so far concerns social housing. But I feel it is already significant.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there other questions or comments relating to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques?

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques referred in his motion to uneasy relations between this Government and the provinces. How does he see our relations with the Quebec Government?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): When I said that the Government had rather peculiar relations with the provinces, it seemed clear enough to me. I imagine that the Hon. Member reads newspaper reports as much as I do and that he attends from time to time the oral question period. Can you imagine that Manitoba which is hardly one of the richest provinces in Canada since it receives substantial equalization payments, will probably—it is not a sure thing yet because negotiations are going on—have them reduced by $72 million.

As far as Quebec is concerned, how will the Prime Minister get along with Mr. Lévesque? It is hard to tell, but you may be sure, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Lévesque will come with a rather long shopping list. He will not be asking for peanuts. We will then find out if the honeymoon of a sort which the PQ and the Progressive Conservative Party have enjoyed since the last election will endure. Do not ask me how those talks will develop. One thing I know is that there are some rather hefty cuts in the Quebec programs and Mr. Lévesque will not be arriving in Ottawa with a big smile on his face. How will things turn out? Everyone is anxious to know.

And if relations or rather talks with Quebec are handled as skilfully as with Manitoba, watch out for the fireworks.

• (1130)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any other comments or questions on the speech of the Hon. Member? If not, we shall resume debate.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to enter into this debate. By way of reference, after reading the motion of the Hon. Member opposite I was prompted to reflect that this Government regrets that, after less than three months in office, the Opposition is in growing disarray. One would have thought that such a small group of people could get their act together quickly but all we have seen is a rerun of the last election campaign.

The previous Prime Minister has suggested that if he had run he could have won. The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), or for Main Street or Bay Street, or wherever he is now from, suggested he could have done better. The present Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) suggested that he had to run because there was no one else. So I believe it is fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that the disarray is basically over on the opposition side.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Do not include us!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You make the Liberals look good!

Mr. Lewis: With respect to comments made by the Hon. Member regarding what is bizarre, I suggest that perhaps one of the most bizarre relationships existing in this country is the relationship the federal Liberal Party has with the provincial Liberal Party in the Province of Quebec. I believe that all of us are enjoying the way that one is breaking down for the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

I am astonished when I see the obvious contradictions contained in the motion introduced by the Opposition. For instance, on the one hand this motion states that the government has been in office, for a short time, namely less than three months, and on the other hand, it accuses the same government of lacking judgment or of being in disarray. There is a contradiction in terms. After such a short time, it is improper to make this kind of accusation. Up to a point, it even reflects some disarray on the side of the Opposition.

[English]

Mr. Ouellet: We should applaud the Hon. Member for his French.

Mr. Lewis: I think you ought to applaud the translator.

Second, the motion seems to imply that Ministers are having a tough time in coming to grips with their departmental responsibilities. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that nothing could be farther from the truth. I can assure Hon. Members of this House that all Ministers of the Crown have a good grip on their responsibilities in their respective Departments. I believe it is fair to say that all Ministers and their staff have been taking a measured, intelligent, thorough and wide-ranging approach in becoming conversant with the issues and views of all those people concerned and in carrying out the mandate and programs of the various Departments.

The Ministers are not just satisfied to read their background material, they carry on consultations with experts in the private sector, businessmen and ordinary Canadians whose life and livelihood can be affected by Government programs.

[English]

It is evident, Mr. Speaker, from the seating arrangements in this Chamber that this Government was elected with a strong nation-wide mandate for improvement and change. I point out that it is a mandate which does not stop at one provincial border. It is interesting that both opposition parties have mandates which stop at certain provincial borders. I feel it is important to demonstrate to the House that our mandate sweeps across the country.

While the process of change and improvement has begun with the Speech from the Throne and the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the first evidence of change has been a carefully balanced and realistic approach to government. Our initial broadly-based expenditure review has a number of important objectives. First, it is aimed at promoting growth and employment. It attempts to treat all regions of the country as equitably as possible under the circumstances and at the same time ensure that those who are in need are not unduly affected. Government objectives honour existing commitments with provincial governments and others, and fulfil our pledges. A careful examination of the whole range of programs, subject to expenditure reduction and revenue recovery, clearly shows that these objectives have been met as fairly and humanely as possible in the time available.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that we are dealing with a global situation in trying to reduce government expenditures, yet it impacts differently on each riding of the Hon. Members of this House. For example, in my riding there has been a move by the Government to stop funding a scientific interpretation centre at the Wye Marsh. This is one of five interpretation centres across the country. I must admit, Sir, that I am receiving a great deal of mail from the people of my riding. However, I believe we must point out to the country—and I have pointed it out to my constituents—that there is a difference between the present Government and the former government in the way this is being done. There are five interpretation centres being shut down across Canada, and all of those centres are in Conservative ridings. The move was based upon the principle that the federal Government should get out of the interpretation business, that this should be handled by non-governmental organizations or by the provinces. The move taken by the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) has basically been accepted on the broad scale. In my riding there are some difficulties but we are receiving complete co-operation from the Minister of the Environment in looking at ways in which it could be taken over by non-governmental organizations. I feel that is the key. Perhaps we could put a user-pay concept to it rather than making it free. That is the kind of examination which is being conducted.

We are coming to this House with clean hands in that the decision was based on principle. It was not done in the way of the last government where there would be cuts in Tory ridings and initiatives in Liberal ridings based on pure politics. Our reductions are based on principle which makes it much easier for all Hon. Members of this House to support them.

[Translation]

Of course, people will be affected by these changes in the near or distant future and in various ways. However, it should be emphasized that the Progressive Conservative Party has made a commitment to reduce the deficit without bringing about a major increase in taxes.

[English]

The platform of our Party, Mr. Speaker, as clearly stated during the election campaign, is that the fundamental priority of a federal Government led by the Progressive Conservative Party would be to improve the way government works.

If we consider the various types of reductions in expenditures, Mr. Speaker, we find that we shall be recovering $700 million by reducing general costs and implementing general restrictions. We have to put some order in our taxation system before asking our fellow citizens to take us on trust.

Our party also said that the primary purpose of a Progressive Conservative Government would be to give our Canadian unemployed their jobs back. We added, because there is no doubt in our mind about it, that job opportunities for our unemployed would improve only as a result of a lasting economic recovery.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to remind you that the previous Government was going to cut the funds allocated to direct job creation in 1985-86.

We are now building the necessary framework which will equally attract new investments and create new jobs.

We believe that we are establishing a climate of confidence which will be favourable to business and good for investment. We believe, Mr. Speaker, and the private sector seems to agree with us, that the Government is moving in the right direction both in its policies and its intentions.

● (1140)

[English]

We do not believe that everything should be done by the Government. Surely a reliance on a healthier private sector and an enduring economic recovery is the most advantageous regime under which Canada can thrive. Canadians from all ten provinces have placed an onerous charge on this Government to do just that and I believe the pools would indicate that Canadians are not disappointed by our progress so far. However, they expect more and I can assure them that they will not be disappointed.

I have pointed out the expenditure reductions that we have made. I suggest that the significance of those reductions should not be underestimated. We have identified some $4.2 billion in expenditure savings and revenue increases. This includes some $2.8 billion in spending reductions. We have used $1.4 billion of the gross savings for special initiatives which will help the economy get going again and take care of disadvantaged groups which have been adversely affected in the past.

Moreover, the remaining $2.8 billion will be applied to reduce the cash requirements of the Government. Of this, $2.2 billion is a direct contribution to reducing the deficit. In fact, this $2.2 billion is a downpayment on the deficit's reduction. More important than the mathematics of that downpayment is the signal we are sending to the private sector, to our trading partners and to our investors, both foreign and domestic, that the Government is seriously committee to deficit reduction as a principal method of restoring sound economic health. The Government's Ministers have been travelling abroad to meet with foreign business people and investors to explain our Government's policies and direction. I would suggest that they have been favourably received.

It is not just Canada that understands the importance of coming to grips with the deficit and government spending. It is a realization that is world-wide. Canada, with its new Government and new mandate, is leading the way in coming to grips with that runaway deficit.

In combination with what we are trying to do to reduce the deficit, I would suggest to the House that we are committed to productivity improvement in the federal Public Service. That is not a new suggestion because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke at some length and in some depth about the issue before the election last September. The Prime Minister released a major position paper which addressed productivity improvement in detail, laying out our Party's intentions quite comprehensively.

I might say that earlier this morning I was the keynote speaker at the Canadian Comprehensive Auditing Foundation's meetings which are being held in Ottawa. In a speech which I had prepared prior to assuming the position of Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board, I dealt with the question of comprehensive auditing and the importance it could mean to productivity in the Public Service and in the Government. This morning I suggested that we on this side view comprehensive auditing as a management tool to help government examine policies. Policies must be developed by politicians and administered by public servants. We must have a method by which we examine that policy and ensure that taxpayers, whether at the municipal, provincial or federal level, are getting the best value for their dollar.

That is the mandate that is given to politicians at all levels. I can assure the House that the Government intends to do everything it can to further disciplines such as comprehensive auditing and to give the people the accountability that they deserve.

We produced a position paper called "Towards Productive Management—The P.C. Approach". We stated in that paper that it will be a top priority to implement changes in federal Government management techniques and processes to ensure that Canadian taxpayers receive value for money. We added that it is our goal to create a management philosophy in government which starts at the political level—a philosophy based on accountability, the appropriate delegation of authority and the encouragement of creative and efficient management within the Public Service.

We have already begun to move in that direction. We inherited rules and regulations—perhaps it is the nature of the beast—which are too many, too detailed and too universally applied to do the job. This was acknowledged last spring by the former President of the Treasury Board, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). We intend to make significant improvements in this area.

The policies that we inherited do not provide for adequate flexibility for Departments to achieve real value for money in specific circumstances. There is much work to be done and it is work that we will do. Our goal is to shift from a reliance on regulations and controls and detailed procedures toward a greater reliance on managers' competence and the achievement of results. Our goal is to simplify government and let the managers manage.

If the Opposition is unsatisfied with the achievements to date in this area of simplification and rationalization, I can assure them that we have further plans to have a more extensive and more encompassing grass roots review of programs. That is under way. A committee chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) is continuing to review federal programs and regulations with a view to consolidation, simplification, ending duplication and improving the deliverance of important government services to the public.

The considerations are proceeding at the present time. The committee is undertaking to present its recommendations in the months ahead. The action to implement these recommendations will be preceded by an appropriate period of consultation with those who are substantially affected. Our Government believes in an applied approach to government expenditure reduction which allows sufficient time for those who are affected to adjust. As proof positive, I suggest to the House that there will be some reductions in the number of jobs in the Public Service but it will be done on a consultative basis. The consultations with the heads of the unions and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) had already started before the economic statement was released. It began with a very frank and friendly meeting between the President of the Treasury Board and the heads of the Public Service unions.

I want to assure the House that that is a process of consultation which the President of the Treasury Board started and which I know he intends to continue. We are committed not to act prematurely or precipitously on these issues.

That is why the review made and the results which were published are something that can be read and understood by the ordinary public and the ordinary politician. We did not slash "x" per cent across the board. There are specific programs that were cut out and the rationale for those reductions are explained.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is evidence of this Government's intentions to act in a rationale way. I appreciate the opportunity to engage in this debate. I naturally think that the motion is perhaps not frivolous but very close to it. I am sure though that the Member who presented the motion did so in good faith. We have no hesitation in defending our policies and actions based on the mandate that was given to our Government on September 4. We look forward to a debate throughout the country and a consultation process that will prove that our moves on behalf of Canadians, especially on behalf of the taxpayers, can be supported by the briefs and the reviews we have taken.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated that when his Party came to this House of Commons to form the government that it came to the House with clean hands. Since the Tories came to the House their hands have quickly become soiled, if not soiled, bloodied by breaching the many promises made.

Will the Hon. Member define the mandate his Government received? He spoke of the massive mandate which the Tories received from people coast to coast. Will he define what he means by the mandate his Party received? Does the Hon. Member not agree that the mandate received to govern was based on the some 300 odd promises made by the Tories during the election campaign? Will the Hon. Member not agree that it is incumbent upon the Government to fulfil those promises?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there were several questions included in the Hon. Member's comments. The only way we got our hands soiled once it came to office was when we moved out the furniture of the previous government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: And some Hon. Members did not want to move.

Second, Canadians wanted a change of style and attitude. Canadians want a government that is more open and more accountable. That is why the Members opposite are so few in number. That did not happen to my colleagues in the New Democratic Party. People wanted a change in style. People had had a belly full of the way the Liberals operated.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We in the NDP still have quality.

Mr. Lewis: It is said the Liberal Party has nowhere to go but up. I suggest to the Hon. Member who asked the question that he ought to look to his left because the Liberals could still go down one peg.

The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) made reference to the 300 promises. I am sure the Member watched our promises carefully. I have no difficulty with the objectives that we set before the Canadian people. We told them that we would work toward those goals. They do not expect us, given the mess we inherited from the Liberal Party, to solve the problems of the nation overnight. The Liberals had an awful lot of time to put those problems in place and it will take some time to solve them. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we are going about solving them and in due time we will be able to report to this House and to Canadians that progress has been made on every one.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I was not going to participate in the debate but the Hon. Member did such a good job encouraging people on this side of the House that I shall. The Hon. Member mentioned that the electorate voted his Party in power because people wanted a change in style. Canadians did get a change in style, but not for the better. We have witnessed, over the last three months, a government that has been more centralized than any government in recent history. Ministers could not even choose their own staff. We have noticed a Government that has surrounded itself with secrecy. This is a Government that has expanded its staff of ministers without worrying about job creation outside of the House of Commons.

I come back to the Hon. Member's suggestion about the mandate given to the Tories by the people. The mandate was not one on cutting the deficit. I think though that spending should be done in an efficient and effective manner, and there would be no trouble in getting an agreement from all sides of the House on that. The Conservative Party was given a mandate to create jobs. From coast to coast we heard the Leader and his caucus saying "if you give us a mandate and elect us we will deliver on the jobs". It was not a mandate to deliver on cuts in programs affecting young people, senior citizens, in the area of science and technology or in the area of the environment. Those cuts were never mentioned during the campaign.

We got a promise to deliver jobs, thousands of jobs overnight. We have seen the cuts. We have read about them and we have heard about them. Where are the jobs?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should point out that I have no difficulty in encouraging Members on the other side of the House because so many of them are ours.

Having said that, I would say that the Member has no conception of what has to be done if we are ever to get the economy back in shape from the chaos left by his colleagues—many of his colleagues are not here now—there is in the Liberal Party. We all know that we have to reduce Government spending and that we must get the economic situation together if we are going to have the room to do what we want when it comes time to stimulate the economy. A lower deficit will strengthen the economy, give confidence to consumers, and confidence to investors both foreign and domestic. That will create the jobs about which the Hon. Member talks. It is self-evident. We campaigned on the theory that we would create jobs. Let me tell the Hon. Member not to worry. We will create lots of jobs, and possibly we will eliminate his.

Mr. Marchi: Just watch us. Is that what you are saying?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate the Hon. Member for his challenging and interesting job as the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis). It is perhaps one of the least interesting for those who have over the years been trying to find out exactly what Treasury Board does to public servants. The Hon. Member referred to the possible cuts in the Public Service. He said that many consultations have been going on.

Could the Hon. Member give us the dates of these consultations? Between whom did they take place? Did the Minister meet with the Alliance? Did someone meet with the Professional Institute of the Public Service? Did the Minister meet, for example, with people from the Public Service Commission, the Commission responsible for lay-offs? Did they meet? If so, when? Perhaps we could obtain information from the gentleman as to the lay-off schedule? Who will be affected and in what manner?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, let me advise the Hon. Member that there is an axiom in law: never ask a question unless you know the answer. That axiom also applies in the House of Commons, something to which the Opposition has not yet quite caught on.

• (1200)

At eleven o'clock on the morning of November 8, the day the economic statement came down, I was present with the Minister at a meeting with at least 11 or 12 persons who were heads of Public Service unions, including Mr. Donegani. The Minister advised them as to the type of atmosphere we wanted to set, that consultation would be the name of the game, and that we wanted to monitor the process very closely with their co-operation.

I will undertake to give the names of those people to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Gauthier: I asked about the Public Service Commission.

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry, but I am not familiar enough with all the players at this time to give the Hon. Member the answer now as to who exactly was present. That was one of the meetings. I am certainly pleased to tell him that I will relay those names to him, because there cannot be any secret that we met with someone.

That is the way in which we are operating. As far as lay-off notices are concerned, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) made it very clear that every effort would be made to re-employ people within the Public Service and that attrition would be the rationale used wherever possible so that people would be retained within the Public Service.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the debate this morning. It is important to begin by conceding that the point of the previous government speaker is quite accurate. There was a major change in the country on September 4. There was an expression of disgust and lack of confidence in the previous regime and there was a strong statement for change. With that statement of change was an expression of hope and optimism for the future.

By their nature Canadians are an optimistic and hopeful people. The political earthquake which took place on September 4 was an effort to regain some sense of that optimism and hope for the future. It was an optimism and hope deliberately sparked by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during his election campaign when he made the rather remarkable boast or promise that on the very day after the election of his Government there would be such a burst of new confidence by business in the future of the country that it would start to create tens of thousands of jobs. To some degree this sense of hope and optimism has survived within Canada for the first few months of this Government's regime. It is, not surprisingly, a honeymoon period.

When this session of Parliament began, in a sense the Throne Speech picked up many of the themes of the hopeful election campaign. It was a Throne Speech which talked about co-operation, consultation and a sensitivity to the needs and concerns of ordinary Canadians. Then the hopeful package began to unravel. As the package was opened, the Christmas present or the hopes began to look much different. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) came in with an economic statement. It was something like the grim reaper arriving at a birthday party. He came in with very harsh messages, as his files on Manitoba indicated. First we saw major cuts, not so much cuts to social programs which the Government was to study before looking at reducing, but cuts to a series of important economic areas of activity within the Government including the unemployment insurance system and the Industrial and Regional Development Program. Also there were cuts in a series of agencies and departments and in research and development activities, matters which are important to our economy five, ten and fifteen years down the road. There was a shift from the emphasis in the election campaign on tens of thousand of jobs to stress, instead, cutting the deficit.

To be fair, the Minister of Finance believes very strongly that the strategy he is bringing forward is one which will, by some magic message to investors, create jobs in the future. I do not think he believes that it is a deliberate attempt to keep hundreds of thousands of Canadians out of work. However, as an economist I have to say that in my view and the view of many economists in the country that is precisely what will happen. It is a misguided strategy, a strategy which has been tried in British Columbia, in Britain and in other parts of the world. In each case where the strategy of cut-backs, tax increases and leaving the re-energizing of the economy by magic to the private sector has been tried, the result has been a persistence of unemployment and of the deficit which the Minister says he is committed to reducing.

The reality is that we do not eliminate deficits by trying to cut government activity.

Mr. Nickerson: You don't?

Mr. Langdon: No, you don't. We eliminate deficits by getting the economy moving again.

Mr. Brisco: How do you get the economy moving?

Mr. Langdon: The only way to get the economy going again is by putting more money in people's pockets, not in companies' pockets. As a result people are put back to work and taxes flow back to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty). Then he will not need hundreds of new tax inspectors to go out and search for them. There would be a revival of the economy and through that a reduction in the deficit.

I predict, as sure as the flowers will come up next spring despite the change in weather about which the Conservatives talked last week, that we will see as a result of this strategy an increase in the Government's deficit. A year from now the Minister of Finance will be reporting back to the House that his estimates were wrong. Rather than a cut in the deficit next year, the deficit will be higher.

I ask the Conservative back-benchers and others who are here to think ahead and to remember this prediction. As an economist, I predict that just as it happened in British Columbia, Britain and country after country which adopted this effort to butcher the public sector, we will end up paying the price, not just in more unemployment but with a higher deficit as well.

A deeper issue is emerging. It is not only a question of how guided or misguided the economic strategy of the Government is because, in the last two weeks in particular, we have seen some deeper questions come on to the political agenda. These are questions about the very integrity and confidence of this Government.

I say that with sorrow. Nobody was happier than I to see the previous Government thrown out. Nobody was happier to see them reduced to 40 seats. I would have preferred a reduction to 28, but 40 will do for the moment.

We have to realize that the people of this country wanted a whole new style of government. The reason why that catastrophe hit the Liberal Party is because it had become a regime that had no sense of decency, integrity and being up front with the Canadian people. The Canadian people have lost their willingness to put confidence in these difficult times into a regime like that, so they made a change.

A regime has emerged in the last few weeks which in certain fundamental and crucial ways is picking up all of the worst habits of the previous government. It has picked up the enthusiasm for secrecy, for managing the news and trying to fool the Canadian society. This can be seen in cases like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) refusing to release the results of the work of his officials on the Government's economic model and what will happen as a result of the cut-backs that have taken place.

This is not some kind of back alley piece of magical machinery in which nobody has confidence. This is a model of our economy built by governments over the years in which the Minister of Finance has great confidence. He has so much confidence that if you take the long term agenda for change by the Government, he uses that model to lay out what he thinks will happen to the economy in the future. The Minister of Finance refuses to release the results of that model as to what will happen as the result of the cuts in this next year. In doing so, incredibly, he states that he believes the model's results are wrong.

The Minister brought in a 130-page book based on the predictions of that model. He could put the model's results out for the next year and say that he thinks it may be mistaken here and there. However, he refuses to release those results and blames it on the lack of effectiveness of the model. He used it in other pieces that he put out at the same time. That demonstrates a degree of inconsistency, a refusal to be up front with the Canadian people. Frankly, I find that staggering.

That was not the only gesture. The same Minister took a hard message to Manitoba in his memo, but refused strategically to tell Manitoba about that hard message. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) announced that there would be $175 million in cuts to his Ministry's programs of regional industrial development funds. He then got up in the House of Commons and tried to pretend that those cuts were not real, that there was no real significant change in the job creation that was going to be provided by IRDP next year.

It is an attempt to obscure what is taking place that is unworthy of this Government. I remind the Government that it represents 211 constituencies. It can afford to have a little bit of grace and self confidence. It can level with the Canadian people. It does not have its hard messages. It should send them out. Let us talk about them and look at them in detail.

We have the incredible picture of a Party which just two years ago said on a point of principle that for the sake of Parliament and Parliament's rights for future, it must not allow the Government to borrow for the next financial year. They said it was not right to borrow for the future without stating what is was going to do in the future. What does this Government do? It asks to borrow billions for the future. It does not even blush in doing so. At least the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) had the good grace to blush. He is prepared to admit that his job in Government is to demonstrate that the Government is not perfect. He could not have chosen a better job for himself.

Mr. Lewis: What is your job in the NDP?

Mr. Langdon: My job in the NDP is to indicate the way in which this Government has lost track of its integrity so early in its regime. That sense of drift and loss of direction is something that I express not with partisan happiness or glee, but with a sense of sadness. The people of this country wanted a change. They wanted a decent new Government that would level with Canadians, a government that would be up front.

There is a bit of irony in this motion of non-confidence being moved by the Party next to me. Talking about blushing, it might be good for them to blush for a little while. For the future of our country, we as the opposition in this House have to bring this home to the Government of Canada. The Party across the aisle is the Government. It should have the self confidence to recognize that. We must bring home to it the message that the Canadian people want an open, honest, sensitive government that will consult and co-operate. If they do not get that from this Government, I hope they will turn to us in this party to give them that kind of Government in the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have one comment to make. The Hon. Member referred to the phrase "butcher the public sector". Perhaps the Hon. Member might explain that phrase to the House. There are some 300,000 Civil Service jobs in existence and the economic statement contemplates the reduction of 3,600 such jobs, but attrition in the public sector accounts for 13,000 jobs a year. I know that the phrase "butcher the public sector" has a very oratorical ring to it. Perhaps the Hon. Member might be able to back that statement up.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, unlike the Hon. Member, I feel that central to the public sector is what it does for people. I am referring to the services which are provided to Canadians across the country. The butchery I am speaking of is the kind of butchery that is taking away millions of dollars of grants which would otherwise support alternate energy research in the country, including the elimination through the National Research Council of its program of grants for energy research. It is the kind of butchery that is cutting back research and development in the environment sector in the same way that Ronald Reagan did in the United States. It is the kind of butchery which is taking $85 million from the CBC, an institution which in my constituency particularly is the only voice that we have to counter the overflow from the incredibly powerful communications industry in the United States.

I am referring to the kind of butchery that has told workers in the CDIC that the Government will sell their businesses without even consulting with them first. It is the kind of butchery that has taken a program like IRDP which was to have been given $150 million more next year for grants to small businesses across the country and cut that amount out. It is a butchery which deserves to be called a butchery because it has been done without thought and without consultation.

We can deal with case after case in which programs have been cut without allowing any opportunity for provinces, communities, workers or the people to have a say. We are talking about a Government that talks rhetorically. The Hon. Member has already mentioned rhetoric. The rhetoric of the Government regarding co-operation and consultation has been magnificent. However, the record of the Government as shown by these very cuts to which I have referred has been absolutely dismal.

I thank the Hon. Member for raising that question because I had not been able in my speech to deal with the specific cuts which have been so damaging. The butchery is there. It is serious and the Conservative Government will pay the political price for it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, that answer was so unusual and so far from the point that I would like to thank the Hon. Member for it.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting comeback. Rather than leave that dangling in Hansard and somehow suggesting that a contrary reply was made to a different question, let me remind the Hon. Member that he asked about butchery in the public sector.

Mr. Lewis: Of the public sector.

Mr. Langdon: I had provided the Hon. Member with a detailed list of this. This Hon. Member himself spoke a few moments ago about how the public sector was no longer to carry responsibility for certain services in his own constituency. He cannot describe that as being the public sector at that time and now turn around and say that the public sector consists only of public employment. We too are concerned about public employment but the public sector provides leadership in the country because of the services and help it provides to grant programs and through direct work with the private sector. It is an element of our economy which consists of far more than just the jobs that are involved within that sector.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no more questions or comments, we shall now resume debate.

We shall continue the debate with the Hon. Member for Chambly.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this first opportunity to speak to the House, especially since you are in the Chair and my father is celebrating his 76th birthday. I feel very privileged.

Mr. Speaker, I am also very pleased to be able to take part in this debate. However, I am surprised by the cynicism of the motion before the House today. This attitude can hardly be justified, considering the new Government has been less than three months in office. This Government is certainly capable of great achievements, but one can hardly expect it to remedy in three months a truly appalling legacy which has been nearly two decades in the making. This is just too much, Mr. Speaker. After all, we cannot work miracles. Canadians voted for change because they recognized threats to our economy. By voting for us in vast numbers, they demonstrated their dissatisfaction and discontent. They had had enough of the practices of the previous Government, something the Opposition seems to have trouble understanding today. Canadians want a new direction for this country, they want a change in policy and a new perspective on Government activities. That is the challenge we were given, and we intend to meet that challenge!

Canadians not only voted for change, they voted for decisive leadership. We shall not disappoint them. In fact, the Government has already started its economic renewal program. Canadians also want leadership that is attuned to their needs. We realize they do not want the kind of change that will disrupt their lives or that is lacking in compassion and understanding for those Canadians living in very difficult circumstances. Canadians across the country want to participate in the national decision-making process. They have had enough of decisions made without consideration for their needs. They want to co-operate and communicate more with their neighbours, both their next-door neighbours and those further away. They want relations between the federal Government and the Provinces to get off to a fresh start.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress an important aspect of this desire for change as expressed by Canadians on election day. Canadians want to be able to trust their Government again. That trust has been undermined in recent years by a Government that refused to consider the needs of Canadians and that gave us budgets like the one it brought down in November 1981. Governing this country is not a game, Mr. Speaker. To rebuild that trust, this Government intends to change the way the Government operates and the way it treats its citizens. I have elaborated on the significance of the outcome of the election because Opposition Members have failed to understand what Canadians need and are refusing to face up to the consequences we must live with today.

There was a massive vote for our party because our philosophy attracted voters and because it reflects the state of mind of Canadians today. The Government is not in disarray, Mr. Speaker. I has taken its bearings and changed a course that had been followed until September 1984. Unfortunately, some people refuse to accept this new direction and to look at new perspectives. They see only the old route, a route studded with rising government deficits, rising unemployment, uncertainty, a radical drop in foreign investment, briefly, a route that has brought this country to the brink of disaster.

We believe that today, our Government must set a priority on creating sufficient jobs for those people who are able and willing to work. To that end, we intend to focus our energies on getting the Canadian economy going again, so as to show Canada's true economic potential and reduce the federal debt, which by the end of the fiscal year is expected to be $190 billion. We also believe that the size and rapid growth of this debt is one of the vital issues we must deal with during the initial years of our mandate. A debt of 190 billion dollars! That is the legacy we received.

For years, the previous Government spent money it did not have. Successive budget deficits, from year to year, from decade to decade, have had grave consequences. The size of our public debt is putting pressure on interest rates, since it creates pessimism about inflationary trends. Servicing the national debt is responsible for 21.5 per cent of Government expenditures and constitutes a serious handicap for, and is probably the greatest obstacle to, economic growth. It means that our financial room for manoeuvring is seriously limited, since steadily increasing sums of money must be spent on interest payments, money which could otherwise have been put to more productive use. Finally, the rate of growth of our public debt is a clear signal to Canadians and foreign investors alike that government accounts are mismanaged. It takes a minimum of logic to conclude that the problem is serious.

If I have enough time, I will have more to say about the steps taken by the government to come to grips with the problem of the rapid growth of the public debt. It is a fact that only sound tax management will renew confidence in Canada and lead businessmen to invest and open up new Canadian companies, something which is absolutely necessary if we are to solve the unemployment crisis.

Unfortunately, that is not the only problem facing us today.

We have to redefine the role of government if we expect it to provide a healthier climate for economic growth and job creation. These days, people rightfully look upon the state as an intruder, an obstacle which impedes change and innovation. That is why we must reconsider the basic role of government in society, wondering as we are whether certain activities can still be justified in 1984, including among others our participation in public enterprises, regulations, tax incentives, grants to bankrupt industries. We have to ask whether all those factors might not undermine the orderly operation of the market.

Although we do have reservations about the role of government in the nation's industrial affairs, Mr. Speaker, we are still very much in favour of social programs specially designed to help the needy. Still, even those programs will have to come under scrutiny in case they might be better and more efficiently oriented and implemented. We also want the business decision-making process left to the private sector, and we want to be able to meet the needs of Canadians with a minimum of government intervention, the dire consequences of which we are all too familiar with. We want to make Canada more attractive for Canadian and foreign investors alike.

That is our plan, Mr. Speaker. We will reduce the deficit's rate of growth, we will stop getting involved in areas where the private sector can perform favourably. We will stimulate Canadian and foreign investment in this country. We have already started implementing that plan, although we have only now been in office for three months. Who would dare say the Government is in total disarray? That disarray is nowhere but in the minds of people who are accusing us.

Last month, the Government addressed the problems of the nation by announcing in the Throne Speech the upcoming changes in orientation. It reviewed Canada's economic situation. It revealed the details of a plan of action and announced the first measures intended to reduce public expenditures.

Those measures were not taken rashly, Mr. Speaker, they stem from a concerted plan of action. We have examined one by one all the existing programs. While protecting the interests of taxpayers, our goal has been to look with a fresh mind at government expenditures and identify the areas where savings were possible. That review was done in a spirit of fairness, with a view to protecting as much as possible our needy fellow citizens. Also, we have divided those actions in such a way as not to burden any particular region or economic sector.

The program review, which was aimed at reducing the gap between expenditures and revenues, allowed us to eliminate those that were no longer essential, to lower the levels of expenditures, to tighten management and to postpone or cancel certain capital projects.

Further to that review, Mr. Speaker, the Government could announce a $4.2 billion reduction in financial requirements for 1985-86.

But the Government will not stop at that. Under the leadership of the Deputy Prime Minister, a task force has undertaken a more detailed review of the structure of the government programs, in order to merge and streamline them. This will result in a simpler, more understandable government that is more acceptable to Canadians, more efficient and more competent.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the Government will not stop at that. It will keep on scrutinizing all federal expenditures. It will focus its efforts on current priorities and genuine requirements, to further reduce financial requirements. It will consult with the various groups in Canadian society on the whole gamut of issues it has raised in its economic renewal program.

As stated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the detailed document submitted to the House, this consultation will be a flexible but in-depth process. It will not be an excuse to postpone decisions. The Government's commitment to consultation reflects the knowledge that only through the co-operation and determination of all Canadians to work together can the challenge of an economic renewal be met. That determination and that spirit do exist, I believe, Mr. Speaker. I have faith in a new departure, in the will to rebuild confidence and establish a new national consensus in order to fulfill Canada's economic potential.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments. I now recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the last comments of the Hon. Member and I have to admit I am somewhat confused because his statements are not consistent with those of his colleagues. For example, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) told us that he is making cuts here and there but the Hon. Member said that he is holding consultations here and there.

Considering all this, the Hon. Member could perhaps tell us whose advice was sought before the recent budget cuts and who was consulted before the cancellation of the 1986 census? I am particularly curious about this particular matter because several groups have contacted me, and I have received many phone calls and letters from ministers and other people stating that they had not been consulted.

● (1240)

In view of the fact that he seems to know otherwise . . . the Hon. Member could perhaps tell the House about such consultations, Mr. Speaker, because we have not yet had the opportunity to learn whom the government consulted before cancelling the 1986 census.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) often travels to his constituency which is far enough, maybe 4 or 5 miles from here, but I travel every week to my constituency, Mr. Speaker, and I consult businessmen and various concerned individuals. As recently as yesterday morning, I met some 150 businessmen who were enthusiastic about the economic statement. Those businessmen are quite pleased to discuss and consult with their Member and to make suggestions. They are quite satisfied with the economic statement which has already allowed my constituency to experience a revival and reach a loud confidence in the economy which translates into new jobs.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member was not paying quite enough attention. I will have therefore to repeat my question, because he does not seem to have understood it well.

What I should like to ask, even at the risk of repeating myself . . . the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) can relax, I am not going to raise the Cumberland-Masson bridge issue again, I am going to ask him instead about the consultations he referred to in his speech. He said that the government had had and will continue to have consultations. Well, over the past few weeks, I have received a letter from the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and we have met their representatives, also some Indian groups and some federation of businessmen as well; we have had contacts with major corporations such as Sears. And I am sure the Hon. Member from the Progressive Conservative Party is very much interested in what major corporations think: each and everyone of them indicated that they had not been consulted.

Here again is my question, Mr. Speaker: Who has been consulted before the decision to cancel the 1986 census was made?

Mr. Grisé: The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell's question may not have been clear, but I feel he certainly did not quite grasp the remark I made early to the effect that we are not miracle workers to put everything back in order in three months.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) on his statement. I also want to tell him that, over the weekend, I participated in a radio program aimed at collecting funds for the needy at Christmas. It was pointed out many times during this program that nearly 30 per cent more money than last year had been collected and many participants were asked why they thought people were more generous this year. Their answer was, that, since the election of the Progressive Conservative Government, the public feels that responsible people are in office and that the problems will be solved. This was my experience this last weekend.

In addition, I was congratulated about the fact that, in reducing expenditures for the programs which were not cancelled, we have tried to reduce administrative costs. I was asked to tell my colleagues that action taken to save money in some areas to be able to spend even more for job creation next winter was both responsible and commendable.

Therefore my colleague is right when he says that our Government is on the right track and that people are quite satisfied with the efforts made until now.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to remind you that, according to our rules, Members are entitled to ask questions to the Member who has just spoken. I listened very carefully to the comments made by the new Member and I do not believe that she asked a question. I therefore think that it would be a good thing if her comments were relevant to the speech we just heard and more along the lines of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) whose maiden speech in this House was, I must admit, quite interesting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have just one comment to make about the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). I believe that the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) can make comments, which must however be relevant to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Chambly, without having to ask any questions. I did wonder about the relevancy of the first part of her comments, but I then realized that the second part could be considered relevant with the benefit of the doubt of course.

[English]

If there are no further questions or comments, we shall resume debate.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): All summer long, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party was asking Canadians to vote for change. So, on September 4, Canadians voted for change.

"As soon as the Cabinet is sworn in, we are going to create tens of thousands of jobs". Who can ever forget this promise? And one month after the Government assumed power, it has eliminated thousands of jobs— and it is only the beginning. What a change, Mr. Speaker! They had promised a lean government—

An Hon. Member: A lean government?

Mr. Gagliano: —a less visible government. What have we got? The largest Cabinet in the history of our country, a government very visible indeed through the appointment of political commissars, a token reduction of salaries, a threefold increase in spending within the ministers' offices. What a change, Mr. Speaker!

All summer long, the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party who is now the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was giving new hope to our young people with his promises. One month later, he is cutting student loans programs and the Summer Youth Employment Program. Indeed, what a change!

[English]

Universality is a sacred trust and a month later he wants to start it. What a trust!

[Translation]

An open government, so much so that it had to issue guidelines to force Civil Servants to keep their mouths shut. What a change!

[English]

A government that will run this country in a business-like manner. First, the Government asked for authority to borrow billions of dollars without a Budget and without telling this new Parliament how the loan would be serviced. A businessman would not go to the bank and ask for a major loan without giving a projection of revenues and expenses. The bank would definitely not grant credit without having sufficient explanation. What a change!

When the Progressive Conservative Party was in opposition it considered too harsh the methods used by Revenue Canada to collect taxes. Now that the Conservatives are in power, the new Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) says he will use all the means available to him to collect the $3.5 billion owed to the Canadian Treasury. Quite a change there also, Mr. Speaker.

During the election campaign, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who was then opposition leader, stated that job creation would be a top priority for a Progressive Conservative government. Today he is eliminating thousands of jobs to reduce the deficit. The Conservatives keep telling us they were unaware of the financial situation of the government. Yet in his first electoral speech, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) who was then the Right Hon. Prime Minister, had stated that he anticipated a higher deficit. But the Conservatives were not listening. They chose to ignore the deficit situation so they could promise the moon to Canadians, and the sun as well! What a deception it is for Canadians!

Canada wanted a change and got a two-faced Government.

What a change! "Confidence talk".

They speak about restoring confidence among Canadians; they say that confidence will solve all our economic problems but the first thing they do as a new Government is to increase the sales tax they had criticized so strongly when in opposition. Are those the changes that the Right Hon. Prime Minister proposes to the Canadian people after a few weeks of suspense, Mr. Speaker . . . the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has done his first hatchet job: Increase in the cost of gas, in unemployment insurance premiums, in transportation taxes and charges for services that the Government provides to its citizens. Many thousands of jobs will be lost as well.

If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote a few statements from the December issue of the magazine CGA-Canada, where the President of CGA-Canada—

[English]

CGA-Canada President, Wilf Caplan said in commenting on the economic statement:

> With unemployment still running at over 11 per cent, I am really afraid that cutting programs which relates into cutting jobs, may worsen the situation.

[Translation]

On November 8, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business submitted a brief to the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). I quote from page 8 of this report:

> Consequences of the increase in unemployment insurance premiums.

According to a national survey made from January to March 1984, because of increases in unemployment insurance premiums:

> Hiring of part-time rather than full-time employees, 15.8. Delayed hiring, 15.1. Lay-offs, 7.4. Replacement of workers by machines, 3.5. Total of the negative impact on employment, 41.8.

At the bottom of the same page, the CFIB says, and I quote:

> According to our survey, small businesses must bear a heavier tax burden than large companies. Small businesses employing more manpower have to pay much larger social security contributions and indirect taxes comparatively to their profits.

In the same report, on page 13, Mr. Speaker, the CFIB says, and I quote:

> Small businesses pay too many taxes comparatively to their profits because they employ much more manpower and consequently have more social security contributions. There is ample evidence that those contributions limit the natural tendency of small businesses to hire mostly young people, and to train them. We find interesting one of the recommendations made in the document of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, published on April 7, 1984, which is entitled "Major Findings and Recommendations, A Task Force on Technological Change and Manpower Training".

The recommendation is as follows: The contributions to the unemployment insurance fund should not be considered as an expenditure but as a tax credit so that the present inequality will be removed.

Mr. Speaker, just last week I put that question to the Minister of State (Small Businesses) who seemed to be surprised that his party had made such a recommendation. I am still waiting for an answer.

Our new Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has also introduced a new conservative vocabulary: consultation, co-operation and especially confidence. A few weeks later, we learned from a file he forgot in a meeting room that those words are meaningless.

He does not intend to seek any advice, because the decision is already made. He does not intend to co-operate because his decision is not advantageous for the provinces. He does not trust his provincial counterparts because he tapes their talks.

Mr. Speaker, we have never seen a government whose position has changed so dramatically and so soon after the election. Broken promises is all we have up to now for a policy of change.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot ignore the Conservative turn about. We have the right to insist in strong terms that the government should keep its promises, because it would be easy for any political party to make promises and then break them.

The Canadians have voted for change and the only change has been thousands of jobs cut off as soon as the tory government was sworn in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) whether he saw the following in The Globe and Mail of Saturday last, and I quote:

[English]

Yesterday's figures show that business investment did indeed pick up during the third quarter of the year, rising by 1.7 per cent from the April-June period. But Statscan said it is still 19 per cent below the level of business investment—

The article also stated however, that:

The Canadian economy has surged ahead with renewed vigor, handing the Progressive Conservative Government an unexpected Christmas bonus.

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I have not yet read the Quorum. Having been in the House since this morning I am not aware of this report. However, I can tell you that the small business sector is now asking a lot of questions about the increase in gas prices and in unemployment insurance contributions, which are direct production costs. In addition, I imagine that the report to which she refers is the result of the action of a Liberal Government since it is a statistical report.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would recognize the Hon. Member for Chateauguay if he were in his seat. The Hon. Member for Châteauguay for a brief question or comment.

Mr. Lopez: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou. He has just referred to the fact that because of the Conservative Government unemployment has been created or many jobs have been lost; he did not specify the number, but he said that there were many.

I would now like him to tell the House which jobs were lost because of the Conservative Government.

Mr. Gagliano: I said in my speech that as a result of the Government action thousand of jobs will be lost, and if the Hon. Member reads the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), he will be able to realize this. I would therefore suggest that he should read the economic statement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

DISARMAMENT

STATEMENT BY ASPEN INSTITUTE INTERNATIONAL GROUP

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of this House a new statement from the Aspen Institute International Group, which is composed of several former heads of state, foreign ministers, and distinguished citizens of many countries. The message is simple, realistic, and pragmatic.

There are specific recommendations for arms control talks, and a call for two new security channels. One would be a strategic panel composed of a small number of United States and Soviet representatives, who would hold high level confidential meetings to discuss and explore, but not negotiate, critical security issues. The second would be the establishment of a network of crisis control centres linking the capitals of states that possess nuclear weapons.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has repeatedly stated that the Government will work actively for peace and reduced tensions in the world. As a contribution to that discussion, as Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence I am taking the liberty of sending each Member a copy of this new and, I think, important document.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES CHEMICAL POLLUTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as you know, the Great Lakes are the largest freshwater body in the world. They supply water to millions of Canadians and Americans. The Canada-U.S. environmental study just released shows that 1.5 tonnes of potentially dangerous chemicals are oozing into the Niagara River daily from 60 locations on the U.S. and Canadian sides. If the pollution continues unabated, or increases, "we can have environmental catastrophe, no question about that", as Ontario Environment Minister Brandt is quoted as saying.

The federal Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) has a crucial job ahead. On behalf of concerned Canadians I urge her to meet with her counterpart in Washington to raise this matter at the earliest possible time, because it is a most urgent matter.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the waste water treatment plant in Niagara Falls, New York, has not functioned properly since it was opened in 1978. I urge the Minister to raise this matter with her counterpart in New York. The U.S. representatives on the joint Niagara river Toxics Committee refused to support a Canadian recommendation to make a clean-up of the Niagara River the first step in a concentrated effort to rid Lake Ontario of pollutants. Here again I urge the Minister to take swift action with her counterpart in Washington.

TRADE

SECTORAL FREE TRADE—DEMAND FOR INFORMATION AND DEBATE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the reason for my rising today is to impress upon the Government the need to put before the House of Commons whatever positions have already been taken, or will be taken, by the Government regarding negotiations between Canada and the United States on sectoral free trade. There is a large body of opinion which has expressed grave concern about the possible consequences of entering into sectoral free trade. The question of whether or not it will impinge upon or infringe upon Canada's trade relations with other nations is a question which has to be looked at not only by the Government but also by the Parliament of Canada.

With this in mind, I ask that the Government seriously consider putting before this House all of the information presently in the hands of the Government regarding the current state of negotiations and, in addition, that the Government set aside time, perhaps in the early part of next year, for a discussion here in the House of Commons on the potential benefits and dangers of entering into sectoral free trade arrangements with the U.S. administration.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CALL FOR STREAMLINING OF OPERATIONS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss a subject most dear to my heart, that of the Post Office. Recently I was privileged to receive correspondence from the President of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, Mr. Jean-Claude Parrot, in which he took issue with my remarks of last June about post office involvement with a commercial enterprise, especially the ill-fated fling with Consumers Distributing. Mr. Parrot claims that increased diversification within the post office, if you can imagine this, will increase productivity and create jobs. I say nonsense! I still feel that the mandate of the Post Office is clear—to deliver letters. Instead of trying to diversify, I would suggest that they try to streamline the existing operations. With the co-operation of union leaders, perhaps this process could be expedited.

At no time in our history, Mr. Speaker, has the need for more efficiency and productivity been more urgent. I therefore urge Mr. Warren to keep this in mind and give us better service for our 32 cents.

MULTICULTURALISM

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in an editorial the prairie newspaper, The Link, boldly stated that in regard to a national multicultural policy "it is hard to say whether Brian Mulroney and his Government will live up to his promises." The paper was quite mild, Mr. Speaker. Multiculturalism has been a low priority with the new Government. The Throne Speech was multiculturally bankrupt. The Government made no mention of a Multiculturalism Act. There was no mention of a separate standing committee, separate department, and no mention of a budgetary increase for the multiculturalism directorate. All of these were promises made druing and after the election campaign.

The Government has not apologized to the Japanese Canadian community, nor has it established a committee to examine a compensation strategy. However, the Government has undertaken to cut back immigration from 95,000 to 85,000. It has also doubled and tripled citizenship application fees. Finally, it refuses to add a national voice to condemn the unfortunate, racially discriminatory practices presently raging in the taxi industry.

Canadians were promised a multicultural expressway, Mr. Speaker, one that would pave the way for equal opportunity and facilitate entry into the Canadian mainstream for all Canadians of all backgrounds. Instead we have witnessed a multicultural dead end, both unpaved and very winding, and lacking in direction. I urge the Government to take this national responsibility back to a road of prominence rather than a road of obscurity.

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING—LIBERAL PARTY POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, last Friday in this House the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) said the development of Soviet cruise missiles would be a major disruption of North American security. That is true. Of course the Soviet move is exactly what we in this Party foresaw two and a half years ago when that Hon. Member and his Government pushed ahead in helping the Americans develop the new generation cruise in the first place. The Member, his Party, and his Government refused to heed our advice and a similar call from the Canadian people.

Now the Hon. Member raises alarm about the cruise missile. Now the Hon. Member calls for a Soviet and American ban on cruise missile deployment, and calls on the Canadian Government to promote such a ban. Yet he does not call for an end to cruise missile testing in Canada. He wants Canada to seek a halt to cruise deployment while we proceed with plans to test the very same missiles next month. What does his Leader, the Liberal leader, say? He says Canada should test the cruise. Canada should help develop those very same weapons that pose a threat to our common security on the planet.

It is a good thing the Liberals have admitted they have nowhere to go but up. Based on their stand on the nuclear arms race, it is clear they will be in that position for some time. If the Liberals want to ban cruise missile deployment to strengthen our common security, let them start by calling for an end to cruise missile testing in Canada.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHANGES TO COMMITTEE SYSTEM ADVOCATED

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, our Government made a commitment in the Throne Speech to enhance the role of the private Member in this House. A special task force has already been established, under the capable chairmanship of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), to make recommendations on the powers, practices, organization, and resources of the House of Commons.

In keeping with our commitment to provide positive reform that will allow each and every Member to represent his and her own constituents and all the people of Canada, I urge this task force seriously to consider making substantial changes to the committee system. Our committees should have more resources, more stature, more independence, and more power in the policy review process.

Independent, expert counsel should be provided to all committee members, with sufficient resources available to allow for special investigations and ongoing policy reviews in designated areas.

Committee chairmen should report directly to the House on a regular basis, in a manner that allows for questioning and discussion. Committees should be able to launch their own inquiries without references from the House.

S.O. 21

Changes such as these would provide the private Member an opportunity to put his or her energies to work in a more constructive and meaningful way. Through positive reform, all Members of the House can become more active participants in the decision-making process.

FINANCE

VALUE-ADDED TAX PROPOSAL

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, once a new tax is brought into being it invariably remains, and is incorporated into the general tax system. Witness the temporary income tax originally imposed as a wartime emergency measure. Witness the Canadian Ownership Charge which is still with us even though its initial purpose no longer exists.

We hear, these days, considerable discussion about a value-added tax, commonly referred to as VAT, with the idea being that if this were to be imposed other taxes could be reduced. History and human nature tell us that this would not be the case. Inevitably we would end up with both the new VAT and the older taxes imposed at their former levels.

The idea of a value-added tax for Canada ought to be rejected out of hand, and the Government ought to concentrate on reducing and simplifying existing taxes which currently impose too heavy a burden on the tax-paying citizens of our nation.

HUMAN RIGHTS

NAMES OF ALLEGED PROSTITUTES PUBLISHED IN HALIFAX

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my shock at the measures taken by certain authorities acting under the Solicitor General of Nova Scotia.

The names of 47 alleged prostitutes were recently posted on the public square, in Halifax more specifically, for the purpose of summoning those persons to appear on December 5, 1984 before the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia.

Personally, I view this as both degrading and discriminatory for the human beings involved. This is infringing upon personal rights and privacy, because those 47 persons should have been summoned individually, without their names being posted in a public place or published in a local newspaper. To several of them, this will be extremely prejudicial.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is one of the most progressive in the world. I hope that our society will feel it has a moral obligation to implement it and broaden it in such a way that no person's reputation will be tarnished in whatever context or situation.

If that kind of posting ever happens again, I demand that the names of the clients of the alleged prostitutes be also published.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER—TOXICS COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather ironic to make a statement about the pollution in the Niagara River and Lake Ontario Basin, following the statement made by the former Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia).

The Niagara River toxics Committee has once more identified many sources of toxic and organic waste, and points out that new chemicals have been discovered. However, the report went on to say that many old pollutants are still entering the river from already known municipal and industrial sources about which the former Minister of the Environment was aware. It is these issues that Environment Canada should address quickly.

The report states that further delays in the repair of the Niagare Falls, New York, waste water treatment plant are unacceptable. Waste disposal sites along the Niagara River are not being dealt with as expeditiously as possible. Known source pollutants should be required to enter into remedial measures as fast as possible. While 90 per cent of these contaminants originate on the American side, there are some Canadian source pollutants. The report cries out for action.

The Niagara River is the most closely monitored river in Canada. Pollution studies have gone on since the early 1950s. In order to reflect the awareness of an alert and responsive Government, Environment Canada should not take a reactionary stance but should take the lead now. The eyes of millions of Canadians are upon us.

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF SPECIFIC STATUS OF QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT'S INTENTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

The newspaper Le Devoir reported on the weekend that the Prime Minister is prepared to recognize in the Canadian Constitution the distinct and specific character of Quebec's society. Could the Prime Minister inform the House how he intends to recognize the specific status of Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously that was not a direct quote. I have the article here, but as far as I know, it is not a direct quote of something I said. Quebec does have a number of distinctive and quite different dimensions. Basically, it represents a francophone cultural and linguistic entity that must be recognized as such. It has always been my intention to try and create a climate that will make it possible for Quebec to sign the constitutional agreement with enthusiasm and with honour. That has always been the aim of this Government.

PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that report in Le Devoir apparently came from certain members of the Conservative caucus, and said that the Prime Minister was reported to have addressed his Members.

In any event, as a prelude to his forthcoming meeting with Premier Lévesque, on Thursday, I believe, has he consulted with the Premiers of the other provinces in order to determine from them how far he could go in terms of their possible consent in addressing the hopes and ambitions of the people of the Province of Quebec as recognized through the Premier?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my visit with the Premier of Quebec next Wednesday or Thursday will be a courtesy visit, on my way to my riding of Manicouagan. I intend to see Mr. Lévesque for a general discussion on various matters, both economic and otherwise, that are of interest to us as Quebecers and Canadians. If he wishes to make any further proposals, I shall be delighted to give them careful study and to inform the House accordingly at the appropriate time. For the time being, this is just a normal meeting between the duly elected Premier of Quebec and the duly elected Prime Minister of Canada.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT PLANS TO GIVE RIGHT OF VETO TO QUEBEC

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Would the Prime Minister be prepared to grant a veto right if the question were asked by Mr. Lévesque?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Well, this is similar to what the Hon. Member, your Quebec lieutenant, wanted to do during the election campaign. In the weekend press I saw that the Premier of Quebec was not necessarily seeking a veto right and that he might wish to discuss other alternatives, and I will be there to listen. We are of course aware of the new factor in the constitutional area as a result of the new constitutional amending formula by which the central government is bound. That being said, I shall listen carefully to what the Premier has to say.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT READY TO START IMMEDIATE NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Two weeks ago in Toronto, the Prime Minister told media representatives that he had no intention of holding constitutional negotiations before the next election. Is the Prime Minister now in a position to tell us whether he is prepared to have immediate constitutional negotiations with Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The economic recovery has always been my priority. Every effort of the central government will be aimed at Canada's economic recovery, including Quebec's. Naturally, I cannot prevent the premier of a province from raising another issue with me, and should the Quebec government do so through its premier, you will undoubtedly agree with me that it would be quite proper for me to consider and analyze carefully such a request.

• (1420)

RIGHT OF QUEBEC VETO—POSITION OF OTHER PROVINCES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

Did he seek the opinion of other premiers on that issue, considering that there were only a few diverging opinions between the provinces, the federal Government and the Quebec government when the constitutional agreement was signed? Would the Prime Minister be in favour of reconsidering the possibility of giving Quebec the right of veto? Most provinces were willing to do so at the time, when the Ontario government decided to drop its right and let Quebec alone have the right of veto, and only a few provinces had raised objections. Since those provinces are now led by governments whose political views are the same as those of the Right Hon. Prime Minister, is it his intention to apply pressure so that those provinces will agree to give Quebec the right of veto, as we had recommended at the outset?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what requests will be made or what positions will be taken by the Quebec government. But I can say without hesitation or ambiguity that the new Government will take every reasonable approach to create a climate which will enable the National Assembly of Quebec to sign and endorse a constitutional agreement under which Quebec would indeed, and in every respect, be an integral part of Canada.

PETRO-CANADA PURCHASE OF PETROFINA—REQUEST FOR DOCUMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In August the Prime Minister indicated very clearly that he believed the Auditor General of Canada ought to have complete access to the documents that he wanted to see concerning Petro-Canada's takeover of Petrofina. At that time the Prime Minister said:

> The Auditor General doesn't work for the Government of Canada. He works for the Parliament of Canada . . . he's got to be able to look at those books.

The Prime Minister was right in August when he was campaigning. Why has he changed his mind now that he is Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I have not changed my mind at all, Mr. Speaker. We have been trying to find a formula that would provide the Auditor General with all of the information that he seeks. It appears that previous documents of Cabinet, confidences of Cabinet, because of constitutional convention and custom could not be made available to the Auditor General, and every other means was made available to him to have the information that he requires. It appears, however, as the days go on, that what is emerging is a conflict between Parliament and the executive. I stand fully for the rights of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: As a consequence, I will be asking my friend, the former Leader of the Government, as a Member of the Privy Council, and the Leader of the New Democratic Party, to meet with me to find a means which will satisfy the requirements of constitutional convention, but provide the Auditor General of Canada with all of the information he requires.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister does not need that meeting. He has our agreement right now.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Right now.

Mr. Broadbent: We, too, stand for Parliament's interest in this matter. We remind the Prime Minister that the Auditor General is responsible to the Parliament of Canada, as he knew in August. To deal with the substance which the Prime Minister has raised, considering that the specific documents which the Auditor General has requested are being denied because he has maintained, as a decision, an earlier Liberal Cabinet minute decision, and considering that similar documents on other related matters, not concerning Petro-Canada but other Treasury Board submissions, have already been made available in the past, so there is Cabinet precedent, I come back with my question to the Prime Minister. When he talked as he did in August in full knowledge of the constitutional traditions of this Parliament, of Cabinet government, and said that the Auditor General's right to these documents ought to be implemented, I repeat, why did he change his mind when he became Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The answer is I have not changed my mind at all, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I was confronted with constitutional advice that was given, and opinions conveyed by the former Government to the Auditor General, and I will acknowledge readily that, in attempting to defend the constitutional principle, it appears there is conflict emerging between that principle and the right of Parliament to know. I am on the side of Parliament having all of that information.

Because of the delicacy of it, but with a view to obtaining an urgent resolution of this matter, I am suggesting that the former Leader of the Government as a Privy Councillor, and the Leader of the New Democratic Party, meet with me on an urgent basis to devise a formula which will be respectful of the constitutional tradition but which will ensure that the Auditor General gets all of the facts in this case so that he can make a determination as to its propriety.

CONSTITUTIONAL TRADITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I thought just for a moment that the Prime Minister was going to say: "The devil made me do it". He did not go quite that far.

An Hon. Member: Not yet.

Mr. Broadbent: Would he, as Prime Minister, please explain to the House which precise constitutional practice or tradition would be violated if he decided to make available the specific documentation which the Auditor General has requested? Would he tell the House what tradition would be violated?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that over the course of Canadian history Cabinet discussions have remained confidential—

Mr. Broadbent: He did not want that.

Mr. Mulroney: —I am trying to answer the question—so as to ensure the full flow of debate within the Cabinet chamber. This debate is captured in Cabinet minutes and records of decision which are there. Most Ministers over the history of the country have participated in the knowledge that they were bound by Cabinet secrecy and that these documents would remain privileged. It was with a view to protecting that privilege of people who went before us in the ministry that I have taken a hard look at this. I can understand the reasons for that. It is important that Cabinet function in that manner. But because of the conflict of the Auditor General seeking information, I look to my hon. friend as a Privy Councillor, and to a former Leader of the Government, in the certain knowledge that by putting our three heads together we can come up with a formula that, as I say, will be respectful of that tradition but which will provide the Auditor General with all the information he needs to pass a value judgment on the propriety of a commercial transaction.

I am not trying to hide a single thing. We were not involved, directly or indirectly, in the Petro-Canada transactions. We are just here trying to provide the Auditor General with the truth, and the whole truth. That is what we are up to.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT PLANS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. According to this morning's edition of The Globe and Mail that paper has a leaked Conservative report of an internal task force on employment which states, among other pessimistic declarations:

> We found very little reason to be confident that we will solve the unemployment dilemma we face in the near future.

In the Minister's financial statement of November 8 he stated:

> Unemployment will come down only as U.S. interest rates fall, and at best will average 9 per cent for the rest of the decade.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Member have a question, please?

Mr. Allmand: Despite all the rhetoric with respect to unemployment during the campaign, are the Minister and the Conservative Party now telling the Canadian people that they have no specific plans to create employment other than to reduce the deficit and to leave everything to the private sector? Are these two pessimistic documents their only plans to create jobs?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: It is not unanimous.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Maybe the next time it will be unanimous. If the Hon. Member would look at the discussion paper attached to the economic statement of three weeks ago, he would see that a very broad change of direction is signalled by the Government. It will free up the economy, the obstacles to growth and the regulatory malaise which have slowed down the economy. It will be a major impetus to the economy and will create far more jobs than the direct job creation which this individual Member seeks; those jobs are not permanent, they do not satisfy the needs of the economy.

REQUEST THAT CONSERVATIVE PARTY REPORT BE TABLED

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): The Hon. Minister's Leader stated to the House a few minutes ago that he believed in the right of Parliament to decide and determine things. Mr. Speaker, will the Minister be willing to table the internal task force report of the Conservative Party which seems to have a lot of input into the policy making process of the Government? Will he be willing to table it and refer it to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration so that all Members of the House can review it and be more privy to the Government's plans for employment?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the document to which the Hon. Member refers was the subject of an extensive press conference back in early April of this year. Large portions of that document were discussed at that time. I believe they were also discussed in committee at the time. I do not believe that what the Hon. Member wants will add anything to the knowledge of the committee. I suggest that he read the agenda paper to have a better understanding than he does now of the directions which the Government will be following.

PETRO-CANADA PURCHASE OF PETROFINA—REQUEST FOR CABINET DOCUMENTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Auditor General Dye has labelled government arguments that Cabinet minutes are confidential and cannot be divulged as a "red herring", and that the Auditor General has had Cabinet information in the past, why is the Prime Minister stonewalling in the particular case of Petrofina and Petro-Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer this question as the Minister responsible for the issue. The Prime Minister asked several weeks ago to look into giving the Auditor General everything the law allowed, that means everything except private documents. In checking with my Department I have learned that, in fact, the Auditor General has received everything the law allows, that is, everything but Cabinet documents. I would be glad to table the list of the material supplied to him.

Unfortunately the Auditor General wants from me what the law does not permit me to give, that is, access to other Cabinet Ministers' material. They are not my memoirs.

Ms. Copps: Memoirs!

Miss Carney: In order to resolve this with the Auditor General, I have discussed with him whether he is willing to participate in an independent review for which I have commissioned chartered accountants. As the Prime Minister indicated, there are also parliamentary methods of going about this. I will be meeting Mr. Dye on Thursday to discuss further with him how we can accommodate his request without my breaking the law.

LEGAL REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is simple. Will the Minister please tell me what law she is talking about?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are advised as Ministers of the Crown by our legal advisers that we are not permitted access to the Cabinet documents of our predecessors. I would love to go rummaging around.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: I would dearly love to do that, but I am advised that that is not open to me, and that in future, anything in which I participate in Cabinet would not be available to people who follow me. That is the situation with which I am faced.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS' REFUSAL TO CASH WELFARE CHEQUES

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will know that Canadian banks continue to reel in magnificent profits and at the same time are turning away people who go to them to cash their welfare cheques. This leaves these people in the hands of a new breed of store-front bank sharks. Will the Minister tell Canadian banks to stop this scurrilous treatment of disadvantaged Canadians? Will he tell them that they are in business to serve all Canadians, rich and poor alike?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the practice which the Hon. Member discusses in the House today. I would be happy if he raises it with me and I will get back to him with a specific answer.

EXISTENCE OF CHEQUE DISCOUNTERS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, there is a new breed of store-front bank sharks who are setting up to cash cheques which the banks will not cash, and they are charging up to 6 per cent for that. Will the Minister do something about this rip-off? Will he set up a patrol of these bank sharks?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to take the Hon. Member's representation under advisement.

ABELLA COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. It concerns his meeting tomorrow with provincial Ministers. Since aggressive federal action is essential to set an example for the provinces if women are ever to achieve true economic equality, what specific actions has the Minister recommended to Cabinet to enforce the Abella Commission recommendations, particularly regarding employment equity and equal pay for work of equal value?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, indicated that she intends to bring very early to Cabinet an outline for discussion in order that as a Government we might address the issues concerned. Tomorrow's meeting of which the Hon. Member speaks is a meeting to address two important issues. One interfaces with the Abella Commission and concerns the impact of the First Ministers' meeting and economic issues relating to opportunities for women. In that discussion I will be interested to hear the observations of provincial Ministers on the Abella report.

MANITOBA DAY CARE LEGISLATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, since accessible and affordable child care is a prerequisite for equality, has the Minister studied the Manitoba proposal for a Canada Day Care Act? Will he recommend this model Act for consideration by both provincial and federal Governments?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the issue of day care is one which has seized all Canadians, but its delivery is primarily a responsibility of provincial Governments. At the moment we have a federal task force which is reviewing the matter. One of my purposes in meeting with the Ministers responsible is to receive their recommendations on how the task force the House will establish can have maximum acceptability by provincial Governments. Those recommendations will then go to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and his colleagues for implementation.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON ISSUE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In view of another tragic killing over the weekend, and fully appreciating the priority of economic matters which, frankly, will always be with us, would the Prime Minister have the Government House Leader meet with other House Leaders to discuss and define the time and manner of a debate on capital punishment, as a result of public interest in this matter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated in other circumstances, I hope that during the life of this Parliament there will be an occasion for Members to consider this and other matters. However, for the moment I think the priority of the country and of Members of the House is devoted toward economic renewal and economic recovery. Until the economy is in better health and we can see some light at the end of the tunnel, I think Hon. Members would want me to stay on that course.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TOURISM

ELIMINATION OF FUNDING UNDER INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Tourism. In his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Regional and Economic Expansion. The Government has decided to eliminate tourism funds under the Industrial and Regional Development Program. Until recently, this program provided valuable funds for tourism development. Why has the Government cut the tourism industry from this program, and why has it done so before having signed tourism subsidiary agreements with all of the provinces?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, in the latter part of his question, partly answered his own question. We believe we can give suitable assistance to the tourist industry through IRDA types of agreements and subagreements. Second, we believe there are better ways of helping the industry than the traditional IRDP approach to which the Hon. Member has referred.

CONSULTATION WITH INDUSTRY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister advise if there was consultation with the tourism industry before these cuts were announced and made?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will be pleased to learn that we are in constant touch with the tourist industry.

AUDITOR GENERAL

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Section 13(1) of the Auditor General Act states:

—the Auditor General is entitled to free access at all convenient times to information that relates to the fulfillment of his responsibilities—

Why is that access being denied?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the access is not being denied. I think the Hon. Member knows that. The Hon. Member quite understands the fact that there is this tradition of privilege that is associated with documents involving Cabinet deliberations.

We have only been here two months. I am not trying to protect anything that I or my colleagues have said. We are trying to be respectful of that tradition. I was delighted to hear my right hon. friend indicate that he would be ready at any time to meet and agree upon a formula that would allow unfettered access to the Auditor General within certain obvious constraints. I take it as an article of faith that the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and perhaps the Leader of the Opposition, will meet with me as soon as possible and we will help the Auditor General get on with his job.

LEGISLATION QUERY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that the same section I just quoted states: "Except as provided by any other Act of Parliament the Auditor General is entitled to free access—"? What Act of Parliament is there that denies the Auditor General the access he seeks?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not debating legal niceties with my friend today. There is a constant uninterrupted current of legal advice which buttresses the view that I have, with some reluctance I might say, been defending here.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Why don't you fire your lawyer?

Mr. Mulroney: You were fired a long time ago.

We could do a lot better and satisfy the requirements of Canadians if the former Minister of Energy and his predecessor appeared before a committee of this House and answered all the questions of the Auditor General. They have the answers. We are going to find a formula that will allow the Auditor General, on behalf of all Canadians, to get the truth. I hope the Hon. Member will help us in that.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

USE OF CENSUS DISTRICTS FOR TIER CLASSIFICATION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion on the application of the provisions of the Industrial and Regional Development Act respecting tier classification. Simply stated, a depressed area will be denied benefits if that community is included in a census district that in other areas has high employment and industrial activity. Will the Minister review the statutory requirement respecting the use of census districts for tier classification? One solution would be to allow the use of subdivisions of census districts to establish economic need in a particular community.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will be pleased to know that we have under review the classifications to which he is referring. In the instance he is specifically concerned with involving his own constituency, he will be pleased to know that on Friday I discussed his situation with the local officials and got an update on what is in fact the problem.

HOUSING

RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—PROVISION OF FUNDS TO LOWER INCOME GROUP

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. In committee last week the Minister said he was lowering the amount of money available for RRAP funding to families earning $13,000 a year or less. Does the Minister feel this measure of cut-back is appropriate at a time when the most recent CMHC annual report states that one million Canadians had identified their dwellings to be in a state of major disrepair?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry if the Hon. Member misunderstood what was said in committee last week. I recall saying in committee that 50 per cent of the monies now applicable under RRAP go to those families earning less than $13,000 a year. I stated that this would continue, even with the lowering of the amount of money available in the total aspect of RRAP. Our concept is to provide, within the fiscal framework that we have, to those most in need when it comes to housing.

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is stating, as he stated in committee, that he is considering lowering the eligibility to those families, he will be restricting families—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member put her supplementary question, please?

Ms. Copps: Does the Minister realize that lowering the ceiling to $13,000 will destroy the accessibility to social housing and rehabilitation funds by Canadians, many of whom at an $8,000 higher figure still live below the poverty line in Canada?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member feel that more money should be allocated to those earning $23,000 rather than to families headed by individuals who only earn $13,000? It is a priority of this Government to provide, within the scarce amount of funds available, to those individuals most in need. I am sure the Hon. Member will agree that families earning $13,000 are more in need than those who are earning $23,000.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

IMPENDING BRITISH WITHDRAWAL—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I am sure he is aware that Britain wants to withdraw from UNESCO. On "As It Happens" last Thursday, the Canadian Ambassador to UNESTO, Ian Clark, was asked if he had been notified by Ottawa of a joint Commonwealth appeal to Britain to stay in UNESCO. Does the Prime Minister feel that Ambassador Clark was following the Prime Minister's new guidelines for public servants when he replied, according to the transcript: "Now, Miss Gray, you can't ask me a question like that"?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we Clarks have to stay together. The Government of Canada is very deeply concerned about the progress of reform in UNESCO. We do not intend to follow the British action and signal an intention to withdraw from UNESCO. We are, however, going to ensure that there is a more speedy progress toward reform which will not only strengthen that agency but could strengthen all of the United Nations system.

QUESTION PUT TO AMBASSADOR

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the question was not answered. I simply want to ask, either the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, why Ambassador Clark was not allowed to answer a factual question like that. Why could he not answer? Was it because of the restrictive guidelines?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, it was not.

ENERGY

VENTURE OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT—MOBIL OIL COST ESTIMATE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Mobil Oil has estimated that it will cost approximately $3 billion to bring the Venture gas onshore. How much does the Government estimate it will take to bring this gas on shore?

• (1450)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that we cannot make that kind of estimate because we are not interventionists. We do not dictate to the company how it should develop the natural gas reserves. However, I am discussing the Venture project with Mobil, and at this point there seems to be every indication that that project is moving along very well. We look forward to the announcement of new sales contracts that will be made shortly.

DEPARTMENTAL STUDY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Can the Minister confirm that his Department in fact commissioned a study on the production of Venture gas and that that study states that the cost of bringing the gas onshore is considerably less than Mobil estimates, and in fact may be as little as $1.5 billion?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I am not aware of such a study. I will ask if there is such a study, and I will be in touch with the Hon. Member in due course.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PUBLIC SERVICE—WORKPLACE HEALTH AND SAFETY REGULATIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board.

Since, during the election campaign, the Conservative Party advocated more co-operation between the government and the public servants, could the Minister explain why the extension of the Canada Labour Code to health and security in the Public Service has been deferred for a period of 18 months without any consultation with the unions representing the Public Service?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, because the responsibility of implementing that Code rests with the Minister of Labour, I would like to reply to the Hon. Member's question as I replied on Friday. There is a need for consultation during the drafting of the regulations that will be implemented to reflect the views and wishes of the legislation, and it requires that amount of time. The Hon. Member knows that at present there are occupational health and safety provisions for public servants.

PUBLIC SERVICE REACTION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that the drafting of these regulations in the Province of Ontario took only nine months after the passage of Bill 70, and that it would have taken until March, 1985, if the same calendar had been followed here? Is the Minister aware to what degree his arbitrary decision, made without advance consultation, has shocked the Public Service and jeopardized the chances of a co-operative relationship with the Government of Canada?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I find the Hon. Member's expressions of shock to go further than I would like to see them go. It is very apparent that I have offered, to the Hon. Member and to his colleagues, consultations with my officials in the spirit of open government so that they will understand the necessity of drafting regulations that are consistent with the wishes of the employer and the employees, so that when those regulations, are implemented they will be implemented with knowledge and everyone will have had an opportunity to have had some input into those regulations.

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—DONATIONS TO FEED THE FAMINE-STRICKEN

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have in my hand a cheque for $1,760 made out to the Ethiopian Relief Fund, which was presented to me by a constituent who won a trip for two to Hawaii. This compassionate constituent felt that the Ethiopian hunger would be better helped by the money than—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Scowen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister assure the Canadian people that the Government is doing everything possible to see that every dollar donated is being spent on food for the hungry?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased not only to be able to give that assurance but to thank the Hon. Member for Mackenzie for bringing to the attention of the House of Commons one more instance of the extraordinary generosity of Canadians in response to the famine in Africa. I can offer the assurance to all Members, and to all interested Canadians, that the need continues and that the delivery system is as effective as we can expect under the circumstances. I am sure I speak for all members of the House of Commons in encouraging individual Canadians to continue their most generous contributions in response to the famine in Africa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION—APPOINTMENT OF NEW CHAIRMAN

As reported in Hansard of November 26, the Prime Minister stated, and I quote:

[English]

We do intend to proceed without undue delay with some appointments within the National Capital Commission and to depoliticize it—

Last weekend, a well known personality in Ottawa's political circles and active supporter of the Progressive Conservative Party was awarded an Oscar of a sort by the Prime Minister when he appointed her Chairperson of the National Capital Commission. My question is this: Was the Prime Minister really sincere when he stated last week that he meant to depoliticize appointments, especially those made to the National Capital Commission?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am quite surprised by the Hon. Member's question. For the first time an exceptional and extraordinary woman has been appointed to chair this important commission, and we are looking for other women with similar qualifications to carry out other important duties within the Civil Service, and you surprise me by asking me such a question. We want women to fill other important positions, and I can assure you that we will appoint more of them.

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—

NEGOTIATION OF FORMULA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Last week the Prime Minister wrote a letter to me which read in part:

At the time the new formula was negotiated, all provinces agreed with its objectives.

Since it was obvious that the Province of Quebec and the Province of Manitoba objected violently to the equalization formula, why did the Prime Minister write that to me? If he did not write, it, who wrote that statement for him?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was indicating to my hon. friend that the various formulae that we have inherited will be subject to renegotiation but were there when the new Government came in. I never meant to suggest that they were perfect, but they were there and we are trying to improve upon them. That is exactly what the Minister of Finance has been doing in Manitoba, Quebec, and elsewhere.

PROVISION OF INFORMATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister explain why he is giving me false information as to what the positions of the provinces were?

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Murphy: Why is he giving us false information when he knows that at least two provinces disagreed with that equalization formula?

Mr. Speaker: The question is in order.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend does himself—

Ms. Copps: How is your Teddy, Brian?

Mr. Mulroney: A little better than yours.

My hon. friend does himself and the House a disservice when he suggests that another Hon. Member wilfully misled him. I did no such thing. All the information he sought was provided in a way that I thought was above board and helpful. If the Hon. Member disagrees with it, that is his prerogative. However, I can give him the assurance that it was provided in the most honourable way.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

UNLICENSED CABLE TELEVISION OPERATORS—PROSECUTION QUERY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I would like to ask him to confirm that on Monday, November 19, he met with prosecutors from across the country who are prosecuting cases dealing with unlicensed cable television operators, and that he gave them the go-ahead to continue with those prosecutions on that date.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that may have been the date on which I met with the people from the Department who were assembled here in Ottawa, but I did not meet with any such group for the purpose of discussing prosecutions of cable companies or anything of the like.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I did not ask whether that was the purpose of the meeting. I asked whether that direction was given. Had the Minister, prior to that meeting, received from his colleague, the Minister of Communications, or any of the officials from the Department of Communications, information about the necessity or desirability of continuing those prosecutions?

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke to the officials of the Department I was not speaking on departmental business. There were a few words of greeting and a few words on general topics. I do not know to what the hon. gentleman is referring or what his informants told him, but the issue was not discussed, and it is completely irrelevant to whatever the hon. gentleman is trying to grope for.

PETITIONS

VIERGE ALTAGRÂCE HOUSING CO-OPERATIVE—REQUEST TO REINTRODUCE CANADA WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition signed by my constituents through the Vierge Altagrâce Housing Co-operative. They humbly ask the government to reintroduce, for the benefit of our senior citizens who worked so hard, the Canada Works program for the Vierge Altagrâce Housing Co-operative project which has been in abeyance for three years.

CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this, the day after the murder of the eighth police officer in Canada in the last four months, to present a petition signed by 269 residents of Ottawa West and other Canadian citizens, calling for the reinstatement of capital punishment for conviction of first degree murder.

Mr. Speaker: Could I take a moment to remind Members that it is unfair to the Chair and to other Members of the House to pass between the Speaker and the Member who is speaking. It makes it very difficult both for whoever is on the floor and for me. I would appreciate it if Hon. Members would undertake to remember that practice in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FOREIGN EXTRATERRITORIAL MEASURES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-14, an Act to authorize the making of orders relating to the production of records and the giving of information for the purposes of proceedings in foreign tribunals, relating to measures of foreign states or foreign tribunals affecting international trade or commerce and in respect of the recognition and enforcement in Canada of certain foreign judgments obtained in antitrust proceedings, be now read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Order Paper Questions

NARCOTIC CONTROL ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR MEDICAL USE OF HEROIN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-213, an Act to amend the Narcotic Control Act (therapeutic use of heroin).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to provide for the medical use of heroin, especially in the management of pain for the terminally ill. A similar Bill had its subject matter referred to committee in the last Parliament, but it was overtaken by the parliamentary calendar and by dissolution. I am hoping that the House will allow the committee to finish its work in this session.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 26.

[Text]

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES LAWYERS

Question No. 26—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed by the Department of Supply and Services?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): There are 18 lawyers assigned to the Department of Supply and Services from the Department of Justice.

[English]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, before I give consent to let the questions stand, I would like to bring to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary his habit of answering only one question a day. There have been a total of seven questions answered out of the over 100 questions which have been put to the Government. I just wondered if—

Mr. Speaker: I am in some difficulty. The House has developed the practice of allowing questions with regard to the status of a specific question. It is not a matter of consent as much as it is a matter for the House to agree to let the other questions stand. With great respect, I do not want to introduce the concept of general comments with regard to these practices, as this period could be extended longer than is necessary.

Mr. Gauthier: With all due respect, I am not entertaining debate. Mr. Speaker, you will have to ask for unanimous consent to allow the other questions to stand. I am telling you that I will not give that unanimous consent continuously in the weeks to come if the Parliamentary Secretary does not give the answers which are requested of him. I am simply giving you notice that you may not get unanimous consent to stand these questions in the days to come.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may want to consult the effect of refusing to give unanimous consent, if he were to choose to do so. I presume he knows what will happen to the questions on the Order Paper if he does that.

Mr. Gauthier: I sure do.

Mr. Speaker: I simply wanted to ensure that the Hon. Member knew about that.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about the status of question No. 65, which I submitted on November 13.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member quite simply that it has not yet been answered.

Mr. Nunziata: I would also like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about the status of question No. 66, which I submitted on November 13.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I think I should point out to the Hon. Member that in previous times a Member of this House had questions on the Order Paper for eight years and the previous government refused to answer them.

I would like to point out that as of the eighteenth sitting day, which was last Friday, this Government had answered 5.9 per cent of the questions, whereas on the eighteenth sitting day of the Thirty-second Parliament, the government had answered only 4.5 per cent of the questions.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that that is no less debate on the matter than that attempted by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Does the Hon. Member for York-South Weston (Mr. Nunziata) have another question on this matter?

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary when I might have answers to the 12 questions which I submitted to the Government. Can he give me a time frame?

Mr. Dick: Soon.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques):

That this House regrets that, after less than three months in office, the Government is in growing disarray as demonstrated by its harmful, inadequately considered and irresponsible cuts in government services of importance to the economic and social development of the regions and of individual Canadians as well as by Ministers' apparent inability to manage their departments and their relations with the provinces and with the public.

Mr. Speaker: Since the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) was in the middle of his question and comment period, I will advise the House that there are eight minutes remaining for questions and comments.

If there are no questions or comments, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I was beginning to wonder if today was in fact an Opposition day. I was also beginning to wonder if the Opposition was serious about the Opposition day. I thought that the Opposition might proceed in the next hour to deal with Questions on the Order Paper and to filibuster the House. That would give us an indication of how serious it is not about the embarrassing motion which has been proposed. The motion is embarrassing to the Opposition.

Mr. Boudria: It is your Government that is embarrassing.

• (1510)

Mr. Brisco: Let me review the Opposition motion. It states that the Government is in growing disarray "as demonstrated by its harmful, inadequately considered and irresponsible cuts". Including the words "inadequately considered" would infer that we really have not examined the matter in any depth and that what we should do is resort to greater study. For the record, Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to Hansard of November 7, 1984, at page 38. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said, and I quote:

Studies are not action. Process is not an agenda for progress. The Prime Minister and his Party have a massive majority.

At least we can agree on that.

We can see it in this House. We can see it all around us. Now they are the Government. Now they must face the tough issues and difficult decisions.

That is what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition asked us to do, that is what we are doing and that is what that Party is now complaining about. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition goes on to say, and I quote:

> That is what their role is. That is what the Canadian poeple put them into office to do, not to study, contemplate, ruminate and meditate.

What do we find today, Mr. Speaker? We find an article in The Citizen entitled "Sky High", and the relationship to the title is the $1 million cost of the probe into the crash of Air Canada's Gimli Glider. I think it should more likely be called the "Gimli gimmick" which was perpetrated on the Canadian people by the former Minister of Transport. The former Minister of Transport insisted that the probe be held in Winnipeg, coincidentally in his riding, because, after all, Gimli is not too far away from Winnipeg and that is where the Air Canada Boeing 767 went down, out of gas. Therefore, it should follow that that is where the study should be held. But how many times did that commission manage to get to Gimli? Just once, Mr. Speaker. Yet that commission managed to go to Vancouver, London, Frankfurt, Zurich, Paris, Seattle, San Francisco, Manhattan, Chicago, Atlanta, Dallas, Montreal and Edmonton in order to find out how an airplane runs out of gas.

Mr. Crosbie: And it never ran out of gas once.

Mr. Brisco: You are right. And the study is still not ready. That is the kind of contemplation and rumination which the former government indulged in. Those Hon. Members should not ask us to perform that kind of self-examination of our navels at an enormous cost to the taxpayers.

The Liberal Party says that the cuts in government services, which are of importance to the economic and social development of the regions, is irresponsible. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) said this morning: "We must be putting more money into people's pockets". What that means in effect is that we do not cut, we spend. If that is not what the Hon. Member is saying, then I stand to be corrected. What I believe he is saying is that we do not decrease the deficit, we increase it.

The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor advised us that he is an economist. As such he is some form of a specialist. I must say, however, that that specialty is in deep trouble in his Party. Mr. Laxer tells us that he is in deep trouble in terms of his Party because the Party is in deep trouble in terms of its economic philosophy. I recall on Cross Country Checkup when the Leader of the New Democratic Party was waxing eloquently about how up to date his Party was in its philosophy and policy. He was really upset with Mr. Laxer and was letting Canadians know that the New Democratic Party was right on its economic track. When was the program Cross Country Checkup aired? It was just before the election campaign. It was in 1984 and the closest year the Leader of the New Democratic Party could refer to as reference was 1979. He said his Party went along with the Liberals in 1979, but he is right out of touch in 1984. I do not believe he has ever read Orwell. If he has, he must have started at the back of the book and read it in reverse. The corollary is that we do not discourage investment, we encourage it, thereby encouraging Canadians to put their savings into the elements which are going to bring this country back from the brink of disaster and rebuild the economy.

I would be very interested in terms of the election campaign just past to know what the Liberal policy is on this particular problem with which we are faced, the deficit. How does the Liberal Party rationalize its motion? I would like to know what the New Democratic Party policy is. I say that on the basis of my experience in appearing on eight or ten open line shows during the period of the election campaign.

What a spectacle, Mr. Speaker, of the Liberal candidate looking through her policy book—which consisted of three pages, handwritten. Finally, in the last week of the election campaign, glory be, there it was with the Liberal logo on the front. It was official. When I asked the former Hon. Member for Kootenay West what his Party's policy on mining was, he did not know. He did not believe there was a policy on mining. I knew what the New Democratic Party's policy on forestry was because it had copied ours. That was a great help because at least we could communicate on that subject. There are two main resources of Kootenay West, mining and forestry, and at least the former Hon. Member for Kootenay West was half right; but there was an absence of policy as indicated by the thinness of the manual. It looked like a starved child.

During the election campaign I had the opportunity, as did many Canadians, to listen to the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor speak on the CBC in programs of national consequence. In fairness, I wondered what that Party had to offer us. If they could not tell us what the answers were, at least they could give us some concrete solutions or suggestions. That is what I had hoped for, and some things which the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor had to say did make sense.

However, this House of Commons is the place not just for debate; it is a place where one should be prepared to listen to the concrete solutions of either the Government or the Opposition. Just because one is in opposition is no justification to slam and kick. It is an opportunity to offer alternatives. But I have yet to hear from Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party or Hon. Members of the Liberal Party as to any alternatives. I have heard them say "Cut this, butcher that, do this", but in terms of laying out in a sensible and cohesive manner a proposal which any Party could consider, be they on this side or the other side, I would have to say how disappointed I am in the rabble across the way.

The motion moved by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), Mr. Speaker, refers to "harmful, inadequately considered and irresponsible cuts". Let me ask Hon. Members opposite where they were when the NDP got together with the Liberals on the National Energy Program, a total economic disaster? Were they ever in Alberta or northern British Columbia, or were they comfortably sequestered in their seats in this House of Commons? Did you see any of these Hon. Members out in northern British Columbia, off the beaten track in the Fort St. John gas-producing area? Did you see them at drill sites in Alberta? No, sir! I can remember reading a document in which the NDP energy critic thought that tar sands and heavy oil were the same thing. So much for knowledge. So much for the ability to criticize intelligently.

How many Members opposite realize that when you drill for oil it is not just a brace and bit. When you drill for oil you are talking about a structure that takes two years to build and costs millions of dollars. It requires up to 40 flatbed trucks to move it from one site to another. In the case of a deep well, it is 64 trucks. But they do not realize that, Mr. Speaker. They did not see the industry shut down, the trucks parked and unmoving. Neither did they see the tool retrieval firms with half a dozen employees go bankrupt. They did not see the suppliers of equipment and services to the oil and gas sector. How many of them ever went to the small town of Drayton Valley and looked at the number of houses for sale? None of them, Mr. Speaker. They were in isolation, wrapped up in their House of Commons cocoons. They dared not step off the threshold.

The bottom line is that they have never cared for the West. Never! The Party with its roots in the West is the very Party that abrogated its responsibility to the West. I speak of the NDP. That, Mr. Speaker, is what has brought about their demise and will continue to do so.

They pose questions about economic and social development of the regions. We have had some howling about the four and a half person-years being removed from the interpretation centre at the Creston Valley Wildlife Management area. I have not heard a word out of these people opposite about the social and economic impact on loggers, truckers and other equipment operators of the rebate of 20 cents a gallon on fuel taxes for the resource sector. I have not heard a word about the difference that is going to make to the trucker who has to haul logs some 40 miles over back roads. I have not heard a word about the fact that this 20-cent rebate will mean that, on the basis of fuel consumption and mileage, a trucker will now be able to buy one new tire a month, and there are 18 tires on a logging truck. I have not heard a word about the fact that that rebate can mean the difference between survival and failure, between employment and unemployment, in the fragile forest industry of British Columbia. I have not heard a word about the opportunities provided to the mining sector. But then of course, they really have not asked about them, Mr. Speaker.

The motion, as framed, is specious and frivolous, particularly when I hear them talk about the social consequences. Do not talk to me about social consequences when I represent a riding with the highest unemployment rate in British Columbia at 24 per cent.

Mr. Marchi: What are you doing about it?

Mr. Brisco: Working a darn sight harder on it in this House of Commons than you are, sir.

Mr. Marchi: Answer the question.

Mr. Brisco: I would be pleased to answer your question after I have had my shot.

Mr. Nunziata: Answer it right now.

Mr. Brisco: No, I am not going to bother with your frivolous question at this moment.

When it comes to the social and economic consequences of 24 per cent unemployment, I have seen them. Why do you suppose that the third floor of the Nelson Hospital has 12 beds occupied now instead of one? Why do you suppose the people occupying those beds are there by virtue of acute mental and psychological depression? It is because in Nelson, B.C., there is a 24 per cent unemployment rate.

In Kootenay West we have the highest unemployment rate in British Columbia, and among the eight highest in Canada. When they talk to me about social consequences, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you that those miners are glad to have the opportunity to get back to work. Forest workers, loggers, truck drivers, skidders, they are all delighted at the opportunity to know that this 20-cent rebate, taken across the board, can mean the difference between survival and failure. But what do I see here? I see a member of the Liberal Party grinning. I hope he never has the misfortune to have the level of unemployment in his constituency that I have in mine. If he did, he would not be sitting there grinning. He would understand the impact that has on the people I care for and whom he should be caring for.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I will turn to a statement by the Economic Council of Canada. They have again reminded us of how we got into our current fiscal mess. Perhaps the Liberals and NDP on the opposite side who have a grain of doubt in their minds should carve this in stone on their foreheads. What happened was quite simple, and I quote:

> We designed elaborate government programs in the sixties, and added to them in the seventies. Yet the economic growth to pay for the programs faded in the seventies, opening an increasing gap between expenditures and revenues. The recession of 1981-82 blew the gap wide open, sending the federal deficit from $10-billion to $35-billion.

They went on to say:

> Tighter spending controls, a review of some 'tax expenditures' and a more relaxed monetary policy is the combination the country requires.

Those are the proposals put forward by the Economic Council of Canada. I look forward to listening to some good sense and good suggestions from the opposition side. How refreshing that would be in the House of Commons.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to my hon. friend that despite the differences in this House, no one grins about unemployment, whether it is in his riding, mine, in eastern Canada or western Canada.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member about the unemployment situation in his own riding. The Hon. Member's Government was elected on a promise of job creation as the first priority, not necessarily cutting the deficit. His Leader and caucus went around the country from east to west promising thousands of jobs overnight. I would think they were also referring to the Hon. Member's riding. What does the Hon.

Member's Government have to propose concerning job creation for the people in his riding and others? Give us some solutions instead of only talking about concepts and the idea of co-operation, consideration and consultation. Many Canadians believe that such talk adds up only to vegetation. Let the Hon. Member tell us what he proposes not only for his riding but for other ridings across this country that face unemployment. Let him put those proposals on the floor.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I have no difficulty in responding to that question in terms of my own riding. I would rather not offer solutions for all the other ridings because that is a rather heavy responsibility to deal with today. However, I am more than prepared to respond in terms of the constituency of Kootenay West.

What has the Government done? If the Hon. Member had been paying attention he would have heard that the forestry sector in British Columbia is in very serious trouble. It is facing oversupply primarily as a result of cutting wood for nothing else but two by fours. The economy has forced that sector to consider modernization, expansion and efficiency. We have provided the ways and means for such improvements to one sawmill in particular through assistance in the sum of approximately $1.25 million, which will guarantee the maintenance of existing jobs. In terms of the Hon. Member's question, I believe that is an example of what the Government is doing.

We are also considering an application by Cominco—which is the largest silver, lead and zinc producer in the free world—for assistance in the construction of a new lead smelter in Trail. That will generate 600 jobs directly for six years. The spin-off benefits in the ratio of two to one should be evident to the Hon. Member. The application of that particular project would certainly prevent a directly negative impact on approximately 3,000 jobs along with the spin-off effect on 40,000 people living in a number of communities.

I would suggest that the initiative, which has been approved, and the Cominco application, which is being studied, will go a long way to help to secure job opportunities and create additional job opportunities in the forestry sector.

I have already mentioned the impact of the 20 cent per gallon tax abatement on diesel and gasoline fuels for off-road use in the bush and in the mining sector.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am goaded into making some comments and asking a brief question. First, I would suggest that if the Hon. Member read Hansard more carefully, he would see that there are four occasions since this session started when, as our Party's spokesman for economic development, I laid out positive suggestions for reviving the economy.

I have made speeches about industrial development, agricultural policy, tax policy and trade strategy. If the Hon. Member is interested, I can give him the references.

He also suggested that there was a comment in my criticism of the Government dealing with putting money in people's pockets and that somehow it suggested irresponsibility. I was suggesting, and continue to stress, that it is crucial to our economy to put more money into the pockets of the taxpayers of this country who, I believe, are overtaxed. The economic crisis in this country, as in fact analysed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), stressed the problem of consumer confidence. His approach to creating more confidence has been tax those people more and to cut back public sector services.

It is our opinion that such an approach does not make sense since one creates more consumer confidence by allowing ordinary Canadians to have more money in order to be able to spend more and have a greater sense of security for the future.

How can the Hon. Member, as a Conservative, stand up in the House and make the kind of commentary he does when so many of his colleagues in the last Parliament made commitments, such as to ensure that borrowing does not take place for the next fiscal year, to provide, an open government, and to consult with groups affected by policies, yet his own Government is taking a step by step move away from those past commitments?

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). If he cares to provide me with the page reference to his comments on agriculture, the tax system and economic development, I would be pleased to read them.

In his remarks this morning, the Hon. Member made frequent reference to butchery when I hoped that he would give some solid and forthright suggestions about what his Party's policy would be as a solution.

He stated that there is too much taxation and that taxpayers should have more money in their pockets. However, the economic indicators suggest that there should be more taxation. The Economic Council of Canada is saying that there should be more taxation. It also stated that any government is fearful of adding to the tax burden of taxpayers.

If I understood the Hon. Member correctly, when he spoke of putting money into people's pockets, he meant reverting back to the grant system. While there are times when I believe the grant system is more appropriate, I have seen some major abuses of the grant system in my constituency. When the Canada Works applications come before my advisory board, they will be most carefully screened. I do not want to see an apple juicing plant erected in a community where there are no apple trees. I do not want someone given a grant to build a pelton wheel factory, only to have that building revert to that person for him to sell when in fact no pelton wheels are produced. It is that kind of use of the grant system that I am against.

With respect to the issue of seeking borrowing authority for the next fiscal year, I think the Hon. Member must realize that, for the Government to implement even to a degree only the programs which his own Party espouses as well as our programs that will help generate short-term employment and meaningful long-term job training, borrowing is necessary at this stage. I do not like it any more than the Hon. Member, but it is an issue that has confronted us and one which we have acted upon. We must bite the bullet, and we have done so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. We will resume debate.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to enter the debate on the opposition motion of the Liberal Party. Basically, the motion states that after less than three months the Government does not seem to know where it is going.

● (1540)

While I support the motion, having sat in the House the last number of years when the Liberals were in power, I have often wondered whether the Liberal government knew where it was going. In most instances the Liberal government did not know where it was going. It was crisis management, going from pillar to post and not really providing any leadership for Canadians and for our economy.

The September 4 election of the new Government, I hasten to add, brought with it a lot of promise and hope, but we have seen in the last three months what type of direction this Government wants to take. To tell you the truth, Mr. Speaker, I am quite afraid. At first I was quite hopeful. While in Opposition I had an opportunity to talk and meet with a fair number of members of the Conservative Party. I got the impression that many were people with whom I could associate myself. Many were small "c" Conservatives who were concerned about preserving and conserving.

I am very committed to the notion of a conserving society. I believe that Canada and most of the industrialized western countries are going through major economic, social and environmental changes. The rapid growth in the past has in many ways reached its limits. For society to survive in the 21st century, we must begin to conserve scarce resources, for instance, energy and other natural resources. We must attempt to conserve our land, clean water, and clean air. We must begin to conserve and use wisely our capital and human resources. I had hoped, perhaps naively, that this new Government might begin the task of introducing into the Canadian social and economic fabric some of the notions of a conserving society. How disappointed I was when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought down his economic statement.

It seemed to me that all the programs which the Liberals had introduced in a hesitant way, often as a result of pressure from people such as New Democrats, and I must say as well the odd Conservative Member, were some of the main programs which the Minister of Finance and the Conservative Party elected to cut back or abolish as a whole.

Let us go through the list. First, let me deal with environmental questions. Coming from Saskatchewan, I have been concerned with the increasing use of herbicides and pesticides. It has been the practice in the last number of years to use chemical products to kill weeds and undesirable pests. Over the years we find that insects and plants develop resistance to these chemical products, and so more powerful chemical products are needed to do the job. We have also found that some of the tests that determine the safety of these products on the environment and on consumers have not been all that honest.

A number of years ago I rose in my place in the House and brought to the attention of the former Minister of the Environment, the former Minister of Health, and the former Minister of Agriculture the faulty testing of International Bio-Test Laboratories in the United States. It had done most of the testing on almost all of the herbicides and pesticides that are on the market in Canada today. It was discovered that that lab had deliberately falsified the tests. The matter was first brought up in a Senate subcommittee by Senator Kennedy in the United States. I raised questions in the House and in committee on numerous occasions. In the beginning, the then Minister of Health pooh-poohed me. She said that I was unduly raising the concerns of Canadians and that our system of testing the safety of these products was quite adequate. Many officials of International Bio-Test Laboratories are in jail in the United States. The governments both in the United States and in Canada have had to withdraw certain products from the market because they were found unsafe. Tests had to be redone costing millions of dollars, for which farmers and consumers must eventually pay.

It has been recognized that the massive use of chemicals will have a detrimental effect on users, consumers, and the environment. Studies after studies have been done by the Department of the Environment showing mutations among the lower level of biological life at the lake bottoms in Saskatchewan and in the Great Lakes as a result of the chemical residue that washes into these fresh bodies of water.

Programs that monitor changes in the lower form of life give warning signals to the rest of society. They tell us that abnormal changes in the life pattern are occurring and these will eventually move up into life's chain, affecting the health and welfare of all Canadians. This monitoring is important if we are to conserve the fresh water we have for the generations to come. The speed of technological change is such that it is not just the health and safety of generations to come with which we must concern ourselves but the health and safety of our own generation.

I was very sad to notice that one of the programs to be cut by this Government was the program to study toxicology and the program to study the effects of dioxins and other such substances in the Great Lakes.

A number of years ago I had the privilege together with my colleagues of touring the dump sites at Niagara on both the Canadian and the American sides. I saw the Love Canal. I am speaking not only of the Love Canal; there are other dump sites in which Hooker Chemical has dumped thousands of pounds of highly toxic materials. When the war in Vietnam came to an end, Hooker Chemical realized it had un-needed chemicals, such as Agent Orange. One will recall that DDT was banned. Hooker Chemicals decided to bury their un-needed chemicals in dump sites. We know there has been a certain amount of leeching from these dump sites through the Niagara River into the Great Lakes. We know there are toxic chemicals in the dump sites. If some irresponsible person or some act of nature such as a storm, an earthquake, or whatever else were to wash enough of these highly toxic substances into the Great Lakes system, it would destroy the system as a source of fresh water for humans. The whole of the Great Lakes could become so filled with toxic substances that human beings would no longer be able to draw from it water to drink. It is so sad for me to hear that the program to monitor the amount of dioxin material in the Great Lakes is scrapped. I call that false economy. In fact, to say false economy is mild. It is such stupidity that it amazes me. For the sake of a few million dollars, the Government is willing to risk the water supply for all of southern Ontario. That is stupidity to the nth degree.

As a country we have one of the richest forms of natural wildlife. Today I received a letter from The Saskatchewan Natural History Society. I should like to read a paragraph of it for the record. It reads:

> In particular our members are most outraged by cuts which will: close the Prairie Wildlife Interpretation Centre near Swift Current; halt the planned reintroduction of the Swift Fox, an endangered species; and cancel the 1985 opening of Grasslands National Park. Our members also wish to protest: reduction of wildlife research programs; elimination of the wildlife habitat acquisition fund and the termination of the 200 seasonal naturalist positions in National Parks.

This Government, previous governments and governments to come have a responsibility to preserve our wildlife so that it is not dissipated within the life span of our generation. It is terrible for us in this generation to assume that we can despoil wildlife for generations to come. Surely we have a responsibility and a duty to maintain our natural wildlife. The actions of the Government for the sake of saving a few million dollars have determined that the Swift Fox as an endangered species can go by the way and that the Grasslands National Park can go by the way, that there is no need to preserve them. What false economy!

Turning to the list of further cut-backs, I should like to deal with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. As we move into a time when energy will cost more because it is an unrenewable resource, even though market conditions will see the price fluctuate, we know that in the end the price and cost of energy will rise.

The solution for reasonable men and women is to begin to preserve, conserve and develop alternatives. With a downturn in the cost of energy such as the one we are experiencing now because of international situations and a downturn in the economy, we have been provided with a bit of breathing room. Now is the time to have on stream some of the alternatives—solar, wind and different forms of hydro. It is essential for us to make these alternatives into economically viable alternatives while there is time. Let us not awaken one morning to find another oil crisis where the cost of energy will go through the roof and threaten the economic and social well-being of the country. Let us not discover that we have not done our work on developing alternatives. Lo and behold, it is another area which the Government has deemed to be unuseful and deserves to be cut. The NRC program developing wind, solar and alternative forms of energy is cut. The home insulation program is cut and will eventually die. That particular program saved the skin of the previous government and of Canadian taxpayers by the amount of energy it saved. Positive-thinking Canadians participated in that program. Governments at the time called upon Canadians to work together to help preserve and conserve energy, and Canadians responded. Surely that is the road the Government must follow if it really believes in working with people and being dedicated to conserving and preserving.

No, that is not the route the Government wants to see Canadians develop. Instead, we will become more dependent upon the oil industry and upon those people who hold the economic and social well-being of our country in their fists. Rather than encouraging and providing leadership for Canadians to develop alternatives and independence, we will be forced into a greater dependency upon the oil industry.

Turning to the area of housing, again I refer to the work of the National Research Council in developing more energy-efficient housing. That program will be scrapped. RRAP attempts to conserve and preserve older housing stock in the city core. That program has been cut. Our city cores can rot. As long as land developers and speculators on the outskirts of cities are doing their thing, everything must be hunky-dory as far as the Tories are concerned. So much for the core of our cities.

Let me deal with the cuts in cultural agencies. Wise men and women who have the responsibility of government must realize that if we are to preserve ourselves as an independent country, having our own sense of identity and culture and living so close to the American border and its culture, it is the responsibility of governments to work with the private sector to help maintain and conserve a separate cultural identity. This is why cultural activities are so essential for the well-being of our nation as a separate entity. However, we see further cut-backs in essential cultural services to the country.

The Tories say, "preserve it" and "conserve it"; in fact, that was their slogan in Ontario. In fact, they ran Ontario Hydro ads reading "preserve it, conserve it". The previous speaker from Kootenay West made reference to George Orwell. I would like to do likewise. Surely Newspeak is occurring here, the utterance of slogans which in the end are just empty slogans. The government Party is not committed to preserving and conserving. It is committed to exploitation. It is committed to exploiting the environment here and now and damn the future, damn the environment, damn the quality of life and the quality of our fresh water. It is not a conserving Party. It is one that exploits, one that would seek to exploit our valuable human, technological and environmental resources just for its sake right now. It is not concerned with the future. It is not composed of men and women who have the well-being of generations to come at heart. Its bottom line is whether its members will be re-elected in four years. Its time span is a very narrow one. As we move into the 21st century, I am afraid it is a mind-set which will lead to disasters such as the urea formaldehyde disaster, thalidomide babies, environmental mistakes, miscalculations and misplanning. Future generations will have to pay many more dollars to correct the mistakes that these people are making in the name of false economy. As such, I wholeheartedly support this motion.

M. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. He has advocated expenditure on a number of items which have been postponed. Would he prefer a larger deficit this year than previously announced by the Liberals? Would he like to spend forever?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I have given two speeches in this House dealing with the deficit. I am well on record as saying that the deficit has to be reduced. I have been suggesting that there are false economies. I suggest that these cuts in the environment, science and preventive health care are false economies that will in the end cost us more.

The point in both my speeches is that this Government is concerned about the expenditure side of the balance sheet. The Economic Council reported last week that the Canadian Government has not overspent. As the Economic Council pointed out, we have not been collecting the revenues that should have been collected.

I pointed out the scam in the research and development tax credit. Introduced by our Liberal friends, it was supposed to involve only $100 million in lost revenue. When the Liberals left, it had run up to $1.5 billion. Apparently there is a grandfather clause. We will lose another $400 million to $500 million under the Tories because of this grandfather clause. Instead of putting on a moratorium, we will lose another half billion dollars under this grandfather clause. That half billion dollar loss would do more than just restore these cut-backs in the environment, preventive health care and home insulation.

That is why my answer to the Hon. Member is that these cuts are false economies. The public Treasury could have saved money in ways they have chosen to ignore. Rather, they cut areas that are essential to the health and well-being of Canada.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, in the two speeches on the deficit, did the Hon. Member explain in detail where he would either raise the revenue or cut expenditures in the nature of $4 billion or $5 billion to reduce the deficit somewhat? Did he detail where he would make the cuts or increase the revenue?

Mr. de Jong: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not given a counter-budget. As soon as the Government introduces its full budget, there will be opportunities to introduce a counterbudget. I have suggested one item to the Hon. Member: Put the freeze on the grandfather clause that deals with R and D. That would save the public Treasury some $500 million. With that saving, the Government could restore some of the cut-backs in preventive health care, home insulation, alternate energy and the environment.

Mr. Dick: Does the Hon. Member not believe that he would gain credibility if he suggested, rather than just criticising, a constructive alternate package of cuts and tax increases?

Mr. de Jong: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. That is why we will be asking the Government for much more information. We want to know about the $4.5 billion in uncollected taxes. We want to know whether the $1.6 billion that the corporate sector has not paid in taxes, even though it accepts the fact that it owes these taxes, has been collected. We want to know why the $400 million which companies have deducted from their employees to be remitted to the Government has not been remitted. Why is the Government writing off $100 million of that amount?

We want to know some of the deferred taxes. We want to know the type of information introduced by the Minister of Finance in the Clark Government with regard to tax loopholes and how much lost revenue has occurred. We would like to know how many jobs were created and how much useful social activity occurred because of these tax breaks. When we have that information, we will be able to supply the Hon. Member with a blueprint of how to balance our budget and still do the important things a Government needs to do, such as conserving the health and the environment of Canada.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I want to be sure I heard the Hon. Member correctly. A moment ago he said he wanted to balance the budget. Is it now the position of the New Democratid Party that it wants to have a balanced budget?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, it would be very foolish for us to attempt to balance the budget in one year. It would create social havoc. Let me point out, as I have done in other speeches—and the Hon. Member may not be aware of this—that when the NDP and its predecessor the CCF were the government of the Province of Saskatchewan, we had a balanced budget. When the Conservatives were elected in the Province of Saskatchewan in 1982, we had a surplus of $170 million. After less than two years of Conservative government, the Province of Saskatchewan has a deficit higher that all the deficits in the history of Sasktachewan rolled into one, thanks to a Conservative government. How they were able to accomplish that is still a puzzle to us. They cut back on social and human services and sold mines, highway equipment and public assets. They have done the cut-backs and have still rolled up a $1 billion deficit. That takes some doing.

Why is it that Conservative governments, whether elected in England, the United States or Saskatchewan, end up with higher deficits than ever before? The highest deficit in the United States is now, under a Conservative government. The highest deficit in England is now, under a Conservative government. The highest deficit in Saskatchewan is now, under a Conservative government.

I will stand here in my place one, two and three years from now and accuse this Government of increasing our deficit. I predict that with its economic policies there will be a downturn in economic development in this country, in economic activity.

Public revenues will fall and the deficit will increase under its so-called stewardship.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased that the Hon. Member stopped at the end of three years because in the fourth year we hope that he will be defeated. Under the NDP Government of Manitoba, the only NDP Government we have presently, that Province has the highest per capita deficit of any province. I did not know we were going to debate provincial budgets in the federal House.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It started under Sterling Lyon.

Mr. Dick: This is much higher. The Hon. Member did not answer my question. How soon does he want to see the federal budget balanced?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, we all want to see our debts paid off as soon as possible. As I mentioned before, this cannot be done overnight. We have to accept some of the economic realities. We have to ensure that cuts are done with wisdom, care and in an open way. People should know the economic and social consequences of those cuts. That is how to begin to reduce the deficit. We must pinpoint where there are wasteful expenditures and where there are tax breaks and tax loopholes that are not productive. Once that information becomes public, it will become evident to all Members of Parliament and Canadians where the fat is to be trimmed, what loopholes are to be closed and what public revenues are to be saved. Until the Government comes across and starts supplying that information rather than trying to hide it in some secretive way, Canadians, including members of the Opposition, will never be able to give a straight answer to the Hon. Member because we do not have the information. The Government has the information and it does not want to share it with anybody.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques):

That this House regrets that, after less than three months in office, the Government is in growing disarray as demonstrated by its harmful, inadequately considered and irresponsible cuts in government services of importance to the economic and social development of the regions and of individual Canadians as well as by Ministers' apparent inability to manage their departments and their relations with the provinces and with the public.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be taking part in the debate today and to second the motion moved by my colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

I would like to start by mentioning the presence in the Chair of the newly elected Member for Verchères (Mr. Danis) who has been a patient and courageous defender of Progressive Conservative interests in the Province of Quebec for many years, and I am sure it gives him a great deal of satisfaction to be here in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore wish to offer you my best wishes for a successful though perhaps not very long career.

This Government, which has just received a very strong mandate from the Canadian people, started by creating expectations among all levels of our society. It is a fact that Canada is going through a difficult economic period. Because of the world economic situation, unemployment rates in this country have been fairly high, and, like other industrialized countries, we have also experienced a slowdown in economic growth.

At the time it was easy for the Opposition to criticize the Government and have Canadians believe that a change in government would be beneficial. However, we accept the verdict of Canadian voters. The Progressive Conservative Party offered Canadians an alternative, which was accepted. Voters thought that by electing Progressive Conservative Members, prosperity would return to this country and they would find jobs very shortly. We do not blame them for this political judgement. We are too democratic to complain about the result of an election. We accept the people's verdict, but, as the Official Opposition, it is our duty to point out to Canadians that this Government, which promised so much, is very slow to deliver on its promises and to respond to the expectations of Canadians.

I was reading the newspaper "Le Droit" and I saw a headline: "All talk, no action". I am referring to an editorial by journalist Alain Dexter, which appeared in the weekend edition. He was referring to the Government of Canada in connection with acid rain and said: "All talk, no action".

Mr. Speaker, I think this is an appropriate slogan for the new Government of Canada and its Prime Minister: "All talk and no action", because the Progressive Conservative Party's 338 election promises are certainly far from being kept, and I have no hesitation in saying right now that they will never be kept in the four years to come. All we have to do is look at what has been done, starting with the Throne Speech, and then the economic message by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), to realize that this Government has already aligned itself with certain groups in our society, to the detriment of those Canadians who are in need and constitute the most disadvantaged groups in our society. If anyone asked me what kind of favorites this Government plays, I would say without hesitation that this Progressive Conservative Government, this Mulroney Government, plays favorites with big business and more particularly, with the oil companies.

If we read the economic message carefully, in page after page the Minister of Finance focussed almost exclusively on energy questions, not for the benefit of Canadian consumers but for the benefit of the multinationals which are being given additional grants and additional concessions. And who is going to pay? Canadian consumers, who will have to pay more for gas and oil in the months and years to come. This Government had raised a lot of hope and paid close attention to the people of Canada, this Government had stated that job creation would be its first priority, yet this same Government has just shown through budget cutbacks that it will create unemployment rather than jobs for Canadians.

This morning, I listened to the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé), his maiden speech in the House. And what did the Member for Chambly say? He told us that the Government has a three-prong action plan: first, lower the deficit, second, ask the private sector to create jobs and, third, invite foreign investors to spur our economy.

Closer examination of those three points reveals that the Canadian Government has given up altogether on its responsibilities. It expects others to create jobs and launch the economic recovery. Not only will the Government fail to create jobs but, as a result of its drastic cutbacks in several departments, it will create unemployment directly by making Canadian public servants lose their jobs and, indirectly, by depriving Canadian institutions of the grants they had become used to, which they were entitled to and which they were given before by the Liberal Government.

Quite obviously, Mr. Speaker, the Government has switched priorities, anxious as it is to lower the deficit. That is what leading businessmen and major corporations have been saying for years to the Canadian Government, and that is what they told us when we were in office: Cut the deficit.

I have never seen an ordinary worker, an ordinary citizen, somebody we refer to as the man in the street urge the Government to cut the deficit. Never! But I have seen many business leaders, businessmen and major corporation executives tell the Government to cut the deficit. Well, now, the first priority of the Progressive Conservative Government, its first measure is not to give jobs to those who need them. No, its first priority is to reduce the deficit, to make ordinary Canadians suffer even more just to please the corporate sector. That is why I say that the favourable prejudice of the Mulroney Government benefits the corporate sector to the detriment of ordinary Canadians. We in the Official Opposition will work hard and tirelessly to force the Government to keep the election promises it made this past summer and in early September. We will make sure that people across the land come to understand and recognize this Government's true character, this new character that clearly will honour some commitments to the large multinational corporations but will not help all those whom they had promised to help during the election campaign.

We are now convinced that this will be detrimental to this country's poor, to the co-operative groups that are cut from the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation's programs. It will be detrimental to the Canadian workers who welcomed the passing of the Canadian Labour Code Amendment Bill just before the Houses adjourned, and who now hear from the new Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) that time will be needed to draft the regulations and that the new amendments to the Canadian Labour Code will not become effective before a couple of years.

Mr. Speaker, this proves one thing. It proves that this Tory Government is not lending its ears to women and workers who were the main beneficiaries of the amendments to the Canadian Labour Code. This Government lends its ears to large corporations, to business people. Those bankers, those spokesmen for the Canadian Bankers' Association and the major Canadian manufacturers have told the Minister of Labour: "Sit on the regulations, wait before you put into force that Act which was passed by the previous Government. Take your time drafting the Regulations." And this Tory Government, with an ear of course for these businessmen and bankers, has shelved as far away as possible the drafting of the new regulations relating to the Canadian Labour Code.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I suggest this is not good enough. It is sheer irresponsibility for the new Government not to draft as a priority the regulations under the Canadian Labour Code amendments. This amounts to penalizing thousands of Canadian women who need those new regulations in order to have justice on the market place. This amounts to penalizing thousands of Canadian workers employed in businesses under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Government and who need those regulations as soon as possible to be better protected on the market place. Knowing the large number of occupational accidents in Canada, knowing the number of hours lost due to such accidents, I cannot understand why this Government does not want to immediately implement the regulations needed to better protect Canadian men and women in the work place.

Finally, I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that a Government is very quickly judged according to what it does or does not do in the early stages of its mandate. As far as we are concerned, we very soon realized that this Government does not care for the people living in the most remotest parts of this country. People living in the most underprivileged areas have been the first hit by the cuts announced by the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I need only look at the programs affected, like the dairy policy.

If there is one group of Canadians in need of Government assistance, it is our Canadian farmers, especially those who work hard under difficult conditions, rising very early in the morning to take care of their dairy farms. Yet, as a result of Government action there will be cutbacks in our dairy programs. I find this completely unacceptable.

Secondly, this government is going to cut funds appropriated to social housing. Is there any thing more unfortunate than the situation of our senior citizens or simple people, living on an inadequate income, who are unable to find decent housing in many regions of Canada? Yet, the first message given by the new Government to these people is that there will be cutbacks in its social housing programs, which means that the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation will not be able to build facilities for senior citizens or social housing units so essential in our Canadian economy to provide assistance to the poorest and most disadvantaged members of our society.

In addition, the Government is preparing to cancel our job mobility programs. Because it is difficult to find work nowadays, the previous Liberal Government had implemented a subsidy program whereby Canadians could move to other parts of the country where jobs are available. However, this program, under which assistance was provided to workers willing to move to other regions where jobs were available, has been cancelled by this Government. In my opinion, this goes directly against the interests of Canadian workers who are looking for jobs.

Finally, we have been told that job creation programs for young people and summer employment programs for students will be cancelled. This is another group in our society which needs Government assistance and which has been deceived and let down by this Progressive Conservative Government in the very first days of its administration.

I shall close by saying that it does not take long to judge a new Government, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian people certainly want the economic situation to improve. They certainly want this Government to do well. That is why I urge the Progressive Conservative Government to keep its promises and to bring prosperity to all Canadians and to make jobs available to those who need them. This should be the first priority of this Government. We are looking forward to it. The Official Opposition will always support Government initiatives aimed at creating employment. We shall work in close cooperation with this Government to promote economic recovery. However, in the face of uncertainty, when the Government seems to want to reexamine everything, to give priority to a reduction in the deficit rather than to job creation, we have to say that this Government does not keep its promises as it should. We shall have to ask the Progressive Conservative Government to do better in the future, otherwise the people will be bitterly disappointed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez).

Mr. Lopez: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). I hope this time I am going to get answers, for I did not get any this morning when I directed a question to the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

I suppose that he simply could not answer. I suppose also that it would have been difficult for him to answer without placing himself in an embarrassing situation. Now that I am facing an Hon. Member with much more Parliamentary experience, I am quite sure he will be able to answer my questions.

Ms. Copps: Ask your question! You have wasted two minutes already!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please!

Mr. Lopez: He is blaming us for trying to reduce the deficit which the previous administration has created. My question is this: Does the Hon. Member believe that we should allow the deficit to increase even more! He claims that no ordinary citizen has ever asked him to reduce the deficit. Does he expect ordinary citizens to come to the House and say: Dear Hon. Members, enough is enough? The deficit Canada is faced with is already more than we can pay. Indeed, it takes 33 per cent of our GNP to pay the interest alone. Does he suggest we should allow the deficit to grow bigger still? Does he not feel that when Canadians voted for change on September 4, they were actually saying: Enough is enough! Let us get rid of a government which can do nothing but mortgage our future?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) has the floor.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question of the Hon. Member for Châteauguay. Of course, I give priority to job creation over the reduction of the deficit and he would know it had he listened to what the leader of the Liberal party said during the election campaign. The reduction of the deficit is of course a long-term objective we should strive for. Putting that objective ahead of job creation may be the Conservative solution but it is surely not the Liberal one. I remember that the leader of my hon. friend for Châteauguay said to Montrealers when he came to speak at Place Ville-Marie: "I promise you to make Montreal the major city it used to be." And Montrealers thought that it meant more jobs and more economic growth for Montreal.

Now the first step taken by his Minister of Finance was to make cuts in VIA Rail which means that the maintenance base for VIA Rail may not be built in Montreal. The Hon. Member is from the Montreal area and he should look into that matter.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) who belongs to the same cabinet has relocated the Canadian Air Safety Board in the National Capital area without any consultation even though he told me in this House that he had some consultations with concerned authorities. But we have documentary evidence that the mayor of Montreal or the chairmen of the Chamber of Commerce and the Board of Trade as well as the chairman of the Montreal Urban Community have declared: "We were never consulted by you. You have relocated that air organization which is quite important for the Montreal economy and you did so without prior consultation."

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member who has just put that question to me will join the Liberals to exert pressure on the Tory ministers so that Montreal will regain the status it once had, such as promised by the Progressive Conservative leader. Job creation measures will be needed rather than cuts such as those imposed by the Minister of Finance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Another supplementary question? The Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez).

Mr. Lopez: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is well aware that reducing the deficit is the key to creating jobs. Reducing the deficit will bring the interest rates down. And everybody knows that it is the excessively high interest rates resulting from the Liberal Party's mismanagement which is responsible for the high unemployment rate we now have in this country.

Does the Hon. Member not agree then that after we have reduced the deficit, we will be able to boost the economy and create jobs?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez), the overnight expert financial critic, is overlooking a number of international economic factors. He should recognize that the value of the Canadian dollar and the level of interest rates in our country are linked to the economic situation in the United States, and that no matter the budget cuts my hon. friend would like to make to ease interest rates in Canada, our interest rates will fluctuate along with those in the United States.

And until such a time as the economic situation in the United States is dealt with by President Reagan's administration, this Conservative government has an obligation to do everything in its power to help the Canadian people who are looking for jobs. Young Canadians, one million and some hundreds of thousands Canadian men and women who are now unemployed want to hear something other than "the deficit will be reduced by the Conservative government". A lot of good that is going to do them in their efforts to find jobs. It is not by creating more unemployment within the federal Public Service for the sake of reducing government spending that we will help our unemployed people.

[English]

Mr. Dick: In the 12 years I have been here as an Hon. Member—the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) has been a cabinet Minister most of that time—we have gone from a surplus and, in the last ten years, an ever increasing deficit, allegedly because of job creation. At the same time, we have gone from 4.5 per cent unemployment to 12 per cent unemployment. Since we have tried the deficit route and have ended up losing jobs rather than creating jobs, would the Hon. Member not now agree that it is best to look at an alternative way of trying to create jobs?

Mr. Ouellet: I regret to disagree with the Hon. Member. Quite clearly he forgets to mention one element which is extremely important. He and other Hon. Members of his Party very systematically avoid mentioning the fact that there have been more people entering the labour force during this period than in any other industrialized nation. What we have been faced with in Canada is not only the oil crisis of the industrialized world—

Mr. Crosbie: Everyone faced that.

Mr. Ouellet: —but at the same time the increase of the labour force due to the baby boom after the war.

Mr. Crosbie: They had babies everywhere, not just in Canada.

Mr. Ouellet: The number of people who entered the labour force increased because of the reality that there is more than one person per family who wants to work. Therefore, the previous government has had to face a tremendous request for jobs, which we met substantially by creating more jobs per capita than any other industrialized nation in the world.

Mr. Dick: Most of them for 20 weeks.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please! I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time allotted to questions and comments has expired.

[English]

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to address this House for the first time.

• (1640)

Mr. Price: I look forward to the opportunity over the next three to four years of addressing and contributing to the process that takes place in this House in a meaningful and positive manner.

During the recent election campaign, the Progressive Conservative Party promised Canadians an enlightened national program for economic renewal, a program built on a solid foundation of open consultation with the provinces, the private sector, management and labour, women's groups, natives and minorities. We promised to build a dynamic national consensus that would define new national goals for Canada and a fair and equitable manner in which they could be realized. In the three short months since Canadians overwhelmingly endorsed our manifesto, we outlined, on November 8, the first chapter of a coherent national plan to involve Canadians in determining their collective destiny. It was a courageous effort, open, detailed, sound, logical and, above all else, honest. It is a plan that will give Canadians an opportunity to participate in a consultative and co-operative process that will lead to a rekindling of a vast potential which was kept dormant by the years of virtually uninterrupted Liberal mismanagement and frivolous abuse of their elected position. What the Liberal government of the last decade and a half failed to do, we have done in three short months.

The program of expenditure reductions announced on November 8 were part of a conscious, well defined plan for economic renewal, Mr. Speaker. They were not arbitrary, heavy-handed and callous reductions in government expenditure as suggested by the Hon. Member in his motion. They involved numerous responsible discussions between Ministers who took great care to ensure that no single group of Canadians or no single region was disproportionately affected. We were ever mindful that all expenditure reductions were not without some degree of pain. At the same time we were steadfast in our belief that some bitter medicine was needed to revitalize a great Canada left moribund by Liberal mismanagement and imprudence.

We were not alone in the belief that expenditure reductions were needed and could be effectively introduced. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) himself admitted during the campaign that there were billions of dollars in the current $100 billion federal budget being wasted. He said, and I quote:

> There is a lot of space to reduce and cut expenditures and duplications. Programs which are no longer in force, which are no longer pertinent, wastage in public administration. I believe this reduction in expenditures could save us billions of dollars.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, federal Government spending has climbed from around $12 billion in 1968 to over $100 billion in 1984. A significant portion of this increase occurred in the four years since 1980. Government spending was only $50 billion when the Liberals were re-elected in 1980. The profligacy that followed in those short four years was unparalleled in recent history and is a matter of public record and public discontent. The last 10 years since 1974-75 has been characterized by a staggering accumulation in our public debt as the result of annual deficits, and I would like to examine briefly some of the facts.

In 1974-75, the net public debt was $24 billion. By the end of 1984-85, it will have risen to almost $190 billion, an eight-fold increase in 10 short years. In 1974-75, $1 out of every $20 of tax revenue was used to pay the net interest on this debt. If gross interest payments were used, the numbers are one in three in 1984-85, compared to one in nine just 10 years ago. Canada's national debt is growing much faster than the Canadian economy. The net public debt will have increased from 16.6 per cent of the Gross National Product in 1974-75, to a whopping 45.2 per cent in the current year. If allowed to grow as projected, by 1990-91 the net public debt will have more than doubled to $400 billion, or 63 per cent of the projected Gross National Product.

These continuing deficits and growing debt critically undermine confidence. They put upward pressure on interest rates and reduce prospects for growth, not to mention the psychological albatross around the necks of future generations of Canadians. Simply put, if taken all at once, then total deficit would cost each Canadian taxpayer over $17,000, more than many Canadians make in a whole year, Mr. Speaker.

The persistence of deficits, while eroding the confidence of foreign and domestic investors, is also indicative of the previous government's inability to manage its financial affairs with any degree of prudence. This Government cannot and must not tolerate the continuation of such a pattern of excessive expenditures relative to revenue. In behaving responsibly and practically, we introduced a number of very conscious policy and program decisions on November 8. The decisions were aimed at restoring some degree of fiscal flexibility within the context of creating an environment within which balanced and sustained growth could be fostered.

The Hon. Member has referred to harmful and irresponsible cuts and makes wild allegations regarding the relationship of this Government to the provinces and the public. We are all aware that government has become too big under too many years of Liberal mismanagement. With its regulations, subsidies and interventions, it intrudes perversely into the lives of Canadians and the Canadian market-place. Heaven help the poor unsuspecting Canadian business person who endeavours to find his way through the maze of over 100 federal government programs which purport to serve his needs.

During the campaign, Mr. Speaker, this Party promised to introduce principles of productive government management to ensure that Canadian taxpayers received value for money. To make government more responsive to the needs and aspirations of Canadians, we launched the ministerial task force on program review led by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). Its mandate is to streamline the delivery of programs, to eliminate duplication, and to get more value for every dollar spent. The reviews will involve consultation with Canadians, thereby making them a responsible and essential part of decisions which will affect their future. In a comparable fashion we will involve the provinces and the private sector in a continuing dialogue to build a better Canada.

Our strategy for economic renewal implicitly provides the framework for meaningful discussions while building a lasting partnership. This partnership cannot but lead to the realization of our objective to provide sustained growth and productive jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Since there are no questions or comments, I would like to call upon the next speaker.

● (1650)

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak to this motion put forward by the Liberal Party. I believe that the motion demonstrates the absolute moral bankruptcy of that Party. I knew that before the election but now I am convinced of it today.

The Liberals have the audacity to criticize us about government spending and our relations with the provinces and the public. It is unimaginable how the Liberals can condemn us after 20 years of spending public money like drunken sailors and inflating the deficit to $30 billion. We are attempting to deal with the problems which the Liberals have left with us.

How did today's problems come about and what can we do to solve them? The economic and fiscal mismanagement which has resulted in our record deficit began in the early and mid 1970s when the Minister of Finance at that time, the present Hon. Leader of the Opposition, talked about the need for restraint. During the five budgets that he introduced, federal government spending doubled, a $600 million surplus was transformed into a $4 billion deficit, and the net debt grew by 50 per cent. Public debt charges doubled, and the Public Service grew by 74,000, excluding cuts to the Armed Forces.

The Auditor General of Canada stated that Parliament had lost or was losing effective control of the public purse. According to a study by the C.D. Howe Institute at that time, three of the five budgets of the then Minister of Finance actually widened the gap between rich and poor. This is the legacy that we have inherited.

Following that auspicious beginning, the Liberal government continued another ten years of spending money, increasing the deficit and building a spirit of confrontation in this country, the likes of which we have never seen before. This is the legacy that we are now attempting to deal with as the Government.

The economic renewal strategy plan that was announced in the Throne Speech refers to removing impediments to growth, seeking national consensus for economic direction, reinvigorating investment, and enhancing private sector risk-taking and innovation among entrepreneurs.

In immediately attempting to reduce the huge federal deficit, this administration has realized that the cost of servicing the deficit limits the Government's ability to meet priority economic and social needs. The deficit hides the real cost of government and does not allow for society's response to the needs of its citizens. The deficit inhibits private sector growth and constrains the Government's ability to encourage growth.

I am convinced that the most constructive role that our Government can play is to concentrate its attention on creating a kind of environment in which the private sector can do what it does best—to create jobs and new prosperity. Increasing private sector confidence and investment in the Canadian economy will result in the security of employment and jobs.

I suggest it is fair to ask why the deficit needs to be addressed. NDP members, including the NDP spokesman on industrial regional development, who claims to be an economist by profession, seemed unable to analyse what has happened to our country in the last 15 years of continued deficits. The Government, just like any business or individual, faces the problem of financing a debt when it spends more than it takes in. When the Government runs a deficit, it has two sources of financing. The first is the printing of money. The second source is borrowing. Both sources have inherent problems that eventually result in a weaker economy and the loss of jobs.

Let me explain briefly how this happens for the benefit of some Members who seem unable to make that link. In the early years of deficits, the governments resorted to printing money. The basic result was an expanding money supply and an ever-increasing inflation, which essentially robs the workers and those on fixed incomes of their spending power. In fact, it is a hidden tax.

The second method of financing is deficit borrowing. There are two sources of borrowing—foreign and domestic. Since the government must pay the interest and possibly repay the principal on a foreign debt, the result is pressure on the Canadian dollar. That pressure must be balanced by the Bank of Canada through such measures as an inflated interest rate. Canadians have seen the result of inflated interest rates in the last few years. The majority of federal government borrowing is done domestically. That domestic borrowing has a drastic economic effect because essentially it removes the available capital in this country and crowds out private borrowing. It raises the cost of money, which is, in essence, the interest rate.

Money is just like any other commodity. When there is an increased demand for money by the government, interest rates are driven up and foreign borrowing is crowded out.

Furthermore, we are all familiar with the very negative effect of high interest rates. We have witnessed how high interest rates have resulted in a decline in consumer spending for those high ticket items such as cars and housing which produce many jobs in this country. High interest rates are also very detrimental to small businesses which require sources of capital at a cost that will not prevent a new business from realizing a profit.

The job of rebuilding the Government's finances and implementing policies that will support economic growth and job creation is just beginning. We asked Canadians for this opportunity and we are absolutely delighted that we received such a strong national mandate for change. Canadians from all regions and from all groups expressed through their votes the belief that our country could and indeed had to do better.

I represent a western riding and therefore must travel extensively. I have talked to people in airports as well as to my constituents and have heard nothing but positive support for the direction in which the Government is heading. While I have received some correspondence at my office expressing some concern about individual cuts in spending or about programs that have been affected, most individuals realize that despite their concern, the Government had to control its spending and get its house in order. While these people may have asked for a review of their individual case, they essentially agree with the objectives of the Government.

The fact is that we have support for our policies. I believe that that is borne out by opinion polls, much to the dismay of our friends on the opposite side of the House. They are aware that Canadians acknowledge our progress and that we have their confidence. Canadians voted for a change in policies and in the approach of Government to the making of policy. This motion today is trying to tell us to go back to the old ways, the old ways of a government that had been spending money like a drunken sailor, spending it on a political basis aimed at ridings held by Liberal Members. One of my colleagues mentioned that the way to attack problems by the former government was to set up commissions so its friends could be well looked after, travel the world at taxpayers' expense and live, I think the words were, "reasonably comfortably". And what about the probe into the Gimli airplane case—

• (1700)

Mr. Crosbie: The gimme case.

An Hon. Member: The Gimli gimmick.

Mr. Dorin: Yes, the Gimli gimmick. We are told that over $1 million has been spent, to find out what? The trip resulted in some fairly interesting information. What was that information? For instance, the Israeli airline decided to check levels manually on all its 767s before and after fueling. It is incredible that we would have to spend $1 million to find that out.

Mr. Crosbie: Just by a dip stick.

Mr. Dorin: And then we have Thumper Macdonald at $800 a day. I understand the counsel to this commission, a former provincial Liberal candidate in Manitoba, suggested that he was making about $800 a day. Everybody has basically acknowledged that he was dragging it out because he had a good thing going.

Mr. Crosbie: They all did.

Mr. Dorin: This nation is seriously in debt, Mr. Speaker. Business confidence has ebbed. Foreign investors have been scared off and unemployment is painfully high. As soon as the election was called, everyone knew what was going to happen. People did not have to wait. People knew the Liberal government was going to be turfed out. In the third quarter, we had a dramatic 8 per cent increase in our GNP. Just the fact that the election was called inspired confidence in a new government that everyone knew was going to be elected.

The Government can neither wish nor legislate economic growth and meaningful job opportunities into being. The way must be made clear for the private sector to become confident, to flourish, to invest, and thus to create jobs. The Government must move step by step to remove a wide range of obstacles to growth and new jobs. The private sector must be provided with a stable and comprehensive policy environment. The first order of business is to take action on the deficit. The mounting federal debt has become the single most powerful obstacle to growth and private sector job creation. It has been said that the greatest financial invention was compound interest. From an investment point of view, this may be true, but there is another side to compound interest, that seen by the debtor. The federal Government, unfortunately, has fallen into massive indebtedness that now feeds on itself. New interest charges generate new borrowings, which lead to more and more interest charges, an accelerating treadmill of debt.

Even with relatively favourable assumptions about interest rates and continuing economic growth, the deficit in future years was projected to remain in the range of $34 to $38 billion. On the one hand it was clear that we would not just grow our way out of the deficit problem. We could not spend our way out. In fact, we would be getting into an even greater debt problem unless we took action. The public debt, if left unchecked, would reach a staggering total of $410 billion by the end of this decade, the equivalent of $54,000 for every Canadian family. Each year we are borrowing more and more money just to pay the interest on past debts. In so doing, we are imposing a crippling tax burden on future generations.

When, as is currently the case, more than $1 out of every $3 of tax revenue is used to pay the interest on the national debt, then it is clear we are not only compounding past debts, we are compromising the future. The accumulating debt threatens the creation of permanent jobs for unemployed Canadians today and for our children in the years to come, and it does so in a number of different ways. It puts upward pressure on interest rates by raising the expectations of future inflation and by competing for private savings. It limits the Government's ability to meet priority economic and social needs. It symbolizes a state of economic mismanagement that undermines confidence and threatens the job-creating private investment that Canada needs.

That is why, despite the limited time available, the Government had to make a number of tough decisions which were announced on November 8 as part of the economic statement, decisions to reduce expenditures and to increase revenue recovery as a first step in controlling the deficit. As a result of these measures, the projected deficit for 1985-86 has been brought down to $34.9 billion from the projected $37.1 billion. Those figures tell us that much more needs to be done. Clearly, this will not be an easy or a painless task. Some pain, as mentioned by the motion, has already been felt, but we will have to feel a lot more in trying to correct this mess.

Mr. Boudria: What is this?

Mr. Dorin: As we did with our initial spending reductions, we will continue to do our best to ensure that our decisions are consistent with all our economic renewal objectives, including the principles of greater self-reliance for the private sector and equitable treatment for all regions of the country, not just Conservative or Liberal regions. We will even help NDP regions a little. We will treat NDP regions fairly as well.

Of course, we could have responded to the debt problem differently. One option would have been to try to treat the situation with stimulative financing. Yet nothing short of a massive injection of stimulus would have had any initial effect on growth or employment. With the deficit for this year already $5 billion higher than was projected in last February's Budget, deliberate and massive stimulation would have left us in a very precarious position. The country would have sunk more deeply into the quagmire of national debt, and long-run prospects for growth and employment would have been seriously harmed. The cost in lost investor and consumer confidence would have lost us jobs in future years.

The other option we had was to chop the deficit dramatically and ruthlessly right at the start. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that many of my constituents have told me that that is what we should have done. But this Draconian appproach would have undermined confidence and threatened social cohesion. The costs of adjusting to such a sudden wrench in the economy would have been high, and our collective ability to deal with our structural problems would have been undermined.

We must do all we can to encourage a more dynamic and self-reliant private sector. We must deal not only with the deficit, but also with the tangled web of regulations, subsidies and other forms of government intervention that have been built up over the years.

Too many industries in this country are overprotected. Too many programs designed to assist investment have distorted investment decisions and encouraged the establishment of companies viable only with continued taxpayer support. Too many negative signals have been sent to foreign investors, particularly in the energy sector, and too many government programs carry on long after they have stopped being needed.

In short, the inherent dynamism of the Canadian economy has been eroded by frequently inappropriate and erratic economic policies.

Besides changing government policies, we need to change the way we go about the public's business. We need to take the confrontational tension out of the air which was the hallmark of past governments. We need to sit down and talk to one another.

We have challenged all Canadians to take a hard look at fundamental problems and to break free of the conventional wisdom of the past. The challenge is great for all of us, but particularly so for the private sector. The private sector must be the driving force behind growth and job creation. I think we in this Government are on our way to giving Canadians the kind of confidence they can and should have in their government.

• (1710)

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I am amazed to hear repeated Conservative speakers who have addressed the motion before us today saying that they are looking for options. Perhaps they should consider the option which they promised the Canadian electorate several months ago. Also we have heard them talk repeatedly about their top priority being deficit cutting.

In my riding the candidate for that Party never touched the question about deficit cutting. He stressed job creation. I asked an Hon. Member who spoke previously what kind of initiatives would be brought forth in order to create jobs and how they would maintain the fundamental promise which they made from coast to coast during the election campaign.

If I look at my own city in North York, I see quite the opposite. I see the Government cutting a $58 million tax centre which would have created 3,000 jobs—2,000 full-time and 1,000 part-time. It would have created hundreds of jobs in the construction and trade industries. It would have provided a service to the citizens of North York. Where was the job initiative in that cut? Where were the promises to Canadians before September 4 about the multitude of cuts we have witnessed? What happened to the Government on the way to the House of Commons after September 5?

I do not want to hear from the Hon. Member anything about deficit cuts because we did not hear anything about them during the campaign. We heard about job-creation programs which would come overnight from the Government. I would like to hear what the Hon. Member has to say in terms of actual numbers of jobs being created. That is what Canadians want to hear.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to respond to both those points. First he talked about deficit reduction during the election campaign. I assure him that I used every opportunity to talk about deficit reduction. I said that deficit reduction was the only way to get true job creation. I was not referring to job creation in terms of make-work projects using the money of the government and taxpayers. The only way to obtain permanent, long-lasting and meaningful jobs is through job creation by the private sector.

For example, in the job-creation programs which we have funds have been allocated in an attempt to provide people with meaningful jobs and to use that money in the best possible way. That is in contrast to the former government. I am talking about the Canada Works program. For the last several years, my riding has received the minimum allocation under the Canada Works program of $100,000 per year. The reason we continued to receive it was that the former government continued to manipulate the formulas and to use data which were three to five years old to arrive at its formulas. In actual fact, ridings which could rightfully call upon those funds were refused their fair share simply because Conservative Members were representing them.

Under the Canada Works program, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), in allocating funds, used current data so that it would be done on a fair basis. In my riding, the amount of funds received rose from $100,000 to $770,000 this year. A large number of projects is being evaluated by the advisory board. We hope to have some good jobs.

Despite the fact that we have to do that temporarily because of the current situation, those programs are not the answer. I hope that in two, three or perhaps four years from now those programs will not be around any longer. They are simply a band-aid solution. They are not a long-term solution. We have to create true jobs in the private sector. The only way to do that is by giving the private sector room within which to work, and the only way to do so is by reducing the federal Government deficit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognize the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) on a short, succinct question, to which he will receive a short, succinct answer.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure how a short, succinct question could do justice to the many myths which were put before the House by the last speaker.

Does the Hon. Member not think that it is important, in talking about the deficit in Canada, to recognize that the personal savings rate in this country is two and a half times that in the United States? Does he not think that it is also important to recognize that every conceivable authority concedes that no crowding out effect is taking place in an economy where investment has declined over the last two years and where there is idle capacity and excess unemployment? Does he not realize that there is no possible way that businesses could be faced with too much competition for funds? In short, is he not applying an argument about the deficit which might make sense in the United States but is entirely different here given the conditions in this country?

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, certainly I realize that the personal savings rate in this country is very high. I will take the Hon. Member's word that it is two and a half times that in the United States. However, the reason it is high is the lack of consumer and investor confidence. People are paying down their debt. They are reluctant to spend it on consumer goods or on business investment because they are afraid of the federal Government deficit getting out of control and of not receiving a return on their money. In fact, they are afraid that there will be hyperinflation. Eventually the Government will have to pay its bill. If it cannot do it by borrowing, it will do it by printing money. Then we would see the kind of inflation which exists in Israel, and the money people have spent will come back to them in worthless dollars. That is the reason for the lack of confidence. We in the Government are trying to instil some confidence in the Canadian consumer and investor.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask two very brief, factual questions. With respect to Canada Works summer projects, I gather the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) vehemently disagrees with the position taken by the Ontario Federation of Students. It has already expressed its concern and dismay over the elimination of the Canada Works summer program. I understood the Hon. Member to imply that moneys which were given out across the nation for Canada Works programs were being given in Liberal areas, somehow to prop up Liberal fortunes.

I wonder if he could answer the Executive Program Director of the Catholic Youth Organization in my community who wrote to his Government because, as a direct result of its decision to cut back on programs, 106 young people, including about 73 disabled and handicapped children, will be unable to attend summer camp in Hamilton this summer. Are these the so-called Liberal supporters to whom the Hon. Member referred, these 73 handicapped children who will be denied summer camp as a direct result of his Government's fiscal cut-backs?

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, under the programs which are now in place funds are being allocated in a manner which is fair to all areas and regions of the country. They are done on the basis of statistics, not votes.

In reply to the question on student summer employment, I do not know what programs may be forthcoming regarding government job creation. However, my hope is that we will not need them. As I said, they are not solutions; they are simply band-aids. What we want is private sector jobs.

• (1720)

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief because other Members want to speak to this motion. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) on his excellent motion—"irresponsible cuts, Ministers' apparent inability to manage their Departments and their relations with the provinces and with the public." Of all that the Conservative Government promised, and still promises, it is consultation with the provinces, openness and the stop of those decisions made from on high in Ottawa.

One Member mentioned in this debate cuts in the social housing program. I want to elaborate on that issue as it relates to the lack of consultation with the provincial governments. They were not consulted. If there is one thing a government must do when it cuts back on social housing projects, it is to consult with the provincial governments and the agencies concerned.

The reason is quite simple. It is the provincial government agencies which have to guarantee the occupancy in most of the social program public housing in this country. The provincial governments decide when a housing project will be built and where. I know that CMHC has certain maneuvrability in its programs, but it is the provincial governments that have to act in concert with the federal government.

In the last five years, each provincial government has announced a five-year program. It is common for a provincial government to have a five-year program from senior citizen homes, nursing homes and the like. This announced cut-back of $9.5 million in the social housing area will have an incredible effect on these plans. This $9.5 million may not sound like much money, but this is a cash cut from 1985 to 1986.

The social housing department of CMHC has ongoing responsibilities on 30 and 35 year mortgages. They cannot be stopped. We are looking at a financial cut for the year 1985-86. A senior citizens' home with a $4 million mortgage could pay an additional $100,000 to bring the rate of interest down 2 per cent. That kind of a cut right across this country will involve a substantial reduction in social housing programs right across this country. There was no consultation. I understand that the federal Minister responsible for housing will meet with his provincial counterparts later this week, after the decision was made and after it was handed down from on high by this Government. There was no consultation with provincial governments.

The other area that hits at the heart of the issue was the announced 25 per cent cut in RRAP. That really smacks of discrimination. It discriminates against the poorer regions of this country. This is another example of lack of consultation with the provinces. It is the provincial housing authorities which deliver the RRAP program in high unemployment areas. Apart from the national poverty organization in various high unemployment areas, the provincial housing authorities deliver this program.

I continually criticized the previous government for restricting this program. It started off as a great program. You could qualify depending on the condition of your house. It started to be restricted because the demand was so high and the money was just not there. It reached the point where a family of four could not put on the extra bedroom.

It began with a forgiveness of $3,750 for those whose income was below $11,000. It increased later to $5,000 for those whose income was below $13,500. The provincial housing authorities are now being told that this program is being cut back 25 per cent across the board. The provincial housing authorities, the delivery agents, do not know what to do. One housing authority I checked with said it will meet next week to decide on a public statement. It will not criticize the federal Government in that statement. It cannot do that.

Incredible cuts are being made in transportation with no consultation with the provincial governments affected. Some of these cuts are absolutely outrageous. The motion says they are irresponsible cuts. That is an understatement.

The tourism departments in each province have been working with the federal Government to try to devise a long-term plan to encourage tourism. The Provinces of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island have always wanted a cheap ferry system. They demanded that. Each time CN Marine increased its rates, each provincial government filed an objection with the Canadian Transport Commission.

This Government has laid down in law that CN Marine must cut $20 million from its administration and operations. It is to cut a further $17 million in its gulf ferry runs and coastal boat service without consulting with the provincial governments. No sweat for CN Marine. It announced a 15 per cent rate increase and blamed it on the federal Government. The decision was handed down from on high with no consultation with the affected provincial governments.

One person and a car travelling from North Sydney, Nova Scotia, to Argentia, Newfoundland, must pay $98 or $99—I say it is $100—on the basis of a 15 per cent fare increase. Add to that a reduction in coastal boat service, which was never adequate, not on my coast of Newfoundland or on other coasts. That is the word from on high from this great Government that is going to consult and ensure that everything is open. That is what it has done with regard to transportation.

The Fisheries Loan Board is meeting this week in most of the provinces affected to determine what can be done as a result of the announcement made by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to cut out the national insurance scheme. These fisheries loan boards will have to seize some of the boats next year, have their own insurance scheme or have a subsidy or package arrangement delivered through the private insurance companies. Subsidizing private insurance companies is not in the statement of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He did not consult before the decision was made. He will now be consulting after the decision.

Other policies were announced which will substantially affect provincial budgets. There was no consultation. No one in this House can stand and say that provincial welfare budgets will not be affected by the $200 million cut-back in unemployment insurance. The reason is that it will be more than $200 million. The system which the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) says she is going to put into effect will cut more than $200 million out of the unemployment insurance paid to Canadians. The reasons are quite simple. The restrictions on people drawing unemployment insurance in the country are too great as it is. If an unemployed person does not sit next to his or her telephone every day of the week for eight hours a day, he or she runs the risk of being cut off of unemployment insurance. I notice that the local unemployment offices in high-unemployment areas of the country have taken to heart what the Government has said and are making these phone calls as of two weeks ago. They are phoning fishermen on the northeast coast of Newfoundland asking where they were yesterday at 3 p.m. A fisherman might say: "I was down at the store," and the fellow says: "What store is that?" The fisherman then gives the name of some store in St. John's. The point is that this will affect the provincial governments.

The other part of this motion indicates that the Ministers do not really know what they are doing. On the subject of UIC, how does one cut back on the mobility program for people who are looking for work in other parts of Canada? That mobility program is too tight right now. The people who need help from it cannot get it. If someone wanted to go from Newfoundland to Alberta, he or she would need to have a guarantee of a job for at least a year before he or she could qualify. Then the job has to be advertized by the local manpower office closest to the location of the job. In other words, that is how tight the program is at the present, and yet the Minister of Employment (Miss MacDonald) is now going to cut it. The question is, Mr. Speaker, where she is going to cut it? Ask the Minister, she does not know. Ask the bureaucrats, they say they have not worked it out yet. The same is true for the CMHC cuts to social housing. The Departments do not know about them. That is why this motion is so adequate at this time.

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) does not know how she is going to charge people who phone the weather office for weather information. She admitted to the House that she does not know how she is going to do that. Neither does Atmospheric Environment know, but the word has been handed down from on high and the Minister has to follow it. She must have had some prior consultation. She is the most accommodating Minister in the Government. I say that because out of the 1,500 jobs that were supposed to be cut by the financial statement, her Department suffered a cut of 416 jobs. That is unfair to the Department of the Environment.

The Minister of the Environment does not know how she is going to charge people for those phone calls. Granted it will take time, but why should the Minister have it dictated to her that she must charge for weather forecasting information other than the information that is received via the media? It is a difficult proposition. How does one charge someone for making a telephone call to the local weather office if, as the Minister has said, fishermen and those who require the information for health and safety reasons are not to be charged?

It is common for federal government Departments to impose a charge that excludes a certain group of people for a particular reason. How does one determine who are the exclusions? The Minister says that they are working with the telephone companies, but the CRTC will not allow the telephone companies to act as a collection agency. Who is to make the decision that a caller is a fisherman or requires the information for health and safety purposes? The telephone company will not ask those questions. Therefore, if the provision goes through, it will be the local weather forecaster who will have to ask these questions. How is he to know the difference? How is he to know whether someone is a full-time fisherman or a part-time fisherman? Is he going to get a list from the federal Department of Fisheries? Is he going to have a checklist of the families that are eligible and those that are not?

That particular policy was ill advised. We can see the same thing happening in every single section of the Minister's Department. This morning an Hon. Member said that the interpretation centres that are to be cut out are all in Tory ridings. While he was making that statement, I was wondering how people could receive an interpretation of a national park on their own. The guided tours have been done away with. We now have what the Minister calls self-guided tours, and she also mentioned volunteer-guided tours. You can imagine, Mr. Speaker, that in the wilds of our national parks, among the bears and amid the trees, there will be self-guided tours. There will be signs all over the place saying: "Seek and ye shall find," or "Enter at your own risk". As I suggested at one time, perhaps this would be a good way to beef up search and rescue despite the cuts that have been announced by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates).

The Government also announced that it would increase berthage fees in Canada. What is a berthage fee? I do not know. I am from Newfoundland, Mr. Speaker. We did not have berthage fees there and I will tell you why. The Hon. Jack Davis, who was the Minister of Fisheries some years ago—

Mr. Ouellet: A Liberal.

Mr. Baker: Yes, a Liberal. He made a special agreement with the provincial Minister of Fisheries to exclude the Province from berthage fees. What has happened now? A new Government is in power in Ottawa and, all of a sudden, there is to be a doubling of berthage fees for commercial fishermen and a tripling of berthage fees for sports enthusiasts with their own boats, and this is to be applied equally across the country. The bureaucracy does not know how it is going to apply these berthage fees to Newfoundland. I phoned the Department head and asked him that question. He said: "I do not know. We have not really decided yet". I spoke to the Minister. He said: "Well, we are just examining it now". It has been put down in black and white by the Minister of Finance that these berthage fees are to be applied.

You are indicating to me, Mr. Speaker, that I should conclude soon. I am sorry about that because I had so many things to say, although I was going to be very brief in my remarks.

On August 28, in one 25-minute period, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised $224 million in agricultural expenditures, $50 million in small business initiatives, $268 million in tax relief for the energy sectors, $45 million for restructuring of the fisheries, $150 million in mining investment and tax relief for northern workers, $265 million in health and welfare, $285 million in training and youth employment, $100 million in direct research and development investment, $22 million in assistance to Canadian veterans, $190 million in defence expenditures, $75 million for shipbuilding and $8 million in justice initiatives. In a 25-minute period, the Prime Minister promised about $1.7 billion, give or take $.5 billion. Those are promises that were made in one 25-minute period. Examine what was promised in every province of Canada. Now the Government says it cannot really spend those billions of dollars because the nasty old Liberal government put it in a debt amounting to $34 billion while it figured it was only in debt by $30 billion. Therefore, it cannot spend the $10 billion that was promised to the Canadian people.

In conclusion, let me say that I do hope that the Government will change direction and that it will consult with the provincial governments and the people affected by its cuts in a spirit of openness and fairness. If it does not, it will be stuck with a label that is even worse than the label of the Liberal government. It will certainly not regain the confidence of the Canadian people, which has, as this motion suggests, been lost during the past two months.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). I was a bit confused by the reaction of some government members when he was decrying the intention of the Government to cut back on relocation moneys for former employees who are seeking work in places across Canada. A number of government members asked what was wrong with that. They thought that relocation fees should be cut back.

Could the Hon. Member first, clarify the Government's cut-back, and, second, reconcile that particular cut-back with the order which was issued by the Prime Minister's Office? That order indicated that when employees in his riding faced lay-off, all possible assistance was to be given to relocate up to 1,000 residents who were losing jobs because of a mine shutdown. I would like the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate to comment on the reaction of government members who have indicated that the relocation program should be cut back. Could the Hon. Member clarify our position on this?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: In particular, could he clarify the position of government members who have indicated that the program should be cancelled, when at the same time the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has no qualms in applying it in his own riding?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the point is this—

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering to which program the Hon. Member is referring when she refers to a program that the Prime Minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but that is not a point of order.

Ms. Copps: It was on October 13, 1984. The Prime Minister said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Please, if the Hon. Member wants to carry on a conversation, she can go behind the curtain. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate has the floor.

Mr. Baker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, anyone who says that there should be cuts in the mobility program of the Department of Employment and Immigration has not talked to his or her constituents who are looking for work. They have not gone through the experience of talking to someone who wants to relocate to another part of Canada where there might be a job available. If they had done that, they would realize that the restrictions which are presently in place discourage people from moving to another province. Then, to turn around and further cut back through a decision made by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Employment and Immigration is absolutely outrageous. If the Prime Minister has ordered the money for that mobility program for his own riding, and if there are any numbers involved, the entire year's budget for that program will be exhausted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) on a short question.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question. When the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) first got to his feet, he promised to be brief. That was welcome news to anybody who has listened to the Hon. Member before. My question is, why did he mislead the House by announcing he was going to be brief and then continue until the Speaker called him to order?

Mr. Baker: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was going to be very brief. When I started I had four lines of notes, but I just could not stop. What came to mind was the reign of terror in Canada. People are wondering where the axe will fall next.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, sitting as I do next to an economist from my own city, I hestitate to get into a discussion about deficits. However, having listened to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin), who has unfortunately departed from the Chamber, I feel no hesitancy in stepping into waters in which I could not otherwise swim.

I may not know much about economics, but I do attempt to have some familiarity with history. I know that emphasis on deficits, notions of restraint and the cutting of social programs has had numerous precedents, not the least of which were the actions taken in the course of the Great Depression which made matters worse. I would suggest that could happen now. Even those people who are least informed about economic principles would understand that the great economic surge in the United States has resulted not from the actual implementation of what has been sloganed, but from the rather significant expenditures in the military area. That area has the function of creating make-work programs. Indeed, what we have is a model whereby one does not attempt to deal with the deficit in the manner suggested by the Hon. Member who spoke previously, but on the basis that certain things can be accomplished by expenditures.

The issue is not one of idle economic speculation of Hon. Members on either side. What I have frequently noted in listening the Hon. Members opposite is that they seldom deal with the issue. They seem more determined to deal with their allegedly perfidious predecessors than with what they are responsible for. It is no wonder they have not chosen to deal with the motion before us.

The motion states that "the Government is in growing disarray". Can anyone seriously challenge the loss of government papers in hotel rooms, interviews in the form of dictation tapes, and contrary views about what regulations should apply to contracts with the press? I would suggest that that indicates there is some measure of disarray.

The motion goes on to suggest that the "growing disarray is demonstrated by its harmful, inadequately considered and irresponsible cuts in government services". Could anyone seriously suggest that the cuts in unemployment insurance will not prove harmful? Can there be any doubt about the harm that has been recognized in the cuts in environmental, scientific and cultural expenditures?

The motion states that the cuts were "inadequately considered". Let us for a moment reflect upon the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) and her reconsideration of ill-considered cuts, such as the herring gull project. A further example could be the hesitancy now evident with respect to CBC cuts. It is now recognized that they were a little too precipitous.

The motion goes on to suggest that there has been, on the part of the Ministers an "inability to manage their departments and their relations with the provinces and with the public". If Members opposite had been rational in their consideration of the content of this motion, they would have inevitably reached the conclusion that the resolution states the facts as they are.

I really do regret that this kind of motion has appeared before us so early in the session. I was somewhat seduced by the proffering of the 300 promises made by the Leader of the Government during the election campaign. I suppose it reflected the fact that the Leader of the present Government was smiling as he made those promises. I should have recalled that his advisers had suggested he not laugh at his own jokes. Having observed the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in these chambers, I would suggest that that advice is probably very useful—now knowing what the Government intends to do—because it may be thought by the poor that the Prime Minister is laughing at them.

We have a Government which promised there would be no confrontation. I suppose that has proven to be partly correct in the sense that the only confrontations of which this House is aware are confrontations over the previously mentioned policies with respect to contact of his Government with the press. We have a Government which promised consultation. I believe every previous speaker referred to the lack of appropriate consultation with the provinces on a number of issues. But it seems to me there are other areas where there is a dangerous failure to consult. I have in mind the numerous actions taken with respect to science and technology. Clearly on the basis of any number of reports in the press, these decisions were taken without any consultation whatever. I cannot possibly believe that there could be no reaction from the government side unless those Hon. Members on the government side who are scientists have been muzzled. I cannot believe that scientists would have allowed such cuts as the herring gull project cut and the toxicology centre cuts, and so on.

We have a Government which has chosen only one of the two goals usually chosen for itself by society. On the one hand, there is the pursuit of social justice. On the other hand, there is the pursuit of prosperity and economic growth. Usually the people look to government to pursue the goal of social justice while it is the role of business to pursue the goal of economic growth and prosperity. It is obvious that this Government has chosen not to perform the proper function of government but to place its emphasis on the goals of business, thus separating social justice from the issue of prosperity and growth. This is marked by a whole litany of buzz words, one of which is "restraint", which really means, "let the poor eat confidence". We hear phrases like, "Cut the deficit. Cut unemployment insurance benefits. Cut government spending. Cut social programs". The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that every time there has been an attempt to cure the ills of society by pursuing prosperity at the expense of social justice, we have suffered. Every depression, every recession could be attributed in a very large measure to the fact that someone has chosen the route of abandoning social justice in the pursuit of prosperity at any price.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) said we must have short-term pain. As I look around me, I suspect there is not a soul in this room who is going to experience any pain whatsoever as the Government pursues this course. That Party talks a good game but it should experience the cuts in unemployment insurance benefits itself and try to cope, as does the lady who wrote to me recently saying she presently lives on $300 a month while paying $350 for housing and food.

This Government says that confidence is going to cure everything; let the poor eat confidence. But this Government is not even consistent. If it is going to pursue the kind of economic goal about which it talks, then one would have to consider the pillars of private sector growth. These pillars are research and development, innovation, technology diffusion, labour markets, human resources and adaptation to technological change. If one contemplates those so-called pillars, Mr. Speaker, then I believe one is driven to examine the economic statement, and the Government's agenda, and perhaps look for the steps which need to be taken in order to address the needs dictated by those pillars. One might contemplate the possibility of there being some reference to the necessity of having a broadly educated work force. One might look for suggestions on how to increase the opportunities for young people, not in narrow, specified areas of training but with the kind of broad education and versatility which will be necessary for our economic future. One might have thought that Government would try to find some way to ensure that the offspring of the poor and of minorities would be encouraged to avail themselves of the kind of education which the great economic future which is promised will require. Yet nowhere in all of the verbosity which accompanied this great agenda does the Government deal with the issue of post-secondary education. There is some reference to transfer payments and this is elaborated upon, not in the documents themselves but in subsequent statements, to the effect that those transfer payments will have to be subject to restraint.

We have heard the glad tidings about youth. Youth are going to have an articulate spokesman. But in the economic statement we find that Summer Canada is to be cut by $85 million, and even that statement is misleading. That is the base funding. The fact is that the Government's so-called perfidious predecessor spent twice that amount on Summer Canada in 1983 and 1984.

We cannot have prosperity at the expense of the poor, the youth, single women, or minorities. We heard the Minister's reaction to the Abella report last week. There were vague phrases addressed to some 117 recommendations. But the Government could not see the forest for the trees, Mr. Speaker. If it looked at the clear recommendations of that report, it would realize that if we are to achieve justice for women, native people, the visible minorities and the disabled, there are certain specific actions which must be taken. Those actions certainly do have economic repercussions. But the Government casts aside any of those issues which have anything whatever to do with social justice in order to ensure that those who most strongly support the Government will benefit from whatever actions it may pursue in the interests of prosperity and that prosperity otherwise will dribble down to the rest of us.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—REQUEST THAT 1985 ENTRY LEVEL BE INCREASED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is not in the House to hear what I have to say concerning the immigration target level of 85,000 to 90,000 set for 1985. I had expressed my feelings about its inadequacy, and I spoke not only for myself but on behalf of my Party which has announced itself in favour of a target for 1985 of at least 100,000.

The reason I am sorry the Minister is not here is that I wanted to explain to her how the target of 85,000 to 90,000 damages the reunification of families process. She did not seem to understand that, from the answers she gave to the questions I asked. She seemed to feel that all that was needed for families was to establish the relationship and they could immigrate.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, that is true as far as it goes but it is only true for immediate children, parents and grandparents of an individual Canadian applicant seeking to bring those family members to Canada. I was astonished the Minister did not know that the relatives who are wanted in Canada are not in that category. That is so in the great majority of cases I have in my office, and I am sure the same is true for all Members of Parliament. It is the brothers and sisters, sons and daughters who may be married or over the age of majority, nephews, nieces and others, who in every sense of the word, other than in the Minister's understanding, have to be considered to be family, and they ought to be able to be reunited in Canada, particularly at a time of economic growth.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the Government has admitted that it does not really know what to do. Why do I say that? The Minister herself said she felt more study was justified in deciding whether higher levels should be set for Canada's immigration target for 1985. If that is the way she feels about it, I urge the Government to keep the rate as it was, at least while these studies are being done. Do not lower it any further. It would be preferable to increase it recognizing that there is economic growth and that immigrants make a tremendous economic contribution in times of economic growth.

They do this in two ways, Mr. Speaker. First, they are consumers from the moment they arrive. It is winter in Canada now and they will need winter clothes. They need a place to live. They need to be fed. All of this puts extra demand in the Canadian economy. They have their families assisting them to become consumers when they first arrive.

Of course, much more important than their role as extra demand in the marketplace is the role they play and always have played in the labour market. They are the most willing workers in the country. They are anxious to establish themselves and obtain Canadian experience. I have always noted, in my years in business and in practice in Toronto, that immigrants are at least as willing as the rest of us to take any job to get started.

I regret very much that at a time when the Government itself is putting forward evidence of those who cannot get employees to do the jobs that need to be done in Canada, the Minister would take a hard-nose attitude towards immigrants.

Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, when the Minister makes a determination of what the proper level is, that affects the way the Department operates around the world. If they are told that their target is lower, then the resources allocated are lower and the pace of work is less. In each of our immigration offices across the country there will be a less open attitude, rather than the more open attitude which there should be in a time of economic growth. That is very regrettable.

I note that according to the statutes, the Minister can come back as often as she wants to change that target. I would like her to reconsider that, as the Government has reconsidered so many of its mistakes in its first three weeks in Government. Let it reconsider this mistake also, and come back with an immigration level that is realistic, compassionate and humane in view of the immigration situation.

It was suggested that when I spoke today I should be very certain to speak to Canadians who themselves are not affected by immigration. Let us say there are some who do not have relatives they want to assist to come to Canada as immigrants. They should bear in mind that there must be someone around to pay their old age pensions when they reach 65 years of age. If one looks at the demographic studies, it will not be people who are born to the people already here who will pay. If we are going to have the kind of base population that we need to validate the commitments we are making to senior citizens and others in our society, we need more people in this country. The Liberal Party has always stood for those principles.

I am very disappointed that the Government has taken a kind of lead from the tough times of the last few years and put on the clamps. Let the minister and her hench persons reconsider that policy.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall if I may reply on behalf of the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss Flora MacDonald) to the Hon. Member's question.

Contrary to what the Hon. Member was saying, I think the present levels of immigration announced by the Minister certainly do not reject the principle that immigrants when they arrive here in Canada are assets to our country and represent a vital stimulus for our economy. However, in his supplementary, my hon. friend urged us to be careful because we should also consider the repercussions immigration levels may have. Immigrants not only provide a considerable economic stimulus, but we will also have certain obligations to these people later on, and that is why we must be circumspect in this area.

According to the annual report on future immigration levels tabled last November 19, it is now expected that the number of immigrants admitted will range between 85,000 and 90,000. It also indicates that the Government intends to revert this fall to a planning cycle more in tune with the future, after full reconsideration of the immigration policy. As the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) assumed her new responsibilities only last September, she did not have enough time to make an in-depth study of future immigration levels, and that is why she announced the levels for 1985 only and decided to wait for the assessment of future cases.

Still, it has been decided that two initiatives might be taken immediately as evidence of support for immigration. First, government-sponsored immigrants will increase by 1,000 in 1985, which reverses the declining trend of the last four years. Then, a $500,000 or half-a-million increase in funding for the immigrant settling and development program to $3.6 million, to reflect the increased needs of immigrants, especially those who have been living in Canada for more than three years. Even though the trend to lower immigration levels over these last three years could not be immediately reversed, it has been indicated that there would be increases next year in both areas.

For a large part, reactions to the report mistakenly concerned the current level considered as an indication of the Government's attitude towards immigration. Clearly, the Government cannot be judged on the basis of that report. The report that must be tabled under the existing statute sets a provisional position by announcing a one-year level, in order to allow for a significant review of the future levels and policies which will have an impact on the number of immigrants that can be admitted into Canada.

The levels announced in the recently tabled report are not pre-established maximums. Rather, they are estimates of the number of immigrants that will be admittable under current policies. For more immigrants to be admitted, not only must artificially high projections be submitted, as has been done over the past few years, but also policies must be significantly changed. Policy changes having—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired. The Hon. Member for York West.

VISIBLE MINORITIES—INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II. (B) DISCUSSIONS WITH JAPANESE CANADIAN COMMUNITY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, during the debate on this adjournment motion I would like to focus some attention on two questions I asked during Question Period on November 23. I appreciate that the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) has taken the time to come here this evening.

As I mentioned earlier in the debate today, I was somewhat worried about the priority the Minister had given to the whole question of multiculturalism. I said in my earlier remarks that the Throne Speech in terms of multiculturalism was quite bankrupt. I feel strongly about that.

During the campaign of several months ago our various ethnocultural communities were promised a multicultural expressway to equal opportunity and greater facilitation in this whole process called Canada. Within that multicultural sphere I would like to concentrate this evening on those questions I asked concerning the Japanese-Canadian situation.

My questions were two-pronged. The first relates to the whole matter of an apology. The second is the issue of compensation. The Government has made this a priority. We were told during the campaign, and certainly following the campaign, that priority was to be given to the matter of apologizing to the Japanese Canadian community for the policy undertaken by our government during the Second World War.

I have doubts about that priority because three months have passed and we have not had any form of announcement in this House on when an apology will be forthcoming. Our Leader said quite articulately in his opening comments in this House that we favoured and all-party resolution that would apologize for those things that occurred during the Second World War. There is no question that a resolution of this kind would move through the House very rapidly. Why has it not come? Why is it being held up? Has the mechanism been swallowed up with time and consultation?

The second question about compensation is also worrisome. In my discussions with the Japanese Canadian community, the process is as equally important as the substance. Japanese Canadians would like some input into the whole process of determining what kind of compensation is appropriate. They would like a committee to look at the alternatives. They were promised by the current Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that a committee would look into the various features the compensation would take, to whom, and when.

On several occasions during Question Period I put questions to the Minister, but was unable to determine when this apology would be tabled in the House. Why has a committee not been formed? What kind of a committee was the Minister thinking about when he was out on the hustings and said that "We are committed to a committee"? What kind of membership will it have? Will there be members of the Japanese Canadian community on this committee? Will there be Parliamentarians from the three Parties on this committee? Will the committee travel across the country to touch base with the various elements?

This is not just a Japanese Canadian matter. The Minister knows full well there are various ethnocultural communities also supporting a resolution to this Japanese Canadian situation. The resolution of this issue is fundamental to their communities; their communities also in a small way have suffered similar experiences.

I mentioned that Japanese Canadians value the process as much as the substance. I have been quite worried about some of the discussions which have taken place. I have received reports that a chair of Japanese studies was being considered by the Minister as compensation. I asked the Minister about it in the House. He denied that it was a consideration. Only a few days later in an article in The Toronto Sun he was quoted as saying that that was being considered. My purpose is not to criticize or to make any value judgment on a chair of Japanese studies.

Another project came to my attention involving a several million dollar educational institute. I am not questioning whether that is right or wrong, appropriate or inappropriate. My concern is that those considerations are being percolated through the Department in isolation of Japanese Canadians, in isolation of this Parliament and in isolation of Canadians from coast to coast.

Also my concern is about the process. The Japanese Canadian community is very concerned that it be included in the process. To date I think it fair to say that Japanese Canadians have been somewhat frustrated about the process. They yearn for an announcement from the Minister or from the Government which would in fact keep the commitment they were given during the election.

I notice that I have 60 seconds or less to summarize this matter. I see that the Minister of State for Multiculturalism is present in the House. When can we expect an apology in terms of time frame? I am not playing politics because it is a sensitive issue, but after three months someone has to pick up the pieces and begin to work with them. When will an apology be forthcoming? Will a committee to study compensation be organized or established? My concern is that Japanese Canadians are being excluded from a process which largely deals with their community.

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I always listen to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) as he is knowledgeable in the area of multiculturalism. He comes from a very important part of the country which is immersed in multiculturalism; of course the City of Toronto.

The Hon. Member made two or three accusations which I will deal with before dealing with the Japanese Canadian issue. He indicated that we were bankrupt of ideas because nothing had really happened over the last three months. I am sure he knows that that is not the case.

My Department, my staff and myself have been moving in a number of areas. We are looking at a federal-provincial conference, of which the Hon. Member undoubtedly is aware. It will be the first one held in the area of multiculturalism. We have been dealing with racism through consultation with the chiefs of police in the country. We are looking at strengthening the appointment process which was sadly lacking after the last government was in power. We are moving to strengthen the Department in some very significant ways. We are broadening the base of multiculturalism in terms of the areas we want to address and in terms of mainstreaming multiculturalism.

Of course we are addressing the Japanese Canadian issue, the whole question of compensation and apology. The basic reason the apology has not been forthcoming to this point in time is that there has been a lot of consultation. I have met with Japanese Canadians in Vancouver, Winnipeg and Toronto. We have discussed the matter at length. I am not exactly satisfied about the direction in which we should go, and certainly I will be looking for further consultation in the future. There is no question that there will be an acknowledgement in terms of what happened to that important community. Of course the Government will act. The question of compensation is important. It is being discussed at the present time. As I have previously said in the House, the Hon. Member will be one of the first persons to know our progress in this process. He may know before it is public. In fact, I hope he will know because I intend to talk with him and take him into my confidence on this matter.

AIRPORTS—AUTOMOBILE RENTAL CONCESSIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the question I wish to raise today concerns the rules and regulations of the Department of Transport which are destroying the second largest car rental company in Canada, Holiday Rent-A-Car. This company is fighting for its very survival because government regulations are preventing Holiday franchise holders from bidding for space at some of Canada's larger airports. This comes from a Government supposedly dedicated to fair and open competition and deregulation.

In a nutshell, this is the situation. Many Holiday franchise holders are being prevented from bidding for airport counter space on December 7 because previous Holiday franchise holders are in arrears to the Department. The Government regulations that make present Holiday franchise holders responsible for past debts is unfair. Certainly this principle does not exist in normal business practice or law. Let me give an example.

If I had a Kentucky Fried Chicken franchise and went into bankruptcy, owing money to the bank and property taxes, under this present Government regulation no one would be allowed to open a Kentucky Fried Chicken outlet until my debts were paid.

That is an unheard of business or legal principle. However, this is what is occurring at Canadian airports. The Minister must realize that this is unfair. In fact, when he was in opposition, he asked the former Minister of Transport to change the regulations.

In his reply to my question in the House, the Minister was incorrect when he stated "The Holiday Rent-A-Car organization is in considerable arrears". Holiday Rent-A-Car does not owe the Government—individual past franchise holders do. These are the people with whom the Government had a contract.

It is ludicrous that the Minister expects Holiday franchise holders in Vancouver, for example, to pay past arrears for people who now own the Budget franchise. The person who now owns the Budget franchise was the previous Holiday franchise holder in Vancouver. Under government regulations, the present franchise holder is expected to pay off those debts. That is ludicrous. I repeat, it is a principle that you do not find in normal business practice.

We are not asking the Government to write off these debts, but to collect them from the people that owe them. We are asking the Minister to stop holding the Holiday organization responsible and penalizing them to the point that they will go into bankruptcy. We plead with the Government to postpone the December 7 deadline and to refer this matter to a subcommittee of the Transport committee.

This is a complex issue. The best forum to deal with this is a subcommittee of the Transport committee which could call witnesses and hear testimony. A group of Members of Parliament from all sides of the House, hearing the evidence and considering the situation as it exists, will render a fair recommendation to the Minister and to this House. I therefore urge the Minister and the Government to consider these suggestions and proposals.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make the following observations to my friend, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). Over the past two years, the Department of Transport has undertaken an extensive review of the 1979 airport vehicle rental concession policy to ensure its equitability and the provision of an open and competitive access to the airport market.

The policy, in particular the arrears provision, was seen by some to be too restrictive. This provision prevented any person or corporation in arrears to the Crown, or any person or corporation using the trade name or style of a company in arrears to the Crown from being awarded a vehicle rental contract at any Transport Canada airport until full payment of all arrears is received. The provision was established because of significant difficulties that arose as a result of the 1976 tender calls where some limited companies overbid and walked away from their airport debts.

In the 1979 tender call, the Department provided historical sales data that ensured prospective concessionaires would be aware of the dimensions of the market so that they could govern their bids accordingly. The Department, through these provisions, thus effectively served notice that it, like any other business, could not permit companies which were unable to pay their arrears to bid. Indeed, for Transport Canada not to insist on payment of rentals is unfair to competitive car rental companies and, in fact, I suppose, does a disservice to Canadian taxpayers.

In order to provide Holiday and other companies in financial difficulties with some measure of relief, the policy was amended in October 1984, such that the prohibition against companies and trade names in arrears was applied on a site specific basis only. That is, a company in arrears at a particular airport may bid at that airport if all arrears are paid. In order to further facilitate entry into the airport market, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) further agreed that such rental arrears could be paid over the five-year term of the next contract.

The Minister of Transport tried on several occasions to reach a negotiated settlement with Holiday Rent-a-Car. These efforts have not been successful thus far. Nevertheless, individual Holiday operators not in arrears are most welcome to tender for new contracts at Transport Canada airports.

SALTFISH ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans) moved that Bill C-6, an Act to amend the Saltfish Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to introduce Bill C-6 for second reading. It is legislation to amend Subsection 17(2) of the Saltfish Act to increase the permitted borrowing limit of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation to $50 million from the present ceiling of $30 million.

This is part of the backlog of legislation left over from the previous session. I am seeking the co-operation of Hon. Members to give speedy passage to this item of legislation. Its implementation is of considerable importance to the effective operation of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation and the large number of fishermen and saltfish processors in Atlantic Canada who depend upon the Corporation to market their catch.

Let me briefly outline the situation which has led to the introduction of this amendment to the Saltfish Act. The Canadian Saltfish Corporation, as I am sure many Hon. Members are aware, is a Crown agency which was established in 1970 with the primary aim of improving returns to fishermen. It was set up to bring about a change in the inefficient and haphazard marketing situation for saltfish which existed previously. The record shows that it has done a commendable job in this regard.

Under the Act the Corporation has a monopoly of the interprovincial and export trade in cured codfish—that is to say, salt bulk and dried codfish—produced in the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador and on the lower north shore of the Province of Quebec. Under matching provincial legislation, the Corporation has exclusive purchase rights to cured codfish and to codfish for curing within the mandated region. The Corporation is required to buy all cured fish of an acceptable quality which is offered for sale within its area of jurisdiction.

When the Saltfish Act came into effect 14 years ago, the Corporation's borrowing limit was set at $10 million, which was deemed adequate at the time. This limit was increased to $15 million in 1976 and to $30 million in 1980.

Due to the soft market conditions currently prevailing in the frozen groundfish industry, an increase in salt bulk and saltfish production is expected in the coming year. Because of this, and due to a number of other factors outside the Corporation's control, such as inflationary cost increases combined with severe devaluations of currency in importing countries, the Corporation anticipates that its peak borrowing in 1985-86 will be in the neighbourhood of $37 million. By the year 1988 it is predicted that this borrowing requirement will rise to $48 million.

I cannot emphasize too strongly that the sum of money established under the Act as the borrowing ceiling represents the absolute level of funds available to the Corporation as working capital in any one year. The Corporation cannot obtain additional credit outside this limit.

In summary, it is very clear that for the Corporation to operate effectively its borrowing limit must be increased from the current $30 million level. If this does not happen, the Corporation is likely to find itself in the impossible position of being obliged under its mandate to buy all the fish offered to it, at the same time having insufficient credit reserves to be able to pay the fishermen or processors. Of course, this is the same state of affairs confronting the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation which is also seeking to raise its borrowing limit under separate legislation.

As far as the Saltfish Corporation is concerned, this dilemma can be overcome by passage of the legislation before the House today. I trust Hon. Members will see their way clear to take that action with the minimum of delay.

• (1110)

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be very brief with respect to this Bill. The Minister omitted to say that the major problem with the Canadian Saltfish Corporation today is markets. The problem is further complicated by currencies, the value of those currencies and whether they can get their money within six months or a year if they sell to certain countries.

There used to be a problem of grades of fish. That problem has been partially overcome. We now have in Canada some of the best grades of saltfish in the world. It is unfortunate that the Canadian Saltfish Corporation cannot in certain cases reward those areas of Atlantic Canada, specifically Newfoundland, which produce grade A top quality fish.

Under the Liberal administration a couple of years ago, the Government of Canada encouraged a system of quality control whereby fish were brought in to the wharfhead and iced. When taken out of the water, they were immediately bobtailed or bled, as we call it, then iced and graded on the wharf. For the first time we had what we, the industry and others, call a grade A product.

Unfortunately, when that grade A product was brought in, it did not fetch a higher price than the grade B product. Various excuses were made at the time for these discrepancies, mainly that there had to be a certain quantity of grade A fish available in order that a higher price would be paid. Without that quantity, you could not get into the grade A market in Brazil, for example. In a certain part of Brazil you can sell a high-priced quality product and in another part of that country you can sell the medium grade product.

The Government had to develop a system of subsidies. I know that is a bad word with the present Government, but a system of subsidies was developed for a grade A product. The major buyers were given the money to pay the difference to the fishermen who brought in the grade A product. I cannot see in the policies of this Government whether that system of encouraging quality fish in the market-place is being continued.

The Canadian Saltfish Corporation buys mostly in Newfoundland because it is mainly a Newfoundland-based product that we are talking about. There is some product along the coast of Quebec, but it is mainly a Newfoundland product. This year, the fishery in those areas was very poor. I would think that with all of the problems in the fresh fish industry and with all of the major plants in Atlantic Canada encountering closures due to strikes and to their financial situations, we would see an automatic increase in the amount of saltfish that is handled by the Canadian Saltfish Corporation.

Three and four years ago there was a crisis in the fresh fish industry. That is the industry which deals with fish that is normally frozen into cod blocks in Newfoundland, unfortunately to be sent to Massachusetts or somewhere else in the United States to be made into a finished product. At that time when the plants were unable to buy the fish, the fishermen normally salted the fish and sold it to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. The Canadian Saltfish Corporation, the Corporation we are dealing with today, must by law buy every bit of saltfish that is offered to it. Three and four years ago the amount of fish that was sold to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation rose because there were problems in the fresh fish industry.

The fishery was very bad this year. There were problems with the fresh fish industry in Atlantic Canada. There were a certain number of fishermen who salted their fish and sold it to the Canadian Salfish Corporation through a licensed buyer. However, the amount of fish that was sold to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation was substantially less this year than it was in previous years. That was probably a godsend to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation because, according to my understanding of the situation, it had large inventories.

I estimate that the amount of fish sold to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation must have decreased by about 20 per cent. I imagine the Corporation would tell the Minister that the amount of fish that was sold to it had decreased by about 10 per cent or 15 per cent but I would say it was about 20 per cent. This highlights a very serious problem in the inshore fishery, specifically in the areas where there are fishermen who sell to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. This problem is very, very serious and is of a magnitude that has never been seen before in this country. The fish were not there. They were simply not in the ocean in the latter part of this past summer.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser), in bringing forward this Bill, should keep in mind that because there were these problems in the inshore fishery in eastern Canada and because no action was taken by the Government to assist these fishermen, there are a couple of Cabinet Ministers in the present Government who are in serious trouble with the inshore fishery. They are in very, very serious trouble with the fishermen who sell to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation.

I recall that it was this Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who, together with the fishermen's union of Newfoundland, sent to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) a list identifying some 1,600 fishermen who simply did not have enough stamps to collect unemployment insurance this winter. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans identified some 200 such fishermen in the northern area, about 400 in the northeast area and about 1,000 in the extreme lower east coast of Newfoundland.

I do not know what happened to the Minister's recommendation to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I imagine that the people who work in the Department of Employment and Immigration must have gotten their hands on it and said: "We will hold off a bit now until the fishery season is over". That was in November. They will hold off until the fishery is over. The Minister of Employment and Immigration said that there would be no special program to assist the fishermen who sell to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. The 400 fishermen that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans identified, who were in financial trouble a month ago, were from Fogo Island. Fogo Island is solely the Canadian Saltfish Corporation indirectly selling through the buyer of the Fogo Island Co-op.

The fishermen were in serious trouble, worse than ever before in their history. Last year it was bad. The federal Government last year—the Government that was accused of throwing money at problems—had a special program for fishermen. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon) recently stood in the House to read a statement from the Department which denied that such a program existed. It is frustrating for me, as a representative of the fishermen, as well as for other members on the government side who represent fishermen, to have this confusion.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans knows that there was a special program whereby fishermen's groups, associations or co-operatives, such as the case of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, received an amount of money from the Department of Employment. That amount was exactly equal to the amount of money required to put fishermen to work fixing wharves, stages and haul-outs. The work would give the fishermen the required number of weeks to enable them to receive unemployment insurance. Why? Because it was not simply a subsidy. It was required to keep these people in the fishery. If that is not done this year—and it should have been done a month ago—we will see a decrease in the number of people fishing indirectly for the Canadian Saltfish Corporation.

We cannot have respectable people, full-time fishermen, going on welfare. They are much too proud for that. Therefore, they will get out of the fishery—as a lot of them have this year—and look for jobs in Toronto or Fort McMurray where they have relatives. Of course, they will not receive money from the mobility program of the Department of Employment and Immigration because that program has been substantially cut back. The restrictions of that program mean that the fishermen will not receive the money which would enable them to travel to another area to get a job.

The fishermen were laid off as they obtained the required number of stamps to qualify for unemployment insurance in order to get them over the serious problem they faced last year. If a fisherman had six fishing stamps, he could match them up with four labour stamps; if he had seven fishing stamps, he could match them up with three labour stamps. But if the fisherman only had five fishing stamps, the law stated that he must have had ten labour stamps in order to qualify for unemployment insurance. As the Minister of Fisheries understands, these fishermen had anywhere from nine stamps to seven stamps. It required one or two weeks' work to get those stamps. Under the previous government, as the fishermen worked that one or two weeks, they were laid off, collected unemployment insurance during the winter, and then went fishing again in the spring.

Now there is no program. Somehow, through the jigs and the reels and through misinformation, the Minister of Employment and Immigration stood in the House and told Members—representing the areas that the Minister of Fisheries identified to the Department of Employment—that the Government would put them to work on Canada Works grants. Everyone knows that a fellow cannot be laid off after a week if he is hired under a Canada Works grant. He cannot be laid off after two, three or four weeks. It is not allowed under the Canada Works Program. What are they doing? Even if some of those fishermen were employed under Canada Works, they would have to work right through the winter and probably next summer, taking a job away from someone in the community who really needs it.

There are several problems, Mr. Speaker. If a Canada Works Program was begun it would mean that if a man had worked one week in the previous eight weeks, he would not be allowed to go to work. There are various problems associated with the announcement of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who made an unforgiveable error by saying she will top everyone up to $3 million knowing full well that the districts affected are already up to $3 million under the the Canada Works Program. The Minister of Employment and Immigration is in very serious trouble with the fishermen who are covered under Bill C-6, an Act to amend the Saltfish Act. To lose these fishermen, Mr. Speaker, would be a tragedy for the Canadian Saltfish Corporation.

In examining their problem one can see that 99 per cent of these fishermen are poor people who sell their catch to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. There is a program under the Department of Employment and Immigration but one cannot go to work under that program unless he is drawing unemployment insurance. Provincial governments have community development programs administered through the Department of Welfare, but one cannot go to work under those programs unless one is drawing welfare.

In the latter part of this summer the fishermen covered by the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, as a result of the cuts that were made, found themselves in the position that their boats had to be tied up and they could not fish. They had no money coming in and there was no special program in place to help them. Then, Mr. Speaker, we saw the discrimination practised against the fishermen which is inherent in our system in eastern Canada. These fishermen had no money to spend but when school opened their children's school books still had to be purchased. These fishermen went down to the welfare office and asked for welfare but they were denied for a variety of reasons. In some cases they were denied welfare because they were self-employed and in other cases they were denied because of a stupid 90-day rule under which provincial welfare departments operate. Under this regulation, if a fisherman had a good lobster season or a good groundfish season—and you can make quite a bit of money in a week with groundfish—he could not draw welfare for the next 90 days according to provincial regulations. So the trick used by a lot of these 1600 fishermen was to try to get on welfare in order to get their children's school books paid for.

I recall a phone call I had from a fisherman who sells his catch to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. He is a gentleman about 55 years of age and he has three children in high school; one in grade 12 and two in grade 11. He asked me if the federal Government was going to come up with a special program and I told him to hoped so but I could not be certain. We have a change of Government now and this Government does not believe in throwing money at problems. This is a Government which does not believe in just maintaining a system because it is there. He told me he had a problem. He said that he had $70 on an upper shelf of a cupboard. That $70 was to buy food for the family during hard times. He has three children in high school and he cannot afford to buy their school books, which cost about $100 per student. He asked me: "What am I going to do? Welfare will not look at me because of the 90-day rule and I am a self-employed man". What he had to do was give the $70 to the three children and tell them to buy whatever they could between them and he would have to borrow flour from next door to help them over this crunch.

For the areas covered by this poor inshore fishery, Mr. Speaker, on the northeast coast of Newfoundland and Labrador, that is how bad things were this summer. If you went into a community like Tilting you would have seen all the boats hauled up three-quarters of the way through the so-called fishing season. But this Government will not do what the previous Liberal government did. It will not assist those people although the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans sent a list of the fishermen to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and she verified in this House that that was done. So did the union. Then we see a provincial system which discriminates against these poor people. Is there any wonder that we have lost fishermen? They are not going to go back to the boats any more this year, those very inshore fishermen who keep the Canadian Saltfish Corporation alive.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, a few Cabinet Ministers are in trouble with these inshore fishermen. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is one, together with the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) and the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). That particular Minister is in trouble because these very inshore fishermen who sell to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation did not like it one little bit when she, in response to a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) from Greenpeace, sent a letter to a Canadian delegation somewhere in Europe and told them not to object to Greenpeace being recognized by this international union of environmentalists. She can stand up and say: "We did not want to object. Is it not right that they become a member of this organization?" However, Mr. Speaker, by this very act she is supporting that organization.

I said at the beginning that I would not be very long, but I wanted to bring to the attention of the House a serious problem that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is going to have with the buyers for the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. The problem concerns the interpretation of rules and regulations by government departments. I have here a letter from Employment and Immigration Canada to a fisherman which says:

—this is to verify that the amount of salted ground fish, wet salted (salt bulk) is 600 cwt (600 lbs.) for an insured week. This is calculated at the end of the fishing season and for each 600 lbs., you would be entitled to one fishing insured week.

That is what the regulation says. The calculation is not on the value of the fish you sell, it is on the weight. Six hundred pounds entitles you to one fishing insured week. That is how salted fish is distinguished from fresh fish or other products controlled by the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Department of National Revenue in the determination of a question, as they put it. The fisherman brings this letter to the buyer and tells him he is supposed to be calculating the benefits in this way. The buyer turns around and writes two letters, one to Employment and Immigration Canada to verify this, and another to the Department of National Revenue because that department determines who qualifies and who does not under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

In the letter that the buyer sent to the Department of National Revenue, he says that the fisherman said:

—we should take his total number of pounds of fish shipped and divide by 600 pounds to arrive at the number of insured weeks. However, this is not the way that we do the calculation.

If that is not the way they do the calculation, then they are in very serious trouble with the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Employment and Immigration. He continues:

We have been calculating the number of insured weeks in the week that the shipment was made.

Please inform me if the above calculation is correct. If it is not correct, I would like to have some clarification on the matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the chief of source deduction of the Department of National Revenue is a man who knows. He has never made a mistake that I can recall. Never. He writes to the buyer:

—this will confirm that your method of computing the insurable earnings and weeks from the sale of a cured catch is indeed correct.

The information provided by Canada Employment and Immigration Commission . . . will be discussed at a meeting of the Commission and this Department with a view to ensuring the proper information emanating from both offices is factual.

As far as I can see, the Commission was correct in its interpretation. The Department of National Revenue was correct in its interpretation. Then we turn to the Deputy Attorney General of Canada and let us see what he thinks. Here is a buyer who averaged out the entire earnings for the total period covered by the fresh and cured catch deliveries instead of calculating the earnings separately and for the week in which they were caught. There have been countless cases like this, Mr. Speaker, in which a fisherman seeks an opinion from the Commission, the Department of National Revenue and then perhaps a judge, and all three are at variance. But the bottom line is that if that fisherman or buyer takes it to the final court, the Federal Tax Court of Canada—regardless of what the Departments involved have said—whatever that court says, that is it. If someone in the Commission made a mistake, it is the fisherman who suffers, not the buyer. It is not the Commission, not the Department of National Revenue, but the fisherman involved.

I wanted to bring that to the attention of the Minister as an illustration of the confusion around the sale of saltfish in the country and of a grave injustice that has been dealt to a poor fishermen who does not know any different and sells his fish to a buyer in good faith. If the buyer, the Unemployment Insurance Commission or the Department of National Revenue has made an error in determining the question, it is the fisherman who then faces having to pay back to the Government thousands and thousands of dollars.

At this very moment in the area covered by the Saltfish Corporation, there are 106 cases of fishermen who have been told they must pay back to the Government of Canada thousands of dollars. This happened at a time when the fishery was bad and the Government of Canada said it was not going to give them enough stamps for unemployment insurance. At that time 106 fishermen left and in 1985 they will have to face the courts. The cases will be brought pursuant to the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the appellant versus the Minister of National Revenue, respondent. It will be a case of the Minister of National Revenue versus the 106 fishermen who sell to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation.

I wanted to bring that to the attention of the House for a particular reason. It is fine to look back and say that the Department has made a mistake. It is in black and white, but in a court of law it does not matter who made the mistake. No one is reprimanded in the Department of National Revenue or the Unemployment Insurance Commission. It is the fishermen who must pay on the bottom line. The buyer was misled in written statements from government departments. Therefore, in 1985 it will be the Minister of National Revenue versus each one of these fishermen before the Federal Tax Court of Canada.

I brought that up because under the Act the Minister of Employment and Immigration has the power and authority in cases of hardship, when it is determined that a person must pay back money, to forgive that money owed to the Crown. That is why I am bringing this up today. I am asking the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to make representation to the Minister of Employment and Immigration to forgive the amounts owed to the Crown. Another way to short-circuit it would be if the Minister of National Revenue would say that they are not going to proceed with these cases. I do not know what reason he could use. I suppose he could say that there was written contradictory evidence from government departments. If that were done, I suppose it would be creating a precedent which would be very difficult to change in future cases.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, something must be done. Any fair-minded person must realize that something must be done for these fishermen who sell to the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. Who would deny that? One would have to be crazy not to realize that something must be done for the fishermen. It is unfortunate that the Minister of Employment and Immigration could not have set up a special program to give these fishermen their unemployment insurance stamps. He could have put them to work for $200 a week so they could draw 60 per cent of their income in unemployment insurance. Is that too much to ask for a primary producer in the country? Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that is not the way it worked out.

I have gone on longer than I should have, Mr. Speaker. I mentioned that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, who was in trouble, is not in as much trouble as the other Ministers are. I would like to congratulate the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans for sending that list to the Minister of Employment and Immigration to verify the 1,600 people who needed their unemployment insurance. I also want to chastize the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, in the areas covered by the Canadian Saltfish Corporation Act, for agreeing to policies handed down from on high and for agreeing with the group of people in the back room who decided to do this, that, and the other thing without consulting him. He will stand up in the House and say he was consulted, but I do not believe he was consulted when they decided to charge fishermen for the charts. I think he had to do what he was told with the substantial cuts in his Department. I know the philosophy behind that.

There was a statement issued in the PC Handbook called "Pocket Politics". I wish there were a hole in whatever pocket it went into. It is absolute garbage as it relates to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. In Newfoundland we would call them all cracked. It is insane, Mr. Speaker. It says in "Pocket Politics" that:

> The current budget for the department is almost $700 million per year, almost 20 times what it was in 1968.
> Under Liberal management, Canada's fisheries have become virtually uneconomic, and have taken on the characteristics of a social welfare system, especially in Atlantic Canada.
> Fisheries policy has been designed to make the industry dependent upon Liberal goodwill, patronage and government handouts.

An example given is Crown corporations that rigidly monopolize vital sectors of the market. The Minister is now bringing in a Bill to extend the borrowing authority of this Crown corporation. It continues:

> Subsidies expand the industry with no thought to the limits of biological resources. Over-expansion on the Atlantic coast has bankrupted the processing industry and forced a massive federal bail-out that does not solve the real problem.

The Premier of Newfoundland called that massive bail-out the best thing that happened since confederation. Who creates over-expansion in the Atlantic fisheries, Mr. Speaker? They did not say that in "Pocket Politics". Those licences are issued by provincial governments and have nothing to do with the federal Government.

Reading this is almost like reading a communist manifesto. It says:

> The current budget for the department is almost $700 million per year, almost 20 times what it was in 1968.

So what, Mr. Speaker? It should be 40 times what it was. The policy emanated from cuts in the Department.

I know my time is running out, Mr. Speaker. Have I used up my 20 minutes? I have two minutes left in 40 minutes? I have gone on a little too long.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is going to cancel the fishing vessels insurance scheme. In the one minute I have remaining I would like to appeal to the Minister not to cancel the program. If it is cancelled there will not only be fellows who will owe thousands and thousands of dollars to the Department of National Revenue, but they will also have their boats repossessed because, under provincial law, they must have insurance for provincial loans to remain in force. You must have your own insurance before you can get a loan from a provincial loan authority. You cannot just cancel something and leave a little fellow with a 19-foot boat trying to make a living on the great northern peninsula unable to get insurance through a normal insurance company.

• (1150)

I see the Minister nodding his head. He is perhaps going to be dealing with this, and I know he is going to try to overcome what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) laid down as being the law of this country. It is wrong for a small group of people from on high to cast down his policies without consulting the very people they should be consulting in this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are no questions for the first three speeches. However, if we have unanimous consent, the Hon. Minister may ask.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Waddell: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). I thought for a moment he was going to ask for unanimous consent to go on for another 40 minutes. We certainly would have enjoyed listening to him for another 40 minutes.

He used a phrase I have never heard and I thank him for teaching it to me. I imagine it must be an East Coast phrase because we do not have it on the West Coast. He referred to the jigs and reels, and somehow through the jigs and reels in a debate on the Saltfish Corporation he managed to speak about Greenpeace, welfare, unemployment insurance, taxation, the communist manifesto and finally insurance. I congratulate him for doing a good job on behalf of his constituents in getting through the jibs and the reels into the things that concern his constituents. I gather he has very many poor people in his riding, particularly the inshore fishermen on the north coast of Newfoundland, and I learned something from his speech.

I have noticed that Mr. Richard Cashin and the officers and members of the Newfoundland Fishermen, Food and Allied Workers Union have also been speaking out and working hard on behalf of those people. They are quite disadvantaged compared to we rich city dwellers in other parts of Canada. The Hon. Member talked about the syndrome of going down the road, this time fishermen from Newfoundland, to Toronto, to Fort McMurray and to other places in Canada. I am sorry that sort of thing happens in this country. I wish it did not. I am sure the Hon. Member and the Minister would agree that we should be putting together a fisheries policy to help those people stay and thrive.

I have just returned from Europe. I spent some time talking with people in the European Economic Community, particularly the Danes and to a lesser extent the Greeks, about the fishing industry. When I see what the Danes have done, especially with their industry and how they have concentrated on quality, we have something to learn. The Hon. Member mentioned in his speech how important quality is, how important the product is and how important it is to sell in foreign markets. We have a lot to learn from them, and I hope we can.

On behalf of my Party, I have a few things I want to say about this Bill. The Bill seeks to amend the Saltfish Act in order to increase the Canadian Saltfish Corporation's borrowing power from $30 million to $50 million. The last time an increase in its borrowing authority was authorized was in 1980, as we heard from the Minister, when it went up from $15 million to $30 million. This is a simple amendment seeking to put the borrowing authority up to $50 million.

I want to say something about the background of the Corporation as I understand it. The Corporation was established in 1970 by the then Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Jack Davis, a fellow British Columbian. This Corporation has the exclusive right to market saltfish produced in Newfoundland, Labrador and the lower north shore of Quebec. It is a non-profit Corporation which was established for the purpose of improving the earnings of the primary producers of cured saltfish. What is important to note here, Mr. Speaker, and it is important for Conservative Members in the House to follow this, is that before the establishment of this Corporation the saltfish industry was in a shambles, in much the same way as the freshwater fish industry was in the West before the establishment of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in the Prairies. In other words, the private sector—the market here—was unable to operate effectively and efficiently in the fishing industry and so the Government set up this non-profit corporation. We seem to be going in reverse these days and I will come to that in a minute. The market was not working for the fishermen so the Government stepped in and set up this non-profit Corporation.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) said in his speech, to quote what he said a few minutes ago: "The record shows it; the Corporation has done a commendable job". I hope the Minister and the Government generally will not take corporations like Petro-Canada and other government corporations that have done a commendable job, to put it mildly, and out of pure ideology get rid of them. This is an example.

The Saltfish Corporation has been very successful. It has turned a profit every year since its creation, with the one exception of 1983-84. The annual report for this year, as far as I know, has yet to be published and the loss for the year 1983-84 is not yet known.

It should be noted that since this is a non-profit Corporation, any surpluses made by the Corporation are rebated to the fishermen as annual dividends. In 1983-84 the Saltfish Corporation was able to absorb its loss by depending on reserves it had built up for a rainy day. The Corporation has yet to cost the taxpayers a dime. It has been self-sufficient. The only place it gets its money or working capital is from the Government, but so far it has not run at a loss.

The Corporation is small and efficient. It has 48 full and part-time employees. It packages, markets and in some cases processes saltfish, which mainly consists of codfish but also includes pickled herring and salted salmon. It buys fish from agents, who are private entrepreneurs, and then markets the fish. The primary consuming countries to which the Corporation exports saltfish are Portugal and Puerto Rico, the latter country being part of the United States.

Unfortunately, since 1980, the last time that the Corporation had its limit of borrowing capacity raised, the devaluation of the European currencies against our Canadian currency has had a serious impact on the export of saltfish. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate mentioned this in his speech but he did not elaborate. Let me say something about it so that you understand it, Mr. Speaker. The Portuguese escudo is now worth one-third of what it was against the Canadian dollar in 1980. That is not bad for Canadian tourists—

Mr. Fraser: May I ask the Hon. Member a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No. The Hon. Member has the floor. The only way that could be done is with unanimous consent.

Mr. Waddell: Maybe the Minister will ask a question at the end of my remarks. Beware of Scotsmen asking questions, Mr. Speaker, as the English learned to their chagrin! The Minister and I have both been seen together in kilts, but I can tell you that I am the only one who has worn a kilt in the House of Commons. You can ask me that later.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Let me go back to the Portuguese escudo. The point is very important. The reason is that this currency has fallen in value vis-à-vis the Canadian dollar. Other European currencies have also fallen, such as the Italian lira and the Spanish peseta.

• (1200)

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Ordinarily I would not rise at this point, but in the interests of the democratic functions of the House I must ask the Hon. Member, who is well known to me and who wears the kilt, as I do, if he would consent to a question being asked.

Mr. Waddell: Certainly I would.

Mr. Fraser: Are you for the Bill or against it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Minister to ask a question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister wants to know whether I am for the Bill or against it. We are for the Bill, and I am explaining why.

Mr. Dick: We were having trouble.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member should not have trouble. There is something to learn from the Bill. What I am pointing out is that this Corporation is a successful Government Corporation. It had to take over from the free market which was not working in this particular case. Sometimes it works, but in this particular case it did not. The Minister has acknowledged that. This is very important because some time down the line in this Parliament we will have some problems.

Mr. Dick: Then why are you smiling throughout your speech?

Mr. Waddell: I say to the Hon. Member who is asking that question that he should look at the Government's report entitled "A New Direction for Canada". The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated that it was "An Agenda for Economic Renewal". The Hon. Member should look at page 31 which indicates the failures of some commercial credit corporations in international marketing of products. One paragraph on that page reads:

> Other Crown corporations which have an export-facilitation role include the Canadian Dairy Commission, the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, and the Canadian Freshwater Fish Corporation.

Then on page 32 it speculates as follows:

> Is it clear that a need exists for other specialized services promoting the export of selected agricultural and fish products? Could this role be assumed by the private sector or by other established government programs?

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will participate in this debate. I should like him to tell us whether the Government will privatize the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. If the Hon. Member does his homework and looks at this report, he will understand. Why is it mentioned in here beside the concept of the market not working and the idea of changing or getting rid of these corporations? This is why I mentioned it.

The reason I mentioned the Portuguese escudo was that I was trying to point out that one of the difficulties the Corporation had with marketing the product of fishermen from Newfoundland and the lower north shore of Quebec was that they have had to compete in a market where our currency has been over valued. The currencies of countries such as Norway and Iceland which compete with them have in fact been devalued. This makes the situation even worse.

I have been told—and I looked into it—that it is very difficult for us to cut costs here in Canada. The fishermen and processors of Newfoundland are making very little money. The average income from fishing activities in that area has been between $3,000 and $4,000 per year. A plant worker makes $7.38 per hour, tops. This is not full-time, year-round work.

The prices paid to fishermen and the wages of workers cannot go any lower. Fishermen will simply not fish at the lower price; it would not be worth their while. More fishermen will go to Toronto, Fort McMurray or wherever.

The Corporation is taking its first loss for 1983-84. This was not due to bad management of that Crown Corporation, because it is properly managed. It is due to the international economic market and its associated problems. There is plenty of fish. The problem is marketing it without taking a loss.

I have already referred to "A New Direction for Canada" and the agenda therein. I would point out that the former Tory Minister of Fisheries, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), stated that he had a firm belief in the Corporation and was committed to it. I hope this Minister, through his Parliamentary Secretary when he speaks, will be committed to it as well.

In summation, the Government has our co-operation in passing this amendment. It is a small one. I have indicated the background facts as to why the amendment must be passed. I have tried to set out some of the problems of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation as I see them. We in the New Democratic Party consider this to be a very important issue and hope that the Bill is passed quickly.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and to keep the record straight. It was just communicated to my office that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), on the recommendation of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser), approved $6 million to take care of the problem to which the Minister of Fisheries and I referred this morning. I congratulate the Minister of Employment and the Minister of Fisheries for a job well done on that very serious problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista-Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I should say that it is ironic that my colleagues from Newfoundland should steal the announcement I was about to make. I am sure he saw me go across the House and talk with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) and suspected something was in the wind. Obviously he wanted to find out what it was. In any event, I congratulate him for making the announcement.

I fully support the amendment to Bill C-6 which is presently before the House. There are six major saltfish processing plants within any riding. I think it is safe to say that the largest percentage of saltfish processed in Newfoundland is done in my riding. I am quite familiar with the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. I could elaborate quite a bit on it. I want to say that it is well managed, as the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) stated. It is essential that it continue.

As has already been stated, since its inception the Saltfish Corporation has until this year operated without a deficit. I did not hear the Minister when he made his statement, but I hope he pointed out that the deficit would not be repaid from this extended borrowing. According to my information there are reserves in the Canadian Saltfish Corporation to take care of the deficit incurred this past year.

Not only does the Corporation play a vital role in ensuring that fishermen receive equality in prices paid for fish throughout Newfoundland, Labrador and on the lower north shore of Quebec; it also has during peak periods in the fishing season in Newfoundland provided a means for fishermen who deal exclusively in fresh fish to find an outlet for fish which fresh fish processing plants are unable to process because of a glut in catches. They have done that by bringing in foreign vessels to purchase fish over the side.

If I were to talk about all the problems that exist in the fishing industry today in Newfoundland, I would need a full day. I have been involved in the fishing industry directly and indirectly for more than 35 years. I have caught fish, helped to process fish and bought fish from fishermen as a sub-agent of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. There are many problems that have existed and still exist today. If Members of this House fully support the amendment to Bill C-6, some of those problems can be overcome with the extended borrowing of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation.

I want to elaborate a little on the remarks of the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). I do not believe that the Ministers referred to are in as much trouble in Newfoundland as the Hon. Member has stated. The announcement with regard to the $6 million program for fisherpersons and fish plant workers shows the compassion this Government has for those in need. That program will not be implemented on a constituency basis. The monies will be allocated to the areas most affected and where the most need exists, where the least catches were obtained this year. I congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) on that decision.

Other Members have elaborated on when the Canadian Saltfish Corporation was incorporated and the role it has played. Therefore it is not necessary for me to say anything further on that. I believe that the Minister for Fisheries and Oceans and the other Ministers to whom the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate referred should not be criticized by the Hon. Member but be given constructive ideas. I am sure these Ministers would welcome any ideas he might have to improve the welfare not only of those in his constituency but throughout Newfoundland and Canada. That is why I will not elaborate further. I work in consultation with the various Ministers. I will make my views known to them rather than seek the glory of having my constituents seeing me stand here and ramble on, talking about what I am already putting forward to the Ministers concerned.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Johnson), who is perhaps the most experienced man in the Newfoundland fishery ever to sit in this Chamber. He is experienced, both directly and indirectly, in all aspects associated with Newfoundland fishermen, such as the seal hunt and so on.

Will the Hon. Member inform the House what regulations should be changed in the Department of Fisheries relating to the size of boats and licensing? Will he give the House some indication of what he believes should be done in so far as these matters are concerned?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the size of boats, we have vessel allocations with a restriction on size. The regulations state that a fisherman with a 50-foot boat can only increase the size to 60 feet. That is ridiculous as it now applies on the west coast of Newfoundland, which is covered by the gulf region of the Department of Fisheries. If a vessel has an allocation of x number of hundreds of thousands of pounds of fish, it is almost criminal to say the fisherman must catch that fish in a 55-foot boat. He may have to build a new boat, requiring subsidies from both the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland. He could purchase a 65-foot boat by borrowing from a commercial bank, which in some cases is guaranteed by the Government of Newfoundland. It is wrong to say he must pay an additional $300,000 or $400,000 to acquire a 55-foot boat if he can purchase a 65-foot boat, as long as he is only permitted to catch the same amount of fish with that vessel. I do not mean to say that because he gets a 65-foot boat, he should start pleading with the Government for an extended allocation. Those problems exist in my riding today. I also receive representations from other parts of Newfoundland requesting me to present these views to the Minister of Fisheries, which I am now in the process of doing.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong the debate because I support this Bill. I notice the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) has left the Chamber. I want to say to him that I welcome his appointment. Because he is from the West Coast of this country, he may bring a whole new perspective and point of view to the East Coast and the Atlantic fishery. I welcome him to that portfolio and hope that he will do an effective job. He has the ability and the right spirit to do the job that sorely needs to be done in the Atlantic area.

I do not want to talk about the fishery in general in the Atlantic, but I do want to say a few words about the Canadian Saltfish Corporation and make some remarks about a special subject in connection with that Corporation.

I support the points very effectively made by my colleague from Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). He clearly staked out the plight of fishermen who make maximum use of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. It was very dramatic when at the end of his remarks an announcement was made to the effect that the money he was seeking had been made available. I congratulate the Government on that. There was no other way to help those people caught in a situation through no fault of their own, except by a special ex gratia payment. That is now there, as it was in the past. I am pleased it is because if this did not happen, there are fishermen who would have no other recourse this year because of the way the system works. My friend, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate, has pointed that out very effectively. Now these fishermen will have a way to collect unemployment insurance benefits this winter and to retain their dignity.

Let me give a brief example of this that I came across this morning. In the community of Griquet on the northern peninsula of Newfoundland there are about 30 fishermen who do not have enough qualifying weeks to draw unemployment insurance benefits this winter simply because the fish were not there. Under the normal Canada Works allocations, it is not possible to fit all those fishermen in because we cannot rotate them on Canada Works. Canada Works was not a vehicle. My friend has explained why welfare was not a vehicle. There were no other vehicles available to them. There was no safety net for these fishermen like the one farmers have. If this action was not taken, those people, through no fault of their own, would have been caught this year.

I am pleased that the Government has now come through. I would like to give my friend, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate, a lot of credit for pressing his case and for making the views of his people known.

Mr. Fraser: He got the $6 million all on his own?

Mr. Rompkey: No. It is too bad that the Minister was not present earlier because I was saying some very nice things about him while he was gone.

Mr. Fraser: I'm back now.

Mr. Rompkey: He can check the record, but I cannot keep on saying too many nice things about him. After all, we are the Opposition.

Let me talk about the Saltfish Corporation. The Minister has described how it came into being and I do not want to trace that course of history any further. Suffice it to say that it was a godsend for fishermen in Atlantic Canada and particularly for those in Newfoundland when the market for fresh fish was very weak. The Saltfish Corporation offered an alternative. The fresh fish industry in the Atlantic provinces sells basically to the U.S. market. When the U.S. market is soft, there is no alternative. However, the Saltfish Corporation has sought out markets all over the world. It has sought out alternatives and it has the backing of the Government of Canada.

I think it is fair to say that the Saltfish Corporation has not only been an effective marketing arm but has also been financially responsible and effective. We have not had to give great subsidies to that particular corporation. I think I should give credit on the record here in the House of Commons to some men who have made the Saltfish Corporation what it is today.

One name that I recall is that of Knell Henriksen who was a Scandinavian with private sector experience in his own country. He came to Newfoundland and took over the Saltfish Corporation. He is no longer with us, but I think that his contribution will be remembered and it is appropriate that I place on the record of the House of Commons the name of that man who did so much to make the Saltfish Corporation what it is.

Another name that I recall is that of Len Cowley, another public servant who is no longer with us but whose name I think will be remembered with a great deal of respect and affection. I would like to remember him today for his contribution to the Saltfish Corporation.

I can recall other men, Aiden Maloney among them, who have made their contributions over the years. Suffice it to say that the Saltfish Corporation is strong and we must continue to keep it strong. I support the improvement offered by today's Bill.

There is one thing that I would like to deal with particularly, Mr. Speaker, and that is the Northern Fishery Development Corporation. That Corporation is, in theory, a creature of both the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland. It was set up because of a very ironic situation which is occurring on the northeast coast of Newfoundland and the coast of Labrador. In these places are some of the most disadvantaged fishermen anywhere in Canada. They have the lowest incomes and their plants are in need of upgrading. By and large, they are small-boat fishermen. Yet off the shores of the northern peninsula and off the shores of Labrador, there are some of the most lucrative resources anywhere in Canada. There are shrimp, salmon, Arctic char, herring, codfish and crab. All of those resources are available. There are maximum resources and minimum income. One of the reasons for that is that the private sector has simply not performed up to scratch in those areas for a long while.

For example, St. Anthony was part of the Fishery Products chain. However, it did not prosper under the Fishery Products chain. When Fishery Products decided to withdraw from St. Anthony, the Government of Canada stepped in and asked the Saltfish Corporation if it would take over the St. Anthony plant and run it for a year. The Corporation did that. Bear in mind that there was no other alternative within the private sector. The Government of Canada asked the Saltfish Corporation to operate that plant and it did. It broke even and possibly even made a small profit a couple of years ago.

As a result of the Kirby task force, the governments then decided that they would indeed create a Northern Fisheries Development Corporation to include St. Anthony, certain plants on the northern peninsula and along the Labrador coast, some of which were owned by the Government of Newfoundland. Both governments signed an agreement indicating that that would be done. That happened almost two years ago yet nothing concrete has been done to put that Northern Fisheries Development Corporation in place.

I and others submitted that the easiest, simplest and most effective way to put in place the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation was to set up a subsidiary corporation under the Saltfish Corporation. After all, if we already have a wheel there is no need to invent one. However, there were others who said there were other alternatives. If there are other alternatives, I have not seen them put on paper. I have seen no other proposal that I can compare with a subsidiary of the Saltfish Corporation. My proposal still is that both governments would act to set up the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation, something to which they both agreed, through the Saltfish Corporation, an already existing mechanism. However, that has not happened.

Because this is an urgent matter I want to do what I can today. The fishermen of the northern peninsula and the Labrador coast want to know where they stand and what their future will be. We have now restructured the industry. There is a major company in place. However, that major company will not look after all the little plants in Newfoundland. The fishermen in that area want to know if their future is assured. That is the urgency involved in setting up this Northern Fisheries Development Corporation. I suggest that we put it in place by this spring.

I would like to use my time in the House of Commons today to try in whatever way I can to move forward the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation. When we get to committee, I intend to move an amendment to this Bill which Your Honour might want to take under advisement; I have the amendment with me. It simply indicates that Bill C-170 should be amended by adding thereto the following Clause 2, that the Saltfish Act is further amended as follows, and then it deals with amendments to the Saltfish Act which would indeed allow the Saltfish Corporation to deal in fresh fish. That is essentially what it would do. That would open up the way to creating a subsidiary corporation under the Saltfish Corporation which would become the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation.

The Minister of Fisheries is present today and I hope that he will put his views on the record as well. I know that he sees the wisdom of moving ahead with the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation as was agreed in the past. At least I hope he does see that wisdom, and that he will put his views on the record. If he agrees with moving forward with that particular development corporation, I hope he will give us his views on how we might most speedily and effectively do it in order to have it in place for this spring.

I have proposed a course of action and I intend today to push it forward. However, I would be interested in knowing the views of the Minister of Fisheries. I hope that he concurs with this course of action and that he will consult with his provincial counterparts who are now all of one congregation. I hope he will consult with them and attempt to expedite an agreement which will put in place the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation before next spring. If he does, I will give him credit for doing so. He will fulfil my expectations of a westerner who has come to Atlantic Canada, has seen from a pure perspective what is needed and has done the job. I know the Minister has the spirit and the capacity to act. What I want to know is, will he act?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member? If not, is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister wish to ask a question or does he wish to speak on debate? I want to ensure the House is aware that if the Minister speaks, it will conclude the debate.

Mr. Fraser: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that. I have spoken and I am not rising to speak again. However, I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move the Bill into Committee of the Whole and have the Bill considered at all stages.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Fraser, seconded by Mr. Layton, moves that Bill C-6, an Act to amend the Saltfish Act, be read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-6, an Act to amend the Saltfish Act. Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—Limitation

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned in my remarks, I propose to move an amendment. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate:

That Bill C-6 be amended by adding thereto the following Clause 2.

2. The Saltfish Act is further amended as follows:

"The definition fish in Section 2 of the Saltfish Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

'fish' means, except in Section 7.1, fish of the cod family (Gadidae);".

The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after Section 7 thereof, the following section:

Additional powers

"7.1 (1) The Corporation may

(a) own or operate, alone or together with one or more persons, facilities for the processing, storage or transportation of fish in those parts of the Great Northern Peninsula of Newfoundland and the Quebec north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence that are north of the fiftieth degree of north latitude, and in Labrador; (b) harvest fish destined for processing at a facility referred to in paragraph (a) and own or operate vessels or equipment for the harvesting of such fish;

(c) market fish processed in the area described in paragraph (a); and

(d) carry on, for any purpose, in respect of any fish processed at a facility referred to in paragraph (a) or harvested or marketed pursuant to this subsection, the activities that it has the power to carry on under Section 7 or 8.

Definition of "fish"

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), fish includes shellfish, crustaceans, marine animals and the eggs, spawn, spat and juvenile stages of fish, shellfish, crustaceans and marine animals."

The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after Section 15 thereof, the following section:

Moneys

"15.1 Notwithstanding subsection 15(1), sums required for the purposes of Section 7.1 shall be paid out of such moneys as may be appropriated by Parliament for that purpose."

The Chairman: The Chair rules that the amendment of the Hon. Member is out of order, as the Chair believes it is an attempt to amend the whole Act and we are dealing specifically with Section 17.2 of the Act. The Chair would like to read Citation 773(1) of Beauchesne to clarify the ruling. It reads as follows:

(1) An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negatived.

The Chair feels that the amendment is beyond the scope of the law as it presently stands and therefore rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that ruling and obviously the House must abide by it. I simply want to say to the Minister that the amendment has been ruled out of order because it is beyond the scope of the Bill. However, it is not beyond the scope of the Minister.

Having exhausted whatever parliamentary vehicles are available to me, I will now throw myself on the mercy of the Minister, and throw the fishermen of northern Newfoundland and Labrador on the mercy of the Minister. The group of people who live in that area are among the most disadvantaged in Canada. They have one of the greatest resources off their shores. They are looking to the Minister for leadership and support in putting in place a corporation which they very much desire, need and deserve. I hope that the Minister will give us some indication that he will proceed speedily in order that the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation will be in place by next spring.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I do want to reply to the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador. I would make it very clear to him and to the committee that I understand the purpose of the amendment which he has proposed. Regrettably, it is not in order, as Mr. Chairman has ruled, but I understand the purpose of and the reasons for that amendment. I am sympathetic to it. I would ask the Hon. Member, who has served with distinction in this House both as a Private Member and as a Minister, to meet with me to discuss the matter further. I hope that an appropriate response will be forthcoming. I thank the Hon. Member very much.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the title carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85 (No. 2)

The House resumed from Friday, November 30, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Riis (p. 694).

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise in debate on Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority for billions and billions of dollars, not just for the needs of the current year but for the following year. This Bill has aroused a strong reaction from our Party which has resulted in an amendment by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) which points to the inappropriateness of this action taken by the present Government. In the same way, it was inappropriate two years ago as was pointed out by the then Official Opposition.

In considering the foolishness of the Government in asking for authority to borrow for the following year, I would like to explore the concerns about the deficit which were put before us by the Government. I would like to refer in particular to some of the questions involving the size of the deficit, the way in which that deficit is growing and the Government's inability to deal with it.

Earlier in the life of this Parliament we heard a statement on the economic situation of our country. The importance of dealing with the deficit to which this borrowing authority now addresses itself was stressed. We were told in the Throne Speech that the deficit had to be dealt with. This was the first concern of the Government. There was no dispute about the importance of dealing with the deficit and the fact that it was the highest priority of the Government. However, there has certainly been some disagreement among commentators on our economic situation as to whether we must immediately find ways of reducing the deficit or whether we should be preoccupied, as was suggested by the Conservatives during the election campaign, with getting people back to work. I believe that the top priority should be working towards a full employment situation. Instead, we are now seeing a preoccupation with the deficit, as stressed in the Speech from the Throne and laid before us in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). That seems to be the main challenge and basis for action on the part of the Government.

What seems to me to be very strange is that while the deficit has been pointed to as the greatest problem which faces us—and it is recognized that the deficit has grown over some period of time—there has been no real consideration of why we are in the situation in which we find ourselves. The Speech from the Throne and the economic statement which followed, although they can be pointed to for encouragement and inspiration if not for actual reality, are statements which simply failed to explore the reasons the deficit has grown to its present dimension. The Business Council on National Issues produced a document in August which addressed the federal deficit. It laid out some options for expenditure reduction. It is quite remarkable that although there are the same assertions in the document about the size of the deficit, there is no explanation of why the deficit has reached the state it has.

The Canadian Real Estate Association indicated on November 5—coincidentally with the convening of this Parliament—a more careful consideration of the existence of a deficit. The statement is entitled "The Deficit Albatros: The Realities of Forming the Next Budget". There is a bit more care taken here in exploring the situation in which we find ourselves. However, the fact remains that while it is recognized that the deficit has been growing since the middle 1970s, reaching much higher levels in 1981 and 1982 because of the recession, there is again no real consideration of why that is the case.

What distresses me is that the Government produces statements such as the Speech from the Throne and the economic statement, then goes on to explore the matter in "A New Direction for Canada, an Agenda for Economic Renewal", but there is still that lack of analysis as to why the situation has developed as it has. We just see a description of our situation, a description of what is regarded as the national plight and the potential disaster for certain areas, indicating the prospect, for example, that if government deficits remain large, interest rates will remain high. Surely the forces which act upon Canadian interest rates are much less the Canadian deficit than certain activities in the United States with its enormous deficit. The United States is going through higher economic activity than is true of this country and the Federal Reserve Board has followed the policies which are carried out in the United States in order to finance its deficit and to compensate for other areas of economic weakness. When those are the factors which keep interest rates high, it seems open to debate that the Canadian deficit has those effects.

But we fail to ask ourselves why over the past ten years the Canadian federal Government, and other governments as well, have run the sorts of deficits they have, and what the national policies have been which have created the situation. That fact opens in my mind the possibility that the new Government, for all of its intentions to change the situation, will in fact maintain this sad reality of deficits, unemployment and slow economic activity, and will not accomplish anything which will give us the kind of country which we want and which we were promised during the election campaign.

By contrast, in a document entitled "Government Limited" published by the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, I find the kind of analysis that is so totally lacking in government statements. I find a careful consideration of how from the middle 1970s government deficits in Canada began to grow. We are reminded that it was in the Budget of 1975 that the then Minister of Finance, now the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), made a couple of careful decisions. He asserted that the federal Government was becoming too large a factor in the Canadian economy and he was going to do what he could to ensure the role of government did not continue to expand in the same way. There were, of course, tax concessions to business which were designed, it was thought, to produce investment and expand business activity. If on the one hand the Government held back and on the other hand business expanded, surely we would have an improved economic situation.

I remind everyone that corporate and individual tax breaks had begun two or three years earlier, but in effect it was from that point in the middle of the 1970s that the deficit began to grow. That is the striking thing. If one considers the statistics of all governments in Canada, not just the federal Government which serves in so many ways as financier of last resort, if I can use that phrase, particularly in areas of social services, then the really quite astounding thing is this. When the Conservatives last governed for any length of time in the days of the Right Hon. Member from Prince Albert, the Government of Canada ran some substantial deficits. I do not intend to get into the question of what sort of economic mistakes at that time created the situation, but my constituents certainly have not forgotten that the Diefenbaker days were bad days for many Canadians. With that and the Bennett record, to go back even further, Conservatives ought to be very certain that this Government does not renew memories of what Conservatives do when they are in government.

More particularly, Mr. Speaker, if one looks at the tables of surpluses or deficits in total government operations in Canada, it is quite remarkable that from about 1964 through 1974 total government operations were in balance. A surplus was being run in government, be it federal, provincial or municipal. It is only from that point in 1975, when these policy decisions of the federal Government were beginning to take effect, that we find deficits beginning to grow. Of course, they began very rapidly to rise up into the billions of dollars with the effect that we are well aware of now. Incidentally, it is worth considering carefully how large this deficit really is. If one deflates it to 1971 dollars and compares the 1946-47 situation after the war with the situation of the 1970s and into the 1980s, the deficit is not necessarily the ponderous weight that some of the business rhetoric would have us believe. It is not necessarily a destroyer of economic activity in this country.

To return to the point, Mr. Speaker, exactly why have government deficits grown as they have? Why does the government of the day think it necessary to borrow not just billions of dollars for this year but billions of dollars for next year in order to provide for its financial needs into the fiscal year 1985-86? Surely it is because, not having analysed the situation and come to a clear understanding of why deficits have grown, this Government wants to be prepared for any eventuality. It wants to be prepared for the possibility that, in spite of the best attempts to hold back on spending, the deficits will continue to grow.

That, of course, takes us back to the decision in 1975 concerning corporate and individual tax concessions, all of them designed to encourage investment. They had begun to take effect and there was clearly a marked decline in revenues to government. One cause of the deficit is to be found right there. The discussions in government about this problem have been largely, not entirely but largely, silent on that particular reality.

There has been a remarkable consistency between the Conservative and Liberal governments in pursuing, as I believe, those misguided policies, and the question is the extent to which those particular policies have in fact created the deficit. I concede that in these last days there has been some indication from the Minister of Finance that there will be a reconsideration in this area, and I trust that Private Members on the government side will keep the pressure on their Cabinet colleagues to ensure that that really happens and that they do not knuckle under to the pressure that will surely come from business interests to avoid paying all the taxes they should.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, it has always seemed to me that there is no way you can encourage business investment to any extent if there is not enough economic activity in the country to justify the establishment of new productive facilities. As long as economic activity in the country is as slow as it is, as long as Canadians do not have the money to buy goods to the extent they should, there is no real reason for investment and it is just throwing tax money away and weakening the Government's ability to deal with the situation if we remain caught in those policies.

On the other side, Mr. Speaker, we have something about which the Government has said a good deal, something of which we desperately need careful reconsideration. I suggest that we need a fundamental reconsideration of the decision to try and reduce the role of government in the economy. That is an ideological position. You may well say that our ideology is the contrary, to make government grow. But we do not want to do that just for the sake of doing it. Rather, we use government as an instrument in order to meet social needs.

When I hear of a list of 450 people in Thunder Bay who cannot afford housing and who want to get into social, low rent housing, and then I hear a government that for its own ideological reasons is cutting back efforts to ensure that kind of housing is provided, then I see a kind of ideological lunacy here that says that government must not do these things. Business confidence will grow when government restrains itself. I say that is stupidity. When the needs of the Canadian people are met, when those housing needs particularly are recognized and governments do what is necessary to ensure the construction of that housing, then I see an incentive to investment. I see a demand for construction and an increase in economic activity.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PENSION REFORM

AREAS OF PROVINCIAL CONSENSUS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago the federal and provincial Governments began the process of reviewing the pension systems not only in the private sector but in the public sector as well. During those 10 years there have been several commissions on the subject. There has been a parliamentary task force. There have been individual task forces set up by the federal Government and, in some cases, by provincial Governments.

A year ago, after the parliamentary task force had met and presented its viewpoints to the Government, there seemed to be a degree of consensus in the country on the way in which we should undertake pension reform. However, since that time there have been delaying tactics which we did not envisage at the beginning. That led to a provincial conference in June of last year at which the provincial Ministers responsible for pension reform reviewed the various scenarios. On November 1 and 2 they met with their officials, and yesterday the Ministers met again in Toronto.

There are areas in which a consensus has been reached. Those areas include eligibility criteria for full-time and part-time workers, minimum employer contributions, pre-retirement and post-retirement survivor benefits, among many. In addition, the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, Larry Grossman, has indicated that in the event that total consensus cannot be arrived at by February—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, considering that the new Conservative Government is a corporately-oriented Government, we felt it appropriate that a quarterly report be presented.

A statement released by Brian Mulroney in Halifax on August 2, 1984, said: "A P.C. Government will set up an industry-government panel to produce a new and positive role for Canertech to play in advancing renewable energy and conservation." Canertech is now being wound up.

In the election it was promised, in reply to a Friends of the Earth questionnaire that "a P.C. Government will promote a phased and orderly completion of the National Parks system." The economic statement cut $19.5 million from planned spending in the National Parks.

In the election the Conservatives promised to "establish a new Department of Forestry at the federal level". That was in the P.C. Campaign Handbook, at page 49. Rather than create a separate Department, a junior Minister has been appointed in the Department of Agriculture.

In the election the Conservatives promised to rebate fuel taxes to farmers. They have done so, but only for three years.

The Conservatives promised to give the Auditor General Cabinet documents relating to Petro-Canada's takeover of Petrofina. They are now continuing Liberal stonewalling.

The Conservatives promised open government, and then announced a communications management strategy which places new restrictions on the right of public servants to talk to the public, the media, and Members of Parliament.

The Conservatives opposed the 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax announced in the last Budget, and then implemented the tax increase themselves.

In the election the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) promised federal funding for a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island. She now says no money is available.

COMMUNICATIONS

ANXIETY OF FRANCO-MANITOBAN COMMUNITY OVER CBC BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Leo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my constituents in St. Boniface reacted very favourably to the economic and financial message presented in the House on November 8 of this year.

However, I would like to point out that the Franco-Manitoban community is concerned about the proposed budgetary cutbacks for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

The CBC's French network is the only national network serving Francophone communities outside Quebec. Local and regional programming is absolutely essential for the people of St. Boniface and for all Franco-Manitobans.

Local TV programs on CBWFT take up less than five hours per week, so that any cuts would be disastrous.

The CBC must provide a national service that meets the needs of all Canadians. Any reduction in local programming would only further increase the number of Quebec-oriented programs.

I might add that the service we have now is already at a basic minimum. I would therefore urge the Minister responsible for Communications to do everything in his power to maintain present regional production.

THE LATE HON. GEORGE R. PEARKES

SUGGESTED COMMEMORATION IN NAMING OF NATIONAL DEFENCE HEADQUARTERS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I rise to encourage the House to recognize, in a tangible way, the contribution to Canada of a most honourable gentleman, the late George R. Pearkes. General Pearkes served Canada well in the two world wars, earning the highest military decoration, the Victoria Cross. The Hon. George Pearkes was a distinguished Member of Parliament and Minister of National Defence. He later became Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia.

May I suggest that we memorialize this fine gentleman, recently deceased, by naming the twin towers located at 101 Colonel By Drive, Ottawa, "The Major General George R. Pearkes, V.C. Building". These twin towers are at present referred to as National Defence headquarters, a misnomer, as the Defence headquarters is spread through a number of buildings in the national capital region. It would seem both opportune and appropriate to provide a more descriptive title for the towers. It would also be an opportunity to pay tribute to a distinguished Canadian soldier.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CAPE BRETON REGIONAL PROGRAMMING

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the economic statement of the Minister of Finance, the proposed cut-backs at the CBC station in my constituency are of great concern to myself, as well as to the majority of people I represent, not only because of the reduction in service but indeed because of the loss of jobs.

CBC Cape Breton is, and always has been, a great supporter of our culture and customs and has, more than any of the other electronic media, promoted the uniqueness of our area. Locally produced programs such as "Talent Cape Breton", "Island Echoes", a program which promotes the ancient Gaelic language, and "Fresh Air", are virtually the only such programs dedicated to the promotion and preservation of our local musicians and their talents.

Presently, Mr. Speaker, we have only one hour a day of local television programming, "Cape Breton Report". That deals with local issues such as sports, weather, and news. It is all we have left and it should not and must not be cut back, because it is the only real service for those communities. If we are to keep our identity as Canadians and Cape Bretoners in this great country, we must be permitted to keep our local CBC productions whole. I urge the Minister of Communications to reverse this decision on behalf of the people of that area.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, to continue the quarterly report on the Government's activities, the Conservatives promised to establish review boards to mediate between farmers and their creditors. No action has been taken, even though farm bankruptcies are at an all-time high. The Conservatives promised major new spending initiatives in the area of research and development, yet cut $107.2 million from federal research grants.

The Conservatives told the Co-op Housing Foundation of Canada that they were committed to strengthening Canada's co-op housing program. The subsequent economic statement cut nearly $10 million from the program. The Conservatives told the Catholic Register that "we will increase Canada's contribution to official development assistance to .7 per cent of our GNP by 1990." They eliminated this target in the economic statement.

The Conservatives specifically told the National Radio Producers' Association that "we are committed to maintaining the level of funding for cultural agencies, including the CBC". They also told La Fédération des Franco-Colombiens that they hoped to see the CBC expand its service in French for French Canadians outside Quebec. They cut funding to CBC by $75 million.

The Conservatives told the Canadian Council for Children and Youth that they supported a House of Commons report calling for the phase-out of lead in gasoline. There was no action. They also told the Family Service Centre that their Party supported the recent amendments to the Canada Labour Code providing for unpaid parental leave following the expiration of maternity leave. They have since delayed that. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the quarterly—

TOURISM

REGIONAL TOURIST DEVELOPMENT—THE LAURENTIANS

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on the development of the regional tourist industry.

As the House is probably aware, the riding of Labelle is blessed with abundant resources in this sector, so that tourism contributes very significantly to local incomes and job creation. In the Laurentians, the tourist industry alone generates over $250 million in income and helps create over 15,000 jobs. The people in my riding and the main agencies involved in promoting tourism in the Laurentians, both regionally, nationally and throughout the North American continent, were delighted to hear that a new Ministry of State for Tourism had been created, and they were particularly pleased with the Government's emphasis on an industry which, on a nationwide basis, generates about $18 billion in revenue and helps to create over 600,000 jobs.

Mr. Speaker, the tourist industry is unusually sensitive to a number of factors. Now that the Hon. Minister of State for Tourism has announced an aggressive promotion and marketing policy, and considering the new climate of detente in federal-provincial relations, I hope that, first of all, these policies will be able to provide conditions for harmonious growth and management and enhance this sector's stability, and second—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry I have to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal.

SHIPBUILDING

CALL FOR POLICIES TO ASSIST INDUSTRY

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, Canadian shipyards are in serious trouble. Work orders from the private sector are going off-shore and unemployment still remains high.

A significant problem for the industry is a number of loopholes left open by the previous administration. These loopholes allow foreign shipyards to continue to provide equipment to Canadian companies that could, and should, be made in Canada.

Private sector demand for Canadian built ships and equipment must increase before shipbuilding, ship repair, and allied industries can expect to see rejuvenation. This can be aided by the closure of several loopholes that operate to discourage the private sector from placing orders in Canadian yards.

I would urge the Minister responsible for shipbuilding to act on policy that would provide financial assistance for petroleum exploration activity only to companies that build equipment in Canada or maximize Canadian content; double the temporary entry duty rate to one-sixtieth a month; include duty on fishing vessels 100 feet or longer, and provide concessionary financing to domestic shipowners.

The industry was heartened by the P.C. commitment to revive shipbuilding as a major economic factor. I am confident the Government's efforts to ensure national renewal will put in place factors that will encourage our shipbuilding industry and create long-term employment. However, I would ask that these measures be implemented with speed to prevent the further loss of work.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, let it not be said that the Conservative Government does not keep its promises. The man said: "I had a choice, I had a choice. I could have said no but I said yes. The devil is making me do it".

The man said: "Oh, there will be jobs for Liberals and New Democrats too, but only after I've been Prime Minister for 15 years and I can't find a single living, breathing Tory to appoint".

The man said: "Let's face it. There's no whore like a old whore. If I were in his position, I would have been right in there with my nose in the public trough just like the rest of them".

After some token non-partisan appointments to quell criticism, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his cohorts are totally immersed in the trough, fulfilling the nose-grinding duty he campaigned against during the election. This Government and this Prime Minister are drenched in hypocrisy.

He told the Canadian public that what the Liberals had done was wrong. Well, Mr. Speaker, it was wrong then, and it is wrong now. The pork barrelling should stop, but it hasn't. The list of Tories nosing in on the action grows daily: Ron Huntington, former Tory Member of Parliament, now Chairman of Canada Ports Corporation; Pierre Boutin, Mulroney associate and bag-man, now Chairman of the National Arts Centre; Huguette Pageau, wife of a long-time Mulroney supporter, now a citizenship judge; Jean Pigott, former Tory Member of Parliament, now President of the National Capital Commission—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

OFFICE EXPENDITURES OF FORMER MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the details of the waste and maladministration of the former Liberal Government are now appearing. Today's report of the over-indulgence, the horrendous staffing practices, the lack of any sense of frugality shown by the former Minister of Transport the present Member of Parliament for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), shows clearly how the former Government ran the finances of Canada into their present sorry state. No wonder, Mr. Speaker, the House is asked for over $23 billion in borrowing authority.

The former Minister of Transport had an overly fat budget for his personal office. But $1.2 million was not enough for him, and in five and a half months he not only spent his entire year's budget, but over $860,000 on top.

He squandered public money for no reason other than to try to advance his personal image, secure his personal re-election, and protect, nurture, and provide cushy jobs for Liberals.

This Parliament ought to commence an inquiry into that abuse of public funds by the former Minister so that the public will be fully apprised of how his country was managed. There should be provision whereby Ministers who abuse the public trust personally repay the Government money lost and wasted. Parliament will now be called upon to supply a supplementary appropriation to cover the former Minister's profligacy—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

SOCIAL SECURITY

USE OF POSSIBLE SAVINGS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I do not know whether he was able to catch the 6 a.m. radio news today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I thought I would, while the CBC is still able to provide the news.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of National Health and Welfare, when asked whether the savings from a review of social programs would be used to reduce the deficit, told the CBC:

We have not discounted any options.

The Prime Minister will recall that in an interview with a reporter for The Toronto Star on November 17 he was asked the same question, namely, would savings accruing from reducing social programs be used to reduce the deficit?

No, absolutely not. Absolutely not.

Would the Prime Minister be good enough to explain to the House the contradiction between what the Minister of National Health and Welfare said on CBC radio this morning and what the right hon. gentleman told The Toronto Star reporter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did hear the news at six this morning.

Mr. Deans: You were on your way in.

Mr. Mulroney: I was in my jacuzzi, listening to it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: And then, just to be sure I had heard right, I turned on my satellite.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: There, indeed, was the Minister of Health in living colour—in the jacuzzi!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I heard the thoughtful statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He said nothing inconsistent at all with the view that I expressed in Toronto, and a view that the Hon. Member for Sudbury expressed some sympathy for, namely, that we were ready to review some of these aspects to find out whether we could not make a better utilization of public funds, in other words, to direct those funds to those people in our society who needed them most. I do not see anything inconsistent between the statement of my hon. friend, the Minister of Health, and the general view that I expressed as supported by the Minister of Finance.

STATEMENT MADE BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I submit, Mr. Speaker, to the right hon. gentleman, that the statement which the Minister of Health made is directly contradictory to the interview which the right hon. gentleman gave to The Toronto Star reporter.

In that same interview he said the money so found by a review of the social programs would be, as he said this afternoon, redirected to the needy. When that same question was put to the Minister of Health in the committee yesterday by the Hon. Member for Sudbury, the Minister said:

No, I think our imagination is a little more fertile than that.

I am saying to the right hon. gentleman that there are contradictions appearing in the Government's stance, and that I think he perhaps owes it to Parliament to clarify the situation and to say who is speaking for the Government.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the view I expressed was on behalf of the Government. What my friend, the Minister of Health, was doing was exploring options, which is a good idea, in the expression of a national debate in which we hope all Members of the House will become engaged. It was a thoughtful expression of opinion and not at all inconsistent with the broad thrust of what we are trying to accomplish. I do not think there is any doubt but that our principal hope is to redirect, if we can, and if it meets with the favour of the House and broad public support in the country, some of our scarce assets to helping those who need them most.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister is going to review his Ministers' statements, because it might . . . My question is as follows: When is he going to admit that his own Ministers are confusing and upsetting Canadians by their contradictory statements about Canada's social security system?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I heard the Right Hon. Member say on television that he was prepared to review universality. What he said was entirely in agreement with a statement made by the Member for Sudbury, who said more or less the same thing, while other Members of his caucus were saying the exact opposite. We are just saying that there is considerable debate on the issue in this country, and we are seeking opinions from all Canadians on this matter. We hope to be able to allocate more funds to the neediest in our society, but it will depend on the outcome of the debate.

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—GOVERNMENT PROJECTIONS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Would he tell us whether he is aware of any reason, which has not been disclosed either to the House or to the Canadian public, to alter the economic projections for the Canadian economy that were set out in some detail in his mini budget of November 8?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no, I don't know of any reasons to alter those projections. They will stand. If the Hon. Member looks at some of the recent releases by other economists, he will find that the projections are well within the consensus range of leading economists in Canada.

ISSUANCE OF GOVERNMENT BONDS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, how can the Minister of Finance justify this week's $1.2 billion issue of Canada bonds—obligations of the Government of Canada—with four maturities through to the year 2005, non-callable, and with interest rates far in excess of anything projected in the mini budget, which was 6.5 per cent from 1986 to 1990? We have ranges going up to 12 per cent for the latter part of that issue. That is a tremendous waste of taxpayers' money, if he really has confidence in the numbers which he gave us on November 8.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member looks at the broad range of the debt management program of the Government, which is necessitated by the huge borrowing requirements left by the previous Government, he will understand that a range of securities has to be offered at any one time. I would point out to him that some 56 per cent of the outstanding securities of the Government of Canada are in Treasury bills and in Canada Savings Bonds. Therefore, they are very sensitive to the changing nature of interest rates. We will benefit in a very major way if we are able to get interest rates down, and that is what we intend to do.

PETRO-CANADA PURCHASE OF PETROFINA—REQUEST FOR CABINET DOCUMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises out of something which she said in the House yesterday. I want to give her the opportunity to correct what I think she will have decided was an error. When she was asked about providing information to the Auditor General, she said:

> —the Auditor General wants from me what the law does not permit me to give, that is, access to other Cabinet Ministers' material.

I should like the Minister to tell the House what law she was referring to, or will she take the occasion to correct what she said?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to correct in this matter because I was referring to a convention which has the force of law—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: —and which has been used in the parliamentary system for many, many years. It was the convention that I addressed.

Mr. Broadbent: Perhaps the Minister could consult either of the gentlemen sitting in front of her, who, I think, have had some legal training, presumably passed the courses, and therefore know that there is a distinction between a law and a convention.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister telling the House that, in her judgment, it was only a convention which stopped her from passing on the material that the Auditor General requested?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the Hon. Member that a former Leader of our Party took a convention to the Supreme Court of Canada for a ruling on the Constitution.

Mr. Broadbent: To see if it was law.

Miss Carney: I can only repeat what I told the House yesterday. As a Minister of the Crown I am advised by our legal advisers that I cannot have access to my predecessors' files, as much as I would love to have them. The other point is that I do not have the files. The information the Auditor General is seeking is not in my files.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister could get some more advice from the Prime Minister. She would discover that other conventions were taken to the Supreme Court of Canada and it was decided that they were merely conventions, not laws. There is a distinction.

CONVENTION GOVERNING CABINET DOCUMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will turn to the Prime Minister himself instead of going about it indirectly. What is at stake in part in this issue is indeed a convention, not a law, which was established by a Cabinet itself at one time, and therefore can be changed by a Cabinet. Considering that the Prime Minister promised—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, it is time for the question.

Mr. Broadbent: —change, and considering that he had a choice when he became Minister, will he change this convention and provide the information which the Auditor General ought to get?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are going to have to start charging for all this legal advice. The fact of the matter is that my hon. friend, if I may say this with respect, is cavorting a little here. He knows full well that he and my right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, and myself, will be meeting in about half an hour to attempt to find a solution to this problem.

I said yesterday that it appeared, inadvertently or otherwise, that there was a bit of a collision between the rights of Parliament and certain privileges of the executive. In my judgment, in that kind of confrontation Parliament should always prevail.

Mr. Broadbent: I will remind you.

Mr. Mulroney: What we will try to do, being respectful of traditions which have existed under the British parliamentary system for many years, is find a forum which, hopefully, will allow us to respect the necessary degree of confidentiality at Cabinet meetings and discussions and to provide the Auditor General and Members of the House with all available information to enable the Auditor General to make a good value judgment.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES CHEMICAL POLLUTION—REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET UNITED STATES OFFICIAL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Great Lakes supply water to millions of Canadians and Americans. Last week the Ontario Minister of the Environment was quoted as saying that if pollution continued unabated or increased, "We can have environmental catastrophe, no question about that".

The Canada-United States environmental study which was just released showed that 1.5 tonnes of potentially dangerous chemicals were oozing into the Niagara River daily. Does the Minister of the Environment have plans to convene a meeting with the new head of the EPA and, if so, when will the meeting take place so that this very important matter can be raised?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that I am giving the issue of water quality in the Great Lakes all my attention, and that in the months and weeks to come, I shall be giving it at least as much attention and energy as did my hon. friend when he was Minister of the Environment.

PROPOSAL MADE BY CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister knows that the Canadian side of the joint committee recommended a clean-up of the Niagara River. This recommendation was turned down.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Caccia: Therefore I would like to ask the Hon. Minister—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect to the Hon. Member, when the Speaker rises it is normal to sit. I ask the Member, please, to put his question.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I was ready to ask my question. Therefore I understood your rising to remind me of that necessity, and I was ready to do so.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Caccia: What initiative does the Hon. Minister have in mind to pursue and promote the proposal advanced by the Canadian side of the joint commission, which was turned down by the U.S. side?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it was not a case of the two Canadian recommendations not being accepted. The U.S. side wanted more extensive studies on pollutants in the Great Lakes which do not originate from the Niagara River only, and we shall continue to press for preparing an action plan as soon as possible.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

REVIEW OF NATIVE CLAIMS POLICY—EXTINGUISHMENT REQUIREMENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Minister is not in the House at the moment.

An Hon. Member: Here he comes.

Mr. Penner: I welcome the Minister back from his travels across the country.

The Minister has promised a full review of the native claims policy. It is long overdue, and I welcome it. Will the Minister give the House a firm undertaking that in that review he will eliminate the unacceptable and perhaps unconstitutional requirement of extinguishment, whereby a native group negotiating a claim must surrender all of its residual aboriginal rights in settling a claim and not just those mentioned in the agreement?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and remind him that the parliamentary task force respecting indian self-government made a similar recommendation. In my consultations with various Indian communities, I indicated that I would undertake a review of Indian land claims, particularly onthe question of extinguishment. That is still the position of the Government. We will continue to review the land claims with a particular eye to the policy of extinguishment.

ROLE OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is addressed to the Minister of Justice. In the past the sticking point in getting rid of this odious extinguishment policy has been the Department of Justice. Does the Minister agree that this extinguishment policy should go, and will he work in co-operation with the Minister of Indian Affairs to abolish it once and for all so that we can have a decent, respectable, just, native claims policy?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we are working as hard as we can to get rid of most of the odious practices that were left by the last regime. There are very many odious practices. We will attempt to reach some accommodation with the aboriginal peoples on that question.

As the hon. gentleman knows, if you pay a consideration, you have to get some consideration in return. If you are going to pay for certain rights to be surrendered, there has to be some finality to the process. That concept has to be observed somewhere along the line, and we must remember that the provincial Governments are also involved. We are certainly prepared to try to work this matter out. We will be meeting with the representatives of the aboriginal people on December 18 and 19. That will be one of the matters discussed.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF SASKATCHEWAN MINISTER OF EDUCATION AND MINISTER RESPONSIBLE FOR STATUS OF WOMEN

AUDITOR GENERAL

PETRO-CANADA PURCHASE OF PETROFINA—DEPARTMENTAL FILES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the Minister aware that, according to the latest edition of the cabinet paper system of the Privy Council Office, there are three types of documents, the first being a discussion paper, the analysis and background papers, the second type being the memo to Cabinet from the Minister, and the third type being the record of the Cabinet decision? Is the Minister telling this House that her Department does not have in its files the background papers, that is, the discussion papers with regard to the take-over of Petrofina by Petro-Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I am telling the House.

LOCATION OF FILES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, according to the same document, those files do not have to be destroyed. They can be kept. Has the Minister given notice, or has notice been given in her Department, that those files have been taken out of her Department? Has she given notice to the Privy Council Office?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is being extraordinarily obtuse about this. My Department was not asked for information or support from the previous administration on this issue. They were not asked to deal with this issue. Petro-Canada was the agent in this whole affair. My officials have assured me that my Department does not have that information.

UNITED NATIONS VOTE ON NUCLEAR FREEZE PROPOSAL—CANADIAN POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs who will know that six of the fifteen NATO nations and two of the three ANZUS partners either voted yes to the nuclear freeze in the UN First Committee or abstained on that vote, thereby rendering ridiculous the Minister's arguments for our voting against the freeze. Will the Minister now free himself from the Pentagon and its control, and instruct Canada's Ambassador for Disarmament at the UN to join Greece, Denmark, Australia and others at the vote in the UN next week, and vote yes to a nuclear freeze?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in deciding Canadian foreign policy I pay as much attention to the Pentagon as I do to the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I listen to them both in the interests of some balance. The answer to the Hon. Member's question is that the Government of Canada does not intend to change its vote on that declaratory motion in the United Nations.

POSSIBLE REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES AND SOVIET UNION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): The Minister's answer that we shan't change our vote and join our friends at the United Nations is most disappointing.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue another comment that the Minister made.

Mr. Speaker: Order. With great respect, the Chair is trying to make it clear that the purpose of supplementary questions is to ask questions and not to make statements. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Ms. Jewett: When the Minister is talking with the United States and the Soviet Union, when he discusses ceasing the deployment of cruise missiles, will he tell them that Canada, wanting credence on this matter, will itself cease to test the cruise missile?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are really two questions here. I have made it clear in the House that this Government does not intend to take unilateral actions that we believe would reduce significantly our influence within the North Atlantic Alliance which, among other things, is very important to our being effective on questions of arms control and disarmament. The second question has to do with communications. I was requested by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry to pass on representations to the Soviet Union and the United States in preparation for the very welcome discussions at Geneva. We are still in the process of considering what, if anything, should go into that representation. As soon as that decision has been taken, I will advise the House.

ACID RAIN—ROUYN-NORANDA REGION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment.

The riding I represent in this House, and more specifically the Rouyn-Noranda region, has a serious pollution and acid rain problem caused by Noranda Mines. Could the Minister inform the House whether she intends to take any specific action in the near future to improve the quality of life of my fellow citizens?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform my hon. friend that I had a meeting on the subject yesterday with the Quebec Minister of the Environment, and I will be meeting the presidents of the smelting companies tomorrow evening in Montreal, including the president of Noranda Mines.

Oral Questions

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

STEEL LABELLING PROVISIONS OF UNITED STATES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I know he will be aware of the situation because I wrote to him about it last October, although he has not seen fit to reply. Does the Prime Minister agree with the Minister for International Trade that the steel labelling provisions of the U.S. Trade and Tariff Act, which could cost hundreds of Canadian jobs, or that it is a violation of GATT?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter is open to discussion and debate. We are advancing Canadian interests in Washington and elsewhere with vigour and, I hope, with great success.

● (1440)

REQUEST FOR RETALIATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, given that since the election of this Government more than 2,000 employees of the Steel Company of Canada have either been laid off or have received lay-off notices because of a downturn in the steel industry, will the Prime Minister guarantee to the House that he will proceed with retaliatory measures if the U.S. legislation is not changed, or will his bowing to the U.S. President force Canadian steelworkers to scrape the bottom of the barrel when it comes to jobs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one thing that I can guarantee my hon. friend that we will not do is indulge in retaliatory rhetoric such as the kind that we hear from her, which does nothing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: Two thousand jobs is not retaliatory rhetoric, Mr. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: I think my hon. friend has forgotten that she is no longer in Queen's Park.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: We are delighted to have her here. I just want to say that we believe that by putting the case firmly and effectively, we can create new jobs and arrest those lay-offs to which she refers. She has our full support in that initiative.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

JURISDICTIONAL QUERY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Has the Minister recommended to the task force on government reorganization that the Unemployment Insurance Program be transferred to the jurisdiction of the Department of Finance?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, can the Minister tell the House why, on October 30, while speaking to a training group in Kingston, she suggested that that is so? Is it because she wants to get rid of a hot potato portfolio, or was she simply suffering from loose lips?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must say that that discussion in Kingston centered on how we could improve training programs for people, and it focused particularly on how human resource development could be expanded and encouraged. One of the things that was discussed at that time was how better usage could be made of the Unemployment Insurance Fund in this regard.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

OFFICE EXPENDITURES OF FORMER MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Leo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Today's Globe and Mail contains an article entitled "The Axworthy empire". In a six-month period prior to the election, this empire spent almost $900,000 more than its excessive yearly budget of $1.2 million. Can the President of the Treasury Board reassure the people of Canada that this self-serving empire building will not be tolerated?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we were obviously quite concerned by the very high costs of ministerial offices, including that of the previous Minister of Transport. Among others, in the Ministry of Indian Affairs expenditures were about $2 million, and expenditures in the Ministry of Employment and Immigration were above $3.5 million. There was obviously a need to bring in measures, which we did, to ensure that there would be strict control over the budgets of ministerial offices in the future. This will reduce the spending in that area in the year to come. I will table the document.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

SYSTEM BLOCKAGE—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns the continuing shutdown of the St. Lawrence Seaway system. As the Minister knows, the weather is not co-operating with attempts to get the Seaway system re-opened by December 7. In fact today, with high winds and low visibility, work is stopped and equipment is on stand-by. In view of that shutdown at Valleyfield, and in view of the fact that a very similar but unreported incident occurred at Sault Ste Marie a month previous to the Valleyfield shutdown, will the Minister agree to have an independent commission of inquiry examine that 40-year-old system, to restore public confidence in Canada's Seaway?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that work has been delayed due to the excessive winds on site. The equipment and men are standing by and waiting for the winds to subside. As I have said in earlier responses to questions put by the Hon. Member, we are putting forth our very best efforts to get the system operational again and, of course, we will be undertaking to take all steps necessary to ensure that breakdowns of a similar nature do not occur in the future.

INTERNATIONAL REACTION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that alternate routes to the Seaway system are available, is the Minister concerned about Canada's international reputation, given the fact that the Seaway, an important economic generator, will be impacted negatively unless something is done by the Government to demonstrate that the Seaway system is in fact dependable?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Minister of Transport has indicated, we are facing an unanticipated and serious accident. I believe that international opinion, like opinion in Canada is greatly encouraged by the high priority the Minister of Transport has given the accident and the great dispatch with which he is proceeding to repair the damage.

INCOME TAX

RATES CHARGED BY DISCOUNTERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, almost 400,000 Canadians who were entitled to income tax refunds received money in advance by going to discounters who charged 15 per cent per rebate, making an annual interest rate of 180 per cent, because people could not wait to receive the money in the usual fashion. Most of these are low-income people. Has the Minister given consideration to putting an end to the scam that is being perpetrated on these low-income people?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. friend for raising the issue. In fact, the demand for the services of discounters has more than doubled since 1982. We are keeping a close watch on the procedures being followed, and if there is any infrigement of the law, we shall act accordingly.

CHEQUE-CASHING SCAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister is aware of a new fast growing scam, the cheque-cashing scam, in which people are charged a rate of 6 per cent for cashing a government cheque. The Government of Quebec has banned the operation of that kind of business. Would the Minister give consideration to having the federal Government put in place a similar policy?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my department is monitoring the situation and plans to intervene if there is any further infringement of federal statutes.

FORESTRY

JACKPINE BUDWORM INFESTATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry, but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Minister of State for Forestry. In view of the threat to the economic life of many communities in northern Ontario due to the infestation of jackpine budworm and the apparent reluctance of the Ontario Government to act, will the Minister urge his provincial counterpart to take the necessary steps so that an effective control program can be put in place by next spring?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, today the Minister is attending a meeting dealing with conservation of our forests. I will certainly bring the matter to his attention so that he may take notice of the Hon. Member's question upon his return.

REQUEST FOR AUTHORIZATION TO USE INSECTICIDE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I put my question to the Hon. Minister because, since the Minister of Agriculture has been away for over a week now, he is often the Acting Minister of Agriculture. Will the Minister undertake to urge that the biological insecticide BT be authorized for use on an emergency basis, so that this program of control can be put in place next spring?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, might I say that the Government puts a high priority on the forests of the country. That is why a separate Ministerial responsibility was created. I will certainly take the question as notice, and I will see that the Minister is made aware of it upon his return.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM DISCUSSIONS—PLIGHT OF BRITISH PENSIONERS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He is scheduled to visit the United Kingdom in the next several weeks for bilateral discussions with that Government. Could he advise the House whether he intends to give top priority in those discussions to the plight of some 41,000 U.K. citizens who now reside in Canada, who receive a U.K. pension, but who do not receive cost of living increases from that Government? If he does intend to raise that, will he give it a high priority?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know that matter has been of great and continuing concern to the Hon. Member, as it has to several Members on all sides of the House. I do intend to raise it in my discussions in London, and I will give it a high priority.

TRADE

EXPORTATION OF ELECTRICITY

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. We will know that various areas of Canada have exported electricity to the United States and that other areas want to export electricity to the U.S. Could he tell the House if he supports the sale of electricity to the U.S. not simply to New England but as well to the Midwest? Could he give the House some indication of the policy of the Government in this regard?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the sale and generation of electricity is essentially a provincial matter. If he has some actual knowledge as to a province which is interested in selling electricity to the United States, of course we would be very interested in hearing the details.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I am sure there is adequate evidence on the record, but I would be glad to tell the Minister that my province, for one, wants to sell electricity.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister met with his counterparts or is he going to be meeting with them? In addition, can he tell us through what mechanism he will support the sale of electricity to the United States?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows from his time as a Minister of the Crown, if he wanted to do something with respect to the sale of electricity during that five-year period perhaps he could have taken some action. I can only repeat the answer which I gave to the first question. Give us the details and we will be more than pleased to work with any province, including the province of the Hon. Member, in trying to sell electricity into whatever market where they feel they can sell it.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

PLANNED SHUTDOWN OF BLACK & DECKER PLANT AT BARRIE, ONT.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Black & Decker has just announced that its world profits rose by 116 per cent this year. Could the Minister now report back to the House on the undertaking which he made last week, which was to consult FIRA about the planned shutdown of the Black & Decker plant in Barrie? Would he assure the House that the information which was reviewed was correct and accurate?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with FIRA. As a result of those discussions I have asked that certain of the Black & Decker officials come in and go over the various undertakings and explain why they feel certain projections have not materialized and why it was necessary to close down the Barrie factory.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to hear that this close investigation is taking place.

REVIEW OF TAKE-OVERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister commit himself to keeping the review of indirect take-overs of this kind in the FIRA Act in the future? In addition, will he permit unions and local communities to have access to the information that is given by companies in their undertakings to FIRA in cases such as this?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the Hon. Member's question, I would ask him to be a little more patient. He will shortly see the Bill in its entirety.

In answer to the second part of his question I can only indicate that the previous Government developed the precedent of not making available any of the information with respect to undertakings unless the party involved agreed to such a disclosure. I am now looking at that situation to determine whether it must be followed. Again, I will advise the House when I have something further to say, perhaps during the debate on the revisions to FIRA.

CRIMINAL CODE

IMPAIRED DRIVING AMENDMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The Minister knows that Christmas is coming and that the Christmas Party season has already begun. When he was in Newfoundland he indicated that he was intending to bring forward tough legislation to deal with drunk driving, before New Year's. The former Government had legislation before the House on that subject. Is the Minister going to bring that legislation forward? Will he give the House time to consider it properly before New Year's?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly prepared to admit that Christmas is coming, and I thank the hon. gentleman for tipping me off.

I hope that before the middle of December the Criminal Code amendments will be before the House. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman exactly on what day. The draftsmen are busy working on not just the amendments which relate to impaired driving, but on other matters as well. If the House is interested, there should be time to consider it adequately before Christmas. That is my hope.

HERRING GULL EGG PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the concern expressed by many Canadians over the last two weeks about cut-backs in environmental monitoring, and in view of the report which was released last week that highlighted the problems of pollution in the Great Lakes and the Niagara River, could she tell the House whether she is reconsidering the decision to cancel the Herring Gull Egg Program? Is she prepared to tell the House now if she will do the better thing and reinstate that program?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as far as the Herring Gull Egg Monitoring Program is concerned, I am consulting with various authorities to assess the scope of this program, and I might refer the Hon. Member to a reply I gave in the House a few weeks ago. However, if the fact that we are considering cutting this program poses a threat to the health of Canadians, the research program or our international agreements, I am prepared to reconsider.

[English]

MINISTER'S RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister tell the House how long this reconsideration process will take? When can we expect to hear from her on whether she will stick by the cancellation of that program or whether she will do the better thing and reinstate it?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I shall make a decision within the next few weeks.

PORNOGRAPHY

PENTHOUSE MAGAZINE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue.

Since the Minister is responsible for customs and excise, could he inform the House whether officials of his Department banned the importation into Canada of the January 1985 issue of Penthouse, or if it is because of inadequate controls at the border that, today, the Minister has been forced to instruct distributors to keep the January issue in their warehouses?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank the Hon. Member for her question. When we had the chance to look at the January issue of Penthouse, I was very concerned about one of the pictorials which was in it. As a result I asked for a legal opinion from my Department as to whether it would be possible to prevent importation of that issue as we did in the case of the December issue. The legal opinion I received from the Department was that it was not possible to do so.

As a consequence we held up the importation of the issue at the border while we requested a second legal opinion from the Department of Justice. The second legal opinion was similar to the first, that is, it is far from clear that, if we were to ban importation, we would be able to succeed in the courts.

Point of Order—Mr. Blenkarn

● (1500)

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Monday, December 3, 1984, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

PROCEDURE RESPECTING TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In replying to the Hon. Member for Saint-Boniface (Mr. Duguay), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) made certain comments and read from certain documents. Would he now be required to table those, as he offered to do in the House?

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member is making an allegation that a Minister referred to documents, or cited or quoted from them. I will check the "blues" and determine whether there is a procedural requirement on that matter.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Ministers have the right as Ministers to table documents under "Tabling of Documents". The Hon. Member is rising on a point of order, I presume, to ask the Speaker whether there is a procedural requirement imposed upon the Minister as a result of his reference during Question Period. The answer is that the Speaker would have to check the "blues" in order to determine whether in fact the documents were cited or quoted. He would then have to determine whether the rules with regard to that matter apply to Question Period.

As I have indicated in a previous ruling, if the Minister chooses of his own volition to table the document under "Tabling of Documents", that is his freedom. At the moment the point of order has been raised and I must reserve on the point of order.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps my hearing of the point of order with respect to the tabling of that document was somewhat different from yours. I understood it to be a request of the Minister to table the document to which he was referring.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Hon. Member says "Right on".

Mr. Speaker: With due respect, it cannot be a point of order if it is a request to the Minister. The point of order which I heard was, did the Minister have an obligation to table as a result of quoting from the document? I presume that is the only point of order which could relate to the matter.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I take it that our rules say that during the course of Question Period it is not possible for Ministers to table documents.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I have indicated I will reserve on the point of order raised. That is normally the practice of the Speaker with regard to a point of order related to some comment regarding citing or quoting. The Speaker is also indicating to the House, as is his obligation, that should the Minister have documents which the Minister wishes to table of his own volition, there is a procedure in the rules for that. I believe the Hon. House Leader knows that as well and we will get to it.

WORLD PEACE AND DISARMAMENT

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present a petition signed by residents of the City of Prince George who share a common concern over the issue of world peace and disarmament.

The petitioners applaud the Government for the appointment of an ambassador for peace and disarmament and express the hope that Parliament will resolve to work towards specific goals: to end the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada; to declare Canada a nuclear weapons-free zone; to have Canada support no first-use of nuclear weapons policy at NATO; and finally, to support a vote in the United Nations for a multilateral nuclear weapons freeze.

DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION LAWYERS

Question No. 22—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): There are eight lawyers assigned to the Department from the Department of Justice.

CANADIAN LONG BASELINE ARRAY

Question No. 87—Mr. Nickerson:

What progress is being made towards the establishment of the Canadian Long Baseline Array?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): The Canadian Astronomical Society, sensing that funds available for science are limited and aware of the interest in Long Baseline Interferometry which has developed in other countries, has undertaken a reassessment of the Canadian Long Baseline Array proposal which it put forward in 1982. The report of this study entitled "Collaborative Options for the Canadian Long Baseline Array" was presented to the Presidents of the National Research Council of Canada and the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council in August of this year.

While reaffirming its preference, based on scientific merit, for the original nine-antenna design, the Canadian Astronomical Society now proposes an optional configuration involving only four antennas. This array (referred to as CLB 4) could not operate as a stand-alone instrument for astronomy, but if used in conjunction with antennas in the United States or Europe, its performance would exceed that of the original Canadian Long Baseline Array. The four Canadian antennas could operate as a stand-alone array for geophysical studies, although collaboration would be important in this area as well.

A study to define the benefits to Canadian industry which would result from construction of the array is currently being undertaken by a committee of the Canadian Astronomical Society.

The National Research Council is awaiting the results of the study of benefits to Canadian industry before proceeding with further consideration of the project.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Riis (p. 694).

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, when we reached the luncheon adjournment earlier this afternoon I was exploring the failure of the Government to examine the reason why the deficit from which the Canadian people are suffering has developed. I indicated the way in which the deficit has grown since 1975 and suggested that in large measure decisions of past governments to encourage capital investment by various tax expenditures and other programs, and the attempt of government at the same time to reduce its role in the economic development of this country, has had the result of slowing economic activity in this country. The safety net provisions, as we euphemistically call them, tend to increase the amounts of money government has to spend. The result of these decisions, then, has been to create a higher deficit year by year.

In the few moments I have left this afternoon, I would like to explore briefly whether there is going to be any change in these matters and what sorts of changes government ought to undertake if we are ever going to have any prospect of real resolution of our deficit situation and, consequently, less need to borrow funds.

It seems to me all too doubtful that there is going to be action taken with respect to the role of government. There may be some action taken with respect to tax expenditures. There have been some indications of that and, as I said previously, I hope very much it will take place. However, it is even more true now than in the mid-1970s that government seems to be convinced that government itself is the prime operator in the economy. That thinking is, in its way, a detriment to prosperity in this country. If government meets needs and in the process is forced to borrow money, that supposedly reduces confidence. The classic result is that we begin to enter a kind of depression in which there is no shortage of human needs to be met but government refuses to assist in meeting those needs.

● (1510)

Our people long for better housing and employment. There are all sorts of economic and social needs to be met and the Government's refusal to do so means we have this incredible disparity. As long as this is the case, as long as there is not the ability to purchase goods, as long as business does not have the demand it so desperately wants to supply, there will not in fact be the confidence in the economy that is warranted. Thus the hopes that Conservatives have been expressing in one statement and another are going to fall flat and they will be back for even more money next year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions and comments on the Hon. Member's speech? If not, we shall resume debate.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, introduced by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), and to speak against the most recent amendment. This Bill means the Government is seeking authority to borrow $23.3 billion. Of that amount, $7.3 billion is for the fiscal year 1984-85, and the balance of $16 billion is for the next fiscal year, 1985-86. Of the $7.3 billion, I think it is noteworthy that $5.3 billion reflects further financial requirements resulting from the deficit inherited from the former government. The remaining $2 billion may be carried over into the fiscal year 1985-86. Of the $16 billion being borrowed for the next fiscal year, none may be carried over to the following fiscal year.

The $2 billion reserve I spoke of for this year is designed to provide flexibility in the event of large, unpredictable changes in the Government's financial requirements; for example, the foreign exchange operations to stabilize the dollar may be required. The $16 billion is expected to meet borrowing demands until next fall, and legislation will probably be introduced following the Budget next spring to cover the remaining part of the fiscal year.

As Shakespeare put it in Hamlet, Mr. Speaker: "Neither a borrower not a lender be". I think most Canadians will acknowledge the wisdom of that statement. No one wants to borrow money for the operation of a household or business or, in this case, government. But as desirable and agreeable as that statement is, I think Canadians will acknowledge just how necessary this borrowing is. The previous government left a legacy of crippling debt for Canadians and thus necessitated this borrowing Bill.

The saddest part of all this, Mr. Speaker, is that there should be no deficit. If we look at the past decade from the years 1969 to 1979, there were times of record economic growth. As some provinces have demonstrated, we have seen that by proper financial management and fiscal housekeeping a government should emerge from good economic times and a strong vibrant economy with a surplus. But this was not the case here. As one of the outgoing Ministers quite rightly put it, we have a bare cupboard. Because of this background of wasteful spending we find ourselves having to approach this House seeking authority to borrow more money.

Over the course of this debate it has been interesting to listen to the use of the word "hypocrisy". The critics have said that this debate involves hypocrisy because of this Party's opposition to borrowing Bills when it was the Official Opposition and the now Opposition's position against borrowing Bills, given the fact they were the government that incurred all of this debt. This allegation of hypocrisy comes from the third Party in this House, the Party that believes the economy will get going again if the Government puts dollars directly into the pockets of the people. On the face of it that might sound good until one begins to examine the economic foolishness inherent in that statement. Someone has to pay for government handouts, which means taxation and deficit financing, which is what got us into the situation we are in.

This allegation of hypocrisy is interesting also because it is only half right. As we examine the statement of the financial cupboard, Mr. Speaker, we can see that this Government is left with no alternatives. However, the Official Opposition, when it was in government, did have alternatives over the decade of prosperity. It could have bequeathed to Canadians a much stronger and vibrant economy than it did. If one is to talk about hypocrisy, then indeed that is the boldest form of it.

If we look to this morning's edition of the national newspaper we can see the kind of spending that resulted in this deficit. We see the squandering by the former Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). His government brought us to the point where one dollar in every three is needed just to service the debt. His government was spending $264 million every day or, to bring it down to something more understandable, $190,000 a minute. His government held this absolutely perverse rationale that by giving people money from the government, that would somehow solve the long-term economic problems. We have found instead a record deficit, record high interest rates and record pressures on the Canadian people. This is what we have been left, but there is hope.

I think all of us would agree, Mr. Speaker, with the hope we found in the statement by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the hope as exemplified in what he talked about as the four positions we must take as the Government. First, we must put our own fiscal house in order and get control of government spending. Second, we must redefine the role of government as a player in the economy. Third, we must adopt policies that foster investment. Fourth, we must bring about changes in a fair, open and equitable manner.

The expenditure cuts and other measures announced by the Minister of Finance will hold next year's deficit at $34.9 billion, a level only marginally larger than this year and considerably lower than the $37 billion projected by the previous government. Canadians have seen others suffer the tragic consequences of a government that spends so much more money than it brings in, the negative economic ripple effect which has resulted in high interest rates and a lack of investor and consumer confidence. The message should be abundantly clear to all Members of this House: responsible deficit management is needed. We do not need what the third Party of this country has advocated—reckless spending.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that we have come before this House seeking passage of Bill C-11. It is for these reasons that we are left with no other choice. Therefore, I support Bill C-11, I agree with the necessity to borrow, and I thank you for the opportunity to address this issue before the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have had a chance to listen to our new colleague from The Battlefords-Meadow Lake and I welcome him to this House. I was very interested to hear him talking so much about the deficit, about Shakespeare and all those fine words. He also talked about our Party and the deficits we would like to run.

I would like to ask him about a very real situation back home. Under the Douglas Government of the 1940s, 1950s and 1960s, the Government of Woodrow Lloyd, and on through that of Allan Blakeney, we did not have deficits in our province. In fact, two years ago when the Blakeney Government was defeated, there was no deficit in the Province of Saskatchewan. Now all of a sudden, after two years of Tory rule, there is a deficit of over $800 million in the Province of Saskatchewan. In a province of only one million people, that is a deficit of over $800 for every single man, woman and child.

Why would the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake accuse us of being a Party which likes to run up huge debts when the record speaks so clearly? When one compares the NDP record in Saskatchewan against that of his party, it is clear that the Party of irresponsibility and deficit financing is the Party of the Hon. Member. In fact, according to the statistics I have here, the number of people on welfare in Saskatchewan has gone up in the last two and one-half years by 73 per cent. How can the Member stand in his place and say that our Party is the Party that likes to drive up government debts when indeed the record speaks clearly for itself?

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) for asking that question. It is an honour for me to respond to his comments. It is an opportunity I have long waited for.

Two years ago, after the prosperous decade of growth which I spoke of earlier, the Province of Alberta had untold billions of dollars. The Province of Saskatchewan came in with a balanced budget every time. A lot of us thought that was odd because if the government was indeed playing in the fair market in the real world there should be a surplus. Then we looked at the books and found that through third party lending on Crown corporations and very creative bookkeeping the state-oriented type of government which this Party advocates and has been so fond of would have bankrupted Saskatchewan. However, the interesting type of bookkeeping which we saw resulted simply in a balanced budget.

With all due respect and honour to be accorded to the new government, they have simply opened the books of the Government of Saskatchewan to look at how the New Democratic Party would run a government. What we found has resulted in an $800 million deficit. This is a warning to the people of Saskatchewan for the 1986 election and a warning to the people of Canada about what would ever happen in the country if that kind of Party even became the Official Opposition rather than simply the third party rump of Canadian politics.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, that is a most novel suggestion from the Hon. Member. Even the Conservative Party back home does not claim that the deficit which now exists in the Province of Saskatchewan was really an NDP deficit which existed before and that only a change in the bookkeeping system has resulted in the deficit. Even the Minister of Finance in Saskatchewan is not making that claim.

I am sure the Hon. Member has received, as all Members of Parliament from Saskatchewan have, a letter from the Saskatchewan Natural History Society. In the letter they make a plea to all Saskatchewan Members of Parliament to do whatever we can and to use our good offices to attempt to persuade the Government not to cut as severely as it has the wildlife program. As they point out in the letter, they feel that the Conservative Government has unfairly burdened these agencies with excessive costs. Whereas the over-all cuts only amount to 1 per cent of the civil service, the Canadian Wildlife Service has been cut by 33 per cent.

Does the Hon. Member support the Government in these cuts, particularly in the closing of the Prairie Wildlife Interpretation Centre near Swift Current, the halt to the planned reintroduction of the swift fox, which is an endangered species, and the cancellation of the 1985 opening of the Grasslands National Park? Is the Hon. Member in favour of these cuts? Does he believe that there was not other government waste that should have been cut? Does the Hon. Member believe that these programs were really wasteful programs that should have been cut? Or, can the Hon. Member display his loyalty to the Province of Saskatchewan and our natural heritage by being honest and telling us he really does not believe these cuts were justified and there was indeed other fat that could have been cut instead?

Mr. Gormley: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) for his question. By way of preamble, it is interesting that in his recent householder there is a pre-occupation with Saskatchewan Government politics to such an extent that I think we may have jurisdictions rather confused with regard to which recent financial statement we are talking about. However, I will leave that as a matter for provincial debate.

I share the concern of the organization mentioned, Mr. Speaker. The answer that I gave in my correspondence was that the process of trying to control government spending is indeed a very painful one. I assured these people, as we have assured people all across the country, that sharing in government restraint is not a process which one wants to participate in but it is necessary. If we share the painful process of government restraint across all geographic regions of Canada, including our province, as Canadians we will see the benefits of this kind of government restraint with the slow winding down of the deficit. Our children will see a Canada which will be an economically better place to live in a generation from now.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member the question again. A straight yes or no will do. Does he not believe that cutting the Canadian Wildlife Service by 33 per cent is too severe a cut?

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I believe that whatever cuts have occurred to the Canadian Wildlife Service are reflective of the cuts going on in many corners of the country, in many government departments, and affecting many Canadians. If Canadians have the courage, moral strength and conviction to bear down and get used to the idea of a government that is responsible with our tax dollars, we will see untold benefits in the future.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, my question is again with regard to the deficit. I have not heard Premier Devine or the Minister of Finance back home say that the deficit was really an NDP deficit because of the Crown corporations. What evidence can the Member give the House today about what he said? You must realize, Mr. Speaker, that our budget in the Province of Saskatchewan is only around $3 billion, so a deficit of over $800 million is extremely large. That was run up within less than two years because the new budget has yet to come down. It will probably be around $1 billion. That is one of the most astonishing increases in a deficit that any government in the country has seen in the history of Canada. What kind of evidence can he cite, or is he just trying to create some rhetoric here?

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, to keep my answer brief, I would refer the Hon. Member to the financial statement of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation, and particularly to the lending and borrowing that Sask Power did. I believe that was in the neighbourhood of $2 billion. This was ostensibly capital borrowing. I think if you were to look that up and see where that money often went in the provision of government services, it would show that the past NDP government had become masters at robbing Peter and Paul to pay someone else. If the Hon. Member would read the Sask Power Financial statement, that should bear his consideration.

Mr. Nystrom: What was the deficit of Sask Power? May I ask one more question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, the Member for Yorkton-Melville with a very very short question, please.

Mr. Nystrom: He is talking about $2 billion. They do not spend anywhere near that much money. Following the train of thought of the Hon. Member, what was the deficit of Sask Power in 1981-82?

Mr. Gormley: When the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville reads the financial statement he will be able to enlighten all of us about the financial picture of Sask Power.

Mr. de Jong: You don't know.

Mr. Nystrom: He does not know.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. We shall continue with debate.

● (1530)

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, while I stand today in support of Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, presented by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), I must say that I deplore the circumstances that have led us to this point. There is not one of us in this Conservative Government who would willingly lend himself or herself to the prospect of increasing the national debt and the burden on the Canadian taxpayer. We are just beginning to realize the depth of the financial hole in which we have been left by previous governments. The job of climbing back out of that hole has only just begun.

The Minister of State for Finance has asked that our borrowing power be increased by $7.3 billion for this fiscal year. That will take care of current commitments and allow for a $2 billion contingency fund that, if not needed, will be carried over into the next fiscal year. This reserve fund will allow flexibility in the event of unpredictable fluctuations in our financial requirements, such as changes in the exchange rates and the value of our Canadian dollar. Looking forward into the next year, the Minister has asked for authority to borrow $16 billion more for fiscal 1985-86.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this estimate of our spending needs is a sound one and the request for borrowing is born of necessity. While we are apparently still on the same Keynesian track that led us into this morass, we are not, as a Government, committed to handing out money pell-mell, as was the last administration. The course we set with the passing of this Bill, coupled with the measures set forth in the Finance Minister's economic statement, will lead us out of our debt-ridden circumstances and on to the road to fiscal recovery.

Let us look at why we are now in this state today. Let us look at what led us here. We have inherited a situation with this Government that I believe to be unique in Canadian history. We are following a dynasty of Liberalism that led this country down the garden path. In talking of economic mismanagement, I shall quote from a book entitled Business Cycles in Canada by Maurice Lamontagne, excerpts from which are found on pages 73-82 in the 1984 paper of the Canadian Institute for Research on Public Policy. The late Senator Maurice Lamontagne was a former Minister in the Pearson government. I quote:

> The medium-term government strategy was not clear-cut. A few specific fiscal incentives and a less effective tax cut applied to manufacturing but in 1974, a substantial increase in taxes on profits was implemented. More important, after the Canadian dollar was allowed to float in 1970, the rapid rise in the exchange rate significantly dampened the cyclical expansion in business investment by shrinking the market outlets available to Canadian industry.
> The coupling of structural and supply-push unemployment and inflation became the dominant phenomenon of this period.
> Errors in forecasting and in economic policy made by the government did not help to attenuate these undesirable trends and to achieve greater stability.
> Government short-term fiscal strategies were seriously mistaken throughout the period.
> However, the seeds of a serious disequilibrium in the government budgetary position had been planted. The government had practically lost control over its budgetary position.

Since 1967, the Liberal governments have spoken about their concern for the deficit and preached the message of restraint. In December of 1967, the then Prime Minister Lester Pearson told Canadians that the government was doing something about the deficit. He said:

> By cutting our expenses, and increasing our revenues, as a result, the next budget will be a balanced one.

That year the government spent $11 billion, and there was a net debt of $18 billion.

Two years later in August, 1969, Pierre Trudeau told Canadians that:

> We'd be on the road to financial disaster if nothing is done to bring spending under control.

Spending was $13 billion and the net debt came to $18 billion. Four years later, the present Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) told Canadians, in his November, 1974 Budget, that:

> We must do all we can in these circumstances to restrain the growth of government expenditures.

Spending was $30 billion and the net debt jumped to $24 billion.

Let us move another four years down the road to the next Liberal Finance Minister and his November 1978 Budget, who said:

> There can be no weakening in our determination to keep expenditures under tight control.

Spending was $46 billion. The net debt up to $60 billion. Four years later in his June, 1982 Budget Allan MacEachen told the Canadian people that some say the Government:

> —should print more money. Others say it should let the deficit rip. But that would fail miserably. Inflation and unemployment would get worse. Interest rates would rise even more. Canada would price itself out of world markets. Recovery would be postponed.

That year, spending was $80 billion and the net debt had climbed to $124 billion.

This last summer the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition told Canadians that:

> There are programs that are duplications; there are programs that are wasteful; there are programs that are no longer useful; there are programs that no longer serve a purpose; and I am going to cut that down—

This is the legacy left the Canadian people, left to this Conservative Government. After taking into account the expenditure reductions outlined in this November's economic statement, the Government will spend $100 billion this year, with a net debt by the end of the fiscal year of $191 billion.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that you look at this record of prudence and sound fiscal judgment espoused by the Liberal government: from spending of $11 billion and a total debt of $18 billion in 1967 to the $100 billion spent this year, and the $191 billion that is net debt. This is the legacy left the Canadian people and this Conservative Government following two decades of Liberal control.

I spend a great deal of time in my riding. I feel that the duty of a Member of this Parliament is to be accessible to the people who put us here. I see a multitude of constituents weekly and 90 per cent of them ask: "What can we do with the economy the way it is today?" They are not condemning anyone now in power; they are simply wondering what direction we must take to find the light at the end of the tunnel. They are not looking for the quick fix because they know only too well that those who say there is a fast and easy way out do not have a clue as to what they are talking about. They do not wonder how this came to pass. They see the evidence daily in the newspapers, such as, for example, today's edition of The Globe and Mail with its reference to the "Axworthy Empire". People are well aware of the fact that there has been mismanagement and wanton spending in the past that cannot and will not be repeated during this thirty-third Parliament.

Let me close, Mr. Speaker, with another quotation from the Right Hon. Leader of the Loyal Opposition. It reads:

> I start from the proposition that there are many things that only government can do. And the first priority is to get these right: fiscal policy, tax policy, trade policy, monetary policy. Then the government must provide a safety net for those who are unemployed, ill, aged, disadvantaged—

The last governments have failed miserably to reach even their first priority, and have worsened the situation for all those mentioned in their second.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I feel I am representative of all Conservatives sitting here today in saying we do not like the prospect of increased borrowing but recognize the necessity of such a move at this time. We as a Government have made a commitment to the Canadian people to bring their financial house back to order. By real restraint and judicious handling of the national purse strings we will realize this goal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment and conclude with a question on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) relating to the need to borrow money. We have had a lesson in history, or at least a scanning of the record of the past. The record was provided to us in a descriptive way. There was not much analysis. My question for the Hon. Member will deal with his analysis.

• (1540)

As he did this historical scanning, I was reminded of another time some 100 or more years ago when the Liberal and Conservative Parties of the day were, by circumstances, being pressed toward a common position. After the Conservative government under Sir John A. Macdonald brought in a national policy, the Liberals resisted it at the time. The Conservatives established a 20 per cent tariff, and the Liberals had a 17.5 per cent tariff. As O. D. Skelton writing about this just before the Great War observed, the difference between protection and free trade became the difference between 20 per cent and 17.5 per cent; 2.5 per cent was sufficient.

I was struck by the fact that the Hon. Member said that a profligate government which squandered money and so on was defeated. Presumably a 4 per cent reduction in expenditure gives us a government which is responsible and prudent. If we look at the areas in which the trimming takes place, it is startling that they are the environment and others where Canadians lose important services and where there is not a great deal of fat to be wrung out.

In our day what we have in the Liberal and Conservative Parties, for all the rhetoric, is similar policies of restraint which the Liberals, as the Hon. Member documented very well, had been trying to follow. The result had not been economic success, so his constituents—and he does not want to take their comments against himself and his Government—are very anxious. In that continuity of policy we have the grave concern which I expressed that a year hence the request will be for even more borrowing authority.

In all this description of how it has become worse, what actually is wrong with the Canadian economy? What will the Government do other than give us 4 per cent less as a measure of responsibility and urge us all to tighten our belts? As I said before, Canadians have various needs which are not being met. I do not want to say yet that the Government will not do anything about it. Important programs are clearly under the knife. Time will tell whether the Government gives a damn about them. Would the Hon. Member tell us what will really be changed other than this minor 4 per cent change?

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member's question. We cannot disregard the kind of overspending of which we have seen examples. There were clear indications that many corners had to be cleaned out and that probably many programs needed to be examined by the past government. Many aspiring leadership candidates espoused that. Certainly it was a clear indication to this Government that we should look into the matter. There was another example in today's newspaper. Of course, one of our Cabinet Ministers mentioned that many other Departments had overspent. I do not think the situation is any different from that of a household or a business.

Canadians were looking for some clear signals. I think the Canadian public is already reacting to the indications of the Government by being prudent and by looking at cutting, not at spending. We cannot continue spending more than we take in. Perhaps the Hon. Member can do it, but in the long run I personally think he will run into problems, just as governments will run into problems. I think a very clear signal has gone out to the people of Canada, and they appear to be responding.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the presentation of the Hon. Member. He mentioned that he felt quite comfortable asking the House to provide a borrowing authority for $16 billion into the next fiscal year.

I see that the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) is in attendance this afternoon. As Leader of his Party, he argued long and hard that this was a precedent which we ought not to consider. For example, if a government were asking for $16 billion for the next eight months and into the new fiscal year, using the same principle I suppose it could come in asking for a borrowing authority for the next two, three, five or fifteen years. We have a precedent where the government obtains borrowing authority for the year in which it is requested. Why does the Hon. Member feel it is appropriate to go against that precedent and particularly against the argument presented by his previous Leader?

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, it is a request for funds to carry us to the next budget. As a new Member I have been concerned about the amount of verbosity which takes place here every time a government comes in asking for borrowing authority. We ought to get down to running the country. We might want to look at some efficiencies. This is a clear example of that.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, two years ago on July 19, 1982, my very good friend from Yellowhead moved an amendment to a very similar Bill. I agreed with him and supported him at that time. My position is very consistent, my position is the same now. At that time his amendment read as follows:

"this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than that amount which is required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle and this House therefore declines to give second reading to Bill C-125, an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority".

If the Conservative Party found it so wrong for the government of Mr. Trudeau to do that two years ago, in other words to borrow money not for the current year but for the next fiscal year, why the sudden change of heart?

Mr. James: If I were facing a government with the kind of record that government had, I might have felt very much the same. We have a new Government, a Government with responsibility and certainty.

Mr. Nystrom: I should like to ask a supplementary question. When the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) was Leader of the Opposition he objected to this in principle. He was not playing political games. I know him very well; he does not play political games. He was not only concerned about the record of the government at that time. He was objecting in principle to the borrowing of money for the next fiscal year when parliamentarians should have some kind of budget before them. He is a very principled man. He was objecting in principle. What has happened to those principles?

Mr. James: I do not question the Hon. Member's principles whatsoever. I am sure that he spoke with conviction.

Mr. Nystrom: He did speak with conviction.

Mr. James: And I am sure he does. I remind the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) that there was a different government at that time. He probably had some serious concerns over the ways in which it would manage the fiscal affairs of the country.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my friend and neighbour from Sarnia-Lambton. While the government may have changed and it may be a very different government, the principle remains the same. The principle was well elucidated by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) when he was opposition finance critic. He is now the Minister of Finance, and I should like to quote what he said about that principle. He said:

The first amendment we offered was to decline second reading of this bill.

This is when he spoke on the amendment of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). He continued:

There is a well established principle that Parliament only provides sufficient borrowing authority to a government to allow it to finance its operations within the current fiscal year.

He clearly outlined that principle. It supersedes any government which sits on that side of the House, whether it be Liberal, Conservative, NDP or whatever.

Would the Hon. Member please explain why the principle, to which his Party held as the ideal a year ago, has become a principle upon which it is prepared to trample now that it has become the Government?

● (1550)

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, we are looking to a new budget in a few months. This Government has a conviction and follows the principle of getting on with accomplishing things that will turn the economy around and do what Canadians are looking to have done. There is an efficiency in what we are doing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall now resume debate.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to speak against this borrowing Bill and in support of the amendment moved by my colleague. It is the same amendment that was moved by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) when he was Leader of the Opposition. In the very same words, our amendment states:

"that this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than the amount which is required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle—

The Right Hon. Member does not say that it is the government that is objectionable. He says the borrowing is objectionable in principle. This is what we say. It continues:

—and this House therefore declines to give second reading to Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority".

The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James), in answer to our questions about the principle, repeatedly said, in effect, "Trust me. Trust my Leader. What is wrong for the Liberals to do is right for the Conservatives because the Conservatives have good intentions". He implies that the Liberals had bad intentions, the Conservatives have good intentions. The principles of both the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) disappeared on election day.

What was a matter of principle before September 4 is no longer a matter of principle for the members of the Conservative Party. They are willing to do anything to advance purposes which they claim are good. Unfortunately, they do not tell us in any clear way what those purposes are that are worth $16 billion. They tell us they will create more jobs. All they have done is to lay off people. They tell us they are going to reform the tax system. All they have done is to make the tax system worse by loading more taxes this fall on to low and middle income people without touching with one finger the loopholes that are making the rich richer and the poor poorer. They have not told us one word about what they will do with the money to be borrowed for fiscal 1985-86. They refuse to tell us what they want to do with $16 billion in a fiscal year that has not yet started.

We agree with the principle they expressed a couple of years ago. We regret that they have sold their principle down the river. They sold it for a piece of opportunism in the conduct of the government which the people entrusted to them. Perhaps the people believed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs held those principles. They now find they held those principles only until election day and they are now expended.

What is at stake here is a different principle entirely. What is being operated on is a different principle, the principle of making the rich richer and the poor poorer. This Bill adds $23 billion to the debt. That debt has to be paid by working people and small business people.

The Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) said nobody likes to be a borrower or a lender. He is half right, nobody likes to be a borrower. There are people who just love to be lenders. They become rich. They become billionaires because they are in a position to lend and to charge any interest rate they can force out of the borrowers. The members of the Conservative Party are in league with those lenders. It is the pleasure of the lenders and of this Government to lay still further debts on the people of Canada, for the most part without telling them what they are going to do with the money.

We do not object to the money they are asking for in order to finish fiscal year 1984-85 or even the $2 billion they want because they are not sure they can count correctly and do not know how much money they will have to pay public servants. They are not sure how much they can chop off public servants' wages or other budgets they administer, so they want $5.3 billion plus an extra $2 billion.

We are not arguing with that. We want to focus on the main point. They ask for $16 billion for the coming year without one word of explanation as to what they will do with it. If that passes, and they have a majority, they can do anything they please. This Parliament will not be able to hold them accountable in any effective way.

This flies directly in the face of the teaching given to this country approximately two years ago by the Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church when they put forward two basic principles of Christian teaching that ought to be taken into very serious consideration by the Government of this country and by Members of Parliament. One of their principles was what they called the preferential option for the poor. They warned that if we feed the rich first, the poor get left out and the country is in trouble, whereas if we make sure that the poor get fed, the rich get fed as well. This wisdom has been brought forward for centuries. It is urged upon us not only by the Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church but by other Christians and leaders of other religions as well.

Their second principle is the priority of labour over capital. That does not mean a choice as between the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. It means a much more basic principle, namely that the work we do today, our live labour, whatever kind of labour we do, must make use of the work we did yesterday or a century ago, which is dead labour, the capital, the tools that we have created in the past which we can use in the present. Our present work must dominate the use of those tools. Those tools must not dominate our present work.

This borrowing Bill enslaves us to the past. It makes the poor poorer in order to make the rich richer. I want to give a few illustrations. Contrary to the Prime Minister's promise to make the tax system fairer, which he has the opportunity to do this month but refuses to do, he promises it will happen some time in the new year, in the sweet bye and bye. What he has done and is doing now is primarily to tax low income people. There is a sales tax which he and his colleagues ridiculed and abhorred when in Opposition. They then changed their principle, turning it upside down on election day. A billion dollars or more a year is to be taken primarily from the pockets of those who can least afford it. Cuts were announced at the beginning of November, $48 million out of a social program which was already nowhere near meeting the needs of the country either for housing or for useful employment. People have been cut from the unemployment insurance rolls by doing what was advocated not only by the former Liberal government but by the Conservative Opposition. People who have taken early retirement, people who have built up pensions and people who have negotiated severance pay are now to lose out on their unemployment insurance benefits because of this Government. To make sure that these people lose out, the Government is hiring 700 snoopers. The Government is taking several hundred people away from the business of counselling workers who are looking for new jobs and has put them into the business of harassing workers to find excuses to cancel their unemployment insurance benefits.

• (1600)

The same Government, without any legal authorization from Parliament, has publicly offered to provide publicly-funded services from the National Revenue Department to help businesses find still more loopholes in the tax structure so that they can pay still less tax. The amount of corporate tax paid has declined sharply in the last several years as personal income tax has risen. The Government will make the amount of corporate tax paid decline still further.

Mr. Blenkarn: Where did you get that idea?

Mr. Heap: Where did I get that idea? I got that idea from the admissions made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) in answer to a question put by the Opposition. He said, in a statement made in the City of Toronto, that the tax officials will now freely, at public expense and not at cocktail parties after work, tell corporations upon request how they can avoid taxation.

In the last seven years, according to the Economic Council of Canada, there has been $100 billion worth of tax expenditures and forgone revenues under the previous government. This Government is continuing that policy and intensifying it. If that $100 billion had been collected, our deficit would be insignificant. The deficit about which the last government howled and about which the present Government howls would vanish if those revenues had been collected. They should have been collected primarily from the big corporations and the high-income individuals of the country.

In order to try to persuade the public to forget the promises made by the Prime Minister, the Prime Minister has taken on the mantle and stepped into the shoes of the previous Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau. The new "Mr. Trudeau" who now sits across from us on the right-hand side of the Chair now says that the deficit is the only problem. He says: "Pay off the deficit at the expense of low-income people and the country will prosper". Those are the same words we heard from his predecessor. The promise is no longer "jobs, jobs, jobs", a promise upon which the Prime Minister was elected. The promise now is "soak the poor".

Seen as a percentage of the Gross National Product, the deficit ought not to be used as the fabricated bogyman that Hon. Members opposite like to use. As a percentage of the Gross National Product, the deficit is smaller than it was during some of the years when Canada thrived after World War II. The deficit is simply being used to cover the rip-off of working people, small business people and farmers.

This is not the change Canadians voted for but is more of the same. The only thing that has changed is that the Conservatives now sit on the right-hand side of the Chair rather than the left-hand side of the Chair. There has been no other basic change of direction. Beyond that, the Conservative Government has intensified the very faults it liked to criticize when it was in Opposition, as shown by the complete sell-out of principle as I have described it in the motion for amendment that is before us.

We have a long history of this kind of policy. The Canadian people have suffered for a long time. This suffering in the main part goes back at least nine years and in some parts even a little further. The erosion of unemployment insurance benefits by policy occurred for several years under the previous government and is continued by this Government. The erosion in the support of post-secondary education occurred under the previous government and will clearly remain no better and perhaps even worse under this Government. The erosion of social housing occurred under the previous government and a further $9.6 million has been cut by this Government.

The erosion of the public health system occurred under the previous Liberal government in connivance with the Conservative governments of many provinces of Canada. We have every reason to believe that that erosion is to continue because we cannot get straight answers from the Prime Minister and his colleagues on the question of universality. One day they are for it, another day they are against it. They say that they are for it except for certain things. They want to find some ingenious system for preventing a banker who earns $.5 million a year from collecting old age pension benefits. They want people to forget that we have a system for doing that, and that is, the income tax system. This could be done if the present Government were willing to live up to the promises it made last summer.

There is the further erosion of the living standards of working people, small business people and farmers, which has occurred because of the interest system. In the last 15 years, interest payments as a share of the Gross Domestic Product have more than doubled. During the same 15 years, 1966 to 1981, wages as a share of the Gross Domestic Product grew by only 14 per cent. However, the share of interest payments grew by 140 per cent, which is 10 times as much as the share of wages grew. Nothing is being done by this Government to control interest rates just as nothing was done by the last government to control interest rates.

The tools for controlling interest rates are at hand. At one time, those tools were used. Some of us who have grey hair can remember the days when mortgages had, by law, a 6 per cent ceiling. That happened in years when Canada was very prosperous. It can happen again and it would make Canada more prosperous. The lenders who love to lend money at extortionate rates might not be prosperous, but they form a tiny minority of parasites that we do not need to serve as the Government serves them now.

As I said, the main fault with the Bill that we are opposing is that it requests to borrow for the year 1985-86 without proper authority. It is flying in the face of the principle and tradition of Parliament that the Party opposite claimed two years ago and until September 4 to support. No private borrower would be able to get away with something like that. If one were to go to a bank manager and say: "Lend me some money. I will not tell you what I will do with it, just trust me", the bank manager would laugh. The friends of the bankers who sit opposite expect us to take them seriously and to tell our constituents that these are honourable gentlemen who will use the money honestly. They have not given us one reason to believe that they will use the money honestly.

The Government is doing the same thing as R. B. Bennett did when he turned the five-year depression into a 10-year depression using the same policies that the Government is using now. He soaked the poor, increased interest payments, increased the taxes on the poor and made sure that the investors got the gravy. That is how R. B. Bennett undertook to save Canada in the years 1930 to 1935. It took another five years for Canada to find its way out of the hole into which he put the country. I hope the Government will be warned by the example of R. B. Bennett. If not, I hope the people of Canada will take the Government in hand to make sure it does not lead us into 10 years of misery.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have one question for the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). It has been quite properly brought to our attention that the Bill we have before us is divided into two parts. Part I deals with the request for borrowing authority within the present fiscal year, and Part II deals with borrowing authority for the next fiscal year.

Am I correct in assuming that the New Democratic Party has no objection to Part I of the Bill? If the Bill consisted solely of Part I, would NDP members have no objection to the request for $7.3 billion in borrowing authority, with an amount of $2 billion continuing on to the new year?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the Hon. Member for his question. Yes, we would not object to that. We would support the Bill if it were asking for money which was required only for this fiscal year. That point has already been made. Presumably the Hon. Member just came into the House. It is the same point our House Leader attempted to make in negotiations with the government House Leader. If the Government is asking only for the money it needs in this fiscal year, there is no problem. We object to the request for $16 billion for next year, in advance, without any planning, budgeting or accounting.

If Members opposite would instruct their House Leader to agree to the request and split the Bill—a request which the Government made when it was in Opposition—there would be no problem.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, am I to gather from those remarks that if the Bill were split and reintroduced as only Part I, the New Democratic Party would be prepared to allow the Bill to pass without further debate? Is that correct?

Mr. Heap: Yes.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the amendment before us deals with a complaint that the Bill has a second part to it, which is to borrow $16 billion for the next fiscal year. The House would have to pass a Bill in this fiscal year for the next fiscal year, otherwise the country would have no borrowing authority to start the next fiscal year.

In view of the fact that there has been a financial statement before the House for some time, would it not seem reasonable to the Hon. Member that this should be treated as a different condition than one which existed in the past, and that the Government should be permitted some borrowing authority for the next fiscal year so that it would not find itself totally out of borrowing authority on April 1?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two points. First, supposing that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is serious in what he said, he cannot seriously claim that the financial statement gives us any projection for fiscal year 1985-86. It talks only about the period ending in March, 1985. We are not disputing that. However, there has been absolute refusal to give the House a projection beyond the end of March.

On my second point, I will quote the Minister of Finance when he was the opposition critic. He said:

> There is a well established principle that Parliament only provides sufficient borrowing authority to a government to allow it to finance its operations within the current fiscal year.

The Government has said that it has not had time to do its arithmetic for the 1985-86 fiscal year. That is fine. Let it work during December, January, February and March. In March let it give us some figures and projections for the next year as to where it will put the money it wants to borrow. Then let it ask for borrowing authority. The Government should not ask for a blank cheque, which it refused to give when in Opposition.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member ought to know, if he has taken a look at the financial statement, that it clearly sets out the borrowing requirements for 1985-86. Those requirements are in excess of $29 billion. The Government has a statement for 1985-86, albeit it is not a complete and proper budget. But this Government has just taken over. Is it the view of the New Democratic Party that we should go back in history and talk about another government which had been in power for two and a half years and which came in with a borrowing authority Bill without first having presented a budget or even an estimate of expenses? Is it saying that this is the same situation? It is not.

The financial statement sets out what the likelihood is for deficits, borrowing authority and spending for next year. Surely that should be sufficient to the House. It should give the House an indication that at least $16 billion will be required for next year. Would it not be wonderful if only $16 billion were required? Surely the Hon. Member for Spadina is not so hidebound or ridiculous to suggest that we will not need to borrow at least $16 billion in the next fiscal year in view of the financial statement already presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has said that there is a $29 billion debt proposed for the coming fiscal year and has made several remarks about it. However, there is no budget and no possibility of debating a budget. We are told that there will be a budget but that it will be brought forward after we have given the Government the money with which to operate. The financial statement is utterly vague with respect to fiscal year 1985-86. If the Government seriously intends to bring forward a budget for the 1985-86 fiscal year, beginning on April 1, 1985, then there is time for it to ask for borrowing authority.

Yes, the Government will get the money once we know what it will do with it. But it is asking us for a blank cheque. The Government says it has not had time, and yet it has December, January, February and March in which to put those figures together and tell us what it wants to do with the money.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have clearly said that there will be a national economic council with the first Ministers of all the provinces. He will know that the fiscal arrangements between the provinces and the federal Government must be resettled. He will know that the Estimates will be before the House before March 31. He will know that the financial statement, and the projections in the many documents that went with it, clearly set out where the Government is going and the travesty and problems it faces. The Hon. Member will know the demands which are clearly set out as being payable by the Government of Canada, and he will know that the required borrowing is very slightly in excess of half the anticipated borrowing for the next fiscal year. That is all the Minister of Finance has asked for. Surely, with those facts before him, the Hon. Member should not be so hidebound as to suggest that he has not had disclosure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I recognize the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), keeping in mind that the time has almost elapsed, in all fairness.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I will simply say, "It is the highest demand of Parliament in the history of Parliament. It is unconscionable. It is improper. It cannot be supported by any thinking Member of the House". I hope the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) will remember that those were his words when he sat on this side of the House.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Riis (p. 694).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for twenty-minute speeches and subsequent ten minutes of questions and comments has now expired. We shall now proceed with ten-minute speeches, without questions or comments.

[English]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Government talks of creating an atmosphere of confidence in which business can operate. This atmosphere of confidence, Mr. Speaker, which it plans to generate in the private sector will, we are told, solve the country's problems. The Government will not create any private sector confidence with Bills like the one we are debating here. No business would even think of going to the bank and asking for a major loan without telling the bank what it is for. Yet this is just what the Conservatives would have us do. Despite all their rhetoric on fiscal responsibility, they want to borrow $16 billion for the next fiscal year. If the Government is trying to create a credible image for the private sector to see, it should avoid doing what it is doing now. It is behaving in a financially irresponsible manner.

This loan which the Government is asking for is irresponsible. If some businessman in my constituency dared to ask his bank manager for a substantial loan without explaining what the money was for and without demonstrating how the debt would be financed, the bank manager would throw him out. I am warning the Government that it is making a mistake in trying to pursue this dangerous course of action.

I know that a small business could not borrow in the foolish way the Government is proposing. How can the Government create anything but distrust and lack of confidence in that most crucial and vital sector of our economy, small business, if it behaves in the kind of irresponsible fashion which no small-businessman would even consider?

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would have us borrow $16 billion without any indication of how the debt will be financed. What good manager would go to the bank for a loan without knowing what revenues would finance the carrying charges? This, Mr. Speaker, is what the Conservatives are trying to do. They are trying hard to manage the flow of information. But if the Minister of Finance himself does not know how he is going to finance the loan, then he is no better at managing borrowing authority than he was at managing information flow in the hotel lobby in Winnipeg.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if the Government wants the permission of the House to borrow $16 billion for the fiscal year ending on March 31, 1986, let it first bring down its Budget, and then we can consider a request for borrowing authority.

Does the Government have any respect for the democratically elected representatives of Canadians? Does the Government have any respect for Parliament?

Mr. Speaker, they are so arrogant they introduced Bill C-11 without tabling either a Budget or interim supply for the period from April 1, 1985 to March 31, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, that is the least we should expect of a Government that claims to be open. Actually, they are more pretentious than they are open, because only yesterday, in the House, Government Members . . . In fact, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), in quoting from the December 1, 1984 edition of The Globe and Mail, claimed that the economic situation had picked up during the third quarter of the year, unfortunately leaving out the next paragraph:

[English]

While the federal agency said this growth took place mainly in July, when the Liberals were in power—

[Translation]

Right after that, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez) asked me to tell the House which jobs were lost.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member for Châteauguay to read the "Expenditure and Program Review", tabled in the House on November 8 of this year by the Hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret).

The other weekend I met one of my constituents who worked for VIA Rail, and he told me that as soon as the cutbacks were announced, 59 of his fellow workers were to be laid off the next morning.

Only last Sunday I was at a meeting of the Coopérative d'Habitation Vierge Altagrâce, whose members are originally from Haiti. They were concerned about this Government's cutbacks. The community really needs this housing co-operative to provide accommodation for its members who live in substandard housing. Now that the project is about to become operational, the Government cuts.

What do Government Members have to say about cuts totalling $29.4 million in Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Programs? How many thousands of jobs have been cut? Only the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) knows the exact answer, Mr. Speaker, because he has the projections, but he has refused to table them in the House.

Those were two examples, Mr. Speaker, of this Government's arrogance.

[English]

This sort of behaviour can do nothing but discredit the present Government in the eyes of the hard working Canadian business people. What we are asking for is not a lot in exchange for $16 billion—actually closer to $18 billion if the $2 billion carry-over slush fund is included. All we ask for is a budget to establish the Government's credibility which is in question. It cannot be given carte blanche when it has not proven itself. The Government has a lot to do before it can win the trust of this House.

All we are asking the Government to do is to observe sound business practice. Deficit financing is acceptable under some circumstances, but only if the pertinent facts and figures are known. We want this factual information and we want it on the record. We want the facts and figures on what the $16 billion loan is for and how it is going to be repaid.

• (1630)

The Government should come to its senses and accept the amendment of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). When the Government has presented a budget, it can come back to this House and ask for $16 billion if it needs it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Government had promised that it would administer the country in a businesslike manner. No businessman will apply for a loan unless he knows exactly why, and no bank would lend him money. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the Government must bring in a budget before proceeding with Bill C-11 if it wants to inspire confidence in business circles.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about Bill C-11.

[English]

It is very interesting to see, after being here a number of years, that when a different Party takes office, the more things change, the more they remain the same. You would never dream there has been a change of government when you look at this Bill. I remember so well two years ago when the Trudeau government came to the House to borrow money and we had this highly principled amendment by the then Leader of the Opposition, the Hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). He said that it was a terrible thing to do, against the practices of parliamentary procedure, and it was taking all kinds of power away from the Parliament of Canada. All of a sudden, that same Party forms a government and it is doing exactly the same thing that Mr. Trudeau did year in and year out.

Mr. Dick: Is this debate or a question?

Mr. Nystrom: This is debate.

Mr. Dick: He is the guy you are asking the question of.

Mr. Nystrom: I am not asking him a question. I have been recognized to participate in this debate, and you would know that if you followed what happens in the House a little bit.

Mr. Rodriguez: He did not pay attention last Friday.

Mr. Dick: I did so.

Mr. Nystrom: In that debate years ago they made argument after argument as to why that Bill was so horrible. We heard argument after argument from the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), if I can get his attention down there on the far side of the House.

Mr. Rodriguez: He has a short attention span.

Mr. Nystrom: He was so incensed that the Government wanted to borrow some $29.5 billion. That was horrible.

Mr. Dick: We are not.

Mr. Nystrom: He says, "We are not". I do not know what he means when he says they are not borrowing a large amount of money. The Government is borrowing $23.3 billion.

Mr. Dick: That is less.

Mr. Nystrom: That is an awful lot of money to Members on this side of the House. Two years ago the Hon. Member for Mississauga South said the following about that, if we can get his attention once more. He said:

> The amount of this Bill, Sir, strikes a new level in borrowing demand. This Government is coming to the House and asking that the House approve its going to the markets for $29.5 billion of authority.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is right.

Mr. Nystrom: He said:

> That is $10 billion higher than any other previous demand. It is the highest demand on Parliament in the history of Parliament. It is unconscionable. It is improper. It cannot be supported by any thinking Member of the House.

Mr. Murphy: He stopped thinking.

Mr. Nystrom: Then do you know what he said, Mr. Speaker? He said:

> This House should rise up, Sir, and demand an end to this, not only on behalf of us as Hon. Members and of our constituents, but on behalf of our children, our children's children and our children's children yet unborn or even thought of.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: A good speech.

Mr. Nystrom: Scandalous.

Mr. Blenkarn: It was.

Mr. Nystrom: Two years later what do we have? We have Mr. Trudeau reincarnated. We have a new Prime Minister who is doing exactly the same thing. No wonder the people of this country are so cynical about the political process. The Party in Opposition says one thing, it goes to the people of the country and says one thing, and then when it comes into government it does exactly the opposite. The Government is doing exactly what it promised it would not do and what it criticized the Liberal Party for doing two years ago. I do not think that is very principled at all.

The Government is borrowing $7.3 billion for this fiscal year. I can accept that. But it is also trying to borrow $16 billion for fiscal year 1985-86, and I cannot accept that. I have not seen a budget, and I have not seen any precedent for this except for one two years ago in 1982. At that time we had the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition which said that this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for borrowing a sum of money other than the amount required to meet the Government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle. Those were the words of the Leader of the Opposition. If it was objectionable in principle in 1982, the same in 1983, then is it wrong in December, 1984? To me a principle is a principle, and if it is wrong in 1982 or 1983, then surely to goodness it is wrong on December 4, 1984.

I really wonder what the Tories are doing in this House in trampling on our rights as parliamentarians. If the former Member for Prince Albert, John Diefenbaker, were here, I am sure he would be scandalized but what he sees in this House today. A lack of accountability by the Government which wants a blank cheque. There are a lot of poor farmers in my riding and they cannot go to the Farm Credit Corporation and ask for a blank cheque for the next 10 years. They cannot do that. They have a tough enough time getting money for their farm operations if they present a detailed and well thought out plan to the FCC, let alone ask for thousands of dollars to do something in the future even though they are not sure what it will be. Yet that is what the Government of Canada is asking for. I think that is trampling on the rights of Parliament. Parliamentarians should have a right to say whether or not a certain program is good or bad and should be funded.

The purpose for which we were elected is to decide how to spend the taxpayers' money. But what I see happening across the way with this new Government really makes me very angry and I do not intend to sit silently by and let it borrow all kinds of money for goodness knows what in 1985-86. I wish some of those Members, like the Hon. Member for Mississauga South who was so angry two years ago, would rise up on their hind legs and express some of the same outrage and anger he expressed when he sat here in the House just a few short months ago. If he did that, then I would know he was a very principled man and has the courage of his convictions. He would get up there and fight. I know all kinds of other Members—

[Translation]

I see the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) in the House. I remember very well that, two or three years ago, he often criticized the Trudeau government.

Mr. La Salle: I had to!

Mr. Nystrom: Yes? But now you are doing exactly what Mr. Trudeau did in the House. Here you are with a bill to borrow $23 billion. Mr. Trudeau did exactly the same thing in the House two years ago. At the time, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Joliette vented his frustration and shouted in the House: It is a bad government! This country needs a change, we must change the situation for our people! But now, after September 4, they are behaving just like Mr. Trudeau used to do. This government is not being altogether honest with the people of Canada.

[English]

I wish some of these people across the way who got up and showed outrage a few years ago would get up now and say the same thing to the new Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). If they do not do it now, that Prime Minister is going to create an empire in the PMO and the PCO. He will create an empire that makes the empire of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) look pretty small in comparison. The only way for them to stop is for them to get up in this House and put a stop to it. They have the majority of Members.

• (1640)

I wonder what they are going to use this money for, Mr. Speaker. I have had the opportunity to watch first-hand a Conservative Government in my province for the last few years. As I said earlier in the House today, when it took office in April of 1982 there was a surplus in the Saskatchewan treasury of over $100 million. After two years there is a deficit of over $800,000 because of the incompetence of that particular government. The unemployment rate has gone up from 4 per cent to 8 per cent, which is one of the most rapid increases in any part of Canada. The number of people on welfare in my province has gone up by 73 per cent in the last two and a half years.

The Government across the way is borrowing money for the same kinds of programs and purposes as the Government of Saskatchewan and the Government of British Columbia did. They say that confidence, the private sector, and business will do it. Grant Devine says the same thing in Saskatchewan. He says they are open for business and will allow the private sector to do it. They will create all kinds of jobs. Exactly the opposite has happened, Mr. Speaker, and that is another reason why the House should say no to allowing the Government across the way to borrow some $23.3 billion, which is going to put debt upon debt upon the people of Canada in the years ahead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Before giving the floor to another speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) that I inadvertently let him cite a speech made by another Member of the House. There was a decision reported on July 28, 1979 which stated that it is not in order for a Member to obtain or quote during the current sitting the official record of the remarks of any other Member. I would just like to remind the House of that decision.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, this being my first speech in the House of Commons, I would like to start by thanking my constituents in the riding of Duvernay for sending me to Ottawa to represent them. I promise to do everything in my power to honour the trust they have placed in me. I also wish to say a word of thanks to my colleagues in the House, who were most generous with their help and advice from the first day I started my new life as a Parliamentarian.

Mr. Speaker, the riding of Duvernay is the eastern part of the City of Laval and today encompasses an area with a population of over 108,000. Duvernay has a large francophone majority, 89 per cent, while 7 per cent of the population are English-speaking and 4 per cent represent the various ethnic communities. The riding is a veritable paradise for people who like peace and quiet. As far as the economy is concerned, there is a good business environment with the following main industries: manufacturing, construction and the petro-chemical sector. I may add for the information of the House that today, five correctional centres are located in the riding, and even more important, there is a training centre for correctional centre staff, the only francophone centre in Canada.

As a new Member of Parliament I would like to take advantage of the occasion of my maiden speech in the House to say that I fully realize I have yet a great deal to learn, while sharing with my colleagues the business of Parliament and the responsibilities we have to the people we represent here in Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, as a newcomer to Parliament, I have not only a great deal to learn, but also much to offer in the way of experience and my perception of the economic problems facing this country today. Speaking with the people of Duvernay who have entrusted me with the difficult task of speaking for my constituents and explaining their needs before this national forum, I have a deep sense of my responsibility in meeting their expectations and helping them to put the economy of our country back on the right course.

One could compare Canada's distressing economic situation to what happens when we want to renovate an old house. Before you can renovate or expand, you first have to remove any rot from the beams and reinforce the frame. Our Government has made a firm resolve not to act hastily, to ensure that both the economy and the Government will be operating effectively in the interests of all Canadians. I am therefore very happy to be part of a team that is determined to bring this country's horrific deficit under control.

I would like to add, as the only Italian Member of the Government, that I am proud to represent in this House both the riding of Duvernay and the entire Italian community. Even as a junior Member of Parliament who may not have a great deal of impact on Government decision-making, I am confident, after many conversations with my colleagues, that I will be able to explain satisfactorily the problems of my riding and to act as my constituents' spokesman in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, today is the first time I have spoken to Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority. I am pleased with this opportunity to say a few words about the reasons for tabling this Bill. I would like to mention briefly some of the premises that form the basis for my comments today. I would like to speak to the Bill presented by my colleague, the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), in my capacity of entrepreneur representing small- and medium-sized businesses.

It is actually somewhat against our principles to support the Bill before the House, because in our opinion, there is a crucial and almost direct link between reducing the deficit and sound management of the Canadian economy in general. However, considering our goal of economic renewal, I wish to express my support for this Bill. No obstacle is as impressive, almost insurmountable and threatening as this federal deficit!

The Bill before the House is aimed at giving the Government an additional borrowing authority of $7.3 billion for fiscal 1984-85, of which $2 billion may be carried forward to fiscal 1985-86. The reserve of $2 billion is intended to cover unpredictable changes in financial requirements. But why has the national deficit suddenly become an important priority on the list of our national policies? After all, we all know that a deficit for a given year is not necessarily a major problem.

However, Canadians are beginning to understand that in recent years, the previous Government registered deficits in years of growth as well as during recession periods. The accumulated deficits have, over the years, generated a cumulative debt of alarming proportions.

This year, the public debt will reach $190 billion, which works out to the equivalent of an individual debt of $24,000 for each Canadian family. Because of this disastrous economic liability we inherited from the previous Government, today we must put the national economy back on course by restoring the confidence of consumers, business and entrepreneurs who are anxious to see a return to responsible management of the country's economy. We do not like borrowing, and as far as that goes, we do not really like the Bill before the House today. However, we are faced with a dilemma. The previous legislation has already given the Government a borrowing authority of $24.5 billion. However, to ensure the proper functioning of our economy, we must go ahead and ask, through Bill C-11, for a total borrowing authority of $31.85 billion.

A maximum borrowing authority of $16 billion is provided for the 1985-86 fiscal year without possibility of carrying it over to 1986-87, and as the Minister of State has noted, the Bill introduced in this House should enable the Government to meet its borrowing needs until next fall. Later on, a Bill should be introduced after the budget is brought down next spring to cover borrowing needs for the rest of the 1985-86 fiscal year.

Of course, some people might be shocked at the contents of this Bill, but we have no choice: if we had not taken this action, we would very soon have been deeper in debt. To improve borrowing management, to restore a sense of responsibility and active participation in the operation of our economy and to provide some financial stability, we must support the solution provided by the legislation itself. By its very nature, this Bill constitutes a kind of incentive which will allow us to break the vicious circle of indebtedness; the loss of confidence of consumers and investors has already cost us a lot during the last few years, especially where stable employment is concerned.

The deficit is eroding the very foundation of our economy. It is only by reinforcing the framework of our economy that we can restore business confidence. We need positive investors. We must give them back the motivation to undertake new economic ventures in a true spirit of competition.

Mr. Speaker, the last years of the previous Government are a typical example of a system which I think works like the well-known story about the antelope and the lion. When the lion wants to eat, it runs after the antelope, but when it comes back without having caught the antelope, it does not ask for a grant to tie it down.

I shall close with these words, Mr. Speaker, as the time allotted me has run out.

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much for giving me this opportunity to say what I think about Bill C-11 to provide borrowing authority, but before I do that, I should like to commend my colleague from Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) for his brilliant statement, particularly since it was his maiden speech.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will not hold it against me if I go into the background of Bill C-11. Previous speakers have already eloquently said everything that needed to be said, and then some. However, I think it is important, and that is the purpose of my contribution, to emphasize one aspect which is half way between what the Opposition is blaming us for and what we are proposing.

For at least two or two and a half months now, we have been told again and again that Canadians wanted the change of government we had promised during the election campaign. The key word was "jobs, jobs, jobs", and now we are being censured because of the cutbacks. Well, it is true that giving jobs to Canadians will be quite a departure from the former administration, but one thing they seem to forget is that we have promised jobs and, true enough, jobs there will be. But how are we going to do that? Basically, the Opposition is blaming us probably because we are not using the same means they did.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, you will agree that if we were to use the same means, we would obviously reach the same point as the former government—a shameful deficit and an intolerable unemployment rate.

We never said to the people that we had a magic formula, a wonder recipe for creating jobs. We did say quite clearly that we would improve the economic and social climate through a policy of reconciliation and consultation with the various levels of government. And already we have seen tangible results of that consultation and reconciliation process.

Mr. Speaker, this august body stands as evidence of the fact that, not only throughout Canada but especially in Quebec, we have managed to achieve what some people thought was impossible: we were able to have more than 57 Conservative Members elected in the Province of Quebec. Why? Because we consulted one another, each of us in his or her riding, throughout Canada, but particularly in Quebec where I know what is going on, we consulted one another, we all worked together towards a common objective. Many people think that it was a miracle. Well, Mr. Speaker, it was not a miracle, but the result of joint efforts among the various talents we had at our disposal. There you are. That is exactly what we are suggesting to the Canadian people. We want to promote a climate of dialogue with the various levels of government in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised to see once again that the Opposition, particularly the Official Opposition, is raking us over the coals about the cutbacks. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, that was part and parcel of that climate of consultation. We simply had to divorce ourselves from the previous administration, its wasteful ways and its shameless patronage.

As an individual and as a representative of a riding, I am not overly enthusiastic about those cutbacks, particularly when I am directly affected. That is understandable. But when I keep in mind the ultimate objective of this exercise, I am even prepared to vote today on the basic principle of this Bill, since it will eventually help us give Canadians what they expect from us.

As to the other Opposition, the New Democratic Party, they keep on raising objections very forcefully but all in all, they are simply in favour of virtue. I am also in favour of virtue, except that in their case—and I do not know whether they are listening—the problem is that they have no definition of virtue. They always say where they stand once the train has gone by: if it is good, I am all for it, if it is not good, I am against it. But that, always after the fact. Before, we have no idea where they stand. Criticizing seems to be their raison d'être.

Mr. Speaker, sensible Canadians—they make up the majority in this country—had their say on September 4, and the results are there to see.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ADVISABILITY OF PROMOTING INDIAN SELF-GOVERNMENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of promoting Indian self-government by:

1. Announcing support for an affirmative policy of constitutional recognition of aboriginal self-government;

2. Pursuing actively, a bilateral process of discussion with representatives of first nations on such issues as self-government, natives claims and the elimination of the extinguishment policy; and

3. Introducing legislation to recognize first nations self-government which should be developed by means of a joint process and utilization of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I believe that most Canadians would be dismayed and perhaps even outraged if they knew fully that there is a significant group of people in our country calling for emancipation. As difficult as it may be for us to believe, there is a group of people wanting to be decolonized.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) said it very well in committee this morning when he indicated that there is a group of people in Canada who have a sense of powerlessness because they virtually have no control over the most important decisions affecting their daily lives. I am talking about more than a quarter of a million people who are living in Canada and who are weary beyond words of having us standing on their toes. Small nations of people, people who describe themselves as Canada's First Nations, can no longer bear the burden of having us on their backs. The Indian people of Canada want to have their right to self-government, their right to self-determination, recognized in the Constitution of Canada. There is a great need for the federal Government at the next two constitutional conferences between the spring of 1985 and 1987 to be a very strong advocate for Indian people as they seek to have this right defined and entrenched in our Constitution.

I do not think they are asking for too much. For a very long time Indian people have disputed the right of the Government of Canada to run their lives. However, it is only very recently that this situation has begun to receive the public attention it deserves. Their claim to self-government is historically based. Before European settlers arrived on these shores, there were numerous Indian First Nations which were governing themselves quite adequately. They had their own economies, cultures and languages; they traded with one another.

The Indian Act of 1876 eroded and undermined these traditional Indian governments in Canada. They were replaced with a form of government which we in our wisdom thought was appropriate for them. We called these new forms of government band councils. These band councils never had any real power. Little chores were delegated to them from time to time, but they never had any real power. All decision-making remained with the government of Canada through the Department of Indian Affairs.

In the mid-1960s it looked as if some enlightenment had arrived in the mind of the government of Canada because it started a new policy called devolution in which it transferred, as was said, responsibilities to Indian communities. Let me examine what that really was. It increased the flow of funds, fairly significantly I should add, and asked band councils to administer certain programs. However, they were never given any decision-making power. They could not participate in the way budgets were derived. They could not participate in the programs developed on their behalf. They were only administrative arms of the government of Canada. I may say that in most cases they administered very well and did so very cheaply on behalf of the government of Canada. All of that has to come to an end because we know how unsuccessful it has been.

Social statistics in Indian communities are a national disgrace. They are appalling, whether we are talking about housing, education, health or any area vital to everyone's daily life. I will not take the time of the House to repeat those statistics. I have done it in the past and they are available. For example, they are available in a public document prepared by the government in 1980 entitled Indian Conditions. So dismal is the record of the government of Canada in directing and controlling the lives of these people that now they are saying, "Give the responsibility back to us; let us manage, control and direct our own affairs; bring to an end this domination and manipulation which has been going on for so many years".

There should not be any misunderstanding in the minds of Members of the House. There is nothing here which is not perfectly legitimate, fair and reasonable. Let it not be thought by any Hon. Member that this is a call for absolute sovereignty or that this is somehow thinly disguised separation. Not at all, not at all.

Indian people are asking to be within the confines and the limits of the Canadian Confederation. Indian people are not asking to be excluded from our Confederation; they are asking to be allowed in. There may be some people in this House and in other parts of the country who will resent these claims for self-determination. This subject is open to misinterpretation, misunderstanding and even ridicule.

Speaking of the relationship between the government of Canada and the Indian people, I should like to quote a statement by Dr. Lloyd Barber of Saskatchewan who once said:

> I suppose we tend to react like somebody who has been standing on the other fellow's toes for so long that we are indignant when he wants to pull his foot out.

Nearly 100 years ago Leo Tolstoy put it this way:

> I sit on a man's back choking him and making him carry me and yet assure myself and others that I am sorry for him and wish to lighten his load by all possible means—except by getting off his back.

Did Hon. Members know, for example, that these artificial governments which we invented and imposed upon Indian people, these chiefs and councils, spend 75 per cent of their time dealing with the administrative overburden imposed upon them by the Department of Indian Affairs? They have been elected in a democratic fashion the same as all Hon. Members of the House were elected. Yet the chiefs and councils have virtually no time to serve the people who elected them and to be accountable to them.

Indian people want the right to govern themselves recognized in the Constitution of Canada. They also want to be recognized by way of statute in this House. They want a self-government Bill that will replace this outmoded and antiquated Indian Act by which we now govern Indian people. Indian government in this country will be distinct. It is not to be confused with provincial governments. It is not municipal government. It is distinct. It is different. It will take many different forms because there is a tremendously rich diversity within the Indian community of Canada. Some forms of government will be tradional, like the potlatch. It is ludicrous to recall a time when the potlatch was actually outlawed. RCMP officers swooped down on a potlatch, arrested people, confiscated relics and objects of art. That is part of our glorious history.

These individual Indian governments will be distinct. Some forms will be suprisingly innovative and modern. I invite Hon. Members to attend on some occasion in the near future an Assembly of the First Nations. It is a parliament like ours. They have a Speaker. Delegates are elected. It is amazing how the order of business is conducted, that with a very large assembly, Members listen to what the others say and try to reach a consensus. When you compare their parliament and ours, what a shame ours is. We appear immature compared to the way their parliament functions.

Whatever form Indian government takes, it must be indigenous government. It cannot be something imposed, such as band government. The powers that these indigenous governments exercise are inherent powers. They belong to them. They are not powers that can be derived from some other level of government whose origins date only to the arrival of Europeans on this shore.

Following recognition by way of the Constitution and by way of statute, which I hope we will pass in this House, there will have to be some protracted and difficult negotiations to define the jurisdiction of these people. The Indian people are quite willing to enter into this bilateral process of government to work out what their jurisdiction will be, but they do not want to proceed by way of consultation.

If Hon. Members have reserves in their constituencies and they visit them from time to time, if I am not being arrogant in doing so, may I counsel them to avoid the word "consultation". That word has become so badly tainted in the relationship between the government of Canada and Indian people that it is no longer an acceptable word. In the past, consultation meant a few little discussions after the decision was made. They knew all the time it was a unilateral, imposed decision. They want genuine negotations to determine exactly the jurisdiction that will be exercised by these distinct governments in Canada.

We had such a Bill in the last Parliament, Bill C-52. It was an Indian self-government Bill, but what an inadequate, flawed Bill it was. It was totally unacceptable.

An Hon. Member: It was a Liberal Bill.

Mr. Penner: I do not think it was very liberal at all. It was an illiberal Bill. It did the same thing that has been done for so long in the past. That Bill was not developed by way of joint process. It was developed in the usual way, unilaterally, with a few telephone calls and a bit of conversation from time to time. It was not developed bilaterally as the special committee said it should be.

I would like to see that Bill referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but not at second reading stage which would lock us into a clause by clause study. The subject matter could be referred to the standing committee under our new and very able Chairman, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). If we had that Bill in its subject matter form and had the resources to call upon, I believe we could submit for consideration to this House a vastly improved Bill, one that would be acceptable.

I have been talking about legislation. I want to interject very quickly that legislation will not be a substitute for recognition of the right to Indian self-government within the Constitution of Canada. It is merely a step along the way.

Before concluding and allowing other Hon. Members to express their views to the House, my motion also includes reference to the native claims policy. This morning in committee, the Minister indicated that he was going to undertake a full-scale review of that policy. That is long overdue. In reply to a question I put to him in the House today, the Minister stated that part of that review will look very carefully at what is known as the extinguishment requirement.

I wish to take a moment to tell Hon. Members about the extinguishment requirement and see whether they believe that it actually exists. This is how it works. If a native group has a legitimate claim that has been accepted by the government of Canada and enters into negotiations to reach a settlement and a new agreement, at the time that agreement is signed all residual aboriginal rights must be surrendered. The other party to the agreement, the government of Canada, surrenders nothing except what is in the agreement. The other party must surrender everything.

Whoever heard of an agreement like that? Obviously that which is in the agreement must be surrendered. If it is the amount of land or compensation, there has to be a quit claim on that. It cannot be re-opened. To have all other aboriginal rights surrendered is unreasonable and unacceptable. I believe it is also unconstitutional. Some day that will have to be tested in a court of law.

This policy of extinguishment must go. In his answer today, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development indicated that he is prepared to lead the way in getting rid of it. He will have some problems. He will have problems with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), not because the Minister is an unreasonable man but because this policy somehow got entrenched in the dark corridors of the Department of Justice and it is now believed to be right.

The former Minister of Justice gave me a letter dictated to him by his officials. They were adamant that there could be no movement at all on the extinguishment policy. Today I listened to the Minister of Justice who replied in a confused, half-hearted way. There were more hedges in his answer than in an English country garden.

I conclude by asking whether the Parliament Secretary will give careful consideration to not talking out this motion this afternoon. I ask that he consider having the subject matter of this motion referred to the standing committee. In doing that, there will be no commitment by the Government. Let the standing committee use this motion to do a number of helpful things. This morning in committee, the Minister indicated that he wants to work with the committee, to take it into his confidence. He does not want to use us in some manipulative way. He wants us to be part of the process in developing an Indian policy of which the country can be proud. Here is an opportunity for the Parliamentary Secretary to have a few of his Members make some comments, and before six o'clock agree that the motion not be talked out but be referred to the committee. Other Members will then have an opportunity to express their views in committee and we can carry on for some period of time by looking at these very important, sensitive and difficult issues.

● (1720)

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I listened with intent interest to the speech delivered by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). Many of us know the Hon. Member. Those of us who have been Members of previous Parliaments and have worked with him on Indian affairs and on the special task force on Indian self-government know that he has earned a reputation which is perhaps second to none for his regard for the Indian people and for the justice he wishes for them. I commend the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior for the general thrust of his motion.

The report of the Special Parliamentary Committee on Indian Self-Government, which was tabled in the House a little over a year ago, has come to be known as the Penner report after the Hon. Member who just spoke. He and all members of this special parliamentary committee are to be commended for the manner in which they approached the committee's mandate and for the provoking, detailed report which they produced.

In attempting to ensure that Canada's relationship to the Indian First Nations is one of honour and decency, the Hon. Member and his committee have done a great service to all Canadians. By recommending a new relationship which combines historic precedents with current realities, the special committee has set forth a vision for a future in which other governments in Canada might relate to Indian First Nation governments in a spirit of mutual accommodation.

The relationship between the Indian First Nations and the Canadian government is indeed unsatisfactory. Far-reaching change is needed. I think we all agree that an entirely new relationship must somehow be established. It seems to be obvious and indeed reasonable that the people of Indian First Nations must be able to control their own affairs in a manner which respects their diversity, rights and traditions.

We on this side of the House support the concept of a new relationship between the federal government and Indian First Nations. An essential element of the new relationship is the recognition of Indian self-government. This would be beneficial to Canada. The current dependency cycle in which the Indian people and Canada are caught must end. If the communities have the power to determine their own destinies within the Canadian Confederation, they and all of Canada will be strengthened.

The current legal assumptions are not an adequate basis for the new relationship. Now that aboriginal and treaty rights have constitutional protection, Canada requires a new legal framework to ensure that the rights and well-being of the Indian First Nations are protected. Canada must re-order its legal system to accommodate First Nation governments.

Consultations and constitutional discussions have been put under way to determine how self-government can be recognized in Canadian law and how self-government is to be dealt with in the Canadian Constitution. I know the Hon. Member believes that Indian self-government must be specifically stated and entrenched in the Constitution of Canada and that constitutional amendment is the surest way to achieve a permanent and fundamental change in the relationship between Indian First Nations and the federal government. Be that as it may, any such basic change must be carefully considered and accepted by Canadian society at large.

One of the processes through which self-government might be achieved would be bilateral discussions and agreements made within the context of current laws and constitutional arrangements. The multilateral or constitutional amendment process gives provinces an opportunity to co-operate with the federal government in a joint program and policy to advance self-government among Indian peoples in their own communities and on their own lands.

The Royal Proclamation of 1763 which is acknowledged in the Constitution of Canada provided the first basis for recognition of Indian governments and a direct link between First Nations and the Crown. It established a means through which the federal government could enter into treaties and agreements. This arrangement can be used again to enter into agreements with the Indian First Nations so that there will be no confusion with the jurisdiction exercised by the various levels of government.

One thing is obvious to me, Mr. Speaker. The Indian Act is not an acceptable blueprint for self-government. Even if it were to be amended, the Indian Act is not acceptable. Any legislative framework in the area of Indian self-government must be flexible enough to allow for all the governmental arrangements that will be proposed by Indian First Nations.

I am sure a wide variety of Indian governmental styles will emerge, depending upon culture, location, size and the wishes of the people involved. As well, the development of Indian First Nation governments will be sure to proceed at different paces. Needs will change and forms of government will change as well. Such diversity, changes and varying paces are to be welcomed and indeed are to be accommodated.

On an interim basis, pending constitutional change, the federal Government has the option to introduce new legislation which would enhance constitutional entrenchment and which would then reaffirm the special relationship of the federal Government with the First Nations. Through this legislation, the federal Government could then affirm the maximum amount of self-government which it can within its current powers. This possible option is one for which consultations with many sectors are taking place and will continue to take place. The widest possible consultations and participation are necessary if such fundamental legislation is to be developed.

Before colonization, Indian peoples had governments which were accountable to them. This principle has been disrupted by the Indian Act. We support the principle of arrangements which allow Indian people to maintain governments accountable to them. In some instances, joint control will be desirable where First Nation, provincial or federal jurisdictions might overlap. With attitudes of mutual accommodation, sensitivity and respect on the part of provincial and federal governments, I think agreements on how the jurisdictions could best be jointly exercised would be possible. Such agreements would ensure a workable sharing of power and responsibility.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) is beginning to engage in a serious review in which the Indian First Nations will be involved. This is a review of all existing policies of his Department so that policies may be changed to enhance self-government. He will ensure that only initiatives which lead in the direction of increased self-government are acceptable. This transition process is immediate and will be ongoing. It will be a visible indication of the serious wish of the federal Government to respect a relationship of mutual accommodation.

Recent court decisions have caused a re-examination of federal responsibilities including the degree of obligation of the federal government's specific duty to promote the interests of Indian First Nations. We recognize that there are competing interests. Perhaps there is a specific duty of the Minister to protect the rights of First Nations against encroachment of other interests. Perhaps his responsibility must be to act on behalf of the federal Government so that its agreements with the First Nations will be honoured. He might be the first recourse of First Nations for action in remedying problems in their relationship with Canada. All of these concepts are now under review by the Minister.

The Government recognizes that there are Indian persons who may not be members of Indian First Nations or who live away from their First Nations lands who continue to have special needs. This is particularly true of those Indian people who live in cities. In this discussion on self-government, I would like to mention that our Government reaffirms its willingness to work with Indian people, Indian First Nations governments, provincial governments and organizations toward arrangements that respect the rights and aspirations of such people so that they may benefit equally with others in the Canadian society in which they live.

The Indian First Nations have shared with Canada the resources of this great and bountiful land. We believe there is a special obligation on the federal Government to ensure that First Nations have the power to plan and implement economic ventures on the community level in whatever forms may seem appropriate to the people of the First Nations. We are moving to adopt those policies and to make them operative. The federal Government will adopt policies which will see that an adequate land and resource base is restored in a manner which does not prejudice the rights and interests of third parties nor the rights of the provinces. Claims for past wrongs must be fairly settled. These are measures the Government is taking so that Indian First Nations will be able to help build the economic bases which are needed if they are to prosper with the rest of Canada.

We note with concern that recent federal initiatives in this regard have been inadequate, as was indicated by the previous speaker. They have been inadequate and inappropriate. They neither serve First Nations nor Canada.

We cannot speak of Indian dependence without noting that Indian First Nations have been denied sufficient resources to maintain themselves for well over a century. As a result, serious deficiencies of community infrastructure exist which we would like to see corrected so that community infrastructure can be improved to a level equal to that of the surrounding communities, but according to priorities, policies and planning established by each Indian First Nation. We will not confuse funding for these purposes with economic development.

What about fiscal arrangements for self-government? We recognize that Indian First Nations require a financial underpinning in a manner which is in harmony with and reinforcing of self-government. The current method of federal funding is totally unsatisfactory and new fiscal arrangements are required. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has recently announced that he is exploring a means of introducing block-funding to Indian governments which are held accountable by their people. Such new funding arrangements for Indian First Nation governments will enable them to decide how best to meet their people's needs, to set their priorities and to make their own policies. The people of each Indian First Nation will then be able to assume the responsibility of ensuring that these powers are exercised responsibly.

The present duplication, wasteful budgeting and accountability requirements which sap a large percentage of funds allocated by Parliament to benefit the Indian First Nations will no longer be required when ministerial accountability is eliminated in favour of the accountability of Indian governments to their own people. We are exploring a system of direct transfer payments in which Parliament would be asked to take the responsibility for allocation by grants as the means of funding. Eventually, we can see the day when each Indian First Nation will have its own assured sources of income as a result of a control of land and resources, resource revenue-sharing, income from investment and economic activity. Until then, interim grants are necessary and justified. We are seeking a way of funding which would allow each First Nation to chose the mechanisms through which it would provide services to its people.

We must find a way, in these times of restraint and fiscal responsibility, to provide a level of funding sufficient so that First Nation governments can provide levels of services on a par with others in Canada, which will allow them to become healthy and productive communities. This can be done only when funds can be expended in accord with their own values and under their own control. This is imperative.

We believe that Indian First Nations which have not yet established sufficient political infrastructure or mechanisms for self-government but which wish to participate in the new arrangements should be able to do so by arranging for a third party to provide services on a contract basis. In some cases these services might come from a provincial government or from the private sector. By moving to these new fiscal arrangements, the federal Government is not only enhancing Indian self-government, but it is reducing unnecessary administrative costs and providing for the best use of scarce funds.

It is a special relationship. The federal Government is moving in these directions not only because it seems to be the right and just thing to do, but because the special relationship between the Crown and the Indian First Nations can best be honoured by enhancing the recognition of Indian First Nations self-government and by providing the resources to make it work. We believe that by moving in these directions the Government will strengthen a relationship with the First Nations which is in compliance with international standards and within the spirit and intent of the original special relationship which was established by our ancestors and the Crown.

In conclusion, there certainly will be areas in which we will be urged to move more rapidly. There can be no doubt about that. There will be those who feel that we are not going far enough. These are uncharted grounds, both for us and for Indian people. There are vast areas which require clarification and others which require fine-tuning. By following the guidelines already set out by the distinguished Hon. Member who presented the motion and the special committee which he chaired, the Government is demonstrating its commitment to the spirit of this motion.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) for bringing this motion forward. I think that three parts of the motion are consistent with the report on First Nations self-government which was unanimously approved by Members of all three Parties in the last Parliament.

● (1740)

I was interested in listening to the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), who made a number of suggestions and proposals upon which, he said, the Government would be acting. I simply urge him and his Government to act upon those proposals as soon as possible and to lay them on the table so that the standing committee and the Indian people themselves can examine them and make suggestions and criticims. Then we can get this whole process in place as early as possible. The Hon. Member knows, as we all do, Mr. Speaker, of the urgency of this situation.

There is a general consensus on what needs to be done which is recognized by all people who have looked at this situation. We realize that the present system is not working. It is certainly not working for the Indian people who have been caught in a downward spiral of poverty and dependence. They have been subject to the discrimination and restrictions of the Indian Act. It is not working for the Canadian taxpayer either. We have seen some attempts over the last 110 years to 115 years to force Indian people and Indian communities and governments into a preconceived mould. These attempts have been expensive failures. They have not worked. If they have not completely destroyed the Indian governments which existed prior to the establishment of the Dominion of Canada, they have certainly prevented these Indian governments from functioning in an effective way; they have prevented Indian governments from effectively meeting the needs of their people; and they have prevented Indian governments from helping to keep their people abreast of the needs of the 20th century. They have worked in a very negative manner indeed.

Indian people do not want to become assimilated and have been willing to pay the price of poverty rather than to become assimilated. They do not want to see their nations reduced to the status of municipalities. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, now is the time for action. I was disappointed that there was no reference in the Throne Speech to any action with regard to First Nations government, but I was very pleased to hear what the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary had to say and we hope that the Government will act on those proposals in this section of Parliament.

The previous government acted to the extent of appointing a special committee. After that committee made its report, the government then moved very slowly. Finally, in the dying days of the last Parliament, the government brought in Bill C-52, but it was brought in so late that it was never debated in the House, never referred to committee and, therefore, there was no opportunity for the committee to hear Indian witnesses or make any general examination of any shortcomings or strengths the Bill might have had.

Roberta Jamieson, the liaison member for the Assembly of First Nations, examined the Bill and developed a critique of it. I would like to quote some of her comments because I believe it is important to have on the record the perspective of one person who was very close to this situation as a member of an Indian First Nation. Miss Jamieson said, and I quote:

> C-52 speaks of "special responsibility to Indian peoples", but does not speak of special relationship with Indian governments. The new status for which some bands might be eligible is more corporate than political in nature, and it is acquired from the federal government.
> In the Bill, the federal government has been careful to protect its own interests and to protect itself from possible liabilities. In doing so, it has weakened the already weak protection of First Nation interests available under the Indian Act.
> There is no recognition of the inherent right of First Nation self-government, nor is there in the Preamble any commitment to seek entrenchment through the constitutional process nor commitment to seek to establish a distinct order of First Nation government. Bill C-52 is not related to nor does it enhance constitutional entrenchment.
>
> Approved bands would have more powers under the legislation than are now available to band councils. But these powers must be exercised within contribution agreements, and the federal government may withdraw its recognition at any time, or be put under a federal administrator, Any law made by an Indian government can be cancelled by the federal government at its discretion.
> The federal government maintains total authority over what is acceptable and what is not.
> In short, the Bill provides a complex system of cosmetic changes in which the federal government maintains the power and control in the hands of the Minister and the Cabinet.
> Bill C-52 continues legislating over Indians and Indian lands. In fact, it seems to ignore the fact that the Canadian Constitution recognizes that aboriginal rights limits Parliament's powers.
> No proposal is made for the kind of dramatic change in federal government machinery necessary to allow First Nations to deal with the Canadian government on a government-to-government basis. It does not even establish a new Ministry—everything is left to Indian Affairs. Nor is there any indication Indian Affairs will ever be reduced in size. The new legislation would require increases in the bureaucracy to administer it.
> Bill C-52 does not call for revision of the land claims process. No mention is made of accelerated settlement of long-standing grievances, and the concept of "extinguishment" remains as a pillar of federal policy.
> No real changes in fiscal arrangements are proposed. Only modifications in current arrangements are suggested. Indian governments will simultaneously have to be accountable to their own people while continuing to be accountable to the Minister for all funds spent and for performance of its governmental functions.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, there are a great many flaws in Bill C-52 and it is not satisfactory. We look forward to something better from the present Government. In that connection, I was pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Erie say that there is going to be the widest possible participation and consultation with Indian leaders. I would urge the Government to bring in funding for the Assembly of First Nations—the funding has expired at the end of the second quarter—so that Indian First Nations can continue with the process of developing their Indian self-government proposals. If there is going to be the widest possible participation, then it is absolutely essential that Indian peoples be funded so that they can participate in a reasonable and responsible manner.

The motion as introduced by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior has three parts. The first part calls for government support for an affirmative policy of constitutional recognition of aboriginal self-government. This coming spring we have another of the constitutional conferences involving the federal and provincial governments. Indian people all across Canada have been very suspicious of the process which involves the provinces. Until now they have only been involved with the federal government. They are suspicious of provincial involvement and have been very disappointed with the results so far. Part of the reason is that the previous government did not take a sufficiently outspoken attitude toward the whole question of the entrenchment of aboriginal rights. The previous government was prepared to sit back until the very last moment when it suddenly decided that it was going to support the concept of aboriginal rights.

What the Indian people, as well as other aboriginal people, would like from the present Government, Mr. Speaker, is that it become an outspoken advocate of aboriginal rights and that it recognize the right to self-government now. There will then be time to mould a consensus involving the Canadian people so that at the time of the constitutional conference the provinces will not be able to say, "Well, we have not had time to consider this. Our people are not prepared", and that sort of thing. We would like to see the Government take an active advocacy role on behalf of First Nation's government.

Second, the motion calls for a bilateral process. There are already many areas where the federal Government and Indian First Nations can negotiate so that Indian First Nations will have much more power under the present system. Certainly the improvements to the land claims process are of the ultimate importance and priority here. Then there is the whole question of introducing legislation, and I urge the Government to do that now.

It is important for all Members of this House and the Canadian people generally to recognize that the situation of aboriginal peoples in Canada is changing. First we had constitutional recognition. Second, we are beginning to get some court decisions which recognize the fundamental nature of aboriginal title. Perhaps the most important of those decisions was handed down in Vancouver just last month. It said that the interest of Indian people in their lands is a pre-existing right, not created by royal proclamation, by Section 18(1) of the Indian Act or by any other executive order or legislative provision. These rights existed before the Royal Proclamation of 1763 which simply recognized those rights. It is important for the Canadian people to begin to recognize the fundamental nature of those rights and to do justice to them. We do not do justice when we continue to insist upon an extinguishment clause, which is really like telling people: I will agree with you that I owe you money if you will agree that I can keep it. That is what we insist on when we demand that Indian people have an extinguishment clause in every kind of land claims agreement that is signed.

There is a general consensus among all people who have looked at this that the present system is not working, that the direction in which Canada and this Government must go is that of the right of aboriginal peoples to govern themselves. Along with that right there must be a granting of the necessary funding so that it is not a meaningless ritual. There must be the provision of an adequate basis, and consensus already exists among people who have looked at this question.

I urge any Members who do not agree with that consensus to study our report. The consensus exists, the time for action is now, and I urge the Government not to talk out this motion but to refer it and its subject matter to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development so that we can continue to make some progress. I underline the need for the Government to continue to make funding available to Indian peoples so that they can make progress on this subject also.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I fully support this motion but because it is getting near six o'clock I will sit down and ask you to put the question.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) for bringing forward this motion. He will note that because we debate this issue so little in this House, when a motion comes forward there are many Members who want to participate in the debate. I guess that is a problem we faced during the last number of years. Legislation on this issue has not been forthcoming and, as a result, few Members have an opportunity to discuss the issues in the House of Commons, other than in committee. That is why it has been so important in the past that the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development has taken up the cause of the Indian people in various ways and has been very successful in putting forward ideas and suggestions which may be helpful.

I know that it has been the experience of many of us on that committee over the years that there are many varied and different interests of Indian people across this country and it is very difficult for any Minister or any government to bring forward a piece of legislation which will fit every Indian band or Indian self-governing organization in the country. The desires and aspirations of the Indian people of British Columbia are so different from those of the Indian people of Nova Scotia that when the Bill on self-government was brought forward, immediately Indian nations from across the country had many disagreements with the terms. That is why I am encouraged by the Hon. Member's suggestion that the committee take up the subject matter of this legislation and use it as the basis for our discussions so that the legislation is good for the whole of the nation.

The bilateral process has, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion been essential. I could never understand how we got involved in a constitutional process of attempting to entrench various aspects of the Indian way of life when many of the provinces are not comfortable with the terms that Indian people have using for the last number of years, such as "Indian nation", or with the attempt to eliminate the extinguishment policy. That is why they have been demanding specifics. They do not want problems resulting from entrenchment.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for bringing forward the motion. I hope the committee can take up the work, and I look forward to working with him and other Members as we hopefully continue to foster the work of this Parliament and the Indian people across the country.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) on introducing his motion today. I also congratulate other Members who have worked long and hard over a number of years on this very important report. I had the opportunity a year ago to take part in this committee which travelled to parts of my riding in northern Ontario and to listen to different band members from northwestern Ontario and hear their concerns regarding self-government, dealing with government, and their day-to-day problems.

The Parliamentary Secretary announced today some of the areas which the Government and the Minister are prepared to deal with, such as Indian self-government and the day-to-day problems from coast-to-coast that we have to deal with.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

MINES AND MINING—ANNOUNCED CLOSING OF STELCO MINE AT RED LAKE, ONT. (B) ASSISTANCE TO MINERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on November 16 I directed a question to the Hon. Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton) concerning the closure of the Griffith Mine located between Ear Falls and Red Lake, Ontario. It was with regard to the 283 jobs, almost one-quarter of the areas workforce, which would be lost should Stelco go through with its intention of closing this mine in April of 1985. I rise today to basically get an update from the Parliamentary Secretary and to offer him an opportunity to read into the record some of the initiatives and moves that his ministry has taken in the meantime.

Specifically, I would like the House to be informed about what discussions have taken place with Stelco and what they have revealed. I am assuming that there has been discussion at the ministerial level with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Sinclair) who was responsible for the ILAP Program, and also with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) who, if the mine in question does close, will be charged with the responsibility of delivering the adjustment programs that will be necessary. I have the assurance of the Minister of State for Mines that the area would qualify for these programs, at least on a "level of assistance similar to that given mines recently closed in Quebec".

In the economic statement the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that there would be special consideration for single industry towns that were closed down. In his original answer the Minister of State for Mines said that the Government is "ready to assist them to the fullest possible extent with existing programs".

Could the Parliamentary Secretary bring us up to date on discussions with the provincial Ministers concerned, particularly the Ministers of Northern Affairs and of Labour? Have there been any exploratory discussions along the lines of determining a bad ministry and appointing a federal-provincial co-ordinator? Has there been any work done with Stelco in exploring the possibility of obtaining alternative customers? I have in mind the Ipsco plant in Regina, Saskatchewan and the Manitoba rolling mills plant? Would the Parliamentary Secretary take this opportunity to bring us up to date on federal Government initiatives?

Mr. F. Oberle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to express to the Hon. Member my appreciation for giving us ample notice of his question and for accommodating the Minister in the sense that we are not prepared last week or the week before to respond in greater detail to the question, simply because the Minister was absent from the city.

The Hon. Member is aware of most of the information that I can give him tonight. As he knows, in a press release dated November 15, Stelco announced that the Griffith mine located between Ear Falls and Red Lake, Ontario, would close permanently as of April, 1985. There will be a displacement of up to 282 jobs in that area. Whenever anything like that happens it is very critical and serious. I want to assure the Hon. Member that this announcement arrived here at a vital moment and was taken very seriously.

Yes, there has been dialogue with the company. There have been efforts and examinations into the potential for new customers for the type of product which the mine produces. Unfortunately, it is of a type and a quality that does not lend itself, in present market conditions, to be sold elsewhere.

This mine is the highest cost iron ore mine in Canada, if not one of the highest cost mines in the world. It is a very low volume mine. In other words, there is a lack of economy of scale to consider further operations. It has not been the judgment of any previous government to develop long-term policies with regard to closures of mines. That is the nature of a mining venture. Mining ventures are not only subject to the cyclical nature of that particular industry, but are subject also to the phasing out of an ore body or the volume in the mine.

I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that the Minister has discussed the situation with his counterparts in Cabinet. Every existing program, including enriched ILAP, will be made available to the area. These are training programs, manpower relocation and so on. There have been discussions with provincial counterparts. I cannot tell the Hon. Member which ministry will be the lead agency to service the communities, but everything possible has been done.

In addition to that, the Minister is committed as is the Government to work most expeditiously to develop more long-term policy that would address itself to this general situation; naturally not to this problem because it is an immediate problem and we can only use the existing facilities that we inherited when the Government took office on September 4. There will be very expeditious movement toward a long-term policy that will plan the phasing out of a mine at the inception of a mining venture. That is a critical development involving not only federal and provincial governments and their agencies but industry and unions as well. I want to assure the Hon. Member that everything possible is being done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please, the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson).

FINANCE—FUEL SALES TAX REBATE—POSITION OF BULK FUEL DEALERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker this is further to my question raised November 29 concerning rebate of sales tax on farm fuels. I would direct my remarks to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier). Let me say first that this Government is to be congratulated for moving quickly to fulfil another major promise to provide fuel tax relief to hard-hit primary producers such as farmers, fishermen, miners, and laggers.

I note that Bill C-12, to amend the Excise Tax Act, was read for the first time November 26. Hopefully it will move to second and third reading soon. The amendments will provide for a rebate of sales tax of 3 cents per litre on gas and diesel fuels used in off-highway primary production. As well, the producer will be exempt from the recent 1.8 cent per litre increase in the petroleum compensation charge. Thus the total rebate will be 3 cents plus 1.8 cents, for a total of 4.8 cents per litre or almost 22 cents per gallon, effective December 1, 1984.

Unfortunately there are several problems associated with the rebate. Notwithstanding a communique concerning the program issued yesterday by the Hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty), there appears to be confusion about application and, even worse, the possibility of discrimination against a large number of bulk fuel dealers.

Since my riding in southwestern Saskatchewan is largely agricultural, I will use the farm community as an example. The sale tax is essentially a refinery tax, and it is payable at the time of sale by the manufacturer. Some bulk fuel dealers—and these are the dealers in villages, towns and cities who retail to the farmer, notably Imperial, Shell, Texaco and Petro-Canada who hold fuel on consignment from headquarters—have an inventory free of sales tax. In effect they are agents of the refinery. They will be in a position to give an immediate sales tax rebate of 22 cents per gallon to their customers.

On the other hand, many bulk fuel dealers have purchased their inventory for resale. I am told that these dealers include Gulf and Husky as well as all co-operatives and independents. These dealers hold inventory on which sales tax has already been paid. Therefore, in order to reimburse themselves they must pass the tax on to the farmer.

I should like to examine the producer end for a moment. The rules appear to say that the farmer is to secure a bulk fuel permit from Revenue Canada and present it to his dealer. If the dealer has tax free inventory, obviously the rebate benefit of 22 cents per gallon will be given immediately at the time of the sale. However, if the dealer has tax paid inventory, then he must collect the 22 cents from the farmer and tell him to remit an application form along with purchase invoices to Revenue Canada for a rebate.

The average farmer purchases some 10,000 gallons or 45,000 litres per year of farm gas and diesel fuel. The rebate will mean something in the order of $2,200 annually. Let me assure the House that most farmers will be inclined to go for their fuel where they can get it for 22 cents per gallon less up front. They do not want to mess around with the forms and the usual government delays. I see the potential sales of those dealers with tax paid inventory being very seriously affected, through no fault of their own. We realize the difficulties in administration owing to the nature of the tax at the refinery level, and because the rebate is going to only a certain segment of the population. Nevertheless, there appears to be no reason to discriminate against certain dealers.

There appear to be two possible solutions. The first would be to require all dealers to collect the tax. All producers would then submit their invoices and application forms for rebate. Such an application form could be combined with the existing application for the 1.5 cent per litre excise tax refund. Producers could then apply on the same form for all three rebates—the three cents per litre on the sales tax, the 1.8 cent per litre on the petroleum compensation charge and the 1.5 cent per litre excise tax, for a grand total of 6.3 cents per litre, or something in the order of 28 cents per gallon.

The second alternative would be to permit those dealers holding tax paid fuel inventory to give the rebate to their qualified customers over the counter and then seek refund from the Government of the sales tax not collected. If this alternative were selected, the dealers would have to be assured of speedy reimbursement, perhaps through a system of revolving credits.

Another possibility which may occur to the bureaucrats is to resort to coloured fuel to distinguish inventory available to primary producers from that available to the general public. Bulk dealers, who have only so many compartments in their delivery trucks and limited holding space, unanimously beg the Government not to resort to the use of dyes.

In conclusion, I trust the foregoing has explained the potential problem faced by many bulk fuel dealers. The rebates are to take effect from December 1. It is now December 4. Of course the amendments are not yet law; there is still time to rectify the problem. I raise it now in the hope that remedial action can be taken. The producers and dealers need a rebate system that is fair to all and simple to administer.

• (1815)

I again congratulate the Government on instituting a system which will provide much needed relief. At the same time, I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to comment on whether a solution to this apparent problem is at hand.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on my first appearance on the "late show", I have been asked to talk about rebates, and I will try to do so with all the dignity this requires.

In fact, we are concerned here with a fuel sales tax rebate and the differences existing in the position of bulk fuel dealers.

The Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) has expressed some valid concerns with respect to the fuel sales tax rebate program announced in the Government's economic message on November 8 of this year. He observed, quite rightly, that some dealers have tax-free inventory while others have tax-paid inventory. The former are therefore free to offer a direct rebate, while the second group's customers must apply especially for the rebate.

The simple solution would be to demand that all people benefiting from the rebate submit claims. We realize that this procedure will not be attractive to farmers, who would probably prefer to do without the administrative red-tape. On the other hand, they are familiar with the practice because it has existed for a number of years in connection with the one and a half cent excise tax rebate per litre of gas.

Another more complex solution might be to allow retailers to claim the rebate on behalf of the primary producers in the case of bulk sales. Retailers would then be required to provide names, sales permit numbers, sales volume and proof that the rebate was indeed credited to the client. This solution, however, does pose a few problems.

First of all, it would impose an additional administrative burden which some retailers would certainly not be willing to take on. Second, identifying clearly what constitutes a bulk sale might also be a major problem. Third, since the claiming party is not the actual recipient of the rebate, there is a risk of a tax "leak"—no pun intended—which might take on increasing proportions. Finally, retailers electing to submit claims on behalf of their customers would have to wait some time before receiving the funds claimed from Revenue Canada.

The Government is now consulting with the fuel sector, and we are confident that a solution satisfactory to all parties concerned will emerge from these consultations, which are being held as part of the regular policy of this Government.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PLIGHT OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN NOT ELIGIBLE FOR BENEFITS. (B) LEVEL OF ASSISTANCE FOR AFFECTED CONSTITUENCIES

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a subject that came up in the House today. As some Members will know, the Minister announced today a $6 million program for fishermen and plant workers who were affected by the inshore fishing season this year. That is welcome news. I congratulate the Minister on it, but I would say to her that it is too late. I wish she had agreed to the request we made some six weeks ago.

I raised a question in this House, as did my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). We wrote and spoke to the Minister pointing out the seriousness of the situation. We tried to help the Minister to understand, as I am sure the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) did, that fishermen and plant workers have no recourse; there is no safety net, no alternative. If the fish do not come ashore because of ice, dirty water or whatever, there is no recourse. The system is built in such a way that the welfare system will not support them adequately. There is no alternative for fishermen and plant workers caught in that situation.

If one responds at the proper time, such as in October, one can work out projects that will be beneficial to the community. As it now stands, it will take about another week to identify where the fishermen and plant workers are who are affected. We will then have to hastily design projects which will last until the end of March. You can repair some gear and do some inside work, but you cannot build a slipway or repair a wharf in the winter. Nor can you fix a stage. These are things that cannot be done when frost and snow is on the ground. Bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that most of the fishermen affected here are on the northeast coast of Newfoundland and the coast of Labrador.

I welcome the news, but I say to the Minister that it is too late. In September and October we told her that she should act then. She insisted on waiting for the end of the fishing season. Sure, the fishing season is not legitimately over until November-December, but the reality for many communities is that it finishes as of September.

I welcome the news but I would urge the Minister to act quickly next year, or the next time this happens. Please God that it will not happen next year. I believe it is an act of God. If it does happen next year I would urge the Minister and the Government to take speedy measures, bearing in mind that we are dealing with disadvantaged people who suffer through no fault of their own, and to whom there is no recourse or alternative. An ex gratia payment is the only alternative. I welcome the Minister's announcement today. I simply wish she had made it six weeks ago.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): As my colleague pointed out, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has already said that we are monitoring the fishing situation very closely. Fisheries and Oceans Canada have advised us that, according to recent data, roughly 1,100 Newfoundland fishermen might have enough weeks of insurable employment to be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits this winter. That figure has been confirmed by the United Fishermen and Food Workers Union.

We have also been advised that most fishermen along the coast of Labrador might be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits and that the situation in the south-east region has improved since Fisheries and Oceans Canada have authorized higher herring quotas.

The special fund mentioned by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) was in fact a subsidy to provide assistance to fishermen in areas where during the normal fishing season, fishing is restricted because of icing conditions. Last spring, the ice remained longer than expected, which left the fishermen in many communities without work and without income, the winter period of unemployment insurance benefits having expired. This special initiative was taken by Employment and Immigration Canada, but the money did not come from the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

The Minister recognizes the importance of short-term job creation programs for people in the fishing industry who are not eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. I am therefore happy to inform you that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has allocated another $6 million to the Canada Works Program to provide assistance to fishermen and processing plant workers who are suffering because of the plight of the fishing industry. The Minister has already provided that information to the Hon. Member, in a letter he may not have had the chance to read.

I would also like to inform the House that we are in the process of amending the National Employment Service regulations with respect to the referral of applicants for Canada Works Projects. Such an amendment will ensure throughout Canada that any fisherman or fish processing plant worker who has not qualified for unemployment insurance will be referred as a priority for projects approved under the Program.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress once again that we are closely monitoring and that we will keep monitoring the situation in the fishing industry, and that the Minister has taken firm steps to improve that difficult situation. I can also assure the House that problems related to fisheries will be discussed during the talks to be held with the provinces on the Government's overall directions in the area of job creation and training.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.25 the House adjourned.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, by the thousands, Canadians have expressed their shock and dismay about the proposed cuts in environmental and wildlife research activities. Highly trained biologists, zoologists, and specialists in a variety of disciplines, are about to lose their jobs. Their only prospects seem to be south of the border because provincial Governments are not prepared to absorb them, nor is the private sector.

A better understanding of the role of wildlife in the ecosystem is an essential and never ending process. The Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) must understand that wildlife research and activities mean more than human health. In addition, the announced cuts have dealt a heavy blow to the morale of people within her Department. She must fight for the preservation of the Canadian Wildlife Service at its present strength before the announcement of cuts.

Today, in a letter by author Farley Mowat and the President of the Public Service of Canada, Jack Donegani, to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), they urge him to reconsider the cuts in the Canadian Wildlife Service. We on this side of the House again urge the Minister of the Environment to fight for the Canadian Wildlife Service, reject the cuts, and restore confidence in her Department, by her employees—

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE ECONOMY

INVESTOR CONFIDENCE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has made it quite clear that the rationale behind all the cut-backs and tax increases in his economic statement is to increase investor confidence in Canada.

The Canadian investment community has now had ample opportunity to witness the new Government in operation and to assess its supposedly new approach to our economic problems. Has it responded like the Government suggested they would? Has it suddenly found renewed faith in the Canadian economy and begun to invest, and produce the tens upon tens of thousands of jobs that we were promised would be created overnight? The answer is clear, and it is no.

Just last week, for example, Great Lakes Forest Products Limited of Thunder Bay announced that it will be investing $25 million to build a newsprint mill in the United States because it has more confidence in the American economy than in Canada's. Today's Globe and Mail indicated that production and employment by Canadian manufacturers have taken a sharp drop. A spokesman is quoted as saying: "There sure seems to be a lack of confidence".

The Government's approach is not working because it is based on faulty assumptions. Just wanting increased investor confidence is not enough. We need concrete actions to put Canadians back to work. It is obvious that Canadian investors, as well as the Canadian public, do not have faith in the Conservative Government's approach. They do not believe, as I do not believe, that the Conservatives have any answers. Not only is the Government's honeymoon just about over, but it appears that most Canadians are ready to sue for divorce.

HUMAN RIGHTS

RIGHT TO LIFE FOR ALL

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to express the satisfaction of my constituents in the riding of Beauce and that of all Canadians with respect to the positive attitude taken by the Canadian Government in providing aid to Ethiopia.

Our Government's initiative was instrumental in persuading other countries, agencies and thousands of Canadians to make a generous contribution.

Mr. Speaker, everyone understands that we should help people who are starving and many of whom are actually dying of starvation. However, I think our own attitude in this country is entirely ambiguous, in that we are not prepared to protect the right to life of defenceless creatures. This is a shameful injustice, Mr. Speaker.

We do not want to let old people, men, women and children die in Ethiopia, and our actions are laudable. But why do we let our own children be killed, in a civilized country?

We are willing to protect and to help people in need, but why do we let our own children be killed by abortionists who operate freely without any scruples?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, as a Member of this House, I still fail to understand how we can make such admirable efforts to feed the hungry of the world and at the same time let others kill those who have a right to be born.

BANK OF CANADA

CAFETERIA MEAL PRICES

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, at the time when the Government is attempting to lead the way in curbing excessive government spending as a result of the economic mess this Party inherited from the Liberals, I want to point out a situation I discovered within the Bank of Canada.

Currently the Ottawa office of the Bank of Canada operates a cafeteria which offers employees heavily subsidized meals. For example, from yesterday's menu patrons could order beef short ribs for 80 cents, or tuna casserole for 65 cents. Milk sells for 20 cents. A side order of vegetables or rice is 15 cents, and soft drinks are 10 cents. I support your move, Mr. Speaker, to raise prices in our restaurants and cafeterias on the Hill, and I strongly urge the Governor of the Bank of Canada to do the same. The Bank of Canada should be setting an example, not breaking the bank at the taxpayers' expense.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

SCIENCE EXHIBITION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, it has been brought to my attention that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is putting on an elaborate display today relating to all of its major activities on the pure science side, in the applied science areas, as well as information relating to the Candu reactor and, even more important, to the little known and numerous achievements that nuclear research has attained in the field of medical science. This display and public relations effort will take place at Atomic Energy of Canada Headquarters here in Ottawa, and only the Progressive Conservative Members of the House of Commons have been invited to participate.

I cannot emphasize enough the importance that the Conservative Members of the House of Commons should give to this very vital and key project in the field of the pure and applied sciences. I would impress upon each and every one of them that they should take the opportunity to attend and get the real side of the story about this great achievement in the scientific history of Canada. I have been given to understand that a similar, future display will be presented for the Liberal caucus Members and one for the NDP caucus Members.

Some Canadians do not place enough emphasis on the outstanding, positive achievements of the many brilliant and dedicated expert personnel that we have in our country. The time is long overdue when the positive side of nuclear research must be accurately, spontaneously, and credibly placed on the record for all to see, not only in our own country where we sometimes give our own people the least credit for achievement, but also—

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SUPPORT FOR REDUCED AUTOMOBILE EMISSIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I appeared before an interdepartmental hearing on auto emission standards to urge them to recommend the implementation of lower, less polluting auto emission standards for this country. Reducing auto emissions to at least the American level would be a step in the right direction, not only in reducing acid rain but also in enabling us to get tough with the Americans with respect to their massive contribution to acid rain. Reducing Canadian automobile emissions would help restore the credibility on this issue that was lost through previous Liberal inaction in this area.

• (1410)

The Government must also act in those areas where it itself has damaged the ability of Canada to advocate with integrity that the Americans be more sensitive to acid rain and other environmental problems; by re-instating the herring gull egg program which monitors toxins in the Great Lakes, and by reversing cuts in wildlife services, some of which affect international agreements and concerns like the future of the porcupine caribou herd in the Yukon.

EMPLOYMENT

UTILIZATION OF LAPRADE FUND

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, the Trois-Rivières riding which I have the honour to represent in the House is one of those that have been affected by the notorious and dismal affair of the Laprade Fund. I use the expression "dismal affair" because the previous government never fulfilled its commitments in this regard. We all know that the money earmarked for the Laprade plant project that never materialized was supposed to be spent in the affected ridings to create permanent jobs, mostly in the energy sector.

Mr. Speaker, the previous government, not content with failing to fulfil its promises, made a farce out of the Laprade Fund by distributing right and left, here and there and everywhere in a wanton fashion subsidies which have never created permanent jobs of any sort.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot find words strong enough to describe the stupidity of the previous government in this affair, and my constituents are well aware that the members of that government are now trying to wash their hands of the whole mess as they sit on benches opposite. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that for my constituents it is better that way.

ABORTION

APPEAL AGAINST ACQUITTAL

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are law-abiding people and expect our courts and juries to uphold the law of the land. Yet in Toronto a jury acquitted Dr. Morgentaler, who admitted he broke Canada's laws and would continue to do so. A father who breaks the law by stealing bread to feed his hungry children is sent to jail, but in this case we have a jury acquitting a man who denies life to unborn babies. The fact that he has broken the law many times should not now make it right and proper. These juries are saying: "Break the law often and it is okay". If one believes the law is wrong, he has every right to work for a change but, until it is changed, it should be obeyed. Any other philosophy will bring chaos to the country.

Morgentaler's lawyer appears to justify breaking the law by saying: "... the right to control one's body is essential ... ". Right on, Mr. Lawyer, but that control should happen before the act of intercourse, not by killing the child after he or she is conceived. I congratulate the Government of Ontario for appealing this case, and I hope the appeal court makes it abundantly clear that the laws of Canada must be obeyed by all, including Dr. Morgentaler.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEWFOUNDLAND POLL FAVOURING LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I would borrow a phrase from President Reagan by saying that we will soon be able to consign those kinds of dinosaurs to the ash bin of history.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: I rise today to tell the House that the rebuilding of the Liberal Party of Canada has already begun under our most distinguished and right hon. Leader (Mr. Turner). On Monday a major poll conducted by Eastcan Research of Halifax was released and showed that the Liberal Party of Newfoundland now stands at 48 per cent in the polls while the governing Tories stand at 42 per cent. This poll shows what Newfoundlanders think of the Tory way of doing things, both in the Province of Newfoundland and here in Ottawa. Newfoundlanders and Labradorians have recognized the age-old maxim of our grandfathers: Tory times are indeed hard times.

May I offer a word of advice to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)? He should listen less to the applause of the mindless 211 cheerleaders he brought with him to the House of Commons, and pay more attention to the voices of the people of Canada who are upset at the double-cross that was perpetrated on them by a Prime Minister who promised compassion and gave them a cold shoulder, who promised to listen and gave them a closed door, and who paraded himself as the voice of ordinary Canadians, but who, in only a few months, has forgotten where those Canadians live and who they are.

[English]

THE ECONOMY

INVESTOR CONFIDENCE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I would like to address my question to the Prime Minister, who has just entered the House. I am tempted to note that the Minister of Finance is so afraid of losing his briefs that he is costing the Canadian taxpayers their shirts.

He confirmed in the House yesterday that we would see interest rates of 6.5 per cent. At the same time, in the same week, he authorized a long-term 20-year bond issue at 12 per cent that will cost Canadian taxpayers millions and millions of unnecessary dollars, if his forecast is correct.

How can the Government instil the sense of investor confidence in the private sector that it seeks if it issues a forecast which is completely imcompatible with the bond issue authorized earlier this week?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that this Government instills a sense of confidence, in the markets and elsewhere, by bringing the first degree of sanity into the public finances of the country that we have seen in a long, long time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: One of the major offenders who sent out conflicting signals was my hon. friend when he was running for the leadership of his own Party. He contradicted official government policy. He confused a lot of people, including the delegates to the Liberal leadership convention—but not enough.

The policies of economic renewal and growth which have been set out by the new Government and by the Minister of Finance are the stuff which will inspire sound decisions and will bring back a positive investment climate which will create jobs in Canada.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, that's no answer; it is more bafflegab of the kind we got yesterday from the Minister of Finance.

GOVERNMENT BOND ISSUE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Finance. If there are anticipated declines in interest rates, there are ways of managing the public debt under those circumstances. Undoubtedly the Minister has heard of, or perhaps considered, indexed bonds. Why does the Government not take this opportunity to cancel the issue that was proposed this week, go back to the drawing board and come up with a flexible instrument which will send a positive signal to the private sector and will result in the saving of millions and millions of dollars for Canadian taxpayers?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to answer the Hon. Member's question. I recall a time when the former Government issued Canada Savings Bonds at 19 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: We have no intention of cancelling the issue. It was appropriately priced and placed in the market. We are thoughtful when we put these issues together. As the Minister of Finance has suggested, our intent is for interest rates to come down under our administration. That has been a long time coming because of the former Government's record.

ECONOMIC STATEMENT CREDIBILITY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that we are not going to see Ministers indulging in political arithmetic, because political arithmetic is exactly what she has just indulged in.

Is the Minister really not saying that the economic forecast was not credible, that the interest rate forecast was not credible, and that the deficit forecast was not credible? In short, is she not saying that the entire economic program as announced in the mini Budget of November 8 is not credible?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I know that many of my hon. colleagues in this House agree that indeed, the economic statement was credible. Canadian people believe it is credible. I am sorry that the Hon. Member is having difficulty finding it credible.

DISASTERS

INDIA—UNION CARBIDE INDUSTRIAL TRAGEDY IN BHOPAL

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. Canadians are horrified by the tragic accident at the Union Carbide plant in Bhopal, India. Is the Right Hon. Member in a position to inform Canadians what kind of assistance the Canadian Government is offering to our friendly allies in the Indian Government?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government shares the horror which is expressed by the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice. We have been, as he will understand, in active touch with Indian authorities. I am not at this stage in a position to announce the response of the Government of Canada, if, indeed, a response is appropriate in terms of aid or other assistance to the people of India.

INDIAN DISASTER—MEASURES TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of the Environment.

I would like to ask the Hon. Minister whether her department is now taking the necessary action to prevent such a tragedy from occurring in our own country—it appears the same company is engaged in similar activities here in Canada—and in such a way that we can guarantee Canadians that there is no possibility a tragedy of this kind will occur in this country.

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Commission de la santé et de la sécurité au travail du Québec is monitoring Union Carbide factories very closely on behalf of the Province of Quebec, and I am keeping in touch with provincial agencies to ensure that an accident of this kind does not happen here.

PRODUCTION AND EMPLOYMENT SURVEY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the November survey of the purchasing managers of Canada which shows the sharpest drop in production and employment which we have seen in the last two years. A spokesman for their association said in reference to the business community: "There sure seems to be a lack of confidence". Because of the shocking results of the survey which show this drop in production and employment, is the Minister now prepared to recommend to Cabinet a change of the policy of spending cuts and tax increases which, obviously up to this stage, has not worked?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the Hon. Member that the measures we have proposed are not working, and will not work. This is a very small survey. I believe there were some 200 firms involved. As the Hon. Member knows, there are any number of surveys coming up, with any number of conclusions. Our forecasts indicate, and our information is that confidence is increasing in this country, and will continue to do so.

MEASURES TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Since business has already lost confidence in this Government's economic policies, what other measures does the Government intend to take in order to turn this trend around, if it remains as it is now?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this Government is working every day toward rebuilding confidence and employment. I might point out to the Hon. Member that, even in the survey from which he quoted, production had increased by 23 per cent.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister knows, on November 8 his Government cancelled the summer employment program for students, which represents a cut of $85 million in the Summer Canada Program. He should also know that in only four months, approximately on April 15, the students of Canada will be on the streets and available for work.

Many students are already looking for summer employment. Many of them are wondering how they are going to pay for next year's tuition. Will the Prime Minister assure this House that if he has any alternative program for summer employment—if he has one—he will do as was done in other years, and announce that program before this House adjourns on December 21?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has already assured the Hon. Member, and through him, the House, that the programs of the previous Government in this area were unworkable—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —and considered as such by all Canadians, including the students of Canada who passed judgment on them along with the rest of the country, on September 4. We will have in place appropriate and helpful programs to deal with the requirements of students, in advance of next summer, by a long shot.

• (1425)

REQUEST FOR REINTRODUCTION OF SUMMER CANADA PROGRAM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have the impression the Prime Minister is telling the country and the students that he has no program for next summer. As he knows, the Minister of Employment has told us that she is launching a series of consultations with business, the provinces, and the unions. That will take three months, too late for next summer.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Allmand: Will the Prime Minister, at least for this year, reintroduce the Summer Canada Program? Will he also table the proposals the Minister of Employment is bringing to the provinces, the unions, and the business sector, so that we can all be privy to the documents she will discuss with them?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, 10 years of silence on the Liberal benches have done wonders for his lungs, but not for his logic.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: No action.

Mr. Deans: That is what you meant by civility.

Mr. Mulroney: The Minister will be bringing forward helpful programs designed to assist students who need these programs.

Mr. Allmand: When?

Mr. Mulroney: At the earliest possible moment pursuant to an intensive and thoughful consultation process, and in ample time to deal with the requirements of students.

Oral Questions

ENERGY

IMPACT OF MOVE TO WORLD OIL PRICES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Energy confirm the general accuracy of a report by Cyrus J. Lawrence, a prominent energy analyst from New York City, who says that the chief beneficiary of the Government's change to world oil prices will be Imperial Oil which will receive a windfall profit on its own oil of $95 million, or roughly 60 cents a share?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the chief beneficiary of our move to world oil prices will be the unemployed Canadians who will be back to work because of the changes that take place in energy.

REQUEST THAT WINDFALL PROFIT TAX BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, since the ordinary Canadian will be paying this $95 million at the tank and in his heating bill, is the Minister prepared to say that she will apply a windfall profits tax to this gift of $95 million?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of going to world oil prices is to get some cash flow generated in the energy industry which will supply jobs and energy security for Canadians at a time when our foreign sources of supply are looking unstable.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Secretary of State whose responsibility includes student loans. He has just heard that the Conservative Government still has no program in place for employment this summer that the students know about. He also knows that 94 per cent of post-secondary graduates hold down jobs.

Can he tell us why the Government has frozen $5 million which is used for student loans, and taken a route which will most certainly add to youth unemployment instead of reducing it? Is the money going to be saved on the backs of our youth?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague will know that there is division of opinion amongst Canadian students regarding the relative importance of additional financial support for student loans, and of incentive to create jobs. The students are concerned almost to a person that there be jobs available when they are finished university. Therefore, the result was a decision by this Government to focus on job creation and at the same time, as he knows, the assistance to students under the Canada Student Loans Program was increased by this House last year.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister sit in submissive silence while the Government freezes this additional grant of $5 million, and at the same time it plunks down $220,000 for the education of political aides? Is the education of political commissars more important than the education of young people to get a job?

Mr. Beatty: Ask Lloyd Axworthy.

Mr. Axworthy: Mine were already trained when I got them.

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member chooses to ignore the adjustments in assistance to the students which were made during the last period of time. He also chooses to ignore the fact that it was his Party which imposed six and five on the entire university community and brought about increased pressure upon the institutions and the students.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING—MORATORIUM PROPOSAL

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On November 30 he said that he would consider proposing to the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. a ban on further Cruise missile deployment. Does the Minister's suggestion of November 30 mean that Canada will actively consider joining Belgium and other NATO advocates in calling for a moratorium on further Cruise missile deployment in Europe?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have tried to make clear on two occasions in the House, we are considering whether, in light of the very encouraging initiative taken by the Soviet Union and the United States to resume discussions about nuclear arms control, there are initiatives or suggestions that it would be useful for Canada to make to both parties as a means of advancing that process. That is a matter which is still under very active consideration. I expect to be in a position to indicate whether we think it would be useful to take that kind of initiative, before the week is out. If we decide it would be useful to take initiatives of that kind, I will naturally indicate to the House the nature of any communication we would send to both parties in the context of trying to add to the success of the Geneva talks.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is not interested in joining Denmark, Greece, and other NATO partners in a nuclear freeze, and is not interested in joining the initiative which has now come from Belgium and other middle-sized NATO countries to call for a ban on deployment of Cruise missiles, how can we avoid the conclusion that he is not interested in any NATO initiatives except those that are authorized by the Pentagon?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I frankly doubt that I will ever persuade the Hon. Member, but I have some faith that the general public of Canada is far more understanding, both of the issue and the effectiveness of Canadian response.

Ms. Jewett: You don't even listen to the Canadian public.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Surely there has not been a time when it would be less appropriate for the Government of Canada to act independently, in a way that may upset the agreement that has been reached between the Soviet Union and the United States to come together on talks, than it would be to do that now. It is the view of the Government that there has been a very significant move forward on the part of the Soviet Union and the United States in their agreement to come together to talk about how we can reduce nuclear arms.

Ms. Jewett: What about Belgium?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We want to advance that process, not throw it off course.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: What about Greece?

GEORGES BANK BOUNDARY DECISION—POSSIBLE UNITED STATES REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It has been reported that the Reagan administration will formally request a one year moratorium on the implementation on of the Georges Bank boundary decision. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated that should such a request be made it would not be accepted, but that he would renegotiate or deal with the U.S. officials should a request be made. Will the Prime Minister assure the House today that such a moratorium will not be accepted by the Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton East for her applause. I hope that from time to time she will extend that same courtesy to her Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The question raised by the Member for Egmont is very important. We have not received an official request from the Government of the United States. The position of the Government of Canada is very clear. We did not want to have this matter resolved in the courts. We preferred to have it resolved through negotiation. It went to the courts, and there has been a decision rendered by the courts which we regard as final.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs for that answer.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER NEGOTIATE MANAGEMENT AGREEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Will he use his offices to deal directly with the President of the United States and the U.S. administration in order to effect a good management and conservation agreement based on good, sound management principles in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, which will benefit both Canadian and American fishermen?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly continue to use my good offices to advance the cause and interests of Canadian fishermen.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED SALE OF MILITARY AIRCRAFT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Why is it government policy at this time, in order to sweeten the deal about to be entered into between Canada and Turkey for the sale of some Buffalo STOL military aircraft, to add to it a gift of some 20 CF-104 Starfighters, precisely when the NATO countries of Turkey and Greece are almost at the brink of going to war over the remilitarization of some of the islands in the eastern Aegean, especially when our own Canadian soldiers may be caught in the crossfire in Cyprus?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that it has been the practice for some time for Canada and other NATO countries, when there is a change in the aircraft we use, to make available to other NATO countries aircraft that will no longer be in use in Canada. It is my understanding that we have made that offer to both Greece and Turkey.

TENSION BETWEEN GREECE AND TURKEY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat my question in a much more important way. At a time when both of those countries may very well go to war and break up the southeastern flank of NATO, why is it that Canada insists on getting involved in the sale of arms to precipitate that kind of blow-up in the eastern Mediterranean which may end the southeastern flank? It is most serious.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I find it surprising that the Hon. Member appears to have come to a sudden awareness of the tensions between Greece and Turkey.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Those have been known to most Members of the House, and to the Canadian public, for a long time. If I may deal with what I think is the assumption at the basis of his question, naturally we would not be entering into those kinds of arrangements if we thought there was a significant danger of Canada's involvement heightening the tension or making it more dangerous.

PENITENTIARIES

ESCAPE OF THREE INMATES FROM BATH INSTITUTION

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Is the Minister aware that yesterday in my constituency three persons escaped from the Bath Institution, possibly with outside help, then forcibly entered a home, terrorized two hostages, left them bound, and stole their car and three weapons? I am appalled at this incident and at the many escapes that have taken place in that area.

What measures is the Solicitor General taking to ensure that this kind of terrorizing does not recur? Will he give the House assurance that he will look closely at the problem of classification of inmates?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can well imagine the trauma suffered by the Reeve and his wife, and the frustration felt by the Hon. Member, as a result of this very regrettable incident. As the Hon. Member knows minimum security institutions have, as a key element, the classification of the types of people who are in them. Predicting human behaviour is an inexact science. I am awaiting the result of thesecurity inquiry and the rationale for having these particular inmates in that particular institution.

THE CONSTITUTION

JURIDICAL BILINGUALISM

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Crosbie). Section 133 of the constitution requires the use of bilingual introductory documents before the Quebec courts and at the federal level. Since the Minister of Justice has made an about-turn withdrawing his support for juridical bilingualism, more specifically in the MacDonald case in Quebec involving a ticket drawn up in French only handed to that gentleman, is the Minister of Justice effectively going to be the executioner of linguistic equality for any minority wherever it lives in this country?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. gentleman is referring to the MacDonald case in the City of Montreal. The issue there is the language of the ticket. We are intervening in the Supreme Court of Canada appeal to put forward the Government's position on official language issues. We have given financial assistance to the litigant who was arguing that the ticket was invalid because it was in English only. However, it is not a comparable case to the Bilodeau case. I am sorry; it was in French only.

Mr. Lapierre: Or Chinese.

Mr. Crosbie: It could be German.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Could he explain this contradiction to the House and Canadians? The Secretary of State finances the Courts Challenges program and has given money to Mr. MacDonald, as the Minister has just indicated, to present his case in front of the Supreme Court of Canada. The Minister of Justice in the same Government is taking a diametrically opposed view, in oppositon to the position held by the minority group. Can he explain that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the explanation is quite simple. This is not something new. This has been the policy for a number of years.

Mr. Gauthier: This is the first time you have done it.

Mr. Crosbie: The object of this program is to permit official languages issues to be tested in the courts. It is not to give financial assistance only to those litigants who make arguments with which we agree.

In some cases we finance the litigants because they have an issue that should be decided upon by the courts but we take the opposite point of view and argue an opposite point of view. That has been going on for 10 years or since the policy has been in effect. There is nothing peculiar about it. The hon. gentleman should be supportive of it.

Mr. Gauthier: Baloney. You have changed your position.

AUDITOR GENERAL

PETRO-CANADA PURCHASE OF PETROFINA—ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In light of his election promise to make available to the Auditor General of Canada all the information that he wanted pertaining to the Petro-Canada takeover of Petrofina, why did he change his mind, accept the advice of the Clerk of the Privy Council and cut off access to certain information, including information that the previous Liberal Cabinet wanted kept secret? The Prime Minister had a choice. Why did he not provide the openness that he promised?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that my hon. friend knows full well that I have tried to live up to the letter and the spirit of that commitment. I have met with him and explained privately, as I have explained publicly in the presence of my right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, that it was the intention of this Government to put out under public scrutiny all of the information that was available to us so that the Auditor General and the Canadian public could make a decision in regard to the Petrofina-Petro-Canada transaction.

I referred to the difficulty we were having in terms of Cabinet confidences as they affect communications between Ministers, that constitutional custom has required that they remain private. They do not affect this ministry. We have nothing to hide at all.

It was my view that, by instructing the Chairman of Petro-Canada to attend before the Public Accounts Committee and to bring all information, that would be a significant first step in providing Canadians with all of the information that they require in this file.

REQUEST THAT CONVENTION GOVERNING CABINET DOCUMENTS BE CHANGED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that there is an important difference between the work of a committee of this House, as important as that is, and the ongoing rights and responsibilities of the Auditor General. There is a fundamental difference in responsibilities.

Why did he not change the existing convention which hitherto has excluded our Auditor General from having access to such information? I ask this in light of the fact that the Auditors General of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, with whom I have just spoken, have the precise right that the Prime Minister promised to give our Auditor General. Why did he not deliver on that promise of openness?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed I have been attempting to deliver fully on that commitment, which is not all an unreasonable one. I felt that the proper manner in which to proceed was to make sure that all evidence that impacted upon that transaction, hopefully including the presence of former Ministers of Energy before the committee, be educed to enable the Auditor General and the people of Canada to make that determination.

If that turns out not to be the case and the Auditor General feels that other information would be appropriately sought by him, I would be ready to meet with him to find a formula to allow him to secure that information.

We have absolutely nothing to hide. We did not do the deed; others did. We want it examined by the people of Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Either the Prime Minister does not understand the general principle or he is deliberately obscuring the reality.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is beneath even you.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we are concerned about the Auditor General having an ongoing right and not having to respond to a particular case. Why will the Prime Minister not give the Auditor General of Canada the right of access to economic information that he requires to do his job, and which the Prime Minister promised to Canadians during the election? You had a choice. Why don't you deliver?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is advancing a novel theory.

Mr. Broadbent: No.

Mr. Mulroney: It is that as Cabinet discussions ensue the Auditor General can be there to examine Cabinet documents in confidence.

Mr. Broadbent: No. That is not what I am saying.

Mr. Mulroney: That is exactly what you are saying. That is the inconsistency of your position.

Mr. Broadbent: That is not what I said.

Mr. Mulroney: That is why I have asked for something that appears to be difficult. I have asked for the good faith and co-operation of my friends from the NDP who, I am sad to say, appear to be more interested in scoring some brownie points than getting the truth out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: We want all the information made available to the people of Canada, and I need your help and co-operation to do it.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DELAYS IN MAIL DELIVERY THROUGH CALGARY POST OFFICE

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue in his position as the Postmaster General. Bearing in mind that mail moved from St. Joseph's, Missouri, to Sacramento, California, by pony express in a guaranteed ten-day period in 1860, does he approve of the fact that mail frequently going through the Calgary Post Office to rural small communities will too often take 10, 15 or 20 days for delivery?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): First, Mr. Speaker, let me thank the Hon. Member for his useful statistics. I can assure him that the Canada Post Corporation, in an attempt to cut storage costs, wants to move the mails as quickly as possible.

I will certainly refer his comments to the President of the Canada Post Corporation. I can assure him that the Corporation will do everything possible to speed up delivery.

SOCIAL SECURITY

BENEFITS PAID TO WIDOWS AND WIDOWERS AGED 60 TO 64 YEARS—EXCLUSION OF SINGLE, DIVORCED AND SEPARATED PERSONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

In answer to a question I put to the Prime Minister last Friday—if I may be allowed to quote Hansard, for it is a very important matter concerning the spouse's allowance for people aged 60 to 64—the Prime Minister said this:

—our objective is to help those people in our society who are most in need, and I think that is the basic purpose of any decent social program in this country.

Mr. Speaker, we believe there is a real need for such measures among people between 60 and 64—

Here is my question: does the Prime Minister know that he may have misled the House in his answer Friday since the program announced and selected by the Progressive Conservative government is designed exclusively for widows and widowers, and that it discriminates against the 340,000 Canadians who are separated, divorced or single and who have similar needs?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, the Government has indicated, both in the Throne Speech and in the economic agenda paper, that legislation will be forthcoming. If we had an economic climate whereby we could advance the cause which he puts forward, we would love to do it. We would love to help people who are in need. We will move as quickly as we can. That is why we want economic growth. I would suggest to him that he agree with us to reverse the economic trend of the Government of which he was a part, and have economic growth so that we can help the very people he asked about.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and it is directed to both Ministers. First of all, the Prime Minister did not answer because I am saying that he misled the House. Should he care to answer, I would ask him why he misled the House and raised false hopes in respect of elderly Canadians. To the Minister of National Health and Welfare, is he aware—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member now sits on the Opposition benches and he is raising strong objections against the economic assistance program for widows and widowers—that is what you are saying—whereas we are quite prepared to help those people in our society who are most in need.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SUGGESTION THAT ADEQUATE OFFER BE MADE TO DOMTAR EMPLOYEES AT LEBEL-SUR-QUÉVILLON, P.Q.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

At Lebel-sur-Quévillon, the workers at Domtar, a company in which the Quebec Government has a 45 per cent interest, have been on strike for seven months.

Since he will be meeting his new friend Mr. René Lévesque this week, could the Prime Minister suggest to Mr. Lévesque that it is high time Domtar employees were made a satisfactory offer so that the whole community could go back to work as soon as possible?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think we have inherited enough problems in this federal administration as it is, without my giving instructions or advice in this area to the Premier of Quebec.

You are right that we are trying to maintain friendly relations with the Government of Quebec, as we indeed are with the Government of Manitoba.

Mr. Rodriguez: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister show the 1,200 people of Quévillon who are on unemployment insurance as a result of this strike that he is concerned by the seriousness of the situation and that he will ask the Quebec Premier to intervene personally in order to put an end to the strike as soon as possible?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, we are always concerned about prolonged strikes. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has already held consultations on the matter and offered our assistance where it would be beneficial, but I think you will understand that it would be difficult for me to intervene directly in this matter. In the circumstances, however, I shall be glad to transmit my hon. friend's position and let Mr. Lévesque know that we are all hoping for a speedy end to the strike.

EDUCATION

UNIVERSITY OF SASKATCHEWAN—PROPOSED TOXICOLOGY CENTRE

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Prior to the September 4, 1984 election, his Department committed $2 million for a toxicology centre at the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon. Could the Minister advise the House if he would consider an increase in the financial commitment to the toxicology lab so that the University of Saskatchewan could establish a centre capable of meeting the needs of all western Canada?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question I remind him that this action was taken when the previous Government established an amount of $2 million just prior to the last election, under the program of centres for specialization. I assure him that it is a priority of this Government, in reviewing future involvement with the provinces, to encourage centres of excellence. I will be entering into discussions with my provincial colleagues, first of all about priorities for joint co-operation on federal-provincial relations. The type of situation which he outlined is the type which I believe will be a model for federal Government concern and support.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

NATIVE CLAIMS POLICY—COUNCIL FOR YUKON INDIANS DEADLINE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development told the House that he is going to launch a full-scale review of the native claims policy, including the possibility of abolishing the extinguishment requirement, provided the Minister of Justice does not stand in his way. That being so, could the Minister tell us why he is insisting that the deadline of December 31 be met in the claim which is being negotiated by the Council for Yukon Indians?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. As he may know, the deadline was not set by me. The deadline was set by agreement between the parties a year ago, and it was delayed for another year. I have simply taken the view that the agreement in principle, which has already been initialled, should now be ratified. I think that is a just and fair view within the existing situation.

At the meeting I had with the Council for Yukon Indians in Vancouver last week I outlined that situation. I think it is one that it understands, because I also indicated it to the Council in Yukon a month before that.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the Council for Yukon Indians is not ready to sign by December 31. Will the Minister take us into his confidence and tell us whether he is having undue pressure put upon him by the Hon. Member for Yukon? If that is the case, does he need any help from us in overcoming that pressure?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I indicated on an earlier occasion that my door is always open to the Hon. Member for Yukon. I think in this particular case the Hon. Member and I can rest easy. As he may well know, in my discussions with the Council for Yukon Indians in Yukon I indicated, on the question of extinguishment, that whatever change would occur with respect to the principle of extinguishment, the agreement would not be a bar to them. With respect to the funding, and the deadline of December 31, I indicated that the funding was available until the ratification occurred. If the ratification occurs, the funding will also flow.

I might also add that it is not a question of the CYI alone. There are 12 bands, eight of which have already indicated—

Mr. Speaker: Order, with great respect to the Minister.

YUKON INDIANS' CLAIM

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister and it is in regard to the same case. I think he is aware that just six days ago in Vancouver he made it very clear to aboriginal groups in British Columbia that his Department, and he personally, were undertaking a fundamental review of the aboriginal claims policy. I agree with my colleague who just asked the Minister a question. How can the Minister possibly expect the Council for Yukon Indians to ratify that claim when it was made quite clear to him, and to other Members of the House, that the Council was simply not ready to do that? He is jeopardizing the process with the Council for Yukon Indians, and with other aboriginal groups in Canada.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, if that were the case, I would agree with the Hon. Member; of course it is not. When I was in Yukon six weeks ago, I indicated to the Council for Yukon Indians, the chiefs, and the General Assembly, that on the question of self-government and extinguishment, two matters which were beyond the question of the agreement in principle, I would undertake to ensure that the agreement was not a bar to any future opportunity both in terms of self-government and extinguishment. That was understood, and that is exactly what I repeated in a letter to Harry Allen of the Council for Yukon Indians. I also repeated it in Vancouver. It is a just and fair agreement.

RATIFICATION OF CLAIM

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is asking the Council for Yukon Indians to buy a pig in a poke. Will he at least allow the CYI to wait, in terms of the ratification of its claim, until the Minister has completed a review in his own mind and has publicly examined and put forward the result of his fundamental review in terms of extinguishment and in terms of the aboriginal claims policy?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member understands that there was an agreement in principle. When in fact I became the Minister, the agreement in principle was already in place and initialled both by the negotiator for the Government and the negotiators for the CYI. Indeed they are in the process of ratification. All I want them to do is complete that ratification. I made two changes in order to assist—one with respect to extinguishment and one with respect to self-government. Those two matters were very important and went as far, I think it will be acknowledged, as it is possible to go.

• (1500)

Finally, may I say the choice is theirs. There is no pressure whatsoever. I indicated that December 31, their deadline, was acceptable to me.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to House business. I would like to advise the House of a change in the order of business for today. Rather than proceeding directly to Bill C-11, it is my intention to call the motion to establish the task force on reform of the House of Commons as the first item of business this afternoon. This motion stands as item No. 3 under the heading of Government Business on the Order Paper.

If the House concludes its consideration of the motion, we will then proceed to deal with Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, at second reading. When debate on Bill C-11 is completed, we will then call Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

With respect to the business for tomorrow, it is my intention to call, if necessary, Bill C-11, followed by C-12, in that order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO ESTABLISH TASK FORCE ON REFORM

The House resumed from Thursday, November 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

That a Special Committee of the House of Commons to be composed of Mrs. Bourgault and Messrs. Blaikie, Cooper, Ellis, Friesen, McGrath and Ouellet, be appointed to act as a Parliamentary Task Force on the Reform of the House of Commons to examine the powers, procedures, practices, organization and facilities of the House of Commons, bearing in mind the balance between the respective constitutional responsibilities and roles of the House of Commons and the Government, such an examination to include, but not be limited to, the following matters:

(a) the Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders;

(b) the role of the private Member in the House of Commons;

(c) the accountability of Ministers to the House of Commons;

(d) the legislative process;

(e) the funding, facilities and staff support services made available to Members of the House of Commons;

(f) the administration and management of the House of Commons; and

(g) the procedures and powers of Committees of the House of Commons and the role and the use of parliamentary task forces;

That the Committee have all the powers provided to standing Committees pursuant to Standing Order 69(8);

That the Committee have the power to retain expert, professional, technical and clerical staff;

That the Committee and members of the Committee have the power, when the Committee deems it necessary, to adjourn or travel from place to place inside and outside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the required staff accompany the Committee or members of the Committee, as the case may be;

That all the evidence adduced by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure and the reports of that Committee as tabled in the House of Commons during the 32nd Parliament be referred to the Committee;

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when an interim or final report of the Committee is completed, that the Committee shall report its findings by depositing its report with the Clerk of the House and that it shall thereupon be deemed to have been laid upon the Table;

That the Committee be authorized to include in its interim and/or final reports drafts of proposed permanent or temporary Standing Orders drawn to give effect, if concurred in by the House, to any permanent or temporary change or changes proposed by the Committee;

That the Committee be authorized to include in its interim and/or final reports recommendations as to the implementation of any reforms proposed in the reports of the Committee;

That Messrs. Penner, Binns, Comeau, Duguay, Jardine, Ravis and Young be appointed as alternate members of the Committee;

That changes in the membership of the Committee be made only pursuant to Standing Order 69(4)(b); and

That the Committee shall report to the House finally no later than June 28, 1985.

And on the amendment of Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques), seconded by Mr. Gauthier,—That the motion be amended by adding the following words:

"and that it be an instruction to the committee that it shall include in each report its assessment of the effects of its recommendations on the role and the rights of the opposition."

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As you will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, I have changed the order of business for today. I have the pleasure of advising the House that we have had discussions with the House Leaders with respect to the disposition of this important motion.

I simply rise to say that my understanding is that the Deputy House Leader of the Official Opposition and the House Leader of the New Democratic Party will be addressing their positions with respect to this matter. It is my understanding that we will proceed with the order of reference and allow the motion to pass in its original form. That will allow the very excellent committee of Private Members named within that order to proceed with the important and widesweeping powers contained in the order of reference.

It is with great pleasure that I indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, on this brief point of order, that we have in the spirit of co-operation agreed to proceed with this matter at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on this same point of order?

Mr. Deans: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and even more briefly than the House Leader. We have agreed to pass this post haste. My colleague from Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), who has the floor as I recall, is prepared to wind up his remarks in five minutes. At that point we will have no further speakers.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader is correct. We have had discussions on this subject and we are prepared to allow the motion to pass with very limited debate. We may have one more short speaker. I thought the House Leader might elaborate on some of the peripheral points accompanying this agreement, namely the fashion in which the Opposition will be dealt with in committees of this House and on related matters. Maybe he will let us in on his plans in this regard.

Mr Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I will wind up the debate.

Mr. Speaker: I take it we have finished with the point of order.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to wind up the remarks that I began several days ago on this topic. We were debating the establishment of the special committee to investigate the changes to the rules of the House of Commons. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, we had hit upon a rather unfortunate series of incidents. The various committees of the House were being struck under a set of rules and guidelines that ignored the long-standing traditions and past practices of those committees and of the House. It was a very difficult set of circumstances under which the changes to the rules of the House of Commons were to begin.

• (1510)

The Government had sent signals indicating that it was going to ignore a lot of the old traditions and past practices not only of this House but of parliamentary democracies all over the world. Members of our Party and Members of the Official Opposition as well expressed some doubts about opening up the process of reviewing the rules given the way we felt the current Government had mishandled its very huge majority in committee.

With some trepidation we are now prepared to resume the study of the rules of the House of Commons even though we note, as I noted the other day, that such a committee had done substantive work in the previous Parliament and had made reports which had unanimous support, not all of which have been acted upon. I feel that it might have been in the interests of parliamentary reform if those reports had simply been acted upon rather than beginning a whole new round of parliamentary review.

We are hoping that the Government will keep its word to act in a responsible manner in spite of its very large majority. Now that the Government's mind has been jogged by events of the past few days, we hope that it will continue to recognize the need, if a parliamentary system is to operate properly, for the Opposition to have its firm rights and responsibilities guaranteed not only by the rules but by the precedents and traditions of the House. We hope that that will be the case and I am looking forward to hearing from the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn). I would hope that he would confirm that guarantee and read it into the record so that we can finalize the decision to set up such a committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech? Debate.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to add a few brief words to what has already been said. As much as Members of the House are willing to entertain a proposal to have a special committee struck to change the rules of the House, I must say, and several of my colleagues are of the same opinion, that we question the Government's sincerity in doing this because at the same time as it was introducing such a motion, it was unilaterally changing the traditional rules under which we had operated. Specifically, Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to the first meetings of the committees of this House.

A few weeks ago we attended the first meeting of the Agriculture Committee and several Members who are present today will recall what happened then. Just for your information, Mr. Speaker, what opposition members had to contend with on that particular day was a series of pre-printed resolutions introduced by government members in committee. I am told that these resolutions were unprecedented. One of these resolutions was introduced by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais) and was a resolution to have the committee sit in a mini-quorum fashion for the purposes of hearing witnesses, having only four government Members present and without a representative of the Opposition.

Needless to say, several members of the committee, particularly opposition members, were very upset by this proposal made on behalf of the Government. The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) and I spoke extensively. As a matter of fact, the foundation meeting of the committee which traditionally lasts only a few minutes dragged on well into the better part of an hour and a half on account of the very difficult situation in which the Government chose to place the Opposition.

As far as I and many of my colleagues are concerned, if Conservative members want to hear witnesses on their own, they can call such a meeting a Tory task force and not a parliamentary committee. If there are to be such Tory task forces, then Tory members can invite guests at the expense of the Tory Party and not at government expense. As well, they should publicly advertise that it is in fact a Tory task force that is sitting. On the other hand, if we are to have parliamentary committees, we should respect the traditions of Parliament which are that opposition members are to be present at such committees.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that when there was a dispute in the House regarding how many Parties should be present in order to take a vote, the Government was made helpless for a number of days. A vote could not be taken when bells were being rung. The Government at that time simply had to wait for opposition members to return as per a ruling made by the Speaker. Everyone contended with that, as unfortunate as the incident was. Today, when the shoe is on the other foot, the Government says that it wants to be efficient. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture made a speech indicating that the Government should be efficient. Curtailing the role of opposition members was done in the name of efficiency.

Efficiency is a noble cause. We are all in favour of efficiency. I am sure that a dictatorship would be far less cumbersome than a democracy. However, we have not chosen to run our country by dictatorship. We have chosen to run it by parliamentary government and by responsible government through Members of the House of Commons. Having decided as a society to run our Government that way, I find the actions of the Government to be totally unreasonable.

This Government stated many times in the past during an election campaign which we can all remember that it was going to be open and accountable to Parliament. That was one of its 338 or so promises. It promised it would be respectful of Parliament's wishes. Government members said many other fine words to us during the election campaign.

Taking these actions in the name of efficiency is just not good enough. We in opposition are of the view that whenever a mini-quorum sits, there should be at least one opposition Member present. To refresh our memories, a minim-quorum means four Members sitting for the purposes of hearing a witness.

We are also of the view that the Member leading off in debate should always be a member of the Official Opposition according to the traditions of this House. Having myself come from another legislature, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that that is the way it was done there as well. The Official Opposition was usually recognized first in debate. I am sure that rule was not written down in any of the Standing Orders of that particular House of Assembly but it is an acknowledged principle under which Hon. Members always operated.

I would hope that now that the Conservative Party has formed the Government of the country, it will afford as many courtesies to the Official Opposition as the previous Government afforded the Conservative Party when it was in opposition. If I can make one promise, it is that we will not abuse the rules the way Conservative members did.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) on a question or comment?

Mr. Shields: No, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a few brief remarks.

• (1520)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I must say to my colleague that I was present at the time and that his eloquent intervention today comes as a surprise to me, because he did not even bother to join in the debate on a motion moved by the New Democratic Party and voted against the NDP on the very same principles he has just been upholding.

Mr. Boudria: I want to answer that, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member knows full well that we in the Official Opposition wanted our right to make the first intervention in a debate to be recognized. One can indeed refer to the Opposition generally, but the Official Opposition does have a special role. Having voted against the long-standing parliamentary practice, whereby there ought to be at least one Opposition Member in attendance for a mini-quorum, the Hon. Member ought to admit that he has to change his mind today as a result of the agreement among parties. Besides, I am sure he realizes now that he was mistaken when he took the position he did at the time.

[English]

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member recognizes the proposition to which he alluded about committees and the reduced quorum for the purpose of hearing witnesses. Does he not realize that this was done to accommodate people who might be travelling from the Northwest Territories or the far reaches of Canada to Ottawa to appear before a committee to give evidence which is taken down verbatim and made available? During the time of a reduced quorum, there would be absolutely no possibility of a vote. A full quorum is required for a vote. That protects opposition members. It was proposed strictly to accommodate that sort of thing and not to put the committee in a position where one or two opposition members may boycott the committee after having gon to the expense of bringing a number of people from British Columbia or the Northwest Territories to Ottawa to appear before the committee. Has the Hon. Member given that some thought?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, certainly we have given that some thought. But I want to remind the Hon. Member that if we want to hear witnesses and if the Government on that particular day, through some misfortune, is in the position of having no opposition members present, all it has to do is find four more members. If there are eight members present, an opposition member does not have to be present. Obviously, that point is not valid.

We are talking about the presence of an opposition member for the purpose of a mini-quorum, not for the purpose of a full quorum. A full quorum of eight members has not got the necessary component of having an opposition member in order to deliberate. Now that the Hon. Member has mentioned that, it should be changed as well. The rule should be changed to require an opposition member to be present whether it is a full quorum or a mini-quorum. However, we are not talking about that today; we are talking only about a mini-quorum. In other words, a quorum of four for the purpose of listening to witnesses.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any further questions or comments?

I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister that if he intends to speak he will be closing the debate.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): No, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Fine.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Prescott-Glengarry—

Mr. Boudria: Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. He can henceforth refer to my constituency as West Saskatoon.

This is a situation in which there have been discussions between the Parties. I will not belabour the point which has been made, except to say that we are very serious on the government side in ensuring that the rules are fair, not only in terms of the majority of the Members of the House, but fair with respect to the rights of the Opposition. This particular situation is one which has caused some concern for the Opposition. As has been pointed out on different occasions, it was not intended to cause the Opposition any reason for concern. However, because it has been raised and because there is a question of perceived fairness, I will be quite happy to deal with it.

I have indicated publicly and I will reiterate on the floor of the House of Commons that henceforth, in terms of the reduced quorum for the purpose of hearing evidence in committee, we are prepared to have in the standing committees a motion put forward which would provide for the presence of one member of the Opposition as a minimum for the purpose of hearing evidence. I believe the majority of committees have already passed that motion. It is to ensure that opposition members will be present. Opposition members from time to time have pointed out to me what I think is a truism; that is to say, it is not their intention to abuse the right of having one Hon. Member appear before committees. I accept their words as serious Members of Parliament on behalf of their respective Parties. We all share the same interest, that is, to make this institution as effective as possible.

I am pleased that this particular motion will be passed. It is an opportunity to examine the operation of this institution and to consider how we can better strengthen the role of Private Members, not only on the floor of the House of Commons, but also in terms of their work within committees.

Reference has been made to the fact that previous work has already been done with respect to the Standing Orders. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) has drawn this point to the attention of the House. I have taken a position in the spirit of consensus which I believe must exist on this committee. It would have been very easy for us to have taken unilateral action. The substantial majority which we have in this House would have allowed us to move forward and implement our view of how the universe should unfold in terms of parliamentary reform.

Reform without consultation is no reform at all. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre asked me to consult the operation of the House as it is now constituted. I accept that and propose to do so. There have been a number of meetings and I have tried to advise the opposition Parties in every instance of the Government's intention with regard to legislation, statements or other initiatives. That is absolutely essential to the operation of the House.

With respect to the recommendations of the past Parliament, there are new Members who should have the benefit, through their representatives on this committee, to examine and review the recommendations brought forward by the previous committee. That is a fair and equitable way in which to deal with this. It was not our intention to prolong debate, because the committee which is about to be formed has a limited life-span. It is required to report before the end of June, 1985. Time is of the essence. It will be required to make serious analyses and serious suggestions—

Mr. Deans: Why don't you sit down if time is of the essence?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I will tell you a secret about the House Leaders' meetings. I have to listen to the House leader of the NDP hour after hour, so now I will have my day in front of the television cameras. I should get the George Cross medal for bravery!

I appreciate the spirit of co-operation that has existed. In terms of the operation of the committee, the request has been made that the Official Opposition have precedence in leading the questioning, particularly with respect to estimates and the examination of expenditures. That is a tradition with which I am quite satisfied and with which I agree. There will be equity in terms of operation of the committees. I look forward to the work of the committee proceeding at the earliest possible date so that we will have the benefit of the sage counsel and advice of the excellent members who have been asked to serve.

• (1530)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments on the Hon. House Leader's speech?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment that the formula which was just proposed by the Government House Leader would satisfy us. After all the debate which has been had in this House on this subject, I believe we are coming to terms regarding more reasonable arrangements which will be suitable to us. I take it from what the Government House Leader said that perhaps it was something which happened with new members on the committee. It was certainly not something planned by himself or by the Government.

We feel better about it now and I would even go as far as to suggest to Hon. Members that, if I had unanimous consent, I would withdraw my amendment, which was seeking, in fact, some form of protection for Hon. Members representing the Opposition. If it is agreeable to Hon. Members, I will withdraw the amendment and we could continue on with the main motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) is withdrawing the amendment. Is there unanimous consent for its withdrawal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Guilbault, Saint-Jacques) withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question on the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn) agreed to.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85 (No. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Riis (p. 694).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger).

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I understand that an Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party has to leave shortly because of an appointment. With your accord, I would desist from speaking at this time, as long as you could rearrange the order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Fine. Then I will recognize the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his co-operation in allowing me to catch a plane.

I rise at this time to speak in favour of the motion of my colleague that the borrowing recommendations of this Government be changed. This is the first occasion, except for the period of Standing Order 21 statements and Question Period, on which I rise to speak in this House.

I would like to say a few words in relation to my election on September 4. The voters in my riding made two very important decisions on that day. First, like many other Canadians they decided enough was enough and that Liberals should no longer reign in this country. Where my constituents differed from a large majority of the population of Canada is that they saw through the promises made by the Conservative Party, realized that they were no different from the Liberals and opted instead for New Democratic representation in this House.

This Bill, Mr. Speaker, is yet one more example of why my constituents voted the way they did. If they had voted Conservative, they would have been voting for borrowing authority of $16 billion sight unseen, with no indication of what the money was going to be spent for. If I dared to vote in favour of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, my constituents would have every right to ask me to resign immediately. I want to thank those voters, Mr. Speaker, for their support and for their faith in my abilities. I also want to thank my riding association and the hundreds of persons who worked not only during the two-month pre-election period but who have worked over the last seven years to send me to this House. I would also like to take this opportunity to thank my family without whose support I would not be here.

I am very pleased to speak today on this Bill, Mr. Speaker, because this week marks a very important event in the riding of Thunder Bay-Atikokan and in the neighbouring riding of Thunder Bay-Nipigon. For the first time in a number of years citizens of those ridings who are cable subscribers are able to watch the House of Commons live without the aid of a converter. I noticed earlier today the former Member of Parliament for Thunder Bay-Atikokan was in the gallery, the now reincarnated commissioner for the CRTC. I am sure he will be pleased to know that whereas he was unable to make that change in the television service, I was successful.

The community of Thunder Bay and Atikokan and the parts in between have suffered much over the last number of years. This past winter there were over 14,000 people registered as out of work and looking for employment in our communities. That cost is staggering, Mr. Speaker. One of the reasons I am opposed to borrowing $16 billion without knowing what it is going to be spent on is that my constituents believe that they should know how this Government is going to deal with their unemployment situation. That unemployment problem is extremely expensive. Unemployment insurance benefits last year for the Thunder Bay district amounted to $55.7 million. Welfare benefits for the City of Thunder Bay cost $2.5 million. Lost federal revenue over the same period amounted to $144 million. That is well over $200 million cost to the taxpayers of this land because of the unemployment situation in the Thunder Bay area, and it is the direct result, Mr. Speaker, of too many years of Liberal economic policies, which seem very clearly to be carrying through under the Conservative reign.

There is a plant in Thunder Bay called CanCar Rail Incorporated. It is a facility which was nationalized by Bill Davis and company, the Conservatives of Ontario. It is currently without functioning contracts. Its employees have been laid off for well over a year. In fact, in September ten employees became exhaustees of unemployment insurance; in October 150 employees became exhaustees; in November it was 100, and in December 25 to 50 employees have run out of unemployment insurance benefits. Those employees will not be getting back to work until June at the earliest. It is very clear that this new Government must act to provide some kind of income support in order to allow these people to survive over this long winter.

Before we approve any spending of this nature, we would also like to see what kind of urban transport policy will be put in place. What kind of program will there be for VIA to require the production of double-decker rail cars? Both of these things will have a big impact on the CanCar rail facilities.

Because the railroads and the Wheat Board could not come to an agreement last winter as to how much to pay to ship grain from Thunder Bay to the Seaway ports, over 1,000 men and women were laid off. This year it will be worse. The combination of poor crops in the lower Prairies and the two bridge failures we have experienced and are still experiencing will cause those lay-offs to occur again. In fact, there will be more people laid off and for a longer period of time.

We must do something about the capacity of the port of Thunder Bay. The lake shippers would like to have elevators which are almost full so that they can move their boats in and out very rapidly. The railways, on the other hand, would prefer to have the elevators nearly empty so they can move their cars in and out quickly. Thunder Bay is an extremely fine-tuned port. If nothing goes wrong on the rail or the water, everything moves smoothly. However, if there is a disaster on the rail lines which blocks CN or CP from coming in for any length of time, the port of Thunder Bay is in trouble. If the problem of the damaged bridge on the St. Lawrence had occurred in July, Mr. Speaker, the port of Thunder Bay would have shut down because it would have filled up very quickly.

The community of Atikokan was abandoned by the former Liberal government. It was only provided with make-work projects after the two mines closed. Every day in this House, Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at how we did not learn from the experience of Atikokan. We did not learn that we should not allow Canadian steel companies to purchase their iron ore from the United States. We did not learn that we should not allow companies to shut down communities arbitrarily, because it is not just mines we shut down, it is communities. Well, Atikokan is surviving, but no thanks to the federal Government. It is surviving due to individual initiative by the people in that community, but there are still some needs that have to be dealt with.

I noticed with interest that earlier this fall, when a mine closed in the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Government was very quick to provide some special assistance to that community. Well, the special assistance I need for the community of Atikokan is income support for those miners laid off in 1979 and 1980. Because of age and the damaged bodies they have as the result of many years in the mine, they need some kind of early retirement program which will allow them a decent level of survival. I want to know what kind of programs this Government will have next summer. I want to know now so I can tell the young people in my community what kind of jobs will be available to them. They are planning for their future and they want to make sure they can afford to go back to school next fall. So far this Government has done nothing but reduce the amount of employment opportunities.

There are many more things I could say about my community, but I will leave it at that for now. To summarize, I would just like to suggest that much has been said about the need to restore investor confidence in this country. What we really have been witnessing is nothing but a confidence game rather than a means of establishing confidence. We need a mechanism to ensure that people are put back to work. The majority of Canadians would prefer to work, whether it is in the home or outside. They would rather be doing that than collecting pogey or welfare. If we in the NDP were to support this Bill and the borrowing of $16 billion, we would be giving the Government a blank cheque and I do not think the people of Canada want us to do that.

[Translation]

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, for me also this is the first opportunity I have to rise in this new Parlement, and I would like to take a few seconds to thank my constituents of Laurier for the confidence they showed me on September 4. I am very proud of the relationship I have established with so many people in my constituency from the time I was first elected in 1979, and I would like to give to all the men and women in my riding the assurance that I will do everything in my power to deserve their confidence during this new term of office.

I am very pleased to rise in this debate on borrowing authority, and I also note with great interest that the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) is here, listening to this debate, because I have a few comments on matters for which he is responsible.

I would first like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and this bill requesting borrowing authority now before the House, coming so soon in the life of this new Parlement, prove to anyone who may still have any doubts about it the failure of this Progressive Conservative government. Perhaps you will say it is too early to make such an assessment, that I may be too critical. I do not think so, Mr. Speaker, and I will try to prove it within the next few minutes. Let us not forget that this Government was elected without a program and without goals. The only thing indeed that united that motley collection in the Progressive Conservative Party was that they were against the previous Liberal Government. Mr. Trudeau, the former Prime Minister, often reminded us that the Progressive Conservative Party represented all the people and all the elements in our society who were against something.

[English]

He referred on a number of occasions to that "coalition of antis".

[Translation]

It sems rather obvious by now that there is no strategy and no plan. The only thing we can see is a sort of hardened position based on the Conservatives' blind faith that the deficit has to come down no matter what, and a few weeks ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) let the axe fall right and left without suggesting alternative solutions. They are now seeking our approval to borrow, but we do not have a budget, we do not have estimates.

The cutbacks ordered by the Conservative government are a fair indication of what it does not like, but we do not know what it likes. Our leader, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) summed it up for us when he said: We will have to wait until spring to find out what this government likes. Mr. Speaker, that reminds me of a football team—I know you are a sports enthusiast and follow the game very closely—it reminds me of a football team whose defensive unit goes on the field, without a play—

[English]

The quarterback, as you know, Mr. Speaker, has to improvise. He goes into the huddle and scratches out the plays on the back of his hand or in the dirt. This is the kind of government we have today.

[Translation]

The government of the Progressive Conservative Party has no plays, it is always in a huddle, and Canadians are left to hope that the huddle will not last too long. This blind obsession with cutting down the deficit will have a devastating impact in the field of science and technology, my responsibility as Opposition critic. The new government was hardly sworn in that it rushed to cut research tax credits. A few weeks later, we heard the statement of the Minister of Finance and whole programs of energy and environmental research were terminated, whole programs of summer employment for youths and students, Summer Canada, labour training programs were cancelled, and all that in spite of the challenging promises of this government which was supposed to promote research in this country.

[English]

I remember that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was Leader of the Opposition last March or April, he made a speech and said that we must double research and development spending in this country and triple our resolve to reach it.

Mr. Siddon: Have patience.

Mr. Berger: But what have we seen? We have seen the contrary.

I am very pleased to see the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) here today. Earlier today I spoke to the chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and asked him if we could conduct hearings into the cutting, the slicing, the destruction of the energy division at the National Research Council. The Minister is very well aware of that. I cannot believe that this is what this Government intended. Something went wrong some place. I just cannot believe that it has embarked upon such a foolhardy path.

I would like to read into the record a letter to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), a copy of which was sent to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. It is from the Faculty of Engineering at the University of Waterloo. The author states:

● (1550)

The curtailment of the 61-man Division of Energy at the National Research Council is a great blow to Research and Development in renewable energy. What the government has done has far reaching negative consequences, specifically:

* Loss of jobs in the private sector, estimated at around 1500 to 2000. These are mainly in the small business sector.
* Loss of export potential for made-in-Canada renewable energy and energy conservation products.
* Loss of inflow of technical know-how through loss of participation in the International Energy Agency activities.
* Loss of highly skilled personnel at NRC and elsewhere whose efforts have put Canada in the forefront of alternative energy research.

In a similar letter from the Brace Research Institute Faculty of Engineering at Macdonald College of McGill University, the authors summarize some letters they have written to the Minister of State for Science and Technology and to the head of the solar energy program at the National Research Council. They write:

We feel that the Conservative Government is adopting a policy to completely dismantle the entire Canadian renewable energy industry which has a great potential for providing employment and small business opportunities for Canadians.

They are undertaking this dismantling operation without any consultation—

This puts the lie to every single promise that that Government and its Leader made.

—of those of us in the private sector who freely gave of our time and efforts to establish with the previous regimes, programmes destined to stimulate the Canadian economy.

They are ignoring the fact that Canada will host a World Forum of Renewable Energy in June 1985.

They are not diversifying our R&D capabilities in energy. Instead of undertaking R&D to create jobs they are putting us at the mercy of foreign imports.

I have several other letters which I will not be able to get to today, Mr. Speaker. I will conclude by saying that the Government has again provided us with no alternative. It has told us what it does not like. Presumably it does not like the energy division of the National Research Council. It does not like the summer employment program for students. They have not told us how these cuts are going to stimulate investment in the private sector.

I wish the Conservatives would explain to us how Canadian businesses are going to be taking more risks and how they are going to be putting up the research and development monies which we need in the country. The only answer they have is that these cuts will somehow reduce the deficit. Presumably they might lead to lower interest rates which would lead to further investments, except that in his statement the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) states very clearly that interest rates in Canada depend upon the United States.

[Translation]

Last Friday, November 30, less than three months after the election of this new government, was a historic day in Canada. For the first time, I heard one reporter—there might have been others—suggest that this government would only last one term.

[English]

In his column Don McGillivray stated:

The Tories don't look invincible now. It's strange now to remember the forecasts of only a couple of months ago that they would be unbeatable for a generation.

After the goofs of recent days, it's possible to see this as a one-term government, disintegrating like the government of John Diefenbaker did.

I rest my case, Mr. Speaker. I think I have read into the record ample evidence to demonstrate the intellectual bankruptcy of the Government. It will not take long before the Government starts to plummet rapidly in the polls of the country and in the confidence of the voters of Canada.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the comments of the hon. gentleman. He said that there has been absolutely no consultation with the non-renewable energy sector. I wonder if he is aware that they are having their convention at the present time. I spent—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. There are no questions or comments. Is this debate?

Mr. McDermid: I am sorry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Would you please take your seat. We are now on 10-minute straight speeches. There are no questions or comments. I would like to recognize the next speaker, the Hon. member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Mr. Blaikie: I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, perhaps somebody could send the new Member a copy of the Standing Orders.

Mr. McDermid: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry. I know this is Wednesday afternoon. On December 8 there will be a full moon. I would hope that Members would maintain decorum. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Mount Royal. No more points of order.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the legislation which is currently before the House, namely Bill C-11, the borrowing authority Bill. The Conservative Government is seeking authority to borrow $7.3 billion in the present fiscal year, 1984-85, plus $16 billion for the fiscal year 1985-86 for which it has not tabled, or does it intend to table, estimates until next spring. In essence, the Conservatives are asking us to accept, de facto, that they will seek to spend the people's money in the best interests of the people.

I suggest that the best interests of the largest percentage of the population are not being considered at all. In fact, the beautiful rhetorical phrases that the Government has used, is using and plans to continue using cover a travesty of its actions and its lack of concern for the majority of the population. They feel that they can lull us all into insensitivity to the real issues and the real plight by talking about, for example, imposing a minimum tax on the rich, which essentially will be a small amount of money in the total picture and certainly will not assure that justice and equity will be achieved. They think it will and plan to go merrily along their way implementing these unconscionable cuts which will surely severely affect the majority. We shall not be duped.

In its November 8 economic statement the federal Government announced that it planned to reduce its spending in the fiscal year by $4.2 billion through program expenditure reductions, eliminations and increased cost recovery. Of these reductions some $515 million, or 12 per cent of the total, can be said to be social-type expenditures. For example, expenditures of the Department of Employment and Immigration would be reduced by $432.3 million in 1984-85. Among the programs affected by the cuts will be the Mobility Program, the General Industrial Training Program, Young Workers Exchange Program and the Summer Canada Program. It is also anticipated that this Department's expenditures will be reduced by $200 million by tightening interviewing procedures to ensure that only those who are entitled receive benefits. I think, Mr. Speaker, you will recognize Flora's private snoopers there. I think that is a disgrace.

Another $90 million is expected to be saved by considering severance pay and pension income as earnings when determining the eligibility for unemployment insurance. Thus, workers who lose their jobs would not receive unemployment insurance benefits until they exhaust their company pension and their severance pay. This is a mean and reactionary cut-back that affects the least protected in our society and I believe has created much discontent.

● (1600)

Cut-backs in employment programs can be particularly consequential for women, young people, the handicapped and visible minorities. I suggest that these groups constitute a majority of our population. These groups suffer from higher than average unemployment rates and need special assistance to find work. The unemployment rate for women between the ages of 35 and 44 who return to work when their children enter school is much higher than that for men.

With the increasing need for two incomes in the family and with the increase in self-supporting women as a result of separation, divorce or their being unmarried mothers, the number of women looking for work is much greater than it was a few years ago.

With the workplace in transition, the need for training and retraining programs becomes an imperative for our new entrants to the workplace and those displaced by new technology. Since they do not have access to adequate training programs, the cut of $40 million in the General Industrial Training Program hits very hard. Women account for approximately 23 per cent of the trainees in this program. There must be an ongoing response to those who have difficulty finding work. The Government does not seem to be looking hard for those solutions.

The highest unemployment rate is among young people with very little or no previous work experience. That unemployment rate is close to 18 per cent. Although staying in school longer is one of the employment solutions, Canada student loans have been cut back by $5 million and $3 million has been cut from the Young Workers Exchange program and $85 million has been cut from Summer Canada. Without student loans and assistance in finding summer jobs, many young people will be forced to quit school. Yet many cannot find work. It is a vicious circle. The promises of action some time in the spring do not answer their need to develop to their fullest potential.

I believe the Government is completely forgetting about the finest natural resource that we have, our human resource. It has forgotten how one should go about developing that resource. Let me bring to the attention of the House an article that appeared in Le Droit today—

—where it is stated: "Champagne avoids the real problems."

The Minister Mrs. Champagne, who is also responsible for the coordination of activities related to the International Year for Youth in 1985, performed an incredible feat when she did not mention once in her speech the unemployment problem affecting 17 per cent of our young people between 15 and 24 years of age.

She did not refer either to the programs planned by her government. The young people were clearly disappointed when the Minister representing them in the government did not say a word or make a single policy statement about their future. I find that absolutely shocking, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Another important area that I would like to bring to the attention of the House is the expenditure cuts in housing. A cut of $9.6 million will affect social housing expenditures whose object is to assist Canadians whose income is insufficient to gain access to adequate housing. Another $29.4 million will be cut from the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, the object of which is the repair and modernization of existing houses and the improvement of housing and living conditions. In my riding of Mount Royal there is a tremendous number of old stock housing which is in serious disrepair and badly in need of renovation. We also have a high demand for co-op housing. These are the exact areas which the Government has chosen to cut.

My constituents and other Canadians with whom I have talked are obviously not saying the same things that the Minister of Finance, (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) or the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) have heard. That is of great concern to me. We must either speak louder or improve their hearing aids.

With respect to social housing, there are only 147 transition houses which provide emergency shelter, safe houses and second stage housing. We need many more. Only 45 per cent of Canada's population lives in an area with a shelter for battered women and most workers feel that funds need to be increased before real inroads can be made in attempting to address the housing shortage for battered women. In the last 20 years there has been an acute increase of single parent families from 6.5 per cent to 10.4 per cent. Elderly women are in serious need of protected housing. The Government's commitment to Canadians in need has reflected itself in decreased grants. These cut-backs seriously jeopardize the health and welfare of the general public.

In conclusion, the extent of the cut-backs may affect the service-producing industries in which women, youth, the handicapped and visible minorities are involved. I cannot support the budget or this Bill until we have some idea of what the Government plans to do.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have learned one thing in the years that I have been here, most of which have been during Liberal governments. This Bill has amply and vividly demonstrated that message. I have learned that the more things change, the more they are the same.

We are being asked to give the Government authority to borrow more money to finance its expenditures until the end of this fiscal year in March, 1985. That is a standard procedure which we see almost every year and to which we have no objection. However, the other aspect of the Bill is a proposal to allow the Government to borrow $16 billion for the next fiscal year.

The reason I began my remarks by saying that the more things change the more they are the same is that the Liberal government introduced a similar Bill. No one fought such a Bill more strenuously than the Official Opposition at the time, which is now the Government. When we dealt with a similar Bill in 1982, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), who was then the Leader of the Official Opposition, moved a motion. In that motion he said that the granting of authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than the amount which is required to meet the Government's need to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle and that the House therefore declines to give second reading. What the Secretary of State for External Affairs was objecting to then is precisely what his Government is asking the House to approve at this time.

While we are not opposed to the Government borrowing funds to meet its expenditures, we are opposed to giving the Government a blank cheque for the next year, for the same reasons which the Conservatives gave when they were in opposition. We have no budget for the coming year. We have no details or explanation of the kind of programs the Government proposes to put into effect. We certainly have no explanation in any detail about what cuts in existing programs it proposes to make. When we see the cuts that the Government has already made in this year's programs, we can have nothing but fear about what it proposes to do.

This is not the only government that has a deficit. I point out to Members of the House that every government in Canada, including the previous Liberal government, the present federal Government and every provincial government, including Conservative, NDP, Social Credit and Parti Québécois governments, have deficits. Even if there was a Liberal provincial government, it would have a deficit. Every provincial government has a deficit, not because they are overspending but because of the slowdown in the economy, the recession. Revenues are down. They are substantially lower than those governments had calculated. The only way in which they could operate without deficits would be by having major cut-backs in the services which provincial governments provide for the people in their provinces, and the people are not ready to accept that.

We do not have deficits because we are overspending. We have deficits because revenues are not what they should be. If our economy was working as it should be and instead of 11.5 per cent unemployment we had a 5, 6 or 7 per cent rate of unemployment, deficits would be very small.

Ten of the most prominent economists in academic communities in Ontario and Quebec and in think-tanks such as the C. D. Howe Institute have agreed that the Government should try to reduce the deficit. They have said that along with proposals to reduce the deficit, the Government needs to get the Bank of Canada to ease its monetary and fiscal policies. We cannot do much as long as we have interest rates such as those which prevail today.

We are told that interest rates are down substantially from what they were. However, the real interest rate—that is, the difference between the increase in the cost of living and the interest rates charged—is not down very much from the time when it was 20 per cent. It is now down by eight points, but the rate of inflation has also been reduced by the same amount. The real interest rate is very high and it will continue to be high as long as the Conservative Government follows the same advice which the former Liberal government received and permits the Governor of the Bank of Canada to tie our interest rate policy to the American interest rate rather than to have a policy which meets the needs of Canadians.

I oppose this Bill not only because it gives the Government money for the next fiscal year, but because I am very apprehensive about the kinds of cuts the Government has made in its desire, intention and determination to reduce the deficit. First of all, the Government cut back on programs which helped people in greatest need. I should like to give a few illustrations. It has cut back on housing programs which are very important to older people and people in the lower income brackets. It has cut CHIP by $84 million. There are thousands of homes in every city in Canada which were built 60 to 100 years ago. Those homes are energy inefficient. This program helped to rehabilitate such homes and help people save hundreds of dollars per year in heating costs. It was not only important to the individuals in those homes who benefited from the program; it helped cut down on the amount of heating oil and non-renewable energy resources which were being depleted at a rapid rate.

The Government has also cut $29.4 million from RRAP. In every city there are older homes which are falling into a state where they are virtually unusable. As a result of this program, funded in part by the federal Government and in part by provincial governments, tens of thousands of older homes in poor areas of our cities have been modernized and rehabilitated, have been rewired and replumbed. For the Government to cut back on that kind of program is a disgrace. Similarly there have been cuts in the funding of public housing. If there is one area in which the governments of Canada, federal and provincial, ought to be ashamed of themselves, it is in their programs to provide adequate housing for people in lower income brackets. I am thinking of people on welfare and single parent families. Their incomes are too low for them to obtain adequate housing. They need rental rates which they can afford, yet that is the kind of program which the Government cuts back by $9.5 million.

There are thousands of young people attending university. The only way in which they can continue to attend university is by finding work in the summer, yet the Government cut Summer Canada programs by $85 million.

I could continue but I see Mr. Speaker indicating that my time is up. In conclusion, the cuts in the budget which the Government has made are the worst ones it could have made, even if I agreed that cuts were required, and I do not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak to Bill C-11. I do not think anyone will be surprised to hear that I disagree with the Bill as presented by the Government. One reason is that I do not think we can really trust a Government and a Party that asks the House for borrowing authority for next year, without bringing down a new budget, without tabling the Estimates. Why we should not trust this Government? Well, what this Government has achieved, or rather has failed to achieve since the election campaign and its outcome on September 4, shows why it cannot be trusted.

For instance, the Government promised it would create jobs, but if we look at the mini-budget, all it contains are cutbacks and potential lay-offs and unemployment. I see the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) opposite. This Government made a commitment to engage in consultation and to refrain from unilateral decisions. The first thing the new Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did was to ignore the people who take care of UFFI cases, and instead made a unilateral decision, that is, he recommended to Treasury Board that cuts be made in the program.

Another example is subsidized housing. During the election campaign, Members in all ridings promised co-operative housing when they were in the Opposition, and they were asking for more funds. But lo and behold: the mini-budget provides for cuts in subsidized housing and the RRAP program.

Mr. Speaker, I can think of another area as well where the Prime Minister said 'with his hand on his heart' that he would never tamper with the universality of our programs. And what do we see now? A document that challenges the universality of those same programs. Not only Liberal Members, not only New Democratic Party Members are saying that we can no longer trust this Government. I know some Members of the Progressive Conservative Party, senior Members, who are starting to feel uncomfortable. They did not expect their Government to act this way. As for the junior Members, sooner or later they will wake up as well. After Christmas they also will start to react. There are also the media, and I would like to quote from an article by Lysianne Gagnon in the newspaper La Presse, in which she comments on the universality issue, and I quote:

"With his hand on his heart—"

August 1984: on every platform, with his hand on his heart and in solemn tones, Brian Mulroney repeated that he would never never challenge the principle of universality for social programs: that is, he said, "a sacred trust".

August 1984: in the riding of Saint-Hyacinthe, Andrée Champagne, the Progressive Conservative candidate, is indignant. Her Liberal opponent had the effrontery to distribute in the riding a speech by John Crosbie in which he said it would be necessary to revise the universality of social programs and keep them for the people who really need them. At a press conference, Mrs. Champagne protested that it was "monstrous" to scare senior citizens with the "purely personal" thoughts of Mr. Crosbie. (One would have to suppose that Mrs. Champagne was oblivious to the fact that Mr. Crosbie was not exactly an unknown within the Party, being the former Minister of Finance and the Opposition critic for finance. Less discreet than his colleagues, he had shown the Party's true colours at the beginning of the election campaign, when he was soundly reprimanded by his leader.)

November 1984: the Mulroney Government announced its intention to review the universality of social programs.

For the time being, only old age pensions and family allowance would be on the review list, so they said. The Prime Minister, his hand on his heart and with sincerity in his voice, swore that he would never tamper with medicare.

One wonders whether that is not precisely the government's ultimate goal.

Why this nagging doubt? And why not? When one has been lied to once with so many solemn promises, the odds are that it could happen again. But there are other indications.

Anyone who believes that the Government's main objective in challenging the universality principle is to give more to the poor is naïve beyond belief. This is a good selling point, but in fact, everything suggests that this is not a transfer of funds to assist the disadvantaged, but simply an initiative to save the government some money, in line with the main obsession of the Mulroney Government which is to reduce the deficit.

● (1620)

Mr. Speaker, I think that more and more, in all walks of life, virtually the only people left who have any confidence in this Government are the Conservative Members of Parliament, and that is why we cannot grant this Government the requested borrowing power because of its lack of credibility.

Today and last Friday, I asked a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about spouse allowances for people between the ages of 60 and 64. In reply to my questions, the Prime Minister himself said that he was willing to help all needy people between 60 and 64, but in fact, the government is only helping the small group of widows and widowers between 60 and 64. This discrimates against those between the ages of 60 and 64 who have the same needs and the same income, but who are single, separated or divorced.

Mr. Speaker, we know that the initiative announced by the Minister will provide assistance to 85,000 people at a cost of $300 million. However, what the Prime Minister and the Minister did not tell us, and what the Conservative Members certainly do not know, is that the Governments will save about $170 million of these $300 million because about 40 percent of those who will become eligible for the new program were already eligible for welfare benefits, which means that the Government is giving with one hand and taking away with the other. Instead of helping a greater number of people, the Government is now depriving 340,000 people aged between 60 and 64 who live alone, of the right to spouse allowance or old age security pension with guaranteed income supplement.

Mr. Speaker, I do not trust the Prime Minister, but I do trust the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), as he and perhaps the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) are the only members of Cabinet to defend the rights of ordinary Canadians. What about the rest of them? We know where they come from. They are more interested in defending the multinationals. I trust that, with the assistance of some of the Members opposite who will very soon be receiving visits from senior citizens, these other members of Cabinet can also be made more aware of the situation. I am confident that this will happen because I know some of the Conservative Members, and they are honest people who will defend these senior citizens in the interest of all Canadians. I do not believe this cause to be partisan, either Liberal, NDP, Conservative; rather, all Members of this House and all Canadians should make it their cause to guarantee that the legislation passed by this Government will be fair and will really meet the needs of people between 60 and 64 who live alone. And we know that the very great majority are women, and I am confident that when the legislation is introduced the Government will have mended its ways, and instead of discriminating against a group of people for reasons of marital status, they will introduce a bill that will meet the needs of the entire population.

There is another important issue the Government will give us a chance to discuss and that is the universality of social programs. I have already suggested how sad it was for the Government's approach to foster class struggle. Unfortunately, the Prime Minister himself has made a comparison—is it normal that someone earning $500,000 should get family allowances? And the documents tabled by the Minister of Finance reflected the class struggle existing between those earning from $20,000 to $30,000, from $40,000 to $50,000.

In my view, there are enough devisive factors in Canada as you are very much aware Mr. Speaker, that we should not be creating new ones. Speaking on the issue of universality, we need only look at the tables provided by the Government—if there is an area where the rich are favoured, it is not through program universality but through tax exemptions.

Let us consider the support which the Government provides for families with children, that is the family allowances. A taxpayer earning less than $10,000 gets $359, while another taxpayer earning $80,000 is left with $175 per year after tax. Let us turn now to the child exemptions based on the income tax tables. People earning less than $10,000 pay no income tax at all. They have zero income. People earning $80,000 get a $363 tax saving.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, but the Hon. Member's time has expired.

[English]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, this is an outrageous piece of legislation before us today in Bill C-11. It is the sort of thing the Conservatives opposed in opposition, the sort of thing they said ought never to happen. They were very critical of borrowing for expenditures that had not been specified in a Budget. They were very critical when the Liberals did this. In terms of contempt for the public and disregard for Parliament, the Conservatives are indeed the equal of the Liberal Party.

We have before us today a proposal that $23.3 billion be borrowed. Of this amount, $16 billion is for expenditures for the following fiscal year. We do not have any details of that. Of the $7.3 billion for expenditures for the remainder of the fiscal year, $2 billion is for a very loosely defined contingency fund; in other wrods, an expenditure which is totally inappropriate.

We are not opposed to borrowing in principle. Obviously every government has to borrow. If we were in government, we would have to borrow as well. It is what the borrowing is for, specifically the justification for the program. We either have no detail or we have the proposals in the economic statement, in effect a short-term mini-budget which shows that the Government's expenditures are short-sighted and misguided.

An alternative to borrowing more is to raise the money by taxes, specifically by closing the loopholes by which many people avoid paying taxes. This could be the source of an enormous amount of money. This Government does not choose to pursue that option which is open to it. It would be more fair for the Canadian public when medium and low income earners are having to pay very high taxes because corporations and better off individuals are benefiting from these enormous loopholes. The economic proposals that we have in the economic statement show that the Government is making important cuts in some areas. I think these cuts could be characterized as being harmful enough in certain areas to hurt the agencies concerned.

I can think of cuts to expenditures in the area of arts and culture. We are seeing cuts which total under $100 million. That is really not enough money to help the deficit. However, that amount of money is very important to an area like arts and culture in which expenditures have not been generous. Cuts to this area mean that particular companies cannot perform, programs will have to be cut back, artists and writers will not get grants, books and magazines will not be published, and all kinds of activities which are important to the cultural life of Canada will not happen. This cut-back particularly affects artists who, on average, are low-income earners. Spectacular monetary successes in the artistic world are few and far between. The average performing artist or writer lives on a very modest income and a very high proportion of them actually live below the poverty line.

There have been no cost-of-living or general increases to funding in the area of arts and culture over the last decade. Now its funding is getting cut and those cuts are sufficient to hurt arts and culture. However, what is $100 million when we have a deficit as large as we do? If we really want to attack the deficit, we must take much sterner measures and go after the lost revenue. We would go after tax loopholes and tax expenditures for corporations if we were really serious about the deficit.

Let me turn to some of the specific cuts contained in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). There was a cut to the Summer Canada Program, a program which employed students in the summer. This program certainly provided excellent projects for the riding of Broadview-

Greenwood. It provided good jobs for students and helped local agencies and people. The program gave young people a good opportunity to work.

Cuts have been made to the Canada Oil Substitution Program. Goodness knows we need to be working on oil substitution and better conservation measures for this important non-renewable resource. However, cuts have been made to that program.

Cuts have been made to the CHIP program and there have been reductions in funding to energy research and development. There have been really misguided cuts in the budget affecting science and technology. There have been cuts to radiation research, pollution research, research on the extent of damage caused by the spruce budworm, Canada wildlife research and a toxicology centre which has been doing very important research. These were important programs. However, the amount of money gained by these cuts is not significant in terms of reducing the budget deficit. This harm is being caused by shortsighted policies and is not a serious attack on the deficit which the Government says it is really trying to attack.

Cuts have been made to the 1986 census. There has been a 25 per cent reduction to the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, something which will affect a lot of people. There was a cut of $180 million to external aid. Yet the Government talks about increases in its aid to Ethiopa. I remind the House that among these cuts to external aid are cuts to IDRC, to CIDA and to projects in which Ethiopa took part. On the one hand there is the pretence of being more generous by meeting a crisis, and on the other hand there are cut-backs in perhaps less glamorous programs but ones which are very important to attacking the problem of under-production of food and under-development. Surely it is that kind of aid with which we must be equally concerned.

A cut of $9.6 million has been made to the CMHC social housing program. Co-ops and public housing will be hit. Co-ops need more money, not less. We in Canada have a very good co-op system. There are many people who are on waiting lists for co-ops. There are plans for co-ops to be built. It is an excellent form of housing. There is a crying need for public housing. There are homeless people, families doubled up and families living in inadequate housing because the private market is building housing which is not affordable for a great many individuals and families. Yet there are budget cuts to this very critical area.

I suggest that the Government might do better by looking for its economic ideas in the recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada. Just last week, the Economic Council of Canada published its annual review and recommended that there not be budget cuts of the nature of those made. The Council suggested that the Government ought instead to increase its revenues. The Council does take the deficit problem seriously. It thought there should be a conservative attack on the deficit but it did recommend the following:

> Our research . . . shows that much of the fiscal plight of governments today is of their own making, since they have forgone in various ways revenues that in earlier days they were able to levy effectively.

Of course, the Council is speaking of the taxing of wealthier individuals and particularly of corporations, a sector which is paying less and less of the tax burden. The Economic Council of Canada notes that corporate income taxes provide only 10 per cent of the revenue of the Government of Canada, while personal income taxes provide up to 28 per cent of it. Corporations at one time paid a lot more than that.

The Economic Council of Canada very cautiously recommends that tax increases be implemented by the elimination of exemptions and loopholes and by the imposition of very modest rate increases. This is an alternative that could be considered instead of these vicious cuts to social and public housing, co-ops and external aid.

There are a great many tax loopholes and exemptions available. Taxes forgone through RRSPs, for example, amount to $2.6 billion. That is an enormous amount of money. Yet the cuts to arts and culture expenditures amount to under $100 million. That shows that the Government does not have the right priorities. It is tampering with important and vital programs but is not going after moneys that are available to it. These moneys could be tapped into, retaining more money for the vital social programs of Canada. Fast resource write-offs—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I was not prepared, I did not expect to speak today, but while listening to the Hon. Members opposite, I told myself: What nonsense! I must rise in this debate. As you know, memory is the faculty that forgets. Hon. Members opposite do not seem to recall that not so long ago, they were governing this country and the pandora's box which was inherited from them and which we have had to open, was not as interesting as we had hoped at first.

Therefore, this borrowing authority is requested to clean up the mess left by the previous administration. We have to make a review in order to borrow that money.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, some Hon. Members opposite do not seem to—For instance, I feel that my colleague the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) is too easily influenced by the old guard of her party who have certainly failed to tell her how their government was run. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, you certainly remember something which adversely affected my riding, namely, the wanton expropriation at Mirabel by the Canada Lands Company. That is the perfect example of mismanagement. Do you realize that they found it necessary to expropriate a surplus of 80,000 acres of land for an airport for which only 17,000 acres were required—As you know, this was paid for with public funds and today it is things like those—

An Hon. Member from Western Canada was telling me today that in Alberta there are facilities which were leased by the previous government and which are now costing millions of dollars, although they are not being used—All these things we must cope with now.

I do not intend to start a long debate on this, but I feel I must provide the House with some examples which I think are significant. My hon. friend referred to our senior citizens. We all know members of the party opposite love nothing better than to frighten Canadians by saying that a Conservative government would do away with the unemployment insurance scheme and the programs for senior citizens. But that did not stop Canadians from making a choice on September 4. As an example, here is what one of my hon. colleagues opposite was complaining about at a meeting. He said: "There are Conservatives in front of us, and both to our right and left". This is so because Canadians decided on September 4 that enough was enough, that they were fed up with the previous administration.

Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude by saying that it is difficult for a blue sea to tolerate ships with Liberal captains at the helm, but the time will come when Conservative captains will take over the ships and sail them to safer harbours.

• (1640)

[English]

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise today more out of fear and frustration than out of respect for the legislation of this Government. I am finding it very difficult to accept the hypocrisy of a Government that speaks of reducing the deficit and then proceeds to borrow billions of dollars without indicating to Canadian people for what that money will be used. It is a Government which speaks of confidence, consultation and openness. I am sure if it could fit it into its public speeches, it would find a way to convince the people of Canada that it is the sole representative of truth, beauty and light.

The Government, through Bill C-11, has asked to borrow $7.3 billion on the basis of a financial statement which consisted of lightly considered cut-backs. What concerns me most is the fact that the Government wants to borrow $16 billion without a budget or the Supplementary Estimates which would indicate where the money would end up. The Bill states that $16 billion may be required for public works and general purposes. That is certainly a wide-open definition. I for one would like to know where the money will be spent.

Will the money be directed to areas which would be of benefit to Canadian people? After all, the Government has told Canadians that they will see a brand new prosperous day. Canadians have been told that it is a Government which has only their best interests at heart. Can I believe, and can I presume, that Prince Edward Islanders will also be witnessing this brand new day? Let us go back to the Government's indication of its interest in Canadian people and see what prosperity is held in the financial statement for the Islanders.

It is clear to me after reviewing background papers of the economic statement that every segment of the Prince Edward Island society will be adversely affected. I cannot agree that the programs and services which are necessary for the maintenance and growth of the primary industries on Prince Edward Island should be subjected to such radical cut-backs.

Let us examine agriculture. The dairy research program will be eliminated and special export payments for dairy products will be restricted. What effect will this have on dairy exports? What effect will it have, for example, on the sale of evaporated milk from Prince Edward Island to the Algerian market? What effect will it have on the sale of cheese from Prince Edward Island to foreign markets? Those are serious considerations that arise out of the economic statement.

The federal Department of Agriculture will be reducing its operating expenditures and restricting grants and contributions in such areas as livestock improvement. If we talked to most small farmers and farmers in Prince Edward Island in general, we would find that it was a very good program. We should be trying to improve that program, and it should be continued. We should be trying to improve livestock and genetic strains among other things in this country.

Canagrex was eliminated before it had a chance to prove its worth. That was a very important program. I realize there was some opposition to it, but, in general, Prince Edward Islanders were for Canagrex. Farm organizations have already criticized the elimination of Canagrex.

Additional levies will be imposed by the federal Government for services such as food inspection. We should think about that. In Prince Edward Island 80 per cent of the potatoes produced go on the export market. To reduce inspection could be devastating. The Island is basically disease-free but has diseases such as ring rot. If that disease got on the foreign markets, Prince Edward Island would lose those markets. It would be the end of the potato industry in Prince Edward Island, or wherever potatoes are grown in Canada.

The agricultural input quality assurance and records of livestock performance will be eliminated. What effect will that have on Island farmers? Those are matters which should concern each and every Member of Parliament; not just opposition Members, but also government members.

When we talk about business we must realize that farmers and fishermen are business people. That is what a large portion of this great country is made of. Let us examine the fishery. I must say that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) escaped much of the wrath of the economic statement. However, $30 million was cut out of that budget. It is a budget which should have been increased. When I was on the government side of the House, I advocated many times that the budget of the Department of Fisheries should be increased.

We could examine the small craft harbours branch. That annual budget is $40 million. That is not enough to maintain the harbours and ports. Those are areas which should be considered. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced in his economic statement the closing of three research facilities, including the Ellerslie fishery station in my riding. After consultations with the Minister, it was evident to me that he did not realize the implications of that decision. He has assured me that he will give it consideration. I applaud him for that. Hopefully, the station can be restored. I do not think that when the cuts were made the Government realized the impact they would have on the 2,500 oyster fishermen and shellfish fishermen in P.E.I.

Not too many Members understand what the shellfish fishery is in Atlantic Canada, and certainly the oyster fishery in P.E.I. The oyster industry is one area in which both men and women work. It is one area in which anyone can participate. It is an industry which has grown drastically over the years. It is something which the Government should be pushing to expand. It would create more revenue for the Government through taxation. But the Government went about it in the wrong way totally by eliminating the back-up research which is necessary to develop this most important industry. Tourism is extremely important to the Province of Prince Edward Island and to Atlantic Canada. But what do we find? We find increases in ferry rates. I realize that what is good for one part of the country may not be good for another. Certainly, some of my friends on the Government side of the House agree with an increase in the price of gasoline. However, they do not consider the ill effects it has upon our tourist, agriculture and fishing industries. I feel I could continue for another half hour on the complications caused by just a few cut-backs, but in the time I have left I want to go on record as saying it is very difficult for me, as a Member of Parliament representing the Province of Prince Edward Island, to agree with this great borrowing authority of $16 billion without knowing where the money is going to be spent.

● (1650)

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Bill we are debating now is a classic example of the kind of political move which breeds cynicism about politics and political parties. It brings into question the credibility of the Official Opposition of just a few years ago. What is the Canadian public to think—those who pay attention to these matters—about a Progressive Conservative Government which now requests Parliament to do the very same thing that those Hon. Members, when they were in opposition, so self-righteously and indignantly condemned. This is the sort of thing which breeds cynicism. One has to ask just what the Official Opposition of just a few years ago had in mind. The only conclusion one can come to is that at that time they were insincere in their protests. We remember all the rhetoric about the abuse which was being heaped on Parliament by the Liberal Government. We heard then that in coming to Parliament and asking for this kind of borrowing authority the Liberals obviously had no respect for the long tradition of parliamentary scrutiny of parliamentary expenditures, and it was this situation, in part, which helped the Conservatives to get the mandate they did. People had a sense, and rightfully so, that the Liberals were abusing Parliament. Now we have a Conservative Government and instead of an indication that this Government does indeed want to depart from the attitude towards Parliament which it so righteously condemned just a short while ago, we get identical action. There must be bewilderment on the part of a great many Canadians who voted Conservative on the basis that they considered the Liberals were disrespectful of Parliament and who thought some change might be forthcoming.

I feel it is particularly ironic, Mr. Speaker, that we should be debating Bill C-11 on the same day that a motion was finally passed to bring in to being a special task force on parliamentary reform. The objections of the Official Opposition to this kind of Bill just a few years ago were based on its understanding and respect for Parliament. And on the very day we begin what I hope will be a genuine process of parliamentary reform, we see before us in Bill C-11 an unfortunate indication that the new Government is no more respectful of Parliament, and no more willing to change, at least at this point, than the previous Government. Therefore, I say, Mr. Speaker, as one who will be part of that new task force on parliamentary reform, that I intend to go into it with the kind of positive and hopeful attitude which I know is absolutely necessary if that committee is to finally have an effect on the life of this Parliament and on the House of Commons for years to come. I am disappointed at the same time, Mr. Speaker, and I am taking this opportunity to say so—because I unfortunately did not participate in the debate surrounding the creation of the task force itself—that the new Government did not seize the opportunity to show good faith when it came to the issue of parliamentary reform. It did not use the mandate it received from the Canadian public, partly as a result of its rightful criticism of the Liberals and their attitude towards Parliament, to begin by making a few changes. The committee will have to spend many hours trying to arrive at what it hopes will be the right recommendations so that Government will finally act. It would have been a spur to that committee to have received any sign whatsoever that the Government actually was open to change. It also would have been a sign of hope, not just to members of that task force, but to all Hon. Members of Parliament, and to everyone concerned about parliamentary reform. We did not receive that indication, Mr. Speaker. Instead we got a hassle with respect to quorums in committee and who had to be present when we were to hear evidence.

The Government could have taken the opportunity to adopt some of the unanimous all-party recommendations by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure of the last Parliament. The recommendation which comes most quickly to mind is with respect to the election of the Speaker. Purely from a tactical point of view, Mr. Speaker, the Government could have determined who it wanted to be Speaker. I say this with no reflection on who actually became Speaker because I happen to believe the present Speaker is doing an excellent job. However, the Government could have seized the opportunity to adopt the recommendations of the Special Committee with respect to the process by which we elect the Speaker. It would have been assured of having its own way, in any event, given the massive majority it has in the House.

Government could have given the House of Commons more control over its own life by bringing in changes with respect to the Commissioners of Internal Economy, by having all-party representation either on that committee or by changing the various structures by which the House administers itself. There were a number of recommendations with which the Government could have proceeded, but it did not. I, for one, am disappointed. Nevertheless, I will go into the work of the new task force on parliamentary reform with a positive and hopeful attitude, knowing that the chairman is serious about parliamentary reform. I am sure that all Hon. Members who have been assigned to that particular task force by their respective parties are also serious about parliamentary reform.

I would like to comment, in the context of the borrowing authority, on the over-all strategy of the Government. I, as the environment critic for the New Democratic Party, have been particularly concerned about the cut-backs in Environment Canada. I am very concerned about the reductions in federal Government programs in the Canadian Wildlife Service of the Department of the Environment. I would just like to take what time I have left to say that the cut-backs in the Canadian Wildlife Service with respect to wildlife toxicology projects, projects to rehabilitate endangered species, conservation of international wildlife, and wildlife interpretation, are, in my view, a classic example of short-sightedness. It is a classic example of being pennywise and pound foolish. It is a tragic failure on the part of this Government because any real long-term, stable economic growth will have to be based on an economic model which does not put environmental concerns aside for the moment in order to have economic growth, thus setting up a false dichotomy between healthy economic growth and environmental matters. The Government should see that at some point we will have to develop a way of thinking economically that faces up to the fact that long-term, stable economic growth has to take environmental considerations into account. What we have here on the part of the Government is not that realization. In fact it is, as I say, a tragic failure to make that connection.

I can only hope that over the course of the next weeks, months or years, however long it takes, by working with others concerned about the Canadian environment, indeed the global environment, we can bring this Government to realize that this is indeed short-sighted and it should begin to see the world differently.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be taking part in this debate, because it is a very important one. I want to say a few words in the other official language. The question at issue in this debate is: what is the Government going to do with the money for which it is seeking borrowing authority from the House? The Government has given us no information on how the borrowed funds are going to be used. That is a very important matter, Mr. Speaker.

Second, I want to ask this Government how it can justify borrowing large sums of money without providing information. Is this how the Government respects Parliament?

Third, I want to ask the Government how it can possibly ask for permission to borrow a lot of money while at the same time wanting to give the public the impression that it is eager to reduce the deficit.

[English]

This is an important debate on three important questions, Mr. Speaker. What is the purpose of the spending for which authorization is sought to borrow this money here today? What is the Government's attitude toward the notion of accountability of the executive to Parliament? How can the Government, without any credibility whatsoever, come before us to borrow large sums of money at the same time that it preaches frugality to the public?

Dealing with the first question, the Government is asking to borrow $23.3 billion, $7 billion for this fiscal year, of which $2 billion is for a discretionary fund. The Government has not identified the purpose for which that money will be spent. It just wants to have the money on hand without specifically identifying what it is for. Could the Government possibly be borrowing this $23.3 billion for a worth-while public purpose? If so, it would be incumbent upon us to give the request serious consideration. Since the Government has not provided us with information regarding the $16 billion for the next fiscal year or the $2 billion in the discretionary fund for this fiscal year, we are left to wonder and speculate about what it wants to spend the money on. Therefore, I would like to posit some possible and useful public purposes for which the Government could use this money, which would then make it incumbent upon us to consider the request seriously.

For example, if it were seeking the money to invest so that the public would get a decent return, we would know it was going to be put to a useful purpose and would not be wasted. However, the Government has given us no information. In fact, it has deferred needed public works for both this fiscal year and next. Public works not only put people back to work but also provide facilities to serve communities for many years to come. It is bad enough that the Government cancelled public works, but even worse than that, it has deferred them. By doing that, the Government is admitting that those public works will have to be done in the future. Obviously they will have to be done at a higher cost than the cost at which they could be done today, and they will be done at a time when inflation is higher than it is today, so it will cost more to do them. That is a waste of public money.

If these people across the way, Mr. Speaker, were to borrow for a useful purpose, we could consider the request very seriously. But their actions have demonstrated that they are not seeking to borrow for a useful purpose. The Government could be borrowing for the useful purpose of better insulating homes so that energy could be better conserved. This could be done if we were to make dollars available to home owners so that they could insulate their homes properly. That would be a useful public investment. Electrical utilities in the United States have found that it is cheaper to produce electricity through conservation than it is through the construction of new hydro facilities, for example. Investment in conservation gives a real return. If this Government were to say that it wants to borrow money to provide for better insulation in homes across this country, then we would have to consider that seriously. But once again, actions speak louder than words. It is there in the economic statement.

What did the Government do regarding home insulation? It cut the Canadian home insulation program. That makes no sense in the present environment and it certainly leaves us with no justification for approving the borrowing request. From the perspective of investment or return on investment, Mr. Speaker, the Government's request falls short. It would be helpful, Mr. Speaker, if the Government would invest in the insulation of homes and the rehabilitation of older homes. There are many older homes across the country which are structurally sound. If a few dollars were spent on those homes, they could be brought up to par and would last for many more years. That would be a useful investment of public dollars.

Is there any reason for us to believe that the Government will be using the funds it wants us to approve today for such a worth-while purpose? Would it invest in the rehabilitation of older homes in the country? Its own economic statement tells us it will not Mr. Speaker. In that economic statement, the Government cut the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. It cut monies from public expenditures which would have allowed older homes to serve a useful purpose for a much longer period of time. From the perspective of investment, based on the Government's actions, since it will not give us any information on what it wants to use this money for, its request for approval of borrowing falls short.

Perhaps we could look at its request for borrowing from a different perspective. I will wrap up what I have to say, Mr. Speaker. We have had simply to speculate upon the possible uses to which the Government would put borrowed funds. A few short months ago that Party was in Opposition and it recognized the importance of the accountability of the executive to Parliament in the area of public spending. Now that that Party is in office, it has failed to recognize the basic truth. This is a severe disappointment and it will increase cynicism in the country.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will be very brief because of our eagerness on this side of the House to get on with some business that would reflect the programs of the new Government. We would like to expedite the process of cleaning up the business that was left behind by the former government. As you know, Mr. Speaker, from time to time we are required to sit in the House in the afternoon and to listen to such diatribe as that which has gone on this afternoon. At such times one feels the need to make a speech and the desire to set the record straight.

Mr. Blaikie: The truth hurts.

Mr. Oberle: We have heard all kinds of suggestions for ways in which we might improve the economic situation in Canada. The Hon. Member for Birds Nest, for instance, suggested we should protect the migratory—

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I believe that you and other occupants of the Chair have, on numerous occasions—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate the point of order. It is the Hon. Member for Birds Nest—sorry, it is Birds Hill, Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the name of the riding that I represent is Winnipeg-Birds Hill. It is not Birds Nest, it is not Birds Eye, it is not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All right, I regret that. Will the Member please take his seat. We will try to rectify that.

Mr. Blaikie: I hope that Mr. Speaker himself—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Will you please be seated?

Mr. Blaikie: —will keep that in mind.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We will try to rectify that. It is Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Oberle: Through you, Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer the Hon. Member my apologies. I should know, of course, that the riding is Winnipeg-Birds Hill. The reason I made the mistake is that he suggested that the solution to economic recovery would be to look after migratory birds. That is what he suggested in his speech. That is probably why that Freudian slip was made.

Another Member, who just sat down, suggested that if we insulated all our homes, that would be the solution. If we insulated ourselves from the reality of the mess that was left us by the people who now know all the solutions to our problems, maybe the problems would go away. However, the fact is that they will not go away.

This year's budget is $100 billion, Mr. Speaker. We all know that today's promises are the obligations and taxes of tomorrow. The promises and stupid commitments of the former government are the obligations of today. For example, $25 billion will have to be paid in interest payments. We need money to pay the interest so that the New York bankers do not come in and repossess your car or the front door. We must pay some interest. There is nothing you can do about that. These people made sure of that.

We are locked into transfer payments for social programs. Our friends in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties suggest that we should now enrich and enlarge these social programs quickly. They say that it is the solution to our problem, but we say the cause of the problem is that we have lived beyond our means for some time.

Mr. Blaikie: It is not the cause of the problem.

Mr. Oberle: We are now paying for the sins of the past.

Mr. Blaikie: There is no sin in medicare.

Mr. Oberle: I sat on the other side for 12 years. Every time a Bill like that came up, we had legitimate reason to complain.

Mr. Blaikie: Where is the sin in medicare? Where is the sin in family allowances?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to use the name of the Hon. Member's riding again, but I offered him the courtesy of allowing him to speak, and now I would ask that I be extended the same courtesy.

I will be very very brief. All I want to do is to be helpful and to tell these people that there are certain expenditures over which we have no control in the short term until we pay for the sins of the past. The bankers are knocking at our door and we must pay $25 billion in interest next year. We have to borrow money to pay the interest. I would ask the socialists across the way to make a simple comparison. It is pretty hard not to compare them with a bunch of birds. If they are not yapping they are doing something else. At this particular moment they are yapping.

Mr. Riis: You are bad-mouthing birds again.

Mr. McDermid: They are all from Birds Nest.

Mr. Oberle: Let me give you some helpful hints to demonstrate that insulating homes and protecting the migratory birds, as important as they are, are not the solution to our $36 billion deficit. Put yourself into a situation where, having met with your banker a few months earlier to float a $5,000 loan to buy a new car, you are going back to him and asking for another $1,000 to pay the interest on the money already borrowed. The banker would ask for the key for the car. There is no difference between that situation and the situation we are facing here. We are going back to the bankers, the innocent, unassuming public of Canada, and selling them Canada Savings Bonds. We are telling them that we need money to pay last year's interest.

Another fellow wants to start another Crown corporation. He wants to buy another business so he can have some dividends later on. I would like to ask him how much in dividends he has been receiving from Petro-Canada this year. How much in dividends has the CDIC, Eldorado Nuclear, or any of these companies, paid this year?

Mr. Blaikie: What about the $6 billion in the Petroleum Incentive Program?

Mr. Oberle: Now you want to buy more Crown corporations. That is not the solution.

Mr. Riis: What are you doing for forestry?

Mr. Oberle: We struck a raw nerve, Mr. Speaker. Obviously these people do not want to be exposed to the truth. They do not want to be exposed to reason. They would just like to see these carts dragging along the beach in mud up to the axles. We have other ideas and you must be patient.

Mr. Blaikie: You have your head in the mud.

Mr. Oberle: You have to wait until our schemes and good ideas which we will be bringing forward once we dispose of this Bill will bear fruit.

Mr. Riis: Let us hear one of your good ideas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to correct something here. I regret that I called the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, Winnipeg Birds Nest. I also regret that I did not say that the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) was the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Mines.

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be taking part in this debate and to speak to Bill C-11. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate you on your appointment to the Chair and also to wish you a satisfying career in the House of Commons. Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, take advantage of this opportunity to greet all my constituents in the riding of Bourassa, a riding I have proudly represented in Parliament for six years.

Mr. Speaker, my riding encompasses the total area of the City of Montreal North, a wonderful place to be, as a resident confided recently. It is situated on the north side of Montreal Island, along the northern arm of the St. Lawrence, known as Rivière des Prairies—

Mr. Della Noce: Just before Duvernay!

Mr. Rossi: I will get back to Duvernay later on, just give me a chance.

—it has a population of 92,000, spread over various communities.

Mr. Speaker, on September 4 of this year, Canadians gave this Government a clear mandate. We on this side of the House have accepted the outcome of the democratic process. However, we must be realistic. Throughout the election campaign, the Progressive Conservatives found it very easy to repeat to Canadians that it was time for a change and that they would find jobs for everyone and would find a solution to the unemployment problem. Mr. Speaker, that is the way they conducted their campaign, and in a local newspaper in my riding, a newspaper with an Italian name, the Progressive Conservatives said, and I will not repeat it in Italian, of course: A house and a job for everyone! Promises, promises. And speaking of Italian origin, Mr. Speaker, perhaps you will allow me to correct what the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) said on page 896 of Hansard on December 4, 1984, and I quote:

> I would like to add, as the sole Member of Italian origin, that I am proud to represent in this House both the riding of Duvernay and the entire Italian community.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mislead the House, probably unwittingly, since I take him to be an honest man with a good reputation, he probably did not intend to mislead the House, and made this statement in entirely good faith.

But I myself am of Italian origin, and for the information of the Hon. Member, I was the first Canadian Quebecer of Italian origin to have been elected to this honourable House. I believe that for six years now, I have served the Italian community and all the other communities in my riding very well, and I can inform the Hon. Member for Duvernay that the people in my riding will certainly not require his good services, since their own Member is doing his job quite well, thank you.

Mr. Speaker, this Government has made many promises, including that of finding jobs for everyone. Canadians believed all the glowing promises made by the Progressive Conservatives. They believed that the Tories would provide prosperity and, above all, jobs. The Canadian people will soon realize that they have been duped and fooled. But Hon. Members of the Progressive Conservative Party ought to be careful. We are keeping our eyes peeled! Remember that an American President once said:

[English]

You can fool some people for some time but you can't fool all the people all the time.

[Translation]

An Hon. Member: Say that in French.

Mr. Rossi: I can also say it in Italian, Sir. One of the many cutbacks which took me by surprise, Mr. Speaker, is the one related to the Summer Canada Program which was set up by the Liberal government and which was a boon to thousands of young students. The Progressive Conservatives have described that program as a band-aid program.

Mr. Speaker, again I say to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) that it is not a band-aid program, if only because it does enable students throughout Canada to work during their summer holidays and earn a few dollars to help pay their tuition fees. It seems that nobody wants to hear anything about this Summer Canada Program. Earlier today, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) asked a question about the Summer Canada Program, but the Prime Minister evaded the question neatly, and there was no meaningful answer, Mr. Speaker.

A few weeks ago I asked the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) whether he thought the Summer Canada Program was a band-aid program. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member himself did admit that it was nothing of the kind, and I fully agree with him.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, in the newspaper Le Droit last December 5, there was an article about the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) entitled 'Champagne avoids the real problems', which said the following:

> Minister Champagne, who is also coordinator of the activities surrounding National Youth Year 1985, has managed not to mention even once in her speech the problem of unemployment which affects 17.6 percent of our young people between the ages of 16 and 24.

"In fact, there was no mention of the real problems", as one of the students noted, Mr. Speaker.

I see that you want me to hurry up, Mr. Speaker.

In closing, I would like to mention that my main concern, is about the students who will want to work next summer. I therefore urge the Prime Minister, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Minister of State for Youth, and also the Minister of Finance to do something for them.

Finally, I want to ask this Government to keep its promises, and I also want to say this to the ministers involved: "Please, reverse your stand and see to it that our students can find work!" As for the Government, it should be true to its commitment to provide prosperity for Canadians and jobs for those who want to work. These are some of the promises made by this Government, and in the interests of all Canadians, we sincerely hope that those promises will be kept, and you can be sure, Mr. Speaker, that we of the Official Opposition shall always support Government initiatives aimed at providing employment for all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) on a point of order.

Mr. Della Noce: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I did not want to interrupt the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) when he quoted something I said. I did not want to mislead the House, but there was indeed a mistake. Hansard should read the only Italian Member of the Government. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that there is another mistake, namely where the English version says:

• (1730)

[English]

The riding is a veritable paradise for people.

[Translation]

The word "paradise" was omitted.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a good deal of pleasure to join in the debate this afternoon. Also I should like to join with other Hon. Members in congratulating you on your appointment. I am certain the House will run more smoothly and that high sticking will be kept to a minimum.

The Government proposes to borrow something in the order of $16 billion. It is interesting to sit in the House today with a kind of feeling of déjà vu or a reverse of déjà vu and to hear the screams and shouts from this side about borrowing without any plan or indication of what the borrowing will be used for. It is interesting to hear the ragged comments of the former opposition group which simply put down any necessity for giving the House of Commons and the taxpayers of Canada some indication of what it proposes to do with $16 billion. It is an amazing situation. Some of the open government about which those Members talked is complete nonsense in view of the comments they have made to date.

I should like to offer some suggestions in terms of spending that $16 billion. If they would simply keep their promises, that $16 billion would be adequate. A reminder of some of their promises might be useful. In my partiuclar area and along the entire coast of British Columbia, which now has a number of Tories representing it who made those same promises, the fishing industry is a disaster. The Conservative Government promised to spend $100 million in a buy-back program to assist fishermen who are in an extremely bad position. It was promised. The $16 billion could help deliver it. Why not keep some of the promises made by the Government during the election period? The Tories promised $200 million for Salmonid Enhancement Program. It would put thousands of people back to work on the coast of British Columbia, thousands of people who are financially flat on their backs and facing ruin. They recognize that problem. They made a promise to those people and now they are failing to keep it. The $16 billion of borrowing could be used for that. A firm, hard promise was made and nothing was delivered.

That same Party, campaigning for votes of the people in the forest industry who are suffering as badly, promised a $100 million reforestation program. It would create an enormous amount of employment on the coast of British Columbia. However, what do we hear from the Conservative Government? There has been absolute silence on that promise. We hear that the cupboard is bare.

Fishermen, loggers and others in the forest industry, have lost the opportunity of employment. They could be put back to work in the Salmonid Enhancement Program and in reforestation programs. Of course they could be assisted in the buy-back program, it it ever comes to pass.

They also promised to revamp the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. People involved in the fishing industry on the coast of British Columbia in communities from Prince Rupert to Vancouver who are dependent upon fishing, as well as industries and small businesses which are dependent upon fishing, were promised that the Department of Fisheries would be revamped. That Department affects the lives of a great many people and many of the businesses there. They promised to make it more responsive to the people of that area. They promised to create an advisory committee. It was more than an advisory committee; the Conservatives called it a management committee comprised of representatives of the industry. What do we have right now? We have 1,200 public servants in the Department of Fisheries on the West Coast who have received no instructions from the Ministry in Ottawa. They have no instructions on what to do. There is a policy void out there. No one knows what is going on. Instead of revamping the Department or establishing a management committee, we have chaos out there right now. People are losing their vessels and their homes. They are unable to qualify for unemployment insurance. The prospect with a Conservative Government in place is that social assistance is the order of the day for those people.

If they want to borrow $16 billion, they can go ahead and do it. However, they should at least give us some indication of what will be done with that money. Why do they not keep their promises? The people along the coast of British Columbia would be a lot better off.

The fishing industry on the coast of B.C. is in serious trouble. The Government promised open government. A number of cabinet Ministers have said, "Our door is open; if you have a problem, raise it". I am somewhat confused because a number of major groups out there are having difficulty. They are in a policy vacuum. They know they have had an enormous number of hundred million dollar promises. All they received was $4.2 billion in cut-backs, as well as the $30 million in cuts in the Department of Fisheries to which my colleague referred. There is nothing for them. They will spend this winter, perhaps next spring and perhaps the next fishing season with nothing. By that time there will be nothing to make policy about because that industry on the coast of B.C. will be finished completely.

Turning to the buy-back program, it is critical that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) and the Government move now with assistance. People are losing their vessels. It was impossible for many people to earn income from fishing this year. It is a complete disaster because the Department of Fisheries and Oceans compressed the fishing season so much that very few people earned enough money to make their boat payments. Many people did not earn enough money to qualify for unemployment insurance. Income was at an extremely depressed level.

The Minister cannot sit here and do nothing. He must act quickly. This buy-back program was promised. It was on a scale of $100 million. It should have been under way this year. People should have an understanding of what will happen. The promise was made, it should be kept. Time is wasting and time is critical.

I should like to refer briefly to the management committee. The cut-back in fishing time has been a serious problem. The Department of Fisheries has literally put many fishermen out of business. In the Johnstone Strait, communities such as Port Hardy, Alert Bay, Port McNeill, Campbell River and many others are dependent upon the fishery. They have been promised that it will continue to exist. However, the indication through the Department of Fisheries now is that that fishery is being compressed. Eventually it will be destroyed and they will be driven out. The gulf trollers, the people who work on the Straits of Georgia, were invited some years ago to take either an inside licence or an outside licence. Those who opted for the inside licence in the Gulf of Georgia were told that that fishery would continue and that they should have no fear of being put out of business.

Last season the Department of Fisheries and Oceans put them out of business. It limited their fishing season to a point where they could not earn enough income to provide a living. This virtually destroyed many people. They were told that the burden of conservation on chinook salmon was so important that everyone had to share. The gulf trollers were told that they could not fish on April 1, that they would have to start at almost the mid-point of the fishing season and that they would be shut down early. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans at that time said that the burden of conservation had to be shared, but it was not shared by the recreational fishery. There was a complete slaughter in the eyes of many people as the chinook salmon were simply reallocated from gulf trollers to the recreational fishery. Those fish never got to the spawning grounds.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans must make a statement indicating what will happen to gulf trollers who were told that they would continue to have a place in the fishing industry in the Province of British Columbia. It turns out that that is absolutely false.

The idea of open government is not coming to pass. We are seeing many important groups on the coast of British Columbia asking for meetings with the Minister. He does not have to make commitments to them. He simply has to give an indication that the door is open. Many groups want to meet with him including, we are given to understand, officials within his own Department who cannot get time. The Native Brotherhood of British Columbia would like to meet with him. Important Indian bands along the coast of B.C. would like to meet with him. United Fishermen and Allied Workers and other groups within the industry would like to meet with him, but there is no opportunity. His flacks are too efficient. They are saying, "Maybe next year". Maybe it will be some other time. Maybe it will be after there is no fishing industry. Open government does not exist. Anyone who thinks it does is extremely naive or a fool.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) had the courage to venture out to British Columbia with his officials. He met briefly with many groups under the responsibility of his Ministry. He attended the native brotherhood convention, an extremely important group on the coast of B.C. I urge the Minister of Fisheries to get his can out there and meet with these groups. He should at least hear their problems and suggestions for solutions and then get on with the business of making the statements that will give them the opportunity to know where their lives are going. Where is this open government?

• (1740)

The Salmonid Enhancement Program is vitally important. We are watching the destruction of the fishing industry and the salmonid species on the coast of British Columbia. In some cases this is coming about as a result of overfishing and in other cases as a result of habitat destruction. We know that we have to get more involved in the process of salmonid enhancement. The program in that area was cut drastically by the previous Government. The present Government promised $200 million in salmonid enhancement funding. It must deliver on those funds. It must create employment so that fishermen who are not able to earn income this year—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member. He is a minute over his time now.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak on the amendment to Bill C-11. Of course I support the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

I would like first to thank the people in Wesmorland-Kent for their vote of confidence on September 4. There is no doubt the constituents of Wesmorland-Kent have a sixth sense, the so-called common sense, because they were not taken in by the two other candidates' alluring promises.

I would also like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, and assure you of my fullest co-operation in carrying out the business of the House.

Coming back to this legislation, I do not see how I could support a measure requesting the authority to borrow $16 million for 1985-86 without seeing any supporting documentation.

If I were expected to support this legislation merely on a confidence basis, I would say that this Government has not as yet deserved such a confidence, and that this lack of confidence is the result of the attitude adopted by the Government towards Canadians.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to the tourist industry, not only in my capacity as the critic of the Official Opposition in that regard, but also because that industry will be playing a major role in the economy of my area.

[English]

I would like to read a few quotations from a newsletter of TIAC, the Tourism Industry Association of Canada. It is dated October 5, 1984. The present Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) spoke to an audience in 1979. The following are a few quotes from that speech:

Canada needs your industry more than she has ever needed it before to first help correct our current account deficit and to give more employment for Canadians.

On the part of government we must regulate you less, tax you less—

Mr. Mulroney, too has expressed an understanding of the problems facing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. Will the Hon. Member refer to the Right Hon. Prime Minister by his title, please.

Mr. Robichaud: I am quoting from a newsletter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It does not matter. Please refer to him as the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Robichaud: "The Right Hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Mulroney, who has expressed—".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. "The Right Hon. Prime Minister" will be sufficient.

Mr. Robichaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Right Hon. Prime Minister—

—too has expressed an understanding of the problems facing the tourism sector. The following quote from one of his speeches in Halifax during the campaign shows his concern. "A Progressive Conservative Government will recognize the importance of the tourism and travel industry to the Canadian economy in general and the Atlantic provinces in particular by implementing the following three-point program: As part of our proposed national conference on the economy, we will examine gasoline, alcohol, food and lodging taxes which are reducing the competitiveness of Canada's tourism industry".

We know the actions that have been undertaken by this Government. The price of gasoline has increased by nine cents a litre. The price of alcohol has increased by 1 per cent. The fares for ferry services in Atlantic Canada, a service that is vital to the tourism industry, will be increased substantially. Not only will the services in national parks be reduced, but it will cost more to use those facilities.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is a most deadly sin, in the sense that they knew very well what they were undertaking to do. Indeed, last spring the Opposition Members were continuously criticizing the Government about the price of gasoline. And in no less than 26 speeches did they oppose oil price increases. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, this is a sin because they knew very well what they were doing. I cannot trust a Government that acts in such a way.

[English]

In his economic and fiscal statement, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said, "We must have faith in ourselves and in our country". I agree with that. However, if we are to have faith in the Government, the Government must show it has some heart for the people, for faith comes from the heart. I cannot have faith in the Government because the Government has shown no feeling for Canadians.

[Translation]

This is why, Mr. Speaker, I cannot support the Bill as introduced, because the Government has not yet deserved my confidence, and I support the amendment to Bill C-11.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate for the first time, if for no other reason than to be of assistance, aid and comfort to the Government and to assist the Progressive Conservative Party.

The point we have been trying to make is not necessarily NDP policy. We are not asking for NDP programs to be implemented. We are asking the Government and Progressive Conservative Party Members to do what they demanded in Parliament all along and fought for, I must say to their credit, with some success. In the summer of 1982 they fought the government on a borrowing Bill on excellent grounds. We were pleased to support the Progressive Conservative Party in the summer of 1982 on this very same subject. We are only trying to be helpful. I do not understand why Conservative Members are not applauding our assistance. I do not understand why they cannot rise in the House and say that we have had enough of the old Liberal style of borrowing Bills drafted by the same old bureaucrats and that the new Government will put in place the changes it promised on September 4 by changing the way the Government requests borrowing. However, we are getting the same thing the Liberals gave us at least twice in the last few years.

• (1750)

There was strenuous opposition to the methods being used by the then Liberal government on the part of members of the Progressive Conservative Party and members of the New Democratic Party. In order to implement its own policies and remain true to the excellent battle it fought in June and July 1982, all the Conservative Government needs to do is what the opposition Parties succeeded in forcing the then Liberal Government into doing in 1982. It should delete $16 billion from this Bill, because that is the amount of money that is to be borrowed for the fiscal year 1985-86 which does not begin until April 1.

I do not know of anyone who would ask to borrow money he or she would not need for another four and a half months. I do not know of anyone who would lend money to someone who asked for that. Why does the Government want to have the authority to borrow money at least four and a half months before it will need it?

I have been reading Hansard from 1982. I believe one of the best quotes in Hansard comes from the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). As reported on page 19454 of Hansard, he said:

That is an affront to this Parliament. No banker outside of these walls who deals with a businessman or businesswoman, large or small, would grant a line of credit to a financially crippled business that refuses to provide projections of its cash flows. No banker would do this, yet that is what this Government is asking the House of Commons to do.

The Government has not told us what its cash flows will be between now and the end of March and it certainly will not have the foggiest idea what those cash flows will be in the next fiscal year until a budget is brought in and the taxpayers know what the tax regimes will be. In any event, Hansard of those days makes excellent reading. It is the one time when most speeches made by Conservative Members were really worth reading.

I hope that Conservative Members appreciate that we are trying to be helpful to them. All we have done is to move the same motion that was moved by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead in July, 1982. I thought that that would be appreciated by my hon. friends in the Progressive Conservative Party.

We can support the borrowing of $5.3 billion for the rest of the fiscal year. We can even go along with the borrowing of $2 billion for a cushion to take care of any unforeseen happenings, whether it be an emergency with the Canadian dollar or emergency spending for other things that might occur between now and the end of March. We find that acceptable. However, to ask us to approve the borrowing of $16 billion before we are even into the next year, is, as the Right Hon. Member said in 1982, an affront to Parliament.

The Government is trying to cut the deficit. Of course, when it cuts the deficit, it increases unemployment. This means that deficit cutting is the Government's first priority, although "jobs, jobs, jobs" is a first priority as well. That outfit over there has more first priorities than any outfit I have ever seen.

I would like to quote the words of someone who is not a member of the NDP who supports the arguments we have made since this Parliament started. Dr. Harold Chorney is a professor at the University of Concordia and I like what he has said because I used words to the same effect during the Throne Speech debate. It is nice to see these words reiterated by an economist. My information reads:

> Chorney's study says "the current debate about the deficit seems to ignore the lessons of the 1930s".

Do you remember, Mr. Speaker, how R.B. Bennett, Mackenzie King and that breed of cats from the 1930s harped at us, at Parliament and the people of Canada? It goes on:

> Then, as now, the cry was to reduce deficits, restore "sound public finance" and let the private sector promote economic recovery. Then, as now, this policy was doomed to fail."

The current policy is doomed to fail just as the policy of the 1930s failed. If the Government wants to cut the deficit, it has to take measures which include additional borrowings starting now. If the Government can reduce the unemployment rate from 11.5 per cent to 7 per cent or 7.5 per cent, it can wipe out the $34 billion deficit over a period of three and a half years. That is all the Government need do. If it wants to get rid of the deficit, that is the route to go.

If the Government were to ask Parliament for borrowing authority in order to create jobs, put businessmen back into business and workers back to work, these people would be paying income tax, and that would liquidate the borrowings. The Government would be accomplishing the objective that all of us in this House want. However, it has its priorities reversed.

If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister in charge of CMHC and other Ministers had completed an across-Canada survey of what housing projects are in the works that can be started sooner than otherwise planned, we could borrow now whatever our share of the cost would be. This could be done in order to advance programs, whether they be senior citizens' programs, co-operative programs, public programs or any private housing programs in which federal authorities may be involved. We could canvass all of the municipalities in Canada. We could ask what works are in progress that could be advanced and speeded up. We could borrow whatever money is required for the federal cost-sharing responsibility now and get those projects started.

If you could give me another 60 seconds, Mr. Speaker, I would call it six o'clock. I would be happy if you could do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am certain that with the unanimous consent of the House, my hon. colleague could complete his remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hear a "No". I regret to inform the Hon. Member that there is not uanimous consent.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to use this moment to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

> That the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Martin) now be heard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Standing Order 33 does not apply in this case. I regret but it is six o'clock.

It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85 (No. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, December 5, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Riis (p. 694).

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in this debate and to lend my support to the amendment which has been put forward. In reading through the Bill, I am somewhat surprised if not annoyed that the Conservative Government would put such a Bill before the Parliament of Canada. In fact, when government Members were on this side of the House, they argued for a considerable amount of time to the effect that when borrowing Bills come before Parliament, they ought to be clear.

Part I of this particular Bill requests a certain sum of money and Part II requests an additional sum of money. Part II of the Bill is not clear. It is not clear why that money is being requested. In fact, there has been no budget although it could be argued that the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was in fact a mini-budget. However, the Government has chosen to call it an economic statement and not a budget.

The Government is now asking the Parliament of Canada to approve expenditures which are in the billions of dollars, including approximately $16 billion for fiscal year 1985-86. However, we have yet to learn what it wants to spend that money on.

Government Members said during the election campaign that their major priority was jobs. Unfortunately for the 1.5 million unemployed Canadians, the rhetoric that was used during the campaign has not been put into action either in the Throne Speech or indeed in the economic statement. Instead, we have seen a great many economic cuts affecting all areas of Canada and particularly the poorer regions of Canada.

I find it to be a bit hypocritical, if you will, Mr. Speaker, for Conservative Members who are now in a position of power to say to the people of Canada: "We want $16 billion but we are not going to tell you what we are going to do with it". They are not telling us what they are going to do with it with regard to employment and employment opportunities. We have heard the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) talk about an economic employment strategy, and indeed that strategy was alluded to by the Minister of Finance. Yet we have not seen any signs to tell us what it will comprise.

Government Members have not put before Parliament any measures that would be of some assistance to young Canadians. They have not put any package of legislation before the House to assist women or minority groups with regard to employment opportunities. What are they prepared to do with the $16 billion that they are requesting from Parliament?

Perhaps the argument can be made that the money they are requesting is not going to be directed toward job creation or social programs. Perhaps it will be directed toward the private sector by providing more tax concessions to businesses. In theory, there is nothing wrong with tax incentives and with providing financial assistance to private sector companies which, we would hope, would create employment.

• (1110)

Just yesterday, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association released a survey which indicated that for the month of October production had decreased substantially and unemployment had increased. The private sector, as alluded to by the Government, will not resolve unilaterally all the evils of unemployment. Government must assist. Government must be an active player. We have received the complete opposite from this Government.

There used to be some red Tories, but they have been overcome by the blue tidal wave. What has happened is that programs which were in place for young people, such as the Canada student employment program, have been cancelled. We have a Government which said that consultation was the key, operative word. Were young people consulted with regard to the cancellation of the Canada student employment program? Absolutely not.

The Government talks about consultation. Then it unilaterally moves to cut the deficit by $4.2 billion—and many of those cuts will affect the less fortunate in the country—and indicates that it will study further how the deficit can be reduced, whether by reductions in terms of tax reform, tax incentives or the curtailment of social programs. Yet it has the audacity to say to Canadians that it is trying to improve investor confidence. That is absolute nonsense. Will investors invest if there is going to be consultation, when the Government unilaterally cuts $4.2 billion and then says that it will have further studies? I suggest that the business community in Canada and abroad will wait until well after a federal Budget is announced. So much for confidence in the private sector. The private sector will wait to see what is the outcome of those discussions. They will wait to see what tax incentives are put in place. They will want to know what the effects of those incentives will be for them as business individuals.

We have a Government which speaks of confidence, but in actual fact it is not restoring confidence. It has increased the lack of confidence by the measures which it has placed before Parliament. I find it very difficult to accept that some of the red Tories who were on this side and who are now in government are allowing the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), "Mike the Knife"—the Minister of Finance—and all the right-wingers in the Government to override completely any interests of and concerns for the less fortunate in Canada.

Members opposite laugh, but the 1.5 million unemployed Canadians are not laughing. Statistics Canada has reported that 600,000 young people are unemployed. Three hundred thousand unemployed have given up their desire to look for employment because there are no jobs. It is a human tragedy and this Government has done absolutely nothing to assist. The Government has aided and abetted this tragedy by doing nothing for these people. Instead it has taken direct action to affect those individuals who are the least fortunate in our society.

I would like to know what portion of the $16 billion will be directed towards direct job-creation programs in this country. How much money will be put into the training of young people, women and minority groups in this country? How much money will be put into regional industrial development? The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has reduced its budget by $200 million. I will break it down into tier one, the so-called more fortunate area, as opposed to tier four, the less fortunate areas. Tier four has been reduced by 25 per cent whereas tier one has been reduced by 16 per cent. That, Mr. Speaker, is Tory justice.

This Government has an obligation to place before Parliament information which is not readily available to this Parliament but is readily available to it. I very strongly urge Members of the Government to rise in their places and represent their constituents, not the view which has been expounded by the right-wingers, whether they come from Toronto or Washington. This is a Reagan economic policy, Mr. Speaker, which should be abandoned. Parliament ought to have that information before it approves a $16 billion commitment to this Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is the following one. Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

In amendment thereto, Mr. Riis, seconded by Mr. Deans moves that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor: "this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than the amount which is required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle and this House therefore declines to give second reading to Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority."

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Riis), which was negatived on the following division:

● (1210)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak against the motion of the Government which asks for borrowing authority from this House. The Bill has two parts. It asks for $5.3 billion to cover expenditures which the Government foresees between now and the end of the fiscal year, and it requests an extra $2 billion in case the Government has miscalculated its contingency fund. The Bill further asks for $16 billion for expenditures the Government proposes to make after March 31, 1985.

The point has been made many times about the change in attitude which Members of the Government have now as opposed to the time when they were the Opposition. I can recall the days and days of debate when those Hon. Members would berate the Liberal government for attempting to ask for money from Parliament when the Liberal government had not given the House any indication of how it was intending to spend the money.

We have not had a budget, nor have we had any indication of what the money will be used for after March 31. We believe that the $16 billion is totally uncalled for. We realize that governments from time to time need money because taxes do not come in as fast as expenditures. We are aware that the Government is carrying a deficit somewhere between $30 billion and $35 billion. Most of that deficit it inherited, but it has done very little about it.

The economic statement addressed only the reduction of expenditures. The response to those proposals in the business community seems to have been negative. While they were enthusiastic about the support of cut-backs in the press, when business associations began to survey their memberships they found that they were less optimistic about the future than they were several months ago. The result has been negative. I think it is time the Government began to look elsewhere for solutions to get the economy going.

I would bring to the attention of the Government the positive program which we presented to the electorate in the last election. The electorate in 30 ridings paid some attention to our program. I will reiterate that program, because I do not think Members opposite paid much attention to it. During the election campaign virtually all of our program was eventually picked up by Conservative candidates, with two notable exceptions. I think the key to turning the economy around lies with those two exceptions. One was a made-in-Canada interest policy. That policy would recognize that the Government of Canada does have control over the Bank of Canada, that it sets the guidelines for the economy of the country, and that it can operate an economy which is separate from that of the United States. We attempted to make that point many times during the campaign, but it was not as well picked up as it might have been so I will repeat it now.

First, Canada is not like the United States. Canada has a positive trade balance and has had a very sizeable balance of trade for the past five or six years. Unlike the United States, Canada has a positive savings balance. Canadians save more money than they invest. There are plenty of funds generated within Canada. We do not have to build up interest rates in order to attract outside investment, because there is a surplus of investment funds created here annually. That is quite different from the United States which spends more money in investments than it generates. People in the United States are not good savers and never have been. They do not generate enough funds from within their own territory to meet their investment needs. Canada is quite different. It makes no sense to adopt policies that are consistent with those in the United States. A point that is often overlooked is that Canadian workers are more efficient than American workers. During the last two years worker productivity in Canada has outstripped worker productivity in the United States.

Those are three basic economic indicators which tell us that Canada is a very strong country. Canada has a good basis for beginning an upsurge in the economy. The one thing which is holding it back is our high, restrictive over-burdening interest rates. No consumer is going to increase his purchasing as long as those interest rates stay high. Home owners are going to be very careful about buying houses. Farmers and small business are going to be very cautious about making future investments. All of those things are absolutely necessary if we are going to get the economy growing and find employment for the 11 per cent of our population who want to work but have no jobs.

● (1220)

The second item which was discussed during the election campaign but is not now being mentioned by the Conservatives who make up the Government is the necessity for a fair taxation system. We recognize that small business is the engine of growth in this country, unlike the United States which relies more heavily on big business. More than 70 per cent of the new jobs created last year were created by small business, so it is vital that the tax system works well for small business.

Because of the shortcomings in the proposal which is before us, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce an amendment to the motion. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and the following substituted therefor:

"Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Debate is on the amendment to the main motion.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in this important moment in the history of the House of Commons. I want to take this opportunity to speak on the amendment to Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority. Perhaps the obvious reason for the amendment being put before the House this morning is that this borrowing authority covers more than a one-year period. In fact, it provides over $7 billion of borrowing authority for the next four and a half months of this fiscal year and then provides another $16 billion for the 1985-86 fiscal year.

The Government came to power on a policy of creating jobs and economic activity and suddenly, after it has achieved power, it has changed direction and its overriding preoccupation now is with reducing the deficit. We really do not know what the Government's spending plans to create the economic activity which the Conservatives talked about so much in the past will be. We have not heard any definite plans spelled out as to exactly how this $16 billion plus $7 billion will be spent.

The Bill looks ahead not only to the end of this fiscal year but into the following fiscal year, so we are really considering a period of some 17 or 18 months into the future. The obvious question is, why should Hon. Members on this side of the House, or Hon. Members on the other side, buy a pig in a poke for what amounts to two fiscal years? We must ask ourselves, is the Government really trying to be secretive about this? The marching orders went out as soon as the Cabinet was sworn in on September 18 to hold everything in confidence and to keep everything secret. Soon the edict went out from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that people in his Department were not to talk to the press or to Members of Parliament or to anyone else, socially or otherwise. That edict has been withdrawn but there certainly is still a permeating idea of secrecy which follows right through to Bill C-11 which is before us today.

We really do not know what the Government is going to spend this money on, Mr. Speaker. The cost of ministerial staff has been increased by $140,000 to $400,000 for each Minister. We do not know whether that amount will be increased even more. Perhaps there will be appointed a second chief of staff, in a way similar to American politics. The Cabinet will be further bloated from last summer where there were 29 Ministers of the former Government to 40 Ministers of the present Government. When we leave the House of Commons at night we see those 40 Oldsmobile 98s sitting out in front with their two-way radios and chauffeurs. We do not know whether there is going to be more spending like that.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) did us a favour last week, he said, when he told us that the Department of Public Works actually wanted to spend $600,000 on 24 Sussex Drive and he talked them down to $100,000. Although in his view, he has saved us $500,000, we really have to question whether or not some of this $16 billion will be spent on those kinds of things.

The Prime Minister indicated that he is going to pay for his own hot tub and the television satellite dish for his Harrington Lake residence. He also told us last summer that the Parliament of Canada was not going to have to pay for his nanny. However, it developed that we were going to have to pay for the nanny. Further inquiries were made and it was said that the nanny really was not the nanny any longer, she was a maid. When asked about that the explanation was that she was a maid, but a maid who interfaces on a continuing basis with the children. Obviously, sometimes these terms can be switched around. We just wonder whether some part of these funds will ultimately go towards the cost of the hot tub and the television dish. Perhaps the Prime Minister will invoke that prime ministerial provision as he did with the Government JetStars when he was questioned about whether they were being used by Ministers for personal use. He said in a deep voice that they were really sacred instruments of government travel. I can just imagine that if the Government of Canada ends up paying for the hot tub and the television dish, the Prime Minister will probably use his deepest prime ministerial tones at the press conference and say that they are sacred instruments for prime ministerial comfort and titillation.

In any case we have this Bill for borrowing authority of $7 billion for this fiscal year and $16 billion for the coming fiscal year before us. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the difficulty for this Government is that it came to power with many, many promises which it knew, and we knew, and now everyone knows, could not be kept. Instead of going ahead and implementing those promises on an orderly basis, it wants to switch them over to the standing committees of the House or have consultation with other groups outside the House and we really do not know where the Government is going.

• (1230)

We have in Bill C-7 legislation to implement the tax proposals of the previous government. This Government has brought in legislation from the previous Parliament but it does not seem to want to bring in even the uncontroversial legislation of its own. When a Party gets 211 seats in Parliament it should be able to see that its campaign promises are implemented. There were solemn promises concerning agriculture. Legislation and funding would be provided so that outstanding farm loans, a tremendous handicap to our agricultural producers at interest rates of 16 per cent and 17 per cent, would be written down to current day interest rates. Yet there is no legislation to implement that promise. There is no legislation to implement set-asides such as was done in the United States, or to bring back the special farm financing assistance program of the previous government.

In his economic statement the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) spelled out in pretty good detail what this Government is against, but what we do not know and what this Bill does not provide is which promises made during the election campaign the Government is going to keep. That is why I think the Official Opposition, at least, would like to see this Bill split into two parts, one for this fiscal year and one for the next fiscal year.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak to this Bill, the objectionable part of which says that we are to borrow $16 billion for the year 1985-86 without having any budget in front of us whatsoever. We objected to this from the beginning. The earlier amendment proposed a much more direct sort of remedy, namely simply to split it. We offered that option to the Government. One or two government Members asked us, rhetorically as it were, whether we would accept such a split and we said quite clearly yes, we would. However, there was obviously no move from the government side to consider such a split although that was exactly what the Conservatives asked for and got two years ago when the shoe was on the other foot and they were sitting on the other side of the Speaker.

Therefore, we are asking for a six-month hoist which will give the Government time to do its arithmetic and determine what it wants to use the money for. This is the tradition of Parliament in Britain and Canada. The control of spending by Parliament has been a fundamental cause for which parliamentarians lived and died, and for which a king of England lost his head. He insisted on spending money without authority so they chopped off the head of Charles I. We are not proposing anything so drastic as that, Mr. Speaker. I see the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) looking a little anxious! I can assure him we would not want to do anything more over this motion than defeat the Government and have an election.

Mr. Crombie: You did that once, Dan.

Mr. Heap: He would still have his head. We did not do that while I was here, Mr. Speaker, and I would still like to see it.

We really have to oppose this motion. This is the policy that R. B. Bennett tried and which proved utterly disastrous half a century ago. It was a policy of trying to cure a depression by forcing unemployment. What he did was to double the depression; it did not last five years, it lasted 10 years, thanks to R. B. Bennett's policy. Unfortunately, memories are short and apparently members of the Government have not read their Canadian history or talked to their parents about the depression. They do not know that they are doing exactly the same thing that turned a disaster into a double disaster half a century ago.

There have been warnings from financial authorities that even if there has been a short spurt to the economy through international trade, the domestic economy is not picking up. It remains flat. In fact, the spurt in international trade may be turning down again. I wish the members of the Government would heed that warning because their policies failed in the view of ordinary people as well as in the view of economists.

For example, the Government has decided to wipe out 4,000 jobs in the home building industry by cutting $9.6 million from the social housing budget. The subsidy for a unit is in the range of $5,000. Roughly speaking, that will cut out about 1,900 units and about 4,000 jobs in construction and home furnishings. It is accepted in the building trade that each unit means about one job in construction and a little more than one job per year in home furnishings. By cutting $9.6 million from the social housing budget, the Government is wiping out 4,000 jobs when unemployment is already too high. The Government says: Don't worry, just stop eating or tell your constituents to stop eating and probably in a year some more jobs will appear from somewhere when the economy has been stimulated and confidence is restored. In the meantime, confidence is going down the drain and the Government is taking bread and butter off the table of many working people.

This Government is not increasing confidence, Mr. Speaker. Reports of economists show that. The Government has taken another $29.4 million from rehabilitation, probably another 600 jobs. Then there is the money cut from insulation programs. More jobs lost. These are labour-intensive programs which employ people in the cities of Canada where the unemployed are mostly congregated. Those are jobs that could employ people who have known skills. They do not need a retraining program, they are ready to go to work today. But the Government has cut them off. Not only those families suffer, but the tradesmen and merchants who would like to sell to those families suffer as well because these people do not have money to buy the goods.

• (1240)

In the same way, Mr. Speaker, the Government is cutting back on all kinds of social programs. I want to speak particularly about the immigrant settlement adaptation program. The Government provides less than $400 per immigrant for the whole process of getting settled and learning English. That is a serious hindrance to their settlement in this country. The kind of cuts the Government is making in the budget do not give us any confidence that it will spend the money in the proper way in the coming year. If the Government would show us how it will spend the money, we would be able to decide whether that is what Parliament wants.

Until then, Mr. Speaker, we have to say that without any accounting or budgeting in advance it would be utterly improper for Parliament to vote the Government a blank cheque of $16 billion. That is equivalent to $1,000 or more for every family in Canada. We simply cannot afford to put that money in the hands of untried people who refuse to give us any budget or account.

I would hope that Hon. Members on both sides of the House will consider very seriously the danger of what the Government proposes to do and will support this very sensible and conservative motion that has been put forward by our House Whip.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to be able to speak to the amendment on Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority. To say that this Bill is nebulous gives a completely new definition to the word. We are asked to approve a Bill in two parts. The first part is for $7.3 billion for the fiscal year 1984-85. The second part is for $16 billion for the fiscal year 1985-86.

There are really two parts to the amount that we are being asked to approve for this year. The first part of the $7.3 billion relates to increased expenses of $5.3 billion. The second part is for a $2 billion reserve fund. I think it would be more commonly described as a slush fund.

Why are we being asked to approve this Bill at this particular time? It is mainly because of a statement that has been termed an economic and fiscal statement. It has certainly not been called a budget, yet we are asked in the House to approve this Bill giving authority to borrow a tremendous sum of money. We are asked to give the Government this money blindly on what is produced in that statement without having produced a budget or brought down estimates. Certainly it would be a travesty to the people of Canada, to the House and to Members of Parliament as representatives of the people of Canada to approve this sum of money with the sketchy information that has been provided.

Where is this money going to go? No one has been given any inkling of what the Government plans to do. Certainly the Government has not given us any information in its election promises. Any election promises that have been kept have been purely coincidental. What was said during the election campaign was for the consumption of the Canadian public to be used to forward that Party's platform for the election. It has become increasingly obvious that the Government had no intention of keeping those election promises.

Again I ask, where is this money going to go? What will be the benefit to the Canadian public? Where are the programs that the Government is supposed to have brought forward for the betterment of the Canadian public and the economy, which we have agreed needs attention? Certainly the deficit is important and needs attention. However, what are people going to do, not only in the long-term, which has received some consideration, but in the short-term? How are people going to cope? How is the Government's program going to deal with this very important question? In its economic and fiscal statement the Government said that it is going to cut $200 million from regional development programs. There is nothing to indicate that the Government in any way has any feeling for the low income and unemployed Canadians, let alone any concept of how it is going to attack the very important problem of regional disparity and unemployment in the country. This is not only a lack of policy; it is insensitivity to this very important question.

Where is the energy policy that was promised? During the election campaign the Government Party was not shy in stating what it planned to do. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) admitted freely prior to the election campaign that she had consulted on various occasions with industry and consumer groups. I think it is paramount that we get some indication of what the energy policy is going to be before we approve this extremely large sum of money. I do not think it is unreasonable; I think it is very responsible and in the interests of the taxpayers of the country that we ask for this six-month extension to consider this Bill and the approval of this sum of money.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said that she would like to use the energy policy as an engine for growth. If she does that, this certainly will involve a very considerable and substantial fiscal regime on the part of the Government. What is that fiscal regime going to be? Who is it going to benefit? Frankly, is it going to be sizeable at all and is it going to do what the Minister, the industry, and the people of the country are expecting it to do? We have no indication of this. The Minister herself has said that she cannot make major energy decisions until the world price of oil stabilizes. What is a stabilized world price for oil? Certainly the price has been stable for a month and that is about all anyone can expect from that category. Any conflict in the Middle East could have a tremendous impact on the world price of oil. That is no reason to postpone these major decisions on what the Government will do on this very important question.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) shed crocodile tears when he was Opposition about the needs of Canadians and the people who are disadvantaged. He is now prepared to jettison everything that previous governments have worked for to provide the best health care system in the country in the interest of trying to meet this blind desire to reduce expenditures. This strikes out at those who are the most defenceless in the country and the easiest targets of this blind economic policy which the Government is following. In addition to the blind economic policy, the Government is now asking us to grant this amount of money without our knowing to what use it will be put.

It would be irresponsible for the House to approve this Bill and this sum of money, Mr. Speaker. The Government is irresponsible and not fulfilling its mandate even to table this Bill at this particular time in view of the sketchy information it has provided. The Government is not only acting irresponsibly, it is acting callously. I think that is a result of an elitist policy which has complete disregard for what Canadians are expecting from the mandate they have given to the Government.

I ask Members of all Parties to vote against this Bill and, particularly, to support the amendment to the Bill of my Party. Surely, with additional time the Government could come forward with at least some of the information we require for considering this Bill. In this six-month period it could at least go through the motions of informing Canadians how this money will be spent.

I submit that my Party has taken a very responsible position which is, frankly, a very moderate position in its amendment. We could have requested a good deal more from the Government in light of its arrogance in requesting the House to approve this Bill in its present form.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I also rise on behalf of the people in my riding to call upon the Government to rethink its stand with respect to this Bill for at least the six-month period in question. I ask the Government to reconsider its current position with respect to the borrowing of billions of Canadian taxpayers' money without providing Parliament with the tools we need to carry out our job.

I know that there is extreme concern not only in my riding but in the community of Hamilton about the fulfilment of promises made by the Government, particularly those made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with respect to the issue of steel import quotas. Members will no doubt be aware that during the election battles throughout the country we heard many flowery promises from the Prime Minister. In fact, he assured the people of my riding in a letter which he wrote to them that when he became Prime Minister he would do everything in his power to ensure that the Canadian steel market or the right of Canadian steel products to enter the United States was not infringed upon by quotas or other measures that would be in violation of GATT.

However, like so many other promises, the Prime Minister has disappointed and indeed disgusted the people of Hamilton East. I questioned the Prime Minister about this issue in the House earlier this week. His response was not one of a serious parliamentarian or head of state with respect to an issue of international importance and with international repercussions. Instead, it was a flip answer that was an attempt to castigate the present position taken by the Liberal Party that the Government must go to the President of the United States and insist that the labelling provisions which are a violation of GATT be withdrawn immediately or we will be prepared to take retaliatory measures.

The Prime Minister talked about retaliatory rhetoric. I want to inform the Prime Minister that there are hundreds of people in my riding and thousands throughout Hamilton who are facing a very bleak Christmas. Almost a thousand people have already been laid off. Some have received notice that they will be laid off by the end of January unless there is an upturn in steel production. One can imagine the kind of Christmas those constituents are awaiting. I rose in the House on behalf of those constituents of Hamilton East to ask the Prime Minister what stance the Government is prepared to take with respect to the negotiations with the Congress and the President of the United States. He simply replied with a laugh and a snarky rhetorical remark. Such a response by our Prime Minister to a serious question is not acceptable. It is not the kind of answer the people in my riding would have expected from the Prime Minister, particularly when they are facing serious job dislocation.

My colleagues and I have been extremely disappointed that the Government has chosen not to seize the opportunity it has been given as a result of its unprecedented mandate. Instead, it is spending most of its time raking the muck in search of stories and innuendos about the past history of former Liberal Ministers, including the current Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

I believe the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said it best in Toronto last night when he asked if members of the Government did not realize that they have won the election and that, as of September 4, the Prime Minister and his Party was given a massive mandate by the people of Canada. Does he not realize that the election is over? He is no longer campaigning; he is in Parliament and the people of Canada are looking to him and the Government to provide leadership in the area of job creation and job protection.

As a Member who represents literally thousands of steel workers, I find it completely unacceptable for the Prime Minister to be unaware that the current tariff barriers being imposed by the U.S. Congress with respect to the labelling issue are a violation of GATT. Furthermore, he is unable to stand in his place in the House and tell Canadians that he is doing everything in his power to personally ensure the protection of Canadian steel jobs, as he promised during the election. While this issue is of particular importance to people in my riding, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) should also have a special interest in this issue. His constituents in Sault Ste. Marie are not looking to the Government for laughs and stand-up comicry; they are looking for leadership.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), also spoke on this very serious issue. He is looking to the Government for leadership with respect to the steel industry in Nova Scotia. I find it unacceptable for the Government to ask for billions of dollars of unprecedented borrowing authority into the fiscal year of 1985-86 while the Prime Minister sloughs off such a serious question as the steel labelling issue.

When members of the Government are considering this amendment to delay the borrowing Bill for at least six months, they should recognize that they are also safeguarding their parliamentary privileges by insisting that the Prime Minister and the Cabinet come clean not only with Parliament but with their own caucus. For example, this is true with respect to Government decisions in such areas as CMHC. There is a very disturbing article on the front page of The Globe and Mail. The very existence of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is at stake. At the same time, there is no action on the part of the Government or no attempt to inform Canadians that the Government's role in housing will not be wiped out as a result of its cost-cutting measures.

The people of Canada are frightened. They voted in the Government with a massive mandate for change. However, what they have received is government by secrecy, government by Cabinet and political commissar directives and government by centralization within the office of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen).

I would venture to say that Conservative Members of the House will have just as much difficulty when they go to committee to seek information on issues which interest them and when they try to determine where the Government will make its cuts. At the moment there is a veil of uncertainty which is hanging over Canadians. It is hanging over the steel workers in Hamilton. It is hanging over single parents in Toronto who are trying to find adequate housing and, in some cases, wondering where they will get their next meal. This uncertainty is facing steel workers in Sydney.

I believe that these people would say that it is unacceptable comportment for the Prime Minister to laugh and slough off serious questions from the Opposition each day in Question Period. I believe that the people of Canada deserve more. The Government has been given a mandate and I plead with the Prime Minister to take a strong personal stand with respect to the steel labelling provision so that the steel workers of Hamilton can spend Christmas in the knowledge that their jobs will not be on the line.

It is a serious issue which should not be treated comically by the Government. It is an issue that affects the lives and economy not only of the steel workers but those in the automobile industry. These industries are interrelated and many sectors in our economy are waiting to see if the Prime Minister will provide leadership or simply scrape and bow to his American counterpart in the White House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

THE CENSUS

USEFULNESS OF DETAILED DATA ON ETHNIC COMPOSITION OF POPULATION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, last week at a sitting of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, I pointed out to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) that cancelling the 1986 census would have a negative impact on our immigrants.

When the Minister replied that she failed to see how this cutback could be harmful, I suggested that she consult the principal users of StatsCan data, namely, our federal departments and agencies.

In fact, in a study ordered by StatsCan in 1982 to identify data requirements, principal users asked that collecting detailed data on ethnic non-native groups be maintained on a five-yearly basis, since the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides for the preservation and development of the multicultural heritage of Canadians. It is therefore official policy to help minority groups participate fully in the social, cultural and political life of this country.

Special programs exist for this purpose, and only the census can provide detailed information on the ethnic composition of the population.

The Minister would therefore do well to reconsider her position on the census.

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is time Canadians got some answers from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) concerning his patronage appointments.

Last summer we saw an appalling rash of appointments requested by a retiring Mr. Trudeau being accepted by the new Liberal Leader (Mr. Turner) who said that "he had no option" but to accept Mr. Trudeau's wishes. The Conservative Leader lectured the Prime Minister of the day, saying: "You made those appointments and you have to bear the odious responsibility for them". We all know how dearly the Liberals paid for those pork barrel jobs. He added: "It would take the people of Manicouagan working until the end of their days to pay the salaries of those appointments".

Last July the Tory Leader said: "We are going to remove . . . patronage positions from automatic politics". Last August he said that a Conservative Government would submit appointments for key policy positions to a House committee for review. It is now December and such a committee is nowhere in sight.

Now, it seems, the Prime Minister is playing the old Liberal game. He has recently begun to appoint loyalists and party "bag-men" to high-paying positions of public service. Since the people of Manicouagan are paying for the "Trudeau-Turner" pact, I wonder who the PM thinks will pay for his latest binge.

Prime Ministerial appointments must be reviewed by the House of Commons. In this new age of "accountable" government, I call on the Prime Minister to introduce immediately his proposal for such a review.

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR AGRI-BOND PROGRAM AND FINANCIAL COUNSELLING SERVICES

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of this House the serious financial crisis in agriculture. Canadian farmers are facing severe financial difficulty as a result of heavy debt loads, high interest rates, and low commodity and livestock prices. The drought last summer in western Canada has left many farmers with their backs to the wall. Across Canada the latest Farm Credit Corporation statistics indicate that 17 per cent of Canadian farmers are in severe financial stress, with a further 7 per cent under moderate stress.

I would urge my Government to make financial counselling services available to farmers to assist them in their negotiations with lending institutions, in order to arrange special repayment terms for viable farmers suffering temporary financial difficulties. This move would provide relief in the short term. I would further urge my Government to provide assistance in the long term by introducing an agri-bond program to provide long-term, low interest financing for the agricultural community.

With a famine situation throughout much of the Third World, I urge my Government to make financial assistance for the primary food producers in Canada and the preservation of the family farm a high priority item.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

REJECTION OF NATURAL GAS EXPORT PROPOSAL

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian economy has lost an infusion of $120 million. I refer to the recent National Energy Board decision rejecting the export of natural gas over a two-year period. The National Energy Board rejected this proposal because the price of the gas was less than the Toronto citygate price.

The proposed export at Emerson, Manitoba, is 1,200 miles closer to the source than Toronto. As an analogy, Mr. Speaker, if automobiles could not be exported from Oakville or from Windsor at a price lower than the price in Winnipeg, not many, if any, would be exported.

We urge the Government to rescind this obsolete and ridiculous benchmark as soon as possible. This would give the ailing Canadian economy a much needed $120 million infusion, $120 million worth of jobs and taxes.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EMPLOYEE PARKING RATES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been threatening and harassing public servants ever since it was sworn into office. Thousands of people are being laid off. The Government is breaking its promises to the general population, and especially to its public servants.

Not content with cutting jobs and creating havoc everywhere, it now appears that the Government will be increasing parking rates for public servants to an amount between $80 and $125 per month. Many government employees working at low wages are my constituents, who have to drive several miles to work using the inadequate Queensway, a courtesy of our provincial Tory Government, only to arrive on the job to be hit a double whammy by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his friend, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle). Tory times are hard times, especially for our public servants, but they will remember this Government when the next election comes.

HOUSING

AVAILABILITY OF PUBLIC HOUSING

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, over the course of the last few years, many Canadians have lost their homes as a result of very high interest rates. We noted with interest that neither the Conservative Party in opposition, nor the Liberal Party in government, was prepared to move to assist those individuals, and for them there was no abundant supply of public housing into which to move.

Since his election to the House of Commons the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has sold his home in Montreal for a handsome profit, and has moved three times from one public house into the next.

Just yesterday the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) chose to follow suit, selling his home in Toronto for a handsome profit, only to move into public housing, not the normal kind of public housing, public housing for which you pay no rent, public housing that requires absolutely no outlay on behalf of either of these gentlemen. When you weigh up what they have done over and against what happened to thousands of Canadians in the last five years, the question really is: Where is the justice?

S.O. 21

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE SERVICE APPLICATION—EFFECT ON SASKATCHEWAN RESIDENTS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, a recent federal-provincial study shows that the Province of Saskatchewan would be the biggest loser if new companies are allowed to compete for long distance telephone service in Canada. According to the study, additional competition for long distance would drain off revenues and force the basic rates for local telephone service in rural Saskatchewan to triple in some areas.

Because of Saskatchewan's diverse land and relatively sparse population, our provincial phone company, Sask Tel, relies on long distance revenues to provide local phone service at reasonable rates. If this long distance revenue were to be lost, it might force hundreds of subscribers in Saskatchewan to give up their telephone service. Because of this, I believe that the CRTC should not allow competing long distance service by CNCP, and I urge Hon. Members to follow the wishes of thousands of Saskatchewan citizens who are indeed concerned.

DISARMAMENT

GLOBAL MILITARY EXPENDITURES—CALL FOR PARLIAMENTARY FOCUS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, in the 90 seconds allowed a Member of Parliament for an opening statement, 45 children die from lack of food and medical supplies in underdeveloped parts of the world. In the same 90 seconds, over $2 million is spent on the world's military budget. Obviously if even a fraction of that amount were devoted to preserving life, many of these children would survive. The fault for this mistaken priority does not lie just with the superpowers. Six countries which could not meet their debt obligations in 1981 had spent over $1 billion each on arms imports during the previous five years. Of the world's 114 third world countries, 56 have military Governments.

• (1410)

To many Canadians there seems to be very little that we can do about it. That makes many of us turn all of our attention to purely national, regional, and local concerns. However, arousing the world's consciousness is vital if these disastrous priorities are to be reversed. That is something Canadians can do, especially those of us in this House. In the thirty-second Parliament an impressively large number of references to arms reduction were made by individual Members, but the same cannot be said for Parliament as a whole. Of the 591 days that Parliament sat, only two were devoted by the House as a whole to this critical challenge.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

ACCUSATIONS MADE BY MR. ROBINSON

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my indignation regarding the cruel and irresponsible character assassination of Mr. Robert Foulkes and Mr. Fred Rayer by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: To make specious, unsubstantiated, and slanderous allegations about two individuals, behind the cloak of parliamentary immunity, is a shameless and cowardly act. Parliamentary immunity is a privilege of the highest order and when a Member abuses that privilege in such a cavalier fashion, it casts—

Mr. Speaker: With great regret I interrupt the Hon. Member to indicate that the Member is verging on attacking another Member's use of parliamentary privilege personally. The issue of parliamentary privilege is a very careful issue. I therefore seek the Hon. Member's co-operation, in furthering the statement, to limit his concern to the issue of parliamentary privilege without personally attacking any other Hon. Member of the House.

Mr. Nunziata: Parliamentary immunity is a privilege of the highest order, and when a Member abuses that privilege in a cavalier fashion it casts a shadowy cloud on the integrity of each and every one of us. The purpose of parliamentary immunity is to encourage frank and full discussion, not to besmirch reputations by making capricious and ill advised statements.

The Hon. Member's inexcusable accusations have caused irreparable damage, and bring this House of Parliament into disrepute. The Member, and indeed the New Democratic Party, should hang their heads in shame. How can those self-righteous, hypocritical New Democrats—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It does not matter one's Party. What does matter is the question of parliamentary privilege of all Members of the House. The use of the word "shame" with regard to a particular Member is out of order, I suggest. Does the Hon. Member wish to complete his statement?

Mr. Nunziata: It is unfortunate that the two individuals in question did not have that same privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am in very great difficulty on this question. I hope Hon. Members will understand that I am. It is a very difficult situation to raise during a statement, in terms of raising a question about another Member's use of a privilege that pertains, through long standing traditions, to the rights of all Members. It is not, therefore, one that I will allow, with respect, to be continued at this time, pending some further review of the precedents on the matter by myself, again with great respect to the Member and his concern for the issue.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

PLIGHT OF LOGAN LAKE AREA RESIDENTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago Teck Corporation closed down its Highmont Mines operation in the Highland Valley of British Columbia. As a result of that closure 450 families find themselves living in a resource town and holding lengthy mortgages with no chance of resale. To counter this problem, CMCH had entered into an agreement with Highmont Corporation, called the resource industry guarantee. Naturally, the residents of Logan Lake are anxious to receive copies of the guarantee to see what rights they have at this point.

CMHC officials have continuously stonewalled the request of residents and the Member of Parliament who has made requests on their behalf. I urge the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), who is responsible for CMHC, to intervene in this situation to ensure that public servants actually are public servants and start to serve the residents of the Logan Lake area by making this resource industry guarantee available to them.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF UMBRELLA AGREEMENT ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF QUEBEC

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, according to the Journal de Montréal, it seems an umbrella agreement on the economic development of the Province of Quebec will soon be signed with that Province. My question is therefore directed to the Acting Prime Minister.

He is no doubt aware of the fact that we had a similar agreement from 1974 to 1984, under which one billion dollars was paid, and that only this spring, we were about to sign an agreement with Mr. Parizeau and Mr. Léonard, who have now resigned from the provincial Cabinet. According to our policy, $224 million were earmarked for regional development this year. I would like to know first of all, whether the agreement in question is to be signed this week or the week after, and second, whether it is true that only $100 million will be made available to the Province of Quebec over the next ten years.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is in Quebec today having discussions with Premier Lévesque in an effort to rebuild and restore real federal-provincial co-operation in this country. I would not reject the idea that that might be one of the items on their agenda for discussion, but I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he await the Prime Minister's return next Tuesday, at which time he can put the question to him. I am sure the Prime Minister will be glad to answer all questions with respect to the outcome of his restoration of federal-provincial relations with all provincial Governments.

EXPENDITURES IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, when you speak about the restoration, the whole concept of these economic and regional development agreements was the creation of the preceding Government. Many were signed before the unfortunate event of September 4, 1984. That is history. I will now go to the Minister of Regional Industrial Development, his Parliamentary Secretary, or the Acting Minister.

Since $1 billion was spent in the Province of Quebec under the last agreement, without speaking of the specific agreement for the Gaspésie—I see the Minister is arriving—which was something like—

[Translation]

—one half billion over fifteen years.

[English]

As well, of course, there were the La Prade monies and the monies of the Industrial and Regional Development Program. Is this really a substantial cut-back in the amounts that will be spent in the Province of Quebec over the next 10 years?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I am sure he will be pleased to learn that the IRDA that we are negotiating with the Province of Quebec covers only five years through to 1990, but basically it will reflect, through subagreements, funding that is very comparable to the historical amounts in the 10 years previous to 1984.

NATURE OF FUNDING BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister assure this House that the five year agreement to which he makes reference, and not the ten year agreement which has been reported, will not contain any part of the Industrial and Regional Development Program monies, which are a program apart, and will not contain any part of the La Prade funds, the Bell Helicopter project, or the Pratt and Whitney project, but in fact will be purely new monies devoted to regional development in the province, and not any part of the Gaspé monies, $260 million also devoted to that particular area of Quebec?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Hon. Member is always living in the past. I can assure him that what we have been discussing with Quebec is new money. In addition, Quebec and ourselves feel that we should look at all the ongoing programs, whether they have been committed, allocated, or whether it is new money. The IRDA agreement does cover a ten year period. What I am saying is, following out of that IRDA agreement, we anticipate sub agreements which will have a five year period. That is where the funding will be set out.

ENERGY

INQUIRY WHETHER LA PRADE FUND REMAINS IN ESTIMATES OF DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

I would like to ask the Minister whether the La Prade Fund which has been part of the Estimates of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for many years and on which we have spent over $50 million, will continue to be included in the Estimates of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, as indicated recently by the President of the Treasury Board, who said that the La Prade Fund still existed. Is the Fund still under the control of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am aware, the La Prade Fund is not in my Estimates any more than it was in the Estimates of my colleague when he held my post.

EXISTENCE OF FUND QUERIED

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. How can the Minister say that there is no La Prade Fund when the President of the Treasury Board, while making a statement three weeks ago in Victoriaville, said that the La Prade Fund was to be maintained and used in a different fashion? Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House who is telling the truth? Is it the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who said there is no such fund, or is it the President of the Treasury Board who, in Victoriaville, said that there is such a fund?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can throw some light on the issue raised by the Hon. Member. The La Prade Fund never shows up in any Estimates of any Department. It was used as a political patronage slush fund by the Liberal administration at the time it was in office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

NUCLEAR FREEZE PROPOSAL

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Secretary of State has said that Canada will continue to vote "No" on the question of a nuclear weapons freeze at the United Nations. He has also said that even though six NATO countries and two ANZUS countries have supported the freeze or have abstained from the vote, now is not the time, as he said yesterday, for Canada to "act independently" on the nuclear freeze question. I would ask, independently of whom?

Given the fact that Canadians support a freeze, that the U.S. House of Representatives supports a freeze, and that the Soviet Union supports a freeze, is the Secretary of State in fact saying that Canada will not act independently of the Reagan administration?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the word I should have used yesterday was "eccentrically". Canada does not intend to act eccentrically, which I am sure the Hon. Member finds distasteful.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, that is about as eccentric an answer as I have ever heard.

CANADIAN POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Secretary of State is in effect dismissing and, indeed, denigrating the positions taken by friends of ours in NATO, at the United Nations, and in ANZUS, will he not reconsider his decision to follow so eccentrically the Reagan administration's line? In addition, will he take some action at home? For example, might he not assure us that the refitted Shearwater naval base will not be used by Trident submarines? Will he assure us that the—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are taking a position which we believe is in the interests of Canada and in the interests of contributing to steady progress toward disarmament and peace in the world. We are doing that in the belief, which we think is widely supported in the country, that one of the most effective ways for Canada to contribute to a reduction of the arms buildup is both to maintain our credibility with the Soviet Union by being a nation that does not put aside the values that we hold deeply, as well as retain our influence with our allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Ms. Jewett: We don't have any.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member may have no influence with NATO. This Government has, and we intend to keep it.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State not admit that he is denigrating our allies who want to vote for the freeze? Will he not admit that he is denigrating their positions? Will he not also admit that the vast majority of the Canadian public want Canada to support a nuclear freeze?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, of course, I am not denigrating the positions of others. They are free to take their positions based upon their judgments—

Ms. Jewett: Are we not free?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —as we are free to take our positions based upon judgments. We have taken a decision as the Government of Canada that it is in the interests of Canadian citizens interested in peace that we encourage the process which has now been resumed at Geneva, encouraging the superpowers to come together to seek agreement on how we can begin to scale down the arms buildup. That is the most important development in the last several months. For Canada to throw a spanner into that process would be irresponsible and counterproductive.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CONSTITUTION

UNILINGUAL QUEBEC TRAFFIC TICKET APPEAL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Yesterday the Minister confirmed that the Conservative Government will oppose Duncan MacDonald's position before the Supreme Court that he has the right to be summoned in English to the Quebec courts. This goes contrary to the position taken by previous Governments in the Forest case, the Blaikie Johnson case, and Jones' case. It is an interpretation of Section 133 of the British North America Act that has never before been agreed to.

Who approved of the position taken by the Government and of the factum? Did the Minister approve of it, did the Cabinet approve of it, or did the Prime Minister approve of it?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman should know about that. He was part of the Government when it was approved.

Let me try to put the Hon. Member's mind at ease. There is quite a difference between this case and, for example, the Bilodeau case from Manitoba. The issue in the Bilodeau case was not the language of the traffic ticket as such, but was that the enabling law that authorized it was adopted in English only and was therefore invalid. In this particular case the issue is not whether or not the substantive law that authorizes the traffic ticket was valid, because that law was enacted in both English and French. The question is whether or not the summons itself is valid because it was written in French only. It is a different issue from those in the previous cases.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S FACTUM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is not answering the question. Of course it is a different issue. It is the first time that this issue will be interpreted. The Conservative Government has put a factum before the Supreme Court, and I have the factum right here, stating that Anglophones in Quebec do not have the right to receive their court summonses in English. I ask the Minister, who approved that position? I would suggest to him that it would be better to withdraw his intervention before the Supreme Court and say nothing at all rather than take that position.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman has read the factum—

Mr. Allmand: I have the factum right here.

Mr. Crosbie: Then he is ahead of me since I have not read the factum.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECT OF MILITARY EXPENDITURES ON CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns jobs. I am sure the Minister is aware that a Pentagon committee is on tour of seven cities in this country seeking contracts for the American military, and that this Pentagon committee has been organized and funded by the federal Government that sits across the way. Is the Minister aware of recent American studies that show it costs between two and three times as much to create a job through military spending as it does through almost any other sector of the economy?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of those reports to which the Hon. Member refers, but I can tell him that we are indeed interested in creating jobs in this country, and that will remain our key priority.

• (1430)

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I wonder if the Minister might tell her friends in the Pentagon that we in Canada are more interested in civilian contracts which produce between two and three times as many jobs as does spending in the military sector.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly be glad to tell our friends in the United States. I am glad to hear that the Hon. Member, is at least one of his Party, who has recognized that we have friends in the United States. Many of them do not make that recognition. But I will be glad to tell the Americans and others in other countries that we are very interested in having them help us create jobs in Canada. That was part of the whole approach that we took in the immigration policy to bring entrepreneurs to this country.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

AVAILABILITY OF FEED BARLEY

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. I have had numerous telephone calls from constituents in the past few days regarding the availability of feed barley for the livestock feeding industry. The Minister will be aware that the Canadian Wheat Board is no longer providing feed barley under the formula price. Can he assure the House that there will be an adequate supply of feed barley from outside the Canadian Wheat Board stocks? If not, is he prepared to move to make Canadian Wheat Board stocks available?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises an interesting question. As of the end of last week the Board stopped supplying at the formula price because it was below the initial price. With regard to stocks, there is some concern. There are considerable stocks held in the private trade. The Board has indicated that it will be issuing permits, bearing in mind that there are domestic supplies which can move to meet the demand, and that corn comes in freely. Might I also say that this is not a new feed grains policy, but this simply points out that the present one certainly needs to be revised.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of National Defence. In today's media the Minister of National Defence was quoted as saying that Canada is going to boost its air strength in NATO when the new CF-18 fighter aircraft replaces the CF-104 in the next year. He also talked about adding six new patrol frigates to the Canadian Navy. When making such statements, was the Minister simply not making several promises to our NATO allies that were based on commitments which had already been made, and were under way, by the previous Government?

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that when the Minister made the statements referred to by the Hon. Member he was making them in good faith and in good knowledge of what the Government intends to do. I feel sure he will assure the Hon. Member when he returns that he will do what he is saying he is going to do on behalf of the Government of Canada.

PROMISES MADE TO NATO

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Acting Minister. What new promises is he aware of that the Minister has made to NATO? Indeed, has he as yet obtained the money from the Minister of Finance, who has already robbed him of $154 million, to proceed with the commitments which he has made and which are new to the system?

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we, in our Cabinet, unlike those in the previous Cabinet, talk to each other very, very frequently on a very confidential basis. But, on this particular occasion the Hon. Minister of National Defence has not been in touch with me in the very short time since he made this very good statement. So, I am not aware of the exact words which he used, but I can assure the Hon. Member that what he said makes a very great deal of sense.

PUBLIC SERVICE

VISIBLE MINORITY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board I would like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Would he tell this House why the enumeration of visible minority members in the Public Service, which was announced on June 27, 1983, as a prerequisite for the implementation of affirmative action in the Public Service, has not been completed by the Treasury Board as it should have been by now?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board is unavoidably absent due to an unforeseen commitment which came up at the last minute. I will take the Hon. Member's question as notice and ensure that the President of the Treasury Board communicates with him.

REPORTED POSTPONEMENT OF ENUMERATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that Treasury Board has requested a postponement of the enumeration until 1986. In view of the great concern among visible minority members throughout the country, will the Deputy Prime Minister, on behalf of his Government, assure us that such an extensive postponement will not be approved and that the enumeration will take place as quickly as possible in the new year?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will convey the representation made by the hon. gentleman to the President of the Treasury Board who, I am sure, will be in touch with him.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

STORAGE OF LETHAL GASES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday she indicated that the Quebec commission for health and safety is monitoring Union Carbide factories in that province for safety and prevention. I would ask the Minister today, considering the number of lethal gases which are stored in Canada, whether she has contacted her provincial counterparts, or the respective provincial authorities, on this matter? If she has done so, what assurance has she received with respect to the prevention of similar tragedies in our country?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have not done so.

TRANSPORTATION OF LETHAL GASES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, that is distressing and disappointing. I would then ask the Minister if she has spoken to her colleague, the Minister of Transport, to seek his assurance that the regulations governing the transportation of lethal gases are in place, so as to protect nearby communities, and what assurances she has received from him?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have every confidence in the administrative skills of my colleague, the Minister of Transport.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. In view of the fact that the Minister will be meeting tomorrow with his provincial counterparts, and in light of recent press reports about the possible demise of CMHC, can he assure Canadians that the federal Government will continue to play the lead role in maintaining social housing, insuring of mortgages, and the CMHC inspection of every house with a mortgage which is going to be insured by CMHC?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that, when I meet with my provincial counterparts, we will make every effort to give to Canadians, in the most cost-efficient and meaningful way possible, the housing which is so necessary for those who are in need.

PRIVATIZATION PROPOSAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister today categorically repudiate the Clark Government's Matthews Report which recommended the privatization of CMHC, the cancellation of federal involvement in mortgage insurance and the cancellation of public housing, co-op housing, non-profit housing and residential rehabilitation, in favour of other programs? Will he repudiate the Matthews Report?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the sound and the phooey of the Hon. Member surprise me. I would tell her that we in this Government are taking action and studying programs. We are not relying on input which may be confined within this caucus or within the House of Commons. I am meeting with my counterparts. We are seeking and reviewing all documentation and studies which have been done in the past. We will continue to do that. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we will make every effort, as I said before, to give to the people of Canada the best and most efficient housing we can, within the fiscal restraints under which we operate.

AUDITOR GENERAL

PETRO-CANADA PURCHASE OF PETROFINA—ACCESS TO DOCUMENTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given the fact that her Deputy Minister today told the Public Accounts Committee that there is a document in the Minister's Department concerning the PetroCan takeover of Petrofina, which the Privy Council directed not be revealed to the Auditor General of Canada, and given the fact that the Auditor General said that he had received cabinet documents from the Clark, Trudeau, Turner and the present Governments, will the Minister tell this House whom we should believe, herself or her Deputy Minister? And if we are to believe her Deputy Minister, will the Minister make this document public to the Auditor General?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I really wish the Hon. Member would get his facts straight. The Deputy Minister told the Public Accounts Committee that the only document of which he is aware does not relate to the purchase of Petrofina. It is a document which relates to the setting up of the Canadian ownership charge which, in effect, was the bank account for the acquisition. It had nothing to do with the acquisition of Petrofina.

As I have assured the House, my Department tells me that we do not have these documents at all and I, therefore, cannot table them.

TAKEOVER DETAILS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Since the former President of Petrofina a few moments ago told the media that no one from the federal Government or Petro-Canada asked details of Petrofina's assets before this incredible takeover, would the Government stop stonewalling, stop this charade, and make it possible for the Auditor General—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You supported the takeover.

Mr. Mazankowski: Make up your mind.

Mr. Waddell: —for the good of the people of Canada to get a look at the books concerning this takeover?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, as well as all Hon. Members of the House, have heard the Prime Minister say repeatedly this week that it is his intention, and the intention of this Government, to assist the Auditor General in every legal way possible in order for him to achieve—

Mr. Waddell: Would that make the documents available?

Mr. Nielsen: —his audit responsibilities under the Act. He is doing that in an admirable way—

Mr. Waddell: He is not.

Mr. Nielsen: Indeed, there is an article today where the Auditor General is quoted as saying: "I have had his"—that is the Prime Minister's—"personal assurances that we are trying to find a solution to this problem". "And", said the Auditor General, "I believe him . . . I think he's sincere", Dye told reporters. I wish the Hon. Member would accept that sincerity of the Prime Minister and of the Government.

MEDICAL CARE

USER FEES AND PREMIUMS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The National Anti-Poverty Organization issued a report entitled No Care Medicare which documents the barriers which user fees, premiums, and opting out represent to the poor they are seeking adequate medical care. I wonder if the Minister is familiar with this document. If he is, would he tell the House what he is prepared to do about it?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the Hon. Member that I am aware of the report entitled, No Care Medicare, which I have in my hand. I will be meeting with the association tomorrow.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of National Health and Welfare would care to acknowledge to this House that user fees, premiums, and opting out constitute a barrier to the poor for adequate medical care. Would the Minister also meet with his provincial counterparts with respect to removing this barrier so that universality in medicare is not breached?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will recall that the Canada Health Act was passed in the previous Parliament and that this Party supported the thrust of that Act. I also want to indicate to the Hon. Member that, with respect to provinces which have premiums, there are also exemptions so that people who cannot pay those premiums will still receive health care. I would also like to indicate to the Hon. Member that the Canada Health Act specifically has a bar against anyone not being eligible for health care, that is, anyone can have health care despite the fact that premiums might not have been paid.

Ms. Copps: What about British Columbia?

ENERGY

HIBERNIA OILFIELD—ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STUDY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister knows that on several occasions, in fact on four occasions over the last two weeks, the Prime Minister has confirmed in this House that his Government has received a copy of the environmental assessment impact study conducted by Mobil Oil on the Hibernia development. The Minister knows as well that the Prime Minister, on her behalf, has undertaken to table that document. To date the document has not been tabled. Will the Minister tell us when Members of the house will have a chance to study that document?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister committed to table the document if we had one. He said that when we received the document we would table it in the House, which of course we will. We do not have the environmental impact statement to which the Hon. Member referred. We have some working copies but we have not received, nor will we accept, a formal environmental impact statement until such time as Newfoundland decides the mode of development.

COMPLETION OF STUDY DOCUMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at least explain to this House why the Prime Minister—and I invite the Minister to read Hansard—clearly said on four occasions that the Government has a copy of the document and undertook to table it? Why does the Minister now say she has a working document but will refuse to receive the whole document? What has this Government, in a deal with the Government of Newfoundland, been trying to hide for six months? What is being hidden?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We have only been in power for three months. How can we hide it for six months?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with respect, I still maintain correctly that I do not have this document. I will table it when we do have it. I will be glad to do that.

Ms. Copps: The Prime Minister is lying?

Miss Carney: What we did was to agree to postpone the completion of an environmental impact assessment until such time as we decide on the mode of development.

Mr. Tobin: It is finished.

Miss Carney: The Hon. Member says it is finished. How can one finish an environmental impact assessment if one does not know how one is going to drill for the oil?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRPORTS

AUTOMOBILE RENTAL POLICY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. There is some suspicion that the Minister's car rental policy at airports is politically influenced.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Jong: The Minister has accepted all of the major regulation changes asked for by Budget Rent-a-Car, which is represented by a prominent Conservative lawyer, while refusing to make any changes which would prevent a Canadian company from being destroyed.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Another Svend Robinson.

Mr. de Jong: Will the Minister postpone tomorrow's deadline for bidding, and refer the whole matter to the transport committee?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's statement is a bunch of malarkey. The fact of the matter is that there is a policy in effect. There have been some minor modifications to that policy. There is provision to encourage Canadian bidders.

With respect to the Holiday Rent-a-Car situation, the Member knows very well that over the last two weeks the Department of Transport and, indeed, my office, have worked in exploring a number of possibilities which would, hopefully, satisfy some of the problems affecting Holiday Rent-a-Car. The problem is that Holiday Rent-a-Car wishes to rewrite the policy to suit its own terms, and that would be unfair to all the other potential bidders.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, all we have been getting for the last weeks is yo-yoing around and stonewalling.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE HEARING

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, all we are asking the Minister of Transport for is open decision-making and a chance for a small Canadian company like Holiday Rent-a-Car to have access to the market and not be excluded because of government regulations.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister to please allow this matter to be dealt with in an open transport committee hearing. What is he afraid of, and what is he trying to hide? Open it up.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this Minister is not afraid of anything.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: This whole policy has been discussed and formulated in the most open fashion possible. I want to assure the Hon. Member, and other Members as well, that there is nothing in this policy that prevents Holiday from tendering providing they fulfil their obligations consistent with the policy.

MEDICAL RESEARCH

COUNCIL'S SHORTAGE OF FUNDS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Minister knows, the Medical Research Council is facing a $3 million short-fall in its budget next year. Without this money many very important research projects currently underway will be discontinued. In the Toronto area alone some $5 million to $6 millions worth of medical research could be affected. Will the Minister take corrective action to rectify the situation which, I might add, was caused by the previous Government?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one correction to the Member's question. It is not a question of $3 million but, rather, $30 million. I would like to indicate to the House that the base of the funding for the Medical Research Council two years ago was at roughly $115 million and is now at $128 million. There was a five-year plan two years ago through which an additional $20 million was placed above the base. Last year there was an additional $30 million placed above the base. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, 1985-86 was never looked at by the former Government with regard to whether it should be put in the base or how it should be funded.

THE CENSUS

NECESSITY TO HAVE ETHNIC COMPOSITION AND CITIZENSHIP DATA

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Justice.

In a StatsCan report of November 3, 1982 on the census, we read as follows: "Under the Constitution, the Government is obliged to preserve and develop the multicultural heritage of Canadians. It is essential to have data available on ethnic composition and citizenship of Canadian residents."

Does the Minister agree that the proposal to cancel the 1986 census may go counter to Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and what does he intend to do, as the guardian of this Charter?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): I am not in agreement, Mr. Speaker, so I do not propose to do anything.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT WISHES TO CANCEL 1986 CENSUS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services.

My question is again concerned with the census and census data. Could the Minister of Supply and Services inform the House why the census should be cancelled when today, the user list for this service includes the department responsible for multiculturalism, the Minister's own department, and also included the Hon. Member himself when he was in the Opposition?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member that the decennial census every 10 years will carry on. In between the census periods there are polling techniques used by Statistics Canada to obtain information. There are administrative records and a whole lot of ways in which we can gather the data necessary to satisfy constitutional and other requirements of government. As the Prime Minister indicated to the Hon. Member, the question is being looked at. We have made a commitment to gather the necessary data to satisfy all the needs, in the most cost-effective method possible. We are looking at that, and as soon as we have laid out those details the Hon. Member will be the first to know.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OFFER TO SUPPLY MILITARY AIRCRAFT TO TURKEY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the Government still planning on giving those 20 CF-104 Starfighter jets to Turkey in view of the fact that the Turkish air force has demanded upgrading of the airframes, overhauls of the engines, and new paint jobs at a cost of close to $40 million to the Canadian taxpayer before it might consider accepting the gift?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I must say that that is a good question, and I will look into it.

REQUEST THAT REPORTED OFFER BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, when he finds out the facts, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs promise the House that the gift will not go ahead under any circumstances, in view of the potentially explosive environment in that part of the Mediterranean?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to make any kind of commitment until I have had a chance to look into the allegations that the Hon. Member has made. When I have had a chance to do that I will make an announcement in the House of Commons, or reply to a question.

I regret that the Hon. Member is inadvertently exciting false fears about tensions in the region. I repeat what I said yesterday that, naturally, the Government of Canada would not go ahead with that transaction if it would increase tension in the area, whether by supplying those aircraft to Turkey or to Greece, and they have been offered to both.

FISHERIES

MEMBERSHIP OF ATLANTIC SALMON ADVISORY COUNCIL

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In his absence perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could respond.

On Tuesday evening representatives of Nova Scotia's Licensed Commercial Salmon Fishermen appeared before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. I was shocked to learn from these people that no licensed commercial salmon fisherman sits on the Atlantic Salmon Advisory Council. Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us how this situation arose, and what he intends to do about it?

Mr. Mel Gass (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Member for the question. It was on Tuesday night that the Commercial Salmon Fishermen from Nova Scotia appeared before the Standing Committee. One of the recommendations that they made was that in fact there should be a licensed commercial fisherman on the board. However, I understand that the Nova Scotia Licensed Commercial Salmon Fishermen have only recently been formed and they were not an association when the advisory board was set up. Had they been, it might have been appropriate that they were members. As a consequence of the meeting, the Minister is looking into the terms of reference of the advisory board, and is looking toward making changes or adding more members to the board.

SOCIAL SECURITY

LA RÉGIE DES RENTES DU QUÉBEC—CANADA PENSION PLAN—INJUSTICE TO PUBLIC SERVANTS IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I am sure the Minister is aware of the fact that the Government of what used to be la belle province has changed the regulations for the Régie des rentes du Québec and lowered the pensionable age to 60, provided the individual is no longer on the labour market and agrees to a certain penalty, a decision that affects thousands of public servants in the Ottawa-Hull region. If an Ontario resident works all his life on the Quebec side, he is eligible for benefits under the Régie des rentes du Québec, while a Quebec resident who has worked all his life in Ottawa or Ontario is eligible only for benefits under the Canada Pension Plan which does not operate in the same manner as the Régie des rentes du Québec in this respect.

I therefore wish to ask the Minister whether he intends to meet with his provincial counterpart to try to correct a situation that is unfair to thousands of public servants and employees living in the National Capital region.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did not get the entire question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre.

DISASTERS

ASSISTANCE FOR FLOOD STRICKEN FARMERS IN NORTHEASTERN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, who speaks for the Minister of Agriculture in his absence. During the election the Premier of Saskatchewan and a number of Progressive Conservative candidates promised the flooded-out farmers in northeastern Saskatchewan that they would get $3 federal for every $1 provincial if a Conservative Government was elected. Has that promise been implemented? Is the sharing arrangement between the federal and provincial Governments, in cases of disaster, now $3 for every $1 that the province puts up?

• (1500)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture is presently in Manitoba speaking with farm groups. The issue that the Hon. Member raises regarding flood assistance to northern Saskatchewan is under consideration on the basis of upholding our campaign commitments, many of which have already been upheld as far as the agriculture sector is concerned. Mr. Speaker, I could spend the rest of the afternoon outlining the promises that we have upheld and I know the Hon. Member would want me to continue, but I see you shaking your head, so I will sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, December 5, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

MANPOWER

TABLING OF CONSULTATION PAPER ON TRAINING

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 46(2), I am tabling in both official languages two copies of a consultation paper on training.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am waiting for the usual House business question. It has not arisen yet so I am wondering if the House Leader can tell us what the business is for tomorrow and the rest of next week.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: All that proves is that the longer you have been here, the sneakier you can get! I sense that there is an understanding that the House business question is to be deferred slightly. I am prepared to hear the question now or just accept that there is an understanding and we are going to move to Statements by Ministers.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I just want to confirm that your understanding is correct. The House Leaders are going to meet after Routine Proceedings, after which we are going to come in and ask the indulgence of the Speaker so I can ask the traditional Thursday question. I appreciate the assistance of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), but I think he should use the opportunity he has behind the curtains to talk about this to his House Leader.

INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION

MOTION COMMEMORATING FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the International Civil Aviation Organization. ICAO has gained the respect of the world community as a model of international co-operation and harmony. It is an example of how well the United Nations system can work. The fact that ICAO headquarters is located in Canada is a source of pride to all Canadians.

With unanimous consent, Sir, I would like to move the following motion:

[Translation]

That this House note that December 7, 1984 marks the fortieth anniversary of the signing in Chicago of the Convention on International Civil Aviation and congratulates the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) for its outstanding achievements in developing safe and efficient civil aviation throughout the world.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, we fully agree with the Minister's statement and welcome his motion. It is not only an example of how UN agencies can work, it is concrete evidence for member nations to use in similar commitments in other UN agencies and in the UN itself.

If you have had the privilege of flying westbound from Europe to Canada, Mr. Speaker, crossing the awesome ice cap of Greenland, it is comforting to know that navigational aids to which Canada contributed $800,000 under the 1956 agreement are in place in Greenland, Iceland and the Faroe Islands. That is an example of working together internationally which needs to be followed. The legal work of ICAO has resolved differences in national codes of law that would have otherwise handicapped international air operations.

Now is the time, Mr. Speaker, to transfer the example of ICAO in the United Nations to the number one priority for the UN and all humankind, for peace, disarmament and non-participation in the nuclear madness. Without all of that, all else, including the magnificent work of ICAO, will go for naught.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): I want to join with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the hon. gentleman to my left in stating the appreciation of the Liberal Party of Canada for the work of ICAO during its 40 years of existence. I think the Minister's motion is appropriate. We only have to reflect back a few months to the unfortunate Korean Airlines flight 007 incident to recognize that in today's world it is important that organizations such as ICAO, under the auspices of the United Nations, are able to speak for all people everywhere in a non-partisan manner so as to assure the safety of passengers, no matter where they fly or on what airline, irrespective of geo-political differences.

Therefore I, too, would like to join in congratulating ICAO on its excellent work. I share the Minister's pride in that that organization has seen fit to continue its good work based in Canada and I urge all Members to endorse the Minister's motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House prepared to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Clark, Yellowhead) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) now wishes to rise on the motion?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I believe that under the rules we can briefly ask the Minister questions on his statement. That is what I wish to do.

Mr. Speaker: There is also a tradition that we do these things in the context of equal time. We have exceeded equal time at this point. Does the Hon. Member have one question perhaps?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, if it is not already happening, is consideration being given to using the auspices of ICAO to marshal cargo and passenger aircraft in the international community for the transport of aid such as food and medical supplies as well as to aid workers into the drought areas of Africa?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member spoke he very properly made reference to the importance of international, particularly United Nations, organizations, of which ICAO is a stirring example. He will know that as a result of the initiative of the Secretary General of the UN, Mr. Perez de Cuellar, there has been the establishment of a co-ordinating agency in the UN to bring together, as much as is possible, the efforts of countries interested in responding to the crisis in Ethiopia. I can only assume, and it is an assumption, not an affirmation, that as part of that international co-ordination work the auspices of ICAO are being used. If not, certainly we recommend that they be.

PETITIONS

REDUCTION IN POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present to the House a petition from the residents of Riverside, Albert County, in my constituency who are protesting the proposal by Canada Post to reduce office hours from 40 hours a week to 30 hours a week. I hope the Government will take this petition seriously and ensure that the already depleted standard of service is not further reduced.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND OCEANS LAWYERS

Question No. 13—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans?

Mr. Mel Gass (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): There are four lawyers assigned to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans from the Department of Justice.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE ECONOMIC UNION AND DEVELOPMENT PROSPECTS FOR CANADA

Question No. 40—Mr. Howie:

To date, what was the total cost of the Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada and what is the estimated total cost of the Commission?

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): The total cost for the period of November 5, 1982 to October 31, 1984 was $13,971,363. It is estimated that the total cost of the Commission will be between $19,500,000 and $20,000,000.

Mr. Dick: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85 (No. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Althouse (p. 948).

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has the floor.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to continue the debate started this morning. Am I in order?

Mr. Speaker: I am informed by the Clerk that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Ms. Copps: This morning, I was told by the Chair that I still had two minutes.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the Clerk at the Table tells me that the Hon. Member's time had already expired.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Without contradicting anything that has been said, the Acting Speaker told me personally, prior to one o'clock when he was leaving the Chamber, that the Hon. Member had three minutes left.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member be trying to drive a wedge between the Acting Speaker and the Speaker? That would be an achievement, in context!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am advised, according to the book, that the Hon. Member started at 12.50. Is that correct?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to make an international incident out of this but it seems to me that if the Acting Speaker advised myself and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) that I had minutes remaining, I am not sure which takes precedence, the Acting Speaker or the Clerk.

Mr. Speaker: The clock takes precedence. However, may I suggest a resolution to this matter? Would the House consent to hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Coops) for two more minutes, by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the House for its courtesy to myself, the Acting Speaker and the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. I merely wish to add my voice to those Hon. Members who have already expressed their support for the amendment asking the Government to postpone borrowing these billions of dollars for at least six months. If we look at the situation in the steel industry in my riding, we see that the Prime Minister has as yet failed to react to the urgings of the Liberal Party to take a tougher stand at meetings with the U.S. Administration.

The House is aware that this Government and its Prime Minister have received a very clear mandate from the Canadian people, and it is now their responsibility to show Canadians it is the boss and that it is going to do everything in its power to create thousands of jobs. However, in the riding of Hamilton-East there are many jobs that are going to disappear altogether as a result of the Government's failure to act. I know the Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Kelleher) is concerned because he has steel mills in his riding, and there are other Members who are also anxious to see this Government and its Prime Minister ask the President of the United States to postpone a decision by Congress to prohibit entry of certain types of steel from Canada into the United States if they are not labelled as to country of origin.

Mr. Speaker, all Canadians have seen the Prime Minister and heard his promises, and they now expect him personally to do what he can to convince the President of the United States.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-11 through which the Government is requesting borrowing authority from this Parliament. Our Party has introduced an amendment requesting that this matter not be dealt with at this time.

Why would a reasonable Party such as the New Democratic Party present such an amendment? Which provisions of the Bill have forced us to introduce a hoisting amendment? Through Bill C-11, the Government has indicated that it needs $5.3 billion to fulfil its commitments to the end of the fiscal year, in March, 1985. We have no difficulty with allowing the Government the authority to borrow that amount. The Government has also indicated, quite correctly, that it requires a cushion of approximately $2 billion for unforeseen circumstances. Again, ours being a reasonable Party, we can understand the request for another $2 billion. Therefore, we believe that the request for $7.3 billion is reasonable.

Mr. Riis: We are reasonable people.

Mr. Rodriguez: We are reasonable people. It is a reasonable proposal. Therefore, we have no difficulty in consenting to that borrowing requirement.

The crux of the argument concerns the Government's request in this Bill for an additional $16 billion.

Mr. Riis: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: Of course not. That $16 billion is for the fiscal year 1985-86. In other words, it is a pig in a poke.

There is a very serious principle involved in this issue. While I might not agree with the Conservative Party and, in fact, have never agreed with them, I have always considered the Conservative Party to be very principled.

The previous Liberal Government introduced Bill C-125 to borrow money into the next fiscal year.

Mr. Riis: The Liberals?

Mr. Rodriguez: The Liberals wanted to. At that time the Conservatives clearly identified their principle. Let me suggest to the young Conservative members here that they should not be influenced by the more experienced practitioners of Tory politics in the House.

Mr. Riis: Why is that?

Mr. Rodriguez: Perhaps those Conservatives have sat opposite the Liberals for too long and have learned that you stand for principle when in opposition but when you become the Government you practise it in the breach more than in the observance.

It really disturbs me to see that these honest young Conservative rookies have been very silent. I want to tell them that they should not let their colleagues in the front benches lead them down the primrose path to unprincipled action in the House. They have been as silent as a tomb at midnight. Have they nothing to say on this principle?

Mr. Riis: I guess not.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member says "I guess not". I might remind the Hon. Member who is a Conservative in the front benches to my left—if you can believe that there is a Conservative to my left—that he does not have to look to me for guidance. He has only to look to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). When he was the finance critic for the Opposition in the last Parliament, during a debate on Bill C-125 in which the principle of borrowing into the next fiscal year was the issue—

Mr. Riis: Did he favour it?

Mr. Rodriguez: No, of course he didn't favour it. These were his remarks which can be of guidance to the neophyte Conservative members who are sitting in the House today silent, thinking it is a big joke. One would think that they would want to get up and participate and ensure that their Party's leadership on the front benches maintain the principle that they stood for in the last Parliament.

• (1520)

Here is what the Conservative finance critic said in the last Parliament on this question: "There is a well established principle that Parliament only provides sufficient borrowing authority to a government to allow it to finance its operations within the current fiscal year". That was the principle and nothing has happened to change that principle. That is a reasonable principle.

There are Conservative members in this House who are prepared to sit and make catcalls from their benches. I welcome them to join in the debate and participate. They ought to be ashamed because every time a principle is breached, the rights of Parliament are trampled on.

As a matter of fact, if the Conservatives are looking for guidance they look to their own elders in the Conservative Party. Let me quote what the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) said. He was the former Leader of the Conservative Party. First he said that he was a baseball fan and always recognized when the Liberals ran the former Minister of State for Finance, Mr. Bussières, as a pinch-hitter to introduce a Bill. The Conservatives have run the Hon. Member for St. Paul's (Mrs. McDougall) as their pinch-hitter. The Tories did not put up the Minister of Finance to move this Bill. Here is what the Hon. Member for Yellowhead said: "This is an affront to this Parliament. No banker outside these walls who deals with a businessman or businesswoman, large or small, would grant a line of credit to a financially crippled business that refuses to provide projections of its cash flows". That is a good argument to support the principle on which the Minister of Finance stood for when he was finance critic in the previous Parliament. It is a fine principle and it is a fine argument, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He was the Leader of the Party.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. He was the Leader of the Official Opposition at the time. We said that was a good principle. We are saying that if any of us went into the bank to ask the bank manager to borrow large amounts of money, we would be asked: "What is it for?" We would say: "We don't know; for anything that might come up". We will not get very far with that loan application. I think the Conservatives in this House owe it to the principled position which they took in the last Parliament to make sure they are not led down the paths of bad practices which we saw developed under the previous Liberal government.

Mr. Riis: What is their excuse?

Mr. Rodriguez: The Member asks what is their excuse. Maybe it is: "I am shy to make a speech in the House". It is only 10 minutes, gentlemen, only 10 minutes. I see the Speaker is telling me "time, gentlemen, please".

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): I rise, Mr. Speaker, to speak to the motion calling for a six-month delay in the Government's borrowing bill. It seems to me that the people of Canada, and those of my Mount Royal riding, would consider me remiss if I just said "yes" to everything, like some other Members of this House do to what the Government proposes, without having the responsibility to ask for the contract and to read the fine print. We should all read contracts and look at the fine print before we sign a blank cheque.

For example, we have heard a lot of talk about jobs, jobs, jobs, as a priority. We have had no action. We have had lots of cuts, because that is where the action seems to be centered. We have had lots of concern about cutting the deficit and about setting a climate which would incite or invite investment. With all this hyperbole about how the private sector is going to improve working conditions and do the hiring, I want to know where, when, why and how we are going to make up for those thousands and thousands of jobs presently being cut.

I want to bring to the attention of this House the remarks made by the Economic Council of Canada in its twenty-first annual review of the economy which was released November 27. Let me quote from it:

> Putting Canadians back to work should be the Government's primary concern . . . The unemployment rate is 11.3 per cent.

Mr. David Slater, the Council Chairman, said:

> We must grapple now with the high rate of unemployment because it is a serious economic and social problem.
> The deficit, too, needs addressing and the Government has already started bringing it under control. Reducing the Government's debt burden is important, but not sharply and suddenly with a broad axe approach to spending as some other groups would recommend.

Let me add to that "and as this Government seems to have done". The Council urged the Government to steer clear of making deep cuts in federal spending, especially on social programs. It would seem to me the Government has done exactly the opposite. We have been witness to very serious and deep cuts in all aspects of government right across the board.

I will not enumerate the size of those cuts, but I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the impact that has been observed by many different groups within our society. For example, a forecasting firm, Informetrica Limited, estimated that the Government expenditure cuts and increased revenue recovery announced on November 8 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would result in the loss of 12,000 to 31,000 jobs. The Conference Board of Canada, another economic forecasting firm, has estimated that some 15,000 to 20,000 jobs will be lost as a result of the spending cuts.

The Government takes the position that while some jobs will be lost as a result of the decreased expenditure levels, these will be more than offset by the increased business confidence that will result from the cut-backs. I say that would be marvellous if we could be so assured, but we have no such assurance. The simple fact is that people are hungry and they are concerned. They really want to know where their next job is.

At the same time, the Minister of Finance has refused to make public the estimates carried out by his Department on the number of jobs lost as a result of the cut-backs. I think that is irresponsible on his part. Why should we have to wait for outside forecasting companies to tell us what is going to happen? Why should the Minister not be responsible to Canadians and advise them as to the impact and then say that these cuts will be made up by changes in the economic climate and the investment climate? No, Mr. Speaker, that is not what the Minister has said. He has let everybody sit back and worry. I think that is irresponsible.

The Statistics Canada leading indicator released last week indicates that a period of weaker economic growth will begin some time within the next six months. Although that may not be on the Tory calendar, nonetheless that is what is on the Tories' future slate. This does not necessarily point to the onset of a recession, and I do not wish to bring doom and gloom on to the scene, but it does tend to confirm economic forecasts indicating a slowdown in economic growth and continued high unemployment.

In this context, reduced government expenditures are not what is prescribed by the Keynesian school of economic thought and it would not find the Tories' approach very solid. I think the Keynesian school of economic thought and many forecasters in the Economic Council believe that government expenditures should contribute to increased demand in a period of sluggish growth.

• (1530)

To obtain an idea of how women will fare relative to men in the advent of an economic slowdown, it is useful to consider the labour market situation over the past few years. We have seen a participation rate of women of 50.4 per cent in 1980, of 51.7 per cent in 1981 and 1982, and of 52.6 per cent in 1983. Their unemployment rates went up from 8.4 per cent in 1980 to 11.6 per cent in 1983.

This data brings to the fore the fact that during the 1982 recession, women generally fared better than men in the sense that they experienced a lower unemployment rate without any decrease in their participation rate. This tends to contradict the argument that women suffer more unemployment in cyclical downturns because they are not part of the core economy.

For example, it is generally thought that women do not participate in the labour force as consistently as men because they either have to leave the labour market or hold part-time jobs because of the added burden of domestic responsibilities.

Unfortunately, women do not have that luxury today. Women work because they have to. Two incomes are needed to make ends meet. The problem is that they do not accumulate as much job seniority as men and tend to be the first to be fired in economic downturns. That this did not happen in the last recession is because the hardest hit sectors were the primary industries, manufacturing and construction, which have a predominantly male labour force.

Women participate more in the services producing industries. In particular, women are predominant in the community, business and personal services as well as the finance, insurance and real estate sectors. Thus, how women will fare in terms of job opportunities in the coming year depends largely on the performance of these sectors. However, it is difficult to ascertain how the planned cut-backs will affect these sectors relative to the goods producing sectors. In this time of changing technology, it is very important to see what the Government's policy will be and how it will affect these sectors. Only then will I be prepared to see about giving it the kind of blank cheque it wants.

Current unemployment rates for October, 1984, show that women are now experiencing higher unemployment than men, 11.6 per cent for women compared with 9.7 per cent for men. While employment for women increased by 4 per cent between October 1984 and October 1983, the female labour force increased by 4.8 per cent. Neither male employment nor the male labour force are increasing as rapidly. Do I have one more minute? Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

We are translating these percentages into 179,000 more jobs for women and 156,000 more jobs for men between October 1983 and October, 1984. To the extent that the recent cutbacks may affect the services producing industries, women may have to face higher unemployment rates in the future. I would like to be assured that the haemorrhage of job losses, which are predicated by what has happened with government cuts, is going to be controlled. Until we know that, we should not accept the borrowing Bill. We should wait until we see what is behind the blank cheque request.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, as a candidate in the last election, I could not help but be impressed with the commitment to political honesty and civilized behaviour that was communicated by members of the Conservative Party during that election. I understood that we differed in a number of significant respects that were cited by the Hon. Member sitting before me together with members of the Conservative Party with regard to political philosophy, but I was sure that they shared with me the concern about the cynicism generated by a pattern of hypocrisiy in politics that causes some significant questioning of what all of us share, namely a commitment to serve the Canadian people.

In view of their pronouncements during the election campaign, Members opposite are now faced with a very uncomfortable situation. They are asked to support Bill C-11, which would communicate a strong message of inconsistency, abandonment of principles, a message that constitutes an obvious denial of a point of view which was consistently and vigorously argued upon the introduction by previous Governments of Bill C-125 and Bill C-21.

The essential and proper argument made by the then Leader of the Opposition with respect to Bill C-125, and reiterated in the motion offered by my Party and since rejected, stated then what is obvious now. What is proposed is wrong, objectionable and contravenes parliamentary practice. It is a contradiction of the principle that there should not be borrowing beyond the fiscal year.

It is worth mentioning that because of opposition resistance, the Liberals had a seizure of conscience. On both previous occasions, they withdrew the objectionable Bills. Would the Conservatives want to be seen as less respectful of this House than the Liberals were on those two previous occasions? Would they want to seem less committed to the principle of honesty than the Liberals demonstrated themselves to be on those two previous occasions?

The government Party made a number of promises during the last election campaign, promises which were broken very quickly upon their ascension to government. They broke their promises with respect to Canertech, national parks, and access to information, particularly with regard to the PetroCan takeover of Petrofina. They broke their promises with respect to taxation, research, housing and racial equality. Above all, they promised change. The kind of change they brought about is the change that one experiences on that first cold day of a winter of discontent.

I will cite two examples. With respect to culture, they assured the Canadian people that they would not do anything that would affect culture in Canada in a negative fashion. If one looks at what they propose to do to the cultural mandate of the CBC as it is manifest in the city of Windsor, one finds a classic example of the kind of commitment this Government has to its promises. They propose to cut $2.5 million of an $8.2 million budget for CBET, involving the dismissal of 40 people, chiefly in programming, and the abandonment of a portion of the most lucrative television newsbroadcast in the country in terms of revenue. This was proposed for a community that already experiences significant isolation. This was proposed for a community that requires something to bind it to the rest of the country, something to ensure that its Canadian identity will be continued and reinforced. This was proposed for a community in which Canada's broadcasting system represents a window away from the United States. Fortunately, the Government took pause with respect to that initiative.

• (1540)

On the other hand, if one looks at what has been done to young people, I suppose it would have to be mentioned that government Members promised young people very little. What they have managed to do is to provide less. They claim that they have cut $85 million from Summer Canada, a cut that would account for some 41,000 student jobs. However, they have been misleading even with respect to this claim. The fact of the matter is that the Liberal Government, in two previous fiscal years, devoted first $170 million and then $200 million to providing jobs for some 81,000 young people. This Government has not announced any substitute for that. How can we be reassured by anything that government members might say with respect to the request for borrowing authority for the next fiscal year?

There must indeed be a crisis of conscience being experienced by back-benchers who have not been exposed to the kind of cynicism that being in power generates. It must be terrible for them to have it required of them to abandon principle by seeking Parliament to give what should not have been asked for in the first place. It is time for a catharsis of conscience on the part of the government members. I would ask them to tell their leaders that they have had enough compromise and enough abandonment of principle and that they will not act in a way inconsistent with what they believe. I ask of those Conservative back-benchers who have not been committed to the cynical point of view of their leadership to tell their leaders: "No, we have had enough, we are not going to go along with this kind of abuse". Join with us and with the rest of the Opposition in supporting the hoisting of this Bill.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. With only one Minister in the House, I do not think we have a quorum. Could you take a count of the Members?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We counted twenty Members, including the Speaker. There were twenty Members present at the time the count was taken. So we have a quorum, but only just. The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): —only just, Mr. Speaker. I see that despite the Government's massive majority, there are more Members on our side than on theirs, and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you must feel a little uneasy about this.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to take part in this debate, and I want to thank my fellow Members for coming to the House in droves to listen to my speech. I would like to take this opportunity to point out to the House that what we are being asked to do in this Bill is, and I am sure those who know something about farming will appreciate this simile, we are being asked to buy a pig in a poke. I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier) is here as part of his new duties in Parliament, and I know he is doing so at the behest of the people on the front bench when I see him violate one of the sacred principles so cherished by his fellow Members when they were in the Opposition—

I remember the debate on Bill C-125, when his colleagues claimed they were acting according to their conscience. They had a conscience at the time but they seem to be losing it now they are on the other side of the House. They are mistaken if they think this House is prepared to give them a free rein and let them spend and borrow additional funds, after what they have done to us since the beginning of this session, after the way they have cheated Canadians. Now, after only three months, the people of Canada are starting to realize this!

We saw the results of some polls today, and I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that it is a slow process, but after only three months they are already losing the confidence of the people of Canada. Five points, 5 per cent of Canadians have seen through this Government's game, and I am sure this is only the beginning of a general disenchantment. Imagine! Five points in three months! Mr. Speaker, it will not be long before the people of this country, before the majority of Canadians will start looking to this side of the House for other alternatives.

We must discharge our responsibilities while we wait for the next election call, Mr. Speaker, and that includes making sure that public funds are properly spent. In light of the experience we had with the economic statement and the Speech from the Throne, we have lost faith in this government and we simply cannot approve that borrowing authority until the government comes up with some kind of a program.

As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, the government was preaching virtue on the hustings, saying that Canadians would know everything, that the government would be a model of transparency. Well, Mr. Speaker, it has lost some of that transparency since the election and the opening of Parliament.

Economic and regional development is of great concern to me, so I am not prepared to issue a blank cheque. I would just like to know what their plans are before I agree to let them borrow more money. Will this additional money be used for—

—"Flora's hit squad"—

[Translation]

Will this additional money be used to pay for the 700-man strong unemployment insurance police squad?

Hopefully not, and I am glad that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is here, because I do hope those funds will not be used to pay those 700 people whose only goal will be to give a hard time to the most destitute Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I know that this amendment is aimed at putting off the borrowing authority for six months. I am convinced that the adoption of the amendment will enable all of us, particularly the new Members, to reflect upon what the government has been doing so far. Since the festive season is a good time to make resolutions, I hope they will take that opportunity to resolve at least to keep their promises and not to change course every time the winds shift.

With respect to youths, am I going to let the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) spend God knows how many billions of dollars on behalf of young people who have no reason to complain as it is? That is what she has been saying. According to her, priority goes to young people who are doing fine. I would certainly be worried if those funds were earmarked for young people who are already fairly well off and who have no problems. I know she is saying to herself: Let us forget about the 15 per cent of those who are in a bind because there will be economic fall-outs, Mr. Speaker.

I know that Members on the other side are distressed by this situation because, in their ridings, requests for help come from young people who are experiencing difficulties, not from the others who know where the next meal is coming from.

But that does not prevent the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) from telling them that she must provide help for those who have no worries because that is how the Conservative policy works.

But that is a new policy they discovered after the election, because they would never have dared to say that before!

International trade is another subject I am very much interested in. I see the Minister of External Trade (Mr. Kelleher), who travels hither and yon, and who says: We are going to spend more on export aid, on seeking out new markets—and at the same time he is cutting budgets.

Is the additional borrowing authority we are being asked to give going to be used to continue this series of contradictions, this series of broken promises?

That is why I think that we, as Parliamentarians, cannot let the Government, acting on behalf of Canadians, borrow money without knowing what it is going to do with it. I remember well the debate on C-125. It was long and it was painful, and as one of our colleagues on the left said, finally the Government, thanks to the influence of its backbenchers . . . at the time backbenchers did have some influence on the Government, while today, they all sit there without saying a word! Mr. Speaker, you have been listening to these speeches for several days, and you know that not a word has come from the Government side.

And I, especially as a Member from Quebec, $16 billion . . . and they were accusing us of not opening our mouths at the time, Mr. Speaker.

I see the Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), who spends his time speaking in his seat instead of on his feet.

Mr. Speaker, I realize they must feel uncomfortable, because they were supposed to be the great defenders of the people of Quebec. They claimed they were better than the Liberal Members, and now, they are letting themselves be run by the gang on the front bench, Mr. Speaker. I am thinking especially of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier), who at this very moment must feel he is being used and manipulated. Asking the House for $16 billion without knowing what they want to do with it! Mr. Speaker, I wish I had a chance to ask the Parliamentary Secretary what he would do with the $16 billion. I would bet you anything he has not a clue!

Mr. Speaker, thank you for reminding me I have only two minutes left. I could spend the rest of the afternoon talking about this very serious matter of asking a responsible Parliament to turn not one but two blind eyes to what the Government is going to do with this money. I know now that many Conservative Members used to say that they were small businessmen, and that of course makes me wonder whether they were ever able to walk into the bank manager's office and apply for a loan without telling him what they would do with the money.

They kept saying that common sense would be the hallmark of their government, that everything would be crystal clear, that there would be no doubt about the course of government. Here we are debating the first major piece of legislation, for we must recall that the economic statement was supposed to be a budget, but there was no way for us to debate it directly, and so we are waiting for the real thing. If Hon. Members opposite know where they are going, Mr. Speaker, I wish they would bring down a budget in the House just so we might have a clue as to what the money is for and find out which orientation the government will follow. I know that the silent Members would like to know what their government is going to do, but their leader practically read them the riot act: Stop asking questions and come in to vote when you can, that is what counts.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your attention and I am convinced that the longer we can put off the adoption of this measure, the clearer the conscience of Members on the other side will be.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have the opportunity to enter into this debate. However, I regret that we have to prolong this debate. If the Conservatives had the same sense of public principle today as they had in the summer of 1982, we would not have to extend this debate to get the argument across that what they are doing in Bill C-11 is precisely what the Liberal Government attempted to do at that time. However, the Liberal Government finally found the sense of public decency and changed; it accepted the recommendation of the Opposition and divided the Bill.

It is totally unacceptable for a government to ask for permission to borrow a certain amount in funds—inevitably from the taxpayers—for one fiscal year and then ask for an extra $16 billion for the purpose of a contingency fund.

The second thing I find distasteful is the request to borrow $23.3 billion. All we have heard from the Government since the first day of the Thirty-third Parliament is a long litany of cut-backs and termination of programs. One would have to ask the question: Why does the Government need all this money if it is going to cut back? One would have thought that the amount of money would be considerably less than the $23.3 billion which is being requested.

I want to talk about these cut-backs because the Government has indiscriminately, right across the board, cut back on virtually everything, with the possible exception of National Defence. If we listen to the longer range plans of the Government, as those plans evolve into the winter, spring and fall, I suspect that National Defence will end up spending more money in fiscal year 1985-86 than those funds which are presently allocated.

The Government wants $23.3 billion for the purpose of spending money for the balance of 1984 and for a contingency fund for 1985-86. There is something wrong. I want to bring the cuts to the attention of my constituents. I want to bring the umbrella of funding down to a basic unit, that is the constituency unit.

I happen to represent a constituency which, economically speaking, is as badly off today as it was during the depths of the recession in the summer and fall of 1982. The riding of Brant is not unlike many other constituencies, particularly those of Atlantic Canada, the remote northern areas of Canada and the interior of British Columbia, to give several examples. In the federal riding of Brant all-out war will be declared on the Unemployment Insurance Commission by the recipients of the benefits of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

It has been mentioned in fairly reliable circles that the Government will bow to the demands of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and reduce the number of benefit weeks from 52 to 26. We could imagine what would happen in a constituency such as mine, where Massey Ferguson is at the brink of disaster. There are about 1,700 employees on long-term lay-off. The company will not terminate half or even a third of those employees, who will probably never return to work, because if it did terminate them the company would have to pay severance pay and it does not have the money to do that.

This Government wants to include severance pay and vacation pay as declared earnings. That will hurt people on long-term lay-off. If the maximum benefit period were cut from 52 to 26 weeks it would mean that, in a riding such as mine, hundreds of men and women would be forced to go on welfare. That means the local tax base will be increased at a time when the general economy is down in my constituency and in the province, and at this time there are provinces worse off than Ontario. These are retrograde steps, giant steps backwards to the 1930s. That is what this Government is giving us. Nothing in the Conservative philosophy has changed since the days of R. B. Bennett, and we know what happened then. I predict that if this Government is determined to continue with its massive cuts and spending programs to help rejuvenate the economy, not only will it lead us into another recession but it will take us into a depression in many parts of this country.

• (1600)

The cut-backs in the unemployment insurance program are bad enough, but in ridings like mine where there is massive long-term unemployment, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has indicated that there is going to be the reintroduction of inspectors. They were called "Benefit Control Officers", I believe, back in the 1970s. Back in the 1970s the Government of the day decided to hire retired police officers, many of them on more than adequate pensions for that period of time, to go around and knock on doors to see if Mrs. Smith or Mr. Jones was actively searching for work. How do you actively search for work day in and day out in a city like Brantford which has a population of 75,000 and 8500 people out of work chasing some 260 jobs? How can one be expected to go out day after day, pounding on doors looking for work when there is that kind of ratio of jobs to workers? But this Government wants to force a further indignity upon the recipients of unemployment insurance benefits who will have their privacy invaded by a knock on the door by an inspector, an updated version of the Gestapo—with perhaps not the same physical tactics—asking, "When is the last time you were out looking for a job?"

It is despicable, Mr. Speaker, to think that we would go back to that time. The Conservatives across the way, along with our Party, fought this action back in the 1970s. They have now changed their minds on that. They have also changed their minds about the method of going about borrowing funds. They have forgotten the principles they espoused in 1982. Now they have come up with quasi police officers who will be checking up on those persons they suspect are not actively looking for work.

The ERDA program was basically a good one. It would take federal funding grants out of the political arena and provide moneys to industry through municipalities. It would grade municipalities according to need regardless of who its Member of Parliament was. The former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce had the full backing of our Party for this program. But what is the Government of the day doing, the Conservatives who supported the ERDA program? It has gutted the program by reducing its funding.

I would like to say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to hold up this legislation as long as we can to remind the Conservatives that if they had principles in the summer of 1982, they had better find those principles in the fall of 1984.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85 (No. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Althouse (p. 948).

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that former speakers on this side of the House have been so effective that they have driven that 40-man Cabinet from the benches across the way, with the exception of one. We have a 2.5 per cent attendance of the famous Cabinet which was going to do all this wonderful governmental work in the years to come.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It is quality that counts.

Mr. Hopkins: At least the Minister is my partner with White Shell and Chalk River.

As others have said before me, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-11 is divided into two parts. Part I asks for the authority to borrow $7.3 billion in the currrent fiscal year of 1984-1985. Part II asks for the authority to borrow $16 billion for the fiscal year 1985-1986. Many of us have sat in this House of Commons over the years and have heard the present Government—then the Opposition—shout, scream and complain about borrowing Bills. and here—a few months after Parliament has reconvened—we have a borrowing authority Bill totalling $23.3 billion. What has changed? The problem with this Bill, of course, as has already been pointed out, is that it is traditional for a government to present estimates of expenditures and revenues prior to asking for borrowing authority. This Bill is almost equal to taxation without representation.

The Conservative Government of today has not only failed to present the Estimates but it has not yet presented a budget. We on this side of the House feel that the economic statement which was delivered a few weeks ago may well be considered a budget. All we have seen so far is that "smuggled in" budget, camouflaged as an economic statement. We have studied this statement and its accompanying documents in an attempt to discern the future direction of this Government, but, believe me, Mr. Speaker, as the days go by it is becoming more and more difficult to decide in just what direction this Government is going to go.

During the last election campaign, in riding after riding across Canada, we as candidates heard our Conservative opponents say, "The day after a Conservative Government is elected, we are going to have tens of thousands of jobs". Never before, Mr. Speaker, have I had so many people lining up at my constituency office and my office here in Ottawa looking for jobs. Our Conservative opponents said as well that in order to get things done, one needed a representative on the government side of the House. And I throw that back to my hon. friend across the way. Those Hon. Members on the backbenches opposite are going to have a marvellous time before this Parliament is over because it is not just the opposition Members who are not going to have the programs to work with in the future. The programs are cut for every Member of Parliament regardless on what side of the House he or she sits. Let us stop this nonsense. We do not have to be on the government side of the House to get things done. What we need, Mr. Speaker, is a Government which has the guts, the intestinal fortitude and the humanitarianism to bring in legislation which is going to produce jobs for those people out there who are in need today.

Ms. Copps: Right on!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: And we did that as a government. I hear some shouting from across the way. I must be touching on some pretty sensitive nerves, Mr. Speaker. We brought in many jobs, and what did we hear during the election campaign? All those jobs were wasted money. In other words, those Hon. Members opposite were telling us, as they told us in this House, that money spent on human beings is wasted money. But we do not buy that as Liberals. We have compassion for those who are in need, for those who are out there looking for jobs today.

I would just like to bring to the attention of the House something which happened immediately after the last election campaign. There was an earlier agreement in place ready to be signed with the Province of Ontario. That province did not sign that agreement for months. So what happened? The money, some $75 million for forestry, was sitting there waiting for the agreement to be signed, but a few days after the Tories came into power the agreement was signed. Then what did some of the Tory Members says? It took months, they said, and the Liberals never signed an agreement with that Tory Government in Ontario. They forgot to say it was a Tory Government in Ontario but they said it only took them a few days. The only reason for that, Mr. Speaker, was that the Liberals had it already in place. It had been sitting there on the shelf and the Tories refused to come and sign it. So let us set the record straight on a number of these things.

• (1610)

Mr. Mantha: Feel better?

Mr. Hopkins: The Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha) asks me if I feel better. I hope he feels better when some of these cuts start hitting northern Ontario. He and his colleagues are going to have to answer for them. The picnic is beginning to start. I suggest that he not shout too loudly at this point because four years is a long time.

There have been other things said here which are rather misleading, Mr. Speaker. For example, that the Liberal Government was not doing anything on defence. That is the biggest inaccuracy that could be stated. The often repeated charge that Canada was not fulfilling its commitment to NATO with respect to real growth in defence spending is simply false. The NATO commitment was 3 per cent, and this year defence spending will grow in real terms by 4.1 per cent. That is under Liberal planning and Liberal Government, but that was after we had taken $50 million out of the defence budget to put in a $307 million employment initiative program announced by our present House Leader during the campaign. If that money had been left there, we would have reached a 4.6 per cent increase in real terms in defence spending.

There is another very important point that is often overlooked or not even considered because it is hardly ever mentioned by the critics. If one were to use the NATO method of calculation, because ours is based on the gross national expenditure of the Department of Finance, Canada's performance would appear better still. It would have been over 5 per cent.

Mr. Mantha: Why didn't you do it?

Mr. Hopkins: We did. The Hon. Member does not know what is going on. Under NATO guidelines, Canada, as a result of Liberal policy, is hitting the 5 per cent mark in increased defence spending. The Hon. Member for Nipissing had better get his facts straight before he starts shouting out on the floor of this House.

Since 1974, defence spending has increased every year in real terms except during the Clark Government. In 1974-75, some $2.5 billion was spent on defence. Defence spending this year, under a Liberal budget, because this Government has not brought in a budget but simply an economic statement, will be $8.7 billion, and we projected $11.1 billion in 1986-87. At least 50 per cent of that was going into Maritime Command and on upgrading our capital equipment in the Department of National Defence.

So let us not have rumours spreading all over this land that the Tories are coming in with this great new ballgame for the Department of National Defence. We were well on our way and we have handed them an excellent program to go on. We are going to be here to see to it that they carry out those promises, bring in that extra manpower, and buy that extra equipment. As the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates)—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret—

Mr. Hopkins: I was just going to refer to my good friend, the Minister of National Defence, in very kind terms.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret, but the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, during the recent election campaign we heard very little from either the then government Party, the Liberals, or from the then Official Opposition Party, the Conservatives, about the horrors of the deficit. What we heard from the then Leader of the Opposition, the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), was that the important issue before the people, the question that had to be answered, concerned jobs, jobs and jobs. Not only did he not worry about the deficit, but he made some 400 individual promises which the Conservatives would keep if they became the government. All of this would of course cost substantial amounts of money.

What has happened since the Government said that jobs, jobs and jobs was the issue? Now the most important, in fact the only issue facing the people of Canada is to get the deficit down.

Mr. Deans: At any cost.

Mr. Orlikow: Precisely. It is pretty obvious that what the Conservative Government is doing is listening to the rhetoric of President Reagan and ignoring the reality of what he is doing. President Reagan rails against deficits and savagely cuts social programs for the poor and the needy. President Reagan endorses the idea that the U.S. should enact a constitutional amendment which would prohibit deficits at all. But the reality is that he has brought to the U.S. the biggest deficits they have ever had; much, much bigger than they were during World War II. Indeed, the deficit in the eight years President Reagan is likely to be in office will probably amount to more than the entire deficit created in the U.S. in the almost 200 years prior to his being president. He talks about the deficit but he does not worry about it. He has improved the unemployment situation in the U.S. It is now down to the point at which it was when he was elected four years ago. He accomplished this by spending hundreds of billions of dollars on defence. That is what has fueled the recovery in the United States. What is going to fuel the economy in Canada?

This Government is cutting back on the budget by several billion dollars in the hope that the private sector will get busy and create jobs, Mr. Speaker. Why would the private sector begin to invest billions of dollars? That is what is required to put people back to work. Why would it do that when most of the major industries in this country are operating at only about 70 per cent of capacity? Private business in this country, as in any other, only operates when it can see a profit. No one can criticize it for that. If it is working at only 70 per cent capacity, there will be no major investment from the private sector.

I fear that the cuts announced by this Government so far are only the beginning. When the Prime Minister meets the premiers, I fear next February he will tell them that the funds transferred to the provinces through the Establish Programs Financing Agreements are going to be either reduced or held at the present level. That is going to mean increased expenditures and deficits for all the provincial Governments. I remind Members of Parliament, especially Conservative Members who preach about how inequitous deficits are, that every provincial Government has a deficit. Seven of those provincial Governments are Conservative. They have deficits because they are not, and should not be, prepared to make major cuts in the services which they provide for their people, and neither should the federal Government be.

• (1620)

We now have 11.5 per cent unemployment. Every economic research agency in the country which has looked at the prospect for the next few years has predicted that we are going to have more double digit unemployment for the next five to 10 years.

Mr. Deans: You mean it is going to get worse?

Mr. Orlikow: My hon. friend, the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), asked if it is going to get worse. Yes, Mr. Speaker. Economists whom I have talked to, who have been much more correct over the years in their estimates of what would happen in the next year or two than the economists in the Department of Finance, have estimated that the policies of the present Government will lead to another 100,000 to 150,000 unemployed in a year from now. That is not surprising, Mr. Speaker, because the Government is more intent on reducing the deficit than it is on providing the jobs which are so necessary.

The Government talked about making our industry more efficient and more able to compete, not only in Canada but in world markets. We know from what has been done in Japan, Sweden and the United States that the way to get our industries more efficient is to invest heavily in scientific research and development. Our country has one of the worst records of all the countries that belong to the OECD. Most of the other countries are spending 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product on scientific research and development. Canada is spending substantially less than 2 per cent.

When the Conservatives were in the Opposition they joined with us and the scientific community in saying that we must do better, that we must reach 2.5 per cent of GNP invested in scientific research and development. When they got into office, however, they cut research and development funds for virtually every Department of Government. Most Canadians work in agriculture, forestry and the fishery. In every one of these fields as well as in the Government research agencies we have seen cut-backs. We have not got the details yet, but I am sure that the cuts in research will amount to tens of millions of dollars, probably to $100 million.

That means there will be cut-backs in research done in our universities. That means that our industries will become less efficient. If you look at the United States you will see that the new jobs which have been created in high technology are clustered very close to the major universities. They are in Massachusetts close to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. They are in California close to their major universities. Those universities do the basic research, and industry picks up the new techniques that it finds in those institutes and applies them in a commercial way. Instead of encouraging universities to work with industries, the Government is cutting back.

I will close, Mr. Speaker, by predicting that a year from now we will have substantially more unemployed than we have right now.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before Your Honour took the Chair it was understood that after a meeting between the House Leaders I would come into the House and ask the traditional question on House business, and my colleague, the Government House Leader, would be in a position to respond. Pursuant to that understanding, and with your permission, I would be delighted to ask my colleague, the Government House Leader, his plans for the business of the House for the coming week.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, we have had some discussions in which I have apprised my colleagues, the House Leader of the Official Opposition and the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, of the intention of the Government with respect to business of the House. I would like to inform the House that it is our intention to carry on today with Bill C-11, the borrowing authority Bill. If this Bill receives second reading today and is referred to committee, we would then enter into a discussion at the second reading stage of Bill C-12, which is a Bill relating to the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

It is our intention also to deal with these items tomorrow. If Bill C-11 has not passed today, we will continue with that debate tomorrow. After we finish it, if we do not manage to finish it today, we will deal with Bill C-12.

I want to designate next Monday as the final allotted day in this Supply period at which time we will, I understand, be dealing with the motion which is now on the Order Paper in the name of the Leader of the New Democratic Party. Since it will be the final Supply day, we will also want to consider at all stages the Supplementary Estimates and the Appropriation Bill.

I am pleased to announce to the House that on Tuesday we will have an opportunity to start debate, if not complete it, on a Bill relating to Investment Canada. This Bill will be introduced by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It is proposed that he will be introducing this Bill for first reading tomorrow. On Wednesday we hope to carry on with deliberations on that Bill and have second reading if we will not have reached it by that time.

On Wednesday I propose to call Bill C-3, the Bill relating to the courts of Ontario and Manitoba, which will be at report stage, and Bill C-5, the Bill respecting the Freshwater Fish Corporation, also at report stage. I understand that there is a disposition to deal with those two Bills on Wednesday next at report stage and third reading. In that event, if we will not yet have finished the Bill relating to Investment Canada, we can go back to that Bill on Wednesday and have some more discussion on it.

That, Mr. Speaker, is my intention for business of the House for the next week, always subject to the caveat that if circumstances change and we make progress, I would re-arrange the order to bring on further legislation. I look forward to the co-operation of the Opposition in this regard.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I know that it was no doubt owing to inadvertence on the part of the Government House Leader, but one item that I understood was to come up for some short debate was a statement with relation to International Human Rights Day. Such statement was to take place on Monday next. The duration of such a statement was not to exceed one half hour and each of the Parties was not to exceed ten minutes in time.

• (1630)

As I recall, that was the arrangement to which we agreed. I just want to verify that that is the understanding for Monday next, given that it is an Opposition day and that it is unusual to interrupt Opposition days with other than simply the routine business.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, it was not by inadvertence, it is simply that everyone in the House knows that my word is my bond. I did not think it was necessary to mention that in public after I had discussed this matter. Of course, the Leader of the New Democratic Party may not have the same faith in his House Leader.

Therefore, I am quite pleased to make it understood that we do not intend to spend a lot of time on that matter, but it is an important day. The House Leader of the NDP (Mr. Deans) will know—and I raised this issue—that because December 10 is the anniversary of the Declaration of Human Rights, we have traditionally had statements in the House on that day. It was my suggestion that we carry on that tradition and try to respect the fact that it was an allotted day. It was with that in mind that, as usual, I am always thinking of the Opposition and want to make sure that every possible consideration be given to their every wish.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, given that the Government House Leader, in his normal and customary way, is trying to accommodate the desires and wishes of the Opposition, and given that we have been attempting to achieve some reasonable resolution in the debate on the government's borrowing authority Bill for some days now, I just want to say that it was my request that we try to find some way to resolve this matter. I would very much like to hear very quickly what the resolution of this particular question might be.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up too much time of the House. I know that these questions are intended to be serious and not for the purpose of using the valuable time of the House when we could be considering the borrowing authority Bill. I would simply say that the Minister of State for Finance has engaged in conversations with representatives of the New Democratic Party. I am informed today by the House Leader of the Liberal Party that the Liberal Party is satisfied with the proposal put forward at this stage of the discussions. The Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party knows that the Minister of State for Finance has just arrived back in town. As a matter of fact, even now I have a telephone call from the Minister whom I will call as soon as we have finished this point of order.

Mr. Foster: I wish to rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is this a point of order on business of the House?

Mr. Foster: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to return to the motion. However, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Government House Leader seems to be in a very friendly and co-operative mood this afternoon. Perhaps it is because the House is in the same mood.

A reference to one of the House committees that was mentioned in the economic statement concerned agriculture, agri-bonds, Section 31 and the capital gains. Could he tell me if that reference will be made in the next week or so? Will it be going to the Agriculture Committee or to another committee? Could he bring the House into his confidence and tell us exactly what is happening, because there are some urgent matters with regard to the farm financing issue. I hope he can advise the House in this respect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow this, but we should get back to the Orders of the Day.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to discuss fully the matter at this time but a solid and firm rule which I have maintained is that I always deal with the Hon. Member's distinguished colleague, the House Leader of the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for Windsor West. I never go behind his back. I always try to consult him first with respect to House business.

Perhaps if the Hon. Member for Algoma would lean forward, the Member for Windsor West would have a chance to discuss these important matters with him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I think we should return to the debate on the amendment.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85 (No. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Althouse (p. 948).

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, after reading the newspapers, watching television and listening to the radio during the last few years, I have been extremely concerned about the manner in which the House of Commons conducts its business. It seems as though the House of Commons has been paralysed by inaction when trying to solve the problems of the country. I believe that this concern is shared by the vast majority of Canadians. I also believe that among a great number of important issues in the last election, this was an issue that concerned almost every Canadian. Canadians wanted a Parliament that could get on with solving the problems of the country.

For the last few days I have listened to the debate in the House continue on with the same points being discussed over and over again. I am beginning to feel that frustration that used to well up in me, and I am sure the same frustration is being felt by many Canadians in viewing this debate during the last few days. The same points have simply been repeated over and over again.

It seems to me that there comes a time when Canadians want Members of this Parliament to deal with the pressing problems of the day. Members of the opposition Parties have spoken about pressing problems such as unemployment and problems in the economy. We were elected in order to deal with those issues. The Opposition has amended this legislation twice and I believe it has made its point very well. I believe that Canadians understand its point and I do not think it is necessary for opposition Members to keep repeating it.

I suggest that it is time to get on with the business of this country and to solve the problems of this country. If Members of the House are unable to discipline themselves to solve this problem on their own, I hope that the task force on reforming the rules of the House of Commons can solve these problems. After going through an election only three months ago, surely Hon. Members must realize that Canadians want Members of Parliament to get on with solving the problems of the country rather than simply dragging out debate endlessly for the purpose of tactics, stalling and filibustering.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Member still has some time left. Would he permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) on debate.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is rather strange that a member of the Conservative Party would talk about delaying tactics in the House of Commons and about the need for the House of Commons to get down to work.

Although he is new to this place, he should know that his Party hijacked the House for days on end and weeks on end for what it believed at that time was an important principle. He should know that that Party when in opposition justified its tactical manoeuvers in this House in forwarding a principle that was important to the Canadian people. We are following in its footsteps, Mr. Speaker. We are using all of the tools that are available to us as Members of Parliament to give a message to this Government, to let this Government know that it is trampling on principles that are important to parliamentary democracy.

• (1640)

If the Member who has just spoken would take the time to read Hansard from the last session of Parliament, and if he were to read speeches of Members of his own Party who dealt with the matter we are dealing with today, he would see what I mean. Members from his own Party said to the Government of the day, a Liberal Government, that it was an affront to Parliament to come to the House of Commons and to ask to borrow money for the next fiscal year without any documentation on what that money was to be spent for. Those Members used every instrument available to an opposition Party in a democracy to bring the Government to its knees. They won.

Mr. Shields: Yes, we won on September 4.

Mr. Keeper: The Tories forced the Government to negotiate. My Conservative colleague says that they won on September 4. Yes, the Tories won the election on September 4, but it is rather strange that after only three months in power they should display such arrogance. They have begun to act like their Liberal counterparts who were on the other side such a short time ago. They think the only thing that matters is what happens on election day. The Tories have to keep in mind that, if they want to be in power again, they must respect this House of Commons and the people of the country.

It is important for this new Conservative Government to remain humble, to keep its feet on the ground, to remember that this country is governed by a parliamentary democracy and that one of the basic principles of a parliamentary democracy is the accountability of the executive to the Commons, and to remember that the accountability of the Government for the expenditure of money is to the representatives of the people. The Conservatives should keep in mind that some time ago another executive, a King by the name of Charles, lost his head because of this kind of action.

This Government today is losing its head. It is acting without common sense whatsoever. It is asking for money without any description of the purpose for which it wants the money. If we were to allow this Government—and the Government not think that we will allow it because we will not—to borrow money during this fiscal year for the next fiscal year without any justification, we will have the Government coming to us next year saying, "Not for the next fiscal year, but for the year after that as well".

Mr. Deans: They will put one Bill forward at the beginning for the entire Parliament. How ridiculous and absurd it is.

Mr. Keeper: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. The Tories could call this House of Commons together and bring forward a borrowing Bill that would allow them to borrow all of the money they want to spend for a four-year period, if we allowed them to get away with what they are doing now.

We hear from the back-benchers of the Conservative Party on this side that that would be a good idea. They would love just to call the House of Commons together for one sitting to pass one borrowing Bill and then go off quietly in some corner to govern the country.

Mr. Shields: What garbage.

Mr. Keeper: The Conservatives are so used to being in opposition, they have had so little experience when it comes to governing, that they have to learn. Like all people, they have to learn the hard way. They have to learn that their power is not unlimited or absolute. They have to learn that their power is democratic. They can only enjoy power as long as they have the confidence of the people and as long as their actions are held accountable to the representatives of the people in this House. This means not only the representatives of the people in the Liberal Party and the NDP, but the representatives in the Conservative Party as well. It is astounding to see so many Conservative Members silent while their Cabinet, their Government, arrogantly disrespects the authority of the House of Commons.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is the arrogance of silence.

Mr. Keeper: The Conservatives arrogantly disrespect the principles upon which the democratic system in this country works. It is incumbent upon every Member in this House to assert the authority of this House. The fundamental authority of this House is to hold the executive accountable for the spending of public dollars. We must and we will insist that this Government, before it gets any borrowing authority, justifies the purposes for which it seeks that borrowing authority.

Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives have come to us and asked us for authority to borrow $16 billion—not $16,000, not $16 million, but $16 billion. There is not one iota of description of that for which it is going to spend this money. That is utter, complete arrogance. The Conservatives have come to us without any statement of purpose for the borrowing of the money, and this is such a large sum of money. This arrogance even outdoes Liberal arrogance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: When the Liberals were in office they came to this House and asked to borrow money for a fiscal year in the future. After a period of debate, after the Opposition brought the principle of accountability for expenditures to the House of Commons to the attention of the Liberal Government, the Liberal Government backed down. The Liberals at least backed away. But what we see now is a new level of arrogance. The Conservatives are even more arrogant in office when it comes to the spending of the public dollar than the Liberals were. Can you believe that, Mr. Speaker?

That is the Party that claims to take to heart the reform of Parliament, that claims to be the Party which respects parliamentary democracy, the Party that is tearing at the very roots and at the very principles of parliamentary democracy. I hope this Conservative Government comes to its senses. There are enough Members here who could listen to reason and could get up to speak. Why do they not go to their cabinet Ministers and say, "We will not stand for the rape of Parliament or the arbitrary spending of public dollars"? Why do these back-benchers not stand up and be counted rather than act like a group of tame sheep? We can hear them baa-ing. It would be good to hear them say something, anything, rather than the silence we get. This is an important principle. When the Conservatives were in opposition they made a number of good points as it affects this institution. Those points deserve to be respected by the Conservative Party now that it is in office. The fact that Conservatives say one thing in opposition and do another when in office breeds cynicism throughout the land. It brings into disrespect the profession of politics. It brings into disrepute every Member of the House of Commons.

I call upon this Government to wake up to its own conscience, to listen to its back-benchers who, while silent in this House, I am sure behind the curtains are counselling the Government to respect this House of Commons, to respect the fact that the executive, the Government, is accountable for the money it spends to the elected representatives of the people.

• (1650)

There is no way that this borrowing authority is going to be granted to this Government. It may think that there is, but there is no way. I call upon it to enter into reasonable negotiations to find a way that respects this House of Commons and respects accountability for public expenditures. I call upon it to negotiate and come to a reasonable proposal with regard to borrowing authority.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I appreciate the words of the Conservative Member a few moments ago. Sometimes it appears that there is a lot of repetition and that we are almost too political in our statements in the House. Sometimes the Government does respond. A good example is something that happened a couple of days ago. I wish to congratulate one of the Conservative cabinet Ministers.

I do not want it to go to her head, but I want to mention publicly in the House of Commons—and I am sure Conservative back-benchers have done the same—that the other day the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) got approval for $6 million to try to solve the problem confronting us in part that of Newfoundland. The Minister deserves credit for listening to her opposition colleagues and members of her Party on this problem. As I said, I do not want that to go to her head because there are many other matters on which to disagree and which we will continue to raise in this House of Commons.

In my few remarks, I want to stick to the Bill before the House and to state why it should be terminated. One need not look at the major items that are under dispute. The Hon. Member said that he has not heard anything new. I went over the notes in the financial statement and the expenditure and program review of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). I notices one small item which states that land rental rates around airports are to be automatically increased to meet a budgetary figure of $23.5 million of increased revenue through three initiatives. That does not sound like a big item. It is a minuscule part of that revenue-generating program, but it is supposed to generate considerable revenue.

This gets back to how decisions are made. What group of people inside or outside the Government have decided on specific items to increase revenues to the Government? I am sure the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) will agree that to increase land rental rates around airports violates long-standing agreements and understandings with provincial Governments and municipalities in this country. Most airport land is actually owned by provincial Governments. Through Orders in Council the provincial Governments give permission to the Ministry of Transport to operate that land for airport-related purposes. When sections of land around airports are to be used for other purposes, the consent of the provincial Government is required as well as that of the federal Government.

As the Minister of Transport knows, these agreements are usually reached on the basis of an understanding and a $1 per year rental fee. Municipalities use that land in certain cases, and private industry in a lesser number of cases. Provincial government agencies are the major users for industrial parks and other purposes.

To generate revenue automatically from the lease of land that has been granted for a specific purpose violates long-standing agreements. Imagine what would happen to industrial parks around airports. They would obviously have to increase charges to users. We are talking here about provincial government agencies. If that airport uses a municipal water supply for which a set rate is paid, the municipality could well increase the charges to the federal government Department that is increasing the charges for the use of the land. It could go so far as to dispute the grants in lieu of taxes paid on airport-related buildings and properties.

It is not a simple matter of a revenue-generating source. We must consider who will be influenced. There was no consultation with the provincial Governments before this decision was taken. I am sure of that. It was handed down from on high to be initiated by the Minister of Transport. The transportation commitment of this Government given in Halifax, Nova Scotia, on August 2, 1984, was to accelerate the construction of airport and other federal transport-related projects. All we see in the financial statements are cuts and increased revenue generated from the leasing of those facilities.

At the same meeting on August 2, the Government announced that a fund would be set up to finance the cost of a submarine cable between the mainland and the Island of Newfoundland. I do not see the cost of a cable from Labrador to Newfoundland in this financial statement. I do not see it in any statement made after this Party came to power. A cable is needed. You have to do something. You cannot put it over the Gulf of St. Lawrence because that would be an awfully big bridge. You cannot put it on top of the water because that would damage shipping. I suppose you could put it under the straits. That was tried. This is why I raise the matter today.

We saw the history of this commitment over television a few years ago in Newfoundland. A Conservative Government announced it would put a cable under that section of the Atlantic Ocean. It said it would build a tunnel through which cars as well as the cable could pass through. They even set off the blasts, both at the same time, one on the mainland and one on the Island. The television cameras were there to record the big explosions. The holes are still in the ground. The Conservative Party still has not given up on its promise. That is exactly what it is, a promise.

There is no mention of a cable in the financial papers. The cable will go the same route as the tunnel. It is just a promise. I could go on to list 380 other reasons for stopping the present legislation from being passed by the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With regard to House business, in the exchange earlier today, I indicated that discussions had been initiated by the New Democratic Party with respect to the borrowing authority Bill, Bill C-11. It has not been possible for the Minister, who is in Cabinet at the present time, to carry on those discussions. In order to allow for the discussions to carry on, I propose to change the order of business for tomorrow. We will reverse the business by starting tomorrow with Bill C-12, which deals with the Excise Tax Act, followed by Bill C-11, the Borrowing Authority Act, after Bill C-12 has been disposed of at second reading.

• (1700)

The other business for tomorrow will be the same as I announced previously, and this will be true with respect to Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week as well. However, tomorrow we will deal with the Excise Tax Act and will allow discussion to continue on the borrowing authority Bill.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, indeed we have been consulted regarding this move and are ready to agree to it. In fact, we are ready to do anything to help the Government reflect on the situation of Bill C-11. We will co-operate.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private Members' business, as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS— MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all orders and items preceding No. 150 stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ADVISABILITY OF AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should amend the Constitution Act 1982, to include property rights and, that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights so that it reads as follows:

Constitution Act, 1982

"7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this matter has been before the House on a number of occasions. The last occasion it was before the House was in a debate held on April 29, 1983, as reported in Hansard commencing at page 24996 or thereabouts. The matter to be debated on that day was brought before the House by the Progressive Conservative Party and was supported by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp (Provencher)), the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) and the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) in their previous capacities.

Not only has this provision been supported by government Members in the past, and I would assume by government Members now, it has been supported by this Party for a great long period of time. You will recall, Sir, that the issue forms the essence of the Canadian Bill of Rights passed by this House on August 10, 1960, and copies of that Bill of Rights are displayed by all Members of this House. The Canadian Bill of Rights sets out the right to own property and to not have property taken away without due process of law.

Indeed, the right to property is so fundamental in our jurisdiction that the history of property rights goes back to the Magna Carta of 1215. At that time, the barons of Runnymede forced the king to recognize their rights to property. The right to property is not just a part of our history but is a part of the history of all civilized countries in the world, as evidenced by the 1948 United Nations Declaration of Human Rights which specifically protects the right of property in Article 17 which reads:

(1) Everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others.

(2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

That being the case, this right was a question of debate when we were organizing the patriation of the Constitution. Through the negotiations relating to that Constitution, we came out with a flawed Charter. We came out with a Charter that was supposed to be a Charter of Rights but that left out a fundamental right. Indeed, the right to own property is so fundamental that without the right to own property, none of the other rights are worth anything. They cannot be defended. If one cannot own property, how can one pay a lawyer to defend the rights of freedom of speech or of assembly? How does one have an assembly if one cannot have a private hall? A private hall must be a piece of property.

At this time, we have a flawed Charter of Rights. We have a Charter of Rights that is really not worth very much when dealing with the rights of human beings. Therefore, I call on this House, as has the Legislature of British Columbia and, as I am told, as has the Legislature of New Brunswick, to do what must be done under the amending formula, and that is, to restore that which should have been present in the first place and that which was promised by the negotiations but which was somehow left out in order to get the New Democratic Party on the side, as some say. I am sure even members of the New Democratic Party would want to know that people have rights that can be enforced and supported.

If the state owns all and if the state can control, then the entire system under which we have been operating means little. If the state can take away that which one has, then one's right to speak out and to protect what one says is non-existent. Therefore, I call upon the House to do something it should have done a long time ago, and that is, to pass a resolution amending the Charter of Rights so that it can be whole and so that it can be a Charter of Rights that really means something.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the debate on the resolution proposed by the Hon. Member. Obviously, all Members of the House will be aware that this is not a new issue but one which has been raised and talked about extensively in the past. In the time that I spent in the Ontario Legislature, a similar issue was dealt with after having been proposed by a member of the Party which I represented. I believe that the Hon. Member for the provincial riding of Waterloo North, Mr. Herb Epp, has proposed a resolution along that line in the hope that the Ontario Legislature could obtain Ontario's consent for such inclusion in the Constitution.

Although I am in agreement with the principle of this motion, I have some reservations. I am of the view that if this resolution is passed, it should be discussed thoroughly at the committee level, and the committee should listen to witnesses from various parts of the country who could discuss possible side effects that could result from the final passage of such an amendment to the Charter of Rights.

We all know that the Canadian civil liberties group has expressed some reticence with regard to the passage of such a resolution and is of the view that it could indeed have severe repercussions. One also wonders what would happen to certain expropriation procedures which exist at this time. Again, having spent some time at the provincial level, I know of the number of agencies and government Departments that have rights of expropriation at this time. You will recognize, Mr. Speaker, that if all of these rights were denied by the passage of such a resolution, there could be serious side effects. When dealing with the construction of roadways, the erecting of hydro towers or any other such matters, we can see that this matter is of tremendous concern to many Members of the House.

● (1710)

There is another concern that must be reckoned with of course, that is, the fact that certain provinces are not yet in agreement that this should be done. In looking through newspaper articles, the last reference which I could find indicated that at least four provinces were not in agreement. I understand that Saskatchewan, Alberta, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland had not, at the time of the newspaper article, given approval to such a measure. That does not mean that we have to wait for the approval of seven provinces before initiating a measure, but it does indicate that not everyone is in accord with such a resolution.

One also has to look at what happened in the United States with the Bill of Rights. We know that the Bill of Rights was used for many years to prevent the stoppage of child labour. It was also used to prevent groups from unionizing. It was also deemed that the establishment of minimum wage laws could infringe upon the Bill of Rights.

Given that some of us approve of the general intent of this Bill, we certainly would not want to see the passage of such a measure within the space of a few minutes of discussion. It requires a very thorough airing in the House and in committee. We should call upon witnesses from all sides of the issue who could assist us further in making a final decision.

I listened very attentively to the Hon. Member who proposed this motion. He alluded to the fact that our present Charter of Rights and Freedoms is somehow deficient. I think he said that the Charter of Rights was flawed because it did not have a reference to property rights. It is incumbent upon us to remind the Hon. Member that there was an attempt in the past to get such a motion passed in the House, but the whole thing was turned into a joke by certain members of the Conservative Party. Certainly, the previous Government cannot be faulted for that. I would like to refer to an editorial from The Calgary Herald of May 4, 1983. It is entitled: "Property issue a joke". It reads:

> Given the importance of proposed property rights amendments to the Constitution, this week's procedural hijinks by all members of the House of Commons over the issue are irresponsible at best and disgusting at worst.
> Conservative MP Elmer MacKay may well be right when he said the Tory's presentation of a property-rights resolution in the form of a non-confidence motion was "one of the stupidest things our party has ever done.

It is important to remind members of the Conservative Party who think that the Charter of Rights is imperfect, deficient or flawed, as the mover of the motion has said, that they are to blame for that so-called flaw. They participated in the hijinks in this House.

Mr. Shields: It was the socialists.

Mr. Boudria: Some people say it was the fault of the socialists, but I am not here to take sides. Some Members may be against the motion, but that is the right of Hon. Members. I am not questioning that right. What I am questioning is the fact that a motion was introduced in the House in the past which was formulated in such a way that it was at the same time a non-confidence motion. Because it was worded that way, the Government was forced to vote against it. It also created the situation in which the motion could not be reintroduced in the House. That was the fault of the opposition Party—the Conservative Party.

I find it interesting that a Conservative Member has brought forward this resolution. This deathbed repentance is very nice to hear. But to do so and at the same time state that the Charter is flawed, and to suggest that the past Government which was the author of the Charter of Rights was less than competent in its duties when it made the Charter, is not entirely correct. I am sure the Hon. Member will want to correct the fact that it was not others but indeed his own Party which sabotaged any attempt to get such a motion passed.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attentiveness to the very persuasive arguments which were made by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Having served with him for the past six years I know how sincere he is with respect to this particular matter. There is nothing more important to him than economic freedom as part of political freedom. Therefore, it is with some diffidence that I speak. To some extent I agree with the Hon. Member who has just spoken, as to the thorns and the thickets involved in this issue.

Here we are, in Private Member's Hour, discussing a matter which involves the Constitution. It is a question of public law. It is a public issue. Many people have expressed a great number of concerns. There is no doubt how I feel with respect to this matter; I would like to see the entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution. But I do not think that Private Member's Hour is the appropriate forum for such a monumental decision.

A number of years ago I heard Horace Carver speak. At that time he was the Attorney General of Prince Edward Island. He spoke about lands which were being purchased on the ocean front in Prince Edward Island. At that time he expressed concern that people were coming from New York and other off-shore areas to purchase valuable land because they were people who had money. As a result, Islanders were being left out. They could not compete with people who were coming from offshore. He expressed the concern that his province wanted to implement legislation—which it did—which indicated that anybody who was not a national should be able to come to Cabinet, but only then could an order in Council be passed.

Women's groups have made submissions to all political Parties indicating that they fear the courts may undo what the legislatures have done in the past. Those are legitimate concerns. Therefore, to debate this particular issue during a Private Member's Hour gives me a great deal of trouble.

It was the Conservative Party under John Diefenbaker which introduced the Canadian Bill of Rights in 1960. That projected the rights of individuals with respect to the enjoyment of property. More recently, during the process leading to the establishment of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Progressive Conservative Party supported the constitutional protection of property rights. In the spring of 1983, my Party introduced in Parliament a resolution to amend the Constitution by entrenching property rights. This resolution was defeated by the Liberal Government of the day, but my Party has continued to support, as I do, the principle of expanding the protection of property rights.

Underlying this commitment is a recognition of the significance of property rights in our society. The concept of property is deeply rooted in our traditions. When the Progressive Conservative Party introduced a motion in Parliament in 1983 to entrench property rights in the Constitution, the Hon. Member or Richmond South Delta (Mr. Siddon), now the Minister of State for Science and Technology in the present Government, spoke very eloquently to the motion. He said, and I am quoting from page 24999 of Hansard for April 29, 1983, that:

> If we go back in history we find that—the right to own and enjoy property is fundamental to Canadian history—It goes back to the time of King John, the Magna Carta and the constant struggle through history, which went hand in hand with the evolution of the parliamentary system, and with the evolution of property rights and individual rights as a means of escape from monarchism, feudalism and the baronial entitlements, previous systems under which some citizens had many more rights, powers and privileges than others.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the concept of property is the basis of the economic life of our country. It is of fundamental importance to our social institutions and to our everyday lives. The protection and regulation of property rights is a pervasive and essential ingredient of our law. But we should clearly understand what we mean when we speak of property, because the concept of property is quite broad.

Our laws recognize a wide range of property interests. We may own real property or land, or personal property such as an automobile or a book but, as we know, there are also less tangible types of property, an easement over someone's land or a mortgage on someone's property. Equally, the right to be paid a debt or a share in a company is a form of property. Then there is what has been called "intellectual property". An example is a patent, the right to manufacture and use a particular invention. Other examples are rights in names or trademarks. Yet another example is copyrights, exclusive rights to make copies of books, pictures, designs or movies. The goodwill in a company is a form of property that is protected at law. And more recently the individual's right to personality has been recognized, the right to control the commercial exploitation of one's image or reputation. The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that we have to understand just how broad a concept the notion of property is.

While we often use the word "property" to refer to the fact of owning something such as land or an automobile, we also mean the rights and powers relating to these things. We mean the right to possess, use, enjoy and dispose of these objects to the exclusion of everyone else. While simple ownership may in some cases give us pleasure, we want to be able to use and enjoy our property. We want to be able to farm our land, to build on it, to use it to contribute to our own economic and social well-being and that of this country of Canada. Property rights are much broader than the simple right to own property.

With such a broad concept of property it is not surprising that the law touches upon property rights in so many respects. Governments regulate the process of acquiring and disposing of property. They create schemes for the orderly acquisition and disposition of interests in real and personal property. Governments also regulate the use of property. Zoning and land use regulations allow us to plan the development of our communities. Environmental laws control land use and allow us to preserve our natural heritage and prevent pollution. We tax the use of property and, indeed, we are required to pay taxes with money, a form of property.

An absolutist conception of property was at the root of matrimonial property regimes based on the notion that partners to a marriage shared everything except each other's property, a concept upheld in the Murdoch case in the Supreme Court of Canada. It is a concept which I feel very few people in the House would agree with. Enlightened legislatures have acted in family law reform legislation to ensure a more modern appreciation of property interests in a marriage relationship and thereby have protected the interests of women in particular.

As in other controls in the commons interest, these protections are rational and represent a necessary balance. In my opinion, the protection of property in the Constitution can only take place in the context of an assurance that these modern developments will not be brought down by interests that are narrow and self-centred. And I say this, Mr. Speaker, not to undermine the concept of constitutional protection for the enjoyment of property, but to show that there are important concerns that must be resolved in any proposal of a constitutional character. That is why I feel that Private Members' Hour is an entirely inappropriate forum for discussing this matter.

There are many important societal interests that require the Government to regulate the ownership and use of property. Several provinces are concerned about the effect that entrenching property rights might have on their ability to enact other laws. Only two provinces, British Columbia and New Brunswick, have passed resolutions supporting the entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution. To date, to my knowledge, no other province has acted. They remain concerned about the consequences of entrenching property rights.

The amendment of the Constitution to entrench property rights is not a unilateral process. Amending the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms to entrench property rights requires resolutions of the legislative assemblies of seven provinces with at least 50 per cent of the population, as well as resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons. No government acting alone can entrench property rights. Rather, we need a consensus between the federal Government and the provinces. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has referred to a new era and spirit of co-operation and conciliation between the provinces and the federal Government. Building a consensus, particularly on matters of constitutional reform, requires a judicious approach. The federal Government is in a position to employ its considerable authority and prestige to reach a consensus on the matter of the entrenchment of property rights because we have a four-year mandate.

Acting precipitously runs the risk of provoking a dissenting province to opt out of a constitutional amendment as it is allowed to do by Section 38 of the Constitution Act, 1982. Hon. Members will appreciate that if a constitutional amendment is adopted, a province which disagrees may avoid accepting the change, if it is one which "derogates from the legislative powers, the proprietary rights or any other rights or privileges of the legislature or Government of a province". Subsection 38(3) provides that such an amendment shall not have effect in a province which expresses its dissent by resolution of the legislative assembly. An amendment to entrench property rights in the Constitution would certainly appear to be an amendment coming within subsection 38(2). It is possible, therefore, that the result of premature action on our part might create constitutional property rights protections that would not apply in one or more provinces because we had not succeeded in building the necessary consensus. The importance of property rights is such that constitutional protection should, if at all possible, be provided on a consistent and uniform basis across the country. We should not lightly put ourselves in a position where it might be necessary ultimately to proceed without the assent of a province. We should strive to reach agreement, but the opportunity to do this has not been available to the present Government.

So as to allow other speakers to address this House on this fundamental issue, I will conclude by saying that I believe that this matter should be addressed during the four years of our mandate. We must build a consensus with the provinces. Private Members' Hour is not the time to talk about public law Bills. I would like to say that I agree with the whole concept of entrenchment but we are dealing in illusions if we do not form a consensus.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this is the second opportunity I have had to speak on a Conservative motion with regard to property rights and the Constitution. The procedure the Conservative Government is following on this particular issue is interesting. The first time I spoke on this subject was on April 29, 1983. We were debating an opposition motion, with a vote, which, of course, meant that members of the Liberal Party had to vote against the motion, despite what they may have felt about its particular merits, because the Conservative motion was a non-confidence motion. In other words, Hon. Members on the government side would have had to vote against their own Government in order to support the resolution which was before them.

It is interesting that we have this second occasion to discuss property rights. It is not a government measure. For that matter, it was not mentioned in the Throne Speech. This is strictly a Private Members' Bill on which the government Members are speaking with the purpose of killing the Bill. If the Conservative Government were serious about property rights in the Constitution, it would start the process as an official government measure.

I have to agree with the last speaker from the Conservative Party who said that Private Members' motions to amend the Constitution are not the route we should take. There is no way that this House, after a one hour debate, should try to amend the Constitution of this country. We had a debate on April 29, 1983 on this matter and I spoke about the need for a process which allows the provinces, the public, business and labour groups, environmentalists, native peoples and others to come before this House to talk about their concerns. The problem with the route being taken now is that it does now allow for public participation.

The last time the Conservative Party tried to bring this measure before the House they wanted it passed in a four-hour debate in one afternoon. It did not want the groups I mentioned, nor I suspect did the Conservative Premiers, to have the opportunity to speak in front of a committee of this House on the rights they were concerned about. At the time the motion came before the House in 1983, I talked about the process and the need to allow the public to get involved in the changing of our Constitution. I put forward a motion to that effect. I realize you were not in the House at that time, Mr. Speaker, so I will point out that negotiations took place which, had they been accepted by the Conservative Party—and it was the Conservative Party that killed the property rights—we would have had a committee of this House listen to people from different parts of Canada, those groups that I have mentioned. But the Conservative Party did not want that to happen. That Party, by introducing a Private Members' Bill, does not allow for public participation, and that proves it is not serious about property rights.

Mr. Blenkarn: Oh, come on.

Mr. Murphy: It is a pure political sham. If the Conservative Government were serious about this, it would have been in the Throne Speech.

Mr. Blenkarn: This is Private Members' Hour, remember?

Mr. Murphy: I hear the mover of the motion, Mr. Speaker, rambling on. That same Member talked strongly against the borrowing authority which the Liberal Government introduced. What he said is now in the record of Hansard. What he says on this side of the House when he is in opposition, and what he says on that side of the House when he is a government Member, are two things that tend to be completely opposite. The people who elected us expect us to say the same thing whether we sit on this side or that side. I would hope that that Hon. Member would have had the integrity to say the same thing when he is on that side as he did when be was on this side. Obviously he cannot do that at the present time.

When I last rose to discuss property rights regarding the Constitution I moved an amendment which I would like to read into the record. The amendment was that the House of Commons:

—favours a constitutional amendment to entrench the principle of the right of Canadians to own their own homes and farms; that such entrenchment in the Constitution must embody wording which does not create new problems for Canadians; for example, for provincial governments and others who wish to ensure that the ownership of recreational land be restricted to Canadian citizens—

Mr. Blenkarn: Can't have a cottage.

Mr. Murphy: It goes on to say:

—or that good farmland be restricted to agricultural use only, or that labour rights, native peoples' rights or environmental protection not be jeopardized.

Mr. Blenkarn: You can't have a bank account.

Mr. Murphy: Perhaps the Hon. Member who introduced the Bill will be kind enough to sit and listen instead of yapping like a dog.

In putting forward my motion, Mr. Speaker, I suggested that the House resolve:

—that the subject matter of property rights be referred to a committee consisting of representatives of all parties in the House of Commons, which committee will hold hearings to ascertain the views of interested groups and individuals.

I tell members of our Party, members of the Liberal Party, and especially members of the Government Party, that if you are serious about property rights, then deal with it in a serious manner. Allow those groups to come before one of our committees to explain their situation. The hypocrisy of bringing a Bill forward as a Private Members' Bill, which I suspect the Government will talk out, proves that Members opposite are not serious. Amending the Constitution of Canada is such a serious and important matter that we cannot do it on the basis of what I call a 55 minute debate in the House of Commons. We must amend our Constitution through a process which allows the public to participate.

It is interesting to be in a position where I can quote a Conservative provincial Government speaking out against the Bill before us. It is no secret to the Members of this House that it is the provincial Conservative Governments which say they do not want a constitutional amendment protecting property rights. For example, Prince Edward Island, with its Conservative Government, is concerned about making sure that recreational land remains available for Canadians. That province does not want a constitutional amendment which will prevent it from passing laws making sure that that limited and valuable resource is available for Canadians first. I will quote a member of the Alberta Government, which I suspect you recognize happens to be Conservative. The then Minister of Federal and Intergovernmental Affairs, Mr. Horsman, said that the debate made clear that the Government of Alberta's position is that the constitutional responsibility for property and civil rights is that of the provinces. It should properly remain there and not be entrenched in the Charter of Rights and thus become subject to any control by the federal Government. That is a Conservative Government, Mr. Speaker, talking about why it does not want property rights entrenched in the Constitution. Because the Government of British Columbia passed a resolution on this very matter, the Alberta Government also addressed that fact. It said that it is true that the case for inclusion was put forward by the Province of British Columbia at those meetings, but no extensive discussion took place relative to the matter. In other words, the other provinces did not feel convinced that that was a matter on which they had to join the others in support.

• (1740)

The British Columbia Government, the token secret Tory Government in this country, put forward the position for property rights. The other provincial Governments at that time which, as Mr. Speaker knows, are by and large Conservative Governments, did not support the Government of British Columbia. After a brief survey of other provinces by the Province of Alberta it was clear that there was very little support given by other provinces for inclusion of the subject of property rights in the Charter. This is not the New Democrats saying that property rights should not be in the Charter. This is the Government of Alberta telling us that that Government and other Conservative Governments across the land did not want property right in the Constitution.

Let us have no more hypocrisy and false debates in the House of Commons. Talk to your political friends and colleagues. If they want property rights in the Constitution, have them come to the House of Commons and explain that they really want property rights in the Constitution, because it is apparent that that is not what they want.

There is a reason for that. We talked about the Government of Prince Edward Island wanting to protect recreation land. I am sure you realize, Mr. Speaker, as do Hon. Members, that recreational land in Prince Edward Island is largely owned by non-Canadians. I am sure that you are aware, Mr. Speaker, because you are a very wise and honourable person, that in many other provinces there is a concern, as there is in the Province of Manitoba. I am sure that my friend, the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) would like to get up and speak on this. Manitobans are concerned that farmland is being bought by people from West Germany and the Netherlands and by people who are not interested in farming. The Government of Manitoba, like many other western Governments, is very concerned that it have the right to pass legislation to make sure that the limited agricultural land in the country remains available to Canadian farmers. It does not want a clause in the Charter which would prevent it from passing legislation which would restrict that land for agricultural use.

The same thing applies with regard to workers, native people and others who are very concerned about what is happening in the country. Native people are concerned that if property rights are in the Constitution they may not be in a position to get the land to which they are entitled. The very fact that it is called land entitlement tells you that they are entitled to that land. They are concerned that something in the Constitution may prevent them from negotiating for what is their due.

The workers and tenants in the country are afraid that property rights may restrict their rights. When I spoke on this matter in April of 1983 I quoted from an article from the Winnipeg Free Press. At that time a representative of mortgage holders told the Winnipeg Free Press that one of the major reasons they wanted property rights in the Constitution was that they would have more rights to the assets of the companies than the workers who work there. That mortgage holder was saying that if property rights are put in the Constitution, those who own property such as bonds and assets would have more rights to the assets of a company when it went bankrupt than the workers who work there. In other words, you could work there for 10 years and the company could owe you $5,000 or $50,000 in pension benefits. They could owe you $20,000 in wages and more in benefits and pension rights, but, according to the mortgage holder who was speaking to the Winnipeg Free Press, you would not have any rights. The person who would have rights is one who is not that badly off and has assets, bonds, and some kind of securities or bills owing from that particular company.

We are not speaking against property rights, Mr. Speaker. We in this caucus happen to represent farmers. Some of our caucus members are farmers and own their own farms. Most of us own our houses. Some of us have cottage land which we own. We are not against property rights. However, we want to make sure that property rights will only be included in the Constitution once we have protected the rights of other Canadians by recognizing the rights of tenants, native people, and people who are concerned about the environment. That is something that I have not had a chance to talk about, Mr. Speaker. We must recognize the rights of a provincial government to ensure that the limited land available is best used for the purposes of the whole public. Once that is guaranteed and we have found a process to ensure that we have not taken rights away from the province and the individuals, we can have property rights in the Constitution, but only then.

It is very important that the House not deal with property rights in the artificial manner in which the Conservative Party has brought them before us on the last two occasions. It cannot be brought forward as a motion against the Government. It cannot be brought forward as a Private Members' Bill. It must be brought forward as a serious piece of government legislation which allows the provinces and all those affected to speak before it is passed.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my congratulations to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) for bringing forward this very important motion. I agree with the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) that obviously Private Members' Hour does not provide an adequate opportunity to discuss the concept of entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution. However, it does provide an opportunity to discuss some of the issues. I hope some of those issues will be brought out during this debate.

I too am sympathetic to the idea of entrenching property rights in the Constitution. I reiterate the support of my colleagues and my Party in this respect. In considering the entrenchment of property rights I believe we cannot discuss it in a vacuum. I believe that we muste understand the context of the real world in which constitutionally entrenched property rights would operate. We should and must take into account the important interests of society which justify reasonable and fair restrictions of property rights. Not the least of these interests are the interests of women. That is the area I would like to address today.

It is imperative that we act in a manner that least affects the exceedingly hard-won gains that women have made toward equal opportunity and employment and economic issues in recent years.

Let us consider the issues that women's groups have brought forward. They have argued that the entrenchment of property rights might jeopardize the interest of women, and we need to analyse some of those issues to reassure ourselves and society at large that such an initiative is well and thoroughly considered. For example, women are concerned that the protections we have won under the family law reforms might be annulled by the application of constitutional property rights protections. Matrimonial property legislation now provides for the division of assets upon divorce and separation.

The courts are empowered to divide assets among separated or divorced persons irrespective of the apparent legal title to those assets. Spouses are deemed to have acquired an interest in property by virtue of the marriage relationship. The extent of the interest varies with the circumstances. The types of property to be divided on marriage breakdown range from the matrimonial home to automobiles, from personal possessions to pension rights. The practical effect of these laws is to recognize the mutual contribution of homemakers and breadwinners to the success of the family as an economic and social unit. They also prevent the equal partners in marriage from suffering unequal burdens upon marriage breakdown.

What women's groups are asking is whether the entrenchment of property rights could be accomplished without dismantling the matrimonial property systems that have been set up under family law reforms. We should recall the wording of the clause proposed in the resolution of the Legislature of British Columbia, my home province. That resolution proposed that Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms should be amended to add the right of enjoyment of property to the rights already enumerated therein. Everyone would have the right not to be deprived of the enjoyment of property except in accordance with principles of fundamental justice.

The constitutional protection of property rights proposed by the Legislature of New Brunswick is worded somewhat differently. That Legislature resolved that the Charter should be amended to add Section 7.1 which would read, "Everyone has the right to the enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law".

The women's groups are concerned that whatever form of wording is chosen the result will be to allow the courts to interpret "due process of law" or the "principles of fundamental justice" as a guarantee of substantive due process.

Let me explain. Under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, no person may be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law. In American jurisprudence, due process has in the past been given a substantive as well as a procedural connotation. Due process has involved the American courts in assessing the substance of legislation. In the early years of this century, the American courts frequently challenged legislation on due process grounds.

Members may recall the case of Lochner versus New York, an early leading case in which the United States Supreme Court struck down a statute prescribing maximum weekly and daily hours of work for bakers on the grounds that it affected the deprivation of property rights without due process of law.

The American courts also applied a substantive due process of law doctrine to invalidate statutes relating to minimum wages and child labour.

Women's groups have expressed the fear that Canadian courts might adopt a substantive due process approach to property and other rights and they worry that on such an approach important reforms in the interest of women will be put at risk. Most Canadian courts have so far taken the view that fundamental justice refers to procedural due process only. That accords with the views expressed during Parliament's consideration of Section 7 of the Charter. Women's groups have taken the position that a substantive due process interpretation cannot be ruled out and, indeed, in two recent Superior Court decisions, the courts have suggested that the protections afforded by Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and fundamental justice specifically, may be more than procedural.

That question is now pending before the Supreme Court of Canada, and I shall therefore not to go into further detail on that legal issue. However, if the courts were to adopt a substantive due process approach to property rights protections, womens' groups are afraid that socially progressive legislation such as matrimonial property laws might be struck down by the courts on policy grounds as restrictions on the property rights of spouses. The provinces are similarly concerned, we have heard, that a substantive due process approach might endanger these and other important pieces of provincial legislation.

Women's groups are also concerned about the hardship and the cost of judicial review of family laws under property rights guarantees. Their view is that the cost and the burden of judicial review would fall on individual women. They point out the so-called "persons" case, a case that we all know and admire so much. In 1928, the "Famous Five" had to fight hard and finally appealled to the Privy Council to determine that women were indeed persons for the purpose of being appointed to the Senate.

The point that is made on behalf of women is that there is a financially limited capacity to individual women to take on these cases. Their concern is that important test cases would have to be mounted to determine the scope of entrenched property rights and their application to newer controls on individual property rights. The argument is that the cost and hardship of constitutional litigation would fall on those who are least able to bear it.

I would note that women's groups have acknowledged the positive aspects of the entrenchment of property rights. They have suggested that if property rights were entrenched, procedural property rights guarantees could be beneficial to women under a broad interpretation of property. They have taken the position that a broad interpretation of property might include interests in such things as social benefits. The property in such benefits would be premised on the expectations that arise from social assistance legislation. Under this interpretation, recipients could not be deprived of such benefits except by procedural due process.

Again, in the United States, the Supreme Court has on a number of occasions applied the due process clause of the U.S. Constitution to protect that so-called new property. The Supreme Court has held that an expectation of academic tenure, a driver's licence and disability benefits are property interests deserving of protection under the due process clause. It seems that women's groups might be more favourable to the entrenchment of property rights if "property" were given a broad interpretation along the lines of the American example, an interpretation which would provide protections in respect of social benefits received by women.

Women's groups as well as other groups and provinces have sincere concerns about the effects of entrenching property rights. We have an obligation to take their views into account and to seek, if possible, a consensus on this matter. Even if it is not possible to achieve unanimity, in the spirit of consultation and conciliation, we should make an effort to reconcile those with different views.

My Party is committed in principle to the entrenchment of property rights, but we cannot do so hastily and without reflection on the possible impact of such constitutional amendments on the interests of over half of the population. There are important and legitimate concerns that the Government needs to address over the first portion of its mandate. I look forward to the opportunity of discussing this matter not only in Private Members' Hour but on future occasions when it comes forward.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business is now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE—STEEL LABELLING PROVISIONS OF UNITED STATES. (B) REQUEST FOR RETALIATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise in my place this evening with great regret because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has chosen to ignore the very critical issue of steel labelling, and the Prime Minister's representative here tonight, I hope, will be able to tell the House, and in particular the workers in my riding of Hamilton East and the workers in ridings across Hamilton, just what initiatives this Government has in mind with respect to the steel labelling issue.

The Prime Minister is no doubt aware that during the election he personally thought this issue was so important that he sent letters to constituents across my riding urging them to support the Progressive Conservative Party because he would personally lead the fight to save steel jobs. Yet we have seen, since the election of this Government, a Prime Minister who treats the issue of steel jobs and the labelling issue with the same kind of lack of interest and denigration with which he has treated a number of other very serious subjects explored in this House.

I was frankly shocked, when I raised an issue which involved the lay-off and the potential lay-off of more than 2,000 steelworkers in Hamilton, that the Prime Minister was not even aware that the current labelling requirements as passed by the U.S. Congress are a violation of GATT.

Will the Prime Minister and the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) clarify to this House whether the International Trade Minister—who has already stated publicly that the labelling requirements are a non-tariff area and thus a violation of GATT—is speaking for the Government or whether it is the Prime Minister who is doing so. I understood that the Prime Minister, in his completely inadequate response to my question on this issue this week, was unclear whether the labelling issue was a violation of GATT. I would support the statement by the Minister for International Trade that the labelling provisions is a violation of GATT and that the Prime Minister has an obligation to the voters of my community and to the steel workers across Canada, including the steel workers in Sault Ste. Marie who are watching this issue very closely, as well as steel workers in other parts of the country. The Prime Minister has an obligation to get tough with the Americans and he has an obligation to suggest to his very good and great friend, the President of the United States, that if the U.S. Congress is not prepared to exempt Canada or to lift the labelling requirements with respect to steel imports, then it is time that the Canadian Government followed the initiative suggested by the steel industry, and that is, with retaliatory measures.

The Prime Minister in the House talked about retaliatory rhetoric. He joked. He threw the question off into oblivion because he felt it was not an issue that should be dealt with seriously by parliamentarians here in the House and by the people of Canada. I would like a clarification from the Prime Minister as to whether he believes that the labelling requirements are a violation of GATT. If he believes, as does his Minister for International Trade, that they are a violation of GATT, why does the Prime Minister not shrink back from the commitment he made to the electorate of Hamilton East when he said that if he were successful in becoming the Prime Minister of this country he would personally lead the fight to save steel jobs?

We know that over 2,000 jobs are already on the line as a result of a downturn in steel production since the election of this Government. More than 2,000 people in my community have already been laid off or are facing a potential lay-off in January of next year. Yet, faced with this, the Prime Minister stands in the House of Commons and laughs and jokes and tells the workers, who are looking forward to a very bleak Christmas, that he does not have answers. He is only concerned with retaliatory rhetoric.

The response of the Prime Minister is not sufficient. I am sorry the Prime Minister is not in the House tonight to deal with an issue that involves the potential loss of thousands of jobs for Canadian steel workers. I ask that his representative clarify the GATT requirements and clarify the position that this Government is taking. Will he clarify to the Canadian voters why the Prime Minister did not see fit personally to intervene with the President of the United States after the United States Congress introduced the tariff regulations which are in violation of GATT?

• (1805)

These are very serious questions. The voters of Hamilton want answers to these questions. The Prime Minister's comic relief in the House earlier this week is certainly not good enough.

Mr. Stewart McInnes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to reply to the Hon. Member's question on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher).

The Government submitted a note to the U.S.A. administration on October 1 identifying the proposed marking regulation affecting steel pipes and fittings, which was contained in the draft U.S.A. Trade and Tarrif Act of 1984, as a serious non-tariff barrier to Canadian exports and inconsistent with U.S. obligations under the GATT. Our Ambassador in Washington also wrote to key Congressmen and met with administration officials outlining our concerns over the new marking law.

After passage of the legislation by Congress on October 9, the Government submitted another note setting out our concerns. We also made representations to the U.S. administration on the technical aspects. A further note was submitted on November 1 after the Bill was signed into law. In this representation, we sought the least restrictive application of the marking regulation, while pressing for repeal of the legislation when Congress reconvenes in 1985. In addition, the Minister for International Trade called Mr. Brock, the United States Trade Representative, on this issue.

In part as a result of our representations, the administration issued a directive on November 14 which instructed U.S. Customs to administer the new regulation on an interim basis for 120 days. This is in fact a moratorium of the law that was enacted by Congress. Application of the new marking law on this basis will cause minimum disruption to Canadian trade and provide time for the administration to seek repealing legislation.

In addition to our bilateral representations in Washington, we raised the issue in the GATT. Consultations are scheduled to take place in Geneva on Friday, December 7. In our view, the new marking law is inconsistent with United States GATT obligations, in particular Article IX:4, which deals with marks of origin.

In light of these developments, both the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade have indicated that it would be premature for the Government to discuss the possibility of retaliation at this time.

The Government, as it has from the beginning, continues to work closely with the Canadian industry to safeguard access to the important U.S. market. Indeed, the Minister met with the industry and provincial representatives in Toronto on Monday of this week to ensure that there is a co-ordinated plan of action. Canadian exports of pipe and fittings to the United States totalled approximately $125 million U.S. in 1983, down from approximately $233 million U.S. in 1982. Exports to the United States in the first half of 1984 are already over $125 million U.S.

I want to assure the House and the Hon. Member that the Prime Minister is very sensitive to this Government's obligation to the steel industry. His primary consideration is that jobs that are in jeopardy be preserved. It is in furtherance of that particular concern that these measures have been taken. We have had a very reasonable and appropriate reaction from our U.S. friends. I trust this answers the inquiry of the Hon. Member.

INCOME TAX—RATES CHARGED BY DISCOUNTERS. (B) CHEQUE-CASHING SCAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, several days ago I brought to the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) the plight of several hundred thousand Canadians who are being ripped off by companies which discount income tax refunds. This situation is growing more serious every year.

In the 1970s, when Members of Parliament and the Government learned that some people were having their income tax refunds discounted 50 per cent to 60 per cent, legislation was passed entitled the Tax Rebate Discounting Act. That was in 1978. It provided that discounting companies such as BenTax and H & R Block could provide cash advances on income tax refunds and charge a fee of 15 per cent of the total amount of the tax rebate. Since 1978, the number of Canadians who are having their tax refunds discounted more than doubles every year. In 1982, there were 60,000 Canadians who did this. In 1983, there were 153,000 and in 1984 there were 380,000 who did this.

Let us ask ourselves who the people are who have their tax refunds discounted. They are not Members of Parliament, bankers, lawyers or doctors. The clients of the discounters are the poor. They are the single mothers who are heads of families. They are native people and people who are on welfare. In fact, 64.5 per cent of those who discounted their returns in 1982 had total incomes of less than $8,000 per year. They are people living in poverty. The median income of those people was $5,700 per year, and 41 per cent of them were women claiming the child tax credit, a social program intended to help lower-income families. Those people who discount their tax returns are not getting the benefits which Parliament wanted them to have.

The discounters themselves estimate that 50 per cent to 65 per cent of their clients are unemployed or on welfare. These people need the money in March or April when they discount their return, but they need it later on as well. They receive no benefit from doing this. They take a substantial loss by getting the money to which they are entitled early.

In 1983, the discounters charged an average of $114 per return. On the basis of the number of returns they processed in 1984, discounters made about $43 million. They took that money out of the hides of poor people. They took it despite the fact that the legislation was designed to help those people.

The 15 per cent fee which is permitted to be charged by the discounters under this law works out to an exorbitant rate of interest if calculated on an annual basis. Given the fact that most of the returns are processed and returned by Revenue Canada within one or two months, discounters are basically providing loans to their clients at annual interest rates of 90 per cent or more.

Not only are the large companies I have already mentioned getting into the business, but there are now smaller companies which are not in the financial business at all entering the business. There have been instances of car dealerships enticing people to buy or lease a car by offering to cash tax rebates minus the 15 per cent fee, of course.

I believe that the Government can take action. The Minister said his Department is studying the matter. The Government is studying it but is doing nothing. I believe that the Government could pass legislation making it illegal to have tax rebates discounted. Just because something is not illegal does not make it desirable.

I believe that rebating serves no useful purpose. The Government should give consideration to an outright ban of such discounters. It could make tax rebates non-transferable. If the Government does not want to ban discounting, it could pass legislation to bring discounting rates into line with normal consumer loan rates. After all, the risks are minimal yet the interest rates charged are exorbitant. Using normal consumer loan rates of about 15 per cent on an annual basis, such companies would get a fair return for giving money to people a month or two before they would normally receive their rebates. As I pointed out, the average return is back in four weeks and 15 per cent is charged, which would work out to 180 per cent annually. If the return takes two months, the effective rate of interest is 90 per cent.

● (1815)

If the Government is not prepared to amend the legislation, I would urge it to meet with the banks and the credit unions to persuade them to extend discount options to their customers at the rate of consumer loans. That would at least reduce the social cost of the discount to poor families.

The banks have been given the ability to become the most profitable organizations and the largest corporations in the country. Surely we can ask them to show some social responsibility. Surely we can ask them to show some consideration for these people who are among the poorest in the country. Surely we can ask them to co-operate in getting rid of this blight which is being forced upon them.

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has asked two questions. He is concerned about the tax rebate discounting process which is now being followed, as well as with cheques which are being cashed for a fee.

With respect to the tax rebate discounting question, I wish to assure the Hon. Member that the entire issue is being studied very carefully by this Government. By way of background, I wish to remind the House of the purpose of the Tax Rebate Discounting Act. It is to protect the interests of taxpayers who give up the rights to their anticipated tax refunds, in exchange for a minimum of 85 per cent of the value of the refunds, in order to receive immediate cash. The statute was enacted in 1978 at the urging of provincial Governments.

The legislation appears to have addressed successfully the problems it was intended to remedy. Consider the situation of those who, as the Hon. Member puts it, simply cannot wait to receive the money in the usual fashion. These people may have very urgent and pressing financial needs and may be unable to obtain credit in the traditional ways. No longer is it necessary for them to seek out loan sharks or to lose as much as 50 per cent of their tax refunds. Now they can obtain at least 85 per cent of their refunds in advance in an atmosphere which is legitimate and business-like.

Nevertheless, this Government recognizes that, as with any new piece of legislation, particularly when it relates to a growing industry, certain new factors may be encountered. That is why we must continually, as the Hon. Member has mentioned, monitor these processes which from time to time may get slightly out of hand. However, we have no reason to suspect that they are out of hand. Indeed, representatives from discounters and such concerned groups as the National Anti-Poverty Organization have already been studying it. We are in close contact with them in order to try to avoid any possible rip-offs which might be occurring in the industry.

With respect to the Hon. Member's question on cheque-cashing operations, I wish to advise the House that this matter is also under consideration.

The Hon. Member has suggested that legislation should be passed to outlaw these businesses. Indeed, the recent development of this type of business, which now has at least 20 offices operating across Canada, could give rise to concern. Such concern, however, need not lead directly to the conclusion that cheque-cashing services should be outlawed. The rapid growth of cheque-cashing services indicates that some Canadians are prepared to pay up to 10 per cent of the value of a cheque merely to have it cashed. Their reasons for doing so may derive from such legitimate interests as greater convenience.

Although the Department has received no complaints from the users of cheque-cashing services, the House can be assured that we will continue to monitor the development of the cheque-cashing business.

In closing I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North for the opportunity to address his concerns.

FORESTRY—JACKPINE BUDWORM INFESTATION. (B) REQUEST FOR AUTHORIZATION TO USE INSECTICIDE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I raised a question with the Acting Minister of Forestry a few days ago in the House concerning the jackpine budworm infestation which has swept across Ontario this past year. Actually, in 1983 there were some 67,000 hectares of jackpine infected. By this year, 1984, there is over 1.5 million hectares infected. Of this amount, 1.5 million acres are in northeastern Ontario. In the Eddy forest products limits north of Espanola and up towards Timmins, some 150,000 acres to 200,000 acres, which have high concentrations of jackpine, are highly infected. In total, some 800,000 acres are infected.

I asked the Acting Minister if he would make representations to the Ontario Government to put in place a control program for 1985 so that the decision could be made now. In that way the control program can take place in late June of 1985. I also asked the Acting Minister if he would make representations to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to have the biological insecticide, Bacillus Thuringiensis, approved on an emergency or operational basis for use during the 1985 year.

We must appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that the economic viability of whole communities such as the town of Espanola are at stake here. We are talking about thousands of jobs both in the plant and in the bush. I appreciate that the Ontario Government has not been too active with regard to this kind of control program. I am told that in this past year only 3,000 hectares were actually under a control program for the spruce budworm, which is a similar type of infestation, whereas in Nova Scotia some 21,000 hectares are under control. Quebec has some 600,000 hectares under control and New Brunswick has over one million hectares under control. But just to put this into perspective, I am told this is one of the fastest expanding infestations which has ever been witnessed by scientists. It has spread from 67,000 hectares in 1983 to over 1.5 million in 1984. I am told that with respect to the Eddy forest products limits alone, their losses by stunted trees and so on during this one year will equal their total plantings during the next five-year or ten-year period under its reforestation program. We can see, therefore, the economic loss and danger to the forests.

I was trying to make the point in the House that there is an urgency for decisions to be made now. The B.T. insecticide needs to be approved for use in the infected jackpine stands in Ontario. I am told that the effectiveness of this insecticide for use with the jackpine budworm infestation can be provided within a two-week to three-week period. Then it is simply a case of the Minister of Agriculture approving it.

I also want to point out the urgency of a decision being made by the Ontario Minister of Natural Resources to approve a plan for next year. It is not just a case of turning on the plan at the whim of the Minister. There are long-term preparations which have to be made. Pesticides have to be ordered. I am told there is a three-month delivery date and there has to be a period of public hearings or approvals after the Minister makes the decision. Planes have to be contracted for. These decisions cannot be put off until January or February at the whim or convenience of the Ontario Minister.

● (1825)

I know, Mr. Speaker, that we are very fortunate to have a Minister of Forestry in the Government of Canada who has extensive experience in these problems in New Brunswick. I am very pleased that he is in the House this evening to respond to my representations. I simply hope that he will give an indication that the federal Government, through the Minister of Agriculture, will act expeditiously to approve the insecticide and that he will use his influence with the provincial Minister of Natural Resources and the Minister of Agriculture to approve a control program at a very early date. I say this because, although the actual responsibility for the control program is under the Ontario Minister of Natural Resources, our scientists at the Great Lakes Research Laboratory in Sault Ste. Marie are very involved in the actual egg counts, the scientific analysis and investigation of this infestation. Clearly, given the experience of our Minister, his recommendations and representations will have a great deal of influence on the Ontario Minister of Natural Resources in this matter.

Hon. G. S. Gerry Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) for his kind comments. I have had some considerable experience in dealing with such matters, coming as I do from the Province of New Brunswick. I also want to apologize to him for being absent when he asked his question. I was addressing a very major group of the Western Forest and Conservation Association in California regarding issues of great concern to Canada—and the Canadian forest industry.

When we have an infestation of any insect, as we have lots of them in this country, it is a matter of great concern to our country and certainly to the forest industry. Believe me, we have agonized in some detail over these infestations and how to deal with them effectively. As the Hon. Member has rightly pointed out, management of the forests and the spray programs are essentially the responsibility of the provinces. We have been working very closely with the province here and I will outline in some detail the steps we have taken to ensure that his legitimate concerns are being addressed.

There is unfortunately only one chemical at this time which has been registered for the jackpine budworm, and that is Fenitrothion, which we have used of course in the Province of New Brunswick. However, the CFS has been working in the Forest Pest Management Institute in Sault Ste. Marie in collecting insects and doing research to find out if it is possible to have a biological insecticide suitable for fighting the jackpine budworm. We would prefer that if it is possible to do and within reasonable cost.

My officials in Sault Ste. Marie met today with the manufacturer of another chemical, Aminocarb, to discuss possible testing of that insecticide to combat the jackpine budworm as well. The Hon. Member may be aware that there is a group called the jackpine working group. They met yesterday to discuss ways of controlling infestation. Present at the meeting were members of the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources, my own Great Lakes Forest Research Centre and, of course, the Forest Pest Management Institute. We invited representatives as well from the E. B. Eddy Company, a very large employer in the Hon. Member's riding. In the near future we hope to be able to provide the test data to the manufacturers and to Agriculture Canada on the results of our testing. I mention that because of course the registration of pesticides is their responsibility. If they are proven to be effective against the jackpine budworm, it will then be incumbent upon the manufacturer to seek a label amendment from Agriculture Canada. If that is approved, the new insecticide could be available in time for the program next spring.

Believe me, Mr. Speaker, having been a forestry Minister in a province of Canada I know how much time it takes to take all the necessary steps to make sure you have a program prepared to go. I do want to inform the Hon. Member that while steps are being taken by CFS, the decision to go or not go in the Province of Ontario does rest with the province. While we understand that there are some people who have concerns, rightly so, about spraying chemicals or even biological insecticides, we want to say that they can only be applied if approved by the federal Government and by the provinces, and applied by licenced applicators according to the label instruction. Having worked on these programs for a number of years, I know the controls are pretty tight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock in the morning, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.30 p.m. the House adjourned.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

STORAGE AND TRANSPORTATION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the tragedy in Bhopal stresses the urgent need for all levels of Government in Canada urgently to enforce and, where necessary, implement new safety measures to ensure that this will never occur in Canada.

First, the Government of Canada should produce a public map showing the location and quantity of all lethal gases stored in Canada.

Second, by way of close co-operation, the federal Government should seek from the responsible provincial agencies the assurance that inspections of these locations are carried out by qualified people, that valves and control equipment are in top condition at all times, and that adequate buffer zones surround new installations.

Third, the federal Government should immediately review the existing regulations governing the transportation of hazardous substances.

Fourth, the transportation of hazardous and lethal substances should be rerouted away from urban areas.

Fifth, trains transporting hazardous material should not be permitted to stop on sidings in populated areas.

Sixth, for the long term, the federal Government should initiate a study that would determine to what extent lethal substances, be they pesticides, manufacturing goods, et cetera, are essential to our economy and civilization, search for non-toxic means of accomplishing these same ends, and promote the fledgling use of non-toxic biological products.

Seventh, in co-operation with the Provinces and municipalities—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

AGRICULTURE

FARM DEBT MORATORIUM ADVOCATED

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, recently the Saskatchewan Government introduced a farm debt moratorium which will stop foreclosures on farm lands from December 1 of this year to the end of December of next year. This measure attempts to provide temporary protection to farmers who are threatened with the loss of their property because of high debt.

The moratorium does not, however, protect farmers from having their livestock, grain or machinery seized. What good is land without the machinery to farm it with?

I would like to bring to the attention of the House two recent cases of foreclosure in Saskatchewan. Both of these cases resulted in farm-gate defences by their neighbours. The first involved the seizure of cattle at a farm near Kisby, and the second the seizure of machinery near Choiceland. These examples should make the case obvious. The need for a complete debt moratorium, as has been called for by Mel Swart in the Ontario Legislature, to include all parts of a farming operation, is evident.

In addition, it is time that Governments began to address the fundamental reason for farm bankruptcies—unreasonably high interest rates. During the moratorium, farmers' interest rates will continue to accumulate and farmers will not be able to farm with their high debt load. It is time to reduce the interest rates in order to save farmers. If the Government is serious about maintaining efficient farms, it should extend legislative protection to secure farms not only against seizure of land, but seizure of all farm assets, until—

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

TEACHER OF DEAF CHILDREN PERMITTED TO STAY IN CANADA

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in a world struggling with death, destruction, derision and deceit, I bring you good news.

Through the hard work of interested groups and the generosity of the Government's Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) many deaf children in this country will learn to communicate.

S.O. 21

Mary Lou Meiers, a young lady from the United States who has a special gift for working with deaf children, will be allowed to continue her work in Canada. Presently employed at the Bob Rumball Centre for the Deaf in North York, Ontario, Ms. Meiers was issued a Minister's permit to stay in Canada.

A vocal faction of Lions International petitioned to keep her here, as well as friends and families of those persons she has helped.

Ms. Meiers' temporary working permit was originally to expire early in the new year. The compassion of a great many people will allow her to apply for landed immigrant status from inside Canada.

Her work with the deaf has been described as "almost magic" by those who know her. It is indeed to the advantage of all Canadians to have this woman working with our children here in our midst.

I trust my colleagues in this place, regardless of political stripe, will join me in welcoming this talented teacher to Canada on a full-time basis.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

YOUTH

INTERNATIONAL YOUTH YEAR

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members, 1985 is drawing near and has been designated International Youth Year.

Throughout the country, preparations are being made for a worthy celebration of this invaluable resource, our Canadian youth.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this year will not only be one of celebration and rejoicing but also a year of decisions by our Government that will have an impact on the lives and expectations of our young Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the coming to power of the Progressive Conservative Party has confirmed that a new concept is emerging that is not based on the adversarial but on the search for consensus.

That is why I am anxiously awaiting our chance, as Members of Parliament, to take an active part in International Youth Year, and I am sure we will have an active part to play.

As a junior Member of this House, I am hoping for a better future for our children, as the year 2000 approaches. I am profoundly aware of the problems of youth today, a youth that refuses, and rightly so, to engage in confrontation.

Mr. Speaker, under the previous Government, it was all nothing but talk as far as youth was concerned. However, under this Progressive Conservative Government and our Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne)—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the Hon. Member's time has expired.

ENERGY

HIBERNIA OILFIELD—ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STUDY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), I would say in a generous manner, inadvertently misled the House by misquoting earlier statements which were made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Question Period. The Minister suggested that the Prime Minister had committed himself to tabling a document called an environmental assessment impact study if it were available.

Since that time the Minister and I have had time to check Hansard wherein the Prime Minister categorically, and to the contrary, confirmed on four different occasions that the Government had a copy of the report and undertook to table it in the House.

Because Statistics Canada has confirmed that 50,000 more people have been added to the unemployment rolls in the country, that report is critical to Newfoundlanders in assessing the kind of deal which will be made between the Minister and her counterpart in the Province of Newfoundland. The fact of the matter is, that a six-month suppression of the report will allow a deal to be signed, without the benefit of its detailed information for Newfoundlanders, and will allow a provincial election to be called long before Newfoundlanders ever understand the detail of the Mobil report.

That report indicates what the mode of production will be, the timetable for production, the rate of development, and most important, it indicates the number of jobs which will accrue to Newfoundlanders out of the development. That information is being deliberately suppressed by a deal made between the Minister of Energy in Ottawa and the Minister of Energy in Newfoundland.

• (1110)

On behalf of all Canadians, particularly those living in Newfoundland, I call on the Minister of Energy to come clean and to quit misquoting and misinterpreting—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LOW UNEMPLOYMENT RATE IN MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment figures for the nation were released to the public this morning. They again point out that Manitoba has the lowest unemployment rate across the nation. What they also point out, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government can make a difference.

An editorial in the Toronto Star earlier this week pointed out how the Manitoba Government has taken a deliberate step to create both short-term and long-term jobs for the people of that province. It also pointed out that Manitoba does not have a secret, that it is just a matter of a concerted effort of job creation. The Manitoba Government has made that a priority. It has worked with private enterprise in order to create more jobs, to further research and development, and to help train the young people of that province.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, by quoting from the article in The Toronto Star on December 5, 1984:

> It's a forward looking, integrated approach to the economy that seems to be paying dividends for the people of Manitoba. Canadian political leaders in other jurisdictions should take note.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

MEDICAL SCIENCE RESEARCH

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has a long list of positive achievements which should and must be made known to Canadians and to the world. The now famous cobalt therapy unit for the treatment of cancer was developed at Chalk River, Ontario, and was first put into practice on October 27, 1951, in a hospital in London, Ontario. There has been a very effective and practical offshoot from the industry, leading to the development of the advanced application of medical isotopes which, in turn, had led to the saving of lives, and in many, many cases has prevented unnecessary surgery.

Continued research into the results relating to isotopes will become an even greater diagnostic tool for medical purposes in the future. This research is proceeding with indepth emphasis on future medical applied science. The development of isotopes will keep Canada in the forefront of medical research.

It is my intention, Mr. Speaker, to continue to bring forward more information of a positive nature with regard to the role that Atomic Energy of Canada plays in many areas in the development of our nation. This is not a time to be pessimistic about a Canadian success story. It is not a time, when all negative comments about nuclear research in Canada can be publicized, not to have those negative, and sometimes uninformed comments corrected and, indeed, balanced off in the media. The realistic and constructive achievements which have come out of the laboratories of Atomic Energy in the past, which are coming out now, and those achievements which will continue to come out of that great body of professional and expert personnel in the future, should be put on the record—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ADVANTAGES RELATING TO ADOPTION OF BILL C-11

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, my statement concerns the Act to provide borrowing authority. Bill C-11 seems to be particularly controversial, judging from the tone of the present debate. The purpose of this legislation is to authorize the Government to borrow $16 billion for the year 1985-86. This part of the legislation will become effective at the beginning of the next financial year. There seems to be a lot of confusion among Opposition Member's especially because this type of clause is unusual in a borrowing authority Bill. It may be unprecedented, but we must not forget that the size of the present deficit which our Government inherited is also unprecedented. There are many arguments in favour of adopting this part of Bill C-11, which, unfortunately, I cannot detail to the House today, because of lack of time. However, I hope to do so on another occasion.

Mr. Speaker, the least I can say is that this Government has promised Canadians sound fiscal management. Adopting Bill C-11 will be a step in the right direction. It will enable the Government to meet its borrowing requirements at the lowest possible cost while avoiding any disruption of the financial market. It guarantees the flexibility required for effective management of Treasury requirements, for the benefit of all Canadian taxpayers.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

INTIMIDATION OF INDO-CANADIANS IN VANCOUVER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament from the City of Vancouver I have a significant number of Indo-Canadian constituents, and I am proud of that fact. So, too, of course, do the Hon. Members for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), and Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney).

I would like to express to this House my deep concern about what appears to be a campaign of intimidation by a minority hard core group within that community. The target is the moderates in that community, some of whom have told me they have been threatened and their right to free speech denied.

● (1115)

In Canada, Sir, we believe in free speech from all points of view. Moderates should not be afraid to speak out on the tragic events which have recently shocked their community, ranging from the events at the Golden Temple at Amritsar to the tragic assassination of Mrs. Indira Gandhi. I personally deplore the situation in Vancouver where some of my personal friends have been threatened. I have talked with and written to the other Vancouver MPs about this situation. Should it persist, the Government of Canada has many means at its disposal to enforce Canadian law to guarantee free speech in the community.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NOVEMBER UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the statements made by the Prime Minister that tens of thousands of new jobs would be created in Canada, and the fact that the Minister and her colleagues took credit for increasing the number of jobs during the month of October, is she prepared to accept the blame for her economic policies which resulted in 50,000 people being added to the jobless in November?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the unemployment figures remain unacceptably high. But I would say to you, Sir, this is a legacy of the years of fiscal mismanagement of the previous Government. I would like to add that, despite this burden, the number of people employed in Canada in the last two months has gone up by 65,000. Some 250,000 new jobs have been added in the last year, 25 per cent of which have been created in the last two months. This is indeed an indication that the policies of this Government are beginning to take hold.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is saying to the unemployed in this country: "Carry on in your despair and hopelessness, and when we, as Tories, get around to it, we might do something about it".

FIRST CHANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to activate the First Chance Program so that 900,000 young Canadians will have an opportunity for employment? Is she prepared to get new money to activate that program?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the First Chance Program was an unfunded fantasy. It was a hoax that the Leader of the Opposition was trying to perpetrate on the young people and taxpayers of this country. What we have said instead is that there would be $1 billion dedicated to direct job creation and training, worked out with the provinces, our economic partners, and with the young people of this country, to make sure there are real solutions to the real problems confronting young people.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the only fantasy in this House is the Minister and the rhetoric of her Cabinet colleagues.

CANADA WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared today to activate the $1 billion of reallocated money under the Canada Winter Works Program, because the demand exceeds the present budget by six times? Is she prepared to move on that today?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the first thing we did on assuming office was to allocate $430 million for Canada Works projects this winter, something which the previous Liberal Government had not even budgeted for. That Government had not included in its Budget any plans for this winter, despite the fact it knew unemployment would be highest at this time of year. That $430 million will add another 70,000 jobs this winter just at a time when the jobs are needed most. The Hon. Member should be aware that, with that allocation, 170 constituencies got more money than they did last year under the same program.

YOUTH

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE—CRITERIA

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Youth).

Considering the present crisis situation with respect to youth unemployment which has now reached 18 per cent, and considering that young people are losing hope and are freezing outside, does the Minister not think it is shameful that she speaks only to those who are well off? What are her moral criteria for helping young people who are less in need of Government assistance and neglecting those who have very real problems and are waiting for some kind of action by the government that is attuned to those problems?

● (1120)

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I certainly did not say we are going to neglect young people in difficulty. As the Minsiter responsible for International Youth Year, it is part of my responsibility to celebrate this year despite the problems facing youth today. Of course, thanks to programs like those announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, we shall also be working on jobs. We are now working on involving young people in the community and getting them to help other young people who are not as well off.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, do I take it from the Minister's answer that she will approach the Prime Minister to change the title of her Ministry to the "Ministry of State for Untroubled Youth"? Does she realize that this situation is a tragedy and not a soap opera?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I do realize that the tragedy of youth is not a soap opera. The Government is doing its best to better the—

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

According to Statistics Canada this morning, there are now more people unemployed than there were three months ago, and we all know that the Progressive Conservative Party was elected on September 4 of this year.

I just want to know what this Government is going to do to create new jobs today. What does it intend to do now to create jobs for the unemployed in this country?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member obviously was not paying attention when I responded to a similar question just a few minutes ago. For his benefit I will repeat what I said then. Perhaps it will get through to him this time.

As I mentioned, there have been 65,000 people added to the workforce in the last two months. There are 70,000 new jobs which will be created by the Canada Works Program which we announced earlier this year. The highest amount is dedicated to Canada Works during the winter period. That will bring the jobs into creation at the very time they are most needed. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that the deadline for those projects was earlier this month.

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, there are more people unemployed now than there were when the Conservative Party took office three months ago, and 50,000 more than last month. What is the Minister going to do now for those additional unemployed people?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is really not possible to add $430 million to the Canada Works Program every month. That is just not possible, although the Hon. Member might think that is the way to go about it. He should look at what that program will indeed do, beginning with the 70,000 new jobs that will be brought onstream this month as a result of the $430 million already allocated. We have done that despite the fact that it was not budgeted for by the previous Government and certainly had not been planned. We have moved to make sure—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect. The Member for Yorkton-Melville on a supplementary question.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, despite what the Minister says, there are more people unemployed now than there were three months ago when she took office. What will she do before Christmas for these unemployed people to put them back to work? What will she do?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it does seem very difficult to get through to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deans: It is a lot more difficult when you are unemployed.

Mr. Nystrom: What are you going to do?

Miss MacDonald: I have told him that there is $430 million allocated to bring on jobs beginning this month—that is, the months of December, January and February. Seventy thousand new jobs will be created, beginning this month.

EDUCATION

FUNDING OF STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Secretary of State. If the Government will not do anything about the 18 per cent of our young people who are now out of work, perhaps it will at least do something for our youth in school.

Hon. Larry Grossman of the Conservative Government of Ontario has just announced his intention to raise tuition fees for university students by 10 per cent per year. Of course this will discourage young people and even deny them an opportunity to go to university for the education they need to find work. In view of that fact, will the Secretary of State ask the Minister of Finance to reconsider the freeze that he imposed on the $5 million that was earmarked for student loans next year in this Tory double whammy of increasing tuition fees on the one hand and reducing student loans on the other?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, let me assure my hon. friend of my deep concern about opportunities for students in our universities. On Monday I will be meeting with provincial Ministers who are responsible for education, and our conversations will include the issue which is, at the first level, the provincial responsibility for funding for universities and the question of tuition fees for students.

Mr. de Corneille: I thank the Minister for his answer.

TUITION FEES QUERY

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister, in view of the absence of the Minister of Finance. Before the Minister of Finance imposed this freeze on $5 million for student loans, did he, in the spirit of dialogue and consultation, consult with Mr. Grossman or any of the provincial Tory Ministers of Finance to see if they were going to raise tuition fees?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister responsible for the Canada Student Loans Program, let me indicate to the Hon. Member that the Canada Student Loans Program was adjusted in 1983. The weekly limits were adjusted from $56.25 to $100. With the built in escalators for this year, there is a weekly limit to $105. Therefore, the question of cutting back is erroneous. After a review of the over-all expenditures, it was agreed that the escalators were adequate at this particular time, until there is an opportunity to review the over-all funding with the provinces and set the Canada Student Loans Program in that context.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT CREATED BY TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. She has just finished telling the House that she does not care about the unemployed in this country—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: She does not care about the young unemployed. In light of her report that was tabled in the House yesterday that clearly shows that 8,333 Canadians will be coming on to the unemployment rolls every month as a result of technological change, with serious implications for single industry communities, can the Minister tell the House, without any flim-flam, what she intends to do about unemployment?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Bring back Judy Erola.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1130)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the paper that I tabled yesterday in the House of Commons, the paper on training, is a very positive attempt to come to grips with the real problems of technological change, working together with our partners in the economy, in economic and social areas, to tackle the problems of economic change. But a very real part of the problem that we face in developing the highly skilled labour force that we need in this new era is to overcome the negative attitudes that exist toward technological change. The Member is a living example of that kind of negative approach. I would urge him to take a positive view, to read the paper carefully, and to work with us to help bring about the changes that are indeed needed if we are to have that kind of skilled labour force.

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of the fact that the Minister said I should be positive—and I do hope, and sincerely hope, that all the things the Minister projects in the paper will come true—I want to know what the Minister intends to do about unemployment now.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE CONSTITUTION

QUEBEC UNILINGUAL TRAFFIC TICKET—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It deals with previous questions that I asked this week of the Prime Minister which were not answered, and which questions were put to the Minister of Justice which also were not answered. It concerns English-speaking Canadians' right to receive documents in the courts of Quebec in their language. The Prime Minister boasted last spring, and has boasted also over the air waves, that he has defended with great vigour the English-speaking minorities in the Province of Quebec against abuses of Bill 101. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House whether the Government will withdraw its factum from the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Prime Minister, of this Government, and this Party, I can assure the Hon. Member that we are deeply committed to the Official Languages Act which we supported when it was introduced by the previous Government almost six years ago.

With respect to the specific question, which falls within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice who is absent today, I shall take notice of the Hon. Member's question and ask the Minister to be in touch with the Hon. Member.

FACTUM PRESENTED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Does the Deputy Prime Minister, considering that he probably did not read either the factum presented by the Tory government, that the Minister of Justice as well did not read it, and that nobody on the other side seems to know what is going on... I agree that the government endorsed the Official Languages Act, and I also agree that minority rights must not be restricted—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows the rules.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Will he withdraw the factum to enable the government, the Minister of Justice and himself to read the document, come back to the House, consult with the government and the Prime Minister, and then perhaps take the appropriate action?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have very grave doubts whether I would have the jurisdiction to intrude in that depth into the responsibilities of the Attorney General of Canada, as his own Leader pointed out in the House a few days ago.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MR. FRANCISCO LABASTIDA OCHOA, MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND PARASTATE INDUSTRY FOR MEXICO

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt proceedings to advise Members of the presence in our gallery today of Mr. Francisco Labastida Ochoa, Minister of Energy, Mines and Parastate Industry for Mexico.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): My question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. She knows that we have added 50,000 to the rolls of the unemployed in the last month alone, and that we have 244,000 people who have been unemployed for between six months and a year already. She knows her program will provide only 70,000 jobs during this winter. There is a tremendous short-fall. Will the Minister bring forward new programs now to try to meet at least the requirements of those who seem to be long-term unemployed?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have said many times in this House, $1 billion has been dedicated by this Government to new job opportunities and to developing human resources. That $1 billion will be spent to the benefit of Canadians in this field. It will not be frittered away on partisan boon-doggling as it has in the past. I would say to the Hon. Member that that $1 billion will be allocated in a way that will bring real solutions to the problems of unemployment.

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE EXHAUSTEES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Doesn't the Minister recognize that the 244,000 people who have been unemployed for over six months have lost benefits, are not able to meet their commitments, and cannot wait for the Government to introduce its programs to spend the billion dollars? Will she move now to provide them either with an income or with a job opportunity?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is because we recognize that the problems of the unemployed have not been solved by the kinds of past programs he is advocating that we will take the time necessary, and without any excuses whatsoever, to work out the best possible programs that will address the needs of these people who are in such desperate need.

Mr. Deans: When?

Miss MacDonald: I can tell the Hon. Member that those consultations are going on right now. They are going on with labour unions, with business, and with provincial Governments. When we present those programs, it will be with the undertaking that they do the job.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DISASTER IN INDIA—MEASURES TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Environment.

To avoid a tragedy such as that which has just stricken the State of Madhya Pradesh in India and which resulted from leaking lethal pesticides responsible for over 1,600 deaths since last Monday, can the Minister tell me and the House what emergency measures are provided to avoid a similar industrial accident and protect the health, security and environment of Canadians?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the chemical product involved in the Bhopal disaster is not manufactured in Canada. To that extent, a similar incident cannot happen here, but it is true that we do handle very dangerous toxic materials and every kind of emergency measure is provided to cope with disasters. Still, the Bhopal tragedy was so serious that I have asked my department officials to get together with their provincial and private sector colleagues and reassess those emergency measures to make sure that they are effective.

ENERGY

VENTURE OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT COSTS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I asked a question of the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, and today I would like to direct this question to him. I mentioned there was a report that indicated the cost of bringing the Venture gas on shore was less than the $3 billion projected by Venture. Can the Minister now confirm that this report is known to his Department and it was prepared by Marshall, Macklin and Monaghan of Toronto?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Let me mention to the Minister that this report was commissioned by Petro-Canada. Will the Minister of Energy undertake to table this report in conjunction and consistent with her present status of wanting the Canadian public to have the information Petro-Canada has which is of interest to the Canadian public and the industry in Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I will phone Mr. Dye and see if he has got it, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: I can assure the Hon. Member that we are only into our preliminary analysis of the Venture field with the officials of Mobil. We are working on the basis of that analysis and the numbers which will flow from it.

I am aware of the earlier report but it is not, I believe, the relevant document to be used at this time.

AUDITOR GENERAL

PETRO-CANADA PURCHASE OF PETROFINA—ACCESS TO DOCUMENTS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister on a related subject. The Auditor General and this House have had enormous difficulties getting the information which has now been promised to come from Petro-Canada with respect to the Petrofina purchase. Will the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that other investigations by the Auditor General will not be blocked on the grounds that the background documents needed to carry out these investigations are secret Cabinet papers?

• (1140)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has indicated in the House repeatedly, as has the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that all documents relevant to the audit of the Auditor General are made available to him. In addition to that, the Prime Minister has taken a further step by indicating that Mr. Hopper should be invited to appear before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, chaired by the Hon. Member for Trinity.

I might suggest to her that the Committee, which is master of its own processes, may wish to consider inviting Mr. Dye to be present when Mr. Hopper is testifying, and inviting Mr. Dye to put any questions he pleases to Mr. Hopper when he appears before the Committee.

I do not know what further steps might be taken in order to have a totally open inquiry into the affairs of Petrofina than that vehicle.

ACCESS TO BACKGROUND PAPERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that Mr. Dye is not blocked in a similar way with respect to his investigation of subjects like the F-18 fighter jet purchase, or the purchase of frigates? Will he assure the House that the Auditor General can do his job as a servant of Parliament and have access to background papers, if they are required to do his job?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I reject the implication in the Member's question when he infers that the Auditor General has been blocked with respect to his inquiries into Petrofina-Petro-Canada. We have explained that repeatedly and repeatedly.

Mr. Waddell: Look at what he said.

Mr. Nielsen: I've read what the Auditor General has said, but for the moment, if the Hon. Member would listen to what we are saying, I think he might come to the conclusion that we are trying to assist in every possible way to ensure that the Auditor General is able to achieve his statutory task as a servant of Parliament, not of the Government, in every area in which he has a right to make inquiries, in order to fulfil his statutory responsibilities. We will assist in every way we possibly can within the law.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR REINTRODUCTION OF FIRST CHANCE PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It arises out of her answers this morning. We are all disturbed by rising unemployment, particularly among our young people. We risk discouraging an entire generation if we do not do something about it. She called the program a hoax, but wouldn't she reconsider reinstating the First Chance Program, approved by Treasury Board, which would have helped train a hundred thousand young people a year, give them some experience, and make them qualified for jobs?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition shows very well the contrast between the way his Party approaches things and the way this Government does. He never explained nor was money allocated to the First Chance Program. He never explained where he would find the money or where he would re-allocate the resources. Instead, contrast that with a Government which has had the courage to review the fiscal framework, to look at the various programs which it has offered and, as a result, to dedicate $1 billion to human resource development, to training, and to new job opportunities. That is there; that is something more than the fantasy which the Leader of the Opposition proposes.

NAME OF PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the young people of the country will be very interested to learn that a program to train and qualify them in large numbers for jobs is treated by the Hon. Minister as a fantasy. If she is going to play politics with the youth, why doesn't she rename the program, seek out the co-operation of the provinces, business and labour, and give young people a chance?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, obviously with his heavy duties the Leader of the Opposition has not had a chance to read the training paper which I tabled in the House yesterday. I urge him to do so. However, I also want to say that the fund about which he talked was not only a fantasy, it was an unfunded fantasy. We do not intend to mislead the young people of the country in that way. That is why we are working out with them, with labour, with business, and with the provincial Governments, the proper programs—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is with regard to the concern among many Canadians about nuclear weapons technology. Would he advise the House what his position is regarding the testing of the Cruise missile and the concern among Canadians that this may well be the prelude to the installation of Cruise missiles on Canadian soil which will be directed across the Canadian Arctic, against the Soviet Union?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government on the testing of the Cruise is well known. We are proceeding with the testing of the Cruise. Indeed, as has been reported in the press, the next test will occur between the period of the first of January and the end of March, 1985. There will be a more precise indication, I think a 48-hour notice, to avoid any non-authorized air traffic in the affected air corridors. I think the other implications which the Hon. Member draws are unfounded.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FEARS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is in regard to the same concern shared by Canadians. In a recent poll in the City of Toronto it was indicated that 10 per cent of young people suffer seriously from nuclear fear. Would the Minister advise the House, and Canadians generally, what steps he is taking to provide information to parents, to teachers, and to young people on how to deal with this very serious dilemma of nightmares and nuclear fears?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a serious question. Obviously all of us share the hope that the Geneva Talks, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated many times in the House, will bring positive results. Average citizens want that matter addressed seriously. Other Members of the House and I are hopeful that positive results will occur.

Oral Questions

GRAIN

TRANSPORTATION DIFFICULTIES OF PEACE RIVER FARMERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He is well aware of the serious transportation problem of many grain farmers in parts of the Peace country. We have been ignored by previous Governments. When can we expect some action to deal with this very serious problem?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I applaud the Hon. Member for his efforts in trying to alleviate the problems of farmers in the Peace River district, and to provide a better transportation service for grain at more equitable rates. Within the next few weeks I should be in a position to announce a mechanism which will be put in place to review various alternatives and options that could best serve the farmers of the Peace River district. I hope I will have the Hon. Member's support and input, as well as the input of Hon. Members who reside in that area.

ENERGY

HIBERNIA OILFIELD—MODE OF DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday the Minister put words in her Leader's mouth which were never uttered by him in the House of Commons. In the interests of clarity today, would the Minister explain what she meant when she said yesterday that her Government will not accept "a formal environmental impact statement until such time as Newfoundland decides the mode of development"? Is the Minister saying that the Government of Newfoundland alone and unilaterally will decide the mode of development or production for Hibernia oil?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought the Member would have risen on a real problem which is being created off Newfoundland, that is, the iceberg that is bearing down on Hibernia and threatening two rigs.

• (1150)

Again, I can only refer the Hon. Member to Hansard which shows that the Prime Minister said nothing of the sort.

Mr. Tobin: Read Hansard?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, am I allowed to read from Hansard? When asked if he would table it, he said very clearly—

Mr. Tobin: Where? Where?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me it is reasonable that if someone has been asked to answer a question that the House listen to the answer. It is reasonable to ask that the House listen to the answer.

Miss Carney: The Prime Minister was asked if he had a copy of the study and if the Prime Minister would undertake to obtain a copy. The Prime Minister said:

> Yes, I will make that undertaking on behalf of the Minister.

When he was questioned repeatedly on November 27, the Prime Minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, I hoped that the Minister would be back in the House today. She has been detained in Toronto. She will provide my hon. friend with an answer as soon as she returns.

He always said that, if and when we had the report, it would be tabled. I have told the Hon. Member over and over again that I do not have a final report that is acceptable to me and to the Government of Newfoundland because the mode of development has not been decided upon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: As I tried to explain yesterday, one does not determine an environmental impact of a development until one knows how one is going to drill for the oil.

JOB CREATION QUERY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will be almost as generous with me as you have been with the Minister who again has been misleading the House, I hope inadvertently. I invite everyone, including the gentlemen of the press, to read Hansard.

An Hon. Member: And women.

Mr. Tobin: And the gentlewomen of the press.

Would the Minister confirm that, as part of that environmental assessment impact study, an attitudinal study conducted by Mobil indicates, based on statements that have been made by the provincial Government, that 50,000 Newfoundlanders expect to get jobs on that development? Will she tell us what the real, sober estimate is for jobs in the Hibernia development as outlined by Mobil Oil in a report that she is suppressing?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am really astounded by the Hon. Member's question. I have said I have not received the report. Therefore, I have not read it. I do not have a report that establishes the environmental impact of the development of Hibernia on Newfoundland.

May I point out that when the Hon. Member's Party was in power, it totally excluded Newfoundland from having any say whatsoever in the development of the offshore.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Churchill.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. During the election campaign the Prime Minister promised that he would, without delay, open a new round of negotiations with the Province of Quebec on equalization. Did the Prime Minister, in his meeting yesterday, start that process?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Hon. Member would agree with me that it would be much more fruitful if he asked that question of the Prime Minister when he returns to the House on Tuesday.

Ms. Copps: Give up your seat!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ECONOMIC STATEMENT EFFECTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, much has been made of the fact that Manitoba and Quebec are the provinces that are suffering now with the problem of the equalization formula which the Liberal Government imposed on the country. It is hurting those people. Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us if the Government, in its effort to consult with and keep provincial Governments informed, will provide the information that the Manitoba Government requested specifically, which was to have the economic effects of the last economic statement provided—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I find it difficult to find that question supplementary to the first question.

SOCIAL SECURITY

BENEFITS FOR WIDOWS AND WIDOWERS AGED 60 TO 64 YEARS—EXCLUSION OF SINGLE, DIVORCED AND SEPARATED PERSONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning the spouse allowance for widows and widowers.

Could the minister confirm the fact that 80,000 senior citizens between 60 and 64 years of age and in desperate financial need will be denied the benefits of this program simply because they are single, separated or divorced?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in an earlier answer to the Hon. Member I indicated general patterns regarding the possible legislation for widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64. For the exact details, the Hon. Member will have to wait for the legislation to be tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister cannot give as an excuse the lack of money, for he is well aware that the government will recover $20 million in welfare benefits. Does he not think that it would be better to ask the Minister of Finance to spend $36 million on these people instead of spending it to buy new uniforms for our Armed Forces personnel?

[English]

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate to the Hon. Member that, unlike the previous Government which—

Mr. Nunziata: Hey, put it on fast-forward.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I would be glad to do so, but you wouldn't even understand that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gauthier: That's the fourth time today.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members may find that it is Friday, but I think that it would be appropriate, no matter what the answers to the questions are, if everyone listened with some dignity and courtesy. I think that would be appropriate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, I would say that the pension reform as well as the paper on the elderly benefits were much better in approaching the matter over a general pattern to see where we best can strengthen not only the elderly benefits package but also look to the future. I hope the Hon. Member would like to join us in that exercise.

TELEVISION

ADVERTISEMENTS PROMOTING WAR TOYS AND GAMES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am sure he knows that in this pre-Christmas period children are being bombarded by television advertising which promotes the sale of war toys, war games, and violence-related products. This comes at a time of high international tension and threat of war. Would the Minister give consideration to the possibility of doing something about this kind of advertising in view of its adverse effects on children?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in terms of the specific question raised by the Hon. Member I think it is advisable for the House to know that there are consumer groups that have raised the question of advertising of war toys that are on the market at Christmas. I would think it is a better approach for consumers to take appropriate action rather than for the Government to legislate.

WESTERN EUROPEAN GUIDELINES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, a number of Governments of western European countries have sat down with the industry and worked out voluntary guidelines to limit that kind of advertising. Would the Minister consider that?

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Deans: He did. He said: "Would the Minister consider that?"

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain asking to rise? Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Deans: Just trying to be helpful.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would consider having his Department sit down with the industry to work out guidelines.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question put by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —I want to indicate to him that, through the Ministry of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, meetings take place with advertisers in various industries, and if that is the appropriate forum, I am sure it can be considered.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Will the Hon. Minister either confirm or deny that three Soviet athletes have been charged with bringing drugs into the country?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I have been informed that three Soviet weightlifters were indeed detained at Mirabel International Airport last evening. They were found to have in their possession restricted drugs, contrary to the provisions of the Canadian Food and Drugs Act. The matter is now in the hands of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and, therefore, I am not in a position to make any further statements.

PRIVILEGE

REMARKS OF MR. ROBINSON ALLEGED CONTEMPT OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the House that I have received a question of privilege standing in the name of the Hon. Member York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege relates to certain allegations which were made by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) at the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs meeting on Monday. I have notified the Hon. Member of the proceedings today.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot hear a point of order during a question of privilege; the Member knows that.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, on Monday, under the cloak of parliamentary immunity, the Hon. Member for Burnaby alleged without substantiating evidence that Mr. Robert Foulkes, a former Vice-President of Petro-Canada, and Mr. Fred Rayer, a Vice-President for International Explorations, were CIA spies. The Hon. Member for Burnaby stated:

> I would also ask the Minister, while he is making those inquiries, to make inquiries about another allegation which I do not have any documentation on, but which I received from the same source as the source of this document—the authenticity of which, by the way, I have had confirmed through the American embassy; that is, the authenticity of the document—and that is an allegation that the CIA have been involved in the penetration at a very senior level of Petro-Canada. In this committee, Mr. Chairman, just so the Minister can be specific in making inquiries, the allegation is that a former Vice-President of Public Affairs of Petro-Canada, a Mr. Foulkes, as well as Mr. Rayer—that is, Bob Foulkes and Mr. Fred Rayer, who is currently working for Petro-Canada Resources as Vice-President, Explorations International—may have been either tasked by the CIA or originally involved with the CIA in some capacity, and the purpose for their having been tasked was to obtain information from Petro-Canada. As I say, I have no—

Mr. Deans: What is the privilege?

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Hon. Member is presumably raising a question of privilege. I appreciate he is reading into the record matters from the committee, but he does have an obligation to move very quickly, when raising a question of privilege, to explain how his privileges have been breached.

Mr. Nunziata: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I simply wish to point out that the Member, in making his allegations in committee, indicated on two occasions that he was making the allegations without foundation—

Mr. Deans: What is the privilege?

Mr. Speaker: Could the Member please move quickly to explain to me how his privileges have been breached?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, it would be my respectful submission that the unsubstantiated allegations constitute a contempt of Parliament which reflects negatively on each and every Member of this Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I will be asking you to conclude that a prima facie case can be made of contempt of Parliament; and if you so conclude, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for—

Mr. Speaker: No. With great respect, the Hon. Member is now proceeding to attempt to put before me the motion he would move if I found a prima facie case of privilege. His obligation at the moment is to present the case which I must consider. He has yet to present a case. I cannot let this go on much longer without the Member presenting a case of privilege which has been breached.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, if I may, the case of privilege is as follows. It is recognized that a Member's freedom of speech is unrestricted and that there is parliamentary immunity. The purpose of that parliamentary immunity, as I indicated yesterday, is to encourage frank and open discussion in Parliament and in committee. It would be my respectful submission that the immunity is a shield but ought not to be used as a dagger. In this particular instance, that privilege was abused. As a result of that abuse, it has cast a negative shadow over each and every Member of this House. It would be my submission that that constitutes a contempt of Parliament.

I would like to cite Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada at page 193, wherein it reads:

> —the dimension of contempt of Parliament is such that the House will not be constrained in finding a breach of privileges of Members, or of the House. This is precisely the reason that, while our privileges are defined, contempt of the House has no limits. When new ways are found to interfere with our proceedings, so too will the House, in appropriate cases, be able to find that a contempt of the House has occurred.

In conclusion, it would be my most respectful submission that a contempt of this Parliament has occurred. Although Members of the House have parliamentary immunity, there are restrictions. When a particular Member goes beyond the realm of what is proper, this House has the authority to cite that particular Member for contempt. It must have that authority. If it does not have that authority, then this House could be brought into disrepute. Mr. Speaker, those are my submissions.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on the same question of privilege?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, to begin with, I do not believe that there is a question of privilege. I would point out that the Member should perhaps go into the history of privilege to determine first whether he is prepared to stake his seat on a question such as this. Beyond that, the Member to whom he is referring has already issued a public statement to the effect that he regrets having done what the Member now claims is a matter of privilege. Second, the least he could have done was to wait until the Member was in his seat before he raised the matter in order to allow that Member to respond adequately.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened with great care and it would be my normal practice on these matters to reserve. However, I listened with great care to the technical argument put by the Member with regard to the quotation from Maingot which refers—and the Member would know if he read further in Erskine May and Beauchesne—to the capacity of the House to find that an attempt to interfere with the proceedings of the House itself is a contempt. That is the quotation he has read, to my knowledge, from Maingot.

The privilege of a Member of Parliament to make a statement in the House of Commons, or in a committee, is absolute. It would be very, very difficult to find that a Member, by making a statement that another Member—as is that other Member's equal right—found improper, immoral or wrong—which I take it is what the Member feels—it would be improper to find that a Member exercising his freedom to speak somehow could be in contempt. Otherwise the privilege of free speech would be null and void if a motion of privilege could deal with whether a Member had in fact caused a contempt. The contempt that the House deals with when Members speak is whether Members speaking in the House have caused a disorder in the House—whether they have used unparliamentary language.

I am indicating all of this in case the Member wants to write a further argument to me. Because it is a question of privilege with regard to another Member, I feel an obligation not to rule until that other Member had had a chance to comment or respond. Therefore, I will not make a ruling today. However, I will say to the Member that I think, frankly, at least with regard to his comments, he has mixed up an apple and an orange. That is, when something is, by definition in his mind, potentially contemptuous, that is not necessarily a contempt of the House. So I will reserve for the moment.

Standing Orders

STANDING ORDERS

CONTINUATION IN FORCE OF PERMANENT AND PROVISIONAL STANDING ORDERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. After consultations with my colleagues, the House Leaders of the other two Parties, I would ask for the leave of the House to introduce the following motion by way of draft Order:

That, notwithstanding any previous Order of the House, all the current permanent and provisional Standing Orders shall continue in force, until otherwise ordered;

● (1210)

[Translation]

Provided that the provisions of Standing Order 43 shall be suspended during the Thirty-third Parliament.

[English]

I believe, Mr. Speaker, if you were to ask unanimous consent to proceed with this motion and, indeed, to have it passed unanimously, I believe you would find it forthcoming.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to give our unanimous consent to the order which the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is seeking.

I would just like to say as well, Mr. Speaker, that since you have reserved your decision on the motion of privilege raised by the Hon. Member of the Opposition Party who has just spoken, I would appreciate the opportunity to speak to his motion when you next have the matter before you.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is now in another difficulty. There is no motion before it. I listened and looked for all those who wished to address the Chair at the moment with regard to the question of privilege which was raised. I indicated that I thought I should not make a ruling, even though I believe I am making it clear and that I am pretty close to one. However, I thought I should at least consider giving the Hon. Member who is mentioned in the comments an opportunity to speak since he is not here today. Other than that I presumed that all Hon. Members who wished to address that matter have done so.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to clarify my position. I felt that since you wanted to give the Hon. Member who was the object of the comments of my colleague a chance to speak, and in order to facilitate the business of the House, I would reserve my comments—

Mr. Deans: No!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —until this matter was next before us.

Mr. Speaker: With due respect, I did not say that. Does the Hon. Member for Windsor West wish to make a comment on the question of privilege? If he does, I will undertake an extraordinary procedure. Since I have a request for unanimous consent on a House order, I suggest we dispose of it and then I will hear a further comment on the question of privilege if the Hon. Member for Windsor West chooses to make one.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on the point of order raised by the Government House Leader?

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I regret my hon. colleague tried to bootleg something in which was not before us. We did in fact discuss the draft order which has been proposed by the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and we agreed to keep in force the existing Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders until such time in the future as it is deemed desirable to change them.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion described?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There being unanimous consent, it has been moved by Mr. Hnatyshyn, seconded by Mr. McLean:

[Translation]

That, notwithstanding any previous Order of the House, all the current permanent and provisional Standing Orders shall continue in force, until otherwise ordered;

Provided that the provisions of Standing Order 43 shall be suspended during the Thirty-third Parliament.

[English]

Shall that motion be adopted?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn) agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

REMARKS OF MR. ROBINSON ALLEGED CONTEMPT OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: Given that this is the first time we have dealt with this, I will now hear the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on the question of privilege which was raised earlier.

There is a dilemma, and I am doing this deliberately. I therefore seek unanimous consent that the Hon. Member be heard. I did not indicate that I was going to reserve until I had heard everyone who chose to rise. That is what I believe concerns the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). If the precedent is established that the Speaker may reserve and then other Members get up and make further speeches, a difficulty is created for the Speaker. I had not indicated I was going to reserve and the Hon. Member for Windsor West did not rise to be heard. May I seek the consent of the House at this time that the Hon. Member for Windsor West be heard on this matter?

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) is asking for permission to enter into this discussion at a later date. If that is what he is seeking, then I will not give unanimous consent. However, if the Speaker is intent on reopening the question for further discussion now and will allow comments to be made by those who wish to comment now, and then reserving to some later date in order to allow the Hon. Member—who has been accused in his absence and with the full knowledge that he would not be here by the Hon. Member who moved the motion—

Mr. Nunziata: I gave him notice.

Mr. Deans: —then, perhaps, we will consent—

Mr. Speaker: This is the dilemma of dealing with questions of privilege with regard to parliamentary privilege because it is beginning to get personal. I therefore suggest, as I suggested yesterday—without asking the Hon. Member to withdraw his comments at the time, so I will therefore not ask the Hon. Member to withdraw his comments at this time—that this is not the way to deal with this matter.

I am now left in a quandary. It is clear, I hope, what my intention was when I said I would reserve. I would reserve to decide myself whether it was appropriate to allow the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) to speak to the issue, and to make my own ruling. I did not indicate I was reserving to allow other Hon. Members to participate. I do not yet know in my mind whether it is reasonable to allow the Hon. Member for Burnaby to make a statement later. That I have to decide as well.

I therefore seek the consent of the House to allow the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray)—

Mr. Rodriguez: No!

Some Hon. Members: No!

Ms. Copps: It's an NDP gag!

Mr. Gauthier: There is no democracy there!

Mr. Speaker: I have sought the consent of the House to hear the Hon. Member for Windsor West. I find no such consent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: If you want to put your muck raker up, put him up. Any time he wants to rise on debate, we will debate it!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. About two weeks ago Wednesday became Tuesday. This week Wednesday has become Friday! With great respect to Hon. Members, shall we just proceed with House business?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BUDGETARY CUTBACKS—NECESSITY FOR CONSULTATION PROCESS

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, when my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced his strategy for putting the Government's fiscal house in order, he asked all Government agencies to do their share to achieve the proposed budgetary cutbacks. As a result, the CBC has had to cut back its proposed budget estimates for 1985-86 by $75 million. This reduction represents 7.5 per cent of the total expenditures of the CBC.

Since there was a risk that this administrative obligation would affect the CBC's general strategy and its long-term operations, I decided, in agreement with the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, that a consultation process was necessary.

[English]

Mr. Juneau supported this process and on November 5 he stated in a letter to me, and I quote:

> It was agreed that if such reductions were made, important basic corporation strategies would be affected, and therefore it would be necessary that consultations take place between the corporation and yourself on the implementation of these reductions.

In his letter, Mr. Juneau pointed out that such consultations could take place while respecting the discrete responsibilities of the Minister and the corporation.

[Translation]

I am happy to inform the House that this emphasis on consultation has produced positive results thanks to the co-operation of the President of the CBC and his senior officials, who worked together with my special consultants, Mr. Gould, Mr. Audley and Mr. Paquin, all of whom were realistic in their approach and gave full consideration to the Corporation's creative resources, both from the regional and the network point of view.

Mr. Juneau has informed me of the main points of this strategy and has asked me to approve amendments to the pension plan, so as to open the possibility of early retirement for CBC employees and thus minimize the loss of jobs. I am happy to inform the House that I have given my approval for these amendments.

[English]

It is a pleasure to inform the House that my consultations with Mr. Juneau have been conducted in a spirit of co-operation and with a shared concern for the well-being of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and its excellent service to Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Juneau also informed me that he will be meeting the members of the CBC board of directors very shortly and will be ready to announce that the board has decided some time next week.

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in giving his statement to the House, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has told us that there has been an agreement on a plan to help employees of the CBC who will be asked to take early retirement. In doing this, the Minister of Communications has lifted the veil only very slightly on what is going to happen to the CBC and its services for Canadians across this country. He is confirming that there will be substantial layoffs and a permanent loss of jobs for CBC employees. If this is the case, then while he has not lifted the veil further, as I thought he might do, and given us the details of the impact on programming services to Canadians all across this country resulting from the cuts announced in te mini-budget of the minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a few weeks ago, I think we can take it for granted, because of what the Minister has said at this time, that there will be substantial reductions in worthwhile programming and broadcasting services available to Canadians throughout this country. Certainly if people are being laid off one has to assume that they will be in the area of programming and news and public affairs. I think we would have to assume that those who will lose their jobs will not be those employed in the head office of the CBC here in Ottawa or in the major regional head offices in Toronto or Montreal. We have to assume that people involved in providing programming services to Canadians in regions like Windsor, Winnipeg and Moncton are going to be among those who will lose their jobs. As a result they will not be able to provide the programming which Canadians in these regions have every right to expect under the legislation passed by this Parliament.

• (1220)

One likely result of the plans of the CBC and the Government, Mr. Speaker, is that Canadians will have to depend on more productions made in other countries and imported into this country. That is a weakening of the essential cultural fabric of this country, something that Canadians have become proud of due to the efforts of the CBC supported by previous Liberal Governments, and which the Conservatives are now beginning to tear apart.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we are going to have a lot more to say when we get confirmation of what we already have good reason to believe, that the impact of the Conservative Budgetary cuts on the CBC will hurt programming, particularly in news and public affairs, in the outlying regions of this country. We will have a lot more to say when we get these details but we can already conclude that, as with so many other aspects of the Conservative mini-budget, it is damaging a vital national institution. It is damaging the ability of Canadians to receive broadcasting in the areas of news and public affairs and local programming in their own communities. These cuts are damaging the essential cultural fabric of this country and when the next election comes, this Government, because of the damage it has caused to this country as a whole, not just the CBC, will stand condemned in the eyes and through the votes of the Canadian people.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) tells the House that the changes in the CBC programming have been done in consultation with the head of the CBC. It is a fine consultation when the Minister holds a gun to the head of the President of the CBC and tells him "We can consult but you have got to cut $75 million from your budget".

We know from information we have received from various regions that the CBC has proposed and will implement major reductions in the staff and services in most of the regions, including cities like Winnipeg, Vancouver, Windsor, Moncton and Ottawa. We know that not only will people be laid off, but regional and local programming will be severely cut in order to maintain the national programming. We know this kind of major cut will mean that the objective the CBC was given by governments in the past to increase regularly and to a large extent the production and distribution of Canadian programming will have to be cut back.

We say, Mr. Speaker, these cuts will very seriously inhibit the ability of the CBC to provide the kind of service which the people of Canada expect from the CBC. I would hope the Minister would agree that the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture could meet as soon as possible to hear from the President of the CBC so we can get the kind of details which we have not yet received as to actually what kind of cuts there will be and what kind of programming will be so adversely affected.

Mr. Speaker: Questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question about regional programming.

Can the Minister give this House the assurance that CBC regional programming, and I am thinking of production centres in places like Winnipeg and Western Canada for the French network and English programming in Quebec, will be maintained at the levels we have known in the past two or three years? Is regional programming going to be improve? Will such improvements be continued and can we expect continuation and completion of the five-year plan to promote minorities and bring the CBC to communities with a population of more than 500 people?

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that first of all, during these consultations it was understood that consideration for creative resources both in the regions and in the networks would be given priority. Second, the President of the CBC will be discussing his proposal with the board of directors of the Corporation and will then inform Canadians of the outcome of those discussions.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Minister responsible for the CBC.

First, could the Minister tell us now how many jobs will be affected by the CBC cuts? There are reports that some 800 jobs in the CBC's regional service will be affected, and this means 800 people. In addition to that, many contract employees will be laid-off, and they will not even be included in those figures because they are not part of the actual CBC staff. Therefore, how many people will be affected, and second, how do these cuts square off with the election promises of the Progressive Conservative Party, namely that no actual cuts in cultural expenditures would be made by a Progressive Conservative Government?

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, so long as the Board of Directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has not confirmed the President's proposals, there is nothing official yet. If and when such decisions are made by the Corporation's Board of Directors, I think it will be up to the corporation's President to announce the decisions made by the Board.

[English]

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister's announcement today lead to increased or decreased production by the CBC?

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question will be found in the analysis the Hon. Member will make of Mr. Juneau's press conference, which will be a part of the nuts and bolts of the cuts affecting the corporation.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, coming from Manitoba I have gone through a restraint program with the provincial Conservative Government that was in power from 1977 to 1981. We found that in the Department of Northern Affairs, for example, all the cuts were made to on-the-line people. There was no decrease at all in the headquarters of the Department. It is quite interesting to note that the number of bureaucrats working in the central office actually increased at the very time that there were cuts in the field. What guarantee do we have that the same thing will not happen with the CBC cuts?

• (1230)

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, it has been stated here in this House, at the outset of the discussions on that matter, that the Minister of Communications expected and hoped that all the cuts would respect the whole question of creation both in the regions and within the networks. It is in that spirit and towards that aim that co-operation and consultation with the CBC has been carried out. You will get to know the results of the corporation's work and consultation after the Board of Directors will have approved the President's proposals and once these will have been published.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions are going somewhat beyond the actual content of the statement. Some Members may not know our tradition here, which is to have a short period of questions after a ministerial statement. I am trying to get everyone who has risen in for one question. I think that will be the only fair way to use the traditional period of time, if that is agreed. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister could confirm that there will be cuts in the Vancouver region and tell me the extent of those cuts, especially in production. In Vancouver, which is an exciting region, there is the feeling that everything is concentrated in the Toronto region and that Vancouver gets the worst deal possible with regard to cut-backs and so on. It is a real struggle to produce programming in Vancouver and to get money for that. Was it not possible for the Minister to set some guidelines to ensure that the cut-backs would be made where the fat is, rather than in the regions where there is a real need?

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking me to interfere in a rather tactless way, to say the least, with the responsibilities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

When the Board has approved the President's recommendations, we will then be in a position to discuss the implications of such approval by the Board.

But as long as the Board has not been asked . . . has not made any decision, I do not think it would be proper to discuss such hypothetical matters.

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, most of us welcome the sense of consultation with which the Minister indicates this process is now under way. My question for the Minister is with regard to broader consultation with some of the communities and workers affected. There certainly have been requests, for instance from the Windsor-Essex County area, for meetings with the Minister and people who are responsible for these cuts.

Would the Minister be prepared to make a commitment that such requests will be accepted so that the degree of consultation in these cut-backs can be much greater, particularly for some of the remote communities or communities like Windsor which faces an overflow of programming from the United States which has no competition with the CBC in the form of private stations?

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I am taking it for granted that the senior officials of the CBC will be able, in accordance with good labour relations, to arrange the necessary consultations within their organization.

It is not up to the Minister of Communications to set up labour-management meetings at the CBC. I do not believe that this is the job of the Minister of Communications, and I have too much respect for CBC authorities to interfere in their daily activities which have nothing to do with the duties of the Minister.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister.

We are all aware that the Fédération des francophones hors Québec and many other groups are concerned about the cut-backs, especially as they affect regional programming. Can the Minister assure this House that the Halifax station, about which many people are concerned, will go forward and will open on schedule. With that in mind my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) spoke earlier about the speeding-up policy of the CBC to serve French-speaking groups of over 500 people outside Quebec? This policy has already been established. I agree with what you said earlier about internal consultations within the CBC, but I still believe that a policy statement by the Minister would be in order to tell French-speaking people outside Quebec, especially in the Halifax region, that the programming will begin as expected.

Mr. Masse: I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I am convinced that the management of CBC have taken into account all the comments put forward both by the Federation and by some Hon. Members here in this House, in their analysis and implementation of the cut-backs dictated by the present economic situation which we have inherited from the previous Government.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: We have now taken more time than that taken by the statements of all Parties. I will recognize the two Members whom I have seen rising for some time who have not yet had a chance to ask a question, and that will be the end of it. The Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille).

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister certainly knows of the number of studies that have been made and of the great concern we have about the fragile situation which faces our Canadian authors, writers, artists and all those who work in the various kinds of drama and art in the country. He knows of the fragile condition that is facing this entire group in the face of the new satellite dishes and so on. I do not need to remind him of the very sensitive and fragile situation which exists and of the need for us to be able to develop and maintain a sense of Canadian culture.

Mr. Speaker: I have tried to explain to Members that we are in fact running over the length of the time of the original statements. Does the Member have a question?

Mr. de Corneille: Yes, Mr. Speaker; I was simply indicating the gravity of the situation. In light of the cuts that are being made, can the Minister say that the philosophy, position and direction of the Government will ensure that this fragile situation will not be accidentally destroyed by these tremendous cuts?

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Minister is well aware of this situation and that the CBC, in accordance with its responsibilities and parliamentary mandate, has done its best to guarantee that the creative activities of the CBC mentioned by the Hon. Member will not be curtailed.

[English]

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have just one brief question for the Minister. I am not sure that the Minister realizes the depth of concern among the people who depend on the CBC for their casual earnings, which are often low over the course of a year. I am talking about actors, musicians and writers.

Will the Minister move quickly to tell the House and the country exactly where programs will be cut so that those people who will lose opportunities of employment will know where they stand and can try to make other plans for their careers?

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, it would certainly not be appropriate for the Minister of Communications to reply to such a question until such time as the chairman of the board of the CBC has referred to the board the management proposals and the board has endorsed these proposals; it is then that they will be made public by the Chairman of the Board. At that time, I am convinced that the Hon. Member will find sufficient evidence in the proposal or the public report of Mr. Juneau to realize that her concerns were shared and taken into account by the CBC.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT EXCISE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

She said: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government I am pleased to rise in the House today to put before Hon. Members for second reading Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act.

This Bill proposes some very positive policies announced by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the Government's economic statement that was tabled in the House on November 8. The intent of this legislation is to restore a sense of stability and prosperity to several areas of economic activity in this great land, this land that we all love and want to see as a land of opportunity again.

Bill C-12 also re-establishes a number of measures that were introduced by the previous Government. That Government allowed these items to linger. We are proceeding with these measures now to reduce uncertainty so that those affected by these measures will have the legislative assurance which will enable them to plan for the coming year.

It gives my Government great pleasure to include in this Bill a measure allowing a fuel tax rebate for primary producers; those Canadians engaged in farming, fishing, logging and mining. As Hon. Members may know, this measure was announced on July 5 in Prince Albert. This commitment recognizes that our primary producers continue to be significant contributors to the Canadian economy. Primary producers will now be eligible for a three-cent per litre, or 13.6 cents per gallon, sales tax rebate and relief from the 1.5 cents per litre, or 6.8 cents per gallon, excise tax. These combine to produce a total tax relief of 4.5 cents per litre, or over 20 cents per gallon. This rebate took effect December 1, 1984.

Our Government wants to facilitate this fuel tax rebate. We are concerned about the financial difficulties currently facing those engaged in the primary sector, and it is our hope that all Hon. Members will act in concert with the Government and pass this relieving legislation as quickly as possible.

When providing primary producers with a fuel tax rebate, the Government will not impose on the primary producers a mountain of paperwork in return for this benefit. On the contrary, our Government is dedicated to simplicity and greater productivity wherever and whenever possible. I want to reassure Members of the House who represent Canadians engaged in the primary sector that we are not a Government which introduces tax relief measures only to create a bureaucratic albatross to administer the benefit. The administrative measures will be implemented by the most fair and simple means possible. Relevant information on the procedures for this fuel tax rebate are being distributed by Revenue Canada.

This measure, as I mentioned earlier, reflects our Government's concern for the current financial difficulty facing primary producers. It will cost some $160 million in the first full year of operation and will run through to January 1, 1987. In addition, the refund system for the 1.5 cents per litre excise tax on gasoline will also remain in place.

A second measure reflected in this Bill deals with the air transportation tax. This tax measure is part of the cost recovery program which my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), announced on November 8, 1984. The ad valorem rate of this tax on air travel within Canada and the United States is increased to 9 per cent from 8 per cent, with a new maximum of $30 which is up from the previous $23 maximum. For air travel to destinations outside Canada and the United States, the specific tax will be increased to $15 from $12.50. These increases will affect tickets purchased within Canada and those purchased abroad by passengers who board flights in Canada. This increase is effective April 1, 1985.

This cost recovery measure is expected to generate additional revenue of $34.6 million in 1985-86. The amount will be allocated to Transport Canada to fund services related to air transportation in Canada. In addition to these new initiatives, the Bill will remove any uncertainty in the market-place with respect to tax measures announced in the past but not yet legislated.

A telecommunication programming services tax of 6 per cent on charges made for provision of programming services such as Cable TV or closed circuit broadcasts and related services is being authorized. This tax has effect as of April 20, 1983 for services provided from July 1, 1983 and has been included in the charges of most cable system operators since that time. We are proceeding with this particular measure, as well as three measures I will place before the House, in order to avoid undue disruptions in the affected industry.

Second, the tax point for highway motor vehicles is being shifted from the manufacturer level to the wholesale level; that is, to the sale-to-retail level. This shift has no effect on the tax on domestic vehicles but it does decrease the amount of tax on U.S.-made vehicles while increasing the amoung of tax on other foreign-made vehicles. This change is effective from March 1, 1984 and removes competitive inequities inherent in the current tax structure.

Third, for all taxable transactions from October 1, 1984 to December 31, 1988, the sales tax will be increased by one percentage point. The applicable rates are 6 per cent on construction materials and equipment for buildings, 13 per cent on alcohol and tobacco products, and 10 per cent on all other taxable goods. The additional revenues generated by this increase had already been allocated to prior expenditures.

The previous Government set up programs without knowing how to pay for them or taking the responsibility to raise the necessary funds at the same time. This adjustment in the tax rate will generate revenues of $2.2 billion by 1986 to pay for programs already set in motion by the previous administration. Much as the Government regretted this measure, we were compelled to proceed with its implementation once we had examined the extent of the overspending by the previous Government.

I am also putting before the House certain technical measures which will benefit taxpayers. Upon Royal Assent to this Bill the Government will begin paying interest of 1 per cent per month on refunds of taxes outstanding more than 60 days beyond the filing of a valid claim. This will apply in respect of all payments to taxpayers or other persons entitled to recover moneys under the Act.

• (1250)

Also effective on Royal Assent, taxpayers may apply for and recover ad valorem sales and excise taxes paid on transactions which are written off as bad debts. Sales from February 16, 1984 are covered by this provision.

The definition of "taxable marginal manufacturing" is being clarified specifically to include the coating or finishing of goods for sale, while removing the reference to unspecified activities related to the preparation of goods for sale. Other amendments relate to specific commodity or industry groups or are of a technical or administrative nature.

Passage of this Bill will clear the way for consideration of new initiatives to improve our commodity tax system while allowing the business community to operate in an atmosphere of certainty and confidence.

I would like to take this opportunity to reaffirm before the House this Government's declared dedication to restoring confidence and stability to our economy. Confidence is the key to our economy's expansion, the key to greater job opportunities and the key to social equity for all Canadians, young and old, wherever they live in this great country of ours, in the west, the east or the far north.

This Government is here to serve all Canadians. Our Government was elected because it represents change, a very much needed change. This mandate for change is an enormous responsibility. We take the trust given us by the Canadian people very seriously. We have begun the reconstruction of our national finances. We are redesigning government programs and policies. We want to support rather than hinder economic prosperity. It is about time the Government of Canada took charge and attended to the economic affairs of this great country. It is about time Canadians got a sense of stability and prosperity for which they work so hard.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-12 is very similar to a number of measures that were introduced by the previous Government. The previous Government tabled several motions pertaining to the Excise Act and the Excise Tax Act in the Budgets of April, 1983 and February, 1984, and one concerning the Excise Tax Act in May, 1984.

Bill C-12, arising from the notice of Ways and Means motion tabled on November 8, 1984, in effect brings forward the motions tabled by the previous Liberal Government. Proposals pertaining to the telecommunications programming services tax, the wholesale tax for motor vehicles, a number of commodity tax changes, provisions relating to recovery of sales tax paid on bad debts and payment of interest on outstanding sales tax refunds and overpayments are all virtually identical to those introduced by the previous Liberal Government.

However, there are at least two differences between the present Bill and previous motions. First, the Government proposes a rebate of three cents per litre on motor fuels used off highway by farmers, fishermen, loggers and miners. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) assured us in his economic statement that this is approximately equal to the federal sales tax. I think Members would all agree in principle that providing assistance to this particular group of Canadians is worthwhile. But I am interested in why the Government chose this method over others. For instance, one of the Government's campaign promises, which many us on this side have read in "Pocket Politics '84", was to remove the sales tax on gasoline and diesel fuel for all primary industries: fishermen, farmers, loggers, miners and the up-stream oil and gas sector. In this case the oil and gas sector seems to have been left out of this particular provision of the Bill.

It is also interesting to note that when this measure was discussed in February, 1984 in this House, the Member for Portage-Marquette, now the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), advocated a very different solution. He pointed out that farmers and fishermen are allowed a 7 cents per gallon or a 1.5 cents per litre rebate. They pay the tax and then apply for the rebate. The Hon. Member expressed the view then that if the Minister of Finance were serious about helping this group of Canadians, it should be done by a different system. He said that farmers and fishermen find it very annoying and cumbersome to apply for refunds. Granted we are all in favour of relief for this particular group of Canadians, but I would be interested to know why the Government now in office has chosen a method of providing relief which is at variance with its campaign promise and the expressed views of one of its Members. I would be interested in the reason for choosing this method and for discarding the other two proposals.

Let me move to another point, Mr. Speaker. The February, 1984 Budget contained proposals for a formal assessment and appeal system to be introduced into the Excise Tax Act. This was a method to have the appeal rights of Canadian taxpayers protected and entrenched in the law. The present Government is not proceeding with that measure. One would like to know the reason for this change.

Finally, the Minister in her opening remarks spoke of the potential of this Bill to raise revenue. Indeed it does raise revenue, as all excise tax Bills do, but this kind of tax is not progressive. It falls equally on Canadians who are able to bear extra costs and those who are not. I gather the new Government does intend to look at the whole taxation system. I hope as it does that it will try to weigh any changes it makes in favour of a more distributive tax system and that the Government will limit any growth in measures of this kind which fall equally on those who are able to bear them and those who are not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) wish to commence now, or shall I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deans: I would prefer, Mr. Speaker, if it were not inconvenient, to call it one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It now being one o'clock p.m., I do leave the Chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 12.59 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When the House rose at 1 p.m., the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) had been given the floor.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not pleased to be rising to speak on this Bill. I had hoped the Government in its wisdom would have recognized that the additional tax measures contained within the Bill are undesirable from the point of view of Canadian consumers and perhaps unnecessary from the point of view of industry.

Let me begin by saying that we will oppose the Bill for some of the same reasons the Conservative Party opposed a similar Bill when it was in opposition. It is interesting to note that what we have in this legislation is for the most part a reiteration or a reintroduction of the measures proposed by the previous Liberal administration. With some minor modification, the Bill before us is a reintroduction of what the Liberal Party had in two of its previous Budgets but had never been given the opportunity to enact into legislation.

Although it may surprise some, it does not surprise me that the Government has chosen to accept the direction which was taken continuously over the last number of years by the Liberals in office. I am somewhat dismayed by the reversal of the Government from the position it took when in opposition. I never cease to be amazed, when people move across the floor of the House, at how they can find some justification for approving actions which they previously condemned as unnecessary or even harmful to the over-all economy of the country.

How well I remember the days prior to the last election while the House was still sitting. Conservative Members rose to point out how the additional $1 billion cost, which the increase in the federal sales tax would result in, would be disastrous to the economy of Canada. I am sure my Liberal colleagues remember Conservative Party Members saying that when they sat on this side of the House. They castigated the Government for imposing this additional burden at a time when the economy was so fragile. They told the Government that it would do nothing other than result in further unemployment. They told the Government that it would do nothing other than reduce the purchasing power of the majority of consuming Canadians and therefore would in turn result in a decrease in the necessity for manufacturing consumer goods. They said that the end result of all this would be that with the $1 billion—and that is only part of this Bill—which flowed from the excise tax increases we would continue to create within Canadian society further unemployment and a further downturn in the utilization of manufacturing potential and capacity. Also they said that we would make it even more difficult for hard pressed families in Canada to be able to afford to purchase what they must have in order to provide for themselves and to keep the economy healthy and growing.

I took those words to heart. After all, I thought that with the vast resources of the Conservative Party, it would have conducted the necessary research to justify the suggestions it was making. I checked it out with my own research and asked: "Are the Conservatives right; is this what will happen?" We looked at it. We analyzed it. We did a breakdown of it to see what would be the consequences of the imposition of this additional tax. Lo and behold, we came to the conclusion, just as the Conservatives said, that it was regressive, unnecessary and undesirable and, just as they said, that it would create further unemployment, and undermine an already fragile recovery which we hoped was taking place. We found, just as they had said, that in fact they were correct.

I had hoped that having put forth that argument, Conservative Members would stay true to that in which they appeared to believe. I had hoped that when in office they would be prepared to rescind these kinds of measures and take into account what they themselves had been foisting upon Parliament and the public of Canada as conclusive evidence of the inadequacy and inadvisability of this legislation. But no, Mr. Speaker. They nip across the floor of the House after the election, get themselves comfortably seated for three or four days and then do an immediate about-face.

The implementation date for the imposition of the additional tax was upon us in September and the first question put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and then subsequently to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was: "Are you going to rescind that tax? Are you going to withdraw those provisions?" The immediate answer was: "Well, we are going to consider it", followed very quickly by a statement indicating that the Government intended to allow the tax increase to take place and intended to allow this additional $1 billion burden to be placed on the backs of the consumers of Canada. It intended to run all of the risks with the economy that it had indicated were the risks the previous administration had intended to run. In fact, government Members were going to endorse the very thing that they had said was going to be extremely harmful.

If someone were to do that in private life, people would lose confidence with that person. People would have no confidence in his or her capacity to make decisions. If it was done only once, perhaps people would overlook it and would try to find some good reason for what had been done. However, this is the second time in this Parliament that what Members of the Conservative Party had held as a principle is to be broken. What the Conservative Party had put forward as an absolute position will be reversed. It worries me to see a Party that is so desperate for power that its Members will say anything any time notwithstanding whether or not they are prepared to implement or stand behind those statements.

Conservative Members are bringing forward during the course of this debate and are implementing at the end of this debate Liberal legislation. It has minor modifications that can be touched upon, but on balance this is Liberal legislation. All of the experts have said that the sales tax is a regressive tax. It requires of everyone who is affected by it that they pay the same amount notwithstanding their income capabilities. Notwithstanding their capacity to earn, they pay the same amount. It matters not what their income levels are. If they must buy the product, they pay the same sales tax whether they are millionaires or are living off welfare. It is in fact a regressive measure and it is certainly less progressive than many other options that are open to the Government for trying to raise necessary capital.

This Bill is of an omnibus nature and I use the word "omnibus" in the broadest possible sense. I am not arguing that it is an omnibus Bill. However, it contains a series of measures. Through that series of measures, this Bill extracts from the economy $4.4 billion. The economy cannot afford to have $4.4 billion worth of purchasing power removed at this point in time and still expect to have a recovery. If $4.4 billion is taken out of the consumer market-place and put into the coffers of the Government, that means in actual fact that that many fewer dollars can be used to purchase the products that are being manufactured or could be manufactured by those who are in the business of producing. There will be no market for those products because the people do not have that $4.4 billion.

Quite clearly, on the one hand the purchasing power is being reduced while on the other side of the coin the revenues to Government are increasing. In the process of reducing the purchasing power, we are creating or at least running the risk of creating additional unemployment. By creating additional unemployment, we then add to the cost of government.

The $4.4 billion taken out of the economy results in unemployment being created all across the country and the slack will then be taken up by the Government at various levels by providing those unemployed people with an income capacity in order to meet their needs. They will be drawing unemployment insurance and welfare payments. Where is the gain? Our economy is operating at about 76 per cent or 72 per cent of its capacity, depending upon when one makes the calculation. What is the point of further reducing the manufacturing capacity by reducing the consumer demand? That is what this kind of legislation does.

It is not as if I am blind to the fact that the Government needs to raise additional money. I can well understand that this Government has inherited a dog's breakfast from the previous Liberal administration.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Thank you very much. I will give you more in a moment.

I can well understand that the Government may have some difficulty raising the necessary funds for the ongoing program needs given that the previous administration did not manage the economy particularly well. However, I am saying today what I would have said to Liberal Members had they stayed in power. If the Government needs $4.4 billion or, for that matter, if it needs even more or somewhat less than $4.4 billion, this is not the way to go about raising it. Of all of the options open to government this is clearly the most harmful one. The option that has been chosen is the one that will do the least good and will impact the most severely on the economic recovery, assuming that there is some kind of economic recovery under way.

I would like to suggest to government Members that had they done an accurate analysis of the various tax concessions that are presently available and had they done that analysis in such a way as to determine on a cost-benefit basis whether or not the tax concessions that we allow are yielding the benefits that we had anticipated, the answer that would have been forthcoming would have been conclusive: we do not get the benefits from tax concessions to the corporate sector that were intended. These are not my own words but the words of economists all across the country and of economists who have studied the tax concession route that has been taken by successive governments in many jurisdictions.

I do not deny that certain of the concessions were given with good intentions. I understand that and can appreciate that governments have from time to time thought that by giving additional tax concessions to a particular part of the economy, that would yield significant benefit in the long or short run. However, the analysis that has been done has proven that that in fact is wrong and that we do not get the benefit from the tax concessions that the majority of past governments have argued we would get.

Very interesting analyses have been done on that which show that tax concessions for research and development did not in fact result in the build-up of a research and development capability in Canada. Many other tax concessions were sought by business. But few were used for the purpose of creating new initiatives for job opportunities in Canada. Those tax concessions, though they cost us many billions of dollars, did not bring about the kinds of results that we expected. When I say "we", I mean the Government, whether here on the federal scene or in the provincial area. The tax concessions which the Government gave did not result in the kinds of benefits that many people had expected.

An estimate was done of the concessions which are afforded by the federal Government to various and sundry parts of the business structure of Canada, either by way of tax breaks or by way of outright grants. The analyses show that the money that has passed through the system to that sector amounts to something in excess of $18 billion on an annual basis.

If it is true—and I submit that it is true—that money does not give back to the economy of Canada the kinds of results that were intended. If it is also true that the Government finds itself in the position in which it requires additional tax revenues, why did the Government not go to that area, look more closely at the grants and concessions, and make some determination that perhaps they could be reduced from the sum of $18 billion to $14 billion? That would have yielded approximately $4 billion to the Government which it is attempting to raise through the various tax measures we have before us. Would that not have made at least as much sense, and perhaps even a tiny bit more sense, than to go the federal sales tax route? The Minister smiles, and she smiles very nicely, but I know that deep down she is thinking: "My God, why didn't I think of that?"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mailly: Fat chance.

Mr. Deans: I can see the little wheels turning, and that is not because her head is hollow. Now she is thinking that maybe she should withdraw the legislation and come back with something more in keeping with the very sensible proposals which are being put forward by the New Democratic Party. I would congratulate her if that is what is going on in her mind.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I am not one to claim credit for good things. I want that to be clear to everyone. We in this Party are quite prepared to share the glory of having come up with a good idea. In fact, we will even allow the Government to adopt the idea as its own!

In a more serious vein, I want to suggest to the Government that there is not a study anywhere which would indicate that it is better for the economy of Canada to increase the federal sales tax by the numbers and amounts that this Bill will, over and against the option of reducing the handouts and tax concessions which are presently available to the corporate sector by one-quarter, thereby raising the same amount of money. That would trim off some of the fat.

If the Minister really wants to do something useful, she should accept this proposal in the way that it is intended. The Conservative Party was right when it was in opposition to say that these were the wrong measures and it was the wrong way to go. The Conservative Party argued a very forceful case when it was in opposition. Reluctant though I am at times to agree, I agreed with what was put forward by the Tory Party when it sat on this side of the House. Having already made that great leap and accepted that it was right when it was over here, I can come to no other conclusion but that it must be wrong when it is over there. It is not possible to be otherwise. If I supported it when it was arguing that this was the wrong way to go—and I did—then I can do no other than to be consistent and say; "Why don't you join me in the consistency and live up to what you believed was true?" Then it could look at alternative ways.

I am not suggesting that what we proposed as appropriate measures are necessarily the only measures which could be implemented. But I am suggesting that there is widespread support in the House of Commons—and I think on the back-benches of the Government and out in the country among the experts and analysts—for a very careful review of the concession method of providing a pass-through of tax dollars to the corporate sector. Since there is no requirement on the corporate sector to live up to any kind of guidelines or to abide by any kind of commitments, it is abundantly clear to anyone who has studied this subject that there are few, if any, benefits that flow from the $18 billion, or at least a significant portion of that amount; but if the Government is determined to reduce the amounts it would not cause any long-term damage to the economy of Canada. There certainly are few benefits in what is being proposed here today.

We need only look around the country to appreciate that we are facing as difficult a time today as we were facing prior to the Government being elected. The unemployment statistics show quite clearly that, with all the best intentions in the world, the Government is not able to match its commitments to its performance. Indeed, in the first three months of the Government's mandate things have worsened for many people. There are now 50,000 more people looking for work than there were when the Government was elected. There are 244,000 people in Canada who have been unemployed for between six months and a year, many of whom no longer qualify for unemployment benefits. There are 130,000 people who have been unemployed for over a year. Long-term unemployment in Canada—those unemployed for a year or more—is considerably higher now than it was a year ago. In fact, it has risen by approximately 180 per cent. Those people are not going to be satisfied with the measures which have been brought forward to date.

The Government speaks of confidence, but confidence is difficult to measure. The Prime Minister admitted that it is hard to measure confidence; it is hard to feed it into the equation and calculate how it will impact. I agree that it is hard. I honestly hope that the Government's measures work, and I will tell the House why I hope they work. I hope they work because if they do not work the country will be in an awful mess. The measures which have been taken since September 4 will work a tremendous hardship on a large number of people. Between now and the end of next year, those measures are anticipated to create between 50,000 and 100,000 more people on the unemployment rolls. I would hate to think that that additional sacrifice will be made by those individuals, among others, and then have the Government's long-term program not work.

• (1430)

What I find most difficult is: What does confidence mean? It is a wonderful word but how can one measure it? How can one measure confidence when one has no job and no one in the area is hiring? How does one measure confidence when a kid graduates from high school and has no way of being able to continue on to university? How does one measure confidence when a person owns a home but because of cut-backs he cannot afford to meet the mortgage payments and must give it up? How does one measure confidence when a small business person operating in a small community finds that the only employer in that community is closing his door? What does one say to the people who worked for that employer who is closing his door? The word "confidence" is a wonderful word. We can say we are as confident as hell, but having said it, what about the jobs? What about the employment opportunities and the growth? Where do we see the development taking place which would lead us to believe that in fact there is something which will flow from that development? It is bad enough that the Government of the day should inherit a terrible situation, but far worse that the Government of the day should then set about to make it even more so. That is what is happening not only as a result of this measure but as well as a result of the economic statement which was brought forward by the Minister of Finance some weeks ago.

One cannot create employment by creating unemployment. We cannot decide to cut back a whole host of programs with the inevitable consequence that there will be more people unemployed, and then expect that everyone will feel that somehow or other that measure is creating employment. It just does not happen.

I want to say to the Minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that we have to stop and take a look at the reality of that which is Canada. We have gone through some very buoyant economic times and we have gone through some less satisfactory economic times, but the one thing I notice from looking over the history of the development of this country in modern times is that the private sector has not been prepared on its own initiative to keep pace with world development. The private sector, notwithstanding all of the grants about which I spoke, has not been prepared to invest in Canada in order to keep pace with changing technology. Notwithstanding the grants for research and development which were made available through our tax dollars, the private sector has not been prepared to engage in proper research and development. And that is the way we must measure the performance of the private sector. It has not been aggressive in seeking new markets for its products. In the main, as a sector, the private sector has not been aggressive. It has in fact, to the contrary, steadfastly refused to go out and seek those markets.

I took part in a study which was conducted all across Canada. I spoke to numerous sector organizations about the need to seek markets outside of Canada for their products, but with few exceptions it was indicated to me that the private sector was content with the size of its business as it was. It was content to operate as a domestic supplier and it had no intention of moving into world markets. Those individuals in private business who did indicate that they were interested in doing so did not have the power in Canada to make the decision in any event. In the main, they represented branch plants of a multinational operation which was set up in Canada to meet Canada's domestic market requirements. They did not have a mandate nor did they have the authority to get a mandate to seek world markets.

Mr. Stewart: Exports are up 40 per cent in Ontario.

Mr. Deans: I thought I heard my colleague from the other side saying "That is absolute crap", which I want to point out is unparliamentary; but nevertheless it would be useful for the Hon. Member, if he does not believe me, to go out and find out for himself.

Mr. Stewart: Exports are up 40 per cent in Ontario.

Mr. Deans: Exports are up 40 per cent but not in manufactured goods.

Mr. Stewart: What about the auto pact, cars?

Mr. Deans: The auto pact is a peculiar situation which fluctuates from year to year and does not operate under an independent mandate in Canada. It operates as part of an international North American conglomerate structure.

An Hon. Member: For what?

Mr. Deans: If the Hon. Member wants to rise and make a speech, he may do so. But the majority of individual companies operating as a part of a branch plant operation, worldwide, do not have the authority to develop world markets.

Having said that, I have to ask where is this business confidence—I am not even asking about consumer confidence—going to come from? Where are those businesses which refused during the good years—and we have had many of them—to seek out those alternative markets, to build the Canadian base, to develop the R and D potential and to become part of a world-scale operation? Where are they? Because that is what is required in order to achieve the goals set out by this Government. But they do not exist, in the main. What they would not do before, they will not do now.

We have given concessions upon concessions to the point where big business hardly pays any tax at all. We have now reached the point where big business can defer paying tax indefinitely so that perhaps it will pay tax 20 years or 30 years down the road, unlike the average worker who pays tax by the week. We have already made it possible for big business not to pay for almost everything it does. What more can we give? The fact of the matter is that we can give no more. Because we can give no more we can hardly expect, based on its record, that big business is suddenly going to rush forward and embrace this new requirement of "confidence" which this Government believes ought to be in existence in this land.

There is nothing I would like better than at the end of this four-year period to see that the Government's measures have worked and everyone in Canada is working, that there is growth and everyone can look forward with some degree of optimism to prosperity and enjoyment of life and to be able to provide for their families. I would love to see that happen. That is motherhood. We would all like that. However, we cannot have that if we are going to rely on the corporate sector which steadfastly refuses to operate on Canada's behalf. We cannot have that if we rely on big business to change its ways; it has had ample opportunity to do so and has refused at every turn. Why do you think we have had to have so much research done in the public sector? Because the private sector refused to undertake it.

Mrs. McDougall: I'm listening.

Mr. Deans: I know you are listening. It is not doing much good, though. The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that there has been the opportunity given. We have tried that and it has not worked. Just to restate the requirement over and over again is not going to make it any more acceptable than it was in the beginning. I say this because I believe that the Government is placing all of its eggs in one basket. It was said earlier that everything which has been tried by this Government has either been spoken about or tried by other governments in other parts of the world, and in fact was even tried here in Canada some years ago. The consequence of those actions being pursued was that massive unemployment was created.

Our mandate, for heaven's sake, is to try and take care of the people who are here today; to make sure that the opportunity is there for them; to make sure that they do not have to pay a price far beyond what would normally be expected by the balance of society; and to attempt to lay the groundwork for a future for the next generation and the ones which follow. That is not what is being done by this Government through this legislation or through its economic statement.

So I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that when we look at what we now have before us and consider its consequences, we cannot help but believe that if we take almost $4.5 billion out of the consuming economy—because that is where it comes from—it can only result in a reduction of purchasing power for the overwhelming majority of Canadians who must buy consumer products. If that is the case, it can only result in a reduction in manufacturing which will then result in increased unemployment. There can be no other way to look at it. I do not care how you calculate it or which economic model you use; you can only come to the conclusion that if you take more money out of everyone's pocket, they inevitably will have less to spend. That is what this Bill does and it is why it is counterproductive. If there was ever a time to pursue this kind of measure, and I have my doubts that there is, this certainly is not the time.

If the Government has to find ways to raise additional money, I suggest it begin to look at the $18 billion in tax concessions which we hand out willy-nilly. That, in essence, is what the Conservative Party said when they were in opposition, and that was the right position. But what the Minister is now doing is going to cause more hardship and not relieve the pain.

The Government is not required to do this. To begin with, if the Minister believes that in the future there will be economic prosperity, that the private corporate sector will be able to provide the necessary job opportunities, then it is quite clear that the revenues derived from those who will be working will be sufficient to carry the debt we now have. That hopefully will be the case. If so, if the private corporate sector is going to live up to the Government's expectation and by some fanciful means achieve the goals the Government hopes it will achieve, then quite clearly there will be a sufficient number of tax dollars generated from that new economic activity to make this measure unnecessary. I suggest to the Minister that if these measures were not implemented, that $4 billion would remain in the economy and help us achieve that goal more quickly. If more people are able to buy, then the possibility of newly-generated opportunities in the private sector will be even greater. But in taking the measure the Government is taking today, it is impeding the very goal it has set for itself.

What the Government is doing, Mr. Speaker, not only does not satisfy me but it does not satisfy the goals the Government has set. That is the hard part to understand. If an economy is operating at considerably less than capacity and you reduce demand even further, how can you expect to improve the economy's productive performance? They just do not mix and therefore do not match. We would much prefer that the Minister bring forward legislation dealing with the many, many tax loopholes, the many, many corporate donations by the Government out of the average taxpayer's pocket. We would rather see the Government bring forward measures to restrict the use of those funds. It would not again be digging into the pockets of the average Canadian family and thereby creating even more unemployment and more hardship. We would rather see that we go the other route and give people a chance to feel the confidence the Government asks them to feel. Give them a chance to demonstrate this by putting forth some effort of their own on behalf of the recovery the Government would like to see and that we would like to see as well.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier).

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak more particularly to the Bill that was presented in the House this morning. Actually, today I am not speaking as the Member for LaSalle but rather as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. I rather like preambles myself, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday afternoon, I was singled out more specifically, and I would like to inform the House and particularly my hon. friend opposite—and I hope he is listening, the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre)—that I speak freely, am censored by no one, and that I have risen from my seat to speak to a Bill which I support wholeheartedly. I may add that the Progressive Conservative Party or Government backbenchers, as we were referred to yesterday, are not frustrated at all.

First of all, we have been silent for so long because we are learning a lot, and we have been silent not because it was the prudent thing to do but because it was the correct thing to do. We prefer to choose our words carefully instead of talking a lot but saying nothing.

Second, on the other side of the House we hear lots of "were" and "was", but we, the newly elected Members of this House who are almost the majority, we would much prefer to hear things said in the future tense, and I think that is why we were elected: to look to the future.

Unfortunately, at this stage and with the financial legacy we have received, we must first put out the fire and clean up the mess. You may rest assured that it was a joint effort, for I had an opportunity to work very closely with my Minister—or Ministers, I should say—the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) to draft the bill introduced today and even the economic statements presented recently. I can tell you that it is common sense at its best.

Somebody on the other side tried earlier to tell us what is going on in the private sector. Well now, I might point out that we too have worked in the private sector for a while, and that is exactly what is happening there. When one opens a new business, one tries to forecast which way things are going to go, and then sets everything straight from the start.

The bill introduced today is more than a simple copy of earlier such measures. To put it another way, some details need to be straightened out, and these details of the bill were clearly explained this morning by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall). I do not see any need to go over them again. However, I must emphasize that this measure highlights the major principles which generally govern the private sector. In other words, one of the basic principles used in the private sector is that people must pay for services rendered. In my opinion, an attempt has been made to redistribute the load, in the sense that this bill contains as many tax rebates as new tax levies. This is the kind of redistribution which has to be made, considering the sorry mess the previous government left behind.

The word confidence has been heard often lately. I think this bill will restore confidence and I draw your attention particularly to the spirit of fairness behind this measure.

● (1450)

In one instance, the Government has decided to pay interest when it was late in paying back. In its arrogance, the previous Government was quite willing to make us wait for money owed to us. In the private sector, you have to pay a penalty for late payments, and that is what this Government is proposing in its great spirit of equity under certain provisions of this Bill.

A lot has been said about unemployment. I believe that this Bill will to some extent restore the confidence of our citizens. Why? Because when a new administration takes over the first indication of its ability is the extent to which the people in charge can put things back in order, and this is what we have done. We have not been in power very long, only three months, but I believe that this Bill confirms our commitment to put these mechanisms to good use to provide jobs for the people of Quebec. Of course, I believe that our Government is not alone in this, and I am quite certain that this obviously is also the wish of the Opposition.

Of course, there is no confidence at the present time in the Canadian economy. There is only hope that this confidence, which we deserve, will be restored. I sincerely hope that the initiatives taken under this Bill will give back to Canadians the confidence necessary to create employment for their fellow citizens.

I found one sentence in this Bill especially striking, and it says something like this: Passage of this Bill will be a first step in examining new initiatives and improving the spirit of equity that should characterize indirect taxation while enabling the business sector to operate in a climate of certainty, stability and confidence. This is our definite pattern, and it is our belief that everything in the measures introduced by our new Government and in the legislation we will be putting forward will show the same spirit of fairness which we backbenchers from the business community are bringing here. It is our hope that the forthcoming bills will be as well designed as this one to restore financial order.

Of course, a new emphasis will have to be put not only on the backbencher's role, but more generally on work ethics. Formerly, people were admired for their work ethics, but now people are admired mainly for what they get as a result of their work ethics, and that too often alas means money!

I think the Right Hon. Prime Minister made a remarkable statement when he said that people would have to be put back to work. We must put them back to work confidently. There are many people now who work but lack confidence in the future. There are people who refuse to work, supposedly because salaries are too low, prefering to do nothing. But we will have to give priority to the work ethics that always inspired our predecessors and Canada's pioneers.

Well, I would think that this legislation or the spirit behind it has been very successfully developed from a consensus reached both outside and within the Government.

I am sure you appreciated the comments made this morning by my Minister and I would like you to know, Mr. Speaker, that this is the first time I work for a woman other than my wife, but it is extremely pleasant, and I can assure you that my Minister has performed very well up to now, and although she does not need my humble assistance, I can assure you that she has my full support, both as to the contents of the legislation and the way it was put forward. I had the chance myself of attending consultations that led to the introduction of this Bill and I can assure you that the business community is quite in agreement, on both the procedure and the ultimate goal.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you personally that as back-benchers on the government side we take part in the drawing up of all government policies and I can do it without any restraint. I feel that my training phase is not over yet, but I assure you that we feel quite proud of taking part in the management of our country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Nystrom: I should like to put a question to the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) about his speech on Bill C-12.

Many changes are made to our tax system in that Bill. A very important issue is the 1 per cent increase of the sales tax. The proposal was made by the former Liberal government. In July and in August, the Progressive Conservative Party fought the election campaign against the Liberal party and the tax increase. The same situation prevailed in the House last year when the Progressive Conservative Party criticized the sales tax increase planned by the Liberal Party. Could the Hon. Member explain his party's turnabout? Why do we find a Liberal proposal in a Conservative bill?

The more it changes, the more it is the same, Mr. Speaker. Last year it was the Liberal Party; this year it is the Progressive Conservative Party. What we have is exactly the same thing with exactly the same proposal. Could the Hon. Member explain to the House why his party has changed its mind? This is an important question, because a party should follow the same line in government as in the opposition. That is the reason why Canadians sometimes——are very cynical of politicians in this country.

[English]

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to remind the Hon. Member that I have never sat in the opposition. In addition to that, it is understood that we are not allowed to discuss a particular section of the bill. We must deal with the whole bill which contains adjustments one way or the other. Obviously, I am not in a position now to deal with a particular issue or increase without referring to the bill as a whole or going over the very clear explanations which the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) gave the House this morning. That is the approach. If you want to consider the bill as a whole, I feel that the speech was perfectly clear in this respect, but again I repeat the first part of my statement. We were not in the opposition. People should stop stirring up the past and start looking to the future. This climate of confidence which we are trying to create will be based on the future, because the recent performance of the past government having been so dismal, I do not think it could be used as a basis for anything.

• (1500)

So let us build upon a foundation we already have. I think this bill will indeed go a long way towards providing a kind of continuity in this government. Let us use that foundation to build our future.

Last month's economic statements were our foundation, our starting point. I might say in passing that I have no idea what happened in the Opposition because I was not here. As to the election promises, they should be considered as a whole, not singly one after another. I still have vivid memories of the election campaign, and the reason for that is that, even though I was not in the Opposition, I did take an active part in the campaign. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that throughout the election campaign the Prime Minister always made it a point not to refer to a particular aspect without talking about policy as a whole. In my opinion, it is quite unfair to single out one specific detail without referring to the whole picture so ably presented this morning.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member was not in the Opposition, but he does belong to the government team and that government made an election promise. I have one specific question to ask: Is the Hon. Member now prepared to throw that promise on the scrap heap? Is he for or against? Is he for or against the provision of the bill to raise the sales tax by 1 per cent? Is he now prepared to throw that election promise on the scrap heap? Yes or no?

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I thought I said clearly and calmly that promises have to be taken as a whole, not piecemeal. That was done. There is absolutely no question of reneging on any election promise through this bill.

[English]

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to make a brief comment on the hon. gentleman's speech. He made repeated references to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). I also want to congratulate the Minister for her speech, not for the same reason given by the hon. gentleman, but for conveniently overlooking the obvious when the Government says it will give 20 cents a gallon to primary producers because of financial problems facing primary producers. On the one hand, it gives 20 cents, and on the other hand, it increases oil and gas to world prices. It gives 20 cents while it increases sales tax on certain commodities.

On the one hand, it gives 20 cents to the fishermen, while on the other hand, it tells the fishermen they may have to pay for their weather forecasts. It gives that 20 cents while telling the fishermen they will have to pay to tie up their boats. It gives this rebate while telling the fishermen that the Government will do away with their insurance scheme so that they will have to pay hundreds of dollars more per year to insure their boats.

The other note that I made was that the Minister referred to 20 cents a gallon on the sales tax rebate and the excise tax rebate. She and the Government conveniently overlooked in all of their statements the fact that the excise tax rebate was always there. It was brought in by a Liberal Government in 1975. Taxpayers simply made their claim and kept their receipts at home. There was not a word of distinction made by the Minister of State for Finance nor was there anything in the documents emanating from the Department of National Revenue about conveniently overlooking a matter of fact concerning that excise tax rebate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): If there are no further questions or comments, we will proceed with debate. The Hon. Member for . . . Did the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary intend to answer?

Mr. Lanthier: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier).

Mr. Lanthier: This has been quite a charge against the spirit of this legislation. When it so happens that at one point we do something and at another point we do something else, that in one instance we do something and in the other instance we do something else, well, this is exactly what we intend to cure with this legislation. The goal is to have the place back in order. There is no question and we never made any secret of that, of simply lightening the burden with that Bill. The purpose is to make a redistribution, and listen! We also have to put in order bills that had been introduced by a previous Government and that were gathering dust.

And it was because of the genuine concerns of the private sector that we decided to put the place back in order. I would therefore thank the Hon. Member opposite for illustrating, in a much more experienced way than I could do, that the aim was to put our house back in order.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I want to remind the House that there are approximately two minutes left for questions and comments.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, may I say this in reply to the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). The Hon. Member said that one must look at these tax measures as one package and that they cannot be separated. I am interested in one particular tax measure, the one which increased the federal sales tax in order to raise a billion dollars. That tax measure was an issue during the campaign when the Hon. Member's esteemed Leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), took the position that he would not put that measure into effect.

It seems to me that the Hon. Member should at least be principled enough to respond to that question. Is he in favour of that increase to take $1 billion from the spending ability of Canadian taxpayers? Is he in favour of that particular measure, yes or no?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I would remind the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance that he has only a few seconds left.

Mr. Lanthier: Fine. I repeat, this is not as a package, it is as a whole. But let me say that this has already been answered. Yes, I support that tax, on the one hand, but within a series of reductions that would stem from elsewhere. Agreed? I think I have answered. I believe so, yes, because I supported the Bill.

Mr. Nystrom: And you are taxing the people. Did he say the same thing during the election campaign?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The period for questions and comments is now ended. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased with this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-12.

Mr. Speaker, I was listening very carefully this morning to the speech by the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and to the comments made earlier this afternoon by the Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier). I wonder whether we were running in the same election, Mr. Speaker, because I think my recollection of the recent election campaign is somewhat different from the description given by the Member for LaSalle.

For instance, I remember that the Progressive Conservative Party made 338 promises in this campaign. But I do not remember that at any time during the campaign anyone said: Well, ladies and gentlemen, we made promises, but we will not be able to keep them. I do not remember anyone saying that during the campaign. In fact, when the Leader of my Party said there was no way the promises being made by the Progressive Conservative Party could be kept, the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said very clearly that of course, with the new spirit of confidence that would reign in Canada, and so forth, it would be able to keep the 338 promises he had made.

I certainly do not remember, or else maybe I forgot, Mr. Speaker, the present Prime Minister saying during the campaign: Ladies and gentlemen, we must realize that the promises I made cannot be kept. If he did, I stand corrected by the Hon. Member or other Conservative Members in the House. But I do not remember hearing this during the campaign. In fact, I discussed it with some of my constituents, and they do not remember it either.

Mr. Speaker, earlier there was some reference, and I believe it was the Hon. Member for LaSalle who mentioned this, to putting Canadians back to work. I think that is the expression he used in his speech. However, I examined the Expenditure and Program Review which proposes to cut tens of thousands of jobs in my riding and elsewhere in Canada, and I do not see any reference to where Canadians will be put back to work.

My constituents of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell employed in the Public Service do not at all feel as if they were being put back to work now. They rather feel as if they were being dismissed or laid off by a Government which told them quite the opposite only a few months ago. So they feel that they have been conned, and rightly so. And you, Mr. Speaker, who are witnessing all our discussions in a very objective and non-partisan way, surely understand that what the Progressive Conservative Party wanted us to believe during the election campaign is not at all what we are seeing today.

We just heard, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) saying we should stop referring to the past. However, he himself dealt in his speech with the financial state of affairs inherited from the previous government. Well, how can one reconcile those two very different ways of thinking? You cannot say that you want to forget about the past while at the same time making reference to it every five minutes in statements and speeches. You cannot do that!

Also, that same Government which apparently wants to forget about the past is introducing in this House Bill C-12, a Bill that for the most part was introduced by the Liberal party during the last session. That is some record for a Government which apparently wants to put the past behind it and says that the previous Government was ineffective and incapable of running this country, to come up every two or three days with Bills that are similar and sometimes identical to those of the previous Government. How come then, if the previous Government was unable to govern the country, this new Government has chosen to copy the bills the former Government introduced?

• (1510)

[English]

When I was in elementary school, if I had tried to copy or use someone else's notes it would have been referred to as copying, and in university as plagiarism, meaning the same thing, of course. But when the Government introduces Bills previously introduced by the Liberals, it should put a little note at the bottom of these Bills, or an acknowledgment of the fact, even a note to say that most of the Bill had been presented before by the Liberals, if that were the case. I think this would be only fair. The person who spoke before me is indeed a very sincere Member and one who would want to give due credit to those involved in presenting similar legislation. We know the Hon. Member would not want to take credit for anything that he did not do. We recognize that on this side of the House. Perhaps this is an oversight. It was not mentioned in the previous speech or in the speech of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall).

There are some good points in the Bill. There are some differences. One of the issues raised in this Bill is the gasoline and diesel fuel rebate for off-highway use by farmers, loggers, fishermen and miners. At least part of one of the 388 promises will be fulfilled by this measure. We are still waiting for the other 330-odd promises that have yet to be fulfilled but probably never will be.

In recognizing that one promise was made, I find that there was perhaps a parallel promise that was forgotten. I want to draw something to your attention because I know that you will be very interested in this, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

I find it rather unusual, Mr. Speaker, that during the recent election campaign the government failed to tell us—and no doubt it is an oversight on the part of the Progressive Conservative Party—that while a rebate on fuel would be granted, an additional $6.2 million cut would be made in dairy programs.

I also find it rather unusual, for example, that the government failed to tell us that $9.4 million will be cut in the Department of Agriculture budget. Canadian farmers who will be receiving that rebate cheque from the government will quickly lose it directly or indirectly and their loss will probably be higher than their gains. On the one hand, the government gives out $1 and on the other, it takes back $2.

It seems to me that this is what will happen according to the financial statement or under the programs put forward by the new government. For example, Canagrex will be abolished: that is a $6.6 million cut in the agriculture program. Some members stated earlier that they agree that Canagrex should be disbanded. The government will very soon introduce a similar bill changing the name of the corporation but entrusting it with duties similar to those given to Canagrex by the Liberals. In any case, agricultural programs are being cancelled.

If we speak so often about farmers, Mr. Speaker, it is because it should not be forgotten that the fuel tax rebate cheque will be handed to our farmers by the government. Therefore, we should always bear in mind that what the government gives with one hand it takes back with the other, but it always takes more than it gives, particularly when it is a Conservative government.

I would like to point out next, Mr. Speaker, the cut or cancellation of the $3.5 million forest research project in Corner Brook and in St. John's, Newfoundland. In the agricultural services, $32.3 million will be recovered. Mr. Speaker, do you know what cost recovery means? It is a tax in disguise. It may be that Conservative speakers who spoke of that project forgot to mention it but cost recovery is direct or indirect taxation. The truth is that even the farmer who receives a cheque with the signature of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or the Prime Minister or any other minister will have to pay back to the government money he would not have paid before. As far as I am concerned, I call that a tax and farmers who will have to pay it will call it a tax too. Those farmers will feel betrayed by this government who did not act in good faith and did not keep his election promises.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to the previous speaker, who said that under the Liberal government bills lingered on. I am asking you, Mr. Speaker, who let the bells ring during the last Parliament? Who is it that brought the parliamentary process to a halt? Was it the Liberal Party? No, Mr. Speaker, it was the Progressive Conservative Party which did that. And they have the gall to accuse the Liberal Party of allowing some bills to die on the Order Paper!

• (1520)

Members of the Liberal Party were here and they wanted to work. If the Progressive Conservative Party had really been sincere in its concern for the welfare of the Canadian public, its members would have come to the House when called; they would have sat, debated the various bills and voted on them according to their opinion. Hon. Members may be for or against a bill, but when they refuse to sit while being paid for representing and being the servant of their constituents, in my view they are certainly misbehaving.

Being in a non-partisan position, Mr. Speaker, you will certainly agree with me that my constituents and all Canadians have elected me and all other members of the House in order for us to represent them in Parliament. Therefore, when some 100 members of the House decided to let the bell ring and not to sit for a few days, the constituents they were supposed to represent were in fact without representatives for that period. I am sure that otherwise several bills would have been brought forward, several pieces of legislation needed by Canadians would have been enacted.

I want to tell you as well that we in the Official Opposition have no intention of taking such action. I must say that like members of the Progressive Conservative Party, we may disagree on occasion with the Government. For instance, I agree with the general principle of the Bill before us, but I cannot accept the fact that once again, the Government has failed to keep most of its promises. But they will have to live with the fact that they are not meeting the commitments they made to the Canadian people.

However, what I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, is that although some of us disagree on occasion, we will say so in the House and we will vote accordingly. We do not intend to let the bells ring for weeks or do anything else which, in fact, would paralyse this Parliament and the government of our country. We, in this party, agree with the government when they say that Bill C-12 is a good bill; we admit it since this bill was copied from what the Liberals did in the past. We do not quite agree with the two or three parts of the bill which were amended, and I must say, even if I repeat myself, that the part dealing with the rebates to farmers, the part which applies to farmers is totally unsatisfactory because, as I said earlier, the government takes back what it gives the farmers in the first place. It probably takes back much more than it gave.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, I must say to the government that we, in this party, will continue at every opportunity to remind them of the commitment they made last September 4 to meet their 338 promises. Maybe more than 338 were made. Some Progressive Conservative Members may have made promises of their own in their ridings. It is even possible that the Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) told his constituents they would not lose their jobs if they elected a Conservative government. That is not impossible. But the people of Ottawa-Carleton who have already lost their jobs or who are going to lose it will be disappointed when they realize that promise is worth nothing. Anyway, let us say 338 promises were made nationally. Our party will use every opportunity to remind the government to keep its commitments. Perhaps Members opposite will say they cannot do it because the government has no money. But they had the duty to get the facts and to do their work properly before making any commitment.

For instance, the Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), who apparently is a businessman, said earlier, Mr. Speaker, that in the business world you have to study the situation before you make a decision, or something to that effect. That is exactly what he should have done regarding the 338 promises.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and Comments?

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, sitting here listening to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), I found it strange and curious. The Hon. Member accused the Government of stealing his Party's Bill. He said that it took the tax proposals which the Liberal Government in the previous Parliament had put forward, that it took them holus-bolus and put them together in Bill C-12. The Hon. Member rose and said that they should be given credit for it, but I should like to ask him how he will vote on this Bill. Will he vote for Bill C-12 or will he vote against it?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier in my remarks, a good part of the Bill is in fact a repeat of what had been introduced previously in the House. I have explained in great detail that there was a considerable resemblance. However, there are portions of the Bill with which I did not deal in my remarks. I am referring in particular to two clauses. One refers to the appeal procedure and another concerns the fuel tax rebate. The fuel tax rebate in no way reflects the promise of the Government last August and September. At that time the Government promised to do two things. Actually it made 338 promises, but as they pertained to this Bill there were two main themes. One was that the excise tax would be removed and that the increase in excise tax elsewhere would not be implemented.

The situation with which we are faced is that the Government is removing part of the excise tax. We acknowledge that. On the other hand, it is introducing through the back door other taxation measures. For instance, if the Government wants to be really honest with Canadians, this Bill should indicate that the excise tax is replaced with the tax I previously mentioned. Then we would know what is going on. In fact, the Government is removing one tax and replacing it with another. However, in the document to which I referred, they are not called taxes. They are called cost recovery, whatever that means. A cost recovery is nothing but a tax in disguise, not even a very good disguise. We all know that a fee charged by the Government for a service which was previously free is in fact a tax. To call it anything else is not perfectly honest. It is a tax or an increase in tax, but it is not a cost recovery.

Those are the concerns which I expressed previously in the House. I agree with the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) when he says that a good part of this Bill was introduced previously by the Liberals. I have acknowledged that. There are some differences which I just explained. When our Party introduced the Bill in the past and during the last election campaign, we never said, "Vote for us, we will give you 338 goodies and life will be beautiful thereafter".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is why you lost.

• (1530)

Mr. Boudria: I am glad to hear the Hon. House Leader say that we lost because we did not make promises with which we could not live. If that is the reason we lost, I feel better sitting on this side of the House. When I go to sleep at night, I do not worry about disappointing the people of my riding. I have told them the truth and I will continue to tell them the truth. In four years, we will be over there and government Members will be over here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Other questions or comments?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, the Hon. Member has not answered the question. How will he vote on the Bill, for or against?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I hate to have to repeat everything I have already said. Let me try to make myself clear. We are debating this Bill and studying every clause in it. Now we are studying its general principle. Later we will discuss every clause. When the time comes for final reading, our Party critic will clearly announce to the House the position we will take.

Right now I am expressing in great detail my reservations on two different clauses of the Bill. I dealt with the Government not living up to the commitments it made during the past election. If the Hon. Member and others wish me to go through the whole series of thoughts that I expressed previously, I am quite willing to do so. I would be surprised if that were the case. I am personally willing to listen to what other Hon. Members have to say about this. However, if that is not the case, I will continue to conclude my remarks in response to statements or questions for the remaining 10 minutes afforded me.

[Translation]

Mr. Chartrand: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to make a few comments about the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). First, I want to tell him that he really knows how to represent his constituency and that the whole House is now aware of the name of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. I have never heard the name of a constituency repeated as many times as in his speeches.

He stated that we made 338 election promises. Perhaps we made many promises, but how can he say, after we have been in power for only three months, that we do not keep our promises and will not keep them? In my opinion this is a gratuitous statement.

He also said that we delayed proceedings last year by letting the bells ring and by not taking part in the debate. I do not understand how he can make such a statement since as neither he nor I were in this House last year. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell was not a Member of Parliament at the time, so how can he say that we delayed the business of the House? In this regard, if I try to think as others would, even though I was at home myself and had to follow what happened in the newspapers, I would be inclined to say that this was perhaps an attempt to make the former Government—and I do mean the former Government because it is no longer in power and will not be for many years—understand that there were ways to make them listen to us, and I believe that this was one way to do it.

The Hon. Member says that he wants to serve his constituents, but so do we, all of us. We were elected to serve the people of our constituencies as well as we can. In my own riding of Verdun-Saint Paul, and I can at least mention the people of my region, I was told to take means available to represent my constituents well. I believe this is what the Hon. Member is doing. He is using his voice. He speaks well, but there are many other means available and what we did last year was perhaps a way, short of going on strike, at least to force the government to listen to us.

The Hon. Member also made another statement which I find very unfounded, namely when he said that we give the farmers $1 with one hand and we take back $2 with the other. I would like to know how he can be so specific about this amount and state without proof that we are taking back more from the farmers than we are giving them. I do not understand this.

Mr. Speaker, the statements made by the Hon. Member and his attitude towards us are quite unwarranted. To me, attacking the Government is not an acceptable way of representing his constituency. I am a Government member and do not consider myself a back-bencher. Freedom of speech is a right enjoyed by each and everyone of us but surely there are much more important things to say if we want the Government to work and to provide all Canadians with the necessary services and everything else available to help them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). I must remind him that he has only a few seconds left.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. I wish to thank the Member for his comments. Mr. Speaker, I must tell you that I have no excuse to make whatsoever for having expressed in this House the opinion of the constituents of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. I have been duly elected for this purpose and that is what I have been doing from the start, so you better get used to hearing me out because I will be around for a long time yet, Mr. Speaker. All Members should keep that in mind.

Now, the member has alluded to the fact that this Government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order! I do not want to contradict you so early in your speech after what you just said, but your time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the chance to join in the debate. In the last few minutes, I have been listening to the debate and I have never heard a discussion that sounded more like a paternity suit.

We have before the House Bill C-12 which, as you know, Mr. Speaker, amends the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and provides legislative authority for a number of sales and excise tax changes that were proposed first in the April Budget of 1983 and then in the February Budget of 1984. It includes some provisions which were proposed more recently in the November economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

We have heard the claims of the Hon. Member from the Liberal Party that he has had some background in this. We know that there was some additional input into the Bill when it fell to our lot to form the Government. The lack of mixed blood comes only from the fact that members of the New Democratic Party have consistently been the jilted suitor throughout the piece. They have always been able to criticize the provisions of this Bill from the same vantage point.

I would like to enter this debate for the express purpose of drawing attention to three specific points to which enough attention has not yet been paid. These specific points are the provisions relating to newspapers and magazines, the wholesale tax for motor vehicles and the increase in tax for tobacco and alcohol.

Before coming to those substantive points, I would like to reflect for just a moment on the speech to which I listened with such care made earlier this afternoon by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). It was a reasonable speech and was made in the eloquent tones with which the Hon. Member has for so long presented his points, both in this Chamber and at Queen's Park. It was a reasonable speech but one which was based on an unreasonable proposition to which I will return in just a moment.

Thinking as I did about the fine baritone voice of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, watching the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) nodding in agreement to at least some of his points, and enjoying the halcyon silence in the House this afternoon as the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is noticeably absent, it strikes me that there are three Members opposite whose voices had previously been heard in the Ontario Legislature. It makes me reflect on how true it is that in the federal system the cream clearly rises to the top.

• (1540)

Mr. Deans: So does sour milk.

Mr. Boyer: There are many tastes in the House. All I was saying is that we found the speech of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain to be reasonable and most eloquently delivered, but based on an unreasonable proposition. It is unreasonable in two aspects. First, a political aspect. Second, a tax policy aspect. The political aspect was to contend that a Party could move from the Opposition—where we justly and for a long time criticized government policy, including tax measures—and into Government, and within a matter of weeks could completely take the great ship of state and turn it around 180 degrees.

That is completely unreasonable. Many measures are in process, most of which are reflected in this Bill. The Bill will clean up previous measures as a part of the transition to the new Government. Anyone looking at this with a sense of realism will appreciate that these things have to be carried through, in certain cases with fine-tuning.

I think the second aspect, which dealt with tax policy, was also unreasonable. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain said that if $4.4 billion had to be raised, there were other less harmful ways of doing it. I question the wisdom of that. What has become evident in redressing national finances is the balanced, even-handed approach which is being taken by the Government. It is manifested in terms of the cuts which are necessary. No one sector is suffering unduly. We are trying to spread the pain evenly so that we will all bear a share of the burden. The same goes for raising tax revenues. This Bill does not contain one big tax bite aimed at any particular sector. What it contains are modest increases on many fronts where taxes have already been imposed. The Government is generating an essential $4.4 billion, which is needed to help pay for government programs without unduly burdening any particular sector of Canada.

I would like to bring three points to the attention of the public. The provisions that deals with the newspapers and magazines does not really increase taxes; it is a technical change to provide clarification. As a result of Bill C-12, in order to qualify for an exemption from the federal sales tax, newspapers and magazines must devote at least 10 per cent of their space to news and editorial content. The change is proposed to ensure that it applies to printed space and that margins and other blind spaces will not be counted as part of news content.

I am the fourth generation of a family which has a weekly newspaper in Ontario, so I have an abiding interest in the press in this country. It is important to ensure that advertising supplements do not replace traditional community newspapers that accurately reflect the voice and concerns of individual communities. The economic base should not be undermined by publications which cut corners and try to use a minimum amount of editorial content in relation to advertising, to sneak in under the wire and take advantage of the federal tax exemption.

The second point, which has not received full recognition in this debate, deals with the wholesale tax for motor vehicles. The change is significant. As a result of Bill C-12, the point at which the federal sales tax is levied on automobiles will be shifted from the manufacturers' level to the wholesale level. That move will put North American automobile manufacturers in a much more competitive position in relation to European and Japanese automobile manufacturers. The wholesale tax on motor vehicles reduces the advantage of overseas vehicles because it changes the tax base from the point of entry to wholesale. Therefore, the tax will take into account such things as distributor charges, which make up the cost of a car. It will amount to a difference of $250 on the retail price of an average car. It will be an advantage for Canadian and American car manufacturers. Every Member of the House knows what that means in terms of jobs in the country. Canada under the Auto Pact with the United States, has a major interest in automobile production and parts which are produced here and shipped south. Anything which can be done to strengthen the North American automobile industry is a step in the right direction. That is the reason I am supporting this Bill.

The third point concerns the increase of the tax on alcohol and tobacco which will rise from 12 per cent to 13 per cent. I support that, not only as a tax-generating measure, but as someone who is very concerned about the health implications of tobacco and alcohol and the social dimensions of alcohol abuse. I will not pretend that increasing the tax on these two commodities is the best way to deal with alcohol abuse or addiction to tobacco. But I am convinced that our society has culturally arranged itself in a manner which puts these two products front and centre when they should be at the periphery of the way we live, if we care about health and society. I feel so stongly about that that I would support the Bill for that reason alone. Any increase which might have a further deterrent or an inhibiting effect is worthy of support. The increased revenue which comes from it, while helpful to the Government, is almost peripheral. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is nodding his head. He is very dedicated to the proposition that we must deal with these issues in a much more direct manner so that Canadian society and individual Canadians can enjoy the health which is their birthright and not have health and social problems accumulate as a result of the pressures of tobacco and alcohol consumption.

I began my remarks by indicating that the debate sounded similar to a paternity suit with respect to who would be responsible for the Bill. It was interesting when the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain said that in his view he really did not care who took credit for the ideas that the New Democratic Party might propose. He said that as long as they were implemented, that was what counted, as far as his Party was concerned. That reminded me, Mr. Speaker, of something my late mother, Patricia Boyer, used to say, that "there is no limit to what you can accomplish in this world if you do not mind who gets the credit for it". I am not sure who really wants to take the credit for where we are at the end of 1984. In terms of the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, these are complicated statutes in the sense that they have so many provisions that touch thousands of dimensions in the way Canadian commerce is carried out. We are dealing here today with but a few of them. It is almost like making soup; the recipe can include whatever you want to put in the pot. I believe that the Minister, in bringing this Bill before the House, has done a fine job of trying to take what was left over from the Liberal Government—as it left for the opposition benches in a rather tattered state—and salvaging what could be salvaged from its previous budgets.

We on this side of the House are not saying that any one Party has a monopoly on all of the great ideas and that any other Party is totally devoid of positive thoughts as to how to deal with the issues. What we are trying to put together here is a Bill which can adequately reflect where we are at this time in terms of having to raise additional revenues and doing it in a balanced and fair way and in a way that is consistent with the understanding many Canadians have, going back two or three years, based on earlier budgets.

That is a final theme I would like to touch on as I conclude, Mr. Speaker. We in this Party lament very much the fact that Canadians have not been able to plan their future adequately because of the uncertainty in government programs and the constant changes in government financial and fiscal monetary policy. The authors of the earlier Liberal budgets, I believe, particularly aggravated the state of the Canadian economy, if not directly through their measures, then indirectly through their constant changes of direction. What was one year brought in as an incentive program to stimulate offshore drilling, investment in Canadian films or housing construction, a year or two later would be called a loophole by the same Minister of Finance who had sponsored the incentive in the House. Canadians who had been encouraged to do something at one time, two or three years later were having a finger pointed at them for being somehow sharp operators who were abusing the tax system for personal tax advantage. It was that constant changing back and forth, the inability of the Liberal Government in the past decade to set the course and hold to it through thick and thin, that has led to the stagnation for the past three or four years in the Canadian economy.

I do not feel I am being partisan when I say that our present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has set a clear course. It is one which is building confidence in the country because people sense that we have a Government in control in Ottawa and one which has taken over the direction of this country. If one reads, for example, Christina McCall-Newman's book The Grits, what is documented there most clearly is the fact that the senior Liberals of the Cabinet in fact did not generate the policy directions for the country but, rather, turned to the senior civil servants for that. If there was a problem with transport or data flow, if there was a question on customs, you name it, the former Government would turn to the senior civil servants to generate the policy.

We now have a Government which is creating policy itself. We are trying to get the Public Service back on the traditional track in this country where the Government, listening to the people, sets the policy and the Public Service carries it out. That, I believe, is a theme which can even be seen in Bill C-12. Because here there is clear direction. It is an amalgamation, certainly, of ideas from all quarters. In fact, there may even be some ideas which the New Democratic Party once advocated in this Chamber which have become respectable over time and have crept in here undetected.

Given this background of paternity, I believe this Bill deserves the unanimous support of this House because it is the product of all of us. In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would ask for the unanimous vote of this House in support of Bill C-12.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer). I believe that when he described Bill C-12 he said he had no hesitation in supporting the Bill because "it was an even-handed approach"—those were his words—"not aimed at any particular sector in terms of collecting the taxes which are outlined in this Bill". I examined the Bill very closely and it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is not even-handed. It does not put the touch at all upon the corporate sector in this country which has, with its friends in Government, very adroitly shifted the burden of taxes from the corporate sector onto individual Canadians. I wonder how the Hon. Member can call this Bill even-handed in its tax collection approach when in fact it does not collect one penny from the corporate sector?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe we are just having a semantic debate here, but it may be that we are. What is even-handedness? As I said perhaps five or six minutes ago, what we are dealing with in this Bill are amendments to but a few of the many, many taxes and categories of taxation which are found in both the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. In large measure what is involved here are not new taxes but slight increments in existing taxes.

To say that this Bill is directed at any one sector in particular is to say that the entire legislation which is on the books now dealing with excise tax is something which is not falling fairly and evenly across the country. I feel it is. That is why I support this Bill as being even-handed.

I hear the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) when he asks why we are not going after the large, wealthy corporations in order to get a bigger tax slice. But we are not dealing with the Income Tax Act now, Mr. Speaker. We are dealing here with the Excise Tax Act, and taxing exchanges in commerce and commodities which fall evenly on all, and certainly any corporation or anyone who is in commerce in this country is going to be paying taxes through this legislation.

I really believe it is an unfair oversimplification to take the position the Hon. Member has taken when he said that this legislation is penalizing a certain group, the consumers and so on, and that the corporate sector is let off scot-free. Anyone who would do a systematic analysis of the total taxing package of the federal Government, not only of this legislation but I think particularly of the Income Tax Act, I would come up with a very different conclusion, Mr. Speaker, from that which was suggested by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Rodriguez: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry. The Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday). We have less than a minute left.

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, I would like first to congratulate the Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) on his presentation today and to tell him that he is a welcome addition to this House. He has a lot to contribute, I know. Since I represent the riding of Oxford, which is perhaps the second or third largest tobacco growing area in this country, I know that many of my constituents would want me to express to the House, Mr. Speaker, the disappointment they feel about the increase in the tobacco tax. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Lakeshore whether he feels that this tax is actually fair. I realize we should be discouraging smoking and I have no trouble advocating that, being a physician and a non-smoker. However, given the fact that we are discouraging smoking, is it fair to do it by a taxation system which strikes at one particular sector, one that is a legal type of business in this country? If he still feels that it is a fair thing to do, would he agree that perhaps we should allocate the additional 1 per cent to tobacco research so we can get rid of some of the carcinogens? Or would he allocate that 1 percent to medical research which might help to overcome some of the problems to which the Hon. Member refers?

• (1600)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry, it being four o'clock, the Hon. Member will have to reserve on that question.

Order, please. It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Member's Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE HULL IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer) moved that Bill C-207, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (national capital of Canada), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure for me to present a Bill like the one before the House today. I feel it is my duty to draw the attention of the Hon. Members of this House to the fact that in Canada, we have a problem which may be attributed to what I would call growing pains, that is, we have yet to have a national capital that truly reflects the aspirations of all Canadians.

I have presented this Bill in the House a number of times before, and over the years it has attracted a number of supporters. I am sure that some day in the Ottawa-Hull region we will have a federal district that will be the capital of Canada, not in Ontario or Quebec or British Columbia or Alberta, a capital that will belong to all Canadians.

The purpose of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, is simply to amend Section 16—it could be done by order in council—so that the capital region as described in the legislation governing the National Capital Commission. It was adopted in 1957 and describes all cities, towns and villages included in the national capital region.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might give the historical background to the creation of Canada's capital. As we all know, a lot of ground has been covered since the capital was designated in 1955. For starters, let me say that at the very beginning Queen Victoria designated Ottawa as the capital of Canada in 1857. Before that selection was made, the governments of Upper Canada and Lower Canada made various suggestions between 1841 and 1857, so that the capital moved around, from Montreal to Toronto, then to Quebec City and Kingston. But as we remembered the sad experience of 1814, of the Americans, we then realized that Kingston was much too close to the United States, and that it was perhaps better to get deeper inland so that, if the United States ever wanted to invade Canada, things would be more and more difficult.

As to what happened then, and I referred earlier to the Queen's choice, whether Queen Victoria put her finger at random on a point on the map between Upper and Lower Canada, I do not know. And I do not know either whether credit should be given to Lady Head, who at that time was the wife of Canada's Governor General, and had drawn quite an amazing sketch of Parliament Hill that attracted the attention of the Queen who then chose Ottawa as the Capital of Canada. But one thing is sure: the Queen probably never realized that in so doing she had her finger pointing exactly between what is now the Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec. Certainly, had she realized that Canada's capital would then be located in Ontario, she would have found a way to make sure it would be neither in Ontario nor in Quebec, so as to really be a capital reflecting the aspirations of a country such as Canada.

And from then on, we have had several successive Prime Ministers, both Conservative and Liberal, who all showed an extraordinary desire to accelerate the solving of the existing problem at that time, making this the true capital that would reflect the aspirations of all Canadians.

There was the Holt Commission in 1913, set up by the then Prime Minister Sir Robert Borden. There was something else beside the Holt Commission which was one of the first to deal with the development of the Ottawa-Hull area and vicinity.

Of course, there has been extensive development since that time because it was realized that the community known in the past as Bytown, the City of Ottawa which replaced Bytown, could not be expected to cope with all the needs entailed by the development of a capital, and a commission was set up, the Ottawa Improvement Commission, followed in 1927 by the Federal District Commission which in turn became in 1957 or 1958, if my memory serves me well, the present National Capital Commission.

Many things have happened. And judging by the evolution, the development of the concept of a national capital, the idea of eventually creating what I would call a federal district is gaining ground, because it is not normal, Mr. Speaker, to have the capital of a country like Canada located within one province. This might be arguable, but in all logic, it is inconceivable that a capital like Canada's capital be located within one province. What I say is so true that when the Right Hon. Premier of Ontario comes to Ottawa, he does not say "I am glad to be in Ottawa", but "I am glad to be in Ottawa, the National Capital of Canada". So I think it is for him a way of raising the status of his province and enhancing its prestige, but I would suggest that is not the best way to achieve the goal we have been trying to reach all these years namely Canadian unity, which would be reflected in a place such as the capital of a country.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, if I recently asked the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to establish a committee for the purpose of studying the future organization of the National Capital Commission it is because in the past, due to great changes and development the capital has undergone, committees were formed exactly for the purpose of considering the development of Canada's national capital. And that is why in 1957 a Senate and Commons committee was established to consider the very role that the National Capital Commission would play. That is why today we are able to judge the important evolution that took place between 1927 and 1984. We owe to the National Capital Commission, which in a way is the offspring of the Ottawa Improvement Commission and the Federal District Commission, the capital city we know today.

So, my purpose with this bill is for the National Capital Region to become the National Capital of Canada, including all municipalities within the limits of that region as decribed by an Act of Parliament; it would be a first step towards the establishment of what many people wish to see, a federal district. Many politicians had hoped for that type of government for the National Capital area. Back in 1906, the Hon. Mr. Fielding, if my memory serves me well, who was then Minister of Finance, decided to have some sort of referendum on the issue which was defeated by only 800 votes. But it did not occur to anyone at the time to poll the people from the other side of the Ottawa River. Now I am sure that if the people on the Quebec side of the river had been asked for their opinion Sir Wilfrid Laurier's great wish would now be fulfilled and Ottawa would be the Washington of the North.

Many concerns were voiced at the time. To create here a new Washington or a new District of Columbia did not seem desirable for the simple reason that it was not considered very democratic not being able to elect a mayor and city councillors. But things have changed a lot since then, and nowadays, one can say that Washington, D.C. is administered in a democratic fashion, although it is funded by the White House.

● (1610)

This may sound like a common place to many of my colleagues here, but you have to realize that most Members often come to Ottawa as tourists and live here two or three days a week for a few sessions. And when you think that about 50 per cent of Members is changing every four or five years, obviously those people are not as well informed as those Members who live in the region and represent the immediate area.

I said a moment ago that there has been a trend in favour of this kind of project. The fact that my friend from North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) was most favourable to it in his eloquent speech in January 1984 as well as my friend the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) proves it. The idea is not to take something from any local government. What we have in mind is to establish a national capital which will truly reflect the traditions of our country that is Canada, which will become a great country.

That is the reason why we are interested, as most Prime Ministers were, in promoting the capital of Canada, which is a great symbol of our nation, from any point of view. It also explains why in 1969 the Premiers met in Toronto to decide unanimously that the Ottawa-Hull area would be the national capital region. When I say Ottawa-Hull, I include the surrounding communities.

Moreover, if we consider what some politicians have said during the years, the best way to administer the national capital region would be to establish a federal district. A great many people contend that with a federal district everything would change: the courts, the education system also. Almost everything would be ruled by Ottawa. I believe that if the government is willing to establish a capital which will, as I said, truly reflect our nation, it must have a say in the development of the capital of our country, that is Canada.

Therefore, it is easy to understand why some Members have risen over the years, and some of them for 50 years, to request, to urge the Government to do something for the development of the capital; they have succeeded in part. Much remains to be done but some progress has been made and if the Prime Minister of the day is interested in making our capital into a true capital, he will follow the path of his predecessors and take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that the capital reflects for all practical purposes the beauty, the vastness, the multiculturalism of Canada, that it is located in a centre, not a neutral one, but a truly Canadian one.

Thus, if you compare what has been said with today's development, you will see that in fact, to be able to have a say in its capital the Government must have the necessary tools in the decision-making process.

And you will remember as well the fights that took place between the Ottawa municipality and the National Capital Commission several years ago about some matters relating to the buildings that were to be erected around Parliament Hill.

Several years ago, you could see Parliament Hill from far away. Today, you may have to fly aboard a helicopter to see it, because of a few small skyscrapers that have, for all practical purposes, destroyed the beauty of majestic Parliament Hill. And the National Capital Commission had to buy some land in order to have control over this area and to avoid any undesirable construction. That is what the Commission did among other things to avoid the building of huge skyscrapers which would have practically destroyed the beauty of Parliament Hill. Beauty is not the only issue but Parliament must be "at home", as they say, except that in this case the Ottawa municipality has control over it, which is a nonsense, if I may say so.

This is the reason why I want the capital of Canada to be really a capital that reflects the wishes of all Canadians as I said earlier, so that everybody from British Columbia or Saskatchewan, Ontario or the Maritimes, may feel at home in Ottawa, and that there be no Ontarian or Quebecois flavour but a distinctively Canadian flavour in this capital. It will be a first step if my colleagues are ready to pass the bill or merely send it to a committee. The possibility was raised during the last Parliament of referring the subject-matter of the bill to a committee for further consideration.

Those are some of the comments which I wanted to make in this House. I would also like to tell the Hon. Members that, in view of the rather special background of our capital, it would be advisable that Members coming to Ottawa for the first time do not behave like tourists but rather like representatives who want to serve our country. Ottawa would thus become more than ever the capital of one of the great nations of the future, Canada.

Mr. Barry Moore (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Mr. Speaker, this being my maiden speech in this House, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate you on your appointment to the Chair of the House of Commons. I am confident that you will fulfill your duties with success and integrity.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, this is the first time I speak in this House and I would like to thank all the constituents of my riding of Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle, an area which is also part of the National Capital, for the confidence they placed in me on election day, September 4th. I would also like to thank all the people who campaigned with me, a number of whom also reside in the national capital, and who contributed to this victory.

I would like to mention that a large majority of Canadians have given the Progressive Conservative party the mandate to represent them in the House of Commons. I wish to tell my constituents, whatever their political suasion whether they live in the national capital or elsewhere in the riding, that I am determined to represent them and serve them to the best of my abilities.

I would also like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to give you briefly some background on my riding of Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle. This riding is a large rural area, made up of some 60 townships and villages and two small towns, Maniwaki and Mont-Laurier. It extends from the Ottawa River to the west, to the city of Hull to the south, and includes the Upper Gatineau Valley and the Lièvre Valley. The Gatineau Park, a federal property, managed and maintained by the National Capital Commission, and the Parc de la Vérendrye, a provincial park, are also in this riding.

Seventy three per cent of the population, is French-speaking and 27 per cent English-speaking. This riding is therefore a good reflection of the various cultures in Canada since it also has an ethnic and native element.

The main industries in this area are farming, tourism and forests.

Unemployment insurance and job creation are of particular concern to me, just as they are for my colleagues, since my constituency is a disadvantaged one as Canadians could realize by watching "The Fifth Estate" program of the CBC network on November 20 1984. For the time being, the creation of a federal district is not a real preoccupation.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to oppose Bill C-207 moved by my friend, the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), which would amend section 16 of the Constitution Act, 1867, since part of my riding is included in the national capital region. The new section 16 would read: "It is hereby declared that the national capital of Canada and the seat of the federal government of Canada shall consist of the city of Ottawa, in the Province of Ontario, and the city of Hull, in the Province of Quebec, and also of such surrounding area as prescribed from time to time by the Parliament of Canada." Mr. Speaker, this bill would change the limits of the national capital of Canada so as to include the city of Hull as well as any other area prescribed from time to time by the Parliament of Canada.

[English]

In mid-1975 a joint Senate-Commons Committee on the National Capital Region was formed to study the recommendations of the Fullerton report in order to find a way to govern an approximate 1,800 square-mile area under the joint jurisdiction of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, the federal Government, approximately 50 local councils, and two regional governments.

Right from the beginning of this investigation into the possibility of making the National Capital Commission into a federal district somewhat like Washington in the District of Columbia, the committee ran into problems. The two Provinces of Ontario and Quebec did not want to enter into discussions that would have the effect of mapping the region's future.

Many committee meetings were held to study, among other things, briefs presented by municipalities from the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario. The participants at these meetings knew what they did not want, but nothing constructive was put forward. Not even an interim report was produced as a result of this committee's work, because of the confrontation of national objectives versus local concerns. It is a confrontation which has been a trademark of the previous administration.

Let me quote an article that appeared in The Citizen on November 11, 1977. It reads:

> The municipalities wanted complete control of planning, while the NCC maintained that "the national interest in the capital region is larger than the sum of the local, regional and provincial interests."

The same article concluded that this committee should not be re-established unless all parties concerned participate actively and seriously and send serious representations. To my knowledge, the consensus of the two provinces, the municipalities concerned and the regional governments has not yet been obtained.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, can we allow discussions on this bill? Are we going to reinstate a committee to address the issue? Let us take into account the present economic situation of our country which is faced with an enormous deficit. In view of the current economic situation, can we afford to foot the bill for what the change proposed in this bill would entail?

What would be the total expenditures needed for such a proposal?

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to repeat what my colleague the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) said in this House on January 20, 1984 when dealing with the Riel Committee which was created either in 1965 or 1966, and I quote:

> It wanted Ottawa and the surrounding area to be taken out of the Province of Ontario and the Hull and Gatineau area taken out of the Province of Quebec, and something like an eleventh province set up, a truly different area apart from Quebec or Ontario which would be the capital territory as they have in Washington, D.C. or in Canberra, Australia.

My colleague acknowledged at that time that this project would pose numerous difficulties. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the problems would be numerous and, above all, it would be costly. My friend, the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), proposed the following in an interview given to the Le Droit newspaper in September, 1982:

> I would see the creation of a federal district administrated by a tripartite commission comprised of the Federal government, the government of Quebec and the government of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, you will know that the creation of such a commission would represent a major investment for Canada and this is a luxury we cannot afford in the present state of the economy. It is not a priority of this Government.

• (1630)

[English]

The federal capital district, Mr. Speaker, would cut into the authority of the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), asked if Quebec would willingly give up Hull, Gatineau, Gatineau Park, and Aylmer and allow them to fall into a new jurisdiction. Would Ontario willingly give up Ottawa, Kanata, and some of the rural areas to a new jurisdiction? I am sure that both Quebec and Ontario would never want to give up jurisdiction over any part of their municipalities. Assuming they would, what tax base would these residents of this new federal district come under? Will the federal Government have to compensate the provincial Government for the infrastructure now in place? Imagine the scenario of attempting to evaluate the present cost of this infrastructure and the debt per capita this new federal district would assume from the provinces and municipalities concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, which law would be applied in a region which is part of two provinces? Ontario's law or Quebec's law? In any event, it would be costly for the taxpayers, not to mention the trouble such a change could spell for the residents who have to adapt themselves to a Federal district.

My hon. friend from Hull-Aylmer mentioned another matter. What education system would be used, Mr. Speaker? We know that each province has it own legislation relating to education. The curriculum and the requisite grades vary tremendously from one province to another.

Also, what language would be used at school, following the creation of such a district? Do you think the people from Quebec would want to adapt themselves to the education system of Ontario? I doubt it, Mr. Speaker, and rightly so, all the more so since Ontarians will not accept Quebec laws.

Would the school commissions in both provinces be consulted or would they have to accept the decision without having a say in the matter?

Mr. Speaker, would the Quebec or Ontario tax legislation apply? As you know, people in Quebec in Ontario do not have the same tax laws. Which one should we keep if the two areas are put together in a national capital district?

Would we consult Queen's Park in Ontario, the National Assembly in Quebec as well as all the people concerned before a decision is made? Or would we impose our decision upon them, as the last government used to do? Just think how much it would cost.

There is also the problem of transport. Presently, each region has its own transit system. We have OC Transpo in Ontario and CTCRO in Quebec. Should we then create a new independent transit system for both areas? In addition, the laws for drivers are different. Would a driving permit cost the same for everybody? Would Ontario residents have to buy Quebec automobile insurance in this new district? Many questions come to my mind, Mr. Speaker. Would it be necessary to amend as well the laws regarding automobile insurance?

Let us not forget the sales tax! In Quebec, at the present time, there is no sales tax on some products, including clothes and furniture. Maybe some tax free products in Ontario are taxed in Quebec. Would that change with the new National Capital Commission? The tax rate is not the same either in restaurants in both provinces. This is something else which might have to be changed, Mr. Speaker.

The Quebec Provincial Police as well as the Ontario Provincial Police are two different entities. If we put together Hull and its surroundings and Ottawa in a federal district, does that mean that we will create another police force for that area or are we going to call on the RCMP?

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that in the face of the economic climate in which the Canadian people find themselves presently we cannot consider such changes which all entail very expensive investments. Are we going to create another level of government with the federal district? We are trying to reduce red tape. We have now the following levels of government: the federal government, the provincial governments, the municipalities, the school boards, the regional municipalities, and we are going to add to that a federal district. Imagine. Can we afford to create another level over and above all those we already have? I think, and many of my constituents do too, that we already face too much bureaucracy.

Mr. Speaker, who is going to benefit from this bill? Are we simply going to make life difficult for the residents of the National Capital area? If they chose to live in the city where they are now, they must have a good reason. What would this change imply for residents on the Quebec side, considering the present gap in housing prices in the two cities? Would it be advantageous or not for them if this bill were passed? In order to support this matter, I would like to quote a paragraph from the November 6th issue of The Citizen.

• (1640)

[English]

I should like to quote an article which appeared in The Citizen in February 1977. Mr. Claude Morin, Quebec's Minister of Inter-Governmental Affairs said:

> —the new Quebec Government would drastically curtail NCC powers on the Quebec side of the river in an attempt to keep the area from being turned into a federal district.

Has there been any consultation since then with the Quebec Government or with the new Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs? Has he consulted recently with the Minister? I do not think so. I think it is just another way of ramming something down the throats of Canadians, without consultation and without any regard for the will of Canadians, and it would be in keeping with the practices of the previous administration.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to read from an article in the newspaper Le Droit of September 9, 1982 in which my colleague the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer is quoted as saying:

I am surprised at the reactions of certain mayors of the region, like Mr. Charette of Val-des-Monts. He should have the roof of the Olympic Stadium to cover the hole in his head.

Mr. Speaker, is that the proper way to treat people who are against a Bill? That, Mr. Speaker, is another example of the typical arrogance of the Liberals.

Let me ask this question: Are we going to let this Bill go through just like that, or are we going to set up another committee to consider the matter? Do we intend to inform and consult the residents of the two regions involved before proceeding with a Bill which entails a radical change for Canadians?

Mr. Speaker, that is why I am against the Bill sponsored by my colleague the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate my colleague for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Moore) for his maiden speech. I see he is on top of his subject, as was seen by all during the election campaign when he took part in very heated debates in his constituency. I also commend the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) for voicing his pride and his feeling of belonging to his constituency of Hull-Aylmer, as well as his French roots. I have not had the opportunity to serve my constituency of Gatineau as long as the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer, but I can share his feelings of pride and devotion.

I also know that during the election campaign, my Liberal opponent took pleasure in recalling that the Canadian Government had taken a hundred years to establish a federal presence across the river from Ottawa and that in one decade the City of Hull had enjoyed a remarkable growth. Therefore, what he meant was that patience was needed to foster that growth. However, I think it would be fairer and more constructive to try and extend the identity of the National Capital beyond the name and limits of Ottawa to the whole National Capital area, rather than annexing the City of Hull, along with its name and surroundings.

[English]

For example, there are several communities on the Ontario side of the National Capital Region which belong to this territory. They feel a pride and a sense of belonging which is shared by the people on the Quebec side. If we were to restructure, rename or reidentify the national capital, we should be very careful to take into consideation as well the feelings of pride and of belonging on the part of those communities on the Ontario side.

[Translation]

Then why should we extend the concept of the Ottawa capital to the Quebec and Ontario sides of the Ottawa River and not restrict it to a particular sector called Hull and its surrounding area. First of all, on the Quebec side there is the municipality of Gatineau, the main city in my riding, which ranks seventh in size among the most important cities in the province of Quebec and is by far the most populated in the West Quebec area. Many are unaware of the fact that the city of Gatineau, the product of the merging of seven smaller municipalities some ten years ago—we shall celebrate our 10th anniversary in 1985—has a population larger than Hull by 20,000 people.

In the past, Gatineau has suffered from an uneven development. Such was the case as well of the Ontario municipalities to which I previously referred. So, although we do approve in principle the Bill presented by the Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), we do not think that it is well enough structured to initiate the very serious discussions that we should have over the identification of our National Capital and the expression of pride that we all feel about being Canadians. It would be much better to try to balance the development.

[English]

It would be much better to try to balance the development on both sides of the Ottawa River before we entertain any new structures for our national capital.

• (1650)

[Translation]

I was saying that we in Gatineau have been the victims of haphazard development. An extremely rapid development of the residential function combined with government orientations at both the federal and provincial levels have concentrated the institutional and government development exclusively in the areas of the island of Hull. As a result, the population shifted from that municipality towards neighbouring communities, thus defeating the purpose behind the integrated organization of the territory.

In 1983, the city of Gatineau found itself in a state of economic decline whose negative impact can hardly be accepted by the people who live there. Being by far the largest municipality in the West Quebec area, with its 78,000 inhabitants, the city of Gatineau has just recently acquired a major hospital complex and industrial park at the airport, which is a first step in the right direction. However, there still is much to do to correct this unbalance in all sectors of direct Government intervention. Fortunately, our Government has already initiated its efforts to balance our economic development. No later than yesterday, the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton) announced plans to build and operate a new receiving station for satellite data in the Gatineau Hills near Ottawa, in the municipality of Gatineau. This station will be able to receive as soon as 1985 the data transmitted by SPOT, France's first remote sensing satellite. The municipality of Gatineau has offered to prepare for the Canadian Remote Sensing Centre a hilltop site as well as an access road and the necessary power lines by March 1985. Public Works Canada will draw up the plans of the station and construction work will be contracted out and will start next April. This station will have an antenna dish with a ten-meter diameter which should be set up in time for the launching of the SPOT satellite expected to take place in October 1985. Thanks to this future receiving station in Gatineau and the existing station of the Canadian Remote Sensing Centre in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, reception of SPOT transmissions will be provided across Canada and the United States.

When the minister announced this project, he underlined that it would benefit those responsible for resource management, adding that this should encourage Canadians to invest more in this new technological sector. On the other hand, he pointed out that Canadian industry as a whole would also benefit as well. Canada is at the forefront of receiving station and satellite data processing technology and the ultramodern Gatineau station will give clear proof of Canada's capability in the field of high technology.

Thus, efforts towards a more balanced development are already under way on the Quebec side of the Ottawa region.

I would like to point out also that there is another very important factor which contributes to this unbalanced development on both sides of the Ottawa river as well as in the development of the Quebec side of the Ottawa region compared to the city of Hull which has been quite favoured so far. We are happy for the people of that city but we believe it is time to extend this economic development to the rest of that region.

As far as government jobs are concerned in the Quebec area of the Ottawa region as well as in the municipalities I mentioned earlier, distribution of those jobs is very uneven. For example, Ottawa, with a population of 295,168 people, that is 45 percent of the population surveyed, gets 78,900 jobs, that is 77 p. 100 of all public sector jobs or 267 jobs for 1,000 people in the National Capital area. Nepean: population 84,000, that is 13 per cent of the population of the region, has 1,000 jobs, or 1 per cent. Hull: population 56,220, that is 9 per cent of the population, has 19,200 government jobs, or 19 per cent. Gatineau: population 74,985, that is 12 per cent of the population, has 150 federal government jobs. There is clearly an imbalance here which must be rectified. I could mention also Gloucester with one half of 1 per cent or 6 jobs. Kanata, with 1,210 government jobs, including 61 with the federal government. And Vanier with only one per cent of the government jobs. The imbalance is evident there also.

This imbalance can be found in the area of social housing in the Outaouais area. There is a ratio of 4 social housing units per 1,000 inhabitants in Gatineau compared with 18 per 1,000 in Hull. In view of the greater population in Gatineau, it is absolutely necessary to deal with this development imbalance.

The level of service, especially in the area of drinking water, is greatly lowered during the hot summer months in Gatineau. The municipality of Gatineau is presently considering this problem and trying to find a solution to it, but because funds have not been allocated evenly between these two municipalities, there are serious problems every summer. Indeed, last summer, it was impossible to obtain drinking water in sufficient quantity on the last two floors of the Gatineau hospital. It is a very severe problem.

And finally, the high technology industries for which Gatineau has all the necessary infrastructure could, because of the pressures and influence game, be further concentrated where there is not much room left. In other words, Hull has enjoyed very strong growth and has benefited from the erection on his territory of numerous commercial or governmental buildings, and is now in a situation where even its mayor would readily acknowledge that he is in search of a downtown, that he has no idea where the real core of his city is.

So, because of the traffic problems already created in Hull, it would seem fair and positive to spread this development elsewhere.

Now, if the Act dealing with the name and territory of the National Capital is reviewed in such a way that the name of the City of Hull is once again stressed, even by adding the words "and surroundings", but still the City of Hull ... this will keep in the minds of the governing and administrative authorities the idea that in the Outaouais region the City of Hull is the largest municipality, and knowing that it enjoyed a tremendous growth, they will tend to think that quite an extensive development has taken place on the Quebec side and that there is no further need for it. That is wrong. This is another reason why I feel this Bill is badly structured. But, Mr. Speaker, I would like that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). Up to now, in the last 55 minutes, we have heard the Quebec side of the issue. The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper) and myself representing Ottawa-Vanier might also like to participate in this debate. Therefore the matter ought to be referred to a committee for serious consideration and we should not use up all the time to kill, lovingly I would say, the bill of the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle). I believe that it would be useful if other Hon. Members could participate in this debate.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that this is the reason why I think this Bill is not well structured, because it puts the emphasis on one city, Hull, on one area, a sector of the National Capital and because, on the Ontario side, there are municipalities with French-speaking populations, like the municipality of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr.

Gauthier), which would like to feel that they are part of the National Capital. All this is to tell you that I would have liked that bill to meet the requirements of the present reality. But such is not the case. I would suggest to my hon. colleague from Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) to rethink his bill, and to come back with another bill which would meet the present needs and requirements.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to thank you for bearing with me and letting me talk for the time left to us, and I regret that parliamentary rules make it impossible sometime to give everyone a chance to express himself or herself on a bill. I believe that the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) has another bill, similar to this one, to change the name of the Ottawa airport, and at that time, my colleagues from Ontario will have the full opportunity to express their views because that airport is on the Ontario side.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, considering the interest that exists in the House for this Bill, I am sure the Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) would agree if I suggest that the Bill be withdrawn and the subject matter of the Bill referred to a standing committee of the House. I would like to make this a motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): You may move the amendment, but that will require a seconder other than the Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle).

Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

It being five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NO-CONFIDENCE MOTION—UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION ON NUCLEAR-ARMS FREEZE

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding, since today is the final allotted day, since the House will later be going through the usual procedures to consider and dispose of the supply Bill, and in view of recent practices, do Hon. Members agree that the supply Bill which will go through all stages later today be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

That this House takes note of the following United Nations Resolution:

REVIEW AND IMPLEMENTATION OF THE CONCLUDING DOCUMENT OF THE TWELFTH SPECIAL SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY: IMPLEMENTATION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 38/73 E ON A NUCLEAR-ARMS FREEZE

Indonesia, Mexico, Pakistan, Sweden and Uruguay: draft resolution

Nuclear-arms freeze

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, adopted in 1978 and unanimously and categorically reaffirmed in 1982 during the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, its second special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly expressed deep concern over the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Recalling also that on those occasions, it pointed out that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons are more than sufficient to destroy all life on earth and stressed that mankind is therefore confronted with a choice: halt the arms race and proceed to disarmament or face annihilation,

Noting that the conditions prevailing today are a source of even more serious concern than those existing in 1978 because of several factors, such as the deterioration of the international situation, the increase in the accuracy, speed and destructive power of nuclear weapons, the promotion of illusory doctrines of "limited" or "winnable" nuclear war and the many false alarms which have occurred owing to accidental reasons,

Noting also that the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi in March 1983, declared that the renewed escalation in the nuclear-arms race, both in its quantitative and qualitative dimensions, as well as reliance on doctrines of nuclear deterrence, has heightened the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and led to greater insecurity and instability in international relations,

Bearing in mind that in their Joint Declaration issued on 22 May, 1984, the Heads of Government of six Member States of the United Nations, coming from five different continents, urged the nuclear-weapon States "as a necessary first step... to halt all testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems",

Believing that it is a matter of the utmost urgency to stop any further increase in the awesome arsenals of the two major nuclear-weapon States, which already have ample retaliatory power and a frightening overkill capacity,

Believing also that it is equally urgent to initiate or resume negotiations for the substantial reduction and qualitative limitation of nuclear arms,

Considering that a nuclear-arms freeze, while not an end in itself, would constitute the most effective first step for the achievement of the above-mentioned two objectives, since it would encourage the initiation or resumption of negotiations and prevent the continued increase and qualitative improvement of existing nuclear weaponry during the period when the negotiations would take place,

Firmly convinced that at present the conditions are most propitious for such a freeze, since the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America are now equivalent in nuclear military power and it seems evident that there exists between them an overall rough parity,

Conscious that the application of the systems of surveillance, verification and control already agreed upon in some previous cases would be sufficient to provide a reasonable guarantee of faithful compliance with the undertakings derived from the freeze,

Convinced that it would be to the benefit of all other States possessing nuclear weapons to follow the example of the two major nuclear-weapon States,

1. Urges once more the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as the two major nuclear-weapon States, to proclaim, either through simultaneous unilateral declarations or through a joint declaration, an immediate nuclear-arms freeze, which would be a first step towards the comprehensive programme of disarmament and whose structure and scope would be the following:

(a) It would embrace:

(i) A comprehensive test ban of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;

(ii) The complete cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;

(iii) A ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;

(iv) The complete cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

(b) It would be subject to appropriate measures and procedures of verification, such as those which have already been agreed by the parties in the case of the SALT I and SALT II treaties, and those agreed upon in principle by them during the preparatory trilateral negotiations on the comprehensive test ban held at Geneva;

(c) It would be of an initial five-year duration, subject to prolongation when other nuclear-weapon States join in such a freeze, as the General Assembly urges them to do;

2. Notes with satisfaction that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have already submitted the report requested in General Assembly resolution 38/73 E of 15 December 1983;

3. Hopes that the other major nuclear-weapon State will find it possible to comply also with the request of the General Assembly before the closure of its thirty-ninth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 39/... on a nuclear-arms freeze".

and calls upon the Government to adopt it as policy, thereby rejecting the position of the previous administration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my comments on this important debate in the House of Commons today by quoting an old Chinese proverb: "If we do not change our direction, we are likely to end up where we are headed". Nothing could be more relevant in terms of evidence supporting this quote than the direction which we in the world will inevitably take if we do not put an end to the nuclear armaments buildup. If we do not stop, Mr. Speaker, the odds are—and they are strong odds—that one day a nuclear weapon once again will go off. If that happens, the odds are depressingly real that mankind itself, and not just a part of mankind, will be threatened. It is time we in this world, we in this Parliament, took leadership to put an end to this nuclear madness.

On November 20, Mr. Speaker, there was a vote in the committee of the United Nations on the question of a nuclear freeze. Canada was among a small minority of nations, I regret to say, which voted against that freeze. To put into perspective what is going on in the world I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that since that vote took place there has been added to the nuclear arsenal of the world the equivalent in nuclear strength of 2,800 times greater than the bomb which went off at Hiroshima. I repeat, just since November 20 we have added to the nuclear arsenal of the world enough destructive power to exceed by 2,800 times the strength of the bomb which devastated the people in Hiroshima.

We have before us a resolution, Mr. Speaker, which calls upon the nuclear superpowers to implement a nuclear freeze. It is one which I submit is grounded equally on hope and on realism. The essence of this resolution, as I see it, is twofold; first, it is applied to both of the superpowers. If one does not act upon it, then the other is in no way obligated. That is a crucial and realistic aspect of any initiative which is to be taken in the real world. The second point which is imbedded in this resolution, and imbedded in the thinking of almost anyone associated with the resolution, is that it calls for verifiability. What this means is that if both of the superpowers come to their senses, accept the first point and obligate themselves now to stop the nuclear armaments race, then if down the road one of the superpowers hesitates in some way to provide access for verification and puts up roadblocks of any kind to discourage the examination of nuclear developments in the armaments field in any way, the other nuclear power is no longer obligated to act under the terms.

What we have, I repeat, is a resolution which is not only optimistic in the sense it would begin, if acted upon, to provide hope for those who are living and for those who will come after us, but it is also one which is grounded in realism. It is not pie in the sky. It is something which ought to be able to obtain the support of the most militaristically-oriented sectors of both the Soviet Union and the United States, if they are doing what they claim, that is, acting in terms of self-defence of their own societies. And it is inextricably linked with the notion of verifiability.

In my comments this morning, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to dwell on all the horrors of the allocation of resources because of this terrible nuclear madness at a time when so many millions of people in the world are starving. Nor do I want to talk about the potential consequences of a nuclear war. That has been done before in this House and other speakers in this debate will no doubt discuss those profoundly important aspects of this question as well. What I want to dwell upon in my comments this morning is this new Government, which promised us change, new directions, particularly in this field, its attitude on this matter, and I want to indicate why it seems to me to be totally lacking in substance.

Last February the man who is now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), then Leader of the Opposition, said: "We need to restore this Chamber as an instrument for seeking national consensus on the challenge we face in foreign affairs". I thought it was a fine speech at the time and a fine sentiment that all of us could support. However, I say to the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn), who is here for the debate today, that if there was ever a national and international consensus on anything in the world, surely it is the consensus on the need for the United States and the Soviet Union to stop developing, producing and deploying nuclear weapons. The consensus is there.

I say to the Government House Leader that if he looks to his own country, church leaders of virtually every faith, union members, women's groups, peace groups—hundreds of them—veterans' associations, the young, the old, western Canadians, eastern Canadians, indeed 85 per cent of the population of this country indicated in the most recent Gallup poll on this question that they are in favour of a verifiable nuclear freeze. If we go outside of Canada and consider the world, every part of the planet, east, south, north, west, countries of every ideological stripe, are united on this important issue. They believe we ought to have a mutual, verifiable nuclear freeze applied to the superpowers. Indeed, more than one-third of the membership of NATO refused to vote against a nuclear freeze. The UN vote was 111 for a nuclear freeze and 12 against. As a Canadian I am ashamed to say that the Government of Canada was among the 12 against a nuclear freeze.

If we go outside of the international community as such, outside our own community as such, and go to the United States of America, so much the concern of the new Government, what do we find? We find that the U.S. House of Representatives has voted in favour of a freeze. Former NATO generals are in favour, as is the former head of the CIA. Business people of all kinds have recently come out in favour of the freeze. I refer the Government to a notable article in the November 19 issue of Newsweek in which a leading group of American businessmen go further in their initiative than does the resolution before this House. Walter Mondale, former candidate for the presidency of the U.S., Republicans and Democrats in the House and Senate, all are for the freeze. Public opinion in the U.S. is overwhelmingly for a verifiable nuclear freeze. The reality is that in the United States almost everyone except Ronald Reagan is for a verifiable nuclear freeze. That is the reality.

This new Government, then, Mr. Speaker, if it had sought to act upon the commitment it made in the debate last February on the question of a consensus, did not even have to lead on the issue. All the new Conservative Government had to do was to follow the opinion of Canadians and Americans, indeed world opinion. Surely a Conservative, if he cannot lead, ought to be able to follow what the rest of mankind wants.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1115)

Mr. Broadbent: The new Government which promised the people of Canada change and innovation should not have voted against a verifiable nuclear freeze at the United Nations. Rather, having said it would help arrive at a consensus in the House of Commons, in the first week in the new session of Parliament, knowing that this matter was going to come before the United Nations, the Government ought to have brought this motion before the House of Commons. It ought to have obtained a positive vote for it and taken that attitude and spirit back to the United Nations and voted for a freeze. That is what it should have done.

In 1945 Albert Einstein said: "The unleashed power of the atom has changed everything except our way of thinking". If I were to apply the reasoning of Albert Einstein to the new Government, I am sure if he were here he would agree with the following sentiment: The unleashed power of evidence, reason and public opinion has changed everything but the Conservative Party's incapacity to think. I think that is the reality. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, the Government is now not only ignoring Canadian opinion, it is, in its great determination to indulge in a permanent waltz with Ronald Reagan, ignoring American public opinion as well.

In that regard I would like to turn to some of the arguments which the Government has offered in defence of this lamentable vote at the committee stage at the U.N. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) admitted recently that public divisions among our allies have existed in the past on the important question of the freeze. He might have indicated in the same statement, as I did just a minute ago, that more than a third of the membership of NATO is in disagreement with President Reagan on this issue. Our new Secretary of State for External Affairs, who promised initiatives and change, said that Canada should not add to tensions with our major ally to the south. On the weekend he was quoted as saying the following: "We have to define ourselves and not let ourselves be defined by notions that others might have of us". I think that is a wonderful sentiment. There was a no better way to define ourselves than by taking an independent stand on this issue rather than letting ourselves be defined at this point in our history by the man who happens to be the President of the United States. That is precisely what he ought not to have done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: This kind of so-called reasoning, which I regret to say is so characteristic of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is not thought at all. It is simply the refusal to think. It is not the course of an independent ally. It is really the easy acquiescence of the timid.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't blame me. I am not the vice-president of Socialists International.

Mr. Broadbent: You will have your chance, I hope, to apply more cogent arguments.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What about President Mitterrand?

Mr. Broadbent: The Government House Leader is obviously a little defensive. He ought to be, having heard the ridiculous arguments offered by his Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The second point I want to deal with, Mr. Speaker, concerns another argument provided in such a cogent and brilliant way by our Secretary of State for External Affairs on the weekend. He said that the Secretary of State for the United States, Mr. Shultz, and the Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. Gromyko, have agreed to meet next month. I am glad that he picked that up. It is true that they are going to meet next month. He went on to say: "We have to be careful that we do not do anything to throw it", meaning the meeting, "off course". He said; "We ought not to throw it off course by voting in favour of a nuclear freeze". How silly can one get?

• (1120)

His own disarmament ambassador to the United Nations revealed for me a more cogent line of reasoning as an explanation for what is now taking place among the superpowers than that demonstrated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Friday in Vancouver, Mr. Roche pointed out that the United States and the Soviet Union are now responding to mounting world opinion against the arms race. He said that discontent will eventually pressure the superpowers into reaching an agreement.

I want to say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that Mr. Roche has it right. The superpowers are beginning to respond to pressure that is being exercised by other nations and by other groups within their own society. I also want to suggest to the new Secretary of State for External Affairs, whose Government has promised change, that we don't create pressure on one of the superpowers by always agreeing with that power, we don't lead by following and we don't bring about nuclear disarmament by voting against a verifiable nuclear freeze at the United Nations.

Let me shift to another argument, to use the term loosely, that was provided by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in this matter which is even more bizarre than the other arguments. He said that Canada was opposed to this resolution because it wants an immediate resumption of negotiations rather than the declaration of the freeze. What sort of Alice in Wonderland thinking is that? A freeze and a resumption of negotiations are not mutually exclusive. In fact, the UN resolution which we now have before the House underlines the urgent need to resume negotiations. The resolution points out that such a nuclear freeze would constitute a first important step in the process that would include negotiations and eventually nuclear disarmament itself. The point is that action on this resolution would prevent the further escalation, both in quality and quantity, of nuclear weapons, while the negotiation for eventual nuclear disarmament takes place. That is why the members of my Party and Canadians all across the land are in support of this resolution.

The article in the November 19 issue of Newsweek to which I referred a moment ago was written by businessmen, including the heads of Bell International and a half dozen other major international corporations which I will not list now. This article underscores the point that it is business groups in the United States as well as democratic party politicians and other segments of American society that are in favour of a nuclear freeze. One reason among others that the writer of the article gave for taking such a position at this time is that there is the mutual capacity of the Soviet Union and the United States to kill each other many times over within the context of a freeze. When there is that balance of terror, as it has been called, he said that they were apprehensive about a costly and dangerous competition that neither side could win but that both could lose. He is dead right.

• (1125)

Those words and the thoughts behind those words are what this Government should be paying attention to. If we are to leave a world in which our children can grow up and live without fear of annihilation, we must rid this planet of nuclear weapons. If we are to do this we in political life must seize all the occasions which make it possible, acting with realism and with hope. The motion before us, which is a motion before the United Nations, is just such an occasion.

I conclude with this thought. Humanity's urgent quest for peace requires leadership. Leadership can and must come on this matter at some point from the superpowers. But in the meantime it must come from others, and it should come from Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? Debate, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the motion which the House has before it today addresses a matter which is of the deepest concern to Canadians, and indeed to all members of the human family, the need to halt the dangerous and ever-increasing nuclear arms race which threatens the very survival of this planet as we know it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we cannot ignore the gravity of the situation. United Nations Resolution L-32, which the House is being asked to consider today, is useful in that it stresses the urgency of reducing nuclear arsenals and calling on the superpowers to commence constructive negotiations. The number of nuclear arms in the possession of the two superpowers runs into tens of thousands, the equivalent of about 5,000 times the explosive power used during the Second World War or 100,000 times that of the bomb dropped on Hiroshima.

There are other examples or comparisons that could be used, Mr. Speaker, to illustrate and bring home to us the destructive power and the horror of nuclear weapons.

Inevitably, these images of the devastation of which man has become capable are always present in our minds when we consider ways of achieving durable peace and security.

[English]

The motion of the New Democratic Party calls upon the Government to reverse its own position and indeed, in the words of the motion, reverse the position taken by my Government and former Liberal Governments on a question of fundamental importance to Canada and to the NATO alliance, of which Canada is a founding member. In addition, in view of the fact that the United States and the Soviet Union announced on November 22 their intention to meet on January 7 and 8 in Geneva to consider negotiations on a whole range of weapons issues before them, an announcement which I and the members of our caucus welcome whole-heartedly, I find it surprising that the New Democratic Party would now want the Government to adopt as policy a resolution which has as its objectives, first, the resumption of negotiations and, second, prevention of continued increase in and qualitative improvements of existing nuclear weaponry.

The first objective of the motion has now been met with the announced meeting of Mr. Shultz and Mr. Gromyko. The second objective will be the substance of their meeting. It is quite conceivable that progress can be made.

• (1130)

In my view, this motion and the resolution on which it has been based have been overtaken by events. The motion draws attention away from the fact that the New Democratic Party does not support the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and indeed is committed to taking Canada out of that alliance. NATO is an alliance of democracies. When it was established in 1949, the founders agreed that it was to be a political alliance as well as a military one. Its existence has led to the longest period of peace in Europe this century. This motion presumes that the foreign policy supported by successive Liberal Governments and by the Canadian people has been unsuccessful and wrong. Nothing could be further from the truth.

I should like to take this opportunity to talk about some of the steps which the Canadian Government has taken over the years to further the cause of peace and to put before the world many of the ideas that are now included in the resolution before the House.

Canada's geographic location between two heavily armed superpowers is an obvious reason for concern by Canadians about nuclear war. From a domestic point of view, although Canada has the capacity to produce nuclear weapons, a political choice has been made not to do so. In 1969 this country decided that it was no longer appropriate for the Canadian Armed Forces to be equipped with nuclear weapons. The phase-out which began at that time has been completed this year. This is a major achievement of Liberal Governments and one which I think all Members of the House support.

Consistent with this policy and as a signatory to the non-proliferation treaty, Canadian safeguards on the sale of nuclear technology are among the most stringent in the world. The non-proliferation treaty came into effect in 1970 and is subject to review in 1985. It governs the transfer of nuclear technology for peaceful purposes and includes binding commitments against the use of that technology for military purposes. As recently as last year, my right hon. predecessor, Pierre Trudeau, called for remedial action to shore up the non-proliferation treaty in order to bring pressure to bear upon those who have not signed that treaty, thus preventing further horizontal proliferation of nuclear weapons.

In 1978 at the United Nations Special Session on Disarmament, Mr. Trudeau first proposed a strategy of suffocation. At that time Canada called for a comprehensive ban on nuclear testing, a halt to the flight testing of all new strategic delivery vehicles, a cessation of the production of fissionable materials for weapons purposes, and a limitation and eventual reduction of military spending for new strategic weapons systems.

The intent of this strategy was to suffocate new weapons systems in the laboratory, thus eliminating the need for countries to continue to outdo each other in evolving new weapons systems. It is important to note that these were not proposals for unilateral action. It was always intended that they would be the subject of mutual agreement. When these proposals were not acted upon and when the Soviet deployment of the SS-20 missiles in eastern Europe continued, Canada supported NATO's 1979 two-track decision to instal missiles in western Europe and to plan to pursue disarmament negotiations simultaneously.

In 1982 at the Second Special Session on Disarmament, Mr. Trudeau incorporated into the earlier policy a policy of stabilization which had two complementary components—the suffocation strategy and negotiations aimed at qualitative and quantitative reductions in nuclear arsenals designed to achieve a stable nuclear balance at lower levels. At that time Canada noted that the treaty on principles governing the activities of states in the exploration and use of outer space had become obsolete. Although it prohibited nuclear weapons in space, it did not deal with anti-satellite or anti-missile laser systems, the so-called "Star Wars" concept. Since such systems would have a destabilizing effect, Canada proposed a treaty to prohibit development, testing and deployment of all weapons for use in outer space. It also called for the international community to address the verification question seriously in the 1980s.

Mr. Trudeau's peace initiative has a direct bearing on present developments between superpowers and also contains the grounds upon which I am proposing an amendment to this motion.

[Translation]

The central concept of Mr. Trudeau's peace plan consisted in adding a new and reinforced political will to disarmament negotiations. This new political will was to be reflected in a calming down of the political rhetoric engaged in by the two superpowers, and to a lessening of tension in both camps. As far as that goes, Mr. Speaker, we see that today there is a definite improvement over the situation that existed a year ago.

The peace plan also included a number of more technical elements, which I shall touch upon very briefly. First, the creation of a tribunal for negotiating global limits to be set on the arsenals of the five nuclear powers. Second, reinforcement of the non-proliferation treaty. Third, re-opening of negotiations on conventional forces in Europe, in order to bring them down to mutally acceptable levels. Fourth, measures that would pursue and update the suffocation strategy, namely, the ban on high-altitude testing and development of anti-satellite systems.

[English]

The present Government has made a commitment to continue and to expand on this initiative. My caucus and I expect concrete action by the Government in the very near future.

Among the initiatives undertaken by my predecessor was the creation of a peace institute. The object and purpose of this institute is to inject fresh ideas and to develop new and better solutions for a world troubled by conflict and uncertainty. In my view, a five-power summit of nuclear weapons states to negotiate global limits on their nuclear arsenals is an objective to be pursued by the new Government. In other words, the initiatives undertaken by my predecessor set a climate in this country and throughout the world. It reinforced the action by previous Liberal administrations in advancing the cause of peace.

The motion, which attacks that position, is one that is unacceptable to this part of the House. The motion before the House encompasses UN resolution L-32 which is to be voted on shortly. In committee Canada voted against the resolution. It did so in the company of some of its best friends and allies, including Belgium, France, Italy, Japan, Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States.

It is the wish of our Party and my own personal wish that there be not simply a freeze but a significant, balanced and verifiable reduction in the level of nuclear arms in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We put it in this way as an item in negotiation because we believe that this is the realistic way in which to put it. Part of that reality is the simple but important notion that arms control agreements can only be based upon a mutual security allowing each signatory to feel secure in the commitment it makes.

Most of our major allies cannot accept the type of freeze envisaged in this resolution which, among other things, would crystallize the current imbalance in the European theatre. The very real problem of refining and improving nuclear weapons verification techniques must be addressed. An efficient verification system is indispensable to any effort to stabilize East-West relations.

I should like to remind not only the NDP but also the Government that the practicality, consistency and morality of this realistic approach have contributed to the fact that world tensions have been considerably reduced from this time a year ago. At that time Mr. Trudeau urged the superpowers to stop shouting at one another and enter into a dialogue.

All Canadians deeply desire a reversal of the nuclear arms race. Canadians want the Government and Parliament to take every sensible step possible to end the threat of a nuclear holocaust. Therefore we should not support a resolution which can, however unintentionally, weaken Canada's heretofore very credible role in the search for peace. We have achieved the highest international respect and have maintained world influence disproportionate to our population precisely because Liberal Governments have properly reflected and propounded the Canadian sense of thoughtfulness, decency, practicality and common sense.

I know that millions of thoughtful Canadians might well want to support the resolution before the House. At the same time, millions of Canadians will feel that this resolution, while laudable in its attempt, is not constructive at this time in the sense that it does not recognize that the solution has to be negotiated. The issue is not one of commitment to peace. The issue is how best to maintain peace and eventually bring an end to the nuclear arms race.

Recognizing what the goals are for the country, recognizing what the goals are for peace, understanding that those goals in terms of a freeze and a reduction must be pursued within the context of a negotiated settlement, recognizing that the resolution before the House notes a situation in the United Nations which is already outdated because the superpowers have signified a willingness to come together at the beginning of the New Year, we feel that the amendment which we will propose to this resolution suggesting an agenda for the superpowers, recognizing that that agenda provides the basis for negotiation, achieving what we believe Canadians seek and desire in their hearts, is the best way to honour the fears and fulfil the hopes of Canadians from one end of this country to the other. Therefore I propose, seconded by my colleague from Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien):

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words following the words "on a nuclear arms freeze" in the second to last paragraph of the motion and substituting the following:

"This House further takes note that the resumption of arms talks by the Soviet Union and the United States in Geneva in early 1985 announced by the superpowers on November 22, subsequent to the presentation of the above resolution at the United Nations, significantly alters the political situation on which the resolution is based and constitutes an effective first-step in the achievement of the two objectives to be attained in the declaration of a nuclear freeze; and calls upon the Government to urge on behalf of Canadians that the meeting of the two nuclear superpowers have on its agenda the negotiation of limits on their nuclear arsenals, a mutually verifiable freeze and significant reductions; a strengthening of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; a renewed emphasis on the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna; the encouragement of political emphasis on the Stockholm conference; a moving up of the date of the United Nations Special Session on Disarmament now scheduled for 1986; an international agreement to ban the testing and deployment of high-altitude anti-satellite weapons; and the refining and improvement of nuclear weapons verification techniques".

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) will understand, given the length of the amendment, that I might have to wait a few minutes to make a decision as to its admissibility. Pending that decision, we can continue with the debate, if that is agreeable.

Questions and comments? No question and comments? Further debate. Is the House ready for the question? Is the House ready for the question? Further debate, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam. Excuse me, the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Vézina).

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to detract from the seriousness of the debate, but I understood the Speaker to recognize another Member before recognizing the Minister. I just wonder whether this is a departure—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member also knows, I am sure, from her experience in parliamentary assemblies that it is normal whenever possible to alternate between Parties. I saw the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam. Before I finally recognized her, I realized that another Member was rising in her seat at the time. I thought it was more reasonable to recognize the alternate party system as best we could.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the Government is very pleased to have this opportunity to explain Canada's position on the nuclear arms freeze.

We would like to make it clear why Canada voted the way it did in the United Nations on November 20 of this year, when, faced with a number of unrealistic and incomplete proposals on a nuclear arms freeze, it voted against these proposals. It is heartening to see that today, Members of all parties will be able to express their views on the serious issue of international security and arms control. As we commence the debate, I hope first of all, that no one in this House will question the fact that Canadians and the various governments that have represented them since the beginning of Confederation have had the same desire for peace that is part of our tradition. It is one of our national attributes, an attribute that has been recognized the world over.

[English]

I hope too, since the discussion we are having here today concerns the lives of our daughters and sons, of our grandchildren and in fact the future of mankind, that nobody in this House will try to transform such a difficult discussion into a partisan debate where one side will try to gain political advantage. Such an attitude would be irresponsible. It would be done at great cost to real progress toward nuclear arms reduction and to peace itself.

● (1150)

[Translation]

I note that today's motion refers to only one of three resolutions on a nuclear freeze that were presented in the first committee of the United Nations and voted upon on November 20 this year. One was presented by the Soviet Bloc, the second by India alone and the third resolution, the one before the House today, by a number of neutral and non-aligned countries, including Sweden and Mexico. For the time being, I would like to comment on the resolution presented by Sweden and Mexico, though of course many of my comments will be applicable to all three resolutions on a nuclear freeze.

Canada fully recognizes the fact that the freeze concept has a great symbolic value, since it expresses the desire of mankind to be free of the threat of nuclear war. The idea of stopping the nuclear arms race and reducing the enormous quantities of nuclear arms present in weapons arsenals is attractive because of its simplicity, and it is also a general objective that, I am sure, is shared by both nuclear and non-nuclear countries.

Let there be no doubt about Canada's position on the nuclear arms race. This Government, speaking for all Canadians, is firmly in favour of significant, balanced and verifiable reductions in nuclear arms levels throughout the world.

Many Canadians, including some of my own constituents, consider that the present level of nuclear armament is a threat to life on our planet. However, just making statements in favour of a nuclear freeze does not constitute a valid response to this threat. We prefer immediate resumption of negotiations on the reduction of nuclear arms. We have said many times, and I say it again today, that Canada wants the present dangerous levels to be reduced through immediate and unconditional resumption of negotiations on arms reduction.

That is why the Canadian Government finds it very encouraging that bilateral talks will soon be held by the United States and the Soviet Union in Geneva. We hope that subsequently there will be substantial negotiations between these two countries, without prior conditions being set, the aim being to reduce nuclear arsenals significantly, while at the same time considering both parties' legitimate desire for security and seeing to it that they both respect any agreements made to reduce nuclear arms levels.

In his statement to the United Nations General Assembly, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) made it clear that Canada would use its influence to reverse the direction of the arms race and reduce the threat of nuclear devastation. This objective will be an ongoing priority of Canada's foreign policy. The Secretary of State for External Affairs went on to enumerate a number of practical, concrete and realistic initiatives in the area of arms control that would help achieve that objective. These initiatives included achieving further progress towards a complete test ban treaty, preparations for a successful conference on the Non-proliferation Treaty, which will be held next year with a view to preventing horizontal proliferation of nuclear arms, and the conclusion of an agreement on mutual and balanced reduction of conventional forces in Europe, which will reduce the threat of nuclear escalation. We feel that all these measures are practical and realistic ways of avoiding the threat of nuclear war.

I would like to repeat that a nuclear freeze, as requested at the United Nations, is neither a realistic nor a practical way of controlling armament and disarmament. Canada sees major deficiencies and serious shortcomings in all three nuclear freeze resolutions that were presented recently at the United Nations.

I would like to elaborate on our serious doubts about the practical aspects of the resolution presented by Sweden and Mexico. All agreements on arms control must reinforce mutual security if they are to achieve their basic goal. That will not be the case if present imbalances are maintained in the European theater, as provided in the freeze proposals. It is exactly because of these imbalances and the absence of an arms control agreement that we support NATO's two-track policy.

This policy is incompatible with the freeze concept. It presupposes the deployment of medium-range nuclear forces, which, however, could be withdrawn at the appropriate time.

The resolution presented by Sweden and Mexico asks for a ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles. For us to agree with this resolution would be to perpetuate the present dangerous imbalance in Europe, without the assurance that this imbalance would one day be corrected. In fact, it would mean rewarding the Soviet Union for having destroyed the balance for its own benefit by installing SS-20 missiles and for having broken off subsequent negotiations on this type of missiles.

[English]

Canada shares the position of its partners in NATO. Canada knows that it is this alliance which is responsible for the relative peace which Europe has known for nearly 40 years.

[Translation]

A global freeze like the one being requested would also have the effect of sealing in the destabilizing components of the present strategic situation. Today, both superpowers have a large number of high precision nuclear warheads mounted on a small number of intercontinental ballistic missiles that are fixed and thus relatively vulnerable. We feel this is an unstable situation, since the warheads may benefit the side that strikes first. That is why we should encourage the United States and the Soviet Union to design arms that are less vulnerable and threatening, as opposed to freezing their present systems.

Both parties must agree on the rules to be observed so that each side can be sure the other will honour the agreement. Statements as proposed in the resolution do not provide such guarantees. The verification provisions proposed in Sweden's and Mexico's resolution do not go far enough with respect to some freeze-related elements. For example, stricter verification procedures would be required to guarantee compliance with a ban on nuclear weapons and delivery systems production and, if possible, on fissionable material production. Nobody has been able to explain to our satisfaction how it would be possible to control to what extent a production ban might be enforced. It is common knowledge that the U.S.S.R., a freeze proponent, still rejects any kind of valid on-the-spot inspection.

The same resolution advocates as well a full ban on nuclear tests. We commend that initiative for what it is worth, but we think it falls short of the target and does not feature a provision to make it possible to resolve the issue of nuclear tests which, although conducted for peaceful purposes, might have destabilizing effects.

Canada was joint sponsor of a resolution on the urgent need for a nuclear testing full ban treaty which was adopted by the United Nations first commission: 109 voted in favour, none against, and there were 26 abstentions, including all nuclear powers. Canada's resolution strongly urges the Disarmament Conference to strike an ad hoc committee and resume immediately the proceedings on a complete ban on testing, including questions related to implementation, verification and adherence to the provisions, with a view to negotiating an appropriate treaty. It is much more direct and shuts the door which Sweden's and Mexico's resolution deliberately left ajar.

The resolution moved by those two countries also seeks a ban on fissionable material production for military purposes, but again it does not go far enough and ignores the problem of nuclear testing for peaceful purposes.

At the United Nations, Canada introduced another resolution urging—provided adequate verification means could be found—a stop of and a ban on fissionable material production intended for nuclear weapons and other explosive nuclear missiles. That resolution was adopted during the commission proceedings—125 affirmative votes, one negative vote and nine abstentions, including four out of five powers with nuclear armament. Canada's resolution therefore bridges another potentially dangerous wide gap which the Swedes and the Mexicans ignored in their resolution. It is deplorable that such obvious gaps can still be found in this resolution on a nuclear freeze.

Imposing a freeze, as advocated in the resolution, instead of negotiating one would inevitably raise numerous and possibly insolvable problems concerning definitions, exclusions and inclusions. Besides, even if it were possible to negotiate a freeze, these negotiations would be just as difficult, complex and protracted as negotiations on reductions, and they would even detract us from efforts made to achieve a true reduction in nuclear arms levels.

As I said, all elements proposed in the resolution have already been the object of resolutions, or they are pending until valid bilateral negotiations resume. The over-all approach of arms and disarmament control advocated in the Sweden and Mexican resolution prejudges all the complex technical, scientific, political, legal and military questions involved in serious negotiations on weapons control. As proposed now, a nuclear freeze would hamper rather than pave the way for the necessary negotiations. It would introduce a factor of instability and unbalance, whereas a balanced reduction is what is needed for constructive peace promotion.

• (1200)

After serious examination of the various consequences of a nuclear arms freeze, Canada decided to vote against the resolution proposed by Sweden and Mexico, as did most of its NATO allies. I should add that our six partners of the Economic Summit also joined us. These include not only the United States, but also the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom, France and Japan.

Our vote should not be seen as a wish on our part to agree that nuclear armaments be kept at present levels or continue to increase. Rather it reflects Canada's continuing firm commitment to look for means to reduce nuclear armaments. It is this commitment, not a freeze of nuclear arms at the present levels that we view as our priority.

The Canadian Government shares the wish of mankind to be rid of the threat of a nuclear war, and it has given clear evidence of this fact. Nothing in our effort is intended to detract us from making this wish come true. Our objective is to try, not only within the United Nations, but also at every level of negotiation, to meet the goal we have set for ourselves, that is a reduction in nuclear arms.

We therefore have three major objectives in the field of nuclear arms. We believe that Canada has a real opportunity to play a positive international role, which we have already begun to develop.

The first objective is an immediate and unconditional resumption of talks between the United States and the Soviet Union. Canada has pursued this objective within NATO councils and at the United Nations. We continued to do so on the occasion of our most recent periodical consultations with Soviet officials. In the interests of mutual security, these talks must be resumed in the very near future. It is for the purpose of supporting the negotiation process that we intend to pursue this objective with determination.

Our second objective is a renewal of the commitment made by the international community toward non-proliferation. Our success will depend to a great extent on the period of preparation before the third review conference on the Non-Proliferation Treaty to be held in 1985. In spite of the differences of opinion between the super-powers, there is a community of interests, as the American Secretary of State, Mr. George Schultz, emphasized in a recent speech on this issue. However, he noted that this community of interests cannot be taken for granted, even when the super-powers agree; consequently, the tasks which await us at the review conference on the Non-Proliferation Treaty will be arduous and their success is far from certain. This was the unequivocal message given by Mr. Mohamad Shaker of Egypt, who was recently elected chairman of the conference.

Canada's policy of positive internationalism can be and is being applied in practice. In Geneva, Canada took the initiative of searching for a new consensus of non-proliferation; in Vienna, Canada was at the forefront of the efforts made to strengthen the garantee systems of the International Atomic Energy Agency; in London, we consulted many countries, both from the East and the West, as well as neutral countries, which export nuclear material or techniques to ensure the safety of these exports, while pursuing the noble objective of co-operating with recipients of these exports. Within the United Nations, we continue to fight with determination for non-proliferation.

The third objective to which Canada's positive internationalism is and must be applied is the prohibition of nuclear weapons. We can all be glad that the three powers in possession of nuclear weapons, namely the United States, the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R., have accepted to stop surface nuclear arm testing. We can also rejoice that these tests have been limited to 150 kilotons. However, it is not enough. Talks among these three countries have been suspended and are now continuing in the larger context of the Conference on disarmament in Geneva.

One of the major questions at the Conference still is verification. And Canada is doing her share in that regard. Along with other nations, we are currently taking part in the international exchange of seismological data. If successful, that project will be a major contribution to what I would call the "verifiability" of a treaty banning nuclear arms testing. But we want to go still further. Last fall, in the United Nations, we co-sponsored a resolution calling upon all parties to ban nuclear testing. The combination of public positions and private endeavours in the area of practical negotiation that such a co-sponsorship entailed seems to me to be a creative example of Canada's positive internationalism.

These three goals—a resumption of superpower discussions, non-proliferation, and a test ban—are feasible. They give Canada an opportunity to use her influence and take initiatives.

Canada has the eminent responsibility of contributing to arms control and disarmament measures, and this Government is committed to setting up a system that will provide genuine collective security.

At about the same time last year, Mr. Trudeau launched his peace initiative, the goals of which were endorsed by all Canadian men and women. More recently, Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney described the nuclear arms problem as a serious problem.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Minister to conclude her remarks.

Mrs. Vézina: I therefore urge all Members to support their Government, and abstain from undermining in this House our constant efforts towards peace and a reduction of tensions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, without trying in any way to diminish the new Minister's importance, I would have hoped to see on such an important resolution the Right Hon. Prime Minister and/or the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in attendance. And this, I repeat, with due respect and without in any way diminishing the importance of the Minister's intervention. This I repeat with due respect, because good manners have still their place in this House.

I should like to ask the Minister whether she has had the time to examine the amendment moved by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and whether her government intends later today, first of all, to support this amendment which is obviously quite acceptable—I do not see why not, since she herself referred in her remarks on several occasions to the essential elements of this amendment. I shall begin with this simple question.

Mrs. Vézina: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to see that elegance fits in well with the customs of this venerable chamber. I take into account your remarks and comments which I do not dare describe openly, although I certainly reserve the right to describe them for my own benefit.

Mr. Prud'homme: I do not understand.

Mrs. Vézina: Your reference to the fact that the minister responsible for the government is not the one which the House wishes to hear.

Mr. Prud'homme: I never said that.

Mrs. Vézina: As to the part—

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis rises on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: One is either elegant or one is not. I did not look down on the minister. I only mentioned that the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) were absent from the House. That does not reflect in any way on the importance of her statement on this very important issue. That is all I meant to say. Just the same, she would have had the opportunity to—

• (1210)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. I will therefore recognize the Minister of External Relations.

Mrs. Vézina: Mr. Speaker, to regret a situation merely means that the situation is not as one would hope—

Mr. Prud'homme: Pretty obvious!

Mrs. Vézina: Then, to come back to the question put to me—

Mr. Chrétien: Where is the Prime Minister?

Mrs. Vézina: Unfortunately, I did not examine the amendment because I was delivering my speech and referring to the position which the new government intends to take with respect to the freeze following the discussions this morning. We will consider it and, as soon as this afternoon, we will take whatever steps are needed.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister was reading her speech and therefore did not have a chance to hear the amendment. Could she confer with her colleagues and tell us whether the Government would be prepared to support such a clear and concise amendment as has been put forward by the Liberal Party?

[Translation]

Mrs. Vézina: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this issue is quite important, but it is not such a vital emergency as to make it necessary for us to interrupt our proceedings in order to announce our intentions this afternoon. Let us proceed with the debate, and this very afternoon we will make our intentions known to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Rossi: I have a comment, Mr. Speaker. The Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Vézina) has admitted herself that this debate is of extreme importance. How come then that neither the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), nor the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), nor the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) are here in this House?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should remind the Member that it is not our practice in this House to mention specifically the absence of any minister.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the Hon. Member relates to a basic right. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Orders of the House may prevent the government or the Opposition from raising the same issue twice in the same session. This happens to be one of the major problems now facing this country and which is of great concern to millions of Canadians, churches and all intermediate groups. The point which my colleague is trying to get across to the Minister who is acting as a stand-in today in the House, and the point we want to make is that, in such an important debate, it is unacceptable that neither the Prime Minister, nor the Secretary of State for External Affairs, nor the Minister of National Defence are here to defend the government's position. That is the important point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would respectfully remind the Hon. Member that his remarks do not constitute a point of order. I believe the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) had made a comment. Would the Minister of External Relations (Mrs. Vézina) like to reply?

Mrs. Vézina: I do not really want to defend anyone. It so happens that previous engagements had been made. It happens that . . . I am acting as a representative of my government, and we are prepared to answer all your questions and give consideration to any proceedings related to today's debate. I fail to see the purpose of that interrogation.

Mr. Prud'homme: Since the Hon. Minister tells us that she is willing to reply on behalf of the Government, I would like to ask her whether she favours, supports or endorses the five points proposed by the former Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliot Trudeau. First, does she endorse these five major points?

Mrs. Vézina: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members seem to be in a great hurry this morning. In my opinion, as a newly elected Member, I should be the one who has to learn the ways of debate in Parliament, but to my knowledge, any decisions to be made will be taken at the end of the day when a vote will be held if necessary. I therefore do not have to state what is the position of my government before the vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

[English]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I understood the Minister to say she was not prepared to take a position on either the amendment or the main motion. If so, then obviously the comments by my colleagues with respect to the absence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) indicate that we have in their place a Minister who is not even prepared to state what the Government's position is on this question. What is the Government's position on this very important question?

[Translation]

Mrs. Vézina: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to tell the Hon. Member that if she had been here during the 20 minutes when I explained the position of the Government, she would now know the answer—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay) for a short question.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Minister will know that this is the age of telecommunications. I was here in the Chamber and I was also watching her remarks on television in the lobby. She will be aware of the fact that there are Members who watch from the lobby and I heard all the remarks she made.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair rules that this is not a question of privilege.

Ms. Copps: Yes, it is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not a question of privilege. As a result, the period for questions and comments is now over. The 10 minutes are up.

Ms. Copps: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, about five minutes ago I understood the Chair to state that it was not the right or privilege of any Member to comment upon the presence or absence of any Member. It seems to me this is exactly the case in point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has ruled that the period for questions and comments is now over. We shall now resume debate with the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it has been pointed out that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates), and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) are not here. That underlines—

Mr. Bradley: And there are three NDP.

Ms. Jewett: —and I say that more in sorrow than in anger, the real reluctance of the Government to present to Canadians any new or fresh initiatives on the most crucial matter facing humankind.

The speech the Minister was given to read to us in the House really did not address the nuclear freeze motion that the UN will be voting on next week except in a very narrow, technical sense. I wonder if the people in the Department of External Affairs think they are dealing with an issue when they nit-pick it to death. That is not facing up to this peril that the whole planet is facing. I started taking a few notes as the Minister was reading the speech but I stopped because, again, there is no sense of urgency on the part of the Government and only a little more on the part of the Official Opposition. They sort of say: Well, we have not had a nuclear exchange or nuclear war for 40 years. Where is their historical sense? Forty years is a very short time in the flow of history. Therefore it is not enough for us to congratulate ourselves that somehow or other this 40 years has made it possible for us to avoid the nuclear peril and to continue to avoid a nuclear exchange of either minor or major proportions.

Instead of nit-picking the resolution, Mr. Speaker, why do Members of this House, all of us, not look back over the last few years and all the deadly gambits—and some of you will, I hope, have read Strobe Talbott's book called Deadly Gambits—and realize that the reason world public opinion demands a nuclear freeze is exactly because you have to freeze the production and deployment and testing of nuclear weapons in order to bring about reductions in nuclear weapons. As the old saying goes, you must stop the car before you put it in reverse.

Hon. Members in both of the other Parties do not seem to realize, although the Canadian public thoroughly realizes and understands, that the increasingly sophisticated galaxy of nuclear weaponry that is constantly coming on-stream from both superpowers, usually, in all but one case, led by the United States, is making the chance of a verifiable nuclear freeze close to impossible.

One of the reasons we so opposed Canadian complicity in the development of the Cruise missile is that its numbers and locations are almost impossible to verify. Every military strategist has told us for years that we cannot have arms reductions if the location and number of those arms cannot be verified. People seem to forget this. The whole point of the freeze, which seems to have been lost in all this nit-picking, is to prevent the development of any more unverifiable nuclear weapons by both sides. If we have more unverifiable nuclear weapons we will never have a negotiated arms reduction that is verifiable. I wish some of the Members in the House would address this extremely serious matter which they seem to have lost sight of.

I recall when we had the reference on security and disarmament in the standing committee about which several of us made a minority statement. One of the most senior strategic analysts in the country, Harriet Critchley, appeared before the committee and stated explicitly what I have just stated. She said that the Cruise missile, the testing of which by Canada had just broken in the press, was virtually undetectable and hence unverifiable. That was not some dove saying that; it was a highly respected strategic analyst who said it. That can be found in the minutes of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence in March of 1982.

One hundred and eleven nations of the world voted for the Mexico-Sweden freeze proposal at the United Nations because of their great concern that, if the development of new generation nuclear weapons is not frozen now, we will never be able to get adequate, verifiable arms reductions in place.

The Official Opposition seem to miss this point in their amendment. I suppose the one good thing one could argue about it is that they at least say they want to have the two superpowers put a nuclear freeze on their agenda. Since the Soviet Union has already voted for a nuclear freeze, they are basically saying that they want the United States to put a nuclear freeze on their agenda. I suppose that is a step forward, but it certainly is not the kind of step which we are asking for in our motion, which is for the House now to support a nuclear freeze in order to bring about the kind of massive, verifiable reductions we all want.

One of the favorite arguments of Hon. Members in the Government and the Liberal Party is that we would be freezing imbalances in Europe. The fact is that there is a rough global balance. Some would argue that the American side is still ahead globally. When the American military people are asked whether they would exchange their nuclear hardware for that of the Soviets, they always say no. There may be imbalances in certain weapons in parts of certain theatres. However, when you are talking about nuclear weapons nowadays, it frankly does not much matter whether you have a little imbalance in one theatre as compared to another. This nit-picking has caused Members to lose sight of the fact that what we now have can destroy the planet 50 times over. There is no longer any distinction to be made on a rational basis between an intermediate range and an intercontinental range nuclear missile. These distinctions have been meaningless for several years now.

For a long time we have been calling for a merging of the talks on theatre and intercontinental or strategic weapons because the differences between them have become so artificial. Nowadays everything is either short-range, medium-range or long-range. If the Department was doing any real thinking about the problem, that would have been a meaningful thing for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to have called for. The differences between the two sides have become meaningless. The difference between a destabilizing and a less destabilizing nuclear weapon has also become meaningless. People get into this kind of military talk and feel they are being terribly informed and are throwing light on the question somehow. Frankly, it is a red herring. It is just a way of avoiding the real question which, as I say, is fundamentally the one presented in this United Nations motion in which we are asking the House to support a nuclear freeze.

Many years ago the former Prime Minister asked for a strategy of suffocation. I remember asking him in the House if a strategy of suffocation was a mutual freeze. He replied that the two are the same thing. His emphasis, of course, was on suffocating in the laboratory. The freeze would suffocate in the laboratory, on the production line, and in deployment. The first step is suffocation in the laboratory; no one has any question about that. He then pressed that strategy of suffocation. He admitted that the freeze was, in his words, the same. We found that he was not able to bring himself to support a nuclear freeze resolution or have the Government support it at the United Nations last year. I presume that it is still the position of the Liberal Party that it cannot support the strategy of suffocation, that is a freeze, after having advocated it. Of course, the present Government is simply following the advice that the Department gave the former Government.

We were told that the new Government would be open and would consult widely with the Canadian public. While the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Vézina) did not reiterate this, one reason given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs for not supporting the freeze was that the Government's policy was still unfolding. It is to have a policy review next year that would be carried out by a special committee of the House or by the standing committee. This special review of policy will include hearings with Canadians in order to give them "a means of allowing Canadians a say in foreign policy formation". That was one reason given for not moving now on the freeze.

However, Canadians have wanted a say in foreign policy formation for some years now, particularly in the area of a nuclear freeze and no Cruise missile testing. We are well aware that they have been expressing their views on these matters for the last three years. I suggest it is rather phony for the Government to say that it must listen to Canadians on this particular matter. Why does it not read what Canadians have already said in this respect for the last two or three years?

I suspect that the Government's emphasis on the consultative process is merely an attempt to kid us into believing that it will take seriously what Canadians have to say. It is only continuing the kinds of policies which the previous Government had in the field of arms freeze and Cruise missile testing. I believe it is simply a delaying tactic or part of its new "civility" when the Government tells Canadians that what they say will matter. It has not mattered to the Government yet. The views of Canadians about the nuclear freeze or Cruise missile testing did not matter to the Government when it was in opposition.

I am becoming disturbed by the Government's promises to be open, democratic and consultative when it does the exact opposite with respect to matters on which Canadians have already stated their position. If this is going to be the case in all aspects of our external relations, why does the Government bother having this rather phony set of hearings? If it will not pay any more attention to what Canadians have said on the matter of Cruise missile testing and a mutual, verifiable nuclear freeze, why does it bother to have these hearings?

The Government makes many arguments to excuse not voting for the nuclear freeze. Let me point out another "picky" argument that it uses. It is that the negotiations to secure a freeze would be as lengthy as the negotiations on reductions. It says that this would hinder the negotiations on reductions.

No one has ever suggested that negotiatons on a mutually verifiable freeze would not be lengthy, but that is no reason for not proceeding with such negotiations. All those who have advocated a freeze have said that these negotiations should be followed by massive reductions. That is what this resolution says. I cannot emphasize too strongly that while negotiations must take place for both, a freeze must come first. The massive reductions come later.

I believe that until Canada follows its friends in NATO, its friends in the United Nations and the ANZUS Pact, all of whom have seen the logic and reason for voting in the United Nations for a freeze, this country will not really be facing the nuclear peril.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, while the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) concentrated particularly on the Cruise missile in her remarks about nuclear weapons systems, I am sure she would agree that the same would be true of nuclear battlefield weapons such as artillery shells and mines. I believe she stated that the location and numbers cannot be verified with respect to those weapons. She has indicated that many nuclear weapons cannot be verified and I agree with her.

I think she will agree that she could amend that statement to include "without on site inspection". In other words, if both sides would permit on site inspection, we could verify all nuclear weapons. However, the Soviet Union will not permit on site inspections, which confirms her statement that the location and numbers of these weapons cannot be verified. If that is true, how can she and her Party advocate the logic of calling for a mutually verifiable freeze? How can she call for a verifiable freeze when she also stated explicitly that verification is impossible? Would she not agree that it is better to call for progress where progress is possible rather than advocating what is clearly impossible, according to her own arguments? Would we not be better off to advocate progress and strategic arms reduction, to start talks where verification is possible?

Would it not be more wise to advocate, as Mr. Trudeau and members of our Party have advocated in the past, that we try to make progress where progress is possible? A verifiable situation is idealistic and she stated accurately that verification is impossible under the current policy of the Soviet Union. Why advocate the impossible when we can perhaps achieve progress by advocating the possible?

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the Hon. Member was present during all of our hearings on verification. Therefore, he did not hear some of the arguments made by people such as Harriet Critchley. The difficulty is that even if all nations agreed to on site verification, it still would not be possible to make that verification. That verification would be difficult, particularly with the submarine-launched Cruise missile. Even if there was agreement, there are no technical or other means to verify the numbers and the locations. It is too easy for either side to cheat and that is my point.

As far as ground-launched missiles are concerned, which are easier to verify, we are moving toward an agreement with respect to on site verification. My point is that even if both sides agreed in principle to on site verification, according to most expert opinions I have read we would be unable to verify in practice something like the submarine-launched Cruise missile. Neither side would be able to know the numbers or locations for sure. That was my point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for a question or comment.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, it would be for a comment—

• (1240)

[English]

I have a comment and then a question, Mr. Speaker. There is no doubt that I regret very sincerely that the resolution of the New Democratic Party was couched in a way which extremely embarrassed many people. The New Democratic Party knew that by blaming the past administration the Official Opposition would not support an amendment like that when a good percentage of the people here, including myself, were part of the administration, and supporters of the administration in the case of back-benchers. They cannot blame themselves for what they did yesterday. My colleague has a different vocabulary; he calls it cheap politics. But I would rather say that I regret sincerely this resolution.

I know my esteemed colleague the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) worked very hard in the Standing Committee of External Affairs and National Defence. She said earlier on: "On the committee of security and disarmament we put forward a minority report". I would like her to attest to the fact that she did support the report as her colleagues did. We all supported a diluted report, I admit, but she supported it because in order to be "more liberal" in our approach, for the first time we allowed a minority report to be part of the majority report. I want to be clear and I want the record to be clear, for future reference by students and readers, that the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam did sign and accept the report on security and disarmament. The Hon. Member only added a minority view. I want to be clear even for myself.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, taking the Hon. Member's points in reverse order, the practice is that when a majority does agree to a matter in a standing committee the whole committee is listed. It is as if it were a unanimous report: all committee members are listed. That is the practice. Therefore, I was listed along with five others. The only route we had to go was to issue a separate statement which we called a minority report.

Mr. Prud'homme: It was in addition.

Ms. Jewett: We had to issue it to show that we were not in entire agreement with the majority statement. Our motion calls upon the Government to adopt the United Nations resolution as policy—

Mr. Chrétien: Stop there.

Ms. Jewett: —thereby rejecting the position of the previous administration.

Mr. Chrétien: That has nothing to do with the resolution.

Ms. Jewett: It has. It makes it very clear that the Canadian House would be taking a position for the first time that is contrary to the position taken—because these resolutions have come to the UN every year—by both the previous Government and this Government.

Ms. Copps: You are playing politics and you know it.

Mr. Deans: That is what you do.

Ms. Jewett: Maybe it is politics, but I think it is very important for all of us in this House to make a fresh start on this issue. The best way to do it is to vote for the UN resolution that we have presented.

Mr. Deans: Why do you not move to amend it?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay) for a question or a comment.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I had a brief comment to make. The NDP does exactly what I said it did a while ago, namely criticizing for the sake or it. With this resolution, the NDP wants to prove once more that it is on the side of virtue. Most often, this virtue remains undefined, but when we look at something like this resolution, it becomes quite clear that the NDP motion is already outdated. In other words, far from leading the way, the New Democratic Party is lagging behind. In addition, the Official Opposition plays its official role quite well and shows itself as it really is because, while agreeing on the balanced position taken by the Government, it criticizes the form rather than the substance of this position in the absence of certain people. It does so through the subtle remarks made by Members of Parliament and former Members. This really shows the Opposition as it really is, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, if I may, I would like to tell the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Vézina) that her balanced position could not have been better explained, expressed and defended than it was by the Hon. Minister herself, and I am quite proud of it.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. We shall now resume debate. The Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins).

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, first with all due respect to the junior Minister, I think she is to be congratulated for being here and for doing her best under very difficult circumstances. I think it is a tragedy that the Government elected with the largest majority in Canadian history is sitting here today with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) absent when we are debating a motion that affects the very lives of the people of this world. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) is away at meetings and has been away at meetings, so I do not criticize him in the same way in this regard.

I have known the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) for a number of years. I have great respect for her, but I would like to say to her that no person and no political party in this world has a monopoly on all the answers. I do not think that the subject should be projected in that manner.

The Hon. Member also talked about nit-picking. Any political party or any leader in the world today who works sincerely for peace is not nit-picking. They are seriously discussing all the parameters of the issue and searching for a solution. I think it is unfair to say just because people are discussing a subject that they are nit-picking. This is far too serious for that type of language. This is a complicated and tough issue and is one that will not be settled tomorrow.

I would like to say to the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam that if she learned more about the military community of Canada she would have a better appreciation for the work it does not only in Canada but around the world. The actions of the military have saved a great many conflicts in this world.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What has that got to do with the motion?

Mr. Hopkins: In the motion today the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam said that Russia is already moving toward a freeze. Why not? The Russians have all their SS-20s in place in Europe and the NATO powers are only in the process of installing their Pershing IIs to upgrade our missiles. It is very easy when fully armed to the teeth to say: "Boy, I am all for the freeze, I am all for peace, and I want the world to know it". If a freeze came about today, the fact of life is that the free world would be in danger of being walked over right through Europe. Then we could imagine what would happen to North America.

• (1250)

This issue is a very complex one. There is no simple answer. However, there must be a solution toward which we must all work together. Einstein said something years ago which is very applicable to this motion and to the debate today. He predicted that the day would come when the human race would focus its attention on mankind rather than on arms. Virtually this is what is happening in the world today. Naturally there are different viewpoints as to how to arrive at a safe society for the peoples of the world. Einstein was right. When the lives of every individual on the face of the earth are in danger, the eyes of the world are on humanity and on peace. They are not on armaments to the extent of looking to the future in that direction. They are on reduction of armaments which must come about verifiably and realistically.

The fact that two major world powers will come together in the New Year is most significant. Hopefully it will be successful and productive. We should do everything we can as a nation respected around the world. We should talk to the other middle powers. We have an obligation to talk to the Third World and to bring pressure to bear upon the two major powers to come to an agreement and give people in this world the right to live and to raise future generations.

Human beings as a whole have not taken arms seriously until now. Until recently they did not know that the capacity to destroy the world existed. The capacity to destroy the world not only exists but without disarmament, without verifiable controls and without political will and goodwill, it could happen.

Verification is always emphasized. It is outlined in SALT I. It had limited verification through satellite and electronic devices. SALT II also had verification in part. There are limitations to verification through satellite and electronic devices to gain a reading, but electronic and satellite devices cannot survey the factory floor. They cannot penetrate the research laboratory. Verification cannot be done by science up there alone. There must be on-ground agreements as well. Verification becomes a difficult problem when it comes to a state of perfection, but it must be the major part of any disarmament agreement. Otherwise an agreement will not be worth the paper it is written on. We have seen such agreements in past history.

We have looked back today at the founding of NATO. It is now comprised of 16 countries. We should think of the great statesmen of that day, such as Mr. Acheson, Canada's own Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent and others. Contrary to some negative comments which we have heard even as early as this morning about NATO, I do not buy them, largely because of the NATO alliance, its success and diplomatic relations along the way. Because of these facts we are now in our fortieth year of world peace. All one has to do is study the last 40 years of history. I agree with what was said before, that 40 years is but a small piece of history. Nevertheless, it is an important piece of history for those who lived during those 40 years and for those who will follow hereafter. Thanks to NATO this has been possible.

I want to emphasize that NATO is indeed a peace organization. There is no one in the world who wants war. We want agreement and goodwill. We want good faith at the bargaining table. We want controls on the scientific armaments which are in place and can destroy the world many times over. That is our objective as mankind and womankind.

Many military people are condemned by some because they are military. Mr. Speaker, you and I have heard them. Because they are military, people think they are warlike and are there to create war. Some of our military personnel are the greatest diplomats. To a degree they are politicians because they deal with people of other nations and are defenders of peace. The Pershing II missiles were to be deployed in Europe starting in 1983. Many people called that year the year of the missile. I totally disagree because in 1977 the Soviet Union placed SS-20s on and behind the demarcation line in Europe. That is what brought about an upgrading of NATO alliance missiles and the establishment of Pershing II missiles. That is still ongoing. It is not complete. As I said before, the Soviet Union has had its SS-20s in place for a long time. If we were in that position, we would be going for a 100 per cent freeze as well.

Let us look at this matter in realistic terms. Let us look at what has happened in the western world to put us in the position we are in today. The fact is that the free world has not kept pace with conventional arms. Because we have not kept pace, as a group of allies we are virtually outnumbered three to one in heavy armoured tanks on the Warsaw Pact-Nato line in Europe. That is one of the problems. We must upgrade our conventional arms in order to lower the threshold of nuclear threat. No nation on the face of the earth has the moral, political or egotistical right to hold the rest of the world up for ransom. An outright freeze without disarmament and good faith in verification is simply the signing of another piece of paper with nothing to back it up. No nation is supreme on the face of the earth, whether it be by armaments, intelligence or whatever.

I should like to say something now which has been seldom been said on the floor of the House. As we are in the middle of this debate, I think it should be said. Einstein said that the day would come when man would have to think about mankind, not about arms. We talk about supreme nations. There is only one supreme person in the world: God is supreme. We are debating this issue today and it has been debated at the United Nations. As the two major leaders—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. He has some time left for this afternoon. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

HUMAN RIGHTS

POSITION OF SOVIET JEWS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, today we remind ourselves of our commitment to the fundamental principles of individual rights and freedoms for all people. Today is the third anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Sadly, we continue to witness violations of these high principles around the world, particularly in the Soviet Union and countries under its influence. Today is an appropriate moment to focus on the compliance with the human rights provisions of the Helsinki Agreement, adopted by 35 nations in 1975, including Canada, the United States, the Soviet Union, and countries of western and eastern Europe.

The signators pledged to respect "fundamental freedoms, including freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief". Of vital importance are the clauses on freedom of human contacts and the rights of reunification of families.

In preparation for the Ottawa conference review on human rights next May, and on this special day, it seems appropriate to bring to the attention of this House the worsening situation of Soviet Jews who wish to emigrate to rejoin their families, or to be allowed the right to maintain their religious identity in their homeland. It is important that our Canadian representatives impress upon the Soviet Union the urgent situation and the need to curtail the proliferation of official anti-semetic material. Jews are being harassed, not for what they do but who they are. December is the month of world-wide solidarity for Soviet Jewry. They need our Canadian support, our voice.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PLIGHT OF HEBREW TEACHERS IN U.S.S.R.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I too bring to the attention of the House and the nation that today is one of significance to people of the world who acknowledge and value the rights of all individuals who collectively make up the human race. In this context, I make a statement on behalf of persecuted Hebrew teachers in the U.S.S.R.

December 10 is the anniversary of the signing of the international Declaration of Human Rights to which the Soviet Union is a signatory. On this human rights day, nine Soviet Jews stand accused of the crime of teaching Hebrew. This basic human right to transmit one's own language and culture is denied only to Soviet citizens of Jewish nationality.

Concerned Canadians across the country fast today in solidarity with hundreds of Soviet Jews who are now protesting with rotating hunger strikes, a courageous response to the Soviet authorities' latest campaign to destroy Jewish culture.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the other day the Minister of Industry (Mr. Stevens) unveiled a new program called Investment Canada. He said this country would now be open for business. I want to give him some words of advice this afternoon. I hope he does not model this after Saskatchewan. Grant Devine, the Conservative Premier of our province, has a plan which he calls "Open for Business" as well.

What has happened in two and a half years has been a disaster for the people of our province. Unemployment has doubled in two and a half years, and the number of people on welfare has skyrocketed. Between April, 1982, and September, 1984, the number of people who are on welfare because they cannot find work in our province has gone up by some 73 per cent. The total case load of everybody on welfare has gone up by 22 per cent; 29 per cent in Regina, 33 per cent in Saskatoon, and 40 per cent in the city of Yorkton. Housing starts last year were down by 46 per cent. In agriculture, farm bankruptcies are up and farm income is down. In my province it is not open for business but closed for business because of this new program under the Conservative Government.

INVESTMENT CANADA

NEW AGENCY WELCOMED

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we have heard recent cries from opposition benches since forming the Government about jobs, jobs, jobs. As the reins of power are being handled with more and more gentle control, many young Canadians are wondering whether a new job creating confidence is evolving.

The pool of investment capital in our country is not deep enough to allow federal, provincial and municipal public sector appetites as well as private sector institutions, to swim successfully in it together. There will be no howls from Canadians who get back to a productive, meaningful life as fulltime workers when German, Japanese, British, Italian, French, American, Dutch and many, many more companies again feel that Canada is going to become a fitter place for investment.

There will be howls, with the very positive signal by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and the introduction of Bill C-15, the Investment Canada Act last Friday, that we are selling our souls to foreigners. One single word is what the unemployed youth of this nation have to bank on, one single word that will take the burden off the public sector to be the great provider in a country that was built on the spirit of entrepreneurism. That word is investment. I say, let it come.

EMPLOYMENT

IMPORTANCE OF SUMMER PROGRAM FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the cries of outrage over the cancellation of the Summer Works Program continue in full force. I recently received a letter from the chairman of the Public Library Board in my city of North York which I believe reflects the level of indignation felt over the regressive cut.

Last year alone the Board sponsored seven summer projects across North York, hiring approximately 40 students in the process; 40 students who had a job to help them pay their next year's school tuition fees, 40 students who acquired on-the-job training and experience, 40 students who received an opportunity to understand better and acquaint themselves with their communities and their neighbours, 40 students who provided a valuable public service to the community.

In my younger days I too participated in several Summer Canada projects. It is more than just a job. It is an extremely valuable life experience and an education. As a result of this government cut, what will the Government tell students in North York this coming summer? What will it tell the parents and the community organizations expecting assistance through this program?

The Government would be wise to reactivate the Summer Works Program quickly. In addition, I issue a challenge to those Members on the Government side who represent ridings in North York to show the calibre of representation and leadership they promised their constituents, apply collective pressure and less cheer-leading in an attempt to right a serious wrong. I look forward with much eagerness—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

PUBLIC SERVICE

MANAGERIAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE GROWTH—TRIMMING ADVOCATED

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is a part of human nature that, rather than countenance adversity ourselves, wherever possible we try to pass it on to someone else. Therefore, when a deputy minister is instructed to reduce staff or expenses, it is not his own staff or expenditures that are reduced. He passes the message on to the assistant deputy ministers, who in turn pass it on to the regional directors or the director general, and so on, all down the line. The cuts tend to take place at the lowest level which, unfortunately, is the level of service to the public. It is the hospital ward orderly or the grader operator who ends up getting fired, and the patient and the motorist who suffer.

This is the wrong way to go about things. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), in whom we all can have confidence to wield the pruning knife deftly and deeply, ought to bring his dexterity to bear on the managerial and administrative side of government where there is a luxuriant growth which would not suffer from a thorough trimming. The objective of the exercise has to be to make government Departments more efficient and effective by reducing the bureaucratic elements, while delivering a high standard of service to the public.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

IMPACT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada were deceived on September 4 by a group of perhaps well-meaning but obviously equally deceived Conservatives running for Parliament. Where on the public record were Conservatives espousing the values of firing wildlife biologists, dismissing the only wildlife pathologist in the country, closing off Canada's first center of toxicology, shutting down the herring gull egg project, smashing the project to monitor the effects of forestry pesticides on songbirds and migratory birds in New Brunswick?

From coast to coast there were no such statements. In fact we are forcefully reminded by the press that many members of the new Tory Cabinet, for example the Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), in opposition condemned the Liberals for neglecting Arctic research and cutting funds for the Arctic biological station at Ste. Anne de Bellevue. The same Tory now says that cutting deficits is a higher principle.

Each and every cut in the environment sector is designed as a signal to the corporate sector that the extreme hardline right wing of the Tory Party is in control. Let the Canadian voters beware. The Union Carbide crowd in the corporate sector are the determining factor for environmental decisions under the Mulroney administration. We can expect more endangered species, greater public health risks, fewer regulations on industrial activities that use the environment as their dump. Canada is on the road now somewhere between the Love Canal and Time Beach. We have the Canadian equivalent of Anne Gorsuch as Environment Minister.

CITIZENSHIP

SPIRIT OF UNITY AND RESPECT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the peoples of Canada come from every country in the world. Joining the Indians, the Eskimos, and the Inuit were the early settlers from England, France, Belgium, Italy, Yugoslavia, Spain; indeed, from all countries of Europe; from China, India, Japan and all parts of Asia; from Central and South America, and Africa; from Iceland, Greenland, and the Philippines; from the U.S.A., and Israel, Lebanon and the Arab States. They all held their heads high as the Citizenship Judge said: "Now you are a Canadian".

They came, many with only the clothes on their backs, for many reasons, including the right to worship as their heart dictated, the freedom to build a home on land that they owned, and in the minds of all of them was the desire to build a heritage for their children. They brought with them the art and literature, the dances and expertise developed over the centuries in their homelands, which they gave freely to their adopted country. They all wanted to contribute in the building of a great young nation that had "freedom" as its watchword.

The PC Party of Canada recognizes the sanctity of every Canadian of whatever creed or colour. It is building a nation that respects the differences of others. From east to west and from north to south it is bringing harmony in diversity. A new spirit is spreading across our land, a spirit of unity and respect recognizing the rights, dreams and ambitions of others. Under the PC Government a strong, united, happy and buoyant Canada will reach its greatest potential.

Viva the PC Party! Viva Canada!

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—SAINT-LÉONARD SCHOOLCHILDREN'S DONATION TO FIGHT FAMINE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, on December 7 I had the honour of receiving from the students of Pierre de Coubertin School in Saint-Léonard a cheque for $547 for the starving in Ethiopia.

Accompanying the cheque was a letter from Patrizia Gagliardi, a grade six student. I would like to read to the House two passages from this letter. It reads:

> We thought that since we have everything, including a beautiful home in a first world country, we should help the needy people in the drought stricken country of Ethiopia. I personally can't imagine not having anything but a rag to cover myself and few days of life. I am sure I'm speaking for all my classmates.

The letter continues:

> God gave us that beautiful thing called love and it should be shared and spread throughout the world. We felt that it was our duty as Canadians, Christians, and as human beings to save someone's life.

The students of Pierre de Coubertin School raised $547, with the expectation that the Canadian Government would match that amount. We should be proud of our children, who by their thoughts and deeds express the joy of being Canadian, always ready to love and help.

I am touched by the kindness of these students, and I stand here today to thank them.

AGRICULTURE

NATIONAL FARMERS UNION—MINISTER'S ABSENCE FROM CONVENTION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, members of the National Farmers Union felt that the cavalier attitude of the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) amounted to an insult to farmers across Canada.

The Minister failed to reply to letters inviting him to address the fifteenth annual convention of the NFU in Charlottetown, despite repeated efforts by the Union to get some sort of response. When the federal Minister of Agriculture failed to appear at the convention, a resolution was passed unanimously expressing the delegates' indignation and concern.

The resolution stated "that this convention go on record expressing its concern and indignation over the casual attitude of indifference and lack of communication" shown by the Minister in not responding to the invitation. It is the first time in 15 years that a federal Minister of Agriculture has not addressed the Farmers Union convention.

The resolution further noted that the serious problems confronting the family farms across the country, and the Minister's "indifference and casual attitude", do not bode well for the survival of Canadian food producers.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, after years of slowly and methodically regaining control over our economy, the Tories are poised to halt and probably reverse the maître chez nous process through the creation of Investment Canada. The Tories should have named it "Sell-out Canada".

The lack of concern among Tories for Canadian independence and Canadian sovereignty, whether political or economic, should not come as a surprise. The Tories have never been able to shake the "master-slave" mode of thinking. In the early years of this century the Tories were determined to keep us bound to Britain. Arthur Meighen said: "Ready, aye ready," to Lloyd George during the Chanak crisis. Now we have "branch-plant Brian" saying: "Ready, aye ready", to Ronnie Reagan and the captains of U.S. industry.

It is hardly a coincidence that the Government should make the announcement of FIRA's demise on the eve of the Prime Minister's "cap-in-hand" speech to the Economic Club of New York. I am sure he will make the corporate boys at the Iron Ore Company misty-eyed with pride.

On the whole, FIRA was good legislation. It had the effect it was intended to have. With the exception of the recession years, foreign investment in Canada increased annually from 1974 on. But, the investment was responsive to Canadian needs. In every major sector of the economy there was a reduction in the amount of foreign ownership. One need only consult the figures for foreign control of Canadian industry from 1971 to 1981. Mining went from—

[English]

PEACE

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister and of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. During the election campaign, as well as during the debates last year about the peace mission of the then Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, both the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that they welcomed that initiative, and that they would support any initiative of that nature.

Is it still the policy of the Government to maintain that same type of policy, to try to initiate on our own, as Canadians, some peace policies around the world? Or are we to take for granted the statement in The Toronto Star of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who said that the peace mission was no longer valid for the Prime Minister of Canada?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the views of the Prime Minister and of this Party were fully expressed during the debate which occurred immediately prior to the rising of the House last June, when we had, before the House, the debate on the Bill to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace. Indeed—

Mr. Chrétien: And Security.

Mr. Nielsen: —and Security. Indeed, the Prime Minister has said since that time that those initiatives will not only be followed but will be increased.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, do I understand from the Deputy Prime Minister that the statement reported over the weekend, that the peace initiative was not valid because Canada was taking a course of its own and that in the future the policies of the administration would be to do exactly as the Americans would do, was apparently made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs as quoted in The Toronto Star on Sunday?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it is not deliberate on the Hon. Member's part to distort the Prime Minister's position on this matter. I have not had the advantage of reading what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said, but certainly I know it to be the intention of the Prime Minister and of his Government to work very closely with countries throughout the world in an effort to bring about that peace which is so highly desired by all of us in Canada, and, indeed, all of us throughout the world.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER CANADA WAS CONSULTED

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister. Could he inform the House why, in an interview given by the U.S. Secretary of state on the weekend, Mr. Shultz stated that he was consulting the allies of the United States before meeting with Mr. Gromyko and failed to indicate that Canada had been consulted? Has Canada been consulted? If not, does the Deputy Prime Minister intend to take the necessary steps to ensure that Canada's voice is heard by the United States before it meets with Mr. Gromyko?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Prime Minister will seek every appropriate occasion to generate vigorous discussions, not only with the United States but with the leaders of other countries in the world, to pursue the objective which we all commonly hold in the search for peace.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

DEPLOYMENT OF CRUISE MISSILES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question along the same line, and as the Minister of Defence is in his seat perhaps he is the most appropriate person to answer.

On November 30 I raised a question in the House concerning the serious threat to the whole North American defence system occasioned by the major deployment by the Soviets of Cruise missiles on submarines and bomber aircraft. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said he would consider raising that matter with the Soviets and the Americans as part of the agenda at the Geneva arms talks. That has now been rejected. If the Government has rejected that approach to try to provide a ban on the deployment, what is the answer, and what is the position of the Government in relation to that major new threat in the whole area of arms escalation?

• (1420)

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would think that the real answer to the Hon. Member's question is the reduction of nuclear armaments in the world. I believe that is what the Secretary of State of the United States, and the Foreign Minister of the U.S.S.R. are going to be meeting about in January, and I believe that is what the Foreign Ministers at the NATO meeting are going to be discussing this week.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I could not agree more with the Hon. Minister. However, if that is the case, why is the Government refusing or rejecting any representations to either of the superpowers in order to make that case, and to express on behalf of the Canadian people our concern about that threat and that we would like them to put the question of banning the deployment of Cruise missiles on the agenda for the Geneva talks? Why, Sir, is the Minister not making that representation on behalf of Parliament and of the Canadian people?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are making every representation possible for the reduction of nuclear armaments in the world. I would ask the Hon. Member if he would give the Secretary of State for External Affairs some support—

Mr. Axworthy: I did.

Mr. Coates: —rather than putting obstacles—

Mr. Axworthy: He rejected it.

Mr. Coates: —in the way of his achievements in that direction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FOREIGN INVESTMENTS

DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

On his trip to the United States, why did the Minister discuss with Americans the changes the Government intends to make in the Foreign Investment Review Act?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure that I understand the thrust of the question put by the Hon. Member. We discussed in very general terms the whole question of foreign investment policy, industrial policy, and the approach we were going to be taking on deficit management. A wide range of things was discussed. I am not sure that I understand what the Hon. Member is driving at. However, the purpose of these meetings is to have a broad understanding of the policy direction between the two countries.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

INQUIRY WHETHER DETAIL OF CHANGES DISCUSSED

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, let me be a little clearer. We are talking here about major changes which have taken place, which were tabled in this House last Friday, with respect to foreign investments. Reports after that presentation indicated that the Minister had discussed—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Langdon: Would the Minister please confirm that the details of some of those changes had been discussed with the American authorities on his visit to the United States before that Bill was tabled?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no to that question. I did not discuss the details. I discussed the general direction in which this Government is going regarding the whole policy on foreign investment, but not the details.

EFFECT OF CHANGES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Would the Minister tell us whether in the course of those general discussions he managed to receive any assurances from the United States that, in fact, such changes in law as you were talking about in Cabinet at that stage would lead to any new jobs or new investment here in this country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has to understand that neither the Government of Canada nor the Government of the United States orders the private sector to invest or not invest. Those are decisions which are taken by the private sector in response to the general policy environment. What we are trying to do, and what the Americans encouraged us to do, is to improve the environment for private sector investment, because that is the way we can create permanent jobs. The only way we are going to solve the unemployment problem in this country is through private sector job creation.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MANUFACTURE AND STORAGE OF LETHAL GASES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environement. I would like to ask the Minister, one week after the Bhopal tragedy, whether she can assure this House, and all Canadians, that there is no manufacture or storage of lethal gases, including methyl isocyanate, in this country? If she cannot give us that assurance, would the Minister be prepared to produce a map indicating the locations, for the benefit of both municipal and provincial Governments?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, to answer my hon. colleague's question, I would like to point out I already said that the substance responsible for the tragedy in Bhopal is not manufactured in Canada. We do, of course, manufacture thousands of hazardous products.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET PROVINCIAL COUNTERPARTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Minister has answered my question in full. However, in view of the importance of this issue, and the importance of preventive measures for the protection of Canadians at large, would the Minister be willing, before her departure for Europe, to meet with her provincial counterparts and discuss a long list of preventive measures which can only be implemented by the municipal and provincial Governments together?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to meet my provincial counterparts to discuss this matter before I leave for Europe. However, I repeat that I have asked my senior officials to meet with their counterparts in the provincial governments and industry. They are experts in this field and I have asked them to reassess the series of emergency measures we have designed to cope with crisis situations, and I have every confidence in their judgment.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

RECORD OF FOREIGN OWNED COMPANIES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Is the Minister aware that Canada has more foreign ownership and control per capita than any other industrialized nation in the world? Does he know that of the top 50 companies in Canada, the greatest number of lost jobs over the past two years was due to U.S. owned companies? Does the Minister also know that in the year 1983 Canada had a deficit of $9.4 billion in interest and dividend payments primarily due to the United States?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, I would remind him that in much of the period back to 1976 we had our experience and experimentation with FIRA. There has been a net outflow of direct investment in this country, and tens of thousands of Canadians are now jobless today, thanks to that experiment.

AGENCY ELIMINATION—EFFECT ON INVESTMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister care to explain how eliminating FIRA will in any way influence investment in Canada by Canadian companies, which do not have to go through FIRA, if they already exist here, in order to decide whether to invest or not?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again in answer to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, I would remind him that reinvestment of retained earnings by non-Canadian companies in Canada is one of the more positive factors in our country's investment program at the present time. However, we in this Party believe that the over-all amount which is invested in new plant and machinery must go up dramatically if we are to get Canadians back to work.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE—REQUEST FOR RE-EXAMINATION OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It is staggering for the future of our country that people who are researching the continued existence of indigenous animals in our environment, in co-operative research with the United States and the provinces, are being laid off. Will the Minister re-examine these cuts which have decimated the Canadian Wildlife Service?

● (1430)

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have explained many times—I think we have a serious communications problem in this House, because my hon. colleagues opposite do not seem to understand what I am saying—I have explained many times that we are continuing to shoulder our responsibilities under our federal mandate which concerns threatened species and migratory birds, and that we are withdrawing from areas under provincial jurisdiction which concern other animals.

[English]

TERMINATED POSITIONS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE JOB DESCRIPTIONS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, there is a problem of communication because this is rampant and flagrant irresponsibility on the part of the Government. Will the Minister table the 84 job descriptions of positions which have been terminated in the Canadian Wildlife Service, so the people of Canada can really see what the Government thinks of the environment?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, since we have decided to make budgetary cutbacks as a result of the incredible deficit we inherited from the previous government, I do not intend to bring back to the Department the 84 positions mentioned by my hon. friend.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

PRACTICE OF FOREIGN OWNED COMPANIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Science and Technology. In view of the fact that many foreign companies when they came into Canada had much of their research and development done by their parent companies, can the Minister tell the House what he proposes to do to stop this practice or control it in the future?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, of course the new Government intends to make it more attractive for those companies to do research and development in Canada, through a variety of incentives which will become evident to this House in the coming months, including the more active use of world product mandates than has been the case in the past.

FREE ECONOMIC ZONES PROPOSAL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister how far the Government is prepared to go to attract foreign investment? Do those incentives include what the British Columbia Social Credit Government proposed, that is, free economic zones which apparently will take away trade union rights, cut back on wages and benefits to employees, and so on? Is the Minister prepared to rule that out? Will he not go that far?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the NDP is prepared to rule out the concept of free economic zones. We have not yet ruled out that possibility.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I want to welcome him back after his being away from the House for two weeks. My question concerns the farm debt crisis which is facing many agricultural producers today. Over a month ago the Minister instituted a moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures, but he has really taken no action to relieve the problem during this last month. Is the Minister preparing to bring in legislation before the Christmas recess, because the moratorium ends on January 15? If he does not, it is going to be seen as a cynical move to avoid farm bankruptcies during the Christmas recess.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I take some satisfaction in the fact that the Hon. Member knew I was absent. The Hon. Member's allegation that nothing has been done with respect to the suspension of farm foreclosures by the FCC after January 15 is false. Since that time I have made an announcement concerning the utilization of the FCC appeal boards across the country. If FCC clients wish, they can appeal their cases to the appeal boards.

As well, in keeping with a campaign commitment, we are going forward with a pilot project involving the FCC, the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture, farmers, farm organizations and, indeed, traditional lending agencies. In addition to that, I made an announcement—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect to the Minister. Thank you.

PROPOSED UNITED STATES PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, over two months ago the Government of the United States instituted a set-aside-program to help active and productive producers get through the debt crisis. Are this Minister and this Government willing to institute a similar program for Canadian agricultural producers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my information is that the legislation to which the Hon.

Member refers is not yet law. However, as I attempted to indicate in my response to the Hon. Member's first question, I made an announcement concerning lowering of FCC interest rates.

SHIPBUILDING

ASSISTANCE PROGRAM TERMINATION DATE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry and pertains to the expiration of the Shipbuilding Industry Assistance Program, which is to come about on June 30, 1985. During the election the Conservatives promised the shipbuilding industry would receive top priority from their Government. Is the Minister prepared to co-operate with the Shipbuilding and Ship Repair Association and major shipbuilders by extending that program for at least two years through to June 30, 1987?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this matter is under review. I assure the Hon. Member that we are giving it a top priority. In fact my officials and myself have met with representatives of the shipbuilding industry, and I can assure the Hon. Member that we will continue to give it a priority with a view to working out a long-term satisfactory arrangement for the shipbuilders of this country.

EFFECT ON VESSEL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is of course aware that this industry is going through the worst recession since World War II, with an enormous loss of employment. There is currently a builder operating in the—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect.

Mr. Skelly: Is the Minister aware that a vessel to be built in Vancouver if the SIAP Program is continued will be built in Korea if he does not make an announcement very soon on this matter?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the vessel to which the Hon. Member refers. That has, of course, been reviewed during some of the discussions we have had with the industry.

EXTERNAL AID

CHARITABLE DONATION FOR MISSIONARIES IN ETHIOPIA

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister acting for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would like to bring to his attention the fact that late last month arrangements were made for a donation amounting to $82,000, from Mr. Juthani of Sarnia, Ontario, to be given to the Missionaries of Charity headed by Mother Theresa in Addis Ababa. The money is currently in a trust fund in Addis Ababa and the arrangements were for the Canadian ambassador to make the donation at the embassy. My question is—leaving some out—could the Minister tell me the status of this donation? If it has not yet been given to Mother Theresa, when will the arrangements be made by the ambassador?

Hon. Jim Kelleher (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the Hon. Member's concern emanating from his constituency. I am advised that the Department is presently endeavouring to get the money to Mother Theresa, and is doing all it can to expedite the transfer of this money.

THE CENSUS

USEFULNESS OF DETAILED DATA ON ETHNIC COMPOSITION OF POPULATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services.

In his answer of December 6, 1984, the Minister stated that he had administrative records through which he could gather the data necessary to satisfy government requirements. Since questions 7 and 27 of the 1986 census for the first time concern natives and disability, can the Minister indicate precisely where the administrative records he referred to originated from, as far as natives and disability are concerned?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I believe I indicated that Statistics Canada has a wide variety of data gathering methods. The census is one, and that will be held at least every ten years for sure. There are statistical surveys, administrative data, and a whole host of other means by which Statistics Canada can gather the necessary information. I want to assure the Hon. Member that Statistics Canada will provide the necessary data so that these important policy questions can be addressed, based on the most accurate data possible regarding the question the Hon. Member raised.

● (1440)

REQUEST THAT 1986 CENSUS BE REINSTATED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the past the Minister promised that the cancellation of the census would be reviewed. In view of the fact that a number of Statistics Canada employees assigned to the census will be transferred January 1, only a few days away, why does the Minister not now admit that the cancellation of the census was a mistake? Why can't he and the Minister of Finance immediately withdraw, and reinstate the 1986 census?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, on the one hand, seemed to welcome the suggestion that there was going to be a review. He now suggests that we should not review it but should make a unilateral decision. He should make up his mind.

FORESTRY

REFORESTATION NEEDED IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Forestry. I am sure he is aware that there are over one million hectares of unsatisfactorily restocked lands in British Columbia, and that a proper program of reforestation would create 200,000 person years of employment. Will the Minister confirm that if the NSR lands are left untouched there will be a loss of at least 62,000 forest related jobs in British Columbia over the next three to four years?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, after having visited the area I am certainly aware of the concern of the people in the forestry industry regarding NSR lands in B.C. I do hope that the Government will be able to deal with this issue through the signing of a federal-provincial forest agreement very shortly.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister is aware that if he proceeds and signs the $30 million per year Canada-B.C. reforestation agreement which he seems intent on signing, no NSR lands will be replanted in British Columbia, none of the backlog will be dealt with, and at least 62,000 British Columbians can kiss their jobs goodbye as a result of the Minister signing that inappropriate agreement.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON RUMOURED LAY-OFFS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Communications, but since he is not in this House, I hope there will be someone on the government side to answer. It concerns reports that some 900 people might be laid off by the CBC as a result of the drastic cuts announced by the Minister of Finance. Since thousands of Canadians are concerned about losing their jobs, I would ask the Government, if not to give us details of the number of people who will be laid off, at least to tell us if indeed there will be 900 layoffs as rumoured.

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Acting Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Communications has indicated previously in the House, it will be appropriate for the Hon. Member to wait patiently for a few more days. The matter is still subject to consultation. In fact the President of the CBC is to make a recommendation to the Board of Governors shortly. When that recommendation is received, I am sure the Minister will be acting.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, does that answer mean that there will be a larger number of layoffs? Indeed, why did the Minister announce last Friday a new policy to make retirement easier by encouraging early retirement? Does this not mean there will be a massive layoff?

[English]

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I must repeat that the Hon. Member should await the announcement of the Minister as to the areas in the CBC where these savings will be achieved.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

SCRUTINY BY AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. During the past two years, the Auditor General's scrutiny of Government expenditures was often made almost impossible because of essential and factual documents that were considered confidential Cabinet documents. In view of the open policy announced by his Party during the election campaign, could the Deputy Prime Minister give the House the assurance that the Government will remove such obstacles in future?

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Just say yes, Erik.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I cannot possibly say yes because the hon. gentleman has smuggled premises into his question which are quite false. There are no obstacles now to the Auditor General pursuing the fulfillment of his statutory duties under the Act which enables him to do so. Indeed, the Prime Minister has said repeatedly that we are prepared to go well beyond that. May I ask the hon. gentleman how much more open we might be than to suggest that Mr. Hopper appear before the Public Accounts Committee? How much more open can we be than to suggest that the chairman consult with her colleagues on that committee with a view to permitting Mr. Dye to ask any questions that he pleases of Mr. Hopper, with respect to that transaction?

AUDITOR GENERAL

PETRO-CANADA PURCHASE OF PETROFINA—EXAMINATION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Deputy Prime Minister please indicate to the House how he expects, in a one and one-half hour committee session, that the Auditor General can investigate a $1.7 billion take-over? Why should the Auditor General not be able to have the specific documents to work from, rather than being shut into a committee session to ask a few questions?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as we have heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources reassure the House, the Auditor General has received all of the documents that it is possible for the Department to give to him in order for Mr. Dye to accomplish his audit. If Mr. Dye has any other specific requirements, I am unaware that he has made requests for any such specific documents.

Mr. Cassidy: He is going to court to get them.

Mr. Nielsen: I have read the pleadings in that court case. The specifics which Mr. Dye has gone to court for are a full range of Privy Council documents. As far as the Petrofina-Petro-Canada audit is concerned, he has had everything the Government can possibly supply him through the appropriate Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

NATIONAL REVENUE

VERIFICATION OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. I will let him get back to his seat.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Did you rehearse it, Perrin?

Mr. Blenkarn: The Minister indicated publicly that the Government was out $1.5 billion by virtue of R and D investment credits. That would indicate about $3 billion worth of R and D investment which would not normally have taken place. What effort is the Minister making to ensure that that R and D investment actually takes place? Is he actually going to be going after people who improperly use that investment credit? What action is he taking on that matter?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if I had known that was the question, I would have spoken to the Hon. Member when I was down at that end.

The Government does indeed have a concern with regard to R and D tax flips. An enormous volume of them have gone through. The Government is looking at them to ensure that any which are claimed are legitimate, and that people are not abusing the system. In any case where we find that fraud exists we obviously take the appropriate action.

THE CONSTITUTION

UNILINGUAL QUEBEC TRAFFIC TICKET—GOVERNMENT FACTUM

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question would have been for the Secretary of State. In his absence I will address it to the Minister of Justice, that very relaxed, carefree, and careless Minister who does not read the factums that are before the court in his name. Has he read the factum in the case of the appellant, MacDonald, with regard to the right of English-speaking Canadians to have documents of the courts served on them in English in Quebec? My first question is whether he has read the document.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has read the document, but he still knows nothing about it.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, that is what I meant by a slip-shod Minister. He does not even know how to answer a question.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, by his own admission the Minister has not read the document. Will he at least withdraw it? That is arrogance that the Minister just displayed.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is only frustrating himself in his attempts to make a mountain out of a legal mole-hill. The hon. mole is not being very successful.

• (1450)

The intervention in the MacDonald case to which the hon. gentleman keeps referring was decided upon back in 1983. I have made myself familiar with the factum and the legal position the Government is taking. The legal opinion of the Department of Justice in this matter has not changed in the last five to six years. It is the same position that we advanced in the Bilodeau case in Manitoba that was accepted by the Court of Appeal for Manitoba, and it is the same in the particular case be is talking about.

As a matter of policy, I believe that tickets should be issued in both languages in Montreal but, as a matter of law, according to Section 133 of the Constitution, it is our opinion that they are not required to be in both languages, but just in one of the official languages. There is a difference between what the law is and what the law should be.

Oral Questions

AIR SAFETY

MAINTENANCE OF ONTARIO GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Given the recent scathing report of the regional Director of Aviation Regulations for Transport Canada which pointed to serious deficiencies in airworthiness, maintenance, and inspections of the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources air fleet, what plans does the Minister have to ensure that the Ontario Government will maintain its aircraft in proper and safe working order and that the province's restraint program will not jeopardize air safety?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that matter is being investigated by Transport Canada officials. Of course the Ontario Government, as everyone else, will be called upon to conform to the air regulations and standards.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PROVINCIAL MINISTER

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister agree with his Conservative colleague, the Ontario Minister of Natural Resources, who said, in responding to questions about this matter: "The Department of Transport should be doing more with its time than trying to cross-analyse another government agency". Will this have any bearing on the Minister's action?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the matter is being investigated by Transport Canada officials. I will report on the outcome when it is completed.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

ANNOUNCED OVERHAUL OF QUEBEC PENSION PLAN—CO-ORDINATION MEASURES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last weekend Premier Lévesque indicated that his Government is planning a major overhaul of the Quebec Pension Plan. Would the Minister indicate to the House if he has met with his provincial counterpart to ensure co-ordination between any changes that are planned to the Quebec system and those that would follow suit in terms of changes to the Canada Pension Plan?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, a meeting which I had planned with my counterpart in the Province of Quebec was to take place two or three days after his resignation. Thus, I have not had an opportunity to discuss this with him.

I am very conscious of the concerns raised by the Hon. Member and I will keep them very much in mind when we do get together.

TIMETABLE QUERY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Is the Minister prepared to indicate to the House if the Government is prepared at this time to give a timetable on changes and improvements to the Canada Pension Plan, which I believe all Members of the House agree are long overdue?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared at this time to give a precise timetable. I can indicate to the Hon. Member that it is an area with which we are quite concerned and with which we want to deal. Matters related to pension reform will be addressed in the budget, I would hope, but it is very difficult to give a specific timetable on the full range of pension reforms at this time.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

BASIS FOR AWARDING CONTRACTS—REQUEST THAT CONTRACTS BE REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. According to Saturday's Montreal Gazette, the Secretary of State for External Affairs recently withdrew a $6 million CIDA contract awarded to a Quebec consortium by his Liberal predecessor and has given it, instead, to a consortium in British Columbia which was the original winner in the CIDA competition.

Will he assure the House that all CIDA contracts will now be awarded on the basis of the point system developed by CIDA? To help ensure this, will the Government table contract bids and evaluations in the relevant standing committee?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the account in The Gazette to which the Hon. Member refers. I shall do so, and I will consider the rest of her question as representation and give the appropriate consideration thereto.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S CONSIDERATION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister is giving consideration to the point system that CIDA uses and the tabling of contract bids and evaluations, will he also consider—particularly when he says yes to those two requests—abolishing the Tory committee that advises who should get bids?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know of no such Tory committee, and I believe I would if there was one. In any event, I will take the Hon. Member's representations under very serious consideration.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR SINGAPORE ROUTE DETAILS

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint Paul): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

As the House is aware, starting January 15, Air Canada will be flying to Singapore. I found out not long ago that the flight will originate from Toronto International Airport, with crews from Montreal. I would like to ask the Minister first of all, whether it will be possible to have this flight leave from Mirabel International Airport which was built and designed for this purpose, and second, whether he is prepared to let 100 employees, all Air Canada flight attendants, be moved to Toronto without their having a say in the matter?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, we have taken the question as notice. We shall make enquiries to find out why this flight will originate from Toronto instead of from Montreal, and we will pass on the appropriate information to the Hon. Member.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

REQUEST FOR REASONS WHY MINISTERS ABSENT FROM DEBATE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the debate on peace and the nuclear arms freeze which started this morning and will continue this afternoon, I would like to know why neither the Prime Minister nor the Secretary of State for External Affairs nor the Minister of National Defence have been in the House to take part in this debate on an issue that is of vital importance for this country and for the entire world.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Prime Minister is in New York today engaged in the business of the country. As she knows, or should know, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in Brussels at very important meetings, on behalf of our country, in that part of the world.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this issue has been on the Order Paper since last Friday, and we have known about it since last Wednesday. If the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Minister of National Defence will not participate in the debate, will the Government at least provide a Minister who is prepared to put forth the position of the Government on this issue, which was not the position put forward by the Minister this morning?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member will contain herself and be patient, I am sure she will probably hear the most brilliant, outstanding contribution to the debate this afternoon which will be made by the Minister of National Defence.

AUDITOR GENERAL

REQUEST FOR ACCESS TO CABINET DOCUMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, before I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister, I am glad to hear that the Minister of National Defence will change his approach.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: My question arises from an answer given by the Deputy Prime Minister to an earlier question from the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. In his response the Minister asked for suggestions about more openness for the Auditor General. Considering that the Auditors General in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island are given continuing right of access to documents considered by a previous Cabinet, will this Government live up to its commitment to openness and give those powers to the federal Auditor General?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, indeed, the Prime Minister has met with the Hon. Member and with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition with respect to that particular aspect and several other aspects of the problem. However, the facts are that the Auditor General, in connection with the case at hand, Petrofina-Petro-Canada, has been provided with all of the documents through the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that he needs to complete his audit. What he is asking for now may well be available through Petro-Canada.

• (1500)

Petro-Canada, in the form of Mr. Hopper, is going to be appearing before the Public Accounts Committee. I would suggest, in that spirit of openness, that Mr. Dye be invited. If I were a member of that committee, I would put the proposal forward that he be invited to question Mr. Hopper, but not for an hour and a half. We have seen committees sit in this House for days and weeks, and weeks on end, and if Mr. Dye needs that much time with Mr. Hopper in order to satisfy himself, then members of that committee could surely accommodate him.

PRIVILEGE

REPLY OF MR. CROSBIE DURING QUESTION PERIOD ALLEGED FALSE

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the House that I am in receipt of a question of privilege in the name of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege, of which I gave you notice on Friday.

On December 6 I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to tell the House who in the Government approved the Government's factum in the Duncan MacDonald case before the Supreme Court. Duncan MacDonald of Montreal is asking the Supreme Court to confirm that under Section 133 of the Constitution of Canada he has the right to have a court summons in Quebec in the English language.

An Hon. Member: What is the question of privilege?

Mr. Allmand: I will get to that in a minute—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Hon. Member will start, please, with the question of privilege.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I need some explanation. The question of privilege, very briefly, is that the Minister in answering my question on December 6—and I have to put the question again to the House—said that I should have been aware that the factum had been presented to the Supreme Court denying MacDonald's contention because it was approved by the Government of which I was a member. I quote his answer, Mr. Speaker:

> —the hon. gentleman should know about that. He was part of the government when it was approved.

Immediately after the Question Period I checked the factum. I found that the factum was dated November, 1984. I also discovered that the factum was only approved after the present Government took over in September. I checked further with the former Minister of Justice, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), who held that portfolio until September 17. He never approved of such a position.

My question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that this Minister of Justice rose in this House to give an answer to my question without any thought to the question whatever and made a completely false statement.

Mr. Speaker: I take it, with due respect to the Member, that we have a dispute with regard to facts arising out of an answer given to a question in Question Period. The Member fully knows the citations which indicate very clearly that no question of privilege can arise out of an answer given in Question Period.

Mr. Allmand: That is not my point.

Mr. Speaker: If that is not the Member's point, the Member has now had three minutes to introduce a question of privilege and is saying that what I have just recited as his question of privilege is not his question of privilege. Does the Member have a new question of privilege?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, if we had a bit of time to explain our question—

Mr. Speaker: May I say very carefully to the Member and to all Members that the question of privilege is the ultimate parliamentary question. That is precisely why long speeches in advance of presenting the case for a prima facie case of privilege are not allowed. Therefore one must begin with a clear statement of the question of privilege that it is being claimed has been breached. I invite the Member to do so.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege, and I will put it as succintly as possible, is that if this Question Period is to have any meaning, then the Ministers on the government side must give serious attention to the questions asked and make an attempt to answer a question seriously.

Mr. Speaker: May I remind the Member, please—

Mr. Prud'homme: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It is difficult to recognize a Member on a point of order during a question of privilege. I think the Hon. Member knows that. Does the Member have some submission he wishes to make with regard to this question of privilege?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, may I—

Mr. Speaker: No, with due respect. Let me make this very simple. I will explain why. There is no question of privilege here.

Mr. Crosbie: I have the right to reply.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question of privilege, I repeat to Hon. Members, is the basis of all of our privileges and should not be treated lightly. May I refer Members to Citation 19(2) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which reads as follows:

> The failure of a Minister of the Crown to answer a question may not be raised as a question of privilege.

The refusal of a Minister to answer a question on the grounds of public interest cannot be raised as a matter of privilege. I can go on with citation after citation. If a Member is dissatisfied with the answer to a question, the same principle applies. This is, in effect, the failure of a Minister to answer a question to the Member's satisfaction. If a Member believes that an answer contains an error of fact, this is not a mater of privilege. If the Minister agrees there has been an error of fact, it is open to him to correct it. If he disagrees, it becomes a matter of debate, not a matter of privilege.

Misunderstandings regularly occur—I will take a minute to explain this, if I may, for the benefit particularly of new Members; I presume others know this—with regard to the matters which constitute questions of privilege, and Members in the past have regularly tried to raise questions of privilege arising out of answers to questions. I think it is important to state for the record that the answers to questions have nothing to do with parliamentary privilege. If a Member is dissatisfied with an answer, he should pursue the matter in some other way. For example, by raising it on the adjournment motion or, as the Member well knows, if there are other accusations or concerns that he has, he has remedies open to him. I therefore find there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have a point of order from the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, is it your ruling that if in answer to a question a Minister uses unparliamentary language or accuses the person of knowingly misleading the House—

Mr. Deans: That is hypothetical.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —then that cannot be raised?

Mr. Speaker: The answer is coming from the far corner of the House. No Speaker would ever dare try to give an answer to that question because it is purely hypothetical. I can assure you the Speaker would be indulging in what lawyers know as obiter dicta, and every Speaker who tries that has got himself in trouble. This Speaker is not going to give answers in advance to questions that are hypothetical, with due respect.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. I appreciate the ruling you made with respect to differing with the Minister's answer, if there is a dispute on a question of fact or if he does not answer a question. I must say I would look for direction from the Chair on what an Hon. Member must do when he has been misled—it is not just a question of fact—in the House on a very sensitive point in the Province of Quebec among English-speaking people.

Mr. Speaker: I will take that as a serious matter and suggest to the Member that what he should do is put the matter down for the adjournment motion. The Member knows he has an obligation to do that on the day of the question. However, under the circumstances, given that this is the first time we have dealt with this matter in this way in this Parliament, I am prepared to assume that I have received a notice from the Member with regard to that question and answer if he so chooses.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. gentleman is making false statements in this House about positions I have taken.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of order. Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: It is absolutely false. I will not say "knowingly false" because he does not know enough to say anything.

Mr. Nunziata: Is it any wonder you are not the Leader?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I guess every Speaker is going to have a day like this!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I am sure with patience on both sides, from the Chair and from the House, we will get to know the rules much better. The Hon. Member just said that the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) misled the House. I would like your direction. If this is not a question of privilege, what is a question of privilege?

Mr. Speaker: If a Member uses language which causes disorder in the House or language which is unparliamentary, it is the Speaker's obligation to require that that language be withdrawn. Or if it is brought to the attention of the Speaker by another Member, it is the obligation of the Speaker to require that that language be withdrawn.

● (1510)

The word "false", if one cares to consult Beauchesne, is a fascinating word. It has variously been ruled in order and out of order, if one reads the chapters and the rulings very carefully. If Members want a small lecture for the rest of the day on what a Speaker has to do with his hours of reading Beauchesne, I will give it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: However, turning to the issue of when the word "false" is used, if the word is used normally to say that a Member has stated a falsehood in the sense that one believes what he is saying is wrong or is not true as a matter of fact, then that is parliamentary. Now I am indulging in an obiter dictum. Watch out! However, those are basically the rulings which have been made on that basis. If someone were to say that a Member had knowingly uttered a falsehood—in other words, had challenged his character—one would be in a different situation. I heard both Members say that each was speaking falsehoods. They were saying things which they believed were in disagreement. That is what I heard. Now that we have dealt with this question of privilege and have given the Member what I believe is advice as to what he should do with it, I suggest that we should leave this matter to the late show—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I think someone took me the wrong way on that! With respect, I think we should leave this matter to the late show if the Member cares to pursue that remedy. Presumably both Members would then have the right to debate the matter.

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, could we leave this matter here and proceed?

Point of Order—Mr. Lewis

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, since you are responsible for budgets in this place, I submit that there has been a serious misappropriation of funds. This Minister is paid to do his homework and he has not been doing it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Dingwall: A point of order—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, this is verging on real disorder. Could we just leave it here, please?

POINTS OF ORDER

WEARING OF POLITICAL BUTTONS IN CHAMBER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a separate point of order arising out of Question Period, specifically the questions asked by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). In Beauchesne it is very clear, Mr. Speaker, that you are responsible for decorum in the House. I submit that it cheapens the House for Members to wear political buttons in the Chamber.

I suggest this with reluctance because it is obvious that Ottawa Centre, as a provincial riding, deserves better representation than it has had in the past. Also I do so with reluctance because, if that Hon. Member were to wear that button and ask more questions, we would win the election for sure.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Keeper: What was the name on the button?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): How do you spell her last name?

Mr. Speaker: May I say with respect that new Members have just had a small lesson on how to sneak in a political point through a phony point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Privilege, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Speaker: Privilege, privilege, privilege. Actually, that is between all of us as old friends. May I respond to the point of order.

Ms. Copps: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is a rule to which the Hon. Member is referring about displays in the House. I take it the Hon. Member was basing his point of order on that. I had seen the badge and had already looked up the citation to determine in my own mind, if it was raised, what was the answer. Citation 333 in Beauchesne's reads:

> Speakers have consistently ruled that it is improper to produce exhibits of any sort in the Chamber.

I have checked the precedents. They have referred to a number of other matters in the past. Since most Members are expected in fact to wear pins on their lapels to indicate that they are Members of the House, I would be in some difficulty if I were to rule that a lapel pin was a violation of the House. If I were to rule that some other pin was improper, I would be creating a problem for Members required to wear pins to get themselves into the building. Therefore I cannot find that there has been a breach of the privileges of the House by the wearing of the badge.

I would remind Members of the practices which occurred in the last Parliament during both leadership conventions. I see other Members rising to put pins on. On the basis of the precedents, this is a matter for which the Speaker has some difficulty finding any other solution other than to say that it is not a point of order. Members may wish to have the matter of wearing other than parliamentary badges dealt with in the usual way by the standing committee of the House.

Mr. Prud'homme: On this point, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deans: On this point—

Mr. Speaker: I have already ruled on the point. It cannot be on this point.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rose for clarification; that was all. I just wanted to be clear. Was the button the one that read "Elect Evelyn Gigantes"?

Mr. Speaker: Lesson two! Can we proceed?

USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am seeking some guidance. On a number of occasions, both from the Speaker's chair and from the government side of the House, there have been declarations that this is not Queen's Park. Could the Speaker in fact clarify for the House just what are the regulations in this august Chamber with respect to the issue of truth? It seems to me that when a Member accuses another Member—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I admire the ingenuity of the point and I take it as sincere. Therefore I refer the Member to the rules and to various books, if one wants to look at them—Beauchesne, Erskine May, and Bourinot if one wants to go back that far—and to the rulings given by previous Speakers on the use of what is parliamentary language and what is not. I think that is all I can do today.

HUMAN RIGHTS

THIRTY-SIXTH ANNIVERSARY OF UNIVERSAL DECLARATION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on December 10, 1948, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was adopted and proclaimed by the United Nations General Assembly. Besides outlining the civil and political rights which characterized traditional codes of human rights, the Universal Declaration went further by including economic, social and cultural rights. It became the initial document in what was to become the International Bill of Human Rights.

The importance of the Declaration lies in its provision of a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations and in its effectiveness as a yardstick to measure the compliance by governments with the international standards of human rights.

I think it is important to note on this anniversary that in countless disputes the United Nations has referred to the Declaration, whether in dealing with allegations of forced labour, racial discrimination, customs inconsistent with the dignity of women, or other abuses of fundamental rights and freedoms.

Today, 36 years after the proclamation of the Universal Declaration, I am pleased and privileged to recognize Human Rights Day, 1984, which is so justly chosen to coincide with the birthdate of this historic document.

It was Dag Hammarskjold who said:

Only on a scrutiny of truth, can a future of peace and justice be built.

During the past year Canada's reports to the United Nations on our implementation of civil and political rights and the Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination came under scrutiny by all appropriate UN bodies. Canada was commended for the thoroughness of our reporting.

In the coming year Canada will be taking yet another important step in enhancing the human rights protection of individual Canadians with the coming into force of the equality provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms on April 17, 1985.

The Government of Canada is also committed to joining with other governments throughout the world in undertaking special efforts such as support to the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons and the Second Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

I should like to highlight two of the special international events in which Canada will be an active participant in 1985. The first is the designation of 1985 as International Youth Year by the UN. This year will see a wide range of international, national and local activities being undertaken by young people in countries throughout the world focusing on the themes of participation, development and peace. These themes have very differing aspects in various parts of the world. One can consider, for instance, that in some countries the bridge between infancy and adult responsibilities is sudden and cruel while in developed countries the transition is more gradual.

• (1520)

The second event is the World Conference on the UN Decade for Women which will be held in Nairobi next July. Canada strongly supports the attainment of full equality for women at home and abroad, their participation in the search for international peace and co-operation and their full integration in economic and social development.

We also encourage the increasing recognition for the critical role that women play in developing countries, particularly in such vital activities as the production of food. It is certainly true that women have often suffered most in times of natural disasters such as famine. Women in drought-stricken countries often give up their meagre scraps of food so that their children may live. Sometimes it is a vain sacrifice.

I think that all Canadians would like me to draw particular attention to the acute food shortage in Africa, as hunger clearly has a bearing on the enjoyment of the rights enshrined in the Universal Declaration. Freedom from hunger is without doubt an essential element in the realization of the dignity and worth of the individual. An ongoing program to help others to feed themselves by improving methods of production, conservation and distribution of food is a high priority in our efforts to assist developing countries; but drought and famine are natural disasters which require an immediate and more direct humanitarian response.

To this end, the Government of Canada has created the post of Canadian Emergency Co-ordinator for the African Famine and has pledged $50 million to help alleviate this critical situation. The broad and compassionate response that countless Canadians have made to the crisis in Ethiopia is particularly laudable as it springs from individual initiatives and concern.

Human Rights Day provides an opportunity for all Canadians to reflect on the efforts we have made both at home and abroad to promote and protect human rights. I am, therefore, pleased and privileged to address the House on this day and to use this occasion to reinforce for all Canadians their Government's commitment to upholding the human rights and fundamental freedoms which are the foundations of a civilized and caring society.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to join in this activity today for the purpose of marking the thirty-sixth anniversary of the proclamation of which my hon. friend had spoken.

This Declaration of Human Rights has provided a benchmark to peoples and to countries of the world when it comes to setting standards with respect to basic human rights. It is also important that we rise in the House today to make these statements, as we are doing, because, as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) has said, tomorrow is Human Rights

Day 1984. It could be argued that every day should be human rights day. At the same time, there is some value in singling out a particular day of the year to pay special attention to a subject as important as basic human rights. Unfortunately, even in a country like Canada we need to be reminded from time to time about the importance of the concepts and provisions enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

While every day should be human rights day and while those of us in this House of Commons have a special responsibility to support the existence of and in fact to strengthen basic human rights for all our people and the peoples of this world every day, it is useful to set aside a special day as we are setting aside Human Rights Day 1984.

I am very proud to have been part of a Government that enshrined in the Constitution of Canada the Charter of Basic Rights and Freedoms. This Charter of Basic Rights and Freedoms is consistent with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It can be said that in many ways its provisions have been inspired by this Universal Declaration. In enshrining in the basic law of this country the kinds of rights and freedoms found in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Government of the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau did something that was widely supported eventually on all sides of this House and by people all across this country. Speaking of its being enshrined in the basic law of this country, I can say again that it is a step which is consistent with the importance and the thrust of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

As I recall the Declaration, it contains provisions not only for the strengthening and maintenance of what we commonly refer to as human rights, the basic right to speak, worship, make decisions for ourselves in terms of expression and ideas, but also talks about the right to food, shelter and education, matters important to our ability to live on this earth in peace, in security and dignity.

In conclusion, in marking the thirty-sixth anniversary of the proclamation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, we in this country, as well as reaffirming our commitment to what we commonly look upon as human rights, should also reaffirm our commitment to the kinds of basic rights such as food, shelter, education and good health, those rights to be able to live in peace, harmony and dignity in this country and this world, which are so important to the people of this country and to all humankind.

I am pleased on behalf of the Official Opposition, of my Party, to join in the marking of the important occasion of which the Deputy Prime Minister spoke. The declaration in question helps to confirm the essential value of human personality, the essential value of humankind. If we forget this value, certainly we in this House and the people of this country are forgetting what is important to ensure not only the future of humanity but of the very earth itself.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on behalf of the New Democratic Party on this thirty-sixth anniversary of the signing of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Perhaps at the beginning it is important to recognize that our world has broadened its understanding of what human rights are since 1948. I would like to give two brief examples.

If we were writing the Declaration today, I am sure that we would use more sexually inclusive language. The first article states: "All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood". If we were writing this declaration today, I think we would also want to include the word "sisterhood". The philosopher Wittgenstein once said: "The limits of my language are the limits of my world". Language that discriminates against women leads to action that discriminates against them. Therefore, it is important that we have inclusive language. That would go for something such as the Declaration of Human Rights.

If we were writing the Declaration today, we would also want to include an article to the effect that everyone has the right to live in a clean and healthy environment. This is especially underscored since last week's Union Carbide disaster in Bhopal, India, where thousands of people were killed or maimed. We do not need to go to India to see the importance of that issue. In the seventies, high mercury levels on the English-Wabigoon River system destroyed the health and economy of local Indian communities. We have seen and heard of the destruction of the environment and the livelihood of the Lubicon Indians and the concerns of the Fort McKay band in northern Alberta about the pollution from the oil sands developments in Fort McMurray.

As we look at human rights, we must do so both globally and nationally. Globally, it is important, especially today when we are having a debate on a nuclear freeze, to remember Article 3 which states: "Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person." It is important that we, as a world, come to terms with the whole question of nuclear warfare in order for Article 3 to have some meaning and substance.

Globally, we face a situation of widespread denial of rights which most people in Canada take for granted. Article 15 states:

> Everyone has the right to a nationality. No one shall be deprived of his nationality.

It is something which Canadians take for granted. Why do they have to bother putting it into a declaration of rights?

There was an interesting report on the radio this morning regarding Bishop Desmond Tutu, the winner of this year's Nobel Peace Prize. When he met with President Reagan, the Bishop told the President that he did not travel on a South African passport but, rather on a travel document which describes his nationality as being "undeterminable at present". He told President Reagan that his people were being turned into aliens in the land of their birth. Even the right to a nationality is something which cannot be taken for granted in South Africa.

To raise the issue of human rights is a dangerous practice in many countries. The 1983 report of Amnesty International states:

> Some governments have made it a criminal offence to publish information about human rights violations in their countries or to send such accounts abroad. Human rights activists have become prisoners of conscience as a result in the German Democratic Republic and China as well as in other countries. In the U.S.S.R. members of unofficial groups monitoring the state's adherence to the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, which the U.S.S.R. signed in 1975, have been inprisoned and sent into internal exile in remote and harsh parts of the country. In El Salvador people attempting to publicize human rights violations have themselves become victims of "disappearances". Relief workers working with refugees in Honduras have been arrested, tortured, and in some cases killed.

The report goes on to point out the hypocritical use of human rights issues in order to make political propaganda. It continues:

> Governments, news media and other institutions have used human rights issues in polemical attacks on other nations while deliberately giving inaccurate assessments of progress on human rights by their allies. Selectivity in human rights work has poisoned many discussions in the United Nations.

Amnesty International calls for a scrupulously non-partisan approach. All Canadians should be concerned, not only about global issues, but also about local Canadian issues. I refer specifically to the treatment of Japanese-Canadians. There should be a specific apology made to them and a redress mechanism should be provided. We must deal with the question of discrimination against Indian women. We should mark Human Rights Day not only with speeches, but with action.

PARITY PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-215, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Bill on parity pricing is to provide a parity price to farmers based on a cost of production formula for wheat, oats and barley for human consumption within Canada and to establish voluntary marketing commissions for pork and beef. In addition, its purpose is to lay the groundwork for parity prices for those producers.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION ON NUCLEAR ARMS FREEZE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House takes note of the following United Nations Resolution:

REVIEW AND IMPLEMENTATION OF THE CONCLUDING DOCUMENT OF THE TWELFTH SPECIAL SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY: IMPLEMENTATION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 38/73 E ON A NUCLEAR-ARMS FREEZE

Indonesia, Mexico, Pakistan, Sweden and Uruguay: draft resolution

Nuclear-arms freeze

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, adopted in 1978 and unanimously and categorically reaffirmed in 1982 during the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, its second special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly expressed deep concern over the threat to the very survival of manking posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Recalling also that on those occasions, it pointed out that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons are more than sufficient to destroy all life on earth and stressed that manking is therefore confronted with a choice: halt the arms race and proceed to disarmament or face annihilation,

Noting that the conditions prevailing today are a source of even more serious concern than those existing in 1978 because of several factors, such as the deterioration of the international situation, the increase in the accuracy, speed and destructive power of nuclear weapons, the promotion of illusory doctrines of "limited" or "winnable" nuclear war and the many false alarms which have occured owing to accidental reasons,

Noting also that the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi in March 1983, declared that the renewed escalation in the nuclear-arms race, both in its quantitative and qualitative dimensions, as well as reliance on doctrines of nuclear deterrence, has heightened the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and led to greater insecurity and instability in international relations,

Bearing in mind that in their Joint Declaration issued on 22 May, 1984, the Heads of Government of six Member States of the United Nations, coming from five different continents, urged the nuclear-weapon States "as a necessary first step . . . to halt all testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems",

Believing that it is a matter of the utmost urgency to stop any further increase in the awesome arsenals of the two major nuclear-weapon States, which already have ample retaliatory power and a frightening overkill capacity,

Believing also that it is equally urgent to initiate or resume negotiations for the substantial reduction and qualitative limitation of nuclear arms,

Considering that a nuclear-arms freeze, while not an end in itself, would constitute the most effective first step for the achievement of the above-mentioned two objectives, since it would encourage the initiation or resumption of negotiations and prevent the continued increase and qualitative improvement of existing nuclear weaponry during the period when the negotiations would take place,

Firmly convinced that at present the conditions are most propitious for such a freeze, since the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America are now equivalent in nuclear military power and it seems evident that there exists between them an overall rough parity,

Conscious that the application of the systems of surveillance, verification and control already agreed upon in some previous cases would be sufficient to provide a reasonable guarantee of faithful compliance with the undertakings derived from the freeze.

Convinced that it would be to the benefit of all other States possessing nuclear weapons to follow the example of the two major nuclear-weapon States,

1. Urges once more the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as the two major nuclear-weapon States, to proclaim either through simultaneous unilateral declarations or through a joint declaration, an immediate nuclear-arms freeze, which would be a first step towards the comprehensive programme of disarmament and whose structure and scope would be the following:

(a) It would embrace:

(i) A comprehensive test ban of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;

(ii) The complete cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;

(iii) A ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;

(iv) The complete cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

(b) It would be subject to appropriate measures and procedures of verification, such as those which have already been agreed by the parties in the case of the SALT I and SALT II treaties, and those agreed upon in principle by them during the preparatory trilateral negotiations on the comprehensive test ban held at Geneva;

(c) It would be of an initial five-year duration, subject to prolongation when other nuclear-weapon States join in such a freeze, as the General Assembly urges them to do;

2. Notes with satisfaction that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have already submitted the report requested in General Assembly resolution 38/73 E of 15 December 1983;

3. Hopes that the other major nuclear-weapon State will find it possible to comply also with the request of the General Assembly before the closure of its thirty-ninth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 39/. . . on a nuclear-arms freeze".

and calls upon the Government to adopt it as policy thereby rejecting the position of the previous administration.

Mr. Speaker: Before hearing the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), I am in a position to consider a matter previously raised regarding the admissibility of the amendment before the House. I gather that the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) would like to make a submission at this time. As I heard no submissions earlier on this matter, I take it the Hon. Member for Windsor West is rising to make his submission on the matter now. On that point of order, I will recognize him.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind what happened when a question of privilege arose the other day, I felt that I would get to my feet quickly and put on the record my submissions with respect to the matter which you are ready to rule upon. In this case it is the admissibility of the amendment offered by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to the motion currently before the House. I would argue that the amendment is properly acceptable and I would do so by bringing to the attention of Your Honour a number of citations.

I would first like to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, Citation 425 of Beauchesne, which states:

The object of an amendment may be either to modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability or to present to the House a different proposition as an alternative to the original which must, however, be relevant to the subject of the questions.

I would submit that the amendment offered earlier today by the Leader of the Opposition certainly makes the motion much more acceptable to Members of the House who form part of the Official Opposition. I would also submit that the amendment in question, while being an alternative to the original, is certainly relevant to the subject of the motion itself. It is not simply the kind of amendment which has been dealt with on other occasions by other Speakers; that is an amendment which would produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negatived. We have an amendment which takes note of a situation in the world political community which has developed since the United Nations resolution—which is quoted in the motion—was brought before the United Nations. The amendment calls upon the present Government to take steps to urge the superpowers in their forthcoming meeting to consider a number of matters, including a verifiable freeze and the reduction of nuclear arms. In this connection, this amendment, if accepted and adopted, along with the adoption of the main motion, would certainly carry the policy of the Government beyond what it was in the past.

I would also like to submit that the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition is acceptable because Citation 428 of Beauchesne states:

(1) A motion may be amended by: (a) leaving out certain words; (b) leaving out certain words in order to insert other words; (c) inserting or adding other words.

● (1540)

Therefore, if some thought should be given to the possibility that the amendment is not in order because its basic thrust is to delete certain operative words in the motion offered by the New Democratic Party and to insert other words, then it is still, by virtue of the citation in question, in order.

I conclude with a comment, Mr. Speaker, on the point which I anticipate may be raised against the acceptability of the amendment, that is, that the amendment may be one which proposes a direct negative or will produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negatived. I have dealt with the latter point. I again and further submit that the amendment offered by the Leader of the Opposition is not simply to negate what is in the motion presented by the New Democratic Party. It is not intended simply to produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negatived. In that connection, I draw Your Honour's attention to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 431, which reads as follows:

An amendment to alter the main question, by substituting a proposition with the opposite conclusion, is not an expanded negative and may be moved.

I have already said, Mr. Speaker, that in my respectful submission, the amendment offered by the Leader of the Opposition is not intended to offer simply a totally opposite conclusion, but to move the policy of the Government forward from what it was in the past. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, for the various reasons I have given, I submit that the amendment which was proposed earlier this day by the Leader of the Opposition is acceptable and should be allowed to be brought before the House for a decision.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I want to deal with three questions quite quickly. To begin with, Sir, I would ask you to find that the amendment offered by the Leader of the Opposition is not in order. It is not in order for a number of reasons perhaps but one reason in particular I find peculiar. You will note, Sir, in the original motion as contained on page 9 in today's Order Paper and Notices, the final paragraph states:

—and calls upon the Government to adopt it as policy—

In fact, that is the most relevant phrase within the motion. What we have asked is that the House of Commons look at a motion which is currently before the United Nations, and we have reproduced that same motion. We are asking that the House of Commons vote today to require the Government to adopt that motion as policy. The amendment put forward by the Leader of the Official Opposition eliminates that motion in its entirety. Therefore, it leaves a motion before the House of Commons the end direction of which is quite unclear. There is no directive to the Government. What we would have would be a statement reproducing the motion of the United Nations, together with a statement by the Official Opposition with regard to an agenda which it would like to see, without the House having before it in actual fact any question upon which to vote.

I suggest that if on no other ground, the amendment we have before us should fail on that ground. There has to be a motion to put and the motion we have is that the Government adopt the resolution of the United Nations as the policy of the Government of Canada. That, in fact, is what the Official Opposition has failed—and I hope inadvertently—to put within the context of its amendment.

I would like to say further that I can well appreciate what the Official Opposition is attempting to do. I do not quarrel, in the main, with the addition of many of the directives which the Official Opposition has offered as an agenda for the arms talks, which presumably may take place some time in the year 1985. I am not arguing that there is no place for that particular suggestion within the motion which we have offered. Not for a moment am I suggesting that. We put our motion on the Order Paper many days ago. I would have been prepared on behalf of this Party to enter into discussions with the Official Opposition during that intervening period in order to incorporate, or to agree in advance that the various and many suggestions which it has put forward might be incorporated in the over-all motion when it is put to the House.

There is one final point I would like to make. I can appreciate that perhaps the Official Opposition does not like the idea in the final paragraph in which we have said:

—thereby rejecting the position of the previous administration.

I would like to say to the Official Opposition that in the interests of putting together a motion which would be acceptable to the House of Commons, a motion which would gain wider support, I would be prepared on behalf of my Party to offer to withdraw those last two lines, if that were acceptable by unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the point the Hon. Member is trying to make. However, I believe we are moving quite a long way away from the adminissibility of an amendment into an area which really is properly a matter for debate or negotiation somewhere else. Would the Hon. Member conclude his argument with regard to admissibility, please?

Mr. Deans: Therefore, in order to tie it up, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I believe the amendment put before you is not acceptable. I believe, in fact, my hon. colleague and friend, the House Leader of the Opposition, probably made my point better than I could in his references to Beauchesne. He did not go quite as far perhaps as he ought to have gone in indicating what was acceptable and what was not. However, I want to point out that Citation 425 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, as I read it, by itself would have made the amendment offered by the Official Opposition an unacceptable amendment.

I urge you, Sir, to consider that that particular amendment is not in order and to note, as no doubt you will, our desire to find an acceptable alternative amendment which will incorporate both what the Official Opposition wants and what we would like to see without any offensive language contained within it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I will also try to be brief because I understand and appreciate the importance of allowing the maximum amount of time to enter into a substantive debate with respect to a very important issue in terms of our position on this most important topic. I believe, Mr. Speaker, since the matter has been raised and since the House Leader of the Opposition has indicated by his intervention that he himself has some concern about the admissibility of the amendment, that I should attempt to assist, if I may, with respect to this particular point of order.

It seems to me that the amendment which is proposed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) appears to be at variance, in my estimation, with the established practices of the House in at least two respects. First, it has been long recognized, Mr. Speaker, that any amendment which has the effect of being a direct negative of a motion then before the House is out of order. The House Leader of the Opposition has alluded to this. This rule applies both to a simple negative of the whole question and to an amendment which approves part of a motion while disapproving the rest.

Citation 436 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition outlines the practices of the House with respect to amendments which negate all or part of a motion. Citation 436(3) in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition provides a reference to a Speaker's ruling of October 20, 1932, which is found at pages 47 and 48 of the Journals for that day. The motion which was before the House on October 20, 1932, called for the approval of a trade agreement. An amendment was proposed thereto which expressed approval of portions of the agreement while disapproving certain other aspects thereof. The Speaker declared the proposed amendment out of order.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that, as in the 1932 case, the proposed amendment which is before us now would have the effect of negating a portion of the main motion. By deleting the last paragraph of the main motion, the proposed amendment would have the effect, if passed, of causing the House to adopt a nuclear arms policy which is significantly different from the one proposed in the main motion. Indeed, the amendment proposes that the House should endorse the policies of the previous administration, and thereby it flies in the face of the last paragraph of the main motion, which calls upon the Government to adopt it as policy, thereby rejecting the position of the previous administration.

● (1550)

The other practice of the House offended by the amendment proposed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is outlined in Citation 482 of Beauchesne's, which reads as follows:

> On an allotted day, during consideration of the business of Supply, an amendment must not provide the basis for an entirely different debate than that proposed in the original motion.

That citation provides references to two rulings by the Chair which support the general principle outlined in that citation. There are certain words contained in those rulings which, in my view, have a direct bearing on the issue before you at the moment, Mr. Speaker. I would like to cite briefly from those rulings. On June 1, 1972, when faced with an amendment to an opposition motion, the then Deputy Speaker had the following to say, as reported at page 2767 of Hansard:

> Certainly, there are times and circumstances when a motion on an opposition day is amendable. Indeed, the Chair has allowed amendments, if not in this session, in the last session of this Parliament. On opposition days, however, we must look very carefully at amendments and the circumstances . . . because if they change the direction or the impact of the motion, they are not acceptable. I think it would be unfair to opposition parties if such amendments were acceptable. This is, of course, in the interest of all opposition parties and the interests of fairness.

That was based on a similar ruling given in March of that year which I will not quote now. However, clearly the amendment proposed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would both negate in its form the motion moved by the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) and, if allowed to be put to the House, would provide a basis, I suggest, for an entirely different debate from that which has been proposed in the original motion. In my submission both equity and established paractice require that the amendment proposed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition be ruled out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I will need to have an investigation conducted into how various speakers who have preceded me got hold of my notes.

I say to the House Leader for Her Majesty's Official Opposition with respect, that it is my view that Citation 482 of Beauchesne's applies directly in this case. The effect of the motion put forward by Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition is to change the subject of the debate so radically as to offend against the traditions of Supply days. This is always a difficult matter for the Speaker, but I think that Hon. Members know we have strong traditions about motions put forward for debate on days allocated for Supply.

Maybe I should just enunciate those two principles in brief before I make a final ruling. The Government House Leader referred to them. The first principle is that the amendment must not change the direction or impact or thrust of the main motion. The second is that the spirit of fair play, which has been ruled on in this matter before, requires that the allotted days should not be taken away from the mover of the motion by means of another Member moving and amendment. Those are the two principles followed by this House for some years on allotted days.

I might also add, when deciding whether an amendment is in order as an amendment, notwithstanding whether or not it negates the motion, there is another test that can be used as a simple rule of thumb, that is, to see whether the amendment could stand alone as a separate motion and be debated separately. That, it seems to me, applies in this case. The motion as moved could form an additional motion for another day. However, on balance I find that Citation 482 does apply directly and I must therefore indicate, with all due respect, that the amendment is, in my view, out of order.

We will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins).

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I understand that when I was interrupted at one o'clock I had about six minutes left. At that time I said I was going to mention something which has very seldom been mentioned in this House. I was talking about superpowers. In making the statement I am about to make I do not want to seem self-righteous because I would like to think that my sins are no greater, and hopefully no lesser, than those of my colleagues on either side of this House. But when we talk about superpowers and get tied up in this debate at the humanitarian level, I would like to say to my colleagues that there is only one superpower, only one Supreme Being on the face of the earth. God is supreme. Certainly in this debate, when we talk about saving humanity, that must come into play. Our Maker created us all. He gave us talents, understanding and the ability to communicate. It is up to us to make use of those abilities. Both Mr. Chernenko and President Reagan have said that a nuclear war cannot be won and must not be fought. We hope that this will be the attitude when these gentlemen meet. We hope also that what follows will be a greater emphasis on the reduction of conventional armaments. Today veterans of the two World Wars and the Korean war will tell us that conventional wars are no picnic either.

In the interests of the coming talks between the United States and the Soviet Union, Mr. Speaker, I feel that we as parliamentarians should suggest that in all places of religious worship, people, regardless of creed or culture, set aside a special day of world-wide prayer for the success of the coming disarmament negotitions between the U.S. and the Soviet Union. This will emphasize the importance of this subject to all people, as it must be emphasized.

We are all children of the same Creator. If there ever was a time when we all need spiritual guidance and moral and political commitment, and political will, it is now. If we do not use all our human talents, all our moral and political will, to promote a solid solution, something other than just a piece of paper, then we are not keeping faith with those who died in previous wars, those whom we honour every November 11. In a debate such as this, we should say that in our minds every day of the year must be a November 11.

We must also think of our own generation and of the generations to come, Mr. Speaker. I have before me a book on the Chamberlains. I was going to read a paragraph spoken by Neville Chamberlain to the nation on radio at 11.15 a.m., on Sunday, September 3, 1939, when the Germans entered Poland. I do not have time to do that, but I do want to read what he said to the House of Commons that afternoon. He said:

> This is a sad day for all of us and for none is it sadder than for me. Everything that I have worked for, everything that I have hoped for, everything that I believed in during my public life has crashed into ruins.

• (1600)

I say to the people in every democratic nation and every nation of the world that now is the time for us to take that speech seriously because none of us wants to be guilty of contributing to the ruins that would be far-reaching and far beyond anything ever dreamed of on September 3, 1939.

We look back today to the great leaders in foreign affairs, such as the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau and his peace mission, and to many others who have contributed greatly through the United Nations and other organizations. We in the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker, are proud of the background of those people who have done so much. It is our commitment to work toward good diplomacy and solid agreements and to work with our friends throughout the world.

I would like to refer to the last sentence in the motion before us today which reads: "thereby rejecting the position of the previous administration." This is the motion of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret that the Hon. Member's time is up.

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to put forward and explain yet again for the benefit to the NDP the Government's position on the nuclear freeze. Simply put, we do not favour proposals for a U.S.A.-U.S.S.R. nuclear freeze at existing levels. Mutual security is not enhanced if current imbalances are locked in, as they would be in Europe. At the same time, as our Ambassador for Disarmament, a former and distinguished colleague in this House, Mr. Douglas Roche, said at the United Nations last month, we recognize that:

> Many Canadians believe that the present level of nuclear weapons endangers the continuation of life on the planet. But mere declarations of a freeze are not a meaningful response to this danger. Rather, we want immediate resumption of negotiations on reductions. Canada has said this many times. I want to repeat our demand: Canada wants the present dangerous levels reduced by immediate unconditional resumption of negotiations on reductions.

The Government's reasons for voting against the three nuclear arms freeze resolutions in the United Nations last month are well laid out in the explanation for the Canadian vote given by our Ambassador for Disarmament. Ambassador Roche pointed to the major flaws seen by the Government in the three resolutions in New York, and I shall not repeat them here. I would, however, like to address some further flaws in the resolutions we have before us. They are of two sorts: political and technical.

On the technical side, the resolution ignores the reality that a freeze raises the same, if not greater, problems of definition and verification as do reduction proposals. Developing an effective and verifiable freeze would not be a simple matter. It would involve long and complicated negotiations. The time and energies of both sides would be better spent negotiating reductions, and that is the call we hope to see emerge from next month's meeting between Secretary Shultz and Foreign Minister Gromyko. We want the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. to do much better than a freeze.

There are many other flaws in the resolution and I will mention just one other. We do not agree that reliance on the doctrine of nuclear deterrence has heightened the risk of nuclear war, as asserted. On the contrary, one can only regret that the rest of the world to which the NDP has drawn attention has not been as successful in avoiding war over the past 35 years.

In political terms, adoption of the proposal would conflict directly with Canada's support for NATO's two-track decision which calls for the deployment in western Europe of INF missiles in the absence of concrete negotiated results obviating the need for such deployment, and with Canada's undertaking to permit the flight testing of unarmed Cruise missiles in Canada. It is probably not too much to say that it is these purposes which have given rise to the resolution. The House knows the position of the NDP on NATO and NORAD. It would have Canada withdraw from both. While sheltering under the United States' nuclear umbrella, they would have Canada go it alone.

There is a curious irony in a proposal which would attempt to influence NATO policy coming from a Party which would have Canada withdraw from that organization. The more so, because not only would the result be a loss of our military security, it would also remove us from the mainstream in the search for progress toward a more stable relationship between East and West, which is the other purpose of the alliance. The NDP position would remove Canada from all consultation and participation in the major arms control issues of today; strategic and INF nuclear arms control, the mutual balance force reduction negotiations on conventional arms, and the Stockholm Conference.

There is another curiosity to be found in the NDP proposal. Members will have noted that the Soviet Union has been applauded for providing its views on a freeze to the U.N., which is no doubt a worthy act. The United States, on the other hand, has been singled out for not having complied so far with the U.N. resolution in question. On the question of the resumption of nuclear arms reduction negotiations, however, the NDP resolution is strangely silent when it comes to identifying which country walked out of the negotiations in the first place. It was the U.S.S.R. and not the United States of America. That choice of example tells us something.

Last week I attended the December meeting of NATO's Defence Ministers. I took the opportunity to say something about the totality of the Canadian defence effort and the direction the Government intends to take in the years ahead. Our objectives, which are to enable Canada to better contribute to and play its part in the common defence, were very well received by all my colleagues. It was also a great pleasure for me to join my alliance colleagues in reaffirming, by way of our communiqué, that:

> NATO preserves the peace and security of its members through the maintenance of military forces sufficient for deterrence and defence and through the continuing attempt to develop a stable East-West relationship.

It is a statement that the framers of the motion before us should ponder. It is through solid work, not empty declarations, that progress will be made. I also told my colleagues that in the period ahead we must stay steadily on the course we have set for ourselves to ensure that effective deterrence is maintained, to increase our capacity for conventional defence, to modernize and to increase our forces' ability to survive and to respond to attack, and to ensure that our forces are demonstratively ready should they be attacked and will be able to fight if they are forced to fight.

Some examples of the improvements I identified are: increases in our land and air forces in Europe, full-scale exercise in 1986 of the Brigade Group which we have committed to the defence of northern Norway, and protection of our European airfields and troops by low level air defence. We are moving forward in Europe. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in the House on February 9:

> You can't have it both ways. You cannot echo support for NATO and consistently neglect support for our Armed Forces so that our alliance commitments cannot be honoured. Nor can we continue to flail at the nuclear umbrella and not be prepared to enhance the conventional deterrent.

A concrete example of what good relations with allies can achieve is to be found in the presence today in Canada of the United States briefing team on defence procurement. Secretary Weinberger and I have agreed to use the steering committee of the Defence Production Sharing Arrangement to monitor the work of the briefing team. The business community in Canada can be assured that Ministers take this initiative seriously. We will guarantee that their participation will be followed up.

Secretary Weinberger and I will assist the business community in every way to achieve both their and our objective, which is, additional defence procurement for Canadian industry. We are talking about new, permanent, long-term jobs that will make our present industry more viable in the days ahead.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to enter into this debate this afternoon on our motion, which one might say, is a carbon copy of a motion that was passed by an overwhelming majority of member states in a political committee of the United Nations a short time ago.

I rise to speak today on what is a unique opportunity for this country and indeed the Government. Today, there is an opportunity for the Government to demonstrate real change, which is, after all, what helped to bring the Conservative Party to power. Although we have seen many flip-flops from the Government on election promises, I ask today, on this one crucial issue, that the Government show Canadians how it is different from previous Liberal Governments.

I will not denounce the Government. Instead, I will invite it to join with those of us on this side of the House to support the motion. I want the Government's co-operation. I want it to state publicly what many sitting on the Government benches privately believe, namely, that we must end this nuclear madness and that now is the time to begin to do it in earnest.

I want the Government to join with other Governments in NATO, such as that of Denmark, which have found the courage to support nuclear freeze initiatives at the United Nations. I want it to realize also that this will not shatter the alliance.

I want the Government to join the growing support for a nuclear freeze because, as I recall someone saying this summer, "Together, we can be better".

I want to explain why I think now is the time for us to support the United Nations resolution on the nuclear weapons freeze. As some Members of the House may know, I spent many years exposing many young people to the lessons of history. Indeed, that was my chosen profession before I came to serve here in the Commons some 14 years ago. I often quoted to those young people the words of a wise man who said that those who do not learn from history are condemned to relive it. I realize that it is a quotation that is often used today, but it still rings true.

I want to remind the Government of some of the lessons of history. I hope it will be as open to those lessons as were those young people. However, I will not take the Government back too far because I know that some Members opposite do not have such great memories. Indeed, I often wonder why so many government members cannot even remember what they promised the people of Canada last summer.

I will only take the Government back to the turn of the century. That should suit the Government well. Many members of the Government look back to that period with some warmth. Some say that the Government's legislation is an attempt to take us back even further.

Let me focus on just one issue that confronted the world in those days. It was an arms race similar to the one that confronts the world today. Of course, the countries and weapons involved were different. In those days, it was Britain and Germany who were involved in a naval arms race. But the circumstances were remarkably similar. Both sides felt threatened by the other. Both sides were engaged in what was in those days massive military spending during peace time. Both sides felt that they had no option but to compete in the arms build-up to preserve a balance of power. Both sides professed that they did not want war. Yet, as we all know, war did occur a short time later. Those weapons were used in World War I. The lesson I wish to point out is simple. More weapons did not prevent that war, they only heightened the tensions.

That lesson is repeated many times in history. There has never been a weapon constructed which has not been used. That is true of all weapons, from the bow and arrow to the atom bomb.

Some people believe that the power of nuclear weapons make their use unthinkable. The people of Hiroshima and Nagasaki know differently. Another lesson to be drawn from this is that professed good intentions are not enough. As long as weapons and the threat they represent exist, wear is not only likely, it is inevitable.

Any accident can set off a war. In the case of World War I, who could have predicted that one impassioned activist with a bomb could have dragged the world into a war by assassinating the Archduke Franz Ferdinand? Yet that is what happened.

Today, there is a whole new generation of what are called threatre nuclear weapons which are capable of striking their targets in just minutes. That means that the world can be brought to the brink of destruction before there is any chance for diplomacy to work on a political solution. The arms race has escalated to the point where the side that perceives itself under attack and in danger of losing will have to go nuclear. That is why NATO has what it calls its flexible response. It reserves the right to go nuclear.

A third lesson to be taken from history is that deterrents cannot put off war forever. After the horror of trench warfare and mustard gas had ravaged a generation of young men, people called World War I, "The war to end all wars". They were wrong, tragically wrong. The next war was just 20 years away.

After World War II had ravaged the globe and ended with those mushroom clouds over Japan, veterans called it "The big one" and people assured themselves that the atom bomb made war unthinkable. They were wrong. We have the Diefenbunker to prove it.

Nuclear war is indeed thought about every day. Otherwise, where would this whole new generation of nuclear weapons be coming from? Somebody must be spending a lot of time thinking about nuclear war. Indeed, some people right here in Canada must be thinking about it, I am sad to say. What other conclusion is there when we are helping to develop and to test the Cruise missile in Canada?

I want to clear up a misconception that some people have about Canada in this regard. I recently read in the paper that Canada is now free of nuclear weapons because the Genie nuclear missiles have been made obsolete by the introduction of the CF-18 with its conventional missiles. That is not quite true. Canada's hands are not entirely clean.

Just last week, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) confirmed that the Cruise missile will once again fly over Canada in 1985. That is sad news to our Party. In fact, the aid and consent that Canada lends to the testing of this weapon casts a shadow much further than Cold Lake, Alberta. It casts doubt on Canada's role as a peacemaker and makes a mockery of that same Minister's consideration to ask the Americans and the Soviets to ban Cruise missiles from their arsenals.

Not only do we help test the Cruise, we helped to build it. The Defence Production Sharing Arrangement between Canada and the United States allowed a Canadian company to help build the guidance system for the Cruise missile. The Canadian Government helped to make the development of that guidance system possible with aid to Litton Systems under the Defence Industry Productivity Program.

Even now, a group of Pentagon officials are touring our country, with government encouragement and assistance, telling Canadian companies how to follow in the footsteps of Litton Systems. The Government of Canada is directing investment dollars from other areas such as education and health care, which as studies show, would create two to three times as many jobs as investment in weapons production. The Conservative Government is helping sow the seeds of our own destruction and is passing it off as job creation. It is sad hoax and it has to stop.

That is why I am calling for the Government to show that real change for which it was elected. I want the Government to join with the thousands of Canadians who support the nuclear weapons freeze. I want the Government to join with those people who showed their resolve by signing petitions supporting the freeze and sending them to this House.

I want the Government to join with our neighbours to the south in the U.S. Congress, who also support a nuclear weapons freeze. I want the Government to join with those who realize that there is a rough parity in the nuclear arsenals of the United States and the Soviet Union. Even President Reagan recognizes that both sides have enough nuclear weapons to destroy the world many times over. After all, it was he who campaigned this fall a few weeks ago by saying: "America is back. America is strong". So even he realizes that the West is strong enough to negotiate an arms agreement. And, after all, who in the Conservative Government would argue with President Reagan?

I am asking that the Government join with NATO allies, such as Denmark who have the wisdom to support a nuclear weapons freeze without fear of losing their allies. I ask that the Government show the courage of the Belgian Government, which has had the wisdom to reconsider its position on nuclear weapons. I ask that the Government join with those on its own benches who privately support the nuclear weapons freeze. Finally, I ask that the Government join with us in taking one small step toward peace.

If Canada takes that step and supports this motion for a mutual, verifiable nuclear weapons freeze, then just maybe it will have some effect. Maybe the Governments of the United States and the Soviet Union will take notice. Maybe it will tip the balance while there is rough nuclear parity and signs of an East-West thaw. Maybe. We may never know. But we will be able to say that today, Canada has done its part. Canada will have shown the world that it is indeed a strong, independent voice for peace.

There are certain assumptions upon which I believe our defence policy is based. Certainly in the public domain there are some assumptions, and I do not agree with them. I do not believe for one moment that the next war, heaven forbid if there should be one, will be simply or exclusively a conventionally fought war.

Second, I do not believe there is any such thing in practice as a limited nuclear war. We are being very foolish if we think for one moment that if either side is backed to the wall in a conventional war or a limited nuclear war, known I think as a theatre war, it will not push the final button and let everything go.

Third, there is only one kind of war, and this follows from my other two points, and that is, a total nuclear global holocaust. Despite the relative importance and potency of the weapons during the hot summer days of July and August 1914, the great powers still went to war over a single shot fired in a little town in the Balkans called Sarajevo. It can happen again, only this time ending up in a total nuclear holocaust.

Then there is the assumption that the nuclear deterrent has kept us at peace for 40 years. We were reminded this morning that 40 years is but a fleeting moment in time. Even if it has kept us at peace for 40 years, Mr. Speaker, do we all realize what that means? It means that the nuclear deterrent will never fail. That is what it means.

In view of the fact that we are only human and historically we have always only been human, and in view of the fact that man has always gone to war and that we have had so many sophisticated non-nuclear deterrents in the past, is there any human being in this Chamber who honestly believes that the nuclear deterrent will keep us at peace for ever and ever? That is madness. That is why we have to begin today, not tomorrow, not next week, to rid the globe of all nuclear weapons. This motion merely allows us to take one tentative step.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there any questions or comments?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak in the debate this afternoon in order to resolve a number of procedural problems that were raised earlier. I intend to make a speech, and I have no questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Very well. Debate.

Mr. Chrétien: Thank you Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would like to say that it bothers me somewhat that, at least as far as I know, we are not going to have more than one debate during this session on a subject as important as this one. We were advised Wednesday of today's debate, and I think it is incredible that, considering the fact that this will be our sole opportunity to discuss a problem that millions of Canadians see as the most important issue facing our generation, neither the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) nor the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) could find the time to be in the House. I remember when they were both in the Opposition and were asking us every day for a debate on the subject, and now that we do have a debate here in the House, they have found other, more pressing business to attend to. I also remember that the Prime Minister, in his first speech as Prime Minister which he made when he visited his alma mater in Nova Scotia, a few weeks after he was sworn in, I remember that he said that for him, nuclear armament would be his number one concern during his mandate. Today, we have a debate on this issue, and normally we will not have another before the end of this session which may last until June or even later, and I therefore consider it entirely unacceptable that neither the Prime Minister nor the Secretary of State for External Affairs are present in the House today.

[English]

I think the speeches made so far today have given an indication of how serious the problem is. I could go on about all the disasters the world could face if ever some error were committed by the two superpowers using the arsenals in their possession. The U.S.S.R. has 1,398 intercontinental ballistic missiles in land-based silos hundreds of thousands of times move powerful than the atomic blast at Hiroshima. The same is true of the United States. The Americans have 1,037 intercontinental ballistic missiles, which represent the potential for thousands of Hiroshimas.

We know that on June 3, 1981, a computer malfunctioned in the United States. We came within minutes of having a decision made by a very responsible general, General James Hartinger, that would have affected life. He was informed one moment that a technological problem and occurred and he was faced with making a decision based on a technical error.

I am sure everyone will recall a film shown on television not long ago and, as a result of it, how emotional the youth in universities around the world became. People were frightened and preoccupied by this film. Many felt they had no future because of the continuing escalation in nuclear armaments by the two superpowers. Today we are confronted with the problem of expressing the views of Canadians on the matter. I am surprised that there are so few Members in the House and no government leaders to express their views today.

• (1630)

Of course, we all want peace and disarmament. However, I am quarreling with the proposition of the NDP today. I am glad the House Leader of that Party, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), recognized that there was a political element in the motion before the House. He asked to delete, if it were possible, some of the words of the motion because he felt that they offended. That is why my Party cannot vote for the main motion. It is basically because it introduces politics into the matter. It calls upon the Government to adopt the motion as policy and thereby reject the position of the previous administration. That injects an element of politics of an unacceptable nature into the motion.

We in the House unanimously supported the peace mission of Mr. Trudeau when he was Prime Minister. We felt that it was extremely important for the voice of Canada to be recognized around the world as that of a country that tries to find new solutions to the fundamental problem confronting humanity. To introduce a motion today which will deny the validity of the peace mission of former Prime Minister Trudeau, which was supported by all three Parties in the House, introduces politics into this debate. I am glad the House Leader of the NDP had the courage to recognize that these words were too many. Despite the fact that we could debate the main motion, some elements of it made it impossible for members of my Party to subscribe to the motion, at least on that point.

There is another flaw in the resolution of the NDP. It has been overtaken today by what has happened in the world. When the resolution was proposed at the United Nations, the intent of it was basically to induce the superpowers to start negotiations, to agree on a freeze of nuclear armaments and when the freeze was agreed upon to reduce the arsenal.

We all want peace. The problem is the process. However, now there is a new element in the process. The Leader of my Party rose in the House this morning and indicated that on January 7 and January 8, 1985 the two superpowers have decided to meet without preconditions to review the situation on nuclear disarmament. We should welcome this opportunity. I am sure the people who proposed the resolution at the United Nations had that in mind. They wanted to ensure that the superpowers came together and made a move which would give some relief to the anxiety of the people of the world.

When my Leader rose this morning, he made a proposition indicating that we should give to the superpowers an agenda which will lead to peace and disarmament. It was a very good move to which we are happy to subscribe. I am sure all Members of the House are able to subscribe to it.

There is massive new development. It was not easy for us in government to agree to the policies of the past. With the build-up in the U.S.S.R. and the deployment of SS-20s in Europe, the western world was suffering from a lack of deployment. We accepted the two-track policy after the suffocation policy of Mr. Trudeau was not accepted. We realized that we had to let the Pershing and Cruise missiles be deployed in Europe. Now the deployment has taken place, the U.S.S.R. realizes that NATO countries can be together when it is important. We are in a new era as a result of what happened in the last month when the two major powers decided to return to the negotiating table.

This is why we offered in the amendment we proposed on behalf of Canadians an agenda for freezing acceleration in nuclear armament and an agenda which will lead not only to a freeze but to the eventual goal which we all have in mind—disarmament, especially nuclear disarmament which is so threatening to the world.

I should like to propose a new amendment to the House this afternoon in an attempt to obtain as much of a consensus as possible. As my Leader said this morning, we would like to propose an agenda for the peace talks which will start again in January. In our anxiety to put forward a new agenda, and not wanting to deny all that had been said, we proposed a motion, which unfortunately the Speaker ruled out of order. My new motion will guarantee that our intentions are all-inclusive. We subscribe to the intention of the motion of the NDP. We want disarmament. We want a bilateral freeze, not a unilateral one. We want the two superpowers to agree to a freeze. A freeze has to be verifiable, otherwise it does not exist. That was the intention of the United Nations resolution. However, if we express that ourselves, it has to take a realistic form. The realistic form has to be in the agenda which the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) proposed this morning.

I should like to reintroduce in an acceptable fashion the motion which my Leader presented this morning. Hopefully it will be acceptable. I will explain it later if I have some time remaining, but now I will read it for the record. I propose, seconded by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray),:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words following the words "on a nuclear arms freeze" in the second to last paragraph of the motion and by adding the following:

"and, noting that the resumption of arms talks by the Soviet Union and the United States in Geneva in early 1985 announced by the superpowers on November 22, subsequent to the presentation of the above resolution at the United Nations significantly alters the political situation on which the resolution is based and constitutes an effective first-step in the achievement of the two objectives to be attained in the declaration of a nuclear freeze, calls upon the government to adopt as policy the intent of the whole resolution by urging that the meeting of the two nuclear superpowers have on its agenda the negotiation of limits on their nuclear arsenals, a mutually verifiable freeze and significant reduction; a strengthening of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; a renewed emphasis on the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna; the encouragement of political emphasis on the Stockholm conference; a moving up of the date of the United Nations special session on disarmament now scheduled for 1986; an international agreement to ban the testing and deployment of high-altitude anti-satellite weapons; and the refining and improvement of nuclear weapons verification techniques."

● (1640)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of the amendment in French, which I would like to submit to the House.

I feel that the Official Opposition is actually proposing a new agenda that addresses the situation as it is today without concentrating on past problems. Personally, I think we now have a chance to review our positions in the light of this new development. Who would have thought six months ago that the superpowers would be meeting in January 1985 to make a fresh start? And why should we, in Parliament, not be willing to look at a new approach to disarmament? I think that is what Canadians want. As I said earlier, the Prime Minister has been very positive on that point in his speech at Antigonish. This is the only debate we have. In my opinion, the House missed a golden opportunity to say clearly to the Canadian people that we want, as soon as possible, to see an end to the proliferation of nuclear weapons in this stupid race which does not appear to end. It cannot be done without prior conditions. That is why we are proposing in the resolution that the first item on the agenda of the superpowers that are to meet in January be a freeze acceptable to both parties and verifiable as well by both parties.

That would be the starting point of negotiations in other fields of disarmament. But if the agenda of the two superpowers could be accepted in the words proposed by the Leader of the Opposition—it faithfully reflects the intent of the resolution introduced at the UN, but it also advocates something positive for the future—I think we now have before the House an agenda which is much more positive and much clearer, and which is consistent with the new situation which did not exist at the time of the UN resolution, when the wish expressed was that the superpowers meet and offer the world a new solution.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the motion I have just proposed will be accepted, for the issue is so complex that we want the same resolution to reflect the intent of the UN resolution, but we also want to add a concrete mechanism, in keeping with today's reality. I would suggest that, if the House were to adopt the proposition of my party, I mean the motion of the New Democratic Party as amended by the Leader of the Opposition, we would be making a worthwhile contribution.

During the last election campaign and the few months before, because of certain events you are familiar with, I met with hundreds of Canadians during my party's leadership race and during the election campaign in my capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I have to say that the disarmament issue was raised all the time. More fascinating and more important still, the issue was invariably raised first by younger people in our society, students who were concerned about the future of both Canada and the whole world. We can spend hours and days in the House trying to find ways to reduce inflation by one or two points or lower the unemployment rate by five or six points, but all that will prove fruitless unless we find a way to eliminate the danger which is threatening all nations the world over.

As I pointed out earlier, both sides now have nuclear arsenals which are more destructive than thousands of times the Hiroshima striking power. If ever there should come a day when, through error, indifference or inadvertence, a nuclear war breaks out, we will have failed in our responsibilities. That is why I think this debate was very important, and I would urge both the NDP and the government to endorse our motion which does take full consideration of the intent of the UN resolution, but in a concrete, positive and challenging agenda for the meeting of the two superpowers next January 7 and 8. I hope the House will accept the amendment I have just moved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Having had the opportunity to consider the amendment introduced by the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), I rule that it is in order. I submit it, therefore, to the House in the following fashion:

Mr. Chrétien, seconded by Mr. Gray (Windsor West), moved:

[English]

Shall I dispence?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there any questions or comments?

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) a question. He will know, of course, that the nuclear freeze resolution at the United Nations has come up each year. Indeed, in the last several years it has come up while talks were going on, either INF or START talks. I therefore wonder why he feels that somehow the whole idea of a nuclear freeze should not be pursued simply because talks are once again to go on. I just do not understand. We have had debates at the UN on the nuclear freeze every year. Indeed, the UN is debating the matter again. As the Hon. Member knows, it will be coming up this week or next week. I just wonder why he feels there is something so vastly different with talks beginning in January when we have had talks every year that we have been debating the nuclear freeze. We want a nuclear freeze.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I indicated in my remarks that we are in favour of a nuclear freeze. If you read our amendment carefully, you will note that we mention a nuclear freeze, but only as a first step towards disarmament. And that is the problem we have been faced with whenever we have had to deal with the position of the NDP who feel that a nuclear freeze is the solution. It is not the solution, because we would end up with the same situation as we have just now. There are now too many nuclear weapons and we would give to the public a false sense of security if we insisted only on a strict nuclear freeze. There are just too many. With the existing weapons, we could all get killed a hundred times over.

And we refuse to give people a false sense of security. We mean to say . . . I fully support the notion that we must begin somewhere. We now have a motion dealing with a resolution aimed at convincing the superpowers to use a nuclear freeze as a first step toward disarmament, but we should not be satisfied with the idea, which I have too often met in my discussions with people concerned with this problem, that a nuclear freeze is the whole solution. The whole solution it is not, for it is only the first step toward the solution which is nuclear disarmament and not nuclear freeze.

[English]

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, the former Minister, because of his preamble to an amendment which has not yet been ruled on, argues that the announcement of talks possibly getting under way again significantly alters the political situation. I am saying to the former Minister that there is no significant alteration in the situation. The talks have gone on before. Let us face it, they were mostly deadly gambits. So why can the former Minister not accept the present United Nations resolution as he has already agreed it is the first step? Then, if we can get support for the intent, which he speaks of in his amendment, why can we not have the Government do what we have suggested, which is to support the resolution itself, not just the intent, but the resolution itself? Then, we can move on to all the other matters, many of which would be covered by a freeze. Why can we not have a straightforward support of the UN resolution, not just its intend, but the resolution itself?

• (1650)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the problem with which we must cope is the politicking of the NDP on the resolution, rather than having a clearcut resolution. The NDP introduced a political element in stating that it condemned everything which had been done in the past by the previous administration. It is very easy for the Hon. Member to get up and appeal to my best instincts, which are so numerous, but, she is just playing politics with terrible problems such as nuclear disarmament.

We have to cope with the problem which has been given to the House by the NDP which is playing politics with disarmament. My amendment has tried to cope with that political problem. The House unanimously approved the peace mission of former Prime Minister Trudeau. It was a denial of that end other initiatives which were taken, such as the suffocation policies, which were supported by the House. But, the NDP again wants to play politics with war and peace. So we proposed a resolution, which was within the intent of the UN resolution, to establish a positive agenda for future development in disarmament talks around the world.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, as a new Member I am having great difficulty in understanding the argument of the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien). He says the New Democratic Party was playing politics by the insertion—

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) said that this morning.

Mr. McCurdy: I am sorry. If the Hon. Member would listen to what I am saying, then perhaps we could debate what I am saying rather than some presumption of what I am saying.

It has been suggested, both in this House and outside the Chamber, that the only reason for rejecting the New Democratic Party's proposition was that in the last phrase it suggested that we reject the policy of the previous administration. That does not justify the complete butchering of the resolution. At this stage of the game we are dealing with politics superimposed upon politics, and the proper resolution is for us to adopt the resolution of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I was to be helped by this intervention! The NDP motion, in fact, could be put in three lines. One line would accept the resolution and the rest would deal with the problem of blaming the previous administration for many of its initiatives which have been supported. Now the Hon. Member is complaining because there is a procedural difficulty which was created by the NDP. It wants to make some political points in the debate. We had to deal with that situation this morning, when the amendment, which was proposed by the Leader of the Opposition, was rejected by the Speaker. We wanted to incorporate into the debate the agenda for future talks. It was the only way we could do it.

If the NDP, rather than playing politics earlier today, had limited its resolution to what the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) is asking at this time, that perhaps would have been a bigger problem for us. Now we have to cope with that. As we have done traditionally, we will come up with something positive rather than play politics. That is exactly what we have done, and the NDP will have to live with it.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, one hesitates to enter a debate about political hypocrisy with the Liberal Party.

It seems to me that the motion which we have placed on the Order Paper effectively asks the House of Commons to do what no Government in Canada—whether that of the Liberal Party or that of the new Government of the Right Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Mulroney)—has been prepared to do, that is, to vote along with the great majority of other countries in the United Nations for the specific commitment to a nuclear freeze. I would ask the Hon. Member Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) if in fact he is not—in his attempt to obscure the past record of his Government—the one who is really playing politics with this issue.

The Liberal Party should be prepared to stand up, as it did when it was in power, and admit that it would not vote for the United Nations resolution. It is not politics on our part, it is the politics of that Party when it was in government. Does the former Minister not have the honesty to admit that it was the politics of his Party when it was in government and therefore it should be the position which it is forced to hold when out of government?

Mr. Chrétien: It is easy for me to reply—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I must remind the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) that he has only two minutes left.

Mr. Chrétien: Fine, Mr. Speaker. I will be glad to limit myself with two minutes.

[English]

I would like to reply to the Member. It was not me who started to talk about the motion being too political; it was his own House Leader who said that in this House a few minutes ago. When he was speaking on the Speaker's ruling, he said that the last line should not have been there. It is not our doing. The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) said the same thing. It is not I who said it. I am just stating what they said. We want disarmament. We want a freeze. We say that in our resolution. We want a freeze to be agreed upon immediately by the superpowers.

Mr. Hovdebo: You voted against it.

Mr. Chrétien: No. If the Hon. Member read my motion, he would see that we are proposing—

Mr. McCurdy: Your motion does not say that. I have read the amendment.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, I am sorry that I am not very good, but the Member must read the resolution. I am sure the Member has not read the amendment. Read it.

Mr. Gauthier: He's just like Crosbie. He never reads the document.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, he is just like the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) who never reads his documents. He can read it and after that he can ask his question. Again, the poor NDP is playing politics. It had a chance to do something positive but could not resist the perpetual temptation to play politics with everything including peace.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now terminated.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by saying that this day had been quite an education for a new Member. It has been a day not marked particularly by courtesy in the House. It is a day when we seem to be more content with hooting and hollering than in addressing the significant issue which is before us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Winegard: Although I have been on my feet in the House before, this is my first opportunity to speak at length. I have looked forward to this occasion for some weeks.

Before discussing the resolution, I would like to congratulate the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) on his return to the House. Thousands of Canadians were sorry to see him leave Parliament eight years ago, including me.

The issue before us is significant to all Canadians. It is an issue which was discussed at some length during the election campaign, and it continues to occupy our thoughts.

I hope I will be forgiven, since this is my first opportunity to say something about Guelph, if I inform this House of some of the background of my community. Such background will help Hon. Members understand the position I take on this and many other issues. Guelph is the county seat for Wellington. It began as an agricultural centre and, I am delighted to say, Mr. Speaker, that it retains much of that soundness and common sense today. Guelph is surrounded by an agricultural area and has a diversity which is envied by most people. It has a sense of history and is a place of beauty. We even have a correctional institution to house those people who come from other parts of the province. We also have a university which has been actively involved in this particular issue. Our university was the site of one of the main peace and disarmament conferences over the past 12 months.

I believe the people of Canada want an end to nuclear weapons. They want peace and they want disarmament. However, the natural caution of most Canadians dictates that we do not want a freeze which has the possibility of harming our strategic position.

I would like to address one specific element in this discussion, namely, verification. In an era of suspicion and uncertainty, nations are unlikely to accede to agreements affecting their own national security without some adequate means of assurance that other signatories will indeed live up to the terms of their agreement. An arms control agreement is essentially an agreement between states to undertake restrictive measures. Since the benefit to each state arises from the compliance of the other, there is, of course, mutual advantage. In simple terms, Mr. Speaker, verification is the means by which such assurance is given to the other states. Consequently, the nature of the verification measures associated with the arms control agreements is of vital importance. The Swedish-Mexican freeze resolution, unlike the other two freeze resolutions at the United Nations, does address the problem of verification in greater detail. The resolution calls for appropriate measures and procedures of verifications such as those which have already been agreed to by the Parties in principle in SALT I and SALT II.

Ignoring the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution is declaratory and thus does not envisage the necessary negotiations of verification measures, there are elements called for in the resolution which simply are not verifiable under the suggested verification procedure. The SALT I and SALT II agreements deal with anti-ballistics missile systems with intercontinental ballistic missiles and with heavy bombers. It is relatively easy to verify the deployment or testing of these major weapons systems by national technical means. Indeed, non-intrusive national technical means are generally adequate to monitor fixed ICBM sites, the number and locations of heavy bombers and the number of submarines actually deployed. However, these methods are totally inadequate to monitor tactical nuclear weapons systems or dual use weapons delivery systems which we have today.

Furthermore, countries must still come to grips with how to verify submarine launch Cruise missiles and Cruise missiles which are deployed on surface ships. Stronger verification methods will be needed in order to ensure a ban on deployment and production of nuclear weapons and delivery systems.

It is a fact of life, Mr. Speaker, that in the world of arms control and disarmament, the need for verification is based on suspicion. To imply that disarmament should be based on mere trust or confidence, or even on less than adequate verification measures, is not realistic. It is the view of this Government that the need for adequate verification in arms control agreements is too important for national security for us to accept the partial measures proposed in the freeze resolution.

I did not know last Thursday evening when I hosted the dinner of an international conference on the verification issue in the context of arms control negotiations in Europe, that the subject of that seminar would be raised in the House the following day. For two days last week, several persons from the United States of America, Germany, the Netherlands and, of course, Canada, met to study this issue. Our own contribution to verification is an important one, one which I wish more Canadians knew about. We are interested in this area. We are active participants in the research on verification, particularly on what is needed to reach verification agreements between parties. We start from the assumption that no agreement will be lasting without an agreed upon level of verification, and those levels depend upon the technology available and the degree of intrusiveness allowed by participating countries. Not all verification, as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, can be accomplished by technological means. Unfortunately, for some purposes, the verification must be an on-site inspection.

A freeze on testing, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps the most likely option to begin the nuclear reduction process. However, even here the verification means is only suitable for relatively large test units. It should come as no surprise to any Hon. Member of this House that we are indeed divided on this issue. Each of us approaches it from a different perspective. As a veteran of World War II, I want to work for peace while remaining strong. I do not look for a quick solution to this difficult and perplexing problem. It has taken us 40 years to get ourselves into this mess. It may well take 40 years to remove the weapons, the fear and the suspicion from all of our hearts and minds.

Let us not vote for United Nations resolutions which cannot be enforced. What compliance system could be used to verify a ban on production and delivery systems? I remind Hon. Members of this House that the Cruise, which we hear so often discussed, is a delivery system. People talk about it as if it were some kind of weapon in itself. The U.S.S.R. has repeatedly refused to accept on-site inspections. Yet we know that is what is required if one of these resolutions of the United Nations is to succeed. Despite the good intent of the motion, it does not, in my opinion, provide the assurance of verification which Canadians demand.

• (1710)

A few days ago I brought to the attention of this House the recent statement of the Aspen Institute International Group called Managing East-West Conflict. It does not promote dramatic win or lose situations. It is a sober, simple, long-range statement that addresses the tensions of the world and how to reduce them. Surely that is what this debate should be about. Reduce those tensions and the rest will follow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) rising on a question or a comment?

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: I must say I am very much impressed by the quality of the speech delivered by the new Chairman of the Committee for External Affairs and National Defence. This is a committee which is very dear to me, having been a member for 20 years and a chairman for eight years.

One of the questions I would like to ask my hon. colleague and new Chairman is this: Does he intend—not that I require a final answer today—but the Committee for External Affairs and National Defence has published a book that is most interesting for those who are concerned with disarmament and security. We worked for months, we heard witnesses from all parts of Canada, and also from abroad, including the Soviet Union—the Committee was keenly interested in Mr. Arbatov's evidence—and we made recommendations.

We did not have that much follow-up, because of all sorts of events, but I would like to ask the new Chairman of the Committee for External Affairs and National Defence whether he intends to follow up on the recommendations that were made directly to the Government, and especially to the foreign affairs commission—and, to give a concrete example, a follow-up on the United Nations' First and Second Conferences on Disarmament—to extract from the deliberations of that Conference the main resolutions and bring them back in order that there should be in fact not just a follow-up, but some concern on the part of Members of Parliament—I appreciate those matters are not of interest to all Hon. Members—but that we may have a follow-up because I am in total agreement with him.

Regardless of all our discussions today, Mr. Speaker, and apart from the fact that we are divided on the question of whether the previous administration should be blamed, or the policy changed, what is important is to get the two superpowers to sit down, irrespective of whatever may be done in this Parliament and in all other Parliaments in the world, if we cannot convince the two superpowers that, for the sake of world sanity, it is time that the two of them should get together, sit down, and discuss without preconditions.

What worries me is that President Reagan, our distinguished neighbour—because when we refer to the United States all the relevant qualifications must be added, our friends and so on and so forth; this is obvious, but still it must be said in case people have any doubts—however I am a bit frightened by the anti-Soviet rhetoric comparing the Soviet Union with the devil, with a monster, certainly does not help reduce world tensions. I am convinced of it. What we should try to do, and I do not want to take the Hon. Member by surprise by asking him a question without warning, even though I know that he already has an opinion on the matter, is to have the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence contribute to greater public awareness and understanding of the issue, first in Canada, and then world-wide, to bring the two super-powers to the negotiation table without imposing political preconditions.

This is indeed the wish of the International Parliamentary Union which I shall be presiding until tomorrow when a new chairman will be chosen. The International Parliamentary Union, to which we regularly send twice a year representatives of our various parties, has always supported for the past three years, that is since Budapest, Korea, Nigeria, Lagos, the Lagos Conference, the Seoul Conference, in South Korea, and the Budapest Conference, the wish of parliamentarians throughout the world that the two super-powers come to the negotiation table without imposing any preconditions. I wish every success to the new chairman of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, and I hope that we shall be able in this Committee to discuss the issues I have just mentioned. My only question, which is quite short, would be to ask him whether he intends to look at these many resolutions.

[English]

If I may put it the other way, perhaps the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence could look back at its final report to the House of Commons, including the minority views expressed by some Members, so that they could be implemented by the, if I may say, Hon. Members' committee.

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his good wishes. I hope I am slightly ahead of him in this matter. I have read the report, I have been in conversation with Ambassador Roche, and he has agreed to speak to the committee any time that we wish him to do so, and to review with us some of those recommendations and give us his good advice. I believe we will be doing that and, furthermore, if it is not part of the major foreign policy review, we will be doing it as a committee in any case.

Mr. Prud'homme: Thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker. I spoke to the Hon. Member before, so I am not taking him by surprise. Does he have any news to announce to the House? Would this great and important policy review on foreign affairs be made by a special committee of the House of Commons or by his own committee?

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that at the present time. It is still a matter of some discussion. The committee has made its feelings known to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and the chairman of the committee and the Minister are still in discussion on this matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I might just remind the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) that the questions should be related to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard), not necessarily to what is going on in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I participate in this debate today and speak in support of the motion by the New Democratic Party. The motion asks basically two things. It asks the Government to adopt a position in support of a nuclear freeze and, in doing so, make a definite split with the program put forward by the previous Government. That program, if it was not schizophrenic, certainly worked against the wishes of many people in Canada, and I think it caused concern around the world.

The resolution supports a statement by the United Nations that basically asks for a nuclear arms freeze. It would be subject, of course, to verification and it would be for a five-year duration. In the process of asking the Government to adopt this particular policy, we want a very clear statement on the part of the Conservative Government that it accepts these goals and that it will rationally pursue them in Canada.

There are sound reasons for this, Mr. Speaker. After the Conservative Government authorized our representatives at the United Nations to vote against this particular nuclear freeze motion, the explanations given by the Government were rather schizophrenic. The Government's opposition, I think, is rather ill-conceived and ill-founded, and many people have expressed the same feeling. It is interesting that Mr. Roche made some comments about why the Government did it. He suggested that the reason it voted against the motion was not that it disagreed with it but, rather, that it was a question of the practicality of the concept. There was no point in supporting simply a declaratory effort at the United Nations; it would have no effect, and certainly would not lead to constructive alternatives. He also indicated that he was opposed to it because there was no provision for dealing with peaceful nuclear explosions.

● (1720)

This is complete nonsense, Mr. Speaker. Any declaratory effort or any effort whatsoever that moves the world one inch closer to nuclear disarmament is worth making. It is almost immoral not to take a position in support of this. It is incomprehensible that the Government should have authorized the country's representatives at the United Nations to vote against the motion unless one accepts the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). If we accept his statement, we begin to understand why the Government voted against such a logical and important motion.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs said he did not want to lose his influence in NATO. It strikes me and my Party and many people in Canada that we do not have any influence in NATO. The United States, in fact, reserves the right to act unilaterally in the defence of western Europe. If something arises in western Europe, we will not be consulted. If we are lucky, we may be informed after the event, but we certainly do not have the influence that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is attempting to suggest to justify this.

He is also suggesting that he does not want to lose his influence with the United States. Again, I do not believe that the Government has any influence with the United States. I think the United States tells the Government of Canada what to do, when to do it, and how much to do. I think the previous Liberal administration, run by the former Prime Minister, followed the same course of activity. There were occasional schizophrenic outbursts, with attempts at disciplinary action by the United States, then he would fall back into line. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we do not have the kind of influence that Canadians want within NATO. The United States would follow unilateral action without its NATO allies. The western European defence community has stated in the past that it will act unilaterally in defence of western Europe. Ultimately, voting against a nuclear freeze is not going to cause us to lose whatever influence we do have. I think it is extremely unfortunate that the Government authorized its representatives to vote against it.

The communication between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Government with the officials at the UN was obviously not very clear. That is an extremely unusual thing to do and I believe that the Conservative Government will pay dearly in political terms for this. There is an enormous number of people in the country who want to have a nuclear freeze and nuclear disarmament. They go to bed at night in fear of what the end result of failing to take positive action on this is going to be. There will be political repercussions.

The briefings that they are giving to people at the United Nations would not lead Canadians to have very much confidence in what is happening. The ambassador for disarmament has stood up and made comments which are virtually ludicrous. He has stood up and said that there is no point in supporting a declaratory statement. He has said that we cannot vote for a declaration of a nuclear freeze because we are afraid of peaceful nuclear explosions and other technical details. That is complete nonsense. Someone, whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs or someone in the Prime Minister's Office, is not giving our officials at the United Nations a clear briefing on what is expected of them. The Minister must be prepared to stand up and take the political consequences of saying that if we vote for the nuclear freeze, the Americans are going to be mad at us and our NATO allies might be mad at us and we are therefore afraid to take a proper action. If they have not got the guts to stand up and vote for something that is morally correct and appropriate given the times we are facing, then they should admit that they do not have the guts to vote for this because Canada is afraid of criticism.

Unfortunately, I do not think that anyone in the Government has thought out very clearly the approach that we should be taking. The motion put forward by the New Democratic Party today states very clearly what should be done. The Conservative Government should adopt as policy the motion put forward by the group at the United Nations. It should make a very clear statement that it is going to stop the kind of schizophrenic activity that the previous Liberal Government was involved in.

I would like to take a few minutes to review some of the activities of the previous administration because it ties into the amendment. The previous administration decided to test the Cruise missile. It took the flak for it across the country. I heard a Member of the Conservative Party say that this really does not involve nuclear weapons as it is only a delivery system. If it delivers a nuclear bomb which is designed to kill and destroy, then certainly it is a part of the nuclear freeze concept. Any weapon or any machinery that delivers or produces a weapon must be considered in a comprehensive nuclear freeze. The previous Liberal administration took the position that it was in favour of testing the Cruise missile. It allowed the construction of components of the nuclear weapons delivery system and, if I am not mistaken, of the weapons themselves. Today the Liberals talk of supporting nuclear freezes, but the past administration was not so inclined.

There are other aspects that were of serious concern. There were enormous demonstrations in Vancouver and other parts of the country. The presence of American vessels carrying nuclear weapons and the over-flying of Canada by American aircraft armed with nuclear weapons certainly are matters of serious concern. The previous Liberal Government of Canada was delaying to the point where it was ludicrous. It allowed the presence of American weapons on Canadian soil. A 1.5 megaton warhead on a Genie missile was fired from a Voodoo—an outdated aircraft, an outdated missile, and a completely outdated concept of defence.

It may pay to review how far out of touch that previous administration was, as were administrations prior to it. A Voodoo dating back to something like 1954 and this Genie missile with the 1.5 megaton warhead were thought to be useful in shooting a missile into incoming fleets of Russian bombers that were flying in formation over the north. Later on it was pointed out that there was only one propeller-driven Russian aircraft that was even capable of making that particular flight. It does not happen that way anymore. A committee in the United States Senate pointed out years ago that the concept was completely obsolete and that it obviously was there for alternative motives. Unfortunately, that administration adopted and continued with what essentially was an obsolete defence system. It was supportive of the manufacture of components into nuclear weapons delivery systems and nuclear weapons. It permitted nuclear armed aircraft to fly over Canada and nuclear armed American vessels to enter Canadian harbours. Finally, it agreed with the testing of the Cruise missile. These facts should be placed clearly on the record. So I welcome the change in position of the present members of the Liberal Party, a change that advocates support for a nuclear freeze.

I believe, however, that the House should adopt our motion so that this Parliament can make a new start that will be divorced from the positions taken by past administrations. That new beginning can start with the support of a nuclear freeze. The members of the Official Opposition have ample opportunity to support the motion before us today in this new session of Parliament. In our motion we demand that the Government support a nuclear freeze and all its subsidiary requirements. In our motion we ask for a definite Canadian policy on a nuclear freeze that would break from the previous administration's approach to it.

Let me comment on the proposed amendment. I suggest that this amendment put forward by that Liberal group today would change the complete intent of what we are trying to do here. The United Nations resolution makes clear what we want to support. The final statement of our motion calls upon the Government to adopt it as policy. We clearly set out who should adopt this policy and which agency is responsible for enforcing it.

Third, we make it clear that we want to reject the policies of the previous administration in relation to the nuclear freeze and its various aspects. I suggest that to adopt the amendment would destroy completely the intent to make a new beginning that Canadians would like to see Parliament achieve.

Our motion does not have a political intent but, rather, one that has the clear goal of establishing a new direction and beginning. I hear some Liberal Members muttering with discontent, but I suggest we have held out the olive branch for them to join us in a new beginning.

It is significant that the amendment was proposed by the artful dodger, the Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien). He stands up cunningly in the House to paint a picture that would make us believe that black is white and white is black. He has inferred that our Party is engaged in some political game, but I would refer him to debates which took place in the House when he was on the other side. He swore to one position then with regard to the Cruise missile debate, but we see him trying to adopt another position today.

Surely this amendment does not fit the circumstances and absolutely denies the intent of our motion. I believe that we have a valid and legitimate goal, which is to encourage the Government with the support of the Liberal Opposition, to adopt a policy of nuclear freeze that will mark a new beginning of change. It will signal that this is a different Parliament with a different administration that will not follow the rather schizophrenic aspects of the previous administration.

We have heard much detail about the various aspects of nuclear freeze, including technicalities and hypothetical situations that may arise. When this Parliament commenced, I began a file on people from my riding who have written with respect to nuclear disarmament issues. These people from the riding of Comox-Powell River have expressed concern and their belief that the Government should act quickly to support disarmament and a nuclear freeze and look seriously at the peace tax proposals.

Every day an increasing number of Canadians are becoming seriously concerned about nuclear disarmament. When they hear the message from our Ambassador for nuclear Disarmament and the contradictory message from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, combined with the silence from Ministers opposite who should be clarifying a solid position on disarmament, those signals do not instil confidence in the people of Comox-Powell River or in other communities in the country about what the Government is doing.

I cannot pass up this opportunity to comment on the position of the provincial Government of British Columbia with respect to the nuclear-freeze aspect. There is a belief that this is solely a federal Government problem. However, there are villages, towns and cities in the Comox-Powell River riding in which there have been referendums asking their citizens how they felt about the testing of the Cruise missile. In many cases, 80 per cent of the citizens in those communities were absolutely opposed to that testing. In other referendums they have been asked for their opinion about a nuclear-free zone. When those citizens realized that the Government would not take an acceptable position in this respect, they asked their local representatives to declare their area a nuclear-free zone. The village of Gold River is an example. The inhabitants have presented a petition to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stating that Gold River would be delcared a nuclear-free zone and that he should act to make all of Canada a nuclear-free zone.

The Province of British Columbia refused to allow the Sunshine Coast regional district to erect a sign stating that the district, by it own declaration, has been declared a nuclear-free zone. The provincial Government's role in this incident is almost ridiculous. It is almost a mirror image of the present Government in the length to which it went not to allow that sign to be posted. It is absolutely ludicrous. Nevertheless, those citizens will not forget that at the time of the next election. It will come back to haunt the Government.

In the time I have left, let me reiterate that the motion before the House today should be supported by every Member. It asks the Government to adopt definitely a solid moral position on the nuclear freeze. Let us make a break with the past so that Canadians will receive a signal that the Government and Parliament are convinced about the direction in which the country should be moving, and that the Government will separate itself from the past administration's schizophrenic and occasional negative approach to this issue.

I strongly believe that the amendment moved by the Official Opposition will totally destroy the intent of our motion. I hope it will be disallowed so that we could proceed to a vote on the resolution before us.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, having listened to the Hon. Member and other New Democratic Party Members throughout the day, I have been impressed how he, like his colleagues, has spoken about a verifiable freeze without ever indicating or hinting how that verification would be established. This is really the nub of the matter. All the hopes of humanity for nuclear disarmament, since the atomic age began, have foundered on the possibility thus far of achieving some acceptable method of verification. For example, the United States has demanded onsite inspection. This has been consistently rejected by the Soviet Union. Neither side has been willing to trust the other with manning such on-site inspection teams. Without that there is no sure hope of finding an acceptable method of verification. It is true that in recent years methods have been developed by which there could be some verification via outer space and by satellite, but that is not adequate, Mr. Speaker. We have to have on-sight inspection if we are to have some verification of further production of nuclear weapons.

• (1740)

We have to think of something new. I am disappointed that the New Democratic Party did not live up to its name and give us some new thoughts, such as multinational monitoring of nuclear weapons production and testing so that we could have some verification by neutral non-nuclear powers that might be acceptable to the Soviet Union and to the United States. It has been a very great disappointment to me that the New Democratic Party would call upon the Parliament of Canada to endorse a nuclear freeze and call it a verifiable freeze without giving us any clear indication of how we and the country could expect that verification to be established.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, apparently 111 nations did not feel in committee at the United Nations the same way as the previous speaker. They felt that the application of the systems of surveillance, verification and control already agreed upon in some previous cases would be sufficient to provide a reasonable guarantee of faithful compliance with the undertaking derived from the freeze. That is the first thing.

Second, we should not try to obscure the key point, as the resolution points out to the country in the form of a debate, that the Conservative Party authorized its representatives at the United Nations to vote against the freeze. The previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), said it was a problem of verification. The Ambassador said he had two other different reasons, a problem with peaceful nuclear explosions, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) says the reason he did not allow it to be voted for was that he was afraid of the United Nations and his NATO allies. What is it, Mr. Speaker? The Conservatives have to sit down and get their game together.

In response to the Hon. Member I will say that there is no doubt that the representatives of 111 nations felt confident enough to support this freeze with the verification methods available and in place today. Certainly there is an element of good faith; certainly a freeze. There is enough power available to blow the world to smithereens. The freeze does not put anyone else in a serious position. Nevertheless, that was the feeling. What the Conservative Government has to do is to get its house in order. We have three speakers, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and our Ambassador, directed by the Government, coming up with three different, completely unrelated stories. The responsibility lies with the Conservatives to support this motion today and to make a new beginning.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, just in the last minute or two before the vote, I think it is important to address an issue raised by the previous speaker who said that people in this country—there is no question, people right across the country—are interested in finding some solution to the horrendous problem facing us. The approach taken by the NDP is not the way to do it.

Mr. Deans: How do you know?

Mr. Axworthy: Here we have an amendment on the floor which provides an opportunity for all Parties to take a non-partisan approach and agree that one of the most important events is the coming together of the United States and the Soviet Union to make an agreement and to start new negotiations. This is an opportunity for this Parliament to speak on behalf of Canadians and represent their interests in a non-partisan way. This is a very rare and important opportunity. But here they stand posturing and saying, "Well, it is far more important to endorse the freeze", which has been superseded already by events—

Mr. Deans: Not at all.

Mr. Axworthy: —and by the willingness.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Axworthy: And if new Democrats knew anything about their history—

Mr. Blaikie: You are full of it, Axworthy.

Mr. Axworthy: Obviously they do not know much about their history because they are the ones failing this country by not supporting this amendment.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 62(10).

[English]

The question is the following one. Mr. Chrétien, seconded by Mr. Gray (Windsor West), moves:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words following the words "on a nuclear arms freeze" in the second to last paragraph of the motion and by adding the following:

"and, noting that the resumption of arms talks by the Soviet Union and the United States in Geneva in early 1985 announced by the superpowers on November 22, subsequent to the presentation of the above resolution at the United Nations significantly alters the political situation on which the resolution is based and constitutes an effective first-step in the achievement of the two objectives to be attained in the declaration of a nuclear freeze, calls upon the government to adopt as policy the intent of the whole resolution by urging that the meeting of the two nuclear superpowers have on its agenda the negotiation of limits on their nuclear arsenals, a mutually verifiable freeze and significant reduction; a strengthening of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; a renewed emphasis on the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna; the encouragement of political emphasis on the Stockholm conference; a moving up of the date of the United Nations special session on disarmament now scheduled for 1986; an international agreement to ban the testing and deployment of high-altitude anti-satellite weapons; and the refining and improvement of nuclear weapons verfication techniques."

All those in favour, please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed, please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Chrétien), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

The question is on the main motion. Mr. Broadbent, seconded by Mr. Deans, moves:

That this House takes note of the following United Nations Resolution:

REVIEW AND IMPLEMENTATION OF THE CONCLUDING DOCUMENT OF THE TWELFTH SPECIAL SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY: IMPLEMENTATION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 38/73 E ON A NUCLEAR-ARMS FREEZE

Indonesia, Mexico, Pakistan, Sweden and Uruguay: draft resolution

Nuclear-arms freeze

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, adopted in 1978 and unanimously and categorically reaffirmed in 1982 during the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, its second special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly expressed deep concern over the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Recalling also that on those occasions, it pointed out that existing arsenals of nuclear weapons are more than sufficient to destroy all life on earth and stressed that mankind is therefore confronted with a choice: halt the arms race and proceed to disarmament or face annihilation,

Noting that the conditions prevailing today are a source of even more serious concern than those existing in 1978 because of several factors, such as the deterioration of the international situation, the increase in the accuracy, speed and destructive power of nuclear weapons, the promotion of illusory doctrines of "limited" or "winnable" nuclear war and the many false alarms which have occurred owing to accidental reasons,

Noting also that the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi in March 1983, declared that the renewed escalation in the nuclear-arms race, both in its quantitative and qualitative dimensions, as well as reliance on doctrines of nuclear deterrence, has heightened the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war and led to greater insecurity and instability in international relations,

Bearing in mind that in their Joint Declaration issued on 22 May, 1984, the Heads of Government of six Member States of the United Nations, coming from five different continents, urged the nuclear-weapon States "as a necessary first step . . . to halt all testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems",

Believing that it is a matter of the utmost urgency to stop any further increase in the awesome arsenals of the two major nuclear-weapon States, which already have ample retaliatory power and a frightening overkill capacity,

Believing also that it is equally urgent to initiate or resume negotiations for the substantial reduction and qualitative limitation of nuclear arms,

Considering that a nuclear-arms freeze, while not an end in itself, would constitute the most effective first step for the achievement of the above-mentioned two objectives, since it would encourage the initiation or resumption of negotiations and prevent the continued increase and qualitative improvement of existing nuclear weaponry during the period when the negotiations would take place,

Firmly convinced that at present the conditions are most propitious for such a freeze, since the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America are now equivalent in nuclear military power and it seems evident that there exists between them an overall rough parity,

Conscious that the application of the systems of surveillance, verification and control already agreed upon in some previous cases would be sufficient to provide a reasonable guarantee of faithful compliance with the undertakings derived from the freeze,

Convinced that it would be to the benefit of all other States possessing nuclear weapons to follow the example of the two major nuclear-weapon States,

1. Urges once more the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as the two major nuclear-weapon States, to proclaim, either through simultaneous unilateral declarations or through a joint declaration, an immediate nuclear-arms freeze, which would be a first step towards the comprehensive programme of disarmament and whose structure and scope would be the following:

(a) It would embrace:

(i) A comprehensive test ban of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;

(ii) The complete cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;

(iii) A ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;

(iv) The complete cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

(b) It would be subject to appropriate measures and procedures of verification, such as those which have already been agreed by the parties in the case of the SALT I and SALT II treaties, and those agreed upon in principle by them during the preparatory trilateral negotiations on the comprehensive test ban held at Geneva;

(c) It would be of an initial five-year duration, subject to prolongation when other nuclear-weapon States join in such a freeze, as the General Assembly urges them to do;

2. Notes with satisfaction that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have already submitted the report requested in General Assembly resolution 38/73 E of 15 December 1983;

3. Hopes that the other major nuclear-weapon State will find it possible to comply also with the request of the General Assembly before the closure of its thirty-ninth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fortieth session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 39/... on a nuclear-arms freeze".

and calls upon the Government to adopt it as policy thereby rejecting the position of the previous administration.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Shall we dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Broadbent), which was negatived on the following division:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion) moved that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the debate today is a debate on creating jobs for Canadians. It is a debate on getting Canadians to be more confident, more willing to invest their huge savings in productive investments. Canada needs in real terms about $100 billion in new equity investment between now and 1991. This Government, this Progressive Conservative Government, is planning now to achieve this target. The Liberal Government gave up. In doing so, I would suggest that they stopped thinking positively. The past Government was, in effect, willing to relegate some 600,000 Canadians to the jobless rolls rather than change an ideology they had become addicted to. Their hostility to what they called foreign investment was paramount.

The new agency described in Bill C-15, on which we are now commencing second reading debate, I would suggest will, in concert with the private sector, provincial Governments and our trade services, work with Canadian investors and non-Canadian investors to ensure that there are productive jobs created for Canadians between now and the 1990s. By changing the name of the agency, we will be sending a positive signal, changing from that hostile-sounding terminology of Foreign Investment Review Agency, to one of: We are open for business once again. I suggest that in changing the mandate from one of foreign investment review to Investment Canada we will demonstrate that indeed there is a strong, positive signal once again coming from Canada with respect to our investment potential, and that those who have money to invest, be they Canadian or non-Canadian, are once again welcome in this country.

The Foreign Investment Review Agency, which we know was created in 1974, became, I suggest, an agency that was out of touch with the realities of 1980. Canada's economic welfare and growth depend on investment. Much of this investment must come from non-Canadian sources. It must come from abroad, and indeed from the reinvestment of earnings by non-Canadian firms resident in Canada.

Canada's performance in the international race for investment has not been helped by FIRA, it has been hindered. Canada should be seen as an attractive place to invest, but unfortunately, in the minds and eyes of many of the world investors, Canada does not have that attractive image any longer. The negative impact of FIRA has given Canada a poor image among potential investors. Our capacity to compete in world markets for technology, investment and trade itself has consequently been hampered.

In a recent European Management Forum study Canada was ranked 22 out of 22 with respect to our attitude and receptiveness to inward investment, as they call it. Imagine, 21 countries such as Australia, New Zealand, Japan, the United States, the United Kingdom, Ireland and Greece were ranked higher on the list of those willing to welcome foreign investment than was Canada. This Government believes, Mr. Speaker, that that is not good enough. Those who are now jobless in the country expect the Government of the day to do more than simply discourage non-Canadian investment from this country, consequently cutting down our full potential. Every industrialized nation in that study was perceived to be more receptive to investment than Canada with respect to their individual countries. We will not allow Canada to continue in last place as a safe, welcome place for non-Canadian investment.

Investment Canada will adopt a positive stance toward non-Canadian investment but it will also want to encourage Canadian investors. Investment Canada, with its new mandate, will be designed to co-ordinate private sector investment, provincial Government activity, our trade services, and, of course, the role of the federal Government in achieving the productive plants, machinery and jobs that we need in Canada. In this new approach we are accepting the reality of the 1980s. We are once again putting Canada in step with the mood of the world today. We are not allowing some outworn ideology to say to Canadians that they cannot have that productive capital which non-Canadians may wish to invest in this country.

• (1115)

In short, let me say that we have found that there are many Canadians who would like to invest in this country. Certainly, they have the savings to invest in this country but they are hesitant because they do not have that necessary confidence to put their investment dollars to work.

We also find that there are non-Canadians who are interested in investing in Canada but they want Canadian partners. They believe that they would be more comfortable if they could work with Canadian investors in developing a business, industry or other activity here.

The purpose of Investment Canada as set out in Bill C-15 is to weld, to bring together, those types of investors. Its purpose is to bring Canadians who have funds to invest together with non-Canadian investors to work in a joint partnership, if you will. These non-Canadian investors may bring new technology or new distribution while also being interested in opening a plant in Canada with a view to serving not just the Canadian domestic market but all of the Americas and serving, through Canada, whatever demands there may be with respect to products that could be sold in the United States, Central and South America and throughout the world. This is what Investment Canada is hoping to achieve.

Let me direct Hon. Members' attention to Clause 5 of the Bill. It sets out some of the positive aspects that we perceive for Investment Canada. Clause 5 reads:

(1) The Minister shall

(a) encourage business investment by such means and in such manner as the Minister deems appropriate;

(b) assist Canadian businesses to exploit opportunities for investment and technological advancement;

(c) carry out research and analysis relating to domestic and international investment;

(d) provide investment information services and other investment services to facilitate economic growth in Canada;

(e) assist in the development of industrial and economic policies that affect investment in Canada;

(f) ensure that the notification and review of investments are carried out in accordance with this Act—

In short, this is a positive piece of legislation that will allow us once again to muster that investment which this country needs in plants and equipment to give our Canadian unemployed work in the future.

To those who may wish to oppose this Bill, I suggest they answer to the unemployed of this country as to why they are disinclined to allow the funds to be mustered to put those people back to work.

I have already set out certain of the subclauses that describe the positive aspects of this Bill. I would also emphasize that when this Bill becomes law it will also ensure that there will be suitable scrutiny of non-Canadian investment over certain thresholds. For example, with respect to direct acquisitions, we will review those that involve an investment of $5 million or more. The $5 million figure was chosen because, at this level, acquisitions are deemed to be of a consequential nature. If we take the 1983 figures as our base, it will mean that we have removed from any review 80 per cent in number of the cases that would ordinarily be reviewed. I would emphasize that the remaining 20 per cent that we will still be reviewing under this clause do represent 90 per cent of the assets involved based on the 1983 figures.

• (1120)

In short, what we are saying is that with respect to new investment, as most of the Members realize from the kits we distributed, there will be no review other than in a very narrow sector.

With respect to acquisitions, we are saying that if they involve $5 million or more there will be a review that catches 90 per cent in dollar terms, but 80 per cent of what the previous Government was reviewing in number will not be reviewed any longer.

I would also mention that as far as reviews are concerned indirect acquisitions, which are now fully reviewable regardless of size, under the new legislation will only be reviewed if they involve an investment of $50 million or more.

Let us put this into perspective. It is one thing for me perhaps to say in numbers, and this is true if you take all the categories, that 90 per cent will not be reviewed, but I believe many people in Canada do not realize the nature of the review which the former Government was enforcing.

The hundreds of cases that went through are very revealing. Since I have had the responsibility for the existing legislation, I have been asked to pass on whether a non-Canadian should have the right to buy, say, a hair-stylist shop or a hamburger stand in Canada. Those were two applications.

Mr. Axworthy: What about a popcorn stand?

Mr. Gauthier: Silly Sinc.

Mr. Stevens: Another one that my friend mentioned was a popcorn wagon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Don't forget the peanut stand. That is usually part of your line.

Mr. Stevens: This fellow, Mr. Speaker, who happened to be a non-Canadian, proposed to buy a popcorn stand from which he would sell, he said, peanuts, candy floss and other related items. When he made that proposal, his lawyers, and this is the law of the land, said: "Of course, you will have to clear that through FIRA". Apparently this fellow said: "What on earth is FIRA?" It was described to him as the Foreign Investment Review Agency of the Dominion of Canada. He made his application. On average, it takes $6,000, if you take the total budget of the existing agency, to process every application. The application chugged through the agency. In due course it came to me. I had to weigh whether this was a significant benefit to Canada. Having found that, in my opinion, it was a significant benefit, the application would then go to Cabinet itself.

The previous Government used up over 20 per cent of its Cabinet agenda reviewing these kinds of cases. This is why we are suggesting that 90 per cent of that type of review is not needed, that we can indicate people are welcome to come to Canada and get on with such investments. We have though reserved the right in terms of indirect acquisitions, as I say, of $50 million or more and direct acquisitions of $5 million or more, to take a look at them and in that way we will catch the bulk of the big dollar items with respect to the legislation.

Mr. Waddell: One minister.

• (1125)

Mr. Stevens: I would emphasize that not only are we freeing up the system, we are allowing the system to function in the way the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) perhaps anticipated when he wrote the original "Gray" report. This is often forgotten. In 1973 when the Foreign Investment Review Act was introduced, it followed the Gray report which recommended that the Government only intervene in important cases. This is sometimes forgotten.

I would like to quote from the report. It recommended such interference or intervention by "limiting the review process to major transactions". It went on to indicate that such review would be possible to maximize economic impact while minimizing the number of cases subject to intervention.

In effect, by knocking out 90 per cent of the cases which are otherwise reviewable, we are simply putting in place what the original Gray report indicated was needed. This is where I suggest that perhaps the problem arose. Ideology was aided and abetted, we will recall, in that period from 1972 to 1974 by this red rump group over there.

Mr. Waddell: You are the ideologue; we are the practical ones.

Mr. Stevens: The Government of the day brought in legislation which was far more sweeping than the Gray report ever anticipated. It was sweeping to the point of saying that every non-Canadian investment in the country should be subject to review.

Let me give another example. There is a moose hunting lodge not far from here which a non-Canadian thought he might like to buy. That of course triggered FIRA. We had to pass on that one. Apparently it is only open 10 days a year, but whether there was a significant benefit to Canada in having a non-Canadian buy that five acres with seven cabins on it had to be weighed. It took the might of the whole Cabinet to come to that determination.

Mr. Nielsen: There is a significant benefit to the moose.

Mr. Axworthy: That is about the level of judgment they could make.

Mr. Stevens: My critic in the Official Opposition has made a comment. I remind him that when FIRA was put in place unemployment in the country was slightly over 5 per cent. Today it is over 11 per cent.

Mr. Orlikow: What will it be a year from now?

Mr. Stevens: A lot lower, my friend.

Mr. Orlikow: We will look at it a year from now.

Mr. Axworthy: That is not what your Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) says. You had better read his report.

Mr. Stevens: It is interesting how the socialists come alive when we start pointing out a few of the hard facts. They have been saying: "My goodness, don't water down this thing called FIRA because it may trigger unemployment in the country", totally ignoring the fact that the unemployment with which we are now living is more than twice as high, number-wise, what it was when FIRA was put in place. Even on a percentage basis, it has gone from 5 per cent to over 11 per cent.

Mr. Orlikow: It will be 12 per cent next year.

Mr. Waddell: You are creating unemployment to fight inflation. Don't you know that?

Mr. Stevens: Let me touch upon another point which I believe Bill C-15 improves tremendously. I am referring to the question of how soon a person who has to have his investment reviewed receives an answer. Under the Act at the present time, there is a 60-day period. However, if the Minister dawdles and does not come to a decision, it is a very simple thing to apply for an extension. Once the extension is applied for, there is no termination. Cases have run for over a year before a person is given a yes or no answer. One has run for 18 months.

• (1130)

That is one of the great deficiencies in the present legislation. A person has a right to know. We are suggesting in our Bill that a 45-day turnaround is appropriate. From the date the application is finally filed, the Minister should be able to get enough information, contact the provinces and the various Ministers that might be interested, come to a conclusion and give an answer within 45 days.

There is a further 30-day extension in cases where that is required. However, if the Minister has not made up his mind after 75 days, the application is deemed to be approved. This is another positive signal to send to those who are interested in investment in this country. We hope Members will support it.

I would emphasize that during that period all the normal checks will be made. What we will be determining is not whether it is of significant benefit to Canada. In all fairness, how can one say that a non-Canadian who wishes to buy a hair-stylist shop is making an investment that is of significant benefit? That is why we are suggesting that it is too nebulous a word. Let's call it net benefit. Do we find that there is a net benefit? If we do, the application should be approved within 45 days, certainly within the 75-day period.

Mr. Waddell: You are assuming they are negative once you use the word "net".

Mr. Stevens: My socialist friend is spouting again. A socialist does not realize that there are credits and debits. As far as net benefit is concerned, I think even a socialist would realize that that is exactly what you have to weigh when you are considering whether an investment should be approved, whether it is of net benefit to Canada. Over 90 per cent of the time even the previous Government said there was a benefit to Canada and approved the application. We are saying the test should be more clear. Call it net benefit and hopefully we will project an image that is positive in the world for Canadian investment rather than negative.

The changes I have mentioned so far can be seen as the correcting of the negative aspects of the Foreign Investment Review Act. Earlier I mentioned the positive aspects. Let me touch on the one reservation we have made within Bill C-15. For those investments that may be of a cultural nature or of a national identity nature, we feel that, regardless of size, there should be a review process. When the parliamentary committee is seized with this legislation, we would like it to make some suggestions as to what should be included under the headings of cultural and national identity.

We believe that by regulation there should be a provision that ensures that book publishing or the media field, for example, should not be allowed to pass into non-Canadian hands without a review. That is why we have that big reservation. It is not necessarily a question of whether an investment is over $5 million. It is much more a question of what is the nature of what is being acquired. I anticipate that at committee various groups in the cultural field will indicate why they feel that something other than book publishing, for example, should be included under that general heading. We are interested to hear from Members on that. That is an important exception to the over-all open, non-review position that we want to take.

Mr. Caccia: How about films?

Mr. Stevens: We have the suggestion of films. I hope the Hon. Member turns up at committee and makes his case. I am not saying that films will not be included under the heading of cultural or national identity as far as this cause is concerned.

Mr. Waddell: Can we sneak in oil companies too?

Mr. Stevens: My socialist friend asks if we can sneak in oil companies. That shows their obsession. Regardless of the consequence and the number of people who may be thrown out of work, their ideology is paramount.

What I mainly want to do this morning is to give the highlights of this legislation, to stress that we believe it is a very integral part of our economic package to get this country back to work and get prosperity on the uptick once again. It is a very essential ingredient in our package. It is a campaign promise that we made very clear throughout the election. It is a promise that we believe the Canadian public expect us to deliver on in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: That is the first applause you have had.

Mr. Stevens: Oh, no. My friend is counting. That is seven.

The legislation before us, Bill C-15, is much more than a modification of the previous Act. This legislation heralds a new day for Canada. Investment Canada will take us from a negative and defensive policy to a positive and forward-looking policy. Critics charge, including my socialist friend, that the legislation throws the door open to economic domination by non-Canadians. They say we will be unable to control acquisitions of Canadian business. These suggestions demonstrate a lack of understanding of the contents of the Bill.

More important, those suggestions are unworthy of Canada. They indicate some unsureness. They indicate a reluctance for Canada to take its rightful position in the world today as one of the most active and dynamic countries, a country having great promise if we simply come into the 1980s and accept that there is a role for capital, be it Canadian or non-Canadian, in the building of this great country.

I will conclude by saying that this Bill respecting investment in Canada is intended to enable us to build bridges rather than barriers. Canadians want more from the Government than an investment watchdog. Canadians want to know that their Government is actively encouraging and seeking investment that is in their best interests. Moreover, Canadians want to know that their country is indeed back in business.

• (1140)

In closing, I would say that I welcome any constructive criticism that fellow Members of the House or of the other place may care to offer during debate on this Bill. I certainly look forward to hearing in our committee review the various representations, but through it all I have the genuine hope that these debates about an Act respecting investment in Canada will make Canadians proud once again to be Canadians in a world setting and will let the world know that Canada has now come up to the 1980s.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to speak on debate? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was just wondering if there is a period for questions and comments at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, there are no questions after speeches of the first three speakers.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we welcome very much the introduction of this Bill by the Hon. Minister because it is the first major piece of economic legislation the Government has brought in as part of its so-called new regime of economic revival. Therefore, it gives this House its first chance to debate at some length and in a comprehensive way the outlines and positions of the new Conservative Government in relation to its stated objectives of economic growth.

We thank the Minister for his explanation of the Bill. I think he fully represents and constitutes the embodiment of that kind of Conservative representation by which, for better or for worse, we will be governed for the next four years at minimum.

I think this is an important debate. I hope all Members of the House will take full advantage of it, listen to it carefully and respond to the arguments that are made. I would hope that the Hon. Minister and his colleagues both in Cabinet and in the Conservative caucus, rather than simply responding in some Pavlovian fashion to the call to arms and to the rhetorical flourishes, will listen carefully to what those opponents and critics of their positions have to say.

I believe that we come here sharing the same objective. We share an interest in creating work in the country. We have the shared goals of generating growth, encouraging investment and of having Canadian industry become a major participant in a new kind of world economy. When it comes down to our basic goals, I think we can say honestly that we on both sides of the House start from the same premise. Where we disagree fundamentally is in the methodology.

It is not as if one side or the other is for or against the creation of jobs. However, our primary concern with this legislation is that it is a faulty mechanism. It is one that is based upon seriously false premises. The end result of the enactment of this legislation will not be the creation of more jobs in Canada but will be the loss of jobs and economic opportunity. It will not provide an incentive for more Canadian investment but in fact will provide a deterrent to the establishment of an effective, modern, competitive, industrialized economy in Canada.

When living in an environment in which there is a requirement for individual countries to compete through high value-added products, manufacturing and high-technology industries, the end result of the Hon. Minister's legislation will be to provide a major deterrent and handicap to growth and development. Therefore, we have a very deep and abiding concern with this legislation.

We believe that if anyone has been caught up in ideology or theology, it is the high priest of the Ministry of Regional Industrial Expansion who has preached an evangelical sermon for years and has now found a new pulpit but in fact will not provide redemption for Canadians as a result. We will in fact find that the opposite will take place. That is why we hope that this debate will be listened to. We hope that we will be able to persuade, through argument at second reading and during committee stage, that there should be changes to this legislation in order not to damage Canadian business and in order to provide better incentives for Canadians to invest in their own economic system.

The real question is what is to be the proper direction and thrust of government policy in order to provide for the development of proper investment and effective job creation. I should say, by the way, that the two are not necessarily synonymous. The one thing we have certainly learned as we have moved into an age of knowledge-intensive industries is that new capital investment does not necessarily lead immediately to job creation unless the benefits of that capital investment and the profit from the wealth it creates is distributed in a way that will create jobs.

Someone could invest x amount of dollars in new machinery to gain productivity, but the end result, at least in that plant or location, would be the elimination of jobs. Therefore, to come at it from a simplistic point of view and simply say capital investment per se is sufficient does not take into account the realities of our present-day economy in which there can be a high level of job elimination or subtraction. What one must do is make sure that the capital investment is allocated and distributed, both on a regional and sector-by-sector basis, to ensure that there is a net gain in job creation for Canadians.

Another reason we have very serious concerns about what the Minister is trying to do is that, first, the so-called Investment Canada legislation is being brought forward in advance of the major economic Budget that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has promised for next spring. It is not part of an integral, comprehensive plan. It is being rushed forward without giving Canadians an opportunity to see what the other parts of the formula will be. We are being given a one-shot unilateral approach by this Minister without having it put in the context of an economic policy.

What we have been promised by the Minister of Finance is consultation and discussion after which we will see the final results some time next spring. However, this Minister, for reasons known only to him or to his colleagues, has taken two initiatives which are quite outside the thrust of the approach of the Minister of Finance. Both his selling off the Crown corporations, thereby affecting in a very dramatic way development in the aerospace sector and the—

Mr. Stevens: Positively.

Mr. Axworthy: Negatively, because we do not know what the results will be. The Minister will not tell us. He will not tell us what the impact will be of selling to foreign buyers Canadair or de Havilland. We have the potential of another Avro Arrow on our hands. The Minister has not issued any guidelines, rules or conditions for that sale. This means that a foreign buyer can buy Canadair or de Havilland, strip its new technology and take it south, north, east or west and leave us with a hulk. The aerospace industry would then be abandoned. We have no idea what the framework of the sale will be because the Minister, when questioned before the committee, refused to say.

We are faced with a Minister who is not only working outside of the framework laid down by the Minister of Finance, but is initiating actions which have the serious potential of damaging major industrial sectors of the country. I suggest that the same fallacy is being perpetrated through this legislation. By not being able to judge its impact with relation to the other initiatives by the Government—which we will have to wait another six or seven months to see—we are being asked to buy a pig in a poke, one which carries with it some very serious potential problems for Canadian investors and Canadian business.

I would like to deal in part with the major principles of this legislation. First, the Minister decides to change the name. To quote Shakespeare, "What's in a name?" The Minister has told us there has been a perception abroad that the very name "FIRA" has struck fear and loathing in the minds of foreign investors and that somehow there is an atmosphere of anxiety and apprehension over the very name "FIRA". I believe it would be of some interest to its officials to know that they have had this incredible amount of power over foreign investors, who are usually much more hard-nosed and calculating than that.

However, if we accept the statement made by the Minister just 20 or 30 minutes ago that there is this incredible sense of fear and loathing, how does he explain the statement by the United States ambassador, Mr. Robinson, who has never been known as a man who limits his statements? He has always been more than forthright and honest in his comments about Canadian programs and policies. I quote from the Conference Board of Canada, not what you would call a Liberal think-tank, by any means. On page 9 Mr. Robinson said: "Canada remains a very good country for people to invest their money". It seems to me that the U.S. ambassador is not subject to the same fear and loathing which the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) believes.

Mr. Stevens: He did not say "non-Canadians".

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Robinson said in fact that we had made changes and things were now improving.

Mr. Stevens: Read page 58.

Mr. Axworthy: Let me continue, Mr. Speaker, and ask about that big foreign investment community out there. A questionnaire was sent out and one of the questions was: "What is it that affects your decision to invest or not to invest in Canada?" Out of 333 companies, 6.6 per cent named some facet of government regulation; only 6.6 per cent, Mr. Speaker. That is the "atmosphere of fear and loathing" about which the Minister talks.

When asked what makes these investors invest, a much higher percentage of companies said it is the whole question of market opportunities, competitiveness and profitability, the normal criteria by which business people make decisions. This Government has gone to this enormous time, effort and expense to tell us we have to change the perception when in fact the perception is generally positive.

Mr. Stevens: Read page 58.

Mr. Axworthy: We have gone through the studies. We have received statements from the U.S. ambassador and, in fact, we could quote, if the Minister likes, a number of other similar statements. It is far more a problem, Mr. Speaker, in the minds—and I use that term loosely—of the Conservatives because it has been part of their theology. They have gone around the country year after year preaching hate against FIRA. They have tried to whip up a storm of resentment. Where the problem has been is when Conservative spokesmen have appeared before American, German or French audiences and told them that FIRA is a terrible thing. That has been the problem, Mr. Speaker.

Let us look at the facts, Mr. Speaker, never mind the perception. Let us look at the reality. If there was such an incredible amount of anxiety out there, how does the Minister explain that last year over $4.1 billion of foreign capital was invested in this country?

Mr. Stevens: That did not regain what we lost in 1981 and 1982. What about the money that left?

Mr. Axworthy: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that 1,000 foreign investors made applications and 97 per cent of those applications were approved. The Minister has tried to make out that FIRA was acting as some kind of a tight screen through which only the odd little person was able to sneak through, but 97 per cent of the applications last year were approved.

Mr. Stevens: One hundred and sixty you did not even decide.

Mr. Axworthy: Why does the Minister argue when somehow those who wanted to invest in Canada were, by and large, given the right to invest after they had properly gone through and been judged in relation to significant benefit to Canada? That is the key question. It is not the flow of capital which is the issue. It is what happens to the capital when it arrives. It is the impact of that capital and what it does in terms of creating jobs, research and development and world product mandates, which is the real issue.

It is the ultimate capitulation and surrender by this Government that it is totally eviscerating the opportunity of Canada to determine whether foreign capital will be used in a positive, constructive way, in order to ensure that the businesses which were acquired or started in this country would in fact be used to create jobs. By eliminating those requirements, by having no screening whatsoever for new business, by taking indirect acquisitions up to $50 million, and by raising the threshold for direct acquisitions, it is eliminating—as the Minister himself said—90 per cent of those applications, which means that investors can come into this country, buy a Canadian company, strip its technology, take it back to St. Louis, leaving nothing but the hulk; and the Minister says that is going to create jobs. That is the problem, Mr. Speaker, which this Minister does not understand.

FIRA was not used to keep capital out. It was used as a bargaining, leverage agency in order to make sure that we received proper benefits for this country.

Mr. Mazankowski: You have to be kidding!

Mr. Stevens: Most of them didn't even come to bargain.

Mr. Axworthy: That was the reason for FIRA and those people opposite did not understand its performance. That is the blindness. That is the theology. That is the problem. Hon.

Members opposite did not understand how it worked and they still don't. The Minister has been so blinded and conditioned for so long that he refuses to understand that the Foreign Investment Review Agency was an instrument designed to ensure that there was benefit from that capital for Canadians.

The end result of what the Minister is now doing is that Canadian companies which have developed a new technology, a value-added manufacturing base, can be acquired without any requirement or condition, and the benefits of that research and development or technology will not be given to Canadians but will be given to foreigners. Therefore, the net result of the Minister's initiative will not be the ability of Canadians to build a highly knowledge-intensive industry base, either in its traditional industries or its new industries, and we will run the real danger of having those attributes and assets stripped from Canadian companies and taken somewhere else. If the Minister thinks that that is going to create a place for Canada to compete in a highly competitive international atmosphere and environment, then, Mr. Speaker, he is out to lunch—

Mr. Caccia: He is dreaming in colour.

Mr. Axworthy: —and performing a serious disservice to the Canadian economy and to the Canadian business community.

Mr. Gustafson: You have been out to lunch for 16 years.

Mr. Axworthy: What interests me about the grand claims made for Investment Canada is that it is just not for foreign investment, it is going to be for all investment. We are going to have one central agency which will provide the stimulus and be the catalyst for all Canadian investors. But what does this legislation empower the Minister to do? He is empowered to publish a few pamphlets, from the looks of it. There is nothing in this legislation which provides any incentive, any more flexible opportunity for Canadian small business whatsoever. There is nothing here. It is a camouflage. It is a phony. It is a subterfuge. It is cosmetics. There is nothing which will enable the Canadian small business community to develop more capital.

Why has this Government been so reluctant and evasive in providing the kind of stimulus for small business when there is a full amount of capital in this country? We are the largest savers in the world. Thirteen per cent of our disposable income is in savings. Why is there not something in this legislation, or in the initiatives put forward by the Minister of Finance, to unlock that capital for equity or venture purposes for small business?

Mr. Stevens: It is in there.

Mr. Axworthy: There is nothing in there at all. The Minister can provide a few pamphlets. However, Mr. Speaker, as part of the Investment Canada initiative, for example, one idea should have been to fold in the Federal Business Development Bank as part of the operation so that Canadian investors could have a proper loan guarantee position available to them to invest in these areas.

• (1200)

Why has the Government been absolutely silent on the issue of a competition Bill? We tried several times, over their opposition, to bring in a Bill to allow for more competition in the business community. Why has the Government been reluctant to do the same? It is because we know in whose back pockets they belong. This is not a Government that really believes in competition. It does not really believe in breaking up the concentration of capital.

Part of the problem in this country has been far too much concentration of capital in large corporations. We know that job creation will take place primarily in the small and medium business sector, not in the large companies. In fact, there have been net job losses in the large companies. The major job creation will take place in the small business sector. From comparative studies between small business in Canada and the U.S. we know that the same percentage of new businesses emerges each year in the small business sector but they tend to hit a dead zone area and find it more difficult to expand and become medium or large size.

One of the reasons for that is our financial system. It is too rigid, too structured, and there is not enough venture and investment capital. But nothing this Government has done, either in this legislation or in the initiatives of the Minister of Finance, provides any opportunity for Canadian business in this area.

I hear the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion was eloquent about how he wants to create jobs. I am in favour of that, no problem; but let us see what he is going to do. He says it is in the legislation, but where? Where is the policy or the program? Where is the freeing up of the economic rules and framework to allow that flow of capital to emerge? For example, when we were in government we initiated major programs of deregulation. We brought more competition into the transportation industry, specifically airline and trucking. We believed there had to be more scope for private innovation and competition. But where have we gone since then? The economic statement of the Minister of Finance added substantial new charges to the transportation industry which will detract from the industry's ability to take advantage of deregulation. They now face higher costs because of government action. We have this group of people who get up on every platform across the country and preach a theology of innovation and competition, and then turn around and increase costs for the small business community of Canada.

This is flip-flop, Mr. Speaker. They say one thing and do another. They have wonderful rhetoric but when you look at the real nature of their actions, you see a very different picture. They are so obsessed and mesmerized by the deficit reduction theology they have that they are now restricting the channels and opportunities for growth. They have dampened the opportunities for growth through these measures of heavier government spending, heavier government costs. The opportunity for the business community and consumers generally to have more money in their pockets through competition has thereby been lost.

The Minister stood up this morning and said it is a new day for Canada, the heralding of a new age. Yet it is the Government that is dampening and suffocating the possibilities for growth. That is the real danger. I hope the Conservatives will not smirk about it but take it into consideration. I am sure that during the committee hearings we will have enough witnesses to provide evidence of that. The Science Council of Canada, for example, has given us numerous analyses. I suggest the Minister might want to read some of their reports. They point out time and time again that if we are to provide for the development of a knowledge-intensive, high value-added industry in this country, then we must protect our industry in that area from takeover and acquisition and suffocation. Members opposite do not necessarily have to listen to me, although I think it would be wise if they did. They might want to listen to the Science Council as to what is required in terms of industrial strategy to meet the international competition we face.

The Minister talks about the 1980s; I am talking about the 1990s and the years beyond. The young people coming out of our universities and colleges are going to have to find jobs in those knowledge-intensive industries, but because of this Minister's actions those industries will all be south of us or north of us or east and west of us because they will not be able to survive here. That is the problem. That is the scenario which has been laid out for us. We do not have an open door; rather we are becoming the doormats of the world.

Do you know what is absolutely mind boggling about this, Mr. Speaker? This Government says it is going to establish a new relationship with the United States, the biggest foreign investor. We have this new privileged relationship. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was in New York last night and the business community applauded him. Of course they did. They always like to see people come down there that they can sell the Brooklyn Bridge to. They love people like that. Of course they are going to applaud and stamp their feet and whistle and cheer. They like to see guys who are going to lie on their backs and go bow-wow. That is what is going on, Mr. Speaker.

I ask the Minister: did he make any effort, did the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) make any effort, did the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) make any effort to get reciprocity from the Americans on the prohibitions to foreign investment that are rampant in that country? They have anti-trust laws, securities laws, procurement laws, exclusion from a number of sectors. The Americans do not have a FIRA, but they sure as heaven have a lot of protective measures to ensure that foreign investors cannot buy up American businesses of all kinds.

There are many examples, and the Minister knows them, of a Canadian business going down to the States and there must be public disclosure because of the Securities Exchange Commission. Where is this in our Bill? If we are going to have an open hunting season on Canadian business, we should get the same rights in the United States. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the Minister has done this secretly or in private. But I do not believe that we should be making these kinds of changes in our ability to monitor foreign investment when other countries are not giving us the right to do the same in their country. Talk about selling out! Talk about poor bargaining! The wool has been pulled over our eyes and the Prime Minister is going down there and reinforcing that all over again.

No one is arguing, Mr. Speaker, that the United States is our major trading partner and source of foreign capital. Under FIRA they supplied 60 per cent of our trade, as I read the figures, or more depending on how you measure it. If that is the case, before we bring in this legislation, before we totally eviscerate our ability to make foreign capital responsible and accountable, why in God's name do we not ask the same thing of the Americans? Why do we simply give away our side of the bargain and not get anything in return? Is that what you call good business? Is that the kind of deal the Minister wants to go around making? We are simply the fall guys for the rest of the world. Is that going to be the new era, the new age? Canadians are simply the soft touches and easy makes in the international environment. Is that the kind of new economic policy we can expect?

If not, then I think the Minister better get on a plane tonight and go down to his friends in Washington. He should tell them that we are on second reading of this Bill, he knows the opposition is going to hold him there for a long time and so he has some time to bargain. Let him ask what those guys are prepared to give us in return. If he does not, then he is in serious dereliction of his responsibilities to the people of Canada as a Minister of the Crown. I think he should understand that.

Not only are we giving away our institutional rights, Mr. Speaker; not only are we threatening the potential for Canadian small business to develop its own specialized areas of competence and expertise and marketing, but we are doing it without getting anything in return. Canadians could compete if they had the same rights, but where are they? Why were we not down there bargaining for those reciprocal rights? That is the problem, Mr. Speaker.

• (1210)

That is why we on this side of the House say that, with regard to job creation and capital investment, this Bill is based on some very major fallacies. If we consider the industrial reality that we will be facing in the country, the Minister is in fact pulling out some of the major props. He received great laughs and hurrahs from his colleagues when he said that they are getting away from "significant" benefit and it will now be "net" benefit. That means that if it is a slight smidgen, half an iota, he is going to sell the store.

Mr. Deans: How would you know?

Mr. Axworthy: We will not know, of course, because now, all of a sudden, the only arbitrator, the only judge, the high priest of Canadian investment, will be this Minister. I do not blame him in a sense for trying to accumulate all this power unto himself.

Mr. Deans: You know all about that.

Mr. Axworthy: Certainly ministerial discretion is an honoured tradition on both sides of the House.

Let us look at the practical realities, Mr. Speaker. The Minister said that he does not want to take up the time of the Cabinet. He made the spurious statement that investment review takes 20 per cent of the time of Cabinet. That is absolute nonsense. I can say that because I was a member of Cabinet. Of course, it may have accounted for 20 per cent of the paperwork. The reason for having Cabinet review was to give other Ministers who have industrial or economic concerns the opportunity to raise a point if they felt it necessary. It also gave regional Ministers from across Canada some insurance that they could protect economic development and opportunity in their own regions. That has now been lost, Mr. Speaker. This Minister can simply make a decision totally on his own cognizance without any sober second thought or any reference to his colleagues. That goes against one of the fundamental principles of Canadian parliamentary government. The Cabinet has always been the repository and defender of regional interests. Because of the weakness of our Senate, and I do not have to go through that whole theory—

Mr. Deans: It is full of Liberals.

Mr. Axworthy: Thank God for that small blessing that we have.

Mr. Deans: It is very small.

Mr. Axworthy: The fact of the matter is that the Cabinet of Canada has always been the route through which regions of the country have been able to ensure some protection of their interests. This is an area of major importance to every region of the country. Depending on which new business comes in or is acquired, it could have dramatic negative effects in Nova Scotia, British Columbia or the Prairies. All of a sudden we have eliminated the opportunity for the Ministers representing those regions to provide some sober second thought, some other calculation or assessment.

I think that is a very major weakness in this Bill and I hope the Minister will reconsider it. We can ask former ministers of industry to come to committee and tell him that it did not take that time of Cabinet. The time was available. It was a residual right, but it certainly did not encompass the amount of time which this Minister claims it did. The Minister is bringing in legislation which eliminates the capacity for regional protection and judgment.

The Minister has taken the position that he is going to ensure quick, efficient service through this new agency. Of course, he has eliminated most of the review. He has taken out 90 per cent of the applications. He has also said that there is an absolute 45-day deadline after which anything goes.

Let us go back to the principle which I put forward that I hope the Minister might accept, even though we have not heard him say it. When there is an application by a foreign company or enterprise to acquire a Canadian asset, there must be some capacity on this side of the border to ensure that that acquisition will protect jobs. Members have been raising in the House the problem with Black and Decker. They have not fulfilled the requirements. What would happen if no requirements were put on them? Oftentimes there is a very important requirement that serious bargaining and negotiations be entered into to ensure that the new acquisition will provide a world product mandate for that Canadian company, protect the jobs and ensure that R and D remains here. There are a number of benefits. What happens if the deadline passes and an agreement has not yet been reached? Why should they agree? What foreign enterprise, knowing that there is an absolute cut-off deadline, is going to bargain in good faith? Why should they? They will simply back away and say—

Mr. Stevens: Because they will get a "no".

Mr. Axworthy: We have not seen any "noes" yet. The Minister has simply said that it is a wide-open world, that they are not stopping anything. They are reading the speeches of the Minister. There were 1,500 people at a dinner in New York where the Prime Minister was promising open skies and open ground.

Mr. Stevens: What do you think the reviews are for?

Mr. Axworthy: Well, that is what we are asking. The review is there to get benefits for Canadians. The term "significant benefit" has been eliminated. New businesses have been eliminated. The threshold on indirect acquisition has been raised. The message is clear. The Government does not want to provide a review, or bargaining or negotiation. The Government is saying that since there is a constituency out there which kind of likes the idea of a screening agency, it will keep the former structure. It is like one of those old western movie sets. There is a big tall building in the front and nothing at the back. It is pure subterfuge, Mr. Speaker. That is all the Minister is giving us. He is not giving us anything real or substantial that Canadian can count upon to protect their interests. The Minister is simply providing a veritable goose. Anything goes through in 20 seconds.

That is why we feel there are serious problems relating to this legislation with regard to the philosophy, the premise and the understanding of the economic environment and what we must do to establish, protect and enhance a Canadian industrial strategy. That is why we feel this legislation is very faulty and damaging and raises a large number of questions that will have to be examined before the House will be able to form any judgment upon it.

In sheer economic terms, Mr. Speaker, we hope that the Minister and his colleagues will reflect upon this.

Mr. Stevens: We will need better arguments than we have heard from you.

Mr. Axworthy: That is the attitude, Mr. Speaker. They know everything.

Mr. Deans: That isn't really fair either. I don't agree with him all the time, but the arguments aren't all that bad.

Mr. Axworthy: I thank the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) for that endorsement.

Let us raise the other side of the coin, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House will have lots of time to discuss it. I know this will bring a scowl and a look of scorn to the Minister's face because he does not believe in this. There is an issue of sovereignty involved. There is a question of the protection of Canadian institutions. Any Government of Canada that has been elected by the people with the kind of mandate this Government received cannot simply put that on the shelf and refuse to deal with it. There is a fundamental issue of ownership and control, because that does, in part, allow us to have some management over our own future. We cannot simply engage in a series of giveaways in the areas of trade, foreign investment and foreign policy. In three short months in the area of foreign policy, the Government has tied its little wagon to the American bulldozer without a question, a contrary word or even a reservation.

• (1220)

In a most revealing interview this weekend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that the Government will simply say "Ready, aye ready" to the American positions on foreign policy. He said that the previous Government became too obsequious at times. Prime Minister Trudeau with his peace initiatives had the nerve to go to talk to other countries, and he even talked to eastern European countries—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Hon. Member to conclude his speech?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I believe that there is unlimited time for the first three speeches.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is a limit of 40 minutes. The unlimited time is for the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Axworthy: Then I will conclude. I simply raised that point for consideration. I know that many of my colleagues will be more than happy to expand upon this Bill in the days, weeks and months ahead as we debate second reading. I will simply thank the Minister for giving us for the first time some of the bare bones of this new Conservative age. I want to say that those bones will need a very good rattling; otherwise we are in real danger of selling out this country for a mess of potage and getting nothing in return.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this is a historic debate of immense importance to the country and to our economic future. It is a historic debate, first because it represents the first real initiative which this Conservative Government has taken. As business people have said, they like the smell from the kitchen, but now the stew—or perhaps I should say the popcorn—is served. The Government now has publicly to defend the direction which we believe prejudice is pushing the Government to take the country toward.

Second, and perhaps even more important, it is a historic debate because this subject, the issue of foreign investment, is something that we in Canada have dealt with for decades. It is a subject that has been agonizing Canadians for well over 100 years, since the first subsidiary established itself in Ontario in 1872. We must remember that history. It is a history that should show us something; a history of a growing presence of foreign investment over the years until the 1930s. During the difficulties of the 1930s when we needed jobs, there was a major outflow of that foreign investment which made our depression worse than it otherwise would have been.

We must also recall the tremendous sense of dynamism, expansion and growth in our Canadian companies as we emerged from World War II. However, there was a huge inflow of American foreign investment which snuffed out those growing Canadian companies that offered us at that stage a chance to grow in our own economy and build on our own resources.

We must also remember that the Foreign Investment Review Agency was not a cheap political trick quickly brought out by a Liberal Government in trouble. It was the result of a long period of careful study and of immensely popular activity and pressure throughout the country to address a concern which Canadians recognized was important, but for the economic well-being of the country.

There has been documentation in this country, starting with the Gordon Commission in the 1950s and moving to the Watkins report in the 1960s and the Gray report in the 1970s, showing the problems which foreign investment can create in this country. It is out of those careful analyses and efforts to understand what was taking place that the decision was made to try to establish a review mechanism along with a number of other legislative initiatives. We are talking about something which has been part of our history and which our history has taught us to pay careful attention to and be seriously concerned about. Frankly, our history has taught us that foreign investment is something that must be handled with care and a sense of control for the sake of our country's future.

I believe it is very important at the start of this debate to define exactly what it is that we are debating. The Minister would have us believe that we are debating the future of employment in this country. That is simply not the case. We are not debating whether this country should have direct foreign investment. Our Party has pressed strongly, for instance, for more Japanese investment in the automobile industry here, and we believed that government action was necessary to push Japanese investors into establishing plants in this country.

It is not a question of wanting to block out direct foreign investment. Nor is it a question of investment promotion. It is quite possible today, without a new Bill or any legislation, for the Minister and his colleagues to promote foreign investment in this country. In fact, our high commissions and embassies throughout the world presently do precisely what the Minister says he wants Investment Canada to do. They talk to potential investors and promote the possibilities of investment in this country which will benefit the country. The debate is not about that.

It is not a debate about whether the Cabinet should have to consider popcorn dealers in Edmonton. It is quite possible for procedures to be set up at any time by any government which will ensure that cabinet looks only at the most important and significant investments in terms of the process itself. It is not a debate about cabinet process.

It is not a debate about whether FIRA is perfect. We in this Party have had passionate criticisms of FIRA in the last ten years. We have seen FIRA as a closed and secretive agency which has not been prepared to be upfront with the Canadian people and with communities that have been damaged by companies that have not fulfilled their commitments. We have criticisms of that agency and would be pleased to support changes in the way that agency operates. In fact, we have suggested some changes.

There are three basic issues involved in this debate. First, with so much of our economy already in foreign hands, is there reason to be concerned about direct foreign investment and should we try to offer some alternatives to it? That is the first issue.

• (1230)

Second, does it make economic sense to have a review process to try to deal with some of the problems of foreign investment?

Third, is promotion of direct foreign investment from abroad the way to make Canadian investment and entrepreneurship more dynamic?

I want to deal with each of these real issues in the debate and leave aside the bogus issues that I think have been too much at the centre of what we have been talking about so far.

The first thing we have to recognize is the incredible proportions of foreign control here in our economy. We have data, the most recent available from Statistics Canada, which lay out the position very clearly. If we take all manufacturing, 51 per cent of our manufacturing industry is foreign controlled, as is 98 per cent of the rubber industry, 51 per cent of agricultural machinery, 92 per cent of transportation equipment, 70 per cent of electrical apparatus, 71 per cent of chemicals, and 52 per cent of miscellaneous manufacturing.

We are not talking about bringing in some new small additions to a country basically under its own control. We are talking about a country in which the proportion of foreign investment is already massive and which no other industrialized country in the world can match.

Mr. Deans: Not that we want them to.

Mr. Langdon: There has been a drop since 1971 in the proportion of foreign control. It may well be that the existence of FIRA has helped that. If so, all I can say is halleluja! Thank God we are finally getting a little more sense of control over the direction in which we are going.

Mr. Stevens: Is it better to have people out of work?

Mr. Deans: Don't be silly. You don't listen.

Mr. Langdon: The argument that is commonly made by economists in countries throughout the world is to bring in some foreign investment as a leavening to a local economy, to bring in some technology to help spruce things up a little bit and to push domestic firms so that they are more competitive and more in touch with some of the changes in technology throughout the world.

Those arguments are made in economies that have 10 per cent, 15 per cent, or 20 per cent foreign control. The arguments are not sensible, they just do not make sense in an economy that has 51 per cent of its manufacturing industry already foreign controlled. Surely to God, Mr. Speaker, that 51 per cent foreign control will act as a mechanism to bring in new technology, new ideas and suggestions from outside. Our problem is not new foreign investment and new input from the outside, but too many inputs and too much of an overload on an economy to make it possible for ourselves to shape the future.

That is just not an argument relevant to Canada. In fact, our problem becomes a problem with the multinational companies that are already here. Again, the data are gloomy and spectacular on this point. If we look at the recent period of devastating economic difficulty in Canada, we see that out of the top 50 companies in Canada, those that were U.S. owned lost twice as many jobs in 1982 and 1983 as those that are Canadian owned.

Mr. Deans: Are you listening, Sinc? That is the answer to your question.

Mr. Langdon: All over the globe multinational companies are rationalizing, shaping their own business empires, as they must. They are run by business people and they have to do it on the basis of what makes sense for them as international entities. When that happens there is absolutely no guarantee at all that we in this economy will get a fair shake out of what those large companies are doing.

Mr. Deans: That is true.

Mr. Langdon: There is absolutely no guarantee at all. If we simply sit back and let it happen, we will have what we have had here in Canada in the last four years, namely plant shut-downs, American companies moving out and Canadian workers out of work. In short, we will have exactly the opposite of the picture which the Minister has painted for us. We will have a worsening of the economic crisis that we have rather than any improvement.

We simply cannot leave ourselves to the mercy of multinational enterprises. There has to be some kind of control, some input, for our communities as these companies carry out their game plans throughout the world.

Why, if there are problems and we need some mechanism to deal with them, do we have a review mechanism? I think first we have to recognize that a great many countries have precisely that kind of review mechanism. If we look, for instance, at the recent book put out by the British North American Committee entitled Governments and Multinationals: Policies in the Developed Countries, it is very clear that we are not alone. We are not the only country looking to review companies from outside coming into Canada. What about Japan, France, Australia and Italy? All of those countries have review mechanisms.

Mr. Stevens: All less than us.

Mr. Langdon: Even the United States has important mechanisms by which it sees to it that any company being established in the U.S.A. faces some kind of overview by its Government.

I think as well that the evidence that the Conservatives believe in is simply not there. They suggest that there has been a downturn in direct foreign investment coming in as a result of FIRA. In fact, if you take the last four years for which we have data, Mr. Speaker, starting in 1981, each and every year the net flow of direct foreign investment into this country has increased.

Mr. Stevens: No.

Mr. Langdon: I can give the Minister statistics.

Mr. Stevens: Take a look at the IMF figures.

Mr. Langdon: From a negative balance of $4.4 billion in 1981 we had a negative $900 million in 1982. In 1983 we were up to a positive $200 million and so far in 1984 we are up to a positive $1.3 billion.

Mr. Crofton: What is your source?

Mr. Langdon: The Source? Statistics Canada: total direct foreign investment in place. These are the latest figures available. The reality is that, contrary to the myth, FIRA was not preventing inflows.

Because of the many problems that exist with direct foreign investment, we need a review mechanism to bargain with those companies, not to exclude them. The goal is not to exclude foreign investment. The goal is to take that $1.3 billion of net inflows this year and see to it that each and every company coming into the country provides the greatest possible benefit to us. That is what the review mechanism is for.

Mr. Stevens: Read the Act.

Mr. Langdon: I have read the Act. The existing problems in terms of direct foreign investment need a response. Let us not pretend that those problems do not exist. Every serious study which has taken place in Canada and in other parts of the world has documented that such problems exist and have to be recognized. For example, the research and development undertaken by foreign companies in Canada is much lower than the research and development undertaken by Canadian companies. If we simply take those firms with more than 500 employees, foreign companies contributed only 2 per cent of their sales to research and development while Canadian companies contributed 10.3 per cent of their sales. If we turn to imports, we see that foreign companies imported four times as much as Canadian companies in the manufacturing sector. If we take the entire industrial sector, we see that foreign companies imported five times as much as Canadian companies. Every dollar of extra import means lost jobs in Canada for Canadians who could be producing the inputs to those companies.

It is not only the problem of purchases. It is the problem of outflows. One would think from what the Minister says that foreign investors come here and give us a gift of billions of dollars of investment. He forgets in a short-sighted way that we have to pay back that gift along with the significant profits which those companies can earn here.

If we take the question of outflows, U.S.-controlled firms which comprise 36 per cent of industrial assets accounted for 61 per cent of external remittances. Money which could be invested here but is instead sent home costs this country jobs. Jobs are not the only cost of outpayments by these companies. They also succeed in escaping from the diligence of the popular Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty). There are various cases which demonstrate the way in which multinational companies aim effectively to set up their tax system so that they take their profits in the country where the taxes are least.

A detailed study of the computer industry in Canada found that in 1981 there was a $50 million loss of tax income through this mechanism. As a result, foreign companies transferring their profits out of the country in the form of purchases from their parent companies abroad led to 30 per cent fewer taxes from the industry than we would otherwise have had in Canada. In addition, these companies exported far less than Canadian companies of the same size and in the same industry. In 1978, 90 per cent of the exports of these companies were just exports to parent companies abroad.

We know from historical data that over half the subsidiaries established here do not have the complete freedom to export. Various restrictions are placed upon them. Every dollar of lost export earnings contributes to job loss in this country.

The problems exist. They are immense. They are well documented. Can a review mechanism or a bargaining mechanism help us to deal with these problems? Frankly, it is difficult to have a certain answer to that question. The way the previous Government set up FIRA created an instrument which operated in a secretive, closed way. This meant that we were unable to monitor carefully the benefits of the review process. In that sense the previous administration was the author of its own misfortune in the attack which is being undertaken on FIRA. If a more open, publicly accountable review mechanism had been set up, we would be able to judge its benefits better.

An internal evaluation study has now been completed within FIRA. We shall be asking for that study to be released. Our understanding is that it showed that the great majority of companies with which FIRA bargained in fact met the commitments they made to create more employment in Canada, to do more research and development here, to export more outside the country and to buy more inputs within Canada. This tells us that FIRA has not lost jobs. Instead, it has gained jobs for Canadians by the bargaining it has undertaken with companies that went through the review process.

We all know that not enough companies went through the review process. Too many were exempted. Too many of the large multinational companies here have never had to face a review by FIRA. But, faulty though it was, the mechanism showed that reviewing foreign investment proposals could gain greater benefits for us.

There is a third issue: Will this Bill "redynamize" the Canadian private sector? Is it possible, by bringing in new foreign investment, somehow to shake up Canadian entrepreneurs and get them investing again? I think the exact opposite will take place as a result of this Bill. The Bill exempts any new investment from being reviewed. It permits any American competitor to come into the country and set up operations in direct and immediate competition with a Canadian firm. Absolutely nothing can be done to stop that. The result could be the bankruptcy of such a Canadian firm with no recourse whatsoever to turn to the Government for assistance. The way to growth, the way to expansion and the way to having entrepreneurship once more moving ahead is to encourage small companies throughout Canada by assisting them in every possible way.

It is precisely these small companies which become sitting ducks as a result of the new Bill. Any company with under $5 million in assets can now be taken over by an American company. Nothing can be done to stop it. There will be no review mechanism, no careful attempt on the part of the Government to work out a joint venture. Instead, those emerging Canadian entrepreneurs, those who can give us our future, will be faced with temptation far too often. When their business gets to a level of $2 million, $3 million or $4 million in assets, they will be able to settle back, as so often was the case in the past in this country, and sell out their firm at a nice high price to the United States. They will be able to retire to Florida, sit back, put their feet up and stop their contribution to this country and the entrepreneurship which could expand it.

I cannot understand the logic of the approach that those very companies that we should be working hardest to protect, those with under $5 million in assets, should have open season declared on them by this Bill. We need a new economic strategy to help the private sector much more, to assist it to make a contribution to building an economy in Canada, not only one that we control but one that gives us the jobs we need. This Bill does not help that process; it hurts it.

This Bill is a major step backwards. This Bill ends all review of new investment proposals, all small takeovers of growing, independent Canadian firms. There will be no more review of that. Even significant-sized subsidiaries in this country can be taken over by indirect takeover with no review mechanism there to stop it.

When the Bill was released on Friday, we said the Bill should have been called Warehouse Canada instead of Investment Canada. It is a Bill to sell our country out. It will turn the industrial estates across this country into a series of warehouses. American companies will set up business, bring in their goods from abroad and maybe repackage them, if we are lucky. They will buy out small Canadian firms to do that, shutting down the production of those firms, and sell as importers. It will cost us again and again the jobs and the opportunities this country so desperately needs.

I cannot understand the economic logic of what is being done. The political logic I understand. I understand that the Government is anxious to tell the United States that we are its best friend once again. We will do anything. We will lay out the door mat and open the doors. If they cannot get in through the door, we will open the windows. We will do anything to prove to the United States that we are going back to our old dependent position of saying "absolutely" when they want something done.

That is the politics of it. We in this party will not let the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and his Cabinet create the impression across this country that they are doing this to get jobs in Canada. It is not jobs they are going to get; it is joblessness that they will create. The cases are already there. We have talked in this House about the Black and Decker case, about the shut-down now being planned in Barrie, Ontario. There will be 600 jobs lost in that community.

Government supporters have to understand that under this Bill, Black and Decker would have been completely free of any review when the takeover occurred. In the case of the GE subsidiary in Barrie, Black and Decker indirectly purchased a subsidiary worth less than $50 million. They would have had complete freedom to shut down that subsidiary without any negotiation process, without any help for the workers involved, without any negotiation with the community and without any review mechanism by the Government of Canada. That kind of economic nonsense will damage communities across this country one by one over the next 10 years, if this Bill goes into effect.

We have talked about the need to have a different kind of mechanism. We would like to see a review undertaken by a body that operates like the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, for example. It would hear representations publicly from the companies seeking to establish a takeover, from the community affected and from the workers affected. That kind of review mechanism would hold the companies to a public set of commitments. Second, it would give workers the chance to push companies to make new and different commitments. Third, it would permit communities to know what their future will be.

We would support that kind of commitment, but that is not what this Bill gives us. This Bill puts a fox in charge of the chickens and it does so unilaterally. It makes the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, with his oft expressed bias in favour of foreign investment, the man who will review every future takeover in this country. I do not believe Canadians want that fox in charge of our chickens.

The jobs it will cost are not just, in that case, jobs from new investment, jobs from takeovers of small companies, jobs from indirect takeovers, but jobs from large takeovers. By taking this out of the control of Cabinet and putting it to the gentle mercies of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, even large-scale takeovers will be subject to approval without guarantees to the Canadian people.

There are two visions for the future which will compete in this debate. I predict the debate will go on a long time because we intend to fight this Bill in a tough and effective way. There is a vision of an independent, strong Canada under our own control, giving us the jobs we need for our future. On the other hand, there is a vision of a country dependent, weakened, with an economy that relies on others to give it dynamism, an economy and a policy prostituting itself to try and get direct foreign investment from whoever will provide it.

We will fight for that first vision of a strong, independent economy under our own control. As this fight goes on, it is that vision of a positive, exciting future for all the people of this country which will win support. I predict that this first major initiative of the Conservative Government will be one of the first steps that ultimately costs it the popular support of the people of this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.
