HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 5, 1984

FIRST SESSION—THIRTY-THIRD PARLIAMENT

[English]

The Thirty-second Parliament having been dissolved by proclamation on Monday, July 9, 1984, and writs having been issued and returned, a new Parliament was summoned to meet for the dispatch of business on Monday, November 5, 1984, and did accordingly meet on that day.

This being the day on which Parliament is convoked by proclamation of Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada for the dispatch of business, and the Members of the House being assembled:

Dr. Charles B. Koester, Esquire, Clerk of the House of Commons, read to the House a letter from the Administrative Secretary to the Governor General informing him that the Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, would proceed to the Senate Chamber to open the first session of the Thirty-third Parliament of Canada on Monday, the fifth day of November, at eleven o'clock a.m.

A message was delivered by Claude Lajoie, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Members of the House of Commons:

It is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada that this honourable House attend him immediately in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the House went up to the Senate Chamber, where the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable Members of the Senate,

Members of the House of Commons:

I have it in command to let you know that Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada does not see fit to declare the causes of her summoning the present Parliament of Canada until a Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen, according to law; but this afternoon at the hour of three o'clock p.m. Her Excellency will declare the causes of her calling Parliament.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER

MR. JOHN WILLIAM BOSLEY, MEMBER FOR THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF DON VALLEY WEST

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, today, we are convoking a new Parliament, a new assembly of the Canadian people. Many Members of this Parliament have never sat in the House of Commons before, including many of those sitting on the Government side, and it is indeed important for an institution like Parliament to be revitalized through the democratic process.

[English]

At a moment like this it is useful to recall the words of a great parliamentarian, Edmund Burke. He said:

Parliament is not a congress of ambassadors from different and hostile interests . . . But Parliament is a deliberative assembly with one interest, that of the whole—

These words we should imprint in our minds as we gather to elect a Speaker to preside over our deliberations and act as the custodian of the rights of all Members.

The role of Speaker is the noblest centrepiece of our democratic system. Going back as far as Sir Thomas Hungerford under Edward III, the Speaker of the House of Commons has been the guarantor of Parliament's privileges and the curator of Parliament's traditions.

The House functions effectively to the degree and to the extent that the Speaker understands and applies his role as an absolutely impartial arbitrator. He is not the servant of the Government or the servant of special interests but the servant of the House. He must be impeccably fair and unfailingly conscious of the duties and the rights of the individual Member.

The words of Speaker Lenthall to Charles I have echoed magnificently down the corridors of time:

I have only eyes to see and ears to hear as the House may direct.

Never has there been, in my judgment, a truer or more accurate formulation of the Speaker's function.

● (1130)

[Translation]

The Speaker represents the House in its entirety. He presides over its proceedings and interprets its procedures. He directs the work of its Members according to rules dictated by custom, tradition and dignity. The Speaker must often draw on his personal qualities and skills. He must have a thorough knowledge of the role and procedure of the House of Commons. He must be able to interpret the intentions of its Members. He must be able to adapt to the circumstances and at all times have a clear perception of the atmosphere and spirit appropriate to the House. Finally, he must be able to preside over the debates in both official languages of Confederation.

[English]

It is not absolutely necessary that he be newly married—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —or that his wife be bilingual, as is the case with the present nominee for this exalted position. This is simply an added bonus in the case of the Hon. Member for Don Valley West.

I am happy to report to the House that we have managed to find in his person an individual possessing to the highest degree all the qualities necessary for this vital position in our parliamentary structure.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: He is tactful. He is informed of the rules and procedures of the House. He possesses in full—and of this there can be no doubt—the integrity and ability required for this vital role.

I am also happy that this is the view of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the view, as well, of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) who may have some comments in regard to the procedure which perhaps are different and—who knows—perhaps for a better procedure for the selection of Speakers in the future. However, we all agree that the Hon. Member for Don Valley West possesses all the high qualities required for this vital job.

The Hon. Member for Don Valley West came to the House in 1979 and almost immediately became conspicuous for the energy which he directed to his parliamentary duties. He developed a deep respect for this House, a love of its traditions, an understanding of its procedures and an admiration for all those who strive so mightily to become its Members. He combines these qualities with a sense of history and a sense of humour. Neither shall be a burden to him here.

[Translation]

I therefore have the privilege to move the nomination of the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) as Speaker of the House of Commons.

[English]

I am therefore privileged to propose the Hon. Member for Don Valley West as Speaker of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Dr. Koester, first may I say what a great privilege and honour it is to have been elected once again to this House of Commons. I want to thank the people of Vancouver Quadra who did me this honour and to assure them that I will do my utmost in turn to merit their confidence and their trust.

I am very pleased to rise in my place today to second the nomination of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of Mr. John Bosley as Speaker of this House. I might say, had circumstances been different, I would have preferred to move the motion than to second it. However, I understand what the people of Canada have said and accept that fully.

I am also very happy to see Mr. Stanley Knowles sitting at the Table.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He sits as an honorary Member of this House. No doubt his wisdom and experience will be of immense assistance to the new Speaker particularly, and to all of us in this Chamber.

Without in any way derogating from the choice which I second today, it might be well for future Parliaments to consider what the unanimous report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure recommended in the last Parliament, namely, the adoption of a new Standing Order which would provide for the election of the Speaker by secret ballot by all Members of the House. That will be something for a future Parliament to consider. As I have said, that in no way derogates from our approval of the particular choice this morning.

Perhaps it is also appropriate on this Guy Fawkes Day, as we open Parliament and elect a Speaker, that we remember that democratic institutions have sometimes been under attack, the Mother of Parliaments, to a lesser extent in this country than in other parts of the free world. Recent events indicate to us what a precious and fragile thing democracy is. The Speaker represents this Commons as the embodiment of the will of the people. Protecting the rights and privileges of this House will be Mr. Bosley's primary concern and, more important, defending the rights and privileges of its Members.

It is particularly important in this Parliament, with the large majority on the Government side—and I might say surrounding us—that the Speaker exercise special care and vigilance in the protection of the rights of Hon. Members and, might I say, the traditional rights of Her Majesty's Loyal and Official Opposition.

[Translation]

In this Parliament, where the Government has a considerable majority, it is particularly important that the Speaker should exercise special vigilance in protecting the rights of Members forming the Official Opposition in this House.

● (1140)

[English]

From this point forward, Mr. Bosley must abandon all partisan loyalties and render decisions which are free of any hint of partisanship or bias. As Beauchesne says, confidence in the impartiality of the Speaker is an indispensable condition of the successful working of procedure. He must be fair and impartial in all his rulings, and above all he must be independent.

Like the Government Members, we in the Opposition also have our rights and duties. We shall observe the traditional role of the Official Opposition, and we are counting on the assistance and co-operation of the Speaker to help preserve this tradition.

I am sure that Mr. Bosley is fully aware of the tremendous responsibility he has taken on, and I can give him the assurance that the Liberal Members of this House join me in supporting his nomination.

We are looking forward to working together in the spirit of co-operation and conciliation, that is so essential to the functioning of this House.

[English]

On a more personal note, to echo the words of the Prime Minister, I am sure that all Members join with me in offering Mr. Bosley our congratulations on his recent marriage.

[Translation]

Allow me, Mr. Bosley, to express the hope that the harmony you will bring to the proceedings of this House will reflect the personal harmony you will enjoy in your married life.

[English]

I am pleased, therefore, to second the nomination by the Right Hon. Prime Minister of the Member for Don Valley West, Mr. John Bosley, as Speaker of this Thirty-third Parliament of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to preface my comments on this motion by noting the new degree of civility that has entered the House with the Leaders of all Parties being given the appropriate due respect, not only by Members in Opposition Parties but by Members of their own caucus, and I am sure I speak for all three Leaders when I say we hope this tradition continues!

I want, Dr. Koester, to say in speaking to this motion that my colleagues and myself most heartily endorse the personal selection of the Member for Don Valley West. He demonstrated during his experience in this House all of those qualities that I am sure will make him a truly admirable Speaker of the House, a bilingual person of real intelligence and capacity to work. I am sure we will see in the days ahead a man with a fine sense of justice.

It is appropriate to add my compliments and congratulations on his recent marriage. I am sure that new experience will constitute an element in his life that will enrich his judgments in this Chamber as well. As the whole House knows, the Speaker has a residence in this place.

[Translation]

As I explained before, we would like to be able to choose the Speaker of the House. I would also be in favour of a different procedure. In the past, a Committee of this House did suggest another method for selecting the Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition has indicated that his Party would support a change of this kind, and I just want to say that in future, we in our Party would like to be able to choose the Speaker and to do so according to a similar procedure.

[English]

For the moment, as I said, we have selected a man who will have the confidence of my colleagues, a man who I dare say could have been selected if we had used that other process.

I compliment the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on his recommendation and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) for seconding the motion. I conclude by simply saying that it is a traditional route of selecting a Speaker, and a Prime Minister who is both a Conservative and who quotes Edmund Burke perhaps could not have been expected at the commencement of this period in office to have selected a different route.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The Clerk of the House declared the motion carried in the affirmative and John William Bosley, Esquire, Member for the electoral district of Don Valley West, duly elected to the Chair of the House.

Mr. Bosley was conducted from his seat in the House to the Speaker's Chair by the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney and the Right Hon. John N. Turner.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members, I beg to return my humble acknowledgements to the House for the honour which it has been pleased to confer upon me by choosing me to be your Speaker.

[Translation]

Hon. Members, I beg to return my humble acknowledgements to the House for the great honour you have been pleased to confer on me by choosing me to be your Speaker.

• (1150)

[English]

Traditionally, these are the first words uttered by a newly elected Speaker. For my part, I mean them most sincerely and ask you to accept them as a signal of my deep respect for the traditions of this office and for the customs of this place.

Speakers-elect have also usually tried to express their feelings of inadequacy. Standing here as the bearer of an historic office which has endured unbroken for over 600 years, I understand and share those feelings. Let me thank, if I may, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) for their kind and far too flattering words. Perhaps the Leader of the New Democratic Party will permit me to repeat an old phrase: "Never explain".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: No greater honour can be conferred upon one of us than to be chosen by one's peers to be their presiding officer. Over the years, great parliamentarians have ennobled this office substantially. The prescription given by Speaker Yelverton in 1597 during the reign of Elibabeth I is clearly no longer adequate:

> Your Speaker ought to be a man big and comely, stately and well-spoken; his voice great, his carriage majestical, his nature haughty, and his purse plentiful.

[Translation]

In addition to the responsibility for presiding over the debates, the Speaker is also the the guardian of the privileges of the House and its Members. He is responsible for interpreting the Standing Orders and parliamentary procedure, and from time to time acts as arbitrator or judge.

He also represents the House in its external relations, but first and foremost, he is the servant of the House and is elected by its Members. This is a practice that has remained unchanged since Confederation. The House may, however, change the Standing Orders or parliamentary procedure as it sees fit.

[English]

I am very conscious as I stand here that it is not easy to be a good Speaker and that the responsibilities will call for all of the strength and abilities I may possess.

[Translation]

Although Speakers of the House of Commons are necessarily politicians, all Hon. Members may rest assured that I shall be the Speaker of the whole House and defend the rights and privileges of all its Members. I shall try to be always impartial, independent and fair in my decisions.

[English]

The first and best definition of the supreme duty of a Speaker comes to us, in the words used by the Prime Minister, from Speaker William Lenthall. Let me tell you the story because it is illustrative. In 1642, King Charles I broke all constitutional accords and entered the House of Commons with an armed escort seeking five Members of the House whom he claimed were guilty of treason. Not finding them, the King demanded of Speaker Lenthall that he tell the King where those Members were. Speaker Lenthall, risking everything including his head, quietly spoke the words from which we date the true independence of this office and of this place:

> May it please Your Majesty, I have neither eyes to see nor tongue to speak in this place, but as the House is pleased to direct me, whose servant I am here.

He survived.

[Translation]

I shall need the support of all my colleagues and will have to work constantly to obtain and preserve the trust of the House. Without that support and without that trust, no Speaker can perform his duty successfully. I do not claim to have mastered the intricacies of parliamentary procedure. I can assure the House that I have already started to study the matter, although I am sure Hon. Members will understand why the casting vote, for instance, is not one of my priorities.

[English]

Regarding procedure, let me say that we are all most fortunate to have the services of Dr. Koester and his colleagues. I am especially grateful to have the wise counsel of the Hon. Stanley Knowles.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: They have already demonstrated to me their wisdom and knowledge and I have been deeply impressed by them.

I know I can expect more from them than was offered to a British Speaker who occupied the chair many years ago. He told the story of how, having been newly elected, he faced a difficult situation in the House and sent a note to the Clerk asking "What do I do now?" The Clerk sent back a note which read: "If I were you, I should proceed with caution!"

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Finally, if I may be permitted one or two personal notes, I would like personally to welcome back all of the re-elected Members and welcome all of the newly elected Members. I hope we will all get to know each other well. I would like to express my sincere gratitude to my family and my friends, some of whom are here today, and to my electors for their support and counsel, for this is a time of great change for me.

As deeply grateful as I am for this honour done me today, you will understand that I am even more grateful and blessed that an extraordinary, wonderful and gentle woman did me an even greater honour just a few days ago.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Those of you who know my wife know she very much makes her own decisions. I think I can say, however, that in choosing this inadequate person to be your Speaker, Hon. Members can take some comfort from the thought that what you see may not be all you get.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: From the bottom of my heart, thank you.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the sitting be suspended until three o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: This sitting stands suspended until three o'clock p.m. this day.

At 12 noon the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 3 p.m.

OPENING OF THE SESSION

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Governor General's Secretary announcing that Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada would proceed to the Senate Chamber at three o'clock on this day for the purpose of formally opening the session of the Dominion Parliament.

A message was delivered by Claude Lajoie, Esq., Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the pleasure of Her Excellency the Governor General, that this honourable House attend her immediately in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber. Then the Hon. John Bosley, Speaker of the House of Commons, said:

May it please Your Excellency,

The House of Commons have elected me their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me.

If in the performance of those duties I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons, whose servant I am, and who, through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their Queen and country, humbly claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to your Excellency's person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from Your Excellency the most favourable construction.

The Honourable the Speaker of the Senate, addressing the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons, then said:

Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by Her Excellency the Governor General to declare to you that she freely confides in the duty and attachment of the House of Commons to Her Majesty's person and Government, and not doubting that their proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temper and prudence, she grants and upon all occasions will recognize and allow their constitutional privileges.

I am commanded also to assure you that the Commons shall have ready access to Her Excellency upon all seasonable occasions, and that their proceedings, as well as your words and actions, will constantly receive from her the most favourable construction.

Then Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada was pleased to open Parliament by a Speech from the Throne.

● (1610)

And the House being returned to the Commons Chamber:

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to report that, the House having attended on Her Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, I informed Her Excellency that the choice of Speaker had fallen upon me and, in your names and on your behalf, I made the usual claim for your privileges which Her Excellency was pleased to confirm to you.

OATHS OF OFFICE

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-1 respecting the administration of oaths of office.

Speech from the Throne

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when this House did attend Her Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, Her Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both Houses of Parliament. To prevent mistakes I have obtained a copy which is as follows:

Honourable Members of the Senate,

Members of the House of Commons:

It is with great pride and pleasure that I welcome you, in my capacity as the Canadian representative of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, to this, the First Session of the thirty-third Parliament of Canada.

Canadians rejoiced this year in the visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip to the bicentennial celebrations in New Brunswick and Ontario, and to several communities in Manitoba. For Canadians the Monarchy is a precious link to the centuries of history and tradition that form our parliamentary democracy. The Crown symbolizes our democratic values, and helps safeguard the freedom and liberty that are the foundation of our system. The Queen as Head of the Commonwealth personifies the common bond of that association of nations and its ideals. An example to all who would serve, hers is a life consecrated to service.

Earlier this fall Canadians from coast to coast had the unique privilege of greeting His Holiness Pope John Paul II. The welcome accorded His Holiness expressed our respect and esteem. It also reflected the spirit of fraternity and generosity that exists in a Canadian society of diverse races and creeds. Pope John Paul's visit has helped Canadians to see anew that the enhancement of justice and peace can be a reality at home, and must be our vocation in the world. For this, and for his moral and spiritual leadership, Canadians express their heartfelt appreciation.

In these first months of my tenure as Governor General, I, too, have been afforded the wonderful opportunity to travel to the various regions of this beautiful land. The warmth and enthusiasm of the reception I have received from Canadians in Quebec, New Brunswick, and most recently in my home province of Saskatchewan, has touched me deeply, and I look forward with great anticipation to completing my tour of the provinces and territories. It becomes increasingly clear with each passing day that the confidence I hold in the strength, character and goodness of Canadians is well-founded and that we are indeed a rich and privileged nation.

Canadians take pride in the participation of the first Canadian astronaut, Commander Marc Garneau, in the Challenger space shuttle program. His voyage is the latest, and most exciting, of recent Canadian contributions to the conquest of space. We welcome the opportunity to cooperate with the United States in their space program. As a result, Canadians are playing a part in achieving the great benefits to humanity that space exploration can make possible.

In July, all Canadians rejoiced in the brilliant performance of our athletes at the Summer Olympic Games in Los Angeles. My government salutes the hard work and dedication of our athletes, coaches and officials. Their excellence serves as a model of national achievement for all Canadians.

Reconciliation and National Unity

This is the inauguration of a new Parliament. Let it be also the beginning of a new era of national reconciliation, economic renewal and social justice. In this spirit, my Ministers will honour the mandate entrusted to them by the people of Canada.

While there are no easy solutions to the great problems facing our country, there is a new will among Canadians to make a fresh start in the search for answers. For the first time in many years all regions of the country are represented in a national government. The mandate received by my Ministers is a magnificent opportunity to build a renewed national consensus.

First, you must critically examine the relationship of Parliament with the people of Canada. Members of the House of Commons will be asked to approve the appointment of a parliamentary task force on reform of that House. The central focus of this task force will be the enhancement of the role of the private member. From that perspective the task force will examine and make recommendations concerning the powers, practices, organization and resources of the Commons.

Second, the massive undertaking that is the government of Canada must be made to respond to the individual citizen, wherever and however it touches him or her. A committee of Ministers headed by the Deputy Prime Minister has begun a review of all government programs. The objective is to reform and simplify the operations of government. From the citizen's standpoint, government will be made more understandable, more accessible, and more sensitive.

The taxation system will be made simpler and fairer and more accountable to the people's representatives in Parliament. The rights of taxpayers must be protected. In particular, legislation will be presented to ensure that no taxpayer has to pay taxes in dispute before an impartial hearing has been concluded.

Thirdly, a priority goal of my Ministers will be to breathe a new spirit into federalism and restore the faith and trust of all Canadians in the effectiveness of our system of government.

A constant process of consultation and cooperation must be restored. My Ministers are regularly meeting their provincial colleagues to eliminate irritants and to improve services to people where the federal and provincial governments have joint responsibilities.

My government's management of federal-provincial relations will pursue three basic objectives: to harmonize policies of our two orders of government, to ensure respect for their jurisdictions, and to end unnecessary and costly duplication.

National unity also demands that the two levels of government cooperate in supporting official language minorities and in fostering the rich multicultural character of Canada. My government is committed to ensuring that the equality of the two official languages—so vital to our national character and identity—is respected in fact as it is in law. My Ministers acknowledge the need for ongoing improvements and for vigilance in this indispensable area of our national life.

The reality of Canada is one of distinct regional identities, each rooted in many generations of history; of diverse cultures; of regional economic strengths: a country of many parts whose people share a profound attachment to one Canada.

My Ministers are determined to achieve a national consensus which will reflect that reality. A national consensus is also needed to reduce the persistent isolation of Canada's regions, to meet the challenges of economic and social disparity, to revitalize the strength of our traditional resource industries, such as agriculture, forestry, mining, the fishery and tourism, and to ensure that our critical transportation and communication links better serve the national purpose.

Ultimately such a new consensus must be reflected in the fundamental law of our land, for it is obvious that the constitutional agreement is incomplete so long as Québec is not part of an accord. While their principal obligations are to achieve economic renewal, my Ministers will work to create the conditions that will make possible the achievement of this essential accord. In this work, the cooperation of all partners in Confederation will be necessary.

Their generous cooperation is also needed to honour the commitment to Canada's aboriginal peoples contained in the Constitution Act of 1982. For these peoples, as for all Canadians, the high expectations that attended the act of patriation must not be disappointed.

Reconciliation and Economic Consensus Building

Nowhere is the need for national reconciliation more urgent that in Canada's economic life. Our repeated failure in recent years to achieve our economic potential cries out for correction by a truly sustained, co-operative and national effort. First Ministers will meet next week to discuss the agenda for a First Ministers' Conference on the Economy. My government will soon announce the date of a national Economic Summit to bring together important groups in our economy.

Thus are my Ministers embarked on the long, complex and painstaking road of building a national economic consensus. The national Economic Summit will not be the culmination of this process, but its beginning. At the table will be representatives of groups such as consumers, women, native peoples, business, labour and government. Their goal is to establish a new and productive climate and context for economic decision-making in Canada.

In this regard, there can be no doubt of the importance or legitimacy of the trade union movement in Canada, or of the desirability of both management and labour playing a critical role in the consultative process through which the new national agenda is established.

Discussion of certain economic priorities, an understanding of the respective roles of the principal economic partners, a commitment to some immediate courses of action: such an outcome would make the Economic Summit a success.

Future summits could address in more detail issues such as the enhancement of productivity, and the responsibilities of industry, labour and government in training and technology. Over time, mutual confidence and a sense of shared responsibility for our national economy must lead to consensus on even more basic issues: how to share the benefits of economic growth, how to share the burdens of economic adjustment, how to preserve the integrity of our unique natural environment, and how to ensure that the ideal of social justice is pursued through programs that meet contemporary needs and circumstances.

In the absence of a national consensus, economic under-achievement would be Canada's misfortune for many years to come. The process of consensus-building will engage the private sector partners in consultation and cooperation on economic goals. In such a context, government would act as guide, mediator and catalyst, becoming less intrusive in the private sector but vigilant over the integrity of the national economy and of national standards.

Economic Renewal: A Three Part Strategy

The process of consensus building will take time. Meanwhile there are some important initial steps that the federal government can take to help generate economic renewal. The three-part strategy of my Ministers is to restore fiscal responsibility, remove obstacles to growth, and encourage new investment.

Later this week the Minister of Finance will describe in detail the state of the economy and of federal public finances. He will announce a plan designed to reduce the deficit in an orderly, balanced and fair manner, and to control the growing burden of the public debt.

That we must deal urgently with the deficit is beyond dispute. If allowed to continue to grow out of control, it will consume our available financial resources, undermine our capacity to respond to new opportunities, put increased pressure on interest rates, and inhibit investment and growth in our economy.

Second, my government will pursue approaches to improve the efficiency and flexibility of our capital markets; to improve job opportunities for Canadians through responsive market-oriented training programs; and to increase investments in research and development to improve our productivity. Proposals will be placed before you to improve the market environment by changes in competition laws and the regulatory framework of the financial services industry.

Third, my government will introduce for consideration during this session proposals to enhance risk taking, innovation and reward among entrepreneurs, especially in the small and medium-sized business sector.

Initiative will be taken to stimulate both domestic and foreign investment. My government is determined to regain Canada's reputation as a reliable and profitable place to do business.

This three-part strategy is aimed at renewing economic growth in order to provide the jobs our people need and to address the continuing tragedy of youth unemployment. My government views unemployment as Canada's most debilitating problem and most critical national challenge. For this reason the need to stimulate job-creating investment is urgent. My Ministers will be taking action to address these compelling issues.

My government recognizes that measures to improve and expand skill training and retraining are essential elements of a sound approach to providing job opportunities. During this session, you will be asked to consider an innovative employment strategy that will be cost effective and oriented to the private sector. It will be introduced following intensive consultations with the provinces, labour and business.

Social Justice

My government is determined to ensure that social justice in Canada keeps pace with the changing needs and circumstances of our people. In this respect the most significant development of recent years is the greater participation of the women of Canada and their rightful claim to equality with men everywhere in our society.

As the women of Canada know, there is some distance between the principle of equality, widely accepted, and its reality, still far short of achievement. It is the duty of Parliament and government to help ensure that Canadian society travels that distance as quickly as possible. This will sometimes require the exercise of your power, and it will always need the power of your example.

Economic equality is the vehicle through which women will come to full partnership and participation with men in our society. Parliament has committed the federal jurisdiction to equal pay for work of equal value. My government agrees that this concept is one of the keys to the achievement of economic equality for women. My Ministers will enlist the cooperation of women and men in the private and public sectors in seeking to define further and to implement this concept. My government will also accelerate efforts to increase employment opportunities for women in the federal government and its agencies, boards and corporations.

You will be asked to consider a number of important legislative initiatives, including removal of the discriminatory clauses in the Indian Act, amendments to the Divorce Act, and measures to control pornography and sexually abusive broadcasting. My Ministers will shortly be initiating discussions with the provinces to establish a national system for the enforcement of maintenance orders. In consultation with the provinces, my government will take action to provide additional assistance to the victims of family violence.

My government has as a high priority measures to support and strengthen the Canadian family, which is the cornerstone of our society. The need for accessible and affordable child care has in recent years come to the forefront of the social agenda facing Canada. In an effort to reach a national consensus on options in this area, you will be asked to establish a parliamentary task force on the future of child care in Canada.

Canadians value and support the comprehensive social security system that has been put in place over many years by the federal and provincial governments. Many areas of this system must be strengthened to respond to the changing nature and needs of our society. It is time to recognize also the responsibility we all share to bring those amongst us who suffer from physical and mental disabilities into the productive mainstream of Canadian life.

My government will enter discussions with the provinces aimed at a comprehensive overhaul of the Canadian pension system, including such matters as portability, vesting, survivors' benefits, and pension coverage of women. An important element of this approach will be the consideration of measures designed to encourage Canadians to save for their retirement.

Consultations will also begin with the provinces to consider the most effective means of providing increased federal support for the improvement of community-based health care.

During the coming session, you will be asked to consider legislation to extend the income tested spouse's allowance to widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 regardless of the age of their spouse at death. My Ministers will introduce measures to improve the financial situation of Canada's war veterans.

As a country rich in human resources, Canada owes much to those who have dedicated themselves to cultural, artistic and athletic endeavour. In a variety of areas, my government will be addressing itself to the challenge of encouraging those individuals who inspire Canadians to new levels of excellence.

Law and Public Safety

Canadians are deeply troubled by the incidence of crime, especially crimes of violence, in our society. Most abhorrent to a nation respectful of the law are acts of violence against guardians of the law whom we have appointed to protect us. The recent murders of several policemen in Canada have shocked our people. Parliament shares the sense of sadness and loss felt by the families and colleagues of those policemen who died on duty.

There have been many studies of the corrections system in recent years and there have been numerous successful reforms. But it is obvious that there are grave defects in the system and my government accepts its responsibility to rectify these quickly. Legislation will therefore be placed before you to eliminate certain problems and abuses in the corrections system. Meanwhile administrative measures are being taken to protect better the public and the public's peace officers.

During this session, Parliament will be asked to consider amendments to the Criminal Code to deal more effectively with impaired driving, soliciting, computer crime, and sentencing. We will work closely with the provinces in the areas of family law, crime prevention and assistance to victims of crime.

In the longer term, my government will address, in cooperation with the provinces, other anomalies in the fields of criminal and corrections law that are causing much public concern.

Renewed Canadian Internationalism

In Canada's past there is a luminous tradition of internationalism. Canadians have fought in two World Wars and in the United Nations action in Korea. Our armed forces have served in peacekeeping roles in distant lands. Our statesmen have been at the forefront in the founding of NATO and in the quest for arms control. Our country has successfully championed racial equality at critical moments in the life of the Commonwealth, and through private and public agencies contributed to international development.

It is the purpose of my government to renew this tradition of constructive Canadian internationalism.

Our relationship with the United States affects virtually every aspect of our national life. It is essential to our security and prosperity. It expresses values shared by the free peoples of our two nations. Beneath the myriad of issues to be discussed and conflicts to be resolved, beyond the hundreds of points of contact that take place daily between two governments and two economies, there are wellsprings of trust between two peoples.

My government has taken the initiative to restore a spirit of goodwill and true partnership between Canada and the United States. My government is pleased by the positive response it has received in both the government and private sectors of the United States.

There are many areas where the national interests or the national policies of the two countries diverge or compete. There are, as well, numerous and as of yet untapped possibilities for fruitful cooperation between our two countries. Restoring a climate of goodwill between our governments was an essential step towards the resolution of our conflicts and the realization of our opportunities. My government views this initiative as a confirmation of our national strength and maturity.

Vital as our relationship with the United States is, my Ministers are determined that Canadian internationalism will again be active and constructive in the wider world. The main objectives of my government are clear: to defend freedom and preserve peace; to prevent nuclear confrontation; to improve trading relations; to build a healthier world economy. For Canada, the way to these objectives lies in concerted action with other nations in every part of the world—allies, economic partners, competitors, friends and adversaries. There is surely none with whom a measure of common ground cannot be sought and found in the pursuit of these humane objectives.

My government is determined that Canada will again play its full part in the defence systems of NATO. Only in this way do we earn the right to full consultation and participation in the policies of that alliance. From this prudent and responsible position, Canada will work unceasingly with other nations, in every available forum, to halt the spread of nuclear weapons and prevent their development and use. Patience and perseverance we will need, for in this endeavor even the smallest progress is worthy of the greatest effort.

Canada's opportunity to influence the course of world events lies primarily in sound multilateral institutions. This is as true of economics as it is of defence, of development, and of disarmament.

Canada cannot prosper without international trade. The dominant part played by trade with the United States is obvious, and my government is exploring with our neighbour new approaches to a better and mutually advantageous trading relationship. But geography has also endowed Canada with an oceanic link to the promising new horizons of the Pacific Rim and to our traditional trading partners in Western Europe. My government will pursue with vigour and imagination new opportunities in these areas.

Canada also has a vital stake in the elimination of barriers to trade, commerce and investment on a global basis. In this connection, there is an urgent need for a concerted attack on non-tariff barriers which have become increasingly insidious and more prevalent. Acknowledging that no country, including Canada, is blameless, my government declares its willingness to do its part in a renewed multilateral effort to remove these obstructions in the international marketplace.

Internal Economy Commission

Canada's record in official development assistance has on the whole been constructive. My government recognizes the continuing need for these programs, including support for the cost-effective and valuable humanitarian work done internationally by our voluntary and non-governmental organizations. But it is striking to observe how much hardship has occurred, how much debt burden has increased, how much economic activity has been held back in developing countries because of world recession, unstable markets and trade barriers. A successful attack on these problems will accelerate economic development and social progress in many of these countries. The alleviation of unconscionable human misery will result.

During this session, you will be asked to address this and other commitments and responsibilities of Canada in the world. A special parliamentary committee will conduct a full review of the main components and objectives of our international relations.

My government is convinced that Canada's defence forces urgently require a new definition of their role in keeping with present day conditions. The strategic context in which we defend our own territory and that of our allies has changed considerably since the early 1970s, when the government last carefully considered this matter. My Ministers are undertaking a comprehensive examination of these matters. The purpose is to clarify the mandate of our military and to give them the resources they need to do their job.

A Time For Renewal

This new Parliament is an historic opportunity to overcome past divisions in our country, and to purge the spirit of confrontation from the conduct of the nation's affairs.

The purpose of my government is to renew the confidence of Canadians that Parliament is truly the voice of the people, that government is their servant, and that federalism is the means to harmonize and preserve the splendid diversity of this land.

Above all, my government will enlist the active support and participation of Canadians themselves as we search for a new way of addressing our national responsibilities: a consensus in our economic life, tolerance in our national life, and a deep commitment to social justice and peace, at home and in the rest of world.

Members of the House of Commons:

You will be asked to appropriate the funds required for the services and payments authorized by Parliament.

Honourable Members of the Senate,

Members of the House of Commons:

In the great tasks of national reconciliation, economic renewal, and social justice to which you are called in this Parliament, may Divine Providence guide your every effort.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSIONERS

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister) presented the following message from Her Excellency the Governor General:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an approved Order in Council appointing the Hon. Roch La Salle, Minister of Public Works, the Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn, Minister of State (Government House Leader), the Hon. Robert R. de Cotret, President of the Treasury Board, and the Hon. Barbara Jean McDougall, Minister of State (Finance), to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as Commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of Chapter H-9 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, entituled: An Act respecting the House of Commons.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a question of privilege with respect to the commissioners of Internal Economy and in particular I want to refer to the ninth report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure which was tabled in this House in 1983. It dealt specifically with the appointment of the commissioners of Internal Economy.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the special committee to re-examine the standing orders and procedure was set up in the last Parliament following the lengthy bell ringing.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am in some difficulty. The Hon. Member may wish to rise on a question of order and he may have a question of order, but I have to tell him that he does not have a question of privilege so far. I suggest, if the Member wishes to be heard, that he please rise on a question of order so that I may hear him.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I will rise on a question of order, but I think this is a matter which affects the privileges of all Members and I think, when I pursue my argument, you will see that it does touch the privileges of all Members.

In any case, in the last Parliament, as Mr. Speaker knows, we set up a special committee to re-examine the rules and procedures of this House following the lengthy bell ringing incident that was initiated by the Conservatives. That committee was set up and dealt with ten reports. One of those reports is the ninth report dealing with the commissioners of Internal Economy.

At the present time these commissioners, as you pointed out, are appointed in accordance with the House of Commons Act which stipulates that the commissioners must be Privy Councillors, but there is no requirement that the commissioners must be Privy Councillors in the Cabinet. Nor is there any requirement that the commissioners must be Privy Councillors on the Government side.

Since these commissioners are responsible for the services for all Members of this House—our offices, our staff, our machinery, our telephones, our travel—the committee felt that it was essential that these commissioners be appointed by all Members of the House and represent all Members of the House.

That ninth report was a unanimous report. Ten of the 12 Conservative Members who served on that committee from time to time are back in this House. Three of them are in the Cabinet, three who supported unanimously this report. I believe I am the sole Liberal surviving from that committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: It surprises me, Mr. Speaker, because I would think that the 10 who survived on the other side would have been more interested in the report. There are two Members from the New Democratic Party who were also on that committee.

In that report, which is very important, the committee said the following, and I will be as brief as I can. The Government has said that it is very interested in parliamentary reform and the role of the backbencher. I wish it would give a couple of minutes here to this because it is extremely important. The committee said unanimously:

> The Commission is composed by law of members of the Privy Council. In practice, only Cabinet Ministers have been Commissioners, although there is nothing to preclude the appointment of Privy Councillors who are not members of the Cabinet including members of the opposition.

We went on to say:

> Your Committee believes it is essential that the House of Commons Act be amended to restructure the Board of Internal Economy. We do not feel that it is appropriate for only Cabinet Ministers to be responsible for the internal management of the House of Commons. The House of Commons is a community of many interests. They should be reflected in the way Commissioners are appointed.
> Consequently your Committee proposes that a new Board of Internal Economy be set up—

And the committee recommended that we modify:

> —the make-up of the Board by enlarging the range of its members to ensure the participation of Members of Parliament who are not Cabinet members. The Board would in future be composed of the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker, two Ministers of the Crown, the Leader of the Official Opposition or a Member designated by the Leader, and four others: two Members appointed by the government caucus, and two from the opposition caucuses—

I appreciate that we have not had time to amend the House of Commons Act, but I would be sincerely interested in learning the intentions of the Government with respect to this important matter. In particular, I urge it to reconsider the matter and to appoint a commissioner who is a Privy Councillor from the Opposition in accordance with the spirit of this report that was supported by 10 members of the Conservative Party when they served with that committee. If the Government is as sincerely interested in parliamentary reform as it alleges in the Speech from the Throne, let it start with these 10 reports which have already been made by this House.

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to rule but I am in some quandary because of the traditions of the House.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few things because I know that the motion put by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) was meant sincerely and was not meant for any partisan advantage at this point in time it being so early on in the course of our deliberations. I simply say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it cannot be a question of privilege because, if it were a question of privilege, it would have been a question of privilege during the course of the previous administration's mandate. I did not hear the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East rise and make an impassioned speech on behalf of this particular provision.

Mr. Allmand: We both signed the report.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I was a member of that committee.

I would like to make a second observation, Mr. Speaker. If the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East had paid attention to the content of the Speech from the Throne, he obviously would have heard the part about the powers and the full extent of the examination that will take place with respect to the reform of the House of Commons and that it is very much a high priority with the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I simply say to you, regarding the technical side of it, that it cannot be a question of privilege. I can assure the Hon. Member that we are serious about parliamentary reform and that we will make progress where the previous administration could not.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has raised what I personally believe is an interesting matter, and I will say no more on that side of it. He has quite rightly recalled the report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure of the last Parliament and indeed has noted that the report has not been adopted by the House. The appointment of the commissioners is a statutory provision and not a matter within the direct responsibility of the Speaker. The House of Commons Act requires commissioners to be Privy Councillors, and the selection of those Privy Councillors is the privilege of the Governor in Council. To appoint a Member of the House of Commons who is not a Privy Councillor would, as the Hon. Member knows, require an amendment to the statute. He did not raise that point.

If I recall correctly, the special committee recommended specifically that the relevant statute be amended and went as far as appending a draft Bill to its report. While the Hon. Member has raised an interesting point, it is clearly neither a point of order nor a point of privilege. However, I can assure him the Chair looks forward with interest to future developments in this area.

APPOINTMENT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move:

> That the committee be composed of Messrs. Cook, Deans, Dick, Friesen, Gauthier, Hnatyshyn and McGrath.

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MR. KEN JAMES AND SECONDED BY MS. CAROLE JACQUES

The House proceeded to the consideration of the speech delivered by Her Excellency the Governor General at the opening of the session.

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely thank the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, and members of his Cabinet, for affording me the privilege of moving the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I extend my profound respects to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada, the Hon. Jeanne Sauvé.

I am taking the liberty of speaking for all Members of Parliament in extending to you, Mr. Speaker, our congratulations on your election to the post of Speaker of the House of Commons. We have every confidence in your ability and we know you bring to your position a true sense of dignity, honour and dedication. We wish you much success in this important milestone in your career, and know the residents of Don Valley West feel justification in the confidence they have placed in you since 1979.

To be invited to participate in the opening ceremonies and the opening days of the Thirty-third Parliament, and to be given the opportunity to deliver my maiden speech so early in my political career, is indeed an honour and one which I shall long remember. The constituents of the riding of Sarnia-Lambton can be assured that this honour has been extended not to me but to them because of the Prime Minister's realization of the importance of this region of southwestern Ontario.

Sarnia-Lambton consists of the Village of Point Edward, the Township of Moore, the Township of Sarnia and the City of Sarnia. I ask that each and every resident of this riding share this moment of pride with me.

Sarnia-Lambton is a riding which is tucked away in the extreme southwestern corner of the great Province of Ontario. It is a riding that is as diverse in its peoples as it is in its economic activity. The brochures call it "Bluewater Land". It is situated at the point where the most beautiful of the Great Lakes, Lake Huron, flows into the wide, beautiful and blue St. Clair River. Every week thousands of visitors pour across the Bluewater Bridge from the United States of America to do business, for recreation and for relaxation in this area. Sarnia-Lambton has grown far past its physical size in cosmopolitan stature because of its proximity to our American neighbours. We have dealt with Canada-United States relations since the mid-1800s and we are still thriving, demonstrating the firm bond which exists between Canada and our close friends, our American neighbours.

In contrast to the pleasant parks and clear waters, there also stands in Sarnia one of the largest refining and petrochemical areas in the country, in fact in the world. This is called the "Chemical Valley", a complex stretching for 15 miles or more. Over $6 billion has been invested in oil refining and feedstock to petrochemical production facilities. Over one-third of the country's crude oil is refined in Sarnia-Lambton, and over one-half of the nation's petrochemicals are manufactured in Sarnia-Lambton. Thousands of jobs in other communities across the country, working in what is called the downstream end of the industry, depend on the refined and petrochemical products which are manufactured in the "Chemical Valley". This area plays a large part in the over-all economic future of the country. There are 14 major companies with refineries or petrochemicals plants in the "Chemical Valley" complex.

In terms of employment in the petrochemical industry, 14,600 people are working throughout the country, with 8,300 people working in Sarnia-Lambton alone. The Sarnia-Lambton petrochemical industry employs almost 57 per cent of the total workforce of the petrochemical industry.

Of late there have been problems plaguing the petrochemical industry, problems due to government regulation and policy which have increased taxation on our resources, in turn driving the cost to a point which affects the competitive situation versus the United States gulf coast petrochemical products production. These problems are not exclusive to the industry in Sarnia. The effects are felt by the producers of crude oil and natural gas in our western provinces and by the manufacturers of petrochemicals, both from the oil-based and natural gas feedstocks in all Canadian locations.

Our Government is now negotiating with all sides concerned. One year ago the industry said that this was impossible. Government is now listening to their problems and accepting positive suggestions about how best to deal with these difficulties. Together we are working towards a sensible and equitable solution, and we will reach one!

There is also the pastoral aspect in the constituency of Sarnia-Lambton. Agriculture is the vitality of the region. In the surrounding area of the City of Sarnia, the Village of Point Edward and the urbanized areas of the Townships of Sarnia and Moore, farming and the raising of livestock have been the historical strength. The miles and miles of carefully tended lands radiate from the undustrialized buildup in the "Chemical Valley". Over the years this has demonstrated that there can be a healthy balance between the traditional use of land and the industrialization which is required in today's high technology society, a balance which respects and acknowledges that both sides are victors.

Transportation is the key to the success of Sarnia-Lambton. Situated as it is on the deep navigable St. Clair River which leads into the Great Lakes system, there is a constant flow of marine traffic. Huge ships bound for Thunder Bay, Lake Superior and Sarnia-Lambton, as well as for ports on the American side, plough their way through Lake Huron after passing under the Bluewater Bridge. Sarnia has storage elevators and repair docks to accommodate these lake and ocean-going ships. The international Bluewater Bridge is a major link between United States and Canadian markets. The new Highway 402 connects directly to the Bluewater Bridge. This highway was completed with the combined efforts of private enterprise and government and is considered the best example of Canadian road building. It is a credit to Canadian engineering and construction.

The new Sarnia airport, which I will have the honour of officially opening later this month, will complete the final element in the transportation chain. Sarnia-Lambton is now fully prepared and able to put its efforts, its facilities and its vitality behind the construction of a new Canada.

The peoples of Sarnia-Lambton would be at home in any other Canadian community. All ethnic backgrounds, all creeds and all persuasions are represented in our community. Our residents are representative of "Anytown Canada" and they delivered to this Government the greatest show of trust and support in the history of our area. They believe in what this Progressive Conservative Government stands for. These people believe in our sincerity, our wisdom, our expertise and we cannot let them down!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, this Government has been given a responsibility no other Government has ever had. We now have a Government which represents all Canadians, from Newfoundland to British Columbia. This Government has been given the trust of the Province of Quebec, something unseen since the sweep of the late John Diefenbaker's Government in 1958. The onus is now on us to honour this trust and to give it the respect it is due; to take the fragile hopes of this country and bring them back to reality; to examine the situation we have inherited and make it right. This is not an easy task we have been entrusted with but it is a choice we made prior to September 4. It is our choice and we cannot, and we must not, abrogate our responsibility. This Government has a responsibility to realize the hopes we envisaged some time ago. Despite the obstacles left in our path, we will deliver. We now have the opportunity to deliver to the people of Canada the Government they desire and deserve. Our Government is one that holds true to its promise and works for the people, rather than expecting the people to work for it.

One of the most serious problems facing our country at this time, and perhaps the most urgent on the new Government's list of priorities, is the unemployment situation. As mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, we will be introducing new programs in a three-pronged attack, and we will be asking for the direct involvement of all sectors of our society. We will be asking for public input to reach the most efficient and rewarding end possible. We will be instituting new training programs that will be market-oriented and more in line with the needs of the future. With dedication and forethought the unemployment statistics in this country can and will be reduced as quickly as is humanly possible.

We have made a commitment to the Canadian people to improve our economy. This coming Thursday evening the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will announce a plan designed to reduce the deficit in an orderly, balanced and fair manner.

As mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, our Government will provide incentives to enhance risk-taking and the entrepreneurial spirit. This will have a positive effect on a cause close to my own heart and interests: the vitality and new growth of small business in Sarnia-Lambton and across Canada.

We have a commitment to justice. It makes me proud to quote from the Speech from the Throne, wherein it is said that our Government accepts the responsibility to rectify the grave effects in our correctional system. Legislation will be introduced to correct the inequities in this system. We have a commitment to international trade, an area in which Sarnia-Lambton is so heavily involved. We have said that we will open new gates and expand our horizons towards better and wider trade agreements with new and established partners. We have a commitment to maintain the updating of the Canadian Armed Forces and the role it plays in international affairs; to strengthen our alliances and world-wide standing by assuming our share of the burden of maintaining peace in the world.

It is not surprising that there was mention made in the Throne Speech to the labour movement in Canada, and how one of our Government's goals is to foster a feeling of trust and shared responsibility with those who represent the workforce of our country. This is an attitude that is integral in the rebuilding process in which we now find ourselves involved. In Sarnia-Lambton there have been few strikes and fewer work stoppages. There always has been a dialogue between labour and management. This is the type of bonding between management and labour we need to see throughout this great country which would strengthen and support the return to prosperity we would all like to see.

First and foremost, Mr. Speaker, we have a firm commitment to the people of Canada to grant a reprieve from the harsh sentence imposed on them in the past. We have a commitment and responsibility to the millions who cast their vote in favour of change, in favour of new and better leadership. Progressive Conservatives have always maintained their honesty, integrity and trustworthiness in a business that has lately been characterized by something less than that. We are not about to change our approach now. We have been delivered a trust and we will not falter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I believe in Canada. I believe in her people and I believe in her future. Canada is ready and waiting to be guided into greatness. I believe this Government will lead Canada to her full potential. We owe it not only to this generation but to generations to come.

I will close my remarks with a quotation which I think is fitting: "The difference between a politician and a statesman is: A politician thinks of the next election and a statesman thinks of the next generation".

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Jacques), that the following Address be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To Her Excellency the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

• (1120)

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to thank the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and his Cabinet for bestowing this privilege on me. It is an honour that I appreciate personally, and it is also one that voters in Montreal-Mercier will remember for many years. It is a mark of confidence that denotes the beginning of a new era: the Government is asking the youngest female Member of the House to second the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

[English]

Your election, Mr. Speaker, also reflects a vote of confidence from all Members and Ministers toward the new generation. To all my colleagues I wish to reiterate that it was the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker who nominated the first woman in his Cabinet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Jacques: Since then the political role of Canadian women has changed and progressed immensely.

Women have taken an active part in broadening the debate on major national and social issues. I salute the determination and courage of those women who were pioneers in their field. In dealing with the major challenges that await it, this Government will have to take into account women's demands and their economic and social needs, failing which it will take that much longer to achieve our objectives.

At the end of the day on September 4 of this year, the message given by the Canadian people and the voters of Montreal-Mercier was a clear one, namely, a desire to restore and renew this country's national, economic and social equilibrium. We have seen that Canadians are in favour of new ideas and new approaches to major issues. I was very pleased to hear that the Government intends to enhance the role of the individual Member, to rebuild a national consensus based on dialogue and establishing common goals, to seek a genuine national consensus on both economic and social issues, to ensure social justice and finally, to renew and enlarge our international participation.

The role played by Members in their ridings is perhaps better known and more appreciated than the role they play in the House of Commons. People appreciate the importance of Members being available to their constituents. However, Members must also be given a more active part in the business of the House. The Government's plan to review the organization of the House of Commons should be supported by Members since it will afford them new ways of being more active and more involved in the business of the House and supporting the work of Cabinet.

As was said in the Speech from the Throne, the three basic objectives in federal-provincial relations will be to harmonize policies of both levels of government, to ensure respect for their jurisdictions and to end unnecessary and costly duplication, and I am sure everyone will agree that these objectives must form the basis of a renewed relationship. This Government recognizes that the Province of Quebec has a major role to play within the Canadian Confederation.

• (1125)

[English]

The Province of Quebec must be a financial partner fully contributing to the economic growth of this nation. The Constitution will not be complete until the Province of Quebec agrees to become fully part of this agreement.

Quebec's human potential will have to be put at the disposal of Canadians in order to contribute not only to our cultural heritage but also to our economy. In a new Progressive Conservative government, Quebec will be in a position, like the other provinces, to play a constructive role in the progress and prosperity of Canada.

[English]

With this new consensus, we must ensure that the economic isolation of certain regions ceases. The Canadian ethnic mosaic must be strengthened in our every day life and the respect of minorities must become part of the Canadian attitude.

As was emphasized in the Speech from the Throne, unemployment is now Canada's most critical national challenge. That social phenomenon is indeed a tragedy for all Canadians. It is imperative that we make every effort to develop and implement effective strategies designed to promote job opportunities and make it possible to prepare new employment programs. I intend to concentrate on that issue along with all my colleagues here.

More specifically, I intend to work towards improving the lot of unemployed youths who are unjustly victimized by the current economic conditions. Over the next few years, we will have to do our utmost to find solutions which will enable young Canadians to take their place on the labour market.

Stopgap measures are no longer good enough. Young people must be able to look forward to lasting and challenging employment. Youth unemployment has been the source of too many disillusions and frustrations. That situation must change. We are morally duty-bound to tackle the issue now so that all young Canadians will regain faith in their country. Canada's future is at stake.

With regard to social justice, one must consider the role of women in Canadian society and their rightful claim to equality for which they have been striving for many years.

Today there is still a wide gap between the principle of equality, which is widely endorsed, and its day-to-day application. It is up to us, women Members of Parliament, to be vigilant and work to ensure that this principle becomes a daily reality.

• (1130)

We shall have to step up our efforts to increase job opportunities for women in the public service and the private sector, and to improve the daycare services offered to working mothers, to name but a few.

Of course, equality between men and women implies economic equality, but it also affects a multitude of other issues that are of daily concern to Canadian women. We must immediately get down to work to meet the legitimate aspirations of Canadian women.

In the coming months, our government will consider important legislative proposals which, if adopted, will improve the quality of life for Canadian women, for instance by repealing the provisions of the Indian Act which discriminate against native women, by bringing about a major reform of the Divorce Act to make it easier for a couple, to go through this often painful stage in their life, by legislating in order to eliminate pornography and television content picturing sexual violence and exploitation, by agreeing to measures designed to increase assistance to the victims of violence within the family, and by implementing, in co-operation with the provincial governments, a national system to facilitate the enforcement of maintenance orders involving Canadian women. As parliamentarians, we must see to it that these aspirations are met. We must ensure that Canadian women can feel not only the dignity and the pride of womanhood, but also that of being full-fledged Canadian citizens.

When we speak about social justice, we also refer to senior citizens. With the assistance of my colleagues, I intend to improve the conditions and quality of life of our seniors. We must allow them to continue to remain independent and to protect their privacy and their freedom while meeting their basic needs. We must ensure them a decent income, adequate housing, appropriate health care and services, and recreational and other activities adapted to their needs. Let us give back to our seniors the dignity, the pride and the joy of being alive.

They are not just great citizens, they are also great builders of this country. They deserve all of our respect and consideration.

There are also our mentally and physically handicapped citizens. Although some progress has been achieved these past few years, we must keep on enhancing their quality of life. They must become independent, full-fledged citizens notwithstanding their physical or mental handicaps. If we can garantee them standards conducive to a proud and decent way of living, if we give them the chance to contribute to our society, they will become better Canadians.

I have the privilege of being here in this House because the people in Montreal-Mercier elected me on September 4 to represent them in our Parliament. I would like to say a few words about this constituency where I was born and raised, and where I still have my residence.

Mr. Speaker, my constituency of Montreal-Mercier is located on the easternmost part of Montreal Island, in the Province of Quebec. It is limited to the South by the St. Lawrence River, to the North by the Rivière des Prairies and it extends from Tétreaultville to the West to Pointe-aux-Trembles on the East End of the island; it has an area of some 41 square kilometres.

My riding includes several petroleum plants as well as one petrochemical complex, which defines it as an industrial area, but more particularly, this feature means that the government's energy policies have a major impact back home.

The riding of Montreal-Mercier has a population of nearly 100,000 including some 35 per cent with so-called ethnic backgrounds. Most of my constituents are very hard workers. We all feel like a very large family and share a very strong desire for change. Young and old, we are all concerned and affected by unemployment and other current social problems. But there is hope for the future and we are looking forward to a renewed confidence in our country and ourselves. My constituents have put their trust in the new conservative government to improve their social and economic conditions.

In conclusion, I should like to emphasize that our Prime Minister's honesty, sincerity and conviction have already marked the new government and its members. Unity in this Government will be our strength and all together we will build a new Canada in keeping with the aspirations of the Canadian people and their wishes stated on September 4 last.

[English]

In order to fulfil all of those new commitments, we will require the full co-operation of all ten provinces. We are looking for a true change, a new national consensus, and together, as our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) declared last year on October 6, we stand united in the sunlight, ready to work for a better Canada.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE URGED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the effects of acid rain on our lakes, fisheries, forests, and monuments are of great concern to Canadians, and rightfully so. Thus far the meeting between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan, followed by the meeting between the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and his American counterpart in Washington, have failed to produce the results promised by the Prime Minister.

We on the Liberal side of this House urge the Government to intensify its efforts, but also to show that we are determined to reach the goal of cutting emissions from smoke stacks and cars in Canada. Therefore I urge the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) to continue to work in co-operation with the provinces, as initiated by the Liberal Government, and to convene as soon as possible a meeting with the provincial environmental Ministers so as to make further joint progress toward the modernization and clean up of dirty plants in Canada.

Finally, I urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to conclude consultations with industry and the public so as to control automobile emissions which contribute to acid rain.

GOVERNMENT'S PROGRAM

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on September 4, 1984, a sick Canada was delivered into the hands of the Progressive Conservative Party. A diagnosis revealed a country dying under a burden of excessive taxation and a rising debt of billions of dollars. Interest rates were killing investment and forcing farms and businesses into bankruptcy. A million people, including thousands of youths, were unemployed and looking for work but could find none because Canadians with money were afraid to invest in their own country. They were heading elsewhere, taking their capital and jobs with them.

Ill will between the east and the west, between the English and the French, was festering. The country was breaking apart. Yes, indeed, we found a Canada sick unto death!

The Progressive Conservative Government, believing that a strong and united Canada is again possible, and with honesty, determination and free enterprise as their tools, are tackling the job, not with band-aids and aspirins, but by gradually removing the causes of the illness, by reducing the gigantic debt in an orderly way, thus forcing interest rates down, and by creating a climate of confidence so that thousands of entrepreneurs will invest their capital and hire Canadians.

A sickness which was neglected for ten years cannot be cured overnight, but now complete recovery will gradually take place and we will again have a strong and a united Canada led by a PC Government which represents all parts of the nation under that dedicated Canadian, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISASTERS

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO WEST COAST FISHING TRAGEDY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of the House, and particularly of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates), that a number of fishermen have died off the west coast of British Columbia in storms at sea because of inadequate weather information provided to those mariners as well as because of inadequate search and rescue coverage of the area.

I would urge the Government to hold a public inquiry into this matter at which testimony and information will be solicited from fishermen and mariners so that the widest possible information will be made available to the Government in order to develop a plan on which to act. I would also urge the Government not to revert to the old ways of the former Liberal Government whereby in-house inquiries were held but very little action was forthcoming on the results.

ASSISTANCE NEEDED FOR FAMINE STRICKEN AFRICAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks Canadians have been shocked by television reports of mass starvation in Ethiopia. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Vézina) should be commended for their timely visit and intervention. However, Canada must become more conscious that Ethiopia is not a unique example. Africa holds 21 other countries with declining food capabilities. Their populations are growing faster than their per capita food productivity.

Shipping food to afflicted areas is a moral imperative which Canadians must accept in the short run, and, indeed, have shown themselves ready to accept. However, if other and equally tragic "Ethiopias" are to be avoided in the future, there is a greater need. We must make a sustained effort to enable the afflicted countries of Africa to expedite scientific agriculture and to develop vital infrastructures.

In 1975 it was predicted that 50 million people might starve to death within a decade. Never has a prophecy of doom been fulfilled with more horrendous accuracy. Never has a prophecy been more avoidable. Can the developed world now face a reality from which many turned away ten years ago? In the 18th century the western nations brought slavery to Africa. We now have a chance to renew its life.

PENSIONS

DEMAND THAT SYSTEM BE REFORMED

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne on Monday afternoon the Government outlined what is supposed to be its blueprint for economic renewal and social justice. While I applaud the Government for committing itself to extending the spousal allowance, it comes as a grave disappointment to me that it has ignored the more than 160 recommendations for reform, which were contained in the report of the Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform, a report, which I remind Hon. Members, had the concurrence of all three Conservative members on that committee.

• (1410)

Instead of concrete action the new Government has said it will "enter into negotiations and discussions with the provinces for a comprehensive overhaul of the Canadian pension system, including such matters as portability, vesting, survivor benefits, and pension coverage for women".

These are all much needed reforms and long overdue, but the Government was given a mandate on September 4 to change, not to study. The Canadian people do not want more discussions; they want action, and they want it now.

I therefore urge the Government to illustrate its commitment to pension reform by reforming the Canadian pension system and taking a lead role by tabling amendments to the federal Pension Benefits Standards Act.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

CALL FOR CUT IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, under the National Energy Program there are in existence two expensive and, in my view, totally redundant programs which represent a serious drain on the treasury and in reality are a transfer from government to the relatively affluent. I speak of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program—in other words, the new furnaces for old furnaces program—which puts $800 in your jeans if you convert from oil to gas or whatever, a program which subsidizes the relatively well off to buy heat pumps so their homes can be air conditioned in summer. The other is the CHIP program under which we pay home owners, certainly not the most poverty stricken in our society, $500 toward insulating their homes.

All forms of energy in Canada, Mr. Speaker, are now in surplus. World oil prices are falling, and producers are being directed not to produce. Indeed, they are being pro-rated. Why then spill out literally millions of taxpayers' dollars to those well enough off to own their own homes in order to encourage them to do what they ought to have done in the first place, to insulate; or to bribe them to buy new furnaces, heat pumps, and such devices. Surely there can be no justification for these programs.

DECISION CONCERNING SALE OF CERTAIN CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) announced that every effort is made to sell four Crown Corporations employing 10,000 Canadians.

We deeply regret that before taking such a decision, the government has not applied its philosophy of consultation. In the Speech from the Throne, there are many references to consultation and co-operation. The government referred to the importance of trade unions in Canada. However, their advice was not sought about the sale of those corporations. That is not the way an economic consensus can be reached. For the employees of such corporations, especially Canadair and de Havilland, that decision is quite dangerous. Many jobs could be lost. Mr. Speaker, we ask the government to consult the employees of those corporations.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

STATUS OF WOMEN

PREGNANCY DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ARMED SERVICES PERSONNEL

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, in its Throne Speech the Government made a very positive statement to the women of this country. It was a commitment to work toward achieving economic equality for all women.

I would like to bring to the attention of this House an example where immediate steps can be taken to redress a situation existing today which blatantly discriminates against the women of Canada.

● (1415)

Existing regulations of the Armed Forces of Canada allow members, both male and female, to claim sick leave without any loss in pay, without any loss in seniority or vacation leave, and without any loss in their pension contributions, for anything from hangovers to facelifts.

When a member of the same Armed Forces becomes pregnant, however, time lost as a result of that pregnancy results in the loss of pension benefits, loss in seniority, and loss of pay. Her record is marred in terms of future promotions, and being put on leave without pay has quite a stigma attached to it.

The previous Government, aware of such blatant discrimination, had years to address this problem and failed to do so. I call upon the new Government, committed to achieving economic equality for women, to introduce immediate steps to bring the Armed Forces up to date and into the 20th century.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CREATION OF NEW JOBS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is properly for the Prime Minister. It is a question which he has undoubtedly been anticipating, and which he has had more than two months to recollect. In July, in Prince Albert, the Prime Minister promised the Canadian people: "You're going to see tens upon tens of thousands of jobs created just as quickly as a new Government can be sworn in." Where are those tens upon tens of thousands of new jobs?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, the fact is that, since the Government was sworn in just a few weeks ago, interest rates have already dropped three-quarters of a percentage point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Conference Board is now forecasting a net gain of 56,000 new jobs as opposed to a loss of 101,000 which it was forecasting last July. I think that is close enough.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

YOUTH PROGRAM FUNDING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I were deeply concerned when the Minister of Employment and Immigration froze the program for training and employment initiatives for young people, which was called the First Chance Program. It is now November; two months have passed. The program which the Minister announced yesterday is merely a pilot program.

Would the Prime Minister assure the House that tomorrow evening the Minister of Finance will make a commitment to young people which will at least match the $100 million a year in the First Chance Program and, if possible, the $1 billion a year commitment which the previous Government made?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of the many remarkably good statements made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition when he was a candidate for the leadership of his Party in regard to repudiation of previous policies, I think he is going to be well pleased with what he hears tomorrow night.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I hope there is something tomorrow night, because there was not much on Monday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

GENERAL MOTORS INVESTMENT IN QUEBEC PLANT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, considering his commitment to create jobs and still more jobs, can the Prime Minister of Canada inform the House whether he has had discussions with the management of General Motors and his friends in the new American administration about the reports published in The Gazette with respect to the alleged decision made by that corporation to shelve its investment project of roughly $700 million for expanding its assembly plant in Sainte-Thérèse?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Leader of the Opposition has every reason to be concerned over that question, and the Minister and I will take this up with the management of that corporation which, hardly a few months ago if I am not mistaken, announced major investments in the riding of the leader of the New Democratic Party. So, to be fair and equitable, the situation in Quebec will have to be reviewed as well.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AID TO AFRICAN COUNTRIES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

First of all, I would like to congratulate the Right Hon. Minister on his decision to go on to Ethiopia, after attending the funeral of Mrs. Indira Gandhi in India, in order to see for himself the extent of this human tragedy, and I am pleased to see the Hon. Minister has confirmed that for many years, Canada has, both on a per capita basis and in terms of absolute figures, contributed the most towards food aid in Ethiopia.

Considering the famine situation in many African countries, does the Government intend to set up a permanent mobile unit in Africa that would include de Havilland surplus planes—the Buffalo type—available at this time and as yet unsold, to provide a quicker and more efficient system for delivering food to the hungry in these unfortunate African countries?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the former minister for his question, and I think his comments have made it clear that aid provided by individual citizens and government to persons in need is in the Canadian tradition. The Government has just appointed the Hon. David MacDonald as co-ordinator, and his duties will be to co-ordinate all activities of the Government, non-governmental organizations and private citizens, so that Canadians will be able to respond to this very serious human crisis in the most effective way possible. Perhaps the suggestion made by the Hon. Member will be included among Mr. MacDonald's recommendations. I trust that Mr. MacDonald will be in a position to give us in Parliament, and all Canadians, some indication of what kind of program would guarantee that Canadians wishing to help the people of Africa in their time of need will be able to do so effectively.

[English]

ETHIOPIA—DISTRIBUTION OF FOOD DONATIONS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the famine is a result not only of years of drought but also of a lingering civil war. Does the Minister have the assurance from the authorities in Ethiopia that they will make sure that food will be distributed to all parts of the country and that the food and relief will not be used to achieve some political leverage?

In addition, does he intend to join the international commission that is proposed by former Chancellor Willy Brandt to attempt to negotiate safe conduct with the successionist provinces and the central government in Ethiopia, so that the food will go to all parts of that country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the reason why I went to Ethiopia was precisely to seek to satisfy myself personally that there was a reasonable prospect that Canadian aid would be delivered to people in need. I was pleased to be joined in that mission by representatives of the other Parties represented in this House. Certainly, for my part and, I believe, for theirs, we are confident that the Government and authorities of Ethiopia are doing everything that is possible in very difficult circumstances to ensure that aid that comes from the rest of the world to help starving people in Ethiopia will get to those people.

There is conflict internally in Ethiopia. Undoubtedly there will be some diversion. My view is that that is minor and on the margins and it should not deter the people of Canada from giving the aid that is necessary. I am looking for reasons to encourage Canadians to give aid that will help the starving. I am not looking for reasons to stop that aid. I think that is the view of all Members in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): As regards the undertaking by former Chancellor Willy Brandt, we will look at that and come to a judgment as to whether that is the most constructive way to try to reduce tensions internal to Ethiopia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

MEASURES TAKEN BY THE PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. During the election campaign, he said that the priority of the Conservative government would be to create new jobs. Since then, the Government has switched its priorities by deciding to focus on the deficit and not on creating new jobs.

My question is very simple. Why did this happen?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I believe that the Hon. Member might be making an involuntary mistake. We formally stated in the Speech from the Throne that unemployment was the most important issue confronting us. Of course, to deal seriously with unemployment, we need a healthy economy, and to have this healthy economy, someone must finally be prepared to deal directly with the deficit, and this is what we are going to do.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that he cannot have it both ways. He knows that in the Throne Speech he said "the urgent priority", that the urgent priority was the reduction of the deficit. In the election campaign he himself indicated an awareness that if you are going to have job creation as the priority you cannot have at the same time a priority of concern with the deficit.

Some Hon. Members: Oh! oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I notice the Prime Minister's colleagues are questioning behind him. They should wait for the quotation from a statement that he made in August. In August the Prime Minister indicated his own awareness that you could not have it both ways, by saying:

> Clearly, there can be no drastic reduction in the deficit until . . . the country gets back to work.

"Massive cuts," he added, "would guarantee a recession".

Why has the Prime Minister changed his mind? Why has he changed his priorities? Why do unemployed Canadians have to wait for a job?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I think, Mr. Speaker, that the operative word in the quotation is the word "drastic". I think there would be general agreement that any such cuts would have the effects to which the Hon. Member refers. That is not our intention. What we are trying to do is to reconstruct an economy, to re-energize an economy, to provide durable employment for hundreds of thousands of Canadians, an economy that was too long built on the premise that where there is a problem you print money and throw it at it. That is not the way you build an economy capable of throwing off the kinds of jobs we all want for our people.

GOVERNMENT'S PRIORITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that since the election not only he himself, but the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Finance, and a number of other Ministers I could mention have said that the number one priority is the reduction of the deficit. No amount of any sort of linguistic game-playing in the House now is going to disguise that reality, and I am sure when we hear the Minister of Finance on Thursday we are going to hear drastic cuts being announced to the people of the country.

• (1430)

Since the Prime Minister suggested that there will not be such cuts, will the Government maintain the priority which the Prime Minister promised in the summer, namely, that its leading priority would be job creation? Will he guarantee that on Thursday night we will not hear drastic cuts announced by the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the best indication I can give to the Hon. Leader of the NDP is that the first step the Government took with regard to the unemployment problem was when my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, announced the proposed expenditure and allocation of some $430 million to create jobs by the direct job-creation process.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Just throwing money at it.

Mr. Mulroney: This was required because of the state of the economy we received. However, we will be dealing with some of the structural deficiencies as of tomorrow night in a statement by the Minister of Finance which I know even the Leader of the New Democratic Party will applaud.

YOUTH TRAINING OPTION PROGRAM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In announcing her Youth Training Option Program yesterday, I know how disappointed she must have been with the $27 million given to her by her Cabinet colleagues for a pilot project when she probably would have preferred something closer to the $100 million which was set aside for the First Chance Program.

Considering the many promises made during the election campaign by the Conservative Party to place a high priority upon employment, and training for employment, how does the Minister justify a mere $27 million for this important matter, and considering the fact that this subject has been studied and experimented with over and over again, how does she justify another pilot project?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, we have been reviewing all programs within government to take a look at their efficacy. As he will further know, yesterday we announced that we would go ahead with the Youth Training Option Program, which is a $27 million pilot project affecting some 4,000 Canadian youths. However, we also emphasized that our major training program for young people would be worked out in consultation and in collaboration with the provinces, the business community, and labour groups.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: We did that because we believe this is a major task which will require us to work together, and not to have a program which is in conflict with the other partners in the economy. Unfortunately that is what First Chance was.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister now admitting that throughout the two months of the election campaign, and for many months before that, she and her Party had no program or blueprint for the creation of jobs and training for employment? Is she now admitting that she misled the Canadian people, that she had no program, that she will now start from scratch consulting, reviewing, and looking for a program, and that she never had one in the first place?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker. I will admit no such thing because it simply is not true.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Within days of assuming office we announced programs to create some 70,000 jobs, jobs which had not been put into effect or had no money allocated to them by the previous Government. It had not taken any steps to do that.

We were elected to change what was taking place, and we will. We will do that by working with our partners, not by fighting with them.

FINANCE

IMPACT OF SALES TAX INCREASE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who, not many weeks ago, stood in the House and said that policies such as the Liberal sales tax increase would result in the 1.5 million unemployed Canadians having absolutely no hope for a job, and would inevitably create a recession in the country within a matter of months.

I know the Prime Minister campaigned for change. However, is this the kind of change, where he is simply changing his mind about a tax policy and in a sense saying to Canadians: "I had no option"?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish I had said that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I think the Hon. Member knows full well, because of his very considerable expertise on the economic side, that indeed the situation we came upon after September 4 was rather worse than what our friends had let on. Thus we were forced to take some measures which, had we been in control some time ago, we would have preferred not to take.

Mr. Riis: I suspect the Right Hon. Prime Minister will perhaps wish that he had not made those statements, because in fact he had an option. He could have said: "I am not going to do it. This is wrong for Canada, and I am not going to ask Canadians to pay the price". He had an option and he said "No". He "chose to say yes to the old attitudes and the old stories of the Liberal Party".

REQUEST THAT DECISION BE RESCINDED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Knowing that since he has taken office we have lost 81,000 jobs in a very short period of time, that by his own admission we will be losing more and more jobs as a result of the sales tax increase, and that we will now be heading into a recession, again by his own admision, would he not now have the courage to stand before the House and say: "I am going to change my mind once again. I am going to go back to my original position and stop the introduction of legislation to impose that sales tax"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member, as will his Leader, will be well pleased with the manner in which the Minister of Finance will come to grips with some very grave structural problems we were left by a Government which sat too long. We propose to deal with them in a very positive and productive way tomorrow night. I think the manner in which it is done will receive the support of all Members of the House, including the Hon. Member.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—PAYMENTS TO GRAIN FARMERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. However, with your indulgence, and through you, I should like to offer my congratulations to the Hon. Minister on his appointment to a position which is of great importance to my region of the country. However, in saying that I should like to express the surprise and disappointment of many people in western Canada at the total lack in the Throne Speech of any reference to the serious drought conditions faced by farmers in that area.

Would the Hon. Minister and his Government consider bringing into the House today, with the full co-operation I am sure of all Hon. Members on this side, the proposals made last summer by the previous Government to bring in advance payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Fund so that some $500 million of cash flow wouuld be in the hands of farmers to meet a very serious problem before the change of the fiscal year? This is something which western farmers have been expecting and planning for, Mr. Speaker. We would hope the Minister of Agriculture will prevail upon his colleagues so that we could have that Bill in the House right away.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to utilize this opportunity to thank the Hon. Member for his congratulatory messages and remarks. Indeed, I congratulate him on his electoral success.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wise: All my colleagues may not agree.

• (1440)

Indeed, I think that he can take some satisfaction from the fact that the agricultural industry was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. It was selected as one of our resource industries which we should make every effort to strengthen and to revitalize.

With reference to the Hon. Member's question drawing our attention to the very serious drought conditions in western Canada, we are very much aware of them. Indeed, one of my first trips after being sworn in as Minister of Agriculture was to Regina where I sat down with my provincial counterparts, along with my colleagues, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of State in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. An agreement between the federal Government and the provinces, to the extent of $60 million, was signed. We have not ignored the drought conditions in western Canada. We have addressed this as well as we can, given our limited financial resources.

POSSIBLE CONTENT OF ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. We on this side of the House are, of course, very pleased that the Minister signed an agreement that we negotiated. That shows some good sense that other Ministers have not shown in some of the other programs.

I would point out that the Minister has not answered the question as to whether they intend to bring in changes to the stabilization fund so that the farmers will have cash. I would ask here and now today, in order to erase any uncertainty, that he repudiate the statements made by officials of his Department which suggest that in tomorrow's statement there will be an elimination of many important programs for farmers in western Canada which would cause their present very serious condition to deteriorate substantially.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in responding to the Hon. Member's second and third questions, I would indicate to him that on Friday, I believe, we released the final payment in the amount of $123 million. With reference to the possibility of providing an initial payment for 1985, I can assure him that my colleagues in Cabinet, and my colleagues from western Canada, are presently discussing that possibility.

INDUSTRY

PLACEMENT OF CNR STEEL RAIL ORDER

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: If you are not careful, you will get the previous Member back.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: My question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It was recently reported in The Toronto Star that the CNR will be cutting some $15 million worth of steel rail orders from Algoma Steel and transferring that to Sydney Steel Corporation. Keeping in mind that the unemployment rate in Sault Ste. Marie is far in excess of the national rate, unofficially 20 per cent, can the Minister guarantee the people of Sault Ste. Marie, and this House, that the old Liberal shell game of shifting jobs from one regionally deprived area of the country to the other is no longer in vogue, and that in fact that $15 million order will be placed with Algoma Steel?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I welcome him back to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: As the Hon. Member knows, the transaction that he is referring to involves a Crown corporation. I would advise him, though, that certain of those transactions are under review. I can assure him that the concern of many in Sault Ste. Marie and in other areas in Canada has been brought to our attention. We will do our level best to ensure that there will be no adverse fallout from any such transaction such as that referred to by the Hon. Member.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW DECISION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. There are two points. First, the Nova Scotia election is over.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: The applause, I presume, was for Alexa McDonough, the Leader of the New Democrats in Nova Scotia.

The other point is that that is the old answer we used to get from the Liberal Party when it sat on that side. In view of the fact that Crown corporations are not the best loved by this Minister, will he be more specific and give hope to the people of Sault Ste. Marie by stating he will review it with the intent of ensuring that that order is placed with Algoma Steel and that no jobs are lost as a result of it?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member I would indicate that I, too, share in his jubilation with respect to the Nova Scotia election. With reference to the second part of his question, I indicated in my first answer that we are reviewing the transactions and that he has our assurance that we will do our level best to ensure there will be no adverse fallout such as he is referring to.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

IMPORTANCE OF PROCEEDING WITH 1986 CENSUS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it has been reported in the media over the last few days that the Government was planning to cancel the 1986 census. I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services who is responsible for the matter.

Since there has been a census every five years in Western Canada since 1886, and in other parts of this country since 1956, and in view of the importance of the data collected by way of that census to the business and academic communities and also to social and government affairs, not to mention of course the issue of the jobs involved in census-taking, can the Minister give us his personal assurance that the census will not be cancelled, but held in 1986 as usual?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Member on his election and welcome him to the House of Commons.

The Government has made no announcement with regard to the 1986 census. All programs of the Government are under active review because of the very serious financial situation in which we find ourselves. When a decision is made, it will be announced. I will make sure that the Hon. Member receives the announcement as quickly as possible.

INCLUSION OF NEW QUESTIONS IN CENSUS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I asked the Minister whether he had made the announcement. We are looking for his personal assurance.

Is the Minister aware that new questions were to be included in the 1986 census pursuant to the "Obstacles Report' of this House of Commons, dealing with important matters concerning visible minorities and the handicapped? There were also to be questions in this census for the first time concerning native peoples. No affirmative action programs can be established without the data base which would be received from this census. In view of that, will the minister assure this House that this census will take place?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments about the value of Statistics Canada and the information it gathers on behalf of the Government and of the people of Canada. We value the agency and its activities. Its activities, along with all other activities of Government, are under review. When that review is completed and the Government has made a decision, that decision will be announced in the proper manner.

PIPELINES

WATER SUPPLY FOR SASKATCHEWAN CITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister was in Regina during the summer election campaign, there was some confusion about whether he supported a water pipeline for the cities of Moose Jaw and Regina. The Regina Conservative candidates assured everyone in Regina that he indeed did.

• (1450)

Just to clear up the confusion that might exist, will the Prime Minister now tell us if indeed his Government is committed to a water pipeline from Lake Diefenbaker to the cities of Regina and Moose Jaw?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yes, we are examining the various options, technical and otherwise, that are available, and I will respond just as quickly as I can to the Hon. Member.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, again this is a bit discouraging because those are the same kinds of answers we were getting from the previous administration.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that there is now a Conservative Government in the Province of Saskatchewan, and a mayor who is very sympathetic to the Conservative Party. When will they all sit down together and draw up an agreement? When, in fact, will we see some real changes so that the people of Regina and of Moose Jaw can have clean, safe water, and as well create some desperately needed jobs back home? When are we going to see some changes and some action?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Soon.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATUS OF WOMEN

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Mr. Minister, in the Throne Speech you stated that your Ministers will seek to "further define" the concept of equal pay for work of equal value. Last August, however, during the Leaders' debate on women's issues, you stated, and I quote—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am reluctant to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the Hon. Member does have some parliamentary experience and knows how questions should be addressed.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am directing my question to the Prime Minister through you. Last August, during the Leaders' debate, the Prime Minister stated:

[Translation]

I believe it imperious for the Prime Minister and the new Government to give very clear instructions to the Treasury Board. The law is clear.

[English]

The Prime Minister said last August that the law is clear. I would like to know what has happened to cloud the Prime Minister's vision so much between August and November, that what was clear in August needs further definition in November? Why will the Prime Minister not move immediately on the changes he promised to all the women of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the point she has made, particularly in view of her sense of humour. In a television interview she referred to the Liberal opposition as the "Fabulous Forty".

Ms. Copps: It was the "Feisty Forty".

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, this Government stands committed to that pursuit. We hope to achieve full equality for women, and that shall be a principal hallmark of everything we do throughout our legislative life.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN STATEMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity, through you, to remind the Prime Minister of the comments he made last August, because not only did he say that the law is clear, he also said:

[Translation]

Of course, I will go further. I will make sure that this equality principle is adhered to by all those who are eager to do business with the federal government.

[English]

He said that he would apply the principle not only to the Government but to those companies that wanted to do business with the federal Government. Again, Mr. Speaker, what happened between August and November to change the Prime Minister's mind about the direct action he promised to the women of Canada? How does he expect the women of Canada to trust him when he changes his mind so frequently?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am a little perplexed by the indignation of the Hon. Member. I think that the program we set out to the Canadian people resulted in the election of an historic number of women to the Progressive Conservative Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This, in turn, resulted in the appointment of an historic number of women to the Cabinet of a Progressive Conservative Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This is an indication of the bona fides of this Government, and we plan to continue this kind of positive, forceful, vigorous action on behalf of the women of Canada, action which has been so badly lacking in the past.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, that was garbage.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs whom I would first like to thank for inviting representatives of the opposition Parties to accompany him to the funeral of Indira Gandhi and on his stopover in Addis Ababa. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River, reported on both to our caucus this morning.

My question does concern what Canada is doing about aid to the starving people of Ethiopia. It is not enough for the Minister to say, as he did earlier, that David MacDonald is looking after it. David MacDonald is co-ordinating it, not instigating it. Has the Government yet instigated a special fund drawn from new moneys, and not from transfers from other moneys in CIDA or elsewhere, for emergency aid and development in Ethiopia? In that connection, has the Minister also considered providing matching grants, out of this fund or other funds, to the contributions of private individuals and organizations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not done that yet. I expect to be in a position to make an announcement within the next few days regarding that precise kind of action. We are not sure of the nature of a matching formula or whether or not that formula will be part of the announcement, although it is being considered. However, let me make a point and ask again for the help of the Hon. Member, and indeed of all Hon. Members of the House of Commons.

We believe that there is an urgent job for the Government of Canada to do, and we intend to do it. However, this is a matter of concern not only for the Government, this is a matter of concern for the people of Canada. I ask the help of Members of Parliament throughout the House of Commons, and of citizens across the country, to ensure that the Government acts and that the people act to do what we can to stop the starving in Ethiopia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, it was on behalf of this Party that I asked whether or not the Government was going to start such a special fund and was going to have sharing with private citizens, because we feel very strongly that the Government can do so.

ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that Willy Brandt, the head of the Socialist International, is now heading a commission to see whether or not there are ways by which the warring factions in the northeast of Ethiopia can be brought to a ceasefire. I understand that the Eritreans, and I think the Tygraians as well, have agreed to a ceasefire. Can the Minister, or will the Minister use his influence with the Government of Ethiopia to get its co-operation with the Brandt Commission and its efforts?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I confess that that is not a matter which I raised with the Ethiopians. I will raise it with them another time. I repeat what I said to the Hon. Member for—

Mr. Chrétien: Saint-Maurice.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am too accustomed to referring to him as a Minister. I am glad that is behind us. As I said to the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice earlier today, I think that a very important part of our approach to this question is to determine whether or not the mission upon which former Chancellor Brandt has embarked will in fact, at this point in time, help us deliver aid to the starving.

UNITED NATIONS PROGRAMS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs and is supplementary to the previous question. The global implications of the Ethiopian food crisis have already called for substantial efforts by the United Nations and national Governments which have spent many billions of dollars since 1974. How impressed is the Minister that these programs have been and are now sufficiently well directed to merit Canada continuing its support for these programs, such as those of the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt at all that Canada must continue to support multilateral approaches to development and, as well, must continue to pursue a very active bilateral program. It is important for us, in this period of active broad attention in Canada to the crisis in Africa, to turn the attention of Canadians to the fact that this crisis did not emerge overnight. If we are to prevent starvation in the future there must be much more attention given by authorities in countries which are affected by starvation, and in countries like ours, to ensuring that there are programs of rehabilitation and agricultural renewal in those societies. That is a commitment of this Government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO NEW PAGES

Mr. Speaker: I wish to bring to the attention of Members the presence of the group of pages in the House who started their new duties, along with many of us, last Monday.

Each one of those 40 young men and women is enrolled as a first-year full-time student at either Carleton University or the University of Ottawa, and was selected from over 400 applicants from across Canada to participate in the House's page program.

They will be working with us for one year and I am sure that all Members will want to join with me today in wishing them a rewarding and worth-while experience in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all Members will want to join me in wishing the pages the best of luck and hope with me that their year with the House of Commons will prove to be a profitable and enriching experience.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by hundreds of my constituents in Vancouver-Kingsway who pray that the Parliament of Canada will act to refuse further testing of the Cruise missile. BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations between the various House Leaders with respect to the business for tomorrow, at which time we are planning to have the economic statement. I have before me and want to present to the House for approval at this time, by unanimous consent, the following Order:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, on Thursday, November 8, 1984, at six o'clock p.m. the House shall suspend its sitting until 6:30 o'clock p.m., and, at that time the business to be considered shall be a statement by the Minister of Finance;

Provided that upon the conclusion of the statement the Minister may lay upon the Table certain Notices of Ways and Means Motions related thereto, and that after a reply to the statement from one Member of each of the other recognized Parties, the Speaker shall adjourn the House.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to acknowledge that in fact the consultations which the Hon. House Leader has indicated did take place, and in our consultations we recognized that, although this is an unusual situation, the length of speeches of Opposition Party Members responding to the speech would not be longer than the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

● (1510)

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to confirm on behalf of the Official Opposition that the motion read by my friend, the Government House Leader, represents the discussion we had among House Leaders and our understandings. I would also like to confirm that there was a further agreement that the spokesman for the Official Opposition, and the other Opposition Party, would have up to the same length of time as would be taken by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in presenting his statement tomorrow evening.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn). It requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, there have also been consultations with respect to the conduct of the affairs of the House relating to Private Members' Business. As Your Honour will know, because the draw for Private Members' Business is taking place today and it will, in the course of our procedures, take a couple of weeks in order to have the list promulgated and the Bills or the motions in question put into place for discussion, I have consulted with my opposite numbers in the Opposition and propose that it be made an order of the House that Private Members' hour be suspended until Friday, November 23, 1984.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to confirm that the proposal of my hon. friend represents the decision which was reached by the mutual consent of the Official Opposition and we would certainly have no objection to the motion proceeding.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to confirm that that is the case.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Government House Leader. There must again be unanimous consent. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On a point of order, I would like to indicate to the House the business for tomorrow. In order to accommodate the economic statement, and at the request of the New Democratic Party, we will not be proceeding with the Speech from the Throne debate tomorrow but rather will be dealing with government business. Accordingly, I would like to tell the House that the order of business proposed for tomorrow will be, first, the Bill relating to the courts of Manitoba and Ontario which was introduced today by my colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie); second, the Bill relating to the sports pool and Loto Canada which was introduced by my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp); third, the Bill introduced by my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser), relating to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation; the fourth item of business will be an item relating to the Saltfish Corporation which was also introduced by my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The last item of business will be an item introduced by my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the National Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act amendment with respect to the tobacco farmers.

I would also want to indicate, Mr. Speaker, that there have been consultations with respect to the debate today, which we are all awaiting with anticipation, being Leaders' day, and there has been an understanding arrived at by the House Leaders that with respect to the addresses of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr.Turner), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), we would have the three Leaders speak today; and if the Leader of the New Democratic Party finishes after six o'clock, we will not see the clock until his remarks have been concluded. In any event, the arrangement is that once the Leader of the New Democratic Party has concluded his remarks, at whatever time, the House would adjourn at that point.

Mr. Speaker: Should I take from the Government House Leader that there is also, therefore, an agreement that the normal limitations of time do not apply?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is right.

Mr. Speaker: As they might in the third case?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard that suggestion. We need unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion is carried. There are no further motions? There being no questions on the Order Paper, I will call Orders of the Day.

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Tuesday, November 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, again I would like to say at the outset of my remarks how proud I am to have been re-elected to this House.

Ms. Jewett: Lucky you!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The hon. lady says I am lucky. There is a lady in the gallery, my wife, who helped me get elected, and my family and my sister, and there was a great, great movement on the streets.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Whereas I agree I was fortunate, it was not a matter of luck.

No greater honour can be paid to a Canadian than to have been elected by his fellow citizens to the forum of the nation, to the highest court of the land, this Parliament. I am immensely grateful to the people of Vancouver Quadra and I undertake, Mr. Speaker, to serve them to the best of my abilities, to lead and rebuild a great national Party and to lead that rebuilding from western Canada.

I am grateful, as I have said, to the citizens of Quadra. They have stood up against a national tidal wave to give me the privilege of serving them in this House and I am proud, once again, of the efforts made by my supporters, my wife, my sister and my children and the sacrifices they have undergone in order to facilitate my return to public life.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, each one of us has the important duty of providing, to provide proper representation for our constituents. Together, we have a duty to serve to the best of our ability the interests of all Canadians. Everyone of us has or should acquire a profound and indestructible respect for the traditions of the House. We rely on you, Mr. Speaker, to preserve and safeguard those traditions.

[English]

As well, I would like formally, as I have personally, to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on his impressive election victory.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is good to know that in this country a man from humble yet honourable beginnings can aspire to the highest office in this country. He is entitled this day to some personal reflections, some private thoughts of satisfaction and pride, and for this he would be fully excused. A great responsibility has been laid upon his shoulders by the people of Canada, and to respond to that, I wish him courage and good health. I need not wish him much more because I understand he has told his closest aides that he is going to govern as if he had a majority.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): May I, Mr. Speaker, also congratulate the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Jacques) who were the mover and seconder respectively of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

[Translation]

Both Members spoke eloquently and frankly about what we expect of this new legislature, and I wish to congratulate them on their contribution. Having been in the same position many years ago, I am fully aware of the importance of a Member's maiden speech in the House, and I think the Hon. Members did a remarkably good job. I trust we shall have further occasion to hear them in the House during this session.

[English]

We are here, Mr. Speaker, for a purpose greater than partisan loyalties. We are here to defend and preserve the democratic institutions of this country, of which this House is by far the most important. A former Opposition Leader and Prime Minister, the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, had this to say in this House. These are his words:

> Mr. Speaker, this institution must not fail. Without it there is no freedom. We are here today not only as the custodians of the present and the inheritors of the past, but Mr. Speaker, we are here as well as the hope of this institution's future.

On behalf of the members of my caucus, I promise you, Mr. Speaker, that we will uphold what Mr. Diefenbaker had in mind. But I promise you and the members of the Government that we will be a strong and vigilant Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As a matter of fact, when the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and I first entered this House of Commons we were in opposition. We have some experience of what that role is. We interpret our position here as recognizing that the people of Canada did accord to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues and supporters a massive mandate. But such was the nature of what they said, what they undertook and what they promised, so vague were those undertakings, that we do not extend that approval to any particular piece of legislation and we undertake to examine with care every Bill which comes before this House. If it is good legislation, it will have our approval and pass quickly. If we believe it needs improvement, then we will propose changes and amendments. If we feel it is not in the best interests of the people of Canada, we will oppose it and oppose it vigorously. I might add that we will not oppose just for the sake of opposing. We do not propose to be, as was contemplated by the Prime Minister in an interview he gave to Val Sears of The Toronto Star, "purely destructive".

I represent a political party which is a party of reform and innovation, a party of openness, with a willingness to experiment with new ideas. We will respect the rights of the individual and the rule of law. We will defend the social contract. We will work to preserve our social programs with special attention to those in greatest need. I want to remind the Prime Minister that he said during the election campaign, and I use his words, that universal social programs are "a sacred trust not to be tampered with". We on this side of the House, the Official Opposition, will hold him to that particular commitment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have said before and I say again in this House that I will not stand by, nor will my colleagues, and watch the social programs built up by successive Liberal Governments being dismantled in the name of economic expediency.

[Translation]

Liberals respect the right of every individual Canadian to develop to his or her greatest potential. We believe in equality of opportunity and access to education, training and job opportunities regardless of family background, colour, creed or sex. My colleagues and I believe in providing the widest possible scope for individual initiative and reward for success. But we also believe fundamentally in protection for those who need help or suffer through no fault of their own.

[English]

Liberalism, Mr. Speaker, believes strongly in private enterprise but holds that governments should play a positive role in the marketplace where private capital cannot do the job or where the public interest demands such an intervention. We believe that the role of government is to support and encourage private initiative and to provide the framework in which it can grow and create the thousands of jobs we need. Liberalism is not static because the world is not static. Liberalism is pragmatic and not doctrinaire.

Liberalism is not rigid for socialist nor single interest dominated. Liberalism rejects monopoly power, whether it is exercised by business, cults, unions or majorities.

A liberal understands that political freedom is impossible without economic freedom. Economic security is necessary for the full development of human personality and human fulfilment.

[English]

Liberals are never content with today. We accept change and we seek it. We believe in reform and we fashion it. We believe, indeed, that the world truly can become a better place to live.

[Translation]

I think Sir Wilfrid Laurier probably gave the best definition of Liberal doctrine when he spoke to the Reform Club in Quebec, in the old capital of Quebec, in the following terms, and I quote:

> I am a Liberal, that is, I believe that in this world, there is abuse that must be stopped, there are new horizons to be discovered and new forces to be developed.

Mr. Speaker, the programs introduced by the Liberals over the years are a reflection of Laurier's vision: health insurance, unemployment insurance, old age pensions, the guaranteed income supplement, family allowance, funds made available to educational institutions under established programs financing, on-the-job training for youth, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and the Student Loans Act, a bill I had the privilege of presenting here in the House at the time.

[English]

There was a question, Mr. Speaker, directed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), concerning the commitments of the Prime Minister and the Government to the women of this country. There are indeed, as the Prime Minister observed, more women Members in this House today than ever before. I congratulate each and every one of them in every quarter of the House. I congratulate them no matter what partisan loyalties they may share, and I urge the women of this country to stand in greater numbers for public office, for Parliament, for the legislatures and for the municipalities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The women of this country have helped set the agenda for the last decade and we need more women in public life to help implement that agenda. All issues are women's issues. We must put an end to discrimination against women. We must allow women, by way of legislation and precedent, to have the freedom to choose how they want to live, whether they want to fulfil their careers at home or in the workplace, or both, either full time or part time.

The rules by which this Party will govern legislation affecting women are those of fairness, equality, equity and a real partnership in this country. This Party has always fought and will continue to fight to improve the position of women, whether they work at home, outside the home, or both. We believe in the full equality of women, we believe in equal pay for work of equal value, and we believe that the Human Rights Commission should take a more activist role in making that principle a reality. As my colleague from Hamilton East pointed out, it is the law; it is now up to the federal Government and its agencies to ensure that the law is fulfilled in the federal Public Service, in federal Crown Corporations and in those who fall within federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Chrétien: No more studies. Action!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My colleague from Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) says: "No more studies. Action!"

● (1530)

We need adequate funding for day care. We do not need any more studies on day care such as the Throne Speech proposes. We need adequate funding for day care.

The Loyal Opposition will support an amendment to the Indian Act affecting Section 12(1)(b). I am glad that the Government intends to make that a priority.

We on this side believe in improving the enforcement of maintenance orders across the country and hope that the legislation contemplates something in that respect. We believe that the Government should follow up the Badgley Report on sexual abuses.

We believe that the Government should continue what we were doing in conducting an audit of all federal and provincial legislation to ensure that it accords with the Charter amendment which will become effective on April 17 next year affecting equality of women. There should be an active audit of every piece of federal and provincial legislation led by the Attorney General.

We also believe in affirmative action and equal access to training, jobs, opportunities and career options. I have been on record, Mr. Speaker, on this subject. We do not believe in a quota system. We believe in a merit system. We believe women ought to have an opportunity to qualify for merit as we believe they easily will. In this respect we will be watching what the Government does on affirmative action because we expect the publication of the Abella Report later this month or next month and we will be watching the Government's response to that particular report.

The cultural heritage of this country must be defended and preserved, Mr. Speaker. There is no longer a majority and a minority in Canada. We are all minorities and the time has come for total accessibility by way of statute, precedent or regulation for all Canadians in business, government and the unions, no matter what their creed, colour, faith or sex, and no matter how long they have lived in this country. In the past Liberal Governments have pursued progressive and humane immigration policies which have enriched the heritage of this country. We have stressed policies which underline the reunification of families. We have welcomed political refugees from Poland, Chile, Vietnam and other countries.

With the greatest respect, the Throne Speech touched only lightly on the subject of multiculturalism. I note, for instance, that there was no mention of compensation or acknowledgement to the Japanese Canadians for the treatment they received during World War II. The Prime Minister proposed that earlier this year. It was also the last question which he happened to direct to my predecessor when my predecessor sat in his seat in the House of Commons. The issue of acknowledgement and the redress which I believe Japanese Canadians are entitled to did not receive mention in this Throne Speech. I hope that we will learn of the Government's position on this issue before very long.

[Translation]

I am happy to see that the Speech from the Throne contains a commitment to preserve both official languages and to protect language minorities throughout Canada. I note that the Government intends to honour its constitutional commitments to our aboriginal peoples. As we all know, these commitments were laid down in the Canada Act, 1982. They are constitutional commitments. However, this throne speech does not mention any progress with respect to aboriginal government, land claim settlements and other issues of interest to Canada's native peoples. We had hoped for more on this subject—

[English]

We are going to press for the fulfilment of the Penner Report. The Hon. Member still sits with us. We are going to press the Government to move toward allowing our Indian, Metis and Inuit people to move toward more self-government and more self-reliance and to assure them the dignity to which they are entitled. I regret very much that the Throne Speech did not address this particular concern.

We on this side would also have hoped for more reference in the Throne Speech to the development of all regions of the country, and for more special emphasis on correcting regional disparities and equalizing opportunities across the country. Where was mention of that in the Throne Speech? What support was there for building up the industrial sectors of this country? Why was that not in the Throne Speech?

I have travelled widely in western Canada since the election, Mr. Speaker. I gave a commitment to the people of British Columbia and the other western provinces that I would do my best to ensure that any government would bring western Canadians into the decision-making process and that that feeling of frustration, alienation and impatience could somehow be dissipated by allowing westerners to become more fully represented. I also gave an undertaking that I would make the Liberal Party more relevant again in western Canada. That is an essential priority for me. Canada is not just an Atlantic nation, Mr. Speaker. Canada is an Arctic nation and a Pacific nation. New prosperity in western Canada depends upon the Pacific Rim. Our trade, tariff and transportation policies must reflect this new reality and new direction. I congratulate the Government for making some reference to it in the Speech from the Throne.

Our Party, Mr. Speaker, stands for an independent foreign policy for Canada. We must have close relationships with all our friends and allies. We must keep our NATO commitment. However, we must never simply mimic American policy. Those are grand words in the Throne Speech about restoring "goodwill, partnerships" and "fruitful co-operation" with the United States. I am all for that. I echo those sentiments, but not at the expense of Canadian political sovereignty, the independence of our foreign policy or our cultural or economic integrity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I sincerely hope that the omission from the Throne Speech of issues between Canada and the United States, such as acid rain, the bilateral problems we have with our fisheries on both the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts, and other bilateral problems, does not mean that the Government does not intend actively to pursue solutions on behalf of the people of Canada.

I am glad that the Government intends to continue the initiatives of the previous Government to upgrade our contribution to the NATO alliance. At the same time, we must not lose sight of the fact that while a strong defence is desirable and necessary, the ultimate goal we seek is peace. It is disappointing and I find it incomprehensible that the Throne Speech does not mention any commitment to the peace initiative of my predecessor, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau has won tremendous respect and admiration in Canada for his efforts to establish a reasonable dialogue on the nuclear arms race. I have met many groups and discussed with them the very active role Canada can play in the search for peace. We shall be keeping a very close watch on the Government's activities in this area.

The throne speech mentioned the tremendous problems facing Third World countries. I would urge the Prime Minister at this point to ensure that Canada will continue to play an important role in reducing the economic gap between North and South.

[English]

I welcome the study of a parliamentary committee on Canada's role in the world, but what are we going to do in the meantime? I hope that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) will enlighten us in the House at an early opportunity as to what his views and those of the Government are and what priorities and new direction the Government intends to pursue. If this is a Government by study, let them have their study; but I would hope that the Minister, who has travelled widely and once held high public office, would honour us with his thoughts on an early occasion in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What about all those undertaking and promises that the Tory Party made during the election campaign? During that election the Prime Minister, his colleagues and his candidates across the country showered an avalanche of promises on the heads of the people of Canada. We tried to count them. We gathered 338 together in a booklet.

• (1540)

I am sorry that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is not here. He put a price tag of $20 billion on those promises and then thought that that might have been generously low. We on this side of the House in the Liberal Party did not believe that the time was right for lavish political promises because the public debt was so high. We knew it and the Prime Minister knew it.

I would like to cite the Prime Minister as quoted in the Financial Post of March 4, 1984. He said we must——deal with some degree of prudence and frugality with public spending, which is completely out of hand.

When I opened the campaign in Edmonton I set out clearly for the people of Canada the fact that the huge public debt meant that 33 cents out of every tax dollar collected by the people of Canada through their federal Government is now necessary to pay interest. Therefore I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative Party knew the facts, the Prime Minister knew the facts, but they went ahead anyway and made those promises. We will remind the Government on every relevant occasion about those commitments to the people of Canada and we will remind our fellow citizens about them as well.

I do not want to anticipate, nor do the rules allow me to anticipate, what the Prime Minister, the right hon. gentleman, will say this afternoon. I have heard his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and we can hear him tomorrow. He will say, as he has already said, that the cupboard is bare. He will say that the situation is, to use his words, "even worse than we had anticipated". That simply will not wash.

Let me quote Allan Maslove, Director of Carleton University's School of Public Administration. In his words the bare cupboard theory is "a bunch of nonsense". The Conservatives knew the situation. They had the same numbers that we had and they were able to see the same forecasts that were available to us in both the private and public sector. But they chose to ignore them.

[Translation]

I also said during the election campaign that if the Progressive Conservatives ever came to power, they would have only three choices. They would either have to renege on their promises, raise taxes or cut our social programs. Mr. Speaker, they never had the slightest intention of keeping those promises, because they knew the state the country's finances were in.

[English]

They might say on the basis of the polls that they like to receive that promises are just words. That only adds to the cynicism with which Canadians tend to view their elected representatives. I tend to believe that it is a question of trust. It goes to the heart of a parliamentary democracy that governments should do what they say they will do, and if they do not they are not fulfilling the mandate which was given to them by the people of Canada.

The Government is now faced with these three options: renege or welch on those promises, raise taxes, or cut into our social programs. That is the position in which the Government has put itself. That is the position about which we will remind the people of Canada. There are a lot of IOUs out there.

I wonder what Peter Lougheed and Premier Devine are saying to the new Prime Minister. I am sure that the Province of Alberta expects the Government to keep its word on market prices for energy. We will wait and see what the Premier of Ontario has to say about that, if he is still saying anything about anything. You can be sure, Mr. Speaker, that the big blue machine that was donated free of charge for the campaign will soon come calling here on the Hill for some of its demands. We will be interested to see how the Prime Minister responds to that.

What has the Government been doing since September 17? There is an old saying which is: "Actions speak louder than words". There are many words in the Throne Speech but very little action. However, in the case of the Government, it is also a case of say one thing but do another.

The Conservatives promised us lean and efficient government. Those were their words. They have given us the largest federal cabinet in history. Restraint is for others. Restraint is for ordinary Canadians, not for that gang. It is the largest government in the history of this country.

I know that the cabinet choices were difficult. There are the blue Tories and the red Tories. To use the vocabulary of the Prime Minister's friend, Margaret Thatcher, the Government has its "wets" and its "drys". If you look, Mr. Speaker—and you should—it is plain that most of the wets in the caucus ended up high and dry.

It is true that the Government has tried to cut down. It has eliminated the foreign affairs and defence committee of cabinet. There are already winners and losers. To use the Prime Minister's words, he promised Canadians "jobs, jobs, jobs". What did we get? Cut, cut, cut and freeze, freeze, freeze.

The Prime Minister said at Prince Albert as he announced the great Prince Albert charter—and I alluded to this earlier in my question—that "You are going to see tens upon tens of thousands of jobs being created just as quickly as a new government can be sworn in". Where are those jobs? What did the Conservatives do? The minute that they were sworn in their policy was to cut, cut, cut and freeze, freeze and freeze. The Government froze the Special Recovery Projects that were necessary to get the economy moving and put Canadians back to work. It killed the First Chance program which would have given on-the-job training to 100,000 young Canadians a year. In its place it produced a pilot program for 3,000 or 4,000 young people, as the Prime Minister said this afternoon. While we offered a first chance for young Canadians, the Government is offering little more than a fat chance. It says not to bother it now but come back later; it says: "Let us see you in the Spring".

The Government is closing embassies and consulates around the world. I see some diplomats in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would think that the gentleman I have in mind got reconfirmed yesterday. We do not know the purpose for these actions and perhaps the right hon. gentleman, the Minister sitting attentively in the House, will advise us on an appropriate occasion.

I am sorry that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) is not here. He is conducting a fire sale on Crown Corporations such as de Havilland, Canadair, Eldorado, TeleGlobe, and apparently Fishery Products International, according to yesterday's release. There is also some suggestion about getting out of Petro-Canada. All of this is being done without any study or analysis of what the impact of the sale of these firms would be. If there is anything that needs more study it is this. I hope we will know the Government's position very soon.

I asked questions about these sales. What are the terms? Who is eligible to buy these corporations? Will foreign companies be allowed to own our aircraft industry? Who assumes the debt? What will be the impact of these sales on Canadian technology and Canadian jobs?

I remember when the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker sat in the House. He regretted for a long time the sale of A.V. Roe and the closing down of that plant.

Even the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), a former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, said the following about the proposed sale of one Crown corporation: "There is as much chance of Fishery Products International being sold to the private sector as me going to the moon". I do not know if the Hon. Member is here but he ought to check with Marc Garneau.

[Translation]

These important economic changes are not even mentioned in the throne speech. They should be debated in the House, because they are too important to be left to the discretion of one minister. I hope the Minister of Finance will give full attention to these issues in his economic statement tomorrow.

[English]

The promise of lean government seems to apply to everyone but the Government itself. Restraint is for others. Its ministry of 40 is the largest in Canadian history. The first thing the Government did was almost double the budgets for Ministers' political staffs.

● (1550)

Mr. Chrétien: Political commissars.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Then they appointed political chiefs of staff. On Jack Webster's show I called them "political commissioners".

Mr. Chrétien: Under Erik.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There are political commissars for each Minister at $80,000 a year per head.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I know that an aide to the Prime Minister describes these changes as, and I quote this invisible aide, "a slight upgrading of the salary structure but not a major one". All I can say is welcome to 1984. That comment will get the George Orwell prize for double-speak for sure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What next do we have? The next time the Prime Minister and his colleagues go with their staff to Meech Lake, perhaps it will be a dacha for each one of the Ministers and for each one of the commissars.

This is the Party that spoke so fervently about the rights of Parliament. Not only are these commissars paid more than Members, but they have more access to Cabinet and more influence than Members and they will be the Prime Minister's eyes and ears in every Minister's office in every department.

Mr. Chrétien: Nielsen.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, I am going to talk about the Deputy Prime Minister in a moment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: He is not worth talking about.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am afraid that this vast assembly of Tories elected by the people of Canada, those who sit forlornly in the back-benches and in the wings will be the forgotten men and women of the country, the forgotten men and women of Parliament, because their authority has now been taken over by the commissariat.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gauthier: They are the book ends.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Tories, Mr. Speaker, promised open and generous government. They are giving us secretive government, closed government, a very centralized government, even at this very early stage. Why? Ministers must get approval from the Deputy Prime Minister, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I congratulate him sincerely on his post. He and I have known each other for years, before he sat in Parliament. We have flown over his constituency in his plane. Nearly "bought it" once!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Ministers must now get the approval of the Deputy Prime Minister before making public statements. The watchwords will be, "Have you checked it with Erik?"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As a matter of fact, Members are not allowed to have a drink with our colleagues here in the Press Gallery without worrying about whether Erik is going to come through the door.

Mr. Chrétien: Check with Erik. Can we go to the bathroom? Check with Erik.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Foster: Go to the john? Check with Erik.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It used to be follow John. Now you have to get permission.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Woe betide his dictum and his fiat.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The motto of the Deputy Prime Minister has become, after Theodore Roosevelt, "Speak softly. Carry a big stick". But that is just when he is dealing with his Cabinet colleagues. I say to the Members sitting behind him: Beware, watch out, and protect yourselves!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: You ain't seen nothing yet.

Mr. Rodriguez: You, too.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am sorry he is not here but I find it inconceivable, for instance, that when the Minister of Justice appeared at the roast for my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount, (Mr. Johnston), and my sister was also there and competing with Mr. Crosbie for attention—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —he said, I am sorry I cannot be as eloquent as I usually am because I am "not allowed to speak".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That was the most disappointing news I had heard because I was counting on the Minister of Justice to raise the standard of debate from the other side of the House and to make it a little more interesting in here.

This is but one of the many reversals we have witnessed since the Ministers were sworn in, Mr. Speaker. I saw the "born again" Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) earlier. When in opposition he attacked the Government vehemently for trying to collect the $3.5 billion in taxes owed to Ottawa. Now, suddenly, he intends to get tough. I use his words. He said he was going to "get tough with income tax evaders".

Mr. Chrétien: That is terrible.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I tell you, Mr. Speaker, what a difference and what a wonderful change a large staff and a chauffeur can do to a man.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): During the campaign the Progressive Conservative Party built up enormous expectations in the people of Canada. This Throne Speech has frustrated those expectations. It offers only meditation, contemplation, rumination, and, most of all, hesitation.

Mr. Broadbent: Sounds like a Liberal to me.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): New Democrats are impatient, Mr. Speaker; they have an exaggerated opinion of their own importance. But I want to warn the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) not to let that chauffeur and car go to his head.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: His price was a car.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): At least it was a General Motors product. As the session goes on, maybe the price will be higher.

One of the most important programs in our country is medicare. It is being threatened by user fees and extra billing. During the campaign the Prime Minister had an answer, which I will quote:

> The answer is clearly, in the circumstances, more money to maintain the services . . . and it's a question of where your priorities are.

Obviously the protection of medicare is not a priority with this Government. It is not even mentioned in the Throne Speech.

The Prime Minister indicated a willingness to address the issue of pensions for homemakers. He made a commitment in the debate on national television affecting womens' issues, but there is no mention of homemakers' pensions in the Throne Speech.

There were 39 specific promises made by the Progressive Conservatives in the energy area. Not a single one received even an honourable mention. In fact, the whole energy sector was ignored. I think this is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) admitted during the election campaign, that was that quiet little accord with the provincial ministers—this is carrying it a little too far. We could at least have heard something in the Throne Speech as to the direction of this Government. Farmers and fishermen at least get a passing reference. But where is the promise to change the advance payments crops Act to double cash advance levels?

We realized the necessity, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) said in Question Period, to trigger a further payout of $500 million in advance payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Plan. The Prime Minister's colleague, the Premier of Saskatchewan, says even that is not enough. When will the Government tell western farmers what they can expect? Where is the promise to remove the 9 per cent federal sales tax on diesel fuel and gasoline used by farmers and fishermen? Where are the 46 specific promises to our multicultural communities? They are not there.

Where are the commitments to regional development, that special assistance to the Atlantic Provinces announced in Halifax? They are not there. Where are the commitments to housing? Housing starts have dropped by 14,000 this October. What does the Government intend to do? Where is the commitment to remove the capital gains tax on the transfer of farm land? Farms in western Canada are immobilized until the Government makes up its mind and the Minister of Finance tells us whether or not that commitment will be fulfilled. Where is the commitment to roll back the freight rate increases on grain for western farmers? Where is the commitment to freeze rail line abandonments?

Mr. Blaikie: You don't want to kill the Crow.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There were many more promises made which I will not list. They are there. They are not mentioned and they will not be fulfilled.

• (1600)

The point is: it is fine to make grand gestures during election campaigns, but the real acid test begins today. I say to the Prime Minister: "What are you going to deliver to the people of Canada?"

The Minister of Finance just told us today that in his economic statement tomorrow there will be expenditure cuts. We are seeing the plan as it develops, the old one-two punch—first, the Throne Speech to try to soften us up, and then tomorrow the knock-out punch in this financial statement. Maybe when Canadians pick themselves up off the floor on Friday morning we will have at last a clear indication of where the Government will take us.

Tremendous expectations were raised during the campaign. What we are presented with in the Throne Speech is a series of consultations. It is government by study, by seminar. The word "consultation" is used eight times. "Consensus" is mentioned eight times. "Co-operation" is mentioned seven times—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —but no action. We expected a bold plan of action. We now have a Government which gives us no action but goes into a retreat. They are not monks and we are not living in a monastery. Canadians want action. They do not want contemplation. Canadians do not want studies and they do not want seminars. Perhaps what is most disappointing is that there is really no vision of the future in that Throne Speech. There are no new goals to inspire us, no new directions in which to lead us. Instead we are presented with a long list of studies, consultations, consensus and process.

That is not leadership. Studies are not action. Process is not an agenda for progress. The Prime Minister and his Party have a massive majority. We can see it in this House. We can see it all around us. Now they are the Government. Now they must fact the tough issues and difficult decisions. That is what their role is. That is what the Canadian people put them into office to do, not to study, contemplate, ruminate and meditate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Harry Truman, a former President of the United States, would not have been happy with yesterday's result across the border. However, I commend his words on one ocasion to the Prime Minister:

> A leader has to lead, or otherwise he has no business in politics.

A government which promised jobs, jobs, jobs is telling 1.5 million unemployed Canadians to wait until spring. They are saying "Go away, give us time; we want to reflect upon it. We cannot talk to you now. Come back next year when we have studied everything".

For this reason I propose, seconded by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), the following amendment to the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne:

> That the Address be amended by adding the following words:
> "But this House condemns your advisers for their failure to demonstrate leadership and to provide plans for immediate action in the creation of tens upon tens of thousands of new jobs".

Mr. Speaker: I have checked the amendment and it appears to the Chair to be in order.

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First, Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my gratitude to the constituents of the riding of Manicouagan where I was born. At a critical, very critical moment in my life, my constituents, my childhood friends and others gave me outstanding support, for which I am deeply grateful today.

[English]

I was touched by the thoughtful and eloquent comments of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) at the beginning of his remarks. Then they went downhill. However, I thank him for his generous and appreciated thoughtful observations. I want to tell him—and I speak with some knowledge as a Quebec Conservative who watched many elections go by—that he should take some heart from the realization that he is now the leader of the largest group of Liberals elected anywhere in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It is nice to see his Quebec lieutenant seated exactly where he should be—two sword lengths away.

[Translation]

How things change after an election, Mr. Speaker! The "common man" from Shawinigan has become the spokesman for Bay Street. How extraordinary! A revolution! As legal adviser, he will undoubtedly defend the interests of the multinationals and American corporations. What a dreadful omen for the future!

[English]

I was impressed by the ringing declaration of the Leader of the Opposition to the effect—and I think I got it right—that governments, it was said, should always do what they say they are going to do, with just about that degree of emphasis.

The Throne Speech of 1980 given by the then government contained the following words, and I paraphrase but modestly: "18 cents a gallon is too much". "We must reduce the rate of unemployment". It was 800,000 then and it rose to 1.5 million. "We are going to arrest the growth in the size of government". It was $60 billion per year then. It is $100 billion now and climbing every day as a result of their mismanagement. Then the big one in the Throne Speech: "Elect us and we are going to reduce the deficit in a planned and orderly way". It was because of four solemn undertakings made and violated by the Liberal Party that the Canadian people placed not the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, because he was not here, but his colleagues in opposition for a long, long time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition alluded to a growing concern in recent years about the perception of Parliament and the fact that it does not appear to be in full control of government, parliamentary committees are less than effective and the role of the individual Member is under attack. Canadians, irrespective of politics, want to know that the elected Members are in charge to the extent humanly possible of Canada's affairs and that government, again irrespective of stripe, is accountable to the duly-elected Member of Parliament.

• (1610)

Therefore, for that reason among others we announced the creation of a parliamentary task force to deal with this vital matter. I am honoured today to be able to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that one of the most outstanding Parliamentarians of my generation has accepted the chairmanship. I refer to the Hon. James McGrath.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: In congratulating the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) for his conviction in and great knowledge of the petrochemical industry in his area, I want as well, and I think he would want me to do it, to——underline the graceful and eloquent manner in which the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Jacques) seconded the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne yesterday. Although she is the youngest Member of the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, she delivered her speech with obvious ease and self-assurance, and I think that she belongs to the generation of Quebecers and Canadians who are now striving for a stronger, more open and more generous Canada.

[English]

In terms of improvements, there are many. I will not list them today, but one of the dramatic improvements that have been made since the new Government took office has been the quality of some of the ambassadors appointed. Yesterday, in a moving speech by Stephen Lewis, the new Canadian ambassador to the United Nations, with regard to Ethiopia and the problems of Africa, he cut out and set out important policies and views. He spoke movingly of the situation in Africa. I know I speak for all Members of this House in saying, as did the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), that we shall provide leadership and assistance in this grave crisis.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: It was with deep consternation and sorrow that we learned last week of the tragic death of Mrs. Gandhi, and again I would like to extend my personal heartfelt condolences and those of all my fellow Canadians to her son, the Prime Minister, and to the other members of her family. Canada is determined to maintain close and cordial relations with the world's most populous democracy.

[English]

Still in the area of external affairs, yesterday I had the opportunity of conveying personal congratulations and those of my Party—and I know I spoke for all Members of this House—to President Reagan as Leader of the United States of America.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I know I spoke for all Members of this House, even some people in the galleries. In fact, I may say parenthetically that the Liberal convention was a dismaying event. Not the result; I was delighted with the result. I refer to the visceral anti-American feelings that were expressed. The hostility to our friends saddened and disappointed many Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Canadians responded on September 4. The United States is our friend, neighbour, ally and largest trading partner. We value our friendship with the United Kingdom, France, the United States, and our other allies and supporters. Recognition of this is an act of maturity, not of servility. Our intention as a government is to maintain those first-class relationships around the world.

[Translation]

In a few moments, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will have to leave for the airport. I have already mentioned this to the Leader of the New Democratic Party and asked him to forgive me, but I must go to the airport to welcome Laurent Fabius, the new Prime Minister of France.

This relationship is a cornerstone of our foreign policy which will help us in establishing and maintaining warm and fruitful relations with France at all times and under all circumstances.

[English]

I do not mean to be unduly critical today. Even if I tried to be critical of the previous Government, I could not do as good a job as was done by the Leader of the Opposition during the Liberal leadership convention. He was tremendous: deficit spending, declining productivity, declining commitment to research and development, abusive treatment of the private sector, the 1981 Budget, the MacEachen Budget, the NEP which just about extinguished the entrepreneurial spirit and debilitated the private sector.

We are going to re-energize the private sector in this country because that is the way new jobs are created.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I must say that it was with sadness when I saw the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition——reverse his stand in the middle of the election campaign, when, after he had made serious and important comments about the National Energy Program, he went to Halifax, and, probably after consulting with Senator Davey, who is also from Bay Street and who is here today, said that he was in favour of the National Energy Program.

[English]

It was an astonishing conversion and a debilitating one. That kind of retroactive provision is odious. Canadian wealth, prosperity and new opportunities are not built on confiscating somebody's property.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I say this because my right hon. friend was by and large not responsible. Nor was he responsible, but this is the heritage, for the downgrading of our military obligations, the churlish and vexatious treatment of the United States of America, our greatest friend, neighbour and ally, the United Kingdom and others.

We were left with unemployment at tragically high levels, an industrial base that had been gravely eroded and to which the Leader of the Opposition quite properly addressed his considerable ideas and force of character during the leadership campaign. The industrial base of the country was gravely eroded, and has been. The private sector has been undercapitalized and unappreciated by a series of these governments.

Today, not a word of contrition, not a single little mea culpa for what has happened to the country, not an ounce of humility. The Liberal Party has been wiped out in the provinces, reduced to a rump here and we do not get even a little 'I'm sorry'. I am not asking for much, just a little bit of an acknowledgement that indeed perhaps the Liberals were not——in secure possession of the truth at all times. They are perhaps somewhat less perfect that the Hon. Member from Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) used to say occasionally! But that is not the point. I must respectfully say that I do not see how the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) can have the gall to criticize us for anything after having been with his colleagues in power for 20 years. As for us, we have only been in power for two months, but I can tell you this: Give us 20 years, and it is coming, and you will not recognize this country. Moreover, the whole area of federal-provincial relations will also be completely changed.

The Leader of the Opposition belittles the process of consultation and the notion of respect toward the provinces that are mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. We believe that these are important and even vital gestures in a federal state, and that we cannot operate without healthy and dignified consultations. This must be understood.

The Hon. Member for the Thousands Islands, who has been named his deputy for Quebec, accused me during the election campaign, and this shows the mentality of that party. The Hon. Member for the Thousands Islands, who is here today, said in an important speech in Quebec that the then Leader of the Opposition—

An Hon. Member: Laval-des-Rapides.

Mr. Mulroney: I am sorry, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said that the then Leader of the Opposition was leading a party of Orangemen. That is wrong: As the Hon. Member can see, I lead a party made up of Orangemen, Knights of Columbus, Ladies of Sainte-Anne, Daughters of Isabelle, Kiwanis and Lions' clubs members, of former Liberals, former Creditists and of all those who believe that the time has come for renewal and prosperity in Canada. To speak about Orangemen is to bring back a lot of nonsense from the 1940s. In fact, that was the traditional bogeyman of the Liberal Party in 1940. I think that after sober consisteration the people in Quebec and in the rest of Canada came to the conclusion that they were going to put an end to the monopoly of the Liberal Party over the francophone vote in this country. Enough of that nonsense! We are going to vote for a new party and a new prosperity in Canada.

I regret to say that the Leader of the Opposition went to Quebec and found three separatists. Three. As for me, I discovered a population saddened by such statements and determined to reject them and to respond to the call for unity and progress. The people of Quebec and Canada decided that, since it was harbouring such harmful attitudes, the Liberal Party needed a period of rest, of reorientation and of renewal which might last a long time.

I have already conveyed to my friend, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party, my regrets at having to leave somewhat early to go to the airport to welcome the Prime Minister of France. However, before concluding I simply want to say that the agenda before the House as set out in the Throne Speech strikes me as being reasonable, appropriate and fair for the country. We seek an end to confrontation. We seek an end to division and conflict. We seek a new era of co-operation and understanding.

I am fully aware of the limitations of the thought itself. I know that there will be difficult moments. I think, for example, of the area of federal-provincial co-operation in which, for 15 years, the people of Newfoundland and Labrador asked for one thing of the Government. They asked for an honourable deal in the offshore and they were told consistently either to do it the Liberal Government's way or it would not be done at all. We applied the great traditions of building upon regions and, understanding the vitality and the necessity of that strength and in a spirit of honourable compromise, we went to Newfoundland—and we will be back again—to conclude an arrangement with Newfoundland and Labrador with regard to the development of that magnificent resource, in the firm belief that people from Newfoundland are entitled to fairness as well and that what is good and prosperous for Newfoundland is good for Canada.

[Translation]

And we have approached the West exactly the same way. We are going to negotiate with Ontario and Quebec. We are, however, going to stop building judo clubs in Quebec churches. That was a hobby of the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). We are going to or at least we shall try to reach some kind of agreement with the elected government of Quebec, and start a reasonable and intelligent dialogue in order to create jobs for Quebecers and Canadians. That is this Government's mandate, both in Quebec, Alberta and Newfoundland, and we intend to fulfil that mandate.

[English]

There is no suggestion, Mr. Speaker, not today nor during the election campaign, that we pretend to have all of the answers. We recognize the seriousness of the problems. May I say parenthetically to my right hon. friend that in regard to the litany that he not improperly set out, there was a very important caveat made in Prince Albert, in Sherbrooke and in Halifax. If he takes the time to read the statement that I released that day, he would see that we indicated that these programs and policies were good for Canada and would be introduced in a timely manner depending upon the state of the finances as we found them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Tomorrow night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will set this out in detail. The "Hon. Member for Shawinigan or Toronto"—

[Translation]

I am not too sure. Does a guy from Shawinigan go to Quebec City to practise law? No. To Montreal? No. To Shawinigan? No. To Toronto? Yes. I like Toronto, but I did not say during my election campaign: You have a choice between the guy from Main Street and the guy from Bay Street. The guy from Main Street is now the guy from Bay Street. I like both Main Street and Bay Street, and they both voted for our party.

[English]

So we put in the important caveat that these programs would be introduced. Pursuant to the statement that will be made by the Minister of Finance tomorrow evening, Mr. Speaker, we will bring forward programs that we believe are reasonable, that are important for the re-energizing of the Canadian economy, that are consistent with our traditions and that people can believe in. We believe that in this spirit of renewal and co-operation and in the search—and it is only a search—for a new consensus, we can and indeed we shall bring a new degree of prosperity to Canada and to Canadians.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my comments by referring to the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in a way that he will well understand. What I am about to say is not said in any mean spirit, but rarely have I heard a former truck driver talk so much about Bay Street, or a prime minister say so little about his Throne Speech.

I do want to begin, most sincerely, by congratulating both the mover and the seconder of the motion. These two Members spoke well, seriously and with conviction. I congratulate them on their beginnings in this Parliament.

I would like to speak about what I thought would be the substance of the debate—the future of Canada. Instead, what we had was a rehash of an election campaign which I thought had been put behind us. In that connection I say that the Throne Speech should assess the problems of a nation, regional, between groups and between individuals, and it should lay out in general terms a new Government's approach to those problems. It should not pretend to provide all the answers, but it should at least pretend to set a new direction and provide a new beginning for the nation following an election.

Without belabouring the problems—because the people of our country know the problems—I would like to indicate some of the matters which, in the view of my colleagues, and I think the vast majority of Canadians, ought to be addressed by this Parliament. Most of the problems ought to be addressed before the House adjourns for the Christmas break. I do not mean that the problems should be solved, but provision for solutions ought to be started. What are some of the problems?

Unemployment: one out of every eight Canadians has been without a job for the past two years. Among our young people, 18 per cent are unemployed. Poverty: 4.3 million Canadians are now living below the poverty line. Moreover, most of our single-parent families whose head is a woman are also living below the poverty line.

The tax system: it has become increasingly unfair. Over the past 10 years, the number of Canadians whose income exceeds $50,000 per year and who are paying absolutely no income tax has increased from 300 to over 8,000.

[English]

Add to these particular problems, that are very real, the problems of our farmers. During the past decade, year in and year out, farmers have had a decline in their real income. Add to that the problems which are becoming increasingly evident for men, and particularly women, who are faced with technological change. One can see that any government coming to power in Canada at this particular moment, whatever its ideological stripe, has its problems set out.

Canadians voted for change. I sincerely congratulate the Prime Minister and his Party. They won one of the great political victories in the history of our country and they deserve to be commended for getting the democratic support of the majority of our people. Having received that support, and having obtained a mandate for change, leadership of a very high order is required, leadership which will indeed begin to address the problems and do so from within the framework of the changes which were promised in the election campaign. The people of Canada are looking for change which will be compassionate, serious and which will provide a greater opportunity for Canadians, young and old, men and women.

If we begin to assess the Throne Speech—and I think in this debate we should spend a little time on that—and if we look at the speech in terms of providing change, what do we find? First, we must consider the stated goals and look at what is found in this Throne Speech as compared with previous Throne Speeches provided by the Liberal Government.

In this speech we find a commitment to "national reconciliation". That is a replacement for the Liberal wording which covered the same objective. The Liberals preferred to offer a "new era of federal-provincial consultation".

On the subject of social justice, we heard a commitment to "value and support the comprehensive social security system", instead of the Liberal words of "strengthening the safety net". Perhaps that expression is a little less elegant, but it is the same goal.

On the question of economic renewal, instead of Liberal talk about a "critical national objective", the Conservatives give us a "critical national challenge". Having listened to the Throne Speech, I was not at all surprised to hear on the news that evening the finance critic for the Liberal Party saying that the Conservative Throne Speech could have been written by a Liberal. I would make a small correction to that statement—it was written by a Liberal.

If there is nothing new in terms of the stated objectives of this Government, if it is essentially a reformulation using new buzz words and new concepts of goals which were provided by the previous Liberal government, I would say right away that the New Democratic Party supports the same goals. I would also say that when the day comes—and I believe it will come—that the New Democratic Party will write a Throne Speech for the people of Canada, and if we talk about the same laudable goals, we will use new terminology. My concern is not with the spurious battle of words. I would rather get on with what I regard to be the essence of such a debate and the essence of such a Throne Speech. It is not over that type of matter that I feel we should be having disputes. My concerns are a little different.

My concern is not about the general goals, which I have said are quite laudable; my concerns are with specifics. The specifics, such as they were in the Throne Speech, almost without exception, were the unfulfilled specifics of the old Liberal agenda. I will not document that case. However, I believe any journalist—and there are a number of journalists who actually do their homework—looking through the list of specific Throne Speech commitments provided by the new so-called Conservative Government would find very quickly that the specific commitments which relate to some of these goals are, by and large, on the unfulfilled agenda of the past Parliament.

I want to add right away, Mr. Speaker, that many of those particular specific commitments we would support as well. However, I raise this point for the consideration of the people of Canada, those men and women who are regarding this debate as it takes place in the House of Commons, those men and women in Atlantic Canada——in the fine province of Quebec, in the province of Ontario and in Western Canada who have voted for a change.

[English]

I have a simple question: where is the change? Where is the change, Mr. Speaker? Where is the new beginning we were promised?

With respect to the Throne Speech, what really does concern me is not simply the absence of the specifics, and I will come back to some of those in a moment, but what is the economic philosophy which permeates the Throne Speech. The political agenda of this Government began to be set out pretty clearly shortly after September 4 in statements made by the Prime Minister from Meech Lake, by statements made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and other Ministers of the Crown. It is perhaps best illustrated by a phrase from the Throne Speech itself—which I understand was added at the last moment—which is this:

That we must deal urgently with the deficit is beyond dispute.

This is not simply the view, Mr. Speaker, expressed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), at least the view he expressed before the summer campaign got under way. It is also the view which had begun to be established by the previous Liberal Government. The Liberal Throne Speech of last year used the following words: the Government would pursue——a fiscal policy track which will contain and then curb the federal deficit as recovery strengthens.

The case I want to make, Mr. Speaker—and I do so for all members of my Party from coast to coast as well as for all the men and women of our country—that if they considered all the implications of this debate, they would find that this fundamental approach pursued by the previous Liberal Government in its latter years, and reiterated with great emphasis by this new Conservative Government, is fundamentally wrong. This approach by the Government mistakes the symptoms for the disease. By attacking on a priority basis the symptoms of a disease instead of its causes, there is serious risk of doing irreparable damage to the patient.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that our problem is one of bad economic performance. Our problem in Canada is that too many men and women are collecting unemployment insurance cheques instead of paycheques. Our problem is that there is too much suffering and too few jobs in the country. Our need as a nation is not to repeat the errors of the past but to learn from them. Our need is not to have a government which plans to implement recent Liberal policy. What we need is a government which would change that Liberal policy.

I say with a great deal of emphasis, Mr. Speaker, that the current mess our economy is in and its ramifications throughout our land were indeed the creation of the Liberal Party of Canada. There can be no doubt about that. However, I also want to say that the Liberal Government just a few years ago began to try to extricate itself from this mess. It began then to see as a disease what I have described as the symptoms. It began to go just a few years ago in a direction which the Conservative Party has now pursued and will be pursuing with a great deal of vigour, I am sure, tomorrow night. That is to say, it began a series of policies and programs with which Canadians are now pretty familiar. I want to remind the Conservatives of the Liberal origin of their current policy. We had in recent years the six and five program, civil service cut-backs, reductions in family allowances, reductions in pensions, and increased loopholes provided in our tax system for upper-income Canadians. We had not millions but billions of dollars in the form of give-aways in an unaccountable fashion introduced into the corporate tax system, give-aways which went out to the corporate sector without performance criteria being attached to them. All of these things, I say, are within the framework of the kind of policy which is now being pursued but incorrectly described by this new Government as being a new policy. These policies were begun by the Liberals.

What did the Liberals say that these policies would lead to? They said that they would lead to economic recovery, that they would begin to turn the mess around which the Liberals had created from 1968 up to the end of the 1970s. But what did we receive instead? We had upper-income Canadians who received the tax breaks, yes, but last year investment in the economy went down, not up. We had thousands of corporations taking advantage of the tax benefits, and I do not criticize them for doing so. Anyone would take a tax benefit if he could. However, the same corporations, according to the president of one of our chartered banks, indicated there was a whole batch of programs which gave them windfall profits they did not need. They received largesse from the taxpayers but did not invest it. We did not create more jobs, Mr. Speaker, we created fewer jobs, and it is to these kinds of programs that we want to put an end.

I want to say to the Conservative Government that, in my view, the approach that it is now embarking upon could turn out to be not only disastrous for the people of Canada but could be its own political undoing. Partisan politics is something that that Party understands very well. I ask the Conservative Government to consider those parts of the world that have already put into operation, on a deeply penetrating basis, the kind of approach which the Liberals started in recent years and which we heard in the Throne Speech and in statements earlier this month from the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. It has not been applied in the United States. Mr. Reagan was originally elected on a campaign to reduce the deficit. He went around the United States saying that the top priority should be the reduction of the deficit. When Mr. Reagan came to power, what did he do? Did he reduce the deficit? Not at all. The United States under the Reagan administration has had the most massive increase in the deficit of any period since World War II. The United States has also had the most rapid economic growth, the lowest level of inflation and the best job-creation rate of any industrialized country in recent years. Mr. Reagan preached one thing but practised another when it came to major fiscal policy.

Where have we seen the application of this new Conservative approach, Mr. Speaker? Where have we seen it put into operation? We have seen it put into operation in the United Kingdom by Margaret Thatcher, who made the mistake of not only taking up the rhetoric of Mr. Reagan but the substance. What she has produced in the United Kingdom is an unmitigated disaster. High unemployment persists, social conflict has exacerbated. Instead of bringing a sense of renewal of purpose to the people of Great Britain, Mrs. Thatcher has brought to them a new level of despondency.

I do not have to go to the United Kingdom either, Mr. Speaker. I can go right to the West Coast and the Social Credit Government of Mr. Bennett. We have seen in the Province of British Columbia that Conservative philosophy which the present Prime Minister has advocated in this Throne Speech. That province, once wealthy in opportunities for men and women, in jobs and social services, has gone persistently downhill ever since Mr. Bennett applied the economic philosophy of the so-called new Conservative Government we have with us today. Not only has unemployment worsened but, I say with care and concern, so have relationships among the people of British Columbia. We have never seen such conflict and antagonism within the same community as we now find in British Columbia. Anyone would be pretty naive and foolish to think the people of British Columbia are fundamentally different from Canadians elsewhere. Not at all. When you have a misapplication of an economic philosophy, when you have a government that wants to determine its policies to benefit the quick and the slick, a government that tries to turn recent economic history upside down by putting forward the wrong set of priorities, you create the kind of disharmony and tension that we have in British Columbia. My Party will have nothing to do with that for the country as a whole.

There was a time, Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister himself, it seemed to me, in the election campaign had a view very similar to what I am expressing. One of the speeches he made in the summer of 1984 seemed to indicate, in my view, that he had a proper sense of economic priorities for this nation. He said in Vancouver on August 24, appropriately enough in light of what I have just said, that "clearly there can be no drastic reduction in the deficit until interest rates are lower and the country gets back to work. Massive cuts now would guarantee a recession". Well, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was right when he said that in the summer of 1984, and he should be applying consistently the same thought as a matter of policy in November, 1984, in the House of Commons.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there are very specific things that could be done to implement the general goals which were outlined in the Throne Speech, and with which I happen to agree, where it talked about economic renewal, co-operation and social justice. I also want to suggest that there are proposals the Prime Minister himself made during the election campaign but which we now find notably absent from what he plans to do as Prime Minister.

Let us consider first of all economic renewal. I believe it to be the case that we really want to reduce the deficit at some point. Every sensible politician, every sensible Canadian, indeed every sensible person around the world, wants at some point to have a reduction in his deficit. You would have to be pretty mindless to say, no, we must go on forever with increasing deficits. That is a spurious caricature of the position some people take. No one really takes that position. But if you begin with your priority of economic growth, which is what we begin with, then when you get that, you will have revenue because people have jobs. The Government will receive taxes from both individuals and companies because the people are working and the companies are making profits instead of suffering losses.

Therefore, the priorities should be jobs, jobs, jobs, as the Prime Minister once said. We should be setting targets for unemployment reduction. It seems to me that, as certain other nations have done in recent times, you could set a target of a 2 per cent to 3 per cent reduction per year in unemployment. Why in God's name, when we have 1.5 million Canadians suffering unemployment, do we have to wait, as this Throne Speech says, until next spring? Why can we not set those targets now to give Canadians some help?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: What are some of the things that could be done in terms of economic renewal, Mr. Speaker? Well, as the Prime Minister promised at one point in the campaign, we could have a reduction in interest rates. We have suggested, and I will not go over the details now, a process which, as a matter of fact, certain Conservative circles endorsed, as I found in a learned Journal not long ago, as one approach to interest rate reduction. I will commend the article to the Prime Minister. He could bring down interest rates, and that would make it easier for business to borrow and expand. But I say, not only to the Prime Minister but to the Leader of the Opposition, that if we have a 1 per cent or 2 per cent reduction in interest rates, the carrying charges for our very substantial national debt would be reduced by millions of dollars each year. In addition, we should do something which seems to me should hardly be seen as radical in a modern world. Instead of having a corporate tax policy that simply gives out money to corporations in the rather naive hope, whatever the market circumstances may be, that they will reinvest the money and use it for productive purposes, we should put an end to this largesse. We should say to corporations: Yes, if you perform, if you have a retraining program and affirmative action programs for women, if you expand because you have purchased equipment from another Canadian firm, then yes, then and only then you will get money from the Canadian taxpayer. That is the kind of policy we think should be put in place.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we must establish a youth initiative assistance program, such as the one which was part of our party platform last summer, to help young people, put to good use both their knowledge and skills. Such a program would encourage economic initiatives and create 100,000 new jobs for our young men and women. It would result in major economic spin-offs.

[English]

Next, Mr. Speaker, in terms of economic renewal, we could have some resource upgrading. Surely the time is long overdue in this resource-rich land of ours that we took seriously the task of upgrading into finished form more of the products of our forests, mines and fishery instead of simply dealing, as we have for so long in our history, with the export of the raw product. It is time now to upgrade our resources and get more of those secondary jobs. New investment is required there.

The income of farmers has been going down for a decade. The Conservatives could implement what they promised, which is to remove the tax on fuels for our farmers so that they could do their job more efficiently. Consumers would benefit and so would they as producers.

These proposals, Mr. Speaker, would put the priorities right. We are not wed to all of these ideas, but some of them make excellent economic sense. All of them we would like to see implemented, but I plead with the Government, if it is talking about economic renewal, to forget this recently acquired version of Reaganism. Look at what has happened in the United Kingdom and in British Columbia. Let it implement instead the priorities that the Prime Minister promised to the people of Canada in August when he sought the office of Prime Minister.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move from the question of economic renewal to that of co-operation. The Prime Minister has spoken often about that, and I believe that he believes it very genuinely. I say candidly that one of the pleasant aspects of the personality of the Prime Minister is that he does have a disposition to try to make friends instead of making enemies, and that is good in any nation. It is particularly good in a federal state like Canada. I also say that he is going to discover before long, whether in dealing with the Premiers or with President Reagan, that a warm handshake and a smile are not sufficient. If we want a co-operative attitude to develop in our country, it seems to me that certain basic policies, rather than just attitudes, must be implemented.

Consider taxation. We in my Party talked a lot in the summer campaign about taxation from the point of view of justice and fairness. It is wrong that a pensioner and a working man and woman in this land should be paying plenty of taxes when a rich person does not have to pay a cent. Certainly from the point of view of justice we should have a change which ensures that everyone pays his or her share.

I also want to recast the argument, Mr. Speaker, because it is not simply from the point of view of justice that my Party speaks about the need for tax reform. We believe in co-operation too. We believe that men and women working in the private and public sectors should have a more co-operative attitude toward one another. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister whether he would not have a much greater chance of obtaining that from working people, like IWA members, steelworkers or the many men and women in our country who are not in trade unions at all, if he said that there is going to be tax reform so that upper income Canadians will have to pay their share. Otherwise, other Canadians may ask, "Why should we co-operate? Why should we not get all we can out of the market system? Why should we have a built-in obligation to try to achieve community if those who are most able to pay are not paying a cent?" Therefore, I say to the Prime Minister that it is not simply for justice but also to develop a sense of co-operation that tax fairness is important.

I come to the issue of social justice, which was also addressed in the Throne Speech. Instead of merely giving us an agenda of the unfulfilled commitments of the previous Liberal Government, some of whose items are quite good and some of whose items men and women in all Parties of the House agree with, why did the Government not bring forward something that was really new in the justice field?

With regard to pensions, they are setting up a new consultative process. It makes sense to consult with the provinces about a lot of things. We have had commissions, we have had study groups, and we have had parliamentary groups. It seems to me that in the past decade we have had half the country studying pension reform. Could the Government not have said that it will begin now with some legislation to initiate pension reform?

On the subject of daycare, everyone in the country knows that the majority of women growing up now are going to be working outside the home. There has been a decisive turning point, not only in the history of Canada, but in the history of all developed societies. Some women will indeed work, get their satisfaction and make their contribution in the home, but the majority of women growing up are going to work outside the home. Anyone who has studied this problem knows very well, from either the male or female perspective, that if we are concerned about the development of children, something must be done quickly about daycare facilities. Why do we have to set up a committee of the House, as is proposed in the Throne Speech, to look into the idea of daycare? Would it not have made more sense to set up the committee on the basis that the principle of daycare is now assumed, that we are going to have it in Canada, and have that committee report back, perhaps in three months, about the methods of raising revenue in our federal system to make it a real possibility? At the same time we should introduce a minimum tax on all those who are earning more than $50,000 a year, something which we have proposed. From that tax alone more than $400 million in additional revenue would be raised. That money is more than adequate for the initial downpayment which has been advocated by the Canadian Daycare Advocacy Association to give a start to daycare. That is what we could do with it.

I now turn to another area of social justice, that is, the equality principle for women. Surely, Mr. Speaker, if there was an aspect of the campaign which we all lived through in the summer of 1984 which was not simply symbolic but a change of fundamental importance to the history of our land, it was the presence of women in the campaign. They were not all necessarily candidates. My Party had a lot of women, but I say frankly that we did not have a sufficient number of them in terms of what we would like in the future. I am not talking simply about the level of candidate participation. I am talking about women in our society, whether in Montreal, British Columbia, Ontario or on the Prairies. Let us put the issue of the equality of women on the political agenda of our country where it belongs.

As I read the Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, and I read it with care, I was more than disturbed, I was deeply disappointed, because in reading that wording I found that when one got beyond the rhetoric to a consideration of the specifics, there was in fact a regression in the commitment made to women. There was a move backwards rather than forwards. I want to remind the Prime Minister of what he said in the election on the issue of fundamental importance to us, the issue of equality between the sexes. He said this with reference to the principle of equal pay for work of equal value:

● (1710)

Of course, I will go further. I will make sure that this equality principle is adhered to by all those who are eager to do business with the federal government.

[English]

He said that on August 15 during the NAC debate in the election campaign. That was an unequivocal commitment to ensure that companies doing business with the Government of Canada would need to have in operation the principle of equal pay for work of equal value.

On the other important issue affecting Canadian women, that of affirmative action, in March of last year the Prime Minister said the following, which was repeated significantly in May at the lunches with leaders in Toronto:

When seeking Government business, companies will be required to detail their action plans, timetables and programs for attracting, training and advancing women within their operations. This, in my view, is a legitimate and fair requirement.

I say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister that if it was appropriate to make commitments in the summer about the principle of equal pay for work of equal value, if it was appropriate to insist on behalf of Canadian women that private companies produce affirmative action programs during an election campaign, it ought to have been in the Throne Speech which we had this week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to conclude with the following words: Canadians do want change, they do want conciliation, they do want economic renewal and co-operation, all of which values are to be found in the Throne Speech. There are things which can be done and there are things which should be done. It is clear, in my view, that the Liberal Party does not really know what it wants. It said one thing in July, another thing in August, and another thing in the House of Commons. However, something is clear, and that is, that we in the New Democratic Party will maintain consistent with what we promised. When a laid-off worker in the Yukon calls, we will be listening. When a woman telephone worker in Newfoundland complains about sexual discrimination, we will be with her. The next time a farmer in Saskatchewan must take action to defend his or her family farm against a bank, we will be one their side. In short, in the summer of 1984 the New Democratic Party campaigned day in and day out for the ordinary person of this country, and I pledge that the same Party will work day in and day out in the House of Commons for the same people. Thank you very much.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) wish to move a subamendment?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the amendment be amended by adding the following words:

"and specifically, that your government has failed, 1. to set jobs as its top and immediate priority; and to set targets and outline specific new programs to put Canadians back to work; 2. to reform the tax system to ensure wealthy Canadians pay their fair share of taxes and that corporations use their tax breaks to create more jobs; and, 3. to provide immediate measures to bring about equality for women in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I have examined the subamendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and find it proper.

At this point we are continuing debate on the subamendment moved by the Hon. Member for Oshawa.

On motion of Mrs. Browes the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn the House adjourned at 5.14 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ONTARIO AND MANITOBA COURTS AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to indicate before we proceed with this legislation that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is just coming from Cabinet where we have been discussing matters; he will be here in a moment. I believe he is coming in now, so I guess we can get on with the business.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-3, an Act to amend various Acts as a consequence of the reconstitution of the courts in Ontario and Manitoba, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is very good of you to be so patient and understanding at such an early stage in what I am sure will be your most eminent career as Speaker.

The legislation before us is necessary because of initiatives taken by two provinces, Ontario and Manitoba. It has to do with the reorganization of the courts in those two provinces. In putting forward this legislation, we are responding to requests from those two provinces to bring our laws into conformity with their legislation.

In the case of Ontario, they are reconstituting the County and District Courts into a single District Court of Ontario. In the case of Manitoba, this reflects the merger of the County Courts in Manitoba with the Court of Queen's Bench which was effective on July 1, 1984.

These amendments, as anybody who has read the Bill will agree, are largely technical in nature. Their purpose is to delete obsolete references in federal legislation to courts and judicial officers in those two provinces. The amendments, you will also note, are contained in the schedule to the Bill. With respect to Ontario, they have a new Courts of Justice Act there, as I say, which provides for a province-wide District Court. There are two amendments that might require a little further explanation.

There is an amendment to Section 34 of the Judges Act which preserves the present requirement that judges reside within the county or district to which they are appointed or assigned, subject to a discretion in the Governor-in-Council to permit residence elsewhere of the judges of the District Court. It is preferable for a judge to reside within his own county or district.

I see the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is back in the House. It is a bit of a surprise to see him back here. Nevertheless, I welcome him back. I note with some interest that he is not the justice critic. The justice critic is a colleague of his from the lower mainland. I hope the lower mainland will not be any lower than it was in the last Parliament.

Mr. Deans: Unlike the Tories, we wanted someone who knew what they were talking about.

Mr. Crosbie: I am glad to see that he has been re-elevated to the justice level after his experience with the issue of prostitution.

Mr. Deans: Tell us about the economic statement tonight.

Mr. Crosbie: I would sooner discuss what I am discussing because this is what I am supposed to discuss. I am a member of the silent service. I am going to keep strictly within my own area of jurisdiction.

This is a matter of tremendous national importance. It is important that a judge reside in his own county or district. Please don't try to divert me.

Another very significant part of this legislation is that we are amending the Railway Act because the Province of Ontario has abolished the office of clerk of the peace and has requested the transfer of the record-keeping functions presently exercised by that officer under the Railway Act to the office of the Crown Attorney. If you understand that, you are far ahead of me.

With respect to Manitoba, all references to the former County Courts are deleted and now the references are to the Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba. One thing that might be noted as well in the amendments is the repeal of paragraph 21(5)(d) of the Judges Act which presently prohibits the payment of travelling allowances to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench for attendance at the City of Winnipeg. Since these courts have merged, a number of judges are required to reside in judicial centres other than Winnipeg, so we are repealing that provision to permit the payment of validly incurred travelling expenses by judges of the court for their attendance at the capital.

All of these amendments are deemed to have come into effect in Manitoba on July 1, 1984. This will permit the filing of all legal documents and so on without any confusion in the court process. That is the purpose of this Bill.

I would like on this first occasion on which I am speaking to the House as Minister of Justice to make a few general points as to the way I hope to approach the responsibilities of this office.

Mr. Deans: Did you clear this with Erik?

Mr. Crosbie: I clear everything I do with Erik. However, I am not saying what Erik that is. I have an Erik in my office. As a matter of fact, the Hon. House Leader for the New Democratic Party often gives me an earache.

Mr. Deans: The ache you give me isn't in my ear.

• (1110)

Mr. Crosbie: I am not going to comment on what happens to other parts of the gentleman's anatomy. They are all unmentionable.

This is my first occasion to address the House as Minister of Justice. I want all Hon. Members to know that I am following in a tremendous tradition. Sir John A. Macdonald was our first Minister of Justice. I do not say this to make any other Members of the House nervous; it just happens to be a fact that Sir John A. Macdonald was the first Minister of Justice of this country. The Hon. House Leader for the NDP would be interested in the fact that one of that Minister's first accomplishments was legalizing trade unions in the country. He brought in the legislation that made it possible for trade unions to function in this country.

We are a caring Party. We are a Party that is responsible for the legitimization of the entire trade union movement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: One hundred years before the poor House Leader for the NDP appeared on the scene, we legalized trade unions in this country. He would not be here today if we had not done so.

Mr. Deans: I beg your pardon? What has that to do with anything?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, my predecessor, Sir John A.—I am Sir John C., he was Sir John A.—was responsible as well for the formation of the Northwest Mounted Police. These were two of his accomplishments while he was Minister of Justice.

It was a Conservative Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson, who, from 1885 to 1892, codified the Canadian criminal law. The Criminal Code was brought in under his tenure as Minister of Justice. Of course, he became Prime Minister as well if only for a few hours or a few days.

It was a Conservative Minister of Justice, Davie Fulton, who of course is still a distinguished member of the Canadian community living in British Columbia, who brought in the first Bill of Rights for Canada in 1960. It was a Conservative Minister of Justice, Senator Jacques Flynn, a member of the other House, who initiated the criminal law review in 1979. The Hon. House Leader of the NDP will be interested in the fact that that was the first fundamental review of the Criminal Code undertaken since the Criminal Code came into effect in 1893. That review is still under way. The Law Reform Commission of Canada has had much to do with the Criminal Code review that is under way and with the changes that were introduced in the House some months ago. Many of these changes will be reintroduced.

If it is permissible, Mr. Speaker, I might just outline some of the things to which I hope the House will attend while I am Minister of Justice over the period of the next three or four years.

Mr. Waddell: Conservative Ministers of Justice also hanged Louis Riel.

Mr. Crosbie: I knew someone from the other side would bring that up. I believe this year is the 100th anniversary of that sad occasion.

Shortly, Mr. Speaker, I will be introducing some changes to the Criminal Code which I hope the House will find possible to pass quickly. These will be non-controversial changes and many of them will be procedural changes to the Criminal Code which are long overdue.

After the Christmas break, we will be introducing other amendments to the Criminal Code in more controversial areas. For example, the area of soliciting and the problem of prostitution will have to be dealt with by legislation brought before this House within the next few months. We are now waiting for the report of the committee of Mr. Paul Fraser which was appointed some months ago to investigate and report in connection with the fields of prostitution and pornography.

We have received a report from Professor Badgley on child abuse which is another area of concern, of course, to Canadians. If any Member would like a copy of that 1,300-page report, we can supply that Member with a copy. We will have to deal with that area.

The area of hate propaganda will be dealt with and those amendments will come after Christmas as well. Provisions or new suggestions with respect to impaired and drunken driving will be introduced to the House. These are all issues that will hopefully be dealt with by Hon. Members of this House in the next six months, and I hope that we will make progress during the next year. Other amendments to the Criminal Code will be brought in after that. Hopefully, if the plan works, we will have a completely revised Criminal Code in place in Canada at the end of the next three or four years. This will require much attention and work from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

In addition to these areas, as Minister of Justice I hope to be introducing to the House, within the next several months, suggested amendments to the Divorce Act. Particular attention will be given to improving the law with respect to the enforcement of maintenance orders. This will ensure that people who are awarded maintenance, and who badly need to be supported, can receive that support in a more effective manner, or can enforce the orders for maintenance and support that they obtain. We also hope to improve the mediation process in connection with the whole area of divorce. In addition to the legislation in that area, I hope to keep the NDP critic busy.

We will be bringing in legislation immediately after Christmas which will deal with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which was enacted as part of our Constitution in 1982. That legislation will amend many of the statutes of Canada because of inconsistencies with the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In addition, there are areas of great importance in which it is not clear whether particular provisions of the present Canadian legal system are in violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I will be asking the House to consider those areas and to give advice on areas of great difficulty and subtlety. It should be an extremely interesting and important subject of discussion in committee, as well as in the House. As I have said, there will be legislation introduced in the House as soon as possible after the Christmas break.

I am also charged with the responsibility of suggesting to the Government policies and positions with respect to the issue of the constitutional conference, which must be held by April 17 of next year, on aboriginal issues. I am currently involved in becoming properly briefed and understanding what the issues are, in order to prepare for that conference. My colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) and myself have already met. As well, we will be meeting with the provinces and representatives of aboriginal groups to prepare for that most important constitutional conference.

How do I want to approach the justice area? As I see it, it is largely an area which is non-partisan. That is the way in which I intend to approach it. In other words, if anyone has suggestions, no matter who they might be—they might even be a member of the NDP, not to say the Liberal Party—the suggestions will be treated on their merits. Of course, I would be surprised if their suggestions have any merits, but it will all be dealt with in a non-partisan manner. If there are any suggestions from the Conservative caucus, of course, they will be treated in the same manner.

Seriously speaking, I view most of this area as being one which is not very partisan, and I would want to approach it in that sense. I would be amenable to changes which are introduced if they appear to be sensible and reasonable. Nothing could be more sensible and reasonable than that. I am prepared to listen to critics of both the NDP and Liberal Parties, and if their suggestions are worth-while, I would certainly be prepared to make changes in accordance therewith. I am interested in seeing the law reformed and changed, but only after it has been given sufficient thought.

I do not want to rush at things or endanger individual rights because there is a certain evil present in society. I do not want to change the law too rapidly in order to try to eradicate that particular anti-social behaviour and in so doing endanger everyone's individual rights. We must be extremely careful of what we do in the areas of pornography, child abuse, hate propaganda, soliciting and the like, in order to ensure that we take a balanced approach and act with concern and compassion, that we do not panic in our desire to improve society and to do away with the social evil. I want to be careful in this regard as I am a believer, Mr. Speaker, in individual rights, particularly in these areas.

I will be asking the House of Commons standing committee for its views and opinions on matters which go before it or on matters to which it might be referred.

With respect to judges, Mr. Speaker, I will be introducing amendments to the Judges Act as well later on. I am now considering the question of salaries and the emoluments of judges. There was a report made by Mr. Otto Lang in committee about a year and a half ago, I believe, with respect to statutory provisions concerning compensation for judges and what should be done. No action was taken in connection with that report. Therefore, the issue of compensation for our judges who are appointed by the Government of Canada to the provincial Superior Courts, District and County Courts, as well as our own Federal Court, is a matter which must be dealt with by the House in the next few months as well.

I have to act, Mr. Speaker, as spokesman for our judges who are not in the position to act publicly, in any event, with respect to their own interests and concerns. They are appointed to the bench and cannot involve themselves in public debate or controversy. The position of the Minister of Justice, therefore, is that he must act as their representative and I intend to do so. If I feel that their needs are clear and that certain actions should be taken which are fair and equitable, even if they might be controversial and not popular with the public, I will put forward their case and ask the House to be sympathetic in its decision as to what should be done in connection with salaries and other provisions relating to the judges of this country, who have an extremely difficult task, Mr. Speaker, a task which has become of tremendously increased significance since we adopted the Constitution in 1982 and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Our judges have been given by the people of this country, or their representatives, tremendous powers to decide whether legislation is valid or invalid, whether or not it is in order and whether or not it corresponds with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We need, therefore, a first-class bench. We need first-class men and women appointed to the judiciary of this country who will act as our judges, and the events of the last several years have given that need even greater importance.

With respect to the appointment of judges, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am interested in appointing nothing but first-class, qualified men and women as judges across this country. Everyone will be considered no matter what their beliefs might be. I intend to consult the provincial Attorneys General during the process of appointment of judges. They will not be ignored, as in some cases they were in the past. There will be a definite process of consultation with the provincial Attorneys General and Ministers of Justice before judicial appointments are made. There will be consultation, of course, with the Chief Justices of the courts and other colleagues, as well as Hon. Members of this House, in order to have their views as to people they think should be considered for judicial appointment. We will be happy to receive any suggestions, which we will look into and ensure that consideration is given.

Of course, we will continue the practice of referring those under consideration for judicial appointment to a committee of the Canadian Bar Association for review and evaluation. To date we have not made any judicial appointments but there will be some coming up in the immediate future, including an appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada which, of course, is very important.

Mr. Justice Ritchie has had to retire due to ill health. He would have retired by next June in any event, having reached the statutory age of 75, but because of the state of his health he has retired a few months earlier. I would like to congratulate him on his long judicial career in the Supreme Court of Canada. He was appointed by Prime Minister Diefenbaker and his Government in, I think, 1959 and has had a most distinguished judicial career. I well remember him as the federal counsel to the royal commission which investigated the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada. I hope that Mr. Justice Ritchie's health will improve as he retires from the bench, and that he will have a long and healthy retirement having performed a great service to his fellow Canadians in his position on the Supreme Court of Canada in recent years.

In ending these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure Members of the House that I am fully cognizant of the responsibility imposed on us to ensure the proper functioning of the judicial system. The courts are now the forum in which we are trying to define our contemporary social goals. They are there to arbitrate conflicting points of view which will be put forward on fundamental issues involving everyone in this country. They have a very difficult task and I will do what I can to assist them in the time that I am here as Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada. We are stressing co-operation with the provinces and I intend to see that there is co-operation and consultation with the provinces. I believe that the unpleasant situation which arose in Saskatchewan in recent years concerning the number of judges is about to be terminated. It should be resolved within the next several weeks, I am glad to say.

I just wanted to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to outline some of the matters that will be coming before Members of the House in the justice area and the way that I will approach my task, non-partisan, fair and objective as ever. As any of the Members who have been here before will know, I always try to act objectively and in a non-partisan manner. I am sorry to see there is only a rump left on the other side who, of course, can testify to that.

Mr. Waddell: Short-term pain for long-term gain.

Mr. Crosbie: When I see that short-term rump opposite me, 40 on the left and 30 on the right, I must say it was much easier in this House when I was on the other side because I did not have to look at the NDP. We could ignore the fact that they were there. Now I am struck with the brutal reality of having to face them every day.

Mr. Waddell: It beats Joey Smallwood.

Mr. Crosbie: It is certainly a daunting task to see the spurious indignation gather on their brows as they rise to ask a question. But I have no doubt that our colleagues opposite in the Liberal ranks will quickly develop the same amount of spurious indignation and vainglorious air that the NDP have. But they will keep us on our toes.

I want to congratulate the former Solicitor General on his new position as justice critic. The hon. gentleman, who is now the financial critic for the Opposition, is not here today, but it was just several months ago that he became Minister of Justice. Early in June he was appointed by the now Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) as Minister of Justice. As I said at his roast a week or two ago, lo and behold, within three months justice had triumphed! Now he is the finance critic and I am the Minister of Justice. This is the reward you get for all your hard work, Mr. Speaker!

So now, justice having triumphed, we are here and I look forward in the next three or four years to the Opposition keeping us on our toes. The more effective they can be, the better it will be for us. I invite them to ask me the toughest, meanest, dirtiest kinds of questions they can, and I will respond in my usual statesman-like fashion. I move second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in taking the floor for the first time as justice critic I would like to respond to the warm good wishes of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and extend my own warm good wishes to him. I know he does not have the job that he wanted. At least, I understand that he does not have the job that he wanted. However, I gathered from his exposé of his priorities that he is moving forward into what I have certainly always considered a job of vital importance to Canada and to all Canadians.

I would like to address for a moment the menu that he laid out of his plans for the coming parliamentary session. I look forward to dealing with all the issues which he raised. I must express disappointment that some of them will be delayed even as long as to the beginning of next year, as he indicated. For example, the Minister talked about righteous indignation from this side. However, it actually happened that there was righteous indignation from the other side when we indicated that the problems of street prostitution and pornography would be referred to the Fraser Commission. Tories asked why it should be referred to a commission when we all know what should be done, or at least the Conservatives know what should be done. Wherever I went during the election campaign I heard the Tory solution for dealing with street prostitution. Now I learn from the Minister, in his first intervention in the House, that they are waiting for the Fraser Commission which was set up by the former Government to deal with street prostitution. That is unbelievable. I wonder what the Tories from the West Coast will be telling their constituents has led the Government to lose the sense of purpose which it had to deal with that subject.

I hope the Minister will address that issue sooner. I agree with the public protest on the subject. I think it is a subject which does need action and I am disappointed, as I know all of the supporters of the Government must be, that the new Government will be waiting for the Fraser Commission to report.

With regard to the other aspect, the subject of pornography, it has become even more urgent as a result of the decision last week, on which the Minister of Justice must surely have been briefed by his officials. Stores in the Province of Ontario which were formerly under municipal regulation as to the exposing of sexually explicit material are now no longer subject to regulations. Sexually explicit material in Ontario can again be put lawfully within reach and view of the entire community, including children and the areas of public schools.

This was an issue in which my own municipality and the other municipalities in my region had acted by putting forward by-laws which worked well but which have now been found to be invalid. So the pornography issue, even more than the prostitution issue, is an urgent issue for action. This Government, with the tremendous mandate it has, is waiting for the Fraser Commission to report on subjects about which they knew all the answers during the election. Now we find we must wait.

In his remarks the Minister spoke about bringing forward the divorce legislation and bringing forward some parts of the omnibus Criminal Code which had been brought forward by Mr. MacGuigan when he was Minister of Justice. The Minister spoke on a number of other subjects and I look forward to having them brought forward quickly. I would like to indicate that my menu will be a responsive one, not a list of things that we will be introducing. Being in the Opposition our role is to respond. I want to tell the Minister that we will not copy the practice of the former Opposition of opposing everything for the sake of opposing it.

We would do what my leader . . . The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said yesterday that we in the opposition are prepared to approve and help expedite any proposed legislation we can agree with, if it is good legislation. I can assure the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) that he will have my full co-operation and that of my Party. I may say that the same policy will apply to the legislation before the House today.

[English]

Bill C-3 is a small piece of the former legislation, Bill C-55. I do not know why the Minister has not addressed judicial salaries in this legislation. I do not know why he has left out some of the other pieces which were contained in Bill C-55. As he indicated, the judicial salary issue is a very important one on which he will have received representations, as I have, from the Canadian Bar Association. He will have read the report of a former Minister of Justice, Otto Lang, on that subject. If the Minister wants to bring matters forward even more quickly than he indicated, he will not find this Opposition, like the former Opposition, wanting to force the House into long periods of eventually meaningless debate before anything could get past the fabulous present Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen).

I want to deal with one other subject on the Minister's menu, and that is his offer to provide the Attorneys General of the provinces with full consultation about the appointment of federal judges. I think that is a sensible policy. I know it was the purpose of the former Government and former Ministers of Justice always to consult with Attorneys General about appointments being made in the provinces, or to seek to do so. However, I do not think that should be a one-way street. Justice, in one aspect and in another, is a shared area of jurisdiction. The Attorneys General of the provinces have their responsibilities and the Attorney General of Canada and the Minister of Justice has his. I believe that if full consultation is to take place with the provincial governments with regard to federal appointments, there should also be consultation by the provincial governments with the federal Minister with regard to appointments which they propose to make within the system of justice.

I have discussed that with some provincial Attorneys General and found total unwillingness to have any form of consultation at all about the appointments within their areas of jurisdiction. Now we have a Government with the same political colour as the governments in most of the provinces of our country. Perhaps that will assist the present Minister in a proper kind of co-operative relationship. If consultation is to take place with the provinces on federal appointments, I do not see any reason why, in the public interest and in the interest of an effective system of justice, there should not be consultation by provincial Attorneys General about appointments within their responsibility with the federal Minister. In the interests of an effective federal system the Minister of Justice should be willing to encourage the provinces to come forward and to have that type of consultation.

Before turning briefly to the Bill I would also like to recognize the tremendous contribution to Canada of Mr. Justice Ritchie who, in this past week, has retired because of ill health nearly a year before the expiration of his term. He is a brilliant man from a very distinguished family who has done a tremendous job in that court. On behalf of my Party I also want to send him our good wishes that the decision he has made to withdraw from the heavy responsibility of being a Supreme Court judge will assist him in his recovery and that he will indeed enjoy many years of happy and productive retirement.

I had the good fortune to have Ken McFarlane as an excutive assistant for a few months. He is an individual who worked as Mr. Justice Ritchies' law clerk. I could see, from Ken's approach to the law, the type of integrity, vigour, discipline and endless hours of work that Mr. Justice Ritchie applied to the Public Service on the highest bench in our land. Again, I wish him a speedy recovery and many years of good health.

Starting with this Bill, as I have indicated, I want to begin the practice that I hope to be able to follow of not objecting just for the sake of objecting. One great reason to commend this Bill is that in respect of virtually all of its provisions it is identical to good Liberal legislation which was already on the Order Paper when the election was called.

I have nothing further to say about it except that I look forward to briefs being submitted before the committee by interested groups. I close as I began by wishing the Minister well but not too well in his term as Minister of Justice.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I too commence my remarks today by congratulating the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) on his appointment to that very important portfolio. I think all Members of the House are aware of the unbridled enthusiasm with which he has approached that important responsibility so far. We will be looking with great interest at the initiatives he will be taking in the near future as outlined in the Speech from the Throne as well as in the remarks he has made today.

I was somewhat surprised that the Minister was able to be as expansive as he was on a Bill which I had initially regarded as being somewhat technical in nature. Of course, given the Minister's history, I suppose that is not particularly surprising.

Of course, I should also thank the Minister because he honoured my constituents and I with his presence in Burnaby on a number of occasions. In fact, prior to 1978 he came to Burnaby and was invited to support the local candidate. At that time I won very narrowly. In 1980 he was invited back twice. Following that, the majority doubled. I want to particularly thank the Minister on this occasion because in the last election it was decided that the heavy hitter would be brought in. When the heavy hitter, the present Minister of Justice, was brought in on several occasions to do battle with the forces of darkness in Burnaby, of course the majority tripled. Therefore I want to extend a cordial invitation to the Minister of Justice to visit Burnaby on many, many occasions in the future in order that that trend might continue.

Mr. Crosbie: They will come to their senses.

Mr. Robinson: I also want to congratulate the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) on his appointment as spokesperson for the Liberal Party on justice. I certainly hope that the sensitivity to civil liberties which he displayed so clearly in his term as Solicitor General will continue in his new capacity as critic of the Ministry of Justice.

While I will not go on at great length with respect to this particular Bill, I believe that the Minister might want to enlighten us about subsection (3), subsection (a) and subsection (ii). We can wait for that enlightenment in due course.

I look forward to co-operating with the Government when it introduces good legislation on those rare occasions; and of course, on behalf of my caucus and joined by my caucus colleagues, to oppose vigorously legislation which is bad.

The Minister stated that there is an appointment forthcoming to the Supreme Court of Canada. I join with the Minister and the Hon. Member for York Centre in wishing Mr. Justice Ritchie well in the future. He has made an outstanding contribution to justice in this country. I urge the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to very seriously consider sending an early signal of the Government's recognition of the importance of the equality of women in this country by the appointment of a second woman to the Supreme Court of Canada. I certainly hope that the Minister and the Prime Minister will seriously consider the appointment of one of the outstanding women who are active in the judiciary and law in the Maritimes.

At the same time I believe we must seriously consider the method of appointment. We must look very seriously at ways of reforming the method of judicial appointment in this country, such as the possibility of involving Parliament. The Prime Minister has indicated on a number of occasions that he believes it is important that Parliament play a role in the nomination of important positions in our society, particularly at a time when the Charter of Rights involves some very significant, social and indeed economic questions. I believe it is appropriate that the mechanism for the appointment of judges be re-examined.

I note with interest that the old Liberal patronage and appointment of Crown agents appears to be alive and well. The Minister of Justice has already issued an early edict which states that the Liberals are to be disbanded and that he will be appointing his Tory cronies to take their place. It is interesting to note that a Government that has expressed its outcry about patronage is already placing its friends in those little plum positions right across the country.

There will be many opportunities in the course of this Parliament to speak at greater length about some of the important questions of legislation that the Minister has addressed, but I want to indicate at this time that we certainly share the Minister's commitment to very fundamental change in the area of divorce law. We hope that this will be an early initiative. We will also look at the whole question of enforcement of maintenance orders.

In addition, the Criminal Code must be overhauled. There are many areas in which this change is long overdue. I certainly pledge my co-operation and that of my Party in moving toward progressive changes to the Criminal Code. The community has very serious concerns about other issues on which the Minister has indicated the Government will be taking action, such as the question of soliciting and pornography. I would caution the Minister to proceed with great care, particularly in the area of soliciting, because I believe we must be aware of the fact that a simplistic knee-jerk response by amending the Criminal Code and in many cases further victimizing women who are already victims would be a most unwise policy. We must look very carefully at the causes of prostitution, whether they be economic or social, while also recognizing the interest of the community in having a safe environment in which people are not harassed and in which women are not harassed by potential clients.

It is also important for the Government to examine and implement the important recommendations of the Canadian Human Rights Commission for changes to human rights legislation. These recommendations have sat idle for far too long. Year after year the Liberal Government refused to listen to the recommendations of the Canadian Human Rights Commission to expand protection of minorities in this country to include sexual orientation and political belief, for example, as prohibited grounds of discrimination. I hope this Government will be prepared to move where the previous Government stood silent.

Reference has also been made to the Badgley Commission. I was certainly disappointed to note the silence in the Speech from the Throne on the very important recommendations of that commission. The commission documented, in effect, a national crisis—the serious and widespread problem of sexual abuse of children. Although there was no reference to that question in the Speech from the Throne, I hope the Government would be prepared to move very early, for example, in establishing the office of Commissioner reporting directly to the Prime Minister, as was recommended by the Badgley Commission.

As well, we have seen evidence of another great inequity in our law. It was clearly documented in the courts of Toronto over the last few days and weeks. I am referring to the inequity in Canada's laws with respect to abortion. Certainly I believe it is essential to recognize that the evidence produced in the courtroom in Toronto, evidence indicating that many Canadian women are denied access to safe therapeutic abortions, particularly poor women and women in rural areas, cries out for response by this Parliament. We must not only look at a repeal of those provisions of the Criminal Code dealing with abortion and recognize that this is fundamentally a decision which must be made by a woman in consultation with her doctor. At the same time we must look at far greater resources for prevention, resources in the areas of sex education, birth control and further research on safe and effective birth control methods.

Reference has been made to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I remind Hon. Members of the House that this Charter was fought by Members of the Tory caucus. It contains an override provision which can effectively nullify the most basic rights contained in that Charter. At the time that Section 15 on equality rights comes into effect, certainly we will be seeking the assurance of the Government that it will in fact bring all federal legislation, as well as other areas within federal jurisdiction, into conformity with those provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

On the legislation before the House, certainly we support the Bill. I note that the enlightened administration in the Province of Manitoba is moving forward to consolidate the courts. I hope the Government will be prepared to take its future direction on the administration of justice from that government, which has certainly made a number of very progressive changes in the field of judicial reform and law reform.

We support this Bill. I certainly look forward to co-operating with the Government in areas where legislative change is overdue and to vigorously resisting the moves of the dinosaur wing in the Conservative Party which would take legislative change and law reform backward in the country.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions after the first three speakers today. However, it can be done by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stackhouse: In view of there being in excess of 60,000 abortions per year, why does the Hon. Member think the present law provides an inadequate opportunity to the women of Canada seeking abortions?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I invite the Hon. Member to review the evidence presented to the court in Toronto and to review the report of the Badgley Commission which contained very clear and eloquent evidence and documentation of the fact that access to safe therapeutic abortion is not a reality for thousands of Canadian women. I would be pleased to provide that material to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to participate in this debate until the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) mentioned dinosaurs. It happens that dinosaurs are in my riding. There are hundreds of them under the hills there. They are there because they were unable to adjust to changing conditions. I suggest that will be the same case with the New Democratic Party. It refuses to adjust to changing conditions. The Progressive Conservative Party is out to change things in the country.

I will always be on the side of the unborn child. I do not think anyone has the right to take the life of an unborn child or a born child.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mr. Crosbie, seconded by Mr. Fraser, moves that Bill C-3, an Act to amend various Acts as a consequence of the reconstitution of the courts in Ontario and Manitoba, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

SPORTS POOL AND LOTO CANADA WINDING-UP ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-2, an Act respecting the winding up of the Canada Sports Pool Corporation and Loto Canada Incorporated, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first I want to take the opportunity to congratulate you in assuming the high office which you have taken on behalf of all of us in the House of Commons.

The legislation before us today marks the culmination of a four-year debate on whether the federal Government ought to have re-entered the lotteries field and the end to the very controversial Canada Sports Pool Corporation. After consideration of the debate, first on the proposal and then on the enactment of the federal sports pool lottery, we as a government have concluded that sole jurisdiction for lotteries must be restored to the provinces. It is for that reason the Bill is before us today.

As Hon. Members of the House will know, the purpose of this Bill is to wind up the previous government's Loto Canada and Canada Sports Pool Corporation, making good our Party's long-standing policy to keep the federal Government out of the lottery or gaming business.

On the surface of it, the Bill would appear to be very straightforward and uncontentious, compared with other legislative initiatives announced in the Speech from the Throne by Her Excellency the Governor General on Monday. This particular legislation may be viewed by some as a rather mundane initiative, an initiative which may lead observers to ask why it has received such early and prompt attention by the new Government. I want to explain that today.

There are good reasons for the Government giving the Bill an early priority. First, by introducing the Bill we are making good on a long-standing belief that the federal Government has no business in the gaming and lottery field. Hence, by introducing this Bill early in the life of the new Parliament, we are demonstrating to the House and to Canadians that the Government is committed to keeping its word on long-standing policy positions and campaign commitments. If that is not patently obvious after hearing the Speech from the Throne, it will become obvious as the House begins to consider this and other pieces of legislation brought before it in the weeks and months ahead.

Second, and possibly more important than the first reason, is the fact that this Bill stands as a symbol. As all Hon. Members of the House will know, federal involvement in the lottery field has been and continues to be a major irritant in the area of federal-provincial relations. The manner of linking the sports pool proposal funding to the 1988 Winter Olympics in Calgary, the use of an Order in Council to alter the terms of legislation passed by this House and the enormous administrative problems of the corporation since it was formed have convinced us further that, quite apart from the issue of jurisdiction, the Canada Sports Pool Corporation must be brought to an end.

I want to say in terms of the negotiations with the provinces, reflecting specifically on the issue of the Calgary Olympics to be held in 1988—and I am sure all Members join with me in wishing the organizers, the City of Calgary, and the residents of Alberta well in the preparations for the Olympics—that my colleague the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) will be entering this debate later today to explain that position as well. Over the course of the previous government's life, countless measures of shared responsibility have been thrust on to the national agenda. In fact, it almost became one of the watchwords day by day in the House—that is, the difficulties, the controversies, or the confrontation that existed between the former government and the various provincial governments.

These measures have run the range from essentially housekeeping and administrative matters to those of split jurisdiction. That has gone all the way from minor legislation to the manner in which the patriation of our Constitution took place. While our recent history of federal-provincial negotiations has touched a wide range of unrelated issues, those negotiations have at the same time been characterized by one common denominator. That denominator we want to remove. Almost without exception these relationships have too often been acrimonious, confrontational and divisive. Through that process, Canadians have not been well served.

During the recent election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and all members of our Party made a commitment to the people of Canada that, if elected, we would endeavour to embark upon a new era of federal-provincial relations. This new approach will be based on a solid foundation of trust, respect and understanding and will, of necessity, be born of the realization that our political system, its institutions, this very House of Commons, our geography, diversity and history, have all conspired to create a climate in which interdependence between the federal and provincial governments is a simple fact of our political life. Yet sadly, more often than not this fact has not been recognized.

In Monday's Speech from the Throne, repeated references were made to the Government's firm conviction that it is time to renew our relations with the provinces. It is time to reconcile long-standing differences. It is time to work together in a genuine atmosphere of co-operation, trust, and respect. It is time, quite simply, for a fresh start. This legislation, as I said earlier, became a symbol of that irritation between the provinces and the federal Government. That is why it has received such early priority from our Government.

That being the case and the reason for the legislation, let us turn to the specifics of this legislation which, if Members have read Bill C-2, they will see is very brief and straightforward. I would like to take a short look at the history of the sports pool and Loto Canada which, with the passage of this legislation, will become history.

As all Members are aware, the federal Government created Loto Canada for the purpose of raising money to help defray the cost of the 1976 Montreal Olympics. I remember as a new Member in 1972 that the first parliamentary committee I served on was the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. As a new Member, I did not know what miscellaneous estimates was all about. I found very quickly that the first piece of legislation put before us was the Loto Canada Bill. That was the coin legislation which allowed the Government to strike specific coins to help defray the cost of the Montreal Olympics.

At that time we had various representatives come before the committee. When we asked them how this legislation would help defray costs, we were always assured that there would be no overrun, that there would be no deficit. The then Mayor of the City of Montreal appeared before the committee and made the famous statement about certain abilities that he thought he would have. Of course, none of us has yet seen that happen. We will leave that also to the matter of history.

The point was made that the Loto Canada Bill should be put into place for a period of time and for a specific purpose. The period of time was to help defray the costs from Montreal. That was its specific purpose. It was not to be an opportunity for the federal Government suddenly to see a voluntary tax approach taken beyond the Olympic requirement or objective. History has proven since then that once the federal Government saw that it had an opportunity to get that kind of money, it wanted to stay in that field.

I recall debating with the then Postmaster General whether that was really the way to go. I asked whether we should not be straightforward with the Canadian people and say that the Olympic cause, the Olympic movement, the hosting of the Olympics, was important for all Canadians, whether it was in Montreal in 1976 or in Calgary in 1988, and tell Canadians "This is our cost. This is what we are going to put before the Canadian people. We are going to raise the money by a legitimate means because it is for a legitimate purpose, rather then go into the whole matter of lotteries". We know the history.

It was also said at that time that the Olympics would be self-financing. I will not go through that history. All of us are aware of it. What is important is that in 1979 my colleague who has been elevated to the position of joining you, Mr. Speaker, and others in the Chair, the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski), had responsibilities in the Government for Loto Canada and he acted decisively with the intention of getting the federal Government out of the lottery field. He took the guideline of proper federal-provincial relations, met with the provinces and made a commitment on behalf of the Government. The commitment was straightforward: the federal Government would get out of the lottery field. The provinces, having exclusive operational rights within that field would in reciprocity give the federal Government for its purposes, primarily for fitness and amateur sport, a sum of money, then established at an amount of $25 million annualized, to be increased through a calculation based on the inflation rate. That money would come to the federal Government coffers for the specific purpose of fitness and amateur sport. The federal Government would be getting out of that field.

An agreement was signed. At that time it was $25 million per year. That figure is now in the order of approximately $35 million. We as a federal Government signed that agreement in good faith and the provinces signed that agreement in good faith.

After the 1980 election campaign, the then Leader of the Opposition pledged that he would restore the federal Government's power to conduct lotteries. I know that Liberals opposite have been saying throughout those four years that a bad deal had been struck. They might even be saying that today.

Mr. Boudria: A rotten deal.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): They even call it a rotten deal. I want to tell the House and Canadians how rotten a deal it was that the Liberals had. I do not know of any other government getting into the lottery field and in fact losing money, but it did that. Not only did it get back into the lottery field, but it lost money.

Mr. Boudria: It is not a lottery, it is a pool.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Well, if $46 million does not mean much to the Hon. Member, he can explain that. That being the case in 1980, the Government took very specific steps to try and get back into the lottery field or gaming business. There were no negotiations with the provinces. It simply said it was coming back in.

What it has done will become more evident not only as this debate unfolds but as the days unfold. There were some very interesting means taken to get back in. While today I do not have the liberty to expose that, the method that was used by the former government to circumvent Parliament, and to circumvent federal-provincial agreements, in order to get back into a field that it saw to be lucrative will become evident. The manner in which that government did it was wrong, Mr. Speaker. I say to Hon. Members opposite that the reason it failed was because they began with the wrong premise, quite apart from whether we agree on lotteries or not.

I suggest that Hon. Members be very careful when they take a look at what was done. Suffice it to say that the federal Government got back into the lottery gaming field by saying that it was not a lottery. However, we find it very interesting to note that it was not to be seen as a lottery but was to have the same effect as a lottery. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, that is not a method that is acceptable to us.

Another controversy developed during that period of time. The question came up as to whether or not the $200 million commitment that was made to the organizing committee for the 1988 Calgary Winter Olympics would still be in place if the Government got out of the sports pool or if the pool did not make any money. The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport will go into this in greater detail today, but the Prime Minister has said that that commitment stands. That commitment will be honoured by the Government of Canada because it was made on the same basis as the commitment that was made in 1972 to the Montreal Olympics. An Olympic committee cannot go before the International Olympic Committee without a letter of approval from the Government of the proposed host country, so that project was a legitimate project and a commitment was made. We were not going to use the success or failure of the lottery as a criterion upon which that $200 million commitment would stand.

I could go into further detail about the steps that the former government took. Suffice it to say that the proposal of the former government has met with absolute failure. We opposed that proposal. However, how deep is that failure?

Some Hon. Members might wonder why the Minister of National Health and Welfare is proposing this Bill today. As a Private Member, I took a very strong position against the lottery. Perhaps some Hon. Members are wondering whether or not it is a personal matter. The reason it is being put forward by me is that under the terms of the Financial Administration Act, that is the legal means by which it must be done.

What has happened to the Sports Pool Corporation? I have already said that the Sports Pool Corporation lost money. It was losing money at an average of $1 million to $1.5 million per week during the time of its existence. Once the accounts are settled, we will see that it has lost about $46 million.

The argument was made that proceeds from the pool would be used for amateur sport. To legitimize the proposal, it was even said that the proceeds from the sports pool would be used for medical research. As a Private Member, I had the opportunity to ask the chairman of the Medical Research Council when he last appeared before the standing committee how much money his people had received from the Sports Pool Corporation for medical research. Do you know what his answer was, Mr. Speaker? It was zero, nothing. I asked him another question. Because medical research funding requires long-term projections, I asked him how much he had budgeted over the next five years or so for moneys that he was to receive from the Sports Pool Corporation. Do you know what he said, Mr. Speaker? He said "Nothing". I asked him if he ever expected to receive any money from the Sports Pool Corporation for medical research, because that provision was in the legislation that we passed and was one of its objectives. From the look on his face, I simply did not need an answer at all.

To date, the Sports Pool Corporation has lost an average of between $1 million and $1.5 million per week. It spent $10.5 million for start-up funding. It received a loan of $20 million from the federal Government to keep it solvent. That money is gone. The corporation has lawsuits pending against it and provincial governments are in strong opposition to it. I say to Hon. Members opposite that its objectives were to fund medical research, to help our amateur athletes who need help and to help fund, in part or in whole, the $200 million commitment to the Calgary Olympic organizing committee. Those commitments still exist and need to be met. As well, what could we have done with that $46 million to help those three causes? The point is that we are $46 million further behind than we would have been if we had never seen the Sports Pool Corporation. That is the reason this legislation is before us.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that Loto Canada was to be wound up. In fact, Mr. Speaker, as a Minister of the Crown in 1979 you had done so. We now find out that, through Orders in Council, it has not been done. That is why this legislation is more than just an attempt to end the Sports Pool Corporation. It is more than an attempt to end Loto Canada. It is a symbol made by our Government to the people of Canada that we do not feel that the federal Government should be in the gaming business, that the federal Government should not be in the lottery business and that when we sign agreements with the provinces, those agreements must be maintained, respected and honoured.

If projects are proposed which are legitimate, worth-while and supported by the Canadian people, we will fund those projects through the proper means here on the floor of the House of Commons rather than through lottery legislation which the Liberal Government tried twice to put through. The Liberal Government tried by some magic to colour the vision of Canadians so that they would see that the lottery business is painless, that it does not affect them and that it is simply a matter of doing business. We are debating a symbol today, Mr. Speaker.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all Members of the House that the timing of this legislation is obvious. Its purpose is clear. I commend it to all Members of the House for speedy passage.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: Thank you for the great round of applause. It gives me great pleasure to rise in this Chamber to participate for the very first time in a debate in the Thirty-third Parliament of Canada. In addition to being critic for multiculturalism, I am also pleased to rise as the official critic for the Ministry of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

I address myself to the Bill that is before us today. Consequently, I will have to reserve my traditional maiden speech, which offers me an opportunity to outline the values, traditions and aspirations of my riding, for a later date. Nonetheless, I wish to take this opportunity to thank sincerely the constituents of York West for their confidence and support. I can assure them that that trust and faith which they have placed in me will be fully and enthusiastically reciprocated.

In the time allotted to me, I would like to place this Bill that is before us today and its implications in proper perspective. The present Government administration has opted to dismantle the Sports Pool Corporation. However, I believe that before analysing the merits of this Bill, it is necessary to examine what mechanism was put in place and why it was established in the first place.

The athletic events pools were set up to generate funds over the long term, in order to encourage and assist amateur sports, the arts, medical research and, perhaps most importantly, the 1988 Calgary Winter Olympic Games. Of special note are the much talked about Olympic Games to which the previous government made a financial commitment of $200 million. The sports pool, among other revenues, was specifically designed to assist in that financial commitment.

It should be made very clear from the outset that this sports pool was not a lottery. I say that because the previous government had no intention of invading the lottery business, a field which is currently held by the provinces. I believe that that intention is clearly defended and demonstrated by the present Bill. The Bill makes absolutely no reference to the word or to the concept of a lottery, something very different indeed from the time when Government members were in opposition.

In terms of the definition, in a lottery a number is taken at random and there is a chance of winning. A sports pool is primarily a test of a person's intelligence and that individual's knowledge of sports, all of which must be used in determining who the winner or loser will be. It is a system which has been adopted particularly in Europe, as well as by many other countries in the world.

I reiterate that the long-term concept of this strategy was a noble one. It was one which addressed itself to the very real needs of the Olympic organizing committee, Canadian athletes, coaches and officials. It was a recognition that in 1988 the eyes of the international community would be upon us. It was felt that it was our national obligation to stage a truly first-rate national and international event.

However, unlike the government of the day, I do not wish to dwell on the past or to study endlessly the decisions and initiatives taken in the past. Nor do I wish to provide slogans in place of concrete measures of action. It is on an action plan and on the future that Canadians voted on September 4, and I would like to discuss this Bill on those terms.

Towards this end, a central concern in the winding down of a sports pool mechanism infers that there will be, and needs to be, an alternative to take its place; the winding up of another action plan. It is quite debatable whether this Bill, on its own, is right or wrong, effective or inneffective, appropriate or inappropriate. Yet I would respectfully submit that the debate would be fruitless and unproductive for Canadian interests if it was not complemented by specifically defined and iron-clad measures which would replace the goals and objectives of the previous structure in an effective and responsible manner. However, I fear that this is exactly what we have. To date, as far as I can recollect, the House has not been told by the Government, nor by the Minister, of any such system.

On the one hand, the present Government is committed to a contribution of $200 million for the Winter Olympic Games in Calgary. On the other hand, it has decided to dismantle a mechanism which was to aid in this effort. However, I have not heard, nor has the House heard, in any detail the precise measures on how those moneys will be raised. It is all very fine to promise $200 million. It makes wonderful and popular headlines to support the Olympics and our athletes. Yet the Government must deliver on those promises, for the expectations of the Canadian people, Canadian athletes, coaches and officials, the Olympic organizing committee, the Province of Alberta and the City of Calgary are great, and rightfully so. The Government cannot afford to play political, partisan games with such a national and international event, for the risks are too great.

Consequently, the real issue vis-à-vis this Bill is: From where are the revenues going to come? It has been some two months since the Minister made the commitment, yet we are still unclear as to from where, how and when these moneys will come. I would like to know, and I am sure the House would like to know, if the Minister himself knows. On September 18 the Minister was quoted in The Citizen of Ottawa as follows:

> A different form of gaming operation could, and I emphasize the word could, continue after that because clearly we have to keep our commitment to the Calgary Olympics and we will.

The Minister went on to say:

> —the question is how we're going to do that.

Those remarks have two very serious implications. First, they suggest that after all the howling that was done by the previous Opposition members on the sports pool concept, the Minister has thrown out the possibility that he will simply replace the sports pool with another similar strategy. The statements which have been given by the Minister and his Party in the House on the sports pool concept not only run counter to what was consistently stated in the House and across the country, but also give a new definition to the word "hypocrisy".

Second, if the Minister does not choose to take this route—and according to his reported comments in The Citizen, this is by no means sure—it suggests that he and the Government are at a loss as to how to keep this very fundamental and significant promise.

In The Calgary Herald of September 20, the Minister announced, in relation to the sports pool program, that:

> Coming up with a different funding system will be a priority.

My question is: Where is that system and where is the priority attached to that system? There was absolutely no mention made of such a priority in the Throne Speech. It leaves one to wonder if this commitment was merely another of the Government's slogans.

Canadians are also asking themselves if the Government will dip into the federal treasury to come up with the necessary funds. Will it come from general revenues, will it come from the private sector, or will it come from donations? What about the provinces?

We have heard a great deal about the co-operation and mutual respect which exists between the new federal Government and the provincial governments. It would make you believe that anything could be achieved overnight. Well, with respect to this and many other issues of the day, let me say that that night has indeed been very long and very painful. To date, there has been no public agreement that the provinces would help contribute to the federal Government's financial commitment. To date, we have not seen co-operation, consensus, or mutual respect. Great slogans but no action. In fact, it is my understanding that both the Province of British Columbia and the Province of Alberta have refused to participate as partners in the financing of the $200 million. Is this the climate of co-operation that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Government have lectured on tirelessly for the last several months?

In addition, the federal Government has not worked out a financial compensation arrangement with the provinces in return for the decision to dismantle the sports pool program. According to the Tory provincial governments, it was perceived as an obstacle to competition. The Government had a golden opportunity to negotiate a financial agreement with the provinces which would have erased many of the worries and financial tensions that the Olympic Games certainly face today. Even during the ill-fated government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) in 1979, the administration negotiated a deal with the provinces which provided that, in return for $35 million annually, the federal Government would remove itself from the lottery business and allow that field to be taken up exclusively by the provincial governments. While the financial aspects of the settlement were absolutely lacking in fundamental, arithmetical logic, since the projected lottery-generated revenues were in the neighbourhood of $200 million annually—and it has been said that it has been very easy to trade in your Cadillac to get a Volkswagen—it nevertheless demonstrated, at the very least, a concern for the national will.

This Government led by the Prime Minister, in its great desire to please the provinces, has forgotten that it has a national mandate and responsibility. It has not recognized, I believe, that Canadians respect and demand a government which protects, encourages and fosters a national will and purpose. Even the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski), the former Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sports under the Clark Government, agrees that a negotiated settlement would have been fundamentally correct and necessary. In Hansard of March 27, 1984, as reported at page 2472, the Hon. Member for Edmonton North asked the then Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport:

> But I would like to ask the present Minister, who is at least a golfer, why has he not sat down with his provincial counterparts to reach a compromise as far as the sports lottery is concerned—

Such a compromise to date, to my recollection, has not been attained and neither, perhaps, pursued. As everyone well recognizes, Mr. Speaker, negotiations are accomplished successfully from a point of strength, not weakness, as has been demonstrated so ably by this present administration.

As I outlined at the beginning of my remarks, the eyes of the world will be upon us in 1988. This event is made all the more important because of the successful staging of the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles. The Los Angeles organizing committee raised approximately $469 million and showed a profit of $150 million. The president of that committee, Mr. Peter Ueberroth, declared: "After Los Angeles, any city in the world should be able to survive an Olympics". Calgary and, in general, Canada must live up to that challenge. We must meet that challenge head on and I feel we should strive to surpass it, setting challenges for other countries to meet.

I would like to assure Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side have always been firmly committed as a government to amateur sports and to the pursuit of athletic exellence by Canadians of all backgrounds and from all walks of life. Our last Liberal government gave the strongest guarantee ever offered so that Calgary would play host to the Olympic Games in 1988. To complement this initiative, the Canadian Olympic Association publicly endorsed the creation of a sports pool program as one intiative to be used to raise the necessary funds and to focus attention on the Winter Olympic Games. At the same time that Canadian Olympic Association censured the Opposition for its attempts to discredit the sports pool program.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, we need to be reminded that it was a Liberal government that helped amateur sports throughout Canada, that paid the lion's share in order to send our athletes to Los Angeles where they made Canada extremely proud and honoured by their athletic abilities. We as Liberals support the participation of Canada in the Commonwealth Games, in the Canada Games, in the PanAmerican Games and in the Olympic Games. However, we as Canadians recognize that we must have money to enable us to ensure that our participation is a responsible and successful one and that our athletes receive the necessary training and resources they require in order to perform well on the international stage of athletics. We need programs and strategies, Mr. Speaker, in order to ensure that those moneys will be generated. Canadians want and deserve to know what will be replacing that which is being removed. How will it be replaced and when? These are the fundamental questions to which Canadians want immediate answers.

When we debate and discuss the Olympic Games and amateur sports in general, we are also talking, to a large degree, about Canada's youth and their great appetite for adventure and achievement. Our future may lie beyond their vision but I would submit that it is not beyond our control. It is the will of our Government and of all Canadians which will determine, in part, their destiny. It is my every hope, Mr. Speaker, a hope which I believe is shared by all the citizens of our country, that as the years pass the efforts of our Government in encouraging athletic excellence in amateur sports and the Olympic Games will be judged as positive and constructive. I endorse the motion of the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp). It is the other Mr. Epp; I thought it was the Minister getting up again!

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, thank you for solving the interesting question of how to deal with certain similarities of name, if little else, although in speaking this morning to the Bill to dissolve the sports pool, we will have occasion to see a similarity of view.

I am very pleased to be able to speak this early in the Thirty-third Parliament on an important measure. I believe I will have an opportunity during the debate on the Throne Speech to speak as well and consequently my comments to my constituents and relating to the past election can be held over. Today I would particularly like to address the matter before us.

Before I do so, I would like to congratulate my friend of similar name on his responsibility as Minister of National Health and Welfare. I hope he will have a good time. I wish him well in the great responsibility he faces in maintaining the social security system of our country.

I was also pleased to see the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) on his feet speaking to this measure. We have been waiting with bated breath for our friends in the Liberal caucus to name their spokesman for fitness and amateur sport, given that the list announced earlier did not include any such person. Since the Hon. Member is also responsible for multiculturalism, as I am, we clearly will become acquainted.

The Bill before us deals with a measure passed in the last Parliament which was designed to create a sports pool in order to raise money, not just for the Olympics in 1988 but for various other objectives. It was designed to raise money for fitness and amateur sport generally, for the support of arts and culture, including, although not necessarily restricted to, capital projects in that area. It was also, as has been recognized earlier today, designed to raise money for the purposes of supporting medical and health research.

All of these things are, of course, very important matters to the people of Canada. They are matters which deserve substantial support. However, the preceding government intended to support these important activities not from the general revenues of the country but by the method of gambling on the federal as well as the provincial level. It was clearly a matter of supporting excellent ends by the use of highly dubious means.

There have not been many comments in the debate to this point on the questionable nature of those means so I would like to give my own observations. In fact there is a large area of agreement between myself and my colleagues in the last Parliament, going back to the 1970s, the views of the present Minister of National Health and Welfare and, for that matter, those of the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek), who I regret not seeing here today.

I would like to put on record the views stated by various members of our Party in years past in order to have an indication of the importance of these matters. The House will pardon the historian particularly enjoying documents while he is in the process of adding to the documentation. In 1976 the then Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Knowles, spoke as follows in the debate on Loto Canada:

> It is because we believe that physical fitness, amateur sport and recreation are important aspects of Canadian life that we think they should be financed out of general taxation and, therefore, paid for on the basis of the ability to pay.
> We do not believe that aspects of life as important as physical fitness, amateur sport and recreation should be financed by gambling, which calls on the poor to pay for it, instead of taxation which is levied according to ability to pay.

Although I will not say much about the importance of fitness and amateur sport to all of us, let me say that those sentiments clearly state my position and that of my colleagues. In debate on the legislation which established what we are today concluding, the sports pool itself, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) spoke as follows on November 18, 1982:

> It is clear that if we believe the health and well-being of the people is important, then we must be prepared to make a financial commitment to that end.

He added:

> The intent of the legislation is quite clear; it will introduce an attitude in the country that gambling is an acceptable way for government to raise money. It is not acceptable, Mr. Speaker.

Later he said:

> But when we in Canada make a commitment to health care, health services and provision of adequate facilities for health, whether it be in the sense of providing immediate care or research, we believe in doing it out of tax revenues. Also we believe that it should be funded in a way to allow the people charged with the responsibility of ensuring the continuation of the health care service to do some reasonable fiscal planning, to budget and to commit dollars for years down the road in order to complete the projects which they have undertaken.

Those are fascinating comments given what the Hon. Minister has indicated about some questions he put to the head of the Medical Research Council. In further debate the then Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake, Mr. Sargeant, on April 19, 1983, made this observation of the impact of organizations such as this sports pool:

What is the nature of the Minister's voluntary taxation—his non-tax source of revenue? For one thing, it is a form of taxation that takes proportionately more from the poor than it does from the rich.

When one thinks about it, it is not really surprising that it is the poor and not the rich who fall for other Government betting schemes. Lotteries, this sports pool and other government-run gambling are turning millions of Canadians into gamblers. The rags to riches, easy money outlook bred by lottery advertising is naturally appealing to poorer Canadians.

He added some observations about the people who tend to buy lottery tickets and presumably participate in the sports pools:

A 1977 profile commissioned by Loto Canada found that 54 per cent of the buyers of lottery tickets earned less than $20,000 a year. A similar study conducted by Gallup found that 73 per cent of people who earned less than $6,000 a year took part in Wintario.

That in my province of Ontario is another dimension of the cause for concern that we feel in our caucus about the proposal which the previous government put on the law books and the pool it created.

Let me quote one more member of my caucus, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), as follows:

I always considered support for arts and culture and support for medical and health research to be a responsibility in the best interest of Canadians as a whole and certainly Canada as a society. I considered this to be a responsibility of all Canadians not just those people at the low end of the income scale who may be tempted because of the economic conditions in which they find themselves as a result of government policy to try to find a way out of those difficulties by buying dreams through the kinds of programs about which the Government is talking. That is what the Government is doing. It is selling dreams. The chances or the odds of an individual who participates in that kind of activity, these lotteries or sports pools, actually coming out a winner are decidedly low.

The debate in the last Parliament was fascinating on that point as Members considered the likelihood with which one might be struck by lightning; it is twice as likely as winning a lottery. That does not prevent the organizers of lotteries from spotlighting every successful winner in order to encourage people, particularly the unfortunate, to take part in these lotteries.

What I found fascinating was the fact that members of the then Conservative Opposition felt the same way about these matters. You will understand, Mr. Speaker, why I look particularly at the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and the Hon. Member for Halton in making these comments. There really is some fascinating material here which I rather regret was not put on the record at any length this morning. The Hon. Minister referred to strong views but he did not really give us the depth and strength of those views while speaking to the Bill presently before us. When he spoke on November 18, 1982 as an opposition member, the Minister said:

We are being asked today by this Government to accept a Bill which allows the federal Government to get back into the gaming industry. What we are debating here today is action which in 1970 was illegal. In 1970 it was prohibited by virtue of the Canadian Criminal Code. Suddenly after ten or 12 years we not only have had legalized gambling, government-sponsored—in fact governments being beneficiaries of that gambling—but gambling has become a part of the Canadian pattern. Today we seem to say that we have to increase this new source of revenue, not because we want to justify that new source, but because the Government needs it for valid programs. It is based on this theory that the ends justify the means.

I did not at the outset mean to parrot him, but I do not think I could have said it any better concerning my own repugnance at what has happened in Canadian society since these amendments to the Criminal Code. I am sorry that the proposal before us this morning is only the abolition of one of those bodies. The Minister, then simply the Hon. Member for Provencher, went on to say:

The carrot is put forward to the people, Mr. Speaker, that they might somehow get out of the economic difficulties in which they find themselves by buying one chance, one hope which somehow might extricate them from the daily living that is faced by most Canadians. It is a fantasy based on advertising, glib, glossy advertising, the kind that, if corporations used it, many of us in this House would get up and argue borders very closely on false advertising, if in fact it is not false advertising. But because governments do it, somehow there is legitimacy. I suggest that is wrong.

I heartily agree. I do not think it could have been said better by a member of our caucus.

Mr. Deans: Oh, maybe marginally.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Marginally. The Hon. Minister would always be welcome over here, perhaps, Mr. House Leader.

Mr. Deans: For a visit.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): For a visit. Well, there may be something to extract from that a little later. The Hon. Member for Halton also had some fascinating observations to make:

At the outset, I would like to say that this sports pool is nothing more than an indirect taxation by devious ways and means. It is an underhanded way of collecting money from the Canadian public because the Government has failed in its responsibility time and time again to collect it by normal means.

That is a splendid statement, one which I do not intend to allow the Hon. Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport to forget in this Parliament. It is one we might inscribe in an appropriate place and keep constantly spotlighted, as is done in a stadium when the great athletes are performing, in order to be sure we do not forget it.

He went on to comment on the proposal before the House on this day in late June of 1983 by saying the following:

As a former athlete I support anything which can be done to help amateur athletes in this country. But certainly not by establishing the phony, sleazy programs the Government is talking about which would be taking advantage primarily of the poor people of this nation, and then misleading them with false and misleading advertising.

That was splendidly spoken. With those comments on the record from both of the Opposition Parties in preceding Parliaments, I regretted this morning that the Minister's observations did not in fact extend to these considerations. I was disappointed to see him focusing particularly on the federal-provincial ramifications of all of this. He is concerned about the pursuit of the policy which the government of 1979 followed in turning the field over to the provinces. That is virtuous at the federal level presumably, a vice lift to the provinces. We might remind ourselves immediately, of course, that the Parliament of Canada declares what is illegal in this country, if it does not in fact define all the vice that exists. To leave our provincial colleagues in their governments responsible for this behaviour if in fact it is immoral, if it has vicious consequences and if the social ends are as evil as the Member for Provencher and the Member for Halton suggested in 1982 and 1983, seems to me highly regrettable. We should in fact be giving the sort of consideration to this whole question which the then opposition member for Provencher did in fact propose.

If I might take one more selection from the parliamentary record of years past, I find on November 18, 1982 the then representative from Provencher declared, in words which I convey to him strongly and powerfully this afternoon:

> I suggest to the Minister that he seriously consider setting up an all-party committee to study the subject of lotteries and what they mean to the Canadian public, both in the immediate and long term, before this Bill is passed.

I daresay it is not appropriate to propose a motion in that direction. As a new Member I am open to instruction on these matters. I see that the opposition member in that Parliament did not in fact move a motion either, but he proferred advice to the Minister as I now do. I think this is really quite a serious matter. Both of us have provincial colleagues who have taken action which we must regret. I am candid in recognizing that the New Democratic Government of Manitoba was into the field very early, about 1970. I regret that. I think it was a wrong action. I regret equally that the Government of Ontario has been in the lottery field so largely with the Wintario program in particular. It has in fact used that extensively for the very purposes for which the late Government planned to use the sports pool.

Surely, given more than a decade of experience with gaming it would be appropriate at this point to take a good look at it. While as a new Member I may hesitate to add to the number of committees we will have in the House, this is one of the important moral and social matters which certainly deserves consideration and I commend it to the Minister.

In connection with the Wintario grants, the impression I have in northern Ontario is that the largesse which comes from Queen's Park and makes possible the establishment of sports facilities of various sorts can be the sort of gift which some of us occasionally experience. Initially everything seems splendid. In this case with the capital grants fully in the ground and above it with buildings erected, local communities find themselves suddenly having to support the operation of facilities they did not have before. The consequence can be a heavier burden of taxation than those people have known before. That surely is another of the consequences of gambling revenue because it seems to be such cheap money. There is no reason why a small community should not have facilities given that this money is in provincial hands ready to be disbursed wherever it may be.

There is, of course, concern about the financing of the 1988 Winter Olympics in Calgary and other activities in fitness and amateur sports. I share the concern of the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) to know how the Government plans to do this. I took care to obtain the governing Party's campaign handbook last night and also to get some sense of what the policy might be in order to have marks by which we might judge at an early point.

I note in the campaign handbook a statement that the PC Government would explore tax incentives for corporate support for sports and fitness programs. I note that the policy statement given to sports organizations saying that the PCs are committed to maintaining the highest level of federal support for amateur sport in Canada is very likely to be contradicted beginning this evening. We have had an indication in one area and another that all Canadians are going to have to suffer cuts in the expenditures of the Government, so it seems highly unlikely that that particular statement given to sports groups across the country during the last election will in fact be maintained and that they will in fact maintain the highest level of federal support. It looks as if some trimming in the funding made available in that area is inevitable. We will be watching with great concern.

This same section goes on to comment on a commitment to develop a charitable donations tax credit. That brings me to my concluding observations and expression of concern about the way in which all of this may unfold. The Canadian fiscal structure is presently shot full of one tax break and another, whether for individuals or for corporations. I found it very interesting when talking to a Thunder Bay accountant a few weeks ago to hear him say: "When you get to the House of Commons, do your best to simplify that tax structure. Stop trying to achieve social aims through the fiscal system because it becomes more and more complex as each of these is carried through".

My personal opinion about the tax breaks is that we ought to be really rigorous in reviewing all of them. I am intensely suspicious about the use of every one of these. Perhaps the greatest concern I feel about the proposal that there be more such incentives is the concern that all Members of Parliament share, I am sure. That is a concern that we have genuine responsible government in this country. The great problem with using arrangements of this sort is that they inevitably become veiled in the confidentiality which applies to fiscal dealings of government with individuals and corporations. When they are so veiled it becomes quite impossible for Parliament to have any close contact with what is happening. We need a rigorous reconsideration of all of them.

On this day on which the Government plans to put forward an economic statement we need a recognition that one of the factors in the deficit that bothers the Government so deeply is in fact an incredible level of tax expenditures of one break and another. In fact, I suspect that the deficit is largely matched by the breaks to individuals and corporations. It would be good to have all the detail we can possibly have on that. The proposal that we have in addition to it as a means of financing fitness and amateur sport, Mr. Speaker, seems to me not much less dubious for other reasons than was the proposal to establish the sports pool in 1982-1983.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me applaud the measure which was put forward by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, subject only to my concern about a proper provision for the employees of the sports pool. I would like to call on the Government to be principled in its entire rejection of gambling in Canada. An all-Party committee to review this seems to me quite essential. We ought to think about the possibility of amending the Criminal Code.

Finally, I would like to say that I await with concern the statement on funding for amateur sport, whenever it is made, and question the intention to use more tax incentives in this area. Thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

PARLIAMENT HILL

PRESENCE OF PEACE CAMP

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), speaking about the Peace Camp on Parliament Hill, was quoted recently as having said: "I think they made their point. It's been amply made, it's been well made. It's really a question of how much more you want to make a point."

How can the Prime Minister say that these young people have made their point when, last year, countries of the world spent over $700 billion on arms, when $100 billion of that was spent on nuclear weapons, when we now have in the world 50,000 nuclear weapons which have one million times the destructive power of the Hiroshima bomb, when there is a new nuclear test taking place in the world every week which is really a rehearsal for nuclear war? The nuclear weapons that exist now can destroy 800 million lives in less than one day. Despite that, the Prime Minister has said that these young people have made their point.

I would ask the Prime Minister to agree that this important vigil, that this important reminder stay on Parliament Hill until the nations of the world ban nuclear madness from the face of the earth.

BANK OF CANADA

INFLUENCE ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, strong downward pressures have appeared on interest rate markets both here and in the United States. Clearly, new, strong, conservative Governments with effective mandates for business oriented policies are largely responsible for the increase in confidence that has led to falling interest rates.

In the United States, three-month Treasury bills were auctioned on November 5 for 8.82 per cent. Today our three-month Treasury bills were auctioned to yield 11.2 per cent, which is a drop of 22 basis points from last week.

Traders have indicated to me that they feel that our interest rates could drop much more rapidly if the Bank of Canada would discontinue its practice of relating exchange rates to interest rates.

May I suggest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that, in view of the fact that interest rates, while dropping here are dropping much more rapidly in the United States, he instruct the Bank of Canada to stop influencing interest rate markets in Canada and let rates drop as low as they can. This will save the country substantial costs in financing the national debt, and more than anything else will stimulate new business activity and the consequent result of increasing new job opportunities.

INTERNATIONAL UNION FOR THE CONSERVATION OF NATURE

MEMBERSHIP APPLICATION OF GREENPEACE INTERNATIONAL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the House and the people of Canada should know that the Government of Canda appears to have instructed an Environment Canada official in Madrid to urge fellow members of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature to reject Greenpeace International's application to join this respected international organization.

Greenpeace is an internationally recognized Canadian conservation group, with operations in over 15 countries and official status at the United Nations. It is ridiculous that the Canadian Government would be so petty as to even consider opposing Greenpeace's entry into the IUCN, and it is clearly inappropriate for any Government in an organization that is comprised mostly of N.G.O's. I have already notified the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) of my Party's objection to this, but I want the House to know that New Democrats are not alone.

I have a telegram that was sent to the President of the IUCN in which 20 of the largest non government members of the IUCN, including the World Wildlife Federation, state that the efforts by the Government of Canada to block Greenpeace's entry into the IUCN risk "opening the door to unnecessary dissension and discord that will detract from and hinder the important work that we are all committed to accomplishing under the world conservation banner".

Obviously, Environment Canada's actions in Madrid are misguided and unpopular, and I call on the Minister of the Environment to make a statement, preferably in the House, to the effect that both passive and active opposition to Greenpeace's entry into the IUCN will cease.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE

Mr. Bill Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, three days ago the agenda of the new Government was presented to the Canadian people. However, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has criticized the Throne Speech, saying that the expectations of Canadians were not fulfilled.

Let us look at the area of federal-provincial relations.

Are Canadians disappointed that both levels of government, including Quebec, have embarked on a new path of co-operation and not confrontation? No.

Are Canadians disappointed that the federal Government has invited labour, business, and government to an economic summit to work out new strategies based on consensus? Absolutely not.

Will Canadians be disappointed that all 11 leaders in Canada will sit down to plan for our future? No.

I do not believe that the expectations of the people in my region, in my province, have been unfulfilled. In fact, they are relieved.

Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition will want to applaud this new atittude once he understands that it is absolutely necessary if we are to develop a sound future for our next generation. As an Albertan I feel confident that the concerns of my province will finally be heard and understood.

TRADE

ENTRY OF CANADIAN STEEL PRODUCTS TO UNITED STATES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to express my extreme regret about the Government's handling of the United States Trade and Tariff Act 1984. You will be aware that as of next week legislation in the United States Congress will be passed which will adversely affect Canada's steel industry by requiring identification of Canadian pipe entering the United States.

I rise on behalf of the people of Hamilton and all those who are concerned about the steel industry, particularly in view of the Government's alleged positive relationship with the President of the United States. It seems to me that it would have been appropriate for the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) at the very least to go to the United States directly to lobby, to ensure that Canadians would be exempted from the trade and tariff changes that will adversely affect our industry as of November 13.

In view of the new spirit of co-operation that has been developed between the Canadian and American Governments, I would suggest that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) exercise his influence with the President of the United States with a little more than a tea party at the Rose Garden, by ensuring that the Congressional Act which will become effective on November 13 will exempt Canadian steel from the labelling provisions.

TOURISM

GEORGIAN COLLEGE'S PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH RESOURCE CENTRE

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan) is aware of the proposal for a tourism-hospitality industry resource centre at Georgian College in my riding. The project will provide employment and improve the quality of tourism at a time when this important industry is facing a number of difficult challenges.

Under the former Liberal Government, Simcoe South was generally overlooked in the area of tourism. Georgian College had 800 applications for the 280 places in its tourism management program this year. Although it is the third largest co-op college in Ontario, it has, in the past, received very little federal assistance.

Georgian College's proposal is estimated to cost $3.5 million, a modest price tag for a project that will deliver over 600 training places in tourism management by 1986. The proposal has the endorsement of TIAC, Tourism Ontario, and a commitment of financial assistance from the Ontario Government. In addition, in his speech in Barrie on August 11 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) expressed his keen interest in this project.

Georgian College offers a first rate tourism management program. The proposed resource centre will be a valuable additon to the existing program.

The new P.C. Government has recognized the importance of tourism by establishing a Ministry of State for Tourism, and by appointing a capable Minister to head it. I urge him to look seriously at this urgently needed project.

CONDEMNATION OF THRONE SPEECH CONTENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign a special debate was held in Toronto on women's issues. The commitments of the Tory Party now in Government would, in hindsight, appear to be public relations window dressing, given the emptiness of the Speech from the Throne.

Canadian women deserve the respect held out to them in the Speech from the Throne, as do all Canadians. Canadian women also deserve action with programs, policies, and legislation to bring them into the mainstream of Canadian economic life.

What the women of Canada have been given by the Tory Government is a study. Some place, somewhere in this city must be a warehouse full of studies regarding women and the economy.

An Hon. Member: They are all yours.

• (1410)

Mr. Gauthier: Right, use them.

The Tory Government must act now to implement the shelter allowance program for single parents advocated by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) during the election campaign. The Tory Government must act now to begin negotiations with the provinces for the implementation of a national daycare system which will provide women with greater access to jobs and training.

The Speech from the Throne has been called a motherhood speech. It is nothing but empty promises. Unfortunately for single and working mothers the Speech from the Throne is empty, and fails to recognize that in difficult economic times there is more to motherhood than being all things to all people. This Speech from the Throne is a disaster.

UNCERTAINTY ABOUT FORTHCOMING FINANCIAL STATEMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to express the concern of my constituents and my Party and also of 300,000 members of the Public Service about rumours and leaks according to which 15,000 Public Service jobs are to disappear tonight, as part of Mr. Wilson's statement. These rumours seem to be part of a deliberate campaign aimed at getting the public to anticipate changes that will cost jobs instead of creating them.

[English]

People voted for change in my riding of Ottawa Centre and across Canada, but in my opinion very few voted to make the Public Service a scapegoat in order to appease the business community. There are real challenges for the Public Service to be met, but under the Liberal Government the Public Service was overmanaged, and its morale suffered from repeated six and five freezes and other such steps. I would not like to see the same thing continued under the new Government.

To give an example, the new Government has let 200 contract employees in Canada Employment and Immigration go, despite the fact that unemployment is at record levels and that jobs counsellors in CEIC cannot do the job adequately now because there are too few of them.

As Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised during the election campaign that, while the Government supported a need for restraint in government spending, "we are not in favour of this goal being achieved on the backs of public servants". I call upon the Government to live up to this commitment and not make public employees sacrificial victims in its budgetary policy.

PREPARATION OF GOVERNMENT'S ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, sloth and wastefulness, arrogance and corruption, these were the characteristics of a Liberal-Socialist alliance too long in power. Their pigeons came home to roost on September 4. On the other hand, sound financial management and prudence in the handling of the public purse will be the hallmarks of the new Government.

Since September 17 the Cabinet, and in particular the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), have been diligently working on an economic statement which will show the true state of Canada's national finances and will set us on the road to economic recovery. Controlling the deficit, that legacy of the Trudeau years which hangs around the necks of Canadians like a stone, will have to be uppermost in the mind of the Minister.

I urge all parliamentarians and all Canadians to listen carefully this evening at 6.30 when the Minister of Finance will pull the switch, thereby putting Canada back on the track toward a bright and prosperous future.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT—PAY-OUTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) when he was a member of the Liberal Government, along with his Liberal colleagues procrastinated for some 15 months before bringing in amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. He and the Liberal Minister of Agriculture dilly-dallied while some 400 farmers went bankrupt. Progressive Conservative members pleaded, argued, entreated, and even prayed for a pay-out so farmers could plant their crops last spring. But the Liberals refused, and finally in the dying days of the last Parliament they brought in the Bill. They promised a pay-out of $300 million.

However, yesterday the same Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry shed crocodile tears and talked about a pay-out of $500 million. What gall! What hypocrisy! This PC Government lost no time in completing the pay-out, and because of the excellent attitude of the Ministers of Transport, of Agriculture, and of the Wheat Board, hundreds of farmers are now rethinking about opting out. PCs will change the Act in order to trigger a pay-out when a pay-out is needed. The Liberals talk. The PCs act.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EDUCATION

SUGGESTED TOPIC FOR NATIONAL ECONOMIC SUMMIT AGENDA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It was inconceivable to those of us on this side of the House that there was no mention of post-secondary education in the Throne Speech. On behalf of the students of the University of British Columbia and other universities across the country, does the Prime Minister intend to make it his personal priority when he meets the Premiers at the upcoming summit to place post-secondary education on the agenda? If so, would he consult the students of the country so that they may help set the agenda for the national economic summit?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed it is our intention to discuss it with the Premiers next week. This is one of the reasons why it was not mentioned in any specifics a little earlier this week. Notwithstanding the observation yesterday of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that he thought we were indulging in perhaps too much consultation, I would be delighted to take his suggestion and consult further with the students.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am sure the university students of the country would welcome any opportunity to give the right hon. gentleman some advice.

USE OF TAX MONEY BY PROVINCES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in approaching the Premiers, in discussing the question of post-secondary education, and in negotiating agreements with them next March, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether he would favour attaching some conditions or setting some sort of guidelines so that we in the House can be assured that money of the taxpayers of Canada destined to post-secondary education is used by the provinces of Canada for the purpose of education?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the manner in which the question is set out indicates the fundamental difference between our two Parties. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition appears to presuppose that if we make an agreement with the provinces they will do something improper. We believe the contrary, that if we strike a deal with the provinces, they are honourable people and they will follow through.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Before meeting the Premiers, I think the right hon. gentleman ought to look at the facts to see how that money is actually being spent by the provinces.

NATIONAL OBJECTIVES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, could the Right Hon. Prime Minister inform the House and students across the country whether he is in favour of setting national objectives, with the agreement of the provinces, in the field of post-secondary education?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Leader of the Opposition is right in bringing up an issue that is absolutely vital, and on which I would say an unprecedented amount of consultation and co-operation will be necessary. In fact, this has been the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition, and rightly so, throughout his public life, and I can assure him that it will be ours as well, especially in an area as vitally important as this one.

Starting next Tuesday, we shall be consulting not only on the principle but also on implementation procedures.

YOUTH

MINISTER'S AREAS OF RESPONSIBILITY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth. However, with your indulgence and, through you, I should like to offer my congratulations to the Minister on her appointment to such a sensitive post at this time of crisis for our youth.

● (1420)

Will the Minister enlighten this House and the youth of Canada on the areas of her responsibilities with respect to legislative procedure and programs, as well as the criteria for the allocation of grants? For example, will she comment on her input to the decision which cut direct job training for youth to a mere $27 million, as announced by her colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration?

[Translation]

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank my hon. colleague for her words of congratulations. I think that in the coming months, she will be able to appreciate what I intend to accomplish in the Department for which the Right Hon. Prime Minister has made me responsible.

As for the Hon. Member's question about future legislation, I may remind her that, through no fault of my own, I am the third Minister in seven months to head this Department. With my departmental officials, we are first trying to clean house. We shall be consulting young people themselves, but not through studies of statistics and statistics on studies, of which we have had more than enough from my predecessors.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Champagne: As for the grant funding to which you referred, we will know after this evening. It is not for me to say now what amounts will be allocated for youth.

[English]

Finally, the Hon. Member referred to the announcement made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. This is not my responsibility right now, even though we have conferred. This is a pilot project. I will be delighted to work along with her to develop new ones.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESS STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am very disappointed that, while cleaning house, she had to cut out one-third of the budget for our youth. However, the question was not related to the dollars in the grant. It was related to criteria. Perhaps we can come back to that.

In particular, I am concerned about an interview which the Minister had with Mr. Bernard Descôteaux of Le Devoir, in which she stated:

[Translation]

She would like to suggest that people look at the 85 per cent who are doing well.

[English]

I am really concerned that young people in difficulty, les décrocheurs, have to turn elsewhere. Will young Canadians have to turn to these other 85 per cent, according to our Minister, for help, or will they get some help, those who are in need, those who are contemplating suicide, and those who have not done well, drop-outs, and students? Are they going to turn elsewhere or to you, Mrs. Minister?

[Translation]

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may point out that at the time of the interview, 85 per cent of young Canadians were able to function normally, despite difficult economic conditions. I also said, if I am being quoted correctly, that of course we were going to take care of people in difficulty. I feel, however, that it is also up to young Canadians and I am thinking of those who are able to function with everybody's help to do their share. In this Government, Mr. Speaker, everyone will have to do his share, and that includes Canada's youth.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ECONOMIC EQUALITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

During the election campaign, the Prime Minister promised that his Government would make changes in the Liberals' policies. More specifically, he promised Canadian women a number of policies on economic equality. He said that Canadian corporations seeking federal government contracts would have to provide affirmative action programs and equal pay for work of equal value. In the Throne Speech, the Government made a complete turnabout. Why?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I think my hon. friend, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, is mistaken. In fact, there was a great deal in the Throne Speech about the status of women in Canada, including the particular issue he is raising. I can say that at this very moment, we have programs that are being quickly examined by Cabinet and my office so as not to delay implementation of the principle in question.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is giving the House the same old answers that we used to hear from the Liberal Government when he sat on this side of the House. When the Prime Minister made the promise during the election campaign—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Well, we don't want to bring back the other people who used to break their promises, to go back on that side. One is as bad as the other. They are a little sensitive, these guys to my right.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Oshawa on a supplementary question.

Mr. Broadbent: Another 30 years in opposition will do you a lot of good, fellows.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: You should know, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: Just look at Nova Scotia.

The Prime Minister knows what is in the Throne Speech. He also knows that there is no commitment to implement these specific promises he made. He promised Canadian women concrete action, that as Prime Minister he would insist that all companies doing business with the Government have programs such as affirmative action, equal pay for work of equal value, in place. Why is he not now giving that to the people of Canada, the women, instead of studying it again for the future?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I see the spectacle that is going on in front of me, I should remind all of the people over there that one thing the Canadian people cannot stand is a lovers' quarrel in public.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: You have got along all these years; don't spoil it now.

Our commitment, the pursuit of equality for women, is at the top of our legislative and governmental priorities. I can assure the Hon. Member that we shall be acting on many fronts to satisfy the very legitimate request of all Canadian women that fairness and equality of opportunity be theirs.

IMPLEMENTATION OF ELECTION PROMISE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has spent most of the period since September 4 reading the former Prime Minister's answers to questions. I warn him, because he saw what happened to the guy on my right, and to his predecessor, that he will not be around for nearly the same period of time unless he changes his approach.

I want to ask the Prime Minister this question because he is both Prime Minister and a lawyer of considerable reputation. He knows that Section 19 of the Human Rights Act will permit the Government of Canada, without making a study and without bringing legislation before the House, actually to implement the promises made in regard to equality for women. If he believes, as he said in the NAC debate, as he said in British Columbia, and as he said in Toronto during the summer of 1984, that his Government will act on equality, why does he not use the Human Rights Act, consider the unequal state in which Canadian women have been living for decades, and implement now the promises he made? We do not need more studies.

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in fairness I think the Hon. Member would acknowledge that the House has only been in session for some three days and that there will be an economic statement tonight which, of necessity, requires priority treatment. The priority we plan to give to equality in the status of women in a number of important areas is, I can assure the Hon. Member, at the top of our list, and there shall be effective action in those areas.

PROVINCES' USE OF FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Hon. Secretary of State. First, I would like to congratulate him not only on his re-election but on his appointment to his important portfolio.

The Minister well knows that for years one of the ongoing concerns of the previous Government, and of all students and all members of faculties of institutions across the country, has been that funds transferred by the Government of Canada to the provinces for post-secondary education might have been partially, or even largely, diverted to other areas and purposes. Does the Secretary of State intend to implement the law which requires him to determine what each province actually spends in the area of post-secondary education, and report this to the House? Does the Secretary of State intend to ferret out the truth and find out where the provinces are actually spending the money given them by the federal Government which was intended to be devoted exclusively to the benefit of post-secondary education?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge the good wishes of the Hon. Member and in turn offer my congratulations to him.

The Hon. Member will recall that it was the amendment put forward by the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration during debate on Bill C-12 dealing with post-secondary funding which called for the responsible action in reporting of which the Hon. Member speaks.

Mr. de Corneille: The Minister, by pointing out this fact, which I would have wanted to have mentioned if there were time—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: No. The Hon. Member knows full well that his opportunity now is to place a supplementary question.

PRIME MINISTERS' POSITION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is in fact addressed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I am sure he has been listening well to the very point the Secretary of State just mentioned. How does the Prime Minister square the views of the Secretary of State with his own when, in Chicoutimi, Quebec, in the heat of the election campaign, he said that he found repugnant the provisions of this amendment which was in fact moved by his own Minister of Employment and Immigration? He said that he found this amendment repugnant in that it required the provinces to be brought to give an account of how they spend federal funds earmarked for higher education.

[Translation]

"It is a dimension of the Act which I find repugnant—"

[English]

The Prime Minister said that he wanted it changed.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was the attitude of the former Government that I found repugnant. That was made very clear.

EMPLOYMENT

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and relates to one of the few employment projects that she has announced to date, the Canada Works Program. I would like to know why the Minister is following the Liberal practice of denying funding to women's crisis centres under the Canada Works Program? That is a program which is very necessary for many people right across the country, and the Minister's program and guidelines specifically disallow funding to women's crisis centres.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows when he refers to the Canada Works Program which I announced that it will indeed create some 70,000 new jobs and many of those jobs, I trust, will be allocated to women, as I have encouraged all Members of Parliament to see to it. This is so that women will indeed receive a larger number of jobs than they did last year under the program as it was being managed at that time. I would urge the Hon. Member to put forward good and viable proposals which will all be considered.

FUNDING OF WOMEN'S CRISIS CENTRES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I presume that the Minister is now reversing her regulations and guidelines and is now saying to us that crisis centres will be eligible for funding. Is that what she is saying to us? If she is not saying that to us, could she be very specific in explaining why those groups will not be eligible for funding?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that I again instituted the establishment of constituency advisory boards in order to bring to the attention of Members and of the Minister those projects which should be funded. I would urge the Hon. Member to attend to his constituency advisory board, to appoint one if he has not yet done so, and to ask it to bring forward its recommendations.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

GLACE BAY COAL PROJECT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. First let me congratulate the Minister on his appointment and wish him well in his deliberations.

As the Minister knows, a fire destroyed the Number 26 colliery in Glace Bay in April, 1984, taking the life of one man and displacing 1,200 workers. Recently the regional Minister for Nova Scotia announced that that coal mine would be sealed and that certain moneys would be allocated for the development of another coal mine. Unfortunately, that Minister did not make known in his announcement its dollar value, the number of jobs that would be created by the coal mine, or the duration of those jobs. Is the Minister prepared to provide the details of that announcement? Furthermore, is he prepared to give a firm commitment to a new coal development in the Town of Glace Bay?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I would indicate that we too are most concerned about the situation to which he refers. As far as the 1B expenditure is concerned, the Hon. Member will be pleased to learn that we have agreed to the employment of over a hundred people for 10 weeks to go ahead with the clean-up operation that is necessary in the 1B situation. That is in anticipation of taking a fresh look at the feasibility of opening 1B itself. As far as the total amount to be expended is concerned, I was speaking with Joseph Shannon this morning and he is still unable to identify the exact amount, but I can assure the Hon. Member that I will provide that detail when it is available.

PLIGHT OF OLDER MINERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Although we have not got a very strong commitment from the Minister, I would point out to him that in the briefs submitted by the Mayor of Glace Bay and the President of the United Mine Workers of America, a number of factors were raised, with all of which I agree. However, there was one glaring omission, a pre-retirement package for older miners at the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Would the Minister issue a directive, pursuant to Section 99 of the new Financial Administration Act, suggesting that the Corporation President enter into negotiations with the UMW and/or invoke the provisions of the Labour Adjustment Program, thereby enabling miners who are 55 years of age and older to avail themselves of a pre-retirement plan, thus creating new jobs for younger Canadians in that area?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, who has referred to my meeting with Jake Campbell and His Worship, the Mayor of Glace Bay, I am sure he will be very pleased to learn that Jake Campbell has sent a telex to me, as a result of this Government's fast action, to say that the people of Glace Bay smile once again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EDUCATION

UNIVERSITY FUNDING

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I am sure that the delegates from the Canadian Federation of Students who are in the galleries will be interested in the Prime Minister's response to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition when he indicated that the complete omission from the Throne Speech of any reference whatsoever to post-secondary education actually reflects a very high priority on the part of the Government.

Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to engage in consultations with the university community, and most particularly students, with respect to defining goals and priorities for universities, and as well to ensure that adequate funding will be provided from both the federal and provincial Governments?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the comment of the Hon. Member about students, I do not think that I could improve by an adjective on a statement in regard to that important element of our society which was made by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition during the leadership campaign when he said to students, "Your generation is going to be strangled if Ottawa continues to go into debt at the current pace". He made that statement on April 3 of last year. I agree with that statement. Students require economic growth, and economic growth requires dealing with a Government's expenditures which are out of control, and dealing with the deficit, to create co-operation with the provinces and the private sector, and to create a climate which will allow for the creation of jobs so that our young people can go back to work.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I gather that the Prime Minister believes that it is more advantageous for students to go into debt than it is for the Government to go into slight debt in order to ensure not only that there will be educational opportunity but also the prospect of real economic growth.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I will pursue my supplementary question to the Prime Minister along these lines. Will the Government consider a new post-secondary education act, as proposed by the Canadian Association of University Teachers, which is supported by the Canadian Federation of Students, to provide the following: one, a national tripartite, independent post-secondary education advisory council involving the federal and provincial Governments and the post-secondary education community; two, a House of Commons standing committee on science, research and post-secondary education to provide a periodic review of government initiatives in regard to post-secondary initiatives; and, three—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great respect, I will allow the question as it has been asked to remain and be answered, but I feel that I should advise the new Member, in order to help all new Members, that the questions were put in reverse order. The first question may be a long and detailed question, but the second question must, by tradition, be a short and supplementary question. Therefore, I will let the question stand as it has been put so far.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the suggestions made by my hon. friend were worthy of active consideration. Pursuant to meetings which began this morning between the Secretary of State in regard to post-secondary education, I thank him for those suggestions and the Government will take them into active consideration.

Oral Questions

AUDITOR GENERAL

COST OF LITIGATION INVOLVING PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board and is in connection with a lawsuit being brought by the Auditor General against Petro-Canada and Petrofina. With respect to that transaction the President of the Treasury Board will know that we are paying the lawyers for the Auditor General through one budget, we are paying the judges through another budget, and we are paying for the defalcations of Petro-Canada in one way or another, which is all costing the taxpayers a lot of money. I would ask the President of the Treasury Board if he would step in to ensure that interdepartmental rivalries get cleaned up in a hurry so that they will not cost the country a lot of money for this nonsense?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that I am well aware of the case.

Mr. Chrétien: You are lucky to have him.

Mr. de Cotret: Sure, we are lucky to have all of our colleagues here with us.

Mr. Chrétien: We are nicer to you than they are.

Mr. de Cotret: Ask questions. I have been waiting for them.

The question is one of which I am well aware. There is a suit which has been brought by the Auditor General, and I have had a number of discussions with him. We want the courts to decide on that matter, and we are following it very closely.

AUDITOR'S ACCESS TO CROWN CORPORATIONS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): My question is supplementary, and is directed to the Minister of Justice, who should take some responsibility for the case which is now before the courts. After campaigning so actively with all Members opposite on a program that would allow the Auditor General to be given complete access to the ways in which all taxpayers' money is being spent, including Crown corporations, how can the Government now claim that this is a matter which it should study, when it promised the Canadian people that the Auditor General would be given access to all such corporations?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which refers to the confidences of the previous administration. We are trying to save their hides, for some reason.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: It just shows how impartial we are in the carrying out of our duties. There are important constitutional issues involved.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Wait until I have answered the question. Then you can howl, yowl, jowl and do what you like.

There is a lot of information which can be given to the Auditor General other than confidences of the Privy Council. Perhaps that will be found to be sufficient before the matter is concluded.

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

FUTURE OF CYPRUS ANVIL MINE IN YUKON

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I will begin by congratulating him on being named to a post which is among the most interesting and challenging of any portfolio in government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: Recently the Minister was visiting communities north of sixty, and while he was in the community of Faro in Yukon he held out a very good measure of hope to the people there concerning the long-term future of the Cyprus Anvil mine which is presently not in production. I wonder whether the Minister at this time would be prepared to tell the House what plans he has, or what he is considering to do—of course, in consultation with the Hon. Member for Yukon—to get this mine back into production. Once it is back into production, what will he do to assure the people of Faro that that operation is going to continue as long as there is ore there to be mined?

I am asking this question quite apart from the current labour dispute, and the lock-out which is happening there. I am thinking of the long-term future of that important economic development project in Yukon.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, first of all, please allow me to thank the Hon. Member for his kind thoughts, and also to congratulate him on his critic portfolio. I welcome him back to the field in which he has long experience and, indeed, in which he is considered an expert.

With respect to the Hon. Member's question, let me say, Mr. Speaker, it is true, as he indicated, that I met on October 24 with a number of people in Faro in order to deal with the question of the closing of the mine. At that time I was asked if I would do my best, along with other parties, to see if we could get the mine opened. In particular, I was asked if I would seek a private sector solution, to engage in discussions with those parties who could assist, and to do that as soon as I could. Since that time I have been doing so.

I have concluded the first round of discussions. There are many parties with whom to discuss and there are many complex issues which must be dealt with. I am now engaged in a second round of negotiations and discussions which are more focused, and I hope I will be able to report good progress as soon as possible.

CROWN CORPORATION PROPOSAL

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, specifically, has the Minister given consideration to the creation of a new Crown corporation—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Penner: —a new Crown corporation involving the White Pass and Yukon route railway and the Northern Canada Power Commission, a Crown corporation which could assist Cyprus Anvil with its transportation and power needs? I raise this, Mr. Speaker, because it was a proposal which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Yukon during the recent election campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think it goes without saying that I am always willing to listen to the entreaties of the Hon. Member for Yukon.

Mr. Axworthy: You do not have a choice.

Mr. Crombie: Let me say, Mr. Speaker, specifically on the question of White Pass, there is no question but that the role of White Pass in the Yukon with respect to the transportation component is extremely important. The role of the NCPC with respect to energy costs is extremely important to any future opportunities for the opening of the mine. However, I can say to the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, that there has been absolutely no suggestion other than today by the Hon. Member, certainly not by any person who has been involved in Faro, any person I spoke to, nor, indeed, by any party to the matter, in relation to a Crown corporation.

If it be that the Hon. Member for Yukon would like to pursue that matter, my door is always open.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CHILDREN

SEXUAL ABUSE—BADGLEY COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice on this momentous and happy day for justice in Canada. In August the Badgley Commission issued a very comprehensive report documenting the shocking national tragedy of sexual abuse of children. Incredibly the Speech from the Throne was totally silent on this very serious problem. What specific early action does the Minister intend to take in response to the very important recommendations of the Badgley Commission?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member no doubt knows because he does his homework—I believe he has that reputation—

Mr. Broadbent: Right!

Mr. Riis: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: —although he was demoted by the Hon. Leader of his Party.

Mr. Murphy: So were you.

Mr. Broadbent: What is your position, John?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Axworthy: You have something in common with him. John.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: It is a very raucous reception, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for them. No, I regard myself as having been elevated to the universe.

Mr. Broadbent: You were supposed to feel that way.

Mr. Axworthy: Elevated right out of finance into justice.

Mr. Crosbie: The only penalty I am suffering is now having to watch the honourable gentlemen opposite face on.

The report, as the hon. le gentleman knows, Mr. Speaker, makes recommendations which involve both federal and provincial jurisdiction. Our officials are in consultation with provincial officials now. There will be a meeting of Ministers of Justice and Attorneys General on November 22 and November 23 in which the report will be discussed among other matters. Certainly action will be taken, but in taking action we must be careful that we do not injure or damage the rights of individuals as well. There has to be a fine balance. This matter is very much on our minds, and action will be taken.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): My supplementary is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

The Badgley Commission was unanimous in its recommendation that the Government immediately establish an office of commissioners reporting directly to the Prime Minister's office, to fight the sexual abuse of children.

When does the Prime Minister intend to set up this office, which is of vital importance to Canadian children?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): As the Minister said earlier, we must first wait for the results of talks with his provincial counterparts, which will take place within the next few days.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

LABELLING OF IRRADIATED FOODS

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and concerns the labelling of irradiated foods. The Department has been studying this issue for some time, in conjunction with the Department of National Health and Welfare in order to determine the best label to use to identify foods which have been treated with gamma rays. Would the Minister advise the House what decision, if any, has been made on the selection of a label which will assist consumers in identifying which foods have been subjected to irradiation?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a communiqué on the labelling of these foods was issued by my department in July 1983 and sent to the various manufacturers and associations concerned. Replies received until April 1984 are now being analyzed and consultations with the World Health Organization are taking place. We shall be communicating the different data within the next few months.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PLIGHT OF OLDER PERSONS INELIGIBLE FOR BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, you will recall, I am sure, in the last Parliament that the present Minister of Employment and Immigration claimed she was vitally concerned about the problems of those Canadians in the age group of 55 years to 65 years who could neither find employment nor qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. What does the Minister propose to do about that problem now?

• (1500)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that this is still very much a grave concern of mine. He will be hearing later today about the steps that will be taken with regard to the unemployment insurance account.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, regardless of what might happen with the unemployment insurance account, is the Minister prepared to assure those individuals one of two things: that this Government will produce jobs for them as the Prime Minister said he would; or they will be given unemployment insurance until such time as the jobs are available?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I understand the very real concern of the Hon. Member, but I ask him at least to contain that concern for a few hours when he will know that there will be certain steps taken.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it is customary at this point to allow me, as House Leader for the Official Opposition, to pose a question to my colleague, the Government House Leader, as to his plans for the business of the House for the coming week. With your permission I would like to do so at this time.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the tradition established with respect to the practice of having a discussion on Thursdays outlining the business of the House, not only for Members of this Chamber but for the general public. Before I get into that, I want first to extend to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) my congratulations on his appointment to that very important task which I had the honour of performing for some few months, that of Opposition House Leader. I also extend my congratulations to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) who has been reappointed by his caucus as the House Leader.

An Hon. Member: Elected.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He was elected, as I was elected by popular vote in our caucus. I want to assure my two colleagues and Members of the House that we have been busy in a variety of meetings and consultations to the point that we hope to carry on the business of this House in an amicable and orderly fashion on the basis of consultation.

With respect to the business of the House, as Your Honour will know, today we are dealing with Government business as an accommodation to the NDP with respect to their Opposition Day vote which we anticipate will take place next Tuesday. After we complete this legislation it is my intention that we proceed with the Speech from the Throne debate, not only tomorrow but during the course of next week. You will understand, of course, that I always reserve the right to change the order of business depending on circumstances. I have informed my opposite numbers that I will be monitoring the progress of legislation today and hopefully we will be able to make some progress and pass some legislation. If we do and there is the prospect of further progress being made on the legislative program of this Government, I may be in a position to stand up later today and change the order of business for tomorrow. At the present time we anticipate carrying on with the debate on the Speech from the Throne and hopefully into next week, subject to further discussions and consultations concerning alternatives.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am interested in two or three matters with regard to the business of the House but I think I might postpone asking those until we meet privately and allow my colleague from Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) to ask a question with regard to House business that she is particularly concerned about.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East, although this is a departure from practice.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he would consider the establishment of a parliamentary committee on the status of women, which would be a tripartite committee composed equally of Members from all Parties with access to women's groups. This request was made in the last Parliament and it was not approved by the Liberals. However, I know the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) strongly supported it.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the seriousness of the request and of the issue, but I think we had better establish at this point, if we may, that matters which have not been tabled or matters which are not under discussion in any committee that we know of really should not be raised as matters under business of the House. They should be raised during Question Period. I say that with full knowledge of the importance of the issue. However, I have a feeling that if I allow this question today it will create a precedent for other critics and other Members to ask similar kinds of questions during this period of time, and I will have no way of saying no later if I do not say no now. It is for that reason and that reason alone that I say no to that question now.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, there have also been consultations between the House Leaders with respect to the proceedings tomorrow. You will understand that Remembrance Day this year falls on this coming Sunday. Accordingly, we thought it appropriate in the traditions of the House to make some arrangement concerning the making of statements by representatives of each of the Parties, leading off with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees). I would like to propose that, starting at eleven o'clock tomorrow morning, after prayers, we will proceed with a statement by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, followed by statements from a representative of each of the Opposition Parties. We ask that Your Honour in effect adjust the timing of the statements by Members and Question Period to accommodate the giving of those statements so that we have the same amount of time as we would on any normal day. If it meets with the approval of the House, I would make that proposal for your consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. Government House Leader. It requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

AGREEMENT NOT TO SIT ON MONDAY, NOVEMBER 12

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, again there have been consultations with my opposite members with respect to the business for next week. You will recall that I made reference, notwithstanding the provisional rules under which we now operate, to the fact that we would be carrying on with business next week. That is the case. The provisional rules do normally require us to adjourn for the week during which Remembrance Day falls. Under the circumstances it was felt appropriate that we not adjourn for that week. If Your Honour will receive this draft order I think you will find that there will be unanimous consent to this proposition:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, when the House adjourns on Friday, November 9, 1984, it shall stand adjourned until 11 a.m., Tuesday, November 13, 1984.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the proposition. Is that agreed?

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

REFERENCE OF 1984 ANNUAL REPORT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, you will forgive me, but a moment ago I tabled the Annual Report of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology. I would like to ask that that report be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates for consideration.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that we will now revert to Tabling of Documents for a moment. Is that agreeable to the House? Is there unanimous consent to revert?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: That being so, I have a motion from the Minister of State for Science and Technology to refer his Annual Report to the appropriate standing committee. The House has heard the suggestion. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SPORTS POOL AND LOTO CANADA WINDING-UP ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-2, an Act respecting the winding-up of the Canada Sports Pool Corporation and Loto Canada Incorporated, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this Bill for the winding up of the Canada Sports Pool Corporation and the Loto Canada Corporation.

In the debate which we had in this Chamber earlier this morning the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) set out succinctly and persuasively the reasons which justify this Bill at this time. We also heard from the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) who had the thankless task of trying to outline, on behalf of the Liberal Party, some of the concerns which they have about it. We heard as well from the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp). In a moment or two I would like to join debate arising out of those comments, particularly the comments of the Member for York West.

The speech of the Minister drew the attention of the House to the fact that this legislation, apart from winding up the sports pool and the lottery corporation, is symbolic in two senses. First, it conveys very clearly the intention of the Government to have a co-operative working relationship with the provinces. That is why the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) is now negotiating with the provinces to work out the continuing arrangements for lotteries at the provincial level. Second, the Minister also said that this symbolizes the intent of our new Government to get out of the lottery business. It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that I speak to this Bill.

There is nothing which could give me greater satisfaction than rising to speak my first words in this very special Chamber in support of a measure that will not only be doing away with part of the old order, but also symbolically will be saying to Canadians from coast to coast—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Boyer: It will be conveying a message to Canadians from coast to coast that the Government has more and better things to do than to be fostering gambling.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret that the governments of our country, at the federal and, especially, at the provincial level, ever started these lotteries. In my opinion, state lotteries are not a true function of the public administration of this country. Today, we are unfortunately blest with this culture, attitude or practice because of state lotteries that tell Canadians they have a chance to win. That is the unfortunate state of affairs we have today.

I realize it is not easy to go back to what the situation was in Canada before governments got involved in lotteries. However, we must start somewhere, and that is why I am supporting this bill.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, lotteries sponsored by governments give Canadians false hopes. They are built upon a message of false dreams. They have created an appetite for gambling where none existed before.

In 1970 I worked at Queen's Park as the executive assistant to the Attorney General of that province. At that time we received submissions from people who wanted to start large scale, province-wide lotteries in Ontario. One of the arguments advanced in support of such province-wide lotteries was that annually $4.5 million to $5 million was going out of the Province of Ontario to buy Irish Sweepstake tickets. The great argument was that if we had our own lottery in the Province of Ontario the $5 million would stay in the province and would be a marvellous thing for the balance of payments.

At that time, and correctly in my view, the Government of Ontario rejected that notion. The lotteries permitted in the province were only those at the local level to support service clubs and sports teams, and so on, trying to raise a little money for an immediate and clearly identified local purpose. Times changed, and in the development of this lottery culture that we now have around us on all fronts in Canada, even the Government of Ontario succumbed. Today that $4.5 million to $5 million, which was the concern in those times, is but the advertising budget for the Ontario Lottery Corporation for several months. The provincial Government of Ontario has joined, as have provincial governments across the country, in an act of delusion, and in the creation of false hopes. In many respects it is something like the practice in Roman times of giving bread and circuses to the people to distract them from other things which the government might more properly be doing, or found it could not do.

In fact, the insidious new attitude has permeated so deeply, Mr. Speaker, that when people now begin a project at the local level for community benefit the first question is almost always, "Where do we apply for a Wintario grant?". They no longer wonder how they can be self-reliant, stand on their own feet and do these things in and of themselves. Instead they wonder how they can get a little more money out of the Government through this special fund. Indeed, it is inimical to the patterns of public finance in this country that funds should be so raised and kept in a segregated fund for purposes that are unrelated to the general priorities of government, all of which must come out of the consolidated Revenue Fund.

The Hon. Member for York West, in speaking to this Bill this morning, referred to lotteries as "noble". I find them to be absolutely undermining the traditional values that have built this country. The Hon. Member asked the House where the money would come from if the Government suspends the operations of the Sports Pool Corporation. As Hon. Members know, there is no money currently coming in through this device. Indeed, it is losing money. It is the taxpayers of Canada who are currently footing the bill.

I submit that it is rather typical of the economic fiscal thinking of the Party opposite, on whose behalf the Member for York West was speaking, that that kind of deficit approach to financing is one that he would still want to see maintained. It is similar to a compulsive gambler who just keeps on hoping.

The Hon. Member also talked about the national mandate given our Government. He asked how the national purpose and national will was being fulfilled in Canada at this time by cancelling something like the sports pool and the Loto Canada Corporation. Our mandate as a new Conservative Government is to foster those values and to see a restoration in this country of those values that have built this country and made it strong. I submit that the state-supported lotteries are just the opposite of that.

I think of a statement made last year by a new Canadian of Italian background in Toronto who had just won a substantial amount of money in a lottery. He stated that he knew before coming to Canada that it was the land of hope and promise. It was the land where new Canadians could come and find a great new life. We have always believed that about Canada and indeed about the new world. However, traditionally the way of building a new life on the North American continent came from hard work, the opportunities which this rich land affords, and from a little bit of luck that is inherent in life. To think now that one has achieved the promise of the new world by winning a big cash prize in a lottery tells us how far and devastating this attitude has become in our country, where we turn to the wheel of fortune, rather than put our shoulder to the wheel, to make this country work.

We also heard this morning from the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon who spoke on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I can say with confidence that his position and mine are virtually identical. He said that we are dealing with something which is a moral and social issue. He referred to speeches made in this Chamber by members of his Party and members of our Party over the years who have taken exception to the practice of governments getting into the gambling business.

Gambling is not an appropriate way to raise government revenues. It is regressive in nature because, as the Hon. Member pointed out, studies have indicated that it is the poor who buy lottery tickets. In my view it is a sham for people to say that it should simply be treated as a voluntary tax. It is government advertising that has created this demand where no demand existed before.

We now have an opportunity to send a very clear message to the country that a new day has arrived in Ottawa. When we talk about peace, order and good government as being the cornerstones of our Constitution, we truly mean good government. We know that there are some things that the Government can, must and should do, and others which the Government should never do, no matter how much could be raised for the public coffers. Just because lotteries raise money is no reason that the Government should be into the act.

Indeed, to this very day the Criminal Code of Canada contains provisions that make gambling illegal. That law used to apply to all Canadians. Governments then decided to get into the gambling business and introduced special legislation to legitimize that which had been illegal according to the traditions and the values of this country. Not only were special laws created for the Government, but at the same time that the Government promoted gambling through the state-run lotteries, the law officers of the Crown continued to prosecute other Canadians for gambling according to those offences that were still in the Criminal Code. That is the kind of double standard that is unacceptable in this country and it understandably gives rise to an attitude of cynicism on the part of citizens of this country.

As a result of striking down that kind of provision today, we are taking a step in the right direction to get this country back on the right track. That, too, is why I support this Bill. Winding up lotteries in any way possible, on every front possible, is desirable and in the public interest.

This being 1984, we cannot close this debate without noting, as the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon would have done had he not exhausted his time, a relevant Orwellian passage. He pointed out that Orwell wrote in his novel Nineteen Eighty-Four:

> The Lottery, with its weekly pay-out of enormous prizes, was the one public event to which the proles paid serious attention. It was probable that there were some millions of proles for whom the Lottery was the principal if not the only reason for remaining alive.

We know that what Orwell was trying to describe in his novel was life under the oppressive state. It was the state that knew better than its citizens how everything should and could be done. Although we have reached calendar year 1984, fortunately we have not reached the Orwellian 1984.

This Bill, short as it may be, speaks eloquently of our determination to turn back that tide. This is but a beginning, because the provinces are still in this game to an unacceptable degree. However, we are turning back that tide and we must continue in the House and elsewhere in the country to champion any measure which will restore a proper sense of the role of government.

I support the Bill before the House that will wind up the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation and the Loto Canada Corporation.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Questions and comments.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien).

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Hon. Member and congratulate him on being elected? Does he intend to put pressure on his Government? I listened carefully to the Hon. Member's speech, and I would like to know whether, if he wants to ensure that the moral values he applies at the federal level are also applied at the provincial level, in other words, that the provincial lotteries, which were in fact authorized by an amendment to the Criminal Code, are withdrawn is the Hon. Member suggesting that we amend the Criminal Code in such a way that there will be no more lotteries in Canada and that we, in doing so, would come to terms with the Hon. Member's moral objections to lotteries?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I share the sentiments of the Hon. Member and former Minister on this issue. In the debate in the House this morning, the same idea was expressed by the Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp). In my opinion it is indeed absolutely necessary to bring about complete and fundamental changes in order to develop a plan that would deal consistently at each level with the methods and functions that are appropriate to government, referring to the Criminal Code within specific statutes. Under the Constitution we have a division of powers which defines the provincial government's function in this area, but above all, we have the Criminal Code which regulates what may be done within those functions. I would like to discuss with departmental officials the concept I expressed earlier in my first speech, to improve the situation along these lines.

[English]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a supplementary question for the purpose of clarification. There is no constitutional authority for the provinces in that regard. Lotteries were not in existence in Canada because they were against the Criminal Code. I know the Hon. Member is a very learned lawyer. He will recognize constitutionally that it was because of the federal will that the provinces started lotteries.

If the Hon. Member is logical in what he has said to the House, is he intending to follow his conscience and vote against this government Bill?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I would like to defer to the Hon. Member, whose considerable experience in the House, including a lengthy and distinguished period as Minister of Justice, would normally lead him to have complete knowledge of the matters of which he speaks. However, when he talks about the fact that the provinces have no jurisdiction with respect to lotteries, I invite him to examine the statutes of the Province of Ontario, for example, which in the mid-1960s under an understanding with the federal Government provided for them.

Mr. Chrétien: Gave them the permission.

Mr. Boyer: C'est ça.

Mr. Chrétien: We had the power to say yes or no.

Mr. Boyer: That was in the days of co-operative federalism, in the mid-1960s.

Mr. Chrétien: We were the ones who said yes.

Mr. Boyer: That is right. That was when Mr. Pearson was leading the Liberal Party and there was co-operation between the provinces and the federal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: How will you vote?

Mr. Boyer: That is why I will not be voting against this Bill. Logic requires that I support it and continue the cause further.

However, I point out for the record that there were provisions in Ontario under provincial legislation permitting lotteries of a local nature and of a regional nature. In each case special permits had to be obtained from the provincial government. We even had a director of the lotteries branch in the provincial government. That was in the days when this lotteries business was still under control.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise with pleasure to take part in this debate involving the winding down of the Canadian sports pool and part of the gambling business in Canada.

I congratulate the Government for taking the initiative to make certain that the second piece of legislation debated in this Parliament would be one which takes care of the gambling issue on the federal scene. Also I congratulate the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) on the speech which he just made and his ringing defence of the natural position of the work ethic, competitive spirit and the role of the market-place, invoking those principles for which Canadians have hungered for entire generations. I am glad he planted his flag very firmly. These are the principles which we intend to enunciate throughout the next four years. Canadians will appreciate it as health returns to the economy as a result of this particular emphasis.

I should like to point out at the outset that the path taken by the previous Government in instituting the sports pool was not the normal way in which it operated. It began a new company. In previous years that Government would normally take over a thriving industry and run it into the ground. It was the old story of how one started a small business in Canada—one bought a big one and let the government do its work and it would become a small one. Normally the Liberal Government would not have started a new business as it did on that occasion. It started a new corporation and in this case the market-place dictated what ought to happen to it in the first place. It died a natural death financially, it died a natural death. I wish it would have followed its normal pattern and taken over the gambling industry in places like Atlantic City and Vegas. If it had done so, Atlantic City and Vegas would be out of business by now. As the saying goes, if it were to nationalize the Sahara desert, it would run out of sand. It broke its normal pattern, but I am glad to say that the law of supply and demand has done its work on this particular corporation.

It is sad to say that the losses this corporation experienced are reason enough to wind it down. These losses tend to overshadow the real reason for doing so. When the corporation can lose $46 million in a few months and require another $16 million or $18 million to wind down and satisfy all existing contracts, it ought to die. People might be led to believe that this is the only reason we are shutting it down. However, the real reason we are shutting it down is because it is wrong.

Mr. Waddell: You do not believe in gambling.

Mr. Friesen: That is right, except at election time, except when Tories run. Then it is not a gamble. It is a sure thing and there is nothing wrong with it.

It is wrong for the Government to engage in this kind of business. There are two, three or perhaps more specific reasons, but I want to deal with at least two of them. The first reason is because of what it does to our people, the debilitating effect on people. It might be worth noting that becoming involved in the gambling business on the part of any government is a good symptom that something is wrong with the economy. We should take a look around the world at what countries institute a gambling business on behalf of the government. We will find that almost, if not entirely without exception, they are countries with failing economies.

Mr. Waddell: Like British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario.

Mr. Friesen: Like those provinces.

Mr. Waddell: They are all in the gambling business.

Mr. Friesen: They are in the gambling business. I think it ought to be wound down, but if the Hon. Member wants to look at a real example, he should take a look at Mexico where people walk the streets with boards, two feet by four feet, with rows of lottery tickets and on which they flash the results of lotteries. In that country lottery is a big business. If the Hon. Member thinks that lotteries in Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario are a big business, he should go to Mexico where there is no unemployment insurance and a high unemployment rate. He will see what the lottery business has done to that country. As bad as the lottery business on the provincial scene is, it is nothing compared with what it is in some underdeveloped countries. I hope the Hon. Member will agree with me. Therefore, it is wrong because of what it does to our people. First, it creates a world of illusion. Somehow it creates a dream in the minds of the people engaged in it that they can get wealthy suddenly, that overnight they can solve all of their financial problems.

● (1540)

It is almost impossible for that to happen. If you look at the odds of gambling, it is almost impossible for people to succeed. For them to be given the dream that overnight they will be wealthy is a cruel hoax. In fact, the odds are written in such a way as to make sure they do not succeed. It is impossible for them. Therefore, the world of illusion is a cruel hoax that we play on them.

The second related reason it is wrong is that it gives people the impression that sudden wealth is great, that it is healthy, that it will be a solution to their problems. That does not happen. There are very few people who can handle sudden wealth.

Mr. Nickerson: I would sure like to try it.

Mr. Friesen: I would not mind trying. I would take the risk. However, the fact is it does not happen very often that people can handle it. If you look at the record of those who have become suddenly wealthy after winning a lottery, it is not a very good history of what that industry has done to people. People just cannot handle that kind of sudden wealth. As my friend, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) says, we would like to give it a chance, but usually it does not work.

The ads shown on television, the million dollar lottery ads, show people who have just won a million. They are on their yacht. They will be getting their Rolls Royce. They have all the luxurious amenities of life. It makes it look as though that were the solution to everything. That is a cruel hoax that we play on people. It is just a terrible illusion that we have.

Second, as my friend, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore mentioned, it is a tax on the poor. Studies have shown that it is people mostly in the lower income groups and lower educational brackets who buy those tickets. It is ironic that you do not find lottery vending machines or tables next to the savings deposit wicket of the banks. Is it not strange that when people go to the bank or credit union they do not find lottery tickets being sold there? There you would have the choice between saving your money in a reasonably safe place or gambling it and being a pretty sure loser.

They do not put them there. Where do they put them? They put them in the grocery stores, in the convenience stores and out on the street where you cannot miss them. They make sure that impulse buying becomes the biggest trap for the people who can be trapped into buying lottery tickets. Next to the potato chips is where you find the lottery tickets. Next to the milk bar you will find the lottery tickets. Given a choice between what they need and what they like, they will buy what they like. That is too bad. It becomes a tax on the poor, and that is wrong.

The third reason why it is wrong is that it is wrong for a government to create the business which eventually makes most people losers. I would have thought that a government would see its mandate and its mission to make people winners, to make people successful, to make people feel good and do well. As soon as a government institutes a lottery industry, it makes sure that most people are going to lose. If not, the lottery business is not going to win. It is not going to work. The only reason they can give a million dollar prize is that there have been a million people giving a dollar who are not going to get it. Knock off the cost of advertising, promotion and sales, and it will take two million sales to give a million dollar bonus.

Most people have to lose. It is morally wrong for a government to start a business which will make most people losers and trick the unsuspecting people into thinking that they are going to win.

Finally, and I again echo my friend from Etobicoke-Lakeshore, it is morally wrong for a government to encourage an economy, a life or a lifestyle simply of chance. Chance is just what the word says. It is risk over which you have absolutely no control. It is wrong for a government to do that. Our country was built well and built strong, not because of lotteries, but because of hard work, not because of lotteries or chance in the gambling sense, but because of the investment of hard work, initiative and chance in the competitive sense, not in the numbers game. It is morally wrong for a government to get involved in a business that depends on chance for success.

I compliment the Government and the Minister for taking the initiative to wind this corporation down, getting out of the business, not simply because we are losing money, although that is reason enough, but to undo the record of the previous Government and start establishing those principles upon which we will rebuild this nation in order to make sure that our people will find satisfying, productive, creative lives and find fulfilment in what they have accomplished instead of some shallow sense of fulfilment from what they have won.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is a little unusual. I notice that you are sitting for the first time in your position as Deputy Speaker. I wanted to draw the fact that, as a very distinguished new Member of Parliament, you have now been given, by the election of this House, very important responsibilities. I am sure I speak on behalf of all the Members of the House in extending to you our expression of congratulations and our hope that you will conduct the affairs of this House as Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the whole with the ability that we know you have. I wish you all the very best in that endeavour and assure you of our co-operation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I wish to add the same feelings and sentiments on behalf of the members of the Liberal caucus who welcome your presence for the first time in the Chair. We express our appreciation and confidence in your work in the future.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Hon. Member. I listened to his speech and I agree with almost everything that he said. I had not intended to speak in this debate because, frankly, I feel uncomfortable. I think there is something somewhat dishonest in the speeches we have heard which say that it is immoral and wrong for the federal Government—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, I would ask the Hon. Member whether he is making a speech or a question or comment.

Mr. Orlikow: A question. It was suggested by the Member and other Members that this is the wrong way to raise money, essentially raising money from the poor, that it is somehow immoral. I agree with that. My province which has an NDP government, the Hon. Member's province which has a Social Credit government, Quebec which has a PQ government and Ontario and other provinces which have Conservative governments are all in the lottery business. It seems to me that along with this vote, the Hon. Member should be back in his province urging that government—

• (1550)

Mr. Epp (Provencher): And you in yours.

Mr. Orlikow: —and I in my province should be urging the provincial government to get out of the business. In a practical way, we should perhaps explore the possibility of suggesting to the CRTC that it forbid advertising of the lotteries and in fact perhaps even forbid the reporting of lottery winners on television. I wonder if the Hon. Member could give some thought to that.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, first, I do not disagree with what the Hon. Member has said. I can personally sympathize with his view regarding the advertisements on television. If the Hon. Member used my standards for what should be on television, I am sure that he would find that the screen would be black a good share of the day.

I personally sympathize with the fact that advertisements are designed to do exactly what the Hon. Member finds so objectionable. I find great sympathy with the need to get rid of such advertisements. The only question I have is about the degree to which we want to set up a list of prohibitions in our society. There are a great many things that are wrong with our society and I would like to see those things eliminated. However, I do not know whether passing a law every time something goes on that we think is wrong is a solution to that problem. Sooner or later, we must return to the implicit human need to make some personal choices about what we wish to do. Incidentally, that is where we gain our personal strength. We gain no strength of character by remaining pure because the Government has forbidden everything. The only way we gain personal strength is by refusing, on our own initiative, to do some things that we can do but have decided not to do because we think they are wrong.

While I sympathize with the Hon. Member and probably would agree with him that those things ought not to be on television, it is much better to allow them on television, not watch them and make sure we give enough guidance to our families so that they do not become misguided by those kinds of commercials.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I listened to his speech with a great deal of interest, and I was particularly impressed by the purity of his principles and the way he washes his hands off the matter by saying that the Government of Canada will no longer be involved in lotteries because it is morally dangerous, etc.

At this point, I would like to ask the Hon. Member how he manages to reconcile his high principles with the fact that over the next few years, his own Government will be receiving over $36 million from funds raised by provincial lotteries? If it is morally wrong for the Government of Canada to be involved in lotteries, is the Hon. Member's conscience flexible enough to approve if the money is raised by others? Can the Hon. Member answer that?

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, first I would refer the Hon. Member to Hansard of March 13, 1984, at which time I said much the same thing as I said today. I have not changed my mind at all from the days we were in opposition to the days that we are in Government. The reason I could speak on this Bill at early notice was because I had said the same things at other times. I have not changed my mind on the subject at all.

I take the Hon. Member's point seriously. I would like to see us wind down the provincial lotteries. I would gladly forgo that income because I think we would make much more if we created a spirit of enterprise in this country that is built on work, thrift, effort, self-expression and creativity. We would make a great deal more than the $36 million we are receiving from the lottery sales.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, speaking of creativity and imagination, in talking to us about the Sports Pool the Hon. Member forgot to mention why the Sports Pool was set up. It was established to finance the Calgary Olympic Games. Perhaps the Hon. Member could use his imagination and creativity to explain how he intends to finance the Government's commitment of $200 million.

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to reconcile for me how the previous Government could, on the one hand, promote such a wholesome activity as the Olympics and then, on the other, pay for it with such an unwholesome activity as gambling.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few comments to make to the Bill that we have before us. I always relish the opportunity to take up a theological dialogue with the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen). The puritan streak obviously runs deep on both the right and the left of this country, but it runs in a different manner. I would like to point out a few of those differences.

Let me say for the record, Mr. Speaker, that I support the Bill and agree with those who have already contended that we ought to do away with government activity in the lottery business altogether. Let me now say why this is so. I think my reasons will differ somewhat from those of the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta.

I was interested in the Hon. Member's analysis of the values that gambling erodes and the entire notion of coming into sudden wealth and the personal consequences that that might bring about. In my view, I do not make as big a distinction between the way gambling erodes values and the way the ethics of the market-place, the stock market, commodity futures and all the other ways in which we in this country and the philosophies of the Hon. Member's Party encourage people to regard sudden wealth through the market-place as that for which we are all striving. In fact, the ideal of the free enterprise society is that someone will finally make it big. That is the engine behind the kind of economy Hon. Members of his Party have exalted for years.

I would say to the Hon. Member that he ought to think twice about whether or not his left hand knows what his right hand is doing and whether or not he does not find himself in the odd position of, on the one hand, speaking about the erosion of values while, on the other, finding himself part of a political movement which in fact exalts the erosion of those same values.

The Hon. Member speaks about eroding the work ethic. It is interesting that we have here only a theology of works-righteousness and no reference to a theology of grace in which one might actually find a place for sudden wealth and suddenly being lifted out of the state to which one had been condemned for so many years, by winning a lottery. However, I say that somewhat with tongue in cheek.

I noticed that the Hon. Member was concerned about the erosion of values. Why do we not hear criticism from members of the Progressive Conservative Party of the erosion of values that takes place day in and day out on our television screens through what is euphemistically called marketing? Advertising is all about using sexual imagery and other sorts of things to sell products. Selling products is what the Progressive Conservative Party has been all about for years. Its members are the ones who have exalted marketing, selling products and the ethics of making a better mouse trap so that the world will come to your door. Those are the kinds of values they have been peddling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must remind the Hon. Member that the time allotted for questions and comments is now over.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I beg your pardon. I have been speaking to the Bill. I made that clear when I rose.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understood the Hon. Member began by saying that it was a comment.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I said that my comment was on the Bill. If you wish to check Hansard, Mr. Speaker, you will find that that is what I said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek).

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With all due respect to the newness of the occupant of the Chair, I rose and said that I was speaking to the Bill. I regard myself as still having the floor. I think that if you seek the opinion of Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, you will find that that is the case.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think we can resolve this matter. I have consulted with my colleagues. I know that I heard the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) refer distinctly to the fact that he was making a comment. I can understand his confusion, but we on this side certainly have no objection to the Hon. Member continuing with respect to this particular issue.

• (1600)

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to listening to another speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill has the floor.

Mr. Blaikie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, why do we not hear complaints? Why do we not hear about that kind of marketing? Why do we not hear complaints about the erosion of values which results from the wonderful free enterprise system, whereby people go out and sell products and spend millions of dollars hiring hucksters on Wall Street, Madison Avenue and everywhere else to figure out how to sell everything from soap to the Progressive Conservative Party? Why do we not hear anything about that? Why do we not hear anything about the way in which advertisements are deliberately designed to create the feeling among people that they need something when, in fact, they may not need that product? Why do we not hear objections to that?

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that it is obvious to you, as it is to everyone else, that I get a little irritated when I hear Members opposite waxing ethical about the erosion of the work ethic and the erosion of certain values as a result of something which I admit myself that I object to, that is, in this case, government lotteries. I wish the Government would extend its moral imagination to things which are part of the world view and things which it traditionally defends. Maybe it could apply a bit of that critique to that.

With respect to that, it is interesting to hear people speaking out against lotteries, saying that they are a tax on the poor. Yes, they are a tax on the poor. Where is the proposal, which was promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the campaign which we have just gone through, to tax the rich? Where was that in the Throne Speech? Nowhere. Was there an answer yesterday in Question Period? There was no answer whatsoever. We hear from Members opposite how horrible it is that lotteries are a tax on the poor, but we see no initiative whatsoever from the Government with respect to having fair taxation in this country and making the rich, who are paying nothing, at least pay a minimum tax. I did not hear anything about that from the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta.

When I am finished speaking, he will probably get up, and when he does, will he say that this Government is going to proceed with the give-and-take proposal having to do with support for voluntary organizations. If we proceed with this Bill as we are, and if, ideally, we were to do away with all lotteries, the voluntary organizations could then get the kind of support they need through the measures supported by the Conservatives when they were in Oppostion. Will that be forthcoming, or will we have another study of that particular proposal?

The kinds of things which lotteries have been used to support, and to which we objected having lotteries support, are, for instance, medical research. We spoke about that the last time the Bill was before the House. Are Hon. Members opposite in favour of a fair taxation system which would enable us to pay for the medical research we need in this country? Are they in favour of that? We have not heard anything about that.

I wanted to put these caveats on the record respecting both the theological observations of the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta and also respecting what can be argued is a hypocritical stance when it comes to a tax on the poor and similar issues. I hope the Hon. Member will give us some clarification on his position with respect to these matters.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta.

Mr. Friesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will check Hansard very carefully, but in the 15 or 20 minutes during which I spoke, I do not think I was making a theological argument. Maybe with the Member's expansive imagination he was able to make that case. I would be willing to engage in a theological debate with him on it, but I do not think that I made such an argument.

I would begin by saying that if he studied his theology the way he has his market-place, it is no wonder he is a socialist. The description he gave of the market-place was not a description, it was a caricature. I think he would agree with that. No one can ever make a defence of gambling with penny stock as being the creative side of the market-place. No one who looked at it for a minute would do that. If the Member wants to insist on making a lifelong commitment to narcissism, as his Party seems to do, then I say there is nobody but nobody who has a moral commitment to anything except the socialists. They are the only ones. Just ask them. They have looked in the glassy pool, have seen their own image and have fallen in love with it. Nobody else can be right.

I would simply respond to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), in the catalogue of questions that he had for which he wants answers, which is everything which he would like to have seen included in the Throne Speech, that that will come in time. If everything I have heard from Members opposite in Question Period were to be included in the Throne Speech, we would still be reading it. They think that everything which is on their own private agenda ought to be included in the Throne Speech. If it is not in there, obviously the government is immediately wrong. I would simply say to him that if he can endure with the perseverance of the saints, the rest will follow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill rises on a point of order.

Mr. Blaikie: The Hon. Member has made a comment. He also has asked me a question. He asked me whether I was willing to endure with the perseverance of the saints, and I would like to respond to that question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I see that the capacity for flip answers has spread along the Government benches. We now see Members, formerly noted for their seriousness, who are now, perhaps not guilty of narcissism, but are obviously taking their self-image from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and have lost the capacity to respond seriously to important questions.

I said that the Hon. Member's remarks were theological. Perhaps I did not explain well enough, but he entered into a discourse on the areas from which we get our strength and he said that such strength comes only from personal decisions. So if we listened to the Hon. Member, we would be free to bombard our people with all kinds of marketing, advertising and images, because presumably the realm of the ethical is only personal. People are supposed to sit there and withstand all that. The Hon. Member has confidence that they will be able to do that. I think otherwise. I think that the realm of the ethical is both social and personal and that we have a responsibility to make judgments about what kind of advertising, marketing strategies and various other things we will permit as a Parliament. That is why we are here. We are here because the realm of personal decision-making is not the only realm of decision-making.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta rises to make a comment.

Mr. Friesen: I would simply say to the Hon. Member that I am not at all confident that the public is naturally or uniformly competent to make all those decisions, or that they would make the right ones. But, thankfully, in a land of free people we have a right even to be wrong, to make wrong decisions and, hopefully, to learn from those wrong decisions.

● (1610)

Second, I would rather have someone make his own wrong decisions. I would rather have him do that than have someone else make them for him. That is the trouble with a centralist government which wants to make laws on everything to make sure that no one can make mistakes. The Government wants to make sure that it will impose such kinds of regulations that no one can make a mistake. That is what is wrong with the socialist frame of mind.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from my colleague opposite what system he would put in lieu of the market-place and advertising? It is my observation by way of a comment, Mr. Speaker, that their replacement would be with central planning. No doubt that the market-place would be gone; no doubt that advertising would be gone, because some central bureaucracy here in Ottawa, controlled by the Hon. Member, of course, would decide how many acres of wheat we would plant on our farm and, as it is in the Soviet Union, so that when July comes along and the rains come and one cannot plant, the wheat would still have to be planted because the Hon. Member and his colleagues in the New Democratic Party would dictate that. Central planning, Mr. Speaker, is what that Party is after. It is a denial of the individual freedom for which our ancestors fought, and we will never give that freedom up!

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I notice it is the same version of Canadian history which we constantly hear from the other side and which we used to hear from this side. In fact, there are still some of those Hon. Members on this side. However, we hope that they are a little more intelligent, the new Members, that is.

Mr. Orlikow: I would not count on it.

Mr. Blaikie: All we hear about is individual freedom, Mr. Speaker. We never hear about the fact that the Government had to intervene, that there was something called the "CPR", that there were all kinds of corporate, institutional and social initiatives when it came to the construction of our country. We never hear about that and, least of all, Mr. Speaker, we will never hear it from the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), because he sees the world through paranoid glasses when it comes to anything remotely to the left of Atilla the Hun. All that Hon. Member can ever hear when people are speaking is further evidence of the great communist conspiracy. Therefore, his question need hardly be taken seriously.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready to continue debate?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the comments of our socialist NDP friend, and I listened very carefully, I did not recognize the fact that he was speaking on the Bill which is before the House. He touched on many subjects, all of which have nothing to do with the Bill presently before us. The fact is that the Hon. Member totally and absolutely misses the point as to what is happening here today, and yet he has been here long enough to realize what is going on.

Perhaps I should reiterate what, in fact, is stated in the Bill and why this Government finally took the only honourable step to wind down the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation. It was done for numerous reasons. The first and main reason, of course, is the fact that there was a 1979 agreement with the provinces giving the provinces the jurisdiction for gaming operations. I did not hear any reference from the Hon. Member in that regard. In order to establish a spirit of co-operation between the federal Government and the provinces—rather than the spirit of confrontation which has existed over the past decade or more fostered by the previous Liberal administration—we took the step of closing down the sports pool and are now in the process of legislating that decision in order to create harmony between this Government and the provinces.

Second, of course, because the sports pool was such a well run operation—typical of the Liberal administration—it was losing over $1 million a week, which made the decision that much easier.

There were some individuals who suggested to us that we not close down the sports pool but improve upon it, make it more comprehensive and simple and then use it as a tool to try to get money out of the provinces in order to close it down. We rejected that option because that is exactly the way the previous Government operated. It used to have a big stick in order to deal with the provinces. That sort of federal-provincial relationship is out of the window as of September 4 last, I can assure you of that.

My main purpose in participating in this debate today, Mr. Speaker, is once again to assure Canadians of this Government's commitment to contributions for the Calgary Games of $200 million despite the closure of the sports pool. As I stated at a press conference on September 21, and I quote:

> This Government unconditionally accepts the commitment to provide financial support for the 1988 Olympics in Calgary to a total of $200 million.

I will expound in a few moments, Mr. Speaker, as to our commitment and where we intend to raise the money for that commitment. However, I would like to take a few comments to follow up on some of the historical background of the sports pool and lotteries in general, following on the statements made earlier today by my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). As you may know, Mr. Speaker, the first lottery initiated goes back to 1973, which was the Olympic lottery. This was initiated by the Liberal Government at that time for the purpose of trying to raise funds for the Montreal Olympics, which were held three years later in 1976. There were problems immediately and the Conservative Party, in Opposition at that time, made those problems known to the House and to the Canadian people. We suggested that the Government should not get itself involved in the lottery business at that time. However, being in the position we were as Opposition, we did not get very far.

It is somewhat ironic that in those days I happened to be the critic for fitness and amateur sports, for the Olympics and for lotteries. It was under those conditions that on February 27, 1976, and again on March 29 of the same year, I brought numerous and specific facts to the attention of the House regarding irregularities concerning advertising and ticket sales with which the lottery was fraught. Specifically, on June 1, 1976, I went on to call for an investigation into the Olympic lottery. However, in spite of numerous concerns outlined not only in this House but across the country, Loto Canada followed the Olympic lottery and was established just after those horrendous problems which developed in the Olympic lottery on June 7, 1976.

We continued, Mr. Speaker, to try to clean up the operation because we were promised by the Government in power at that time that the lottery would continue only as long as it took to pay for the overrun of the Montreal games. It is for that reason, and that reason only, that we eventually supported the formation of that lottery on a temporary basis, with the understanding that it would be closed down after the overrun of the 1976 Olympics was paid for. That was not to be the case, unfortunately, and, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government went on to create other lotteries, and so we found ourselves in the situation in which we are today.

When the Progressive Conservatives eventually formed a government in 1979, we stuck with the initial principle which we had from the very beginning when lotteries were developed in this country. That was to say, let us get out of the lottery business, let us get out of gaming and gambling. We do not want to be in it. The federal Government has really no right to be in it. An agreement was signed in 1979, with the unanimous consent of the provinces, giving the rights and the jurisdiction of lotteries and gaming to the provinces. Shortly thereafter the Liberal Government was elected, and immediately it went into action, ignoring this duly signed agreement between the provinces and the federal Government, and started to wind its way into the sports pool, directly breaking the agreement that existed between the provinces and the federal Government. That was just another example of the terrible lack of co-operation between the federal Government and the provinces. The rest is history.

The status of the two corporations today, Loto-Canada and the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation, is as follows. Regarding Loto-Canada, on November 1, 1984, some $15.5 million was paid to the Receiver General for Canada and $250,000 was retained to pay outstanding accounts. That was because even after all those years Loto-Canada was still in existence. In fact, the Auditor General said in his report on July 29, 1983, that the lottery was ill-founded by monies that were legally due but not paid to the Receiver General for Canada. He went on to say that he was concerned about the high level of expenses incurred by Loto-Canada. As a result of these inherited irregularities, this Government moved quickly to take the action I just outlined.

With regard to the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation, approval for $36.5 million was obtained on October 26, 1984, by this Government to be allocated in the following manner. Some $20 million was allocated to forgive the start-up loan. The Liberals borrowed $20 million to start up this mess. Then another $16.5 million was allowed to pay outstanding accounts which were derived as a result of losses.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, to put an end to this whole thing now, that the remaining matters relating to this corporation will be cleared up in the very near future. It is in very good and capable hands, that of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and officials of the Treasury Board and of the Department of Justice, and I am confident that this will soon be behind us.

To go back to the Olympic commitment and how we are going to raise the necessary funds, that is the number one question. Let me point out, Mr. Speaker, that it was never expected or intended that the full $200 million would be funded entirely from the sports pool profit. The previous Government saw this as only one of several sources of funding, and at least some of those we are actively considering. Others that we have in mind were not, as far as we know, considered by the previous Government.

Now, because the positive spin-off from the games by way of social, economic and cultural benefits will be realized by all provinces and regions of Canada, it is no secret that I have been negotiating and discussing with the provinces not only to engage them in partnership to help fund the Olympics, but also to work together in supporting and improving fitness and sports programs in a more co-ordinated fashion. I have had the opportunity to meet with my provincial counterparts responsible for fitness, sports and recreation, with some of them on numerous occasions now, and I can assure you that a true feeling of federal and provincial co-operation and consultation has become more than evident. I have also met and am continuing to meet with provincial Ministers responsible for lotteries. Of the ten Ministers who are fitness and sports or recreation Ministers, only four are responsible for lotteries. The other six are in different portfolios. I can report that progress is being made in forging the type of partnership between this Government and the provinces that I referred to earlier.

That is one way. There are other ways and means at which we are currently looking to help fund the Calgary Olympics, indeed, to help fund fitness and sports programs in the long run. For example, we will be introducing legislation to create an Olympic coin program, which should generate between $30 million and $50 million, depending on the price of silver and gold at that time. At present, the proposed program would involve 12 issues of one $20 silver coin, with a maximum mintage of six million units, and one issue of one $100 coin, with a maximum mintage of 350,000 units. An agreement for the use of the Olympic marks is currently being negotiated with the Mint, the Canadian Olympic Association and the International Olympic Committee. We are also seriously pursuing increased corporate sponsorship in the area of amateur sports and examining various ways to encourage the corporate sector to become more involved on a long-term basis after the games are held.

I truly believe, Mr. Speaker, that with some effort on our part the private sector can play a far greater role in both the funding of the Olympics as well as in being more directly involved in assisting fitness and sports programs, not only between now and 1988 but beyond that time. I am very seriously looking into ways and means of coming up with some form of incentives for the private sector to do just that.

I prefaced my address, Mr. Speaker, by emphasizing that this Government will be honouring its commitments to provide financial support for the 1988 Winter Olympic Games in Calgary. Indeed, we take this $200 million commitment very seriously. As I indicated previously, I would like to take this opportunity to expound a little on the allocation of those funds. Perhaps the most important of all the federal monies in the long term is the $30 million for the Olympic Endowment Fund. This is in fact a legacy for our athletes, both present and future Olympians. The fund will be used toward maintenance and operation of the Olympic facilities and will ensure that our national team athletes have world class training centres, such as the speed skating oval and the Olympic Park. In addition, these facilities will draw world class athletes and coaches from all over the world to train in Canada. This is yet another benefit which will stay as a legacy. Most important, these facilities are going to be used by the Canadian people themselves, from minor leaguers and beginners right up to those who are training for international events. So the legacy of the Olympics will live on after 1988. It is with pride that the Canadian people are going to look toward 1988 as the best ever Olympics.

Other funding includes $27.8 million toward the budgeted cost of the Olympic Saddledome; $35 million for the Olympic Oval, which is to be constructed by the University of Calgary; $62.2 million toward the Canada Olympic Park, which includes the ski jumps, the luge and bobsled runs; $30 million towards the Olympic Endowment Fund, to which I just referred; and $45 million toward operating funding for OCO '88, it being the Calgary Olympic Organizing Committee. To date we have expended $48 million of the $200 million commitment. In addition to direct funding, we have promised to provide essential federal services such as security, immigration and customs. The Government of Canada may also provide certain discretionary services on a cost-recovery basis.

Having said all this, Mr. Speaker, we are very proud that we were able to move as quickly as we did in closing down the sports pool in good faith with the provinces, a move which made good economic sense as far as the taxpayers are concerned because of the $1 million to $1.5 million loss per week. I can report to you that the funding to replace this $200 million commitment is proceeding on schedule. I can also report to you that the construction projects in Calgary to which I just referred are proceeding according to schedule. Having seen the sites myself and having met the top notch organizers of OCO '88 in Calgary and across the country, I am confident that the Winter Games in Calgary in 1988 are going to be the most successful ever held anywhere in the world and that Canadians will be proud of what we, along with the organizers, are doing and will do between now and then.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the Minister on his first speech in the House as the new Minister for Fitness and Amateur Sport, and I am happy to say he has confirmed all commitments made by the previous government with respect to the Calgary Olympic Games. I share his optimism that the Games will be a success, and I am sure that the organizing committee will not disappoint us.

I also found it very encouraging to hear that negotiations with the provinces are proceeding satisfactorily, and I would like to put a few questions to the Minister on the subject, having had occasion in the past to meet with provincial ministers. I would like to ask him what his position is on Quebec's sine qua non condition—which is public knowledge—namely, an amendment to the Criminal Code. After hearing the Minister's colleagues and their moral objections to lotteries and the rest, I would like to know whether the Minister shares the view of the Government of Quebec that lotteries and sports pools and such should be transferred to provincial jurisdiction by an amendment to the Criminal Code.

I also wish to ask the Minister whether, in addition to the commitment for $200 million, the conditions of a program such as "Better Than Ever", announced by the Government this summer, will be met, and whether the Minister is also committed to helping Canadian Olympic athletes prepare for the 1988 Summer Games. I know there is a lot of concern within the sports community, and I would like to know where the Minister stands in this respect.

To get back to the $200 million, I really would like to know what the Minister's position is on the Criminal Code amendment being requested as a condition by Quebec, and especially whether he intends to formalize his agreement with the provinces which, I am sure, will have no hesitation in signing an agreement with the Minister to provide the $200 million. I would therefore appreciate if we could have a progress report on negotiations as well as the Minister's position on the amendment to the Criminal Code.

[English]

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate being able to expound on some of the statements I made in response to the Hon. Member's question. The Hon. Member will know that it would be inappropriate for me to discuss in detail what is going on in our negotiations before they conclude. I can tell him that if he sees any problems or difficulties arising between this Government and the Province of Quebec, he must be looking into the past. I can assure him that in discussions with Mr. Parizeau the definite conclusion was reached that the Province of Quebec will be going along in principle at this time. We certainly feel very optimistic that when the time comes actually to formalize the agreement, the Province of Quebec is going to be very co-operative. Our meetings with Mr. Parizeau have been very cordial and positive. I repeat that I can only say that, as far as the Province of Quebec is concerned, the situation looks very bright indeed with regard to the formalizing of the agreement which I seek.

In response to the Hon. Member's question regarding the time when we hope to formalize this agreement, I think a Liberal Minister would have said, "as soon as possible". I would obviously like to have it as soon as possible. There are other priorities before us and before all Members of Parliament, the economy being one of them. I would hope, and I emphasize the word hope, that we will have a formal agreement before Christmas. If it is not before Christmas, then certainly in the early part of next year.

There was one other question which the Member asked, and that was with regard to the "Best Ever Program". I have already given my commitment to the associations and to the athletes that we will be going ahead with the "Best Ever Program". In future years, as far as dollars and cents are involved, there may be some modifications. There may be some improvements, but certainly the "Best Ever Program" is going to go ahead toward the Winter Games and the Summer Games as well.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question. I have listened with great interest to the speeches of both the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Minister responsible for Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) supported by a number of colleagues. An element of confusion has arisen. Just exactly why is it that the Government has decided to wind up the sports pool? Is it because it is losing money? Is it because it is illegal in the mind of the Government, in other words it breaks a contractual obligation undertaken by the Conservative Party when it was last in office? Or is it because of the serious moral questions which arise with regard to the appropriateness of funding matters of genuine concern through the sale of tickets based on the element of chance?

I can remember the original debate here when I spoke and the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) spoke. I do not recall the emphasis on that day being placed on whether it would be successful or, to any large extent, on whether it was in violation of the original commitment made to the provinces by the Conservative Party in office in 1979. There was passing reference made to that but the main concern, as I recall it, was that we felt it was an inappropriate way to raise the funds necessary for the ongoing programs which were needed in the country.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare said earlier that this was being done to a large extent because of the necessity for a much more congenial attitude to be developed between the provinces and the federal Government. He pointed out that the loss of substantial millions of dollars was an element. Colleagues of the Minister, speaking from the backbench, then made reference to the morality of it.

Is it because we do not believe this is an appropriate way to raise funds for necessary projects that this particular element of previous Government policy is now being disbanded, is it because it loses money, or is it because of the legal and contractual obligations? The Ministers nod that it is all three.

Mr. Jelinek: That may be confusing. I did not say that.

Mr. Deans: There is a dispute arising here. The Minister of National Health and Welfare says it is all three, but the Minister responsible for amateur sport says no.

Mr. Jelinek: Let me answer the question.

Mr. Deans: We have finally found the division in the Conservative Party. It is quite clear that they speak with forked tongue in an attempt to hoodwink the public of Canada again into believing that they are all things to all people. "Give the provinces what they want even though we believe it is immoral".

Mr. Jelinek: Do you want an answer or not?

Mr. Deans: You give the provinces what they want because some years ago you decided to give it to them anyway and then shucked the responsibility for it. Now, can I get an answer to that? Is it on the basis of morality that we have decided, or is it on the basis of legality?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member started his comments and questions with a phrase indicating that there appears to be some confusion in the wind. I believe that the only confusion that exists is between his ears. We have made our Party's and this Government's position now very, very clear. In fact, the Conservative federal position since 1973 has always been to oppose the federal Government's getting into the lottery business.

• (1640)

Mr. Deans: On what basis?

Mr. Jelinek: When we were finally in a position to come to an agreement with the provinces back in 1979, we did just that. We followed our own principles from years before and got out of the lottery business.

Mr. Deans: On what basis? Did you do it because it was considered immoral or because it was considered illegal?

Mr. Jelinek: Our position this time is obviously that it was illegal. Our principal intent with lotteries is that we never supported them in the first place. That is the position that this Party has consistently taken. I do not see any confusion on this side of the House. If there is any confusion anywhere, it is on the other side of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The comment and question period for the preceding speech is now over. We will continue debate.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Epp (Provencher), seconded by Mr. Crosbie, moves that Bill C-2, an Act respecting the winding-up of the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation and Loto Canada Inc., be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans) moved that Bill C-5, an Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to commence this afternoon by extending to all of my colleagues from whatever Party who have returned to the House and to those from whatever Party who are here for the first time my congratulations and best wishes for their efforts on behalf of Canadians who elected them to take their place in this Chamber in the coming years. I think it is appropriate to set on the record that while there will always be controversy, dispute and argument in this Chamber, in keeping with the best principles of civility most of us who have been here for any period of time have learned to realize that we treat each other with respect and indeed sometimes even with affection. Therefore, I extend my best wishes to all of my colleagues and my commitment to work with all Members to achieve the task for which the public has sent us here.

Today I have the pleasure to introduce for second reading Bill C-5, which is legislation to increase the committed borrowing limit of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation to $30 million from the present level of $20 million.

I am extremely hopeful that Hon. Members will see fit to give speedy passage to this piece of legislation which was left over from the previous session, as its implementation is of considerable importance to the effective operation of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation and the 3,500 fishermen who depend on the corporation for their economic survival.

I should point out that on the previous occasions when it was deemed necessary to increase the borrowing limit, this was accomplished through submissions contained in Supplementary Estimates. However, some Hon. Members may recall that this procedure was challenged in the House and, as a result, the Speaker ruled that the only way to effect a change to the borrowing limit was through an amendment to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act.

When the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was first formed in 1969, the borrowing limit was set at $5 million. This ceiling was raised to $10 million in 1970, and to the current level of $20 million in 1974. Needless to say, since 1974 market prices along with operating costs, cost of fuel, wages, etc., have risen steadily, and there is now a demonstrated need to adjust the borrowing limit upwards.

It might be useful to Hon. Members if I reviewed briefly the situation which led to the creation of this Crown corporation and explain how it operates.

The Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was formed mainly at the request of the prairie Provinces at a time when they were very concerned about the recurrent price weaknesses for freshwater fish. It was a time when the fish resources of this area were largely neglected, the fishermen felt abandoned and exploited, and there was no consistency or policy that allowed the fishermen a decent return for their work. With the exception of the Great Lakes, the marketing, processing and export of freshwater fish was traditionally carried out by many small firms. As most of this production was exported to the United States, the small Canadian exporters were usually at a disadvantage when attempting to deal with the large and powerful American importers. This resulted in a wide fluctuation in prices during the season, which in turn created instability and uncertainty among operating firms and the fishermen.

When the McIvor Royal Commission of Inquiry on freshwater fish marketing looked into the situation existing at that time, it found that the business was made up of some 6,000 fishermen, about 200 packer-dealers and 35 processor-exporters. It had an average total production of freshwater fish of approximately 72 million pounds and an export value of about $17 million. The fishermen are rather sparsely scattered throughout this vast expanse, and the majority of them are native people who have no alternative way of making a living other than fishing. There are several ethnic groups and many language dialects.

The commission found that facilities for receiving, handling, packing and storing the fish catch were not only primitive but generally unsuitable. The processing plants needed in this highly competitive business were almost non-existent.

The commission also found that the fishermen were receiving too small a share for the price paid by the consumer. Because they did not speak as one voice, they were relatively weak as sellers and they bore all the risks and uncertainties encountered in exporting.

The findings of the McIvor Commission resulted in the creation of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation on February 27, 1969. The basic philosophy underlying the legislation to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was, and still is, that returns to freshwater fishermen could best be increased through the establishment of a single selling body with the exclusive right to market and trade in fish in the interprovincial and export trade.

Through the corporation, freshwater fish is now being marketed in an orderly manner, with none of the fluctuations in earnings experienced by fishermen in earlier years. The corporation is also promoting and expanding in international markets, not just in the United States which has been the traditional market, but in European countries as well. Determined efforts are also made to expand our Canadian markets.

The corporation handles virtually all freshwater fish produced in Canada outside the Great Lakes, which amounts to about 50 per cent of Canada's total annual production. The area of operations, covering more than five million square kilometres, includes northwestern Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest Territories. In those regions the corporation buys fish either directly from fishermen or through agents, establishes initial prices for fishermen, packages and processes the fish, and markets them at home and abroad. About 90 per cent of all this fish is exported, and most of that goes to the United States.

The corporation, which has its main processing facility in the Winnipeg area, is obliged to operate on a self-sustaining basis. At the beginning of the season it establishes an initial price, which in practice is a floor price for the operating season. Any additional returns from the market are passed on to the fishermen at the end of the season or when the product is sold from inventory.

At this point Hon. Members might be interested in learning something of the current marketing operations of the corporation. I think I can do no better than quote from the latest issue of Freshwater Country, a very informative newsletter issued by the corporation. In his marketing report, Peter Smith, Vice-President of Marketing, said:

> At the same time that the coastal fisheries are struggling to survive, there has been a dramatic improvement in our financial position here at the Corporation. Our 1983/84 fiscal year which ended in April was extremely profitable, and we expect a sizeable final payment in December.
> During 1982/83 the recession in the United States continued to have negative effects on the fishing industry nationwide. Consumers were short of cash and concerned about the future. As a result, they continued to shop for the least expensive items available, and avoided expenses which they viewed as a luxury. This had a negative effect on sales and especially those to the restaurant trade . . . a market which is extremely important to our Freshwater fishery.
> While our industry continued to struggle with recessionary forces, production of some of our major species remained at record levels. This was particularly the case with pickerel and the result was a major decrease in prices to fishermen, as inventories climbed to uncomfortable levels.
> Production from our major competitors on the Great Lakes was also too high, especially during the winter. In normal years, the Corporation faces light competition in the winter fresh market, but warm weather enabled Great Lakes producers to continue fishing during the winter of 1982/83. As a result, Great Lakes producers captured a large portion of the fresh market, and prices dropped dramatically due to the surplus of fresh fish available.
> Other producers of fish from around the world were also attracted to the United States market because of the extremely high value of United States currency. This encouraged countries as distant as New Zealand to start shipping large quantities of fish into United States markets. Orange Roughy was one of these products. These boneless, skinless snow white fillets have been selling to restaurants for as low as $2.20 a pound.
> It seemed that absolutely nothing could go right for us during 1982/83 and it was not surprising when the Corporation was only able to show a year end profit of $40,000 on over $39 million in sales.
> During 1983/84 things started to turn around for the Corporation. Although we still faced heavy competition from other producers of fish, there was some easing of recessionary forces in our major markets. At the same time, production of pickerel dropped to normal levels in the Freshwater area and whitefish production remained manageable. Winter production on the Great Lakes was also down as a result of freezing weather, and the Corporation experienced a lucrative winter season.

By the end of April, 1984 it was clear that the year had generated a substantial profit. This will be available to fishermen in the form of final payments in December, 1984.

In starting the New Year, we find ourselves in an extremely good inventory situation relative to pickerel and whitefish. Furthermore, we expect that market prices for pickerel will hold up this year, and that prices for whitefish will remain relatively stable, notwithstanding any dramatic increases in production here or on the Great Lakes. This is all reflected in initial prices to fishermen, which show a substantial increase for pickerel and some increases for whitefish as well.

We continue to have concerns about sauger. Harvests of sauger increased by 50 per cent last year, and this inventory will have to be moved in order to affect any increases in the price of this species. The large majority of our sauger is breaded by the food service trade and is sold to family oriented restaurants that serve budget-minded clientelle.

Northern pike is another product that has given us cause for concern. Our major market in France has been unstable for several years as a result of the declining value of French currency. As a result, the price to our French customers has been steadily increasing, while revenues earned by the Corporation have remained unchanged. Last year's decrease in production came at an opportune time since exports to France were down 15 per cent. We hope that pike deliveries will remain moderate this year . . . especially considering the effect that Swedish pike production is beginning to have on our French market. Pike production from Sweden is expected to be 250,000 kilograms this year and estimates are that it will increase to 500,000 kilograms by 1985. The combined effects of devalued French currency and increased competition have already begun to have an impact on our sales of dressed pike. The switch to headless pike is anything but welcome news, but we have little choice given market conditions.

Lake trout prices are up substantially this year. This is primarily due to reduced trout harvests in the Freshwater area. Availability of trout from the Great Lakes is also a factor. Pollution problems there have reduced the supply of trout to the market, and demand is stronger than it has been for some time. A large degree of caution is necessary in dealing with trout, since any sizeable increase in production will dampen prices in this specialized market.

Prevailing prices for pink salmon also impact on trout markets. Today it is common to find headless and dressed pink salmon selling in Canadian supermarkets for as little as $3.72 per kilogram or $1.693 per pound.

Although these factors have not had a major effect on key markets for Lake Trout, we certainly have to be aware of their possible impact in the years ahead.

In this regard, we have some serious concerns about the long term effect of farm-raised salmon and trout. This is a tremendous growth industry in countries like Norway and Sweden, where fish farmers actually supply the market with custom sized fish. Farm raised trout from Argentina have also begun to effect markets in United States cities like Los Angeles, where they are available in retail stores for as low as $2.18 per kilogram or 99 cents per pound.

In the year ahead we will have to be especially cautious in our dealings in both new and existing markets. The forces at work in our industry are very volatile and there is little doubt that the industry will remain unstable into the foreseeable future.

Levels of production will play an especially important role in the year ahead. This is certainly not the time that we can afford any major increases in deliveries of any species.

We will be striking out in some new directions this year in an attempt to broaden the market for our products. This fall for instance, we are making a major move in the Los Angeles area. We will be introducing vacuum-packed pan ready style whitefish into chain stores in an attempt to capture a portion of the market in this major metropolitan center.

We will also be continuing our campaign to sell Northern Canadian Game Fish into exclusive restaurants throughout the United States and Canada. Reaction to this concept has been very positive so far and we are hoping that our efforts will begin to pay off in the year ahead.

That is the end of the article. I thought it was appropriate for it to be included in Hansard because, in a succinct way, it covers extremely well the activities of the corporation.

I am sure Hon. Members will be interested to know that for the fishing season just ending the corporation has had a very good year, with sales in excess of $44 million. A very substantial final payment to fishermen will be announced shortly. I might also add that initial prices for major species have been increased for the 1984-85 upcoming fishing season. This is an indication that the good times will continue for those engaged in the freshwater fishery.

As I mentioned earlier, the current maximum borrowing limit of the corporation of $20 million was established ten years ago. Since that time operating costs have continued to climb, and it makes sense that that borrowing capacity should be increased. If this does not happen, the corporation is likely to find itself in the impossible position of being obliged under its mandate to buy all the fish offered to it and at the same time will have insufficient credit reverses to be able to pay the fishermen, which, to say the least, would be most unfortunate. With the disposition of Hon. Members, I think that is not a likely outcome.

In conclusion, I would again like to stress the importance of speedy passage of this amended legislation in order that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation can plan its budget for the upcoming fiscal year and properly carry out the job for which it was created.

• (1700)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I again beg the indulgence of the House. I want to recognize the fact that this is the first occasion on which you, the Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees, have been in the Chair. The Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) is a young new Member from the Province of Quebec. I want to extend on behalf of all of us our sincere congratulations. I hope that you will enjoy your time in the chair and that you will dispense equal justice in the tradition of the Speakers in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House are also very pleased to see the Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) in the Chair. We wish him the best of luck, and I think I understand your "first night" jitters, having been in the same situation myself. In any case, I can assure you that you will have our full co-operation. Good luck!

[English]

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak today on this Bill, an Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act. It is a pleasure because this was placed on the Order Paper on one or two occasions by the previous Government.

Before speaking on the Bill, I would like to offer my congratulations to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) on his appointment. Like other Members, I wish him well, but not too well. I also congratulate him on bringing this Bill to the floor of the House so quickly. It is rather amusing that the first Bill the Minister brings in has to do with Crown corporations and, of course, in a positive way. I was under the impression from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) that Crown corporations were a sort of bad word. There is a valuable role for Crown corporations to play in our society, and I guess the Minister agrees with that.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans must have had a tough time with the Minister of Science and Technology, the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta, (Mr. Siddon). I remember a debate in this House on July 10, 1980, on a private Member's motion sponsored by the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta for the production of papers. At that time I spoke on the Government side in reply to the Hon. Member's request. What was amusing was that the first part of the Minister's speech today referred almost word for word to the speech that was written for me. It was obviously given to him by the Department. I guess that's the way it works.

In his speech, the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta was extremely adamant about the role of the Freshwater fish marketing agency. I wish to quote from page 2726 of the Commons Debates for July 10, 1980. This is what the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta thought. This guy is now a Minister in the Cabinet and a colleague of our friend, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. On July 10, 1980, he said, talking about the concept of the formation of this corporation, and I quote:

> That original concept was recommended by the McIvor commission in the late sixties and advocated by the Conservative government of Duff Roblin in the province of Manitoba. What that concept of a marketing board has become is, as I said a moment ago, a monopolistic, vertically integrated Crown corporation, like so many of our Crown corporations, which handles the product from the lakeside all the way to the consumer, whether the consumer be in the fish buying markets of New York state or Poland.

Here is what he said, and this is why I congratulate the Minister for bringing the Bill forward so quickly:

> I suggest what we have now is a system of monopolistic dominance in the fish marketing industry, in the prairie provinces in particular, which is a far cry from what I understand to be the principle of democratic socialism where free enterprise and the private sector can operate in competition with one another. What we have is virtual communism in all of its forms in the example and illustration of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

This has been quite a conversion. I understand the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is going to take part in this debate. I will not quote what he was saying, but we will watch him very closely.

I supported this corporation in 1980. My Government supported it. We went back to why the corporation was set up in the first place. It serves northwestern Ontario, the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and the Western Arctic. In some of those areas there are small communities and outports with a very small fishing population. It is difficult for fishermen in that situation, if they are small processors to compete in the market-place or to get any kind of return on their product.

At the time this corporation was set up, there were business operators who not only owned the little processing businesses and the marketing aspects of their agency, but who also owned the fishermen's gear. In other words, they owned the fishermen. That was not unique for that part of the country. I remember such operators in the fishing industry in the late 1950s and early 1960s in my province. One in particular not only had the processing business, but owned the fisherman's gear and the fisherman's house. Every year when the fisherman tried to get operating capital, there was another lien toward something. It left nothing for the primary producer, the fisherman.

This corporation was set up to help those primary producers who found it difficult to operate in the normal natural process of business. It is true that some of these businessmen have had some quarrel with this corporation. No doubt in some cases, because of the make-up of the corporation, a businessman would have some concern in certain areas. I know that if I were a businessman, I might have some concerns in certain areas. However, I think, as the Minister said earlier, that this corporation does the best for the most people involved in the industry. That is why we are supporting it.

I would like to see what other aspects of the corporation are beneficial. First, back in the 1960s before the corporation was formed, the small operators had tremendous difficulty competing, especially in the American market. There were a great many small exporters, but in the United States there were very few small importers. They were playing one against the other and keeping the price down. That is the kind of situation one can find oneself in when there are a great many small businesses trying to compete nationally and internationally.

The role of the corporation has been expanded to include Poland and some other countries. As the Minister stated, I think it is a bit of a success story. If I understood him correctly, I was very pleased to hear the Minister say that this year, the corporation expects total sales of $44 million and substantial benefits will go back to the fishermen. That, of course, is the principle of the co-operative movements in other parts of the country. Again, I would refer to my own riding in which there are two exceptionally well managed and well operated co-ops that have been able to do a great deal for the small fishermen. They are given a floor price in the spring and after the season is over and sales are complete, the profits are shared.

I believe that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation has a very positive impact on the western provinces and on western Ontario. I am extremely pleased to see this legislation before us now because it has been on the books for a long while. This Act was first introduced on April 29, 1983, under the heading of Bill C-149. It was introduced to the House at that time by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans of the former Liberal Government, Mr. De Bané, and was given first reading. However, because of government House business, the Bill did not go through all stages at that time. It was re-introduced by the Hon. Minister as Bill C-31, and that Bill, of course, received only first reading.

There can be no doubt in my mind that in order to run effectively in today's market-place, the borrowing limit of this corporation must be raised. It has been well over a year now since first attempts were made to increase this limit, and I am glad to see that it is finally coming about.

I know other Members wish to speak on this Bill today. Perhaps it will not go through all stages today. In general, I am sure that we in the Official Opposition will agree with it and we hope that the corporation has a successful year this year and that that success will continue for the corporation and for the some 3,500 fishermen it represents well into the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the New Democratic Party, I also wish to congratulate you on your nomination as Acting Speaker of the House. I understand there are several Quebec Members who are Conservatives in name but in fact, are New Democrats. If they want to cross the floor they will be most welcome.

[English]

Perhaps I might speak in English now so that you can understand me, Mr. Speaker.

This is my maiden speech as fisheries critic. I am looking at the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) who is present in the House. I would like to say how pleased I am to be fisheries critic as well as energy critic for our Party. I see that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is present. Just wait. She will get her turn tomorrow or the next day. We will see what happens in the statement that is to be made tonight.

I might as well be honest with the Minister of Fisheries. I do want to say to him—and I think this will be the last time I say this—that I do indeed regard him with a great deal of affection. Not only is he from Vancouver, not only is he outspoken, not only is he a lawyer and a chartered lawyer at that but he is a fellow Scots Canadian. I think that sews it up.

Mr. Fraser: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: He has also been known to have had some principles in the past. My job will be to make sure that those principles do not get lost within this new Conservative Cabinet and to push him so that some of his principles and views, especially those on helping the West Coast fishermen who are in real need, will get through Cabinet.

While I have all of this personal affection for the Minister, I put him on notice that since I represent a riding that borders on Trout Lake in Vancouver, I will expect that he will get some of his initiatives through Cabinet. If he does not, he will hear from us over here.

Having said that, I had better say something about the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, an Act on which I am an expert and about which I am pleased to speak. Just in case you do not know, Mr. Speaker, I should tell you that the Act was passed in 1969. This corporation has the sole jurisdiction to process and market fish in the prairie provinces, part of northern Ontario and in the Northwest Territories. It does not have jurisdiction in most of Ontario and in Quebec because those areas can look after themselves. This corporation deals with freshwater fish in one specific region of the country.

You would be interested to know, Mr. Speaker, that the corporation was set up because the private corporations, contrary to the mythology that we hear from the other side day in and day out, could not really handle and badly mismanaged the freshwater fishery industry in this area of Canada. The private corporations were not acting in the best interests of the fishermen. Is that not a surprise? The Government found that these corporations were mainly American controlled and that they were operating in a dog-eat-dog fashion, not a fish-eat-fish fashion. The fishermen were controlled by these corporations by the initial payments made to them. Start-up fees and so on were required at the beginning of the season, and that was too difficult for the fishermen.

The industry was in very bad shape at the end of the 1960s from the fishermen's point of view. Therefore, there was pressure for the establishment of this Crown corporation, which has been working fairly well. I have some criticisms of the Crown corporation which I will be making in a few moments.

You should be aware, Mr. Speaker, as you undoubtedly are, that the freshwater fishing industry is the second largest industry in northern Saskatchewan. Although sales of freshwater fish pale in comparison with sales of coastal fish, it is nonetheless a significant industry and has a great deal of potential for expansion. The Minister referred to some of this potential in his speech when he referred to new markets and so on.

We have the largest supply of freshwater fish in the world. Of course, we have what is probably the largest supply of energy in the world and the largest supply of forestry and minerals in the world. We are only waiting to have the brains to develop these things the way they should be in order to make us the richest country in the world. Some day we will do that.

• (1720)

An Hon. Member: There is hope.

Mr. Waddell: There is hope. Well, I do not know about that. We will have to wait and see. There is certainly hope for developing this industry.

The Canadian commercial fishing industry in 1982 landed 1.38 million tonnes, valued at $838 million. After processing, the catch was worth about 1.98 billion dollars. This is an industry which the NDP takes very seriously. We give it a very high priority. In the same year, the freshwater commercial fishing landed 550,000 tonnes, which was worth $62 million. Processed freshwater fish products had a value of $100 million. Although freshwater fishing is a small proportion of the Canadian fishing industry, it is nonetheless significant.

The fishing industry exported $1.62 billion worth of products in 1982, which is approximately 82 per cent of the industry's output. In freshwater fish, we exported about 88 per cent; much of it going to the United States, the European Economic Community, and to the rest of Europe and Japan.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the European Economic Community which was good enough to invite me this fall to study some of their problems. I studied the fishing industry in Denmark, Greece, and Brussels. I learned something about the European fishing industry. We could learn something from the way in which the Europeans handle their catch. I would like to thank publicly the officials of the European Economic Community for being so patient in dealing with an expert in fisheries such as I was at that point.

The major problem with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is that it does not own marketing plants in northern Saskatchewan or northern Manitoba. Fishermen living in those areas must ship their fish south to Winnipeg in order for their fish to be processed. Fishermen must bear the cost of shipping the fish south, and it is fairly prohibitive to them. As a result, a lot of fishermen in northern Saskatchewan are a bit peeved off—if I might put it that way—at the corporation. They actually petitioned the previous Government to opt out of the control of the corporation. I believe that was somewhat of an over-reaction, as I think there can be reforms made in the corporation, and I propose to suggest some reforms.

I would say to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that there is a lot of unemployment, both in northern Manitoba and northern Saskatchewan, which is the result of a lack of fish processing plants in those areas. In Lake Athabasca, for example, no fishing is being done on the Saskatchewan side of the lake. Also, there are complaints by fishermen in northern Saskatchewan that the quotas of fish which they are able to sell to the corporation are too low. This affects them, as they must make up for the extra shipping costs and they must ship more fish than their counterparts down South. Therefore, they want higher quotas.

Improvements are required with respect to the management and the operations of the corporation. For example, it is too centralized. It should expand some of its fish processing plants in the northern areas. One suggestion I would make to the Minister is that the board of directors, or its advisory committee, should travel to the northern areas of the provinces and talk to the fishermen about their problems. It is much easier for the board to go north than for the fishermen to go south. It is also much more intimidating for the fishermen to talk to men in three-piece suits than for the men in three-piece suits to go the other way. I know that it does not look very intimidating down here, but very often when people come from the North they find it difficult to deal with this cultural milieu. Therefore, I would make a pragmatic suggestion that the Minister could talk to the board and that the board should go and talk to the fishermen in the northern areas. Then we will not have, as we had in the last Parliament, the instance in which one of our Members from that area was petitioning, on behalf of the fishermen, to opt out of the corporation.

Fishermen are currently represented on the advisory committee of the corporation, but not on the board of directors. Therefore, they have no real decision-making power in the corporation. I say to the Minister of Fisheries, why not put them on the board of directors?

One of the things of which I was made aware in Europe—not with respect to fisheries, but generally—was a movement toward co-determination. That is a situation in which the workers of a company are on the board of directors. It is done in Germany. It gives workers the feeling that they are participating in some of the decisions which affect their lives. There is a certain limitation to this, and it takes a little while to do it, but it is a coming thing. In this corporation, I would suggest that it would be ideal to have some fishermen on the board of directors.

Another aspect of the problem is the general under-utilization of the industry. There are lots of whitefish in Saskatchewan waters, but the corporation is not buying them. The corporation gets all it needs from Winnipeg. Thus, in Saskatchewan there is the unfortunate situation in which whitefish can be bought from Manitoba and not from Saskatchewan, despite the fact that Saskatchewan lakes are full of the stock. Much of the fish which lives in the fresh water is suitable for being dried for export. We could be exporting fish to Africa and other Third World countries. There are plenty of markets abroad for fish. We should not limit ourselves to the needs of our country. The opportunities for export would result in more employment and growth in the industry. I spoke with fisheries officials in Athens, Copenhagen and Bonn about their fishing industries and the possibility of accepting more Canadian fish. There are some possibilities which exist in the EEC. We would have to make some exchanges for fishing grounds and other things in return.

When I was in Denmark, a gentleman informed me that if I wanted to know about cars, I should talk to Mercedes in Germany; if I wanted to know about the wine industry, I should go to France; but if I wanted to know about fish, I should talk to them. It is true. They can land fish which are in the North Sea and the Atlantic, and within 24 hours they are on the table in Paris. Not that I have ever eaten in a restaurant in Paris, but I am sure that the Minister occasionally does. The fact remains that whether a person is eating fish and chips or whether he is eating in a restaurant in Paris, the fish is good, and we could learn much from the way they market and process their fish.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), spoke in the House last year on this Bill when the capitalization issue was raised. The Minister now wishes to raise it from 20 million to 30 million. That is acceptable to us.

In summation, I hope that this Crown corporation is not privatized. I believe it has a role. I have pointed out some of the criticisms and difficulties which have been expressed by the fisheries, and I do so in good faith. I am sure the Minister will take these remarks back to the corporation. We would like to see more decentralization and more consultation with the fishermen. If we are to be in this together, we should consider the expansion of markets and the enhancement of enhancing the industry, canning, processing and other things. In that way it is hoped that we would facilitate progress for a very important industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Western Arctic.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) and the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who said what a great thing this Crown corporation was, a Crown corporation that has a monopoly on the purchase of fish. They said that there may be a few faults with it here and there and with the management, but the Crown corporation has this monopolistic power and that is what they want. Obviously, Sir, they have never talked to a freshwater fisherman.

• (1730)

Mr. Waddell: It is your Bill!

Mr. Nickerson: They would have a much different idea of things if they really knew what the FFMC was doing to the fishermen of freshwater country. I have given the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) the assurance that I will vote in favour of the Bill which he has presented to us today. I do that, Sir, for two principal reasons. First, I am a good Party supporter and would never think of voting against the Ministers of the present Government. I know they are very competent and are doing their best for Canada. I have great faith in them. The second reason, Sir, is that the Minister has threatened to break my arm if I did not vote for the Bill. However, in return, Sir, I expect from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that within a matter of just a few months he will bring into this House, in keeping with the policies of the Progressive Conservative Party, a Bill to amend the FFMC Act further, and the nature of that amendment will be to revoke the monopoly of FFMC in order to allow other entities into the market-place. That, Sir, is they key to getting our northern fishing industry going again.

The Hon. Member for Egmont gave us a brief history of this Bill. He told us that it had been brought in in 1980 and had died on the Order Paper. It was brought in again in 1983 as Bill C-31 and again it died on the Order Paper. I want to tell the Hon. Member why it died on the Order Paper. It is because the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans of that day had no concern with the plight of freshwater fishermen at all. That Bill was always No. 151 in priority on a list of 150 Bills. It was put there and absolutely nothing was done with it. That, Sir, is demonstrative of the difference in attitude between the then Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the present Minister.

The present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans commands the trust of fishermen throughout the whole of Canada. We have replaced complacency on the part of previous Ministers with action.

I would like to touch briefly on some of the figures involved. If one looks at the last available annual report of the FFMC in 1983, one sees that it had working capital loans of some $13.5 million, which was borrowed from the Government of Canada. It had fixed asset loans of some $4.5 million, again borrowed from the Government of Canada. It had approximately $750,000 in bank indebtedness, which brings its indebtedness to a total of somewhere between $18 million and $19 million. Therefore, until the new Government has the time and opportunity to make the necessary changes and if FFMC is to continue for the time being, it is necessary that we make this authorization for a further increase in borrowing authority. However, at the same time as we do this, Mr. Speaker, we should remember that the interest rate on some of those loans is nearly 16 per cent. The fishermen of the northern provinces, the Territories and parts of Ontario are paying about $500,000 a year in interest payments on those loans. What one has in microcosm is a similar situation as with the national finances of this country. In the national case we have accrued debts of billions of dollars and interest must be paid on it, which is cutting into the revenue. The same thing has happened with FFMC. It has had to borrow continuously more and more money, which puts that extra burden on the fishermen who are obliged to pay and pay the interest on those debts, debts which have been run up in the past.

There were many absolute horror stories in the past with respect to FFMC. There were warehouses full of fish and no sales. There was improper management. There was slack financial control of the corporation and all kinds of funny little practices going on. I remember the unauthorized attachment of rabbinical stamps to fish boxes for the Jewish market. I must admit, Sir, that some improvements have been made. I had the opportunity to visit the Transcona plant last summer and I was pleased to see that certain improvements in the operation have been made. There was certainly a better flow-through of inventory and better inventory control.

I would like at this time to compliment Mr. Sam Cunnah, who was one of the managers there. He has recently retired. I would like to compliment him in public for the work he has done. Undoubtedly there is still room for improvement in the management practices. Improvements have been made in the central plant in Winnipeg and Transcona. However, there are still severe problems in the satellite plants. The plant at Hay River is an example of a plant which is just not doing its proper job. Furthermore, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation just cannot get out there and sell fish, which is its mandate. That is what it was set up to do, and it is still not doing a proper job of selling fish and receiving a good return on behalf of the fishermen for the extraordinary effort they put into catching fish. In part, that is the world-wide situation. I understand there are equal problems on the East Coast as on the West Coast. However, I believe there are things which can be done so that we can sell the excellent products of our freshwater lakes and rivers.

There are two questions which should be addressed with respect to FFMC. First, should it continue at all? That, of course, is still under study. The new Government is taking a new look at all the Crown corporations in order to determine which ones should continue and which ones could better be dealt with in alternative ways, by privatization in one way or another. Second, if FFMC is to continue, should it retain the monopoly? I do not want to go into any great detail today on the first question except to give to Hon. Members this analogy. The FFMC has always appeared to me to be something like a lobster trap. One can get into it but it is almost impossible to get out. If the fishermen are asked whether they are any better off now that they have the FFMC than they were before, they will say that, no, they are not any better off. In fact, in the old days they were better off because they could sell their fish. There was always some kind of market in which they could sell their fish. I doubt if any Crown corporation can do as well at fish sales as private enterprise. Private enterprise does not have people just sitting there in some fancy office in Winnipeg hoping the phone is going to ring and someone will order fish. One has to get out there and sell. That is the way private enterprise works and would continue to work if we did not have this monstrosity called the FFMC.

The previous Minister, who has now gone to his just reward among the decaying leather seats of the other place, wanted to extend the Crown corporation monopoly into the Great Lakes. He wanted to put everyone down to the same level of misery. He could not stand the successful operation of homestead fisheries in the Great Lakes operated under private enterprise. He just wanted to spread the misery around.

With respect to the question of monopoly, I will say that this question can be addressed fairly quickly, and I hope it will. The position of the Progressive Conservative Party, which was worked out over a period of time and which was one of the promises we made to fishermen during the election campaign, is that we will revoke the monopoly presently enjoyed by the FFMC. That monopoly will be broken. It will be of benefit to two parties. First and foremost, it will be of benefit to the fishermen. They will be able to shop around and sell their fish to the people who will give them the highest price. They will not be in servitude to a monopolistic Crown corporation any more. Second, it will be fair to the people who wish to engage in the business of buying and selling fish. Would you believe, Mr. Speaker, that if I bought fish for resale, processing or whatever, something I consider to be an honourable undertaking, helpful to the country and everything else, I could go to jail under the Act for two years for buying unauthorized fish from a fisherman? Surely that is an infringement on the liberty of Canadians and should not be allowed to last any longer.

Mr. Waddell: It is called orderly marketing.

Mr. Nickerson: The socialists call this orderly marketing. They prevent people from going into honourable employment, helping their fellow man, providing jobs, putting good food on the table. This is what they do not want to see.

Mr. Waddell: Talk to any farmer.

Mr. Nickerson: Once FFMC gets out of the monopoly side of the business, it might continue to exist. I rather suspect it would not last too long in competition with private enterprise, but I have no objection to its continuing to exist as long as it does not have a monopoly. Once that happens, the alternative is a private operation as it used to be before. People used to invest in the plant for working capital purposes, to buy fish from the fishermen. They would go down to New York or Chicago and sell their fish at the best price they could. That used to work out pretty well. Alternatively, we could have a co-operative arrangement. Right now fishermen cannot form a co-operative to sell their own fish. Surely my socialist friend would approve of that. Perhaps not, because he does not call that orderly marketing. The socialists do not mind the freedom of fishermen to form a co-operative being removed by this House of Commons. I think that if fishermen want to form a producers' co-op, they should be able to do so, but at present they cannot.

There could be provincial involvement. Provinces are already involved. We were told that FFMC is now making a profit, but that is only because of provincial and territorial subsidies to the industry. I know that the Government of the Northwest Territories is putting about $400,000 a year in subsidies into the industry. Some is for price support and some is to help support the packer who goes around the lake to pick up the fish from the lake stations. Even so, the price paid for fish is ridiculously low. What most of the fishermen end up doing is wearing out their nets for nothing. I have a few headlines from local papers: "Fishermen Feeling Financial Crunch". "Fish Prices Still Low". "Bleak Season for N.W.T. Fishermen". So it goes, on and on. I do not think that that will improve until fishermen have the option to sell fish to whomever they want.

Mr. Blaikie: For a lower price.

Mr. Nickerson: I do not think the taxpayer should have to shoulder this burden.

Mr. Tobin: What about the $10 million?

Mr. Nickerson: We have the situation where the nature of the resource is such that it can be exploited profitably. Why can we not do that? Why do Canadian taxpayers have to put money into something which could be operated efficiently with a proper return to the fishermen? In the Territories that resource is one of the best in the world. We are capable of producing premium quality products which ought to be sold for premium prices. This is just not the case because it is mixed in with the other product from the provinces which is not so high in quality. Were the Territories able to develop their own specialty markets, we could command those premium prices. I am sure that in all probability the provinces would be better off too, because they could concentrate on what is then available to them. I know of cases where people have gone out and developed a market, especially for the Arctic char. They have found buyers, told the FFMC about the buyer and asked FFMC to buy fish from them. They wait around for two months and then ask the corporation, "Well, why have we not got an order for this fish?" The FFMC has turned around and given someone else that order. That is the type of thing that is going on.

My colleague, the newly elected Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk), wanted me to bring to the attention of the House his suggestion that Arctic char should be exempted from the species presently dealt with by FFMC. In the eastern Arctic there is a considerable problem in having to sell through FFMC. It would be relatively easy to go out and find markets for Arctic char. There is not that much produced and it should command fantastic prices. However, with FFMC involved, there is not enough effort put into marketing Arctic char and the producers are just not able to get the prices they would be able to if there was a free market in fish.

I was asked, Sir, to get through some of my remarks as quickly as possible in order that this Bill might get through the House this afternoon, so I will not go through some of the things I had hoped to say respecting the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Most of it was good. I was going to be very complimentary to the Minister, but I can do that another time. I would perhaps reiterate one of the points he made concerning the need for aqua-culture. If we continue to hunt fish instead of farm fish, we are going to lose out in the markets of the future. It is absolutely essential that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, through organizations such as the Freshwater Institute, get into research on fish farming so that when in the future other countries have products from their fish farms at lower prices, we will be able to compete with them.

Those, Sir, are my comments on the Bill we have before us. I support the increase in the debt limit at the present time, mainly because we have no other option. The thing has been run into the ground for so long. However, my main pitch has been and will continue to be, until this is implemented in law, that the monopoly of the FFMC should be revoked. Other organizations and entities, whether private enterprise, fishermen's co-op or something brought together by the province or Territory, can also get into that business and fishermen can continue to enjoy the standard of living they had before this socialistic measure was imposed on them in the late 1960s. We can then get this industry flourishing again. I am sure, with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) that we now have, that will happen in the very near future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We shall now go to the ten-minute period of questions and comments.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a quick comment because I am afraid to ask a question. I am watching the clock. I came in here this afternoon looking forward to supporting this Bill and seeing it speeded through second reading and into committee so that we could ensure that the Bill, after many, many years, would see the light of day in this place. But after listening to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) speak on this Bill I am beginning to wonder whether or not it is a good Bill. I am confused as to whether or not the Hon. Member—I am not asking a question, God forbid—is supporting or denouncing the Bill. It is quite confusing, Mr. Speaker, I have a little trouble when a Member says he is rising in his place to support this Bill to give FFMC an additional $10 million, and then spends the next 17 or 18 minutes denouncing FFMC. I am confused when a Member says that we must have this $10 million today, and then spends the next 18 minutes telling us that as soon as possible they are going to do away with FFMC.

It is only due to my interest, intrinsic respect for and confidence in the new Minister of Fisheries, who I am pleased to see occupying that post, and my great faith in him, that I will sit down and do my best to see this Bill get through second reading today.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We had discussions with the House Leaders of the Opposition Parties and my understanding was that they were disposed to let this matter go through all stages today.

Mr. Murphy: You let that idiot rant and rave.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I cannot respond to that unparliamentary reference by the Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) but I had understood this to be the case. If that arrangement is not now going to proceed in accordance with the clear understanding I had, I would like to know now so that I will be able to judge my future relationship with the Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Waddell: Speaking for the NDP and our House Leader, we would like to see the Bill go through. I believe the Hon. Member for Churchill has a few short remarks. We are prepared to let it go through.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, first of all I am a bit surprised at the Government House Leader disclosing discussions between House Leaders. It is not customary to do that in the House. We have no problem with seeing this Bill go through. We would like it to receive second reading this afternoon.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: All stages.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): If we give it second reading, we will advance the Bill. I do not know if the Government is willing to let the Bill drag.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You do what you have to do.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. May I just say to the Government House Leader, by way of instruction to the Government for future purposes, that if the Government wants a Bill to pass in an uncontroversial way through three stages, then it ought to make some attempt to ensure that Members on its side do not use the opportunity for making obviously ideological and controversial statements about the contents of the Bill. Out of respect for the agreement made between the House Leaders—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Blaikie: We do not have to put up with that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. It is argumentative. I think we should carry on. If we are going to pass the Bill through before six o'clock, either we should do it or else we should agree with what the House Leaders have agreed to do. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not plan on delaying the passage of this Bill. However, since the Churchill riding is one of the major areas that is actually affected by this legislation I would like to speak on it. I would like to speak on it in terms of what is actually necessary to improve the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. I am not going to take an ideological position which is just to rant and rave about how bad the corporation is. I for one happen to believe, as does our spokesman, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), that there are improvements that can be made to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

I happen to believe that the Minister was speaking along the same lines. I presume the previous speaker for the Conservative Party was speaking for himself. He did not seem to be speaking for the Government. I certainly hope he was not speaking for the Government, because, if it is trying to destroy and dismantle the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, it is going to be hearing from every fisherman in northern Manitoba and northern Saskatchewan and other parts of the country. They believe that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is the best vehicle for protecting their interests.

It is important that all of us realize that it was the failure of private enterprise which created the need for the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Most of the fishermen we are talking about are native people. Most of those people have felt that they were being robbed under the old system. They want the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation but they also want reforms brought to it. They want to see more processing taking place in their home communities. They want to see more control of that corporation by the fishermen. They want those types of reforms. They want more information in terms of the actual books of that corporation. That is the type of reform they want and that is a reasonable approach.

One of my complaints about the previous Government is that it never really considered the question of how to reform the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. It sat back and gave it money. The only debate we ever had in the House was over money, just as we are having at the present time. The debate is with regard to money rather than the actual structural purposes and levels of responsibility for the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Those are the types of reforms I would like to see. I hope that when the Government and the new Minister have a chance, that is what we will see.

I recognize that we want to pass this Bill. I recognize that the people in my riding would like to see this Bill passed, so I am going to sit down. However, before I sit down, I would like to congratulate you, Sir, on the occupancy of the Chair. It is nice to see a young man move ahead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mr. Fraser, seconded by Mr. Epp, moves that Bill C-5, an Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, he read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I could re-ask the question now that the Whip of the Official Opposition is here. My understanding is that the matter is to be referred to a Committee of the Whole and dealt with through all stages. That was the understanding I had with House Leaders, and it was confirmed again this afternoon by the House Leader of the Official Opposition. If there was such a disposition, I think we could deal with all stages of the Bill and pass it today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the House agree?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): This question was answered by the Official Opposition previously, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is no agreement. The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being six o'clock, pursuant to order made Wednesday, November 7, 1984, the sitting is suspended until six-thirty o'clock this day.

At six o'clock the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 6.30 p.m.

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Order made Wednesday, November 7, 1984, the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Economic Statement

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I asked my colleagues if they would sit down in order that they did not waste their energy now, in the hope that they might do that after as well as before.

Less than two months ago, this Government came to power with a national mandate for change. We did so because on September 4 the Canadian people made a clear and confident judgment about the future of this country.

Canadians voted for change, and for a better future, because they knew that as a country we could do much more to create that future; to create new growth, jobs and opportunities for all Canadians. In doing so, they have opened the way for a fresh start, for new confidence and a new national consensus toward achieving the promise and potential of Canada.

They voted not only for a change in policies, they voted for a change in the approach of government to the making of those policies. That is our mandate. That is our challenge.

[English]

The mandate of September 4 reflects as well a sombre judgment about the recent past. When Canadians looked back, they saw an unprecedented decade of soaring government deficits and rising unemployment; of expansive, intrusive government and sluggish, uncertain economic growth. They saw an economic world that had changed and a country that had not kept pace with that change. They saw their government and their economy dangerously off course and off balance.

Few Canadians will say that things are better today than they were in that great year of hope and achievement, our centennial year. Yet, fewer still believe that we can turn back the clock and return to the "good old days". There are new realities, new challenges. But something fundamental has not changed: our country is still blessed with rich natural resources, with the technological and financial capacity and, above all, the people to fulfill its great promise. It is not time to reclaim that future for all Canadians.

Toward that goal, we have taken stock in these past two months. I want to thank my colleagues for their help in charting our course during this challenging first stage of our mandate. Tonight I will share with Canadians the results of our intensive period of activity so that together we can plan our direction for the next four years.

There has been no holiday from decision-making for this government during this period. We have moved quickly to deal with the urgent need for action on a wide front. A number of decisions have already been announced. Tonight I will be announcing further important measures which make a good start on fulfilling our promises.

But most importantly, I wish clearly to set out the direction which we, as a new government, propose to take to fulfil our mandate for change. And I want to begin the national process of discussion and consultation that is so essential to achieving our goals. I will, therefore, be tabling a paper called "A New Direction for Canada: An Agenda for Economic Renewal". This Agenda paper is a statement of national purpose. It will be the focus for consultations with all parts of the Canadian community.

The Agenda paper recognizes the important economic responsibilities of provincial governments. Our aim is to promote economic growth in concert with the provinces. Dialogue will take the place of confrontation.

Canadians know that this country has been missing opportunities to create new growth and jobs. They know that our competitive position has eroded; incomes have barely kept pace with inflation; confidence in the future has seeped away; and they have seen that the efforts of government to solve problems have too often made things worse instead of better.

[English]

For too long, the Government of Canada has responded to serious problems in our economy by dealing with the symptoms of those problems and ignoring the causes. For too long, government has tried to substitute the judgments of politicians and regulators for the judgments of those in the market place, through excessive regulation and by trying to buy its way, with borrowed money, out of each new problem that arises. We have suffered, for too long, from the growing gap between the rhetoric of reliance on the private sector and the reality of increasing government intervention.

The Government has all too often acted to delay change by protecting, at the taxpayer's expenses, those enterprises which have been too slow to increase their productivity or unable to seize new market opportunities. By being a captive of the past, we have risked forfeiting the future.

As a result, business—and especially small business—has been hamstrung by increasing regulation which has sapped the creative energy necessary to take risks, improve productivity and create permanent and satisfying jobs.

Our objective is to release the creative energies of Canadians to build a better future for themselves, to give young people a chance to make a productive contribution and to open up new opportunities for women in the work place and for older workers who have lost their jobs. We want to put Canada back to work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Indeed, our nation's elderly and disabled cannot feel economically secure while so many of our youth are unemployed and the prospects for our economy are so uncertain.

Economic renewal will not come quickly or easily. It will come step by step. This government has resisted politically-appealing "quick-fix" prescriptions. There are no easy solutions for problems which have built up over a decade. Nor will economic renewal come without the co-operation of governments, business, workers and union leaders and other Canadians. Step by step, we must begin to direct our combined efforts toward expansion of the economic pie and away from an increasingly divisive struggle for a share of a static or declining one. We will not only have to work hard, we will have to work together in a truly national effort of economic reconstruction.

This government is prepared to lead this process of economic renewal. We have set for ourselves four challenges:

first, to put our own fiscal house in order so that we can limit, and ultimately reverse, the massive build-up in public debt and the damaging impact this has on confidence and growth;

second, to redefine the role of government so that it provides a better framework for growth and job creation and less of an obstacle to change and innovation;

third, to foster higher investment, greater innovation, increased international competitiveness and a positive climate for the birth and growth of new enterprise; and fourth, to bring about these changes in a way that is fair, open and consistent with the basic sense of compassion, tolerance and justice that is characteristic of Canadian society.

[Translation]

We will not weaken the basic income support programs. Indeed we will seek to find room, within our own capacity and through stronger economic performance, to provide even greater assistance to those Canadians who truly need it.

[English]

We have clearly set out in the Agenda paper the direction we believe the country should take, but we had another choice. We could have made more decisions and taken more action now, but to do so in the absence of full consultations would undermine not only the spirit of this undertaking but its effectiveness. We want to discuss further the means of achieving these goals with other governments, labour, business and other Canadians. We want their advice and their co-operation.

These consultations will be critical in determining the specific measures we will take and the timing of these actions. But however difficult the decisions will be, let me be very clear: we are determined to act. I intend to return to this House with my first budget in the spring to lay out the next phase of our program for econoic renewal.

Let me now turn, Mr. Speaker, to the economic and fiscal situation which confronts us.

Our economic legacy is one of high unemployment, inadequate investment, eroded confidence and personal hardship. From mid-1981 to the end of 1982 we suffered through the worst recession since World War II. The recovery, which began in 1983, has been only moderate by post-war standards and has been distinctly weaker than the recovery in the United States. After almost two years of recovery, business and consumer confidence remains weak. Cautious households, facing uncertain employment prospects and little real income growth, continue to save at high rates. Businesses, facing excess capacity, high interest rates and uncertain future prospects, have been reluctant to invest and to hire. Investment is more than 20 per cent lower than it was prior to the recession and employment has barely recovered to pre-recession levels.

We are talking here not just of economic failure, but of human tragedy; of real economic hardship suffered by thousands of families; of the social and emotional suffering caused by the loss of a job; and of the loss of hope and self-esteem of young people who find themselves unable to make a productive contribution to society after spending so many years at school. This is the unacceptable price of the failure to provide adequate employment growth.

No less serious or troublesome than the economic legacy is the deficit and accumulated debt situation which we have inherited.

In each of the past ten years the expenditures of the federal government have exceeded its revenues. These continuing deficts have led to an enormous growth in the burden of debt and the costs of interest on that debt. Moreover, unless we begin now to put our fiscal house in order, that burden of debt will continue to mount rapidly in the future. We are on a very dangerous treadmill.

To underline the seriousness of the situation, let me briefly review our economic and fiscal prospects. They are based on the assumption of slower U.S. growth in 1985, a significant decline in U.S. interest rates after 1985 and reasonably healthy world economic growth from 1986 to the end of the decade.

Based on these assumptions, growth in Canada would likely decline from about 4.2 per cent in 1984 to about 2.4 per cent in 1985. Over the second half of the decade, growth would increase and average about 3.4 per cent per year. While inflation would stay at or below 4 per cent for the remainder of the decade, unemployment would remain unacceptably high—11 per cent through 1985 and then declining gradually to about 7 per cent by 1990.

With this set of projections and no policy changes, the deficit for this fiscal year would be $34.5 billion, almost $5 billion higher than projected last February by the previous government. That is bad enough but that is not the worst of it. Current projections show the deficit increasing next year to more than $37 billion and remaining between $34 and $38 billion in every year for the balance of this decade. This is in marked contrast to previous projections that showed the deficit declining over that period.

Next year's deficit, at $37.1 billion, would be more than $9 billion higher than projected last February. And this increase would have been even greater if the previous government had not budgeted for a decline in support for direct job creation and training from $2.2 billion this year to only $1.2 billion next year. The increase in the deficit this year and next and its failure to come down in this decade, even with continuing growth, are major reasons for concern.

This is what we inherited. Not only is the situation serious today. If we don't take action it will be even more serious by 1990.

In our centennial year the net federal debt was $18 billion; by the end of this fiscal year it will be about ten times higher, $190 billion; by 1990, if there are no changes, it could approach $410 billion. Let me put this in more personal terms. In 1967 this debt represented about $4,000 per family; this year it represents about $24,000 per family. And by 1990, if we do not take action, it will be the equivalent of about $54,000 for every Canadian family.

I know that economists will tell me that this is not a perfect analogy, but I want to express the problem in its simplest terms. Many of us have taken on heavy debts in the form of a mortgage or a personal loan at some time in our lives. But we have done so because we believed our future incomes would increase faster than the costs of carrying that debt. If our debts and our interest payments continue, year after year, to grow faster than our incomes, we know we have a problem. If we reach the point where we must start borrowing money just to pay the interest on our debts, we know we have a serious problem. But this is the situation in which the Government of Canada finds itself today. This year almost 50 per cent of government borrowing is required just to cover interest costs and, if we do not take action, this will rise to more than 76 per cent by 1990. We believe we must act now to avoid a future crisis.

[Translation]

There is no easy solution to the problem we face. We cannot just grow our way out of it. Next year we will have completed the third year in this economic recovery and in each of those years the deficit will have increased—from $25 billion in 1982-83 to $31.8 billion last year, to $34.5 billion this year to a projected $37.1 billion next year.

[English]

Moreover, the economic and deficit projections I have given—distressing as they are—are based on an assumption that interest rates will fall to more normal levels in the second half of the 1980s. This assumption follows from my expectation that the returning United States administration and the new Congress will act to reduce the U.S. budgetary deficit and that this will allow the achievement of lower interest rates.

I would be the first to acknowledge that there can be no guarantee that this will be the case. And if interest rates do not fall, our economic and fiscal situation would be even worse. Growth would be lower and the unemployment rate could remain above 10 per cent for the balance of this decade. The federal deficit would continue to increase and could reach $50 billion per year by the early 1990s.

Finally, let me make it perfectly clear that the deficit projections I am presenting tonight are calculated on the same basis as those of the previous government, with one exception. For a number of years, the Auditor General has rightly argued that the accounting policies of the previous government did not give this House or Canadians an accurate presentation of the government's financial position. In order to provide a clear picture of the country's finances. I am announcing tonight that the government is prepared to implement most of the suggestions made by the Auditor General.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): These changes result in an increase in the projected deficit for this and subsequent years by amounts ranging from $500-$800 million annually. Full details are set out in the Agenda paper.

[Translation]

The projections for economic growth, unemployment and the deficit which I have presented are unacceptable. We can do better, but only if we approach this major challenge in a realistic way. And that means facing up to the deficit and debt outlook I have just described. The simple fact is that the mounting federal debt has become a powerful obstacle to growth and to private sector job creation.

[English]

A continuously rising ratio of debt to income threatens growth in three ways. It puts upward pressure on interest rates by raising expectations of future inflation and by competing for private savings. It limits the Government's ability to meet priority economic and social needs. And it symbolizes a state of economic mismanagement that undermines confidence and threatens the job-creating private investment that Canada dearly needs.

To promote growth and jobs, interest rates must be as low as can reasonably be attained. Confidence must be restored. That is why we must take action to limit the deficit. We must assure savers and investors, in Canada and abroad, that the impressive gains we have made on inflation will be consolidated and continued and that the federal government will not place undue demands on Canadian capital markets. Such assurances can be provided only by responsible monetary and fiscal policies. Monetary policy must continue to stand firm against inflationary pressures. Fiscal policy must ease the burden on monetary policy and contribute directly to increased confidence and to lower interest rates.

This government is committed to act now. Because I believe that deficit reduction is the key to rebuilding confidence, and confidence is the key to growth and job creation, controlling the deficit must be our priority for this year and for each year of our mandate. The goals of deficit control and increasing job opportunities cannot be separated.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): For us the question is not whether to act or when to act, but how best to act.

We believe that there are things government should do more of in this country to promote growth, jobs and social justice. We set out earlier this year a number of policy initiatives and I will announce action on some of these tonight. But, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said during the summer, we are committed to implement these policies within an over-all framework of fiscal responsibility over the course of our mandate. And this means that to do more in some areas, we must do less in others.

[Translation]

Our immediate goal is to reduce the deficit through expenditure reductions and not through major tax increases. We have begun a searching examination of our own operations and of government programs. My colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, has directed an assessment of expenditure reductions and revenue recovery measures that can be implemented immediately, in order to begin to reduce the deficit and to create room for us to take new initiatives. He has had the full and complete co-operation of all ministers.

● (1900)

[English]

As a result of this review, I am able to announce that more than $4.2 billion of expenditure reductions and revenue recovery measures will be implemented in 1985-86.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is the first full year of our mandate and the first opportunity that we have to make a meaningful cut in the size of the federal Government spending. These measures, though, will have a continuing impact. On behalf of my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), I will be tabling the full details of these measures later this evening.

In developing these measures, we have made every effort to look first and look hard at our own operations. About $700 million of the total expenditure reductions I am announcing tonight comes from overhead reductions and general restraint measures.

At a time when Canadians are being asked to accept reductions in government programs and services, it is appropriate that Cabinet and Parliament also contribute.

Ministerial pay of the Prime Minister and Cabinet members will be reduced by 15 per cent and 10 per cent respectively for the year beginning January 1, 1985.

Parliament will be asked to reduce its expenditures. The government will ask the appropriate authorities in both Houses of Parliament to examine the expenditures of Parliament as thoroughly as we have examined the expenditures of government, including greater cost-recovery in the operations of the parliamentary restaurant.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Make the press pay.

Mr. Broadbent: Make the press pay their fair share.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Thank you for the advice. If you want to join in, you are perfectly welcome.

The Government will propose the establishment of a parliamentary committee to study two other issues of concern. The current system of pensions for Members of Parliament warrants review. It is more generous than most plans in the private sector. Some differences may be appropriate because Members are forced temporarily to abandon their normal careers, but careful scrutiny of all the features of the current system is justified at this time.

A second matter which the committee will be asked to study is the issue of multiple sources of compensation for those who retire with a federal pension and subsequently are re-employed in the federal public sector. Included in this group are Members of Parliament, judges, public servants, members of the Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and employees of Crown Corporations. The present situation is very complex and raises questions of equity which should be examined.

[Translation]

In our broad expenditure review we have sought measures which would be consistent with the following objectives: to promote growth and employment, to treat all regions of the country equitably, to ensure that those in need are not unduly affected, to honour existing agreements with provincial governments and others and to fulfill our pledges.

[English]

I want to stress that we went as far as we could in the short time available. We do not believe that the job is finished. Further action will be required. A committee under the chairmanship of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) is continuing its review of federal programs and regulations, with a view to consolidation, simplification, ending duplication and improving service to the public. It will report shortly with recommendations.

In the coming months we will have to examine all government programs, to streamline those that can be made more effective in meeting economic, social and national security objectives and to eliminate those that no longer serve a vital public purpose.

I have described in the Agenda paper the process which we must now follow to gain greater fiscal flexibility. We will review a number of major programs including our economic development and foreign aid programs, unemployment insurance, housing and transfer payments to individuals and provinces. Changes in these programs cannot be made without substantial public consultations. With regard to our aid responsibilities, I want to confirm that we remain committed to making steady progress attaining our target of .7 per cent of Gross National Product devoted to Official Development Assistance.

Let me emphasize that our agenda for further action is clear, open and on the table. We will consult fully with Canadians to ensure the changes we will make will be fair, will assist our economy to grow and to create jobs and will not violate the sacred trust of assisting those individual Canadians who need our help.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We believe in a planned approach to expenditure reduction which allows sufficient time for those affected to adjust. The state of the economy will also be an important factor in how fast we move.

But move we must. Our goal is to reduce the projected level of annual expenditures by 1990 by $10 to $15 billion, inclusive of the measures I am announcing tonight.

[Translation]

Improving the fiscal balance will remove a major obstacle to the growth of incomes and jobs. But there are other obstacles which government places in the path of innovation and growth and these must also be removed. This is the second major element of our agenda. We must ensure that government itself—through its taxation, expenditure and regulatory programs—does not impede the change and adjustment necessary to improve productivity and increase our international competitiveness.

[English]

Many industries in this country are over-regulated. Others are over-protected, not just from imports but from domestic competition. Some programs designed to assist investment have the perverse result of distorting investment decisions and leading to the establishment of companies that are viable only with continued taxpayer support. Other policies and programs have sent the wrong signals abroad—signals that Canada had turned inward and did not welcome foreign investment, particularly in the energy sector. And many government programs carry on long after they are needed and represent only a fiscal drain. These are obstacles to growth, structural problems which need immediate attention.

As the government scales back its own activities, it is essential to take complementary action to ensure that the private sector can expand to provide durable growth and productive jobs. To do this, we must encourage enterprise in this country. We must reduce the regulatory burden, not as an end in itself, but to release the creative energies of individuals and companies to experiment, to innovate and to produce better goods and services at lower prices.

Thus, the third major goal is to establish a stable policy framework with proper incentives for investment and growth. We don't need a "grand design" by which government dictates what industries will grow and which will wither. We do need clear and reliable rules of the game.

We must create a framework which provides the incentive for new, productive investment and new jobs. We must create a climate of confidence in which companies can undertake research and development and innovation. We must encourage Canadian enterprise to seek out new world markets. And we must improve the opportunities for training and development for all Canadians.

Finally, we must ensure that growth will be for the benefit of all Canadians and that the costs of change will not fall on those least able to bear them. To provide this assistance, we must make certain that those who really require social assistance receive it. We must also ensure that our social support systems encourage self-reliance rather than create a dependency on government. We will examine our child benefit, old age security and unemployment insurance systems to see how they may be improved within this framework.

Our ideas for addressing these four challenges are set out in broad terms in the Agenda paper. It is a major document, signalling a major change in the role of government. More detailed discussion papers on many of these issues will be released in the months ahead by the Ministers responsible for these areas. They will pursue directions for change with their provincial colleagues and other Canadians who are directly affected.

Some Canadians will be daunted by the fundamental nature and broad sweep of these undertakings. I want to underline this Government's commitment not to act prematurely or with insensitivity on these issues. But I want to underline even more strongly the urgent national need to face up to Canada's economic problems. We must be prepared to talk. But then we must act for the benefit of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Some issues, however, cannot await further consultation. The current regime applying to foreign investment is one such area. My colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), will announce at an early date changes to the Foreign Investment Review Act. Similarly, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be proposing major changes to the Crown interest or "back-in" provisions of the National Energy Program. The clear message is that Canada wishes to become a better place for foreign investors to do business. This in turn should give domestic investors increased confidence in the Canadian business environment.

Other important matters must also be addressed. First, we must deal with a number of general tax issues which were before the House earlier this year so that taxpayers will know where they stand. Second, we must act now on several energy issues and matters related to the resource sector. Third, we must set the Unemployment Insurance premium rate for 1985. Fourth, we must begin to act on certain matters of social justice. Finally, we must address the issue of employment growth.

Let me deal first with the outstanding taxation legislation. The previous government left much unfinished business, some of it dating as far back as 1982. Some of this legislation does not go far enough to address our concerns. But it is imperative that the status of tax proposals, many of which affect this year's returns, be clarified.

Accordingly, I am announcing tonight that the draft Income Tax Bill published in August containing the proposals from the February 1984 budget will be proceeded with immediately with some minor modifications. We are committed to the small business tax simplification measures in that legislation. I look forward to building on them in future budgets.

The Progressive Conservative Task Force on Revenue Canada made an important recommendation that taxpayers must be considered innocent until proven guilty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In this regard, I intend to introduce legislation as soon as possible to permit taxpayers to postpone the payment of taxes in dispute where they are the subject matter of a formal objection or appeal by the taxpayer.

I have already announced that the Government is proceeding with the one percentage point increase in the rates of federal sales tax, effective October 1, 1984. I will be introducing legislation to confirm this and other sales and excise tax measures from the April 1983 and February 1984 budgets. Changes proposed in February in the administration and appeals area of the sales and excise taxes will be dealt with later, after further consultation.

I am also proceeding with the customs and tariff measures that were contained in the February Budget. These measures, modified slightly as a consequence of international negotiations, include changes to the Customs Act to implement the new General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade Code on Customs Valuation and related tariff rate increases on a small number of items.

A number of proposals made by the previous government in the form of discussion papers are also outstanding. The tax proposals for pensions and RRSPs have drawn constructive criticism as well as support. Modifications which address these concerns and achieve the objectives of the previous proposals are under active study. We will also be having discussions with provincial Governments on ways to strengthen both the public pension system and the standards for private pensions.

The gain-sharing proposals have also received extensive comment. The Government is strongly committed to the concept of profit-sharing and will be consulting further with business and labour to determine appropriate ways to support this objective.

I will address these and other outstanding tax issues, such as the transfer of tax deductions and credits, in my spring Budget.

Our resource sector has been slow to recover and commodity markets continue to be weak. Businesses have been making efforts to cut costs and remain competitive in a tough world marketplace. The Government can help. Farmers, fishermen, loggers and mine operators will be able to apply for a fuel tax rebate of 3 cents per litre on motor fuels used off-highway, an amount approximately equal to the federal sales tax.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): This will apply to gasoline and diesel fuel purchased from December 1, 1984 to the beginning of 1987. The cost of this measure is expected to be about $160 million in the fiscal year 1985-86.

[Translation]

We are especially concerned about the impact on workers when the principal industry in an isolated or remote community is forced to close. Such closures and the need for individuals to adjust are part of economic life. They cannot be blindly resisted. How they are handled by all concerned—business, labour and government—is a key issue that is addressed in the Agenda paper. The consequences of closures are particularly severe for workers in communities where alternative employment opportunities are limited or simply do not exist. We intend to offer tax relief for termination benefits in these circumstances and will consult with those affected before determining the precise form of assistance.

[English]

I have also put into effect orders remitting tax on certain northern allowances. The remission will run until the end of 1985 and I will review the situation and consult with interested parties during the coming year with a view to establishing in the law a more permanent regime.

I am also announcing tonight that the government will soon be referring a number of agricultural taxation issues to a parliamentary committee. These include the taxation of part-time farmers, the question of agribonds and the taxation of capital gains on farmland. The Government will issue a background paper on these issues and will request the parliamentary committee to report expeditiously. Should changes be made to the treatment of farm losses in the next budget, farmers will have the option of applying the 1985 tax regime to 1984.

Let me turn now to the energy sector. We have to deal with oil pricing. This Government believes that the time has come to let the price of oil be determined by the market-place. This would be consistent with the general move toward the reduction of government involvement and regulation in the market-place that I have signalled earlier in my remarks. Market pricing would provide a stimulus to the oil and gas industry. There would also be positive spin-offs for manufacturing industries in other provinces as exploration and development activity increased. There would, of course, have to be appropriate safeguards for consumers to deal with exceptional price surges. We shall therefore be consulting widely during the weeks ahead on the ways and means of moving away from price controls.

But we must immediately address a financial problem left by the previous government. The Canada-Alberta Agreement of September 1981 provides that the Petroleum Compensation Charge, a tax paid by refiners, be set at a level that covers the full costs of price subsidies for oil imports to eastern Canada and for new oil produced in Canada. The previous government failed to raise this charge earlier this year even though the need for the increase was very clear. The result is a deficit of nearly $1 billion in the petroleum compensation account, a deficit which is now growing by more than $140 million a month.

This is unsustainable. I am therefore announcing that the Petroleum Compensation Charge will be increased, effective November 10, 1984, by $17.50 a cubic metre. This is the maximum increase that could be made without raising oil prices at the refinery above world levels. Yet even this increase will be insufficient to hold the deficit in the account at its present level, much less reduce the inherited shortfall. The Government will continue to look for sources of revenue to offset this shortfall in its upcoming negotiations with respect to pricing and taxation.

Farmers, fishermen, loggers and mine operators eligible for the fuel sales tax relief which I announced earlier will also be allowed rebates approximately equal to the increase in the Petroleum Compensation Charge—a total of 1.8 cents per litre. In addition, the petrochemical industry will not be burdened with the increase in the Charge. The total cost of these rebates is estimated at $95 million. I must stress, however, that the Petroleum Compensation Charge relief will be available only until oil prices are decontrolled and must not be viewed as an enduring mechanism. Rather, it provides a short breathing space in which to complete the necessary adjustment to market-priced oil.

We are proceeding with changes to the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax as proposed by the previous government with two modifications. I am extending for one year the lower rate of Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax that applies to integrated oil sands projects and will double the threshold level of the small producers' credit from $250,000 to $500,000 effective January 1, 1985. The cost of these measures is estimated at $64 million in 1985-86. These new measures are only a beginning; we remain committed to a full examination of the fiscal regime in the oil and gas sector and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax in particular. But our immediate imperative is to pass the outstanding legislation so that taxpayers can have their tax returns for the last several years processed.

The federal Government is determined that its fiscal regime for oil reflect the importance of energy supply for Canada's future and the economic contribution that will come from greater industry investment. One of the principal challenges is to increase production from the oil sands. We wish to see expansion of the two existing integrated plants. As well, we want to see whether more plants would be built if incentives that adequately recognized the unusually large front-end risks of such plants were made available.

The federal Government is ready to discuss with potential project sponsors and provincial government the incentive framework that would have to be provided by governments to stimulate renewed interest in development of this immense resource, including the effect of the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax. We recognize, of course, that many of the factors relevant to oil sands development also apply to frontier projects and that the fiscal regime for the Canada Lands will have to reflect this.

We are concerned about the few high income tax filers who are paying little or no personal income tax because of the combined effect of tax credits and deductions. We are considering the introduction of a tax designed to ensure that the effective tax rate for high income individuals does not fall below some minimum level. In this issue, as in so many tax issues, the challenge is to make the system more equitable without undermining incentives for Canadian investment. We must also take care not to complicate the tax system unduly for the many Canadians not directly affected but who would face a more complex tax return.

The Government will undertake a thorough review of the situation commencing with a discussion paper to provide background information on a minimum tax.

The budgetary process itself and various aspects of the income tax system will be the subject of a discussion paper to be issued early in the new year. Both have come under increasing criticism from tax professionals and the public at large. The present system of developing, enacting and administering the income tax laws is now widely perceived as inefficient and less than fair.

For example, the traditional and long-standing Canadian practice of provisionally collecting taxes before Parliament has enacted the relevant legislation should be reviewed. It is time to improve the parliamentary process of turning budgetary proposals into tax laws and to involve the public more meaningfully in the development of budgetary proposals. Consultation will pave the way for major improvements in this vital area. I hope to be able to resolve these issues in my spring budget.

As a matter of law, the unemployment insurance premium rate and maximum insurable earnings have to be adjusted annually. Maximum insurable earnings will increase from $425 a week to $460 in line with the formula established in the Act. The current state of the account also requires that the premium rate be increased. However, I am concerned about the impact of a significant increase on employment and economic activity. Therefore, I am announcing that the premium rate for 1985 will be kept as close as possible to the minimum rate required by the Act. The rate will be increased by 2 per cent to $2.35 per $100 of earnings for employees and to $3.29 for employers.

In order to make the program more effective and less costly, a number of administrative changes related to the determination of eligibility for benefits will be made. These changes are part of the expenditure reductions I announced earlier.

To ensure that this program meets the needs of individuals in adjusting to rapidly changing labour market conditions at a reasonable cost to workers, employers and the government, statutory changes are likely to be required. Accordingly, the government has initiated a review of the Unemployment Insurance program to be undertaken on an urgent basis. A discussion paper will be published shortly by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), followed by appropriate parliamentary review.

The state of our finances will not support the costs of many new initiatives. It would not be responsible to proceed with many of the things we would like to do until we have made further progress in reordering priorities and strengthening our economic base. However, it is possible to begin to provide some greater assistance to those Canadians in need and to increase the resources devoted to the creation of employment and training opportunities. The Government will extend the Spouses' allowances program to all widows and widowers between ages 60 and 64.

• (1930)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Some 85,000 low-income Canadians, mostly women, will benefit from this proposal starting in the fall of 1985. Costs to the Government will be approximately $200 million in 1985-86. My colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), will be providing detailed information.

I am also announcing measures to improve veterans' pensions in order to ensure a more equitable and generous treatment from a society which owes our veterans so much.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The cost of these measures will be $22 million in 1985-86. My colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) will be providing further information.

Expanding employment and creating new opportunities is at the heart of our program for national economic renewal. We are committed to providing lasting jobs for all Canadians who want to work. The government will therefore be committing an additional $1 billion in 1985-86 primarily to help Canadians to acquire new skills and to find jobs in the private and public sectors.

[Translation]

Our goal is not to do more of the same through temporary make-work programs, but to offer those who are unemployed real opportunities to make a useful contribution to society. This requires a fresh outlook and new approaches that will ensure that employment and training programs are delivered more effectively than in the past.

[English]

The total cost of the new expenditure and tax initiatives I have announced tonight will be $1.5 billion in 1985-86. In addition, the government previously announced an allocation of $200 million to the Canada Works program, for direct employment creation in 1985-86. The expenditure reduction and revenue recovery measures I announced earlier will more than offset the cost of these measures. Indeed, the deficit we inherited for 1985-86 will be brought down from $37.1 billion to $34.9 billion and our inherited financial requirements will be reduced even further, from $32 billion to $29.2 billion. We cannot be satisfied with the level of the deficit and I intend to propose further measures in my budget following consultation on the proposals set out in the Agenda paper.

[Translation]

The measures I have introduced reflect the direction in which it is essential to go. We have begun to reduce the deficit. We have done so while increasing resources for our most important priority—employment creation—and while enhancing our support for individual Canadians who need and deserve assistance.

[English]

I am tabling the documents I have referred to earlier and Notices of Ways and Means Motions covering the tax and tariff measures I have described and a measure dealing with the interpretation of Canada's tax treaties.

There is an abundance of strength, energy, vitality and resilience in the people of this great country. Our imagination and enterprise are boundless, and there is no reason on earth why we cannot work together to build the kind of future we all want for ourselves and for our children.

This government is determined to lead the way in a national process of economic renewal. The agenda which we bring forward tonight provides a roadmap for a challenging and rewarding journey. It represents a new beginning for Canada. Change must come. The old ways of doing things have not worked. But change must be based on understanding, discussion, and above all, fairness.

This is a vital part of our mandate: to consult and to listen before acting. Building greater understanding of our problems and casting a broad net in our search for solutions are keys to success. The goals are clear; reaching them is the challenge.

I will begin by meeting provincial finance ministers and treasurers tomorrow, and the process will continue up to and beyond a National Economic Summit under the chairmanship of the Prime Minister early next year.

[Translation]

There will be no surprises. Our agenda is open and it is on the table. How fast we pursue it will depend on the support and understanding it commands in the Canadian community.

[English]

As we begin discussion on this agenda, I would ask Canadians not to lose sight of the broad national purpose to which we are pledged. We all come from different walks of life, different regions of the country, and we all have different backgrounds and interests. But our common bond is the desire we all share to see a strong and prosperous Canada. Achieving this will improve the lot of each and every one of us. We can achieve it if we work together to make it happen.

Let us remember that a strong economy leads to strong democracy, to greater protection for our basic values. And our future depends in a fundamental way on how we develop and strengthen our economy and democratic institutions.

We must have faith in ourselves and in our country. We must stop acting as if we were helpless in the face of capricious events outside our country. Let us strengthen our resolve to deal with those matters that we can control and thereby strengthen our place in the challenging economic world around us.

With the support, understanding and co-operation of all Canadians, we can make this country strong again. We can refurbish our image in the world as a good place to do business and we can build a future in which Canadians from all walks of life, in all regions of the country, can share in growing prosperity.

That is the purpose of this economic agenda. That is the goal of this government.

That is the challenge for this nation.

• (1940)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I understand there is a program on television called "That's Incredible" which usually deals with such events as the Hunsinger fumble, back in 1954 but I really do believe that our new Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), or perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself, would be a good candidate for that show.

We have heard a budget this evening, Mr. Speaker, telescoped into a Throne Speech debate; something on which there was no consultation. Frankly, I am not too surprised. If I were the Minister of Finance I would be very reluctant to subject this quite remarkable document and those that accompany it to a budget debate. Nevertheless, I would ask the Minister of Finance to assure us that he will be in the House tomorrow during Question Period, notwithstanding his commitment to the provincial Ministers of Finance.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I was going to start this evening by offering my congratulations to my hon. friend, our new Minister. I still intend to do so, not because of his statement this evening but because he had the courage to take on this difficult task today. I think I can say on behalf of my colleagues on this side of the House that we had great expectations of the Minister in question.

[English]

He is known to us as a serious, responsible, diligent Member of Parliament. He has been in the House now for several years and I think all of us have had some admiration for the solid performance and the intelligent and often non-partisan approach he has taken.

[Translation]

So now, unfortunately, he is trapped, as it were, by promises the Right Hon. Prime Minister made during the election campaign, promises that were generous and impossible to keep, and now the Minister has to take the responsibility for those promises. I will elaborate on this later in my speech.

[English]

I should tell you one other thing before getting to the body of this remarkable document. The Minister of Finance has other talents. He is a tennis player, I understand. In fact, I have seen his forehand. But tonight we have witnessed his backhand, and I can tell you it is not elegant and it hurts.

I feel, and I suspect that many in this Chamber, many in the two rumps of the Conservatives and those on the other side who do not look overjoyed with this particular presentation, feel that this is really not the work of the Member we have seen on this side of the House for many years. There is inspiration here from perhaps the "happy hacker" of 1979, or perhaps his colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) who has been wise enough to leave this place, at least for the time being. He cannot suppress his blush.

Mr. Prud'homme: Look at him.

Mr. Johnston: Quite right, he cannot suppress his blush. We all expected a great deal more, and I feel Canadians have been severely let down.

Having read the Throne Speech, and having heard the Minister read this document tonight, I must say that the Prime Minister had the wisdom not to defend the Throne Speech during his comments in the House yesterday. I read this new approach which, although I do not like to repeat, I will.

But I would do so just the same.

> This government is prepared to lead this process of renewal. We have set for ourselves four challenges: first, to put our own fiscal house in order so that we can limit, and ultimately reverse, the massive build-up in public debt and the damaging impact this has on confidence and growth; second, to redefine the role of government so that it provides a better framework for growth and job creation and less of an obstacle to change and innovation; third, to foster higher investment, greater innovation, increased international competitiveness and a positive climate for the birth and growth of new enterprise; and fourth, to bring about these changes in a way that is fair, open and consistent with the basic sense of compassion, tolerance and justice that is characteristic of Canadian society.

It all sounds terrific.

[English]

That is a lot of good rhetoric, and it is followed by what could only be described as a traditional "x" budget exercise badly carried out, as I will demonstrate in a few moments.

When I read this remarkable document this evening an image came into my mind with which all of us, at least of my age, will be familiar. We often used to look out on the cold streets of this city, my city, and undoubtedly Baie Comeau in the winter time, and would see the sparrows out there trying to get the oats out of the horse manure. I spent much of this evening trying to find the oats in this particular document. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that no sparrow would get fat on the oats contained in this particular piece of draftsmanship, with the exception, of course, of the continuation of the budget proposals which were tabled earlier this year by our Minister of Finance, and which I am happy to see will be introduced into legislation.

I was looking at Barbara Amiel's comments this week after she reviewed the Throne Speech; "pretentious clichés, shop-worn ideas". Now, Barbara Amiel is not known as a pillar of the Liberal establishment. I am anxious to see what Barbara Amiel has to say tomorrow morning now that she has read the second piece of this presentation.

Mr. Prud'homme: She is leaving Canada after having read that.

Mr. Johnston: I do not think it will be that bad. She pointed out, as all others have pointed out, that the promises so generously made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign are completely and totally incompatible with any kind of deficit reduction, and the Minister of Finance knows that full well. Certainly the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), who I see has had the good sense to take his leave as well, estimated those during the campaign at a cost, I think, of $20 billion. We on this side of the House know that that is impossible. We did not expect miracles from the Minister of Finance this evening.

Although he did promise miracles during the campaign, we do not expect any here.

[English]

The Minister said, when he looked at the projections which were presented to us, that in his view they were unacceptable. I agree with that, Mr. Speaker. They are unacceptable because, between the summer and November, using the same departmental officials, somehow the deficit for 1985-86 has blossomed from $27 billion odd to $37 billion odd. That is in fact about $9 billion more, and someone owes us a very good explanation for that inflated figure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: That has happened since this gang got its hands on the machinery of government.

Mr. de Cotret: Ask Lalonde.

Mr. Johnston: What we have watched here this evening is an exercise by which the deficit has been inflated, and then a budget exercise which brings it down to something like $34 billion in 1985-86. When the Throne Speech was read the Governor General told us that, yes, indeed, the deficit would be reduced, I believe in an orderly, balanced and fair way. What was also stated in the Throne Speech was re-emphasized in the rhetoric here this evening. I keep coming back to this point, Mr. Speaker, because we must be very careful with that group to make sure that the rhetoric we hear on the one hand is matched by action on the other. We have not seen that yet. We have seen just the contrary, as I will point out.

• (1950)

That being said, we were told that the Government would re-energize the private sector and that the jobs we all want to see would come from the private sector.

[Translation]

Sure, they are going to stimulate the private sector. They are going to find thousands of jobs in the private sector with their new policies.

[English]

I have in front of me the expenditure and program review under the signature of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). He looks a little sheepish and is also blushing, as he well might. Let us review some of these cuts that have been introduced. I will only mention a few of them because I do not want to take too much time in the House. Although they were not dealt with in any detail in the Minister's presentation, I think Canadians and my colleagues who have not had the opportunity would be interested in looking at a few of these measures that will stimulate the private sector and create jobs.

They are found in an interesting series of appendices to this document. For example, with respect to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, $75 million will be removed. I will not debate the merits of that, but will leave that to the critic. However, is that the way they will create jobs? Certainly not in the CBC. I ask the Minister of Finance how many jobs are involved in that cut? I am sure that he knows, but he did not tell us this evening. There is to be $7.5 million cut from cultural agencies such as the Canada Council, National Art Centre and probably theatre groups right across Canada. Where is the job creation in that cut or the stimulating of the private sector? With respect to the PIP Program and exploration and development, there is to be a cut of $250 million. Will there be many jobs created in the private sector through that cut? Clearly not, Mr. Speaker.

Let me continue with respect to research and development. Where is the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) who told us during the election campaign that they were going to increase R and D spending to 2.5 per cent of GNP, doubling it? Here we find that $34.6 million is removed from the National Research Council immediately, as well as other research programs being terminated. Is there a lot of job-creation there?

Let us consider the Program for Export Market Development. That is a program which we designed to stimulate export-led growth in this country to create jobs in this country. The Government will take $4 million out of that program. Are there many jobs being created there? The same is true for the Canadian Commercial Corporation from which $5 million is being taken. Again, this directly affects our exports and the capacity of this country to export to the world. An amount of $9.6 million is directly being taken out of the social housing program which provides work in the construction sector. We are all aware of the number of jobs that are created by the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program across the country. That represents a $29.4 million job loss.

I turn to Industrial Incentives Programs. I see the Minister of DRIE sitting across the aisle. There is $200 million taken out of the IRDP. That is the only real program which is designed to help small and medium sized businesses in this country. While the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and other Ministers opposite have said that that is where the jobs will come from, they are taking out $200 million in 1985-86. The way that program works means that applications would have to shut down in 1984-85 because they are ongoing through those periods. What kind of approach is that to the stimulation of jobs in the private sector? Did the Minister propose an alternative? Did he come forward and say that they will take $200 million but another program to stimulate that sector, in keeping with the rhetoric of the Throne Speech, would replace it? I have not found one innovative idea to create jobs in any of those sectors.

Let me cite a few more measures. There is "rigorous management of programs". That is interesting.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What about VIA Rail?

Mr. Johnston: My leader mentions VIA Rail. I do not purport to cite all of them, just those that come directly from the page. VIA Rail does appear on the page, with $93 million, repair facilities and so on.

However, let us deal with other measures that touch people directly. For example, the Government will reduce the six-week eligibility for unemployment insurance payments and get it down to three weeks. That involves $5.8 million.

There is the Mobility Program. On the one hand the Minister just discussed giving some form of tax relief in these communities that are affected by plant shutdowns, but on the other hand $2.8 million is taken out of the Mobility Program of Employment and Immigration. That program is designed to assist workers to relocate to areas of higher employment, allowing them to get jobs in other communities where jobs are available. The list goes on, Mr. Speaker.

I wish the students, who came to make representations to Members of the Conservative Caucus and a number of us as well, were still here. With respect to the Canada Student Loans Program, $5 million of financial help for students in this country is removed. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is blushing, as he should. I must repeat the response he gave in the House earlier today. I can see that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) is chortling because at least his commitment was satisfied in the Throne Speech debate.

Canagrex is gone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: I will let the response come from the critic and those people who use Canagrex to get their products into foreign markets. You might find another mechanism, but none of you are prepared to come forward with this other mechanism. Let us see it.

The General Industrial Training Program to provide financial assistance to employers to provide skills training is absolutely critical today in order for those people to get upgraded jobs. We see that $40 million is taken from that program. However, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) will conduct a study. In fact, there has been a new industry created by the Government. It is studies, consultations and committees. While there will be much unemployment there, it will certainly not be productive, particularly since in most instances the Government is trying to re-invent the wheel.

I thought the Prime Minister would blush at the mention of Summer Canada. There will be $85 million gone from this program which provides employment for students during summer months. The $84 million CHIP Program—another good employment program—is gone.

It is interesting to note with respect to capital projects that the Washington Embassy has been deferred a year. I hope the Prime Minister discussed that with the President.

I found it particularly interesting that two of the major research centres—the Manufacturing Technology Institute and the Research Institute in Shawinigan—were both cancelled. One happens to be in the riding of the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), while the other happens to be in the riding of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien).

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): How did they get there?

Mr. Johnston: Is the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) in the House tonight? The Maritime Forestry Research Institute in Fredericton, New Brunswick, seems to have escaped the axe. It is an institute of approximately the same magnitude. Incidentally, that was put into the Member's riding, for which he should be grateful. I think the cuts speak for themselves.

Finally, the greatest embarrassment of all must be reserved for the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates). How could you do it to him? He was sent to Washington to say that the Government would increase defence spending. He was to put new uniforms on our troops and increase our commitment to NATO, which we are told has been neglected by the previous government. But what do we find? The sum of $154 million has been taken out from departmental operations in Defence, with the bald statement that these savings can be realized while maintaining Canada's commitment to NATO. What kind of credibility does that leave the Minister of National Defence? In fact, what kind of credibility does that leave the Government as a whole? He has always said that we would maintain our commitments to NATO. I come back to my point.

• (2000)

Where are the jobs with these cuts? Can anyone tell me that? Does he think I did not notice that he is establishing here—

An Hon. Member: —Members from Quebec.

Mr. Johnston: Another thing—

[English]

There is the Natural Gas Laterals Program in Quebec, $85 million. Current construction will be completed but the rest of the program will be cancelled. Again this means jobs out the window.

I had thought that we might see some symbolic cuts. Unfortunately we have found some real cuts, damaging cuts. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that restraint starts at home. I understand Maxwell Henderson was on Canada AM this morning. He made that point. He said, "cuts begin at home just like charity, let us ground the JetStars, let us put them on the ground for a while"—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: —and "let us roll back some of those bloated ministerial assistants' salaries." It is pretty obvious that the Government needs highly paid assistants over there, but $80,000 is a bit much.

In addition, the Prime Minister and Cabinet Members will take a 15 per cent cut and a 10 per cent cut respectively. Having read this document and the accompanying material to the extent I have, I think that cut is modest. I am sure everyone on this side of the House, with the exception of the two rumps, will agree. In fact, if they had any humility, they would at least double that cut on the basis of the work they have done for this country to date.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: I see the Minister of Finance has taken his leave. I am concerned. I have expressed the opinion certainly of everyone in this caucus, and probably even the Members of the NDP, although they probably have not had time yet to check it with Dennis. My concern is to learn whether the Minister of Finance is really his own man. There is an important tradition in Cabinet that Ministers of Finance have the final word. They set——the framework for economic policy and they also have a policing function, which is extremely important, especially with the crowd across the floor.

I ask you, can we take the Minister's rhetoric at face value, considering what his actions have been up to now, including what he announced in his statement this evening? I say there is no comparison, and I would like to give two examples.

[English]

I read the Minister's speech which he gave in Ottawa to the Strategic Planning Forum Conference. He took a few gratuitous swipes at the previous government. He said that throwing money at individual problems without treating or even examining the whole patient was surely unconscionable quackery. I am delighted the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) is applauding that. Would he also applaud the $15 million investment in Petromont against the recommendations of all experts, against the recommendation of the principal shareholder, Union Carbide? Or, did he recognize that for what it was—political expediency of the worst kind. That is where the Minister of Finance is to exercise discipline, over his colleagues, which he failed to do. Not only that, Petromont was there during the election. Our government and our Leader recognized that that was not an investment in the interests of the taxpayers of the country. If there was ever a moment for political expediency, it was during the election campaign. The former Hon. Member for Verchères will testify to that. That is what I mean by: Is the Minister of Finance his own man?

[Translation]

Unfortunately, he is not and I would like that to change.

[English]

I should like to make another point. The Minister speaks of certainty in the tax system. This is the same Minister who, together with his colleague the Minister of National Revenue, decided to suspend advance tax rulings on certain kinds of tax credit transfers which were within the law and upon which advance rulings had always been given. This created a climate of uncertainty; proceed at your own risk because you do not know where you stand. What has the result been? Ask Algoma what the result has been. Ask Tembec what the result has been. The result has been direct job losses in the private sector. That is how the Government plans to re-energize the private sector.

[Translation]

So, if we want the Canadian taxpayers to know exactly where they stand, that policy must be changed tomorrow.

[English]

Nobody gave this Government a mandate to govern by uncertainty and instability, having run on the premise and with the rhetoric that what ought to be established in the country was a solid investment climate where people knew exactly where they were going, with the tax system set out, with advance rulings and so on. Frankly I find it incomprehensible.

I have another great concern with the Minister of Finance. I mentioned his tennis at the beginning. I would like to extend the metaphor. What we have seen in the Throne Speech debate and here in this financial statement is a series of lobs. I see that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) does not know the term. That is when one hits the ball into the air, sometimes as high as one can, to see if one can get into position before it lands. We have task force lobs, consultation lobs, committee lobs. We have a series of lobs thrown up by the Minister of Finance. That is not his style, because I have seen him on the court. However it is the style of this Government. Take him off that short leash. Let him give us the kind of programs in which he believes. Do not let him be the servant of the "happy hackers"; the Deputy Prime Minister, the Prime Minister with his generous promises, and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It is a shameful way to govern.

Also I have to spend a moment on this quite extraordinary introduction about the national legacy inherited by the Conservative Government—a decade of—I cannot remember the term. I fear I will have to read the document again, much as I would rather not. The cupboard is bare, we were told.

[Translation]

The cupboard is bare.

[English]

He garbs himself as Mother Hubbard. Mother Hubbard as I recall the nursery rhyme—but others have probably read it more recently than I—was not a hypocrite. She did not know that the cupboard was bare when she went to it. There is not one Member on that side of the House nor one Canadian who followed budget debates in the country over the last several years who does not know that the cupboard is bare. With a projected $29 billion deficit, would anybody suggest that the cupboard was not bare? Would anybody suggest that it would be barer at $31 billion or $32 billion? Now they are saying $37 billion, but I doubt that very much. It has always been known that the financial cupboard was bare, but there was a very rich legacy hidden away in that cupboard which the Minister of Finance studiously avoids mentioning, although he paid some tribute to the remarkable progress of the country in bringing down inflation, the greatest evil which can beset any society.

When I look at some of the comments made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign, he certainly knew the cupboard was bare. He was predicting deficits of upwards of $36 billion per year. Now he has the culot, as we say in Quebec, to come in here and tell us that they did not know the cupboard was bare. In fact, in many respects the situation is much healthier than they led the Canadian population to believe.

In fairness to previous Liberal governments of the last several years, I want to read a few facts into the record which will never be read by any other Party in this House. They were contained in various speeches given over the years. Now that we are in Opposition, perhaps someone will listen to us. I should point out in looking at this, and it may come as a surprise to many, that Canada now in terms of inflation is in fact lower than the United States. Based on the recent three-month period, our inflation rate July through September is 2.6 per cent. Put that in your cupboard.

Let me just give a few facts. We have been criticized for growth. Let us go back over the period from 1968. The Canadian Economy has grown on average 3.4 per cent per year, at a rate equivalent with France, faster than the United States, Germany, Italy, or the United Kingdom. Among the summit countries, only Japan has had a higher growth rate in that period.

Listen to this carefully because I have a feeling that most of the Conservatives in this House do not like to be inhibited by facts. Nor do our friends in the New Democratic Party. I will be brief.

In 1984, earlier this year, 3 million or 42 per cent more Canadians were employed than in 1968. The comparable average for the other six summit nations, including the United States, admired so much by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and some of his colleagues, is only 15 per cent. That is the comparable average in the other summit countries. We created new jobs at about three times the rate of our major economic partners under Liberal governments, under Liberal policies.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: That is what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister also found in the cupboard. Our record for absorbing new workers into the economy, at least until the mini-budget that we heard here this evening, has been a remarkable one, especially as regards women. In 1968, 2.5 million women, or 37 per cent of working age women in Canada, were employed. In 1983, these figures had risen to 4.5 million and 52.6 per cent of working age women in this country. That is another fact. That is another part of the legacy which we have given, involuntarily, to the Conservative Party.

We have had a faster growing labour force than any other OECD country. Without going through all of these, let me touch one in particular which destroys the credibility of the rhetoric which we find in this particular document about how dreadful things have been in the past 10 years.

Real disposable income per capita, which as we all know is a widely used measure of the standard of living, grew about 60 per cent in Canada over that period, which is well above the 44 per cent increase in Canada over the previous 15 year period. It compares with a 35 per cent increase in the United States durng the same period.

I do not think I need go on. I will be happy to table this document, if Members wish, in both official languages. It will give them the opportunity to educate themselves a little bit on the legacy which has been left to them. If they do as well in the period in which they have the over-all direction in this country, all Canadians and all of us will be grateful.

I must say that tonight portends terrible news for Canada. The prospects which we read about in this document are in no way represented by the particular actions, the particular steps that have been taken and put before the Canadian people tonight.

In concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I could go on all night, but I was told that I have as much time as the Minister of Finance. However, I am not interested in talking about every aspect of his budget. I mentioned a few which may turn out to be the most dangerous for our society. But I must say that it is an extremely shaky start for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). We are very disappointed and let down.

[English]

I am bitterly disappointed by what I saw there this evening. I had great expectations that finally, after all the rhetoric, after all the speeches, the Throne Speech and the election campaign, even though we are partisan, hidden away somewhere there was some approach that would be different, that would be creative, that would light the way to greater prosperity, to a lower deficit, meeting as many of the irresponsible promises put forward by the Conservative Party as possible. We have not seen that period. We are in darkness. All I can say is on behalf of my colleagues—

[Translation]

I would like to urge the Prime Minister to give more freedom to his Minister of Finance. He cannot be kept on a short leash as we saw this evening simply to protect the new government's credibility, which will no longer exist after tonight. He must be given more freedom of action, he must really have the mandate required to steer the government and the country. Since he does not have that, it is imperative to take action to avoid the consequences and the disastrous effects of the budget he brought down this evening. I, for one, always found the Minister to be a very flexible and reasonable man. It is obvious that he has detected the flaws in the statement he made here this evening.

[English]

If we were completely partisan politicians, we would rejoice. We would be chortling over here at this extraordinarily incompetent piece of economic strategy that has been put forward for Canadian consumption. But we do not. I say that more in sorrow, frankly, than in anger. If they continue down this road, I would predict that before the next election the sky will be dark, dark with chickens coming home to roost.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, on September 4 Canadians voted for a change. They had been told during the election campaign that the priority of the Progressive Conservatives, to quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), was jobs, jobs, jobs. Immediately after the election, we noticed a significant change in their priorities, to the deficits, to cuts, to tax increases. We have seen a move away from jobs to tax increases, to a reduction of services that Canadians have traditionally been used to.

What is interesting is that here is a government that for years and years has said to the people that we have to get government off of our backs, that we have to lighten it up, we have to get government off the back of the ordinary Canadian citizen. Tonight in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), Canadians are being asked to pay more in gas taxes. They will be expected to pay another 10 cents a gallon or 2 cents a litre. There will be more tax for watching television. Those with cable television will have to pay more. When you take out a divorce certificate, you have to pay for that. When you take out a citizenship certificate, you must pay for that. If there is a security investigation for your Visa application, you have to pay for that. When the government inspector comes to inspect scales, those who run shops and service stations across the country will have to pay for that privilege. All of the people who work in agricultural producing firms and have people coming in to check on their facilities will now have to pay for those federal inspectors to come on site. Those people who visit national parks will have to make increased payments. Those entrepreneurs who have a new idea or patent to register will have increased costs when registering that patent. It goes on and on, Mr. Speaker.

This was the Government that wanted to get the government off people's backs. We now have a document containing pages and pages of new and creative ways for the Government to be on the backs of ordinary Canadians once again.

In the Throne Speech on Monday night, we heard of a new era that was about to begin, a new era of co-operation, a new era of economic renewal and social justice. Tonight we see the reality. The reality is the same old policies that we have seen year after year, but with a Conservative face on them. We have seen cuts to services to ordinary Canadians. We have seen increases in taxation to ordinary Canadians. The result of this will be continual confrontation, continual economic stagnation and a continuation of the social injustices that exist within our country.

There has been no change, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister said earlier today that we would be applauding the economic statement of the Minister of Finance. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we are not applauding that statement. Ordinary Canadians will not be applauding the statement they heard tonight. The Government promised jobs and we have tax increases and cuts in service.

A number of symbolic actions were included in the statement. For example, for the benefit of Bay Street, the Government's net cuts out of this year's expenditures will be $2 billion in a $200-billion economy. Again, this is a symbol. The net effect will be job losses.

Our analyses to this point have indicated very clearly that while the Government says that the unemployment level will be 11 per cent next year and will slide down a percentage point or two between now and 1990, that will only happen assuming that the deficit and the interest rates in the United States will be decreased substantially. With the cuts in government services, the cuts in government programs and the increased taxes that Canadians will be paying as a result of this statement tonight, our analyses indicate that we will be seeing the loss of between 50,000 and 100,000 jobs in the months ahead.

We do recognize that there are positive items in this statement. The introduction of the measures proposed by the Auditor General was, I believe, accepted by all Members of the House as a positive step. The rebates in fuel costs that will be available to farmers, loggers and fishermen is certainly good news. Increases in spouse's allowance for those over the age of 60 and slight increases in pensions to veterans is good news. The Government said that it added $1 billion to job-creation funds, but, in a sense, that was a bit misleading. What the Government meant was that while the Liberals had promised a cut in the coming year, the Conservative Government was not going to make that same cut. It would keep the same levels of funding that existed this year. In a sense, there is no increase from the status quo.

The real news in tonight's economic statement is that there is good news for those on Bay Street. The billions and billions of dollars worth of tax loopholes that exist in our tax system were not plugged tonight. They were not touched at all. However, for the unemployed in Canada, for the under-employed in Canada, for the poor, for those people struggling to make mortgage payments, for the hard pressed small business person, for the farmers and fishermen, for those in the forest and mining industries, there is nothing in this budget. For the ordinary Canadian citizen, there is nothing in tonight's statement that will benefit them.

What is in the statement for the average, ordinary Canadian citizen is increases in the price of gasoline by 10 cents a gallon or 2 cents a litre and an increase in unemployment insurance contributions. The Government will again introduce all of the tax increases first introduced by the Liberal administration. This will result in $9 billion being taken out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians over the next four years. It will be taken out of the pockets of the small communities across Canada, of the rural areas across Canada and will be focused here in Ottawa. Those are Liberal tax increases that this Government has simply re-introduced. At least the Liberals had the courage to say how much the increases would cost. Liberal Members said that they would cost $9 billion over four years. In this statement there is no mention of that. There is only mention that there will be cost increases that have been in the pipeline as a result of the actions of the Liberal Government. The Government did not have the courage to admit what was going to happen.

I suppose the biggest surprise of all is that the oil companies, the corporate sector and all Parties in this House have agreed that one of the biggest boondoggles in tax give-aways is the PIP program. Each year, $1.5 billion is shovelled out to the oil companies to bribe them into exploring and developing our frontier areas. They say they do not need that. There was a cut, Mr. Speaker, but it was cut so that this coming year the oil companies will only receive $1.6 billion in PIP grants. However, there are significant cutbacks for research and development in the energy sector, and particularly in the area of renewable energy or the conservation of energy. There have been nearly $70 million in cutbacks to research and development in that critical area.

There have been cutbacks to research and development funding in the forest industry. If there is one item that Members of Parliament have been briefed on time and time again, it is the serious problem of research and development through to production in the forest industry. What is this Government's response to that critical and growing catastrophe in that critical sector? It is to cut back on further research and development in that particular area.

Presumably the Government may have indicated that the National Research Council would take up the slack. We have learned that funding to the National Research Council will be cut by $35 million. We know that we must explore and develop new markets for our manufacturers. What do we find? We find that export market development funding will be cut back by a few million dollars in this coming year.

What about social housing programs? In today's Toronto Sun, I read that housing starts across the country on an annual basis are now at about 129,000 a year. On the business page it is indicated that that is a virtual catastrophe for that critical sector. What is the response? The response is to cut out social housing on top of the cuts to the tune of $10 million made by the Liberal administration.

What about the RAPP program, the one program that hundreds and hundreds of thousands of elderly Canadians took advantage of? That program enabled people to make renovations to their home to extend its life for another 20 or 25 years. It was labour-intensive and helped seniors across the country, particularly those who live in some of the older neighbourhoods in the older parts of the country. What was the response? The response was to cut back on the RAPP program funding by a few million dollars. Funding to that critical program was reduced by $30 million.

Most Members of Parliament have sons or daughters, nieces or nephews, grandsons or granddaughters who take advantage of the Summer Canada Program, which affords them summer jobs and enables them to return to their studies in the fall. That program will be eliminated by this Government. The Government is saying that it will not help the young people of this country with summer jobs and that $85 million will be cut from Summer Canada. What a low blow that is to the young people of the country!

When the small business sector has ideas, skills and is developing markets but needs a little seed money to get its operations going, it looks to the federal Government or the provincial Governments to provide that seed money to enable it to take that first and critical step. The response of the Government is to cut funding to the industrial incentive programs to the tune of $200 million. The Government has said to the small business sector of the country that its good ideas will have to stay where they are just a little while longer.

There were cuts of $84 million to the CHIP program. Fisheries is a critical resource which is in difficulty on both the East and West Coasts. Funding to development and assistance of that particular sector has been cut $12 million. Of course, where funding is needed most, in research and development, it is cut by $1.5 million.

Research and development is critical to the future of the Canadian economy and in virtually every sector of the Canadian economy. But, the Government has cut it out. It has been totally removed. Research and development is not necessary! Every other western industrialized nation is increasing both private and public investment in research and development, except Canada. We are now notable for cutting back in that critical area. The Japanese have built 19 centres in the last year to develop research through production programs, at a time when Canada is cutting back. What a regressive step!

There is no mention of cutting back on the hundreds of thousands of dollars which Ministers spend each year on flights across the country in government jets. One could make comments about nannies and so on that are on the public purse, but one need not get into that.

This was an opportunity for the Government to send a clear message to Canadians that now is the time to change the course in this country, now is the time when action will be taken and the process of putting Canadians back to work into meaningful, long-term, permanent jobs will begin. The Government did not do that. It could have set not only targets to reduce the nation's deficit, but set targets to reduce levels of unemployment in this country. One can make the case that when there are 1.5 million people officially unemployed and hundreds of thousands unofficially unemployed, and when there are literally hundreds of thousands of small businesses and farms across this country on the verge of going into receivership, backruptcy, or on the verge of simply closing their doors and walking away disappointed, the Government could have taken some positive steps. It could have set targets for reducing unemployment. It could have sent a clear message to Canadians by cutting the increase in the federal sales tax, introduced by the Liberals when they were in power. The Government did not do that. That is a billion dollars which will be taken out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians. They are valuable dollars which will not be circulating in the small communities of Canada.

Where the Government really missed was on its opportunity to say something strong about interest rates. I realize the Minister of Finance said that he wished interest rates would come down and he hoped they would come down in the future. It sounds like the fairy tales my young sons used to read—if you wish it will come true. Having a lower made-in-Canada interest rate policy would have been a signal which would have kick-started the economy back into life. I do not know whether Canadians are aware of this, but we now have the largest real interest rates of any country in the western industrialized world. Most of our trading partners do not have the same real interest rates that we have. I think it is time that Canadians asked themselves: Why is it that we have the largest real interest rates in the western world?

As others have indicated, we just learned in the last few hours that as a result of these large spreads in interest rates the Canadian banking establishment managed to accumulate the largest profits of any banking establishment in any country of the entire world. I think we must ask ourselves if it is necessary to have those high real interest rates in Canada. Is it not time to introduce—as we suggested during the election campaign—measures which would ensure that the Bank of Canada would set rates which would result in a real return—which is traditional in this country—between 2 per cent and 3 per cent? Today the real return is about 8 per cent. What would happen in a country with interest rates in the 6 per cent or 7 per cent range? It is the kind of situation in which you find small businesses being able to afford their operations, where jobs would be created and homeowners could start to build their homes once again. If the interest rates in this country were at 7 per cent, the price of a typical Canadian home would be cut in half. In other words, homes would be affordable again and we would be moving away from the crisis situation which we are facing in our homebuilding industry.

Is it not time to review the tax system of this country? The Finance Minister had very little to say about changes in the tax system. He did say that we needed to look at a minimum tax for those thousands and thousands of wealthy Canadians whose incomes year after year may be $100,000 or $200,000 and who pay absolutely no income tax, not a single cent. Maybe they should pay something. But, rather than act on it, rather than take action and set up a committee to introduce legislation and programs to close off the loopholes, the Government said that it would think about it. It will study it, contemplate it, medidate on the concept, and sometime in the future it may act. That is not the kind of change that the people of Canada voted for on September 4.

Mr. Riis: We can imagine what Bay Street is doing tonight. The champagne is flowing. The federal Government is subsidizing corporations by more than $18 billion a year, and that will continue. The second largest area of welfare in the country is the billions and billions of dollars which we hand out to corporations with no expectation that jobs be created and with no expectation of affirmative action programs. In other words, you take the taxpayers' money and they will get nothing in return. If we are to continue to take taxpayers' money and give it to corporations, is it not time for Canadians to expect something in return, particularly jobs, for that kind of tax incentive?

We must change our tax system. We must take action on our tax system. When the tellers in the banks of Canada are paying more in income tax than the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Montreal combined, in terms of dollars and cents, something has gone wrong in the country. Our major banks are now among the richest banks in the world. They did not pay a single penny in income tax in 1982. Plus, they received a deferral for the next year of $22 million. That is the kind of tax system which we have. Canadians wanted change but there was no mention that that was the kind of change which Canadians could expect in the months and years ahead.

We feel it is time to start investing in our young people through programs such as the Youth Initiatives Program. That would result in substantial amounts of money being provided to our young people, which would allow them to develop the kind of employment opportunities that the country requires and that they are able to take. We feel that it is time to invest in a resource policy that would result in the upgrading of our resource sector, such as forestry. Significant increases ought to be placed in those sectors, which would result in economic return to the country such as reforestation programs, programs for disease control and pest control, silvaculture programs and fire control programs. We are talking about the need to create jobs in order to get the people of Canada back to work. We feel that that is how the deficit can be dealt with most effectively.

If small businesses are expanding their operations, if consumers feel confident, are employed and can purchase the necessary goods and services that they require, if farmers, fishermen and ranchers are in a mood of expansion and development, that means that sales taxes will start to flow into the federal coffers. It will mean that personal income taxes will start to flow back into the coffers. It will mean that the corporate sector will start to pay its taxes with a fair tax system. That is the way in which we would like to see the deficit reduced in this country, by putting people back to work and by expanding the economy. That is the kind of change that we feel Canadians wanted on September 4.

One can go on and on, Mr. Speaker, about what this document did not do tonight. We knew from the comments of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister that the cupboard was bare. What ordinary Canadians did not realize was that as a result of this economic statement their cupboards will be bare. As a result of this economic statement, rather than changes which will result in jobs, economic development, hope for the small-business person, what we have is an economic statement which will result in tax increases for ordinary Canadians, costs for government services which traditionally one would expect to pay as part of their taxes, and significant cuts in programs which will result in job loss and a reduction of assistance for economic development across the country.

We feel, Mr. Speaker, that this economic statement was not introduced in the best interests of ordinary Canadians but that it was introduced in the best interests of Bay Street.

Mr. Speaker: It being approximately 8.45 p.m., pursuant to order made Wednesday, November 7, 1984, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 8.42 p.m. the House adjourned.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

COMMEMORATION OF SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the House Order adopted yesterday, I recognize the Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees).

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege as Minister of Veterans Affairs to remind all Hon. Members that next Sunday is Remembrance Day. This year we have been forcefully reminded of just how much we owe to those who served Canada in war. Last June, millions around the world looked back 40 years and recalled the D-Day landings. The role of our three services in that magnificent undertaking won further honour for our country.

Other nations have shown their appreciation for Canadian servicemen and women this year. Members of the first Special Service Force, that unique unit made up of Canadian and American soldiers, were again hailed as heroes at a special ceremony commemorating the liberation of Rome. Other Canadians went back to Belgium to be greeted and applauded as the men who had restored freedom to that country 40 years ago.

Whether Canadians gather at the National War Memorial or before a village cenotaph, they will also be remembering all those who never got to know the final outcome, the 110,000 Canadians who lost their lives in the two World Wars and in Korea. As a nation, we can only offer them our thankful prayers. However, for the 700,000 veterans living in Canada today, and for the widows and dependants of those who died, we can demonstrate that our gratitude goes beyond words.

Many returned home from the wars to face a lifetime of pain or inconvenience. Widows and orphans were left to cope with a lonely future. Even today the rigours of wartime service are only just catching up to veterans in their advancing years. It is impossible to put a price on these legacies of war, but we can all agree that veterans have earned the right to be treated graciously and generously by the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Particularly as they get on in years, our veterans are entitled to prompt and courteous service. Men and women who, in their youth, were expected to obey without question, should not now have to struggle against the "if's", "but's", "although's" and "notwithstanding's" of officialdom. In all their dealings with my Department, veterans will receive the benefit of any doubt.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: I know members of all Parties in this House share these sentiments. The men and women we will be saluting on Remembrance Day unsparingly volunteered themselves when Canada was in danger. In return we must regard them as a very special group worthy of our unsparing attention each day of every year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, as spokesman for the Official Opposition, I too wish to pay tribute to those whose memory we shall be honouring next Sunday.

Once again, across this country, Canadians will be asked to pause for a moment and remember the sacrifices made by generations of young Canadians who shed their blood and gave their lives in the defence of freedom, in two World Wars and the Korean War.

Time goes by and in passing, has marked the faces of those who survived those battles. The ages of those who died are marked for all time on gravestones in military cemeteries in France, Holland, Italy, Great Britain, Hong Kong or beneath the timeless waves.

Since the end of the Korean War in 1953, Canada has become a nation of peace. The concerns of Canadians have been directed towards peace, employment and growth. For many of those who gave their lives, the service was their first job. The promise of youth was snuffed out in the mud of Flanders, the rugged mountains of Italy, in Holland's flooded fields and in the waters of the North Atlantic. In death they have become a part of our history, for all time.

On each Remembrance Day, we attempt to find words that will give meaning to the supreme sacrifice made by Canadians in defence of freedom. We live in a free country, where the equality of all Canadians has never been questioned. We live in a country where Canadians are free to pursue their goals as they see fit. That is the true meaning of their sacrifice.

[English]

The war memorials in the cities and towns of Canada, the wreaths placed upon them on Remembrance Day, and the minute's silence serve as reminders of the cost paid in full by the young men and women of Canada who answered freedom's call. That our nation itself is still open and is still seen as a land of opportunity is a lasting monument to their sacrifice.

• (1110)

Every year, fewer and fewer Canadians can recall from personal experience the deeds of 1914-18. Time has also begun to thin the ranks of 1939-45. They represent two generations of Canadians who defined Canada's nationhood with their valour and their blood.

Lord Byng, who commanded Canadian forces at Vimy Ridge in 1917, said that out of that battle "was forged a nation tempered by fire".

Out of the fire of the Second World War emerged a Canada able and ready to take its place as an equal among the independent nations of the world. And from the cataclysm of 1939 to 1945, came a Canada dedicated to peace.

[Translation]

The tragedies of war have created a firm commitment among all Canadians to peace and justice, for the people of this country and for all mankind. There comes a time when we must be prepared to defend our principles with our lives. Canadians have made this commitment in all parts of the world.

Mr. Speaker, when we pause for a moment of silence Sunday, let us promise to emulate their dedication to this country. That is the very least we owe them.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to join with my two colleagues, and Members on all sides of the House, to remind all Canadians that Sunday, November 11, is Remembrance Day.

Sunday will mark the sixty-sixth anniversary of the ceasefire in the First World War. I suggest that the House pause a moment to reflect on the sacrifices made by Canadian men and women in that holocaust, in the Second World War, and in the Korean War. Our feeling for them is deep and it is everlasting.

More than 100,000 soldiers, sailors, airmen and women served together and died for the ultimate goal, the goal of preserving our democracy and our country.

In these days, when many Canadians are concerned about the unity of our country, it is well to remind ourselves of those who gave their lives for its survival. These men and women fought, not for personal gain nor for glory or conquest. They fought for their homeland; this was their love. Duty was their creed. Truly they are Canada's unforgotten.

I would like to remind Hon. Members of the reference engraved on the Memorial Arch which connects the Veterans Memorial Buildings here in Ottawa. It reads: "All these were honoured in their generations and were the glory of their times". As Canadians we have a special obligation to perpetuate the memory of those who gave their lives for Canada. Let us in our time and in our way be worthy of them.

Before I conclude my remarks I would like to read something which was sent to my office a few days ago. It is entitled "A Prayer for Today", and was found among the effects of a Canadian infantry sergeant who perished outside Ortona, Italy, on a day in December, 1943. It reads:

> Today a bird sang for me. Today I leaned against the strong trunk of a living tree . . . So, I am not alone. When I get back to Canada I'll remember this. I will cherish all of life, for all life is really one. I will never again be a destroyer . . . This is my dream, that we will learn to live in harmony, not between man alone, but with the whole living world.

Let us, the living, keep the faith of this Canadian sergeant so that the incentive of this day may speed us onward and toward a better world of peace, freedom, and justice.

Our purpose is not to glorify war, nor was it the purpose of those who died in war. This is also a moment when we should give thought to thousands of our fellow beings whose lives are ones of intense suffering. They look to us in the developed world for assistance and relief. We have a responsibility to do everything in our power to ensure that those who went forward in the fight for peace did indeed fight the war to end all wars. Let us remember them.

• (1115)

Mr. Speaker: In the tradition of the House, I ask Hon. Members and those persons in the galleries to join us in a minute of silence, in remembrance.

[Whereupon the House stood in silence.]

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

THE ECONOMY

CUTS IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, during the recent election campaign the Prime Minister promised "jobs, jobs, jobs". The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) alluded last night to the fact that his Government would attempt to be compassionate. But what do we have, Mr. Speaker, except "cuts, cuts, cuts"? This budget was conceived probably in Washington and Bay Street, and directly affects the poor regions of Canada, in particular the cuts as they relate to the Petroleum Incentives Program—$250 million.

The Minister of Finance laughs, but the Canadian people are not laughing as a result of those cuts. The Canada Student Summer Employment Program had an $85 million cut; RRAP was reduced by $29 million; DRIE has a reduction in excess of $175 million. Small businesses in Atlantic Canada, western Canada, and parts of Quebec, have had another cut-back. During the recent federal election campaign the Tories promised that they would reintroduce VIA Rail runs. What happened there? A reduction of $93 million! Employment assistance and entitlement had a reduction of $200 million. With respect to national defence, another great Tory promise, there is a reduction of $154 million.

What about the general industrial training program? It had a $40 million cut. The young workers exchange program had another $3 million cut. The forestry research project in Newfoundland is cancelled for Corner Brook. The health and welfare office for Sydney is cancelled. The office building in Halifax is cancelled.

There is no compassion in this Government. There is no compassion in this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and in this Minister of Finance. It is Reagan economics. The Canadian people have been betrayed, and the Government will feel the wrath of the Canadian people as it moves forward in its mandate, because we will challenge it, Mr. Speaker, at every opportunity.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF INFLATION ON FARMERS

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I represent the County of Perth, a county that within its boundaries demonstrates everything good in Canadian agriculture. We produce more pork than any other county in Ontario. We are second only to Oxford in milk production. We have a large feather industry. We grow small grains, beans, corn, and fruit, on land which is very productive.

We have a moderate climate where crop failure is rare. Our people are family farmers, hard working and industrious, but I must report, Mr. Speaker, that many farmers in Perth are in trouble. They have not been ravaged by droughts, insects or disease; they have been ravaged by inflation, which the Liberal Government brought upon us, which caused them to over invest in order to protect their livelihood. They have been ravaged by interest rates which are a reflection of our deficit rather than the earning value of our dollar. They have been ravaged by low farm commodity prices and falling farm values. They have been victims of government policies and this cannot continue.

I want to tell my colleagues that farmers in Canada are becoming desperate and need assistance. The move by the Farm Credit Corporation to stall foreclosure is a welcome relief but does not solve the problems. Farmers are a tough breed, but they have been trampled on—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

DEFERMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS PROJECTS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the Government campaigned, it promised jobs, jobs, jobs. It promised hundreds of thousands of jobs overnight, and a new, bright future for Canadians. Now that it is ensconced with a bloated majority, it delivers not jobs but cuts, cuts, cuts.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Is there an echo in here?

Mr. Keeper: I want to say, Mr. Speaker, as one example—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Members are normally entitled to make their statements without a great deal of interruption.

Mr. Keeper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just pointing out that one area for cuts which the Government is making, in the neighbourhood of $277 million, is that of public works. We usually increase spending on public works at a time of high unemployment.

In order to understand what the Government calls savings, we need to know several things. We need to know how many jobs have been lost through these cuts, jobs in building these projects, and jobs in the private sector activity which has lost support. What are the increased costs of deferring these projects? If we have to build these projects in two, three, four or five years, how much more is it going to cost the taxpayer then? We need to know from the Government quite explicitly whether any of these projects will be needed in the future. I can think of one project in Winnipeg having to do with the export of new technology—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—RECONSTITUTION OF SUBCOMMITTEE ADVOCATED

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, through you I appeal to all Members in this place for immediate action on Canada's greatest environmental malady. The horrors of acid precipitation are too familiar to most Canadians. The Government of Canada has been delinquent in pursuing concrete measures for acid rain abatement. I hereby advocate the reconstitution by Parliament of the subcommittee on acid rain which officially fulfilled its mandate in June of this year. The subcommittee is gone, but the problem is not.

As the Member of Parliament in an area suffering greatly from the ravages of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions, I make this appeal on behalf of my constituents, and in the interest of areas like mine. During the past four years of investigation, the subcommittee on acid rain presented over 50 recommendations to improve the environment. I fear those recommendations will fade into a polluted sunset if the subcommittee is not reconstituted to follow them through.

Action here at home, and negotiations with the United States, are crucial to the uncertain future of many regions affected in Canada. By way of illustration, North American smokestacks and exhaust pipes produce enough SO_2 and NO_x to fill a freight train spanning the distance from Vancouver to London, England, each year. Can we turn our backs on that?

EFFECTS OF CUTS IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, never before in the course of Canadian history has a Government issued an economic statement that was so unabashedly regressive. This is Government for the rich, by the rich, and of the rich. In one fell swoop the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has torn away the facade of concern professed by the Conservative Party for the less fortunate in Canadian society. It also makes an absolute mockery of the syrupy promises the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made during the election campaign.

This Jekyll and Hyde manoeuvre will not go unnoticed by the Canadian nation. It is a tragedy of the first order because, behind all the numbers, Mr. Speaker, are people, average Canadians from coast to coast. The cuts will mean that 126,000 Canadians will be left high and dry in federal job and training programs. Untold thousands of unemployed will face reduced benefits, and 50,000 will no longer receive benefit cheques at all.

Programs for youth and students have been cut to ribbons. Eighty thousand summer jobs for students were wiped out. The slashing of one industrial training program alone will mean that 43,000 individuals, mostly young people will have had their hopes dashed as far as improving their job skills and future employment prospects are concerned. Amazingly, Mr. Speaker, we are told that these are just the first steps, there is more to come and "you ain't seen nothing yet".

Our Party will fight the Minister of Finance every step of the way on his Draconian measures. Liberals have always stood up for the underprivileged in our society. We have stood up for labour, the elderly, youth, and the handicapped, and we are not about to give up now.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

ACCOUNTING POLICIES OF FORMER GOVERNMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, last year the Public Accounts Committee considered the observations by the Auditor General on the financial statements of the Government of Canada. The House will note that the Auditor General, in his report on the financial statement dated March 31, 1983, qualified his report with four reservations due to government accounting practices. It was his opinion that the stated accounting policies of the Liberal Government of the day were inappropriate for a fair presentation of the accounts of the Government of Canada.

In its first report dated March 13, 1984, the Public Accounts Committee urged both parties to settle their differences in order that the Canadian people could have proper confidence in the Government's financial statements. Last evening the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated:

> In order to provide a clear picture of the country's finances, I am announcing tonight that the Government is prepared to implement most of the suggestions made by the Auditor General.

The House welcomes the statement of the Minister of Finance and his efforts to provide the people of Canada with true and accurate accounting information.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

CUT-BACKS IN GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, during the recent election campaign the Conservative Party, in response to questions from the Canadian Conference of the Arts, stated:

> We are committed to real growth and federal contributions to the cultural sector. . . . to maintaining federal funding for the agencies and councils in line with inflation—

Despite that promise, last night the Conservative Government announced a $75 million cut for the CBC and a $3.5 million cut for the Canada Council, the very agencies that the Conservative Party promised it would not attack. Both of these organizations are crucial to the development of culture in our country; both have been the pillars of Canadian cultural initiatives.

It is presently very unclear what will be sacrificed and how many jobs will be involved as a result of these cut-backs. The Minister should tell us whether Canadian TV production will be reduced—only the CBC does such production—whether minority language services will be cut, or whether there will perhaps be additional reductions in regional production facilities. Will the Canada Council be forced to cut funding to such cultural events as the Stratford Festival, or its already small grants to individual artists and writers?

The Government has reneged on its promises and broken its word. We ask the Minister to convene immediately the Standing Committee of the House on Communications to answer some direct questions on these cuts—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT'S ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a matter of national and even international significance.

[English]

As someone who worked during the last four years at the prestigious and objective Conference Board of Canada, I continuously had to live with the traumas of their accurate doom and gloom scenarios of our national economy. This morning I have already had a number of telephone calls from corporate and personal contacts that I developed during my years at the Board, from Ottawa-Carleton and from all across Canada. The consensus is that our new course of fiscal responsibility to planned prosperity is the right one.

● (1130)

As a member of what is now being called the southeast Conservative Caucus in the House, or the left rump, by some Hon. Members, I am proud to have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) as one of my constituents here in Ottawa. I look forward to teaming with him to deliver his so-called backhand with athletic vigour.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MARC GARNEAU, FIRST CANADIAN ASTRONAUT

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding to Oral Question Period may I call to the attention of the House the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished Canadian, our first astronaut, Mr. Marc Garneau, and his family.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

GOVERNMENT'S ECONOMIC STATEMENT—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last night in the House we were finally shown the true intentions of the Government. Last night, for the first time, we were finally allowed to see the Tory right-wing hidden agenda.

During the election campaign the Prime Minister talked about "jobs, jobs, jobs"—

—jobs, jobs, jobs and more jobs.

[English]

It is evident from last night's mini budget that there will be a significant loss of jobs as a result of cuts to various programs, particularly in the Atlantic Provinces, Quebec, northern Ontario, and parts of western Canada.

Did the Prime Minister consult his Minister of Finance and see a forecast given to him by his Minister of Finance before last night's statement or, more properly, budget, as to what the effect would be in terms of the net job loss in the various regions across the country? If so, would he be good enough to reveal those numbers to the House of Commons?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the most recent numbers on employment came out this morning. Unemployment has dropped by half of a percentage point. Thirty-four thousand new jobs have been created since the new Government was sworn in.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I think that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would agree with me—because it is consistent with what he has said very clearly and believed in for many years—that the only way that new and durable jobs can be created is through the genius of the private sector. We are committed to doing that by positive, active, government policy.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The unemployment figures, while slightly encouraging, are still higher than they were when the right hon. gentleman took office. Any improvement seems to have been concentrated largely in Ontario and not in those areas of the country which are brutally affected by last night's budget.

REVIEW OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has said on several occasions that our social programs are, to use his words, "a sacred trust" not to be tampered with. In light of the proposed review of assistance to the elderly, for the children of the country, for the unemployed, for housing, and for lower income Canadians, as mentioned on page 8 of the economic statement and page 71 of the document entitled "A New Direction for Canada", will the Prime Minister now reveal the total hidden agenda to dismantle the social programs of this country as part of what the Minister of Finance calls, in language fairly reminiscent of the West Coast, the "new realities"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): In fairness, Mr. Speaker, the only dismantling and radical change of social programs about which I have heard in the last year really came from the present opposition finance critic when he was seeking the leadership of his Party and proposed their abolition for a negative income tax across the country. That was a major departure.

For my part and that of the Government, we remain committed to the view that universality is a fundamental key to our social development. Given the process of consultation, we are ready to examine with unions, and groups who care for the poor and disadvantaged, the proper utilization and targeting of public funds.

It seems that if one is to enter a process of consultation it is legitimate to ask how best we can use public funds on behalf of those who need them most. That is what we are trying to do in a reasonable way. This in no way jeopardizes the principle that we have referred to, but it opens the door to legitimate considerations from a number of groups designed to help those in Canada who need it most. That is what we are trying to do.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Those were not the words that the right hon. gentleman used during the election campaign.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Would he undertake to appear with his senior officials before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs as soon as it can be constituted, so that he can explain to Parliament and, through us, to the country, how the economic and budgetary forecasts of that Department could alter the projected deficit for the next fiscal year—$37 billion as against $27-some billion forecast by Marc Lalonde, a difference of $9 billion—in a short period of nine months?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the simple answer to the question is yes. However, I would ask the Right Hon. Member if he would also agree that the mess, as he described it, with which he was presented after he became Prime Minister, should also be made public to the people of Canada so that they would know exactly what the Right Hon. Member was withholding from Canadians during the course of the election campaign.

PRIVATE SECTOR

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I made part of that available last night—a 2.6 per cent rate of inflation from July to September. I suppose that that is part of the mess to which the Right Hon. Member refers.

Last night the Minister provided us again with a first class example of saying one thing and doing something else. I heard the Prime Minister say in a press conference a few moments ago: "We are not going to throw money at problems". This comes on the heels of throwing $15 million into Petromont, which I mentioned last night.

The Minister of Finance said that there must be certainty and taxpayers need to know where they stand. At the same time he withholds advance rulings, destabilizing some major economic players in the economy. That is what we have seen.

We were told—again this is the rhetoric—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Hon. Member knows that he has the right to say something at this point but he should then proceed to a question, please.

Mr. Johnston: We are told that jobs will be re-energized by the private sector.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Johnston: Last night the Minister of Finance put $702 million of additional costs in the private sector. I ask the Minister to show us where, in that budget of last night or in any of his supporting documentation, the private sector is to be re-energized and jobs are to be created?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): If the Hon. Member and his Leader would read their own speeches during the course of the last six months, I think it would be quite clear in their minds that the way we can get private sector job creation going is by injecting a greater degree of confidence into the system.

We have said that one of the key steps that must be taken is to reduce the size of the deficit because, in the words of both those Members, that is one of the key reasons why business confidence and consumer confidence are down. We believe that, if we do that, there will be a very, very clear link between deficit reduction on the one hand and job creation on the other.

I cannot give the Hon. Member the exact figures he wants. It is much easier to come up with the precise figures on individual spending cuts. But I am convinced that over time there will be a substantial increase in job creation by the private sector because of the very positive response that is arising from my statement of last night, on the part of the private sector.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT

ALLEGED CONTRADICTION BETWEEN MINISTER'S DECLARATION AND DOCUMENTATION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, if our Minister of Finance is so sure of himself, why do his economic projections show an unemployment rate of nearly 9 per cent until the end of this decade? There is a flagrant discrepancy between his statement and what we find in the documentation. Can he explain that to the House?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has said that at the end of the decade, according to my projections, there would be a level of unemployment of 9 per cent.

Mr. Johnston: You said it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I believe the figure was 7 per cent. That 9 is the average from 1986 to 1990. But if the Hon. Member reads carefully, he will see that at the end of the decade it would be 7 per cent. I will take him through the book later, if he wishes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What I am saying is that those projections were made on the basis that no changes, no changes in policy were made. We set out the first start to the changes that we propose to make that will re-energize the private sector and if those changes are made, and if Members opposite would co-operate in generating those changes that we will be bringing forward over the next few months, then I am convinced that that level of 7 per cent at the end of the decade will be significantly lower.

EFFECTS OF GOVERNMENT'S PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister flows immediately from what was just said by the Minister of Finance. The Prime Minister promised in the campaign to produce jobs, jobs, jobs, just as we have been saying on this side of the House. Last night the Minister produced a program that gave Canadians tax increases and cut-backs which will destroy thousands of jobs.

The forecasts that were made in the budget documents for the coming year included assumptions about the interest rate situation, assumptions about what would happen in the American economy, but strangely enough did not include the effects of the program that was announced last night. I assume the program was run through the economic model of the Department of Finance. Will the Prime Minister confirm that this program was run through that model? Will he confirm also that it showed it would destroy thousands of jobs, that the effect of this program would be a net increase in unemployment? Finally, as a man who promised open government, will he produce those figures for the House of Commons?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Leader of the N.D.P. knows, models never can quantify consumer confidence or investment intentions.

Mr. Broadbent: That is not the question.

Mr. Mulroney: The signal sent out last night is a most important precondition to economic renewal in this country. I think that it is not unfair to say that the premise, as articulated by the Hon. Member, is inaccurate.

Mr. Deans: Inaccurate?

Mr. Mulroney: The premise of the Hon. Member's question presupposed that this program would result in the destruction of thousands of jobs. The program as set out by the Minister of Finance last night lays the groundwork, the essential groundwork, for correcting a malady that we were left with, and lays the groundwork for economic reconstruction on a durable base that will produce the thousands and thousands of jobs we need.

Mr. Deans: It is a dream.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, for three days in a row in this House the Prime Minister has continued to act like a campaigning politician instead of like a Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: He has not answered a question straight yet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Therefore, I will switch to the Minister of Finance and put the question directly to him.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE FIGURES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns his Department. Will he confirm that the effects of the program he announced last night were indeed run through the econometric model of his Department and that the employment effects shown by his own officials show there will be an increase in unemployment as a result of his program, not a decrease in unemployment? And if he confirms that, will the Minister give the House of Commons the figures?

Mr. Benjamin: The short answer is yes.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. The short answer is no.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The question of the Leader of the New Democratic Party is based on the wrong premise. He did not listen to the very clear answer of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Broadbent: I heard it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What the Prime Minister has said is that econometric models simply cannot measure the impact of confidence.

Mr. Deans: Especially if they do not tell you what you want to hear.

Ms. Mitchell: Take a look at B.C.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If I could answer the question, Mr. Speaker, I might be able to shed some light on the matter.

When the Budget of 1981 was brought in, there was a clear impact on business confidence and consumer confidence at that time, and that was not measured by the models at that time, by any econometric models. That had the effect of a major downturn in business confidence and in the economy. The reverse, I am convinced, is going to happen as a result of the initiatives that we commenced last night, and that should be very apparent as time goes by, even to Members of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT EFFECTS—DEPARTMENT'S CALCULATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has been around for a while. He was in business before. He has been in the House. He knows the use and the misuse of economic models, as do I, but I want a factual answer from him, not guff. I say put aside the question of business confidence. He may be right about that, he may be wrong.

I am asking a very specific question. Did his officials run the data and the effects of them through their econometric model, that he produced in his program last night? Will the Minister give a straight answer to that? Did they or did they not? I find it extraordinary that they would not have done so. If they did, will he confirm that they show negative results in terms of unemployment and, I repeat, will he give us the data? Then we will see what happens after the so-called business confidence effect comes into being.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the data were run through.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Where are the numbers?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What was the result?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I say to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and I say to all Canadians, that what we are doing here, in the statement last night and the agenda paper that was attached, is setting a clear, different road for Canadians to follow in economic policy. That different road is to say that we are going to have less reliance on government, more reliance on the private sector, and also rely less on the Government to solve all our problems.

Mr. Broadbent: Where is the data?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I want to say to the Leader of the New Democratic Party—if he could just move his mind away for a minute from the fact that Governments are going to solve all our problems—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Away from the 1930s.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that they are not going to solve all our problems.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): And if the Hon. Member would have some confidence in Canadians, the ordinary Canadians for whom he says he speaks—

Mr. Broadbent: Bay Street, yes. Go ahead.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —if he would have some confidence in those ordinary Canadians, he would have some confidence that there will be a far better economic future for them as the results of this program take place.

Mr. Broadbent: Where is the data? Give us the data.

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT'S CALCULATIONS BE TABLED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we have just had revealed in answers to the last series of questions incredible statements by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister that they issued one of the most savage series of cuts on the Canadian people without knowing what the job impact would be across the nation. That is an incredible dereliction of responsibility. As responsible parliamentarians we have to ask them whether they are prepared to table in this House, for the sake of all Canadians in all parts of Canada who will be savaged by the budget, what the impacts will be of this statement? Will there be 60,000 jobs lost? Will there be 100,000 jobs lost, or 200,000 jobs lost? The only way this Parliament, which the Hon. Members here say they revere, can properly debate and examine that economic statement is if the Minister is prepared to fess up the facts. Will he do that and table them today?

• (1150)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me draw something to the attention of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. The savage cuts which the Hon. Member talked about represent about 4 per cent of the total spending of the Government of Canada. Surely those are not savage cuts. They are not Draconian. They are a reasonable start to getting control of the deficit, which is one of the major obstacles to economic activity and a major obstacle to economic growth and job creation. That is why the two are very clearly linked.

I say to him, as I said to the person across the row from him, that if he would have confidence in Canadians to get out from under this load of government, and have the flexibility to do the things that they can do and should be able to do, then the job creation that is going to flow from the statement that I made last night will even make his head spin.

CANCELLATION OF WINNIPEG RESEARCH CENTRE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance says that these are not Draconian measures. I would ask him, therefore, how he would describe a cut of $200 million in a program that provides for major opportunities in expansion and modernization for small business in the Atlantic provinces, in northern parts of Quebec and Ontario, and in western Canada. It may not be Draconian where he comes from, but in our regions it is very Draconian. Will he not admit that the cancellation of a major high-technology research centre in my own city, without consultation with business and labour, and which was designed to bring in small business and the high-technology industry, is a Draconian measure? It was to help a region of the country that has been treated as a hewer of wood, and that Party wants it to stay that way obviously. Is that not Draconian? Is he prepared to come to Winnipeg next week and show us how he is going to replace the loss of all those jobs and, in particular, the loss of those job opportunities?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be in Winnipeg in about three weeks' time, so I will be happy to do that.

Mr. Axworthy: We will set up a meeting for you.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Thank you very much. The Hon. Member mentioned two programs. One was the regional industrial expansion program. I am sure my colleague, the Minister, will be happy to discuss this. Let me just point out to the Hon. Member that that program is going to be scaled back and it will affect mainly the tier one category, not tier three and tier four, and very very marginally tier two. It will have a much less impact on those areas of the country which need this help the most.

Let me now comment on the research centre in Winnipeg, something that I know is very dear to the Member's heart because he spent a lot of time on it, related not in any small way to his election campaign. Let me say that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the National Research Council were both in favour of that. That is why it was cancelled.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am forced to do this. I had to call a member of the Opposition to order a while ago for his length, and I must call the Minister of Finance to order for his length.

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT'S FORECASTS BE RELEASED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to my earlier questions. It is directed to the Prime Minister. It has just been acknowledged by the Minister of Finance that his Department has run the effects of the Government's program through a computer, through its model, to get the results. The Prime Minister has preached jobs, jobs, jobs. When he was on this side of the House he castigated the Liberals for keeping back information. The Prime Minister said he wanted more open government. My question is pretty straightforward. We want to see the recovery the Minister is talking about. We also want to see the statistical hard data on what the implications are of the Government's program. Will the Prime Minister now live up to what he promised in the campaign with more open government? Will he give the House of Commons and, more important, the people of Canada, the results of the forecasts made by the Department of Finance, based on his statement last night?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, any program of governmental action clearly depends on the response that it provokes in society. It depends on the investment decisions that will be made nationally and internationally. That is the way jobs are created, based on those criteria. The reaction of overwhelming approval from those who invest money to create jobs is a very important consideration of confidence building. As the Minister has quite properly pointed out, that is the kind of information that cannot be factored into any analysis. We are satisfied, based on preliminary reactions from the business community, here and elsewhere, that the steps that have been taken are positive and will be most helpful to those who need the jobs. The statement yesterday was based principally on job creation. That is what this Government is all about, jobs and prosperity.

Mr. Speaker: This is an unusual procedure. I recognize the Hon. Member for Oshawa on a supplementary in his Party's time.

REQUEST FOR DEPARTMENT'S STATISTICS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary. The Prime Minister knows that what he is indulging in now is a cover-up completely of the same kind we used to get from a man named Trudeau, exactly the same. It is hypocrisy. On this side of the House he preached open government. On that side of the House he is trying to cover up an unpleasant statistic. He knows the data that he has will show his program will lose between 50,000 and 100,000 jobs. Rather than admit it, he is trying to keep the truth from the people of this country. I ask a final time whether he will produce the information which his Department of Finance has and let all Canadians, business people, farmers, and the unemployed, pass their judgment on it.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that the question has been thoroughly and honestly answered by the Minister of Finance and by myself.

PETRO-CANADA

CALF-HIDE CHESTERFIELDS AND CHAIRS

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It was reported in the Calgary Herald that ten elephant-hide chesterfields were purchased by Petro-Canada for its executive offices. The cost quoted was from $8,000 to $15,000 each, a total expenditure in excess of $80,000. What a shameful waste of taxpayers' money, not to mention the loss of animals of an endangered species. If we are going to use the hides of an endangered species, we should use thick Liberal hides. Can the Minister confirm this newspaper report? Is the person responsible for this extravagance still in the employ—

Mr. Speaker: The question is clear and has been asked. I think that is a decent length for a question.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was kind enough to give me notice. I was able to speak to Petro-Canada officials and I established that they are not in fact elephant-hide chairs. There are two sofas and two chairs made of Canadian cow hide, manufactured in Toronto.

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE REDUCTIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, during the past week we have heard an awful lot about consultations. This Government was going to consult with everybody about everything. Last night we had the most massive change in Canadian Government in many years, without any consultation whatsoever. My question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In her Department alone there were cuts amounting to $432 million, mostly on the employment side. Can the Minister responsible for employment give us the exact figures on how many jobs will be lost, not only as a result of the cuts in her Department but as a result of all of the cuts? I know the Minister believes in open government. Let us have those figures.

● (1200)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and members of Opposition Parties would like to ignore the fact that last night the Government announced a $1 billion fund for job creation and for human resource development.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I would like to tell the Hon. Member that I will be using the time to work out with my provincial counterparts, and with the private sector, the way in which we together can put those jobs and that training into effect. I know that it will take a joint effort to do that. However, I would ask the Hon. Member and all Canadians to take that very positive point of view into consideration.

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, what a shell game. The Minister has talked about consulting with the private sector and the provinces on her new program. Why did she not consult with the private sector and with the many people who would be affected by those cuts beforehand, to see how the $432 million that was cut from her Department would have affected them? With respect to the $1 billion, I say that that is a shell game because the First Chance Program, which she cut after coming into office, provided for $1 billion for the next five years. She cut that program out and then brought in a $27 million program, not even near the amount that was there in the first place.

She completely cut out of the budget the general industrial training program and the Summer Canada program. Last night, the Government said it does not believe in direct—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, if the Government does not believe in direct job creation, would the Minister tell us exactly how the Government will create the jobs and provide the training that was lost through the cutting out of those two important programs?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all Hon. Members are aware that we have just recently announced a $430 million direct job-creation program which has been detailed to all Members of the House.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that we have said that we will work very closely with the private sector in order to create new jobs. I cannot think of any way that this was better phrased than it was the other day, when it was stated:

> We believe that the role of Government is to support and encourage private initiative and to provide the framework in which it can grow and create the thousands of jobs that we need.

That, Mr. Speaker, was said by the Leader of the Opposition. I thank him for endorsing our approach.

PETROLEUM TAXES AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PREMIUMS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who has explained carefully, and on many occasions, that confidence cannot be measured in dollars and cents. There is something that can be measured in dollars and cents, and that is what will happen to all Canadians over the next couple of months and years while they pay a 12 per cent increase per gallon of gasoline, while they pay increased unemployment insurance premiums, while the regressive sales tax comes back into play, while they pay an increase in air travel tax, and while they pay for the imposition of a whole host of user fees. The Government campaigned during the election saying it was going to get off the backs of the people of Canada. Through this set of measures, it has not only leaped back upon the backs of Canadians but it now has its hands in their pocketbooks as well.

Will the Minister of Finance explain why this priority has been changed? Will he explain why, rather than giving some breaks in order to provide purchasing power to the people of Canada, the Government has increased taxes for every single Canadian citizen?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the increases in both the petroleum compensation charge and the unemployment insurance premiums are charges that we are required to deal with under the terms of the rules set out for those particular programs. However, I would ask the Hon. Member to give consideration to, and read carefully, what was said last night.

The over-all reduction in the deficit is a prime obstacle to job creation. We must get that deficit down. If we are able to get that deficit down, it will more than offset the impact of the items to which he has referred. We do not like having to raise the petroleum compensation charge or the unemployment insurance premiums, but we do believe that if we get the deficit down it will create many, many more jobs than those to which the Hon. Member now refers.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the spectre of Bill Bennett rises throughout the Commons today.

INCOME TAX

FAIRNESS OF SYSTEM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. During the Leaders' debate the Prime Minister promised the people of Canada that he would bring some degree of fairness to the system by imposing a minimum tax on those Canadians who, as a result of countless loopholes, were able to pay not a single cent in income tax year after year. That promise of fairness is now being put under study, is being reviewed and will be examined, meditated, and contemplated upon.

Will the Prime Minister explain to the House why he has changed his mind about this promise, which was very strong during the Leaders' debate, and why he will now study it further, rather than take steps to implement it as soon as possible in order to raise the up to $400 million that would assist Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can give assurance to my hon. friend that that important matter which deals with the issue of equity and fairness in the tax system, something in which I think we all believe, will be dealt with by the Minister of Finance in his first Budget.

GOVERNMENT'S ECONOMIC STATEMENT—DEPARTMENT'S FIGURES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my first question this morning, which was addressed to the right hon. gentleman, sought to seek the figures for the projected additional unemployment which will result from last night's mini budget presented by the Minister of Finance. I did not receive a satisfactory answer. If the figures do not exist, it would be absolutely irresponsible to bring that type of mini budget down without knowing the effects it would have on the people of Canada and on the weaker regions of the country. If, as the Prime Minister has suggested, as he did in his answer to the Hon. Member for Oshawa, that the data were run off, and if the Prime Minister believes in open government, he should tell the people of Canada and this Parliament the consequences of what happened here last night.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my right hon. friend is really raising a different issue and one that goes to the question of secrecy in government. I agree with his comments. If he were to be consistent, he would want to begin the process by releasing the secret letter that he signed in regard to some nominations made when he became Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I can simply tell my right hon. friend that all of the working documents have been dealt with from time to time in the course of the preparation of budgets. We are satisfied, as I know he would be, that the response of the private sector and of the international and national investment sector is very critical to the ultimate results of any new economic initiatives. We believe, and I am satisfied that most Canadians believe, that this will result in the kind of job creation that we need.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DISCONTINUANCE OF ADVANCE TAX RULINGS IN CASE OF LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of his commitment to greater certainty and to private investment, confidence, and a stable investment climate, why, two weeks ago, did he discontinue the practice of the Department of National Revenue whereby it would give advance rulings when corporate mergers were to take place and where advance rulings have been given in the past? Why have there been no advance rulings when companies like Algoma Steel and Tembec want to put together limited partnerships in order to create jobs? Why is the Minister creating this kind of uncertainty and blocking this kind of job-creation activity in our country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the limited partnership vehicle to which the Hon. Member refers concerns the use of a tax vehicle for a use which it was not originally intended. We wanted to take a close look at the impact, use, and long-term implications of that. That review is now ongoing and I would hope to be able to make some comments after the normal amount of consultation with the people who are affected, in order to give taxpayers a greater degree of certainty regarding this matter. I should underline the fact that this is the only area where the Department of National Revenue is not giving advance rulings. The whole matter of advance rulings, as the question seemed to imply, is not being withdrawn. It is only as it affects the limited partnerships.

EFFECT ON ALGOMA STEEL

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Finance aware that in the case of Algoma Steel this new policy will effectively block the completion of a $300 million tube mill project which would create approximately 700 permanent jobs? As well, is the Minister aware that the Prime Minister personally committed himself to that project during the election campaign? In a case such as this, where there will be substantial economic benefit to the community, is the Minister willing to make an exception and introduce a grandfather clause to this policy? Otherwise, it is a mean and cruel device for an industry such as Algoma Steel which has been suffering for the last two and a half years. It is a community which desperately needs jobs.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have met with officials from Algoma Steel as well as officials from Tembec. They have put forward representations to provide for some means of grandfathering the particular projects. We are now reviewing the situation, but at this point we do not have a decision. However, at some stage I hope to be able to let them know exactly where things stand.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister what he means by universality. During the election he said: "Our position is simple and straight forward. We are in favour of universality in social programs and it shall not be touched". Now he is talking about a means test. He has already tightened up on social insurance, is cutting back on social housing, and has indicated that old age security and child benefits will be studied. Did the Prime Minister mean what he promised? Are universal social programs a sacred trust of this Government, or will a means test be introduced, as the Prime Minister implied earlier today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the definition of our position is exactly what the Hon. Member has set out. We have absolutely no intention of introducing a means test. We view it exactly in the manner in which she has set out.

A legitimate question has frequently been raised by Members in this House, including Members on this side, regarding the fairness of someone who makes $500,000 a year receiving these kinds of benefits—could they not be added to the benefits of those who need them most in our society, the poor, the disadvantaged, and people on welfare. These are the people we are trying to help. It seems to me that it is a legitimate question to raise for discussion across the country. That is what we are trying to do in a fair and open way. I think the Hon. Member would encourage us in that view and in the pursuit of a more effective delivery of dollars to the people in our society who need them most.

OLD AGE PENSIONS AND FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I think the women of Canada were right to ask: "Why should we believe you now"? If the Government needs to do a study, all it has to do is look at what has happened in British Columbia through cut-backs, restraint, and the kind of programs which his Ministers are proposing. I want to ask the Minister again—and let us see whether he is a hypocrite or not as he sounds—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Will the Member proceed directly to the question, please?

Ms. Mitchell: Will the Prime Minister tell Canadians right now that there will be no change in universal old age pensions and family allowances? Yes or no?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Withdraw.

An Hon. Member: Which one is a hypocrite?

Ms. Mitchell: The Prime Minister.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first, I hesitated in answering the question because I thought that the Hon. Member would want to withdraw that unfortunate reference—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —secondly, because I could not believe that she was asking me the question inasmuch as I had just given her a very clear answer to the same question. Our position is clear. The reference to Canadian women is not unhelpful, because Canadian women voted for the Progressive Conservative Party in record numbers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Canadian women, like Canadian men, know that durable job creation can only come about by a renewed and re-energized economy, which requires co-operation, and examination of all the programs so that the people who need assistance, who need the benefits of this kind of a country—those people most in need—get more from the Government at all times. That is our principle.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that I am in some difficulty because it has not been the practice of the House to deal with points of order during Question Period. I must inform the Hon. Member, however, that the word "hypocrite" is in fact regarded on all lists as an unparliamentary word.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I presume that she will do the honourable thing.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I think that if the "blues" are checked we will see that I did not accuse the Prime Minister of being a hypocrite, but I will certainly withdraw the word.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

THE OFFICIAL DESIGNATION OF NOVA SCOTIA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-201, an Act respecting the official designation of "Nova Scotia".

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to define the official designation of Nova Scotia, the words "Nova Scotia" being neither English nor French but Latin. The proper use of the proper noun is Nova Scotia. That is the purpose of this Bill which I ask for leave to introduce.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

WAYS AND MEANS

DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 64(2), I request that an Order of the Day be designated for consideration of the Ways and Means motions tabled on November 8, 1984.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the House as I should have previously called for petitions. With the consent of the House, may we revert to Petitions?

PETITONS

CORPORATION TAX BREAKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents from the riding of Kamloops-Shuswap who ask that Parliament change the appropriate law so that in 1985 corporations will receive tax breaks only in proportion to the net new jobs they have created, and that the number of jobs created by each corporation and the tax breaks received will be reported quarterly to Parliament.

ECONOMIC STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by several members of the Liberal caucus, which has been cleared through the Chair, calling upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to depose all of the documents relating to the budget which outline the massive loss of jobs as a result of the so-called economic statement.

[Translation]

I just want to clarify, Mr. Speaker, that we Liberal Members have a petition that is duly signed.

● (1220)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: May I explain to the Hon. Member, please, that the tradition here is that petitions are submitted with a brief description of what they are and the translation takes care, I believe, of the problem the Hon. Member is trying to deal with. I take it that is the explanation.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that the tradition here is a short explanation of the petition. Does the Hon. Member have something she wishes to add?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to explain that, certainly, from a government which has pledged to the Canadian people that it was going to be an open government, this—

Mr. Speaker: No, I regret to advise the Hon. Member—and I will be very clear on this—that that is not an explanation of what is in the petition. I will be very firm on that matter.

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to present a petition on behalf of 200 constituents in the riding of Bruce-Grey who ask that the Parliament of Canada act to refuse the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and to reject research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapon, their delivery systems or components in Canada; that Canada be declared a nuclear-weapons-free zone; that the wasteful spending on the arms race be diverted to fund human needs so as to ensure prosperity through peace and finally, that the above stated objectives be subject to ratification through a free vote in the Parliament of Canada.

Therefore, the undersigned call upon this honourable House to bring about these changes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF AMENDMENTS TO ADDRESS IN REPLY

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations with the Opposition House Leaders with respect to the business on Tuesday. It was contemplated, as I mentioned yesterday, that when we return after the Remembrance Day weekend we will proceed with the Speech from the Throne debate. In order to avoid any possibility of procedural technicality whereby deferred votes today would have to be disposed of before we proceeded with the debate, I would like to propose for the unanimous approval of this House the following motion. Therefore, I move:

That on Tuesday, November 13, 1984, notwithstanding any deferred division on the proposed amendment to the amendment of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), if the Order of the Day is the consideration of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the business to be considered shall be the proposed amendment thereto of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

I believe you will find that unanimous consent will be forthcoming, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm that we give our consent to this order.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, we did in fact confer on this matter. It is a technical question, as you well know, Sir, as to how to deal with that portion of a debate which is supposed to have ended but which in fact by agreement is being continued. Therefore, I will on this occasion accept that this is one of a number of ways it can be dealt with and we accept the motion.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Government House Leader. Is there unanimous consent that the matter be introduced?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the matter be disposed of as the Hon. House Leader suggests?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Wednesday, November 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session; and the amendment thereto of Mr.

Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 38) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 46).

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is with a profound sense of humility and pride that I stand in this Chamber today to address my fellow Members of Parliament on the occasion of the Throne Speech debate. I feel humble because the people of Scarborough Centre have entrusted in me their confidence that my vote will be their vote and that my voice will be their voice in this magnificent House of Commons.

I feel pride because I am part of a new and exciting Progressive Conservative Government, one which will lead Canadians to a better future, prosperous and free. This sense of pride and optimism is shared, I believe, by all new Members of Parliament. Certainly it was clearly expressed by the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) in moving the Speech from the Throne and by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Ms. Jacques) in seconding it. I wish to salute the eloquence of these two colleagues.

I wish to extend my sincere congratulations.

[English]

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the view from these Private Members' benches is quite marvellous. In one long sweep of my eye the entire Chamber is visible. To my left, to my right and out in front there is a sea of new Government Members, and, of course, across from me sit the Opposition Parties, one of which is "official", but perhaps only in name alone.

The view across these government benches is indeed clear, Mr. Speaker, as clear as the mandate which our Party received from Canadians on September 4. Canadians are tired of negativism. They voted to change the old ways and habits of government. The Throne Speech marks a real start to the fulfilment of this mandate. Many of the initiatives outlined in the Throne Speech relate directly to the good people of Scarborough Centre whom I proudly represent in this House of Commons. First and foremost, the people of my riding are common sense people. They work hard, take care of their homes and apartments and know the value of a dollar. The Government's goal to reduce the deficit through economic growth is therefore strongly welcomed by my constituents.

As well, the residents of my riding understand the value of consultation and consensus. Scarborough Centre is a suburban riding within the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto. Its people live and work as neighbours. They know that the common good is advanced when people work together. Thus the people of Scarborough Centre strongly support the declaration in the Throne Speech of a new era of national reconciliation. Together we can and will do better.

There are over 1,000 industrial, commercial and retail businesses in Scarborough Centre. Dozens of light manufacturing firms, the backbone of small business in Canada, are to be found as well as several larger companies. However, my riding has recently been affected by the closure of a major electrical equipment manufacturing plant. Sadly, unemployment remains high, especially among youth and older, mature workers. I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that measures proposed this week will have a strong, positive effect on the economic climate in Scarborough Centre.

Likewise my constituents are confident that the national economic summit to be convened early next year by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will offer good news and fresh initiatives.

People of many different cultural backgrounds make their home in Scarborough Centre. I am proud to represent them all with a spirit of equality and fairness as enunciated in the Throne Speech. These citizens appreciate the Government's refreshing new attitude that multiculturalism is more than just displays of dances, costumes, and cooking; it is also full and complete equality of opportunity throughout the land.

Senior citizens comprise a significant portion of people in my riding. No less than six major seniors' residences are to be found in Scarborough Centre. All three levels of government have worked closely in the construction and administration of these homes. The proposed overhaul of the pension system will ensure that seniors in Scarborough Centre need never fear for the integrity and the security of their pensions.

The compassionate tone, Mr. Speaker, of the Throne Speech offers assurances not only to the elderly but also to the single parent family. Due to societal pressures, such families are more numerous today than ever before. This week the Government has spoken on the need to improve the child care system and to increase employment opportunities for women. Such measures are timely and demonstrate to Canadians that the Government they elected is Conservative but with a conscience. Indeed, that phrase, "Conservative with a conscience", aptly describes my own political philosophy as well as that of this Government. I feel an obligation to watch over both the welfare of the public accounts and the welfare of those people most vulnerable to hardship. For the past two years I have fulfilled this task while serving as the chairman of the Board of Health in the city of Scarborough. It is my hope to broaden such involvement in health issues during my term in the Thirty-third Parliament.

I believe that there are several emerging issues in the health field which will receive greater attention in the 1980s. First, of course, is the matter of cost. It is my belief that Canada must continue to move toward a community-based health care system in order to lower costs and increase responsiveness of care. Geriatric care will become a crucial issue as Canada's baby boom generation enters its senior years. I believe the Government must take the lead now to plan for this future trend. Private sector investment in chronic and geriatric care centres is an option which government should promote.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a question of particular sensitivity has emerged in recent years in the health care field. I speak of the palliative use of heroin for terminal cancer patients. Canadians are compassionate people and I believe would accept legislation allowing such treatment.

I have spoken today of the riding I represent, Scarborough Centre, its people and the ways in which the Throne Speech relates to them. I have also described in some detail my interest in health care issues. Permit me now to speak in more personal terms; first, of a certain former Member of Parliament; secondly, the Leader of my Party; and thirdly, my commitment at the start of this Thirty-third Parliament of Canada.

On March 4, 1948, the following words were spoken in this House:

> Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate, realizing that it has been some length of time since it was begun. First, I should like to join with other hon. members in expressing my congratulations to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I have listened to the various speakers who have taken part in the debate, and it has been somewhat of an education to me to learn something more about this great country which we are pleased to call Canada.

The occasion, Mr. Speaker, was the Throne Speech debate during Canada's Twentieth Parliament. The speaker was my father—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Browes: —the late Major Robert Earl Drope, the Member of Parliament for the riding of Northumberland, Ontario. Perhaps my fellow members can understand the feelings within me at this moment, to hear his words echo once more off the stone walls and the high ceilings of this House of Commons. The sentiments I express for my father are profound and very special. Those I hold for my mother are equally precious since she still lives, proud and strong, in the century old family home on a farm near Rice Lake in Northumberland riding in Ontario.

I take my place in Parliament, Mr. Speaker, knowing that it is due in some large part to the efforts of a man who once was very close to his father, that being the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It was the Prime Minister who earned the collective confidence of the people of Canada during the election campaign, and it was on a hot, sunny afternoon last July that he earned the confidence of the people of Scarborough Centre. When the Prime Minister attended our riding's annual summer picnic and barbecue, he touched all the people of Scarborough Centre. He spoke with sincerity because he is a self-made man whose humble roots allow him to understand the plight of the elderly and the disadvantaged. He spoke with confidence because he is a proud Canadian who believes in the potential of our nation and the spirit of its people. Our Prime Minister spoke with determination because he is a leader of a political party and now Leader of the Government with the people, the ideas and the policies to bring about a new beginning for Canada.

As a Member of Parliament in the new government I look ahead to fulfilling the mandate given us by the people of Canada, especially those in Scarborough Centre. It is an honest mandate, earned by the dedication of hundreds of campaign volunteers and sealed by the oath of office I took as a private member.

I am proud of my family roots in rural Ontario, Mr. Speaker. I am proud of my life in Scarborough with over 25 years of participation in issues of education, public accounts, health and housing. I accept the challenges which await me in the months and years ahead and I am eager to serve the people of Canada.

• (1240)

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that when people ask if the Government truly will accomplish the goals it has set, I declare: Absolutely, it will.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is, of course, customary in the House to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Speech from the Throne, to congratulate the newcomers and those who make their first intervention, such as the hon. lady who just spoke, and to wish the new Members well as they cross the threshold of the Thirty-third Parliament.

It is also natural that we resume debate on the Speech from the Throne and attempt to find the thread which in a way we lost yesterday as a result of switching the order of debate and having to witness last night a presentation which has deeply disturbed us on this side of the House. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that people in my riding and across the country, at this stage of debate on the Speech from the Throne, are beginning to wonder about the theme of consultation which emerged so strongly in the Speech just a few days ago, as read in the Senate by Her Excellency the Governor General.

It took only a few days, until last night, to make us realize that the theme of consultation is really one that is proposed but not practised by the Government. Last night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced a series of decisions which will result in the elimination of jobs estimated by some to amount to over 100,000 and perhpas as high as 127,000 Among the programs or intitiatives and projects which are going to we wiped out is, for example, Summer Canada. This was announced on the very same day that the Canadian Federation of Students was here in Ottawa speaking to the caucuses and representatives of the three Parties, probably wanting to ensure that next summer there would be a job opportunity program for them.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, did the Government consult the students before cancelling Summer Canada? To whom will they turn next summer for a job in the absence of this program? Will they go to Loblaws, to Canadian Tire or to the oil compagnies to find a summer job? Where will they find the jobs upon which they rely in order to finance their studies in the following year? Consultation was promised in the Speech from the Throne. Was it carried out with the students in relation to Summer Canada?

Last night we learned about the cancellation of a number of projects, research centres and initiatives across the country which would have resulted in construction projects. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, were the unions and the construction associations consulted about the cancellation of these projects which will mean the cancellation of jobs in their respective communities?

We learned last night that certain programs of the National Research Council are going to be cancelled. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, were the scientists affected, young and old, and the union which represents the scientists in the Public Service, consulted about the cancellation of important, long-term, far-reaching research projects? Last night we learned about unemployment insurance premiums, Mr. Speaker. Were the employers and the workers consulted about the increase in premiums by the Government? We learned about cuts of some $200 million in the Industrial Incentives Program. I ask, Mr. Speaker, whether the Government consulted industry about the desirability of cutting these programs, particularly in regions that are not at the centre of our economy.

We learned last night about cutbacks to essential train and ferry services, Mr. Speaker. I ask you, was the travelling public in those regions consulted? We learned that Canadians will have to face higher prices at the pumps. Was there consultation with the Canadian public on this increase and the timing of the increase?

We learned last night about cutbacks in social housing and housing rehabilitation programs. These initiatives create jobs in their respective communities and help Canadians reduce their heating costs. I ask the Government whether it consulted with the housing industry. Did the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) consult with them? This is the theme of the Speech from the Throne. Are they practising what they are preaching?

Were the fishermen consulted about the cutbacks on export promotion and fisheries development programs? We learned about cuts in the cultural sector through the Canada Council. Was the artistic community consulted by the Minister or those who are absent at the present time about the cutbacks in art programs which somehow represent an income to our artistic community from coast to coast, be they writers, sculptors, poets, musicians or the like?

What a sham of consultation, Mr. Speaker. Here you see the reality. We and the Canadian public are being treated to a display of hypocrisy. Consultation versus unilateral action on the part of the Government, with no consultation at all, was proclaimed as the main theme of the Speech from the Throne.

We were also treated to that beautiful trick last night, that great demagogic gesture of a salary cut imposed on Ministers. They have a job. They know they will have it until the next election and not beyond that, we know that. As a great gesture to Canadians who are going to lose their jobs they introduced this magnificent salary cut. We congratulate those heroes for having cut $3,000 off a salary of $100,000. I congratulate the President of the Treasury Board for his courage in light of what he has done by eliminating jobs for tens of thousands of students who next summer will have to knock at his door and ask him where they should go to find jobs. Where will they go? Next summer, or next year, or perhaps even beginning next month, there will be some 126,000 less jobs. Or perhaps the Government will tell us the exact number of people who will be affected by the cuts last night.

● (1250)

Therefore, I must conclude that it only took four days for the Tory Government to show to the House and the country its ugly face. Through its own action it has destroyed the credibility in the consultative process which it proclaimed in the Speech from the Throne. The good news this morning that Canadians found 50,000 more jobs last month has been wiped out by the announcement of last night. We have been left with a negative result. Over the weekend Canadians will be agonizing at home with their families about whether they will have a job next year, be they civil servants, construction workers, fishermen or workers in any sector that will be affected by these measures.

Cuts are not made in a vacuum. A program cannot be cut in abstract terms because it eliminates jobs. This is what the Government does not want to realize or admit.

We say that the approach taken by the Government on deficit cutting is wrong. Let me explain why. The deficit can be cut in two ways. The Tories are doing it by withdrawing from the economy and partially closing down Canada during the winter, until next spring. That is what the Government is saying. It says that it must think and consult on the one hand, but then it proceeds without consultation. It is basically telling Canadians to consult with the Government next spring and it will talk business again.

The other method of cutting the deficit is by generating real growth, supporting the jobs that have been created so far and enabling Canadians to maintain the purchasing power that permits them to pay taxes, allowing them to generate revenue for the state and pay their bills. It should not be done by adding their names to the unemployment rolls.

Since we are in debate, let us assume for one moment that the Tory approach is the right approach. There is a profound contradiction when the Minister says on the one hand that he wants to energize the private sector, while at the same time he cuts $200 million from the Industrial Incentives Program, 40 million from the Job Training Program and $250 million from the Exploration Assistance Program in the oil and gas industry. How can those measures energize the private sector?

As Liberals, we do not believe that this is the right policy. If one wants to energize the private sector, one does not pull the rug from under it as the Minister of Finance and his colleagues are proposing. The Conservative Government approach to deficit cutting is wrong. Instead of cutting jobs it should provide incentives for expansion and job creation. That is the sensitive and positive approach that does not cause hardships for students next summer, hardships on people who have a job in the Public Service or those who are looking to a job in the private sector as a result of federal Government initiatives.

I believe that Canadians elected a majority government on September 4 with the understanding that all segments of society would be represented and protected. I believe the Government has failed to understand that message to this point.

There are some very serious gaps in the Speech from the Throne. Let me attempt to illustrate three of them. No thoughts emerged from the Speech from the Throne on the effect of technological change on existing and potential jobs. Although jobs are disappearing as a result of the chip, jobs may emerge as a result of the chip. While people are losing jobs, new opportunities may emerge. The fundamental question facing any industrial society is how we will manage that transition and what is the role of government in the management of that transition. Will the Tory administration abdicate that responsibility? Does it believe that Exxon or IBM will do it for them and provide the necessary social shock absorber to protect those affected by technological change? If it believes that, it is dreaming in colour. The Government must play a profound and important role in protecting those affected workers. When workers lose their jobs as a result of technological change, someone must step in to manage that transition.

Mr. Benjamin: Why did you not do it?

Mr. Caccia: We did it and you know it.

Mr. Benjamin: What about the railroad workers?

Mr. Caccia: I regret that the Hon. Member has been so asleep over the last two years that he does not even recall the elementary tenets of a Liberal administration. We did it through training and the provision of early retirement schemes requiring workers in certain industries to retire at the age of 55. We did it by way of the mobility program, which the Tory Government cancelled last night, a program which permitted people who knew of an opportunity in another region to move there with their family with our help. That is a social shock absorber. During this time of technological change in which the pace will accelerate, the issues will become more complex and difficult to resolve. This is a profound and important issue for any government to address.

In the short time I have remaining, let me point out another shortcoming with respect to what is missing in the Throne Speech. No thoughts are advanced on how to proceed on the frail path leading to arms control and disarmament. It is a very complex issue and an important debate for everyone in this country. Surely the Speech from the Throne would be the natural mechanism to put forward the options and approaches that ought to be examined for the sake of debate in the House and possibly for the guidance of the Government.

The third issue that is missing from the Throne Speech is the very important issue of the interrelationship between the environment and the economy. As Hon. Members know, our economy depends very heavily on our natural resources. Therefore, we have a particular economic interest in maintaining our natural resources in a condition which generate the jobs and wealth contained in our unique nature that makes Canada so envied in the world.

We must ensure that the air we breath, the water we drink and the soil we use for agriculture, forestry and other purposes are in a sound condition. If one accepts that concept, one must conclude that our country and even the world cannot have a healthy economy without a healthy environment. The two are part of the same concept. Therefore, we must pay attention to the consequences of acid rain.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon. The Hon. Member may continue at that time because he has some time left.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) had the floor. Does he wish to continue in debate?

Mr. Caccia: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Before the recess I was outlining some of the major areas in the Speech from the Throne that this Government has forgotten or omitted to cover. Having outlined some, I feel compelled to tell you, Mr. Speaker, and Hon. Members that an important area of policy making missing in the Speech from the Throne is the whole question that relates to the North, the economic future of native people in the North, and the utilization of the natural resources in the North. That raises also the basic question as to the economic future in the North when the exploitation of gas has been completed and the rigs are gone. On what will future generations of northern people rely for their livelihood and for their economic survival?

Another area also missing in the Speech from the Throne, that needs to be dealt with and cannot be dealt with in the limited time available to me is the important issue of a water policy for Canada. As you know, Mr. Speaker, it was the Liberal Government that launched a federal inquiry into water policy. The commission appointed under the chairmanship of Dr. Peter Pearse of Vancouver is to report next year. I would invite the Government to endorse and support that very important inquiry which will determine the quality and quantity of water that Canadians will need in the future, particularly as we are facing some profound changes in climate due to the greenhouse effect which, as scientists and meteorologists tell us, is bound to bring about changes in agriculture, different levels of water—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry but I have to inform the Hon. Member that the time allotted to him has expired. Do Hon. Members have any questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and it concerns his speech. In the early part of his speech he took the Government to task for having failed to consult young people in particular with respect to the demise of the Summer Canada program. It is not clear to me whether his concern is about the failure to consult or about having broken a promise to consult. If it were the former, I would ask the Hon. Member, if his concern is about consulting, how does he reconcile that with the failure of the government of which he was formerly a part to consult with students and young people concerning cuts in post-secondary education for which that government was responsible?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand the inevitable attraction for the Hon. Member to try to score political points in this House on a matter on which he displays abysmal ignorance. If the Hon. Member were informed, Mr. Speaker, and if he knew what had been done in the Thirty-second Parliament by the Liberal Government, then he would know that post-secondary education was one of the major concerns of the Liberal Government. Post-secondary education received funding and increases in funding, but if there were a shortcoming in the provision of funds it was because we never knew whether the respective provinces would channel the earmarked funds to destination.

Now we hear from the new Tory Government—because the Hon. Member's Party will never form a government—that there is a new notion in the country whereby we are going to consult the provinces, that we are going to do things as if a new era had started. We will be watching Hon. Members across the aisle in the Government to see how they will ensure that funds to post-secondary education will reach their destination. We will watch Hon. Members across the way to see how they will reconcile the backward position of provincial governments across the nation on native rights and the commitments made by the former Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs which recognized that the native people have legitimate rights and aspirations.

We will watch and find out how Hon. Members across the way will reconcile the energy interests of Ontario with those of Alberta in this holding hands under the table, which seems to be the latest gospel proposed by the Party opposite. We will watch them on a number of federal-provincial relationships. I, therefore, welcome the question of the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, regarding consultation with students, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) never answered the question. He expressed his government's great interest in post-secondary education, but he never said what consultations were held with the students before a couple of hundred million dollars was taken out of the budget, taken out not by the provincial governments but by the government of which he was a member.

He also raised the question of whether the provincial governments could be relied on to use the money. He probably recalls that this Party asked that legislation be amended so as to require provincial governments to use the money for the purpose intended. His government would not introduce such legislation or would not support such an amendment.

When the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto asked permission to be heard, with a very thoroughly documented brief opposing the cuts by his government earlier this year, what response did his government make to that request and to the request of other councils like it when they asked for consultation on the question of cuts to post-secondary education?

When answering that, I would be glad if the Hon. Member would tell us what consultation the then Minister of Public Works held with the Co-operative Foundation and the non-profit corporations of several cities when he cut their budget, cutting co-ops to about half and practically wiping out Section 56(1) of the National Housing Act. What consultation was there with the co-operative and non-profit housing industry? We know he consulted with the private profit builders; but what consultation was there with the non-profit and co-op builders?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been here yesterday, he would have had the benefit of the meeting with the Federation of Canadian Students in which the whole question of past and present consultations was elaborated. Also, he would have learned some of the answers. He would have learned the answer to the pseudo question he just posed.

In the past, as far as I can recall, long before the Member was elected to this House we launched programs in close consultation with the groups affected. In the case of co-op housing in Toronto, we have developed one of the most outstanding programs of social housing in the whole western world. We did that in very close consultation with organizations, not only with that one. The Liberal Government funded organizations so that they could be formed, when they expressed that intention, in order to provide criticism at times, support at times any ideas and policy changes that they from their experience saw fit to make at given intervals. This is why he and I can rightly claim that we have a social co-operative housing movement in this country.

It is true that there has been a change in that policy. It is a proposed change whereby the former Minister of Public Works, to whom the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) alludes, indicated that at this stage of development of our housing policy it was desirable also to find ways of improving the quality of rental housing in the downtown urban areas of Canada. This includes housing that needs to be upgraded and housing for single person households with a very limited income. They require as much attention as those who have found accommodation through co-op housing.

We were discovering a new public responsibility towards a group of Canadians who until then had perhaps not received the attention they deserved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall now resume debate.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I of course wish to thank the mover and seconder of the Speech from the Throne. As well, I want to express my sincere thanks to the people of my riding of York East for selecting me to represent them here in the House of Commons. At the same time, I want to assure the people of my riding that I intend to represent each and every one of them and to serve each and every one of them to the best of my ability, regardless of their political persuasion and regardless of my own political affiliation.

The riding of York East is located in the central and the eastern portion of Metropolitan Toronto. Approximately 40 per cent of my riding is located in the City of North York and is comprised of the original Don Mills community as well as the communities of Flemingdon Park, Jonesville, Victoria Village and Wynford Heights. The balance of the riding, the other 60 per cent, is located in the borough of East York, the central and eastern portions. That is the municipality where, until recently, I had the privilege of serving as mayor.

York East is a slice of urban Canada. It has a population of approximately 100,000 people. That includes people from every part of the economic spectrum. About 70 per cent of the people in my riding come from the traditional, long-time Canadian background. The balance, approximately 30 per cent, come from Greek, Chinese, Southeast Asian and black origin. In fact, there are over 60 different cultural and ethnic groups and backgrounds represented in my riding. At the same time, York East is the home, proportionately speaking, of one of the largest communities of senior citizens anywhere in Canada. As well, it is the home of a great many businesses and industries, some large and some small.

Although the recent recession has not affected Metropolitan Toronto or my riding as severely as many parts of the country, a day does not go by in York East when I do not hear from somebody who is either unemployed now, has been unemployed, or expects to be unemployed in the near future.

Mr. Boudria: It will get worse with the Tories in power.

Mr. Redway: I stood for Parliament because of remarks like that and because of the policies of the previous government.

In the last two years that I served as the mayor of East York, I would go to my office every morning to find it filled with people looking for work. In 1982, because of exorbitant, horrendously high interest rates, many of the businesses which formed the tax base of our community went bankrupt.

At the same time, because of those same high interest rates brought in by the last government, the senior citizens of our community could not sell their homes. The young people could not afford to buy those homes. That was two years ago. Today we still have 1.5 million unemployed in this country.

This morning I was very pleased to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicate that there has been a gain of some 34,000 new jobs since September 4. I was pleased this week, at long last, that the Speech from the Throne and the economic statement spelled out the new government's strategy for the unemployment problem. The first is to restore fiscal responsibility by putting our own house in order in order to limit and reverse the massive build-up of public debt and the damaging impact that this has on confidence and growth. The second is to redefine the role of the Government so that it provides a better framework for growth and job creation and removes obstacles to change and innovation. The third part of the strategy is to foster higher investment, greater innovation, increased international competitiveness and a positive climate for the birth and growth of new enterprise. The fourth is to bring about these changes in a way that is fair, open and consistent with the basic sense of compassion, tolerance and justice that is a characteristic of Canadian society.

Last night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) began the process of implementing that strategy by outlining his plan for reducing the deficit in an orderly, balanced and fair manner. As the Finance Minister continues the process of implementing government strategy, I ask him to bear in mind that, in addition to restraining expenditures, to improving management and to eliminating programs and agencies, there are two other ways to reduce the deficit and to restore business confidence. I commend both of those ways to the Minister.

The first way to do this is to reduce interest rates. Even a modest reduction in our interest rates would substantially cut the cost of government borrowing which this year will reach something like $17 billion out of a $34 billion deficit. It is plain to see that any slight reduction in interest rates will have a very substantial effect on our deficit and on the cost of borrowing. In my view, the second method by which we can reduce the deficit is simply to put people back to work again and turn them into taxpayers instead of welfare recipients.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Department of Finance has a little rule of thumb that indicates that for every 84,000 people who are out of work, we lose $1 billion in government revenues. Just think about that, Mr. Speaker. If we could put one million people back to work again, we could cut that $34 billion deficit right in half.

In the United States, people have been put back to work again and this has been done by cutting personal taxes to stimulate consumer spending. It is no wonder that President Reagan was re-elected with such an overwhelming majority. After all, who could refuse to vote for a man who cut unemployment, who cut taxes and who cut inflation? That is an amazing record and one that I commend to our own Minister of Finance.

The primary task of this Parliament is to put people back to work and to get the economy moving again. If we can do that, we will have laid a firm foundation for the new era which was described in the Speech from the Throne as an era of national reconciliation, economic renewal and social justice. If we can do that, we will get Canada growing again and Canada can truly reach its real potential as a nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? We will proceed with debate.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the House for this opportunity to speak on the Speech from the Throne. I would like to begin by extending my sincere gratitude to the people of northwestern Saskatchewan who live in my constituency of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake. These people have given me the honour and the privilege of being their servant in the Thirty-third Parliament of Canada.

When one reflects on the outcome of the September 4 general election, one sees that the people of northwestern Saskatchewan and their counterparts around the country voted for a change in government. They did not vote for change for the sake of change but for a significant, markedly different sort of government, a government that the citizens would like to have effect not only new policy initiatives but also a new process and a new way of governing. This way of governing is a consultative, positive, open form of government.

As debate on the Throne Speech continues, I am pleased to be able to speak on this occasion on behalf of my constituents from The Battlefords-Meadow Lake. I would like to explain my riding to Hon. Members. It comprises the entire northwest of the Province of Saskatchewan. It is truly a beautiful area of the country comprising almost 100,000 square miles. It is also large.

From the wheat fields to the rolling hills to the forest country of the north, this constituency comprises a vast array of people and backgrounds. There are 65,000 people living in The Battlefords-Meadow Lake with one-third of them residing in The Battlefords, which is the major economic hub of the constituency. The Battlefords is located on the banks of the North Saskatchewan River with the Town of Battleford to the south and the larger City of North Battleford to the north.

The Battlefords provides goods and services to a constituency that is largely dependent on agriculture. Many of my other constituents live in smaller centres, the largest of which is Meadow Lake with a population of 5,000. The smaller communities are strongly tied to agriculture and reflect a diversity in ethnic backgrounds. There are the Francophone communities of Jack Fish, Vawn, Edam and Leoville, the early Ukrainian settlements of Krydor, Hafford and Speers and the many other communities like Paradise Hill, Spiritwood, Glaslyn and Big River.

In the northern area of my riding, beyond this strongly agricultural base, is the largest geographic area of the riding, the far north. This is home to several thousand constituents who live in communities like Patuanak, Beauval, Île à la Crosse and Buffalo Narrows. There is now a tiny settlement in the far north of my riding which remains as a sad legacy to the former government. It was called Uranium City.

In my constituency of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake, the concern of most people is farming. Farmers have defied misguided government policies of the past decade by adapting to rising costs, but these costs reflect values of 1984 while the prices the farmers receive for their products reflect prices of 1972. This dichotomy, which is known as the cost-price squeeze, has forced many farmers in my constituency off their land. For many of their counterparts who remain, life is difficult, even for the people in the urban centre of The Battlefords whose livelihoods and professions depend upon the viability of farms. It is with this commitment to agriculture that I come to Parliament.

Prominent too in my constituency is the oil industry which, in the community and surrounding area of The Battlefords, employs some 200 people who work in oil development, on the rigs, on the service rigs and in the other industries associated with oil.

The Battlefords-Meadow Lake has several other unique features. Twenty-two per cent of my constituents are of native origin. There are 19 Indian reservations in The Battlefords-Meadow Lake. It is with growing concern that I see the plight of the native person on the reserve. This person is often neglected by the society in which he or she lives, a society which starts with our past Parliament of Canada and extends down even to the Indian leadership which, in often cases, is less responsible for the needs of its people than it should be.

In my constituency of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake there are many elderly people. Because this is a farming, agrarian community, families tend to stay closer to one another. Often farmers retire to the urban area of The Battlefords while their families take over the farm. Older members of society demand from us a better world for their children and for their grandchildren.

Cognizant of this, we should address our country's business as we have in this Speech from the Throne. In that Speech our Government has made commitments which appeal to the people of western Canada, and particularly those in my constituency. Our Government has promised, in an open and forthright fashion, reconciliation, renewal and economic growth. These themes are suitable within the framework of social justice and can be further paraphrased in three sentiments: common sense, honesty and fairness. Every person growing up in small-town Saskatchewan knows that honesty, fairness and common sense are what comprise truly successful people, farmers, families and traditions.

If one looks at the history of Saskatchewan, they will see that the early pioneer knew that life was more bearable for everyone if people co-operated rather than confronted. This spirit of co-operation grew from helping a neighbour or fellow farmer into the co-operative movement and the credit union movement which are still so vital a part of Saskatchewan today. Much of western Canada owes its present prosperity to the fact that the early settlers realized that consultation, co-operation and sharing made society move ahead. It is that same commitment which is in the Throne Speech.

I find it rather odd that critics of the Government find it distasteful that emphasis has been placed on co-operation and consultation at the expense of belligerence, arrogance and unilateral action. The days of government heavy-handedly telling people what is good for them are over. With those days being over, we have a government which will truly listen to the ideals, aspirations and dreams of Canadians from all walks of life.

In The Battlefords-Meadow Lake the change of Government, and the directions which the Government plans to undertake, have been welcomed. The people who have placed their trust in me by electing me to this Parliament are people who know that one does not spend money on what one does not have. One does not bully and force your way on others when talking out a problem may create exciting, new possibilities and solutions which were earlier thought impossible. That is the way in which most well-intentioned Canadians of good judgment have lived their lives and that is what most Canadians wanted on September 4.

Lamentably, the federal government of the past has not lived up to this expectation. This will change. I am proud to be a part of that change and I am proud to be a part of bringing some long-awaited and positive moves to this country.

As the youngest Member of Parliament ever elected from northwest Saskatchewan, and as one of the younger Members of the House, I take a great interest in the future of this country. The future, as seen by other young Canadians, is a future to be challenged and conquered. Through an era of reconciliation, as expressed by the Government in the Speech from the Throne, all Canadians will be able to search mutually and share in new views and new ways of addressing our national obligations and responsibilities. With a united commitment among all of us to consensus, tolerance and fairness, our country will be a better place to live for those of my generation and the generation of our children.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say a few words of thanks to my constituents for once again re-electing me to this Chamber for the sixth time. Obviously I was either very lucky, or else the constituents of Yorkton-Melville were very wise in their choice.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that we did not have a period of questions and comments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is right. I looked on both sides of the House and did not see any Member rising. I apologize, but I had not given the floor to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps)—

[English]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think the Member was standing up.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the order, if in fact there are no questions from the floor, do you revert to the Official Opposition or do you revert to the third Party? There was in fact a Member standing from the Official Opposition to make his response to the Throne Speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In terms of the order, what I will do for the rest of the day is to choose two from the Government, one from the Official Opposition, one from the NDP; two from the Government, one from the Official Opposition and one from the NDP. We had a Liberal member a little while ago; I have recognized two from the Government and one from the NDP. The next speaker would normally be a Liberal, and then two from the Government and one from the NDP.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: To clear the matter up, I think there was a misunderstanding because you did not ask the usual question as to whether there were questions and comments. The Hon. Member rose to make her speech, thinking that she would be given the floor, and I am sorry if there was a misunderstanding. But we will accept—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Proceeding with debate, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville has the floor.

Mr. Nystrom: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said previously, I want to thank the voters in my constituency for once again re-electing me to this Chamber. It is something which I appreciate and I will try to do as much as I possibly can for everyone in that riding.

[Translation]

I want to congratulate the new Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) as well as his government, his Ministers and his colleagues in the House, and all the other new Members of the Liberal Party and of the New Democratic Party.

[English]

I would also like to commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about one thing that I liked in the Throne Speech—which is a welcome break from the past—and that is the emphasis on consensus, the emphasis on trying to find some co-operation in this country. It is a consensus for working together. I think that is very good because we are a federal state and in the past there has been too much confrontation, too much unilateral action which has led to all kinds of regional frictions between our peoples, the provinces and the federal Government.

I also want to say that I am pleased to see in the Throne Speech a reference to the fact that there will be a special committee, headed by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), to look into the reform of the rules of the House in order that the average Member in the House can have more input and power over the direction that the country is moving toward. I think it is time that that sort of thing happened, because in the past there has been much too much power given to the Prime Minister's Office as well as the offices of the various Ministers of the Government. I hope that this is a sincere move on behalf of the Government. If it is, it will be a worth-while contribution to this new Parliament.

I believe there is already a national consensus on one very important issue, and that is that the most important issue of the day is job creation, providing jobs for the Canadian people from one coast to the other. In this Parliament we must make a massive contribution to the creation of long-term, permanent jobs for Canadians. That must be the number one priority.

Unfortunately, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, last night we saw the Government going in exactly the opposite direction. We saw it do two things; first, it cut back on services by $4.2 billion a year, some $430 million of that in the Department of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Just today in the House we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) confirm that they have run these figures through their economic model, through the computers, but he will not table the lists of what kind of job losses or job increases resulted from that.

Mr. Dick: He did not say that!

Mr. Nystrom: We asked him very clearly to make public that list—perhaps the Hon. Member was not here this morning for Question Period—but he will not do it.

Mr. Dick: The Minister never said that!

Mr. Nystrom: I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what is he trying to hide? I thought the Prime Minister believed in open government. When he was in opposition he asked for an open government. He wanted more freedom of information. All of a sudden, now that he is on the other side only two months later, he is not going to make available those statistics for the Canadian people to see. I really wonder what he is trying to hide, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I just want to mention to the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), if he wants to be accurate, that if he was here this morning he would have realized that it was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who said they had put it through an economic model.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair rules that this is not a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: I think he just proved my point, Mr. Speaker. If he will check the blues or Hansard on Tuesday morning he will see that the Prime Minister will not make a commitment to make that information public.

Something else which happened last night, Mr. Speaker, which really concerns me is that we have now seen some tax increases. The sales tax has gone up in Canada. We have seen an increase in the price of energy in this country, the gasoline tax, the excise tax, the move toward the world level in the price of fuel in Canada. We have also seen the increase in unemployment insurance premiums.

This all comes from a political party whose members said in my riding and other ridings across the country that, if elected, there would not be a cut-back in services; if elected they would not concentrate on the deficit because jobs are number one; if elected they would not increase the taxes on ordinary Canadians; in fact, if elected, there would be a minimum tax which rich people would have to pay so that they would not get away with all of the loopholes we have in our tax system today. After only two months, Mr. Speaker, we are seeing a cut-back in services of over $4 billion. I am told by economists that as many as 100,000 people could lose their jobs because of those cut-backs in all of the government departments across Canada. In fact, if one looks at agriculture alone, one sees a $62 million cut-back. And it is not just Canagrex. There is a $32 million cut-back on extra fees which a farmer is now going to have to pay for the services the farmer needs on his farm.

There are millions of dollars cut back in funding for rail lines, branch lines and rehabilitation. In my riding, Mr. Speaker, there are rail lines which need to be rehabilitated. I recall a certain all-candidates meeting in my riding when the Conservative candidate could not show up because he was out with the now Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) looking at a rail line in my riding which goes from Kelvington to Lintlaw to Preeceville, and they made a promise that they would keep the rail line, which those nasty Liberals would not; that there was not enough funding, and that was true.

That is the truth of the matter, Sir.

[English]

Here is the Conservative Party saying: "You elect us and we will keep that rail line". But what has it done? If one goes to the Government's information books distributed last night, one finds it cut off tens of millions of dollars for branch line rehabilitation. It is one thing to promise the people of Canada and not deliver. But here we have the Party across the way promising the people of Canada one thing and delivering something else.

It was the now Leader of the Opposition of the Liberal Party who talked a lot about the deficit being too high in this country and that we had to cut back on the debt. I notice the present Prime Minister is now quoting him day in and day out. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative Party is now implementing the program of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). No wonder the people of this country are becoming increasingly cynical of politics and politicians when we see that kind of breach of promise within 60 days of the September 4 election campaign.

[Translation]

As I said, Mr. Speaker, we now have a national consensus in this country. It is a national consensus and unemployment is the first priority for the government and the country. Canadians will get to work and build a new country. As the Canadian bishops pointed out nearly two years ago in January 1983 in a document that is now very well known throughout Canada, the most urgent issue facing us is setting up a program to fight unemployment which is already too high in Canada, and we must take immediate action to find jobs for Canadian men and women across the country.

[English]

When the Pope visited our country he said that the big, important issue in this country is unemployment. I have here an article from The Toronto Star of September 14 wherein the Pope said, and I quote:

> Men and women are meant to contribute by their work to the building up of the human community, and so to realize their full human stature as co-creators with God and co-builders of His kingdom," the Pope told the fishermen of Newfoundland and their families this week. "Prolonged failure to find meaningful employment represents an affront to the dignity of the individual, for which no social assistance can fully compensate."

The Pope reminded us that this is the big issue facing the country today. The Bishop said the same thing. Our Party has been saying the same thing, as have farm organizations, trade unions and ordinary Canadians from coast to coast.

The point is that it is not just the fact that if people are not working they cannot make a contribution to society. The fact of the matter is that if people are not working it creates all kinds of anxieties and problems for them and their families. A Canadian psychiatrist said recently that last year about 70 per cent of his patients came to him because they were unemployed and were facing problems which were created from their unemployment. The problem is real, Mr. Speaker, for the over one million Canadians who are unemployed today. If one looks back over the last few years, one can see that it is a problem which is becoming worse each and every single year.

In 1981 some 7.5 per cent of the Canadian population was unemployed; in 1982, 11 per cent; in 1983, 11.9 per cent; in 1984 the average so far is at 11.5 per cent. This morning it was 11.3 per cent; last month it was 11.8 per cent; in July it was 11 per cent. So no matter how you look at the figures they have been consistently over 11 per cent during 1984. I do not forget that the Prime Minister said in Prince Albert that if he was elected, within days, as a matter of fact when he was sworn in, thousands of jobs would be created almost magically, like Alice in Wonderland, overnight. I would like to hear the Prime Minister say that to unemployed people in the City of Yorkton, in the City of Melville or in any place in this country. As a matter of fact, if one compares the situation at the time this Government was sworn into office with the situation today, one can see there are more people unemployed today. If one looks at the figures between October, 1984 and October, 1983, one finds there are 72,000 more people looking for work. Those figures come from a government which said: "If you swear us into office, automatically overnight there will be thousands of jobs created". Where are those jobs, Mr. Speaker?

Looking at agriculture, for example, the Party across the way made promises during the election campaign to get rid of the capital gains tax. It made promises to freeze freight rates because the Crow rate had disappeared. It made promises to pay out money from the Farm Stabilization Plan. It made promises to give aid to farmers in northeastern Saskatchewan because there was too much rain. It made all kinds of promises to the farmers of western Canada. They promised to upgrade the rail lines. Yet we have had a Throne Speech, a budget—

Mr. Jelinek: No budget.

Mr. Nystrom: All right, maybe it is not a budget but it was a financial statement. That is what budgets used to look like when I came here a number of years ago. If you want to create jobs, I say to the Government why not spend money in agriculture, helping the farmer, the ordinary citizen and small business in this country, and we will put people to work like we have never put them to work before?

I see across the way the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) and other Members who sat in opposition a few months ago. They were asking why the Government was not doing more for small business and the farmers of this country, but all of a sudden they are on the Government side of the House and they think they are Pierre Trudeau.

Mr. Dick: Please, no. That is an insult.

Mr. Boudria: They do not deserve that compliment.

Mr. Nystrom: I do not know if I would call it a compliment or not, but they have certainly forgotten what they stood for before the election campaign was announced.

We have all seen the statistics that were announced this morning. Unemployment is 11.3 per cent. It is 21 per cent in Newfoundland, 15.1 per cent in British Columbia, and 12.8 per cent in Quebec. The unemployment rate is still very high, yet we do not see any new ideas, programs or initiatives whatsoever from the Government to reduce unemployment. The mandate the Government was given in the election was to create jobs, jobs, jobs. Where are those jobs, jobs, jobs? What programs do they have for jobs, jobs, jobs? I do not see them.

If the Government was to spend the money on small business, agriculture, guaranteed prices, parity prices for farmers, this money would be spent on goods and services. Small business would do the same thing. We would create jobs. In fact, an economist said not too long ago that if we had had an unemployment rate of 7.5 per cent for the last few years, the federal deficit would have been completely eliminated by the year 1983. If we want to eliminate that deficit, the quickest way of doing so is to make sure we put more Canadians to work. They would then generate economic activity, pay taxes and make a contribution. That is how the deficit would go down.

Current levels of unemployment in Canada mean a loss of some $40 billion to $50 billion a year in economic activity. That does not include the anxiety, pain and suffering people go through when they cannot find work. I suggest that the Government set targets to reduce unemployment in this country by, say, 2 per cent or 2.5 per cent a year. The Manitoba Government set that objective a few years ago and it has been able to achieve that objective because of its special job creation projects and programs. I remember very well that when the present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and others were in opposition, they used to ask the then government: What are your objectives? What are your targets? How long is it going to be before you bring unemployment down from 11 per cent to 9 per cent, 5 per cent or 4 per cent? They used to get very upset when the government would not set targets. Well, we are seeing the same thing from this Government today. It has set targets for the deficit but we have not seen any target setting for unemployment. I suggest Members opposite tell the Canadian people where they are planning to go.

I believe job creation should be the main focus of this Parliament and this Government. More jobs for young people, women and small business. I have already mentioned agriculture. One can mention forestry, where we need a lot of research and development. That is another area where the Government is cutting back. Single industry towns must be diversified. We must put more money into shipbuilding. We must have tax reform. As I said before, there are lot of people not paying any taxes at all, or who are not paying their fair share. If we had tax reform, we could collect several hundreds of millions of dollars from the rich and put that money into job creation for the ordinary citizens of Canada. I believe those are things that can and should be done if we are to create jobs for each and every single person in this country today.

We in this country, Mr. Speaker, indeed right across the western world, are going through quite a change in the way our society is organized. We are in the process of moving from the industrial society into the post-industrial or information era. We are going to have to make sure that we spend more money on research and development. We have to spend more money on developing our computer and other high technology industries than we have in the past. Otherwise we will fall further and further behind.

Look at the trend, Mr. Speaker. In the United States in the 1970s some 90 per cent of new jobs were in the non-goods producing area. Only about 10 per cent were in the traditional areas of manufacturing, agriculture and forestry. That type of thing is happening in this country as well. As we move into this kind of society, the important thing will be brain power and knowledge. Yet we see a financial statement here last night which is cutting back on research and development. It will not put as much money into job retraining and upgrading of skills, not just for our young people but for all Canadians. I think that is going in exactly the wrong direction.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to see a government which has a little bit of imagination to do a little bit of planning; a government which will try with the provinces, labour, farmers and business to sit down and develop some national goals and objectives. Ask ourselves what we can do as Canadians and do well. Pick three or four areas that we can do well in, become world leaders and experts in, and I will suggest just three or four of them this afternoon.

We are one of the greatest agricultural nations in the world. There is no reason we should not be producing more agricultural machinery and equipment. We import most of our agricultural machinery from aboard. I think we should be putting more money into that sector so that we can start producing more of that machinery ourselves, thereby creating jobs for Canadians and exporting to other parts of the world.

Another area is that of resources. We are very abundantly blessed with all kinds of resources, yet over 80 per cent of the mining machinery we use in our mines is imported from other countries. I think that has to be changed. There is no reason we could not specialize in mining machinery and equipment to be used in our mines and also export it abroad as well.

A third area is that of communications. We are a vast country and communications is one area we should concentrate on and specialize in, in order to become world leaders in communications equipment and devices.

Another area is that of transportation. This is something that the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has spoken about many times in this House. There is no reason in the world that we should not be in the forefront of technology in transportation. Yet it is not Canada that develops a lot of the more modern trains and transportations vehicles. The fastest trains in the world are in France and Japan, not here in Canada.

These are just four areas where we are naturals to become world leaders, which would create jobs through exports to other countries around the world. There are a lot of other things that one can mention in this debate, a lot of ideas that could be tossed into the hopper concerning jobs. We could be cleaning up our environment and creating jobs at the same time. We could be building a lot more houses, investing more money in people, health education, and creating jobs all at the same time.

We should also be looking at job security legislation because a lot of workers do not feel there is very much security in this high-tech age. We can look to countries in Europe such as Germany, Norway and Sweden and the legislation they have covering job security and protection. We could be doing that as well. We should also be looking at processing more of our raw materials in Canada, as well as asserting ourselves more economically so that we make sure that we make the economic decisions which are important to this country. At present more of our economy is foreign owned than is that of any other country in the world. That, Mr. Speaker, not only causes us to lose some political autonomy, but causes us to lose jobs as well. I see my time is up.

• (1500)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Nickerson: I have one question I would like to address to the Hon. Member. I found his presentation to be excellent. It was presented in a non partisan way and had some very good ideas attached to it. I would like to ask about the last point he made on the processing of resources in Canada. That is something which everybody, I am sure, would like to see happen. However, how do we get around the following problem? We would like to sell sliced bread to Japan and European countries rather than just wheat in order to keep the extra jobs in Canada. However, they do not want to buy sliced bread and they do not want to buy flour. They want to buy wheat, and if they do not buy it from Canada they will buy it from Argentina, Australia or the United States. How do we proceed to implement the ideas of the Hon. Member?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, if we had a more aggressive sales policy and perhaps more aggressive trade commissioners around the world, we could sell more processed and refined goods. Other countries are doing it right around the world. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) knows that as well as I do. Perhaps Canagrex would have been able to promote the sale of more processed farm commodities and do more trading and bartering. However, the Government across the way has decided to kill off Canagrex, thereby chopping another $6.6 million or $6.2 million from the budget.

The farmers from my constituency supported that particular piece of legislation. I voted for that in the House. I wish that that legislation would have stayed, but it is being chopped off by the Government across the way. The purpose of Canagrex was to sell, sell, sell for the farmers of Canada. I do not know what the Conservative Party is afraid of. Is it afraid of Canagrex because it is a Crown corporation? Is it afraid of Canagrex because it might get out there and sell for some of the small producers who do not have the ability to sell through the big private marketing agencies? I am not sure. Perhaps the Hon. Member can explain it himself.

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment on the last exchange between the Hon. Members. All of us in this country must recognize sooner or later that, if we are indeed to export manufactured goods, we have been remiss for 15 years or more in upgrading technology of all kinds in the country. We have not been able to produce manufactured goods at a cost which anyone could sell abroad. One of the reasons I believe this Government will increase the sale of manufactured goods is that for the first time in a long time we have a Government that recognizes the significance of technology transfer. That is the key which has been missing for many years.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I do not necessarily disagree with the Hon. Member's comment that one area in which we as a country have fallen back is technology. I made some reference to that myself. We are into the so-called post-industrial era now in the information society, and we are rapidly falling behind. In fact, our standard of living in the last 30 years has fallen from second in the world to tenth or twelfth. One reason for that is that we have not restructured our economy. We have not restructured a lot of the industries in the country. One of the reasons for that is that so much of our economy is foreign owned. We have depended so much on the head offices in the United States, Europe and Japan and we have the branch plants in this country. The branch plants are always the last ones to be modernized. They are the last ones to have jobs preserved in them. They are the first to go by the wayside. They do not do research and development. There is no innovation in them. That is one of the problems and consequences of foreign ownership. Fully 26 per cent of our economy is foreign owned compared to 3 per cent in the States, France or Britain, or 1 per cent in Japan. I am afraid the Government across the way will be going in the opposite direction by getting rid of FIRA and opening up the doors once again to foreign equity, ownership and control.

The other point I would like to make is that if you look at the budget papers from last night you will find that the Government has reduced research funding in the country by either $60 million or $80 million, I forget the exact figure. This is in a country where research and development already had too low a priority. Until yesterday we had spent about the same percentage of our GNP on research and development as did Ireland and Egypt. Despite that, the Government has cut that back by an extra $60 million to $80 million.

The same thing is happening in agriculture. About $2 million or $3 million was cut back on research and development in agriculture. Mr. Speaker, coming from a farm riding I know that instead of spending less money for R and D in agriculture we should be spending more money in terms of helping the farmers improve the products which they are trying to produce to feed the hungry people in the world. Instead of going forward into the future we have a Government which is moving backward into the past.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to comment briefly on what the mover has just said about Canagrex. I think that this was a program . . . I am very happy to see that the New Democratic Party is now joining the Liberal Party in recognizing that the former Government had some good programs. I also know that the Member from Guelph who has just spoken will have many other opportunities when he chairs the Committee on External Affairs to establish new relationships between Canada and other countries, and in my opinion, everyone is co-operating.

Mr. Nystrom: I only want to add a few words, Mr. Speaker. I have already said that I was in favour of Canagrex, and I still am, and the 31 members of our caucus voted for Canagrex last year. That legislation had been introduced by the former Minister, Mr. Eugene Whelan. It was nothing new for me. I have always been for Canagrex as we need such an agency to promote our exports throughout the world. This is very important. I agree with you that it was a backward measure which the Government announced last night.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure and a great honour for me to take part in this debate. But first, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate you and your assistants on your appointment to the Chair of this illustrious assembly. I also wish to congratulate the Government opposite and, I should add, on this side of the House, on their election on September 4 of this year. Finally, I wish to congratulate all Members of the House on their election to Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank all those who helped me in this and previous campaigns. First of all, the people who voted for me in 1974, when I was running for the Municipal Council of Cumberland Township, as well as those who voted for me in 1976, 1978 and 1980, and last but not least, the voters of Prescott-Russell who elected me as their Member of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in 1981, and finally, the voters of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, who voted for me on September 4 of this year and sent me to this illustrious House. I think the mandate the Government received on September 4 is very impressive, and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you will agree that this Government, now that it has obtained the support of 50 per cent of the voters of this country, definitely has a mandate to lead the country. A word of caution, however: they must recognize the mandate of the Opposition, that of all Members, and the aspirations of all Canadians. Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that even if 50 per cent of the voters voted for this Government, the other 50 per cent did not.

The Government must therefore recognize and even help the opposition parties by providing them with the tools needed to discharge their responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, on September 4, we, of the Liberal caucus, were elected to be the Official Opposition in this House. Ours is also a very important mandate, and, interestingly enough, it will have to be discharged with 40 members as against 40 cabinet ministers. This means that each and every Opposition member is called upon to be an official critic for a department. This again is a very important task which, I am convinced, every member in the Liberal caucus will fulfill with our customary vim and the energy of our leader, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) along with the 39 other Members in the Liberal caucus. I am convinced that with such a dynamic team, we will very succesfully carry out that mandate.

I would like to thank our leader for selecting me as the Opposition critic for Supply and Services. This is an area I find most interesting, Mr. Speaker, because it has been my former privilege, as a Canadian civil servant, to be a purchasing agent here for the House of Commons, and to work with the Department of Supply and Services.

Mr. Speaker, the constituency of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is a very special one in my view. Of course, every member in this House feels that his or her constituency is very special, and understandably so. Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is at the eastern tip of Ontario, east of the City of Ottawa. As opposed to what some people may think elsewhere in Canada, east of Ottawa we are still in Ontario. My constituency has an area of 3,137 square kilometres and lies east of the National Capital. It includes such communities as Orleans, Rockland, Embrun, Alexandria, Vankleek Hill and others. It has a few industries, but it is a farm constituency, especially the eastern part. Ottawa suburbs make up the western part of the constituency.

The area is Loyalist country, except for the Longueuil seigniory which is part today of the Prescott constituency. It is interesting to note that today 64.6 per cent of its citizens are French-speaking and, still more interesting, that 20 per cent of the French-speaking constituents are unilingual.

I think that this very fact makes the French-speaking citizens outside Quebec in the Glengarry-Prescott-Russell riding a very special group.

The average wages of electors in Glengarry-Prescott-Russell are slightly lower than those in the rest of the country. This means that our riding needs help from the federal government and that the cuts announced last evening by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will affect the electors of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

The people in Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, Mr. Speaker, wanted action and a government which would take action on some issues. My constituents want positive action on women's issues, for the benefit of the handicapped, manpower training programs and improved conditions in the years to come. I suggest that those are the aspirations of my constituents of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell and very likely of all Canadians as well. But what have we seen over the past few days? A throne speech which offered nothing and an economic statement yesterday which made cuts across the board. That is not the way to improve the economic situation of my Glengarry-Prescott-Russell constituents.

I see that my colleague the hon. member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) does not share my views. I am sure, however, that when she goes to Buckingham this weekend, on Saturday, her own constituents will impress on her that these cuts are a mistake. The hundreds of thousands of workers who will lose their jobs within a few months, a great number of them both in my riding and in the hon. member's, will find out that this is no joke, that it is very sad for one to lose one's job because of the action taken by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the House of a few historic events which took place in my riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

[English]

Some of the more interesting historical features include the fact that Samuel de Champlain came into our area in 1613. As well, it is in the eastern part of the riding that the battle of the Long Sault with Dollard des Ormeaux took place. This battle was fought between 17 French Canadians and 44 Indians against some 1,000 Iroquois. This battle took place just east of Hawkesbury in the vicinity of the community Chûte à Blondeau in my riding.

The riding also has some very interesting political history. Thomas D'Arcy McGee, one of the Fathers of Confederation, was a candidate for the provincial riding of Prescott in 1867. It is also very interesting to note that he was defeated in that particular election by one James Boyd, who was a wood merchant from the Town of Hawkesbury.

Another interesting feature is the fact that John Sandfield Macdonald, Premier of the United Province of Canada and the first Premier of the Province of Ontario had the honour and privilege of representing the riding of Glengarry in the Legislative Assembly.

William Lyon Mackenzie King represented the constituency between 1945 and 1949. It is interesting for Liberals in the House to note that he was elected in that election with a vote of 4,551 for the Liberals against 325 for the Tories. While I do not quite enjoy that kind of majority in Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, I am grateful for the majority that I did receive and I hope that support from the electorate of my area will continue in future elections.

It is a particular honour for me to come to the House of Commons. I come from humble beginnings and I am very proud of them. I believe it is important for all of us, once we get here, to remember our roots forever. Those of us who forget them will often be reminded in a most ungenerous way by the electors at subsequent elections.

I started working at the House of Commons on October 25, 1966. I believe that I am the first former employee of the House of Commons ever to be elected as a Member of Parliament. I did not come here as an executive assistant to Mr. Speaker, although that would have been nice. Nor did I come here as an adviser to a Cabinet Minister. I was not the son of an MP. I came here as an employee of the Parliamentary Restaurant. I will always have a special place in my heart for the employees of the House of Commons.

During my first days as a Member of Parliament, I had the privilege of taking a tour of the House of Commons. I must say that I have come to the conclusion that we often do not appreciate the work of the staff of this great institution as we should. I want to bring one interesting fact to your attention, Mr. Speaker, of which perhaps we are unaware, that is the lack of attention that we pay to the work of the staff. A few days after the election I was in the hallway right in front of this Chamber. There I noticed a plaque which honours a Member of Parliament who died in the great fire of 1916. Underneath the Member's name it says that six employees also died, but their names are not listed. I think it important that we pay more attention to the people who make this place work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I propose that we erect a plaque honouring these six people, and if this House is unwilling to do so, I will offer to pay for it myself if someone, some day, will instal the plaque. The plaque will honour the following six people: Madame Louis Morin, Madame Henri Bray, Mr. J. B. R. Laplante, assistant clerk of the House, Mr. A. Desjardins, a plumber, Mr. Alphonse Desjardins, employee of the federal public service, and Mr. Randolph Fanning, an employee of the post office. I believe it would be recognition of the 3,000 people who work here if we paid that special tribute to the six employees who gave their lives.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I have the utmost respect for this institution, Sir, and as I said, I worked here previously. I was a member of the Legislative Assembly of our great Province of Ontario, and I was a member on three different occasions of a municipal council. I believe, as my Leader very correctly said only a few days ago, that no greater honour can be paid to a Canadian than to be elected to the forum of this nation. I believe it was our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who said it is a great country when a truck driver can aspire to be Prime Minister. I would like to think that this is not a bad place where a busboy in the Parliamentary Restaurant can someday return as a Member of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

We will continue with debate. The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne).

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to thank voters in the riding of Champlain for the trust they placed in me and the Progressive Conservative Party on September 4 of this year. The vast majority of my constituents realized that important changes have to be made in the riding, in the province and in this country, if Canada is to be saved from the social and economic disaster towards which the Liberals have been leading us during the last twenty years. We owe this tremendous victory for democracy to a Party, to our Party, which listened to the needs of the people, which was receptive and understood the expectations of all Canadians, expectations which in the past had been dashed by an all too arrogant Liberal Government, a Liberal Government which thought it owned the country, a Liberal Government which wasted the hard-earned dollars of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, this country was sick and tired of the Liberal Government's constant confrontation tactics with the provinces. That is why, Mr. Speaker, after the election on September 4, the Progressive Conservative Party has received a clear mandate, a mandate that will give Canadians, once again, a chance to fulfil their potential in all economic and social sectors. Hon. Members will remember that during the last election campaign, Brian Mulroney and his team of Progressive Conservative candidates invited the Canadian people to work together with them towards national reconciliation. The Right Hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Mulroney, has always associated reconciliation with the need to bring about an economic consensus. The climate of tension that existed under the previous government was one of the factors that led to the sad deterioration of our economy. In my riding, in Champlain, Mr. Speaker, this has meant a combined unemployment rate of over 50 per cent in some areas. By combined, I mean the unemployment rate plus the welfare rate. Unemployment is particularly high among young people. They are almost desperate. Women are frustrated because they are being confined to traditional roles. Factory shutdowns have become common place. Farmers are increasingly being faced with serious financing problems, and this is particularly true among those who are starting an operation for the first time. People are very concerned, and it is clear that the situation requires a sustained and concerted effort by all Canadians. We cannot leave the people in my riding and throughout the country in a situation that is indeed deplorable in the eyes of the outside world. We must take action, and we must do so as soon as possible.

In the throne speech, the Prime Minister reiterated his intention of calling a national conference on the economy. In fact, before the opening of this session, provincial first ministers had been asked to meet to set the agenda for the conference. This economic summit will bring together representatives of consumers, women, native peoples, the business world, labour and various levels of government. The purpose of the summit is to establish a new national action plan. It will be a success, provided participants can agree on certain economic priorities and on the respective roles of the economic partners, and if there is a commitment to some immediate courses of action. The Prime Minister also mentioned the possibility of future summits which, over time, would generate mutual confidence and a sense of shared responsibility for our national economy. He also defined the Government's role in the economy in which it would act as guide, mediator and catalyst.

A Progressive Conservative Government will be less intrusive in the private sector but vigilant over the integrity of the national economy and of national standards. The co-operation of all economic partners in a movement towards common economic goals, a concerted effort to resolve economic problems that are at the top of the priority list, regular meetings of these partners, and getting Canada back on the road to prosperity—these elements are all part of the grand design for national reconciliation.

The Progressive Conservative Party did not fight the Liberals and win the election to do what they did, which was to let the Canadian dollar float downward and try to solve the unemployment problem with bandaid programs. We are aiming for consensus, but we realize this will take time. However, we can take other important steps to help create this economic renewal.

The strategy devised by the ministers of our government is threefold: to restore fiscal responsibility, to remove obstacles to growth and to promote new investments. The record shows, Mr. Speaker, that the former Liberal government had to work very hard at the end of its mandate to leave such a bare treasury. Faced with such conditions, the present government got down to work seriously. Our plan aimed at reducing the deficit will be enforced in a fair, balanced and orderly manner and will allow us to restrict the growth of the public debt. Nobody will deny that it is urgent to tackle the deficit. If it gets out of control, it will finally drain all financial resources still available and will prevent us from taking maximum advantage of new opportunities. It will exert a very strong pressure on interest rates and will eventually bring to a standstill all investments required for our economic growth.

I would like also to give my constituants the assurance that our Government will endeavour to increase the efficiency and flexibility of our financial markets. We will strive to improve employment opportunities, based on market needs, and stimulate investments in research and development in order to increase our productivity.

This Government, Mr. Speaker, will introduce legislation to improve market conditions, and will put forward proposals to stimulate enterpreneurship and innovation. And to better reward success, especially in the small and medium business sector, we will also have orientations to suggest. There will be initiatives to increase both Canadian and foreign investment. With regard to unemployment, that tragedy brought about by the former Government, our Government now speaks in terms of strategy. We are committed to put the economy back on its rails, in order to create jobs. It is therefore urgent to stimulate job-creating investment. But to be efficient, any strategy for increasing employment opportunities should rest on increased worker training and retraining. This is why such a strategy based on a broader utilization of resources will be submitted to the provinces, the labour unions and the business community, with special emphasis on the private sector. Intensive consultations will be held with these groups. I am convinced that we will achieve those most interesting results, with the one goal of restoring to Canadians their proper role which is to make this a united, prosperous and pleasurable country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions? Comments?

• (1530)

[English]

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour and a pleasure for me to rise to address this House as the Member of Parliament for Edmonton West. After having heard the Speech from the Throne, I am confident in believing that a new chapter will be written in history. There are fresh ideas and approaches to show the country the direction in which this new Government will proceed in the coming year.

In this, my maiden address as the newly elected Member of Parliament for Edmonton West, I want to outline some of the reasons why I became a Member and indicate to Members of this House and my constituency those areas of personal interest and concern. I am very pleased that those areas have been addressed in the Throne Speech as well as in the economic and fiscal statement last night in what I believe is a very positive way. As a Member of Parliament I do not have and will not have all of the answers to the many pressing questions facing Canadians today. I will, however, be searching for ideas and people with ideas to help me in my role as a Member of Parliament.

I will be consulting and seeking input from my constituents and others on the direction the Government has set. I will do the political leg work necessary to carry the ideas and views of my constituents directly to government, because I feel what has been missing in government in the past is that government has not been prepared to listen to the people and, furthermore, has lacked the political will to act once the consultation process has distilled and refined the ideas which have been presented.

Make no mistake, ideas abound. All Members will know that we here in Parliament are involved in a paper war. We are inundated daily with ideas and presentations of persons seeking to put forth their views. What we need then is to define the process through which all Canadians can be confident that their views will be heard in determining how best to proceed in the direction which the Government has established in the Throne Speech and also in the economic and fiscal statement, which I believe is an integral part outlining that direction, and also that they can be confident that, following proper consultation, the Government will act. For any Member of Parliament the greatest occupation is to serve others and make certain that those people less fortunate can be assured that their government will work with them instead of imposing policies without consultation.

It is obvious from this Throne Speech that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) strongly believes in consultation with the provinces, and the new Progressive Conservative Government has indicated its willingness, and indeed intention, to co-operate with the provincial governments and all involved sectors in major policy areas.

The key issues covered in the Throne Speech by my Government are important to my constituency and the Province of Alberta. The specific areas of economic recovery, international trade and parliamentary reform are of utmost concern to me. Alberta's views must be heard at the federal level, and the new Progressive Conservative Government has indicated its willingness to hear them.

The economic renewal three-part strategy plan announced in the Throne Speech refers to removing impediments to growth, seeking national consensus for economic direction, re-invigorating investment, and enhancing private sector risk taking and innovation among entrepreneurs.

As a chartered accountant by profession, it is obvious to me that, through consultation and co-operation rather than through confrontation, this new Government can adequately respond to regional difficulties when presenting national economic policies.

The initial introduction of a First Ministers' conference on the economy, followed by a national economic summit will join important groups together for the task of constructing a national economic consensus. This summit will be justly represented by all groups: women, consumers, native peoples, labour, business and government.

Alberta cannot prosper without international trade. It is vital that we continue to contribute to our growth and survival. Canada has a vital stake in the elimination of barriers to trade, commerce and investment on an international basis.

Any further protectionist moves by the United States or other major trading countries could have a very negative effect on Canada's and Alberta's trade expansion opportunities. The future of Canada and Alberta in this area must be keyed to our success in penetrating these markets with world level technology, fully reliable export capacities and transportation networks, and a skilled, highly productive domestic work force.

Since Canada is a trading nation—more than 30 per cent of our Gross National Product is derived from exports—changes in the international trading environment have important domestic ramifications. Government must play its part by creating the climate and fostering the entrepreneurial spirit needed to realize new products and processes and to adapt and develop innovations. My colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in his economic and financial statement which was presented last night, made specific reference to directions for change in increasing industrial research and development.

Canada has begun to experience other structural shifts as well, such as an increase in the average age of the population, slower population growth, alterations in demand for consumer products, and greater output shares accounted for by the service sector and the high-tech industries. All of these now demand enormous adaptation and adjustment. I am convinced that the most constructive role this Government can play is to concentrate our attention on creating a kind of environment in which the private sector can do what it does best, which is to create new jobs and new prosperity.

Increasing private-sector confidence and investment in the Canadian economy will result in the security of employment and jobs in Alberta. The quality of our economy rests on the self-reliance of individuals, and that requires room in order for creativity to be expressed. In this respect, our concern for small business, Canadian ownership and access to new careers for women, minorities and young people entails a vital human concern central to our quality of life. To meet these aspirations as well as our economic challenges, it is important for our society to encourage people to innovate and to create.

Economic growth is a social necessity because it will enable us to continue to invest in social programs. As we were reminded, people and not statistics are what economic growth is about. For us, this is a far more ambitious and indeed a far more compassionate concept than a safety net of food and shelter for the less fortunate. Rather, it is the provision of necessary resources and help to reduce dependence and to liberate the individual to participate in the work and rewards in our rich society.

Because of poor job prospects in most other parts of Canada, many unskilled people moved to Alberta in recent years in the hope of finding a job, only to discover that an adjustment to the boom in Alberta was already under way and that fewer jobs were available. The federal Government's announcement that measures are needed to improve and expand skills training and re-training and the Government's intention to introduce an innovative employment strategy is an indication that every effort is being made by the Prime Minister and his Government to co-operate with the provinces, labour and business in determining appropriate policies.

In immediately attempting to reduce the huge federal deficit, this administration has realized that the cost of servicing the deficit limits the Government's ability to meet priority economic and social needs. The deficit hides the real cost of Government and does not allow for society to respond. The deficit inhibits private-sector growth and constrains the Government's ability to encourage growth. With a balanced budget, people would have to pay directly for services and programs initiated by the Government rather than paying indirectly for these services.

We have created an environment in which people expect governments to solve all of their problems but are actually shielded from the fact that, ultimately, the price tags for all those solutions must be paid for by the taxpayer. Deficits insulate that reality, and therefore governments become unresponsive to the true demands of their citizens.

By eliminating this smoke and mirrors distortion of reality, the Government can be held accountable for the success or failure to provide the level of services desired by the citizens with the resources allocated to it by those same citizens. The people are then in a position, through their exercise of the franchise, to decide what the role of Government will be, how large a role it should play and, most important, to what degree our society shall respond to the needs of those less fortunate. That is an important point. I have every confidence that Canadians will respond in a generous and caring way when others, either within or outside our country, are in need. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I have more confidence in average Canadians responding than I have in some bureaucrat or official making a decision on what an appropriate response might be on behalf of the Government and the people of Canada.

The willingness of Canadians to respond to those less fortunate has been demonstrated by the response we have seen to the tragedy in Ethiopia. I commend my colleague, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), for his approach to this world tragedy and for the way that he has provided a vehicle for Canadians to get involved and to respond.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dorin: In Edmonton West, groups have been collecting funds to provide necessary food and equipment for Ethiopians in the hopes of alleviating human misery. It is obvious that this Government and the Canadian people care.

The Government has also announced that Members of the House of Commons will be asked to approve the appointment of a parliamentary task force on reform of the House. This is indeed an important announcement. As a new Member of Parliament, I believe that if the House were freer to represent the regional and local realities of the country, more effective federal programs and policies would result.

Parliament does not at present appear to be in full control of government, and parliamentary committees are not as effective as they could be. Individual Members of Parliament must be given sufficient and adequate resources to do the job properly. We must be provided the tools to do the job and then be expected to deliver results.

Assigning genuine problems to standing or special committees would give Ministers the views of Members of Parliament from across the country. It would also give Members of Parliament the direct opportunity of contributing to the development of policies. We must be given the power to call before committees experts from all areas of the country and all sectors of the economy. We must be allowed more free votes on issues that are not matters of confidence in the Government, and we must be given more individual power. The enhancement of the role of the private Member is the key issue and would allow our system to reflect the reality of the country and lead us to a more effective system.

The Government's planned restructuring of the Foreign Investment Review Agency will undoubtedly benefit small business directly and encourage foreign investment. In my view, this is a positive step for the Province of Alberta. The prosperity of Canada and Alberta will depend on new job creation. Under the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), a new formula has been used to allocate funds for Canada Works programs to every riding across Canada on a more equitable basis.

While I have some concerns about the long-range effectiveness of such programs, it is important to note that areas of tragically high unemployment like Edmonton, which now has an unemployment rate of 13 per cent or more, are now receiving their fair share of federal employment funds to help temporarily alleviate a very serious situation. My constituency allotment for Canada Works has been increased from a mere $122,000 to a more realistic $777,000. This indicates a concern on behalf of the new Progressive Conservative Government for the equitable distribution of funds across the country in order to stimulate employment.

It is Edmonton's eightieth birthday this week. It became a city on November 7, 1904. It is also the one hundred and eighty-ninth anniversary of the building of the first fort by the North West Company. The tremendous growth of Edmonton is a result of immigration from other parts of Canada and many areas of the world. People came to Edmonton because they had confidence in the future of the city and of the province.

It is evident from the Throne Speech and the economic and fiscal statement that this administration is attempting to breathe a new spirit into federalism and restore the faith and trust of all Canadians in the effectiveness of our system of government. Canadians voted for change, and from the indications in the Throne Speech debate I am convinced that this new direction will benefit Canada, the Province of Alberta and my constituency of Edmonton West.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments on the maiden speech of the Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin)? If there are no questions or comments, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

[Translation]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate you on your election to the Chair, and I would also like to congratulate this new Government.

[English]

I think it is quite clear that in the election the people of Canada did vote for change, and as a consequence decided to turf the Liberals out and, hopefully, to make them a historical vestige in Canada. I believe that people also voted for the kind of compassion and concern for ordinary people which New Democrats have traditionally represented and certainly intend to represent in the course of this Parliament.

I would like to thank the electorate of Ottawa Centre for their confidence in electing me. The House may be aware that my majority was a modest one of only 54 votes, and therefore I congratulate other Members of Parliament who were elected with a larger landslide than I was able to attain this time. I will attempt to catch up with them in the 1988 election.

This is a new venue for me, but it is also a return. I was in this House as an observer, as a parliamentary journalist for The Financial Times of Canada, from 1966 to 1970, before spending 13 years in provincial politics as an MPP. It is good to be back in my home city. I recognize and fully sympathize with those Members who have distant ridings, because for 13 years I have been living in one community and representing another. I know the difficulties that that represents. To those new Members who are residents of my riding I offer a particular welcome and a promise that I will inform them regularly through my householder of my work in politics.

I would like to talk about the election campaign as well as the economic statement and the Throne Speech. I believe there is a real danger of polarization between Bay Street and Main Street, and I think that that danger has already been amply demonstrated by the two policy statements which the Government has delivered this week. I do not believe that the people of Canada voted for the values of Bay Street when they voted for change on September 4. I also fear that too much, too quickly and too soon the new Government is beginning to look like the Liberal Government which it replaced, rather than bring in real change which will benefit the ordinary people in my riding and across Canada.

I have a number of priorities I would like to speak on which relate to the people of my riding as well as to many people across Canada. One of those priorities is the question of housing. More than half of the people living in Ottawa Centre are tenants. We have a vacancy rate of 0.2 per cent. One apartment in 500 is actually vacant, as some new Members may have discovered when seeking accommodation after being elected to Parliament. Rents as high as $500 or $600 for a one-bedroom apartment. For family accommodation as well as apartments they are far beyond the affordability of large numbers of people who live in Ottawa Centre, despite the fact that Ottawans are perhaps fortunate in having a higher level of employment and somewhat higher incomes than people in many other parts of Canada.

In my area, homes which rented for $100 a month in 1966 have been renovated. Then are now renting for up to $1,000 or more a month, 18 years later. That is symptomatic of what has happened to the housing situation in Ottawa. The question is, what do families on modest incomes do?

Over many years as an MPP I fought for the rights of tenants. I was among the first people in the Ontario Legislature to seek and successfully gain rent review to protect tenants in the Province of Ontario. But that protection is not good enough if housing is not being provided for people on modest incomes. That is why I regretted so much the cut-backs on co-operative and non-profit housing allocations which were taking place under the Liberals, and why I equally regret that in the Throne Speech and the economic statement there was no thrust at all to have a job-creating investment in new housing directed to people on modest and moderate incomes.

It is to our shame in Ottawa that last winter we had to open emergency shelters because there were hundreds of adult men and women who were homeless. They had no place to live and no place to sleep. There is no form of social alienation in our society which is more intense than that of a person who does not have a roof over his head. In our province, people cannot even qualify for welfare unless they have a home address. There are now sizeable numbers of people in Ottawa who do not qualify for that minimum level of assistance because they have not got a home of their own.

The market system, in which the Minister of Finance and the Conservative Government have put so much trust, is not succeeding in providing housing for people who are poor and people who are on moderate incomes. There are a million Canadians who face an affordability crisis in housing, many of whom are here in Ottawa and in my riding of Ottawa Centre. If the market system is not going to work, people in that situation are either condemned to inadequate accommodation—to paying 30 per cent or 50 per cent of their income in rent—or to having no accommodation whatsoever. I fear that is what the Government is doing because of its lack of housing provisions in the Throne Speech.

The Throne Speech and the economic statement indicated that the Government intends to make cut-backs in the Public Service. My riding is a Public Service riding, and I certainly intend to be a voice on behalf of those people who are public employees and who do essential jobs for Canadians through the Public Service. So far, it has been indicated that 1,500 cut-backs will begin in March, and 2,400 positions will be cut back over the next two or three years. That is disturbing and disquieting. Those numbers are less than we had feared, and for that small mercy I suppose we should be thankful. However, I want to insist that training schemes and relocation schemes be put into place so that no one in the Public Service is forced to lose his or her job as a consequence of the economies which are imposed by this Government. If there were adequate training and adequate advance identification of those workers, that would not occur. It certainly occurred when the Ministry of State for Economic Development was shut down a few months ago under the old Government. I want to ensure that the secretaries, the clerks and the little people who work in the Government get the same treatment as the high-priced bureaucrats in senior jobs received when that Ministry of State was closed down. I hope that the new Government will give that priority.

I also hope to see priority given to the question of political rights for public employees. Over the last several years people working for the Government of Canada have had to put up with an awful lot. A Liberal Government was elected which said that it was opposed to wage and price controls, but it brought in those controls. In the last two years, the Liberals brought in the six and five program. The Liberal Government did it a second time. If people working in the service of Canada wanted to get involved politically to defend their own interests, or if they wanted to get involved politically and had some interest which was completely unrelated to the fact that they worked for the federal Government, they were impeded because of federal law which gives no political rights to people who work for the Government of Canada, apart from the fact that they can vote. As well, under certain limited circumstances those people can present themselves for nomination. This was a major issue in my campaign and I am pledged to work for political rights for people who work in the Public Service of Canada. I want to see that the vast bulk of those workers do not face the disciplinary threats that they faced over the course of this year when the federal election was impending.

Since 1966, the Public Service Employment Act has had restrictions, but they have not effectively been in force because they had to be initiated by a candidate for Parliament, and that did not occur. However, this year the restrictions and warnings were intense. Cases have been lodged and people have been threatened with dismissal for attending political conventions, even despite the fact that no election was taking place. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that that kind of treatment runs in the face of what we have been trying to achieve in this country, which is to broaden people's political rights rather than to narrow them.

I want to remind the Government that when the Conservatives were campaigning this summer, before they became a government, they made it very clear that they believe that most people in the Public Service of Canada should have political rights along the lines for which I would argue and which I would support. In fact, in the correspondence with both the Professional Institute of the Public Service and also with the Public Service Alliance, Brian Mulroney, as Leader of the Conservative forces in the campaign, indicated that the matter should be addressed by an all-Party parliamentary committee in consultation with Public Service organizations, and I am quoting now—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope that the Hon. Member would refer to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister as the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, at that time he was Brian Mulroney, but I will certainly refer to him as the now Prime Minister of Canada.

The now Prime Minister said in his letter to PIPS, "We believe the situation can be quickly resolved—", and referred to the work of the D'Avignon Commission in 1979 as a valuable base on which that should be done. I am disappointed, Mr. Speaker, that that promise was not reiterated in the Throne Speech. I urge the Government and all Hon. Members, in particular those from Public Service ridings, to ensure that that parliamentary committee is set up in the life of this Parliament, hopefully by December. I remind the Government that similar promises were made by the Liberals when they were in Opposition in 1980, but the moment they came back to power they forgot about that particular promise and commitment. I would urge the Government not to be like the Liberals. Do not start forgetting your promises as soon as you get into government. This is an issue which I believe ought to be addressed and ought to be addressed very, very soon.

There are many ethno-cultural communities in my riding. I have made some strong commitments on a number of issues which relate to people from ethno-cultural communities and I am determined to ensure that we will respect those commitments, such as action for redress to the Japanese Canadians for their treatment during the war; action for redress for the terrible situation imposed on Chinese Canadians with the head tax, which effectively shut off immigration to this country over the first part of this century; and the need for affirmative action programs within the Government of Canada in order to ensure that visible minorities are no longer discriminated against in terms of employment. I look forward to the results of the Rosalie Abella Commission on that particular subject. I regret the fact that in the Throne Speech the Government did not take advantage of the opportunity it had to commit itself to the principles and recommendations of the all-Party task force of this Parliament which were contained in the document called Equality Now. It seems to me that that is an excellent blueprint with respect to action by the Government of Canada regarding that important part of my riding, and of our country, which is represented by the ethno-cultural communities.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to some broader issues concerning what was announced in the Throne Speech and the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last night. As Hon. Members are aware, I am now my Party's critic for Treasury Board and Science and Technology, but I have also been appointed Chairman of our Caucus on Quebec, and, Mr. Speaker, we intend to further develop the New Democratic Party's action on issues that concern Quebecers, as well as the activities of our Caucus in the Province of Quebec.

I am afraid that since the September 4 election, there has been a change in the Government's priorities. During the election campaign, the Government ... the Progressive Conservatives said that their priority was jobs. Now it is the deficit, and they maintain that if they can get rid of the deficit, that will attract investment and create jobs.

Since I am going to deal with issues that concern Quebec, I sincerely wonder whether these policies will really affect the situation of Quebecers. Will investment solve the unemployment problem in Quebec in the near future, considering that a majority of Quebecers voted for the Progressive Conservative Party? They elected 58 PC Members to sit on the Government benches. I believe that Quebecers did not vote simply for the theories of Ronald Reagan or Neo-Conservatives, but for a real change to solve the unemployment problem in Quebec and throughout Canada.

The facts are as follows: Unemployment in Quebec has now reached 12.8 per cent compared with 8.9 per cent in Ontario. There is a difference of 4 per cent between the two provinces. Regionally, unemployment has reached 25 per cent in Rouyn-Noranda, 21 per cent in Chicoutimi and 15 per cent in Hull and the Outaouais compared with 8 or 9 per cent in Ottawa. Unemployment is now 14 or 15 per cent in Trois-Rivières. That is the situation. However, the Government is trying to convince us that, if the deficit begins to decrease, this will promote investment which will in turn help correct the situation.

Is the market place going to reduce the difference between the unemployment rates in Quebec and Ontario? Definitely not, in my opinion. What we need is for the government to show leadership and to give priority to employment and not to concentrate only on the deficit.

Will the private sector create jobs in Chicoutimi or Rouyn-Noranda? I do not think so.

What has happened in the past? Many industries in Quebec, such as the mining and the textile industries, have specific problems with which the Government of Canada should be dealing instead of ignoring them. However, the new Government seems to be planning to ignore these problems in the belief that the market place will solve them.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind you about the situation of the Iron Ore Company of Canada. This company had as its president Mr. Brian Mulroney before he became Prime Minister—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to remind the Hon. Member that this is not the Ontario Legislature. The Hon. Member must, not use the Right Hon. the Prime Minister's name. I must also correct him on his use of the name of the Hon. Minister of Finance. He must not address them by their names.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am newly elected to this place, but in the future, I shall definitely refer to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and to the Minister of Finance by their titles.

When the Prime Minister was president of Iron Ore, he closed down the Schefferville mine. At the time, some 600 workers received compensation and separation pay totalling $9 million. However, between 1980 and 1982, the American owners of Iron Ore of Canada received $225 million in dividends while 600 workers received separation pay amounting to $9 million and 1,200 workers were laid off without getting any compensation from the company. These were people who worked in Labrador or for the railways owned by Iron Ore of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this is how the private sector operates. This is what happened to a private company in Quebec.

[English]

That is a good example, Mr. Speaker, of why we are concerned about the promises of the Government, that the free market on its own will suddenly invest and bring jobs back to places like Chicoutimi, Schefferville, Rouyn and Noranda. We quite honestly do not believe that that will in fact occur. We intend to be very active in our attention to the Province of Quebec. As I said in French, I am now heading a Quebec committee of our caucus. We have a Quebec committee in our Party as well. We will be working there because now we are the second party in terms of representation in the House of Commons from all of English Canada, and after 1988 I want to make sure that we are the second or first party in this Parliament representing the people of Quebec as well.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am very disappointed that in the course of the statements made in the Throne Speech and in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), so little reference was made to the problems of technological change which we have to learn to manage if we are to survive successfully the next ten or fifteen years. I believe that responding to technological change can only be done if we do it together. I welcome some of the statements made by the new Government concerning seeking consensus, conciliation and consultation. But consultation is empty if you are not prepared to share in decision making. One of the most urgent problems, it seems to me, in responding to the challenge of technological change is for us as Canadians to learn to share in decision making. The responsibilities of management will have to be shared. Management rights will have to be redefined. Working people will have to take some of that responsibility as well. It is a two-way street. It means both legislation, exhortation and a lot of new thinking by a lot of people. That is why I very much regret that somehow we seem to be getting the rhetoric of Bay Street and encouragement for some of the most outdated management attitudes from the new Government, rather than a clear move forward.

For my part, as critic for science and technology in my Party, Mr. Speaker, I certainly intend to ensure that we look for consensus, conciliation and consultation, but that we do it by sharing, a real kind of economic democracy. If we could move to make economic democracy in this country as powerful and meaningful for every Canadian as is political democracy, I think we would be doing a very good job for all Canadians in moving this country toward the 21st century.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend a warm welcome to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) even though he defeated one of my good friends whom we will miss, the former Member for Ottawa Centre, Mr. Evans.

I think that the Hon. Member has raised a rather important question in his remarks concerning the Public Service of Canada, particularly with respect to the right to participate in the political process. He is referring of course to this issue which he used himself during the electoral campaign—and it served him well. But I would like to ask him to comment briefly and make it clear to Hon. Members and the public at large that there are indeed two aspects to the question he has raised. First, the political participation of public employees which is covered under Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act. I think that the Hon. Member has explained that this section applies during an election and that the Public Service Commission must initiate disciplinary proceedings against a public employee who has been the subject of a complaint by a Member of the House. I should think that very few Members are not fully aware of that provision. That question has been debated at length here and, in the spring of 1984, the Members of the parliamentary committee had an opportunity to raise that issue with the Chairman of the Public Service Commission, Mr. Gallant.

The second aspect is very important, Mr. Speaker, and it is about it that I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member. It has to do in fact with the freedom of expression of public employees.

[English]

—freedom of expression. The Hon. Member will recognize that in the PIPs brief that was made public in the last week or ten days a lot of emphasis was put on freedom of expression. That is a totally different approach than the strictly political participation. I would like to know if he agrees with me that it is a much more encompassing, much larger, more difficult area to discuss, assess, evaluate and come to grips with.

And if in his answer he could explain to me his position on the question of the freedom of expression of public employees—

Both the Hon. Member and myself represent civil servants here, in Ottawa. In our riding we probably have a majority of them, and certainly more than most other ridings. The problem is that there are Hon. Members from outside Ottawa who represent ridings where there are high officials dealing with customs, manpower, skills upgrading or immigration; an immigration officer has the power to decide whether or not a person may enter Canada. From his point of view, would he allow these officials to make public statements concerning government policies? Would he extend to all civil servants this freedom of expression? Since he mentioned the D'Avignon report, does the Hon. Member suggest, like D'Avignon, that there should be restraints placed on the Civil Service as a whole, so that as politicians, we could rely on a non-partisan Civil Service which not only refrains from arbitrary statements concerning government policies but also which is perceived by the Canadian public as totally independent from the government and partisan politics?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. I would say that—

[English]

Perhaps I can reply in English to that particular question. The Hon. Member raises a good question, one which I believe should be studied by a parliamentary task force, particularly if it were to be established very quickly. I happen to believe that most of the restrictions which exist now can and should be removed. That was the position of the D'Avignon Committee, and it is also the practice in Great Britain where senior civil servants do not have freedom to act in a political way. They have to remain neutral, but people who hit the typewriters and drive the trucks and run the weather stations and do all the other jobs that most of the 250,000 people in our Public Service perform would in fact have political freedoms which are essentially the same or almost the same as those of anyone else. I say almost the same in this respect. The principle that is you work for General Motors you do not criticize Chevies if you want to stay in the firm probably applies here, too. If you happen to work for Transport Canada, then I think it is legitimate to expect that a person would not speak out about the policies of his or her immediate employing department. I think that that probably is something that can be developed through guidelines or in other ways, but it certainly would not prevent someone from Transport Canada from being quite actively involved in concerns about, let us say, ureaformaldehyde insulation or concerns about peace or the Cruise missile or some other issue not related directly to his or her department.

I do not think that people in this Parliament are going to be inhibited or restricted by the fact that some people working for government are active politically or are, from time to time, when sitting at a bar, going to a meeting, or in some other way, speaking out on some issue not directly related to their employment. I think this place can rise above that. I do not think that is particularly a problem.

In the case of a Customs worker or someone else who is making quasi-judicial decisions, there may be a certain limited group around whom one has to have a certain intermediate level of restrictions. That is a possibility. But I would say that somewhere around 90 per cent or 95 per cent of the people working for the Government of Canada should have the freedom of expression and of political activity, a freedom which should not have been taken away from them many years ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. I recognize the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper).

Mr. Nickerson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to bring to your attention the fact that in the last question and answer period there was only one question asked and one answer given. My understanding of the rules is that what we were trying to do when we changed the rules was to allow some kind of debate and to have one, two, three or four Members ask questions of the Member who had spoken.

● (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order please. I can appreciate what the Hon. Member said, but when the Hon. Member completed his maiden speech there was only one Member who rose. I considered him to be the only individual who was going to be asking a question or making a comment. Therefore, I proceeded to allow him to have the whole 10 minutes. I am sorry about that.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by congratulating you on your appointment to serve this House in your honoured position. We are very flattered to have you as one of the officers of the House. I would also like to offer my congratulations to Mr. Speaker Bosley. As he has become the interpreter of the rules of this place, I would like to share with him and with you, knowing your sense of humour, a little definition of what an interpreter is. I must say that my comment is made with tongue in cheek. The definition comes from a dictionary which you may well know was written by Ambrose Bierce. It reads:

> Interpreter: one who enables two persons of different languages to understand each other by repeating to each what it would have been to the interpreter's advantage for the other to have said.

I will leave that with you to think about a little bit. You may consider that as you and Mr. Speaker Bosley are called upon to interpret what takes place in this special institution of which we are privileged to be a part.

Before I really begin my remarks, I would like to thank the people of the Peace country for once again giving me the opportunity to serve them in the House of Commons. I found serving them over the last four years to be an exciting challenge, an opportunity, and one of the great thrills of my life. I appreciate the confidence which they have once again placed in me by returning me here. I also appreciate the constant feedback they have given me over the last few years, and which I know they will continue to give me as I continue to work for them in this new Parliament.

I would like to start to discuss the business at hand today, namely, the Throne Speech. As I heard the Throne Speech being delivered I felt there was a great deal of value in that speech. There were a number of things which I felt were extremely significant. I would like to focus on some of those which I feel are very important. One of the first items which comes to mind as I think back on the Throne Speech is the area of federal-provincial relations. This particular issue is very much a concern to the people of Alberta whom I represent. We are very concerned about federal-provincial relations because in the last few years we have watched what can happen when those relationships start to break down. We can see the development of separatists in a region where that had never been a problem. We can see the frustrations and angers that begin to boil and brew when federal-provincial relations are not working. We know that that can cost us jobs. We know of the angers and frustrations which become apparent when federal-provincial relations are not given a priority.

As I listened to the Throne Speech I sensed that we can now expect and look forward to an end to the bickering. I hope that we can start to see some realistic approaches. From conversations which I have had with provincial colleagues, I can tell that tensions are reduced now. There is an opportunity for us as Canadians, for Albertans, Quebecers and people from Ontario, to begin to relate to one another and represent those people at the federal-provincial levels whom we are all elected to serve. I see that as being one of the primary factors in the Throne Speech which I hope will establish a tone for the new Parliament.

A second area in the Throne Speech which is of particular interest to me is parliamentary reform. I had the privilege of serving on the special task force which dealt with parliamentary and procedural reform in the last Parliament. It is a subject which is very near and dear to my heart. It is a subject which I consider to be of paramount importance. It very much affects all of the individual Members of the House, but even more than that that it affects how this nation is governed, how we approach our legislation and the ability that we have to move legislation through the House of Commons.

From references in the Throne Speech to these subjects I sense that there will be a much more meaningful role for private Members of Parliament, Members who are not necessarily in the Cabinet, who are not Parliamentary Secretaries or have not been given a high profile title. I sense that there will be new opportunities for those of us who are in that position. I also see an indication that there will be improved opportunities for Members of Parliament to examine the Government and to consider what it is bringing forward and the implications and seriousness of it. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has asked the Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) to head this very important task force. The Member for St. John's East is a well-known senior Member of the House who has contributed to parliamentary and procedural reform for years. I would like to congratulate him on his appointment and to congratulate the Prime Minister on his choice of this particular individual, who I know is fully capable of delivering to the House a concrete, serious and valuable report.

A third area of the Throne Speech which I believe to be significant is tax reform. Members will recall that in the last Parliament the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), who is now the Minister of National Revenue, was asked by our Party to form a task force to look into Revenue Canada and the difficulties that Canadians from coast to coast were facing with that Department. In my opinion it was one of the most important task forces to be struck in the last Parliament. Out of that came a great deal of good, a great deal of excitement, and a great deal of challenge for the new Government.

In the Throne Speech we have seen signals that there will be an end to the quotas which had so many of us worried and kept so many of us busy by constituents who felt they were being harassed by the Department simply because someone was trying to fill a quota and making sure they were getting their promotions.

Another important factor in the area of tax reform is the concept that a person is innocent until he or she is proven guilty, which we have always thought was significant and totally acceptable in Canada. However, we found that was not the case with Revenue Canada. Often we had taxpayers who were reassessed and had to pay that tax before they could even appeal. So they were found guilty until they could prove their innocence. There are indications in the Throne Speech that we are going to change that. I would like to congratulate the Government on that.

The Throne Speech is a statement of intent, Mr. Speaker. It is a statement of intent in the broadest sense. It cannot outline specifically all that must be done. Of course, the Governor General, out of politeness and good manners, did not or could not tell us why all of these things had to be done. However, I am not under any similar restrictions today and I feel quite free to talk about why I think we need the changes which have been indicated in the Throne Speech and in the economic statement which followed. I believe that we must change the direction in which the Government has been leading the country. We must change it because for so long now the direction in which we have been moving has been the wrong direction. I would like to refer to a few examples which I think demonstrate very clearly the wrong direction in which the previous Government was moving.

Representing the region that I do, I must speak first about the National Energy Program. That Program destroyed investment, opportunity and jobs and set back our country in terms of energy self-sufficiency. That was an example of the wrongness of the actions of the previous administration. There was Canagrex, on which I can remember having a very long debate in the House. It was a debate that took place because Canagrex was going to be the new saviour of our agricultural community. It was going to catapult Canada into making world exports of our agricultural products. After it was formed, we saw that that did not happen, the results were not there. So we now see why we had to cancel Canagrex and return those funds to the Government of Canada. That is a second example of how wrong the last Government has been.

I have already referred to Revenue Canada. Never have we seen such a demonstration of arrogance and such an uncaring attitude toward Canadians. Canadians were treated like numbers and simply as a source of revenue. There was no sense of concern or compassion for fellow Canadians. I believe that the previous Government's use of Revenue Canada greatly contributed to the fact that we are now sitting on this side of the House and they are sitting on that side. There has been a change of government because Canadians did not like the attitude demonstrated by the Liberals. Fortunately, I believe that we are turning that direction around.

In addition to the Throne Speech we also heard the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last night. When I listened to that very significant and important statement for all Canadians, I was struck by the open, frank and sometimes very disturbing appraisal of the problems we face in this country. I was particularly impressed by the fact that the Minister seemed to be speaking directly to the people of the Peace River constituency.

People from the area I represent could quickly relate to many items in the economic statement. They could see that there was an attempt by the Government to recognize the difficult situation that the people of Peace River and all Canadians experienced. They could see that there was an attempt to provide some solutions.

The first issue that comes to mind is that of farm fuel costs. Last night the Minister indicated that there would be an end to the sales tax on farm fuels of some three cents a litre. That is very significant because it gives a considerable advantage to people in the Peace country who consume a great deal of fuel in the seeding, harvesting and maintenance of their fields and crops. In addition, there will be no increase in the petroleum compensation charge to our farming community. These measures are a recognition of the importance of stable input costs to the agricultural community of Canada. That is extremely important to the people in the Peace country, particularly at this time when we are facing rather difficult times.

I must say that there are agricultural difficulties which still must be addressed, particularly in my part of the country. These include the difficulty of covering freight costs for such places as Valleyview, McRae and Fort Vermilion. These are examples of communities in my riding which do not have rail service for grain transportation. I will continue to emphasize this serious situation faced by that part of my riding. There are other areas that are affected by freight costs as a result of changes in the Crow rate.

Let me point out that we in the Peace River area were pleased with the Prime Minister's appointments to the agricultural community. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowksi), who is now the Minister of Transport, is probably one of the most knowledgeable people about the difficulties facing our farmers in terms of the shipment of their grain to market. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) understands the difficulties that we face, and the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board knows that industry as does no other person in the House. We are very pleased, and I know that the people of the Peace country want to congratulate these Ministers on their appointment to these positions. We look forward to their leadership and assistance in providing for the needs of the people in the Peace country.

Another area of particular concern to my constituents is the question of northern allowances. As Hon. Members know, a previous Minister of Finance who is now a Senator in the other place introduced legislation that would greatly affect and tax benefits that northerners receive while working in the North to compensate them for the high cost of living and working in those areas. As a result of last evening's economic statement, there will be a remission of a number of these taxes until 1985 and there will be a study made to determine what further changes can be made. I plan to participate in that process and anticipate the opportunity of making an input to ensure that the people who work and develop the North and provide many of the resources which the rest of Canada enjoy will have a fair tax set-up.

Furthermore, there will be a reference for study on the whole issue of part-time farmers. Many Members will be aware of the difficulties that have arisen in this area. It is a unique problem that is very much a factor in the Peace country. Many new farmers in that area are opening new land. This involves tremendous costs with no income initially, because one must wait for some time before there is any return. Therefore, many of these individuals must earn income off the farm. Under the previous administration, once they did this they were immediately declared part-time farmers and lost the tax benefits they previously would have had as full-time farmers. This placed them in a classic Catch 22, situation. I am pleased that this matter has been referred for study, because it must be addressed. Again, it is a recognition of the serious problems facing many of our farmers.

Other items that I could mention which have a significant impact on the Peace country include changes to the PGRT. This will remove some of the uncertainty faced by our producers. It will also have an impact on oil sands production, which is of particular concern to the region I represent because of the Peace River tar sands project, which is now considering an expansion. I hope that these changes will mean that the project can proceed, thereby encouraging investment and jobs, which are so desperately needed not only in my part of the country but in all of Canada.

There is the matter of veterans' pensions. Any Hon. Member who has spent any time in the House will know that this has been one of our biggest frustrations. It has been frustrating to deal with the members of the Armed Forces or their dependants who have been forced to exist on pensions that are terribly meagre and in fact an embarrassment to all of us when we witness such treatment to those who gave so much to represent our country in the last wars. I am pleased that there will be a one-year extension of pensions for a surviving spouse and that the disability pension will continue for one year. I am pleased that that pension will now be pegged to the consumer price index or to wages of a select group of public servants. We are making progress in recognition of the difficulties experienced by all Canadians.

The main economic thrust of the Government as illustrated by the economic statement and the Throne Speech is the reduction of the deficit. In closing let me address that question. If we avoid dealing with the deficit, we are locking ourselves into permanent debt. Without such action we will not be getting the value for our tax dollars and soon will only be making interest payments on interest payments. The third result of a high deficit is high interest rates. An economy cannot grow with high interest rates and the result is reduced consumer demand. It would mean reduced housing starts with reduced investment and consequently fewer jobs.

We cannot sit and do nothing. We have to make a number of hard decisions and we have to make them now. That is what I see coming through this Throne Speech and what I see coming through this economic statement.

The most optimistic projections indicate that our present deficit is up to about $34.5 billion. Next year it has been projected at about $37 billion. Between now and 1990 that deficit could well stay between $34 and $38 billion.

As the Minister of Finance said last night, to put it in common terms, it means that in 1967 a family would have had a debt of $4,000. Today that national debt per family has gone up to $24,000. If that trend continues, it could well mean by 1990 a debt of $54,000 per family.

My time is just about up, Mr. Speaker, but let me say that it is most important that we kick our economy into gear. We can do that by addressing the deficit and by addressing the serious situation that exists in this country.

I want to congratulate the Prime Minister and his Cabinet on the initiatives they have taken both in the Throne Speech and in the economic statement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments?

It being 4.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 42(3), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the subamendment.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps my eyes are deceiving me but it appears to me that we have speakers on this side of the House who would like to speak in this debate, and I take it that it is only 4.42 p.m. at best. I do not want to question the time that you have called, Mr. Speaker, but I would appreciate it if our Members could also participate in this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In response to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I did not see anyone rise from his side of the House. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) will be recognized now that I see him rising. There are about two minutes left, and in order for him to make his maiden speech and keep it intact, it would be much better if he were recognized now and were to be one of the first to speak at the next debate on the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I take it that you are protecting the position of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) on Tuesday morning at eleven o'clock and that he will be recognized first on this side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, when we next commence with the Throne Speech debate.

May I reiterate. It being 4.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 42(3), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment to the amendment. The question is the following one. Mr. James, seconded by Ms. Jacques, moves:

That the following Address be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To Her Excellency the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, a Member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), seconded by Mr. Gray, moves:

The Address—Mr. Cooper

That the Address be amended by adding the following words:

"But this House condemns your advisers for their failure to demonstrate leadership and to provide plans for immediate action in the creation of tens upon tens of thousands of new jobs".

Mr. Broadbent (Oshawa), seconded by Mr. Deans, moves:

That the amendment be amended by adding the following words:

"and specifically, that your government has failed, 1. to set jobs as its top and immediate priority; and to set targets and outline specific new programs to put Canadians back to work; 2. to reform the tax system to ensure wealthy Canadians pay their fair share of taxes and that corporations use their tax breaks to create more jobs; and, 3. to provide immediate measures to bring about equality for women in Canada".

The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

Amendment (Mr. Broadbent) negatived.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am very disappointed, and I hate to point this out to the House, but my friends from the New Democratic Party surprised me. I stood up to help them and hold their hands in order to get their subamendment voted upon. I am sorry to see the 10 per cent solution, that there are only three New Democrats in the House and they could not be here to make this subamendment of theirs a votable motion. I regret that this motion—

Ms. Copps: And this is the real Opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier but he does not have a point of order.

It now being five o'clock, pursuant to order made Thursday, November 8, 1984, this House adjourned until Tuesday, November 13, 1984, at eleven o'clock pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 4.45 p.m. the House adjourned.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Friday, November 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 38).

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me on this occasion, my first address to the House of Commons. I would like to congratulate you on your election to a role in which you will surely excel. As one of the most junior Members, I would also like to extend my best wishes to the most senior Parliamentarian, the Hon. Stanley Knowles. Mr. Speaker, you will undoubtedly find him to be a great source of wisdom.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege for me to address this august assembly, and I wish to thank the people of Saint-Léonard-Anjou for electing me as their Member and giving me the honour of representing them in this Chamber.

My riding, located on the eastern part of Montreal Island, consists of two towns, Saint-Léonard and Anjou, and part of the parish of Saint-René Goupil. Saint-Léonard has a population of over 70,000, of whom 40,000 are French speaking, 25,000 Italian speaking, 8,000 English speaking and 5,000 of other origins, including many Haitians. In Anjou, the vast majority of the population, 36,000, is French speaking, followed by 3,000 Anglophones and 1,500 residents of various origins. The riding also includes about 5,000 residents of Saint-René Goupil.

[English]

It is particularly exciting to represent such a diverse and truly multicultural riding. It is principally residential but it also contains the important industrial parks of Saint-Léonard and Anjou. Both of these industrial parks contain a broad sample of that most vital part of our economy, small business.

[Translation]

In 1963, our municipalities were small towns without any real economic infrastructure. In twenty-one years, thanks to Liberal legislation which promoted business development, we have been able to achieve a level of economic growth seldom equalled in Canada. By dint of hard work, diligence and intelligent planning, our small and medium-sized businesses have made the riding of Saint-Léonard-Anjou a major commercial and industrial area.

[English]

While I am on the subject of Saint-Léonard-Anjou, which I am very proud to represent, let me say how honoured I am to succeed the Hon. Monique Bégin as its Member of Parliament. It is no small task to try to follow her example. She was such a bright and compassionate person, one who worked so hard to improve the lifestyle of disadvantaged Canadians.

[Translation]

An exceptional Member of Parliament, she remained close to the concerns of her fellow Canadians, while at the same time developing a vision of the realities of this country. She is one of those remarkable people who have had a profound influence on Canada, both through the legislation that was adopted by Parliament and her contribution to the social evolution of our country. Without her, this country would not have become what it is today: a modern and dynamic country, with a concern for social justice and able to provide health services that are the envy of the rest of the world.

[English]

I join with my constituents in thanking her for the 12 years she worked for the riding. I will try my hardest to maintain the standard of service which she set.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I pointed out earlier the major role played by small businesses in my riding. Thanks to these businesses and to the assistance provided by the previous Government, Canada has one of the highest job creation rates in the industrialized world. Our small businesses certainly deserve to be praised for their role in the present economic recovery.

[English]

Small businesses, from corner grocery stores to microchip manufacturers, from tailor shops to machine shops, can create more real jobs faster than any other sector of the economy. In light of this, I was pleased to hear on Monday that the Government intends to enhance risk taking and to reward entrepreneurs. That is good, but it would be better to know how it will be done.

[Translation]

Confidence is said to be a wonder drug. However, if the government wants to restore confidence, it ought to follow a realistic and constructive rather than an ambiguous approach. Canadians are impatiently waiting for specifics.

Referring to the correctional system, the government stated, and I quote, Mr. Speaker:

But it is obvious that there are grave defects in the system and my government accepts its responsibility to rectify these quickly.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it is now up to the government to accept the responsibilities set forth during the electoral campaign and to begin to deliver on its promises, including those which it forgot to include in the Speech from the Throne.

The government proudly and rightfully talks about its mandate as if it were an excellent opportunity. Mr. Speaker, it is an excellent opportunity to suggest concrete solutions instead of making empty speeches as they have been doing so far.

According to the polls, the majority achieved by the Conservatives reflected a desire for change, not a miraculous conversion to the Conservative Party. The Progressive Conservative government has a very clear mandate to take action. It has a mandate to keep its promises, for indeed they were very generous and even impossible promises. One could even say that they were irresponsible promises.

Mr. Speaker, the government stated that the answer to all the problems of this country lies in consensus, and I quote:

A national consensus is also needed to reduce the persistent isolation of Canada's regions, to meet the challenges of economic and social disparity, to revitalize the strength of our traditional resource industries, such as agriculture, forestry, mining, the fishery and tourism, and to ensure that our critical transportation and communication links better serve the national purpose.

To me, those are pious wishes. A national consensus, but what about? And on what? We have yet to hear practical suggestions which might lead to a consensus. A national consensus! Would problems disappear as if by magic so that the government will not have to solve them? And then we are told, and I quote:

Future summits could address in more details issues such as the enhancement of productivity, and the responsibilities of industry, labour and government in training and technology.

Those are important issues which are put on the back burner, Mr. Speaker, such as the tens of thousands of jobs which were to be created the moment the new Cabinet was sworn to office.

• (1110)

[English]

The vocabulary of the Government is full of expressions showing it is in no hurry, expressions like "over time" and "following extensive consultations". I hope it does not substitute "lengthy" consultations for "extensive" consultations. Where is all the work that the famous Tory transition team is supposed to have accomplished? Why were there no new and solid policy proposals in the Throne Speech?

We heard during the campaign that with the swearing in of the Cabinet tens of thousands of jobs would be created. In the absence of any substance to that blarney, we could have at least expected there would be legislation to reduce unemployment; but no, instead of "jobs, jobs, jobs" we hear those heroic Tory buzz words "study, consultation and consensus". Will the words "some time in the future" cure the unemployment problem?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I admit that some initiatives were taken last Monday, but they did not come from the Progressive Conservatives since they did nothing more than implement the initiatives of the previous government. For instance, deletion of discriminatory provisions in the Indian Act, repression of pornography, assistance to victims of family violence, and resumption of discussions on pension reform already launched by the Liberals. The government might claim to have some credibility if it had been able to fulfil the expectations of Canadians by implementing its own policies as a substitute for the Liberal policies it has adopted.

[English]

As for the meagre Tory input of the cure-all "consultation, mediation, co-operation, consensus" and above all "confidence", well, they are very slick buzz words but are a poor substitute for the type of credible and concrete prospects required to generate real confidence.

[Translation]

After the hue and cry raised against the problems created by the previous government, it is comforting, Mr. Speaker, to see that Liberal policies did make sense after all.

• (1115)

[English]

We all know, Mr. Speaker, that imitation is the highest form of flattery.

[Translation]

We thank them for the compliment.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? We shall then proceed with debate.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to be here this morning to address the House of Commons of Canada in this Thirty-third Parliament. I wish at the outset to thank my constituents for the opportunity they have given me to stand here on their behalf and address the people of Canada regarding the many important concerns that face the people today.

Members giving their maiden speeches are inclined to say a good deal about their ridings. They talk about the people who live there, how they work and what they do. This morning I would like to address those topics in the context of the recent election campaign and of the expectations that have been raised and the hopes the people of Thunder Bay-Nipigon expect the Government of Canada to maintain.

The people of my riding joined in a sweeping change that occurred on September 4 in the Government of Canada. Of course, they joined, as did the people of other northwestern Ontario ridings, in a rather different way than was true across the country generally. By electing three New Democrats in Thunder Bay-Nipigon, Thunder Bay-Atikokan and Kenora-Rainy River, they created, as the editor of the weekly newspaper in Thunder Bay recognized, an NDP sweep in the midst of that blue tide. That fact is one to which the three of us, as new Members of Parliament, intend to be faithful in speaking as our constituents would have us speak about the enormously important concerns that face us.

It is beyond question that the economic situation in our country, primarily the problem of unemployment which faces so many Canadians, is the great concern of our day. There was no doubt about that during the election campaign. I called on thousands of people from door to door and met time and again those who had been seeking work. I met tradesmen who had been unemployed for months, carpenters who had been off for six months, a year or 18 months. They were by no means certain they would ever be able to work again. As I met them I began to realize the importance of the problem. We think so easily of the unemployment which faces the young as being a dreadful problem, but it is not much less serious for someone in his or her forties, fifties or early sixties, particularly those who do not have adequate pension plans. They feel a terrible fate before them when they are no longer employed. It was obvious to me that here was the great challenge that faced us. It was a challenge to which all Parties in the election campaign gave lip service, and it was certainly a challenge which all Canadians expect the present Government to face up to and deal with.

It is therefore tragic, Mr. Speaker, that with the fine words we find in the Throne Speech, on Thursday night we got in this financial statement what is, in my opinion, a profound contradiction to the hopes which have been expressed. In dealing with this, in recognizing the problems of unemployment that face our people I want to suggest that the hopes for national reconciliation which have been expressed in the Throne Speech are likely to end up being completely blasted if the financial statement truly indicates the direction the Government is going to take.

It will not be possible to resolve our difficulties by worrying only about the deficit and by using policies of "trim and cut" as a means of paring it back, which could only be done to a limited extent anyway unless one does become truly draconian. As of Thursday evening the Government was not prepared to take the drastic action which I suspect many of its business supporters wanted it to take. Yet we have this trimming and paring in various places which will surely inflict hardship on people, even when practised only to a limited extent, as in the area of the unemployment insurance administration.

The great difficulty with those actions is that the policies of the Government take the wrong direction. We are not going to see a resolution of the enormous problem of unemployment, which faces so many people across the country, if we deal with the deficit as the primary problem in the country. Instead we must have a different vision of what Canada should be like. We must think again of how the country could achieve full employment and how differently the fiscal system of the country would bear on its people if in fact we were able to achieve full employment.

Having spoken about that possibility during the campaign, I would like to put it on the record here so that there can be no doubt about where I stand. I still believe that 4 per cent is the goal towards which we should be moving. Settling for 10 per cent unemployment is simply unacceptable. If the people of Canada ever considered what the enormous costs of unemployment are, they would be inspired to support us in the actions which need to be undertaken.

I have suggested some of the human costs of unemployment. There are social costs as well which impinge on government, such as the higher cost of policing. The social and economic costs run to enormous amounts when we take into consideration the revenues which are forgone when people are not employed. There are clearly billions and billions of dollars of tax revenue not coming in because people are not employed. On the other hand, we must recognize the direct cost to government of unemployment insurance which is paid out month by month, running to billions of dollars over a year. Other costs include higher social assistance payments which drive up the cost of the Canada Assistance Plan.

We recognize these factors as the consequences of employment and begin to realize that the road out is not to be preoccupied by a deficit which is inevitable in these circumstances. Instead we must ask ourselves by what means we could make real progress toward 4 per cent unemployment. We must ask ourselves what kinds of capital investments, among other things, need to be undertaken by government in order to make that progress.

If we were to achieve substantial movement toward that goal and to consider what the costs of government would in fact be given 4 per cent unemployment, surely we would have reason to undertake those measures rather than follow the ones the Government has taken. We would find that taxation, which is opposed by so many people, could be reduced to a level all Canadians could accept once we have achieved full employment in Canada.

Taxation was an important concern in all of the election campaigns across the country, as it was in my campaign in Thunder Bay-Nipigon. I think we want to recognize there the possibility of achieving some greater fairness even before achieving the full employment of which I have been speaking. We must realize that if the total costs of unemployment in direct outflows, in terms of unemployment insurance payments and the total of tax expenditures and subsidies—which are taxes not collected, particularly from large corporations—exceed the present federal deficit, then there is a basis for saying that the tax burden that is being borne by individual Canadians is far too high.

When these tax expenditures include benefits for wealthy Canadians who can avoid paying taxes altogether, and when there are grants and tax breaks for large corporations and wealthy Canadians, there is a basis for exploring the two societies that are developing in this country. There is the situation of privilege in which some Canadians live, and the state of oppression by severe taxation in which the mass of ordinary Canadians are forced to live.

Surely there exists an explosive potential in this division of the Canadian people with those who are privileged because of past action by Canadian parliaments. I intend to make my constituents well aware of this situation and I am sure all Canadians want to recognize it. They expect action in these areas from the Government in order to achieve real fairness.

I would venture to say that if there was an attempt to make taxation more fair in this country and we were able to reduce the burden on ordinary Canadians so that they would have more money to spend, there would be an increase in the purchasing power of Canadians. There would be a larger demand in the market-place, which is surely what business needs in this country in order to prosper as business leaders say. Surely business does not exist for the purpose of seeking tax breaks or to find ways of hanging on to money. Surely people are in business to sell more. This can only be expressed by increased demand by people in the market-place. Business will be able to achieve the profits it wants through larger sales and more efficient operation.

On behalf of my caucus let me say that it is this kind of basic economic reality that is called for from the Government in this Parliament. We will be able to meet the hopes of Canadians only if the Government recognizes those realities and takes the appropriate action.

I believe that the question of hope is truly a fundamental matter in the national morale. We have gone through a number of parliaments in the past 16 years in which the hopes of Canadians were aroused. First, there was the "Just Society" campaign as far back as 1968. There was a campaign in 1974 which included a ridiculing of proposals for controls on wages and prices. There was that turnaround in 1980 with the defeat of a government, and people across the country are convinced that the legislated measures were very similar or even worse than those that the Opposition chose to defeat. Surely those actions over several parliaments have tempted the Canadian people to cynicism. If there is a degraded sense out there that politicians cannot be trusted, surely it is action of that sort from past governments that has done it.

I believe if there is to be a national reconciliation in this Thirty-third Parliament, it will have to be done by other means. The contrast between the Throne Speech and the financial statement stares one in the face. The contrast between the present policies and all the hopes that were aroused during the election campaign, such as statements about sacred trust which appear now to be open for reconsideration, can only confirm the Canadian people in the cynicism they have been taught by previous governments. That surely will be tragic. If there is to be genuine national reconciliation, then we have a government with promises given, expectations aroused and a mandate on which it has to act. The result if the Government refuses to do that can only be the degradation of Canadian public spirit and morale. Therefore, the Government will have to be held very closely to the standard of those promises.

As the critic for multiculturalism and fitness and amateur sport, I would like to say a little bit about those two areas as well. I can relate them to the activities of people in my riding readily enough. Although I am talking about the need for employment, I did not say very much about the activities that occur in Thunder Bay, the importance of the community to transportation, and the importance particularly of Thunder Bay to western Canadians as a port for the movement of grain.

We have at Thunder Bay the largest grain-moving port in North America, at least in terms of elevators and docking facilities. This port is of enormous importance not only to Thunder Bay and western farmers but to the Canadian economy. Thunder Bay is positioned on the Trans-Canada Highway. Through my riding, Highways 11 and 17 move together in one section of tarmac. It can pose real challenges to the movement of people and goods across the country if the route can be cut off so easily by accidents. Occasionally the Trans-Canada route is closed for hours at a time as the highway is cleared. That is one of the transportation matters that I do not intend to forget.

Thunder Bay airport is not on the main route, given the variety of routes Air Canada flies. However, Thunder Bay receives good service from Air Canada and Nordair. Thunder Bay is also served by a number of smaller carriers representing the way in which Thunder Bay is a regional metropolis.

The forest endowment of the Thunder Bay area is something about which we are deeply concerned. We are concerned about the extent to which the forests have been cut in years past and the degree to which forestry production will have to be limited in future. As costs rise and the mills find themselves more hard pressed internationally, we feel concern about the large pulp and paper mills in Thunder Bay at Red Rock and seek research and investment in one more area to ensure that this industry will continue. Again I feel concern about the kinds of policies that the new Government seems to be laying before us.

Then we have the Port Arthur shipbuilding company, which is primarily a repair facility although partial vessels are built in conjunction with the Collingwood yards owned by the same company. In portship we have seen the impact of the economic slowdown of the last years as construction yards in other parts of Canada have had less and less business. They have become more and more competitive in bidding for repair work. We have found business very slow at times and this has meant one more addition to the unemployment community of our area. In these aspects of the economy of Thunder Bay and the surrounding area we see the basis for prosperity and the challenge that exists for achieving full employment.

After those parenthetic comments on the economic life of the community, I want to say something about the multicultural and sports concerns for which I am responsible in our caucus. It is easy to relate those areas to the community of Thunder Bay. The Thunder Bay Multicultural Association is an organization more than ten years old. This group unites the various ethnocultural associations of our community. It was a great pleasure a year ago for me as a faculty member of Lakehead University to join with community members in organizing the seventh biennial conference of the Canadian Ethnic Studies Association in Thunder Bay. I appreciated the strength that members of the Thunder Bay Multicultural Association brought to our planning and to our execution, if you will, of the conference in late October.

The multicultural realities of Thunder Bay are typical of many parts of western Canada and the past and, of course, these days of the various metropolitan centres of our country. We in the New Democratic Party have always regarded the multicultural nature of Canada as an important reality that governments should recognize and respond to.

There were indications during the Conservative election campaign that this reality would be true for the Party now governing, that there was to be recognition of the needs of the Canadian people, that multicultural realities called for the establishment of a department and that the Government would take action in order to meet the needs of affirmative action and justice for Japanese Canadians. Also we have the new concern now arising of justice for Chinese Canadians over the head tax in decades past. These are the various areas that I see need to be responded to and where there is a need to undertake spending. I find myself very anxious in considering what the Government has put before us in the past week.

We need a full-fledged multicultural department which will have a larger mandate laid open to it. We need, as the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) has suggested, a policy that is more than just one of providing some support for festivals, although even that is not what it used to be. We need more than just the politics of multiculturalism. Therefore, I shall be very attentive to these needs on behalf of my constituents. It is imperative that government act, in this area as in others, on the mandate it has.

My constituents and various friends have said to me: "Make sure you keep them honest". On Thursday night I felt very anxious about precisely that, of keeping the current Government honest and ensuring that it lives up to its mandate.

There are people in my riding who have not forgotten Conservative governments past. There was the Diefenbaker Government which was marked by recession, unemployment, high interest rates and so on. People have not forgotten the houses they lost in that era. There are people who still remember all too well the 1930s and the Bennett Government of those days. There is expectation in the Canadian people today that this Government will do much better by them than the last one did.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I have always considered it an important part of my education to listen carefully to speeches made by members of the New Democratic Party, especially when it comes to a Member like the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), and I see the new Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) will be no exception to this rule.

I was impressed by the Hon. Member's plea for capital spending on the part of the Government in order to reduce unemployment. Another member of the NDP whom I listened to on the same subject is the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). One of the projects he suggested is for heavy capital investment in the railway going to Churchill and in the grain-handling facilities at the Port of Churchill. If that could be done as the Hon. Member describes it, one could reduce the reliance on the Lakehead method of shipping out grain. One could ship grain out from the Prairies cheaper than having it go through the Lakehead. Would the Hon. Member who has just spoken support his colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill, in doing precisely that?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It allows me to say something more about our important grain trade. I disagree with my colleague from Manitoba about the importance of the grain trade through Churchill. I frankly hand that proposal back. I do not see any need to do that. We in Thunder Bay are concerned through the Harbour Commission and other bodies about future demands on transportation.

We had a 20-million tonne season just past. Regrettably as a result of the crop difficulties in the southern Prairies, I do not expect the present crop year to be anything like that. However, our concern in Thunder Bay is about reaching 25 million tonnes. Concern is being expressed. Study is being made of ways to move a good deal more grain. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay Atikokan (Mr. Angus) and I during the election campaign expressed interest in exploring the need for additional elevator capacity in Thunder Bay. We believe there is a good case for that in terms of ensuring that elevator storage space will always be adequate and that there is enough grain to ensure that the interface of trains and ships is always the most efficient possible.

In the context in which we hope to bring the port up to a 25 million tonne capacity, expecting that that is the size of crop we will have to move at some time and comparing the quite limited amount which goes through Churchill, about one million tonnes during a short season, we should have the most efficient system possible at both places. We want to ensure that we can move all grain to markets and that their returns are as large as they can be while we have lots of employment in Churchill and in Thunder Bay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I remind Hon. Members that questions on their speeches must be pertinent and directed to the particular Member. They should not be addressed to other Members.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to speak for the first time in this Chamber and to support the Speech from the Throne. I offer my congratulations to the Speaker and his deputies. I look forward to working with them. Also I congratulate all new Members and those who have been re-elected to the House. I know when I speak on behalf of new Members that we come here with a great sense of optimism and a deep sense of responsibility. I echo the words of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), who asked last week that we all work together with a sense of civility and responsibility to achieve the ends required for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: This morning I will speak only briefly about themes from the Speech from the Throne—economic renewal, social justice and national reconciliation. It would be appropriate first, in the tradition of a maiden speech, to thank my very good constituents in the riding of Capilano for their support and for electing me to this honourable position. Also I should like to extend my congratulations to my predecessor, the Hon. Ron Huntington, who served this House for 10 years and who served Canadians so well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: I thank my colleagues for joining with me in that expression of appreciation.

I do not know how many Hon. Members of the House have had the opportunity to visit Capilano. If they have not, they are certainly welcome as my visitors. It is perhaps the most beauteous part of this wonderful nation of ours. Geographically it is almost beyond one's sense of expression to describe its beauties. As one crosses the Lion's Gate Bridge and enters Capilano, one even smells the different scents in the air. When one looks up at the mountains, six months of the year they are capped with snow and ready for skiers; the other six months in gentle meadows receiving hikers. Perhaps my constituency is the only one in Canada where on a brilliant spring day one can ski down Grouse Mountain and five minutes later board a surf board on the beauteous ocean.

An Hon. Member: And it only rains at night.

Mrs. Collins: That is right. Along the seawall, rain or shine, one sees walkers every day inhaling the invigorating sea air. In the eastern part of the riding there is a busy port facility, with ships coming and going, plying foreign markets. There is also a major shipbuilding facility, one which I will be supporting and working toward. Only recently it received international acclaim. Further east one comes to Lonsdale McQuay, a bustling area where a new public market will soon join us with its lovely fruits and vegetables, only 20 minutes by seabus from the site of Expo.

As one's eyes lift up to the hills, one sees magnificent architecture. Capilano was probably the home of western architecture. There are homes with vistas of oceans and mountains enjoyed by the people of my riding. Then in the far western reaches of the island nestles Bowen Island where I spent many a happy childhood summer. It is 15 minutes away by ferry but hours away in the style of life. The general store there is the focal point for news and views. Life carries on with a full appreciation of leisure.

For all its physical glories, Capilano's greatest wealth is its people, people who truly represent the strength of the country, whose beliefs are grounded in the twin sense of responsibility and service.

We have seen in the Speech from the Throne and in the economic statement which followed that our prospects for economic renewal are predicated upon a desire for less government intervention and great reliance upon the individual to accept the responsibility for risk-taking ventures, for capital growth and increased productivity. We believe that jobs will only be secured by the private sector, by risk takers who are prepared to invest in new ventures. In Capilano live the people who will make these prospects come true, people who wish to accept responsibility for risk taking and expanding new business ventures. They only want an economic plan which encourages, and a government which understands and responds to their needs as a facilitator, not as a competitor.

Each day I spend in my riding I am approached by men and women coming to me with ideas for new inventions, new business ventures and new desires to become involved in Pacific Rim trade. They come to me not for financial assistance; they come to me only to know whether our Government will provide the economic climate in which they can take those initiatives and look forward to some appropriate rewards.

Do not let us get the wrong impression. Capilano has also been ravaged by the recession which we have felt for the past three years. Many professionals in their mid-years have been laid off for the first time. Many small businessmen have faced personal bankruptcy. Many families of my personal acquaintance are perhaps living on a third or on half the salaries they enjoyed only three years ago. Many young people with whom I speak are fearful whether or not they will have the opportunity to contribute to our society.

However, the people of Capilano are now looking ahead. This past weekend that I spent with them we talked about the Throne Speech and about the economic statement, and they could see for the first time the opportunities these would provide. It has rekindled their spirit and their desire to move forward, to take the initiative and to make the investments. I applaud this Government for the initiatives taken in the Throne Speech, initiatives which will set us on this right direction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: Social justice is a major concern of people across the country and certainly of the people in my riding. I am indeed fortunate to have residing within the bounds of my riding the Squamish Indian Band, a Band which provides an example for native people across the country. Members of this Band have worked toward economic self-sufficiency, and with them and with the help of my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), I will work toward the increased political responsibility for their own affairs that they are seeking.

My constituents and I were also heartened by the other comments made on social justice. Certainly to me, the advancement of women toward full economic equality in the country must be a major agenda item for us all. However, I would ask my colleagues to try to put within a new context the traditional women's issues. Certainly issues with regard to divorce, violence and pornography have been raised by women in our society, women working together to make changes. However, they are issues for all people in our society. It will take a concerted effort and a concerted understanding to make the changes that are necessary.

I would like to comment particularly on the task force on child care which was proposed in the Speech from the Throne. My own view of this examination of child care is that it must not be limited merely to how we pay for day care for the children of working women. It should encompass the much broader issue of how we value and support family life in our society and how we may ensure the real nurturing of our young people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: We must take into account the changing nature of families in our society. My young daughter Sarah brought her class picture home from school two weeks ago. I asked her how many of the children shown in her picture still lived with their original biological mothers and fathers. She looked at the picture of a class of 27 children and pointed out three or four who still lived under those arrangements. We must recognize, as I personally understand, the changing nature of families and provide the necessary support to enable our families to bring up healthy and well-rounded children for the future of this country.

The issue of violence is of great concern to us, particularly violence against women and children and with respect to pornography. Basically, I believe some of us have had enough. While I am a great believer in freedom, I think that with freedom comes responsibility. We must take measures to define and limit the worst of the hateful and violent literature which degrades women and children. I will be working diligently with my colleagues in this House to that end.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: Although he is not here, I concur with the words of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), who spoke last week. He said that it is not enough merely to advance new penalties or new laws but that we must look at the real root of violence in our society. He referred specifically to the issue of soliciting. I think the same principle applies to dealing with issues related to pornography and sexual violence against women and children. There is a big task before us and we need the good will of Hon. Members from all sides of the House to enable those discussions to go forward in this community of ours.

National reconciliation was the third theme of the Throne Speech. Again, the people of Capilano agree that we can no longer go on with confrontation between provinces and the federal Government and with confrontation between labour and management. We must again work diligently to ensure that all sectors of our society work together to solve the issues before us.

I have always been a great advocate of the consultative process and I applaud the initiatives our Government is taking to ensure that people are consulted, are involved and have an opportunity to participate in the major issues we are putting forward to them. It is only with an informed and involved public that we will be able to make some of the changes which I feel will be necessary in the years to come. I have begun those initiatives in my own riding and I appeal to the people of Capilano to join with me in this consultative process.

Finally and only briefly, I would like to touch on an issue which I will discuss in greater depth on a future occasion and that is the issue of international affairs. The people of Capilano expect us, as the Government and responsible players in international affairs, to first live up to our responsibility with our allies in NATO, to search for a lasting peace in a non-nuclear world and to share part of our wealth and resources with the rest of the world. They expect us to bring hope and dignity to human life on a global basis.

I am pleased to report to you today, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Capilano are already joining in the fight to ensure that this happens. This weekend in Capilano we formed the North Shore African Famine Relief Committee with support from all levels of government and all organizations. We are reaching out to the people of Capilano to ask them to assist in this emergency situation and I know that their response will be generous and supportive.

Time does not allow me to discuss further the many issues which I know will be important. I look forward to discussing these with my colleagues in the months and years to come. I leave you this morning, Mr. Speaker, with messages from the hills of Capilano to these hallowed halls of Parliament. These are messages of optimism because, in our minds, the Throne Speech provides that opportunity of rekindling the spirit of Canadians and providing a greater Canada for all of us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments regarding the Hon. Member's speech?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). I really cannot wait to return to her area to go skiing and water skiing there. She gave us the most beautiful description of it.

I was very pleased to hear about the Hon. Member's concern with respect to violence and pornography and her description of child care. I think that child care is as much a right of the child as it is of the family. As well, I was very interested in what the Hon. Member said about international affairs and I hope she will look at the budget cut and show some concerns there.

I am particularly interested in having the Hon. Member share with the women of Canada the secret held by the women of Capilano. The Hon. Member said that there are so many young, entrepreneurial-spirited women there who do not need or want any government support but are prepared to go into small business and show their entrepreneurship. I know that there are many young women and women of every age who have that desire but seem to be under some constraints, both in terms of obtaining loans from banks and obtaining support from business. Perhaps the Hon. Member could share the secret the women of Capilano know that the women I know do not know.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the congratulations of the Hon. Member and I look forward to working with her. I know of her very fine record of working with the women of this country.

I believe the women and men of my constituency to whom I speak who are interested in establishing small businesses really want encouragement. They want to know that, if they take those risks, they will have the opportunity of prospering and will not be so heavily inundated by government regulations and taxes that they will not be able to take those kinds of initiatives.

I certainly share with the Hon. Member her view that traditionally women have had a much greater problem obtaining the capital to begin new businesses. I have been in that position myself in the past. I believe it will be our responsibility, as indicated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the debate on women's issues, to work with financial institutions, perhaps beginning at home with the FBDB, to ensure that women have the same opportunities to obtain risk capital in order to begin the business ventures that I believe will be the future of this country.

● (1200)

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my endorsement to the comments which were made by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) and by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) regarding the ongoing debate and the seriousness of the pornography issue. In recent days that issue has once again come to the fore. I look forward to debates in this House regarding the fine line between freedom and licence on this issue. I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Capilano raised the matter, and I could not let the opportunity pass to indicate that she is not alone in worrying about this very significant issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there further questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member?

[Translation]

We shall continue debate with the Hon. Member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, after listening to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), I understand why the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) decided not to run in Capilano.

Mr. Speaker, I am both pleased and proud to have this opportunity to make my first speech in the House of Commons, after being elected for an initial term, and I say initial, because there probably will be several more, if we on this side of the House have any say in the matter.

I was anxious to speak on behalf of my riding today, especially since my constituents have not often seen their elected Member rise in the House of Commons, at least not lately. For twelve years the people of Bellechasse were represented by Mr. Adrien Lambert, who is known and admired by many Members of this House, and that is why today, I wish to say a special word of thanks to Mr. Lambert for the work he has done for his constituents and for the entire country.

I am particularly pleased to be rising in the House today, Mr. Speaker, because in recent years, we were no longer accustomed to seeing Quebecers speak in the House to represent their constituents, with the exception of the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that Quebec Members are proud to join the Hon. Member for Joliette, the Minister of Public Works, in representing the interests of Quebec within our marvelous Canadian mosaic.

We all know, especially since last Thursday evening, that the state of our country's economy is precarious. The irresponsible and intrusive attitude of the previous government has resulted in a series of deficits which over the years have become a major obstacle to economic development in this country.

Even worse, I think, is their attempt to have the Canadian people believe the deficit was necessary to maintain some semblance of economic development and to wipe out unemployment. We can see what all those promises have done for us in the space of a few years.

All public institutions in Canada have a duty to balance their budgets. In Quebec alone, we have over 1,200 municipalities, which in the next few weeks must send a copy of their budget to the provincial authorities. That budget must be balanced. If they send a budget that does not balance, it is sent back and they are asked to send in a new budget.

The same applies to businesses and public and semi-public organizations. The same goes for all heads of families in Canada. They have to balance their budgets and avoid spending more than they earn. People will say sometimes borrowing is necessary to balance your budget, for instance if you buy capital assets such as a house or a car. I agree that occasionally, it may be necessary to take out a loan, but in that case, it has to be planned in terms of repayment over a certain number of years. I would have liked to ask the former Minister of Finance before September 4 how he intended to reimburse our cumulative deficit of $180 billion. They did not talk about that. It would have been interesting to hear what kind of answer they would have given me. We have reached the point, Mr. Speaker, where we have to borrow to pay the grocery bill. For every dollar we spend in Canada we have to borrow nearly thirty-five cents. It does not make sense. It was and is the duty of the new Government and that of the Official Opposition and the other Party, to support the Government in its sincere endeavour to gradually reduce this horrendous deficit. There is no other way out. There is no easy way out. We have to take the bull by the horns, as the Quebec Minister of Finance said so eloquently this week, when he congratulated us on the responsible action being maken by the Progressive Conservative Government.

Mr. Speaker, the previous Government has accustomed the people of Quebec and all Canadians to constantly ask for federal hand-outs for whatever they need. As a result, Canadians have come to see the Government as a kind of Providence which responds to their every need.

Mr. Speaker, this is not what a real government is supposed to do. Canadians should learn to take care of themselves and rely less on government intervention. Yesterday afternoon I was explaining to one of my constituents that I did not think the federal Government would be able to provide a grant for redecorating the church or enlarging the cemetery, which is what they were asking. Twenty years ago, nobody would have dreamed of asking such a thing. Everybody knew maintenance of churches, rectories or cemeteries was not a federal responsibility. However, it was the attitude taken by the previous government which literally threw money out of the window at anything that moved service clubs, sports clubs, factories . . . They gave money to anything that moved, to all those organizations, and now people have grown to expect it.

Mr. Speaker, it may not be particularly pleasant to have to say to all these people today who have seen the federal manna from heaven literally pour down on neighbouring municipalities to pay for church repairs, picnic tables or roadside haying: sorry, no more hand-outs.

Mr. Speaker, as I was telling this person yesterday, the Canadian people must gradually learn how to regain control over their destiny and realize that it is no longer possible to carry on this way giving money to everyone, money which we do not have in the first place because if we were to follow the example of the previous Government, we would mortgage our own future and that of our children and grandchildren.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that such an attitude is at all ludicrous, as was suggested last Thursday evening in his reply to the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) by the economic critic of the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henry-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) who is not in the House this morning. Admittedly, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount is familiar with deficits. From what I read in certain newspaper articles this week, it seems that the Liberal Party leadership campaign has greatly depleted their resources. Therefore, Hon. Members opposite know all about deficits.

Mr. Speaker, how dare they call us anti-francophones and Orangemen?

We can see, Mr. Speaker, how and with what arrogance and contempt for our democratic institutions the previous Government governed our country. It is rather surprising to realize that the only issue for which there was a consensus in all, and I emphasize all Canadian provinces, as was very clearly seen last Summer and this Fall, was the need for change. Everyone wanted a change in Government.

I also want to take this opportunity to thank the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for the great confidence he has shown in my ability by appointing me Parliamentary Secretary for the important Department of Agriculture. As many of you know, the constituency of Bellechasse is very large. It is made up of a strip about 50 miles wide and 100 miles long on the shore of the St. Lawrence river in South-Eastern Quebec.

I am fortunate to represent a great number of farmers who have told me on many occasions, including last week-end and the one before that, how proud they are that a Quebec Member of Parliament has been asked to help the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) discharge his important responsibilities so that agriculture will once again regain its rightful place in the Canadian economy.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, nearly half of my constituency is a forested area. Our forests, especially in Quebec, have suffered from a spruce budworm epidemic and our people are counting on the Minister of State in charge of the new Forestry Ministry to see to it that Canada takes action, in co-operation with the private sector and the provincial Governments, and really looks after—which was not the case in the past—the management and development of our Canadian forests in accordance with the commitment made by the Progressive Conservative party.

Mr. Speaker, we do not claim to have solutions to all the problems. However, we are anxious to have a hard, fresh look at them and especially to co-operate fully with the provincial authorities in the search for adequate solutions.

As I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, there are in my vast riding of Bellechasse a considerable number of farmers who are involved in nearly all types of farming. They provide a good sample of the agricultural community which exists both in Quebec and Canada. That is something I am proud of. There are in my riding some sixty municipalities, which is rather exceptional, for none of them is of significant size. The largest one has a population of only 14,000, which is relatively small. That is why there are as much as sixty of them. I have just been awarded two more for the next election. These communities boast many small and medium-size businesses which were hard hit by the 1981 recession whose effects continue to be felt. It will take quite some time before small businessmen regain confidence in the future. As the government, it is our duty to help them regain this confidence, and I suggest that the economic statement of the Minister of Finance has provided the basis for a new social contract both with the private sector and with the Canadian people as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, we feel that our sincere desire to see the private sector regain its legitimate role as the driving force of the economy will help these small and medium-size businesses in Bellechasse, in the Province of Quebec and throughout Canada get back to work with renewed courage. We believe that is a prerequisite to job creation. In this way, our productivity will be gradually increased and, thanks to the firms which have not been afraid to invest in research—there are many of them, both in my own riding and elsewhere—new export markets and long awaited permanent jobs will be created by this new approach and not, as in the past, by this increasingly encroaching government intervention in the lives of the Canadian people.

The Canadian people, Mr. Speaker, needed a breather and took it.

For over a year, I travelled extensively in the Bellechasse constituency and in the province of Quebec and I intend to travel also elsewhere in Canada including in the Capilano riding of which we were given a glimpse a moment ago.

I was able to meet our people and hear their complaints. They were dismayed at the attitude of the government and their leaders towards provincial governments. People everywhere noted the deep financial problems facing the Canadian government and felt that no effort was made to find a real solution.

However, Mr. Speaker, as stated in the Bible: "And the evening and the morning were the first day." On the morning of September 5, we said: "All of that is going to change."

The policies and directions announced in the Throne Speech by the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the financial statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) are an indication to Canadians of the sincere effort and the very difficult exercise performed by the members of the government to cut the fat, out to use a colloquial expression, and reduce considerably government expenditures.

Such exercise was not easy but it was necessary if we want to give back to Canada its true place under the sun and more especially gain real credibility abroad and in our relations with other government levels.

After the statement of the Minister of Finance, the Canadian people might have expected all Hon. Members without exception to praise such a demonstration of courage and determination. Unfortunately, that is not what we got. We heard complaints and witnessed a defeatist attitude with respect to the constructive and sincere proposals made by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, when I am through with my speech in a few minutes, I will already have recorded a better performance than my predecessor, to a certain extent. Quite a few people still remember the Hon. Member who represented the riding of Bellechasse until 1980, the gentleman who belonged to the Social Credit Party, but fewer people can remember my predecessor. His personal record will be beaten when I end my remarks, Your Honour, I mean Mr. Speaker—I am still conditioned by my profession, although I had every intention of being careful about it.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the people of Bellechasse were quite anxious to have a spokesman to represent them properly in the House of Commons.

In conclusion, the Members from Quebec, including myself, want to assure all their parliamentary colleagues that we will fully support the approach of the Government aimed at checking the spending sprees to which we had become used to, as well as the courageous efforts made by the Government in the coming weeks to make sure that the Canadian Government will at last live within its means.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments on the remarks of the Hon. Member for Bellechasse?

[English]

Very well. We will proceed with debate.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I want to compliment the mover, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James), and the seconder, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Ms. Jacques), on the speeches with which they commenced the debate.

I want to express my congratulations to the Speaker on being appointed to this high and important position.

I also want to indicate my appreciation to the electors of Algoma for re-electing me to this House of Commons. It is a great and historic riding, once represented by the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson for some 19 years. It has shown its outstanding wisdom by re-electing a Liberal to this Thirty-third Parliament of Canada. They did this as well in 1958 in the great Diefenbaker sweep.

The Algoma constituency is very diverse in its people and geography. We occupy that area of the north shore of Lake Huron from Sudbury to Sault Ste. Marie, including Manitoulin Island and the area along the Lake Superior route. Its economy is equally diverse, involving everything from agriculture to uranium mines, fishing to forestry, and of course the steel industry in Sault Ste. Marie as well as some of the most spectacular scenery for tourism of any place to be found in the country. Added to the English, French and other less populous groups, we of course have the second largest Indian population in the Ontario region. Some of the most active and vital Indian bands in the country are in the Algoma-Manitoulin area.

The election campaign in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, involved many items but especially jobs, inflation, the economy and youth employment. I believe that during the last two and a half years no community in our country has suffered more from the recession than Sault Ste. Marie, whose steel industry has been hard pressed. We heard all kinds of promises that there would be increased trade with the United States and that the Algoma Steel tube mill would be completed. We heard there would be more rail and rod business from CN as well as more help for industry.

It is unbelievable to me that so many of these promises have been dashed within the first few weeks of this new Government taking office. For example, non-tariff barriers are going to be imposed by the U.S. on the 14th of this month covering tubes being sold to that country. We had a decision by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that the Government would no longer give advance rulings on the tax implications of joint ventures and limited partnerships. This effectively eliminates the opportunity for completion of that tube mill. Just before the provincial election in Nova Scotia we were advised that CN would give all of its future rail business to Sysco, whereas Algoma had provided a great deal of that steel in the past. Since then, of course, there have been cutbacks in the Industrial Regional Development Program which would have helped small industry locate in that community.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Speech from the Throne is long on rhetoric but very short on specifics. There are umpteen studies, task forces, reviews, committee studies and endless consultation, but there is really very little specific agenda for action. That is what I believe the Speech from the Throne should be, but we simply did not get this except for a few left-over items from the last Parliament.

Although those items are important and we are all aware of them, surely that does not really constitute the agenda for action which was promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he said he was going to build a brand-new Canada. It seems to me the Prime Minister is engaged in a massive public relations exercise. It is very impressive but it does not really follow through. For example, look at the decision to sell off CDIC in one lump. I am sure that makes the moguls on Bay Street very happy as they read The Globe and Mail over their morning coffee, but when you look at the reality it is not so simple. Look at Eldorado Resources and its move to try and process more uranium. More exemptions are now being given out so that the uranium refinery in Blind River is operating at about one-third of capacity. If you really wanted to sell off Eldorado Resources you would not be giving exemptions of that type. We see the Prime Minister taking a token pay cut of $6,000, bringing him down to $124,000 a year—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How about you?

Mr. Foster: —while he increases his staff allocation by $140,000. We see the Job Training Options Program announced to take place some time next spring which will create some 2,000 or 4,000 jobs, whereas the First Chance Program, which I understand was a similar kind of program, was supposed to begin on October 1 and by contrast would have created 26,000 jobs.

In the economic statement that we had last week there were massive cuts in financial activity by the federal Government, but we are not actually going to see a budget until some time next spring. The economic statement told us how the Government was going to make massive cuts in its expenditure, but it did not tell us how the Government was going to create the tens of thousands of jobs which were promised last July in Prince Albert. The headlines of the last three days pretty well spell out the impact of that economic statement. The Globe and Mail carried the headline "Government Focuses on Deficit Reduction, not Jobs". An editorial in The Toronto Star was headlined "Abandoning the Jobless". "PM Changes Stand on Social Programs", in The Globe and Mail. "Reversal of policy squeezes the Department of National Defence" in The Globe and Mail. The headlines "Dewar to Protest Housing Fund Cut", and "50,000 Jobs Price of Tory Cuts", both appeared in the Ottawa Citizen. "Social Welfare Advocates decry cuts in UIC and Job Training". "Tory Squeeze on Youth Outrages Student Leaders". "Gasoline to go up 2.5 Cents a Litre". Does anyone remember the Prime Minister promising anything in the election campaign that would lead us to believe that we would see headlines like these this first weekend after the opening of the new Parliament? Does anyone believe that the Canadian electorate will ever believe the Tory promises again? I doubt that even Tories will believe Tory promises in the future.

What happens when we bring these massive cuts and national headlines down to the constituency level? That is really where the action is. A ten-cent a gallon increase in gasoline probably means that the commuting worker at the Elliot Lake uranium mines or at Algoma Steel in Sault Ste. Marie is going to pay something over $100 a year more for his gasoline. The Government cut out the Summer Canada Program. Well, $85 million does not mean much perhaps at the national level, but for 500 or 600 students it means they will have that much less money to spend to go back to school next fall.

An increase in marina fees and the cutting out of the mobile surveillance group for customs means that tourism will be hit hard in my area. The cutting of the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, CHIP and RRAP will mean that low-income families, many of them senior citizens, will not be able to carry out repairs to their homes. They will have to go and see their bank manager instead. The cutback of $200 million in the Industrial Regional Development Program will harm the attraction of new industries to cities like Sault Ste. Marie and northern areas of our country. Toughening up the qualifications for unemployment insurance benefits will push low-income families into welfare that much sooner. Job training programs are to be cut by $128 million so that people cannot be retrained for new jobs when they lose their old ones.

These are cruel and tough measures for the slow growth areas and the low income parts of our country. Cities like Sault Ste. Marie, which has been wracked by recession since the world-wide recession two and one-half years ago, will need more help this winter rather than less, which is what they will get. If the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance had told the Canadian people during the election campaign last summer what their secret agenda was to be, the result of that election would have been different. They certainly would not have received the support of 50 per cent of the Canadian people. They certainly would not have gotten 75 per cent of the seats in the House of Commons. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of change in promises which make people so cynical of politicians.

As well as not keeping its promises, with no advance warning in the election campaign, the Government has reduced many vital services to Canadians. The most frightening aspect of this, Mr. Speaker, is that this is not the end of the Tory "chop chop show". It is probably only the beginning. Our social security system was a sacred trust in the last election. Now it is something to be chopped and negotiated away. We will just have to stand by and see what is proposed for our Old Age Security pension program and our family allowance program which will come under the Tory cutting machine next spring when the budget comes out. Surely no one will believe these kinds of election promises again.

I would like to speak briefly about agriculture today because there is no sector of our economy which requires more attention than this industry at this time. It was mentioned only once in the Speech from the Throne and there were only a couple of proposals and a massive cut of $63 million with regard to it in the economic statement.

Agri-bonds, Section 31 of the Income Tax Act and capital gains are to be referred to a committee of Parliament. Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is the role of government to propose legislation and the role of the Parliament of Canada to dispose of that legislation . This Government seems to be asking us to do endless studies rather than putting forth concrete proposals to be dealt with in the form of legislation.

Canagrex is to be wound up to save the Government $6.6 million. The Tory policy talks about Canada being a superpower and increasing exports massively. How do we increase exports massively if we cut out this most important exporting arm of Agriculture Canada?

Agricultural research was to be increased, Mr. Speaker. Now we discover that it is to be cut by $2.7 million and that laboratory projects are to be deferred. Farmers were to be able to write their loans down to current day values and the special Farm Financing Assistance Program was to be reinstated. There was nary a word in the economic statement or in the Speech from the Throne about that. Agricultural service fees charged by the federal Government will be increased by $32 million. Some of these are bound to end up in farmers' costs.

There is a crisis in the agricultural industry today with regard to grains, red meats and other sectors. The Agriculture Canada report of mid-summer projects that farm net incomes will drop by 3 per cent across the country this year. In Saskatchewan this projection has increased to 8.9 per cent and to 35.5 per cent in Manitoba. Where is the action to overcome this problem? Grain exports are projected to fall by 25 per cent in the 1984-85 crop year. The value of those exports could drop from the $5.5 billion of last year to $3 billion in this coming crop year, according to the Wheat Board. The red meat industry is likewise facing low commodity prices, higher input costs and stiff competition, such as the imports from Ireland which are subsidized to the extent of some 40 cents a pound.

Already this year farm bankruptcies are up by 25 per cent. The Farm Credit Corporation reports that 39,000 farmers are severely stressed financially and that up to 1,700 could face imminent financial collapse due to the heavy debt load. Where is the action in the Speech from the Throne and the economic statement to solve these problems?

The Government promised lower interest rates to be written down by the Farm Credit Corporation or other lenders. There were no proposals put forward in that regard. Where are the review panels which could prevent bankruptcies and provide arbitration such as that which was proposed in Bill C-17 in the Thirty-second Parliament? Why is there no action in the Speech from the Throne to block subsidized beef coming in from Ireland? Why is there no mention of a marketing program or stabilization system to improve returns to the red meat industry? Why is there no action proposed in the Speech from the Throne to set aside debt for those good producers who, in normal times, would have a viable agricultural industry?

I hope that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) will be putting forward a proposal such as was made in the United States in mid-September. Why is there no action to make amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Fund to have a special payout of $500 million this year as was proposed by the former Prime Minister? That fund is made up of farmers' money and the returns and market opportunities are drastically reduced this year. That is the sort of action which should have been in the Speech from the Throne or the economic statement.

The Government has proposed practically nothing in the Speech from the Throne to solve the emergency situations facing several sectors of the agricultural community today. The initiative for legislation in the House must come from the Government. Parliament cannot act to solve these problems with legislation or budgetary items which are not before it. Unless there is some action the situation will grow even more acute throughout the winter and spring months and we will see bankruptcies rise to the level projected by the Farm Credit Corporation. Mr. Speaker, there should have been action on these items in the Speech from the Throne or in the economic statement.

The figure projected by the Farm Credit Corporation of 1,000 or 1,700 bankruptcies is not just an empty statistic. It represents farms and farm families. It represents hopes and dreams which will be destroyed unless the Government acts in this first session of the Thirty-third Parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), one of the few Members on the other side who returned to the House after the election.

I marvel at the Hon. Member for Algoma expecting us on this side, after a matter of two months, to be able to address all the problems which the prior government caused in the country. Would the Member for Algoma tell us whether he himself or his Party is in favour of pensions and baby bonuses for those in Canada who are making over $100,000 a year? Is he himself or his Party in favour of having individuals in that wage category receive that type of benefit?

• (1240)

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, what we really marvel at is the change in what the Prime Minister was saying in the election campaign. At that time he said that these programs were a sacred trust and were untouchable. Suddenly they are no longer a sacred trust; apparently only medicare is a sacred trust. We marvel at the undoubted change that has occurred during the last two or three months.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate the Hon. Member on his speech. However, I think he made one unintentional error with respect to the Summer Canada Program. He said that some 500 or 600 students would lose their jobs during the summer. Would the Hon. Member correct that statement? Perhaps this figure only applies to his riding, because it is an $85 million program. At approximately $1,000 per student, it represents 80,000 students.

Could the Hon. Member give his opinion as to the rationale of a government that would discontinue direct job creation for students in high unemployment areas such as the Hon. Member's riding? What kind of wicked, cruel rationale would a government follow to take such a move? Does he think that the Government will have to turn around in the spring, reverse that policy and bring back the exact same program that the Liberal Government had last summer?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, let me clarify for the Hon. Member that it was 500 or 600 jobs in the Algoma-Manitoulin area and not the whole country. Those jobs will be sorely missed. Many of these students are from low-income families and many are native students from the 12 reserves in my constituency. Many of them have an opportunity to go to university in spite of their modest backgrounds, but they will not now have that opportunity.

Many communities depend on students for their tourism promotion, community betterment, recreational programs and many other projects which the municipal governments cannot afford. They depend on this Summer Canada Program.

I would not attempt to explain the rationale of the Government for cutting out this program. If I were to speculate, I would speculate that the hue and cry from students across the country, including those from constituencies of Members on all sides, will be so great by the spring that the program will be reinstated. This is a relatively modest expenditure and if my constituency is a typical example, it seems to be a cruel, unfair and unjust action to put 500 or 600 students into idleness and to foreclose on their opportunities to return to college or university. I certainly hope that the Government will reverse its policy with respect to this program. It gave no forewarning during the election campaign that it was planning to cut out the student program.

It would have been interesting to see how Progressive Conservative Members would have campaigned on that policy of cutting out student employment programs. I would have been interested to see what support such a policy would have had from the young Progressive Conservatives.

I welcome the question from the Hon. Member from Newfoundland because I did not go into any of the detail which his question allowed me to give in this debate.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me the opportunity to set the record straight. In his presentation the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) said that Revenue Canada had ceased to give advance rulings on the tax consequences of certain arrangements. This is not the case. Revenue Canada continues to give those advance rulings, with one particular exception. That is the one with which the Hon. Member is concerned. It involves the use of a limited partnership for purposes that were not contemplated under the Income Tax Act.

According to the Act, limited partnership contemplated individuals forming partnerships. In the case with which the Hon. Member is concerned, there are two large corporations that would like to form a limited partnership. That is why an advance ruling has not yet been given in this particular instance.

However, I would agree with the Hon. Member that it would be advantageous, especially for the potential new employees in his riding, were the Department of National Revenue to be able to give that advance ruling in the near future.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned this because I think it is a very important concept. The Government said that it would give greater security, confidence and certainty to the business community. In my opinion, the decision not to allow the implications of a joint venture on a limited partnership only adds uncertainty to the situation. I suggest that it is really a cop-out.

Apparently there were eight such cases before the Department of National Revenue. Two of them, Algoma Steel and Tembec, would create substantial jobs. We are talking about 700 jobs in the case of Algoma Steel. Algoma Steel wanted to form a joint venture or limited partnership in which some of the tax credits and capital cost allowances of the corporation would be used by another corporation under a limited partnership. This would mean 700 permanent jobs that are desperately needed in our own area.

I understand that a similar situation exists with the Tembec company which is about 100 miles north of Ottawa. If such an undertaking would create jobs, why could the Department of National Revenue not say that it would allow it and give the advance ruling? Why could it not do that in the case of Tembec?

If there were corporations which were putting together non-productive, limited partnerships that would not create jobs, the department could refuse to give an advance ruling in such a case.

The Prime Minister came to Sault Ste. Marie and Algoma twice in July to say that he would see that the plant would be completed. When the company laid down its proposal at a meeting in September, there was no indication that the Government was going to disallow it. Lo and behold, two weeks later this advance ruling by the Department of National Revenue was outlawed so that the opportunity to complete this $350 million tube mill is foreclosed.

I realize that the Hon. Member is saying that the advance ruling mainly applies to this kind of circumstance, but it is in these kinds of circumstances where the Government is, in effect, copping out from its responsibility to give advance rulings.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and comments on the Hon. Member's speech has now expired.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a privilege for me to say a few words about the Speech from the Throne as well as the statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last Thursday evening. At this time I would also like to congratulate the mover of the Speech from the Throne, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James), and the seconder, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Jacques). I think it is rather unusual that two seatmates moved and seconded the Speech from the Throne. I also believe that they have the same name because, according to my limited French, I believe the names "Jacques" and "James" are the same.

The Speech from the Throne commencing the Thirty-third Parliament was certainly impressive. Much to the disappointment of the Opposition, it did not go into great detail. However, the Speech from the Throne certainly charted a course. The statements and remarks of the Minister of Finance of last Thursday evening clarified a good deal of what the Canadian people want and are expecting. Canada now has, shall we say, returned to the land of the free.

• (1250)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: This Government is going to free Canadians from a mushrooming deficit. If any statement or message was given to the people of Canada by this new Government, it was that something had to be done to reduce the deficit, to put Canadians back to work and to give Canada's private industry and its entrepreneurs a chance to see what they can do. Past government mismanagement and mishandling of programs and its entry into the private field proved most unsuccessful.

As we are all aware, we are now faced with 1,400,000, give or take, unemployed. Band-aid approaches give some short-term assistance but the idea is to get Canadians, young and old, back to work in long-term, challenging and, let us say, permanent jobs.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at this very moment is meeting with the Premiers of the provinces to discuss plans for the future of Canada, to set up goals and various projects for a First Ministers' conference some time early in the new year. We wish them well in this endeavour. Future conferences will be of a different type. First Ministers will sit down and discuss on an friendly basis, and I can emphasize "friendly", rather than on a confrontational basis, the way it was in the past.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: Possibly a year down the road at the conference we will see another Conservative Government representing the Province of Manitoba joining in to discuss the future of Canada.

Mr. Manly: Not likely.

Mr. Darling: I notice that last remark of mine did not register too well in the NDP section of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Darling: I listened with a great deal of interest when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) criticized the Throne Speech for references made concerning consultation with the private sector. That attitude is the chief reason his Party went down to a crushing defeat on September 4. When I think back to that great statement of Mackenzie King, it reminds me that the present 40 Members are in the valley of humiliation from which it will take a great many years to recover.

Canadians should take great comfort in knowing they now have a government that will listen. I want to emphasize that,

Mr. Speaker. I know that we as members of the government will be bringing our messages to the Cabinet and to the Prime Minister. Certainly there will have to be some distasteful medicine taken; there is no question about that. I think the statement "short-term pain for long-term gain" is a truism. It reminds me that everyone wants to go to heaven but nobody wants to die.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Darling: Some hard measures will have to be taken in order for us to get the country back on the right road. The doors in Ottawa have been closed so long and the keyholes plugged for so many years that Canadians must get used to true representation in Parliament.

If consultation and co-operation is such a dastardly goal, perhaps Opposition members could explain why private sector spokesmen are so elated with the Throne Speech and the economic statement of the Minister of Finance. Immediately following the address of the Finance Minister, I had the good fortune to meet in my office with John Bulloch, president of the influential Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Mr. Bulloch's federation is one of nine private sector groups participating in the consultation process, the same group so profusely maligned by the Opposition. Let me quote what Mr. Bulloch said:

> The signals to the investment community are positive because there is a message of honesty. It is a message that Canada will rely more on the private sector than the Government. We're going to roll back regulations and rely on market forces. For small business specifically, they re-introduced the tax simplification measures from last April. These were non-partisan measures developed after three years of effort between the private sector and the tax fraternity. They represent $50 million in savings in accounting fees alone.

Mr. Bulloch described the Finance Minister's announcement as a "cold shower", and said it was the only cold shower he has ever enjoyed taking. That shower, of course, describes the rude awakening Canadians are enduring in the face of a deficit more severe than previously disclosed. Canadians should not be fooled by Opposition prattlings about lack of concern over unemployment. The creation of meaningful, long-term employment is contingent on a strong national economic base. The Opposition is doing what it is paid to do. Unfortunately, members of the Opposition do not seem to care about misinforming the people of Canada and making the pain and suffering of the unemployed even greater.

Getting Canada back to work is of paramount importance to this Government. We defy anyone to provide concrete proof that that is not the case. It will always be our intention to deal fairly and compassionately with the people of Canada. That, in itself, is one of the changes Canadians have been seeking. Unemployment will not take a back seat to problems relating to the deficit, but even grade school mathematicians can see why the deficit must be addressed concurrently.

Consider, if you will, what Mr. Bulloch had to say on behalf of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business:

> We've had some shocking news when it comes to the size of the Government's deficit and their fiscal problems, but the Government has shown a lot of honesty and straight shooting on how they're going to deal with it.
> To have over $4 billion in cuts so early in the game is a major achievement. We, as an organization, are making suggestions to the Deputy Prime Minister where even further cuts can be made over the next six months. The signals to business are very, very powerful. The signals to small business are especially good. We have a whole set of new rules between the tax collector and small business.
> They're going to remove the restrictions that are inhibiting small business growth, for example, the unemployment insurance system and the problems of equity capital. The sleeper is the review of the unemployment insurance system because most people don't realize today that unemployment insurance is creating unemployment.
> The United States now has 7 per cent unemployment while we have 11. The reason: people in the United States are taking real wage cuts. People in the United States are moving more frequently to take jobs. The people in the United States are taking more training and the rigidity in our labour market is the major inhibitor to job creation in Canada. The sleeper here is the serious initiatives to review unemployment insurance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry but I have to interrupt the Hon. Member since it is one o'clock. I shall now leave the chair until two o'clock. Since the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) has some time left, he may continue after the daily routine of business.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONSEQUENCES OF STAFFING FREEZE

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the full impact of restraint measures announced by the new Conservative Government has not yet been felt in the poorer regions of Canada. I am referring to the freeze on person-years announced by the new Government for the federal Public Service, and the cutting and streamlining of administration in various federal Departments.

It is clear what happens when orders are given to cut, to streamline, and to freeze the federal Public Service. It is the job in the field, the job at the end of the line, and the job in the region which are cut. Tory policy today in this area is even more cruel than it was in 1979. To set out intentionally, as the Government has done, to reduce the size of the federal Public Service, with no regard whatsoever to where these cuts are made, is a cruel and stupid policy. This policy reaches into every community in rural Canada, and into Crown corporations such as Canada Post.

This week orders are being issued throughout Atlantic Canada to reduce the hours of small post offices from 40 hours to 30 hours. In Newfoundland, about 160 post offices are affected by the decision. The decision was made for all of Atlantic Canada last week, and I understand rural Quebec will get the same boot this week. It is now clear that the Government is not interested in the poorer regions of the country, much less in poor people.

SPORT

NATIONAL SYMBOLISM OF GREY CUP ANNUAL FOOTBALL MATCH

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to make a statement on an annual national event known as the Grey Cup game. I must apologize if I seem somewhat more jubilant today as a Winnipeger than you, Mr. Speaker, as a Torontonian. On last Sunday afternoon our Winnipeg Blue Bombers became the number one football team in western Canada, and the Western Conference champions. The Blue Bombers are a community-owned team with its home located in the centre of the riding of Winnipeg-St. James.

I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate formally the players—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid that gives me an opportunity I must take. I wish only to say to new Members, and others, that according to the rules of the House Standing Order 21 may not be used for statements of congratulations. I rise only to make that point.

Mr. Minaker: The Grey Cup is a real symbol of national pride and unity. It brings the East and West together in a weekend full of festivities and good will.

I might add that my deskmate, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin), which is in Hamilton, and I, have a friendly wager that the loser will buy a dinner in the Parliamentary Restaurant regardless of whether or not the price has risen. I hope, without breaking any laws, that my colleagues from western Canada will join in similar wagers with our eastern colleagues so that we can get back some of the loot we in western Canada lost last year to the East.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MULTICULTURALISM

SEPARATE DEPARTMENT ADVOCATED

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw the attention of the House to a commitment made by the Conservative Party during the last election campaign, a commitment which is now by no means certain to be honoured.

Ethnic leaders throughout Canada have been asking the federal Government for many years to strengthen its commitment to Canada's multicultural heritage. Since the first statement by then Prime Minister Trudeau in 1971 referring to Canada's multicultural diversity, there has been growing recognition of the multicultural fact.

During the election campaign the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) confirmed that his Party would, if it formed the Government, create a separate Department of Multiculturalism with an "ethnic minister". When asked if his Leader, now the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), would support such a move, the Hon. member and former Minister of State for Multiculturalism during the previous minority Conservative Government, was quoted as saying:

> I think that I can say that without any problem.

It appears now that there is some problem. The Speech from the Throne which opened this new Parliament made only one fleeting and thin reference to the Government's commitment:

> To reach a national consensus which will reflect the reality of Canada's cultural diversity.

There is no mention of the campaign promise of a full-fledged Department of Multiculturalism.

The Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) is reportedly engaged in consultations with ethnic groups to consider the direction of Canada's multicultural policy. I hope these consultations create a better result than the previous Government's multiculturalism Bill of last June. Let the Government show its good will by honouring at least one campaign promise, one that holds an enormous symbolic importance for thousands of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE ECONOMY

SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT'S AIMS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said in his statement last Thursday, the Canadian people did indeed make a clear and confident judgment on September 4 about the future of this great country of ours. I strongly endorse and applaud the objectives and strategies of the program. The process of consultation with Canadians is especially vital if we are to achieve the desired consensus, followed by committed action.

I wish to stress that the creation of jobs remains the top priority in Canada. However, we must take the required long-term steps to create a climate of confidence so that sustained economic growth and job creation will take place. In creating such a climate it is essential to tackle the causes of the problems rather than wrestling with the symptoms. That is why Canadians agree that we must reverse the massive build-up in public debt as a step toward fiscal responsibility.

Lastly, Canadians realize that we must be prepared to forge and fashion our role in the world market-place if the blueprint of economic renewal is to become a reality. That is why the Canadian community is so supportive of the aims and objectives outlined in the statement of the Minister of Finance last Thursday in this House.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED INEFFECTIVENESS OF CERTAIN LEGISLATION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Last Thursday, in commenting on the acquittal of Dr. Morgentaler, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) indicated that he did not intend to support an amendment to the legislation on abortion.

The 1969 legislation on termination of pregnancy is outdated. In fact, in most parts of Canada, recognized hospitals have refused to set up therapeutic abortion committees as provided by law.

The resulting inequities are obvious. Furthermore, the fourth acquittal of Dr. Morgentaler clearly illustrates the shortcomings of the existing legislation, which should be reviewed as soon as possible in order to change either the way it is implemented or its substance.

My purpose here is not to challenge the validity of our judicial system but to stress the ineffectiveness of certain areas of our legislation which penalizes individuals, in this case women, who require a service that, according to the legislation, should be available, but in practice is not.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) promised to reduce the deficit. Now, when the Progressive Conservative Government is actually making a reduction, he groans in dismay, "cut, cut, cut". This is understandable when his record as Minister of Finance shows that he increased federal Government spending by 99.8 per cent. Then his Liberal friends continued to increase spending, with borrowed money of course, until the public debt is now about $190 billion. He would reduce the deficit by add, add, add.

Everyone, except the Liberals, knows a debt cannot be reduced by adding to it, but the Liberals have been trying to lift themselves by their own bootstraps for a long time. The Liberal Leader fights the reduction of the public debt against the wishes of the people.

Here are a few excerpts from editorials: The Globe and Mail, "Business across the country applauded the economic statement"; Le Devoir: "Only a lunatic would claim that the financial situation of the federal Government is not disastrous and does not require drastic measures of austerity"; and even the Vancouver Province: "—this tough, ambitious and fair program should stop the drift to higher payments just to cover the interest on our exploding debt". However, one of my Indian friends put it more succinctly. He said: "That Liberal Leader talks with a forked tongue".

The economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) reflects the thinking of the vast majority of the Canadian people. We will keep our promise to Canadians despite the moans and groans of members of the Liberal Party and of the NDP and we we will build a new Canada—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF ANNOUNCED CHANGES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, neither the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) nor the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) have tabled the impact studies which should show the effects of the announced cutbacks on unemployment insurance claimants, particularly those in the various regions of Canada where unemployment rates are far in excess of the national average. It is obvious that the Government views the unemployed as mere statistics. Therefore, in order to appear tough to the large and powerful business interests in Canada, and to create a climate of confidence for the private sector, the Government is prepared to crush those with the least economic power.

See how tough this Government is! See how the Government is slashing at the public sector! See how the Government creates confidence in the private sector! See how tough it is while it is crushing students, chopping research and development, and savaging public servants! See how it mollycoddles the rich and powerful—world prices for oil, no challenge to corporate concentration in Canada, no changes in the Income Tax Act to make the wealthy pay their fair share of taxes! It seems to me the Government has adapted a theme song from the Three-Penny Opera: "Mac the Knife is back in town".

The least the Government can do is table the impact studies relating to the announced changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act. I call on the Minister of Employment and Immigration to do so now.

THE ADMINISTRATION

SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT DECISIONS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, the results of the election of September 4 indicated that Canadians are willing to work together to solve the problems that we face in our country. They took the first step in reversing the negative trend that has plagued our country by electing a new Government committed to bringing about real change.

Voters entrusted our Government with a mandate to lead the way in a process of economic renewal and national reconciliation. We have begun to fulfil that mandate, Mr. Speaker. Last week, in the Speech from the Throne and in the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), our Government laid the cornerstones for a national reconstruction effort.

In facing up to Canada's serious economic problems, we are all going to have to work hard and we are going to have to make some crucial decisions. The people of the riding of Mission-Port Moody are prepared for these decisions. Already they are responding with enthusiasm to the leadership shown by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance.

Our agenda for change and renewal is based upon consultation and discussion. The Prime Minister began that process today by meeting with the provincial First Ministers. What these people in opposition do not understand, Mr. Speaker, is: "You ain't seen nothing yet".

POLITICAL PARTIES

ABSTINENCE OF NEW DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS FROM NON-CONFIDENCE VOTE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, such was the universal accord and happiness with which the Speech from the Throne and the economic statement were received that the whole country has united in its approval of the policies of the new Government. Even the NDP are in favour of the new policies. Apparently NDP members are not even interested in voting on their own subamendment. On Friday afternoon only three out of the required five NDP members rose when the opportunity presented itself to cause a recorded vote. Therefore, there will be no vote of non-confidence this afternoon.

From that we can only conclude either, first, that 27 out of the 30 NDP members fully support the new Government; second, that the NDP has abandoned its role of opposition by vacating the field to its friends in the Liberal Party; or third, that NDP members would be well advised to reconsider their choice of House Leader and Party Whip.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT PRACTICES

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign Conservative candidates promised a more open and accessible Government. The Tories castigated the Liberal Government for secrecy. In their national election propaganda they said:

> The Liberals deny Canadians legitimate access to Government. They refuse to release government information. Government must be accountable to the people of Canada. It must be accessible, honest and respectful of different needs and opinions.

What a farce, Mr. Speaker. That is hypocrisy in its highest and purest form. Two months of the Tory version of open and accessible Government have given Canadians a real understanding of the words "duplicity" and "deceit". If its present practices continue, the Conservative Government will clearly be the most secretive and paranoiac Government Canadians have ever witnessed.

The most recent example of this approach came last week with the Finance Minister's refusal to release a study done on the impact his cuts will have on unemployment rates. The public, the press, and the Opposition have a right to this information. We have a right to know how many jobs will be lost. We have a right to know which regions and which sectors of the economy will be most seriously affected.

Why is the Government afraid to release this information? What does it have to hide? Canadians are asking themselves what happened to the promise of more open government.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AID

GOVERNMENT'S CREDIBILITY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and, to my mind, it has to do with the credibility of the Government.

In light of the statement made last week by the Minister of Finance concerning the $180 million cut in foreign aid which Canada was committed to give to developing countries, how can the Right Hon. Minister explain that, 48 hours earlier, he had authorized his ambassador to the UN to deliver a passionate speech to tell the whole world that Canada would give more foreign aid than any other country and that, 48 hours later, his Government ruthlessly slashed foreign aid programs, when Africa is experiencing the worst famine in many years and other countries are wondering whether they ought to expect less assistance?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada, under the government of different Parties, has a proud record of contributing to overseas development assistance. It is the intention of this Government to maintain that record.

When my colleague, the Minister of Finance, made his statement in this House on Thursday night, he made very clear the commitment of this country to continuing our steady progress toward .07 per cent of GNP for overseas development assistance. Because of the severe economic situation which the Government has inherited, we have been forced to stretch out that commitment to a longer time frame. However, we are meeting the obligations of Canada, and we will retain a position of respect and leadership for Canada by contributing to development and by contributing to relief of disaster where it occurs.

AMOUNT OF FUNDING

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, how can the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs stand today and make that statement when, on September 25, at the United Nations, speaking on behalf of the Government and all of the people of Canada, he made the solemn promise that we would keep our goal of .07 per cent of GNP for overseas development assistance by 1990 a few weeks later it was postponed to 1995, and two weeks later the programs of aid for the developing nations were cut by almost $200 million? Do you not think, Mr. Speaker, that the credibility of the Canadian Government has been determined by this inability of the new Government to say the same thing inside Canada as it does outside Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons this Government enjoys much more credibility than the Government with which the Hon. Member was associated is precisely that we do say the same thing outside Canada as we do inside Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): And it is our intention . . . And we have shown that we always say the same thing in French and in English.

[English]

What I said at the United Nations was that the Government intends to achieve its level of support by 1990. That was our intention at that time when we had that state of knowledge of the finances of the country. We did not know then just how serious was the fiscal problem in which the former Government had placed this country. For that reason we used guarded language then, and we repeated in the statement of my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Finance, a clear commitment to maintain Canada's steady progress. I would remind the House that Canadian overseas development aid is going up, not down.

AID FOR CENTRAL AMERICA

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member says that he knows what he is talking about. He made a commitment to the UN on behalf of the Government on September 25. Three weeks later he backed away from that commitment because he has no clout in his Government. If the Government is about to cut $200 million in aid, I would like to know if it is the intention of the Government to continue to cut aid. The Minister indicated last week that the Government would increase aid to Africa because of the famine. Is it the intention of the Government to cut aid to Latin America at a time when a major crisis is developing in Nicaragua? Is it not the view of the Minister that he would have been well advised to follow more closely—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great respect to the Hon. Member, I heard his supplementary question and I do not think that it is fair for two questions to be included in a third supplementary.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would make the point that the Overseas Development Assistance budget has not been cut; it has been increased. It will be more this year than last year.

With respect to Nicaragua, this morning I had the opportunity of meeting with the Hon. Member for Spadina who has recently returned from that country. We discussed an aid program for Nicaragua, which the Government is examining. Two or three weeks ago I had the honour of signing a $7.5 million Canadian aid program which will help to ensure potable water supplies in Nicaragua. We are meeting Canada's obligations around the world, and we intend to continue to do so.

RESEARCH

ANNOUNCED BUDGETARY CUTS—QUEBEC REGION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

Cities in central Quebec are probably those most severely affected by the budget cuts announced by the Minister of Finance, and I am thinking of research laboratories in Victoriaville, Trois-Rivières and Shawinigan. Could the Minister inform the House what will happen to the Institut de recherche Maurice-Lamontagne in the Lower St. Lawrence area and the Centre de recherche optique planned for the Quebec City area?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer my hon. colleague but first of all, I wish to thank him for the cordial words he directed to our government and my colleague, the Minister of Finance, last Thursday evening following our policy statement. It was much appreciated. I can inform the Hon. Member that the Centre Maurice-Lamontagne will proceed as planned. As Hon. Members must have noticed upon reading the documentation tabled last Thursday, there is no indication of any cuts in that area, and the same applies to the Centre de recherche optique at Quebec City.

INQUIRY CONCERNING POSSIBLE LOSS OF HIGH TECHNOLOGY JOBS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary concerning the research centres planned for the area represented by the President of the Treasury Board. Could the Minister inform the House how many jobs related to those research centres will be lost as a result of these projects being abandoned or postponed?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in the case of all research centres that were financed by the Laprade Fund, with which Hon. Members are familiar, certain projects which we felt did not have the same high priority as others have been either abandoned altogether or postponed.

Mr. Garneau: At a loss of how many jobs?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I may inform my hon. friend that despite the fact that the Government represented by his Party during the last session spent more than $130 million, central Quebec is not better off than other regions.

The promise that the Laprade Fund would create permanent jobs, Mr. Speaker, is a promise which, quite frankly, was not kept.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S ECONOMIC STATEMENT—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT—REPORTER'S INTERVIEW WITH DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On Friday last, after the Government announced its disastrous economic policy which it is going to—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: It is typical for Conservatives to laugh about increasing unemployment, a situation which we on this side of the House take seriously.

After the Minister announced his economic policy on Thursday night, he failed to indicate the precise effect that such a policy would have, according to analyses which were done by officials of his Department, on employment in the coming fiscal year. The Minister acknowledged last Friday that there was such a study, but refused to give that study to Members of the House and, more important, to the people of Canada.

My question concerns a news story which appeared the following day in The Citizen of Ottawa. In that story the reporter referred to an official from the Minister's Department, with the clear implication that the official gave to the reporter the information that the Minister denied to Members of the House of Commons. I would ask the Minister did any official from his Department give the information to the reporter which we requested, and will he tell us if that was done on the weekend?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the official who gave out the information. The Hon. Member can read the papers as well as I can. Clearly, someone spoke to a reporter and gave some information. However, I would like to underline the fact that the information that was in The Citizen report is not significant information when taken into the over-all context of the broad impact of the economic statement, which is clearly positive. The chief spokesman for small business, John Bulloch, has said that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great respect to the Minister, we are now in the second week of this Parliament and the questions are getting longer, and the answers are getting longer. Therefore, I will assert my authority to bring Question Period back to where I believe it should be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEPARTMENT'S ASSESSMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will keep my supplementary question short. The Minister has said that in his view the assessment which was done by his Department would not produce significant results. Would he now allow the people of Canada to decide whether the document which he wants to keep secret is, or is not, significant? The Minister preached open government when he was on this side. Why does he not practise it when he has responsibility?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are very open to these things.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have just embarked upon the largest consultative process that any Government has embarked on in Canadian history.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would like to give one piece of information to the Hon. Member in response to his question. I said that the information which was in the memorandum to me was statistically insignificant.

Mr. Broadbent: Let us decide.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will let you decide. In year one, in 1985, there is a marginal positive increase in employment; in 1986 it is a marginal negative impact on unemployment—both statistically insignificant and not worth worrying about.

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has told us that the situation will get worse in two years. Some of us hope that two years from now things would be better. Considering that the Minister continues to refer to that information in the House, does he not think that he has an obligation to produce that document, and does he not think that as a Member of Parliament I should not have to resort, as I will after Question Period, to the Access to Information Act, and go right over the Minister's head to obtain from the Government information which he should have provided a long time ago?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the information was provided to me as part of a broad memorandum outlining various policy alternatives. Those policy alternatives should be available to me, and only me, as the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I want to underline the fact that the information is statistically insignificant. It is more than outweighed by the positive impact of what has generally been regarded as a good economic statement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

WORLD OIL PRICES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. When the Minister was the opposition critic for that portfolio, she left no doubt, either before the election campaign or during the election campaign, as to what her policies would be if she were Energy Minister, or what the policies of her Government would be if they were elected. Now that the election is over, it would seem that these ideas have evaporated. I would like to say that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the Hon. Member that the purpose of Question Period is not to make speeches or statements, but to ask questions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister has said that she will not be making any major changes in energy policy until world oil prices have stabilized, what does she feel is "stability" in world energy oil prices? How does she define "stability", particularly concerning the difficult political situation in the Middle East?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member would know, the whole subject of oil pricing is currently under negotiation with the western producing provinces. It is a series of negotiations which are going very well. I am not in a position to talk about the outcome of those negotiations months before they are completed.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question preferably short.

IMPACT ON JOBS OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister herself has said that she wants to use energy policies as an "engine for growth". When is this growth going to take place? When are these jobs going to be created? Just because the Minister is frozen at the switch, does she mean, Mr. Speaker, that these jobs are not going to come forward until 1995 or later?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member clearly was not present recently when I was able to sign amended gas export contracts which will maintain or create 15,000 new jobs by following a more sensible gas pricing policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: We propose to bring forward similar measures in the next few weeks.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

INQUIRY CONCERNING POSSIBLE JOB LOSSES FOLLOWING CUTS IN FUNDING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

When the Progressive Conservative Party sat in the opposition, they often asked for more federal funds to be spent on research and development in Canada. However, in his economic statement last week, the Minister of Finance announced a $60 million cut in our research and development expenditures. My question is therefore as follows: Can the Minister tell the House how many jobs will be lost because of this drastic action taken by the Canadian Government?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the cut in expenditures announced last week in our research and development programs, I would like to assure my hon. friend that the Progressive Conservative party will meet its commitment to stimulate research and development during the next few years and that, everything being considered, no jobs will be lost in this sector, which is very important for the economic development of Canada.

INDUSTRIAL INCENTIVE PROGRAM—EXPENDITURE REDUCTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance just confirmed a few moments ago that there will be a loss of jobs in two years. How does the Minister of Finance square that with what was just said by the President of the Treasury Board?

In the economic statement the Government has cut some $200 million from the Industrial Incentive Program. This means that areas of the country which do not have private industry will be even further neglected by this Government. Will the Minister tell the House how many more jobs will be lost by that cut in expenditure of $200 million? How many more jobs will be lost to the poor areas of the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me try to explain to the Hon. Member. We are convinced that the impact of the economic statement is going to increase confidence and that will lead to job creation.

I recently received a letter from a man who is 94 years old. He said that because of the new Government and the confidence which we are engendering in him, he has gone out and bought a company which was going bankrupt, saved 145 jobs, and is going to create another 25 jobs over the next three months. That is confidence!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Table it!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Sudbury has the floor. Order, please.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

CALIBRATION OF CANCER MONITORING EQUIPMENT—EFFECT OF ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In its economic statement on Thursday the Government announced a number of job cuts in government scientific centres, including the laboratory of the National Research Council which serves as the national standard for radiation. In addition, it is responsible for fine tuning cancer therapy equipment across the country. These cuts will throw into question the amount of radiation which is administered, and make cancer treatments less effective. Will the Minister tell us why the Government has seen fit in the name of restraint, and in a very mindless way, to eliminate very highly skilled technical positions, and at the same time risk the quality and safety of cancer treatment in Canadian hospitals?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. gentleman's question, I will say that the Government indeed has not jeopardized in any way the calibration of cancer monitoring equipment. In fact that was but a very, very small complement of the 30 person years associated with the X-ray and molecular research laboratory which was largely viewed to be expendable by senior officials of the National Research Council.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I must add that that is not the view of a number of directors of hospitals across this country who have expressed surprise and dismay at the cut in that area.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I would like to congratulate him on his appointment to head that very important Department. Would the Minister tell the House why he went along with a cut which he knows will mean over the long term a loss of skilled jobs to an area in the scientific community of this country in which jobs are hard to come by?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his kind words and also to give him my best wishes in fulfilling his responsibilities.

I want to tell the Hon. Member that I believe, knowing of some of his comments in the past, that he will share our view that getting our economic house in order is the best way to create long-term jobs.

The second point I would like to make, and about which I have obviously made inquiries, is that it is my view, as well as the view within the Department, that the concern the Hon. Member has expressed is not valid. Every step will be taken to protect cancer patients in terms of radiation and to ensure that the veracity of the tests will be maintained. This has not been jeopardized, and I agree with the comments made by my cabinet colleague.

FUNDING CUT-BACKS—EFFECT ON EMPLOYEES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology, but first I would like to congratulate him on his appointment. In view of the statement just made by the President of the Treasury Board that there will be no loss of jobs in research and development, could the Minister explain why, in fact, cuts of between $36 million and $70 million are being imposed on the National Research Council, and why lay-off notices have gone to dozens of scientists of great experience at the NRC? Could the Minister also explain explicitly how it is that the Government of Canada is abandoning its capacity to recognize dioxin and other hazardous substances through the disbandment of the environmental secretariat?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the Hon. Member is that, indeed, no lay-off notices have been issued to any employees of the National Research Council. We are taking every measure to ensure a stimulation of private sector research and development—

Mr. Deans: Oh, yes, Sir!

Mr. Siddon: —consistent with the commitment of this Government. If that, in fact, means that people who were formerly employed in some of these laboratories are going to be able to seek out new private sector initiatives with the benefit of programs which this Government will be announcing, then it will give them a permanent, rewarding, exciting, and challenging alternative to stagnating in laboratories—

Mr. Deans: And have it done in the States, or perhaps Europe?

Mr. Siddon: —which have outlived their usefulness in some cases.

CONSULTATION INQUIRY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that employees in several of the laboratories concerned were told on Friday that lay-offs were coming, and were told how many lay-offs would come, but were not told who would be layed off, how can the Minister make that kind of statement? Why did the Government go forward with the cuts in the NRC without the kind of consultation which was so amply promised in the document called An Agenda for Economic Renewal, which we received only last week?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I repeat there have been no lay-offs, and the decisions which were announced by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, on Thursday night, were discussed fully with the senior officials at the National Research Council. It is unfortunate that one does not discuss such contemplated measures with every employee. However, indeed and in fact, those positions were seen to be the least essential of all of the activities of the National Research Council and, therefore, this Government took an essential decision, with which the Hon. Member obviously disagrees.

WHALING

IMPORTANCE TO INUIT OF BAFFIN ISLAND AND EASTERN ARCTIC

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, the seal industry in 50 per cent of my riding has been destroyed by conservationists such as Greenpeace. Due to the lack of industry and business opportunities in Nunatsiaq, over 50 per cent of the residents still carry on a form of renewable resource harvesting to supplement their meagre income. In the absence of a substantial amount of financial assistance to the Eastern Arctic, a ban on Narwhal hunting would aggravate the situation and the consequences would be devastating.

My question to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs consequently is: In view of the importance of renewable resource harvesting of Narwhals and Beluga whales to Inuit of Baffin Island and the Eastern Arctic, could the Minister assure northerners that the Government will protect their interests and that appropriate representation will be forwarded to the convention on international trade in endangered species to be held next year?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): May I first congratulate the Hon. Member on his election and for his first question in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Government is aware of proposals made by the Federal Republic of Germany to list Narwhals and Beluga whales in a way which would jeopardize the economy of northern Canada. We have already begun attempts to persuade the Government of West Germany not to proceed in that way and consequently to be in a position to help us protect the industry and people's livelihood in northern Canada. We are also in close contact with other countries which share our view, to enlist their help in trying to protect the economy and the livelihood of northern Canadians.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PLIGHT OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN NOT ELIGIBLE FOR BENEFITS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last Thursday we heard that unemployment insurance premiums will be raised, people cut from the rolls and possibly benefits reduced. I remind the Minister that in Newfoundland and other parts of the Atlantic there are hundreds of fishermen who, through no fault of their own, will not even qualify for any benefits this year because of a disaster in the inshore fishery. Will the Minister now announce a special fund for those fishermen, as has been done twice in the past, so that they will be able to qualify for unemployment insurance this winter and will not have to suffer the humiliation of welfare?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have been monitoring this situation very closely. It is my understanding that in the last few weeks there have been sufficient fishing opportunities so as to permit fisher people to qualify for the ten weeks that would allow them to collect unemployment insurance benefits. I also want to say to the Hon. Member that if he knows of any individual cases which do not fit this particular qualification, I would appreciate it if he would bring them to my attention.

LEVEL OF ASSISTANCE FOR AFFECTED CONSTITUENCIES

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the sympathetic ear of the Minister. In her letter to us of October 9 the Minister said: "Should the situation turn out to be even worse in 1984, I am prepared to consider raising allocation in fishing constituencies as far up to the $3 million maximum as may be necessary to provide required assistance". If this is necessary, would the Minister follow through so that we can begin to create the jobs that are needed so badly in those constituencies?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I certainly intend to do that as soon as we know that the season is complete and that all the figures and returns are in.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE HEARINGS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Communications. He will know that the CRTC is holding hearings at the request of CN/CP Telecommunications to permit them to enter the long distance telephone business. He will also know that estimates have been made that half a million telephone users will have to give up their phone service, and that rates will go up 30 per cent to 100 per cent in the next few years, if competition takes place. Before the election the Prime Minister said very clearly that he thought no policies should be changed until there was a policy directive. Would the Minister consider suggesting to the CRTC that it should not issue any statement until they policy has been set by the Government?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of a previous question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister's Department has been informed by the federal Department of Fisheries and the fishermen's union in Newfoundland that there are at least 1,600 families affected by what the previous questioner was talking about, not enough stamps for unemployment insurance, and that the ridings so affected are already up to the $3 million limit in Canada Works funds. Given this new information, will the Minister agree that a special program should be instituted like the Liberals did last year, or is she telling the people to go to the welfare office?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what I said in answer to the previous question, and say again, is that we are waiting until the season is completed everywhere in the fishing communities and we will then make that decision. We have made a commitment that we are prepared to go to the limit of $3 million for all constituencies so affected.

Mr. Baker: They are already up to $3 million.

TRANSPORT

AUTOMOBILE EMISSIONS—REQUEST FOR REDUCTION TO UNITED STATES LEVEL

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. He is well aware of the serious situation facing this continent regarding acid rain. Have he and his officials been contemplating any legislation which would reduce automobile emissions in Canada to a level in line with those in effect in the United States at the present time?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no, we are not contemplating legislation at the present time. However, we are organizing public hearings to be held here in Ottawa on the third, fourth, and fifth of December, to study the relationship between motor vehicle exhaust emissions and their impact on acid rain. Following those public hearings we hope to ascertain information as to whether or not appropriate changes should be made to the Motor Vehicle Safety Act.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING POSSIBLE JOB LOSSES IN RESEARCH AND IN CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

With reference to the answers, or should I say non-answers, he gave my hon. friend from Laval-des-Rapides to a very specific question, namely, how many jobs would be lost in the ridings of Trois-Rivières and Lotbinière, as a result of certain projects not materializing or being abandoned, jobs that may be lost not only at the research level but also in construction, could the Minister inform the House why he did not give the answer if he has the figures? Second, were the members for Trois-Rivières and Lotbinière consulted on the matter and finally, did they agree with the decision?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I may inform my hon. friend that the Members in question were consulted.

As far as the lost jobs are concerned, I think that through redeployment of the funds that were earmarked for the region concerned, many more permanent jobs will be created than was the case when such funds were spent in the past.

INQUIRY ABOUT POSSIBLE JOB LOSSES IN VICTORIAVILLE AND TROIS-RIVIÈRES, P.Q.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, what I am asking the President of the Treasury Board is quite simple. He has been president of a bank—I am asking him to keep his figures simple. Could he inform the House whether any calculations were made with respect to the two projects that were supposed to create jobs in Victoriaville and Trois-Rivières. How many jobs have now been lost in construction? How many jobs will not be created? The answer should not be too difficult.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, since the funds are going to be re-directed to the Laprade Fund, it is not a matter of funds or jobs being lost. On the contrary, additional jobs will be created.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—PROPOSED DRAFT PEACE TREATY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my congratulations to you on your elevation to key responsibility in the House.

My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In September the Contadora nations, led by Mexico and Columbia, proposed a draft treaty aimed at bringing peace to Central America, including an end to the U.S. backed invasion of Nicaragua. In view of Nicaragua's offer to sign the treaty, the offer of France and other nations to sign the protocol of support, and the U.S. State Department's boast that they have blocked the Contadora treaty, will the Minister now publicly indicate that Canada will also sign the protocol of support to the Contadora treaty, and urge the United States to do the same?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we continue to have some very serious reservations about the effectiveness of the verification procedures in the Contadora agreement as it now stands. We hope that that can be improved. We support wholeheartedly the Contadora process. On the 26th of this month I am meeting with the ambassadors of the Contadora countries here in Ottawa. I understand that the ambassador for Nicaragua has announced today at a press conference that he is seeking a meeting with officials of my Government. We will be delighted to meet with him. We very much want to have his assessment of the situation in Nicaragua. We will continue to exercise our influence in a way which will not only advance the Contadora process but give us a result which will help bring stability to that area.

VERIFICATION PROCESS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the news that the Minister will be meeting with these other Ministers on this urgent matter within a few days.

If the Minister has, as he says, reservations about the verification process in the Contadora treaty, will he be offering Canada's well known expertise in the matter of verification for the assistance of the Contadora Ministers in working out a treaty that Canada will then sign?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that has been done before, but I will certainly renew the offer. If there is anything we can do to improve that agreement, Canada wants to do it.

AGRICULTURE

FLOOD DAMAGE COMPENSATION FOR FARMERS IN NORTHEASTERN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Last summer the Prime Minister announced that compensation would be given to farmers in five rural municipalities in northeastern Saskatchewan in the amount of $16 million, due to flood damage in 1983 and 1984. Many of the 1,700 farmers involved face terrible hardships due to crop loss this year. The Treasury Board approved this funding in August of this year. Can the Minister explain why these funds are being held up rather than being paid to these hard pressed producers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, I am not sure whether his information is complete and accurate. It is my understanding that indeed the $16 million was not approved by the Treasury Board. However, I have been in western Canada and have spoken with my provincial counterparts, as well as with my colleagues in Cabinet and many members of my caucus. We have completed the submission, and it is before the Treasury Board at the moment.

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE PAYMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it is my information that this funding was approved in August. The Premier of Saskatchewan is in Ottawa today. Why does the Minister not take the opportunity to make this payment immediately and announce it right now?

PORNOGRAPHY

REQUEST THAT CRIMINAL CODE BE AMENDED

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. The action of the Minister of National Revenue who stopped the entry into Canada of the December issue of Penthouse magazine, which expressly depicts bondage scenes of the most degrading and dangerous sort, an outrage to women, men, and, in this case, the Japanese culture, was only a very late reaction. These magazines should never have crossed the border.

Will the Minister reiterate before the House the electoral promise made by the Prime Minister to propose an amendment that would include gender in Section 287 of the Criminal Code on hate literature? Will he assure the women and men of Canada that the customs tariff and the provisions of the Canada Post Corporation Act concerning obscene, violent and degrading material will be enforced by his Government with all the rigour and vigilance required?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the administration of the customs tariff is in the hands of the Minister of National Revenue who is already attending to that particular feature of the Hon. Member's question.

With respect to the other question which the Hon. Member asked, the Prime Minister's commitment will certainly be carried out. Further, we hope that even more effective steps will be taken to improve provisions of the Code that relate to hate propaganda and pornography.

As the Hon. Member knows, there was a commission appointed by the last Government, under the chairmanship of Mr. Fraser, to study the subject of pornography and prostitution. That commission should be reporting in the next month or two. We do not want to move without having the benefit of that report first. You may be assured that after Christmas measures will be laid before the House.

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—IMPACT ON PROPOSED MANUFACTURING TECHNOLOGY INSTITUTE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, if I could have his attention. His Government promised jobs, consultation, and effective representation for the West in Cabinet, yet in the economic statement the Government cut out the Manufacturing Technology Institute, something which is going to have a negative impact on jobs in Manitoba. That was done without consultation, and the cabinet Ministers from the West were ineffective in stopping this savage blow at the Manitoba economy.

When the Minister goes to Winnipeg in a very short period of time, will he be willing to meet with a representative committee of Manitobans, representing government, labour, and business, in order to give a thorough review of this matter of the funding of the Manufacturing Technology Institute?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes I would, Mr. Speaker.

BACKGROUND DOCUMENTATION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the commitment from the Minister to meet with a representative group of—

Mr. Speaker: No, no. The Member asked a long question and got a short answer. Could we have a short supplementary question, please?

Mr. Keeper: Yes, a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In preparation for this meeting in Winnipeg, would the Minister share with Manitobans the documentation and background papers upon which the decision was made to cut out the Manufacturing Technology Institute in Manitoba?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, there were no analyses on which to predicate the spin-off that was alleged to arise from this Manufacturing Technology Centre. The real issue here is one of political philosophy. It is a question of whether our Liberal and Socialist friends across the way believe that we can continue to throw government dollars at the creation of jobs, or stimulate the private sector to do so. In the case of the Centre for Manufacturing Technology, that facility will be turned to the use of the economy of the Province of Manitoba and to the creation of thousands of new jobs in that province.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REQUEST THAT PEACE CAMP BE REMOVED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. The Peace Camp has been sitting on Parliament Hill for nearly two years. Is the Minister of Public Works going to remove the Peace Camp, or is he going to make rules and regulations to allow other people who may wish to protest to Parliament to set up permanent booths and camps and so on, on parliamentary facilities?

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have the impression that my colleague is asking me to do in a few weeks something which the previous Government failed to do in 18 months. Still, I might say that since temperatures are usually somewhat colder in winter time, I dare hope that we will not have to pass legislation on that issue, but that those people will look upon the coming winter months as an opportunity to find shelter in warmer surroundings and that there will be no need to urge them to leave Parliament grounds.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED CITATION OF REPORT BY MR. WILSON

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which relates directly to an exchange that took place between the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). You will recall that during the Question Period the Member for Oshawa requested the Minister of Finance to place on the record before the public of Canada and the House of Commons the information pertaining to the number of jobs that would be affected by the recently tabled economic statement of the Minister.

The Minister referred to two matters. In his reply he acknowledged the existence of a report which showed the number of jobs which would be affected by the Government's economic measures that were announced last Thursday. The second point I want to make is that the Minister, in acknowledging the existence of the report, made precise reference to the content of the report indicating the effect of the economic statement on the number of jobs gained or lost in Canada as analyzed by the Finance Ministry and reported to the Minister. The Minister used that particular citation in an effort to influence the debate which is presently taking place in the House of Commons and also to influence the public of Canada in believing that the reference to which he referred was of little consequence.

I am sure it is not necessary but I draw your attention to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, page 115. Under the heading "Documents Cited", Citation 327(1) reads:

> A Minister of the Crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a despatch or other state paper not before the House, unless he be prepared to lay it upon the Table.

It goes on at some length but that is the relevant sentence. Citation 327(4) reads as follows:

> Only the document cited need be tabled by a Minister. A complete file need not be tabled because one document in it has been cited.

Paragraph 5 is the relevant part:

> To be cited, a document must be quoted or specifically used to influence debate.

Last Thursday the Minister rose in the House of Commons and delivered a speech. That speech resulted in a response from both Opposition Parties and was the catalyst for the exchange which took place today. It was as a result of the speech of the Minister that questions were asked today. Therefore the questions today are very much a part of the ongoing debate in public terms over the relevance and import of the economic statement of the Minister of Finance.

We know that it has been the practice in the House of Commons for Ministers to be requested to table documents that they have used and cited as relevant and pertinent information for the purpose of influencing decisions or, for that matter, the views of Members of the House and the public. I can recall at least two occasions during the last Parliament when Ministers were asked to table letters which they had indicated were in existence and from which they had drawn certain paragraphs in order to shore up arguments they were attempting to make during the Question Period.

Therefore I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to review what the Minister has done and consider whether it is appropriate for him to use a document provided to him by Ministry officials, which speaks directly to a question being asked of him by Members of the Opposition, in such a way as to influence the debate, without tabling the appropriate document.

In my judgment and I believe that of many Members, I suggest it would be appropriate and correct that the Minister be required to place upon the table the reports that were given to him by the Ministry officials, such reports as were cited by him during his exchange with the Leader of the New Democratic Party, which would answer conclusively the question we have been asking during the last two to three days about the effect of the economic statement on the number of jobs that will be lost in Canada.

The Minister says that he has documents which show that the effect will be minimal, which are almost his exact terms. He said that those are documents provided to him by Ministry officials. He has refused to make those documents and that information available to Members of the House of Commons and therefore to the public of Canada. He is attempting to influence the public view of the appropriateness of the actions being put forward by the Government without being prepared to back it up statistically or with the evidence that is available to him. I simply ask that he be required to table the documents.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, during the course of Question Period the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did not simply refer to the existence of a document in general terms; he appeared to be citing from it and using words which would appear to any reasonable person to be drawn directly from the document in question. The Minister or the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) may argue that technically Question Period is not a debate in the House, but I submit that this Question Period took place in the middle of one of the most important debates that can take place in any parliamentary session. It is the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

In addition, I think you are entitled to take judicial notice that there is a debate in the country arising out of the statement given by the Minister of Finance last week. Therefore I submit that what the Minister of Finance did during this Question Period falls squarely within the ambit of the precedents in this regard, that he should be obliged by you to table the document which he cited so specifically before the House so the House of Commons and, more important, the people of Canada will know the truth about exactly how much damage will be done to them as a result of the measures announced in the statement given by the Minister of Finance last week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, may I say at the outset that this is the first procedural argument that has been brought forward by the Opposition. Let me say that I know all of their tricks. I spent much time in that position trying to bring up points of order which were not legitimate and I congratulate the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on his attempt, which is clearly defective in terms of being a point of order from a number of points of view.

First, the allegation was made that a specific despatch or state document was quoted from. Indeed, Your Honour will recall that in the course of the debates and indeed in Question Period there have been suggestions or allegations made by the Opposition that econometric models have been used. When the response of the Minister of Finance has been that any advice he received indicated that these models were in fact not germane or relevant to the debate, we now have the Opposition House Leaders coming forward to say that indeed there are documents which were quoted from and specifically cited by the Minister. That is the opposite to the truth.

The Minister, if you recall the debate, Mr. Speaker, responded to a question by the Leader of the New Democratic Party who brought forward not a state document or a despatch but an article from The Ottawa Citizen as some sort of authority for his question. The Minister said he did not accept the proposition put forward in the article. The point of order fails on all counts, Mr. Speaker.

I suggest that Beauchesne is quite specific. First, you have to have the Minister quoting or citing from a despatch or state paper. There has never been any reference by the Minister with respect to any document in a direct or quotable way. The Minister said that he had received advice and used political judgment on behalf of the Government with respect to the whole matter. His responses have been consistent. He said on the basis of advice received by him, as Minister, without quoting or citing in any respect, that any information he has received from any document with respect to projections concerning job gains or job losses has not been relevant to his decision.

Mr. Deans: He specifically mentioned 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He made reference to information he has received, advice that he has received, in a general way, but he has not quoted from these documents.

Mr. Deans: He referred specifically.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He has only made specific reference, Mr. Speaker, to the content of The Ottawa Citizen which was raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

I have one word in my final submission to you, Your Honour. In the case of precedents where there have been documents quoted from by way of letters or other state papers and there has been by way of agreement the tabling by Ministers of certain documents, that has occurred where specific quotations have been used in support of arguments made by Ministers.

Mr. Deans: That is what he did.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In this particular instance that was not the case, I suggest, Mr. Speaker. I think on the basis of the submission made, the Opposition is attempting only to get information which may or may not be in existence and which it is unable to obtain in other ways through the Question Period.

Mr. Deans: If I may, I have one final point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I raise only one final point. The Government House Leader was clearly not listening. The Minister made specific reference to a memorandum he had received from his Ministry officials. He went further and quoted what the memorandum contained by way of a projection for the years 1985 and 1986 specifically.

I would ask you, Sir, if you are in a position to render a judgment—and, of course, you ought to—and if it is to be based on the suggestion of the Hon. Government House Leader that somehow the Minister made no such reference, that you await receiving the record of Hansard to determine whether or not, at least on the basis of that part of the argument, there is any validity to the suggestion made by the House Leader for the Government that we do not have the basis for a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that I intend not to make a judgment today. I think it would be fair to the House that my first ruling should be reserved, even if I did know the answer.

I want to say to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain that I listened extremely carefully, as he would expect, to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) the moment the Minister of Finance began to refer to some conclusions, as I remember. However, I want to check the blues. I say this to the Hon. Member because there are two points here. Beauchesne is absolutely clear in Citation 327(4) that the document must be quoted. The consequential problem is that this House has always dealt separately with the use of documents and points of order relating to documents with regard to Question Period. It has always done that according to my reading of the Jerome precedents and before that. Before I could evaluate that, I would have to determine, I think, whether a document had been quoted or whether in fact, as I thought I heard—which is why I want to check the blues before I say anything finally—the Minister referred to the general conclusions of a document as opposed to specifically quoting a document.

If that is true, then I suggest a point of order on the second part of the concern does not follow because a document has not for the purposes of the House been specifically quoted.

Mr. Deans: It does not have to be.

Mr. Speaker: With respect to the Hon. Member and with respect to all our newness to this question, I intend to reserve on the matter and to check the blues. I shall be back to the House in this regard.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, could I ask you to consider one further aspect in reviewing the blues and also in reviewing the precedents. I note in looking at Citation 327 on pages 115 and 116 of Beauchesne that there seems to be a distinction made in the precedents between citing and quoting. I refer, for example, to paragraph 3 on page 116 of Citation 327 which reads:

> A public document referred to but not cited or quoted by a Minister need not be tabled.

I respectfully ask you to consider, Sir, whether the Minister of Finance might still be obliged to table the document even though technically he may not have quoted it, but instead if he in fact did something which falls within the ambit of the precedent; that is to say, if he in fact cited a document.

Mr. Speaker: I take the advice of the Hon. Member and I will consider all the arguments.

PETITIONS

PEACE AND SECURITY POLICIES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 71, I rise to bring to the attention of Parliament a petition signed by many of my constituents and, in total, by some 450,000 Canadians, calling for certain changes in current Canadian international peace and security policies, particularly concerning nuclear arms. I understand that representatives of the other Parties will be joining me in putting this petition to the House.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I joined with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and a representative of the New Democratic Party to receive petitions gathered by the Peace Petition Caravan from some 436,000 Canadians, the largest coalition of groups yet established under the disarmament issue. I am, therefore, pleased to present some of these petitions to this House for its consideration. The issues raised in them, connected as they are with the survival of human kind and this planet, are important to this House and to all of Canada. Pursuant to the Standing Order, I wish formally to present these petitions.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the same subject I should like to read the petition. To the Hon. House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth whereas the petitioners, all signatories of the Peace Petition Caravan campaign, refuse the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and reject research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapons, their delivery systems or components in Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Jewett: May I continue, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: No. I think the Hon. Member knows that she is putting me in some difficulty by attempting to read the petition into the record. I ask her please to follow the normal traditions and to give a summary so that we may deal with this matter, as I think we all want to deal with it today.

Ms. Jewett: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I consulted the petitions people and they informed me that it was quite in order to explain what the nature of the petition was.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I absolutely agree that it is in order to explain the nature of the petition. But the Hon. Member is verging on simply reading the petition into the record. Could I therefore ask the Member to summarize the petition, please?

Ms. Jewett: The petitioners also ask, Mr. Speaker, that Canada be declared a nuclear-weapons-free zone and that wasteful spending on the arms race be diverted to fund human needs as to ensure prosperity through peace. And as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

CPR LEVEL CROSSING IN OSHAWA, ONT.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition under the provisions permitting Members to bring to the House petitions signed by our constituents.

I have the honour to present a petition signed by over 6,000 citizens of Oshawa who are deeply concerned about the continuing hazard that results from a certain CPR level crossing in that community.

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: I understand there is an understanding with regard to the petitions of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). I think the record should show for those concerned that the House will wants to treat all the other matters, which I believe were sent to Journals, as deemed to have been filed with the Clerk at the Table. Is that understood?

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening session; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 38).

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking before the luncheon recess I quoted a prominent member of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. I should like to emphasize that it is not a coincidence that the Throne Speech and the economic statement have garnered positive reaction from the private sector. The new Government has been lauded for stopping the bleeding in Canada's economic circles. The private sector is encouraged by the same consultation and co-operation so outwardly despised by the Opposition. The Government has been widely criticized for not creating enough jobs.

As was made perfectly clear during the election campaign, we have no intention of using band-aid treatment for a problem which requires major surgery. It would be very simple to create thousands of new job openings on a part-time or jerry-builder basis. That is not and never was the intention of the Government. We will create long-term, meaningful employment through careful planning and assessment of Canadian markets. Providing widespread, sporadic, unskilled employment serves only to keep workers at jobs with which they are not too happy and which of course will not last too long. We want Canadians working again. At the same time we want them working at jobs of which they are proud. The Government wants to have Canadians contributing to the welfare of the state as well as to themselves. We want Canadians to take home some self-esteem along with their pay cheques.

Economic security cannot be achieved overnight. It is unreasonable to expect an immediately perfect future when we are stricken with such an imperfect history. The fiscal mess facing us now will be addressed with courage and tenacity by the Government in tandem with the people it represents.

We have been quoted in the past as saying that the cupboard is bare. If the present trend was allowed to continue, we would have to go out and sell the cupboard as well. Presently this is not the case and it will not be the case so long as the people of Canada have confidence in their Government's policies and initiatives. From the outset the Progresssive Conservative Party pledged to stop the bleeding. With this done we are preparing for the transfusion.

Indeed cuts have been made, but let us remember that cuts were required. Also let us remember that the cuts were made in fairness to all. Every proposal made by the Government in the Speech from the Throne and in the economic statement was submitted with the people of Canada at the forefront. We believe government must be made more understandable, more accessible and more sensitive to the people.

To illustrate this, the Government is reworking the taxation system to make it simpler and fairer. The rights of taxpayers, which have been thrown to the wind for many years, will now be protected. We will table legislation to ensure that no taxpayer will pay taxes in dispute prior to the conclusion of an impartial hearing. We will remove the taxation biases against small businesses to enable them to grow and prosper with less government interference.

We believe small business is the route to solving the unemployment problem in Canada. Small businesses should be allowed enough breathing room to become medium-sized businesses, thereby tapping into the ranks of the unemployed for workers. That snowball effect is yet another reason the United States has a lower rate of unemployment than our own.

Canadian women will be pleased in that no previous Throne Speech dealt so specifically with their concerns. The Government is fully cognizant of the need for economic equality for women. We intend to increase our own efforts toward hiring more women within the federal Government. We will also form a parliamentary task force to help the Government seek consensus on the future of child care in Canada.

Special attention will also be afforded to ensure that spousal allowances for widows and widowers are increased from the ages of 60 to 64, where they no longer qualify now. Also mentioned in the Throne Speech was more financial assistance to our war veterans. We certainly know they deserve this. Improvements on many social programs are planned for the future. I submit those proposals are the fruits of a government which genuinely cares about its people.

At the same time as the Government has its finger on the pulse at home, it is showing greater concern for international affairs. Canada is not an island geographically or economically. Over recent years international confidence in Canada has eroded. We seem to forget that trade with other countries is not a sideline but rather a necessity for economic well-being. The Government has already made new inroads with the Government of the United States and others, both in terms of good will and future trading prospects.

The vast similarities between Canada and the United States mean two things: first, we are in direct competition for various markets; and, second, there are untold possibilities for good co-operation between Canada and the United States. While this Government has no intention whatsoever of offering Canada as the fifty-first state in the union, we believe the effect of the U.S. economy on Canada should be realistically accommodated.

Frequent communication and harmony with the U.S. can help Canada through increased trade and commerce passing over the border. At the same time, we are determined to refurbish our internationalism in the world. Our main objectives are very clear: to defend freedom and preserve peace, to prevent nuclear confrontation, to improve trading relations, and to build a healthier world economy.

This Government intends to honour its commitment to NATO so we may earn the right to full consultation and participation in policies relating to that alliance. As has been the case in the past, we want to maintain our reputation as a global peacemaker by working toward the cessation of nuclear weapons development and use.

With regard to our own defence, we are convinced that the Canadian Armed Forces need a new definition of their role that is pertinent to present day conditions. The mandate of the Canadian Armed Forces has not been examined since the early 1970s. We all agree that we are now living in a different world with changed priorities and varied attitudes. When the mandate has been clearly defined and modernized, we intend to give our forces the resources they need to get the job done. That simple phrase lies behind the operating philosophy of this new Government. We are setting our sights on getting the job done.

Past governments have liberally dished out rhetorical pap to the people of Canada, but we understand the message of the people of Canada: they will have no more of it. Canadians want solid direction and commitment to effect change in their homeland. The runaway train needs dedicated brakemen to keep this country on track and out of the woods.

I believe the Speech from the Throne followed by the Government's economic statement has shown our intent to produce legislation with teeth. We are not bending to Opposition derision about consultation and co-operation to help form policy and decision. We are proud to invite the provinces, the private sector, labour and educators into the circle. The day of autonomous Government with little or no accountability is gone. Canada has a new team at the helm and there are many talented hands on the tiller. The public cry for action from Parliament has not, for the first time in many years, fallen on deaf ears.

I am sure my colleagues and a good many others will see that there is real and meaningful change. The new confidence is now in effect across the country and is in effect even in my own riding, a rural area. As I mentioned earlier, some of us are certainly going to be hurt by some of the cuts. In my own riding, there are not too many federal jobs available and there are not too many federal agencies. If I were to have my way, these cuts would be put in force and put in force strongly everywhere but in the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka. We are all going to be looking hard at our own ridings and, I suppose, telling the powers that be in the Government that particular positions and agencies are important to the riding.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, in the document tabled Thursday night by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), we saw that some $200 million will be cut from unemployment insurance payments. This will be done through a series of what are called intensified interviews with unemployment insurance recipients. This means that workers who are unemployed through no fault of their own will be hassled and will face even more technicalities, red tape and requirements. That will force them off unemployment insurance and on to welfare. We believe that this is only the beginning of the Government's actions.

The Hon. Member who spoke before lunch referred to and quoted with approval a statement to the effect that unemployment insurance creates unemployment. A great many people across Canada fear this attitude of the Conservative Government. Is it the view of the Hon. Member only or is it the view of the Tory Party that unemployment insurance causes unemployment?

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been paying attention, he would have realized that I was quoting the words of John Bulloch, the President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. There is no question about it. All of us know this after hearing the many people who come to our offices. The great majority of unemployment insurance claims are legitimate claims. However, there is a certain percentage of people who seem to continue to live on unemployment insurance. This is something the new Government will look into. It will see if it can do away with some of these unfavourable occurrences, which are probably leading to continued unemployment.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I was fully aware of the fact that the Hon. Member was quoting the words of John Bulloch. However, I pointed out that he appeared to be quoting those words with approval. I would like to know whether the Hon. Member approves of that statement or disapproves of it. Is it in fact his point of view that unemployment insurance causes or contributes to unemployment?

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I quoted those words because it seems to be the suggestion and feeling of a great many people who are in small and big business across the country—

Mr. Manly: What is your opinion?

Mr. Darling: Just a minute. As far as I am concerned, I live in a rural area in which there is seasonal unemployment and has been for years. A difficult time is coming up now and will continue through until next year. I am hoping that unemployment insurance will continue on. However, it is more important that unemployment insurance be tightened up.

It is much better to have meaningful jobs than to have band-aid jobs. In my own riding, I must admit that there have been jobs that have been created for 10 or 12 weeks simply to get the individual over the hump for unemployment insurance purposes for another year. It would be much more satisfactory if the economy could be turned around and jobs created that are not just band-aid jobs like cutting brush, and digging holes and filling them back in as has been done in the past. I am not saying that this has been done recently. However, these are the things that we are hoping to overcome.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Malépart: I have a question, Mr. Speaker.

I think my hon. friend knows perfectly well that the number one problem for Canadian is unemployment. They want action on job creation. On the other hand, the number one problem for heads of businesses and multinational corporations is the deficit. Could my hon. friend inform the House why his Government has listened only to the demands of the Conseil du patronat and similar bodies, namely to reduce the deficit and increase the unemployment rate?

• (1540)

[English]

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, we have stated definitely that the deficit is all-important. However, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government are not making jobs secondary to the deficit. Both jobs and the deficit will have to be looked at in a hard way. Certainly certain jobs are going to be phased out. As has already been stated, certain jobs in the Public Service will be done away with. Some 1,200 or more of those jobs are not in evidence yet but were to be filled later. The filling of those positions will not be acted upon. I am well aware that jobs are all-important, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and this Government have stated. We inherited the 1.4 million unemployed from the past Government. I am quite sure that this Government will have a better record a year from now. The latest statistics indicate that, for the month of September, unemployment has decreased.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, could my hon. friend opposite show me this mini-budget in the Throne Speech and tell me what kind of encouragement it contains for my constituents—I suppose the Hon. Member also has constituents who go to see him and who are looking for jobs—what kind of encouragement can I draw from this for my constituents and where can I say: Look, the Conservative Government has done something, here is a solution to your problem, you will have a permanent job? Where can I find that in this document?

[English]

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, as far as the document is concerned, the people of Canada have every confidence, and certainly gave this Government the mandate to turn around the economy, to turn away from having the Government helping out by creating jobs such as painting a church. Those were purely band-aid jobs with no permanency whatsoever. That is what I said in my speech and that is what the Prime Minister is going to do. The people of Canada seem to agree with that.

Yes, we are aware that there is serious unemployment and we are aware that it will continue. The figures are not very rosy. The projections indicate 10 per cent unemployment for the next four or five years. If we can get the economy going, businesses, both small and large, will start hiring. Businesses are delighted with the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Those statements created confidence. Businesses will start enlarging their premises. Businesses did not trust the previous Government. They would not spend a nickel because they did not know what the Government was going to do next. We are looking toward better times.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member, when he refers to band-aid jobs, whether he means jobs created for students during the summer through our Summer Canada Works Program for Students, and since the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) has cut Summer Canada Works for Students completely from his budget, will those students have a program so they will be able to work throughout the summer, as was done under the previous government?

[English]

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking of band-aid jobs, I certainly was not referring to the student program. Let us hope that the economy will be much better next summer so that a lot of those students can be hired by private entrepreneurs and businesses. When I was speaking about band-aid jobs I was thinking back to the jobs which were created by the winter work projects, where townships would submit an application to have their roads brushed. Those jobs would have been done anyway. Those were the jobs about which I was speaking, the jobs which do not lead to anything meaningful. I will give the present Government full marks for moving from the winter work projects to providing wages and assistance to private individuals and entrepreneurs to enlarge or improve their premises. The money went to wages and I agreed with that, it was a good idea. A great many Members on both sides of the House would say that some of those projects added nothing to the economy of the country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall now continue with debate, the period for questions and comments having expired. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon, as the environment critic for the New Democratic Party, to make a few comments about that whole area of concern. Many Members in the House will know that I was previously the health critic for my Party. I view my new responsibilities as environment critic as being in continuity with the work that I did over the last four and a half years as health critic. Perhaps the best way to illustrate this continuity would be to remind the House that when the Canada Health Act was in committee I moved an amendment to the preamble of the Act, which was accepted, and which acknowledged the amendment that improvements in the well-being of Canadians would not be forthcoming until the social, environmental and occupational causes of disease were addressed. Although nothing happened overnight, I hope that by adding that to the preamble of the Canada Health Act we achieved some kind of conceptual victory where, by virtue of that legislation and by virtue of many other things which are being said in that direction, we will come to realize, when talking about the well-being of Canadians, that we must take into account the environmental dimension of every problem.

I am also happy to be taking on this new area of concern because it is closer to the reasons for which I entered politics. I was among those in the late sixties and early seventies who began to think about the question of limits—limits to the kind of growth that was being experienced, and the environmental dimension of our problems. I can think of several books which were influential at that time, most of which continue to be good reading even though some of the statistics are out of date. One of those books was Limits to Growth, published by the Club of Rome. Other books which had quite an impact on me were the The Making of a Counter-Culture by Theodore Roszak, the Technological Society by Jacques Ellul, up to and including, more recently, the further works of Theodore Roszak, and the works of Hazel Henderson, Richard Barnet, Lester Brown, Barbara Ward, Barry Commoner, and the list goes on. My intention is not to give a bibliography but to attempt to situate myself intellectually and politically as it pertains to the question of the environment.

Finally, I would be amiss if I did not mention a document which was very instructive for me and which came out a short time before I decided to run for office. That document was the Berger report, the Mackenzie Valley pipeline report. I believe that that report is still one of the most fundamental documents in the politics of the environment, the concerns of native people and the economy. I believe that Justice Berger wove together a number of concerns in a way which has not been superseded. It is too bad that people do not more often refer to that document and that we do not more often see directions based on the kind of philosophy and insight which was so abundant in that particular report.

I see myself as belonging to that school of thought which views our social and economic problems as problems which run deeper than the kind of debate in which we generally engage in the House of Commons. I am referring to longstanding debates between the monetarists, the Keynesians, the neo-Conservatives, the neo-Liberals, the supply-siders, and the demand-siders, all these. It is not as clear to me as I would like, nor to many others, but nevertheless I believe there is some truth in saying that all of these arguments exist within a passing economic paradigm. All of these arguments fail to take into account, in my view, the whole environmental dimension of our economic problems. That is what I would like to spend some time on today.

When we talk about the environmental dimension of our economic problems, we are saying that the environment is not just a kind of middle-class, trendy concern that is a kind of aside to the more central economic debate. We are saying that if we want to be realistic we must come to terms with this dimension of our economic problems as well. That is where we enter the fray with the Government and with its particular economic world view. I have listened to a lot of speeches made by my Progressive Conservative colleagues in the last five and a half years and they seem to be saying that they want Canadians to be more realistic and to face up to tough economic questions. I believe that Canadians have responded to that conceptually, even if they may not like the concrete dimension of the proposals put forward by the Government. That is because Canadians have a sense that something is wrong out there, that there is something tough and real which they must face up to.

However, what I want to debate this afternoon is whether or not what is offered by the Government in its economic statement is in fact realistic and contains the realism at which we must finally arrive if we are going to have a truly human future. The intention is to find out who is the idealist here, Mr. Speaker. Is it the socialists who are often accused of idealism, or is it those who continue to believe that we can continue as we have.

The Conservatives would say that they do not believe we can go on as we have. That is why they believe they must take tough measures with respect to the deficit and get tough in the way indicated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). But I contend, Mr. Speaker, that this is still a form of the belief that we can go on as we have.

What the Tories are really saying is that we have been off on a sidetrack because of fiscal irresponsibility on the part of the Liberals, and that what we must have is some fiscal responsibility to get back to where we were before there was this aberration called "excessive Government spending", so we can have again the kind of economic growth we experienced after World War II. I am contending that in this we have not something new but, rather, an attempt to get back something which could not have continued in any case. The Tories want to breathe new life into an old economic paradigm.

The Government does not have, in my view, an adequate view of the crisis of profitability and productivity about which it spends so much time talking. The Tory hunch is that it all hinges on attitudinal change, that if the Minister of Finance sends out the right signals by indicating he is willing to cut the deficit, investor confidence will increase, the private sector will invest money in Canada, and jobs will be created. There is no concern, I might add, for what kind of jobs are created or whether investment is made in appropriately strategic areas. The government thinks that if it creates the right attitude, money will flow. I cannot prove this, Mr. Speaker, but I feel that the private sector will let its friends down, not because of any maliciousness on its part but because the problems run deeper than that. The answer is not simply to throw the door open to the private sector. The answer is not uncritical public sector spending, either. But I do not want to get into that argument. I am trying to transcend that argument.

The problem is international. The solution will also be international because, when it comes to environmental problems in particular, we will have to face up to them together. If one country tries to face up to the environmental dimensions of its economic problems alone, it will put itself in an uncompetitive position with respect to other countries. We will then hear arguments in the Canadian context, for example, of how we must stay competitive with other countries. Therefore, we must face up to this crisis of profitability and productivity in an international way so that countries are not played off against each other, or workers in one country played off against workers in another.

What is the crisis of productivity, Mr. Speaker? The crisis has to do with us having overestimated productivity for years. We have taken certain things for granted. We have taken for granted clean air, clean water, top soil; and the strong social and moral capital, which was bequeathed to us by 19th century piety, by the work ethics, and in North America by the pioneer experience. We have taken all these things for granted, Mr. Speaker, and they are slipping away from us, while we try to understand what is happening within the limits of an economic model which has no room for understanding these kinds of factors.

Over time, our economic system has destroyed what one might call these "free goods", goods which never had to be figured into the costs of production. We now know that mining is a lot more expensive than it seemed in the beginning when we start to take into account the cost of health care for occupational disease or the environmental costs of cleaning up acid rain. We now know that industrial technologies have been far more expensive than envisaged, after looking at the Love Canal and the quality of water in the Great Lakes. We now know that our farming methods have not been as productive as we believed they would be when we read the Senate report on soil erosion which just came out a couple of months ago. Our agricultural methods have tended toward a long-term decrease in productivity as opposed to an increase in productivity. We know that the whole dynamic of our economy, Mr. Speaker, tends to a disintegration of formerly valuable human relationships. I do not mean, Mr. Speaker, just spiritually or morally valuable but economically valuable economic relationships.

We are just beginning, Mr. Speaker, to comprehend the full social costs of our economic model. I am now talking about the social costs of the breakdown and increasing disappearance of the family farm, of the breakdown of the extended family and community and the breakdown of even the nuclear family. Even the nuclear family cannot survive the economic model of which we have been so fond. We have tried to meet the externalized social cost through the welfare state, but we have now another externalized cost coming due, and that is the environmental cost. This externalized environmental cost is working on us in two ways; for one thing, it is reducing productivity and profitability. We must go out a farther and farther into the forests for trees because we did not bother to replant when we first harvested that resource. We allowed the wasteful destruction of hundreds of thousands of acres to meet false needs. We allowed a system in which those needs were created through advertising. We are all guilty of this. It is not a question of pointing a finger. We are all guilty in our own individual way of being a part of this orgy of consumption, on which people will look back hundreds of years from now and ask: How could they have used up an accumulation of millions of years of resources in such a short time and without any regard for the future?

I am glad that the media is finally paying some attention to the forestry crisis. We have been raising it in this House ever since I got here, as I am sure people did before me. Hopefully it will catch on and some attention will be paid to the problem.

Another good example of how productivity is decreased through our own wastefulness is the incredible amount of hundreds of millions of dollars which has been spent in the last decade in places like the Beaufort Sea and other places where we have had to poke holes all across the Arctic looking for that last barrel of oil. Would it not have been wonderful if we had managed our non-renewable energy resources so well in the first place that we did not have to enter into that kind of risk-taking in the Arctic with respect to the well-being of native peoples and the very sensitive eco-system up there? Fishery is another example of how we are up against the limits of our economic model.

In any case, the problem is that this environmental limit reduces profitability. We have to go farther and farther and deeper and deeper. But if the companies involved are asked to clean up their act, then that reduces profitability. They say that that is too expensive and they may invest elsewhere. Or they may pass on the cost to the consumer in the form of higher prices, which will then either reduce demand or make them less competitive. So we see here that the concern about environment is not just a side issue; it is embedded right at the heart of all the economic questions we deal with in this House. I do not think we deal with those questions adequately enough because we do not take the environmental dimension into account often enough.

I talked earlier about the international dimension, Mr. Speaker. What we need to be working for at every opportunity is a new, just and sustainable international economic order. We need international co-operation rather than competition. That is why my heart breaks whenever I hear government rhetoric, whether it be that of the Liberals or of the present Government, to the effect that we are not going to try to build co-operation, that we are going to yield to the competitive spirit and say, by God, other countries may go under but Canada is going to make sure that it is near the top. Of course, we will not be as near the top as we would like because we will not be able to muster the international meanness and power that the United States will be able to muster, and they will make sure they are at the top.

I think the difference between us and the Government is that the Government sees the way toward economic renewal as being one of complying with the world view and the demands of the international investment community. The Government has said that pretty clearly and honestly, and I appreciate that because we can then have an honest debate. However, we think that is the wrong way to go. In the final analysis it will not work because it will not face up to pressing international questions of co-operation and development, and because at home it means neglecting the environmental dimension of our economic problems. Instead, we should be providing leadership where we have a political culture which, I hope, is able to stand up to the demands of the multinational corporations and others who would have us put aside these environmental questions in order to allow them to do what they want.

We know that environmental sensitivity is seen as a barrier to investment. What has the Government done in keeping with the world view I have attributed to it? It sent out the right signal. It cancelled the Environmental Secretariat. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) spoke about that today. The Government sent out the right signal to the investment community with respect to the environmental dimensions of our problem: Don't worry about us; we are willing to forgo that, if need be, in order to please you. The Government sent out the right signals when it cancelled the Toxicology Research Centre in Guelph. I cannot think of anything more pound foolish and penny wise, more short-sighted, than for the Canadian Government, at a time when we are sitting on an environmental time bomb, to be cancelling a project whereby Canada was finally to have some kind of independent capacity to test and to arrive at a scientific judgment in the area of toxicology. If I had to think of one thing as an example of the kind of shortsightedness we are getting from this Government, that would be it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask the Hon. Member to conclude his speech briefly, please.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I had a few other things I would like to say but perhaps I can just wind up my comments by saying this. What we have here on the part of the Government is an attempt to go back to an economic ethic previous to the welfare state when the real solution to the problems of the Liberal welfare state is not to go back but to go ahead and do some new economic thinking, take into account what is really going on in our fields, forests and oceans, and arrive at new economic solutions which take all this into account and give up the phoney bookkeeping which leaves the environmental dimension on the side.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, as always the speech by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) was excellent, but the point he was making toward the end of his speech is something I think well worth pursuing in light of the difficult negotiations between Canada and the U.S. regarding the Love Canal, the S-Dump, Hyde Park and others which are leaching particularly toxic chemicals, dioxins in particular, into the Great Lakes system. They are as well endangering the lives of millions of Canadians and Americans. I know one of the few requirements in Canada is to really get a handle on what is happening in the Great Lakes. We know about the Mirex contamination of eels that we previously exported to Germany. We know about the possibility of the movement of certain dioxins into the Toronto water supply and so on.

Can the Hon. Member outline in somewhat greater detail the difficulties from an environmental perspective where the Government takes away that kind of funding from the only institute in Canada which could really do that kind of thorough ongoing work? What will it ultimately mean, not only in terms of potential danger to Canadian public health, but also to the environment where these hazardous wastes will build up and become a far greater and more unmanageable problem down the road? Could he expand on that particular point?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) for his question. What we have by way of government action as a result of the cut-backs announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is, as I said, a very shortsighted strategy. The Minister for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) was on his feet today referring to the cut of the manufacturing and technology centre in Winnipeg. He said that he looked forward to the day when all this would somehow be taken up by the private sector. Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons why we wanted to have these kinds of publicly funded research institutes is that for so long we have been dependent on the private sector research activity in the United States, which has proven, time and time and time and time again, to be inadequate, false in many cases and all the time suspect, to the degree that private sector research is funded by the very people who would benefit from research and who declare their products to be safe and marketable.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot say enough about how much I regret this direction by the new Government toward private sector research. We have a strong tradition of Crown corporations and public service in this country. I do not see any reason why we could not have created, within the public sector, the capacity to do that kind of research. Presumably we could trust that research for two reasons. The first reason is that it would be done with the Canadian context in mind, and the second is that it would be done by people whose next paycheque was not dependent upon a grant from the very multinationals whose products were being tested.

Instead, from the Conservative Government we get a continuation, with all due respect to my Liberal colleagues, of a direction, which was already being established by the former Liberal Government, of wanting to have more of this done in the private sector and winding down the public end of that. It is a black day for the environment in Canada as a result of the cut-backs made by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have some comments with respect to the presentation just made. We heard a repetition of the old NDP ideas that Judge Berger's report on the Mackenzie Valley was the best thing since sliced bread, that we should not produce oil in the Arctic but rather leave it in the ground, and that development in the North should not take place.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member that this view was repudiated, not only in southern Canada at the time of the last election, but right across the north. The three northern ridings, Yukon, Western Arctic and Nunatsiaq, all returned PC Members to the House of Commons. People have had the opposite idea, namely, that we should develop the resources in that part of the country, that those areas should not be turned into some kind of reserve but should play their full role within Confederation, and that we should pay our way, so to speak. That can best be done by developing the resources there. That is my comment with respect to the worn out suggestions made by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a short reply. I would like to make it clear to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic that no one, not myself, not Members of the New Democratic Party, nor Judge Berger in his report, ever suggested that there ought to be no development in the North. In fact, a great deal of attention was devoted to the type of development which would be beneficial economically to the whole of Canada and also respectful of the traditional renewable resource economy of the North. I heard the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) speak on that very topic today in Question Period.

I am always surprised at the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). Coming from where he does, he gets up and pours abuse on the Berger report. It is very interesting that he would do that because he knows, if he knows anything at all, that this is one of the most widely read Canadian royal commissions. It is respected by many people in the North. For him to get up and call the Berger report some sort of old NDP idea is very curious rhetoric indeed. I am sure that many people in the North would want to apprise themselves of the kind of things that the Hon. Member for Western Arctic says when he gets up in the House of Commons. I wonder if he goes around the North dumping all over the Berger report. It would be interesting to know whether he does that.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy the comments of the Hon. Member for Birds Eye, is it, Birds Hill, or something to do with a bird. However, I cannot agree with him. I would like to go back in history a little to illustrate how wrong this idea of having government do everything is.

We would not have oil and gas from Alberta in Canada today if we had followed the recommendations of the old CCF which preceded the NDP. There were only two members of that Party left there, but they advocated using public money rather than allowing money to come into the country to develop our oil and gas. If we had not permitted American money to come in and develop our resources there, we would not have a heritage fund in Alberta today. Rather, we would be a few more billion dollars in debt. However, since we permitted money to come in to develop our resources, give jobs to our people and put taxes in our Government's coffers, we have an oil and gas industry today of which we can be proud.

The idea of allowing government to do everything just does not hold water. That is why we have a reduction of people in the Opposition. They wanted government to do everything. I say, let private enterprise do it. Give it a chance. Take the shackles off. Unbuckle its hands. The Liberals put handcuffs on free enterprise with the help of the NDP. As a result, we have 1.5 million unemployed and a debt of $190 billion. Let us unshackle free enterprise as we are trying to do. Then we will see things move. There will be jobs, resources and tax money. That is the kind of country we are building.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would remind the Hon. Member not to comment on the name of the riding of the Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill. Does the Hon. Member wish to answer the question?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I was first going to say, with all due respect to the people of the town of Birds Hill, Manitoba, that I wish Hon. Members opposite would desist from making fun of the name of my riding. I say this not for my own sake, because I can take any kind of abuse these people over here can throw at me. I have a sense of humour like everyone else, but I think there is a certain amount of decorum involved. I do not go around twisting the names of other people's ridings. The fact that the words "Birds Hill" lend themselves to this is unfortunate. I just wanted to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that intervention on behalf of the people of Birds Hill.

With your permission, I will now make a comment on what the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) had to say. The Hon. Member for Bow River is known for his enthusiastic defence of the free enterprise system. He is as good at turning up the volume as anyone here. However, I noticed that he did not answer my analysis of how the free enterprise system used up the forests and left us in the situation which everyone acknowledges we are now in. He did not answer the question of how the free enterprise system put the fishery in the state it is now in. We have not been under some kind of a socialist regime.

Mr. Taylor: Oh yes we have.

Mr. Blaikie: This is not an intellectually respectable claim. How can you answer this kind of garbage, Mr. Speaker? If that is the case, why did all of the five major banks in the country donate as much to the Liberal Party as they did to the Conservative Party? Was it because they thought the Liberals were socialists? Is that the same reason that the seven sisters oil companies donated money to the Liberals in the same way that they did to the Conservatives? Was it because they thought they were socialists? Really, Mr. Speaker, sometimes the claims that are made by Progressive Conservative backbenchers push the imagination and credibility. I only hope that the next five years in Government for them will have some kind of educational effect on them, then maybe we will not hear the same kind of intellectual garbage we get from them from time to time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question period on the last speech is now over.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I had no intention of making fun of the Hon. Member's riding. It is Birds Hill and I will remember that from now on.

Mr. Blaikie: Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Taylor: I wish I had time to answer the other questions he raised.

Mr. Blaikie: You can have all the time you like, but you won't have the talent.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Turner (Vancouver-Quadra) (p. 38).

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to congratulate you and the Hon. Mr. Bosly on your appointments. I also congratulate the mover and seconder of this debate as well as the preceding speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), on his re-election and his contribution to this debate.

● (1620)

Mr. Speaker, since this is my maiden speech in the House of Commons I would first like to thank the people of southwestern Saskatchewan for sending me to Ottawa to represent them. I will try to the best of my ability to justify the confidence that they have placed in me.

I am grateful to my colleagues in the House who have been quick and generous with their counsel and advice.

I pay tribute to my predecessors, Frank Hamilton and Jack McIntosh. It was Mr. McIntosh who first aroused my interest in the Party. I thank them for sharing their wisdom and experience with me.

The riding of Swift Current-Maple Creek is located in the southwestern corner of Saskatchewan, bordered on the south by the State of Montana, on the north by the South Saskatchewan River, on the west by the Province of Alberta, and running approximately 150 miles east into Saskatchewan to include such villages and towns as Ernfold, Hodgeville, Meyronne and McCord. The population in 1981 was some 53,000 people. The area comprises some 18,700 square miles from Leader in the northwest to Mankota in the southeast, from Consul in the southwest to Morse in the northeast.

Southwestern Saskatchewan is almost totally agricultural and comprises a vast farming and ranching area. It was pioneered largely in the early 1900s by hardy settlers from the northern United States, Ontario and Europe. They were men and women who carved out the oft-times inhospitable Palliser Triangle, a heritage for succeeding generations.

The main centre of population is the City of Swift Current, also known as "Speedy Creek". Some attribute this name to our winds because I am told that Swift Current has the second highest mean wind velocity in Canada. The remainder of the population is divided evenly between some 69 towns and villages, the largest of which are Maple Creek and Shaunavon, and the farm community.

While Swift Current owes its beginnings to the railway which arrived in the winter of 1882-83, it owes its continuing prosperity as a centre of supply to the surrounding farmers and ranchers. Agriculture is far and away the predominant economic force. Approximately 80 per cent of those in agriculture are grain farmers; 15 per cent are cattle ranchers and 5 per cent of the operations are mixed. The average farm investment is approximately $600,000.

The second main industry is the oil field servicing sector, maintaining fields lying to the west of Swift Current and running north and south of Gull Lake. The Dominion Agricultural Research Station in Swift Current is famous throughout the West for its research and development of varieties such as Leader Wheat, Wascana and Wakooma Durum and Rambler alfalfa.

The area is a hunter's paradise with literally thousands of hunters converging in the fall to hunt geese, chicken, pheasant, antelope and deer. Liberals are off-limits, having been declared an endangered species.

The riding contains a number of interesting sights such as the Great Sandhills, south of Sceptre the Prairie Wildlife Centre near Webb, the Grasslands National Park, which is an area east of Val Marie for which land is presently being assembled, the Frontier Days Rodeo in Swift Current, and Fort Walsh National Historic Park, which was home of the Royal Northwestern Mounted Police in the 1870s. Finally, there is Cypress Hills Provincial Park which rises out of the prairie south of Maple Creek to a pine covered bench land, which, at 4,560 feet, is the highest point in Saskatchewan. In fact, it is the highest point of land between the Rockies in Alberta and the Laurentians in Quebec. From this vantage point, I am pleased to note, there are no Liberals to be seen for 600 miles in either direction.

According to Statistics Canada, English is the mother tongue of 79 per cent of my constituents, German of 13 per cent and French of 3 per cent. Some 93 per cent of families are headed by two parents, and 78 per cent live in owner-occupied private homes. Swift Current-Maple Creek is a very stable and, if I may say, conservative area. The population turnover is quite low, and we have many three generation farmers and ranchers. The values are traditional. The people believe in God, home and the family. They are church-going people who love Canada.

They have been appalled for years by the state of affairs in this country. They despaired at the economic chaos and felt the disunity. They were saddened at the sight of region tearing at region and Canadian confronting Canadian. They felt sickened at government intervention in the market-place, oppressed at an unreasonable taxation system, and disappointed at the lack of regard for individual enterprise and initiative. They were astonished at incredible man-made disasters such as the national energy policy and the 1981 Budget. They welcome the new spirit of consultation and co-operation.

The spectre of capital gains tax hangs like a sword over the farm community. The farmer struggles for years to pay off his land, which is a non-depreciable asset but which is paid for out of after-tax dollars. The farmer's retirement is in his land. It is truly locked in the ground. Therefore, we have the sad plight of a man who works diligently for a lifetime, only to find that he cannot transfer title to his children for a reasonable sum without facing substantial income tax on the capital gain, which is nothing more than a tax on inflation.

The farm community is heartened to note that some interim relief is in sight. The first $120,000 of taxable capital gains can be rolled into a Registered Retirement Savings Plan, effective January 1, 1984. I say that it is interim relief because we hope that in due course the parliamentary committee will see fit to recommend the elimination of capital gains altogether on agricultural land dispositions. The farmer is first entitled to this special consideration for he is a price taker who is subject to the vagaries of the world market at one end and yet unable to control many of his cost inputs at the other.

In many ways the small businessman is in similar circumstances. His retirement is tied up in inventory or company shares. He also feels threatened by capital gains and by the unnecessary complexity of the tax system. Facing a deluge of forms, questionnaires and surveys, even the smallest business must have extra staff to keep up with the paper work.

Small business will welcome the initiatives in simplifying the tax system and particularly in eliminating the cumulative deduction account. It is my further hope that some means may soon be found to eliminate or at least soften the impact of capital gains on the small business sector.

Earlier this year Canadians watched with interest the work of the PC tax task force, and they applaud the new Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) for listening and acting. All Canadians will welcome the introduction of legislation ensuring that no taxpayer need pay taxes in dispute before his case has been finalized.

As a new Member of Parliament who, according to the media, is far removed from the Cabinet and the decision-making process, I am pleased to say that I have had easy personal access to the Ministers and their staff and that the serious problems of my constituency receive a fair hearing. For example, I cite the legitimate concerns of the producers in the Hallonquist and McMahon areas over the possible loss of the Shamrock rail line. It is the same line which was to form part of the basic rail network as a result of the CTC decision of 1980 and thus be guaranteed to the year 2000. These are the same producers who were assured by the previous Minister of Transport that the necessary Order in Council would be passed to enshrine the CTC decision.

I am delighted to report that the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) moved quickly and responsibly on the request for the adjournment of the CTC abandonment hearing to allow fair notice and time to prepare and, most important, time for the Minister to study fully the whole question of rail line abandonment and rehabilitation, with particular reference to finding the most cost efficient transportation alternative.

During the past number of years, western Canadian grain producers have managed to cope with the cost-price squeeze through high sales volumes. The drought and consequent short crop have resulted in a desperate situation for many farmers and ranchers who are faced with ever higher input costs such as fuel, chemical, fertilizer, feed and carrying charges.

I would like to list a number of responses already made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). First, there is the final payment of $123 million under the Western Grain Stabilization Plan, coupled with the important commitment to make pay-outs more flexible and time-responsive relative to the seasonal needs of the producer. It is the intention of the Government to attempt to initiate a substantial interim payment for 1984-85 in time to assist in the cost of spring seeding.

Second, in response to the drastic position of a significant percentage of the agricultural community, the Minister has imposed a freeze on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosure activity until January, 1985, pending a thorough review in an attempt to seek innovative ways to deal with the problem.

Third, there will be immediate capital gains relief, which will assist older farmers to retire in dignity and at the same time enable younger farmers to begin with less debt load.

Four, there will be improvements to farm rollover provisions, expanding the definition of child and enlarging the definition of land qualifying for the rollover, all of which will relieve substantial impediments to farm estate planning and intergenerational transfers.

• (1630)

Five, a number of agricultural taxation issues, including the question of part time, Section 31 of the Income Tax Act relating to farmers, the question of agri-bonds and the taxation of capital gains on farm land, will be referred to a parliamentary committee for expeditious study and report.

Six, there will be substantial fuel cost relief, as promised, in the form of a three-cent a litre sales tax rebate on farm fuels and an exemption from the 1.8 cent per litre increase in the petroleum compensation charge, giving a total benefit of almost 22 cents a gallon.

The foregoing are but some of the initiatives already put forward in the few short weeks of this Government. They represent a caring and practical response to some very real problems.

It is the hope of many of my constituents that an increase will be made in the domestic wheat price. At present, the return to the bread wheat producer is the equivalent of something less than two slices out of a standard loaf of bread. A 50 per cent increase in the domestic wheat price would cost the Canadian consumer approximately 5 cents per loaf. Surely, Canadians would find this a small price to pay to assist in the survival of Canadian agriculture.

Many constituents in Swift-Current-Maple Creek remain most resentful of metric and the arbitrary and high-handed way it has been imposed. Metric measurement has caused considerable hardship, unnecessary expense and occasional catastrophe to the agricultural community, particularly in the application of chemicals and fertilizer. They welcome the undertaking to allow Imperial measurement on these containers.

The oil and gas sector in my constituency and Saskatchewan in general has, through sensible provincial royalty provisions, experienced a real boom. It is hoped that a similar common sense federal approach will foster unprecedented oil and gas development. We applaud the recent natural gas export licence amendments enabling Canadian companies to export gas to the United States, thus benefiting the industry, producing provinces and Canada as a whole. This will earn more export revenue, which will in turn strengthen our dollar and lessen pressure on interest rates.

The problem of unemployment, particularly among the young, is grave. This is the bitter fruit of years of economic stagnation and of government mismanagement. It will not be easily overcome. A string of massive deficits and consequent high interest rates, coupled with retrograde policies which discourage risk taking, have caused unprecedented economic malaise. Short-term solutions will not work. We need a fundamental change of direction in this country, a change which is well documented in the Throne Speech and the economic statement, change which through consultation and consensus will restore fiscal responsibility, remove obstacles to growth and encourage new investment.

I will touch briefly on some of the pressing concerns of my constituents. Many of them have quite properly raised concerns over problems in the collection of child maintenance payments. I can think of no legitimate reason for a father to dodge payments for child support, thus throwing the burden on the rest of society. This problem of long standing is under examination and, in a new spirit of co-operation and dialogue with the provinces, I am optimistic that real progress will be made.

The people of Swift Current-Maple Creek express consternation over abuses in the parole system. Many also favour a return to capital punishment. I personally share these concerns and intend to work for both a thorough overhaul of the parole system and a return to the death penalty in situations of first degree murder.

I have received many queries regarding the situation in Ethiopia, and while Canada has already made a generous contribution, it is our intention, as expressed through the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), to mobilize a national campaign of relief. Information will be forthcoming from all Members of Parliament to groups in their constituencies as to how best assistance can be marshalled and funnelled into these grief-stricken areas.

Further, in the international arena, Mr. Speaker, peace must be our most cherished goal. No group, and certainly no political Party, has a monopoly on the desire for world peace and nuclear disarmament. We can collectively leave for our children no greater legacy than a world free of the nuclear threat. I congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs for their initiative in the appointment of Mr. Roche as the ambassador for disarmament.

At the same time, Canada, if it is to be taken seriously in the world, must act on its own as a sovereign nation and live up to its obligations. I am pleased to note that Canada will again fully participate in NATO, and thus earn its place at the table of responsible nations.

As the Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek riding, which shares 150 miles of border with the State of Montana, part of the longest undefended border in the world, I recognize the United States of America as our neighbour, our largest trading partner and our best friend. I have been ashamed of the attitude of the past Government toward the United States for we, Canadians and Americans, share the fruits of freedom. We must likewise share the responsibilities. My constituents and I congratulate the Prime Minister in his efforts to renew our bonds of friendship with the United States. We applaud this very sensible and historically desirable initiative.

The thrust of the Throne Speech is reassuring to Canadians. At a time when this nation is reeling under the weight of record unemployment and staggering debt, most people understand what has to be done. They understand we cannot long continue to mortgage tomorrow to pay for today. They know tough decisions have to be made. They know we cannot forever print money to throw at the symptoms of the disease. We must deal directly with the cause. We must recognize our excess. We must renew confidence in Canada. We must rebuild our reputation. The way will be long and arduous, but if we are to survive as a strong and free nation, we have absolutely no choice.

I ask Canadians to take heart because this Government, under the leadership of the Right Hon. Prime Minister, stands united, united in its determination to rebuild over the ashes of years of Liberal neglect, united in its determination to get this country moving again, and united in its determination to secure a fair shake for all Canadians.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be part of a Government that will breathe new life into this country, a Government that will listen to and work with the people, a Government that will seek a new spirit of co-operation and consensus for the Canada we love and cherish.

It has been an honour for me to participate in this Throne Speech debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? There being none, we will continue with debate. The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith).

[Translation]

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, before starting my comments on the Speech from the Throne, I wish to offer you my congratulations on your appointment as Deputy Speaker of the House and with you your colleague, the Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) on being chosen as the Speaker of the House of Commons. I also wish to put on the record that I feel very honoured to have been re-elected to serve the people of Sudbury during this Thirty-third Parliament.

[English]

Before beginning the actual text of my speech, I want to spend some time to thank the people of Sudbury for re-electing me in what I call the Tory onslaught across the country. I think my sentiments speak for any one of my 39 colleagues in the Liberal Party who, with me, survived the onslaught. We know it means even more that the people of our particular ridings place a lot of confidence in our abilities to represent their viewpoints here in Parliament. I just want to assure the people of Sudbury that the confidence they placed in me on September 4 will not be misplaced and I shall continue to serve them in the years ahead with the same degree of enthusiasm that I served them in the Thirty-second Parliament.

In addition, I would like to congratulate the various new Members of Parliament on all sides of the House. I suppose that in this case, with 211 Conservative Members of Parliament, there are a lot more new Conservative Members of Parliament than members of any other political Party. I wish them a four-year successful term. That is all I offer them in this particular instance! I want them to know that I still share the same degree of enthusiasm today that I did four years ago when I first came to Ottawa. Each day as I arrive on the Hill and look at the Peace Tower, I have the same sense of fulfilment of having been selected by my own constituents to serve their needs. That is a sentiment felt by all Members of Parliament regardless of their political stripe.

I want to mention briefly some of the premises which will be inherent in my discussion today. The more experienced Members of Parliament know that Throne Speeches can be made once or twice in the life of a Parliament and sometimes more. A Speech from the Throne can list a number of specific items which the government of the day wishes to accomplish during the life of a Parliament, or it can choose, on the other hand, to use a general theme which will give the people of the country a sense of the direction in which the Government wants the country to go. Evidently the Speech from the Throne which was given approximately a week ago adopted the second route in order to establish a theme which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wished to present to the people of Canada on behalf of his Government.

That theme has raised a degree of concern among members of the Opposition. As Mr. Speaker knows, my speech will be very brief; I have some 18 minutes remaining. My purpose is to establish that there are items other than the Speech from the Throne and an economic statement which are important to Parliament.

At the beginning of its mandate it is important to Parliament for the Government to outline in clear, concise terms the direction in which it wants the country to go. I would suggest that the Speech from the Throne was lacking in that direction. If anything, it outlined 10 particular task forces, if I am not mistaken, with which the Government wishes to study in ensuing months. It did not mention any commitments to the people living in Atlantic Canada. There was very little mention of fisheries or the direction the Government wanted to take with respect to agricultural development. Government Members campaigned this summer on a particular issue, mainly job creation. Most of us on this side of the House sadly recognize that there was very little mention in the Throne Speech about job creation. In fact, when I deal with the specifics of the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made some four days ago, if anything I will indicate that they have reneged on some of their promises in the election campaign of 1984 concerning job creation.

I should like to return to the first week of July, 1984 when the Government of the day, led by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), elected to call a summer election. In his statement at that time, he said that he did not wish to get into a bidding war with Canadians or particularly with candidates of the other political Parties, recognizing the size of the federal deficit. There are responsible people on all sides of the House who recognize that the size of the federal deficit should be and is of concern to the economic well-being of the country. However, having said that, the then Prime Minister outlined that if he were to do such a thing, one of three things could result. If he were elected, he would have to cut spending, renege on the promises which he made during the election campaign, or raise taxes. Yet, the Leader of the Conservative Party chose, despite the fact that he felt at that time that the size of the federal deficit—and this is a direct quote—was "$37 billion", to embark upon a summer campaign in which he promised a great deal to the Canadian public. That is the point I want to make. Throne Speeches and economic statements come and go. What is left is an impression by the government of the day on the people of Canada. The impression left in this case is one of broken promises by the Conservative Party, broken promises to the various constituencies in Canada. That legacy really disturbs me.

At times all of us, regardless of political stripe, worry about the degree of cynicism which exists in the minds of the Canadian public toward politicians. At times, I suppose, various government actions can point to various points made by government to justify its cynicism. It is a sad day when politicians decide that they can campaign and, regardless of their campaign promises, can renege on them within a short period of time after being elected.

I would like to refer to some 338 commitments of the Tory Government during the election campaign this summer. It campaigned on regional development to give DREE a specific legislative mandate to promote the least developed regions of Canada. Yet, in last week's economic statement, the Minister of Finance cut $200 million from available DREE grants. I do not recall the Conservative candidate who campaigned against me campaigning on the basis that there would be cuts in DREE. Earlier in the day I saw the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Gervais) in the House; he is not here now. I do not recall him campaigning in his constituency and telling the people of that riding that if they elected a Conservative Government there would be cuts in DREE grants.

Cuts in DREE grants mean losses of jobs largely in the hinterland areas in Atlantic Canada, in northern Ontario and in northern Quebec. Cuts in DREE do not affect people living in Toronto, Montreal or large urban centres. However, they affect the people living in the less privileged areas of the country.

I should like to refer to another one of their promises. In the area of senior citizens they campaigned on the basis of reinstating complete indexation of old age pensions to the actual cost of living as of January 1, 1985. Much has been said about a statement of the Prime Minister during the election campaign. He said that universality was a sacred trust not to be tampered with. Yet, within two weeks of the opening of Parliament, he is reneging on the basic commitment of universality as a sacred trust not to be tampered with. During his Friday news conference he questioned whether or not bank presidents earning between $500,000 and $600,000 per year deserved to collect universal benefits, be it family allowance or Old Age Security. He left the distinct impression that the terms of reference for the review of universality by the Conservative Government would be related only to about 50 bank presidents. Because we will be returning to this over a long period of time, I want to read into the record the terms of reference of the committee or the parliamentary task force which will review universality, so that Canadians, regardless of their income level, will at least begin to understand the new direction for Canada as outlined by the Conservative Government. My constituency in Sudbury and those everywhere in Canada should at least get in touch with their Members of Parliament to find out how the government of the day will consult with various constituencies to ensure that the interests of average Canadians are looked after. Questions are raised on page 72 of A New Direction for Canada. One such question is:

"Is it fair that families with an annual income in the $20,000 to $30,000 range have larger benefits than families with income below $10,000?"

That is not a bank president earning $500,000 or $600,000 per year. That is the average International Nickel Company worker or the average worker in Sault Ste. Marie who will be affected if the direction of the Conservative Government affects their universal family allowance benefits.

Referring to the second question, I remember a Liberal colleague of mine who raised this issue and quickly had to forget it. She raised the issue as the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt at the time. That question is also raised in A New Direction for Canada and reads:

Should the child tax exemption be retained, since it is of no assistance to low-income families?

If they are to question that, it does not affect the bank president and his wife. It affects the average worker earning between $20,000 and $30,000. If they leave the impression that universality will be questioned by Members of the House in terms of people in upper income levels, I want to read into the record some of the questions which will be asked, because the questions in this paper determine the terms of reference for this Conservative mandate. One question reads:

For example, one possibility would be to reduce the amount of Old Age Security available to high-income pensioners, by making benefits taxable at higher than normal rates or subject to some other tax recovery scheme.

That one affects upper income families. However, it goes on to say:

Another possibility could be to increase the progressive nature of the system by phasing out the two tax deductions over several years.

● (1650)

So that the people of Sudbury and others across the country who are watching today understand, they are here speaking of the special aid exemption and the exemption whereby the first $1,000 of pension income are tax deductible. That refers to everyone with an income of from $15,000 a year up. That is part of the terms of reference of this new Conservative mandate in the country.

Another alternative involved reducing or eliminating the indexation of Old Age Security while compensating pensioners in need. I do not know how that fits in. How can Tory Members campaign with the promise that they will re-introduce full indexation, a reference to the cut that occurred when our Government brought in the six and five program? At that time, the howls of outrage on this side of the House were incredible. Government Members campaigned on the promise of re-introducing what was lost in the six and five program, yet A New Direction for Canada questions whether or not they should be eliminating the indexation of OAS.

I think there should be a word of caution spoken to the people of Canada. They had better listen carefully to what the Government says because, quite frankly, I have the impression that one cannot trust this Government. The sacred trust that the Prime Minister said he would not tamper with has already been tampered with within two weeks of Parliament's resumption. The Prime Minister this summer, after having made many campaign promises, was suddenly confronted by a bare cupboard. If the cupboard was bare when the Opposition felt we had a $37 billion deficit, why is it even more bare when the deficit is only $34 billion?

I am not suggesting that the only role of Opposition is to be critical. There are some good things contained within the economic statement. However, I am making the point that there is an obligation on the Government of the day to come clean with the Canadian public and not imply that everything will be done above board. There is a hidden agenda. The Leader of the Official Opposition was correct when he suggested that the Tories do have a hidden agenda. That hidden agenda is outlined in that book called "A New Direction for Canada". I suggest that Conservative Members of Parliament read that book. They should explain to their constituents just exactly what the terms of reference will be, not only for the committee that will study the universality of benefits but for the committee that will study the cuts in the unemployment insurance program and the committee that will study the pension reform. I am simply suggesting that Hon. Members should be honest with their constituents and should not leave the impression that these cuts will only affect Canadians in the upper income levels.

I mentioned previously that I do agree that there are a number of other areas in which some much needed reform has been brought to the system. That is why I suggested at the beginning that I would have to define certain things. When a Government is given a mandate of 211 seats, it is incumbent upon the opposition to come to grips with the definition of that mandate. In other words, if government action lies outside the mandate that the Opposition feels the Canadian public has given to the Government, then we have an obligation to oppose it. On the other hand, if the Government determines certain legislative actions and if we as an Opposition feel that the mandate given by the Canadian public is commensurate with the legislation that is being brought forward, then I think our only obligation is to enhance or better that legislation but not to impede it. In other words, it is our obligation to allow it swift passage.

As an example of this, I welcomed the proposals contained within the Speech from the Throne and the economic statement indicating that the spousal allowance will be extended to people who are between the ages of 60 and 64. I do not think one member of the Liberal Party would oppose the inclusion and expansion of that particular social program. If anything, I might perhaps put the case to the Government that it should not only go to widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 but that single persons between the ages of 60 and 64 who are in that same economic position as well as divorced Canadians who are in that same boat should be eligible for it. If the Government of the day were to bring that piece of legislation forward on the legislative calendar, it could expect quick passage.

In addition to speaking of some of the much needed reforms to the pension system, I wanted to welcome some of the references to pension reform in the Speech from the Throne. The committee that studied that report last year had the concurrence of its three Conservative Members of Parliament and the other three Liberal Members of Parliament. There was only one dissenting opinion on that report, and it was an opinion of a member of the New Democratic Party. However, we all agreed that the need for reform was great.

My disappointment in the reference to pension reform in the Speech from the Throne is that the Government has chosen to study it and to have further consultations with the provinces. I would suggest that there is already enough agreement in this House on the need for pension reform. Rather than enter into some lengthy negotiations with the provinces, the Government should table legislation which would show the federal Government leading by example on pension reform. I believe that there is agreement on our side of the House that if the Government were to table legislation that would alter the federal benefits standards Act covering all employees of Crown corporations, the federal civil service and employees of the banking institutions and transportation companies that operate interprovincially, then the Government could expect swift passage of it. If the Government would introduce that legislation, it would be a catalyst that would speed up pension reform under provincial jurisdictions. I would hope that the Government would take my advice and introduce this legislation, rather than relying on its consultative process with the provinces concerned.

Finally, I would like to touch upon another promise made during the election campaign. This is a promise to which the Opposition will return time and time again. That comment will not go away and will not cease to reflect upon the Conservative Party and its Leader. The Prime Minister campaigned by saying that once he was elected, Canadians would see tens upon tens of thousands of jobs created just as quickly as a new Government could be sworn in. That was the commitment that was made to the Canadian public.

We find in the economic statement that, rather than having job creation as a priority of this Government, there is a warning that unemployment benefits may be cut back just when they are needed the most. Notice is given that the Summer Canada Works Program for students will be eliminated. Spending cut-backs are to be made in the name of deficit reduction. I do not remember Hon. Members campaigning on the promise of reducing the deficit. However, all this will result in a net loss of 45,000 jobs a year. That is 150,000 jobs over three years. That is not job creation, Mr. Speaker. That is cuts in employment.

I would like to suggest that members of the Conservative Government and the Prime Minister should remind themselves that the trust given to them by the Canadian public on September 4 involved the belief that the Conservative Government would live up to its campaign promises of the summer of 1984 rather than embark on a hidden Tory agenda that will destroy the social fabric of our country.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I was a little surprised to hear the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) speak of broken promises. I really wondered how he had the gall to do it. Does he recall that in 1979, the Liberal Party campaigned on the promise that it would not charge taxes on gas of more than 18 cents a gallon? After the Liberal Party got into power, it increased those taxes several times that amount. Is that the kind of promise to which the Hon. Member is referring? If so, his Party is expert at that.

Second, the Hon. Member indicated that we had not mentioned some items. Did Liberal Members mention to the people of Canada that the Government would change the Constitution? Did they tell the people of Canada they would not put property rights in the Constitution? Did they tell the people of Canada they would bring in the National Energy Program, a program that would practically destroy the industry of western Canada? No, they did not tell the Canadian people about any of these things. Perhaps the Hon. Member should take a look inward before he starts to tell us how to do things.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I referred very early on in my speech to the degree of cynicism felt and the contempt in which a great many politicians are held by the Canadian public today. I said that I think that a great deal of that cynicism is generated by the fact that governments get elected on a given set of promises and then do not deliver those promises to the Canadian people. That is where the cynicism is generated. I will not deal with the specifics of the questions of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), but I will say that in some cases he is quite correct. Promises were made in the 1979-80 election which were not kept by the Liberal Party. As a word of warning, I would tell the Hon. Member that we paid the price in 1984 for failing to keep those promises, and I am therefore suggesting that he should keep his side honest, because I will remind him of the 338 promises that that Government has made. As I have outlined in my speech this afternoon, if the Government breaks its promises, I wish it the same election results in 1988 as we received this year.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith). He mentioned hidden agendas, lack of trust and cynicism. I am somewhat perplexed by his comments inasmuch as the Progressive Conservative Party has been saying, not only during the past election campaign, but for many, many years, that the rising national debt is of the utmost importance and must be solved. The Conservative Party has said that in order to get the economy back on the rails, the problem must be addressed. I have said it in my riding, the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Pietz) echoed that, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was in our areas several times to tell the people that it would be the first priority of a Conservative government. I am very pleased that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Right Hon. Prime Minister have chosen to keep the promises that they made, and the promises that we as private Members made, to make this number one on the agenda.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct that comment. As a Party, the Government made a promise to the electorate this past summer. Following the leaders' debate, I took part in a discussion on The Journal. On that program I represented the Liberal Party. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) represented the NDP and the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) represented the Conservative Party. During that discussion, the Conservatives promised that universality was a sacred trust not to be tampered with. Canadians were promised that additional dollars would be put into the medicare system and that the concept of universality would not be tampered with. That was the trust that was given to the Government on September 4. When an agenda for action was introduced, with the parameters which I have outlined in my speech, that will affect Canadians down to the level of those families whose income is $20,000 a year, I suggest that the Government did not have that mandate given to it on September 4. That will be where we will draw our line as an Opposition—the definition of the mandate. There are 211 Conservative Members of Parliament. They were given a mandate to do certain things. I will remind them every time they break and tamper with the trust which was given to them on September 4. We in the Liberal Party will be questioning them, because they will be destroying the trust which should be inherent between the Government and its people.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I followed with considerable interest the speech of the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith). I felt that the initial part of the speech was very balanced, and I too have that same sense when walking to Parliament Hill early in the morning.

The Hon. Member then got into the difficult terrain of trying to reconcile campaign statements with subsequent action or a change of course. Two Members of this House have already brought home to the Member the record of his own Party, such as the questions of double-tracking in the West, 18 cents a gallon, wrestling inflation to the ground and price and wage controls. The list is long, and I do not have to remind Members of this House that his Party, as he has acknowledged, said one thing in the course of an election campaign and found fit, for whatever reasons, to do something quite different at a later time. In fact, I surmise that it may have been his own experience, in having tried to reconcile the different course that his Government took when in office from what it said during the course of the campaign, that has made him sensitive to the particular challenge which the present Government faces.

The fact remains that the Government has made a strong commitment, which was reiterated in the Throne Speech, to social justice, as reflected through social programs which have been built up over a number of years. We also recognize the need to ask certain questions about those programs through the parliamentary committee, and the Hon. Member has read into the record of the House a number of the questions which that committee will be addressing.

I would ask the Hon. Member how questions that are contained in a public document can constitute a hidden agenda. Moreover, I would ask the Hon. Member whether he believes that his questions should not be asked at this time by a parliamentary committee in order to come to an understanding effectively and thoroughly of whether the House is fulfilling its duty to the Canadian people in providing effective social programs. If he does not feel that this is the time to ask those questions, I would ask him when they should be asked.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I raised those questions to put them on the record because they are legitimate questions. They were raised on the middle of the summer election campaign. The Liberal Party chose to say it was not going to try to outbid the other Party and bring in social programs which would cost more dollars and increase the size of the deficit. The Conservative Party chose to campaign on that basis. It campaigned on the basis that it acknowledged that the deficit was $37 billion, yet it still chose to make promises and commitments to the Canadian public. All I am suggesting is that that is very dishonest. We all know that there are 200 weeks before the next federal election, Throne Speeches will happen once or twice in this Parliament, and there will probably be five or six budgets, but I wanted to ensure that the initial stage was set by reading into the record the promises that were made by the Conservative Government. I can only hope that those promises are carried through.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I am rising because the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), has appointed himself as aide-mémoire to the Government. However, I would say that he should not be too forgetful of his own Party's record. I will not repeat what some of my colleagues have said, but I would not want him to forget some promises which his Party made when they were campaigning—sometimes successfully—such as reducing the deficit. The only things which he found favour with in the Speech from the Throne and the economic statement were those which would add to spending. Spending seems to be in favour on that side, not cutting the deficit, although that was one of the Liberal Party's promises in 1980.

I would like to draw to his attention a promise which was made by the former Liberal Prime Minister and his Party to the people of metropolitan Toronto. They promised a heavily-subsidized program of urban transport, but not a dollar was ever received. That is only one of a long list of broken promises.

In the program which the Government has announced thus far, there have been certain positive aids to cut unemployment and to increase job opportunities in this country. It must be emphasized that we have no future economically and no future for a social justice program unless we cut the deficit and stimulate the economy. That is the objective of the economic statement.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) that, with respect to unemployment, in Question Period today the Minister of Finance has agreed and knows that the econometric model that he used in the mini-budget shows that the unemployment rate will be marginally higher two years hence than it is today. I know that the Hon. Member comes from an urban riding, but I come from a riding in northern Ontario which has experienced the highest level of unemployment, statistically, for the last three years. As a Member from that area, I would suggest that all those make-work projects and Section 38 were instrumental in keeping my community afloat. I hope that private Members on the Government side who are experiencing high levels of unemployment in their areas will keep their Government honest by pushing for those programs for which the NDP and the Liberal Party have fought for decades.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): As questions and answers have now been terminated, I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards).

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I consider it propitious that the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) is occupying the chair at this moment. I congratulate him as the senior member of the Edmonton caucus on his nomination. I congratulate as well the Hon. Mr. Speaker and the Hon. Mr. Deputy Speaker.

I am mindful, Mr. Speaker, of the great privilege, wrung from history and paid for by the sacrifices of our ancestors, which permits me to rise today to reflect the views of Edmonton South to this great and free House. In doing so I acknowledge those who were instrumental in bringing me here; the 34,000 voters from Edmonton South who cast ballots in my favour; those thousands and more who gave up their time, their treasure and their shoe leather in supporting me in the campaign; my wonderful family who grew beyond their own expectations in the long and enervating battle for nomination and election; and, finally, the magnificent national team effort of my Party, spurred on and encouraged by the team of two. No one worked harder than our Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and that gracious lady who captivated all of us. It was my pleasant duty in the month of July to introduce Mrs. Mulroney table-by-table to a gathering of some 3,000 people from Edmonton and its surrounding area. That, in its way, was a whole lot more fun than even being elected two months later.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to some of the issues addressed by Her Excellency the Governor General in the Speech from the Throne. I would like to examine how those issues are viewed by the people of Edmonton South. Before doing so, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Ms. Jacques) for the high tone they have set for this debate.

Edmonton South was at its physical best during the long hot summer of 1984. More than half of its residents owned their own single-family dwellings, and the flower gardens and immaculate lawns reflected the pride of property which is an indispensable Alberta characteristic. Here and there, though, there was the intrusion of a sour note, such as where a house had been abandoned because of inability to meet the payments, and where four able sons of one family, each with his own trade, could not find work, and this happened for the first time in five generations of this family in this country. Entrepreneurs, successful over the past two decades, have one foot into the United States, looking for opportunity.

Edmonton South is not a large riding. It is a totally urban riding of 67 square kilometers. The estimated population of 109,000 people is a microcosm of urban western Canada. Almost half of the population are between the ages of 18 and 44 years. Fully 36 per cent of those employed work as professionals or semi-professionals. In Edmonton South lives much of Edmonton's academic, political, financial, cultural, and business leadership. Also in Edmonton South live pensioners, war veterans and our share of the unemployed and the systemic poor.

The major distinguishing characteristic of the riding of Edmonton South is the presence of Canada's second largest university, the University of Alberta, with an undergraduate enrollment of over 24,000 this year. The University of Alberta, with 19 faculties and close to 90 departments, is internationally known for its education faculty which is the largest in Canada. Other academic strengths include engineering, agriculture and computer sciences. Distinguished graduates include three members of the current Cabinet and two of our provincial Premiers. Founded in 1908 and dedicated to the pursuit of "whatsoever things are true", the University of Alberta has left its mark in Edmonton and in the Province of Alberta. Nowhere in the West, perhaps nowhere in a city of its size in Canada, do the arts flourish more surely than in Edmonton.

On September 4, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada called for a new will to succeed, a fresh start for this nation. In so doing, they imposed upon all of us in this House a formidable burden of expectation. During the next six months the way will be shown toward the rebuilding of our lives and the recovery of our sense of national mission.

During the recent electoral campaign, I was saddened and shocked by the number of well educated, well-meaning citizens who had lost faith with the political process. This has been partly in reaction to a generation of misrule and partly as a result of a genuine aversion to how the system was going. They said, "It does not matter if I vote, you are all the same", or "You may be a good man now, but you will be corrupted, co-opted or commanded once you get there". What should the response be, Mr. Speaker? We have been given part of the answer: a parliamentary task force in reform of this House. I applaud that decision and congratulate the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on his appointment to head that task force.

Speaking as a westerner, I hope that the second phase of the answer is not too far away; the beginning of the long and arduous process toward an elected, effective Senate, equal in representation province to province.

Her Excellency informed us that her Government has, as a key objective, to make government more understandable, more accessible and more sensitive. Partisan considerations aside, such a move can only be welcomed by all Hon. Members, if only because Ottawa has become the personification of the misunderstood, the inaccessible and the insensitive, even the alien and the threatening.

One legacy of the past with which we will have to contend on an urgent basis is the tendency toward policy making on the part of Crown agencies and quasi-judicial bodies. An example is in the field of radio and television broadcasting, an industry in which I have spent 29 years of my life. Here we have the spectacle of the very tribunal which licensed broadcasting stations to serve certain territories now proposing to admit to those territories many other stations—so-called super stations—by way of local cable systems. It is as if one had paid for a mining claim, scrabbled for years to make it pay and deliver some kind of a profit, and in the process deliver a much needed commodity, only to be told that that mining claim would have to be shared with Noranda, Denison and, perhaps, Inco. This move is in process of being made now by bureaucratic fist. It will change forever the nature of information delivery in this country.

We are informed, Mr. Speaker, that the Ministry will breathe a new spirit into federalism. I have had the benefit three times in the past week of participating in the process of federal-provincial consultation. I know that all provinces welcome this fresh and somewhat novel approach. I am sure that all Hon. Members have confidence in the outcome of today's First Ministers' meeting. Few of my constituents, Mr. Speaker, oppose the federal commitment to the quality of the two official languages. Many, though, resent the insensitivity of previous administrations in the pursuit of that goal.

[Translation]

Today, in the House, we have an abundance of talent from all parts of Canada. We are seeing a remarkable phenomenon which would have been inconceivable as recently as ten years ago: two Anglophones from Ontario speaking French in the House, and we have a number of new Francophone members who are taking advantage of this opportunity to learn English. If language is the key to culture and if culture is in the heart and the soul, let us open our hearts and souls and reason will follow.

[English]

The Speech from the Throne referred to the necessity for co-operation between the two levels of Government in fostering multiculturalism. Perhaps nowhere is multiculturalism better fostered as something far beyond song and dance than in Alberta where there is no majority. In Edmonton South the Edmonton Heritage Festival is held annually. It is held in a park named, appropriately, after our first mayor of Ukrainian descent, William Hawrelak. This year, over 400,000 people visited the 44 pavilions. A new ethnic group provided a pavilion for the first time, namely, the English.

The Hon. Horst Schmid, Alberta's Minister of International Trade and the godfather of multiculturalism in my province, said that the Albertan is a man whose father, descendant of French, Cree and Scottish fur traders, married an Italian Polish girl from Hamilton. Our Albertan and his German Mennonite wife leave his Jewish-owned wholesale business in their Korean-made car, drive past the mosque to see a play by an Irish author featuring English and black American actors. That is followed by Chinese sweet and sour spareribs at a Ukrainian restaurant where they are joined by their daughter who is majoring in Greek classics at university and her Uganda born East Indian engineer fiancé. Mr. Speaker, the mosaic is fast becoming an alloy in the kindly crucible of understanding.

● (1720)

The people of Edmonton South welcome the economic initiatives which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced on Thursday. For us, government does not, cannot, create real jobs. Government can create a climate in which business can plan, act, expand, and buy and sell. The first excruciating steps have been taken on the perilous path to growth and, dare we say it, solvency. It is right and reassuring that in undertaking this journey we commit ourselves to preserving social justice so that the costs of change do not fall on those least able to bear them. Even though we attain the Minister's goal of reducing the projected level of annual expenditures by 1990 to something like $10 billion or $15 billion below what they are today, we may still be stuck with a structural deficit. Therein lies the challenge for true change and reform, to provide incentive rather than penalty, and to tackle truly the fundamental reform of our tax system.

During the course of this past summer I encountered hundreds of mature men and women who had been laid off or forced into early retirement because of the recession, compounded by the disastrous effects of the National Energy Program. As well, there were hundreds of well educated young men and women looking for their first real job. Now, we all know that true job creation is going to come in the field of small business. Let us therefore encourage what I call a generational partnership wherein the senior experienced former business people join with the energetic, well trained young people, form a business with funding from conventional institutions, backed by federal government insurance or guarantees. In four or five years the senior partners could extract an equity share as a retirement nest egg earlier denied them, leaving the now seasoned junior partners to further expand and develop new employment.

Albertans, Mr. Speaker, were encouraged by the energy initiatives taken by the Minister of Finance last Thursday. Since 1980, western Canadians have been angered and frustrated by the unilaterally imposed oil and gas pricing schedules, by the new excise and income taxes on gas and oil, and by the centralizing aspects of the NEP such as the changing of the incentive system to target exploration on federally controlled lands. My constituents viewed those policies as a federal grab for revenue and power in an area of provincial jurisdiction. Second, investors had lost confidence in the oil and gas industry. The NEP's huge volume of complex regulations contributed to the uncertainty of the business community. Perhaps $17 billion of direct capital investment, which could have created 500,000 jobs, left the country. Third, the NEP caused a drop in exploration activity and development efforts. Following cancellation of the Cold Lake and Alsands projects, the private sector followed by withdrawing drilling rigs and exploration crews. Many companies announced cut-backs in exploration plans. The Economic Council of Canada maintains that the NEP exacerbated the heavy debt of many important oil companies, rendering new exploration activities even less likely.

The NEP crippled more than the West, Mr. Speaker. The Ontario Minister of Energy, Mr. Andrewes, says the NEP was almost as costly to Ontario as to the West. He says that from 1979 to 1983 the NEP cost Ontario 90,000 jobs and was responsible for price hikes amounting to 33 per cent of all inflation experienced by his province. Ontario's wholesale costs of crude oil and natural gas almost doubled from $4.7 billion in 1979 to $9 billion in 1983.

The announcements made by the Minister of Finance last Thursday are a big step forward. Market pricing for oil with safeguards to protect consumers from price surges, changes in the PGRT which will apply to integrated oil sands projects and which will double the threshold level of the small producers' credit, are major steps in the right direction. As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has said, a healthy, thriving energy industry creates permanent productive jobs. When the oil patch works, it means business for the supply and service companies, the restaurants, hotels and hardware stores. It means thriving communities and healthy family life.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we are to have a renewal of a healthy, responsible Canadian internationalism. All Canadians, especially we Albertans who have the closest family, business and cultural ties with the United States, welcome the hand, and not the single digit, across the border extended by our Prime Minister. Those who fled tyranny in Eastern and Central Europe salute the new commitment to our North Atlantic allies. I am pleased to report that I have had calls during the past day from constituents concerning hunger relief. In one instance, the Kiwanis Club of Edmonton is recommending to its board of directors an expenditure of $10,000 for Ethiopian and African relief. I had a call on Friday from a doctor at the Cross Cancer Institute in Edmonton, who himself comes from the Third World, who volunteered his six weeks' vacation time starting February 11 to go to Ethiopia at his own expense to be of assistance there. That is in the true spirit of Canadian internationalism.

Yet, overriding all these concerns, both economic and defence, is the ultimate sine qua non: the quest for peace. I am honoured to represent the riding adjacent to that of our distinguished Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and to represent the people who sent to Parliament for so many years Mr. Douglas Roche, our new ambassador for disarmament. They must have our support and that of all Canadians. No goal is more elusive, but its dedicated and unrelenting pursuit is demanded by posterity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments on the Hon. Member's maiden speech?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) on his first speech. I will leave it to you to rule; he is my mother's brother's wife's brother's son. I would like to congratulate him and welcome him to the House. I hope that my having revealed this unusual relationship will not keep him from becoming a frontbencher very quickly.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, if I could respond to that rather convoluted description, I think it is also fitting that there is something that makes political campaigns go, that is, financial support. I am very pleased, and I hope this is a harbinger for Canada's political future, that the common bond in this familial relationship is a long-time Liberal from Edmonton who contributed to the campaign of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and to my campaign as a Conservative.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned an increase of two cents per litre in the price of oil and an increase in the price of home heating oil. Perhaps he could inform the House how this will protect the consumer and how single-parent families, most of whom are headed by women, how the aged living below the poverty line and the thousands of workers earning the minimum wage and on modest incomes, depending on the provinces—and I think in yours the situation is pretty rough—how is a two-cent increase for the consumer going to help him?

• (1730)

[English]

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, there are going to be difficulties. However, I think it is fundamental that the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated in his remarks last Thursday night that the whole objective of the Government's policy is to protect the consumer from sudden fluctuations in cost. I can promise the Hon. Member that that will be taken into full consideration.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct two questions to the Hon. Member. He suggested that moving toward world prices in oil would help the workers in Ontario. I invite the Hon. Member to explain how an increase in oil prices, which will have to be absorbed by the manufacturers in every province, will mean an increase in their price of production and will make them less competitive with other sources, can lead to anything but lay-offs?

The Hon. Member gave the usual and very understandable position of the Conservative Party with regard to the role of the private sector in the free entreprise system and downgraded government intervention. He then proceeded to complain that the free entreprise system should not be permitted to operate in a free way when it comes to broadcasting. He is opposed to the super stations. He wants CRTC to stop them. If he believes in the free enterprise system, surely there is no reason why the super stations should not be permitted to move ahead.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having those two questions put to me by such a distinguished and senior Member of the House. I would like to respond to the first question with regard to the effect upon workers in Ontario of world price for oil. The world price for oil, Mr. Speaker, is part of the whole regime of energy policy which is designed to be a major engine for growth in the country. If in fact the NEP caused 90,000 jobs to be lost in the Province of Ontario, those are 90,000 Ontario workers who today would be employed.

In response to the question about free enterprise, my quarrel is not with the free enterprise system. My quarrel is with the fact that a bureaucratic quasi-judicial tribunal is ostensibly making governmental policy in the country. It is time that that policy was returned to the hands of the elected representives of the people.

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to participate in the Throne Speech debate of the Thirty-third Parliament of Canada. I would first like to congratulate Mr. Speaker Bosley on his appointment to the Chair, and you as well, Sir, on your appointment.

I would also like to congratulate my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James), who happens to be my neighbour, and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Jacques), for an excellent job in moving and seconding the Address to the Throne Speech.

Lambton-Middlesex has the dubious distinction of being the largest geographic riding in southern Ontario. It stretches from the edge of the City of Sarnia to the edge of the City of London and encompasses most of the counties of Lambton and Middlesex. It encompasses 6,500 square miles in total. As an added distinction, Lambton-Middlesex has three beautiful waterways which form the boundaries on three sides of the riding. Lake Huron is on one side, the St. Clair River is on the other, and the beautiful Thames on the third. This completes this unique aspect of our constituency.

As you may well have guessed from its geographic size, the agricultural industry dominates Lambton-Middlesex, and this industry is widely diversified. The Thedford Marsh located in the northwest corner of Lambton produces large volumes of vegetables such as potatoes, carrots, celery, beets, head lettuce and onions. Sweeping south from the Marsh is a large gravel ridge which supports orchards producing apples, cherries, peaches, pears and apricots as well as a multitude of tender fruits. On the opposite side of the riding there is another sandy gravel area running from the village of Mount Brydges to the village of Komoka which also produces tree fruits and tobacco.

Lambton-Middlesex is the largest soya bean producing area in the country, with corn running a close second. With the abundance of feed corn available, livestock is perhaps the most important aspect of our economy. The riding is home to a heavy concentration of beef feed lots and pork farms, with a significant number of dairy and poultry farms. Two of the larger turkey operations in the country are located in my riding, with Cuddy Farms, located in the Strathroy area, being the largest integrated operation in Canada and perhaps in North America.

This large and diverse agricultural sector is serviced by a multitude of small towns and villages which supply the infrastructure for the agricultural community. The town of Strathroy, with a population of 9,100, is the largest urban centre that I have in my riding.

As in most parts of southern Ontario, the native people were our first settlers. They were followed in the 1800s by a mixture of English, Irish and Scottish, who were followed by Slovaks in the 1930s, the Dutch in the 1950s and the Portuguese, who are the latest addition to the mosaic which makes up our riding.

In referring once again to the agricultural industry, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not point out what I perceive to be an impending crisis in that industry. On a personal note, I feel fortunate that I entered the agricultural field prior to the onset of the era of inflation and high interest rates. However, the young farmers of today are facing a financial crisis, and my concern is for them. I believe this crisis was caused by a variety of circumstances; mainly rapidly escalating production costs, falling commodity prices, and, most important of all, high interest rates. This, coupled with questionable financial advice from some government agencies and financial institutions, has placed agriculture in a position where this country stands to lose a whole generation of young farmers owing to bankruptcy.

I do not profess to have any simple answers to a very complex problem. However, we as Members should be extremely concerned about what has become not only a severe financial problem, but what could turn into a severe social problem.

At the meeting of Agriculture Ministers last week, this problem had high priority, and I urge Members to support this initiative with constructive input. I would also urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to seek input from the private sector as well as from individual Members so that we can attack the problem with all the expertise available.

I would now like to move to another significant part of the economy of the riding of Lambton-Middlesex. Because of our proximity to the cities of London and Sarnia, a growing part of the population lives in small towns, villages and built-up areas along the beautiful waterways and commute to work. In the area closer to London these people are composed of professionals and tradespeople who work in a wide variety of industries. However, on the other side of the riding, the commuters work almost exclusively in the chemical valley in the Sarnia area. It has been estimated that as many as 10,000 people in Lambton county derive their living, either directly or indirectly, from the health of the valley.

It is for this reason that I fully support the pleas of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton that we as the Government act quickly to remove the obstacles which now obstruct the petrochemical industry from becoming internationally competitive again.

● (1740)

I will not attempt to duplicate the description of the valley given by the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton except to say that those industries are now extending into the riding of Lambton-Middlesex. CIL has the most modern nitrogen fertilizer plant in North America and it is located in Sombra Township in the riding of Lambton-Middlesex.

The provisions of the National Energy Program have crippled this industry. The refusal of the previous Government to address these problems has caused an industry with a proven track record for creating jobs to come to a standstill. The recommendations of the task force that was set up by the former Government would be a sound business proposition for Canada. In all probability, that is the reason why it did not act on those recommendations. Hopefully, we will not be that shortsighted.

The shoreline of Lake Huron is blessed with large expanses of sandy beaches. This asset has created a tourist industry that is vital to the towns and villages in close proximity to this area.

Not only are there large areas of privately owned cottages, there are also public beaches and two of the finest provincial parks in Ontario. One of these parks, the Pinery Provincial Park, has enormous sand dunes gracing its shoreline which are unique to this area. Several excellent harbours attract large numbers of boaters to the area, including many Americans.

In addition to these excellent recreational facilities, the riding of Lambton-Middlesex has several significant historical attractions which attract a large number of visitors. Rock Glen, which is adjacent to the village of Arkona, has yielded a treasure of fossils. That municipality has moved to preserve this unique heritage with an excellent museum in that area containing thousands of items from the region.

Furthermore, the first oil discovery in North America was in Lambton County at the Village of Oil Springs. This oil bubbled to the surface and did not require any drilling. A museum on the site contains all the equipment that was used in those early days.

Just six miles away, adjacent to the Town of Petrolia, is the site of the first drilled oil wells in Canada. While their operation became uneconomical a good many years ago, recently the town restored the site to its original state. It is now producing again and is a unique tourist attraction.

These varied tourist attractions attract thousands of visitors to the riding of Lambton-Middlesex and are an important part of our economy.

I would be remiss if I did not make reference before closing, to the gas storage fields which lie beneath the fields in the Townships of Dawn and Moore. These are huge natural subterranean cavities into which natural gas from western Canada is pumped via pipeline in the summer months at a time when demand is low. These natural cavities hold billions of cubic feet of natural gas.

Not only does this allow the country to make more efficient use of our pipeline facilities, it supplies an important buffer if there are any major breakdowns in the cross-country pipeline system.

I was most pleased that I had the opportunity to return to my riding after the delivery of the Throne Speech and the financial statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It allowed me to get an impression of how ordinary Canadians viewed these two most important documents.

Let me say for the benefit of Hon. Members opposite that the people of Lambton-Middlesex could not be any further removed from Bay Street. However, their response to the direction in which the Government is going was one of wholehearted support. I would suggest that the members of the two Opposition Parties go out into the streets of their ridings to find out what the people are saying. I am sure they will be surprised to discover that the people are in full agreement with the Government program which is designed to stimulate economic growth and create permanent jobs in a framework of fiscal responsibility.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments on the Hon. Member's maiden speech?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question. When the Hon. Member is talking about the tax system, justice and social programs, instead of his Government starting discussions to try and modify what is referred to as the universality of pension plans and programs that affect Canadians on very low incomes, would it not have been preferable to review the indexing table for personal income tax? If I am not mistaken, the net result of this particular measure is to increase benefits to the rich and give less to the poor. Let me give an example I found in the documents tabled by your Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson): a single individual with an income of $7,500 gets only $54, while someone with an income of $100,000 saves $460. Do you not think that to reduce the deficit, your Government and your Minister of Finance should have tinkered with that program instead of with the universality of pensions and unemployment insurance?

[English]

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that I had raised the question that was posed by the Hon. Member opposite. However, since he has raised the question, I would be pleased to inform him that there are no easy answers. There will be hardships, and it has been the Government's position that everyone share in those hardships in a fair and equitable manner. I believe that, as a result of his financial statement, the Minister of Finance has done an excellent job in having the economy and various sectors of the country share those hardships.

If the Hon. Member had spent the weekend on the streets in his riding as I did in mine, he would have found that most people would agree with that assessment.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: I may point out to the Hon. Member that I go down the streets of my constituency on week days as well as on weekends, and that I am a good defender of my constituents' interests, since I was re-elected on my own merits.

Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that the measure I just mentioned is one his Government has introduced, a measure that provides very substantial assistance to the rich. This is not some time in the future, it is here and now. Just read the supplementary information. Instead of shouting, the Hon. Member who did so should stand up and defend his constituents. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the Hon. Member agrees with what the Minister of Finance has just done.

[English]

Mr. Fraleigh: Wholeheartedly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh) on his opening speech. During his speech he referred to the native people as the first inhabitants in his riding. Of course, that is true for all our ridings.

Has the Hon. Member had an opportunity to give particular thought to the problems and alternatives facing native people in Canada today? I am not aware of the situation in his riding and perhaps he could enlighten us about that in his response.

I believe it is generally recognized among those who have studied the situation that the present system is not working. It is not working for the Indian people of Canada and it is not working for the Canadian taxpayer.

In the last Parliament, there was a special committee of the House which studied the whole question. It brought forward the report on Indian self-government with some major recommendations, urging that Canada recognize First Nations governments and that we make the resources available to them to act as governments. In fact, the right to govern themselves has always existed. Has the Member had a chance to consider some of the needs of the Indian people in light of Indian self-government and would he be in favour of that proposal, willing to support it and work for it?

• (1750)

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I have four reservations in my riding and I am quite conversant with native problems. I happen to have served here for a short time during 1979-1980 and I served on the Standing Committee for Indian Affairs and Northern Development in order to make myself more conversant with those problems. I happen to support wholeheartedly the initiative of more self-government for the native people when they are ready. I think a great number of native people themselves will admit that there are large sectors of the native population which are not at this point in our history ready to assume full self-government.

I come from an area where the native people are more advanced than in many other areas. We have reasonably high employment on our reservations compared to that in other parts of the country. These people are good citizens. My understanding of the problem nation-wide is that there are a great many areas in Canada where the band councils and the people who are governing reservations are not by their own admission ready to take over full self-government.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his answer. But I think the crux of his answer was the question of readiness on the part of Indian people to govern themselves. The testimony we as a committee heard time and time again was that the native people have never given up the right to govern themselves. The presence of a colonial type of administration in the Department of Indian Affairs has impeded the right and ability of the Indian people to govern themselves. What they want is for us to get off their backs so that they can do that.

Does the Hon. Member not believe that the best people to decide when they are ready to govern would be the Indian people themselves? They are the ones who can best determine their fitness for self-government.

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I thought that I had addressed the question. I said that the areas in my region were ready. By the native peoples' own admission there are a great many areas where they themselves do not feel they have the infrastructure and the knowledge to take on full self-government. I could not agree with you more that the present system is not working. It has never worked. We have tried a multitude of band-aid solutions. None of them have worked. I do not profess to have the answers. This is a major problem. I would suggest to you, Sir, that for us, as a government, simply to walk away from the native people and say, "There you go. You look after yourselves. Govern yourselves and do all the things that we have been doing for you," would create chaos in the native community.

Mr. Nystrom: I have a question and a short comment, Mr. Speaker. First, I want to welcome the Hon. Member back to the House. He said he was here between 1979 and 1980. He mentioned that we should be out there on the streets listening to what people are saying so that we understand. I think I know what people are saying. I think they want a lot of changes. They listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who made a lot of promises and who made a lot of commitments. Their expectations are very high.

I was here in 1968 when another Prime Minister also caught the imagination of the Canadian people. He made a lot of changes. He made a lot of commitments. He promised participatory democracy and he promised a new vision of a new society. It will be very dangerous if this Prime Minister follows the lead of the former one and does not fulfil those expectations.

We have now heard a Speech from the Throne and we have had an economic statement. A lot of commitments were made. I am not sure whether the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was right when he said there were 330-odd promises. There might be that many but I am not sure. A lot of commitments that were made have not been delivered in the Speech from the Throne, nor have they been delivered in the economic statement. Why has this not happened? Is this not a dangerous thing in terms of people getting very cynical about the process? I will give you one example, Mr. Speaker, and then I will sit down. In my own province, commitments were made to fund farmers in northeast Saskatchewan, to freeze freight rates and to improve farm stabilization programs. All kinds of other commitments were made to farmers. So far there has been no delivery except for a study on the capital gains tax. I find that kind of thing very dangerous. I would like to know what the Hon. Member's feelings are.

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I could not disagree more that the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will follow the example set by the previous one. There is nothing more sure than that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraleigh: As to the expectations of the people, I would have to agree with the Hon. Member. They are great. We happen to have been in power for two months and I, Sir, do not know what the Hon. Member expects in that short period of time. We made some promises, a fair number of them.

Ms. Jewett: A couple of hundred.

Mr. Fraleigh: They were all made on the assumption that they would be done in a good financial framework—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I am afraid the ten-minute period allotted for questions and comments has expired.

The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, in view of the hour, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: The House has no problem calling it six o'clock, I presume?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member could start her remarks. There are still three minutes remaining.

Mr. Speaker: I think I understand the dilemma of the Government House Leader and I think I understand the dilemma of the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam. (Ms. Jewett). Perhaps the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh) would like to finish his comments by unanimous consent. Does that solve the problem?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh) for one or two more minutes.

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to my remarks and to point out that when we as a Party and our leader made some commitments to the people of Canada, they were done on the basis that they would be done within a good, sound fiscal framework. That is what we intend to do. The people of Canada do not expect us in two months to turn the economy around. I want to assure Hon. Members of that.

Some Members of the New Democratic Party say they were on the street this weekend. From what I heard on the streets in my riding I find what they said hard to believe. I did not have one negative response or negative remark about the economic statement of the Minister of Finance. That is the truth. I spent a fair amount of time this past weekend in my riding. If people to whom I was talking did not offer comments to me, I would ask them questions.

My riding is made up of small businessmen and farmers. They are hurting as much as anyone else in this country. They realize that everybody is going to have to bite the bullet. It is something that Hon. Members in the Opposition have not yet realized. To renew prosperity in this country we must have economic growth.

Ms. Jewett: Like in B.C.

Mr. Fraleigh: To get economic growth, we have to restore investor confidence. The only way we can restore economic confidence is to run the government in a business-like manner.

Ms. Jewett: Like B.C.

Mr. Fraleigh: I am getting a fair number of comments, and if I have done my duty—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has done his duty.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—GLACE BAY COAL PROJECT. (B) PLIGHT OF OLDER MINERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on November 8, I posed a question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) concerning coal development in the constituency I represent in this Parliament. I specifically asked the Minister for certain undertakings, but unfortunately he was not either prepared or willing to give me an undertaking in that regard. For the benefit of the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary, I should like to give a brief chronology of events.

As the House may or may not know, a fire destroyed Number 26 colliery in Glace Bay, taking the life of one individual and placing 1,200 workers on the unemployment roll. Subsequent to that my government announced coal developments in excess of $300 million. In that announcement on May 25, 1984, specific comments were directed toward a new validation report for the new Number 26 colliery.

Since that time United Mine Workers of America placed a proposal before the Cape Breton Development Corporation. That proposal is known as the 1B colliery. They are seeking large sums of money from the Government of Canada to open the 1B colliery. I asked the Minister responsible if he could provide some details, because shortly before the provincial election the regional minister, the member from Central Nova, announced that there would be some moneys toward the 1B colliery. We heard from the Minister in this House that it would be 100 jobs for 10 weeks. That is not sufficient. In fact, it was alleged in the news media that it would be 200 permanent jobs. Now we find out after my questioning in the House that it will be 100 jobs for 10 weeks. The details of the press release did not indicate in any way how much the Government of Canada was prepared to allot to the 1B colliery. It did not make any mention of the number of jobs or the duration of those jobs.

I say this to the Parliamentary Secretary so that he will understand that economic conditions in that part of Canada are pretty devastating. It has one of the highest rates of unemployment in the country. Now that the main industry in that community has been put on the back burner, with 1,200 men unemployed, the situation is a very serious one. I wish to remind the House that they do not want 10-week jobs; they want permanent ones. I believe there is a responsibility on the part of the Government to provide the necessary moneys.

In putting my questions and concerns to the Parliamentary Secretary, I wish to remind him that there is a strategy for coal development at the Cape Breton Development Corporation. If the 1B colliery as submitted by the United Mine Workers of America is not a feasible operation, meaning that it is not safe to proceed with that colliery, they ought to proceed with the new Number 26 colliery. Studies are already in place, consultants have been retained, and that information is readily available. A new Number 26 colliery would not come into place for two, three or perhaps four years.

What about the interim? As I have said in the House, interim measures ought to be put in place forthwith. They ought to have a pre-retirement plan for miners who are 55 years of age or over. It should be something similar to that contained in the Labour Adjustment Program. I remind the Parliamentary Secretary that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) compaigned in August, he said that the coal and steel industries in Cape Breton were the soul of Cape Breton. He also said that a Tory Government, under his jurisdiction, would see the two industries through thick and through thin.

● (1805)

The situation is crucial, Mr. Speaker. We need a firm commitment for new coal developments in the Town of Glace Bay. We need interim measures and long-lasting measures as well. We need a pre-retirement plan for the coal miners. In addition to the pre-retirement plan, the Government of Canada, in co-operation with the Government of Nova Scotia, ought to conclude a subsidiary agreement for all of Cape Breton in order to put those miners and other unemployed individuals to work. Many programs dealing with infrastructure like water and sewer could be tackled as an interim measure.

I suggest very strongly that the Government of Canada must provide the leadership. It cannot sweep this one under the carpet. It has jurisdiction and responsibility for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It must provide the money and it must provide it forthwith.

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, with your leave, I would like to take this opportunity, that of my first reply as Parliamentary Secretary, to congratulate you on your appointment and also to thank the Right Hon. Prime Minister for allowing me to accede to this position. I also wish to give all Members of this House the assurance that I shall answer their questions to the best of my ability.

The questions asked by the Hon. Member actually go far beyond the issue raised by the fire in the mine in Cape Breton.

[English]

On April 5, 1984, Number 26 colliery was lost by fire. The fire came from within the mine and one man, Mr. Ronald MacDonald, lost his life. We are all well aware of that. The colliery employed 1,200 employees and was the principal industry within the Town of Glace Bay. It was a sad day for all concerned; for the employees, the town and the corporation. The community's loss and the loss to the employees is so obvious it need not be stated. However, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the corporation has lost as well. It lost its major source of metallurgical coal and millions of dollars worth of machinery, equipment and tools. This loss is in the neighbourhood of $25 million.

I would also like to remind the Hon. Member that the effects of the fire have not gone unnoticed. The corporation made available $150,000 to clean up the roadway leading to the top of Number 7 deep. Number 7 deep leads down to 1B colliery which was closed by the predecessor company on June 30, 1955. Our Government has made available $1.7 million for the sealing of Number 26 colliery and the arching of the same roadway so as to permit safe passage. The closing of Number 26 colliery at the same time is also a required safety measure.

Subject to the physical constraints of the area, it is intended that at least 140 employees will be recalled for a 10-week period to arch the roadway. In the interim, the feasibility study on the reopening of 1B colliery is under active consideration. The decision to reopen 1B must take into consideration not only the current circumstances in Glace Bay but, as well, the market for such coal, the cost of mining, the capital cost of reopening the mine and the return on the capital invested. There is no doubt that this study requires time. However, it is the intention of the acting president to inform the Minister of the results of the study sometime within the next month. The latest news is that, as of today, 130 persons have been recalled to work on the roadways leading to 1B colliery.

NATIONAL REVENUE—DISCONTINUANCE OF ADVANCE TAX RULINGS IN CASE OF LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS. (B) EFFECT ON ALGOMA STEEL

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question of November 9 was addressed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I asked him why the Government was discontinuing the practice of advance rulings by the Department of National Revenue with respect to the tax implications of joint ventures and limited partnerships. The decision taken by the Department of National Revenue was holding up a very important project in my riding. In any event, it seems to me that this whole procedure of not providing advanced rulings for limited partnerships and tax implications of that mechanism is bad. Surely the Government should be providing certainty for the private sector. It should be providing a stable position for investment, as well as certainty and confidence to the private sector. The decision to stop giving these advance rulings is simply adding to the uncertainty of the private sector in making new joint ventures.

I am especially concerned in this case because it involves Algoma Steel. In Sault Ste. Marie there are about 20,000 constituents, within the city itself, and another 10,000 or 12,000 constituents in the surrounding area who depend on this industry as the main economic activity. Two and a half years ago Algoma Steel discontinued the construction of a $300 million tube mill to make a new seamless tube which would be saleable in Canada, the United States and other countries. This tube is now available only from Japan and a few other countries.

During the course of the summer months Algoma Steel decided that it would proceed, using a tax credit transfer, or a capital cost allowance transfer, as a limited partnership with some other company. Representations were made to the Department of Finance and a meeting was held in September at which a proposal was given to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) by the company. Two weeks later the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) said that they would not give advance rulings. Of course, when that happened, the whole opportunity to proceed with the completion of the tube mill was totally thrown into limbo, as were other projects across the country.

In his reply, the Minister of Finance said that they were reviewing the situation. If and when a decision is made, or whether any decision will ever be made, really puts the completion of this massive plant into jeopardy. We must look at it in terms of the 3,000 or 4,000 people who have been laid off by the company. Unemployment lists are up from 5,000 some three years ago to 11,000 at the present time. The giving of an advance ruling on a limited partnership could ensure the completion of the Algoma Steel Company's tube mill. It would create 250 to 300 jobs in the construction phase and as many as 700 jobs in the actual operation of the tube mill—not just in the tube mill, but in producing the additional steel by the company.

I would urge the Minister, the Government and the Parliamentary Secretary to stop this procrastination and to make a decision which will allow this important economic development project to go ahead at Algoma Steel.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to congratulate you on your appointment.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to rise in the House today to clarify several points that were raised by the Hon. Member of the Opposition in his questions addressed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last Friday.

In the first place, it is absolutely necessary to correct the very serious and very inaccurate statements made by the Hon. Member that this Government has discontinued the practice of advanced tax rulings. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Government continues to support fully this essential component of our tax system. We feel that providing advanced tax rulings is essential—in order to obtain further clarification and thus help Parliament in adopting certain tax provisions for individuals who wish to obtain such an opinion before taking measures that might prove to be costly.

• (1815)

[English]

Issuing advance rulings in the specific case of limited partnerships and joint ventures, however, has been curtailed for good reason. Both the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) viewed the impact of recent decisions as a severe test of Parliament's original intent in approving the flow-through provisions of the tax. Some were also found to test the limits of the federal treasury's ability to finance all eligible applicants.

In no longer issuing advance rulings in the case of limited partnerships, and joint venture in the circumstances outlined in the speech of the Minister of Finance on October 24, 1984, the Government has safeguarded the principle that its scarce financial resources be applied in the manner Parliament intended. Furthermore, there is a sincere and justified concern on the part of the Government that advance rulings be used to enhance real investment and not necessarily to purely tax-motivated transactions.

With reference to specific tax cases raised by the Hon. Member on Friday last, I am not permitted by the provisions of the Income Tax Act to disclose any details of a taxpayer's file.

For all of these reasons, the Hon. Member will surely support the Government's initiative in applying the policy as announced by the Minister of Finance on October 24, 1984. In addition, he may wish to take particular heed of the fact that a broad review of government economic programs is being undertaken.

Mr. Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.20 p.m. the House adjourned.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

TRAINING COURSES NECESSARY FOR IMMIGRANTS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, Canada is often referred to as a vast cultural mosaic. This is because as a group we have always recognized the invaluable contribution made by immigrants to our society. We have demonstrated this through measures aimed at protecting the cultural identity of the various ethnic communities that have contributed to the development of our country.

Canada does have a very good reputation for tolerance and willingness to accept differences. However, I believe there is much room for improvement. It is not enough to want to preserve the cultural and linguistic heritage of our immigrants. We must also promote their integration in our society, and that leaves much to be desired.

Recently, I read to my amazement in an article in the Vancouver Sun that a number of immigrants, originally from the state of Punjab in India, were unable or hardly able to speak English, after living in Vancouver for five years.

It is therefore imperative that language training in one or both official languages be made available to all classes of immigrants, because failure to do so will ghettoize them and turn them into second class citizens.

FINANCE

REMOVAL OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX ON FARMS ADVOCATED

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the matter of capital gains tax on farms. It has been said, quite rightfully, that the capital gains tax is a tax on the life savings of the farmer. Farmers entering retirement should be able to do so with the fruits of their labour intact. For the new or expanding farmer, the capital gains tax only further inflates the already high price of land.

The 300,000 farmers of Canada and their families contribute much to the life of our country. The economic spinoffs of farm capital gains tax removal would be many and obvious. I support the proposal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to study the capital gains tax. However, many farmers presently involved in land transactions are uncertain whether to proceed, and they are stalling their sales until the future of this tax is settled. I call on all Hon. Members of this House to consider the capital gains tax removal thoroughly and expeditiously, so that land will sell and farmers can again act with confidence.

TOURISM

IMPACT OF MEASURES ANNOUNCED IN ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the new Government is working in unison. On the one hand it has recognized the importance of tourism to Canada by establishing a Ministry of State for Tourism, but it now appears intent on killing it by the death of a thousand cuts. Last Thursday in its economic statement the Government announced a number of cuts in services which will affect this area. Federal programs in the area of wildlife, water, and environmental protection are being cut, and user fees for the services of Parks Canada, fishing permits, and tourist aviation, are being increased dramatically. Five wildlife centres are being eliminated, one of which received over 40,000 visitors this year.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) announced last Friday that tourism projects will no longer be eligible for funding under the Industrial and Regional Development Program. My fear is that the Government will be creating a lot of verbal hoop-la over tourism, encouraging Canadians to travel within Canada and visitors to come to Canada, yet will be reducing services, eliminating sites and, in the whole process, making destinations less enjoyable.

As New Democrats, we are asking the Government to start supporting the tourism and hotel industry with actions, not just words.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PENSION PLAN STUDY

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the current situation regarding CN pensions. As a result of continuous urging from this Party when in opposition, the previous Government finally appointed a one-member commission to study, investigate, and report on the Pension Act with respect to employees of CN. The study was very limited in scope and mandate and, for that reason, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) rightfully discontinued it.

Due to the status of this Act, and because of the great numbers of CN employees and pensioners who are affected by the current plan, I would respectfully urge the Minister of Transport to proceed as quickly as possible to set up a new study group with a broader mandate, in order to investigate the situation fully and to recommend appropriate changes.

CONFEDERATION

ABSENCE OF TERRITORIAL LEADERS FROM FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister met yesterday with the provincial Premiers to discuss the agenda for next year's economic conference. The leaders of the two territorial Governments were not invited to this important meeting, nor, to my knowledge, is it at all certain they will be invited to the summit early in 1985.

May I remind the House of statements made by the Government in the Speech from the Throne as follows: "The reality of Canada is one of distinct regional identities", and: "A national consensus is also needed to reduce the persistent isolation of Canada's regions". By not inviting the territorial leaders to the meeting yesterday, the Government has demonstrated that its concept of national purpose, co-operation, and consensus building, excludes the people of Canada's north. This cannot be the model for the future. This Government must match its actions with its rhetoric, and include all of the regions and all of the people of Canada in such significant discussions.

CALL FOR EFFECTIVE LAW

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, Canada does not have an effective law on abortion. It has a law which permits over 60,000 abortions to be performed each year in hospitals. In addition, it is estimated that there are enough illegal terminations of pregnancy to raise the total to 100,000 abortions a year.

In two provinces, Quebec and Ontario, it has been impossible to persuade a jury to arrive at a guilty verdict. We, therefore, do not have an effective law on abortion. It is imperative that Parliament and other authorities of the law address this intolerable situation. The Canadian people should not have to live and behave in doubt as to what the law requires. Parliament should not be indifferent to the law of the land being broken with impunity. Leadership is required to develop a national consensus that will support an effective law on abortion.

● (1410)

I am one who believes that human life begins in the womb before birth and should be protected by the law. I am also one who believes that the law can protect only when it has the support of the public. This is clearly a time for Canadians to address the issue of what protection we, as a people, are ready to give the unborn.

BANKS AND BANKING

PROFITABILITY OF CANADIAN CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in his economic statement of last week the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) told Canadians that they would have to work together in common cause, shoulder to shoulder, in order to build a more prosperous future. Everyone, we were told, would have to sacrifice and share the burden of restraint. Unfortunately the Minister's words had a hollow ring when we learned last week that some Canadians are sacrificing much more than others. IBCA Banking Analysis Ltd., an organization which studies and reports on the world's major banks, released figures which showed that, taken together, Canada's banks reaped the largest profits of banks in any country within the international banking community last year. Canada's six leading banks showed, on average, a real rate of return well above levels earned by United States, Japanese or British banks or, for that matter, any other national banking system.

When you consider, Mr. Speaker, that Canada now has the highest level of real interest rates of any western industrialized country, these figures come as no surprise. What is surprising, however, is the Government's inaction in the face of these real interest rate levels. Home owners, small business people, consumers, farmers, ranchers, fishermen, all suffer when interest rates are at their current historic levels.

It is time that Canada's banks were asked to share the burden of restraint like everyone else. On September 4 Canadians voted for change. They gave the Government a mandate to put the economy back on the rails. The first step must be a reduction in real interest rates to traditional levels. The Government has said we need lower interest rates, but so far it has done nothing to indicate that it is prepared to have a made-in-Canada interest rate policy. It is time that the Conservatives go beyond the rhetoric—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

SOCIAL SECURITY

NEED FOR MULTILINGUISTIC PENSION OFFICERS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, over the years Canada has negotiated a number of social security agreements with other countries. These agreements generally provide that a person who lived in a foreign country and also lived in Canada during his working life could claim social security benefits from both Canada and the foreign country, based on the number of years in each country.

Perhaps the most well known of these agreements is the one with Italy which has proven most beneficial to those Canadians of Italian origin. Many of those persons have lived in Canada for over 20 years. They are approaching retirement, and are today finding it difficult to get the necessary papers organized with respect to their Italian pension claims. To some extent the Government of Italy has been helpful in supplying assistance in Montreal, Toronto, and Hamilton, but that assistance is provided separate and apart from the pension office run by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

In my view the Government of Canada ought to employ, in its pension offices, people conversant with foreign tongues, who can explain the agreements to pension applicants and make sure applicants are able to obtain the full benefits they are entitled to under the agreements. I therefore call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to take action as soon as possible to staff offices in such manner so that Canadians can be assisted in filing the necessary papers—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NAMIBIA—SUPPORT FOR INDEPENDENCE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, it has been 13 years since the World Court decision declaring the continued presence of South Africa in Namibia to be illegal, and six years since the passage of Security Council Resolution 435 requesting the withdrawal of South Africa from Namibia. Despite these clear cut, straightforward decisions, the people of Namibia are still struggling for their independence, and South Africa is still thumbing its nose at world opinion and the vast majority of world nations. These delays are intolerable. They are caused principally by South Africa and the 1982 policy of President Reagan to support South Africa by linking the removal of South African troops from Namibia with the removal of Cuban troops from Angola, where there should be no linkage whatsoever.

• (1415)

I would urge our Government to do three things. First, support those Americans who are trying to change their Government's linkage policy. Two, support an economic boycott of South Africa. Three, insist on action by the U.N. contact group to implement Security Council Resolution 435.

Surely Namibia will one day be free, but Canadians can help to bring this about more quickly with a minimum of violence and suffering.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs failed completely to explain the contradictory positions of the Government relating to the starving nations in Africa. In his meeting with the Premiers yesterday, I wonder whether the Prime Minister had any better luck in explaining the contradictory positions relating to transfer payments to the provinces.

The Prime Minister was quoted as saying that "we have not envisaged any cut-backs", yet the Minister of Finance, in a meeting with reporters after his budget, said that such cut-backs were "on the table". Did the Prime Minister discuss these cut-backs affecting medicare, social security, and university and community college funding, with his counterparts at the provincial level? Are these cut-backs on the agenda for the next meeting of the Prime Minister with the Premiers on February 14? If not, is he setting up the provinces for a Valentine's Day massacre?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend seems to assume, as he has often said, that there are three responses to these kinds of matters. One is cutting social programs and reneging on your promises, and so on. There is a fourth response, which is economic growth that we plan to generate by our policies.

In direct response to my right hon. friend, the matter did not arise per se, although clearly if it is raised by the Premiers in Regina we will be happy to discuss it. The answer is that there will be no unilateral cut-backs such as the previous Government initiated. Anything which we care to discuss would be reviewable by all. It would not be introduced unilaterally. That was the intent of my answer.

CONTENT OF DISCUSSIONS WITH PREMIERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether, during the course of those discussions yesterday, the Premiers raised with the Prime Minister the cuts proposed by his colleague in the budget, affecting the various provinces. Did the Premiers raise that with him? Did he give them the type of forecast which we have been asking for in the House, namely, what that budget of the Minister of Finance would mean in terms of rising unemployment in each of the provinces represented by those Premiers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Premiers did allude to it. One of them used the exact same term as the hon. critic for the Treasury Board in the Opposition, when he said it was a courageous act by the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: There was a mood of realism at the conference which seems to permeate every corner of the country, with the possible exception of the caucus room of the Opposition. It was dealt with. Matters were raised and the agenda was set for what we hope will be a productive and co-operative initiative in Regina on February 14 and 15 next. There we will deal with the manners in which we can genuinely co-operate to bring about true economic growth and renewal in Canada.

[Translation]

REQUEST NEXT CONFERENCE BE PUBLIC AND OPEN TO PRESS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Prime Minister has every opportunity to come face to face with the new mood of realism as he crisscrosses Canada after the economic statement of his Minister of Finance. Considering that we were unable to assess directly the results of the discussions the Prime Minister had yesterday with his provincial colleagues, would he assure the House that the next meeting scheduled for February 14 will be public and open to the media as well as to the people of Canada?

● (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, that suggestion was made as a point of procedure, and the decision has been left to Premier Lee as Chairman of the First Ministers' Conference and to myself. Since the consensus was to make the proceedings public as far as possible, most of them will undoubtedly be aired.

THE ECONOMY

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—REQUEST FOR DETAILS ON PREPARATION OF BUDGETARY CUTS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday, the Globe and Mail informed us that the President of the Treasury Board, according to what seems to have been an indiscreet remark to the press . . . that a committee of individuals from the private sector acted as a special consultant to the Government in establishing the budgetary cuts. I would therefore ask the President of the Treasury Board whether it is true that there is such a committee, as reported in last Saturday's Globe and Mail.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that there was no involvement of any private sector committee in the budget cuts described in the document tabled by the Minister of Finance on my behalf last Thursday. This exercise was carried out with the collaboration of my Cabinet colleagues and, of course, their officials in their respective departments, and there was certainly no outside committee involved in this exercise.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board has informed the House that the article that appeared in the Globe and Mail was false, but if there was no committee, were there perhaps individuals, other than officials of the Treasury Board, the Department of Finance or the Privy Council, who were informed in advance or consulted about the cuts announced last Thursday and the cuts to be announced later on?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, no one outside the Government was consulted on the announced cuts.

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister met with the Premiers yesterday, a consensus appeared to develop that jobs ought to be the number one priority for the forthcoming period of time. Did he share with the Premiers the vital information regarding the number of jobs that would be lost, either in the short or long run, as a result of the economic statement and the measures contained therein which were announced by the Minister of Finance to the House last Thursday?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Premiers seemed to be aware of the requirements for privileged communications between senior advisers and the Minister, and they did not ask that question.

However, as the Member quite properly requests, they were sincerely concerned about job creation, as was I, and we discussed the parameters of an important agenda for Regina which, I believe, will be very helpful in creating those jobs that are needed.

PROJECTIONS OF IMPACT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Prime Minister will recall that he stated in Kingston, in August of this year, that one of the trademarks of the Liberal Party was stonewalling and secrecy. He went on to say that: "The reason for government secrecy today . . ." that day " . . . is to keep vital information from the Canadian public."

With that in mind, and given that there will be a number of Canadians who will lose their jobs as a result of the economic statement and measures contained in it, does the Prime Minister not consider that that information, with the projections which led the Government to discount the importance of the loss of their jobs, is vital information to which they should be given access?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Minister of Finance indicated yesterday that the model to which the hon. gentleman refers does not bring about or indicate an increase in unemployment in fiscal year 1985-86; rather, that it is the reverse. That is the case.

● (1425)

There is another point, no less legitimate I hope, that he should reflect upon. The Minister has explained his intention to try to be as helpful and forthcoming in all of these areas, but there is another principle that I would ask the Hon. Member to reflect upon, and that is the need for senior civil servants to be able to communicate in writing with their Ministers on a variety of points of view based on partial data from time to time, and not have that information form the basis of partisan debate. I think it is an important principle that the Minister be able to have this data from within the Department.

Mr. Blaikie: Right on Pierre.

Mr. de Jong: What a ridiculous reason. Sit down.

Mr. Mulroney: It happens that the Minister has acknowledged readily the point to which the Hon. Member refers, but we do not take the sad view that the Hon. Member espouses. We believe that our program, when you factor in investor confidence and consumer confidence, is going to result in a handsome increase in employment, and that is what it is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT OF LAWYERS BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has misunderstood what the Minister said yesterday. The Minister said yesterday that there would be a loss of jobs in 1986 as a result of the economic statement.

Mr. Broadbent: That is right.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister, if I may, why it is that the public of Canada, the ordinary Canadians, who will lose their jobs as a result of the Government's measures, must wait for some projected, maybe, opportunity to regain employment in the private sector, while the Government moves, using public funds, to provide jobs for its 500 PC lawyer friends who are already well endowed with income and do not require access to the public trough? Why do ordinary Canadians have to wait for the private sector while Tory back-bench Members are able to hand out patronage appointments to Tory lawyers?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Now I understand the question, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: It is about time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, in point of fact that economic statement, as the Member quite properly knows, and as other members of the Opposition have indicated, will lead not to less jobs but to more jobs—

Mr. Deans: Less jobs.

Mr. Mulroney: —in this country for everybody, including NDP lawyers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DETENTION OF CANADIAN JOURNALIST IN INDIA

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. As I know the usual good intentions of the Minister, I am hoping he is not completely under the thumb of the reactionary element in his Party—

Mr. Crosbie: What about you?

Mr. Chrétien: —and that he will take heed of the Tories friendly Globe and Mail which in its columns is asking the Government to reconsider the CIDA cuts of yesterday. I hope too, because I know he is very much preoccupied with his good relations with the press, that he will stop the crazy "Yukon Erik" gag imposed on his distinguished Department.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Why is the Minister refusing to help the Canadian journalist, Jonathan Mann, who is incarcerated in India, when the West German Government and the Swiss Government have managed to get two tourists out of there within days? Why has a Canadian Minister refused to help a Canadian press reporter? The Minister should follow what the French Government did in Afghanistan and do something to get this Canadian reporter back in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the question, but I would advise Members in future that preambles to questions should at least relate to the questions that follow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Member and everyone in the House that the Canadian High Commission has been following the case of Mr. Mann very closely since his arrest. Representations at the highest level have been made to India's Department of Foreign Affairs asking for the earliest possible consideration of Mr. Mann's case and that he be allowed to have visitors. Our representative has communicated with Mr. Mann by telephone on several occasions. Mr. Mann is in excellent health. He reports that he is very well fed, and as I have already mentioned, we are taking the necessary steps to ensure that his case will be examined as quickly as possible. We have even heard that he might be freed on bail, and I may also add that his mother, Mrs. Mann, has joined in our efforts and that we are keeping her informed.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulate the Hon. Minister of State for coming to the rescue of the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would like to know whether the Government has made representations to India's High Commission in Canada and whether she could ask her senior Minister if, at four o'clock, this afternoon, when I meet in my office with India's High Commissioner in Canada we could cross the hallway so that the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs may make direct representations to the High Commissioner.

Mrs. Vézina: Mr. Speaker, I can reassure the Hon. Member and tell him that I am not coming to the rescue of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is my responsibility to reply to this question and I appreciate the fact that the Prime Minister has given me this responsibility because, in doing so, he has recognized all the years I have spent trying to improve the quality of life and protect human rights.

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

POSSIBLE REOPENING OF CYPRUS ANVIL MINE IN YUKON

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, whom I should like to congratulate on his appointment to that vital portfolio. Yesterday he appointed Pierre Lassonde from the Yukon suburb of Toronto to reopen the Cyprus Anvil mine as a profitable operation by December 31. The Minister says that there will be no federal bail-out of Cyprus Anvil. Would he explain, in everyday language which Yukoners could understand and which we could understand, just what financial tools he has provided to Mr. Lassonde? For example, does the mandate include loan guarantees, interim equity financing, or Crown corporation status for the White Pass & Yukon Railway as endorsed by the Deputy Prime Minister, none of which are bail-outs for Cyprus Anvil? Would he tell Hon. Members of the House just exactly what tools he has provided? They certainly were not clear in yesterday's communique.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, may I also congratulate the Hon. Member on his polio—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crombie: I congratulate him on his critic portfolio.

Mr. Broadbent: What a Freudian slip!

Mr. Crombie: Well, I was the Minister of Health.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that the geographic location of Mr. Lassande will not inhibit the work I asked him to do. The Hon. Member may recall that last week I indicated I had conducted a preliminary round of discussions with parties involved in the mine. At that time I determined whether or not there was an opportunity to see if the mine could be saved and reopened. My conclusion, as a preliminary finding, was that there was a possibility. It was on that ground that I asked for the services of Mr. Lassonde. I indicated to him that I wanted to have him go to all parties to the action to see what was possible. I constrained him in no way in bringing forward to me those actions which he thinks would be desirable in order to facilitate the opening of the mine.

Mr. Fulton: Last month the Minister travelled to Faro. I am sure he is aware that within days of his visit Cyprus Anvil went on strike and locked out the employees who were involved in the joint federal Government, company and union stripping program which was intended to run until December 31. Interestingly enough, that is the coincident date on which Mr. Lassonde is to report back to the Minister.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Would he tell Hon.

Members of the House and Yukoners, in plain, everyday language, whether he and his Government are politically committed to the reopening of the Cyprus Anvil mine? It is a very simple question. Is he politically committed to getting that done, and will we see it opened by January 1?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I went to Yukon and talked not only with people in Faro but with people in Yukon generally. A long-term, viable opening of this mine is key to the economy of Yukon and certainly to the economy of the people living in Faro.

I talked with Mr. Lassande, with YTG and indeed with the people in Faro. They asked me if I would facilitate a private sector solution which would open the mine long term. That is what I am doing. That is why I asked Mr. Lassande to assist me. I will not second-guess Mr. Lassande, and I certainly will not do things which would take me away from my obligation to the people of Faro and the people of Yukon, that is, to do what they asked me to do, which was to find a long-term private sector solution to the problem.

As the Hon. Member well knows, this mine has been for sale for some time, and there are no takers. It is not an easy matter. However, the Government is committed to doing everything possible to accommodate the wishes of the people of Faro and of the people of Yukon.

RESEARCH

CANCELLATION OF PROPOSED WINNIPEG MANUFACTURING RESEARCH CENTRE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. He probably knows that today there was a report of a senior official of the National Research Council indicating that the cancellation of the manufacturing research centre in Winnipeg would be a very painful cut to Canadian industrial research. Furthermore, it would have been a unique development in Canada and have major industrial spin-offs for the Province of Manitoba. Also, a senior official of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion indicated that it was a major stimulus for growth—

Mr. Speaker: I interrupt the Hon. Member with great regret but preambles and answers today are becoming longer and longer. I ask everyone to bring themselves back to Question Period, which is for questions and answers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: In terms of the new information which has now come to light concerning the valuable and important role this research centre would play in the industrial development of Canada, is the Minister prepared to look at the new evidence, change his mind, review the decision, and consult with the people in Manitoba about reopening that development for the betterment of industrial research for all Canadians?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, I suppose all government officials are entitled to their opinions. However, the Hon. Member's question belies an understanding of the basic challenge which was laid before the country in this Parliament by the Minister of Finance, that being a challenge to the private sector to engage much more actively in the pursuit of research, in the encouragement of investment and innovation, and in the international opportunity which research would represent under the type of economic scenario laid out by my colleague. Just as a footnote, it is astonishing to note that in the—

Mr. Broadbent: That is a long footnote.

Mr. Speaker: I am going to interrupt. With great respect to Ministers and to questioners, I cannot discipline if both sides choose to ask long questions and to make long answers. I have to be fair. Therefore I say to the Minister, please, footnotes are for another place.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON CONSULTATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, can we take from the Minister's answer, therefore, that the Government across the way is no longer prepared to work in any kind of partnership with the private sector to stimulate industrial research? It is cancelling a facility which the Minister knows full well the private sector cannot supply. He is prepared to detract from advancement and progress in the vital field of robotics. Is he saying that there will be absolutely no consultation, contrary to what the Minister of Finance said? Is he saying that there will be no development in Winnipeg? Is that his answer?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): No, Mr. Speaker. The answer is no.

RAILWAYS

PROPOSAL TO ELIMINATE CABOOSES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, before asking my question I wish to congratulate the Minister of Transport on his important and obviously deserved appointment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: I look forward to helping him implement all the statements of policy and commitments he made in the Transport Committee and in other places.

I want to ask the Minister about a matter of grave concern to railway employees, municipalities, and citizens across the country, the attempt of the railways to obtain authority to operate trains without cabooses, which poses a threat to employees' safety, working conditions, and the public safety. Since the CTC is holding a hearing on December 3 regarding the safety of the test train itself, and in view of the Minister's demand—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question? Please.

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the Minister's demand for hearings in nine locations, I would like to ask him whether the CTC has responded adequately. If not, will he order it to hold hearings in those nine locations at dates late enough for groups to prepare their submissions?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his kind remarks. I, too, look forward to working with him in implementing the policies and addressing the challenges of transportation in our country.

Mr. Benjamin: Like re-instating the Crow rate?

Mr. Mazankowski: I will answer that at a later date.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, it is true that I expressed concern about the lack of adequate hearings before the testing has occurred. I have suggested to the CTC, as have other Members, that further pre-test hearings be held across the country. I am informed by the CTC that the additional hearings will be held in addition to Ottawa, in the cities of Moncton, Winnipeg, and Vancouver. I think those will be announced sometime next week.

DEMONSTRATION TRAINS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will order it to do that at the nine locations that he has suggested.

Will he also require the railroads to cease holding public viewings of the demonstration trains at 33 locations across Canada before the test hearings are even held?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly concerned about the matter of the pre-test hearings. I think the CTC has adequately addressed that. If the Hon. Member has additional locations that he would propose, I would certainly be pleased to entertain that representation. Perhaps he could make the representation to the CTC himself. I think the CTC has recognized the need for the additional pre-test hearings and that it is fair to say there has been a reasonable compromise reached.

CONFEDERATION

ABSENCE OF TERRITORIAL LEADERS FROM FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I understand that the Prime Minister was very satisfied with yesterday's meeting to plan a national agenda for next year's economic conference. In view of the fact that the Speech from the Throne talks about concern for regional isolation, will the Prime Minister tell the House why he neglected to invite the two leaders of the territorial Governments, the Hon. Mr. Pearson of Yukon and the Hon. Mr. Nerysoo of the Northwest Territories? I do not need to remind the Prime Minister that these two leaders were present at the last two constitutional conferences. Why were they not at this meeting with the Prime Minister yesterday?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was an agenda-setting exercise yesterday involving the First Ministers of the provinces. I hope at our Regina meeting there will be a fair representation from the North.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT ON FUTURE ATTENDANCE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Do I understand from the Prime Minister's answer that this is a commitment which he has made today, that the two territorial leaders will be at the economic conference next year? Is that correct?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not a commitment. It is a suggestion that I have taken the liberty of putting in writing today to my provincial colleagues for their consideration. I believe it would be appropriate.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MARITIME COMMAND—RESTORATION OF NAVY BLUE UNIFORMS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. The Minister, like all Canadians, is aware of the grave need to equip our Canadian forces properly, but he must face the reality of an empty public purse. Nonetheless, I understand the Minister will proceed to restore navy blue uniforms to Maritime Command, something his Liberal predecessors refused to do. Will the Minister advise the House whether he has formulated a plan to provide navy blue uniforms for Canada's Navy, and when can we expect that plan to be implemented—hopefully in time for the 75th anniversary of Canada's Navy?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: I thank the Hon. Member for Halifax West for the question. I would tell him yes, navy blue will be available to our navy personnel. The distinctive uniforms will be available, at least for some of them, by July 1, the beginning of the 75th anniversary celebrations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

IMPORTATION OF PORNOGRAPHIC MAGAZINES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue as minister responsible for Customs and Excise and deals with the importation of pornographic material generally, and especially violent pornography.

The minister recently ordered a stop to the importation of a monthly pornographic magazine. Still, he is well aware that the problem is much more serious. What does he propose to do to deal more effectively with violent pornography in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, let me first thank the Hon. Member for a very important question. I think every Member of the House of Commons will share her concern. As the Hon. Member is aware, we have indeed ordered a stop to the importation of the December issue of Penthouse into Canada. In addition, I have given orders to my officials to ensure that, where there is a mixture of sex and violence in the future, such material should not be permitted into Canada. In addition, the Government is awaiting the results of the Fraser committee into pornography and prostitution. We hope the recommendations of that committee will be very helpful to us in discharging our responsibilities.

DANGERS OF VIOLENT PORNOGRAPHY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's activity in this regard. We continue to get representations from women's groups all across the country about insensitivity, and perhaps even incompetence in particular cases. I wonder if the Minister could be more specific about what measures he is taking with regard to education of his own officials, and with regard to the problems of violence itself. The recent communique does not stress the violent aspects, but bad taste and offensiveness. I wonder if this really does justice to the issue that violent pornography is dangerous, and not merely in poor taste.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I fully share the Hon. Member's concern. Violent pornography is not simply in bad taste; it is highly dangerous. The Government will do everything possible to ensure that violent pornography is not imported into Canada. What I found very distressing in this instance was the suggestion that it was appropriate to have naked women bound in ropes hanging from trees, and that this was considered art work. It is not art work, and there is no place whatsoever for this sort of material in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MARINE TRANSPORT

FERRY SERVICES IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I join my colleague to my left in congratulating the Minister on his appointment. The people of Atlantic Canada, in particular those people in the island provinces of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, view CN Marine and the region's ferry services as an extension of the Trans-Canada Highway. Last Thursday the Minister of Finance announced a $37 million cut-back with respect to this essential Atlantic Canadian service.

The Minister indicated the cut-backs were possible as a result of selective increased cost recoveries. Can the Minister tell this House specifically what cut-backs and fare increases the Minister and the officials of his Department selected to recommend to his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to achieve that $37 million slash on the backs of the people of Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, it really is a twofold proposition. There will be a rationalization of the Gulf ferry services and the coastal ferry services. As a matter of fact, there will be an additional three new vessels on the Gulf service and one new vessel on the Newfoundland-Labrador coastal service. These vessels will be of the latest state of the art; they will be faster, they will be larger, and they will provide more flexibility and more reliable service. Not only that, this will have a tremendous impact upon the shipbuilding industry and, therefore, will create jobs.

• (1450)

The implementation will be phased in over a three-year period. It will be done in conjunction and in consultation with representatives of the provinces. With respect to the fare increases, there is a proposal for additional fare increases, but it will be done on a basis whereby the regular user will be provided with a discount, and there will be some market flexibility in the application of those new fares.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer makes for some very good PR for CN Marine. Unfortunately he has not answered my question.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT SUBSIDIES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Premier of Newfoundland and, I understand, Premiers of other Atlantic Provinces, indicated yesterday to the Prime Minister that they were very concerned—

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member has a question.

Mr. Tobin: They were very concerned about the cut-backs. In view of the commitment of his Party during the election campaign to make tourism a high priority for this administration, can the Minister of Transport tell the people affected by the ferry services between Nova Scotia and P.E.I., P.E.I. and New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, the only method of cheap transport available to these people—two of the provinces are islands—that the Government will not slash subsidies and will not pass on unviable—I am coming to the question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon.

MULTICULTURALISM

IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, whom I congratulate on his appointment to that important position. The question deals with the report of the Special Committee on Visible Minorities in Canadian Society, which was published under the title "Equality Now". Delegates to the conference of the Canadian Council for Multicultural and Inter-Cultural Education, which was held in Toronto this past weekend, endorsed all 80 recommendations in the report. Several hundred delegates signed a petition calling on the Government to implement the recommendations immediately. Will the Minister indicate when he intends to respond to the recommendations in the report, especially considering the difficult economic times and the recommendations it made regarding employment?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his kind remarks and welcome him to his important position as critic for multiculturalism.

In the area of our work, and the whole question of the "Equality Now" report, there is something in the neighbourhood of 40 recommendations, out of the 84 or 85 recommendations which were made by the committee, which directly affect the area of multiculturalism. My staff is actively working on those recommendations at the present time. We are priorizing those recommendations. We have met with the ethno-cultural community across the country. I think the work is well on its way, and I am hopeful of early results.

ABELLA COMMISSION REPORT—DATE OF PRESENTATION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question deals with the report of the Abella Commission, which has been anticipated for some time. Could the Minister tell the House when the report will be presented and what are his expectations? I trust those expectations are for speedy action on the report of that commission, as well as on the report of the special committee.

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the report is scheduled for presentation in the very near future, literally within a matter of a few days. When that takes place I will be in a better position to respond to the Hon. Member.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF PAROLE PROCEDURES

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Last week in The Vancouver Sun headlines appeared which read: "Court Rejects 15-Year Parole Wait for Killer". This case involved a convicted killer. He was convicted of second degree murder of his common law wife and infant child. The jury recommended that he wait at least 15—

Mr. Speaker: I will be as patient as I can with new Members, but I would ask that the Member please put his question.

Mr. Belsher: What steps is the Minister's Department taking in reviewing and changing the present parole board procedures, so that convicted killers will not be allowed to return to society before justice has been served?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first, with respect to my hon. colleague's question, the case to which he refers is in the purview of the Attorney General of British Columbia and deals with the issue of crimes that were committed before the coming into effect of the Charter of Rights. Therefore, it is the lesser penalty of the 1969 era that applies rather than the present law. As far as the rest of his question is concerned, I can tell him that we are doing everything possible within the confines of existing legislation to control the situation, and hope that early in the new year concrete steps will be taken to give the public of Canada better protection.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY CONCERNING SIX SOVIET PRISONERS DETAINED IN AFGHANISTAN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister is of course aware that six Soviet prisoners being held by the Afghan authorities are probably about to be executed, following a decision made by her department and the Department of External Affairs. These prisoners were about to be granted asylum by Canada as a result of representations by a Toronto lawyer. However, the Government has now reversed its decision and, today, is refusing unconditionally to grant them asylum. Could the Minister justify before the House a decision that could cost the lives of six people?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that no application was ever made for those people.

MEDICAL CARE

COSTS OF TRANSPORTATION TO SECURE HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Canada Health Act states that all Canadians should have reasonable access to health services without undue financial barriers, yet thousands of Canadians are denied access to the specialized treatment they require because they live in areas which are outside the major metropolitan centres and cannot afford the transportation costs to those centres. In light of the Prime Minister's recent reaffirmation of the universality of health care, would the Minister commit himself and his Government to eliminating this long-standing inequality by changing the regulations that currently prevent federal health funds from being spent on medically-necessary travel?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member relates a concern which is outside the agreements on the so-called insured services that is, services which are agreed to be cost-shared between the provinces and the federal Government. I can tell the Hon. Member that I have had one meeting with my provincial counterparts. We did not explore that issue, but in general terms we have agreed to sit down and take a look at the best manner in which we can preserve not only the present health care system but also future considerations.

REQUEST THAT MINISTERS DISCUSS ISSUE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister agree to place the subject of medically necessary travel on the agenda for the next meeting with his provincial counterparts?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will give that suggestion consideration. I would also point out to the Member that the delivery of health care is within the purview of the provinces, and we will give full consideration when looking at that issue.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED CITATION OF REPORT BY MR. WILSON (ETOBICOKE CENTRE)—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I am now ready to rule on the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on November 13. The Hon. Member alleged that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in answering a question from the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), quoted from an official document and therefore had an obligation to table that document.

Having carefully examined the exchanges which took place between the Hon. Member for Oshawa and the Minister of Finance, it is evident to me that the Minister, while referring to a departmental memorandum, did not in fact quote from it. He stated that the memorandum was "statistically insignificant", and added that it indicated a marginal positive increase in employment for 1985 and a marginal negative impact on unemployment for 1986. This, I submit, may be a reference or a paraphrase, but it does not constitute a quotation. Therefore, the Minister is under no obligation to table it as is made clear in Citation 327(3) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which states:

A public document referred to, but not cited or quoted by a Minister, need not be tabled.

Citation 327(5) adds:

To be cited, a document must be quoted or specifically used to influence debate.

I submit that when a Minister uses a document to supply information in replying to a question in the House, the use of that document cannot be construed as an attempt to influence debate. This view is supported by a ruling given by one of my predecessors, Mr. Speaker Jerome, on April 8, 1976, when he said that:

Reference to a document has never been held to apply to a situation in which a Minister has simply been asked a question about a document and given an answer.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain alleged in making his point of order that the Minister cited the memorandum, and I quote the Hon. Member:

—in an effort to influence the debate which is presently taking place in the House of Commons and also to influence the public of Canada in believing that the reference to which he referred was of little consequence.

He went on to say that the questions directed to the Minister were, and I quote:

—very much a part of the ongoing debate in public terms over the relevance and import of the economic statement of the Minister of Finance.

It seems to me that when a Minister is specifically questioned about a document and he refers to that document in the course of his reply, it would be difficult to find that he was attempting to influence debate. Furthermore, Beauchesne's Citation 327(5) applies only to debate in the House and not to debate in the country at large. Using a document to influence the public and using a document to influence debate during debate in the House of Commons are not the same thing, and the authority of the Chair cannot be exercised in relation to the former.

Given all of these circumstances, therefore, I must rule that the Minister is not compelled to lay this particular memorandum on the table unless he chooses to do so.

PETITIONS

CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present to this House a petition from residents of Leeds-Grenville and elsewhere in Ontario who call upon this House to reinstate capital punishment as a penalty for murder, and to introduce the legislation as quickly as possible.

DEREGULATION OF TELEPHONE SERVICE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to present a petition to this House on behalf of a number of my constituents from Prince Albert who ask Parliament to reject any proposals in the deregulation of Canada's telephone service. These Canadians are satisfied with the current telephone service and feel that deregulation would result in poorer and costlier service.

Therefore, the undersigned call upon this Parliament to stop deregulation of the telephone services.

INCOME TAX ACT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of citizens of Spadina and other parts of Toronto requesting this House to change the Income Tax Act for 1985 so that large corporations will receive tax breaks such as they have received in the past only in proportion to the number of new jobs they have created, and that the number of new jobs created by each corporation, and the tax breaks it receives, will be reported quarterly to Parliament.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING GUN CONTROL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-205, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (gun control).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, during recent months we have had some tragic, violent murders in Canada, many committed with the use of firearms. The purpose of this Bill is to strengthen our gun control laws. It is well documented that those states with stricter gun laws have fewer crimes committed with guns. This is a measure to prevent violent crime before it takes place and not after the fact.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Tuesday, November 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 38).

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate you on your election to your high office, and also for keeping a close watch on us during Question Period. I would also like to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. May I make particular mention of the seconder, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Jacques), who gave a very strong speech, particularly in light of the fact that she is, I believe, the youngest Member of this House.

In replying to the Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, and in addressing this House for the first time in this Parliament, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the people of New Westminster-Coquitlam for returning me to this place and honouring me with their trust and support. I am honoured and proud to continue to serve them.

During the recent election campaign, promises were made by all Parties. We, on our side, promised to represent and fight for the ordinary people of Canada, to fight for fair taxes, equality for women, the preservation of social services, disarmament and peace. We are living up to our promises.

What can we say of the Conservatives and their promises and the way they have lived up to them? Campaigning this summer, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that universal social services for Canada were "a sacred trust that would be maintained by a Conservative Government". Only weeks later we see this Government moving to negotiate and, perhaps, abandon this sacred trust.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), while speaking in my riding during the election campaign, told pensioners that fears that the Conservatives would cut social services was "a lot of garbage" and "over my dead body would they cut them". Dead body or not, it is that Minister who is responsible for a lot of garbage as we see Tory plans for cuts to social services and cuts in her own department now enfolding.

What of fair taxes? During a televised debate with the other two Party leaders, the Prime Minister promised to move to ensure that the wealthiest Canadians, many of whom pay no income tax, would pay tax and "would pay handsomely". We see no promise of that in the Throne Speech, nor indeed in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) the other evening.

The Tory list of deception and broken promises is already long, but nowhere is it more shameful than in the broken promises to Canadian women. An early promise by the Prime Minister for contract compliance to achieve affirmative action in firms doing business with the federal Government has been reneged on. Canadian women are still waiting to be paid equally for work of equal value. They are still waiting for increased pensions and for growth and funding in child care. One might argue that all Parties, particularly those which hope to form a government, make a lot of promises which they cannot then keep. However, one cannot accept that something which is a sacred trust one day becomes expendable the next day. What that does, Mr. Speaker, and what causes us the most concern, is this. Far from engendering confidence in Canadian society, the kind of confidence which this Government is talking about engendering, it breeds cynicism. How can the Canadian electorate take a government seriously when on one day it says universality is a sacred trust, and the next day that it is negotiable?

• (1510)

On jobs, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives' deception has been thoroughly addressed by my Leader and other Members of my Party in their remarks. With grand claims to put thousands and thousands of Canadians back to work, to create new jobs and new prosperity, the Conservatives won the support of many Canadians. The Throne Speech gave no substance to these promises and the Minister of Finance buried them unceremoniously last week. The true Tory job policy is really 19th century free market economics.

Mr. Benjamin: Make that 18th century.

Ms. Jewett: No, not quite. The famous large-scale monopoly private sector will take care of job creation, just as the Iron Ore Company of Canada has taken care of job creation in Schefferville, and just as B.C. Packers is taking care of jobs on the West Coast.

Now, the kind of initiative the Government could take, and which we have been urging it to take, the kind of initiative the people of Canada expect from their government, could be both direct and indirect support for the forest industry, to take a very important example, and particularly the forest industry in British Columbia. I would like to give one example of the tragedy that is taking place in this industry and in the industries that serve it.

A New Westminster-based supplier of pulp and paper machinery, Lamb-Cargate Industries, a recent casualty of this Government's high interest rate policy, is a key manufacturing industry not only in my riding but in the province and in the country. It is being prevented from competing in our own domestic markets by the high interest rate policy of this Government. Foreign pulp and paper machine manufacturers benefiting from lower interest rates in their own countries, indeed in some cases subsidized interest rates, are winning manufacturing contracts in our own province and country. Lower interest rates, assistance to the forest industry, and real national economic planning, Mr. Speaker, are what Canadians need and expect from the federal Government.

In this Parliament I am proud to continue to speak for my Party on external affairs in general and on Canada's nuclear disarmament and international development assistance policies in particular. I am concerned, indeed alarmed, at the emerging shape of the Government's foreign policy.

Before I address those concerns, let me point out that there are some things upon which all Parties in this House agree. Such unanimity is felt at the time of great loss. The sad and untimely death of Indira Gandhi, the outstanding woman in politics in our time and the leader of the world's largest democracy, is a loss not only to the Indian people; in all corners of this House we share that loss. We are concerned as well with the continuing violence in India, and we have had many moderate members of the Sikh community in this country talk to us about that violence. I would hope that all of us, many of us having East Indian and Sikh constituents, would agree that what is needed is a fact-finding mission on behalf of Parliament to go to India and collect the facts upon which we can then make our judgments about what assistance we can give to the people of India. I would hope it would be an all-party fact-finding mission established within the next few weeks or at most few months.

As I say, on many matters we are in accord. On many more we are not. The shadow of war grows in Central America. The danger of a regional war directly involving the United States is more likely now than ever before. Continuing military conflict, covert war, border attacks and grotesque violations of human rights are the reality in Central America. Despite congressional reprimand and international outcry over the mining of Nicaragua's harbours earlier this year, the Reagan administration continues to escalate its military aggression, economic sabotage and attacks on Nicaragua. This poses a danger not only to Nicaraguan sovereignty and independence but to the rule of international law, the self-determination of a people, initial efforts towards development and democracy, and the peace and stability of the western hemisphere.

Honduras has become militarized by the United States to the point where its fledgling democracy and economy are threatened. In Guatemala, massacres and large-scale human rights violations continue and have been well documented.

What has been this Government's response to the crisis in Central America? First, it has refused to increase our diplomatic and political representation in the region. While haggling goes on about Canada's representation in the wine-growing regions of France, this Government accepts that Canada will have no representation except an occasional monthly call in El Salvador, Honduras or Nicaragua. What that means is that the Conservatives, like the Liberals before them, will continue to rely on the U.S. State Department, the U.S. Defence Department and the White House for information on and assessment of this critical region. The Tories are simply continuing an earlier Liberal Minister's policy, that of Mark MacGuigan, of "quiet acquiescence" in Washington's policies on Central America.

Secondly, one of the first foreign policy decisions of this Government was its refusal to send observers to the recent Nicaraguan elections. Although earlier this year Canada had sent official observers to the elections in El Salvador, this Government declined the same courtesy to Nicaragua. The Conservative Government prejudged the process and the outcome of the election and once again acquiesced to Washington's wishes.

Thirdly, the Government has failed Canadians and the cause of peace in Central America in an even more fundamental way. Earlier this year all parties in this House were in agreement that the Contadora group's efforts were the only realistic path to peace in Central America. All parties claimed support for these efforts. In September of this year, when the Contadora foreign ministers presented a proposed peace plan for Central America, the countries of the region expressed approval. Nicaragua in particular, much to the surprise of the United States, agreed to the plan. France and other European nations have endorsed it but the United States, which had earlier asked for and succeeded in getting certain elements in the peace plan, refused to then support it when Nicaragua accepted it. They said that there were verification problems. What verification problems? France and other countries have not raised this question. The countries in the region, members of the Contadora groups, have not raised this as a problem. Only the Americans are raising it as a problem and this Government, in the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) yesterday, echoing Washington, has begun raising it as a problem.

What this Government does not seem to realize is that Washington has wanted to delay indefinitely implementation of the Contadora peace plan. For proof of this one need go no further than an article in the Washington Post on November 13 which revealed the contents of a paper presented by the National Security Council of the U.S. for an October 30 meeting of that Council at which President Reagan presided. This paper, which to my knowledge has so far been made available only to the Washington Post, credits U.S. foreign policy with success in blocking efforts by Venezuela, Panama, Colombia and Mexico—that is, the Contadora group—to obtain early signing of a proposed regional peace treaty in Central America. It actually states that the United States has been successful in blocking the peace plan.

• (1520)

The paper goes on to say that problems remain in getting the four core contries, that is Guatemala, Honduras, Costa Rica and El Salvador, to agree on a position consistent with U.S. policy against Nicaragua, the fifth potential signatory. There are problems with getting the core countries to agree with the U.S. policy of attacking, undermining and destroying Nicaragua.

In considering its policy vis-à-vis Central America, perhaps the Government will read some of these documents, such as the one I have just quoted from, a document of the U.S. National Security Council, rather than what they are fed by the State Department, Defence Department and White House.

I believe this is an example of breeding cynicism in our own electorate. Members of the House will recall that when the Prime Minister spoke at St. Francis Xavier University in Antigonish on September 28 of this year, he said that his "most cherished ambition is to reduce the threat of war and enhance the promise of peace".

But, if the Government is failing Canadians and peace in Central America, it is also failing Canadians in other aspects of the quest for peace, such as the urgent necessity for nuclear disarmament. It is interesting that the Government has chosen two admirable and skilful spokespeople for its policies in this field, not the least of whom is the new Canadian ambassador to the United Nations and indeed the new ambassador for disarmament. While we applaud these choices, if the Government really feels it is essential to go outside of the External Affairs Department, we cannot applaud the policies and actions, or rather inactions, that go with them.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), speaking at the United Nations on September 25 with regard to aid policy and Canadian development assistance, said that "despite serious economic problems at home, we shall not turn our backs on the world's disadvantaged people". He went on to say: "Our new Government intends to maintain Canada's commitment to reaching .7 per cent of the GNP by 1990 in official development assistance". The Minister of Finance shot that one down in his economic statement, as he shot down the sacred trust of universality. Now the goal is not .7 per cent by 1990, but rather by 1995. This is beginning to sound just like the Liberals. In the early 1970s they had a goal of .7 per cent of GNP for official development assistance. That was consistently lowered to .6, .5 and .43 of 1 per cent of GNP.

Most seriously, will the electorate not again become cynical when our Government says very fine words and then reneges so seriously and damagingly on its promises? What has the Government done in the search for peace in the field of nuclear arms control and disarmament? So far it has not produced any ideas or proposals which would carry Canada and the world forward even a step. In his speech in Vancouver on October 20 the Government had the ambassador for disarmament say that the kind of progress the Government would make in these life and death matters would be inch by inch. In metric that would be centimetre by centimetre or millimetre by millimetre. Indeed, the very title of that speech was to the effect of reaching peace "inch by inch." I am sure that the ambassador was almost embarrassed to have to say this, but of course that is government policy.

The second shocking thing about the Government's policy is that it has totally rejected any unilateral initiatives that Canada can take in the field of nuclear arms control and steps toward disarmament. It has totally rejected our own historical tradition where we have, from time to time, taken unilateral initiatives. It says that those are no longer possible and we cannot take any initiatives on our own as Canadians, whether it is rejecting Cruise missile testing or bringing nations together to promote a nuclear freeze.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's speech has now been concluded. We will proceed to questions and comments. In view of the fact that there are no questions and comments, I would like to call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate you on the assumption of that very prestigious office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this Government has taken office at a time when our society faces challenges and difficulties. These challenges and difficulties are without parallel in the history of most Canadians. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, this Government has taken office to meet those challenges and difficulties because the voters of Canada recognized that the old ideas and ways had reduced our economy to a shambles and in the process had cost many hundreds of thousands of Canadians their homes, jobs, businesses, dreams, and even their hopes.

It is no wonder that when Canadians went to the polls on September 4 they did indeed vote for change. Hon. Members opposite have acknowledged this. With less than three score and ten of them, they have no alternative but to do so. The message of the electorate was unequivocal. The people of Canada voted for change. They voted for a government that they could believe in again, but they voted for more than that. They voted as well for a government that would believe in them.

Therefore, I stand in the House today to make my first speech as Minister of Employment and Immigration mindful of the enormous task of rebuilding and reinvigorating that lies ahead of us. However, I am confident that with the strength and belief of the Canadian people behind us we shall succeed in our duty. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we must succeed in that duty. Unemployment of 11.3 per cent, 10 per cent, 9 per cent or 8 per cent is a tragedy that we cannot afford and must not tolerate. We cannot afford its continuing cost in human terms of ruined lives and the despair in many regions which is almost incomprehensible in a land that is so truly great—a land which we all grew up to believe held unlimited possibilities.

But that despair is real. It is the legacy of ministers and cabinets dedicated to the belief that the government—the bigger the better—knows best. It is the result of unilateral policies that promised one thing and delivered another, such as high interest rates, which ruined tens of thousands of businesses, put hundreds of thousands of people out of work and in three or four short years left a national debt which is both a millstone and an albatross around our necks.

No, the old ways will not do. They did not work in the past and they will not work in the future. The people of this country do not want them any more. They did indeed vote for change. They voted for a government which will meet the challenges of today and those of tomorrow; a government which will ensure that productive, remunerative, worth-while and prideful work will remain a fundamental element in our daily lives.

As Minister of Employment and Immigration I will accept no less objective. However, I want to emphasize that I do not underestimate the momentous task ahead if we are to achieve this objective. We know today's unemployment only too well. We all label it intolerable or unbearable, as indeed it is. What, then, shall we say tomorrow if hundreds of thousands more Canadians were to be left without work and without the skills needed to work because the technological revolution passed them by? What, then, would be the economic and social reality?

Over the past five years those ministers responsible for addressing this challenge either did not recognize it and its dimensions or simply did not care. Today we are paying for that failure and for that indifference. We are starting out already late in the race for the future. If we do not begin to hold our own and to catch up in the next five years, then the race as far as Canada is concerned will be over. We must put Canadians back to work. We must keep Canadians in work.

That requires two objectives. First, we must remove the obstacles to economic growth. We welcome investment. We restore an atmosphere which shows that Canada is once again a good place to do business. We build better, sell better. We manage our own affairs, our own economy above all, in a professional and competent manner. In other words, we build confidence at home and internationally, confidence in Canada itself and in the ability of its people.

This development of economic resources was highlighted by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), last Thursday. I may say that in that one address we heard more sound commonsense on economic matters than we heard in the whole of the previous four and one-half years by all the former Ministers of Finance.

If the first condition we must meet in our quest to create employment for all Canadians is economic development, then the second is the development of our human resources. Indeed, the two are inseparable. Without the skills we cannot fill the jobs and without the jobs in a growing economy we will not create new opportunities.

The world of work is changing. The place of work is changing. In the future, what we do and how we do it may change not just once or twice during our lifetime but over and over again. Skills will not be static. They must be developed and upgraded on a continuing basis. Every working Canadian, young and old, male and female, must expect and indeed accept new training and retraining as part of their working lives.

That is what it is. It is part of our working lives. The era in which we went to school, acquired our skills and then worked 30 or 40 years in the same job is at an end. In the information age that we are rapidly entering, today's skills are but a stepping stone to tomorrow's and not an end in themselves. We, as a society and as individuals, must be prepared to accept this fact and to accept this challenge.

Clearly, it is an enormous undertaking. Some estimates suggest that fully 5 per cent of our annual GNP will eventually be directed to training and retraining. There is no question that the task is huge or that the time is short. Virtually nothing has been done to prepare our society to meet the scope of this challenge of human resource development. However, our Government is determined to make up for lost time.

The enormity and complexity of this task will require the co-operation and determination of all sectors of our society. The old unilateralism just will not work. To meet this challenge, I have already launched a process of consultation. Over the coming months I will meet with provincial ministers, business and labour leaders and with groups from the community. The challenge is common and so must be the solution.

It is obvious why we must consult with the provinces. Basic education, the foundation upon which we prepare for our working lives, rests with the provinces, as does most of our post-secondary education. The role of community colleges and technological schools is already expanding and will become even more critical in the years ahead.

Training and retraining does not begin and end only in the classroom. The responsibility cannot rest solely with governments. Industry has a vital interest in contributing to a trained labour force. Training will be an ongoing part of work and if industry will share this responsibility government will share the cost of this human investment.

In the future, training and retraining will not be restricted to schools and institutions. It will also take place on the shop floor and in the office. If for no other reason, this would require the participation of organized labour.

Labour has an even greater role to play. The trade union movement in Canada has helped to shape our lives. It will continue to do so as we face the challenges of tomorrow and labour's participation can help ensure that we maximize the opportunities of technological change, be it through better working conditions or a new equality in the workplace.

The goals we are striving for are basic. We must ensure that we have a skilled labour force which can meet the needs of the future. We must stimulate economic growth, a dynamic force for the creation of new job opportunities. We must also ensure equality of opportunity, equality in competition and equality of access to jobs. We have a national challenge and it will take a national commitment to meet it.

The federal Government has signalled its determination to meet our share of this national challenge and national commitment. We have already allocated an additional $1 billion for employment development. But our commitment is to people as well as to providing money. When I talk about investing in people, I think of those groups in our society today who are at a particular economic disadvantage—groups which need a particular commitment.

I should like to mention just three of them: youth, older workers, and women. Youth unemployment is a continuing tragedy. Many young Canadians still lack training and practical experience. They are having trouble getting their first job. They need to prove their worth and their competence. They need to get on with their lives. Dealing with youth unemployment requires more than the random spending of dollars. What happens when our young people leave school? How can we help them make that transition from school to work? What about those who do not go on to post-secondary education?

We are considering a number of options, Sir, which will be set out in a discussion paper on training and which I will be releasing shortly. These include a new emphasis on co-operative education measures and on apprenticeship. Employer-based training is another concept which merits study and consideration. Through the process of consultation and commitment with the other players in our economy, we will find the answers to this critical waste of talent and potential which we see now.

Now I come to our older workers. Many older Canadians now find that they need new skills in mid-career. These Canadians are still travelling along the old road; that is, school, one career, and then retirement. They have crashed headlong into the future world of work. How do we equip these people for new employment opportunities? How do we keep our work force skilled, current, employed and employable? One avenue which we will explore is that of skill development leave. We also recognize that business must be more involved in training. Training as well for those with special needs should be available if we are to meet our responsibilities to all Canadians. With regard to new employment opportunities, one way to encourage the private sector is through an employment tax credit.

In any discussion of opportunities, Mr. Speaker, there must be an emphasis on what the future means to women. The reality of working women in this country still lags behind the accepted principles of social and economic equality. In this context, I noted this morning's report from the Economic Council of Canada. I am encouraged by the trend that it shows, but we must continue to do much, much more. One cannot be satisfied with the results we saw this morning.

Women need real choices in the future. They should be able to choose both to work and to have children. That is what I mean by real choice. Like all Canadians they must be able to train and to have retraining without suffering economic disadvantages. These are economic realities, and the problem of child care and parental leave are inexplicably linked to the problems of employment for women. But it is not only a so-called women's issue. I cannot emphasize this enough. This is a major employment issue.

The new technologies remove many of the obstacles, real or imaginary, to women. For the first time a revolution in the workplace has occurred which does not impose any physical barriers. In fact, some of the skills that have kept women in low-paying jobs will now be tickets to new opportunities. The computer managed world is one which I think can be of some immense help to women. For women to make the most of it, training opportunities must be expanded as access to the new machines increases. The age of the microchip is still young. For women, I think this is a critical opportunity.

Future prosperity will not be achieved easily, Sir. It never has been, but it is achievable. With the mobilization of our economic and human resources, with a shared sense of purpose and a shared responsibility, we can and we will attain it. The process has begun. The consultations on which I am embarking this month will lay the groundwork for a new atmosphere of mutual trust and co-operation. While they apply in particular to the provinces, I have five objectives clearly before me.

First, to remove obstacles to employment growth and to promote mobility in a growing labour market.

Second, to develop approaches to training which are capable of providing the skills and flexibility required in the years ahead. It is especially critical that we apply this philosophy to small business, the powerhouse of today's employment growth.

Third, to simplify federal programs and wherever possible to harmonize them with the efforts of the provinces.

Fourth, to ensure equitable access to training and employment opportunities for all Canadians.

Fifth, to reach a consensus on fair sharing of responsibilities between the federal Government and the provinces and our economic and social partners.

These consultations are critical to our development of a workable co-operative training and employment creation strategy. That is what I am aiming for, Mr. Speaker.

But we will also act immediately when obvious need confronts us. The $430 million I have already allocated for Canada Works this winter is an example of such action today. The $1 billion this Government has allocated to employment and human resource development signals our determination to meeting our commitments tomorrow.

The creation of an effective employment strategy for Canada is long overdue. Our need for such a strategy becomes even more critical with every passing day. We are entering a new era in work, a new era in living itself. Our success depends upon our own intelligence and indeed upon our resourcefulness and our willingess to work together.

As a government we have a faith in the future, undiminished by the magnitude of the task and the challenge that confronts us because we know Canadians will work together to accomplish these goals.

All of us share a common tomorrow, and I believe we all share common hopes of that tomorrow. We are all social and economic partners. Our purpose is to secure prosperity for all Canadians. This is the vote for change that was recorded on September 4, and I am optimistic we shall achieve it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We shall now proceed to the period allotted for questions and comments. I would like to recognize Members in the following order: the Hon. Member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Clifford); the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom); the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi); the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker); and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). After that, we will see if there is time to recognize any other members in the ten-minute period.

Mr. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, I would like to convey my congratulations to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) for working out such wide-sweeping plans for this most serious problem in our country today. I was pleased to note that the pricey plethora of patchwork programs that has been imposed upon Canadians in the past is going to end.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Clifford: —the source of most unemployment, which is at the secondary school level can the Minister clarify what she is going to do to keep young people in school—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order please. The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, it is understood that the ten-minute period for questions is usually reserved for Opposition Parties, and if Opposition Members do not have questions, then I think it is legitimate for Members of the Party to which the Member who has spoken belongs to ask questions. I would think the other two Parties should have their chance first.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's point of order is not well founded. Questions and comments are permitted for every Member in the House. The Hon. Member for London-Middlesex has the floor.

• (1550)

Mr. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, I think I actually completed my question to the Minister. However, in summary, could she elaborate on whether there are any plans in these programs to react to a source of unemployment, that source being students at the secondary school level?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It is an area which has a great many unemployed people in that age group. In announcing the Youth Training Option Program, I said that it was to be used as a pilot project. We will be looking at the results of that pilot project. However, that pilot project and the manner in which it was announced indicated that the other partners in a youth training plan had previously been left out. I am talking about the provinces which must have a direct input into education leading to further training and to jobs. Through the course of the next few months of intensive consultation, I will be discussing with the provinces, the educational system and the private sector a much larger plan as to how employment for those coming out of secondary school can be addressed and training plans initiated.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I will try to speak loudly enough. First I congratulate the Minister on her appointment. I think she is the right kind of person in that Party to be in that portfolio, being a so-called red Tory.

An Hon. Member: Time will tell.

Mr. Nystrom: Time will tell. In any event, I appreciate the emphasis she placed upon retraining, mobility and so on. Arising out of that, I should like to ask her one or two questions about the statement of last week. In the blue book entitled "Expenditure and Program Review" we notice that there was a total cancellation of the General Industrial Training Program of some $40 million. If the Minister is interested in retraining people, why would she cancel that program before any other program is put in its place? I could see it if she was bringing in a new program that might be an improvement to the Liberal program; that is not difficult to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Why did the Minister cancel that program before there was something else in its place?

My second question concerns a reference in that book indicating that she is planning on doing something. Could the Minister illustrate what the new program will be?

My last question deals with mobility. The Minister has talked a lot about mobility. However, I notice in this book that she is cutting back on the mobility program by $2.8 million. Why is she doing that in the age of high-tech and the information society when people have to be more mobile than ever before? It seems to me that the Minister is saying one thing and doing the other.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, in addition to other recipes I will try to find a recipe for the Hon. Member's laryngitis. Perhaps I could help him out.

He dealt with two questions in particular, the first one being the General Industrial Training Program. That program had not lived up to its expectations. It was not providing the right kind of training. We have analysed it. We feel that in that sense there are many more effective ways to carry out retraining. However, I should like to tell the Hon. Member that any contracts or agreements presently in force will continue. There will be no cancellation for anyone who is in a training program at the present time.

With regard to the mobility program, we have made adjustments in that program. We have altered it to avoid cases where persons coming in from other communities could take jobs and where unemployed people in the community were bumped out of their place in the line. We have altered it so that those people who are unemployed in local communities will have the first chance at jobs.

Mr. Nystrom: What kind of program is the Minister planning to introduce in place of that $40 million General Industrial Training Program which she cancelled? This is referred to in that blue book, but there are no details.

Miss MacDonald: There are no details. I want to assure the Hon. Member and all Hon. Members that in the process of consultation which begins later this month I have not set on the table the answers I want to see come out at the end of three months of consultation. We will be negotiating meaningfully with labour organizations, women's groups, the private sector and the provinces. I do not go to them saying: "These are the details of the programs I want to see at the end". I really want input and co-operation from all sectors.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Minister on her very important appointment. In her speech she referred to youth unemployment as being a tragedy. I agree with her. Seeing that students can only work a few months per year during the summer holidays, could the Minister tell us whether she feels—like the Tories have said—that the Summer Canada Program for students was a band-aid program? It was abolished by her Government.

Was it the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) who suggested that it be abolished or was it the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald)? What does the Minister have in mind as a program to replace this Summer Canada Program for students?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for his question. If he looked at the documents which were released the other night along with the economic statement, I am sure he would see that there was another part to the cancellation of the Summer Canada Program. There was an undertaking that there would be other programs in place. As the Hon. Member knows, we have set aside some $1 billion for new job-creation opportunities. We want to co-ordinate our efforts for next summer and indeed beyond that with our provincial counterparts and with the private sector.

I assure the Hon. Member that these programs will be worked out within the next few months and that there will be programs in place for next summer. I want to assure the Hon. Member, all other Hon. Members and the young people of the country of that.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I had another question for the Minister, but in light of the statement she just made, I should like to indicate that there are vast areas in the country where there is no private enterprise—none, not even a McDonald's. These are high unemployment areas. The only way that someone leaving high school can attend university or trade school is through direct job creation by one of the two governments. Certain provinces in Canada, such as the Province of Newfoundland, have no direct job-creation program for students. That is the only way a student can further his or her education or return to school the following year.

Is the Minister now saying definitely that there will be a direct job-creation program by government for students next summer to replace the one which was just discontinued by the Government? The question is straightforward. It has nothing to do with private enterprise because many of these areas have no private enterprise. These are the poor about whom I am talking now, not students of rich families. I am asking the Minister point blank: Is she saying definitely that there will be a direct job-creation program for students administered by government next summer?

• (1600)

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am very well aware that there are disadvantaged areas and disadvantaged groups of people throughout this country. I think we have already shown our good intent in this regard by announcing some $430 million in direct job-creation programs for this winter. That is job-creation projects that were not placed on the books by the previous Liberal Government. They simply were not there.

I want to assure the Hon. Member with regard to next summer that we are going to be working out these programs during consultations throughout the next three months. I do not intend to announce today what the outcome of those consultations will be, but I can assure the Hon. Member that there will be programs in place for the summer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The last question by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the same Minister. The announcement was for $430 million Canada Works funds. Will the Minister indicate to the House whether that is over a two-year period or if it is just for one fiscal year, 1985-86? Second, she makes mention of the $1 billion fund for job creation in training. In answering this question, will she say whether or not the National Training Act, which we instituted, is going to be done away with and can she give a firm date as to when the $1 billion will be disbursed and how it will be disbursed? She makes mention of discussion and consultation, but the Canadian people would like to know when that announcement is made how the money will be disbursed.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, can I perhaps take the questions in reverse order. The $1 billion and the announcement thereof will certainly not be made until we have carried out the consultations with the other partners in the process. That is really what it is all about. I am hoping that these consultations will be carried out within a period of three months. That is what I am looking toward. I cannot tell the Hon. Member definitely at this point that they will all be completed by then, but that is generally the target.

The second part of the question had to do with the National Training Act. I have been in discussion with my provincial colleagues, the persons responsible for having signed the agreements on behalf of the provinces under the National Training Act. We have agreed jointly to the extension of the National Training Act for one year so that consultations can take place over that which will extend the National Training Act and make any modifications or changes to it that are seen to be needed.

With regard to Canada Works, that is for this winter. It began, of course, in 1984-85. The tail of it has to run over into the next fiscal year. That is because some of the projects which will probably be underway or getting underway January 1 will not be completed until into that next fiscal year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I would like to recognize the next speaker—

[Translation]

—the Hon. Minister of State (Youth) and Member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot.

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): First I would like to thank my fellow Members, who irrespective of their political affiliation, offered their congratulations on my appointment as Minister of State for Youth. I can assure them of my full co-operation and dedication. I appreciate their support, Mr. Speaker, especially since I will need it to fulfil the mandate I have been given by the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) to help the young people of this country.

I also wish to say a word of thanks to the people of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot for their trust in electing me on September 4. I want them to understand that despite my ministerial responsibilities, I will certainly be available to my constituents. I have also become a member of the rural caucus of my Party in order to serve the farmers in my riding more effectively.

I was very pleased that my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), announced that the increase in the price of gas will not apply to the gas farmers' need for their operations and that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) informed us recently that the Farm Credit Corporation would be stopping most of its recovery activities until next January 15.

My responsibilities as Minister of State for Youth will be exercised within the parameters by which my mandate is defined. I shall get back to these as soon as I have indicated the key points of my speech. These reponsibilities arise from the high priority placed by the Prime Minister on youth, a priority that will remain, despite budgetary restrictions that have become absolutely necessary as a result of the financial situation left by the previous Government.

The support every one of us has shown for youth is a good sign. In fact, this support will make it possible for us to approach 1985, designated by the United Nations as International Youth Year, in a spirit of co-operation and enthusiasm.

[English]

On September 4, the Canadian people clearly indicated their profound desire for a new approach. The Government has understood this message. We must all take it into account.

[Translation]

I think it was Picasso who said that it takes a long time to grow young. The problem is that young people do not have time to wait. At a time when words are often more powerful than ideas, they would not understand, nor would the rest of Canada, if we wasted our time.

My philosophy is one of optimism and realism. My optimism is tempered by reason and arises from my experience with young people, starting with my own children. This common sense optimism leads me to believe, for instance, that the majority of young people who succeed in our society can, through appropriate activities, have a beneficial effect, a snowball effect as it were, on young people who are less fortunate.

My approach to Canadian youth which, I might add, is more to be envied than pitied, generally speaking, as I realized not long ago at the Conference of ministers for youth and sports from French-speaking countries, held in Gabon my approach will, I hope, be a common sense one.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with the conference I just mentioned, I am pleased to announce, on behalf of my colleague, the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Vézina), that Canada will be hosting this conference in 1987. In Libreville the news was welcomed with enthusiasm by all participating countries.

[English]

I know my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), will agree with me when I say that in programs aimed at solving youth unemployment, for example, we must discard the shortsighted formulae and those that fail to take into account the training and work experience already acquired by those involved.

My colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), reminded us the other day in his eloquent statement that we must attack the roots of the problems facing us and not just the symptoms. Let me add that we will devote our efforts to co-ordinating our activities on behalf of Canadian youth with those of the provinces, the municipalities and the private sector. We will do everything in our power to make our programs compatible with the long-term development programs of the various regions of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I intend to realize these projects as part of the mandate I have been given by the Prime Minister. At the Department of the Secretary of State, I am responsible for co-ordinating the national activities program within the framework of International Youth year and for acting as a spokesperson for youth and for those who work with young people within the Government and Cabinet.

I accept this mandate with enthusiasm. I fully intend to be the spokesperson for young people. I will actively promote their interests and aspirations in the preparation of the Government's political orientations and strategies. I am already committed to that policy. If I am to fulfil that role properly, however, I must also speak to young people on behalf of the Canadian Government. I am anxious to listen to them and learn more about their problems and their achievements. I want to make them see me as a privileged spokesperson who will uphold their viewpoints and aspirations. I want to establish a close relationship with them, with their associations, with the organizations which serve them and with their major social partners in the private and public sectors.

Overly concerned about seeking solutions to their own problems, adults are often wont to forget young people and to leave them on their own. Those young people must regain their rightful role in the activities and the conduct of the affairs of our society. Where there is no such role, they must create one, and it is up to us to help them. Young people have every right to education, employment and decent living conditions. They must have adequate means at their disposal to ensure personal development and take part in the development of their community. It is imperative that they have their say in the decision-making process which involves them and has an impact on them. Those last three objectives are priorities for me and they will be the focus of my efforts in the coming months.

• (1610)

[English]

Youth in Canada today are really no different from their predecessors, even though living conditions have changed. Young people have always demonstrated their creative and innovative potential and have always played an essential role in the constant adjustments which our societies must make in order to adapt to new realities. In this way, they represent an active and positive force. Their unstinting contribution to society's institutions has two important benefits. On the one hand, it enriches the institutions and pushes them toward renewal; on the other hand, it represents one of the most fundamental investments in their future.

Youth's achievements are often more easily recognized in the highly visible areas of the arts, culture, sports and politics. Yet in the past they have contributed directly to our economic institutions, particularly in areas which have become central today, such as advertising, communications and high technology.

Young people represent a significant portion of our society. Almost one person in five is between the ages of 15 and 24. They generally enjoy good health and a physical condition that compares favourably with that of youth in a number of developed countries. They are more educated than they were in the past and benefit from the positive aspects of our age of communications. However, young people are affected by the insecurities, difficulties and restrictions facing our society as a whole. At a time when they are making plans for their future and the search for personal autonomy is a constant concern, all young people are extremely sensitive to the precariousness of world peace, the vagaries of the current economic situation and the significant shift in social values and behaviour.

Young people today are under an unprecedented amount of stress. For some, it becomes a source of innovation, exceptional achievement and excellence. For others, it is a source of serious problems that lead to isolation, use of drugs and alcohol, delinquency and even suicide.

A large minority of young people do not have equal opportunities to earn an income, nor equal access to jobs and training. Poverty is widespread among young people. As well, unemployment and underemployment among youth are particularly serious as they affect young people's confidence in themselves and their abilities.

Adults and especially our major political, social and economic institutions can do much for young people who are in difficulty. However, I believe that young people can do a great deal for themselves if they are given the means to gain a better self-understanding, to help each other and to use their know-how and creativity to improve their circumstances.

Young people are not a homogeneous group. They are not as readily identifiable with specific ideological and political trends as they were in the past. They are students, workers, entrepreneurs and unemployed people. They live in urban centres and remote areas. They are men, women, natives, disabled and people of different ethnic origins. However, a single important characteristic unites them. Having lived in a state of dependence on their families and social institutions, they are beginnig, and in many cases completing, their transition to personal autonomy. At age 15, 98 per cent of young people live with their parents, while the proportion is only 65 per cent at age 20 and 23 per cent at age 24. The transition to personal autonomy is crucial for young people and for society because it shapes the way in which youth participate in society, now and in the future.

Youth form a unique pool of human resources in a society and this alone is reason to pay special attention to their development and to potential obstacles to it.

[Translation]

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, my philosophy is based on optimistic realism. Any society must be particularly attentive to every new generation of young people. The vigour, the health and the future of any endeavour, whether industrial or cultural, can be judged by the quality and the commitment of those who bring new blood to it. The same is true for a society. I invite my colleagues and every Canadian to look at our youth from that point of view.

There are two other principles underlying my actions: one is a sense of equity and the other a search for excellence. All young people do not have the same potential. However, every youth must have all the opportunities to develop his own potential fully whether rich or poor, male or female, native or immigrant, and so on. Moreover, as a social group, young people must not be viewed as a separate class entitled to fewer rights. For instance, it is no more acceptable to pay a young person less than the minimum wage for his or her work than it would be an adult.

On the other hand, young people must yearn for excellence in their field of activity. Youth is by nature idealistic. This idealism must be encouraged, especially when it leads to creativity, challenge and excellence. These are the major principles underlying my action plan, which is threefold.

First, I shall continue to get involved with young people, with the groups representing them and with our social partners for the purpose of listening to their projects and discussing them, whether they be their own or whether they be carried out by governments or the private sector. My involvement will make it possible for me to examine existing means of action, especially in the various federal departments and agencies. I shall see what they entail and check, in cooperation with my Cabinet colleagues, to what extent they can meet the needs of our young people and how their efficiency can be improved. I shall also identify with them present shortcomings and the possibility of taking new initiatives to help young people help themselves.

Finally, I shall continue to hold bilateral meetings with my counterparts in the provinces and the territories, who are responsible for youth-related matters. I shall attempt to define with them the objectives which we can share and to ensure the relevance and complementary nature of our programs.

Finally, I will endeavour to ascertain whether there is any unnecessary duplication of our respective endeavours. I will therefore be in a position during 1985, the International Youth Year, to put forward specific proposals. They will serve as the basis for long-term planning for the young and will truly help enhance their involvement in all sectors of our society.

The International Youth Year is indeed a unique opportunity for youth to strengthen their self-image and potential, to pave the way for future generations. For us adults, it is a privileged period for improving our awareness of the youth fact, to communicate with them and to foster their integration into society.

I specifically and cordially urge all our young people and all those who are interested in them to take an active part in the celebration of the International Youth Year.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that if I seem to dwell upon the young people who are doing all right, I also care for the minority of young people—a minority that is always too large, whatever their numbers—who are facing tremendous difficulties. I have in mind the young unemployed, the young faced with poverty, whether they are workers or students, the young whose emotional ties with their families have been severed, those who are withdrawn within themselves and have lost all hope of better days ahead. They deserve special and first hand attention, because without minimum standards a person cannot grow and fully contribute to society. Were we then to stress the lot of these young people only, this might have negative effects, discouraging the young, making them over-conscious of the obstacles confronting them, leading them to ignore the enormous potential of youth generally, with or without problems. This might emphasize short-term solutions rather than solutions that extend in the future, or create a ghetto for the young people whose problems frighten the adult population and deepen the generation gap. This is why, in my view, an approach to youth must also set aside an important place for their creative achievements and contribution. A youth policy must address all of the young, and increase the potential of each and every one.

To summarize, I see my role at various, closely related levels. First, I definitely intend to strive during the International Youth Year to look for solutions that can improve living conditions for all our young people. In that sense, it is my belief that most young people who succeed will help the less privileged within their rank. Second, as Minister of State for Youth, I am committed to direct all of my energy to influencing federal policy orientations pertaining to social, political, cultural and economic activities affecting Canadian youth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions, comments.

• (1620)

[English]

Questions or comments. I would like to recognize the following Hon. Members, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall); the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong); the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez); the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie); and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), in that order.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I would like first to congratulate the Minister on her remarks. I would like to say how happy I was to hear those remarks because they were made with some degree of conviction. However, during the election campaign, the Leader of the Minister's Party promised "jobs, jobs, jobs", and I believe the Canadian youth responded to that and voted en masse for the Conservative Party. However, the Minister ought to know that it was revealed by StatsCanada that there are 600,000 young people unemployed. There are another 300,000 young people who are "officially unemployed" but who have not reported this to StatsCanada. Therefore, we are looking at crisis proportions, Mr. Speaker, with 900,000 young people unemployed.

My question to the Minister is: Notwithstanding her conviction to see something realized for young people in this country, does she not believe, as I do, that there is a credibility gap? On the one hand, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promises jobs—on page 9 of the Throne Speech there is mention of jobs—and on the other hand, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) cuts out most of the programs for Employment and Immigration. When will the young people of this country see some concrete, substantive action as opposed to more studies, dialogue and deliberation with the private sector?

I suggest to the Hon. Minister that young people want jobs; they do not want rhetoric!

[Translation]

Mrs. Champagne: May I say that I am somewhat disappointed, Mr. Speaker; I felt that since he appeared to listen to my remarks and to understand my deep convictions in this regard, my hon. friend would have been satisfied. I indicated very clearly in my speech that I would serve as the spokesperson for youth in the Cabinet and indeed I am the spokesperson for youth-related issues in the government.

Mr. Speaker, let me tell the Hon. Member that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) answered his question just a few minutes ago and that employment programs are her responsibility.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister on her speech. Indeed, if I were handing out awards, it would receive a very excellent rating because it is very rhetorical. Her speech contained some very lovely, high-flown phrases which mean absolutely nothing. The Minister says she will use the International Year of Youth in order to try to bring about a better understanding of the problems of youth internationally. However, can the Minister tell me what her role was when all the consultation over there was going on to eliminate what looks to me like a very interesting program called "The Young Workers' Exchange Program"? This was to allow international exchanges for young people.

If there is one thing we need in this country, and in this world, it is better understanding among peoples. One of the places we should start is with young people. I do not want a Pontius Pilate washing of the hands answer that the Minister is going to be a spokesperson. I want to know what voice the Minister had in the consultation. Did she demand from her colleagues that they ought not to eliminate what appears to be a pretty creative kind of program?

Second, all of these studies are now showing, Mr. Speaker, that there is a great correlation between unemployment and juvenile offences. This can all be related back to the fact that young people are not receiving the kind of dignity of being employed in jobs for which they feel they are gifted or in jobs they would like to do. How can the Minister responsible for youth sit there, Mr. Speaker, and wash her hands, saying she will only be a spokesperson? Can this Minister say what she is going to do within her Cabinet to get some of these programs, like the $85 million for the Summer Canada Program, into place before there are any more changes?

Mrs. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, I have a feeling that I am talking to deaf people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Champagne: I will try changing languages and perhaps that will help. As far as the exchange program is concerned, yes, we discussed it in Cabinet and found that some cuts had to be made, and part of that program was cut. He may ask for some more details of the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) under whom this program comes.

• (1630)

Mr. Rossi: You should know about it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order.

Mrs. Champagne: As far as employment is concerned, I think again the Minister for Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) answered the Hon. Member. I said in my speech, and I repeat, that my main responsibility right now is with the International Youth Year, and again in doing what I have done, maybe not always all that I wanted with all my heart to do, I had to agree, as did every single Minister, to some cuts somewhere because of the financial state in which we were left. Every sector had to be cut, mine included.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I also wish to congratulate the Minister on her very important appointment. The youth of this country are surely our most important asset and resource. I think every Member of this House agrees that there are some very serious problems facing young people today.

I must say that poor Pablo Picasso must be turning in his grave hearing himself quoted by a Conservative Member. But poor Mr. Picasso is gone and will not be able to rise and object. I am interested in the statement of the Minister in which she described herself as the spokesperson for youth in the Government. I am interested in what her position is on some of the issues of concern to young people, particularly funding for higher education.

As the Minister knows, there has been ongoing conflict between federal and provincial levels of government on how transfer payments for post-secondary education have been used for other purposes, such as building highways, by the provinces. In the last session, the Opposition Conservative Party moved a motion requesting the federal government to monitor how the provinces spent the money allocated for this purpose. Does the Minister believe the provinces should be held accountable for the money they receive from the federal Government for post-secondary education? Will she express these views vigorously in Cabinet?

Mrs. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made it very clear that all those subjects will be touched on during the meetings with the premiers of the provinces.

[Translation]

Certainly these are some of the subjects to be discussed at the meetings which we have scheduled for next week in Quebec and other provinces. I suggest that, together with the provinces and following consultations, the Secretary of State will be able to reply more conclusively.

[English]

Mr. de Jong: You are the spokesperson, what is your position?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) for a short, succinct question, please.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, with a spokesperson like the Minister young people do not need enemies, because she has failed time and time again in Cabinet to defend those things which are worth defending. Where was the Minister when the Government decided to freeze the Canada Student Loan Plan at present levels? Given the situation in which students find themselves, where was she then? Does she sit outside the door during Cabinet meetings or does she say nothing when she is there?

[Translation]

Mrs. Champagne: The Hon. Member is well aware that this program has not been cut.

An Hon. Member: Yes it has.

Mrs. Champagne: It has not been cut. Let me tell the Hon. Member that we are merely maintaining the amount which may be paid each week to the same level as last year. Where did the money go? The Hon. Member should ask his fellow Opposition Members!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now expired.

[English]

Before I recognize the next Member, may I bring to the attention of Hon. Members that earlier today during Routine Proceedings under the heading "Introduction of Bills", the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) introduced a Private Members' Public Bill to amend the Criminal Code. The seconder of that motion was stated as being the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). I have since been informed that the seconder of the motion was in fact the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). The record of Parliament will reflect this change.

I would now like to recognize the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, first of all, as most Members of this House have already done, I wish to congratulate you and your colleagues on your respective appointments. I would like to start my speech by thanking the people of Sainte-Marie for giving me a third mandate to represent their riding in the Parliament of Canada. Today, Mr. Speaker, I want to give them the assurance that I shall continue, as I have done in the past, to work together with the groups in my riding to improve the quality of life of my constituents.

As far as youth is concerned, despite the cuts made by the Conservative government in a number of programs that were not merely needed but desperately needed by the young people in my riding, I can assure them that in conjunction with the Action jeunesse office I set up myself in my riding, we shall continue to increase the number of services offered to these young people. These services include teaching them how to find that first job if only this government would stop raising unemployment; how to find out which subjects to take in high school; and we are also offering various kinds of recreational services.

As far as senior citizens are concerned, they may rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that as in the past, I will be organizing an annual seminar or meeting with all those responsible for taking care of senior citizens, while senior citizens themselves will have an opportunity to attend a meeting and find out about the various programs being offered by all levels of government to help this segment of our population to provide various services appropriate to their needs. I find this is also an opportunity to consult them, to find out about their concerns, and the Government has asked us . . . You may be sure that on February 15, I will have a meeting to inform these people about what the Government intends to do about the universality of old age pensions.

Mr. Speaker, although this Government unfortunately found it necessary to make cuts in subsidized housing, I intend to continue, with the co-operation of municipal and provincial representatives, to ensure that low-cost housing will be built in my riding, as well as co-operative housing projects to meet the needs of families, the handicapped and senior citizens. Mr. Speaker, I also want my constituents to know that right after September 4, with a community group from my area, we set up an organization that will provide advice and assistance for tenants in my riding who are faced with unreasonably high rent increases by a few landlords who are only interested in land speculation. These people may rest assured that they now have an organization that will defend their rights.

As for my role in the House of Commons, I can assure my constituents of Sainte-Marie that when the government introduces satisfactory legislation meeting their needs and expectations, I will support them. On the other hand, if programs, legislation and regulations detrimental to low or average income citizens are introduced, I will oppose them strongly and make sure that the government is fair in trying to meet their needs.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to refer to the throne speech. I believe, as you and most members in this House do, Mr. Speaker, that everybody was disappointed with that speech. After 20 years in the opposition, many seminars and conventions and the setting up of many committees, I thought, like the new Conservative members, that the Progressive Conservative Party would waste no time and have specific programs ready since they made so many promises and commitments. What do we find in the throne speech? Nothing. There is nothing for a million and a half unemployed, no specific measure for the young or for consumers, nothing about the housing policy, for single parent families, for farmers or fishermen and nothing about pension reform.

Why did Canadians vote for changes? They did so because hon. members opposite had led us to believe that there would be changes for the better, but they are for the worse. It is they who have deceived the public and not the other way around.

Mr. Speaker, everyone knows and all the polls show that Canadians believe the major problem in Canada is unemployment. However, the major problem for business leaders and high finance is the deficit. Who did the Conservatives listen to? They listened to the big wigs, the VIPs; and gave priority to the deficit. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that the party opposite ever intended to create jobs.

I have leafed through the throne speech, and I found it interesting in two places. When I read that the Government would organize a tripartite summit attended by labour, consumer and employer representatives, I thought that they would finally be able to discuss solutions to the unemployment problem. Not at all. It says in the speech that they will be meeting to determine how the few workers who are left can become more productive. The major purpose of this meeting is not to sit down and discuss how to reduce unemployment. Such a meeting could have provided an opportunity to consider using early retirement to help reduce unemployment. Those involved could have considered using unemployment insurance funds to allow 60-year old workers to retire and make room for young people or for those looking for a job. They could have studied the union recommendations for shorter work week to create more jobs. They could also have discussed work-sharing and many other suggestions. However, the first item on the agenda is the economy and how to reduce the deficit. There is only one good thing in the throne speech, and it seems that this Government is unable to do things to the full even when it tries to do well. I am referring to the spouse's allowance for widows and widowers between 60 and 64. What I do not understand, is why single people are penalized. Why discriminate against single pensioners? Why penalize pensioners who are separated or divorced? Why did the Government decide to do so?

I believe that the Minister should have done something for all of pensioners between the ages of 60 and 64 who live alone whether they are widows or widowers, single, separated or divorced, because they all have needs. I trust that he will because I have confidence in the Minister. In fact I believe that only one or two members of the Cabinet will defend low-income citizens because all the others belong to the financial establishment.

Mr. Speaker, I always maintain that a picture is worth a thousand words, that a cartoon speaks for itself. Just what is the Speech from the Throne? Well, I have here a cartoon featured in the November 6 Journal de Montréal which shows the Governor General reading the Speech from the Throne. It is a blank piece of paper, and that is what people think of the Speech from the Throne.

And now, the mini-budget. If we keep in mind the promises and commitments of this Government, what does it contain? Higher taxes, fewer jobs, more unemployment, more lay-offs, and 2 cents more for a litre of gas.

When I saw the election results in Quebec, Mr. Speaker, I told myself that we had a champion of gas station operators, the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) who took up the fight of small gas station operators against the multinationals. I thought that the Government would at least have one man to speak up for low-income people. However, I saw him rise and praise the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for increasing prices!

What is going on, Mr. Speaker? What is going on? I saw him on TV not so long ago when he said that the multinationals would be cut down to size. He was the one who was cut down to size in a hurry, Mr. Speaker. I have heard that he got into a new business and bought a Mr. Muffler franchise. He got a contract to muffle 57 Quebec members.

Mr. Speaker, who will pay the increase in unemployment insurance benefits and various services made available by the government? The consumers will. Let us now have a look at the cuts. We should never forget that this government has promised jobs, jobs, jobs. What have they done for our youth? First, the student loans program for students, a rather negligible program, will be reduced by 5 million dollars. The minister has just referred to that and said that it will remain at the same level as last year. But indexation of income tax tables for the rich will be maintained. To do otherwise would be shameful. Students are not rich so they will remain at the same level as last year. School fees as well as transportation costs will not be increased any way, despite the increase in oil prices. However, the Exchange Program for Young Workers is not really important, so it will be abolished and so will the Summer Youth Employment Program with a budget of $85 million because it is unimportant.

Mr. Speaker, I woulk like to read into the record a letter from the chairwoman of the school committee of a polyvalente school in my constituency concerning Summer Canada projects. I quote:

Dear Mr. Malépart:

Having read newspaper reports on cuts in Summer Canada projects for the coming year, I want to tell you that I am shocked by the Government's decision to cancel those projects. Having done volunteer work as member of a school committee over the years, 11 years to be specific, I can say that a good many of our students have been able to attend Cégeps or universities through such projects, which allow them, within a short period of time, to earn the money they need to pay for their registration, textbooks and transportation over a certain period. I would therefore ask you to forward to whomever it may concern our representations for the continuation of Summer Canada projects. Because with the current high unemployment and uncertain future opportunities, we deem it important that the people in this constituency, mostly young people, keep on hoping by furthering their studies. I want to emphasize that as a parent I have done volunteer coordination work for 34 young people working on projects and if I had to go through that experience again I would do so, because I can say that, had they not worked this summer most of them would have had to stay home in September because their parents could not afford the cost of attending Cégep or university. It is my hope that the decision is not final. Expecting good news for our students and parents, I am,

Yours truly,

Micheline Mathieu
Chairwoman
Home and School Committee
Polyvalente Pierre Dupuy

So much for what has been done for our young people.

Let us turn now to our workers. A moment ago, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) emphasized the importance for people who are 55 years old to adapt to technical changes through manpower training. That is all very well, but given that the available resources have been cut by some $40 million, she could have dispensed with that speech. Some $40 million less for on-the-job manpower training! Some $300 million less for unemployment insurance benefits! They have found someone who could collect $600 in unemployment benefits for a couple weeks. Fancy that! The executioner from Treasury Board said: It is outrageous! Let's save this amount for the presidents of our major banking establishments. It does not make sense.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister brags about consultation, even in that field. A company in my riding sought the agreement of the union and decided that, instead of laying off 60 employees among those with little seniority, it would urge workers aged 55 or more to take early retirement, and it offered them a cash settlement for leaving their jobs, in addition to allowing them to draw benefits from the private pension plan. But with the new measure, those people stand to lose $12,000, so they are quite reluctant now. As a result, young employees with little or no seniority will be laid off, yet 126 people had willingly agreed to go on early retirement. That is just another senseless measure taken by this Government.

When it comes to housing, Mr. Speaker, social housing does not weigh heavily in the balance.

In the City of Montreal and surrounding areas, some 15,000 applicants are waiting to move into low rental units, $9.6 million. Residential rehabilitation: the RRAP program had gained wide acceptance throughout Quebec, but all the Conservative Members from Quebec rose to cheer. I can hardly wait to see them face to face with the mayors. I can hardly wait to hear what they will reply when the mayors say that rehabilitation is fine, but who is going to pay for it? The people will pay, or else the city will be left with slums because this Government has decided to shelve that program.

The Minister responsible for housing sent us a press release full of statistics about the decline in rental housing starts. True, he said, we will look into that, it is important, the situation is deteriorating. He did look into it—he cancelled the program and withdrew $7.8 million. Who wants a press release! But that is not all, those cuts are only part of the picture. Quebec Members from the Lac-Saint-Jean region are aware of the $80.5 million cut in the Natural Gas Laterals Program. I can just see them telling their constituents that they support that. Then there are projects in the riding of Trois-Rivières, in the riding of Lotbinière, $4.9 million, and the Members . . . The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) tells me that they have been consulted. Fair enough, cut those programs out, there is no unemployment in our ridings.

And now, the National Capital Region. The National Capital Commission had several projects, but it so happens that the projects which have been dropped were in Quebec. The Members from the Quebec side of the Ottawa River rose and cheered, Mr. Speaker.

Another $3.5 million . . . The Vieux-Port in Montreal, the marina in Chicoutimi, VIA Rail cuts, all those projects were slated for the western part of Montreal and would have created jobs. Mr. Speaker, I fully expect that certain Members will wake up at the next caucus, because the people will give them an earful. I referred earlier to the cartoons dealing with the minibudget or the Throne Speech. I have another one with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), above the caption: Ladies and gentlemen . . . and showing knives stuck in all the various expenditures the Government has decided to slash.

Concerning commitments, I would have understood that that party could not implement all its promises; this is normal. They could have done so over four years. But the shame of it is, they did the exact opposite of what they had promised. I would like to quote from an article by Gilbert Lavoie published in La Presse in 1979. 'From an about-face to another, election promises are made to be broken, said John Crosbie'. He is a Tory, and I am happy to see Quebec Members say: 'Yes, I fooled the people at home and I am happy.'

The Mulroney Government is no exception to the rule. It reneged on universality for social programs, which was held as a sacred trust by the Prime Minister during the election campaign but they are now preparing to throw that overboard. Mr. Mulroney and his ministers have tried to rebut the charge of reneging on one of their election promises; only, they forgot to agree between themselves on how to explain that. The Prime Minister admitted during a news conference that he promised not to tamper with universality, but he denied having reneged on his word, saying he was merely launching a public debate. One hour earlier, the President of the Treasury Board had said the Government was not tampering with universality because universality has been abolished with the introduction of child tax credit for needy families and the guaranteed income supplement for certain pensioners.

On Friday—according to Mr. Lavoie—the Minister of Finance had another explanation. He suggested Mr. Mulroney had only promised to maintain the universality feature of social programs for the less privileged. When the reporters appeared to be taken aback, the Minister, being a true gentleman, abstained from insisting. Such were Gilbert Lavoie's comments in La Presse. Mr. Speaker, not only were they satisfied with delivering a minibudget, but after creating unemployment and taking money away from the people, they put all that together and said: We are going to bring down their earnings, we are going to put them out of work, then six months after we are going to hire them back. From what we have saved, we will use a billion dollars to create jobs.

But there is something which is not bad which they have decided to do concerning new directions for Canada. Again, I thought they had promised to create jobs, but the title of the document is An Agenda for Economic Renewal. If that party had truly wanted to create new jobs, the title would have been "An Agenda for Economic Renewal and Full Employment". But this is merely window-dressing. There are two points which I should like to discuss concerning the so-called sacred trust principle governing social program universality which the Prime Minister and this government insisted upon. I, for one, deplore the approach of this document which aims at fostering a class war between Canadians earning $10,000, $20,000, $30,000 or $500,000. When the Prime Minister wonders if a person earning $500,000 should be collecting family allowance—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

I regret . . . Questions and comments? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette).

Mr. Bissonnette: Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who has been elected by his constituents for a third term, although I deplore his negative remarks concerning the Government. I should like to ask him what he thinks of the $1 billion job creation scheme which is being offered under the Canada Works Program and which has been made available thanks to a better administration. What do the Hon. Member and his constituents think of this program?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, if only the Government had made available $1 billion of new money, but it is $1 billion which has been taken away from the poorest among the poor to create jobs, and the Minister has not yet defined whether the unemployment insurance money was paid to . . . Is it the rich people who are collecting unemployment insurance benefits? How about the student loan cuts? A cut of $85 million from the summer jobs programs for students? Are these rich people? What about the 2 cent increase on gasoline and fuel oil? The Minister is not likely to get hurt in his pocketbook. But the single parent family in his own riding will certainly be hurt.

On the other hand, to reply to his question concerning the $1 billion for job creation, what kind of jobs is it going to be? The Minister has stated that he would make no announcement, but it will be probably some kind of tax incentive for employers willing to hire young people. You know that thousands of businesses are not unionized. What is going to happen? They will lay off people 55 years of age and save money hiring young people. That will be the end result of your policy.

Mr. Chartrand: Mr. Speaker, I do not have a question for the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), but I have a comment to make.

As was pointed out by my colleague from Saint-Jean (Mr. Bissonnette), I am concerned to see that the Hon. Member has only negative things to say on behalf of constituents who are entitled to be well represented in the House of Commons.

As for me I simply want to comment on two points related to job-creation for young people. I am sick and tired of hearing that, in years past, the Opposition party boasted about creating a whole lot of jobs for young people. Recently, when I received the grants already allocated to my constituency of Verdun-Saint-Paul, I realized that these grants which were supposed to go to students for summer jobs were simply a continuation of Canada Works grants from past years. And who received them? I investigated and realized that most of them went to friends of the party. It so happens that I decided this year to advertise in the regional newspapers, and this had never been done before. I had never seen, in Western Montreal constituencies, advertisements saying that grants were available. I do not know if this was the case in Eastern Montreal, but in Western Montreal, this had not been done. As I do not want to take time away from other Members, I shall simply add that 11 times more applications were submitted this year and I have $300,000 more to give. Therefore I think that the money is coming from this Government. Our Government is doing this and I do not see any evidence of a cutback. Jobs will be created in the small constituency of Verdun-Saint-Paul, and there will be at least 150 of them because, for once, a Member of Parliament is working with groups of people and public servants instead of ordering officials to help his friends.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just insulted you once again. Last year, you were already a Member of Parliament and you were responsible for distributing these—

An Hon. Member: In the Opposition.

Mr. Malépart: In the Opposition or in the Government, it is the same. It is about time you should learn that. I think that the Hon. Member is wrong. As for creating jobs for the students, they do not need permanent employment since they only have two-month holidays. When you were a student, you had two months of vacation, from May to September. That is when students need jobs. These jobs were important not only to help students make money, but because of the practical experience they could acquire in their work environment. Whatever the agency involved and even if this was an extension of another program, the purpose was to help the student, and the agency served the people. It is time for you to learn your job.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer).

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the speech of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). It was not difficult to understand. It is clear that the Hon. Member proudly and strongly objects to unemployment, but I am not asking a question, I am making a comment, my friend. He speaks with the pride and enthusiasm of a neophyte who has just discovered a new problem. I wonder if he still holds the same opinion as when he sat on this side of the House. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the Hon. Member is reflecting the views of his constituents with such a negative attitude about our new $1 billion program for job creation and whether he could set forth some concrete ideas and better suggestions in our national debate on unemployment.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member's three questions. With respect to his first, namely if I had the same attitude when I was on the other side, I would say yes because if during the worst recession, the Liberal government had enforced your policies, we would not have a million and a half but four million unemployed. Within the caucus, some members like myself and some of my colleagues have fought and instead of reducing the deficit, the government created jobs to prevent undue hardship. That was the first question.

The Hon. Member then asked what were my suggestions. You said that you listened carefully to my speech. Suggestions have been made. Union leaders say that we should discuss reduction of working hours as a means to create more jobs. Would it not be worthwhile to set up an early retirement policy, to lower to 60 the retirement age so that the young could gain access to the labour market? There are many solutions and instead of challenging the universality of programs, it may be more advisable to deal with taxation.

• (1700)

Yesterday, I mentioned the tax indexation table. Who benefits? The rich. One billion dollars . . . The income tax indexation table . . . A bachelor with an income of $7,500 saves $54. But a bachelor with an income of $100,000 saves $460. That is where they should get the money to reduce the deficit. Why I am so negative? Well, my constituents seem to think I do a good job, because in spite of the Conservative landslide, they put their trust in me, while as far as you people are concerned, anyone running for your Party would have been elected.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): More questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, upon rising in this Chamber, the symbol of our democracy, I am filled with emotion. On this occasion, while I am both very proud and very pleased to be making my first speech as the Member representing the riding of Lotbinière, I also feel some apprehension and at the same time a great deal of confidence in the future in undertaking my duties as a parliamentarian. Mr. Speaker, it is with great joy and enthusiasm that as a citizen of this great country, I am ready to help find solutions to the problems that will be facing us, nationally, provincially and within our respective ridings.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to congratulate you on your appointment. I am sure that you will conduct the proceedings in this House with discernment, justice and equity for all. I should be grateful if you would also convey my congratulations to the Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley), the Speaker of the House. Perhaps the Hon. Member remembers his visit to the riding of Lotbinière. In any case, the people of Lotbinière remember a bilingual gentleman, who is both fair and forthright, and also his quick wit and brilliant intellect, his absolute honesty and his parliamentary experience. My congratulations also go to all Members of this House who were able to win the confidence of their constituents and who are sitting in this Chamber at the beginning of this thirty-third Parliament. I am sure that we, the class of 1984, will benefit from the experience and advice of these senior Members.

Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the tradition, I would like to thank my constituents in Lotbinière for their confidence in electing me as their representative in the House of Commons. I can assure them that I will devote all my efforts and energy to state their views and their claims in Parliament. I would also like to congratulate the Canadians throughout the country who have made a sound choice when they heavily supported the representatives of a government of national reconciliation, for it is in those terms that the newspapers and other medias describe the new era announced in the throne speech. National reconciliation is what people seek at this juncture and Canadians have said so clearly in the last election. National reconciliation calls for change or renewal in many fields. Current priorities, as set forth in the Speech from the Throne, are designed to meet our requirements: economic renewal, social justice renewal and constitutional renewal.

Using my riding of Lotbinière as an example, Mr. Speaker, I intend to depict briefly our current situation with respect to employment, economic conditions, agriculture, federal-provincial relations, youth or senior citizens associations. Everywhere, people are worried.

Lotbinière is a huge riding on the south shore of the St. Lawrence River. Our population is young despite the exodus towards more challenging labour markets. It is a partly urban, partly rural area. We have aggressive farmers, and some have the best dairy farms in Canada, but they also are worried. They have things to say to the federal Government. They remember that in the past they have been ignored at times, forgotten at other times, but they have been hurt by legislation and regulations passed without being consulted. They were quite often victimized by high-handed decisions coming from above, and certainly they are happy with this new Government's attitude. I am therefore committed to be a strong and efficient spokesman, and I feel sure that this new spirit of conciliation will be beneficial to all.

Certainly I will not forget our hog, poultry or grain producers who also at times are at odds with a finicky government. All these people getting their living from the farm are entitled to the decent income and the job security the Government can provide them through just and fair legislation.

Several other types of producers and breeders may also be found in my riding, Mr. Speaker, and in Saint-Apollinaire we have one of the very few rabbit abattoirs in Canada. This goes to show that people in my area are not afraid of going off the beaten track in order to break new ground and show their vitality in that area so vital for our economy. Whether it has to deal with a dairy producer in Warwick or a grain grower in Saint-Edouard-de-Lotbinière, our government will make it its duty to be equal to his expectations. The Speech from the Throne indicates very well the spirit in which we will work in the future with local operators.

Mr. Speaker, in my riding we also have a very large number of small and medium-sized businesses. Incidentally, one of our communities, Daveluyville, has the largest number of industries per thousand inhabitants in Canada. But those industries, once thriving, have been hit hard by recession. The preceding government's policies have also contributed to their downturn. The employment crisis in the Bois-Franc area, in the very heart of the riding of Lotbinière, is almost tragic.

The clothing, wool and textile industry which used to be the pride of Victoriaville, same sort of a regional metropolis of the Bois-Francs, is near bankrupcy. Just two years ago, that industry still employed over 4,500 people whereas today it barely survives with only about 1,000 jobs. The largest clothing manufacturers in the area were forced to close down.

As well, Victoriaville used to boast about being the capital of the furniture industry which has now almost disappeared from the area taking away the means of living of a specialized manpower.

Such disrupting facts about the economy of my region have been brought to light during various economic conferences held in the Mauricie-Bois-Francs area. We now have a chronic rate of unemployment which, for the past two years, has been twice as high as the average rate in Canada. All those who took part in the economic summits held in our area have been unable to find a sound solution to our problems.

Voters in our region seem to have found the answer, Mr. Speaker, in the trust they placed in the Members of the Government, which public opinion has already described as the Government of national renewal. The hopes of small businessmen are now raised because obviously the policies of the Progressive Conservative Government will favour the private sector, which is the motor of a healthy and dynamic economy. Our regional economy, which was based almost exclusively on soft sectors such as wood and clothing, certainly needs clear and specific policies. It also needs a general sense of vigour which will make it easier for consumers to purchase Canadian products of excellent quality.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Victoriaville area is the industrial core of my constituency. During the last few years, many industries have had to close down and to lay off hundreds of able and hard-working employees.

To solve this problem, the former Government chose to create temporary jobs leading nowhere. But, my fellow citizens are proud people, and like all Canadians, they want lasting jobs; they want to support themselves and their families with dignity without fear of going on unemployment insurance every three months. These are probably the reasons why so many community agencies were created; in other words, people have organized effectively.

The expectations of the Lotbinière voters will not be left unfulfilled by this Government or by their Member of Parliament.

Along with the sad regional economic situation, there is anxiety on the part of the farming class in Quebec. The milking industry and maple plantations constitute the basis of that farming industry. Regretfully I must remind the House that there is a problem in this area in that producers are complaining about cost increases.

[Translation]

I should mention as well, Mr. Speaker, the role of the State in the generous distribution of its wealth through so-called job creating grants.

In this regard, I wish first to refer to a view expressed in a report published in La Presse on November 6, 1982, about the role of the Welfare State. One can read in this report those very wise comments, and I quote:

> The State has grown out of proportions. It has overwhelmed in too many areas personal initiative and hence created an excessive dependency, thereby undermining all inventiveness, mutual help, family and community solidarity, etc. Group, class and regional interests have replaced sharing and mutual aid.
> Community organizations and intermediary bodies have a particularly meaningful role to play in restabilizing our society.

During these times of economic and social crisis, we must support any local initiative intended to help people in need and to strengthen the life lines of the community.

Mr. Speaker, these are basic principles that we will put into practice when allocating the available funds of the State, which must cease to be viewed as the welfare State. Those who control the distribution of these funds or programs must not be guided by political capital considerations. The general interest must prevail at the time of the allocation over the particular interests of any individual or political group.

I will now say, Mr. Speaker, a few words on the federal-provincial constitutional relations as they stand in my province and in my riding. It is no secret that there is constitutional disagreement between the different levels of government in our country. It is inconceivable to think that Quebec is still not part to the constitutional agreement. It is also inconceivable to see that the federal and provincial MPs of our region have not been able to co-operate in order to implement joint programs in the best interest of their constituents who are all full-fledged citizens of the same nation, Canada.

[English]

I am very happy to note the atmosphere of national reconciliation between Ottawa and Quebec and better relations among all government Departments.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to congratulate the Hon. Prime Minister who, faced with the concerns of young people, has appointed a Minister of State for Youth to deal specifically with their problems. This is an initiative that my constituents approve of.

I would also like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the wish expressed by the Fédération des personnes âgées du Québec, which has 175,000 members in Quebec and whose former President, Mr. François Urbain Roux, lived in my riding of Arthabaska. Their message, reprinted in the paper Vie nouvelle de l'âge d'or, in the October 1984 issue, said in particular and I quote:

> We ask you, Mr. Prime Minister, always to consult with the senior citizens of Canada before making any decision concerning them, because the builders of yesterday deserve the consideration and attentions of their sons, today's leaders, as the full citizens they continue to be.

I want to tell this House that senior citizens, their club with the largest membership of more than 2,200 in the province of Quebec being in my riding of Victoriaville, are concerned, and they would like to see a renewal in the social justice measures concerning them. I am assured that this government will be able to take their claims seriously. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to talk about the expectations of my constituents, and particularly about the hopes they put in this new government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Minister of State for Small Businesses Mr. Bissonnette.

Mr. Bissonnette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay) for his speech. You will have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that the value of the candidates recruited by the Progressive Conservative Party is most impressive. The Hon. Member for Lotbinière spoke of young people, older people, poultry producers and other very interesting issues. He also mentioned the industry and all the other concerns in his own riding. You certainly noticed, Mr. Speaker, that his remarks were thoughtful, straightforward and positive. That kind of attitude has not been prevalent up to now. A new government with new blood and such fine young men and women is indeed capable of achievements.

Mr. Malépart: It is somehow strange that the Hon. Minister gets $40,000 more just to congratulate his colleagues in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to put my question to the Hon. Member whom I want to congratulate for his statement. The Hon. Member may have been here when I had asked a question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). He told me that he had consulted with you about the delay of the project in your riding and that you agreed with him. The same thing was said of the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent). Therefore, I would like to know if it is a fact that the Hon. Member asked for your agreement.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) for showing an interest in the problems faced by people living in the riding of Lotbinière. However, considering many things he said in the last few days, I find good reasons to doubt his concern for my constituents is genuine. Moreover, I must add that I have acted without waiting to be consulted. I decided to take the first steps on my own. In fact, in the document tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), you may find that, possibly because of my intervention, what is mentioned is not a cancellation but a delay until further studies are done.

I would like to deal with something else, Mr. Speaker. I am rather amazed by the bragging from the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie. He is talking about the plant laboratory in my riding as if it were in existence. In fact, that project was supposed to be implemented over several years and be completed only in 1987-88.

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. It being 5:30 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 42(4) to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment.

Mr. James, seconded by Ms. Jacques, moved:

> That the following Address be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada.
>
> To Her Excellency the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, Member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.
> MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:
> We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), seconded by Mr. Gray (Windsor West) moved:

> That the following be added to the Address:
> "But this House condemns your advisors for their failure to demonstrate leadership and to provide plans for immediate action in the creation of tens upon tens of thousands of new jobs."

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

Before the taking of the vote:

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Before we proceed to the vote on the amendment, with the consent of the House I am going to try to explain the procedure we are going to follow. We are now dealing with an amendment to the main motion. Therefore, I have some assumptions about who may be voting in favour of the amendment. Given that assumption, the vote will begin with the Right Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition (Mr. Turner). We will then proceed in the normal way with that Party, starting with the Hon. Member closest to me.

Making an assumption for the moment about a potential other Party's interest, we will begin again with the Leader of the New Democratic Party and we will then proceed from the front bench to the back bench. If that Party were to vote against the amendment, we would deal with it after we have dealt with the Government.

Now we get to the complicated part. We will begin with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). We will then proceed as is normal, starting with the Member closest to myself on the front bench, then continuing with Members on the second bench, the third bench, etc. We will then proceed—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: You should try to figure out how the Clerk Assistant feels! We will then begin with the opposition Member closest to me on this side and we will call out the names of all the Members on the front bench voting that way. We will do the same with all the Members on the second bench voting that way, etc.

An Hon. Member: Would you say that again?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if everyone would accept that I have said that twice?

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)) which was negatived on the following division:

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Wednesday, November 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak for the second time within four House working days. Perhaps it augurs well that someone who sits in the very back row, the most elevated row in the Chamber, has the opportunity to address this Chamber. I reflect on the words spoken here one time by a friend of mine, Sean O'Sullivan, who was a Member sitting in the far reaches of this Chamber. He once said that any seat in the House of Commons is a good seat. This is a very special place and, as I sat here in silence before the Chamber began its session this morning in this almost cathedral-like setting, a place that carries still the imprint of earlier Canadians, I thought of famous distinguished Prime Ministers like Macdonald, Borden and Diefenbaker; but I thought equally of men and women who came from different parts of Canada to represent their constituents. Perhaps many, if not most, are now long forgotten, but in their time they came and spoke and through their words and actions helped to build this country and create a reality from nothing but a dream.

Sir, to be here on my own wings is very special. I have for a long time been around legislatures. My father, Robert J. Boyer, was for 17 years a member of the Ontario legislature. I worked in these precincts for Heward Grafftey when he was a Member of Parliament, and later for the Hon. Robert Stanfield when he was Leader of the Opposition. I also had a stint at Queen's Park working for the Attorney General of Ontario, Arthur Wishart. It was a great learning experience but now, as I say, to be able to come into this famous Canadian House of Commons and have my own seat from which to address other Members is a great honour and something that I will treasure for as long as I am sent here by the electors of Etobicoke-Lakeshore.

Indeed, Sir, I recall coming here with my late mother, Patricia M. Boyer, many years ago and sitting in the gallery. I guess at about age 12 I formed the dream that some day I, too, might sit in this Chamber. I just thank God that I live in a democratic country where we, men and women, have the freedom to follow our dreams. Through the democratic process, with help and perseverance, we can help make things happen in our political system.

I am not the first person with the name Boyer to be in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker. There was Louis-Alphonse Boyer who was born in Montreal in 1839. He was a lumber dealer and operated a model farm at St. Lambert. In fact, he was mayor of St. Lambert before being elected to this House in 1872. He was a Liberal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boyer: Then came Gustave Benjamin Boyer. He was born in St. Laurent in 1871. He was a journalist and a public lecturer on agriculture for the Quebec Government. He was founder and editor of Écho de Vaudreuil and he was elected to this House of Commons in 1904. He, too, was a Liberal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boyer: There was another Boyer, Arthur Boyer, who never made it to this Chamber, although he was a Senator in the other place. He was born in Montreal in 1851. He was president of La Canada publishing company and he too, as the Hon. Members opposite will be happy to hear, was a Liberal.

• (1110)

But now, Mr. Speaker, things are afoot in this country. Times are changing and I am very happy to stand in the House bearing that same name, not as a Liberal but as a Progressive Conservative—the first Boyer. This reflects the profound change in the country. It is a sign of the times. There is some question whether my name is pronounced "Boy-er" or "Boy-yea". I was born at Bracebridge in central Ontario and the other day—

[Translation]

—a CBC reporter asked me whether my name was pronounced "Boy-er" or "Boy-yea", and I answered that it was a perfectly good bilingual name for a bilingual country. Either language works with a name like mine.

[English]

By whatever name I am called, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure Hon. Members opposite will find many names to call me during the time I am here, I am proud to be the Member of Parliament for Etobicoke-Lakeshore. It is an honour to represent the men and women of that riding and I shall treat their support for me as a trust.

On September 4 the government of this country was overthrown by lawful means. As I have written in one of my books, Political Rights, we Canadians too often take for granted the liberties and freedoms which we enjoy in this country and the working of our democratic process. That we were able in this country to change the government by lawful and peaceful means is something we should not pass by too quickly without reflecting on what it tells about the degree of civilization and common understanding of orderly government that we have achieved in this country.

Turning to the Throne Speech itself, Mr. Speaker, it does set a clear course. It does contain strong themes. It shows that we are launched on a new era of national reconciliation, economic renewal and social justice. There are three principles that will govern all which the new Progressive Conservative does in the weeks, months and years ahead. It does not, as many Members of the Opposition have noted, contain a specific shopping list of item after item. Those who have wailed and complained and been concerned that some specific detail was omitted should not be alarmed. The Government needs, and Canadians want, a theme, a philosophy, a coherent approach, a blueprint for action, not just a hodge-podge of programs. The details will come in time. At the outset of this new Government, Mr. Speaker, it has been fundamental to say clearly that the course we are on is one of national reconciliation, economic renewal and social justice.

The financial statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) reflected many hard choices which had to be made. I campaigned on deficit reduction and therefore I applaud the approach taken in the financial statement of the Finance Minister. I also campaigned on jobs and I applaud the approach of the financial statement in that regard as well. With respect, Mr. Speaker, I have heard a lot of silliness in the debate. Does anyone in Canada, including anyone in either of the Opposition Parties, honestly and sincerely believe that our Government does not want to create more jobs? Of course the Government wants to create jobs. The goal of everyone in the House is the same, to create jobs. The issue and the debate is on how to create them. Our answer is through economic recovery. That is one of the principles which will underpin the measures that will come before the House in the months ahead.

Before leaving the economic statement I would like to reiterate that in taking the tough approach which he has been forced to because of the size of the deficit, at the same time the Minister of Finance has demonstrated a great deal of compassion. The deficit will not be reduced on the backs of the poor, the seniors, or the unemployed. In fact, those groups are benefiting under the Finance Minister's program. The spouses' allowance will be extended to all widows and widowers aged 60 to 65. That is one of the issues upon which I campaigned in Etobicoke-Lakeshore. Further, veterans' pensions will be improved. The sum of $1 billion will be set aside to create new jobs in 1985-86, not in make-work programs but in meaningful, long-term jobs.

I have been in the House virtually every day and have listened with care to what Opposition Members and indeed Members of my own Party have said. I have been amazed to hear the great concern expressed by the Liberals and New Democrats about what is the Government's number one priority. They want to know if it is deficit reduction, jobs or the status of women. It is talk such as that which leads me to believe that those Members believe that only one matter can receive priority attention from a government. In fact, we have 40 Ministers and incredible bench strength. We can deal with peace, employment, economic equality for women, tax reform, parliamentary reform, jobs and deficit reduction at the same time. This Government does not need to have a single focus and indeed it has not. We are planning to move on many fronts.

Universality of social programs is indeed a sacred trust. This has been the subject of some discussion in the debate so far. Our Party stands today as committed as it did when the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker set the course for our Party and said that the means test is "the meanest test of all". There will be no means test. The pensions that are available to seniors in this country stand intact and will remain intact.

The Throne Speech also carries into greater definition the number of themes on which I campaigned in the summer election of 1984. I would like to quote some. In material that was distributed in Etobicoke-Lakeshore, I said:

> Although Canada is the No. 1 country, there is much we can improve. There is unfairness and injustice here. There are special tax benefits for the wealthy and powerful. There are neglected people. There is still poverty. The language issue has been exploited for Liberal party partisan purposes. There are good Canadians working hard to improve themselves and their country but who are struggling to overcome problems and procedures which the bureaucratic mentality in Ottawa has imposed on them. There is a serious lack of national unity. There is too much emphasis on materialistic issues and we have overlooked the spiritual side of our existence, and those deeper values which unite us all in freedom as our brothers' keepers.
> We must restore a proper sense of patriotism to this land. We must support the family—
>
> Our religious institutions.
> —and human dignity.
> We must play a positive role for world development and pursue peace through strength.

The new Government stands astride the Canadian mainstream. Those who feel that the new Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) represents some kind of Reagan North or a Canadian version of the Thatcher approach in the United Kingdom mistake the knowledge and abiding traditions of the Progressive Conservative Party.

In the time ahead I will outline more about the theory and the philosophy of our Party. Today, I will refer only to a speech that I gave some 15 years ago at Sault Ste. Marie which was then reproduced on page 7 of The Globe and Mail. I stated at that time that our philosophy is based on the continual tension between its two fundamental traditions. On one side a basic foundation is the tradition of order and authority. It is this side which embraces peace, order and good government. The other foundation, equally important in supporting this philosophy, is the libertarian tradition. This is the side that embraces freedom and upholds freedom of the individual especially. Clearly, the philosophic superstructure built on traditions of stability and liberty is by definition always at conflict with itself. There is always a creative tension between the two.

This is the true meaning of a Progressive Conservative philosophy. Those who are dumbfounded by the combination of progressivism with conservatism must be unaware of the inherent contradictions within human nature. They perhaps are the ones who have sought an overly simplistic solution through socialism or liberalism. But those who are aware that man implies contradictions look for a political philosophy that embraces this dichotomy. They will find it in Progressive Conservatism as long as we do not err too much in favour of either tradition. When we emphasize too much the tradition of authority and order, the philosophy becomes repressive. When we forget about the tradition of order and think only of the libertarian tradition, we become anarchists. A Progressive Conservative stands equally on both founding traditions: order with liberty, liberty with order. This provides our working framework within which issues can be debated and resolved.

The riding of Etobicoke-Lakeshore is in so many respects like every other part of this country. On September 15 when Constable David Dunmore was shot and killed in our riding, this did not change but merely reinforced the attitude which most of my constituents and I share about the need to have the restoration in this country of capital punishment in cases where that is required. We have in this country a range of crimes from theft of a 25-cent newspaper all the way up to murder and assassination. We also have sanctions to fit those crimes ranging from small fines up to the most serious sanctions that can be applied. I think that in light of the time we have now had in Canada without capital punishment, this Parliament should consider in a free vote the restoration of capital punishment so that in cases where, after due process of law and trial before a jury, a person has been found guilty of first degree murder, a judge has the option to impose that sanction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boyer: There is a great deal more I would like to say, Sir, and the temptation for any Member in his or her first speech is like making a Dagwood sandwich—, you are hungry, you are just at the fridge and you want all of it at once. I am sure though that in the time ahead there will be other opportunities.

Let me say that I shall represent the men and women of Etobicoke-Lakeshore with all my mental and physical energy as a supporter of the Brian Mulroney Progressive Conservative Government. I shall strive in every way possible to bring about a new era of reconciliation, of economic renewal and of social justice. Always I shall fight for fair shares to all and special privileges for none.

I come to this Thirty-third Parliament as the Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore with a heart that feels pride in Canada, with a spirit that is at once optimistic and tempered by realism, with ears to listen to all points of view expressed here, with a mind that I shall try to keep open to weigh the possibilities, the proposals, and the contending ideas brought before Parliament, and with a tongue to speak here not of personalities or of prejudice, but of policy and of principle.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

• (1125)

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) reiterated the claim of most members on the Government side that jobs were a very high priority of that Party and of that Government. However, we note in the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that he announced substantial cuts in funding for research, for forestry, for fisheries and for agriculture. These are three of the most basic industries which employ hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens. In all these fields we are in very tough competition with other countries. In the private sector these industries have been noteworthy for their failure to involve themselves or to do very much in the way of research. These cuts will mean lay-offs of hundreds, if not thousands, of permanent employees doing very important work for the people of Canada. They are permanent jobs of people who work for the federal Government.

How does the Hon. Member square his claim that the Government is committed to more jobs with these cuts and their effects on research?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is very important because it throws into sharp relief, for the benefit of the House and everyone listening to the debate, the fundamental difference between the approach of the New Democratic Party and the approach of the Progressive Conservative Party toward the issue of creating jobs in Canada. In fact, in a moment I will say something about the position of the Liberal Party.

Our view is that long-term and meaningful jobs have to come from the private sector. We cannot spend government money to create jobs in ways which are not authentic or indigenous and growing out of an organically strong economy. Our approach is to do all that we can to foster economic renewal in the private sector.

No one here for a moment is pretending that research and development is not important. We are asking a fundamental question: At this time in Canada's evolution, does the spending on that have to come from taxpayers, or can it not better come from those in the private sector who understand what is moving and motivating the complex operation of the world economy? They know where new research needs to be done and applied in the production of goods and services.

We have sent a very clear signal to the country. The debate so far on the part of the New Democratic Party is well grounded in the traditions of that Party. I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) the other day when he talked about limits to growth and the whole approach that we have to put absolute clamps on the free enterprise economy because of the destruction it allegedly creates for the environment.

My view—and I think it is the view of our Party—is clearly that we can do more, including on environmental issues, with a dynamic, active economy than when matters are stagnant. Certainly the people who are the workers of the country, given that trade-off between jobs and environment, know their priority. We want to get the economy strong. We want to get the country into a high level of productivity. From that vantage point, we will be able to do a great deal more.

• (1130)

It does come to the point where somebody has to start asking hard questions. This brings us to the spokesmen for the Liberal Party and the distinction which is clear between our Party and the New Democratic Party. That is now uncertain when it comes to the Liberals, whose principal spokesman, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), and leading spokesmen of that Party, have time and time again said that deficit reduction is important. Yet we have heard from so many individual members of the Liberal caucus who have stood up with a book and pointed and said: "Well, this has been cut, this has been pared, cuts, cuts, cuts". They are going in one direction when it seems that all of Canada and the new Government, which at long last is in phase with the mainstream of Canadian thinking, is going in the opposite direction.

The Liberals, who have been opposing all of these cuts no matter where they come from, reflect an attitude that is absolutely out of phase with the whole spirit that is now burgeoning in this country as we try to formulate the right blueprint for economic renewal. The Canadian people, who spoke so eloquently on September 4, continue in their eloquence to respond to pollsters and have now recorded their popular support for the Liberal Party, which is going in the opposite direction from this Government and the rest of the country, at an all-time low.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member serious when he says that he is concerned about the poor and underprivileged and that he will not do anything to hurt them? He supports the cuts that were announced the other night, one of which was for social housing in the amount of $9.6 million. Is he suggesting seriously that, if you cut that amount, it will be picked up by the private sector, that the private sector is going to finance housing at a loss? I am thinking of senior citizens, the handicapped people and the poor. Is the Hon. Member serious when he tells us that? How do we make up for that housing? The document put out by his own Government states:

> These savings will be achieved through unit reductions and program modifications.

Is the Hon. Member telling us that this country can tolerate unit reductions in social housing for senior citizens, the handicapped people and the poor? Is that what he is telling us?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks if I am serious. I have never been more serious about anything in my life. The volume with which the Hon. Member asked his question, in spite of the fact that we have amplification equipment in this Chamber, reminds me of the preacher who wrote beside part of his text "argument weak, shout loud". Another metaphor is the inability of the Hon. Member to see the forest for the trees. He is looking at specific items here and there.

Let me ask him whether he and his Party were serious when they were telling the Canadian people that deficit reduction was fundamental to get this country back on the right track. If they believed that when they said it, how can they in conscience come and lament, protest and grieve over individual, specific cuts? The proposals that the Minister of Finance has announced for seniors, veterans and in other programs that will be coming forth will show that this Government does not lack for compassion. Indeed, compassion and a care for ordinary men and women of this country is right at the heart of the traditions of this country.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has not answered the question. I referred to a specific cut of $9.6 million for social housing. He has not answered that question. The reason I am upset is that I have some social housing projects in my riding. The people there are very concerned that these projects will be sold to the private sector and they will be thrown out on the street. That is why I am concerned. The Hon. Member is right, I am very upset. The Hon. Member said in his remarks that this is not Reagan North or Thatcher East. I would like him to tell us why it is not. It looks like we are going in that direction. People who are in social housing are very concerned that this will be thrown in the hands of the private sector. What those opposite are all saying is: Let the private sector do it.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to propose a question to the Hon. Member on a different tack. Perhaps he can explain this to me. I do not understand the Government's logic in making cuts to the budget of the National Research Council, the solar industry, wind and so on, on the mistaken assumption that they are somehow soft or leftish or something like that. Most of this money is being channelled through the NRC to private companies. The Government is going to cut all those private companies at a time when we are starting to take off in a real high technology area of the future. It must be that the Minister never really looked at what he was doing with these cuts.

I would ask the Hon. Member to comment from a different point of view, that is, on the very high-tech, logical, private sector approach that the Government seems to want to take. Why is it making these kinds of cuts? Does the Hon. Member really see any logic in the cuts? I do not see it there.

Mr. Boyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think the logic is called elimination of the middle man. If the Hon. Member is telling me and this House that the private sector is benefiting from these funds and is interested in having those projects go ahead, then let us assume that that requirement, need and demand exist in the private sector and that if they cannot be on public funding, they will find funding elsewhere. There comes a point when parliamentarians owe it to Canadians to say that year after year, decade after decade, a lot of good programs have been put together, each one of which on its own made some sense and seemed to be fulfilling a certain important role—and we have reached that point because we were sent here by the Canadian people to come here and fix it up. The Government must stand back and look at all the individual programs, as a package and say: "This represents the Government of Canada today; it is off track, it is out of phase". Of course, there will be difficulty when individual programs are cut or eliminated and the interest of some to protest is understandable.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Standing Orders provide for a ten-minute period for questions and comments. It has now been 13 minutes, and I would therefore ask the Chair to apply the Standing Order as written.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is correct. The Chair tries to get as many questions as possible into this ten-minute period, and we had a question at the ninth minute, but in any event, the Hon. Member's remarks are well taken.

We shall now proceed with—

[English]

We will now resume debate.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to enter this debate. It is particularly interesting to follow the Member who has just spoken. He is an old friend from years past. His political philosophy has clearly somehow been misled somewhere along the road.

I want to begin, as any new Member should, by expressing a sense of gratitude to the people of Essex-Windsor for giving me the chance to serve as their spokesperson in this House of Commons and to bring before it some of the issues of concern and importance to them. I do so with a sense of considerable excitement about being part of the new era which this Parliament represents.

• (1140)

I should say, Mr. Speaker, that all of us new Members of Parliament are a bit like people tossed into the middle of the lake and told to start to swim. We are not quite sure yet which shore to swim toward. However, give us a few months and, along with the Hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), we will be raising difficult points of order and giving the Speaker a difficult time.

Today I would like to talk about the realities that we face in the economy of 1984. I would like to talk about the industrial policy challenges which I believe the Throne Speech has ignored. I want to talk about some of the wrong directions in industrial policy which I see being taken by the early initiatives of this Government.

When we speak of the realities of 1984 in Essex-Windsor and elsewhere in Canada, we must first speak about what we all went through in the last election campaign. I believe that I and my colleagues are here because the ordinary people of Essex-Windsor and of other parts of Canada wanted to make a strong statement of concern about what has been happening in this country as well as make a statement of hope for the future.

I would like to describe to the House some of the people for whom I feel I particularly speak. I would like to describe the young man who lives in Essex, one of the small towns in my constituency. He is a graduate of university and had worked hard to put himself through school. He had looked for work for over nine months and met me at the door of his house with a profound sense of discouragement and demoralization.

I would like to describe the young woman who lives in the Forest Glade suburb of Windsor. She met me on the street as she set out in her sixth month of looking for work in that city. She was still going out with a sense of determination to try to find a job but also with an increasing sense of desperation.

I would like to describe to the House the small businessman who lives in Amherstburg. He is someone who had made a living selling Canadian crafts and had employed five people. He found that the interest rates of the previous government had killed his business and at the same time killed his dreams.

Finally, I would like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I speak for pensioners who live in places like the Remington Park section of Windsor. I spoke to some pensioners in their back yard about the way that price increases and real decreases in pension levels had led to their facing a situation in which they did not even have the money to be able to afford trips to Toronto to see their grandson. These ordinary, hardworking Canadians are the people for whom this country should be working. They are the people who built this country and they are the people who, in 1984, are being victimized by the way in which this country's economic directions are being set.

At the moment, Mr. Speaker, unemployment statistics for Windsor show us that there are 14,000 people officially out of work. That is up from the 13,000 who were officially out of work a year ago. There are over 21,000 people on the rolls of the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission. The challenge for all of them and for all of us is to make our economy work again, to set right the economic mistakes of the past régime but also to respond to the emerging problems and challenges of the 21st century.

There are many aspects to the meeting of this task. As chairperson of the economic policy committee of the New Democratic Party caucus, I can say that we as a Party will be addressing a great many of those different aspects in the months ahead.

Today I wish to focus particularly on industrial policy and on the desperate need that we in Canada have today to build a solid industrial base—to provide jobs for the young, to give prosperity to small business and to give security to the old. Industrial policy does not mean government control or central planning or prejudice against the private sector. It means all of us working together in this small, open economy in a very difficult world environment, aiming to focus our scarce money and bargaining power where we can use it in building an efficient, modern manufacturing sector that can meet our present needs and expand our exports and our jobs. In this kind of small economy, it means seeing that the Government plays an important role as the catalyst, just as is the case in Japan, Holland, Sweden and Italy.

What priorities do we see for this exercise of government leadership? First, we think there have been some interesting examples in this country in the last few years of business and labour working together to suggest new directions for particular sectors. One of the sectors in which this has been done most dramatically is the automobile sector.

I have with me today the report of the federal Task Force on Automotive Strategy for Canada. We feel that it is crucially important that the Government proceed on the recommendations of this task force, first because this is such a key sector in the Canadian economy, and second because it is a fascinating example of employers and workers getting together and working creatively to give us some sense of new direction. This is an excellent example of the kind of co-operation of which the Government has been speaking. It is also important to the jobs of the people not only of Essex-Windsor but of many different parts of the country. The automobile industry is no longer concentrated simply in Ontario but includes activities in British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Quebec and other provinces.

We feel that it is crucial to proceed on the recommendations of this task force report in the following way. First, we should set up the automotive council called for by the report. The previous government said a number of times that it intended to set up that council but it never in fact proceeded to do so. Second, we feel that the commitment of this report to Canadian content in the auto industry should be put into effect immediately. Third, we feel that the present import quotas on Japanese automobiles coming into this country should be maintained and strengthened as a bargaining tool to achieve that Canadian content goal. If all of this takes place, it is quite clear that we will be talking about creating 40,000 to 50,000 new jobs in this country.

Second, Mr. Speaker, we need a flexible financial framework to assist other industries as well as the automotive sector to modernize, to restructure and to expand into new product areas so that they can meet the difficult competition to be faced on the 1980s and the 1990s. As for ourselves as a Party, we believe that this requires a shift from the tax write-offs which have been the method of operation in the past. However, we also feel that the program for industrial and regional development which was adopted in the last Parliament was a useful initiative in the kind of direct interaction between government and the private sector that we need to reach our goals.

Third, we believe we need initiatives at the community level. Here I would like, Mr. Speaker, to endorse the initiatives which have been taken by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), to establish constituency advisory boards for the Canada Works Program. Certainly in our constituency this will provide a useful way to receive community input on ideas and suggestions for the future.

Fourth, we believe there must be further efforts to expand certain key sectors in our economy, and we think here particularly of the machine manufacturing sector. The CDIC, which the Government now seems to be committed to winding up, was about to be used as a vehicle to do that in the case of mining machinery. We would seriously urge the Government to look again at the issue of selling Eldorado Nuclear Limited to see if it could not be used instead as a vehicle to help move us into the manufacturing of mining equipment here in Canada.

We are no longer talking, Mr. Speaker, about a clean slate on the Government side. It has started to take initiatives and those initiatives now must be judged. It seems to me that the initiatives that have been taken this past week in fact have taken this Government off in the wrong direction with respect to industrial policy. Nothing shows this more seriously than the cuts made in the industrial and regional development program for next year. Details have now been provided by the Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) who has indicated that $525 million will be cut over the next three years for this program of partnership with the private sector.

The details of these cuts have now been given to us by the Minister and there are five key and dangerous program changes which have been made. First, no more modernization and expansion support will be provided to industries in half of this country, including the Cities of Toronto, Hamilton, Halifax, Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon, Verchères, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver. All of these cities could previously receive help; it is now no longer possible with these changes. In short, Mr. Speaker, where the industry is, support will not be given. I feel that says dangerous things about the possibilities of modernization and expansion of our industrial base in this country.

Second, there will be no more help for business climate studies. We in Windsor, for instance, used such help to improve the response time for small tool and die makers who are aiming to adjust to new technological innovations. Cuts will hit other similar parts of the country.

Third, all tourism projects have been cut. I should tell Hon. Members of the Conservative caucus that many of these tourism projects are in important parts of the country which they now represent, including New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario.

Fourth, all levels of support for anything have been cut throughout the country, by half for most projects, by one-third for projects which deal with innovations.

Fifth—and this is most crucial of all, in my view—every single restructuring project in the industrial sector has been cut out of possible support. That is where a firm wants to invest to adjust to changing competitive conditions or to produce new or more competitive products or services. That is precisely the kind of thing we must do for the future, yet it is precisely that kind of project which can no longer be funded by IRDP. For example, over $60 million was given by the federal Government this past year to the new American Motors Corporation plant in the constituency of the Premier of Ontario. Such support will no longer be possible as a result of these changes.

In fact, the cuts for 1985-86 are fully one-third of planned expenditure. In the first nine months of the operation of this program, we find that 381 projects were established. These new rules brought in by the Minister would have cut out 69 of those projects, which amounts to over 41 per cent of total funds. At an average cost per job of some $9,500 per year, these $525 million in cuts, therefore, will cost this country 55,000 jobs over the next three years.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, there must be a political alternative to this kind of butchery. The New Democratic Party represents that political alternative, an alternative which aims not to damage the private sector but to provide partnership and leadership to the private sector in the future.

Mr. Nickerson: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the New Democratic Party get its act together. The Leader of the Party is going around condemning the Hon. Member who has just spoken is a plea that the same so-called corporate welfare bums be given more and more money. I just wish, Sir, that those Hon. Members would get their act together and talk with one voice instead of several.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker I suspect it is typical for Hon. Members to pay somewhat less attention than they should to the speeches of new Members. However, I must say that what I was talking about is precisely the kind of approach which we, as a Party, have been advocating. It is an approach which says that any support provided to private sector industries must come with a commitment to certain numbers of jobs.

As the Hon. Member I am sure knows, that is precisely what happens in all Industrial and Regional Development Programs grants. Each company which receives such support must make a detailed commitment to the government of the kinds of jobs to be provided, where they will be and the training which is associated with them.

We have looked at this program and it has received our support and, indeed, it received the support of the Conservative Party as well when the Bill went through the House of Commons in the last Parliament. It would take us into partnership with the private sector, a partnership where we knew we would get results rather than the kind of partnership in some sort of dark paper bag, which happens when you hand out tax write-offs without any guarantee of a return.

In the first nine months of this program, as I stressed, some 35,000 jobs were established by the funding provided. I stress again that 41 per cent of that money could not have been given under the rules the Minister has now brought forward. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I stress to all members of the Conservative caucus that my constituency is not affected. Essex-Windsor remains one of those constituencies which will continue to receive grants under this program. But one half of this country, most of it represented by the Conservative Party which previously could see industry getting support for modernization, expansion and restructuring to meet the challenges of the future, will no longer be able to do so. I urge members of the Conservative caucus to make sure that at their next meeting they raise with their leadership the crucial and damaging cuts which are going to hit their people.

I might say the press release which detailed all these changes was given out on a Friday afternoon. When I worked in the Press Gallery we were particularly suspicious of press releases on Friday afternoons, especially before a long weekend. This was because they were Friday afternoon bad news press releases which would be ignored. I urge members of the Conservative caucus to look up the press release, look at the detailed changes in it, and see exactly how damaging to them and their communities these changes actually are. Perhaps then they will join me in some of the criticisms I am making instead of criticizing me.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on his maiden speech and welcome him to the House. Obviously he has been here before, I guess sitting in that hallowed position up there in the Press Gallery. I was glad to see that he does agree with us in most areas.

Ms. Mitchell: You were not listening either.

Mr. Gauthier: He does not listen too well, does he?

Mr. St. Germain: I was listening. That is the trouble with you Liberals; you never listen to us and that is why we have the problems we have in this country.

The Hon. Member points out that we have to make changes, and we agree. We made the changes that were required. I do not know the Hon. Member's background from a business point of view, but I think he will have to agree that the problem in this country is that there have been too many grants handed out by that crew over there that sits to his right. They have given the entire country away through grants, but we have brought back a sense of fiscal responsibility.

The reason there are no jobs is that we are suffering from high interest rates brought on by the Liberal Government's deficits. I would like the Hon. Member to address the problem in business, which is high interest rates. It is not a question of shortage of grants, it is a situation where interest rates are so high business cannot expand and create jobs. There is no point getting a 30 per cent grant if you are going to go broke anyway. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on why he does not concentrate on the real problem, that being high interest rates.

Mr. Waddell: We have raised that for a whole year.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am particularly delighted to have the Hon. Member's support for the NDP's strong fight against high interest rates. I hope that at the same time as members of the Conservative caucus raise the details of these damaging IRDP cuts, they will also urge their Government to do something about high interest rates. Certainly at the moment real interest rates remain, as the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has stressed, at the highest levels we have ever seen in this country.

I also want to indicate strong agreement with the Hon. Member in his criticism of the previous regime. That regime in fact was responsible for the economic mess in which we find ourselves today. But we have to ask what is the direction to follow in dealing with that mess. I would express a very sincere and non-partisan sense of strong disappointment that this Government seems to have moved in the wrong direction. That direction does not build on potential partnership to restructure and modernize our economy in a way represented by the IRDP. Please, let us see a strong effort throughout this House to rebuild our economy rather than tear it down, as these changes by the Minister threaten for the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and comments is now over. We shall proceed with debate.

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have waited 51 years for this very moment to rise in the House of Commons of Canada and address such an august body in my maiden speech. With your permission, I would like first of all to extend my sincere congratulations to you on your appointment, as well as to the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) on his election to the distinguished yet difficult position as Speaker of this assembly. I feel confident, as do my hon. colleagues, that he will do justice and honour to himself and this House.

I would also like formally to express my heartiest congratulations to the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) spoke most admirably and struck what I believe is the proper tone for this debate. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Ms. Jacques), in her eloquence, did further justice to this debate in her remarks as seconder of that motion.

In addition to being very proud of having the opportunity to serve in this House, I am equally proud of being the Member of Parliament for Scarborough East. The riding came into existence in 1968 and is the most easterly riding in Metropolitan Toronto. I personally moved to that area nearly 40 years ago, and although my hon. colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), may slightly disagree, I must say that I have had the pleasurable experience of observing its development from farm land and narrow roads where my father and I regularly towed the milkman and the baker from the mud to what today is a modern suburban area. Scarborough is geographically compact compared to so many vast areas in Canada, but it has swelled to 100,000 people and is still growing very rapidly.

The City of Scarborough itself is the seventh largest city of Canada, as well as at present the fastest growing city in Canada. In 1982 the city issued $244 million worth of building permits. In 1983 it issued $491 million worth of building permits, more than double that of the previous year. I can only surmise that for the remainder of 1984, and certainly for 1985, with a Conservative Government in Canada our expansion will increase even more dramatically.

The riding of Scarborough East is proud of some very unique and outstanding landmarks. The Scarborough bluffs rise over 200 feet from Lake Ontario and are not only world famous but have been studied by geologists for decades. My hon. colleagues from both coasts of Canada may also be surprised to know that some of the best salmon fishing in the world takes place off the shore of Scarborough East riding in Lake Ontario.

The Guild Inn is also world famous and has been honoured by the presence of countless heads of state and governments from many countries. Its grounds consist of over 90 acres on Lake Ontario. Its rooms and halls are alive with priceless sculptures, paintings and historical documents and antiques. Last year the Guild Inn celebrated its fiftieth anniversary.

A building in Scarborough East, Mr. Speaker, which strikes even closer to my own heart is Centenary Hospital. I have had the privilege of serving on its board of governors for the past five and one-half years and have thus been in a position to observe first hand the tremendous struggle which this hospital, and certainly many others like it, is having merely to survive each year let alone expand.

Centenary is a 520-bed hospital which serves a large geographical area. Unfortunately, the tremendous population increases in Scarborough, to which I alluded earlier, have made its facilities grossly inadequate and an expansion program is now under way. This is a $30 million expansion program at a hospital which is running into debt in each year of operation.

Its problem in raising money from the public is simple. Centenary Hospital is not famous, although that will be somewhat alleviated after my speech today. Centenary Hospital does not perform heart transplants or other rare and sensational procedures frequently noted by our ever vigilant news media. It merely heals the sick day in and day out without much of the publicity it deserves. As an example of its service to the community, Centenary Hospital had more than 18,000 admissions in its 1983-84 fiscal year and treated 64,600 cases in its emergency department. I stress these figures since I know that all of my hon. colleagues in the House who do not have a hospital in their riding will wish to return to their constituents and urge them to support Centenary Hospital's expansion fund.

I have attempted to provide a broad overview of Scarborough East, Mr. Speaker, because only in that way is it possible for all of us to perceive the relationship of these 100,000 individuals to the Throne Speech and subsequent financial statement being debated in the House.

Scarborough East enjoys the mosaic extending from thousands of young first home owners to thousands of senior citizens, all with one common thread of interest. They all have dreams of attaining different levels of success and comfort. Only last week these dreams became so much closer to reality for all of them after hearing the Speech from the Throne and the Hon. Minister's financial statement. They all have more confidence in both their country and their futures than they had just a few months ago.

The Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, and most especially the subsequent financial statement, was an indicator to this nation. It was an indicator which will restore the confidence necessary to create the jobs we need and reduce the massive deficit which I am sure is the top priority in the mind of every Hon. Member in the House.

The $1 billion allocated for immediate job creation is certainly a welcome message to Canadians. However, of further importance is the attitude which has been established by the economic statement. That attitude is instilling confidence in the minds of businessmen across this country. It is the attitude of confidence, Mr. Speaker, which will, in reality, create even more jobs coast to coast. Companies which have been wallowing in uncertainty over the past few years will now invest in higher technological equipment. They will invest in the expansion of their plants where necessary, and the result will be jobs for thousands of Canadians.

I sincerely envy my hon. colleagues who are fluently bilingual in Canada's two official languages. I hope to become functionally bilingual during my next 16 years in the House.

It has troubled me greatly over the past few years that Quebec did not join with the other provinces of this great country in signing the constitutional accord of 1981. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the inclusion of Quebec in the Constitution of Canada can and must be an attainable goal of our Government over the next four years. If the encouraging views and comments from the Premiers following Tuesday's First Ministers' conference with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is any indication of a new era in federal-provincial co-operation, I believe the Prime Minister will set in motion the necessary negotiations to achieve this undertaking. Mr. Speaker, I want my colleagues on both sides of the House to know that I will support the Government and do whatever I can to ensure that this necessary and vital aim is achieved during the lifetime of this Thirty-third Parliament.

My personal background has been in education for the past 31 years. For that reason, I am deeply interested in the youth of our country and their future. I am particularly pleased that the United Nations has declared 1985 to be International Youth Year whereby member countries from around the world are to place special emphasis on the role of youth in their respective countries. I am pleased further, Mr. Speaker, to announce that in an open letter to the young citizens of Scarborough dated July, 1984, the mayor stated the following:

> On May 28, 1984, the council for the City of Scarborough, by special resolution, established the Scarborough International Youth Year Task Force to develop and co-ordinate this city's celebration and participation in the United Nations International Youth Year, participation, development, peace, 1985, for all youth ages 15 to 24.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, may I say I join with all of the constituents in Scarborough East in the sharing of a vision of Canada not unlike that held by Sir John A. Macdonald. Sir John A. Macdonald had a vision and knew that this country could be great. We have come a long way. We have achieved greatness in many ways, but we have a long way still to go. Mr. Speaker, I pledge my support to help in every way possible, and to work with each and every Member in the House, for what is best for Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? Then we will proceed with debate.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, although we are technically debating the Speech from the Throne, it is fairly evident that the real document that we are discussing is the financial statement tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last Thursday evening. While the Speech from the Throne was a very bland and superficial document, the financial statement tabled by the Minister of Finance finally showed to the House and to the country the real intentions of the Conservative Government. This morning I will discuss both documents because it is essential that we discuss both documents together.

As I said, the Speech from the Throne is a bland and superficial document. It is filled with slogans and motherhood statements which very few people can disagree with. Who can be opposed to reconciliation, consultation or greater productivity? Who can be opposed to many of these goals and principles which were spoken of in the Speech from the Throne? I examined the Speech from the Throne very closely and found that there was really only one specific proposal for legislation in that document. That was with respect to the spouses' allowance. That is a good proposal and we will support it. Of course we will want to see the details, but in general that is a good proposal.

I recall during the election campaign when the Leader of the Conservative Party was talking about his program and what he would do if elected. He kept referring to certain matters as if he was not at all familiar with what had happened in the House. For example, he said several times that they would set up task forces whereby Members of Parliament would be able to participate in the process of government. Mr. Speaker, in the last Parliament we had at least nine or ten task forces on very many subjects. I was the chairman of the Task Force on Employment Opportunities for the Eighties. There was a task force on alternative energy. There was a task force on the problems of the handicapped. There was a special committee on pension reform. These special committees were similar to the task forces. These were special committees on Indian self-government and acid rain. This bright new idea of task forces which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has introduced is one which was very much with us in the last Parliament.

The first item mentioned in the Speech from the Throne that we are led to believe is a bright new idea is the establishment of a parliamentary task force on the reform of the House of Commons. I participated with members of the Conservative Party who did a very good job in a special committee that examined parliamentary reform for more than one year. We examined every aspect of parliamentary reform and tabled 10 reports, only one of which has been acted upon on a temporary basis. Many of us hope that those temporary measures will become permanent. But that was just one of those reports. That committee has already dealt with such matters as how to make Members of Parliament play a more independent role in the House and how to make committees more effective. Since there are so many conservative members, it appears that starting over with a new task force is only a means to occupy the time of Government members in makework projects.

I was a member of that special committee on parliamentary reform last year and I will therefore be pressing very strongly that the new committee begin by implementing those reports to which the Conservative members gave their unanimous support. Three of those Conservative members on that committee, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn), were on that committee. I suggest that the Government House Leader and our House Leader (Mr. Gray) should develop a way to implement those unanimous reports so that the whole process need not begin again.

Let us examine other proposals announced in the Speech from the Throne. The Government announced that it was in favour of official languages and official language minorities. While that is laudable, it was a former Liberal government that set up the royal commission on official languages and, against great opposition from some members of the Conservative Party at that time, passed the Official Languages Act. It has been trying to fine-tune it for some years now. We are pleased that the Conservative Party with its new Leader now stands behind official languages. When it appears in the Speech from the Throne, it is almost like motherhood.

The new Government also stated in the Speech from the Throne that it wants a constitutional agreement with Quebec. We all want that. The original constitutional proposals put forward to the House by former Prime Minister Trudeau included such things as a veto for Quebec, which it always had and wanted. But that proposal was torpedoed not only by the Péquiste government in Quebec but by many of the provincial Conservative governments in this country. As a result, I believe that we have a weaker constitutional document, unfortunately, without Quebec. If we determine who was responsible for that, it certainly was not the previous Liberal government under Prime Minister Trudeau.

The Government then says that it will honour the commitment to Canada's aboriginal peoples as contained in the Constitution Act of 1982. The only commitment contained in the Constitution Act, 1982 is to hold two more conferences.

Why does the Speech from the Throne not mention a commitment to Indian self-government? Such a commitment was recommended in the unanimous report of the special committee to the House to which Conservative members gave unanimous support. As a matter of fact, a present member of the House was co-chairman of that special committee on Indian self-government which gave that unanimous report. The new Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has said that he favours Indian self-government and that this will be his goal. However, it was not mentioned at all in the Speech from the Throne.

The Government also stated that it believes in the legitimacy of the trade union movement. While we are pleased to hear that the Conservatives finally declared their belief in the legitimacy of the trade union movement and consultation with trade unions, it is simply another motherhood statement. The Throne Speech contains other such statements. It was a very bland and superficial document that did not tell us very much. It did not contain very much with which anybody could disagree.

However, it was the Thursday following the Throne Speech when we finally saw the true intentions of the Conservative Party. We finally saw the Tory colours being flown high and bright. The financial statement included a promise to cut expenditures by over $4 billion through the elimination of some programs altogether and a substantial cut-back of others.

It is traditional that the Throne Speech outline the proposals of the Government for the upcoming session. The Throne Speech, except for one item, was rather vague and superficial in that respect. The real intentions of the Government were shown in the financial statement.

There were many proposals that were not mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. It is well known that we compiled a list of all the promises that were made by the Conservative Party during the election. It amounted to 338 promises for a total of $4 billion. These promises were not all made on a national basis. Some where made in individual constituencies, like those made by the Conservative candidate in my constituency. Some promises were made to certain regions of the country in order to gain votes and cajole the people of those ridings. We saw very few steps to fulfil those promises in the Throne Speech. The issue of spouses' allowance is certainly one example. I approved of that policy. However, what happened to those 338 promises which amounted to $4 billion? When will the Government fulfil those promises?

The Government has said that when it came to power it discovered that it would not be able to implement those promises because the cupboard was bare. The Government stated last week that it has discovered that the deficit will be approximately $34 billion. During the election campaign the Prime Minister and his many candidates were saying that the situation was much worse and that the deficit would be $36 billion. They campaigned for election on the basis that the country's finances were in an awful mess, that the deficit was worse than they admitted it to be the other night. Yet they made those 338 promises that were worth $4 billion. That figure of $4 billion was given by the Prime Minister toward the end of the election campaign. I suggest it is another sign of deceit for the Government to come before the House and the Canadian people and say that it discovered that the cupboard was bare. They knew the facts when they made their promises.

During the election campaign the Conservatives made promises in three categories. They made promises for change. I attended some five all-candidates' debates with my Conservative opponent and tried to pin him down on what he meant by change. Did he mean a return to the type of Toryism that we saw for a whole summer when the Conservative Party fought against the new Canadian flag, or when they fought against the Canadian Constitution and the entrenchment of the Charter of Rights? Does he mean a return to the time when they fought against medicare and the initial implementation of other programs? By change, did he mean a change to the past, to that kind of Conservatism?

We did not know what was meant until the financial statement last Thursday. We now know that it is a change to the Arthur Meighen Toryism of the 1920s, to the dismantlement bit by bit of the institutions that have been built up in this country. Although the Government announced $4.2 billion in cuts, it says that more are coming in the spring. We have finally discovered what sort of changes the Conservatives had in mind.

The Conservatives also promised that thousands of jobs would appear immediately after the election. We are now told that they do not have a specific plan at the moment for creating those jobs and that it must be developed in consultation with the provinces, trade unions and business. While that is understandable, why did they not say that before the election? At that time they gave the impression that they already had a plan for job creation. It is now apparent that they had no plan or blueprint for job creation, just a pious hope. Many people would like to see more jobs. I hope the Government is successful in devising a plan through consultation, and members of the Opposition will help in devising that plan.

I hope that in these task forces, special committees and commissions we will have as much input, since we are elected Members of Parliament, as all other Members. They should be listened to but so should we.

The Conservatives made 338 promises which entail specific spending. In other words, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), often says, they were, unlike him, speaking out of both sides of their mouths at once. The Tories were going to cut the deficit and spend, by admission of the Prime Minister, approximately $4 billion on those promises.

With respect to the financial statement of the other evening, a previous debater from the Conservative Party said that the Government would not cut the deficit on the backs of the poor, just as we had said. We said we were interested in curtailing the deficit and doing something about it—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: It is on the record. As a matter of fact, we were accused just a minute ago of being in favour of that. We are in favour of that, Mr. Speaker, but not in the way the Tories have set out. I have forgotten which Hon. Member opposite repeated a minute ago that he did not want to cut the deficit on the backs of the poor or the unfortunate. When I asked him about the $9.6 million cut in social housing—and for anyone who does not know about social housing, it is housing for senior citizens, for our lower income families, for one-parent families, for mothers who have been abandoned and so on—what did we hear? How does the Hon. Member explain it? Certainly those are the unfortunate in our society. The Hon. Member said he would not support cuts that hurt them, but that procedure will hurt them.

Let us look at some of these cuts. I would like to have an explanation at some stage as to how these cuts will not hurt someone. Even the CBC has a $75 million cut. One might say that we do not really need the CBC that much. But I do not know how one can cut $75 million from the CBC budget without cutting jobs. I wonder if the Tories really believe that people who will be cut by the CBC will be picked up by the CTV network. That is a pious wish that they will be picked up by the CTV.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: I have a feeling, Mr. Speaker, that what will happen is what happened when the Avro Arrow was cut. A lot of the technicians and a lot of the people from the CBC will go south of the border and will end up working for the ABC, NBC and CBS networks. That will be most unfortunate. The cultural agencies are also involved. We have the National Film Board, the National Arts Centre and the Canada Council. There are jobs in all those entities. People work in arts and culture.

I got a kick out of the Prime Minister during the leadership campaign. He continually referred to those who work in the "real world". His impression was that if you work in the private sector you were in the real world, but those in the public sector like, I suppose, teachers, nurses, and policemen were not in the "real world". They were in some make believe world. Their work was not as valuable as those who worked, let us say, at manufacturing cigarettes or hula hoops. Because they worked in the private sector, their work was real; but for those who work in the public sector as teachers, nurses, correctional officers and so on, their work was unreal. Then he stopped saying this. I guess somebody in his office told him to stop using that expression. However, his basic philosophy that was committed to that kind of thinking carried on because we saw it expressed in the financial document of the other night.

Let me continue with the cuts. I have mentioned social housing, which is $9.6 million. The program for residential rehabilitation assistance is cut $29.4 million. In the document we find the statement: "The planned level of activity will be reduced by 25 per cent". I do not know how many Members are familiar with this program, but it was to upgrade dilapidated housing in communities, housing that was falling down. Instead of what happened in the past where we saw steam shovels and steam rollers destroying buildings to make room for parking lots, this program was to trying to rehabilitate and restore older housing. This program, however, will be cut by 25 per cent; $29.4 million. I do not know whether the private sector will pick that up for a profit motive, whether it will go into rehabilitation of older housing for those people living there now and not for a lot of trendy people who move into these areas.

I am reminded that my time is rapidly coming to a close.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: There is so much to be said on the subject, but I suppose I had better get to the final point I want to make.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: I have tried to make many points with Government Members. We know we will not win many votes in this House, and I say this very seriously, but we do hope to win some of the debates and turn public opinion against what the Government is trying to do. We are hoping people will start to listen and really examine these cuts, and that Tory members will start hearing from their constituents about some of these things—about rehabilitation of old housing, about the cuts in the cultural agencies, about cuts in research and development and about cuts in social housing. Perhaps then the Government will then change its mind.

I will have to make another speech on another amendment to this Speech from the Throne, but now I want to move an amendment to the Speech from the Throne as follows: I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin); the following amendment:

That this House regrets that your advisors not only failed to make open government a high priority but also, in their actions, have sought to reverse the direction of previous administrations by severely restricting the availability of information on decision-making in government and by attempting to inhibit access to both the elected and non-elected participants in that process.

Let me refer briefly to some of the things that have happened in the restriction of information. Of course, we have had questions by the New Democratic Party and by our Leader about releasing the figures on jobs that would be lost as a result of the financial program brought in last Thursday. The Conservatives refused to give us that information.

We have other examples. We have the new chiefs of staff, the commissars, who are restricting the flow of information from their departments to Members of Parliament and to the press. We have orders from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that people in his department should not discuss matters of that department with the press. We have an individual in the Privy Council Office who had been giving some information and was told to shut up and not to talk to reporters any more. Then we have the Government Lobby declared out of bounds to reporters. For years and years, even under the previous Conservative government of Mr. Clark, reporters were allowed in. Now for the first time no reporters are allowed in the Government Lobby. We have this excessive restriction on the flow of information. On the one hand the Government talks about consultation and consensus-making, yet the Government refuses to provide the Canadian people and members of this House with the information that is needed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made a very eloquent appeal for more support for social housing. Where was the Hon. Member in all the years when we had Liberal governments—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: —when such a small percentage of the funding provided by the federal Government for housing through Canada Mortgage and Housing was allocated for social housing, for senior citizens' housing, for public housing and for co-operative housing?

• (1240)

Would the Hon. Member comment upon the fact that in the most recent documents prepared by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the Liberal government there were proposals for cutting—I am relying upon my memory but I know that I am not far wrong—the allocation of funds for social and co-operative housing by 50 per cent? Where was the Hon. Member when those things were going on in the Liberal government?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member asked that question as he and I have known each other for a long time. He knows that I rose in my place many times and urged the then government to put more money into social housing. In fact, there were occasions when I voted against that government and voted with his Party.

Ms. Mitchell: Come over here.

Mr. Allmand: If the Hon. Member would like me to send him my speeches, I would be glad to do so. I was not satisfied with the amounts of money they were putting into social housing, but at least they were moving ahead. They were not moving backwards. It was not enough in my opinion but at least they were moving ahead. This time we are going backwards.

There may have been situations where, because of the rate of inflation and so on, increases in budget did not do as much as we wanted. However, never did my government bring in cutbacks of $9.6 million or cutbacks in rehabilitation as the present Government has done. The Hon. Member asked where I was. He knows darn well where I was. I used to sit across the way and made many speeches in this area.

He also referred to proposals by bureaucrats to cut programs. He is correct. When we were in government bureaucrats made proposals to cut. They tried to cut a social housing program in my constituency at least five times over the last 10 years. However, when it reached the political level, we said no. I was able to maintain that program in my riding against what the bureaucrats were proposing by approaching the Minister face to face on several occasions and indicating that we should not do that. I hope some of the back-benchers on the Conservative side will take the same approach. I hope they will approach their Ministers and say: "That will hurt in my constituency; it will put people out on the street. Why don't you scrap that? Let's not go ahead with that ridiculous proposal".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) has a question.

[English]

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, it is really a great day. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) used to belong to the NDP. It does not surprise me nor anyone in the House—

An Hon. Member: He still belongs to it.

Mr. St. Germain: As the Hon. Member points out, he still belongs to the NDP but sits with the Liberals. They have been bed partners for years and I guess they will continue in that vein.

However, I find it surprising that the Hon. Member would rise at this point and question our approach. From day one during the campaign his Leader and his Party continually said that we were not saying anything. Now he rises and says that we made 338 promises. We will carry out those 338 promises; however, we will phase them in and they will be carried out in a business-like manner. That is how this country will be run. Obviously it will be a shock to the Hon. Member because he does not know how to do this.

An Hon. Member: A day doesn't go by when you don't break a promise.

Mr. St. Germain: Promises will be lived up to. However, the Liberals fought with everyone. They governed through confrontation. They governed through confrontation and cannot understand how people work through consultation and conciliation.

The Hon. Member appears to be knowledgeable and to know exactly what went on in the previous administration. He said that he wanted to wrestle the deficit; he wanted to reduce it. In 1980 they made that promise, and it was a blatant misrepresentation to Canadians because the deficit did not go down; it went up. What recommendations would he now make? The adjustments made by the present Government were made in a humane, understanding way, taking into consideration people first. Obviously the Hon. Member must have some recommendations; I am sure he would not rise otherwise. Where would he have performed the required cutbacks to wrestle the deficit which is destroying the country and bringing about high interest rates?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for my hon. friend. He and I, despite our differences in politics, are good friends. However, I want to correct him on his first point. I was never a member of the NDP. I was a member of the CCF. I had to leave that party when it became the NDP because I did not believe in its new philosophy. I found that there was more to satisfy me in the Liberal Party than in the NDP.

He talked about the 338 promises. He said that they will introduce them in due course. I hope we do not hold our breath. As a matter of fact, the reason I pointed them out to him was not because I wanted them to bring them all forward. Some of them are good, some of them are not so good. I referred to them because it points to the credibility of his Party. It made some 338 promises and on its own admission they totalled $4 billion. They also said during the campaign that the deficit was to be $36 billion; then they said that they cannot implement the promises because the cupboard was bare and so on.

With respect to confrontation, there was some confrontation during the last five or ten years. However, we must remember that there was a government elected in Quebec which had the explicit purpose at that time of splitting up the country. There was going to be confrontation. There was no way we would accept any of that. When there were other provinces which wanted to whittle away the federal authority, there was no way we would accept it. The initiatives for that confrontation did not come from the federal Government. The proposal for a referendum on sovereignty association did not come from us; it came from the Péquiste government in Quebec. We opposed it. We confronted it and we will always confront it.

In the Budget last Spring there was a program to deal with the deficit. First it was to eliminate waste and duplication, not whole programs if they were good ones. Also we wanted—and it is a goal shared by him and his Government—to do something about the unemployment rate. We believe in direct employment programs, not just in a private sector approach to it. Something had to be done about unemployment because the greatest cause of the increased deficit over the last few years, if the Hon. Member looks at the figures, has been the drain on the economy through unemployment insurance and programs to deal with unemployment. If we stimulate the economy to the extent that unemployment drops and employment rises, there will be a lesser drain on the spending of government and there will be more money paid into it through income taxes and so on.

We do not believe that the principal cause for the lack of business confidence is the size of the deficit. In Japan there is a higher percentage deficit of Gross National Product, yet it only has 2 per cent or 3 per cent unemployment and inflation rates. The real cause of the lack of business confidence lies elsewhere. It lies partly in national problems and in international problems. The cause is not some of the programs which were cut the other night.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate will now resume on the amendment.

The Hon. Member for Richelieu.

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, hon. colleagues of the Progressive Conservative Party, Hon. Members of the Opposition. First of all, I would like to take advantage of this opportunity to extend my sincere thanks to the people of the riding of Richelieu, who supported me in such great numbers on election day.

Mr. Speaker, before getting to the main subject of my speech, I would like to say a few words about this vast riding of Richelieu. Some areas are very industrialized, and I am thinking of Sorel-Tracy and Pierreville, while fishing is important at Baie-du-Fèbvre, farming is the major source of income in Nicolet and the Bécancour area is about to experience significant industrial development with the new Péchiney factory.

My riding also wanted a real change on September 4. People in my constituency were sick and tired of the lack of agricultural policies, the appalling uncontrolled frittering away of the La Prade Fund, the lack of measures to initiate genuine economic recovery by creating permanent jobs, and finally the lack of opportunities for our young people. That is why they rejected an aging government without a real policy, which was literally driving the country to ruin.

After Canadians made their decision, in the Speech from the Throne on November 5, the new Government set out the key policies it intends to pursue during its mandate.

The Throne Speech has shown all Canadians that the Government intends to live up to basic commitments made during the election campaign. It reflects the firm resolve of the caucus to end twenty years of petty quarrelling, which created divisions in our society that will be difficult to overcome. The centralist and paternalistic kind of federalism promoted by our hon. friends opposite during the past twenty years, thereby obstructing the legitimate aspirations of the provinces, is now dead and should be buried as deep as possible.

As far as Quebec is concerned, Denyse Amiot, a freelance journalist writing for the Canadian Legion—which certainly cannot be accused of having separatist leanings—said: The Liberals went so far in opposing any initiative taken by Quebec, whatever its merits, that they could no longer, without renouncing their own policies, retreat from an attitude which, after serving them well for a short time in 1980, finally became their downfall. They failed to understand the message voters were trying to give them. Only a few days before September 4, the Secretary of State gave another example of Liberal high-handedness when he tried to circumvent the Province by paying funds directly to Quebec universities. The result: the presidents of the universities protested, and subsequently, the then Secretary of State, now become a symbol of this kind of arrogance, went down to defeat in his own riding.

A few months before, the fisheries industry in Quebec had been unilaterally declared to be under exclusive federal jurisdiction. The ensuing frustration and confrontation led to a drop in the number of landings, bankruptcies and widespread discontent. The result: all ridings where fishing is a major industry turned their backs on the Liberals.

Mr. Speaker, I shall now discuss a subject that is particularly important to the riding of Richelieu. I am referring to the fact that instead of negotiating in good faith with Quebec the redeployment of funds originally earmarked for the construction of the La Prade heavy water plant at Bécancour, the Liberals decided to distribute these funds at will in the towns and villages of central Quebec. The result: all ridings in this area repudiated the Liberals, even if they had apparently benefited from their largesse.

Mr. Speaker, this kind of federalism was not Canadian federalism. It was a travesty of the spirit in which the fathers of the Canadian Confederation drafted the Constitution of 1867.

As for this Government, it has already clearly indicated in the past few days that there will be a complete change of direction. This has already been reflected in a noticeable detente in relations with the various provincial governments.

It is clear that our task will not be any easier as a result of twenty years of incompetence and a $34 billion deficit. However, despite this unfortunate state of affairs, we of the Progressive Conservative Party are facing the future with firm resolve and shall deal with the mistakes of the past.

In his economic statement, the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated the only possible route, which is to reduce a debt that, today, has a stranglehold on Canadian money markets. Obviously, cutting the deficit will not be easy and some of our projects may have to be temporarily shelved. Members of the opposition can rest assured that I will have special thoughts for them every time that happens. Cutting the deficit means that choices must be made and priorities reconsidered. The economic statement of the Minister of Finance does give us an indication of what those priorities will be. Making that kind of choice is difficult and painful, but I am convinced that he will keep in mind the needs of a riding such as mine which the Liberals have neglected for over twenty years.

Indeed, the riding of Richelieu was once Quebec's metallurgical centre, but it had to cope with declining markets, not to mention the lack of research and development programs in metallurgy. Everyone can see that those vast regions, including Sorel-Tracy where 77 per cent of the industrial labour force works in metal processing and manufacturing plants, need immediate help. Throughout the election campaign, the party and I said clearly that priority will be given to research and development. Hon. Members can appreciate that a developed country simply cannot look forward to a bright future unless its Government actively supports that vital but often neglected industry. That is why I want to repeat in the House that I will make every effort to secure the metallurgical research and development funding which my riding needs so badly.

Another concern expressed in my riding and in many others throughout Canada has to do with our Government's maritime transport policy and the creation of a merchant marine. As you may know, Sorel has long been famous for its shipyards, but unfortunately the situation has gone from bad to worse in the past ten years because there was no firm policy. All Canadian shipyards are now in that kind of predicament. The party and I are committed to steering Canada gradually towards a clear-cut marine transportation policy. Big though that challenge may be, I firmly believe that this Government will take action, unlike others before us which did little more than rest on their laurels. Again I say to Hon. Members that I am anxious to work actively in drafting that policy.

In a country where marine transportation has been completely ignored by Liberal Governments for more than thirty years, in a country where we still have some ships which were built before the Titanic, in a country where more than half of the ships registered in 1983 were at least twenty years old, in short, in a country where the fleet becomes less competitive and less safe every day, now is the time indeed to implement a policy designed to promote the shipbuilding industry in Canada rather than in foreign countries as was the case under the Liberals. Our party has stated clearly that it would support the gradual development of Canada's merchant marine by restoring economic confidence through tax credits.

Other solutions cannot be discounted, quite the opposite. For instance, by applying certain rules to the granting of subsidies under the Petroleum Incentives Program, we could probably promote a substantial recovery in the Canadian shipbuilding industry. Indeed, the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association did a good job of explaining the situation in a release dated February 24, 1984, where it was pointed out that four new foreign-built ships used for shipping steel were registered in Canada during the first months of 1984 under the previous Liberal administration. These four ships, with a total tonnage of 10,722 tons, serve the oil fields of the Eastern coastline. Three of them were built in South Korea and one in Norway. We must stop purchasing from other countries. Those four ships could have been built in Canada, which would have minimized the slowdown in shipbuilding activities in 1982 and 1983. Such imports will probably continue as long as low cost financing can be found abroad and as long as loopholes in existing Government policies have not been eliminated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but he may continue this afternoon.

It being one o'clock, I shall now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

TABLING OF REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to lay upon the table the 1984 Statutory Report of the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada. May I remind Hon. Members that, pursuant to Standing Order 46(4), this report is deemed permanently referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PROPOSED SALE OF CANADAIR AND DE HAVILLAND COMPANIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, something must be said about the early announcement made by the Government that Canadair and de Havilland are up for sale. I rise not only because de Havilland is in my constituency and affects thousands of jobs and surrounding businesses there but because there are dozens of Canadian suppliers for that company who are affected by a decision of the Government which can only be called ideological.

This is a Government that gave the impression during the election campaign that it had a great many of the answers to the questions of how to increase employment, how to strengthen Canadian culture, how to strengthen Canadian ownership, and so on. We have found through the Government's early announcements that it has no answers at all, other than to be nice, to seek consultation, to establish committees to investigate, and so on, except in one area. The only area in which the Government seems to have been prepared to proceed is the putting up of these two companies and others for sale. When we asked for them, we found that there were no studies done, no consultations, and no search for a consensus at all about whether or not these companies should be up for sale.

It is well known that the Liberal Party believes in a mixed economy. We have no ideological commitment to maintaining the aerospace industry in the public sector forever. However, we do have a commitment to maintain that industry. With that point of view, I would like to raise with the Government and with Hon. Members of the House of Commons—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

CALL FOR DEREGULATION OF OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, since 1980 the oil and gas industry has been unable to make its full contribution to the Canadian economy. Declining investment in oil and gas activity has had a direct impact on Canadian energy, security, and employment levels.

Current pricing and fiscal policies have left the industry with inadequate returns. Incentive grants provided by the previous Government to encourage exploration in frontier areas introduced a bias and inefficiency to the exploration and development of Canada's energy resources.

Let us reward success rather than activity. This industry does not want special treatment. This industry wants the same treatment as other industries in Canada. It needs deregulation, a fair tax system, and the immediate removal of the 25 per cent back-in.

MARINE TRANSPORT

ANNOUNCED INCREASE IN FERRY FARES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, cuts in the operating costs of CN ferry boats servicing Newfoundland as announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have caused CN Marine to announce a 15 per cent increase in rates charged for the Gulf ferry run. That means that, for a car and one adult, the fare to be charged on the North Sydney to Argentia run will jump to over $100 one way. This is the fare charged to get from one province to another.

The savings in coastal boat services included in a $16.1 million savings package announced by the Minister of Finance has caused a decision to be made to reduce the coastal boat service to Newfoundland and Labrador. The Government, on the one hand, is penalizing persons who wish to travel to and from Newfoundland but, on the other hand, a reduction of coastal boat service and an increase in rates can only be viewed as outrageous since this is the only method of transportation to and from some coastal communities.

To add insult to injury, the Premier of Newfoundland announced that he has to travel to Ottawa to find out what is going on. So much for co-operative federalism. Only co-operative Toryism has saved the Government from the total repudiation by the Premier of Newfoundland that it so justly deserves because of its post-election actions. I hope that the Premier's knee-jerk obedience to his Tory superiors in Ottawa will soon end.

YOUTH

RESTORATION OF CUTS IN STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM URGED

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I read yesterday's speech by the Hon. Secretary of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) with great interest, and I congratulate her on her speech as well as on her important appointment. Clearly both of us are assigned to youth because we have each drunk at the fountain thereof.

I note that the Hon. Secretary of State has promised to be a spokesperson for young people. She has further stated that she believes "every youth must have all opportunities to fully develop his own potential, whether rich or poor, male or female, native or immigrant and so on". She appears therefore to recognize what her colleagues in the Cabinet do not, and that is that prosperity cannot be achieved without social justice. They are inseparable.

Therefore, I look forward to working with the Hon. Secretary of State as we speak for those represented on the Hill today, and youth generally, in urging the Government to act to obtain assured and adequate levels of funding for post-secondary education from both the federal and provincial Governments through the Established Programs Financing Act, rather than consultation to cut funding. We must ensure that federal student aid is adequate, that it encourages part-time studies, and that it helps overcome the particular barriers faced by the poor, by women, and by minorities. That will discourage the provinces from cutting their aid programs as B.C. has done. I hope, as well, that the Hon. Minister will speak for youth in fighting to have the cuts from the Canada Student Loans Program and Summer Canada restored.

PROSTITUTION

SPEEDY INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATIVE CHANGES SOUGHT

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a matter of concern to the people of Niagara Falls and one that I believe is also of concern to the people of Canada. I am referring to the subject of soliciting for the purposes of prostitution. The former Minister of Justice indicated that soliciting was not a national problem, but I can assure this House that it is a persistent and pressing problem to the people of Niagara Falls as well as to those of many other municipalities across the country.

Since the 1978 Supreme Court of Canada ruling, many municipalities have tried to deal with this problem but have had limited success because the previous Government failed, or refused, to act. I have already been requested by the downtown Board of Management for the City of Niagara Falls, and others, to pursue a quick resolution to this problem. I was therefore very pleased to hear in the Speech from the Throne that the new Government is prepared to act.

I would urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and my colleagues in the Thirty-third Parliament to move with all possible haste to bring in the legislative changes that are so badly needed. Prostitution as well as pornography represent a form of exploitation of women, exploitation that is unacceptable to the people of Niagara Falls and unacceptable to the people of Canada.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUPPORT FOR PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am alarmed to learn that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has hired William Mackness, vice-president and chief economist of the Bank of Nova Scotia, to be his special policy adviser. Mr. Mackness advises the elimination of the principle of universality of Old Age Security and family allowances in order to cut the federal deficit by an incredible 50 per cent. Such a sudden reduction in the deficit will not be felt by bankers like Mr. Mackness; rather, ordinary Canadians will pay for his policy ideas.

It is not surprising that this Government, while extolling the virtues of consultation, goes first to its friends in Canada's fourth largest bank for advice. What havoc will this Government wreak on social programs that benefit ordinary Canadians, in order to please its supporters in big business?

Members of the New Democratic Party fought long and hard for the right of Canadians to pensions and family allowances. We struggled for the principle of universality in these programs to prevent the indignity of a means test. I fear this Government wants to turn the clock back.

We are disappointed and frightened by the changing stand of the Tory Government on the question of universality. Once a sacred trust, universality is now under attack. In this appointment we see further evidence that the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) reassurances on universality were just an election ploy. We ask for a degree of honesty in this Government that we did not see in the previous Liberal Government.

NATIONAL REVENUE

NEW APPROACH TO TREATMENT OF TAXPAYERS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I congratulate the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Beatty) on his project to humanize the tax department. Of all the complaints I have to deal with in my riding, most concern tax issues, tax agencies, tax men and their attitudes. I hesitate to use the word "tactics", although others have.

The Minister has stated that by taking the tax department to the people not as an adversary but more as a counselling agency, it will encourage those who have been holding back to come out of the closet and pay their outstanding balances. I wholeheartedly agree with this approach and, as any parent knows, understanding will work far better than the big stick.

Changing the image of the tax department is a task that has long been put aside, perhaps deliberately. The Government has shown it has the determination and willingness to change rather than prolong a bad system merely because it is there.

This move has other positive aspects as well, not the least of which is the immediate employment of those seeking work. The Minister indicates some 380 person-years will be spent on this change. This indicates the Government's commitment and determination to follow through with the P.C. task force report recommending change to Revenue Canada. This shows the people of Canada that the Government is working for them rather than demanding that the people work for it.

VIA RAIL

EDMUNDSTON TO MONCTON SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the people of New Brunswick and the Maritime region were heartened by the commitment of the Government to restore VIA Rails' Atlantic Limited. The elimination of the line was opposed by New Brunswickers and maritimers who had no desire to lose that efficient and popular link with Central Canada, nor the wish to see our tourism potential and regional mobility hindered. I am very pleased that the Government has recognized the value of the Atlantic Limited.

I would urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to move with speed in re-establishing this transportation system. The frustrations and inefficiency of the present service are well known and well documented. I wish to spare New Brunswickers, and all of those persons travelling throughout the Maritime region, the problems of poor scheduling, overbooking, wasted time, and unnecessary expense.

The reinstatement of the Edmundston to Moncton line was well received and I hope it will again be a permanent part of the VIA operations.

New Brunswickers realize and appreciate the Government is faced with the culmination of a decade and a half of fiscal mismanagement, extravagant waste, and irresponsibility. However, we hope that these factors will not deter the Government from returning to service, as soon as possible, a passenger rail line which never should have been abandoned.

S.O. 21

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

APPLICATION COST INCREASES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, new and would-be Canadians were shocked and disgusted when the Government more than doubled the citizenship application costs for adults, and more than tripled the application costs for minors. An average family of five will now have to pay $155 rather than the previous amount of $54. This unjustified increase is clearly a regressive and insensitive policy direction, one which will discourage rather than facilitate people's entry into the Canadian mainstream.

In its over zealous attempt to increase government revenues, the Conservative Government has abandoned the principle of compassion, undermined the spirit of multiculturalism, and has hit the very people who could least afford it. This policy, Mr. Speaker, is a sad reflection on a new Tory regime.

I urge the Secretary of State and the Minister of State for Multiculturalism to reverse this very unfortunate decision immediately and restore citizenship application costs to an affordable and fair level.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ADVERSE EFFECT ON FILLING SMALL BUSINESS EMPLOYMENT VACANCIES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has made a thorough investigation and has determined that there are at least 170,000 job openings with small business which could be filled if our current unemployment insurance system did not give positive inducements to those collecting unemployment insurance benefits to stay unemployed.

Indeed, a person receiving unemployment insurance benefits is foolish to take a reduction in pay in order to obtain work because the net benefit, after taking into account income tax and the cost of going to and from work, leaves the person with less money than he would have received in unemployment insurance benefits.

The Government is to be commended for raising the matter of the unemployment insurance system in the financial statement. I call upon the Government, as should all Hon. Members of this House, to move ahead quickly so it can reorganize the present unemployment insurance system in order to create an incentive to those unemployed to upgrade their skills, to obtain training, and to take up jobs even if those jobs pay less.

ENERGY

COST OF ELECTRICITY IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, Prince Edward Islanders pay the highest electrical rates in Canada, about three times the national average. These electrical rates are detrimental to the economy of our province. Every person and every resource sector are at a distinct disadvantage when trying to compete in the marketplace. As an example, the national average cost of producing a litre of milk, based on farmers using 3,000 kilowatt hours of electricity, is 67 cents. The cost of producing that same litre of milk in Prince Edward Island is $1.41. That is a total of 74 cents above the national average.

Maritime Electric recently announced that, because of the increase in crude oil prices which was introduced in the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), electrical rates will rise by 4 per cent.

Agricultural production must remain viable in order to ensure the economic security of all Island residents. How can this industry expect to remain viable unless the Government follows through on its promise to reduce the cost of electricity to the islanders? Instead of reducing costs to these people, the Government is raising them. The Government promised to support the farmers and residents of Prince Edward Island, and it is now time that those promises were kept.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—DETENTION OF CANADIAN JOURNALIST

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises out of his Government's unfortunate handling of the case of Jonathan Mann, the Canadian journalist who is imprisoned by the Indian authorities. This is a case which has caused concern to Canadian journalists and even to the Foreign Correspondents Association in Washington.

Yesterday the Minister of External Relations said in the House:

> Representations at the highest level have been made to India's Department of Foreign Affairs—

Yet the Secretary of State for External Affairs is quoted in The Globe and Mail as saying: "We cannot start the process of interfering with other countries in the application of their law". How does the Minister explain this contradiction? Why is he undermining his Minister for External Relations? Exactly what are the facts here? Why is the Minister acting less vigorously to protect the interests of a Canadian journalist than the French Government acted to protect the interests of the French journalist, Abouchar, and to get him released from Afghanistan?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me thank the Hon. Member for the precision of his question. Let me also take the opportunity to say that in a scrum outside the House I indicated, as I should not have, that Mr. Mann had broken the law of India. He is in fact charged with breaking the law of India. I apologize to the House for that mistake.

In terms of the representations which are being made, they are extensive and are made on a regular basis, following the normal and accepted diplomatic procedures by our High Commissioner, and by way of a conversation between my Deputy Minister and the Acting High Commissioner of India to Canada. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the best judge of the effectiveness of the response of Canada to this question is Mr. Mann himself. Mr. Mann himself in recent conversations—yesterday—with our High Commission expresses himself as being highly pleased with the way in which the Government of Canada has responded to his situation.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has apologized for saying yesterday that Mr. Mann broke the law, therefore, in effect, presuming that he was guilty before he had his day in court. Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs personally conveyed his apologies in that regard to the Indian High Commissioner? And has he instructed our High Commissioner in India to convey his apologies to the Indian authorities?

I ask the Minister this question because, if he does not do so, there is no way that the Canadian Government can get the Indian Government to take seriously anything it says because Mr. Mann stands convicted in the eyes of the Canadian Government and of the Minister.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not done that, nor do I intend to. I can assure the House of Commons that the Government of India takes very seriously the representations which are being made by the Government of Canada.

DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS' RELATIONS WITH MEDIA

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if his seeming acquiescence in the detention of Mr. Mann by the Indian Government is linked to his own order gagging all of the officials of his Department—even the press officers who are paid to speak to the press—from speaking to the press and the public? This is in contradiction to the policy he himself issued when he was Prime Minister, which required openness on the part of officials. Is there a link here? In fact, is the Minister intending to apply his own gag order to himself?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is no. The elaboration, Mr. Speaker, is that if the Hon. Member is looking for the missing link, he should turn his eyes to himself.

IMMIGRATION

SPONSORSHIP REQUESTS FOR SIX SOVIET PRISONERS HELD IN AFGHANISTAN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Further to yesterday's question concerning the six political prisoners being held by the Afghan authorities, it seems the Minister misled the Member for Outremont and this House when she stated that no request had been made on behalf of these prisoners. According to the facts, six formal sponsorship requests for these prisoners were made in June of this year. The reference numbers are: R-11044 to R-11049.

Since she has privately admitted she was wrong, is the Minister prepared to make a public apology today for having misled this House?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member raised the question yesterday there were no names attached, and there had been several groups under consideration. I was speaking of one group and she was speaking of the other, and I very sincerely apologize to her for the fact that I did not clearly indicate the group that I was speaking about. However, having reviewed this situation, having looked at the group she later told me she was speaking about, I can certainly assure her that my predecessor had indeed said there would be applications provided to these people should they meet all the requirements, including medical requirements.

We have not been able to persuade the local authorities in a very inaccessible border area to allow medical examinations to take place. But we have asked for the co-operation of other countries in helping to have this done. We have asked for the co-operation of the International Red Cross, and we are very actively pursuing their case in the hope that they will eventually be brought to Canada.

ADMISSION OF REFUGEES TO CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, Canada has already admitted several hundred Chilean refugees without medical certificates. Does the Minister's reply mean that the new Government has changed course and from now on intends to restrict entry into Canada of refugees especially those from totalitarian countries that are—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member ready to ask a question? I am sorry, I heard a preamble at the beginning of her remarks and at the end I heard a question, and I am prepared to hear it again.

Mrs. Pépin: Does the Minister's reply mean that the new Government has changed course and from now on intends to restrict entry into Canada of refugees especially those from totalitarian countries since these are the people who are persecuted the most?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no, we have not changed our approach. These were the regulations that were laid down, particularly in the case of these six people, by my predecessor.

Mr. Nunziata: That is two apologies. Who is next?

THE ECONOMY

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—IMPACT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who will know that we have been trying for many days to obtain the direct job impact of his Government's program cuts and tax increases. I am forced once again today to raise that issue, based on his comments last night at the Toronto Insurance Conference black tie dinner where he said, "our economic analysis suggests that this progam, from a quantitative viewpoint, does not impact negatively in terms of job creation in the country". Yet just two days ago his Minister of Finance stood in this House and said quite the contrary, that in 1986 there would be a marginal decrease in the number of jobs in the country as a result of the Government's policy. Would the Prime Minister explain who is it of the two who is really being straightforward with the House of Commons and the people of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I recollect, the Minister of Finance was not at variance with me in his response. He said the matter was statistically insignificant. That is consistent with exactly what I have been saying. As you know, employment in the next fiscal year will increase. Interest rates dropped today almost a quarter of a point further, inflation is at 3.8 per cent, and consumer confidence as expressed by the Conference Board this morning is rising dramatically. Those are good signs.

ECONOMIC PROSPECTS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister indicated in Toronto that quantitatively there would be no particular change, yet he is saying these things cannot be measured. I seek clarification from him. Is he saying that as a result of the program cuts the Government has made, and the fact that taxes have been increased, we can expect more investment to occur in Canada, more growth in the economy, and more jobs created? Is that essentially what the Prime Minister is saying?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am saying, Mr. Speaker, that the old policies as articulated and defended by the alliance of Liberals and NDP over many years have resulted in abject failure. The new programs set out by the Minister of Finance, which are meeting with enthusiastic response across the country, will provide Canadians with the kinds of durable jobs on an ongoing basis that Canada requires. That is what we are saying.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

YOUTH—BUDGETARY CUTS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State.

At this very moment, while the Minister is sitting comfortably in his chair, nearly 1,000 students are waiting outside for an opportunity to express to the Government their concern about the budgetary cuts that will affect them. The House is aware that the Government intends to cut summer jobs, student loans and transfer payments for post-secondary education, and now nearly 1,000 students have been standing out in the cold, waiting to communicate a message to the Minister and his Cabinet colleagues. I therefore wish to ask the Minister how he can justify refusing to meet with Canadian citizens who want to express their concerns to the Government and, instead, choosing to ignore this demonstration by young people who want to have a say in the debate on their future.

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the important question and the important issue he raises. I want to assure him that I take very seriously the situation of Canadian students. He may know that last week, when the Canadian Federation of Students was here lobbying all caucuses, along with the Hon. Minister for Employment and Immigration we met for an hour and a half to discuss the national concern for the Canada Student Loan Program and the funding concerns of Canadian universities. I assure the Hon. Member that I will be meeting with the provincial Ministers of Education in the near future, and I will be beginning the dialogue about the future of post-secondary education.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY CONFERENCE—REQUEST THAT STUDENT REPRESENTATIVES BE PERMITTED TO ATTEND

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the Minister correctly, to him only the national lobby groups are the legitimate representatives of the students.

Right now, there are about a thousand students out there the Minister is refusing to meet. His leader said this Government had to be generous, open and approachable. Could the Hon. Minister give the House the assurance that before any discussion takes place on cuts in funding for post-secondary education, student representatives will be consulted at the meeting on St. Valentine's Day?

In fact, could the Minister give the House the assurance that student representatives will be allowed to attend the meeting as observers, to ensure that their interests are being defended properly?

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, possibly I should remind the Hon. Member, who was a Member on the government side of the House, that it was not this Party that unilaterally attacked post-secondary education with the six and five cuts that were imposed. It was not this Party which failed to consult the universities, students, administration or faculty. I assure him that I have already met with the administration, the CAUT, and the national student bodies, and we will continue with the process that the Prime Minister has mentioned.

THE ECONOMY

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—IMPACT OF CUT-BACKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. A minute ago he said again in the House that the program cuts and tax increases which the Minister of Finance brought in a number of days ago will lead to more jobs in the economy. Both he and the Minister of Finance have said that they will lead to more investment and growth.

My question is quite a serious one. Based on the actual experience of such a program applied to the Province of British Columbia, I would like to ask the Prime Minister to explain the following results to me. I will give him the figures with care, and ask him to treat the House seriously and answer the question. When Ministers of the Government of British Columbia brought in their budget they made a forecast of growth increase of 6 per cent. The result now is minus .1 per cent. They forecast an investment increase of 15 per cent, and the results are minus 5 per cent. Employment growth was forecast to be 4 per cent. The latest forecast is minus .9 per cent. Two days ago the Minister of Finance of British Columbia said that their deficit is now going to be larger than they expected. Why does the Prime Minister expect his program of cuts and tax increases will be good for Canada when it has been an unmitigated disaster for British Columbia?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no quarrel with the facts as set out by my hon. friend. What is lacking in regard to the question addressed to a national Government capable of influencing fiscal and monetary policy in a real way is the intangible called confidence—investor confidence and consumer confidence.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I know that the socialists do not understand the word "confidence", and with good reason. However, that is a very important factor in motivating the private sector toward the co-operation which we are now seeing between provincial Governments and between the private sector and the federal Government to create those jobs. It is the new climate of fairness, openness and co-operation that is going to bring about the jobs that we require.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROVINCIAL ECONOMY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has talked about business confidence and I, for one, think that the notion has some relevance. However, the very group that he is appealing to, who are now saying that his program is wonderful, also said that Mr. Bennett's program was wonderful when it was first brought in, and they have changed their minds.

I would like the Prime Minister to comment on this. The other day the head of the Business Council of B.C. said, with regard to that program in B.C., that "the economy hasn't recovered". The president of the Certified General Accountants Association of British Columbia, who liked the program before, has now seen the results and has said that "B.C. is heading for hell in a handbasket". He is advising his business clients to get out of the Province of British Columbia. Why should we listen to the Prime Minister when B.C. businessmen see the program as an unmitigated disaster?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I have always been mystified as to why the NDP delights in being so morose. They take such pleasure in other people's difficulties. British Columbia has a totally resource-based economy. It did go through a recession largely induced by the actions of the Liberal Government, and they went through difficult times, as is widely known.

We are trying, as best we can, to put together the framework which will inspire confidence from the private sector, co-operation with trade unions, and co-operation with provincial and federal Governments to try to harmonize our initiatives to create the kinds of jobs that a strong and united Canada can create. That is what we are going to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party and the people of Canada are not interested in being morose. We simply want some truth from the Government of Canada; that is all.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CHANGE ECONOMIC PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, businessmen, labour movements, women and senior citizens have opposed the program now in B.C. Every group in the B.C. community that has seen the results of the Conservative Government's national economic policy in action see it as not working. Therefore, why is the Prime Minister, who promised positive change, not prepared to look at the evidence and change his program now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, why would the Hon. Member indulge in such specious reasoning when he knows full well that there is no resemblance between the program undertaken at a given time in British Columbia and the forward looking, positive, private sector oriented program now?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Why is he so gloomy?

Mr. Broadbent: You should go on the stage.

Mr. Mulroney: The Canadian people did not give him a mandate; they gave him a reprieve on September 4.

There is a mandate for change based on co-operative action with all of the players in our economy. It is based as well on the belief that the private sector, enhanced by thoughtful government action, can create the hundreds of thousands of jobs that we need. That is what we are going to do. We hope that you will co-operate in doing it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROPOSED REVIEW

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. This summer, during his campaign, he promised the Canadian public that universality was "a sacred trust that would not be tampered with". Yet, within six weeks of assuming office, he broke that promise.

In last Friday's press conference the Prime Minister said that only bank presidents, all nine of them, should expect to have some cut in their family allowance cheques. However, in his own budget which was tabled here last Thursday evening, it states that Canadian families earning between $20,000 and $30,000 a year, and that is the average Inco worker, can expect cuts in benefits to their children, and to their grandparent's pension cheques. Will the Prime Minister confirm to the House that average Canadian families earning between $20,000 and $30,000 a year will be subject to this review of social security?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be helpful if the Hon. Member could give us the page and read it out, because there were at least three serious, no doubt inadvertent, misstatements of fact in his question. The fact of the matter is that the Government has not tampered with universality and has not changed it.

Mr. Tobin: Not yet.

Mr. Gagliano: What happened to the sacred trust?

Mr. Mulroney: We have not even considered going so far as the finance critic of the Liberal Party did. When he was running for the leadership of that Party he asked that they all be scrapped. So there should not be any great declarations of ideological purity coming from the other side. All we are trying to do is ask, in what we think is a mature way, without affecting the universal nature of medical care and without at any time having a means test, whether we cannot, as a mature society, explore ways in which we can put more dollars into the hands of those underprivileged in our society who need them most. That is the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OPERATION OF TAX SYSTEM

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, none of us in this Chamber would be opposed to review in that manner.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Frith: Why has the Government chosen to put the burden on the backs of the families of this country who earn between $20,000 and $30,000 a year, rather than on the banks and the people whom we have all talked about, who earn over $50,000 a year and have not paid their fair share of taxes? That is the question I would like the Prime Minister to answer.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): As I think the hon. gentleman knows, the tax system operates in such a way that those in higher brackets, $20,000, $30,000, $40,000, receive less because of the operations of the tax system in many ways. However, in some programs they receive more than people who earn under $10,000. We are trying to get more money into the hands of people in this country who need it. That is the object of the exercise. I was delighted to see that the Hon. Member, speaking on behalf of all his colleagues, joins in this process of review.

PIPELINES

MONTREAL-QUEBEC NATURAL GAS PIPELINE—CONSEQUENCES OF HALTING BRANCH LINE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The Government has announced its decision to halt branch line construction on the Montreal-Quebec natural gas pipeline. This move will eliminate thousands of possible job opportunities for construction workers in the province of Quebec.

Could the Minister explain why this decision was made without consulting the communities concerned and without taking into account the commitments given by Progressive Conservative Party candidates during the recent election campaign?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate my critic from the NDP, on his appointment. I look forward to a cordial relationship with him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: Of course his question deals with the issue of the Quebec laterals program which was not cancelled but deferred in the economic statement last week.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that I met with the Quebec Minister of Energy last week before the cuts were announced to discuss the priorities of the Quebec Minister of Energy. The issue of the pipeline will be the subject of further discussion about when we can resume the timing.

Mr. Waddell: As to that relationship, I assume that the Minister is speaking for herself.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question, which is directed to the Prime Minister, concerns getting information about jobs with respect to this pipeline and other topics. I have before me an affidavit sworn in 1977 by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion in a law case against the Attorney General of Canada, suing the Government for information—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Waddell: In the affidavit, it is said that—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Waddell: The Conservatives said to the court in their affidavit that their opposition in the House of Commons had been "frustrated and stultified" because they could not get information from the previous Government. Why is it wrong for us to ask for that information about unemployment and other matters that went to the Government?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, not only are the NDP morose, they are unfriendly in this case.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: I do not believe that that question was supplementary to the first one. I can only reassure him that the information that he requests about the deferring of the Quebec laterals program is in the economic statement and the material tabled by the President of the Treasury Board.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT CHAMBORD-DOLBEAU PIPELINE BE COMPLETED

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources but it does not deal with cuts.

Under the agreement for the construction of a lateral between Grand-Mère-Chambord-La Baie, there was a commitment of some $240 million. Since the productivity is excellent in our region, it seems that the costs will rise to some $210 million, a saving of $30 million. Can the Minister assure the House that those $30 million will be used to complete the Chambord-Dolbeau system? If it is not done now, it may never be completed.

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Member for raising the issue. Again, as I said to the previous questioner, those laterals were deferred, not cancelled. I would also like to congratulate the utility for the work it has done to date. The project has proceeded on time and under budget. As I indicated earlier, the future timing of the laterals is under review.

MARINE TRANSPORT

CN MARINE—FERRY SERVICE FARES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He knows that under the previous administration's six and five program, CN Marine had prepared early this fall a request to Cabinet for a 4 per cent increase in its fare charges on the Gulf and ferry coastal boat system in Atlantic Canada. Would the Minister confirm that, subject to last Thursday's financial statement, this request to Cabinet for a 4 per cent increase in fares has been withdrawn and that a submission to Cabinet for an approximate 15 per cent increase has been prepared for implementation, subject to cabinet approval?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the Cabinet document of which the Member speaks. It is true that there is a proposal to increase the fares on ferry services up to 15 per cent. However, there is also allowance for a reduction of 10 per cent for those who are regular users. It will give CN Marine some flexibility in applying a new fare structure in order to generate some more revenue.

Mr. Tobin: In any case it is an increase for everybody.

IMPACT ON TOURISM

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in light of the Government's stated commitment to tourism in Atlantic Canada, will the Minister tell the House if an analysis has been made by his Department or that of his colleague, the Minister of State for Tourism, to assess the negative impact on tourism in Atlantic Canada as a result of increasing rates to consumers by 300 per cent more than had been anticipated under the post six and five program?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is exaggerating the point. The fact of the matter is that there is a certain amount of flexibility that can be taken into consideration. I am sure that flexibility will be taken into account to reflect the considerations of the tourist industry. I will be meeting with my counterparts from the Atlantic provinces to discuss ways and means to implement those increases in a fair, orderly, and equitable manner.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES—ACID RAIN RESEARCH PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. I hope that my relationship with that Minister will be every bit as cordial as my relationship with my former nemesis in the House, the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, who was one of the few Liberals to depart this scene with honour.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: My question concerns reports that the U.S. Government is cutting back on its acid rain research program while pretending to give the problem a high profile. Does she intend to look into this cut-back on the part of the American Government? While doing so, would she also take steps to reverse the cancellation announced by the Minister of Finance of the Herring Gull Egg Project for the surveillance of toxic chemicals and wildlife in the Great Lakes, which is part of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement with the United States, so that whatever protests she may make to the United States would have some credibility because we in Canada are doing our part with respect to the environment?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I hope indeed to have cordial relations with all Hon. Members. Ours is a cordial Government.

Like the Hon. Member, I have seen a news report of a labour union reference to the reduction by the United States of acid rain research funding. After I have reviewed the matter and determined whether this is a fact or simply a labour union strategy I will be in a position to answer.

With respect to the jobs that we have eliminated in research on certain aspects of wildlife, those cuts are rather minor, in view of the $27 million my department is still putting in toxicological research and the $150 million put in by the Canadian Government.

• (1450)

[English]

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the cuts are not minimal. The Canadian Wildlife Service has been savaged by the Government. Does the Minister of the Environment intend to sit idly by and allow this inauspicious beginning to her career as Minister of the Environment by allowing the Minister of Finance to cut out the toxicology research centre, to savage the Canadian Wildlife Service, and basically to start out as the Minister of the Environment in a way that sends out completely wrong signals to people who are concerned about the environment? Will the Minister of the Environment speak to the Minister of Finance about the cuts which destroyed all the credibility that she ever had to begin with?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am being subjected to the worst predictions because the credibility I have not been able to establish in this House so early in my mandate is already undermined, completely destroyed. Be that as it may!

The Hon. Member will be interested to learn that out of the 2,846 person-years involved in Ontario, including in the area of wildlife, 34 jobs have been eliminated. I would not that this is the end of the world.

BUDGETARY CUTS AFFECTING PHASE III OF NATURAL GAS PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy.

According to the press, the federal Government intends to make budgetary cuts affecting phase III of the natural gas project.

Could the Minister clarify her position on this subject, since the gas pipeline is of vital importance to our area, in terms of economic spinoffs and development?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member's question, I think I have adequately explained that that project has been deferred, not cancelled. We will be looking at resuming some of that work when the economic conditions permit.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR DETAILS ABOUT CLOSURE OF AIR SAFETY OFFICE IN MONTREAL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport, whom I want to congratulate on becoming a Member of Cabinet, a Cabinet that says it is willing to consult.

I would like to ask the Minister why no consultations were held with the authorities of the City of Montreal when the Government decided to close the air safety office in Montreal.

Second, could the Hon. Minister inform the House whether this decision was made by Cabinet, with the approval of the Prime Minister, or whether the decision was made unilaterally and personally by the Minister of Transport?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I first congratulate the Hon. Member on his re-election? It was a squeaker, but it is nice to have him back.

Mr. MacKay: Another week and he would have been gone.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Another week and he would have been gone, right.

In reply to the Hon. Member may I tell him that my colleague, the Minister of State for Transport, in fact had some discussions with the Board of Trade and others interested in this issue in the City of Montreal, before the decision was taken.

In answer to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, of course the decision was made with the concurrence of Cabinet.

EFFECTS OF BUDGETARY CUTS ON MONTREAL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Transport. Since he has confirmed that the decision was made by Cabinet, is the Minister aware that his leader made a promise during the election campaign in Montreal, at Place Ville-marie, that he would make Montreal a metropolis again? In light of this promise, is the Minister prepared to review this decision which is at direct odds with the Prime Minister's objective, and also the cutback announced with respect to VIA Rail, which will result in a significant loss of jobs since the VIA Rail maintenance centre in Montreal will be scrapped in favour of the centre in Toronto?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not want to base the commitments of the Prime Minister on the interpretation of the Hon. Member, because there could be some variance in that, I am sure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I would not rely on either one of them.

Mr. Mazankowski: This issue was thought through very clearly. It is very plain that the logical place for the Canadian Aviation Safety Board is Ottawa-Hull, or the National Capital Region, from the basis of working with other Departments, such as the NRC, the RCMP, National Health and Welfare, and other flight organizations. From the standpoint of efficiency, economy, and effectiveness, it was felt that it was in the best interests of all concerned to re-establish the Safety Board here in the National Capital Region.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—CONSEQUENCES FOR CULTURAL COMMUNITY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications.

First I would like to congratulate the Minister on his appointment in a field that is of great significance to this country.

Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, the Progressive Conservative Party promised the cultural community that if it formed the government, it would maintain existing financial support at levels commensurate with increases in the cost of living. However, the economic statement shows cuts and reductions in the budgets of cultural organizations. These cuts are proportionally greater—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: With great respect to the Hon. Member, does she have a question, please?

[Translation]

Ms. McDonald: Why is he asking this community, this sector of our economy, to accept these cuts? Why does he want an even larger proportion of people in the arts to live below the poverty line?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, following the statement on economic policy by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), I informed the heads of the principal agencies or corporations connected with the Department of Communications of the objectives the Treasury Board has laid down for the future budget. These agencies and corporations are being asked to submit to the Department proposals commensurate with these objectives by the end of November.

In my forwarding letter I have asked these authorities to see to it that budgetary reductions or restrictions are applied mainly, if not exclusively, to the administration or organizational aspect of the arts, thus shielding the arts community itself from the impact of these budgetary restrictions.

[English]

ARTISTS' INCOME

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister give his assurance to the House, to this community, and indeed to all citizens to whom the promises were made, that there will not be cuts in actual living income to artists, and that, if the cut-backs cannot be made entirely in the domain of administration, those cut-backs will be rescinded?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, since in these discussions between agencies and departments we must mutually respect the other's jurisdiction, I cannot, since I do not have the authority to do so, inform the House to what sector these budgetary restrictions will be applied. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that as soon as the programs or plans are submitted to me, I shall examine them very closely to ensure that Canada's arts community is not exposed to cutbacks owing to budgetary restrictions and that on the contrary, funding allocated for creative work and production is increased.

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, November 14, 1984, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if there are more Members who wish to congratulate Ministers, may I ask that they do it tomorrow so that we can simply use Question Period for questions and answers in future.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, what are the plans of the Government House Leader respecting business of the House for the coming week?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to continue with the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne tomorrow, Monday an Tuesday, which will bring the debate to its conclusion. Tuesday will be the eighth and final day of the debate.

I would like to designate next Wednesday as the first allotted day for the supply period ending on December 10, with the usual caveat that this line-up of business is subject to change in the event that circumstances, exigencies and priorities of the Government change.

Tomorrow I anticipate that the Striking Committee will report. There have been discussions among House Leaders and it has been agreed that the concurrence motion will be received tomorrow. There is an understanding among House Leaders that that concurrence report will be dealt with tomorrow and that there will be a maximum of one speaker per Party before the motion for concurrence is put to the House.

With respect to business of the House for Monday, there have been discussions among House Leaders concerning the procedural difficulty which we anticipate by virtue of the possibility of a deferred vote taking place at the end of that day. Accordingly, I ask the House for its unanimous consent to the following draft order:

That on Monday, November 19, 1984, notwithstanding any deferred division or divisions, if the Order of the Day for the consideration of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne is called, the business to be considered shall be the motion of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton.

I think Mr. Speaker will find that there is an inclination on the part of the House to accept that as an order of the House.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask my hon. friend whether he is ready to give us the business at the House for Thursday next week.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Government House Leader could answer that question in a moment. Either we treat these motions when they are put or I have to defer them to motions. I will simply ask if there is unanimous consent to the suggestion and, there being unanimous consent, is it the will of the House that the matter relating to business of the House for Monday be adopted?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed. The Hon. Member for Windsor West asked a question concerning Thursday of next week. Perhaps the Government House Leader could answer it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am still considering the possibility of business. As the practice has developed, I should like to consult fully with my colleagues, the House Leaders, with respect to business. We did not have an opportunity to meet today. We meet on a daily basis, which is the joy of my existence; there is nothing more exciting than having an opportunity to discuss the future deliberations of the House with my colleagues. Seriously, I hope to consult with them and put forward a proposal with respect to the business of the House for the last two days of next week. I hope we can get on with the business of the House of Commons in an expeditious manner.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I assure the Hon. Government House Leader that there is still a couple of hours left; we could cram in a meeting today. Would he be in a position to indicate to the House whether the Government is intending to establish a committee to deal with the questions directly relating to women? He knows that I raised this question with him previously and he indicated that he was taking the matter under advisement. Since the Striking Committee will report tomorrow on the structure and composition of committees, I was wondering whether we might know something about that in advance of the report of the Striking Committee.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My colleague, the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean), early on in our mandate raised with me this question concerning the very important suggestion of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party. I believe my colleague is in the process of considering a variety of options, which I am sure he will want to discuss with the critics in each Party. I know I speak on behalf of the Government and the Secretary of State when I say to the NDP House Leader that we appreciate his suggestion and that of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East last week. We consider this to be a very important topic. We want to ensure that whatever we do is done in the full spirit of consultation and to the best effect of parliamentary deliberations on matters relating to the women of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: May I just say to the Hon. House Leaders that I allowed that question because it was in the tradition of a question by one of the Party House Leaders. However, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain put me in some difficulty. I should advise him of that because we ruled out a question of the same kind about 10 days ago as it was anticipatory. I let it go today because of the traditions of House Leaders, but I would ask him to consider what I said at that time about anticipatory matters.

PETITION

CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and privilege to present to the House a petition on behalf of the residents of Stormont-Dundas. They believe in the reinstatement of capital punishment for the conviction of first degree murder. Punishments are set to fit the crime and in cases of premeditated murder the supreme crime merits the supreme punishment.

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Allmand (p. 252).

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude the speech I began this morning and which I had to interrupt for the one o'clock adjournment, when I was talking about the merchant marine and the shipbuilding policy.

Since capital costs cannot be reduced through grants under the Petroleum Incentives Program, most oil companies lease tankers rather than have them built in Canada. It should be noted that our foreign competitors provide low cost financing and other direct or indirect grants, whereas the Canadian Government refunds up to 80 per cent of the applicable excise tax to the importer.

January imports are the last of a long and depressing list of foreign imports into Canada. Those four ships represent a loss of about $55 million for Canadian shipyards and related industries. In 1983, Canada imported 38 ships, for an over-all 198,743-ton capacity. That represents the largest number of ships and the highest tonnage ever imported by Canada in a single year. The new shipbuilding government policy came into force last June 30, but there are still some loopholes—PIP grants, among others—which nullify the positive aspects of that policy.

The Government must earmark PIP grants exclusively for companies which buy their equipment in Canada or which maximize Canadian contents. That suggestion does not fly in the face of existing international trade agreements which we have signed since GATT Section 19 does authorize lifting special import barriers when a national industry is threatened.

Canada's shipbuilding industry is seriously threatened. Should we fail to make changes to boost that sector in Canada, then the very survival of our shipbuilding industry will be at stake.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude on that subject by saying that all my efforts will be directed towards the preparation of an effective merchant marine policy which will spell prosperity for our shipyards.

In another vein, I would be remiss if I failed to talk about those who have been most severely affected by twenty years of inertia—young Canadians. Twenty years during which the best the previous government could come up with to solve the unemployment problem was to make them even more dependent on a paternalistic and patronizing government which would force them to wait for handouts from their Liberal MP. Once they realized they had failed miserably, some former Liberal Ministers had the nerve to claim that they had been unable to correct the situation because of the lagging economy for which they were responsible in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I am glad to belong to a government which has decided to create permanent jobs for young Canadians. It is now up to us to take action.

The constituents of Richelieu are also looking forward to a new federal-provincial agreement concerning the creation of industrial parks in the regions of Bécancour, Nicolet and Sorel-Tracy.

In the agricultural sector, our producers are delighted to hear about the reform advocated in the Speech from the Throne, especially with respect to the legislative provisions designed to ease the transfer of family farms and others concerning the tax rebate on gasoline.

Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to you for allowing me to speak in this House and, in conclusion, I want to say again that, for me, it is a great honour to belong to this Government and, for the people of Richelieu, there is renewed hope to see workers walking proudly again, businessmen looking forward to the future, young people regaining their dignity, and the elderly knowing that they are secure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. Debate. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski).

• (1510)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to say what an honour it is for me to participate in this debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne and to associate myself with the many others who have expressed sincere congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, on your elevation to a very high office, one which I know you will fulfil with all the distinction and honour that is customary to this enobled position.

I also congratulate the Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees, the Hon. Member for Verchères (Mr. Danis); the Deputy Chairman of Committees, my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski); as well as the Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees, the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest).

Above all, I congratulate the mover and the seconder for their very distinct contribution in moving and seconding the Speech from the Throne. They certainly have distinguished themselves in an exemplary manner. They have not only brought pride to themselves, but indeed they have brought pride to their constituencies, to those who elected them, and they have certainly brought honour to their regions and districts. I must say it is very refreshing, after having been in this place for more than 16 years, to hear the eloquent words of the mover and seconder and the eloquent words of those who have spoken in this debate.

I enjoyed with interest the person who spoke earlier about his conviction regarding the need for adequate policies to foster the gradual development of a merchant marine and the need to create an economy which would establish permanent job opportunities. It is encouraging to note that throughout this whole country we have people speaking in the Chamber who are echoing the same sentiments. The conviction and the clarity with which these new Members have spoken is indeed an inspiration to us all. They clearly have a lot to offer. I know that this will be one of the most productive Parliaments in the history of this country.

I also want to take this opportunity to express my sincere thanks and appreciation to the electors of Vegreville who have placed their confidence in me for the sixth consecutive time. It has been an honour and a privilege to serve the constituency of Vegreville. For those who may not be aware of where the constituency of Vegreville is, it is east of the City of Edmonton. The western boundary is within 20 miles of the City of Edmonton and the eastern boundary is the boundary of Saskatchewan and Alberta. I have the City of Lloydminster, which is shared with my colleague and good friend, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), who looks after the Saskatchewan side of Lloydminster. I try to look after the Alberta side.

Then there are some very important communities such as St. Paul, Wainwright, Vegreville, Vermilion and Elk Island Park. There is an army base at Wainwright. It is a very mixed economy, primarily agriculture and small industry. The energy resource industry is very important. Essentially all the business activity is related to the activity surrounding agriculture, mixed farming, the energy sector and light industry.

The economic conditions are not healthy. The impact of the National Energy Program and the devastation that was heaped upon our part of the country as a result of the odious policies of the National Energy Program have inflicted irreparable harm. It will take a long time for many of those industries to recover. The small business sector directly associated with agriculture and the energy sector exists in an uncertain climate. There have been many bankruptcies, many failures.

In the farming community we have had our share of bankruptcies. Farm incomes are the lowest since 1938. Last year net farm income fell by roughly 40 per cent in western Canada. These issues clearly need addressing. I am pleased that the Speech from the Throne and the economic statement have gone some distance in addressing the concerns of agriculture.

We are an exporting nation, particularly with respect to our agricultural products. We are not a price setter, we are a price taker. Therefore, we must do everything we can to reduce the input costs of our agricultural products. We have addressed that by addressing fuel costs. Interest rates are coming down. That certainly is a very major cost component. We hope to address the issue of the chemicals we spray and the fertilizers we use. Those are very expensive input costs. We must do everything in our power to bring down the cost of farm inputs. Only in that way can we alleviate some of the cost-price squeeze pressures that are inflicted upon producers.

In listening to the debate up to this point, I find that there has been a lot of rhetoric floating around and very little substance flowing from the Opposition. What puzzles me is that they tend to forget that there was an election on September 4. There was an election where the Canadian people clearly voted for change, an election which gave the Progressive Conservative Party a clear national mandate to set this country on a different course. Yet we hear the same old rhetoric from the socialists and the same old rhetoric from the Liberals, all of which has been rejected by the Canadian people. Will they ever learn?

On September 4 Canadians voted not only against the Liberal government of the day. They voted for a Progressive Conservative alternative. There is no question about that. I might say that they voted against socialism. They voted against a brand of socialism that is depicted by those two Parties which sit close together mollycoddling. They have not changed and they will not change.

• (1520)

I see the former Member for Oshawa sitting in the gallery. The Hon. Michael Starr was a very distinguished Member who served this place with distinction and honour. He visited my office earlier today and reminded me that even the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) almost lost the election this time. His majority was cut from 12,000 to 2,000. I suppose that if the election campaign would have lasted another week or so, we might have got him too.

Not only did the Canadian people vote against the Liberal government but they voted against the Liberal-NDP brand of socialism. They voted for something positive. There is no question about that.

Mr. de Jong: The election is over; tell us what you are going to do. Come on, tell us.

Mr. Mazankowski: There will be lots of opportunity to do that. I think it is very important to set the record straight. The Canadian people voted against a Party which left a legacy of broken promises and hidden agendas. We know what the legacy of that Party was. It was crippling interest rates, massive unemployment, burdensome debt and a weak Canadian dollar. It was a Party which killed the entrepreneurial and creative spirit of Canadians. That is perhaps the biggest disaster that was inflicted on Canada by the alliance of those two Parties. Those two Parties destroyed investor and business confidence. They turned optimism into despair and anxiety. As a matter of fact, their legacy is a legacy of heartbreaks and broken dreams, a legacy of business bankruptcies and farm bankruptcies.

It is amazing that members of the NDP get so irritated. They know that they were a part of this action. They were a part of the action taken on the NEP.

Mr. Waddell: How were we part of it? Name one.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, I will name one right now. Members of the NDP across the way supported the National Energy Program.

Mr. Waddell: Nonsense! That is not true.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is absolutely true.

Mr. Waddell: That is a lie.

Mr. Mazankowski: It cost the people of Ontario 90,000—

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister should not lie to this House—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) that he should not use the term that he just used, if I heard him correctly.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to withdraw the word "lie" because it is unparliamentary and replace it by saying that the Minister obviously knows, if he follows the votes, that we did not vote for the National Energy Program. He is a sensible and good Minister and an honourable man. He should not mislead the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I would like to recall to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway that, first, the House does appreciate the fact that he has substituted the word, and second, that his point is not a point of order. The Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) was making a speech and I would ask him to resume.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it is rather strange that they get so irritated over there. The truth always hurts. The National Energy Program which the NDP supported cost Ontario 90,000—

Mr. Waddell: We did not support the NEP.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe I misheard the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). Once again I think he said that the New Democratic Party supported the National Energy Program when in fact, on every single vote regarding the National Energy Program, members of the NDP voted against it.

Mr. Mazankowski: There again we see the hypocrisy—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Of course, this is a point of disagreement; I would not think it would be a point of order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we again see the hypocrisy of the gang over there. They have not changed and they never will. The fact of the matter is that the National Energy Program, which was supported by members of the New Democratic Party, cost the Ontario economy—

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister is deliberately misleading this House. He has been told and he knows very well—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I believe the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway once again used an expression that may be unparliamentary. Does the Hon. Member wish to—

Mr. Waddell: No, Mr. Speaker. The truth is the truth. He is misleading the House. We never supported the National Energy Program. He knows that very well. He can check the record. He is deliberately misleading the House. Perhaps the Minister is prepared to temper his remarks. He is an honourable man. He knows that I was the energy critic for three years. He knows that I know about the votes. I think he is an honourable man. There are plenty of other targets that may be used against us. Why does he not use the real ones? If he is prepared to temper his remarks, I will—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I understand very well that the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway disagrees with the remarks. He has made his case quite clear on that point. However, I would also like to recall that the expression used by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway is not permitted in this House and is considered unparliamentary. Taking into account the fact that his point was sufficiently made and that the Hon. Member has been very well understood up until now, I would once again reiterate the demand I have just made and ask the Hon. Member to please re-state the phrase.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to change the phrase by saying that he has perhaps inadvertently misled the House. I expect that the Minister will do the honourable thing and recognize that we did not support the National Energy Program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Chair feels very much obliged to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is acknowledging the fact that members of his Party have just done another flip-flop, then I will temper my remarks accordingly. However, the fact of the matter is that according to a recent study done by the Ontario Government, 90,000 jobs were allegedly lost as a result of this odious measure, the National Energy Program, and 70,000 jobs were lost in the Province of Alberta. It affected many other regions. It affected our balance of payments. It created a massive outflow of Canadian investment capital and destroyed generations of entrepreneurs and businessmen. There is no question about that. I am really happy to note that members of the NDP now recognize that it was a bad measure.

Those were some of the things that the people voted against in the last election. They also voted against a government which really divided this country. The National Energy Program was one issue which divided the country. The people also voted against a government which proclaimed that federalism was dead and said that it was not a workable unit. It pitted region against region, West against East, business against labour. The bitterness and strains of acrimony were clearly reflected in the outcome of the election that was held on September 4.

I could speak of the hidden agenda of the Liberal Party, which included the National Energy Program. I could discuss the unilateral way in which it wished to amend the Constitution, an action which again was supported by members of the New Democratic Party. They were going to treat western Canadian provinces as second-class provinces. Members of the NDP cannot weasel out of that one. Those were things that were never talked about during the 1980 election campaign. There was never any mention of the dismantling of VIA and of the dismantling of the Crow rate during the 1980 election campaign. Not a word was uttered. Therefore, we had that massive rejection.

As well, Canadians voted for a new government under the dynamic leadership of the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), a man who must be the most exciting political figure in Canada today. There is no question about that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The Prime Minister was able to put together a team that is competent and compassionate, one which came forward with sensible policies and was able to capitalize on the reservoir of goodwill, talent and character of the Canadian people. And so Canadians supported us because we committed ourselves to putting the economic house in order; to attacking the economic problems on two fronts; and to bringing fiscal responsibility back into the realm of good management. We committed ourselves to creating a climate of confidence for both the consumer and business, a climate of investor confidence and a climate of growth where ingenuity, initiative, creativity and the entrepreneurial spirit of Canadians can once again be unleashed. We committed ourselves to tackle the unemployment problem, not simply by creating more government programs but by encouraging the private sector to create those permanent jobs. We committed ourselves to addressing the interest rate problem.

We talked during the course of the election campaign of the four pillars; the need to address the interest rate problem; the need to address the training and re-training problem; the need for new technology; and the concentration on research and development and on trade, because this country as a nation must trade to survive. Thirty-five per cent of our Gross National Product is dependent upon international trade. We talked about scaling down the scope and size of government. We talked about building upon our natural strengths and revitalizing those basic industries which have carried us through good times and bad.

What are those basic industries? One is agriculture. This country has the potential of being a superpower in agriculture. Even today agriculture is a $19 billion annual megaproject. When we consider that 40 per cent of our economic activity is related to the agri-food business, 18 per cent of our labour force, that we generate $5 million worth of exports, and yet individual farmers are hurting, we see that we must do something to help that particular sector. We are doing that by addressing the cost-input side.

The energy sector is another tremendous engine of economic growth and activity. The CPA has indicated that there are at least 300,000 new jobs which could be created by revitalizing the energy sector. There is the potential of 100,000 jobs in the petro-chemical industry alone through to the year 1990.

There is also the importance of the forest industry. It is a $27 billion annual industry which has $11 billion worth of exports. We must concentrate and ensure that that is a viable and vibrant industry. The fisheries industry is another one of our natural strengths, $3 billion worth. Mining has $12.2 billion worth of economic activity. Tourism is worth $17 billion. We must, therefore, provide a better deal and framework for these industries in order that they may continue to grow and to generate the kind of new wealth which we need in this country.

Yes, Canadians voted for those kinds of programs and they voted for new ideas and new solutions. They also voted for a new way of governing through the process of consultation, co-operation and working together; renewing our political and economic partnership; and working through consultation and co-operation rather than confrontation and alienation. Yet today we hear the same misleading rubbish from my friends in the New Democratic Party which we heard throughout the election campaign.

I heard the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who said the other day that our Government has done nothing for agriculture. Let me go through a litany of things which have been done since this Government assumed office. On October 1, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), together with his provincial counterparts, announced a $60 million federal-provincial drought assistance program for western Canadian farmers. On November 5, the Minister of Agriculture announced a suspension of farm foreclosures by the Farm Credit Corporation until January 15. It is a very distressing situation, and this decision gives us time to analyse the situation to see what we can do in a very constructive and meaningful way. On November 2, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), announced a $123 million payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. This is something for which this Party has long campaigned. Over a year, $123 million, for a total of $223 million, has been paid out.

Initial prices for barley have been raised from $2.39 to $2.72. On October 26, I announced the freezing of the seaway tolls, which were scheduled for an 8 per cent to 10 per cent increase. This will be a saving of some $2 million for the farmers of western Canada. In the economic statement there was the removal of the 9 per cent sales tax, the discontinuance of the collection of the federal excise tax of $1.5 cents a litre—the 9 per cent sales tax is three cents a litre—and relief from the increase in the petroleum compensation charge. All this amounts to a total reduction of 6.3 cents a litre for farmers, fishermen and people engaged in the forestry industry. That is almost 28 cents a gallon, Mr. Speaker, and these guys across the way say we have done nothing for the farmer. Well, if we have done nothing for the farmer, let us take it away, and then we will hear the yelping and screaming coming from over there, because those Hon. Members do not know what they are talking about.

Furthermore, with respect to capital gains—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and things of that nature, those are items which are going to be referred to and dealt with.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, while avoiding rhetoric, I would like to ask the Minister if he will finally get around to talking about his own Department, which got hit for $288 million in cut-backs, which is additional to $32.5 million which farmers are going to have to pay in user fees. I remind the Minister of how he spoke against the Honourable Otto Lang's user pay program. He was one of the leading spokesmen against it.

However, let me go to a matter about which the Minister at that time was the most prominent spokesman, certainly in the Opposition. I hope the Minister who said on September 13 last year:

I have to tell you, Mr. Chairman, that on the basis of our candid assessment this country is clearly not ready for the dismantlement of the Crow.

He went on to say:

—the goal of our amendments will be to maintain the existing Crow rate for the producers of Canada—

And guaranteed in its present statutory form until at least 1985-86. The Minister went on further to say:

We are of the opinion that on the evidence that has been presented to this committee it is clearly in the best interest of the producer to retain the Crow.

Would the Minister mind reporting to the House about the position and policy of his Party which concerns his Department, and tell us if he is going to put the Crow rate freeze on? And will he make it retroactive to August 1st last?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member asked that question, although it was sort of convoluted.

Mr. Benjamin: I just quoted the Minister. If that is convoluted, tough.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, that was not the policy which was stated during the last election campaign, and the Hon. Member knows that. So he should not try to mislead, distort and manipulate.

Mr. Tobin: You are too sensitive.

Mr. Mazankowski: No, the Minister is not sensitive at all.

Mr. Tobin: Yes, he is.

Mr. Mazankowski: No, certainly not. I have ten minutes. I can take more time. I am trying to handle as many questions as I possibly can.

Mr. Tobin: You have a thin skin.

Mr. Mazankowski: No, I do not have a thin skin, either.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Mazankowski: The position of our Party was that the Government would freeze existing freight rates paid by producers from any further increase pending the results of the legislation's review mechanism and the producers' ability to pay. The stated freight rate at that time was the one which was announced on April 27, 1984, which was set for the 1984-85 crop year.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport with respect to the railways. The Minister will know very well of my concern, which is shared with a great many others, with respect to the issue of caboose less trains. I hope he will be following up the request of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) with respect to holding hearings, not only in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Moncton and Ottawa, but also in those other cities in which the Minister himself earlier requested the CRTC to hold hearings.

My question pertains, Mr. Speaker, to a comment made by the President of the CNR with respect to the future possibilities of manufacturing programs at the CN shops in Transcona. The President of the CNR, Dr. LeClair, is reported to have said that the construction of coal cars there—and the Minister will remember this program—was an accident and that it was a one time occurrence and not likely to recur. Does the Minister know, first of all, that it was not a one-time occurrence? There was a wood chip program there and at least one other manufacturing program, so it is not a one-time occurrence. Those of us concerned about Transcona did not understand that it was an accident; we thought it was a new step forward in manufacturing for western Canada where this kind of work could be done on site. Is the Minister taking an interest in this and will he try to ensure that manufacturing possibilities are indeed distributed fairly across the country and that Transcona will continue to be taken into consideration as the site for future programs of this nature.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, I think it is fair to say, with respect to the hearings on the pre-testing of the caboose less trains, that that was an initiative taken by myself and my colleagues, and I appreciate the support of the Members opposite. I just want to make it very clear that the initiative was taken by myself and by Members on this side. There have been requests for additional hearings and I have communicated that request to the CTC and await its response.

Regarding the second part of the question, I have to confess that I am not familiar with the statement to which the Hon. Member referred. I would be very pleased to look into that matter and take the Hon. Member's submission as a representation. I can tell him that because CN is a national railroad system owned by the people of Canada, it is important that the contracts for supplies, materials and equipment should be reflected in a purchasing plan which will take into consideration all regions of the country, and the Transcona shop should not be excluded.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question regarding shipping, although I know he comes from an inland riding. He will recall that his former short-lived Government had some fairly positive proposals to do something about Canadian shipping. I would like to know whether he and his Government have any plans or suggestions that would help to stimulate Canadian shipping. In addition, what are his views on a Canadian merchant marine?

Mr. Mazankowski: As a matter of fact, we have a number of initiatives to stimulate the shipbuilding industry, and part of the rationalization for the upgrading of the eastern ferry system involves very intricately the acquisition of new vessels. There will be four new vessels coming on stream, one of which is already built. They will, among other things, provide more capacity, faster service, greater flexibility and, equally important, provide the shipyards with some needed activity.

Ms. Mitchell: What about western shipyards?

Mr. Mazankowski: As far as the West is concerned, naturally we will not overlook the West. As I said, this Government has representation from all regions of the country and we are reminded of the regional strengths and opportunities every week when we meet in caucus. Being a westerner I would certainly not want to overlook the West.

Notwithstanding the fact that I come from an inland part of Canada, I am very interested in marine activities and have always been. I am one who personally favours the gradual redevelopment of a deep sea fleet. There are some difficulties in that and there are different schools of thought on the subject, but we are going to have the benefit of a task force which is going to be bringing down some recommendations. I hope that when that is presented, perhaps the Government will be able to respond with a policy paper.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): There are only a few seconds left in the question and comment period, so I will recognize now the next speaker in the debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by congratulating you, Sir, and all your colleagues in the chair on your appointment in this new Parliament. I want to say how pleased I am to be back here and especially to be sitting straight across from my good friend, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). For most of the last 16 years we have sat on the same side of the table in committee and the same side of the House here. However, now that he is over there, I expected that when he got up to speak in this debate he would have something to say about what is going on in his Department; not what is being done with it or for it but what is being done to it. I was hoping we would hear some explanation about the, as I add them up, $288 million worth of cut-backs in his Department. I would like to have had an explanation as to what the Government's plans are regarding branch lines. Does this mean it is just delaying rehabilitation or does it mean it cancelled rehabilitation?

I would also like an explanation about more user-pay charges. My colleague, the hon. gentleman from Vegreville, led the criticism in this House of a former Minister of Transport who inaugurated user-pay. We had a continuation of that policy under the short-lived Tory Government in 1979, and we have a continuation of Liberal policy under this Government now. User-pay means another $34 million in airline taxes. The Minister carefully tried to get himself off the hook on the Crow rate. I should remind the House, Mr. Speaker, for those who were not here at the time, that the Minister, as transport critic for the Conservative Party, took something like 40 minutes to make a major policy statement last September 13 dealing with one of his amendments to Bill C-155. He laid it on the line and made it very clear where his Party stood on that legislation and what his Party would do with it when it got a chance. He was unequivocal about his partisan stand on it. He said, "The goal will be to maintain the existing Crow rate for the producers of Canada and at least ensure that it is guaranteed in the present statutory form until the review process is completed in 1985-1986". The Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) was sitting there that night. He heard him. I will call him to be one of my witnesses. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) will also bear witness, as will everyone else who was there that night. The Minister made a superb presentation on why the statutory grain rate should be kept for western grain producers. Too bad he was not as superb today, or anywhere close to being superb.

I also want to say that this Government has more first priorities than anyone I have ever heard of or seen in the years I have been here or anywhere else. I have heard all kinds of statements and press releases for the last number of months about first priorities and sacred trusts. There was a first priority on unemployment. It was a sacred trust. Then it turned out there was another first priority and sacred trust in reducing the deficit. There were other first priorities such as women's rights and aboriginal rights. Members opposite have a lot of first priorities. They are still trying to figure out which ones should be first, although I think they decided that last Thursday night. The first priority for them is the deficit. Well, Mr. Speaker, a deficit is a debt.

Mr. Fraser: This one is a growing debt.

Mr. Benjamin: One acquires debt for positive and constructive reasons. You acquire a debt to buy a home, a tractor, a combine, a fishing boat or some nets. You acquire a debt to expand your business. In the acquiring of those debts people go to work. Any part of a deficit which is acquired for those things, whether by individuals, a private company or a government, is a positive and self-liquidating debt. Any debt or deficit acquired for productive purposes is a positive debt. The Government should stop being so hypnotized by that part of the deficit.

• (1550)

If you reduce the deficit, you automatically increase unemployment. The measures announced last Thursday night are going to increase unemployment. We can argue about whether it will cost 20,000 or 100,000 jobs, but it is going to increase unemployment, especially if you reduce deficits for positive investments in our economy which create jobs.

A major portion of the $93 million that is paid to VIA Rail is for the implementation of projects promised in the past seven years, new transcontinental passenger equipment which would put people to work in Thunder Bay, Trenton, Sydney or at Bombardier at La Pocatière outside of Montreal. It would put people to work for something which is needed by the nation, which is the responsibility of the national Government. The private sector is not involved in operating VIA Rail. The private sector would be involved in building new equipment for VIA Rail, which puts people to work, but the Government cuts back on that kind of legitimate increase in deficit for the constructive purpose of creating jobs.

I did not originate the idea, Mr. Speaker, but let me remind the House that by bringing unemployment down to 7 per cent or 7.5 per cent, the deficit would be wiped out in three years or less. Let us not worry about chickens and eggs. I submit that to borrow now for positive investments in things that are the responsibility of the public sector, whether shipyards, railroad passenger trains or a host of other things, would create jobs. Mr. Speaker, when you invest borrowings in productive increases in our economy, you put people to work and keep business busy. They pay taxes and you liquidate the borrowings. Being a simple, ordinary country boy, that has always made sense to me.

Reducing deficits as carried on by this Government and the late unlamented Liberal government has increased unemployment. There are no ifs, ands or buts about it, and it was not the NDP that came up with those figures.

I think the matter of interest rates is at square one. It would be dumb for a businessman to borrow money at 12 per cent, 13 per cent or 14 per cent to expand his business, increase his inventory or re-equip his plant. He would be dumb to borrow money at those rates. Why should small and middle-sized businesses borrow money? The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and all the rest of them over there talk about confidence. Well, confidence does not make jobs. You cannot eat it, you cannot borrow it, and you cannot lend it. If you lower interest rates, Mr. Speaker, those who are willing to borrow and invest will have the confidence to do it. Farmers and fishermen who have to borrow in order to survive are borrowing at rates of interest which will ruin them. It will ruin them because the price they get for their produce is below their cost of production. The Hon. Member for Assiniboia can tell you about that in spades. Yet his Government compounds the felony.

We should put a handle on interest rates. We should not worry about increasing the deficit for productive purposes. In that way, most of the deficit would not go to pay interest on old debts; the deficit would be for productive purposes. At the end of World War II the national deficit was three times as high as it is now in real dollars. With a high rate of production and employment during the 1950s, we got rid of the entire deficit.

The other problem is the paranoia of the Members of the Government and the members of the financial institutions about the value of the Canadian dollar compared to the American dollar. Mr. Speaker, as the man said in Gone With The Wind, "Scarlett, frankly I don't give a damn". Who cares? What does it matter what our dollar is worth compared to the American dollar? The question is what our dollar is worth to us here and what it is doing for us here. To be perfectly honest, I would not mind if it went down some more compared to the American dollar, because that is great for grain sales, as the Hon. Member for Assiniboia can tell you. It is great for potash and forestry sales. It is great for the tourism business and the fishing industry. It makes our imports a little more expensive, but then maybe more of our manufacturers will have more sales.

But the people from the financial institutions in our country are running around wringing their hands saying how terrible it is that our dollar is down compared to the American dollar. Well, what the hell, it is down compared to the Fiji dollar, the Pango Pango dollar, and I do not know what other dollars. It may be up compared to the British pound. It may be up or down compared to any currency. It is like the fellow who asked his friend how his brother was and his friend replied, "Compared to what"?

The Government must get over that nonsense and do what Louis St. Laurent did after World War II and what John Diefenbaker did. We did it for only a year or two at a time and three or four years during the war. We did not give a damn what our dollar was worth compared to the American dollar. We pegged the dollar and the interest rates. We put on foreign exchange controls. By that I am not referring to the $200 or $300 that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) might spend on a weekend in the United States.

Mr. Mazankowski: Are you jealous because I have not invited you?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, you have not invited me to go with you yet.

If they get over that nonsense and do our thing, they will find that there are billions of dollars of investment capital available to Canada from Canadians and from foreign investors. For many years we have brought in billions of dollars of foreign capital for investment in this country, but it was not ownership capital, it was loan capital. A classic example is the Saskatchewan Power Corporation. In eight years it borrowed over $600 million, almost all of which came from New York, Switzerland, or somewhere else outside of Canada. It was foreign capital. We brought electricity to 60,000 farms and every town, village and hamlet in the province. The experts said it could not be done. We increased our generating capacity. We paid off those loans and we own the Power Corporation. That was mostly done with foreign investment, Mr. Speaker.

The investment from outside of our borders does not have to be equity or ownership investment. We had enough of that under the Liberal government. At one point, our economy was almost 90 per cent owned outside of our borders and we were not masters in our own house. I am not anti-American, I like my relatives, but I do not want all my relatives moving into my house, with me having to pay the mortgage and live in the garage.

● (1600)

The Government should take the first step to reduce interest rates and not worry about any borrowings or deficits which are productive and put people to work in areas that are the responsibility of the Government. I believe that the Government will find that would restore the confidence of the private investor. Lower interest rates would mean that tens of thousands of people would borrow money to build a new home or repair their existing homes.

Every city in this country has long waiting lists for senior citizens homes and chronic care beds, but the Government is more concerned with reducing the deficit. Thousands of people could be put to work in this area to meet a genuine need that is the responsibility of the entire public. Instead, the Government sits here like the Liberals did with their nineteenth century concepts on how to solve problems. They sound like R.B. Bennett, Herbert Hoover and Mackenzie King all over again. Why should we not declare a state of national economic emergency and challenge the nation at every level including the private sector, the agricultural industry and the trade union movement to take action as we did during the Second World War? We have done it before and it can be done again.

It is not necessary to sit here and worry about what is happening with the American economy. I am not concerned about what is happening with the American economy. I am concerned about what we do with our economy. History has shown that we can take care of our own affairs. The Government should not simply cut deficits for the sake of cutting deficits just to please the head of the Bank of Canada or any other bank. I am not concerned about how they feel. In fact, I would rather that they felt worse, because whenever they feel bad usually most of the country is working.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that the Hon. Member has never met a bottom line or a payroll. I doubt very much if there is anyone on that side who has met a payroll. It is quite obvious from their type of rhetoric. That is the kind of irresponsibility one gets from people like that.

Mr. Althouse: You never borrowed money when you were in business?

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, I did, and I met a payroll too.

Mr. Althouse: So have we.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member talked about user pay. I take it from his comments that he is implying that the public Treasury should pay an increased share of the costs of transportation relative to what is being paid today.

I ask him in all honesty if he could enlighten me as to how he would handle, for example, the cost recovery in the Canadian air transport administration, which was at 58 per cent in 1980 and is now down to 34.4 per cent. How would he handle the marine sector, which has a cost recovery of roughly 26 per cent; the surface transport, at 17 per cent; CN Marine, at 19 per cent; VIA, at 23 per cent; and the Coast Guard, at one per cent?

I am not trying to belittle the point. I want to get a forthright answer from the Hon. Member, because the fact is that the percentage of cost recovery is on a continual decline and worsening. Does he not consider it to be a responsible move to do everything we can to reverse that trend by getting greater productivity, efficiency and utilization on the one hand while looking at the options of increased support from the users of those systems?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the questions of my friend. I will endeavour to answer each one specifically, beginning with ferry services. I have always believed, as has my Party, that the ferry service is part and parcel of our national highway and rail system. If it were logical to charge tolls for a ferry system, it would be equally logical to have tolls for the use of part or all of the Trans-Canada Highway. Those ferry services should be considered part of the road network.

Mr. Mazankowski: What about the recovery on the Trans-Canada?

Mr. Benjamin: I do not know if we have ever had full cost recovery on the Trans-Canada Highway, or any other road for that matter.

Mr. Mazankowski: But 19 per cent?

Mr. Benjamin: It seems to me that something which is a full public responsibility should be shared by the entire nation through our tax system. We all share in the cost, whether we use it or not.

Mr. Mazankowski: Are you saying there should be no tolls?

Mr. Benjamin: I say that the ferry services should be toll free because they are part and parcel of our highway system. That is not a new idea on my part and does not happen to be part of some socialist ideology.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why did B.C. not do it when the Hon. Member's Party was in government?

Mr. Benjamin: That is a good question. Many of us asked them why they bothered raising the fares.

With respect to airports, if there was full cost recovery or the cost of recovery was substantially increased, what would that do to the users, particularly small users? If there was full cost recovery, we might as well make the airlines build, maintain and operate the airports. However, I do not think that there would be very many airlines in business.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is 58 per cent too high?

Mr. Benjamin: I do not think it should go any higher.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is now 34 per cent.

Mr. Benjamin: At 58 per cent, not only will the airport tax increase, airlines will have to increase fares, because they will not give that money to the Government without trying to recover it. Therefore, it is self defeating. It is either an essential public service or it is not. If the Government does not see it as an essential public service, it should go for broke for a 100 per cent cost recovery and make the users pay the entire shot. At the same time, let the truckers and bus companies build and maintain their own right-of-way. They would then be in an equal fight with the railroads and the airlines. Of course, the taxpayers have already built and maintained the airports for the airlines.

The fact of the matter is that every mode of transportation, going back to the invention of the wheel, has always been subsidized.

We have the situation where governments are hypnotized by user pay to the extent where these cease to be a public utility and become examples to be compared with private enterprise. It would be illogical for private enterprise to buy out the ferry business unless it operated only once a year, otherwise it would go broke.

The same situation is true for airports or highways. They would go broke without applying tolls to recover those costs, plus a reasonable return on their investment. This cannot be done in areas that are properly and logically a public responsibility as a public utility.

The nation has never objected to deficits. I have not heard the voters in an uproar—except editorial writers—about a post office deficit or a deficit on ferry services. These are things which everyone must use directly or indirectly. If it were logical to apply tolls for these services, there should be tolls on pedestrians because they walk up and down the sidewalks for nothing and the ratepayers pay the property taxes to build the sidewalks. Why not have a toll of 25 cents for every six blocks? It would be logical if we are considering tolls as a means to achieving full cost recovery of public utilities for public use.

• (1610)

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about full cost recovery. The Hon. Member has said, yes, there should be selective cost recovery. He said there should not be any tolls on ferry services, notwithstanding the fact that his own NDP government in B.C. did not choose that particular route. I would like to get some idea from the Hon. Member what he considers to be a fair and reasonable cost recovery. As I said in the case of the Canadian air transport administration, in 1980 there was a 58.1 per cent cost recovery. That has now gone down to 34.4 per cent.

Can I ask the Hon. Member whether he considers 58 per cent too high, too low, or just right? Does he consider 34 per cent too high or too low? Or does he consider that it should be less than that or more than that?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the costs should be any more than they are now. The Minister's additional $34 million for an air tax is that much more for consumers.

Mr. Mazankowski: On taxpayers. If the consumer is not going to pick it up, the taxpayers will.

Mr. Benjamin: Again, Mr. Speaker, transportation is something we all have to use both directly and indirectly. I repeat my argument. I am sure that if you slapped $5 a year on every taxpayer in Canada just for that one thing, you would probably have more money left over in the operation of airports.

Mr. Mazankowski: What is the magic figure?

Mr. Benjamin: We used to have no airport tax.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We used to have no airports.

Mr. Benjamin: Now it is up to over $23, and it is going to go up to $30. We used to have no airport tax. In real dollars the deficit was no worse then when there was no airport tax than it is now. What has it accomplished? I suppose it provided some additional money for Ministers of Transport to make some airport improvements. There is no doubt about the fact that that is what they did. However, I would have taken the amount out of general tax revenue and used that money.

Mr. Dick: The deficit.

Mr. Mazankowski: You would let the poor little pensioner pay.

Mr. Benjamin: I would charge a fee to people owning executive jets, to private airline charter companies, and to scheduled airlines. I would charge them a fee. Anybody who rented space in my building or in my house I would charge rent, the same as I would charge people for renting space in an airport. Even now the Minister is trying to drive a Canadian car rental company into bankruptcy with the kinds of regulations and policy he is following. But I am not talking about the latter. If you rent space in the building, of course, you charge for it. But that would not anyway near begin to cover the cost of the operation of a modern airport. I believe that continually raising the user fee is self-defeating.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is 34 per cent too high or too low?

Mr. Benjamin: I would say, leave it where it is, Mr. Speaker. I would say, this far and no further. Leave it at 34 per cent cost recovery. The Minister can get the money. Everybody uses airlines one way or another. The Minister will get the money back some other way which will be more fair and equitable instead of picking on each sector in his Department.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are going to charge the pensioner.

Mr. Benjamin: And the pensioners, Mr. Speaker. The Minister is going to raise the airport tax from $23 to $30 for the pensioners. This is fine for those who are rich and can afford to travel. But what do you do when a whole family has to attend the funeral of another family member, or an old age pensioner—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Allmand, (p. 252).

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my first comments are to you and to your colleagues in the chair. I want to wish you well to thank you for the positions you have taken and for the dignity that you bring to the Chamber. Our best wishes go with you.

I also want to take this opportunity to express my thanks to the residents of the riding of Provencher for re-electing me to this House of Commons. It is an a honour that is afforded very few people. I think all of us are humbled by the fact that we receive that confidence from our fellow citizens.

It is important to understand, as we start this thirty-third Parliament, that Canadians gave this Government a mandate, a mandate for change, to change that which was not working but to change it with fairness, equity and sensitivity. That will be the central theme of my contribution to this debate.

My colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has outlined for those of us who come from rural Canada the advantages that have already been given to the farming community in terms of initiatives, prior to this House being opened and subsequently. Those of us in rural Canada are very much aware that we cannot isolate the farm community from the rest of our population. I would suggest also to our urban friends that it is important, as we take stock of what is happening in the farm community, that we build on the strengths that have been created largely by private and personal initiative. But we must be cognizant of what is happening in the farming community, because if the farming community does not only survive, grow and strengthen, all society will suffer. One cannot isolate what is happening on the farms today in rural Canada from the general well-being of the country.

I am pleased by the initiatives that have been taken, especially in the area of fuel costs. No matter how good a manager might be in a farming situation, he or she cannot do anything about reducing the price of fuel that farmers need for the production of food. I heartily commend the initiatives taken Thursday last.

It is also important that the basic industries that form the backbone of Canada, such as mining, pulp and paper, industries that are represented in my riding and which also form a vital part of the economic well-being of other parts of the country, show strength and growth. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the change we were asked to make and the mandate we were given are important. There is an important hallmark that I want to point out with respect to the responsibilities I have taken as Minister of National Health and Welfare. Let me outline them. Yes, Canadians have voted for change. We want to bring about that change in the manner in which I have just described. But I do not believe that Canadians have voted for revolution, that is, to revolutionize everything that they have come to hold dear or which they feel is part of the social fabric of the country. I want to address that as well.

The Government has now committed itself formally in the Speech from the Throne and again in the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to an approach and to principles that we articulated in the election campaign. The first principle is that of consultation. In contrast to the ways of the past, we believe that Canadians have the right and obligation to be involved in the determination of public policy. We are not afraid, we are not worried, and we are not concerned about what Canadians will say in that determination of public policy. In fact, we welcome it. If we were content simply to manage the affairs of national government, then consultation would not be so important. But we are not content merely to manage. We want to move ahead, and that requires the involvement of Canadians and the governments they elect.

The second principle is that of co-operation. It would be fine if everyone were agreed on where we should go and, as a result of that consultation, we would know exactly where we should go. In the challenges which are before our country, implementing change and moving ahead will require more than agreement. It will take joint action, joint initiative and a pooling of our resources. Despite the partisan nature of the House of Commons, I trust that this will be the character of the House. I also trust that such will be the character of federal-provincial relations. I especially want to emphasize that such must be the pattern if our economy is to be renewed and developed.

• (1620)

The third principle is building upon what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has called "the genius of Canada". It is the farmer, the man or woman running a small business, or the entrepreneur who has a vision or a dream who provide jobs in the country. It is the family and commitment to community which guarantee stability in our social fabric. It is my role as Minister of National Health and Welfare to put forward signals and initiatives which will strengthen the role of the family and give it more prominence in society than I feel it has been given before.

The Government must at all times turn to Canadians in their homes, at their jobs and at their leisure for our source of inspiration and creativity, because it is that creativity which builds nations. I take real satisfaction as a Manitoban and as a Member of the House in finding a commitment to these vital principles in the Speech from the Throne. I know that my commitment and that of my colleagues in Government to work with all provincial governments, including my own, is real. We are optimistic about the first steps.

The strategy of encouraging investment and private sector job creation is practical. Though others might feel that we over-emphasize it from time to time, there is no question that in past years, either inadvertently or directly, there has been a downgrading of the importance of the private sector. That must be changed.

As I want to address the House today on issues within the Department of National Health and Welfare, I should like to take a moment to express publicly that I feel I am most fortunate as Minister in having the Parliamentary Secretary whom the Prime Minister appointed, the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand). She not only has compassion, she comes with much experience having lived and contributed to the public sector in her province. I am most fortunate in the fact that she is working with me.

The determination within our social programs to guard stability and fairness in our social policy is genuine and non-negotiable. I repeat that, to guard stability and fairness in our social policy is genuine and the views that it is not negotiable is shared by all Members of the House. Those are the underlying principles which must be met as to whether or not social policy should be part of our larger social fabric.

My remarks are devoted to certain aspects of the social policy of the Government and of Canadians generally. It is by now a truism that we in Canada have a social system of which Canadians are proud and with which most Canadians are secure. No fair Canadian would deny that all Parties in the House have contributed to the design and the creation of this system—the Liberal Party in office, the New Democratic Party in Opposition and our Party in both roles. I return to the first Bill passed by the Defienbaker government which addressed social policy or to the first Bill, which the administration of the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) passed in 1979, that is, the extension of the spousal allowance. As Hon. Members will know, in the present Speech from the Throne there is a further step in the area of pension reform for widows and widowers. That being the Canadian record, no fair Canadian would claim that we have finished the job. Those who say that we must not tamper with the social system are not only arguing against eroding our social system—and that is not my intention in any way, shape or form—but too often are falling into the trap where they argue against improving the social system. That is important. If the job is unfinished, the debate about social policy is unfinished. If there is more to be done, this Parliament must get on with the job of furthering that act. This is what the Minister of Finance had in mind when he said the following in the House a week ago:

> —we must ensure that growth will be for the benefit of all Canadians and that the costs of change will not fall on those least able to bear them. To provide this assurance, we must make certain that those who really require social assistance receive it. We must also ensure that our social support systems encourage self-reliance rather than create a dependency on government.

It would be foolishness or dishonesty, or possibly both, to suggest that we can more effectively meet the needs of the most disadvantaged without giving a thought to the source of resources or the best means of putting those resources in their hands. Such a careful look at the design of social programs has as much to do with good social policy at any time as it does with husbanding resources in a time of economic crisis.

Going back into the history of the development of social policy in the country, in the postwar period legislators were concerned that if changes were not made, we might sink back or slide back into a depressed economy such as we had experienced in the 1930s. It has been built up gradually and carefully, but always one has had to keep in mind the fact that good social policy is best protected when there is economic growth. Too often, I would suggest, the two solitudes in society have tried to separate that—those who put stress on the economy on the one hand arguing the economic factors and those on the social policy side stressing that side. While that is natural—and I understand it—the time has come that both groups and both views are melded so that we can develop further coverage in social policy.

I can only assume that this is what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) had in mind when he said in the leadership race for the Liberal Party that he would reduce the federal deficit by some $15 billion in seven years. I assume that a concern with equity and with effectiveness of taxpayers' dollars is what motivated the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) to argue the very same during the leadership contest when he said that a re-examination had to take place.

Canadians are understandably and justifiably concerned with any debate on the comprehensiveness of social programs or the level of resources committed to them. I believe it would be helpful to reaffirm what the Government has said in this regard. First, the Government talked about a review of two of our social policy programs, that is, the child benefit system and the elderly benefit system. Today in Question Period I was pleased to note that the spokesman on social policy for the Official Opposition said in his question that he supported a review. I welcome not only his comments but also his input.

• (1630)

Second, these systems were designed to support all Canadians who fall into the categories of having children, that is in the case of the family benefits program, or those who are over the age of 65.

The third principle behind the design of our programs has always been that the benefits of these programs should be greatest for those most in need and lowest for those least in need. Surely no Member of the House of Commons and no fair Canadian would argue that principle. I can tell the House categorically that those principles are inviolate. Our goal is not to abolish or erode anything. It is to improve the progressivity of what is already in place.

All the talk I have heard in the last few days has been about universality. To describe what the debate should focus on, let me offer two possible definitions of universality with which I think most Members of the House would be familiar. One definition might be that all social program should be available to everyone, regardless of need. The defenders of that definiton, if there are any, must realize that they are not defending universality since no such thing presently exists. The guaranteed income supplement and the spousal allowance are two programs that are not universal, but available to those who meet certain tests.

Another definition of universality might see our social programs providing the same level of after-tax benefit to all recipients. Defenders of that definition must surely realize that there is no such thing as universality to meet that definition. The progressive tax system, which is not open to serious question so far as I know, ensures that benefits are taxed at a higher rate for high income earners than for low and middle income earners. There as well the definition needs clarification. I say tangentially that the present Leader of the Opposition has taken certain steps with regard to the progressivity of the tax system, so I do not have to outline that for Liberal Members opposite.

Canadians, therefore, have never had a version of universality in which the theory and the reality are absolutely the same. For example, the old age exemption in the income tax system and the child exemption are theoretically universal, but in fact benefit only those with enough income to pay taxes. Those obviously who are below the taxable income level do not benefit.

When one looks at the program, obviously care has to be taken. There are Canadians who have planned their future. They are retired, close to retirement or hope to retire. They would fit one of those three categories. There has been a commitment made by the people of Canada through subsequent governments that those plans remain in place. It is for that reason that I say I have no intention of eroding that social contract.

Surely there can be only one workable definition of universality that is also consistent with the principle of fairness, that is, that all individuals in the group designated for assistance should receive benefits. At the same time, however, the value of those benefits should surely be greatest for those with the greatest need and least for those whose needs are the least.

I say to the House, and I am simply repeating what the Prime Minister said, that we do not contemplate means tests. I think the definition of a means test is best brought to mind when one recalls the time when we had those types of tests in the country. They were described not as a means test, but the meanest test. That obviously is not progressive social policy.

We are contemplating no trade-off between social and fiscal responsibility. I can give no better proof than what appeared in the Agenda for Economic Renewal, and I quote:

> Social responsibility dictates that wherever possible, and to a greater extent than is the case today, scarce resources should be diverted to those in greatest need. Fiscal responsibility suggests that Government expenditures must be allocated to provide immediate employment opportunities and better ensure sustained growth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Hon. Member's time is up. Questions or comments?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Minister. I congratulate him on his new post. He certainly showed today that at least he is a philosopher. What most people would like to know is, what will be the practical application of this philosophy?

My first question goes back to the point that he made with regard to strengthening the role of the family. Is he in favour of maintaining and also increasing family allowances, particularly in view of the great increase in Canada of single parents, many of them mothers raising children on their own with very low incomes, very often on welfare, and the number of marginal income families with children? Also, there are the millions of people who are unemployed who have children. That is my first question.

The second question has to do with benefits for older people. I am very glad to see the Hon. Stanley Knowles in the Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Mitchell: The Minister will recall that for many, many years Mr. Knowles advocated pension reform, particularly for those in the 60 to 65 age group. We support the idea of increasing benefits for widows and widowers in this group. As Mr. Knowles often asked, why should this be based on marital status? I asked the Minister whether this is only being targeted to married people or those who were formerly married. What about single people, particularly single older women in the 60 to 65 age group who are suffering greatly in this country?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. From philosophy I was obviously going to go to practical expressions of what we intend to do. If the Hon. Member has read the Throne Speech, which I am sure she has done every night because it is good reading, she will know about the initiatives on the spousal allowance which we intend to bring forward. I take from her comments that the New Democratic Party is going to support that Bill. I thank her for that initiative.

We are addressing the very question that she put forward, and I thank her for the question. The gist of the first question had to do with family allowances and family benefits, the total family benefits package. We have to look at family allowances, the tax exemption per child as well as the child tax credit. If I understood the question correctly, the bias or the tilting that the Hon. Member demonstrated was for granting it to those more in need than to those who do not need it nearly as badly.

That is the gist of the debate. That is what I was trying to put forward to the Hon. Member and to Canadians. Surely it is within our imagination that, having those resources and having those considerations, we can only benefit the family by strengthening the family position by looking at the program at the present time, taking a look at if it were to be changed, which families would benefit and which income group would benefit most. That is the kind of debate and review to which we look forward. I also look forward to receiving the Hon. Member's input.

With regard to the reference she made respecting a Manitoban, Mr. Knowles, who is sitting at the table today, all of us from Manitoba take pride in the contribution that he has made to public life.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We have had pension reform discussions for 10 years now. I hope that during this Parliament we can move the discussion to the point of the practical. As I said earlier, we have built our benefit system step by step, I think carefully, trying to respond to need.

● (1640)

We can see what we have not done by taking a look at the task force report on pension reform. What we must do is to give either more incentives, more encouragement or a combination of the two so that Canadians will invest more of their own resources for their retirement period. Surely that is a responsible step for this Parliament to take today for the future of Canada.

When looking at the demographics of the group of Canadians who are over 65 today and looking at the possible numbers of Canadians who will be over the age of 65 by the turn of the century, a time when some of us might be approaching that age ourselves, it is important for us to note that the numbers will grow dramatically, and obviously with that the dependency factor grows. We must address that today. We cannot wait to address it 10 years from now when we suddenly have a situation on our hands which is hard to handle. Let us do it today. That is why we are putting these considerations quite openly on the table. Let us have that review. Once having had that review, which I do not think need be all that long, let us close the books and get on with the best social policy we can put together.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on two issues and put a question to the Minister. I have heard two western Ministers speak on oil and energy. If those Ministers would take a close look at what was said in the Throne Speech and the economic statement, they would see that they did not give the oil industry anything except for a change in the threshold of the PGRT from $250,000 to $500,000. Basically, however, they really did not give the industry much of anything.

Perhaps it takes a member of the New Democratic party to say this, but it is interesting to note that no one has picked up on the fact that the Government has not really got off the backs of the industry. It has made some promises for the future about world prices but it did not give the industry anything. It just took more taxes from the consumers. I simply want to make that point after having heard these Ministers say how great the Government will be for the oil industry in the West.

I would like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). A man who was 62 years of age came to my office last Saturday. He was a real estate agent until he went blind in one eye. He is now going blind in the other. He has to go to the food bank in Vancouver along with a great many other people because he does not receive enough money. I would like to ask the Minister if there is a food bank in the City of Winnipeg. Where does the Minister stand on the question of food banks? Does he believe that Canada should continue to have food banks? I ask this seriously. Is that the kind of private sector welfare that the Minister believes we need, or does the Minister believe we should do away with food banks and replace them with adequate pensions from the Government?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, it almost goes without saying that my responsibility, which I am sure is shared by everyone in the House, is to see that we have an economic climate in which people will receive pensions which will allow them to live in dignity. I really do not know why that must be re-stated. I would think that that was a given. to me at least, it is a given.

If I could draw from my background just a bit, I would say something else to the Hon. Member. I do not think we serve people by placing every reliance on the state. Let me be practical. I am not defending poverty, but some of the best service that has been given to those who are less fortunate than you and I, Mr. Speaker, has been given by voluntary organizations, churches, service clubs and ordinary Canadians who have used those vehicles to help their fellow man. I do not discourage that; I laud it. That does not take away any of our responsibilities as public people for improving the public pension system.

Let us not deprecate the work of ordinary Canadians. Although I am a Minister of the Crown, I do not believe that the state does a better job than the individual. The stage changes; the individual can show compassion. Individuals show love to others; the state sets up programs. While I accept that the two must be meshed, let us not ever work under the assumption that one can work without the other. When looking at social policy, let us never forget that compassionate component in society, because the state can never replace it totally.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I call on the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) to make her speech.

Mrs. Finestone: Is the Hon. Minister finished?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The 10-minute period for questions and answers has expired.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I will change directions. Perhaps if the Hon. Minister stays, we could have that exchange later. Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members of the House of Commons, I am honoured to have this opportunity to address the House as we debate the Speech from the Throne. As I begin my tenure, I would like to express my deepest appreciation to the electors of Mount Royal for placing their trust in me.

At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I want to add my personal congratulations and sincere best wishes to you on your new responsibilities. Yours will not be an easy task but you will have the confidence and respect of all Members here. I also wish to pay a special tribute to the other 26 women elected to this Parliament. Ours is the largest number ever elected in Canadian history.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Finestone: Our numbers have confirmed a more acceptable and nobler meaning to the cliché, "a woman's place is in the house". I wish us all wise counsel in this House as we add our particular perspectives to those of our partners.

In speaking of a woman's place in this House, let me congratulate the Government upon its selection of a delightful young woman as the seconder to the Speech from the Throne. As well, let me offer my felicitations to the mover.

In a sense, the riding of Mount Royal needs no introduction in the House. It has a long and honourable history of sending outstanding Members to this Parliament. In the last 35 years, two men have sat in this Chamber on behalf of the people of Mount Royal. Alan MacNaughton was the Member from 1949 to 1965. He sat in your chair for three years, Mr. Speaker, and served with great distinction. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal prior to the last election was, of course, well known to all Canadians. He was the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, one of the outstanding Canadians of this century. His passion for Canada, its unity, its diversity and its future, was matched only by his passion for world peace and stability. With this tradition and legacy of leadership from Mount Royal, I am both humbled and challenged by the prospect of succeeding representatives such as these two outstanding Canadians.

My riding mirrors much of what is great in this country. The riding is composed of four sectors: Côte St. Luc, the Towns of Mount Royal and Hampstead and parts of the Montreal Districts of Snowdon and Côte-des-Neiges. About 88,000 people make their homes there, and one out of every five is over the age of 65. The Hon. Minister can understand my concern.

The major cultural group in Mount Royal is Jewish, accounting for 48 per cent of the riding. We are indeed proud that our riding is almost 60 per cent bilingual and is enriched by many diverse ethnocultural communities, weaving a wonderful multicultural tapestry. As for mother tongue, 52 per cent are English while 21 per cent are French. As for ethnic origin, people from the four corners of the world, from the Caribbean Islands, Chile, South Africa, southeast Asia, the Middle East and Europe, all make their homes here.

[Translation]

In the best of Canadian traditions, cultural pluralism and social commitment are at the forefront in Mount Royal. Human rights here and throughout the world are a major concern for the members of this well-informed and generous community.

[English]

Internationally, the respect of the Canadian Government for human rights has been expressed in many ways; in its assistance to political refugees in Central America and to those suffering from famine in Ethiopia; in its support for Soviet Jewry; and in its support for the security of Israel. It is our voice as well in the United Nations. It is my sincere hope that the new Government maintains and enhances these vital initiatives in support of international human rights.

At home our concerns with human rights have been just as strong. Here our concerns with the rights and opportunities of individuals have properly focused on two groups of society of particular importance to my constituents and myself, women and youth. This focus must continue. There must be a continuity of purpose and action. In recent weeks, government Ministers have repeatedly talked of "sending new signals" to different groups in our society; signals to the private sector; to labour, to the Americans; to our NATO Allies; and to the world with respect to peace. I want to look to this Throne Speech to see what signals the Government is sending to the women, to the youth of Canada and to the cultural communities.

The evolution of the role of women in Canada, their growing awareness, strength and constructive action is most important. I am pleased to see that the apparent willingness of the Government to address the concerns of women is manifest. However, I must warn the Government that Canadian women—and men—will not be satisfied with words alone. Only three things are needed to follow up on the rhetoric of the Throne Speech, action, action and action. Under the Liberal government women have made great progress. This Government has a really tough act to follow.

[Translation]

Women can and must become full partners in our society both economically and socially. They will reach that goal not only through legislative changes, but also through changes in attitude on the part of the Canadian people and the business sector.

However, economic independence is the very basis of women's equality. We challenge the Government to follow in the footsteps of the previous Liberal Government and at least keep up the pace at which it defended the rights of women.

[English]

Change, Mr. Speaker, must begin at the very centre of government decision-making, in Cabinet's own Priorities and Planning Committee. It seems incongruous that the Minister responsible for the Status of Women is not a bona fide Member who participates directly in the discussions and decisions of this key group. The Government risks the charge that its attention to the significant concerns of Canadian women is little more than tokenism, for it excludes them from the heart of policy-making.

Thus far, the gaps between campaign promises and the reality of the Throne Speech are troubling, Mr. Speaker. First, employment; the promise was for mandatory affirmative action in the public sector and for implementing equal pay for work of equal value. The promise was for contract compliance in the case of companies seeking federal government contracts. The Throne Speech now tells us that the reality is further study of equal pay for work of equal value. The reality is silence on contract compliance.

Second, child care is a basic right for women in their struggle for economic independence. It is a cornerstone of their right to work. The Government has sent a confused and alarming message to Canadian women in its overly cautious decision to send these questions to a parliamentary committee when the recommendations of an independent childcare task force are to be tabled this December. Before trying to reinvent the wheel and waste public monies, this parliamentary committee should examine the reports available from these experts whose work on the childcare task force is about to be ended, and then make the decision as to whether it really needs to continue the study.

[Translation]

Third, there is the crucial issue of the pension system. Must I remind this Government that only one third of Canadian working women have a pension plan? Will they be added to the poorest group in our population, women aged over 65? The necessary studies and consultations have already taken place under the previous Government. What Canadien women ask this Government is that it act now.

[English]

Fourth, the concern about pornography is a matter of urgency. When the Fraser report is tabled, swift action by Government must follow. Similarly with the important Badgley Commission report on sexual abuse of children in Canada. We must work with the courts, the provinces, and with medical and community groups to prevent child abuse. There are helpful steps to take at once, sending a signal of hope.

Fifth, we should not forget single elderly women. Community responsibility, which was alluded to in the Speech from the Throne, gives reference to community-based health care, which is a genuinely laudable notion. The Government should assure elderly citizens of appropriate financial, social and medical care so that they can remain in their homes, continuing to be active and contributing members of society. Do not tamper with the universality of certain programs which form the base of their sense of security.

[Translation]

In this regard, the decision of the Government to extend the survivor's allowance to widows and widowers aged between 60 and 64 is a step in the right direction. However, the fact remains that the Government should have a more comprehensive view. Such a proposal discriminates against single senior citizens. Among them are 200,000 women who would not be eligible to pension before the age of 65.

[English]

These are the women's issues which were addressed in the Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker. I regret to say that the signal to women in the Throne Speech is a "blue alert". What has the Government really told us it would do? It will re-examine the concept of equal pay for work of equal value; back off on affirmative action; procrastinate on contract compliance; study rather than act on child care; discuss rather than act on pension reform; take no major action in agriculture which affects so many farm women; cut $9.6 million in social housing. These things are all crucial to the life of millions of Canadians, particularly Canadian women, be they single parents, those with large families or the elderly. These are not encouraging signals, Mr. Speaker. This really is a Government of broken promises.

What signals is the Government sending to the young? It does not give them the crucial hope of pursuing their studies or finding a good job to see them through this winter and the forthcoming summer. It gives them a Minister of State for Youth who is responsible for furthering the International Year of Youth and has only the power to advocate in their interests, in other words, a Minister who cannot protect their potential for jobs now. Where is this Government's promise of jobs, jobs, jobs? The Government abolishes the Summer Canada Program and freezes the level of Canada student loans to save $5 million. Among other cuts, it eliminates totally the Young Workers' Exchange Program, which I find particularly ironic in this International Year of Youth. The discussion paper on training announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), by which she hopes to promote consultation with the provinces, may develop a good long-term plan. Nonetheless, this must not constrain short-term action and direct job creation to avoid a very bleak winter.

• (1700)

Besides providing direct job creation programs, the previous Government made major strides in the area of training. For all its talk of giving hope to Canadians, this Government offers obscure promises in some dim future. To ignore the immediate needs of unemployed youth is short-sighted and a mockery. This is not the change they voted for.

While my official position is that of critic for women and youth, I cannot let this moment pass without a comment on our cultural minorities. The Canadian idea is complex. It is our native people, it is French and English. It is the wealth of cultures that more recent Canadians have brought us. To this wealth the Speech from the Throne gives a dismissive nod in three lines. There was no promise to reintroduce the Multi-culturalism Act. Cultures in exile from their home soil need nurturing. This Government does not seem to feel this. If the Government does not perform, it will let Canada's rich cultural tapestry grow threadbare, and we really must fight this.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Government has acknowledged that the legitimate concerns of women and young people deserve a place at the top of the national agenda. However, I am disappointed, as are so many, that it has failed to follow up on the acknowledgement with any evidence of immediate action. The Government has sent the signal all right; it has sent an alarm signal that said "stop" to all those efforts under-way to remove the barriers and to extend an opportunity for women and young people. For this reason the Throne Speech has fallen short of expectations of Canadians for change. In the months ahead we will demand more than signals. We will expect action; action on contract compliance, affirmative action, pension reform, child care, pornography, prevention of family violence as well as the reintroduction of the Bills on divorce and multiculturalism, on jobs, education and training for youth. Along with my colleagues I plan to be the "porte-parole" of the grass roots in this House.

[Translation]

We are warning the Government because we take its goodwill for granted. However, we make the firm commitment to remind the Government constructively of its promises to the Canadian people. We want priority to be given to the urgent needs of all Canadians, to their economic and social rights. We shall give prompt support to any constructive legislative proposal.

[English]

Women's issues and youth issues cannot be dealt with in isolation from larger economic and social decisions. Rather, they must run to the very core of what governmental decision making is all about. Will that constant awareness prevail at senior levels of government? Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members: We will be vigilant in seeing that it does prevail in order to uphold a tradition of social action and commitment that speaks to the very best of Canada and Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) for her excellent maiden speech and also for her very important position as critic responsible for the status of women in her Party.

I would like to ask her if she is familiar with the proposal made particularly by some of the women parliamentarians in this House in the last Parliament. This was supported by many women's organizations across the country. The proposal was to establish a standing committee of the House of Commons which would be responsible for the status of women. Our Party initiated that proposal some time ago and it was supported by some Progressive Conservatives in the last Parliament. Unfortunately, it was obstructed by the that Minister responsible for the Status of Women.

We saw this committe as being tri-partite with an equal balance in its representation from all Parties so it would not be a partisan kind of decision making. It would the watchdog of all legislation as to its effect on women. It would look at women's programs under the Secretary of State and groups such as the National Advisory Council on the Status of Women. It would be generally concerned with the place where a network of women across the country could report.

Does the Hon. Member now support this porposal and will her Party support it?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member. Her reputation for interest in women's issues and for her commitment and involvement in this House precedes her.

As to the question, I must say I heard the Hon. Member make that recommendation the other day. My immediate reaction was: My goodness, what a marvellous idea. Then I sat back and thought for a few minutes. I cannot give a concrete response but I can tell the Hon. Member what my thoughts were. I place this before her and I would be happy to speak with her later.

Women have lived for a very long time in isolation from the mainstream of decision making. We have fought long and hard for equal representation as partners in today's society. We are finally making it. We are now 26 in this House. Every issue which touches humanity, our concern, are men and women issues. Therefore it is my feeling that, when it comes to the legislative process, I personally—I cannot speak for my colleagues because I have not discussed it with them—wish to sit with my partner, the man in my life, the men with whom I live, the men who are going to share the society which we will build, to make what would seem to be the best decision for society as a whole.

This does not in any way, in my view, remove the need for a concerted effort on the part of women in a separate kind of place to look at the issues. If the Hon. Member is saying to me, let us have a standing committee, I would say no, because the tendency in society is then to dump everything there that concerns women. I do not want to isolate women in that way. What happens to them touches the whole world.

If we want to vet all legislation coming through covering farmers, fisher ladies and fishermen, all legislation, then yes, but in an unofficial way, then I would be happy to join her and on that I might agree with her. I think in a sense I have made a decision while talking to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Hon. Member for her election to the House of Commons and to congratulate the people of Mount Royal on the dramatic improvement in the representation that they receive.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: We would have welcomed her to this House ten or fifteen years ago if she had come here then. I might add that the former Prime Minister said last night—and I thank my friend here for reminding me—that if the members of the Liberal Party cannot stop their sniping, he might be tempted to come back. I want to ask the Hon. Member if there is a secret arrangement made for her to step aside. He has been known to try to shuffle off the stage before and then change his mind. Is there a secret arrangement between the former Prime Minister and the Member that maybe he will come back and plague us again?

● (1710)

Finally, I would like to add my agreement to the point of view that she has just expressed. Sometimes there are questions in my mind as to why people who call themselves part of the women's movement want, on the one hand, to decry the historical ghettoization of women, and then, on the other hand, want to create another ghetto for them. I compliment the Member on the insight which she has provided on that particular issue.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his observations. The next time I speak with Mr. Trudeau I will have an exchange with him with regard to what the Hon. Member had to say. I have the feeling that he will stay where he is, by his choice.

I would like to take advantage of this opportunity, if I may, to comment on the Hon. Member's observation with regard to what is the perceived women's movement. I would like to suggest that anyone who calls herself a feminist is really someone who is concerned with the best interests of her daughter, her sister, or the people around her with whom he or she lives. As the mother or father of daughters I am sure you can understand that. If you are to give equal education and equal training, you therefore want to give equal opportunity, and you therefore would expect them to get an equal salary, work under equal conditions and be subject to equal promotion. That is their right and their choice. If you want to enjoy the joys of grandparenthood, as I do, you want to know that your grandchildren are going to have that equal right to choice.

I am blessed with four sons, one of whom is in the Gallery, and I am delighted to note that. Some of my sons have chosen to marry, some have not. Some of my daughters-in-law have chosen to have children, some have not. Some choose to pursue a career, some do not. However, all these women and these men qualify as femininsts. When I told my father he was a feminist, he nearly fainted. Then, when he acknowledged that he wanted me to complete medical studies, he also realized he was a feminist. I hope that that answers somewhat the Hon. Member's observations as to who and what a feminist is, or who belongs to the movement that promotes women.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), and I would just like the Hon. Member to take note of the fact that there are only two minutes remaining.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). I was a little disturbed, though, when she said that the Government is not doing anything for women in the Speech from the Throne. I do not know whether there are any bankruptices and receiverships in Mount Royal, but during my lifetime I have seen people kicked off farms and out of their homes. That is hardest on the women. They are the ones who take it the hardest. It is tough on the men and the kids, but it is really heartbreaking for the women.

In that connection, I want to say that the Government is doing the ultimate thing because if we continue to increase the deficit, increase expenses, not pay our bills and live on borrowed money, the time will come when this country will go into bankruptcy the same as other countries have. So what this Government is doing is really the greatest thing for women, because we are going to save them that agony and pain which would come when and if Canada went into bankruptcy. We are determined it will not go into bankruptcy, and with our program it will not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Mount Royal. She only has two minutes remaining.

Mrs. Finestone: First of all I would like to say that I was trying to be very serious and as non partisan as possible, and I really resent the Hon. Member politicising my remarks.

Second, I would like the Hon. Member to know that I did not fully describe Mount Royal, but I come from a most fascinating riding. I pointed out that over 20 per cent of the people are over 65. By the way, over 20 per cent of the people in Mount Royal live below the poverty line, so we are not so——privileged, as you have said.

[Translation]

[English]

Third, I would like to point out that the heartbreak for women would be if the Government did not carry through on the promises which, if the Hon. Member had listened to my speech he would have known, were sincerely meant. I look forward to the Government's bringing forward the kind of propositions and laws which will enable women to reach the equality which we want for our daughters and for ourselves.

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate you and your staff on your new appointments. I am sure the people in Sherbrooke are delighted with the decision made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

I would like to say a few words about the two Hon. Members who spoke before, and first of all I would like to congratulate the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the Member for Provencher, on his clear and concise statement, and also the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) on her balanced and sincere comments that were certainly worth listening to.

"La Beauce" has chosen me as its elected representative, and I therefore wish to express my gratitude to the people in my riding and thank my constituents for their confidence and trust. I can assure them that I shall perform my duties to the best of my ability. I intend to be fair and to help everyone in my riding, irrespective of their past political affiliations. It is a great honour for a citizen to be elected to the Parliament of his country.

It is the first time I have had the honour of addressing this House, and with its Members, both experienced parliamentarians and those who are new to this Chamber, I intend to behave with the dignity that befits a Member of Parliament. I have the privilege of being the first Progressive Conservative Member to be elected in Beauce in exactly 100 years. I wish to pay special tribute to all parliamentarians who in the past have taken up the cause of the people of Beauce in this House. The people of Beauce have pride, dignity and courage, and I intend to be an effective and also demanding spokesman in defending their interests.

Mr. Speaker, the federal riding of Beauce is quite large, covering 4,215 square kilometers. At the last census it had a population of 82,000. There are about 55 towns. The geography of this area is quite distinct from that of other ridings in Quebec and reflects the warmth of its people. The economy is based on agriculture, forestry and a host of small industries. In Quebec, my riding is described as a paradise for small- and medium-sized businesses. A diversified economic base has helped this area to avoid industrial concentration in one specific sector, and the attendant risks. The energy and creativity of the people in this area have helped to create what is referred to as the "miracle beauceron". Mr. Speaker, these people nevertheless have problems and sometimes have to go to the Government for assistance. However, their attitude is best described by the following saying: God helps those who help themselves. The people of Beauce are often referred to as the Japanese of Quebec. We are indeed honoured!

In Quebec, there are two kinds of people: those who are Beauceron and those who would like to be. In the House, we have Progressive Conservatives and a couple of others who would like to be Progressive Conservatives. If only the rest of the country had the same vitality we find in the people of Beauce, the same spirit of entrepreneurship shown by our business people, our skilled and conscientious workers and our 3,700 productive farmers, the same desire to compete with regions that have a lot more resources!

I am sure the former President of the United States, John F. Kennedy, was thinking of people like the people of Beauce when he told the Americans:

• (1720)

[English]

"Don't ask what your country can do for you but ask what you can do for your country". Agriculture is vital. It was Canada's first, and for many years, chief economic lever. Today, although farmers are fewer in number, they have learned to produce bigger and better harvests.

[Translation]

Generally, "la Beauce" is a rural area that is rather well structured. The Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) will have to understand the farmers in my constituency. I trust him to do this.

"La Beauce" is also a world-renowned maple-sugar area. The maple-sugar industry is extremely successful there. Indeed, our maple syrup production accounts for 30 per cent of the world market. However, that industry will have to be subsidized as far as the processing, marketing and export of that seasonal product are concerned. Also, good forest management could help the economic growth of this area.

The Hon. Member for Beauce, like 170 other Conservative Members, does not yet have the privilege of being a Minister. But I would like you to know, Mr. Speaker, that in our party there are no backbenchers, no rank and file Members, but Members of Parliament who already have a prime role to play in Government decisions. Our action will be a positive one. In the Conservative caucus, Hon. Members can get action on issues. Our views will be respected. We belong to a great political party, an open and generous party where co-operation is felt between French- and English-speaking Members, a truly national party.

Let me say also that this country has a role to play on the world scene, and we will make an international contribution. The position upheld by this Government concerning monetary, food and technical assistance to the victims of drought in Ethiopia has been a great joy to me. The Right Hon. Minister for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Hon. Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Vézina) have set up a national aid committee for that country. Mr. Speaker, let me emphasize that Third World countries which soon will include three quarters of the population, will also obtain financial help, because, according to the findings of the Commission on International Development under the chairmanship of Mr. Willy Brandt in 1980, the global income is shared unequally between the various nations, and there is a wide gap between industrialized and poor, developing countries. Per capita income is 32 times greater and the average life expectancy is thirteen years longer in richer countries than in Third World countries. The gap between nations and peoples has reached such proportions that it is seriously endangering the global economy. It is one of the major factors that make the global crisis more acute and affect the political climate.

[English]

Shortly before his death, the great American scientist, Robert Oppenheimer, said that when the vast numbers of people living today on the verge of famine and utter hopelessness become aware of what their situation is and what our situation is, "I am afraid to think what will happen".

I want to stress that social and economic development in the Third World is not only a condition for the prosperity of the industrialized nations, it is an irreversible movement.

In its Throne Speech the Conservative Government traced the broad outline of the action it plans to take. We will not hesitate to innovate as the session continues. We are responsible for the future of the country's economy. We are discarding outworn dogmas and we intend to pursue a new strategy of national development that will free Canada's economy from the dead end in which it is currently trapped. The new economic order will ensure prosperous and continuing development.

[Translation]

Therefore, we must adopt a new perspective and do away with those old-fashioned ideas in order to grasp the spirit of an ever changing world.

The often bitter comments of our friends opposite will not hinder our efforts and prevent Government Members from thinking, acting and carrying out our great objectives for the well-being of every Canadian.

The former government, in fighting inflation through restrictive monetary and budgetary means, slowed down the economic growth during the last decade to an average rate of 2.3 per cent. Because of this, unemployment had reached a critical level when we came into power.

As Peter Drucker, the eminent journalist of the Wall Street Journal, says in his book "Towards A New Economy": "We must acknowledge the need to go back to making difficult choices. Politicians must deal with a number of difficult structural and political choices, hence the need for proceeding with budgetary cutbacks."

Here are the questions the Government must ask itself. "What percentage of the national income should be transferred from producers to non-producers, in other words, from those who create employment and those who depend on the State? What limits should be set on public spending? What percentage of national income can be allocated to funds available for remuneration of employment rather than capital, without increasing unemployment and economic depression? What tax bonuses and financial stimuli are necessary to build the requisite capital?" Our Government is demonstrating great courage and determination because . . . "These are not popular questions. Any answer is bound to lead to controversy, and there is a risk involved because it is a constant reminder that there is a price to pay for everything. It is a matter of facing up to reality and the need to make choices. Economics has again become a sinister science, a science of limits, risks and choices. This was in fact the opinion of the famous economist, John Maynard Keynes: "It is not enough to understand new ideas. We must also escape the old ones that have extended their ramifications in every nook and cranny of our minds."

Mr. Speaker, I want to stress the fact that from now on, a new vision of the world will be necessary, a global and system-oriented vision, because every economy is dependent on other countries. The need for a new vision is particularly great in view of the close and increasing interdependence of the world's countries in their economic and financing activities. As a result of this interdependence, the problems of a single country become international problems, and their solution must therefore be solved within the international context.

For instance, developing countries are in great need of our goods and services, and industrialized countries, like Canada, will need these countries more and more in order to operate at full production capacity, which will help us fight unemployment.

It would be useful to consider some of the new ideas set forth by Professor Angelo Angelopoulos of the Academy of Athens, in his book "A World Employment Plan", which contains a foreword by the Nobel Prize winner Lawrence Klein.

Mr. Speaker, I feel the Conservative Government is on the right track. If they take a closer look at the Throne Speech and last week's economic statement by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), I am sure Canadians will appreciate the proposed measures.

• (1730)

My constituents in Beauce will never suffer financially as a result of the decisions made by this Progressive Conservative Government. We shall protect programs and vested rights. The Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has explained to Canadians the precarious economic situation of this country and, as a first step, proposed a plan to restructure our expenditures, a plan that has already been endorsed by the vast majority of Canadians. By creating a new climate of confidence across Canada, this plan will promote productive investment which will bring the growth rate of our economy up to 3.4 per cent by 1990.

We are committed to building a national consensus. The economic summit will determine our objectives, as the Right Hon. Prime Minister said. In Beauce, I shall try to encourage and support investors, those who create jobs and are prepared to take investment risks for the benefit of the community.

The Speech from the Throne also refers to a new responsiveness of the Government vis-à-vis the provinces. I am particularly pleased with the co-operation offered to Quebec. Quebecers have felt frustrated as a result of a long period of difficult negotiations with Ottawa. Since September 4, a day of national liberation, the results have been swift and effective. The federal machine is no longer set to seek confrontation and jurisdictional disputes. Harmony is the order of the day, Mr. Speaker. Personally, I am convinced that the leader of our Party and the leader of this Government has had a great deal to do with it. His talents as a mediator, his flexibility and his desire to put an end to these federal-provincial quarrels have been an important factor in creating this new climate.

Mr. Speaker, together we are starting a new era, and these men and women who form our new Government deserve the confidence and support of Canadians. I live in and represent a marvellous part of the country: "la Beauce". I shall be making a constant effort to help my constituents. I shall defend their claims and try protect their vested rights and fulfil my mandate with fairness, equity and common sense.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Beauce wishes to thank you for your attention and assure you of his co-operation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech? The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

Mr. Kaplan: First, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member on his maiden speech. I know he comes from the Beauce area, one of the most prosperous in Canada, with a good many expanding industries. With that in mind, I would like to ask him a question related to a sentence which appears at page 2 of A New Direction for Canada. It reads that the government, meaning the former government, has all too often hampered rather than helped change by protecting, at taxpayers' expense, those enterprises which have been too slow to increase productivity or unable to seize new market opportunities. I want to ask him which industries the government had in mind when stating that? Which industries too often were protected by the previous government?

Mr. Bernier: I thank the Hon. Member. I will surely have an opportunity to consider that question and to provide an answer, perhaps with figures. I think that the business community is indeed quite satisfied to see this government in office and it has faith in us. As to the documents referred to by the Hon. Member, I must say that I did not have time to read them all, but I have faith in the people who wrote them and contributed to the preparation of new policies which the Canadian people will surely endorse. I am not the financial expert of the government, of course, and I have nothing to do with job creation.

However, I will answer those questions after I am given a few responsibilities. It is unfortunate that the Minister responsible is not in the House, but I hope the question will be forwarded to him tomorrow morning.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the new Member.

This is the first time I hear the new Member from Quebec, a Conservative. Hopefully the Hon. Member will give me an answer. During the Quebec referendum, three or four years ago, did he support the yes or the no option? Would he like the Province of Quebec to have the right of veto if there is agreement between Canada and his province?

Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member heard only one Conservative Member since the beginning of this session. Naturally, I deplore the fact that some Members are too often away from the House for long periods of time, because several of my colleagues, almost ten, have already made a speech in this debate on the Address. Perhaps the first thing to do would be to improve the climate in the House, because the interest shown by some elected Members is often minimal.

In answer to the question, I voted yes in the referendum. I was even a vice-president in my riding, and I am glad to say so because at that time in Quebec—fortunately, the situation is altogether different now—we were in a state of never-ending confrontation with the federal government then in office and we were aware of what we were doing when we voted yes. We were not asking for the independence of Quebec, quite the contrary, we wanted to have the power to negotiate and I think that, with the advent of a Conservative government, we can forget about the past and still not feel any regret about what we did then.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has a question.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member or, for that matter, the Hon. Member who has just raised the issue are aware of this, but there was, if I remember well, at least one Member of his own caucus who was also very active on the 'yes' side during the referendum campaign.

Mr. Bernier: If the Hon. Member would kindly remind me of the question that was put at the referendum, I should be delighted to give him another answer to that question this afternoon. So, go ahead with the referendum question as it was formulated four or five years ago, and I will gladly answer it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Had the Hon. Member for Beauce completed his remarks? Fine. The Hon. Member for Bourassa has a question.

Mr. Rossi: Only a comment, Mr. Speaker. I am glad that the Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) referred to the quorum in the House, for I have just counted 21 or 22 Conservative Members out of a possible 212.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to remind Hon. Members that they should refrain from mentioning the presence or absence of their colleagues in the House. This applies to all Hon. Members. I believe this is the third time something like this has occurred over the past two days. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway on a question.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I just want to continue that line. I asked the Hon. Member, not to make cheap political points, as I normally try not to do. I genuinely wanted to know for my own interest as a western Member about the change in Quebec. I appreciate what he said. It was very interesting. However, can the Hon. Member answer the second part of my question? Does he see an accord with the Province of Quebec which will incorporate the veto over constitutional change by the Province of Quebec?

• (1740)

[Translation]

Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, this question has already been discussed and it will be discussed further, especially at the First Ministers' Conference. At that time, our own views will certainly be heard and we shall be happy to keep you informed about our decisions. As for the veto, I believe that each of us will be asked for his opinion since the caucus of the Progressive Conservative Party is so big, so generous and so open. However, I believe that the fact that the Premiers led by Mr. Lévesque for Quebec, came here to Ottawa yesterday, says a lot about the decision that the Progressive Conservative Party will have to make about what Quebec wants from the federal Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has a question.

Mr. Gauthier: It is a point of order rather than a question, Mr. Speaker.

A while ago, you told the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) that we should not refer to the number of Members present in the House. I wonder whether you would reconsider because to my knowledge no provision in the Standing Orders forbids us to comment on the number of Members present as long as there is no call for quorum. At such a time, you would have to make a decision. Personally I believe that we can say that there are 20, 25, 30 or 40 Members present. I know of no rule which forbids this, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I take note of the comment made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I should however remind him that the rulings of the Chair are not subject to appeal.

[English]

Is the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) seeking the floor on a question?

Ms. Mitchell: No, Mr. Speaker, on debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any further questions? If not, then we shall resume debate with the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to take part in the Throne Speech debate, particularly this year because the Speech from the Throne will have tremendous significance in Canada for years to come. When I was in Opposition, it was nice to speak to the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne because it provides a wide scope and I could deal with almost any topic. However, today I will confine my remarks to the underlying theme of the Throne Speech.

I am quite amazed by some of the things I have heard from the Liberal Opposition, particularly its outcry about our trying to reduce the deficit or public debt. The people in my country—

Mr. Keeper: Our country.

Ms. Mitchell: Your country, which country is that?

Mr. Taylor: —think that the deficit is the number one priority today. They believe that if we do not get control of our debt, we will go into bankruptcy. If we go into bankruptcy, all this nice talk about social services will simply be useless. Unless we have productivity in the country, we do not have any social services. Bankruptcy would eliminate social services. We do not want to eliminate social services. I have heard the Liberal Members say they want universality, whatever they mean by that. I suppose they mean that everybody wants everything they can get.

Ms. Mitchell: Your Leader said that.

Mr. Taylor: Whatever universality means, I will take their meaning for it. They say they want universality, and then at the same time they say we should continue borrowing. They say that we should borrow ourselves out of debt. They are doing away with social services. The aged, the veterans and the widows who depend upon social services are not dumb, to use street language. They know that social services depend upon the productivity of the country.

This Government is determined to increase productivity. The more we increase productivity, the better social services we can give to our people. It is as simple as that.

The Liberals borrowed and borrowed and borrowed. They kept up social services with borrowed money. Generations to come will now have to pay interest on it for many, many years; today we are paying $1 out of every $3. How wonderful it would be if we could give that $1, instead of to the moneymongers of the world, to the hard-pressed widows who have three or four children to look after, to the farmer who will lose his farm or to senior citizens, the crippled or mentally retarded. These are the people for whom we have compassion. We are determined that the sick, incapacitated and mentally disturbed will receive the best in this country. Our Leader will ensure that they get the best because we are reducing the deficit. Then we will be able to increase our productivity and provide more social services all the way around.

Those Hon. Members talk about borrowing themselves out of debt, which is what some other countries in the world tried to do. I ask them to stop and think where they are going and what they are doing to the country. No wonder there is such a handful of Members in the NDP and Liberal Party. Canadians were sick and tired of their borrowing themselves out of debt. They know that it cannot be done. They might as well try to pull themselves up by their bootstraps. Let us see anyone do it. It cannot be done. The NDP has been trying to do it for years. The Liberal Party tried to do it all the years it was over here. What happened? We paid more and more interest, so that now there is a legacy of debt around the neck of every baby born in the country. Every baby boy is born with a $6,000 of debt, brought about by the Liberals and supported by the NDP.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether the Hon. Member knows that he is using sexist language and discriminating against baby girls when he makes statements like that.

Mr. Taylor: I will talk about discrimination, Mr. Speaker. The NDP and the Liberals are the ones who discriminate against baby girls, because baby girls are being born with a debt of $6,000 around their necks too. We are the ones who are looking after the baby girls, the baby boys, the mentally retarded, the crippled and the aged. We intend to do it. The policies in our economic statement and in the Speech from the Throne will increase productivity and jobs and will give us greater amounts of money to provide social services to those who need them, not to those who do not need them.

The people of Canada saw the light at the end of the tunnel. They put their X beside the names of 211 members of the Progressive Conservative Party because they wanted change. They wanted a new government and a new look at things. They wanted to do away with borrowing ourselves out of debt. They wanted us to start paying our bills like any respectable family.

I cannot understand the philosophy of the NDP and the Liberal Party. They think they can continue borrowing, borrowing, borrowing. That cannot be done by individuals. They would get to the point where they would lose their homes, their farms, everything. We cannot borrow ourselves out of debt, and we will not try. We will increase productivity. We will have more work for people. We will pay our debts and eventually be rid of that deficit or public debt. That is the heritage we want to give the boys and girls, the men and women of the country. Our Leader has a vision. Progressive Conservatists have a vision of a new country, working together from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the forty-ninth parallel to the Arctic, with everyone of all colours and creeds happy. It will be a buoyant economy in which we share what we have with the helpless of the world. I admire this philosophy.

I would like to deal with one or two local problems. I was absolutely amazed at how the Liberal Government, month after month, did nothing about the importation of beef. It did nothing. It just sat on whatever it sits on and did nothing for eight months. Look at the amount of beef that came into the country in the meantime, 145.1 million pounds of beef, mostly from Ireland. It did not come in on a fair market basis. It was subsidized to the point of 38.5 cents per pound by the Irish Government. This subsidy came out of the pockets of the poor Irish people in order that this beef could be dumped into Canada.

• (1750)

Our Government sat here and took it. What did that do to our industry? It almost destroyed our cattle industry. What did it do to our neighbours to the south and to Australia which should have had a share of that quota? We have built up a terrible record.

The Americans have every right to say that we want to export into the United States, but we will not allow imports of U.S. beef into Canada. No, we let it all be dumped in at a subsidized rate. It hurt our industry and hurt our best neighbours, the United States and Australia.

What machinery did the Government have to deal with this? They cannot say that nothing could be done. Several of the Members of this Party spoke to the Government when we were on that side of the House. We urged the Government to do something under the anti-dumping legislation. The then Government did not do a thing until August when the then Minister of Agriculture saw the light. He said that something had to be done because we were destroying our relationship with our good neighbours as well as destroying the cattle industry in Canada. That is what we were doing. He went to the Anti-Dumping Tribunal and asked them to look at the situation.

Let me deal for a moment with the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. Many people do not know that we have this tribunal or the Anti-Dumping Act. That Act was passed in 1969 for the sole purpose of keeping our industries from being ruined by subsidized products from other countries. That is why the Act was established. It takes into account a number of factors, including a share of the market profits, prices, export performance, productivity and employment. It takes in all of those things. Finally, after eight months, the Minister referred it to the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. Who is on the Anti-Dumping Tribunal? I have to tell you because it is important that Members know who they are. The Chairman is Robert Bertrand, the Vice-Chairman is Howard Perrigo. The Members are Raynald Guay, A. L. Bissonnette and Margaret R. Prentis. They could appoint as many as six. I do not know any one of them personally, so I do not speak personally. I am speaking about the principle.

If that tribunal had said, yes, it is hurting our industry in Canada, it is hurting our relations, hurting our employment, hurting our cattle industry and hurting our markets, then the Deputy Minister could have imposed a penalty on the beef being imported from Ireland to the amount that it was being subsidized, namely, 38.5 cents a pound. If that had happened, there would be no imports. They would have stopped immediately.

That is what the Liberal Government should have done. That Government let it go on and on until the whole quota was taken up. At that point our new Government was left helpless. The quota has been used up.

This PC Government will not permit that to happen again. Never will that happen again. I cannot understand how the Anti-Dumping Tribunal could say that this was not injuring the cattle industry in Canada, not injuring our markets and not injuring our relationships. As far as I am concerned, that Anti-Dumping Tribunal should be thrown out. They did not do their job. When they said there was no injury done by the dumping of that beef into Canada, they were not doing their job. If I had the say, they would be out of there right away. I would put somebody in there who understands the different industries of this country.

As a result of imports and a few other things, such as drought and grasshoppers, the cattle industry across Canada is in pretty bad shape. In my own province, in my constituency, the cattle industry is pretty worried, as are many grain farmers, because the drought stopped the wheat, rye and barley from growing. It stopped the growth of feed. Our cattlemen have no feed. Governments are now coming to their aid. Our Minister signed an agreement to provide some help. Help is forthcoming.

If Members opposite do not think that grasshoppers can do a lot of damage, they should have been in southern Alberta this summer. When I was electioneering, the front of my car was completely green with grasshoppers. When I was a kid, I liked to find green grasshoppers. I always caught bigger fish with green grasshoppers. This year you would not have had to hunt for them. There were millions of them. They even attacked a house. They would eat a garden in no time at all. They came almost like a cloud. Don't laugh, people had to move out of their houses. As a result, the cattle industry is in bad shape.

This money will help. They will have enough money to buy feed for 40 to 60 days. However, these cattle will have to be fed for 100 to 120 days. What will happen? They will have to sell some of their cattle. Normally, they would have to pay income tax on the sale of the cattle.

I have a suggestion for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). Along with making proper use of the Anti-Dumping Act, and because of the terrible situation on the farms in southern Alberta, the recommendation of the cattle industry should be accepted. If a farmer has to sell some cattle in order to feed the rest, he should have a deferral of taxes on that income. They do not suggest a forgiveness, but a deferral. Cattlemen are not asking for forgiveness, they are simply asking for a deferral. In two or three years when the situation returns to normal, they will be able to buy back their cattle and pay their taxes.

Cattlemen are independent. They want to pay their way. They want to build this country. However, they do not like to be destroyed by beef being dumped into this country.

An Hon. Member: What about grasshoppers?

Mr. Taylor: We can handle grasshoppers and we can handle a Liberal Government too. We handled it just the way we handled the grasshoppers, by wiping them out. We had to use poison on the grasshoppers. The people put the Liberals out where they should be. If the people knew all the facts, there would not be one Liberal sitting over there.

I ask the Minister of Agriculture to look at this tax deferral. Let us give our farmers a chance to help themselves. Defer their taxes for two or three years until the situation returns to normal. Then they will pay their taxes. They will be able again to contribute. Their herds will be back to full strength. They will help build this country the way this Government wants industry to build it. Hundreds of thousands of small independent entrepreneurs will be making their own decisions. That is what will build Canada.

That is the way this Government is tackling the problem right from the grass roots. It is not using band-aids, not at all. We are taking out what is bad and building from the grass roots up. In that way, we will help our entrepreneurs. Productivity is what our Leader has in mind. When we have great productivity, we will have great social services. The crippled, the lame, the senior citizens and the widows will not have to worry. They will receive better treatment from us than they ever received under a Liberal Government.

I see it is six o'clock. May I call it six o'clock Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION—LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE HEARINGS. (B) TELECOMMUNICATIONS POLICY—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REVIEW

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised because I was told that I would be the third on the list tonight. However, I am ready to proceed.

On November 13, I addressed a question to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse). I pointed out to him that the CRTC was considering an application made by the CN-CP Telecommunications System to permit them to enter into the long distance telephone business. I asked the Minister whether he would consider suggesting to the CRTC that it should not issue any statement on this application until a telecommunications policy had been set by the Government. To my amazement, the Minister refused to agree to that suggestion.

I say that I was amazed because on August 17 of this year, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) addressed a telegram to the Telecommunications Workers Union of British Columbia in which he said the following:

> The Progressive Conservative federal caucus has been examining and consulting widely on the serious implications of this application. We have identified as the first problem the absence of a comprehensive telecommunication policy for Canada, within which this question could be fairly assessed.
> We believe that the first step must be the development of a comprehensive policy which includes a clear understanding of consumer needs, historical relationships, technological opportunities, and impact on federally and provincially-regulated telephone services.

He went on to say:

> In the absence of a clear federal policy, including any vision of how future consumer and business needs and opportunities should be balanced in Canada, it will be difficult for the CRTC to assess the application for de-regulation of long distance telephone services, in hearings scheduled for autumn, without a policy framework.

That is precisely what I was urging the Minister to do. I did so because we know from studies which have been done that if CN-CP Telecommunications is permitted to enter into long distance service in competition with the existing telephone systems, like Bell Canada in Ontario and Quebec, B.C. Tel in British Columbia, the three publicly-owned provincial systems in the prairie provinces and the systems in Atlantic Canada, 600,000 users across the country would give up their telephones, because telephone rates would increase by between 70 per cent and 125 per cent. Many people would find it extremely difficult to absorb that increase. The winners would be the large corporations of the country, the major users of long distance service. The banks, insurance companies and other large corporations use the telephone system frequently and even daily. They would be the real gainers.

I suggest that it is wrong for the CRTC to proceed for another reason. Under our legislation, the CRTC has the right to monitor and set rates for Bell Canada, which services Ontario and Quebec, and for B.C. Tel, which services the Province of British Columbia. However, it does not have the legal right to set the rates for the systems which service Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Yet, Mr. Speaker, these three provinces now benefit from this present system. These three provinces with their telephone systems receive a large part of their revenue from the long distance calls which are made not only from within their provinces but from calls, for example, from British Columbia to Toronto or Montreal. If those calls provide a profit for the telephone system, those profits are shared with all of the systems, and the prairie provinces receive a large part of their revenue from those long distance calls. Because of the money they receive from long distance calls, they have been able to keep the rates as low as possible for the ordinary home owner, the farmer and the small business person. For that reason they have had almost 97 per cent usage among potential telephone customers.

If CN-CP is permitted to enter into the business in competition with the existing system, naturally it will get part of the business and, naturally, the existing systems will have to reduce their long distance rates to compete. Revenues will go down and the losses suffered will have to be made up by increasing the rates to the present user.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, with what the Prime Minister said when he was the Leader of the Opposition, that this question should not be settled at this time by the CRTC but should be a policy decision by the Government. I know the legislation says that the CRTC has the authority and responsibility for dealing with the application. I am not suggesting that it should not deal with it. I am saying, Mr. Speaker, that it ought not to release its decision until the Government has worked out a telecommunications policy.

It may be that when the Government does that, Mr. Speaker, many people in Parliament and groups and organizations outside of Parliament will disagree with the telecommunications policy of the Government. However, that policy will have been established by a Government which is elected by the people and not by a quasi judicial agency which, in my view, has not the right to make that kind of decision. And the CRTC will be doing that, Mr. Speaker, if it permits the CN-CP Telecommunications to enter into the long distance telephone business.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to discuss the issue of interexchange competition and the proceedings being conducted by the Canadian Radio Television and Telecommunications Commission on this matter. As the Hon. Member will know, considerable debate has been generated in connection with this proceeding and there exists a great deal of confusion with respect to the issues which are now being considered by the Commission. For example, some parties believe that a decision by the Commission in favour of CN-CP Telecommunications would result in a U.S.—style deregulation and the introduction of local measured service. On the contrary, CN-CP contends that it is prepared to pay compensation for the use of telephone company facilities which would be used to offset increases in local rates.

In the course of the proceedings there have been various estimates made regarding increases in local telephone rates. Similar estimates relate to the number of people who would be forced to drop off the network—give up their telephone—if local rates were to be increased. Most of these estimates are based on experience in the United States.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that there is no application before the Commission to provide local measured service or to deregulate telephone rates. In the United States there are a number of factors simultaneously at play which are affecting telephone rates in that country. For example, the break up of the Bell system has resulted in a massive restructuring of the telephone network. It has also resulted in the need to develop new regulatory and costing procedures. These factors and others are generally referred to as "deregulation". However, most of the U.S. telecommunications sector remains subject to regulation.

• (1810)

We all know, Mr. Speaker, that our proximity to the United States can often expose us to the effects of that country's policies. Over the years we have learned to develop unique Canadian solutions to deal with such eventualities. The proceeding that is underway before the CRTC is part of that process. The proponents and opponents of the CN-CP proposal have submitted evidence to support their points of view. There is also the opportunity for cross-examination. Out of this orderly but time-consuming process will come a solid factual record, based on which the CRTC will render its decision on the merits of the CN-CP case. The Government, in developing its policies for the telecommunications sector, will draw on that information base as well.

The telephone network has served Canadians in all walks of life for more than 30 years. In the past 20 years, it has become much more than a telephone system. The network now connects computers, terminals, and word processors on a worldwide basis. It is now more than ever an indispensable tool of modern business. At the same time, the policies and regulations applying to the industry are rooted in the past.

It is therefore appropriate that the Government should review telecommunications policy. The Department of Communications is currently engaged in this task. Public submissions have been received, and discussions are being held with interested parties. The CRTC hearings will also provide an important input to the Department's review.

The Government is fully aware of the importance of the telephone service to Canadians and is very mindful of the social benefits which they derive from it. Therefore, while the Government is of the view that Canada's telecommunications system and the regulatory structure must undergo adjustments in order to respond to changing needs and new requirements, it is also firmly committed to preserving affordable, universally available telephone service in all regions of Canada.

MARINE TRANSPORT—FERRY SERVICES IN ATLANTIC CANADA. (B) GOVERNMENT SUBSIDIES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, over the last two days I have had an opportunity to address questions to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) regarding the $37 million in cuts announced Thursday last by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) affecting the Department of Transport, and in particular the gulf ferry services of Atlantic Canada.

The people of Atlantic Canada regard the ferry services in their province, particularly those in Newfoundland and P.E.I., both island provinces, as an extension of the Trans-Canada Highway. When we are talking about gulf transport, whether it be between North Sydney and Port aux Basques, or North Sydney and Argentia, between P.E.I. and Nova Scotia, we are not talking about an alternate means of transportation or the scenic route by the sea. For the average Canadian living in those island provinces, and for the average small businessman operating in those island provinces, we are talking about the only economically viable means of moving goods and people for the people of Atlantic Canada.

The Minister today admitted in this House that the increase proposed by CN to Cabinet will be triple that submitted as of early September. That is an increase of 15 per cent to be imposed in the next few weeks, versus an increase proposed as part of the proposed mandatory six and five program of 4 per cent. The Minister told us that we should not feel too badly; after all the Government is going to put a new ferry on the service which will be much better. It is called the Caribou. I beg to inform the Minister that the Caribou has been under construction for a year. This is nothing new. There are an additional two boats coming into service and they have been underway, as the Parliamentary Secretary nods his head knowingly, for the last couple of years as well, in terms of planning. So you cannot justify 15 per cent cost increases simply on the basis that we are going to have new vessels which are more efficient, bigger and therefore, folks, you are getting a better service and you should pay more.

The fact is that when one looks at the increased cost to users of the facilities currently offered anywhere in this country by Crown corporations in the transport business, nowhere else in Canada other than Atlantic Canada are increases of the magnitude of 15 per cent being imposed. The Minister has indicated that we should not worry, that the rate is 15 per cent but that for regular users there is going to be a discount, and it will only be 5 per cent or 6 per cent. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary what a regular user is.

Will the discount apply to small business people who use the ferry services, not to move luxury items up the Labrador coast or on the south coast of Newfoundland or between P.E.I. and Nova Scotia or Nova Scotia and Newfoundland or New Brunswick and P.E.I., but to move basic foodstuffs, the basic necessities?

Will the additional freight charges which I am told will also be in the order of 15 per cent, apply to food and to those companies which bring their supplies in by way of ferry or gulf boat service? If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, not only are consumers in Atlantic Canada going to be asked to pay 15 per cent more when they avail of CN Marine, because they are not regular users, but they are going to be asked to pay 15 per cent more on the transportation portion of the cost of a tin of spaghetti, a loaf of bread, eggs, or fresh milk, every time they go to the supermarket. Mr. Speaker, for those island provinces in particular, that would be totally unacceptable. That will set up two systems of citizenship in this country.

There is another matter about which I am very concerned. Over the last day I have had the opportunity to speak to union representatives of railway workers and people working on the Gulf and Coastal Ferry Services and the employees of those agencies. To this point they have not been consulted. The Parliamentary Secretary comes from Atlantic Canada and knows about the 25 per cent levels of unemployment in North Sydney and Port-aux-Basques. Perhaps he can tell us what the job loss will be. Perhaps he can tell us when the Minister will get around, in this new age of consultation and co-operation, to discussing this with the people most directly affected by cutbacks and rate increases. How many jobs are going to be lost? What frequency of service is going to be introduced? What kind of reductions are going to be imposed?

In closing I would like to say that I am pleased with the choice of the gentleman who has been named as Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). He is a very knowledgeable man. There is no one in the Government Party who can hold a candle to the kind of experience and knowledge that he has in this field. I want to wish him every good luck in his duties. Over these last few years I have heard him speak eloquently about the regional sense of frustration and the resulting disunity in western Canada. The seeds for that kind of divisiveness exist in Atlantic Canada. They exist in particular when actions are taken without consultation and without regard to the kind of hardships they can impose, in particular on people in island provinces who have no alternate means of transportation to resort to.

I have had the pleasure of knowing the Parliamentary Secretary since 1980 and I know that he will ensure that the Minister has an Atlantic view. I hope he will begin today by telling the House and the people of Atlantic Canada that he is going to ensure that food and basic necessities being moved on those ferries and on the gulf run will not be subject to a 15 per cent increase which is a double tax on everyone in Atlantic Canada. I hope he will tell me as well that either himself or his Minister will begin tomorrow to consult the people who will be affected first and perhaps most; the employees of CN Marine in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is certainly no question that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is probably the most knowledgeable man in this Chamber and one of the most knowledgeable men in Canada with respect to transport matters in this country. I can assure the Hon. Member that he does have an Atlantic view.

Ferry and coastal services in Atlantic Canada constitute an area of very substantial federal Government expenditures. It constitutes $178 million to $180 million, not including some $13 million to $14 million invested in CN Marine this year to support its current program of new facilities and the construction of the Motor Vessel Caribou.. The users of these services contribute in fares and tariffs about 22 per cent of the over-all costs.

The Government has made decisions which will reduce substantially its expenditures in 1985-86 and beyond, while at the same time increasing the efficiency of the services through the provision of new and more productive vessels and support facilities.

The modernization of the Newfoundland ferry and coastal fleet will improve service to passengers and freight customers through the introduction of fewer but larger and faster vessels. Changes in rates and levels of service in the CN Marine Altantic ferry network will be implemented following consultation with regional interest groups and others affected.

Users of all the services will be asked to contribute more to the costs in order to reduce the burden on all Canadian taxpayers for services provided. Government officials will therefore be discussing with the operators measures that can be taken to increase their revenues by 15 per cent, effective April 1, next year. Frequent users of the services, as the Member has pointed out, will also be afforded an opportunity to apply for reduced fares. Hopefully, after consultation, these matters will improve what the Hon. Member was talking about.

An increase of 15 per cent in CN Marine rates would represent four one-thousandths of a cent per pound for a tractor trailer with a 40,000 pound payload travelling in these services. I have used the Prince Edward Island service as an example. We will assess the ability of CN Marine's St. John-Digby ferry service, and the Hon. Member has raised this, to handle truck traffic diverted from the Bluenose during the winter months. Until the fall of 1985, the Bluenose service will operate year-round between Yarmouth, Nova Scotia and Bar Harbour, Maine. Afterward, it will operate for six months a year in the tourist season as a money saving measure.

The addition of modern ferry vessels on the Newfoundland Gulf and Coastal Service will have an extremely positive impact on the people of our particular part of the country.

I see the gentleman at the Mace, so I will conclude.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6:18 p.m. the House adjourned.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY ON WHY PENSION MODIFICATION CONFINED TO WIDOWS AND WIDOWERS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the throne speech pronounced on November 5 of this year contained a number of glowing and vague promises, but the likelihood of their ever being kept became more than uncertain when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made his economic statement three days later.

Let me give an example. In the Speech from the Throne the following was said, and I quote:

My government is determined to ensure that social justice in Canada keeps pace with the changing needs and circumstances of our people.

In the economic statement, however, the Conservative Government announced that it would extend the allowance program to spouses between ages 60 and 64, but only to widows and widowers.

One may well ask why only widows and widowers. What about separated and single individuals who are in need?

If we look at the figures published by Statistics Canada in 1981, widows and widowers constitute only 4.7 per cent of the Canadian population, while people who are separated, divorced or single make up 36.9 per cent.

The Government will have to revise its position and take into consideration the groups it has overlooked. Apparently, the Conservative Government does not have all the facts.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY OF CANADA—ELECTION AFTERMATH

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the dog fights and recriminations between members of the decimated Liberal Party are wondrous to behold. Having been justly turfed out of office by the Canadian electorate, they now seem bent on destroying what remains of that Party by internal bickering and in-house squabbles such as that between the former Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) over which of the two were more directly culpable for their crushing defeat.

All of this would be rather humorous were it not for the fact that the parliamentary system of government requires a responsible Opposition, something which we, unfortunately, do not have at the present time. In all likelihood the Liberal Party will, over the next few years, disappear as a political force with which to be reckoned. Those few remaining Liberals, however, can find some solace. They will all go down in the history books as the last living fossils of a species which has outlived its usefulness.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, a New York Times story exposes the falsity of Canada's policy toward Nicaragua. It reported that a Canadian naval ship is taking part in a 19-day exercise in the Caribbean, with 25 U.S. naval ships, infantry, airborne and helicopter troops of the United States, as well as two Dutch, one German, and one British ship.

Canada professes neutralism, objectivity, and support of the Contadora peace negotiations. Yet Canada is silent about Reagan's flights over Managua, Reagan's invasion of Nicaraguan territorial waters, Reagan's funding of the Contras, and Reagan's lying story about the alleged MIGS.

Against their protests, Canada directs Canadians living in Nicaragua to register with the U.S. embassy, the embassy of the country which will invade Nicaragua. Canada sends a Canadian warship to join in manoeuvres in the Caribbean to intimidate Nicaragua, or to help prepare for the invasion by Reagan. Shame on Canada's two-faced foreign policy!

ENERGY

CONVERSION OF MOTOR VEHICLES TO PROPANE FUEL USE

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the House today on a matter which I feel is of importance to consumers as well as producers of sources of energy. That subject is alternate fuels. I, like many Canadians, was encouraged by the tone and direction set out by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in last week's economic statement.

S.O. 21

Deficit reduction and sound fiscal management are the first steps toward economic recovery, and management of our energy resources is of major import in that recovery.

I encourage the Minister of Finance to continue the present subsidies for conversion of automobiles to alternate fuels. In my riding of Welland propane fuel is used exclusively by the Niagara Regional Police Force in their police cruisers. In the City of Welland 90 per cent of all taxi cabs have been converted to propane as an alternate fuel. Many of my constituents have converted their private automobiles, and I personally have 14 vehicles in my family business on propane. The savings in all cases are in excess of 40 per cent. Propane is readily available to the public at an increasing number of service stations in my riding of Welland and through southern Ontario. It is proving to be a reliable and economic source of fuel.

I would therefore invite Members of the House to encourage their constituents to examine the benefits of alternate fuels such as propane and natural gas, and would encourage the Minister of Finance to continue and, when appropriate, to increase the subsidies for alternate fuel conversions.

This action would increase the opportunity for an increasing—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

TRANSPORT

PAY BOOTH ON CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL—STUDY OF IMMEDIATE ABOLITION URGED

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport must be aware that the Quebec government has abolished highway tolls; he must be aware that the abolition puts an end to unfair treatment in the regions of the south shore and the Eastern Townships; finally, he must be aware as well that this demonstration of equity towards autoroute users is not yet generalized since motorists still pay tolls to cross the Champlain bridge. I am convinced that the Progressive Conservative Members from the south shore and Eastern Townships ridings will echo my representations urging the Minister to consider the possibility of dismantling immediately the Champlain bridge toll booths which constitute discrimination towards and cause delays to motorists travelling to the south shore and the Eastern Townships.

ENERGY

FUEL PRICE INCREASE—EFFECT ON LAC-SAINT-JEAN REGION OF QUEBEC

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, like most Canadians, the people in my riding applauded the statement made by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on our country's economy and finances and the direction the present Government intends to take. One of the Government's priorities is a more equitable redeployment of public funds, which will be done through consultation on ways of regulating, for instance, the price of oil. In the past, distant areas like mine have often been neglected. We believe it is time for a change. As the Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, it is my duty to ensure that this new approach has no adverse effects on the people of my riding. There is certainly a way to meet the needs of Canadians while taking into account the regional dimensions of Lac-Saint-Jean.

For instance, the increase in the price of fuel is a distinct disadvantage. Almost everything is shipped in and out of this area by road transport, and transportation costs are already 25 per cent higher because of weather and road conditions. I would appreciate receiving your suggestions in the next few weeks, so that I can then express the views of all my constituents.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

IMPACT OF ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has made flagrantly contradictory statements on the subject of arts cut-backs. Neither he nor the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are in the House today to answer to them.

During the course of the election campaign the position of the Party was very clear—no arts cut-backs in real terms and consultation with the arts and cultural community. Further, in opposition, the Conservatives were very strong on the arm's length relationship between government and the cultural agencies. Yet the economic statement broke all three promises.

To complicate matters, the Minister said in answer to a question yesterday that he would ensure that there would be increased funding for creative and productive work in the arts, yet he could not assure the House that cut-backs would not be confined to administration because of the arm's length relationship. However, a story in today's Globe and Mail says that there will be further interference with our major cultural agency, the CBC.

Where do we stand? Nobody knows. I suggest that the way out of this incredible muddle is for the Minister to go back to square one with no arts cut-backs, consultation with the arts community, and a strict respect for the arm's length relationship between government and that agency.

YOUTH

EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS' GUIDELINES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) to intervene on behalf of the young people who are being discriminated against in the hiring guidelines for federal works programs released yesterday by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

The Minister of Employment said that we have the highest number of young people in our history without work, and that this is a short-term make work measure on their behalf. I would ask the Minister responsible for youth to examine these guidelines. She will find that preferentrial hiring is given to unemployment insurance exhaustees, then to those drawing social assistance, and then to those who are drawing unemployment insurance. It means that a young person who has not worked before and who is not on social assistance is not allowed to go to work in any of these federal works programs called Canada Works or Section 38.

I am asking the Minister of Youth to intervene, and do whatever she must, to get the Minister of Employment to drop these discriminatory hiring regulations that discriminate against all of our young people in this country who are out of work.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING MINISTER

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

According to a story published in the press today, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion owns a company; he has a 50 per cent interest in a company that manufactures shoes, and since he is responsible for the Anti-dumping Tribunal and for setting quotas on footwear, and the president of the company said that the company was having problems because of imports. Did the Right Hon. Prime Minister take the necessary precautions when appointing the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion by asking him certain pertinent questions, and did the Minister inform the Prime Minister of the potential conflict of interest that existed at the time, and if the Prime Minister was aware of the situation, how could the Member in question become the Minister of a department where he must make daily decisions that may affect the financial position of a company in which he has a 50 per cent interest?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am disappointed and surprised at the Hon. Member for asking such a question. However, I can assure him that all legal requirements were met before anyone was appointed, including the Minister in question. The Hon. Member is no doubt aware that from time to time, Canadian citizens, including Members of this House who have worked in the business world, have been faced with certain problems, and I must say I have received every assurance that all legal requirements have been met, and I am confident that the Hon. Member in question has the integrity and competence required to perform his duties as Minister.

[English]

RESPONSIBILITY QUERY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to ask the question because it is a very important problem. It is not the integrity of a person, I do not put that in question, but a Prime Minister has an obligation that, when he appoints a Minister, he must make sure there is no conflict of interest and no appearance of conflict of interest.

How is it that since September 17 one person in this House, being the owner of a shoe factory, becomes a Minister and remains a Minister until the end of October, owning shares of a company and having the responsibility during that time to make decisions that can affect quotas and the future of this company?

I think the Prime Minister had a duty to make sure when he appointed that Member of Parliament that there was no conflict of interest. He could have appointed him to a different portfolio but not to a portfolio in which he makes decisions about a business in which he has a personal interest, a very important interest because he owned 50 per cent of that company.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to presume bad faith and dark motives on behalf of the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: No, that is a different matter.

An Hon. Member: If the shoe fits, wear it.

Mr. Mulroney: I can assure the Hon. Member that all of the provisions of the statutes governing conflict of interest were discussed with the various Ministers by me, and they were all fulfilled to the letter within the time frames stipulated to ensure precisely that there would be no conflict of interest.

That included following, as I understand our predecessors did, provisions in regard to blind trusts and so on.

If there is a suggestion or an indication of impropriety I would be happy to look at the matter again and report back to the House and to the Hon. Member. But I want to give the Hon. Member the assurance that I exercised vigilance and care with regard to all of the nominations, and I was thoroughly satisfied that these matters had been properly dealt with, as well as the competence and integrity of the Minister involved.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am happy that the Right Hon. Prime Minister intends to look into the matter.

• (1120)

OWNERSHIP OF SHARES—PRIME MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a very precise question. Was the Prime Minister made aware at the time of forming his Cabinet that that Minister owned 50 per cent of the shares of a shoe company? Did the Minister inform him precisely that he had these shares? If the Prime Minister knew, why did he appoint him to his job while for at least a month and a half the Minister was in a position to make decisions in relation to this industry? The blind trust in that matter cannot work because everyone knows that the company exists and that the Minister has shares. A blind trust cannot work; the company is his.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is a crime for anyone to hold shares or to hold directorships in companies prior to their holding high public office.

Mr. Waddell: Did you know?

Mr. Mulroney: One either divests oneself or one complies with the full requirements of the blind trust and other reporting arrangements which are quite properly required by Parliament.

Mr. Chrétien: Did you know?

Mr. Mulroney: I was aware that the Minister and others had financial holdings with which they were obliged to deal pursuant to statutes of this House. I have received the assurance that all provisions of the Act have been complied with. However, as I indicated to my hon. friend, I will be happy to look at it again with care to ensure that there has been full and absolute compliance, not only with the letter but with the spirit of the law as well.

THE ECONOMY

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—PROJECTIONS OF EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It was reported this morning by Informetrica Limited, an economic forecasting firm, that, as a result of the budget cuts announced on November 8, 50,000 jobs will be lost next year and real economic growth will be reduced by .5 per cent. In refusing to give the House the Government's figures on the jobs to be lost by these cuts, the Minister said that they were insignificant and that in any case there would be an increase in jobs in 1985.

Considering the contradiction between his answers and the report of Informetrica, would the Minister tell us whether the loss of 50,000 jobs is to be considered insignificant? Is this new 1984 Tory newspeak? Would he now release the job loss figures calculated by his forecasting model? Will he respect the Conservative commitment to open government and let the House judge what is significant or not?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I said was that the job loss was not insignificant. I said that the statistics which were thrown up by the econometric model were statistically insignificant.

An Hon. Member: What is the difference?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There are differences between what the Informetrica model has produced, our models and other econometric models in the country. I ask the Hon. Member to remember two things. One is that $2 billion of spending cuts, net in a $400 billion economy is not a major amount. The second is that econometric models do not measure the qualitative element of the improvement in confidence for both consumers and business, which I am sure will lead to an increase in jobs that will far exceed the measurable job loss according to the model.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister and the Prime Minister continue to speak of jobs which might be created if interest rates decline far enough, if business confidence leaps ahead far enough. Is this projection merely a pious wish on behalf of the Government? Or, do they have some hard data or information from their friends in big business that they in fact will invest in jobs? Does he really believe that he merely pushes a "cut-cut" button and out the other end of his economic machine he gets "jobs-jobs"? How does he explain that in Japan, where the deficit is a higher percentage of GNP than it is in Canada, there is a much lower rate of unemployment?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that 32,000 more jobs were created in the month of October. Things are moving in the right direction.

● (1125)

In spite of what the Hon. Member is trying to get at with the question, let me state one overriding consideration that his Leader will support. We cannot, as a country, run away from the deficit problem. We cannot run away from the problem of accumulating debt. We are on a treadmill here. It is a very dangerous thing that we are facing. If we do run away from it, the job loss, the economic and the financial mess that we will be in in five years' time will be far more serious than it is today. That is why we took the actions that I announced in my statement last Thursday.

DEPARTMENT'S STATISTICAL INFORMATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Now that Informetrica has confirmed what my Leader said over a week ago, that there would be a net loss of 50,000 jobs to the economy as a result of the Government's economic statement, is the Minister now willing to provide for the House of Commons and for the public of Canada the statistical information that was made available to him by his ministry officials, and show conclusively exactly how many jobs his Government is prepared to risk in an effort to achieve the kind of economic Utopia that it claims might occur some time in the future?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are not trying to achieve an economic Utopia. We are trying to withdraw ourselves out of a very serious problem that we are facing as a country and as a Government. We are taking the steps that we feel are necessary. The Hon. Member has seen the results of the Informetrica modal. I am sure there will be others that will be somewhat less. There may be others that are somewhat more. I say to the Hon. Member that he must look at the broader reasons for the action that we took last Thursday.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF INFORMATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is a very simple question. It surely can be answered. The Minister has in his possession statistical information given to him by his ministry officials which shows that there will be a loss of jobs as a result of the economic direction the Government has decided to take. Will the Minister provide for the House the information that was given to him, in order that the public of Canada can draw some reasonable conclusions as to whether or not those are the risks that they are prepared to take in order to achieve the aims that the Government wants to achieve?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have said in the past, and I will say it again to the Hon. Member, that this information was provided to me as part of an over-all policy recommendation. I do not believe that it is appropriate for Ministers of the Crown to be making information available publicly to Members in the House and the general public which is part of a set of policy options. That is the reason for my not making that information available.

METRIC CONVERSION

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate him on his election and on his portfolio. I wish him well in the House, but not too well. In that regard, I want to know if he has seen the front page of this morning's Globe and Mail and, in particular, if he saw the comments of his Parliamentary Secretary who was quoted as saying:

> The Conservative Government is abandoning Canada's move toward mandatory metric measurement—

He then goes on to say:

> Definitely, that is what's going to happen, as sure as I'm talking to you now.

He was talking to Miss Barbara Yaffe. The article continues:

> We will be selling to the consumers for one more generation in Imperial.

I want to know, if the Minister has seen that, if his Parliamentary Secretary was speaking for the Government and for the Minister. Also, can he confirm that that is going to be the policy of the Government, that it is not going to go ahead with the metric policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that the responsibility of the department is to listen to all comments and consult the public at large with respect to metrication. That is what we are doing now and as soon as we are through consulting we will have an opportunity to set forth the government's final policy on that issue.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CONSUMERS' ASSOCIATION OF CANADA—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I asked whether or not the Parliamentary Secretary was speaking for the Government. The answer to the question is no. Obviously the Parliamentary Secretary was speaking for the Parliamentary Secretary.

It is just as serious, if not more serious, that in the same article, the Parliamentary Secretary said:

The Consumers' Association of Canada has not been speaking for the consumer.

He said that the Consumers' Association of Canada is nothing more than an extension of the very Department the Parliamentary Secretary represents.

Does the Minister concur with his Parliamentary Secretary that, indeed, the Consumers' Association of Canada is not speaking for the consumers? If he believes that, will he cut off aid to the Consumers' Association of Canada? If he does not believe that, will he confirm that he will continue to support the Association, and will he ask his Parliamentary Secretary to withdraw those comments?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, again I say to the Hon. Member that the department's responsibility is to listen to the various spokespersons and interest groups and, as far as I know, the Consumers' Association of Canada does speak for a legitimate interest group. It so happens that I had a meeting this morning with CAC representatives, a meeting which ended just before the question period. Our discussions covered various issues concerning the Consumers' Association of Canada. As I said, the government has every interest in listening to all groups, including the CAC.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

APPOINTMENT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

The Government has appointed a committee of three, including a former CTV employee and adviser to the Prime Minister, to advise the Government on budgetary cutbacks in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. My question is quite simple. Does the Prime Minister trust Mr. Pierre Juneau? If so, why did he not give Mr. Juneau this responsibility.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): In the absence of the Minister of Communications, I can answer the Hon. Member. If I am not mistaken, it is an advisory committee that will be helping the Department and the Minister of Communications analyse questions that concern the CBC, among others, but for the time being it will help analyse the matter of budgetary cutbacks. This is being done to help the Minister ensure that as far as possible, budget cuts will be restricted to the bureaucratic level and will not affect employees of the CBC or other corporations. I think the Minister already gave this explanation, which is an entirely legitimate one.

[English]

CORPORATION'S MANAGEMENT MANDATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Prime Minister is failing to make a major distinction. Does the Prime Minister not understand that there is an important difference between hiring a group of outside advisers perhaps to suggest a change in mandate for the CBC, something which would be quite appropriate, and hiring a group of outside advisers, including a former political adviser to himself, actually to carry out part of the mandate within the CBC? Surely that is a management function properly belonging to the existing management of the CBC. Surely the Government has confidence in that management. Either the management should be given that job, or the management should be changed. The Government should not provide outside political interference.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I see that the Hon. Member is horrified by the idea of someone having been involved in partisan politics having a right to advise the CBC. The proposition clearly does not outrage the present President of the CBC who is less horrified by partisan activity than is my hon. friend.

We have confidence in the management of the CBC. We propose to allow the CBC to proceed in a manner very much at arm's length, consistent with its honourable traditions. That does not preclude, nor should it preclude, a Cabinet Minister from soliciting expert counsel to assist him in his parliamentary obligation to analyse, and advise the House of Commons as best he can on ongoing developments in his Department, including the proper responsibility that he has for the general over-view of the CBC.

FREEDOM FROM INTERFERENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister should clarify things with his Minister. The Minister has said publicly that there were two broad responsibilities given to this group. One was to discuss a mandate for the CBC. It is quite proper for that to be done either by advisers to Ministers' offices or outside groups. There is no question about that. The other mandate that he said was given, and this is in my own words, was actually to implement budgetary cuts involving programming within the CBC.

Does the Prime Minister not see that there is a major distinction between outside advice concerning policy, and internal interference with the decision-making process within a Crown corporation itself? Surely a Crown corporation like the CBC, which is the largest broadcasting entity in the country, should remain free of all outside interference from the Government, and should especially remain free of political appointees nominated by the Government, who are directly involved in management decisions.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if that is true, it will come as a surprise to the present President of the CBC. I say that without any malice, because we have a high regard for Mr. Juneau and his accomplishments. That is a fact.

With regard to responsibility, I think my hon. friend has obscured the clear indications of the responsibility of this committee. It is not empowered directly or indirectly to intrude on, insinuate itself into, or interfere with the operations of the CBC. It is an advisory group to the Minister, empowered to assist him in his proper assumption of his duty to the House of Commons, which is to provide all Members with proper and timely information on the best manner in which government policy can be implemented.

PIPELINES

VANCOUVER ISLAND NATURAL GAS PIPELINE PROJECT

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my first question in this House is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last summer the British Columbia Utilities Commission selected the so-called southern route from the Lower Mainland to Nanaimo for a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island. There is some concern in my riding that the project may be in jeopardy, particularly in view of the perilous financial position in which the new Government has found itself. What is the status of the Vancouver Island natural gas pipeline project?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on his election to the House of Commons. We welcome him to our PC caucus.

Our position on the Vancouver Island pipeline, which we have conveyed to the British Columbia Minister of Energy, is that the project is on hold until the economic climate improves, as are the Quebec pipelines. We have asked the Government of British Columbia to bring us a more economic proposal with revised figures, which we will then discuss with our officials. Hopefully we will be able to schedule this project for construction but it will probably begin a little later than the B.C. Government had requested.

NATIONAL PARKS

EMPLOYMENT AT KOUCHIBOUGUAC NATIONAL PARK, N.B.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for national parks and concerns employment in New Brunswick's Kouchibouguac national park during the summer of 1985. This past summer, 230 people were employed in the park. According to some press reports, the Kouchibouguac national park operating budget will be cut down considerably, to the extent that employment in 1985 will be reduced by some 100 person-years. Since the policy of this government is to eliminate jobs, can the Minister confirm the bad news and explain in unequivocal terms why my constituents are the target of such savage and unacceptable cutbacks?

• (1140)

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Department of Environment is reducing person-years. I want to say to my colleague that nobody has yet been sent a dismissal notice and we will do our best to ease the situation, help retrain employees who can be given other duties and proceed as humanely as possible.

It stands to reason that cuts hurt everybody and it is obvious as well that the cutbacks made by my department will be spread throughout Canada; we are talking about 305 fewer person-years out of a total public service work force in excess of 10,000 people.

INQUIRY CONCERNING EMPLOYMENT FOR LAID-OFF WORKERS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister giving me the assurance that employment will be found for the workers who will be laid off?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): I cannot give that assurance to my colleague, Mr. Speaker, because we are now in the process of considering how best to implement our staff cutbacks. What I can say is that the Department of Environment's prime concern is not to create jobs but, before reducing our staff, we reviewed those programs where a minimum of hardship would be caused.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE—FUNDING OF BIOTOXICOLOGY UNITS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of the Environment and it concerns cut-backs in her Department. One of the cut-backs proposed is in the Canadian Wildlife biotoxicology unit. This unit has undertaken some very important activities in Canada. It was the first to identify DDT as an environmental hazard, and it was responsible for banning a number of dangerous chemicals, particularly in New Brunswick. Would the Minister indicate whether she is prepared to review the cut-backs in the biotoxicology units of the Canadian Wildlife Service, because they are such an important assistance to health and safety in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think I replied yesterday to one of the hon. members' colleagues who was seeking this information in more general terms when I said that there will not be any cut-back in toxicological research, since $27 million from my department and $150 million from the federal government are being allocated to this research.

[English]

PUBLIC SAFETY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the Minister cannot say that will not be the effect. The Canadian Wildlife biotoxicology branches are being cut back. The unit in New Brunswick is being cut back, which is currently studying heavy metals in the Bay of Chaleur and the links between cancer and birth defects. If the Government and the Department of the Environment are not prepared to do that, would the Minister state to the House who will take care of the problem of safety for Canadians in connection with these important issues that she and the Conservative Party are proposing to cut back?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): When we considered these cuts, Mr. Speaker, I agreed, along with my officials, to make very minor cuts to a number of programs, and they are very minor indeed, for we are talking here of 305 person-years out of a total of 10,000 employees; it is clear, therefore, that we are not thinking of abandoning toxicological research. I suggest that some people are dramatizing the situation somewhat, and if the health of the Canadian people were really jeopardized by cuts such as these, we would certainly review the situation and make cuts in some other less essential programs. But we do not feel that such is the case just now.

ENERGY

GAS PRICE INCREASE—EFFECTS ON GASPÉ RESIDENTS

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Considering the long distances people living in the Gaspé Peninsula generally and in my own riding of Gaspé in particular must travel to obtain their basic services, and considering the 64.6 cents a litre they must now pay for no-lead gasoline, could the minister tell the House whether she has recently contacted or met her Quebec counterpart about this situation? If not, does she intend to meet her Quebec counterpart or any other official, in order to deal with this problem and roll back the price of gasoline to a level more acceptable to the Gaspé people?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the Hon. Member that I have in fact met with my Quebec counterpart. I can only tell him that the Governments, either provincial or federal, do not set the price of gasoline. In this country, which is so vast, the whole issue of the difference in gasoline prices is a real irritant, whether it is in the Yukon, Gaspé or northern Alberta.

Gasoline prices are a function, not only of the price of crude oil, but also of federal taxes, provincial taxes and competition. Even in the cities the spread between gasoline prices at the moment is something in the order of 40 cents a litre in Edmonton and 58 cents a litre in Montreal. I am aware of the concern of the Hon. Member and I certainly will meet with him to see if there are any special circumstances that we can alleviate. However, I can only repeat that gasoline prices are not set by the federal Government.

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

MONTREAL TAXI INDUSTRY—COMMISSION FINDINGS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. During the recent election campaign, his Leader, as a major part of his Party's policy, declared in Toronto: "We will stamp out racism wherever it rears its ugly head." The Minister will surely know that the Quebec Human Rights Commission recently concluded without a doubt that racism and discrimination prevails in the Montreal taxi industry against black Canadians and members of the Haitian community. In addition, East Indian Canadians in Hamilton yesterday filed the same grievance.

My question is very straightforward. In light of the fact that this ugly head of racism has unfortunately and clearly identified itself, what specific and immediate proposals will the Minister and the Government introduce in the House of Commons to address specifically these two abusive cases which are causing economic inequalities among Canadians?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I agree that the situation which has developed in Montreal, and also in the other part of the country to which the Hon. Member alluded, is very troublesome, as is the report which has recently been released in the Province of Quebec vis-à-vis the taxi industry. The Member should know that one of the jurisdictional areas in this dispute lies with the Government of Quebec. It is a provincial government matter from that point of view. However, we will be working with provincial Governments across Canada in order to help them in any way that they feel necessary to stamp out racism wherever it exists. That is a commitment which was made not only by the Prime Minister but by the entire Conservative Party. It was also a commitment which was made in the "Equality Now" report to which all Parties have agreed. We are moving to implement the recommendations of that report as quickly as possible.

QUEBEC RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I am quite troubled by the fact that we are breaking down racism on a regional basis—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great respect, the Hon. Member had a very long preamble to his first question. Could he now simply ask his supplementary question?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is, in light of the fact that the Quebec Human Rights Commission spent two years and $300,000 studying the problem, is the Government prepared to act on some of its recommendations, including affirmative action programs, and not give Canadians the generalities which we have seen over the last two months?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is in the wrong Legislature. That question should properly be addressed to my colleague in the Legislature in the Province of Quebec. Both I and the federal Government have stated that we will do everything in our power to make sure that racism does not continue to rear its ugly head in this country.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

ALTERNATIVE ENERGY—IMPACT OF ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. It reflects the tremendous concern people are feeling about the science and research and development cutbacks announced last week. Does the Government consider that energy conservation, solar, wind, and other alternate forms of energy have a contribution to make to the Government's goal of energy self-sufficiency for Canada in a few years? If so, can the Minister explain why the Government has chosen to shut down the National Research Council's energy division, and with it some 200 research contracts that were supporting a fledgling but very important and developing high-tech industry in the alternate energy area?

Mr. Waddell: In the private sector, too.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed, the Government recognizes the importance of continuing research into alternative energy. The facts of the matter, as described by the Minister of Finance last Thursday, are that we just cannot afford to do everything we would like to do for reasons he made very clear to this House. Indeed, alternative energy projects will continue to be funded under a variety of programs, including the new IRDP initiatives announced recently by my colleague, the Minister for DRIE, the Industrial Research Assistance Program, and other initiatives of the federal Government. Alternative sources of funding are available, and these projects will qualify alongside many other projects in the private sector.

[Translation]

DECISION TO END RESEARCH PROGRAM FOR PRIVATE INDUSTRY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the President of the Treasury Board. Could he explain why, since government policy is to put the emphasis on private sector research, the Government has chosen to terminate a program which was related exclusively to research in private industry, and which was responsible for instance for 90 per cent of the total Canadian Government research activity in the solar industry area, and 90 per cent of the total Canadian Government research work done in the fusion industry area towards developing another alternate energy source? Why is it that, in spite of the stated policy, the government has moved in that direction?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The Hon. Member is quite aware that his question has been put and it is now up to the Minister to answer.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my colleague from Ottawa Centre, I would simply emphasize what the Minister has just referred to. Of course there has been a review in that area, as in the case of many other existing programs, those well down on the priority list and which could be liable to certain cuts, and of other programs which may be introduced, as my colleague stated, to replace such activities, and to help meet the Government's objectives in the specific field of research and development.

COINAGE

POSSIBLE MINTING OF NEW DOLLAR COIN

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. As the Minister well knows, the penny candy machines and the twenty-five cent coin laundromats are now basically museum-pieces. In light of these changing realities, and recognizing the increasing usage by Canadians of coin operated facilities for food services, transportation, home maintenance, and entertainment, would the Minister advise the House whether he plans to instruct the Canadian Mint to proceed with plans to produce a new Canadian one dollar coin? Will he also assure the House that appropriate efforts will be made to ensure public acceptance of such a coin before it is introduced?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the Hon. Member that the Mint is being prudent, and is ready to answer any such request from the Government. However, no such request has been made of it. There are ramifications which affect many sectors of our society and economy, and if and when the Government takes a decision in this regard it will certainly be preceded by extensive consultations with all interested parties.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

ALTERNATIVE ENERGY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Science and Technology on a subject already mentioned this morning. The Minister says that research and development into renewable energy can be carried by the private sector, but he knows very well that the private sector dealing with renewable energy is very small and very weak. In fact the work abandoned by this Government had been carried on for ten years. Is the Minister saying that there is no place in this country's future for renewable energy?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I thought I made it clear a moment ago that in fact this Government remains committed to continuing work and research on alternative energy, and the necessary research to support that enterprise. As the Member pointed out, this work has progressed for some ten years largely with federal Government support in the form of major subsidies. If there is an export potential for solar energy technology, for example, it is high time that industry began to demonstrate its capacity to market products which will sell in the external market. We intend to support such initiatives through various other government programs.

RENEWABLE ENERGY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said the Government supports alternate energy; he has not said the Government supports renewable energy. What is the position of the Progressive Conservative Government now, a Government that promised during the election campaign that it would support all industrial projects which would reduce our country's dependency on crude oil?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, estimates and information sought from my own officials at the National Research Council and others in government have indicated that for the foreseeable future our hydro-carbon, hydro-electric and nuclear resources will adequately provide for Canada's energy requirements. In terms of the potential to export renewable energy technology, this Government will continue to support research and development and product development initiatives geared to bringing that type of return back home to the Canadian economy.

MINES AND MINING

ANNOUNCED CLOSING OF STELCO MINE AT RED LAKE, ONT.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Mines. Stelco Incorporated announced yesterday that its plans to close its Griffith Iron Ore Mine located between Ear Falls and Red Lake. The closing of this mine will mean the direct loss of 283 jobs, almost one quarter of the area's work force. It will be devastating for the area. Will the Minister act to influence Stelco to keep this mine open, or, in the alternative, to locate another operator? If unsuccessful in keeping the mine open, will he commit himself to working to ensure a more reasonable timetable for its closure?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for bringing this matter to the attention of the House and providing me, as a new Member of the House of Commons, with an opportunity to address the Commons. The issue of the closing of the Griffith Mine in Red Lake is well known to us. We are monitoring developments and the work being done with the provincial Government as well, but I can assure the Hon. Member, and the community and workers of the Red Lake area affected by the announcement, that our Government stands ready to assist them to the fullest possible extent with existing programs. These will provide for mobility assistance, retraining, helping the workers to find other jobs, and exploring whatever economic options are available to the community.

ASSISTANCE TO MINERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the answer was well read, and my supplementary question should properly be directed to the Minister of Employment. However, in her absence I direct it to the Minister of Mines.

If in fact the mine does close, will the Government ensure that assistance similar to that given to the mines recently closed in Quebec will be given to this area?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Without question, Mr. Speaker!

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Will it be the policy of the Government of Canada and of his Department to ignore the needs of the shoe industry and the question of shoe imports until his shares are sold in the bankrupt shoe company?

• (1200)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to—

Mr. Crosbie: Give him the boots.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member's question, in which he has made reference to the shoe industry, I understand that a series of questions were raised earlier. I certainly intend to give notice that I feel I have a Question of Privilege. I would like to read Hansard with respect to the purport of those questions which I believe have been based on misinformation.

In direct answer to the Hon. Member's question, I can assure him that I have no shares in any shoe company that I am aware of.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Striking Committee. If the House will give its consent, it is intended that there will be a move for concurrence in this report later this day.

Mr. Speaker: As Hon. Members are aware, when a report of this committee is presented to the House and concurrence in that report is sought at the same sitting, it is the custom of the House to have the Clerk at the Table read the entire report to the House. Since this report is lengthy and the report is being circulated, may we dispense with its reading? Is that agreed?

Statements by Ministers

EXTERNAL AID

ASSISTANCE TO AFRICAN REGIONS SUFFERING FROM FAMINE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canadians, as Hon. Members are aware, have responded with overwhelming generosity to the tragedy which is unfolding in Ethiopia. In the face of unparalleled suffering, offers of assistance have come from individuals, voluntary groups, corporations, municipalities and many many more. Non governmental organizations have effectively channelled and stimulated this massive public concern for Ethiopia. Two weeks ago the Government appointed the Hon. David MacDonald as Canadian Emergency Co-ordinator for the African famine.

The generosity shown by Canadians for such colossal suffering abroad is especially heartening in view of the difficult economic circumstances that prevail right here at home. Despite budgetary restraints, the Government is taking its lead from the concern demonstrated by so many Canadians.

Recognizing that the famine is ravaging not only Ethiopia, but threatening most of the African continent, the Government is creating a $50 million special fund for Africa. Parts of that special fund will be used to match funds raised by Canadians. Specific matching formulas will be worked out in consultations between the voluntary sector and Mr. MacDonald.

[Translation]

I am also happy to announce that the following measures will be taken immediately. The Canadian International Development Agency will be granting an additional contribution of $3.5 million in humanitarian aid to Ethiopia, through the intermediary of non-governmental organizations and UN agencies, and it will be sending between 10 and 15 additional tons of grain, for a total value of $4 million.

In order to provide long-term development assistance, the Government has decided to extend to other regions as well a water supply program which has made it possible to provide drinking water for 200,000 people in the southern part of the country, representing a contribution of $800,000. With respect to Africa in general, CIDA will be approving two projects to improve bean and wheat production, which will be carried out jointly with international agricultural research institutes in a number of African countries, at a total cost of $6.9 million, spread over five years.

[English]

Food assistance from Canadians has been a critical factor in sustaining life among Ethiopians. As the drought intensified over the last three years, Canadian food aid accounted for almost one-third of all food aid received by Ethiopia. In the past year it has accounted for more than half of all food aid delivered to date. In Africa at large, Canadian food assistance this year will be $150 million, reaching more than 30 countries. Only the United States provides more, and even then, on a per capita basis, Canadians are the largest donors of food aid in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): As I see it, considering the present situation, Canada should encourage better co-ordination among donor countries.

Last Tuesday, I wrote to the Minister of External Affairs of each of the seven countries of the Western Economic Summit. I pointed out that many Ethiopians will die of hunger or disease unless their country receives massive support in the form of goods, humanitarian aid and logistical support.

I also told them of my impression that the Ethiopian government was doing everything it could to deal with the situation.

[English]

Each evening as our families witness the anguish and suffering brought so intimately into our homes by television, we are reminded of how very well off we are, of the quality of our lives compared to the desperate lot of so many people throughout the world. I am deeply touched by the enormous response from Canadians to the plight of the hungry in Ethiopia, in the Sahel, and throughout the areas of Africa stricken by the current drought.

While the extent of the generosity of Canadians has been overwhelming, I wish to assure our fellow Canadians that their intentions, proposals, contributions and offers of assistance are sincerely welcomed and are being given every attention. In the days and weeks to come, the Government will continue to work closely with those individuals and organizations at home to ensure that Canadian assistance is brought effectively to bear in face of this desperate situation.

Abroad we will continue to work with the Ethiopian Government, with other donor nations, and with the United Nations and its agencies to monitor the African situation and maximize relief efforts. In this endeavour the compassion and the expectations that have been made so manifest by the Canadian people will be our guiding light.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Minister for his statement today. I believe it really reflects the thoughts of the Canadian people. They want the Canadian Government to move quickly and effectively in this area. Any move made by the Government in that direction is applauded by me, my Party, and, I am sure, by all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I would also like to congratulate the Minister for his objectivity. We are all proud that we have been the first for some time, in terms of per capita aid to Africa, and we must continue to be first. I am glad that the Minister recognizes that we are by far the greatest per capita contributor to Ethiopia. I commend him to carry on in this endeavour.

This move to contribute more money to Africa is good. We agree with the $50 million funding. However, we would like to know whether the Government is taking that money away from other people in the world who are suffering. We would like to know if this is new money and if that action will in fact reduce the cuts in foreign aid which were indicated a week ago by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). We do not want that to look good while other people suffer. In addition, CHAD made an application this morning, because the same problem exists there and it is spreading to other countries in Africa.

I do not think that we should cut aid, and I commend the Minister for not doing that. I hope that what he said last week will be withdrawn, because, in spite of the fiscal problems facing Canada, all Canadians want the Government to do more in this area. Now is not the time to cut foreign aid.

Our Government had the very commendable goal of spending 0.7 per cent of GNP on foreign aid by 1990. It is not the time to reduce these goals because of economic problems in Canada when we see on television every night what is happening in those countries.

I am pleased that the Minister indicated that these funds will come from new money. We must be prepared to assist on a daily basis, because this is not only a problem at present, it is spreading throughout the world. It is a positive step in order to help these countries develop their infrastructure through such methods as water projects to help avoid future crises of this sort. No one wants to be partisan about this issue.

While I believe the Minister is taking the right steps, I hope he can assure us that it is not just a facade to hide cuts in other areas.

I am sure that the House of Commons would want to keep its commitment. The goal of 0.7 per cent of GNP is not enough. Our former distinguished Leader, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, along with those who had missions around the world, asked that the rich countries of the world increase their foreign aid to 1 per cent of their GNP. I believe Canada can be a leader in this respect, and I personally was frustrated that we were not proceeding fast enough.

When I was Minister of Finance and President of the Treasury Board I always ensured that we did not cut funds destined for foreign aid in order to solve Canadian problems.

I know that the Minister wants to be successful and achieve that goal of 0.7 per cent. That is what he said to the United Nations on September 25 and that is what he asked Mr. Lewis to say two days before the cuts were announced. I am pleased that the Government is taking this action and that it is using new money. It should continue this policy, because Canadians want the Government to make a good contribution to aid around the world.

Although Canada has its problems, we are fat compared with those countries. The Government cannot ignore the problem and all Canadians will applaud it for taking action. We will not blame the Minister of Finance if he backs away from those cuts. We know that he has other goals to achieve, but I am sure Canadians would not want these goals achieved at the expense of hunger in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to say to the Minister that the response of the Government to the Canadian public's concern is admirable. I am sure that the Minister and the Government are as much aware as we are on this side of the great concern that Canadians have shown through their phone calls and financial contributions. This concern over starvation in Africa is not just recent but has continued for some time. Undoubtedly it has been brought to a head in the last few months because of the global village in which we now live. When television captures the misery and horror in one part of the world, we instantly know about it. Television has brought to our attention vividly the plight of these literally starving millions in Ethiopia and indeed at least seven other countries of Africa in a most serious way.

We welcome the announcement by the Minister today that a special fund of $50 million will be established, part of which, yet to be determined, will be used to provide matching grants to organizations and individuals in the private sector who have shown their concern about this tragic situation.

I was also pleased to hear the Minister say that he is already taking steps to ensure better co-ordination among donor nations. I believe he said that he has written to the leaders of the economic summit nations and to officials in the United Nations to determine if a better co-ordination of donors could be provided and ensured.

I realize that the Minister cannot provide an answer now, but I would like him to indicate in the future whether he has also taken steps, through consultation with other donor nations in the western world and quite possibly those in eastern Europe, to co-ordinate their activities on long-term development assistance.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), reminds me that this was one of the Government's primary concerns when he was with the Minister in Addis Ababa. While this concern for greater co-ordination of long-term development assistance does not take precedence over the immediate crisis—because it is extremely vital to meet this immediate crisis—it does involve problems of a deeper and long-term nature. It was over 13 months ago when the report of the Food and Agriculture Organization warned that 22 of Africa's 50 nations were already suffering catastrophic food shortages. The former Minister of Agriculture, Eugene Whelan, was aware of this. I understand that he tried to persuade the previous government to respond to it but was unsuccessful.

The present Government is aware of the FAO report that it has been the worst drought in Africa this century. Although our emergency assistance is both valuable and important, the Minister is well aware that it will not solve the long-term problem.

I hope the Minister will also indicate if he has any assurance that the emergency aid special fund will go to those in need. I thought that he would have mentioned that in his remarks today. It is my understanding that the situation is of the most grave proportions in Eritrea and Tigre, yet civil war rages there. Does he have any assurance that the aid will go to those most in need?

The Minister has already been asked to clarify exactly from where the $50 million will come, but can he tell us what is its relationship to the $180 million cut in ODA in the current fiscal year? Will it remain the same or is it now reduced by $50 million? I think it is important for us to know that as well.

A third question to which the Minister did not comment concerns the Government's influence in helping to bring the civil war to an end. Does he not have a grave concern—

Mr. Speaker: I deeply regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the tradition is very clear that the time for response by opposition Party spokesmen should not exceed the time used by the Minister. Could the Hon. Member conclude her remarks briefly?

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, this is my final question. The Minister will know that over a third of the budget of Ethiopia is spent on the military. Has he made an effort to persuade the Government of Ethiopia to take the Brandt Commission seriously and be as constructive as possible to end the civil war in Ethiopia?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) want to ask a question?

Mr. Lapierre: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and it happens to be about funding. I think that we all have heard about the cuts made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last week. I would like the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to give me the assurance that the $50 million he is talking about is money to be spent very soon, not over a number of years, and tell me whether it is in fact sliced off the $180 million. Can we now tell Canadians that external aid expenditures will be cut down by $130 million, not $180 million?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the best thing I can do is to indicate the source of the $50 million: $28 million come from the cancellation of cuts ordered by the former government led by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). We are cancelling some of the cutbacks made by the previous administration and $28 million from those funds have now been earmarked for the Africa fund. Some $13 million come from savings flowing from the cuts announced recently by the Minister of Finance. The rest of the money for the fund comes from Canadian commitments to international financial institutions; that money will not be spent this year by the international institutions.

Mr. Lapierre: In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Minister is saying that it is nothing but funds which have been shifted around. He is telling us that those $50 million in fact . . . He has spent the last two or three weeks juggling figures to come up with a total we can understand. If I consider the $28 million he has mentioned . . . I would like to know which cuts he is talking about. And then, we have the $13 million which he had cut, but he has now changed his mind. He should have announced today a $30 million rather than a $50 million program. I would like to have an answer to my question: is that so-called fund of $50 million for one year, two years or for the rest of their mandate?

[English]

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear about the sources of the money. There was a reduction in the funds made available for Overseas Development Assistance by the previous government in the summer of this year during the election campaign. That reduction, much of it, has been restored to the budget of the Overseas Development Assistance, and $28 million of that reduction has been directed toward the fund of Africa.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on Thursdsay night announced a series of reductions, including some in spending within the envelope of External Affairs and overseas development. Of the amounts reduced from our envelope, in the neighbourhood of $13 million has been restored and directed toward the fund for Africa. It has been taken for projects cancelled or delayed in the declaration by the Minister of Finance and has been put back now into the fund for Africa.

The remaining amounts of money come from commitments that Canada had made to certain international financial institutions, commitments which those institutions will not call on and will not need this year, so that money is surplus to us.

To be absolutely clear about what is happening, of the $28 million that came back in the exercise that was revealed by the Minister of Finance on Thursday night in his declaration, that money was available for Overseas Development Assistance. We have made the decision that that money available for Overseas Development Assistance, will be directed toward the purposes of the fund for Africa.

Mr. Benjamin: None of it is new money.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for a very dedicated and sincere effort on the trip he made to Ethiopia.

Would he respond to the questions raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett)? Particularly, is the Government of Canada undertaking activities that would bring some resolution to the civil war there so that resources can be applied directly to the need for emergency aid and longer term development?

My second question again reinforces the question put by my colleague from New Westminster-Coquitlam. Does the Government of Canada intend to become involved as a single nation in the longer term need for development in Ethiopia? Will the Minister be attempting to encourage other nations to join with us to try to find a long-term solution to that problem? What is the Minister's role as a co-ordinator for other nations in bringing more effective response for emergency food aid and equipment into that country?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief in response. Let me say how much I appreciated the participation with me and the quick visit to Ethiopia of the Hon. Member and of a representative of the Liberal Party, and, if I may take the opportunity, let me say that it is our hope that when Mr. MacDonald returns to Ethiopia to carry out further consultations, there may well be interest on the part of representatives of the Parties represented in this House to be part of that delegation with Mr. MacDonald.

Let me try to take the issues in order. In terms of the civil war, as I have tried to indicate in the House, I have two observations. One is that there is no doubt in my mind from my consultations in Ethiopia that while the war is continuing, the priority for the Government of Ethiopia is to get aid to the starving. There is no doubt we have to make use of Oxfam and other non-governmental organizations that have a particular interest in getting money in through the Sudan into the so-called rebel areas. That is envisaged in this program.

In terms of the Brandt Commission, as I have suggested earlier in this House, we have some very real questions as to whether pursuing that initiative at this point in time would help or hinder the delivery of aid to the starving. Undoubtedly there have to be some means found, and we have to play whatever role will be effective, in helping and encouraging an end to that war.

In terms of long-term development, we have announced as part of this project the extension of an important water project. During that period of extension we will be looking to see whether there will be other water projects in Ethiopia that also can be made effective.

We have announced in the statement today the funding of significant cereal and bean projects in Ethiopia and elsewhere. We will be looking for others that will contribute in similar ways to long-term stability and to the avoidance of famine and drought in that area.

As concerns our relations with other countries, I have written, as I have indicated, to the foreign ministers of the summit countries. We are working through the United Nations both in New York and in Ethiopia. Many of the non-governmental organizations with whom we are working are themselves international. I certainly will look for and take advantage of any useful opportunity that arises for Canada to bring greater co-ordination to the effort in Ethiopia. Let me say also that one of the aspects of this breathtaking Canadian response has been the degree to which non-governmental organizations in Canada, which have not always worked well together, have been prepared to make it a common cause to work together to respond to this crisis.

Mr. Speaker: Let me be clear. I see two more Members rising to ask questions, I presume of the Minister. I will accept those two questions and then I will end this discussion.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, could the Minister inform the House of the outcome of his discussions with the former Minister of Agriculture, who apparently had substantial plans in mind to deal with this situation but which apparently did not meet with the favour of his colleagues in the last administration?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to meet for an hour last week with the Hon. Mr. Whelan. I thought it not proper to go back into matters that were the business of the previous government and so spoke with him about his responsibilities as President of the World Food Council and any recommendations that he might make. He had some useful specific suggestions that we are following up, and it is Mr. MacDonald's hope and my own that we will be able to take advantage of the very real experience of Mr. Whelan in continuing an effective Canadian response to the crisis in Ethiopia.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, first I want to add my congratulations to those of others to the right hon. gentleman in terms of the trip he has made and his efforts on behalf of those who are suffering. Also I was happy to hear his comments in relation to the Hon. Eugene Whelan. Unfortunately he is unable to fulfil the kind of mandate he could have been doing so well at the present time.

My question is about this "now you see it now you don't", this $27 million. Is this the $27 million which he has "found" the $27 million that was presumably cancelled by the last government? Was that before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made his announcement or made his cancellation, or did he find the $27 million after the Minister's speech? Where did this $27 million come from? Was it from the present budget since the Minister of Finance made his announcement, or did it come before the Minister's announcement?

This juggling of figures is confusing not only to me but to a number of Canadians. On the one hand they are cutting money for foreign aid in the statement of the Minister of Finance, and on the other they are finding money which was cut out by the last Minister, and now adding on a number of new items. It is a sort of shell game. Would the Right Hon. Minister explain to Canadians just what is happening? He said that it is clear. I do not find it clear.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I will explain it for a third time. First, let me say that it was the decision of the Government, after we had decided not to go ahead with the establishment of an ambassador to the Food and Agriculture Organization, to invite the Hon. Eugene Whelan to remain in the chair of the World Food Council. I am pleased, as I trust are other Members on all sides of the House, that he accepted that invitation which allows him to play, not only with his interest but with some authority, a role in this and other questions of concern to Canadians and to the world.

With regard to the money involved here, the former Liberal government cut foreign aid in the summer. When the Minister of Finance made his economic statement, he indicated in those figures that much of the money which had been cut by the Liberal government in the summer was being returned by the Progressive Conservative Government to the purposes of overseas development and foreign aid. By a decision of the Government, $28 million of that sum has been directed toward the fund for Africa.

In addition, we have secured in the neighbourhood of $20 million which would not otherwise have been available to me as the Minister responsible for the Canadian International Development Association and for external affairs. That money is now available for the special African fund. I trust that my third explanation is clear to the House.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). A number of my constituents have asked for assurance that our food and other aid will be spread equally in Ethiopia. Could the Minister give us that assurance? They do not believe that someone should starve because he or she has a different political ideology than the government of the day.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, it was precisely to seek an answer to that question that I went to Ethiopia along with other Members of the House who were part of the delegation. I cannot give an absolute guarantee. There is no doubt that there will be some slippage in the delivery system. However, I can tell the House, the Hon. Member and the people of Canada that it is my view—and I think that is the view shared by all other Canadians who were there—that the Government of Ethiopia is giving it the highest possible priority and has developed what non-governmental organizations working in Ethiopia believe to be a very effective system to ensure that aid is being delivered to the starving.

There is a civil war in progress. Part of the reason for adopting the formula we have today is that many non-governmental organizations that are being helped by the fund announced by the Government of Canada, rather than working through the Government of Ethiopia, are working by coming in through the Sudan to ensure that aid is available to the starving who are on the other side of the government in that civil war. I cannot guarantee that there will be no people who are put aside because of the civil war, but I think the actions taken by the Government of Ethiopia and the care we have taken in the design of the fund go as far as humanly possible toward ensuring that Canadian aid gets to Ethiopians who are starving.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Striking Committee Report

PETITION

PEACE CAMP ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to the House of Commons. It is signed by some 6,000 people who have been on Parliament Hill at the peace camp. They indicate to the House their desire to see the peace camp remain on Parliament Hill in order to inform people of the nuclear disaster we face and to protest against the Cruise missile.

The people who signed this petition come from as far away as Tanzania, Australia, West Germany and the United States, as well as from all the 10 provinces of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for the last part of his explanation. For the record perhaps I should point out that obviously the names of petitioners from other countries cannot be submitted. We will check the petition submitted as to form. I just wanted to ensure that the petition included the signatures of Canadians.

Mr. Cassidy: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. The vast bulk of them are signatures of Canadians both local and national. The petition also contains a sprinkling of signatures of people from other parts of the world. There are 6,000 in all.

STANDING COMMITTEES

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) and the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), that the first report of the Striking Committee presented earlier this day be concurred in. I should like to address that motion at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister have unanimous consent to introduce the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that there is an important ongoing debate with respect to the Speech from the Throne and that we have also heard an important statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). Therefore, I will keep my remarks brief this afternoon in connection with the report of the Striking Committee. However, I think it is an important report for Parliament and for the House.

The Striking Committee report sets the standard for the operation of the standing committees of this House. The committees of this House are its backbone and its heart. They provide Members with the opportunity to engage in detailed scrutiny of the Government's legislative and spending initiatives and are the fora for the consideration of major issues which confront the Canadian nation. Because it is in committee that Private Members can have the greatest impact on the legislative process, it is important that a government which is committed to reform is sensitive to the wishes and interests of Members when those committees are struck.

There should be no doubt in anyone's mind that this is a government that is committed to real and meaningful reform. In the Speech from the Throne it was announced that a special task force on the reform of the House of Commons would soon be established. This task force will have a mandate to investigate possible areas of reform and make recommendations to the House. Reform, however, is not achieved through mere changes to the rules of the Chamber. The most critical element of reform is a change in attitude.

If the views and needs of Canadians are to be adequately represented at the federal level, the House will have to work in a co-operative and constructive manner and to respect the traditions of this place. As well, the rights of individual Members must be restored. To that end I believe the report of the Striking Committee is a sign that the Government is prepared to work in the spirit of compromise and co-operation which will be necessary if reform is to succeed.

The report before us today departs from the recent practice of the House. The Provisional Standing Orders under which the House is now operating are the result of the deliberations of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure in the Thirty-second Parliament. That committee was of the view that the House would be better served by smaller committees. It was felt that by reducing the size of committees it would be possible to give greater opportunity to each member of a committee to participate in its deliberations. For that reason, the House decided that committees should have no more than 15 members and no fewer than 10.

• (1240)

In the last Parliament, that rule was interpreted as meaning that the majority of committees should consist of 10 members and that only those committees, such as the Committee on Agriculture, which had a particularly heavy work-load should consist of 15 members. At all times, committee membership was to reflect the standings of Parties in the House, that is to say, actual numbers in the House with respect to the ability of the Government to reflect its majority or the actual position reflected in the numbers they had in a vote of the committee.

The report that we are debating today, however, provides for 15 member committees in all but four cases. Furthermore, the report provides for Party representation in committee that varies from the ratio of representation in the House.

The proposal outlined in the Striking Committee Report provides for enlarged committees, at least in part, to ensure that they can cope with an anticipated enlarged work-load. Those committees, which deal with House matters or which are customarily chaired by opposition Members, however, are smaller but have a higher proportion of opposition Members than are represented in the House. Thus, on the Public Accounts Committee, Procedure and Organization, Management and Members' Services, and Privileges and Elections, opposition representation is set at a level of 30 per cent rather than their 24 per cent representation in the House.

By proposing the committee sizes and composition outlined in this report, the Government is agreeing to allow Members of the Official Opposition to occupy nearly 17 per cent of the positions on all House committees. Members of the New Democratic Party will occupy over 12 per cent of all positions. This proposal results in a significant under-representation of the Government on House committees, but it is a proposal which has been agreed to in the interest of ensuring the full participation of Members from all Parties on all committees.

There are other formulas that might have been used and which would have resulted in a more accurate reflection of Party standings. It would be untrue for me to suggest that those formulas had not been considered by the Government. Indeed, I continue to be concerned that the Opposition will not be able to ensure that they are fully represented on all committees at all times.

The proposal contained in the Striking Committee report sets committee sizes in such a way as to give 60 positions to the Official Opposition, to be filled by full members of committees, and an additional 60 positions to be filled by alternates. Thus, there are 120 positions to be filled by a caucus which consists of 40 Members. This problem is further exacerbated when you consider the fact that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Opposition House Leader, the Chief Opposition Whip, the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee and any opposition Member attending to duties outside of Ottawa will not be able to participate fully in committee work.

For the NDP, the Striking Committee report provides for a total of 88 positions, to be filled by a caucus consisting of 30 Members. Full participation on all committees may prove to be a daunting task to members of the Opposition. Nonetheless, the report reflects their desire to ensure that their level of membership on committees is adequate to permit them to participate fully. We respect their wishes, and that is why we made and support the proposal that is brought forward today.

In the coming weeks, Members will have the opportunity to monitor the work of committees. If modifications to the size and composition of committees are required, those changes can be made in January when the Standing Orders require the Striking Committee to meet again.

Until that time, however, it is my hope that Members from all Parties will take the opportunity to participate fully on the committees of the House and that they will do so in a co-operative and constructive manner.

I believe that on September 4 Canadians signalled that they want a real change in the institutions of this country. They want a real change in the style of government. I think that this report reflects our desire to carry out that mandate.

By agreeing today, I believe that all three Parties are taking an important step in setting aside what has been termed by some observers as a bitterness which has prevailed in this House of Commons, one that has often marked our deliberations in this House in recent years. We are in fact moving toward real reform and a real spirit of reconciliation in this most important of our national institutions.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments at this stage concerning the Striking Committee report, which I played some part in forming, along with my colleagues from the other Parties. Of course, the ideal situation would be to keep parliamentary standing committees and special committees down to a small number. There is no doubt about that. In that way, Members could concentrate on their work which sometimes becomes very specialized. They could also develop what I like to call a good working rapport with their colleagues. This is very important in committee work.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, until 1969, the committees of the House consisted of 30 or 40 Members, which meant that they were far too large and did not operate efficiently. It got to the point where the parliamentary committee system was almost a myth and of very little interest to Members.

In an attempt to enhance the role of backbenchers in the House, a new system was introduced in 1969. The membership of the committees was reduced to twenty, except for the Committees on Agriculture and External Affairs, which, if I am not mistaken, had 30 Members.

[English]

The result of these changes was that there were not enough Members to make the system work. Because of this, platooning of committees developed, thereby weakening the efficiency of Members and the effectiveness of the system. More seriously, no working rapport was developed among members because of this platooning phenomenon. It soon became quite evident to the House that we would have to change our rules again.

[Translation]

In December 1983, the Standing Orders of the House containing these changes were adopted and extended for a trial period.

Hon. Members will recall that the provisional changes were extended for a period of 120 days after the adjournment of the 32nd Session of Parliament—the former Parliament—120 days starting September 4, counting only days on which the House is sitting, which means that our present Standing Orders will be governing the proceedings of the House from now until the end of June 1985.

[English]

The present rules were adopted to allow for flexibility. That is the reason for Standing Order 69(1)—and this was referred to by the House Leader—which states this:

Striking Committee Report

—standing committees of the House . . . shall consist of not less than 10 and not more than 15 Members:

The flexibility, of course, recognizes that elections sometimes result in varying changes. The composition of the House does vary from election to election. While committee memberships must reflect the composition of the House of Commons, I believe all Members will agree that the job of the Official Opposition cannot really be carried out if it has only one person on a ten-member committee.

I would like to point out that the Official Opposition in committees traditionally leads off the questioning of witnesses. It must be able, therefore, to present in an effective and efficient manner the views of the Official Opposition. It is not a position that I take lightly. I hold the view also that the official role of the Official Opposition cannot be fully carried out with a single Member.

People do have conflicting demands on their time. Committees do sit when this House is in session. Sometimes a Member who wants to speak on a particular legislative measure before the House is called upon also to sit in a committee and to do his work as a serious committee member and member of that team. More important, I am pre-occupied with ensuring a high degree of continuity in our committees. One person acting can hardly be expected to carry the burden of presenting the views of the Official Opposition.

I believe that there is a significant, meaningful and constructive role to be played in committees and I also believe that the minimum requirements of human resources demand that Members be accompanied by one of their own Party members and that two substitutes be made available. The Striking Committee has seen the wisdom of providing for these two members of the Official Opposition. I am hopeful that it will be effective and constructive.

Finally, I would like to remind Hon. Members that in this Thirty-third Parliament, the Government was elected by a population of which 50 per cent of the voters cast their ballot in support of this Government. The Government received 75 per cent of the seats with 50 per cent of the popular vote. In other words, as was alluded to by the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the Opposition will have less than a third of the members of the standing committees while at the same time representing more than 50 per cent of the Canadian population. I take it that that argument alone would bear some weight with the House Leaders and that they would keep it in mind when allowing the committees to set their own rules. They must also be able to work effectively in representing all of Canada and work for those who voted for them, whether they happen by chance to have control of 75 per cent of the House or, in certain cases, less than that.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. As you now know, Mr. Speaker, the committee worked magnificently together. Co-operation was the key word. The flexibility of the Government is clearly exemplified by the document that is before us if you are to believe the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and of course I do. I simply want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if the House continues in the traditions established by the Striking Committee, there will be no discord and there will be absolutely no disagreement. It will come to a satisfactory compromise on all matters. However, I suspect that that will not be the case.

I found it interesting to note that while the Government House Leader was describing the balance of the seats in the House of Commons as being 211 government Members to 70 opposition Members, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) said that 30 New Democrats are as good as 211 Tories any day. He is right.

An Hon. Member: Better than 40 Liberals anyhow.

Mr. Deans: It is better than 40 Liberals as well.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are a legend in your own mind.

Mr. Deans: At least I have a mind in which to be a legend, right?

I think the argument over the numbers of votes cast in the last election and the percentage of seats in the House of Commons probably has some validity. I think that at some point in time, we may well change the method of representation in the House of Commons to reflect more adequately the percentages of the votes obtained by each of the political Parties involved in the electoral process. This is not something that is foreign to us. In fact, we have suggested from time to time that such adjustments could and should be looked at. They should be analysed and debated, and perhaps that is the reason for the creation of yet another committee of the House of Commons which would put to work those other people who do not have jobs.

I believe that the report of the Striking Committee, of which I was a member, is a good report. It reflects the requirements both of the Opposition and of the Government. The role of the Opposition, whether Official or otherwise, is a difficult role, and I will remember that when the Liberals come third. I will make sure that they will be given a suitable number of members on the various committees. I do think, however, that the role of the Opposition in a Parliament in which the Government has such overwhelming support is an even more difficult role. The role of the Opposition at this point in time has been made more difficult by the unbalanced nature of the Parliament of Canada.

Earlier on, one government Member said something about the role the Opposition must play. I hope that government Members will always bear in mind the role that they played when they were in Opposition. They were not always as constructive as one might have hoped. They were led ably by the now Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). At some point in time, Mr. Speaker, I might be moved to inquire exactly what it is he does for the money he receives.

An Hon. Member: When he is not here.

Mr. Deans: No, when he is here. I may be one of the few people in this place who is not afraid of him.

I hope the committees work well. I am sure they will. I think that the added numbers of opposition Members and the larger numbers on the committee will make sense. The committee that decided on the numbers of 10 and 15 took into account that there would be changes to the composition of the House of Commons. It took into account the fact that as the numbers were struck, they should reflect the balance of the seats in the House. It was difficult to come up with a reasonable balance which would afford both the Government adequate representation and the Opposition an adequate opportunity to participate.

The Government House Leader, in suggesting that we go to 15 members from 10 for all of the normal standing committees, showed a flexibility and understanding which I would have expected from him. I therefore believe that the committees will work well. I believe that having four combined opposition members will permit the Opposition to operate effectively in terms of its analysis of the Government's legislative programs and, equally important, its analysis of the Government's expenditure programs. That is in fact the role the Opposition must play.

I am quite happy with the report. If it is a forerunner of the kind of co-operation we can expect in the future, then I think it will serve the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada well. If, with that kind of co-operation in mind, the Government should decide to make known to the Opposition the analyses of the Treasury Department regarding the numbers of jobs that will be lost, then I think that that would be going even a little further with that kind of co-operation than it has presently gone and it would be welcome.

Mr. McGrath (St. James East): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes we have left, I would like to ask a question of the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn). One of the weaknesses of the system now which has been addressed by a recommendation of the last Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure is that standing committees are not self-starting. We saw evidence of that in the last session of the last Parliament. I had direct experience with one standing committee, the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. Notwithstanding the important issues of the day, that committee did not get under way until about three months after the commencement of the last session, much to the frustration of Members of the House who wished to address the important issues of the day to be dealt with by that committee.

In view of the fact that this problem is not addressed in the current Provisional Standing Orders, I would ask the Government House Leader whether it is the intention of the Government, which now has the required responsibility and initiative, to proceed with the organization of these committees soon so that they can get their important work under way?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), for asking that important question. I believe it reflects our desire to ensure the full participation of Members. I can only say to him that it is our intention to move immediately with the organization of committees, particularly in light of the fact that this Parliament commenced on November 5 and, under the Provisional Standing Orders, we are obliged to report Supplementary Estimates by December 10. I was happy to see a consensus with respect to the composition of the committees at an early date. This will therefore allow us to organize those committees and give the maximum time available to private Members of the House of Commons to examine those Supplementary Estimates before the date of supply which, in this trimester, is December 10.

Motion agreed to.

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Allmand (p. 252).

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, the House shall stand adjourned until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign the Conservatives promised a better future but gave very few specifics. They appealed to the people that change was needed to bring in fresh ideas. Change was the key word. Canadians awaited the Throne Speech with great curiosity and anticipation. What are the changes? What are the fresh ideas?

Some people heard the Throne Speech, others relied on the media to find out about it. Was it startling? Was it exciting? Was it interesting? Was it full of changes and filled with new ideas? Indeed, were there any new ideas? Can anyone remember what was said? I would say that the Throne Speech was one of the most forgettable speeches that I can possibly remember except that that would not be correct because one cannot remember a forgettable speech. I must say that the Throne Speech is the most forgettable on record. In fact, the only hope it has of being remembered is that it has been hailed as such an outstanding failure.

I refer to the writings of Barbara Amiel in The Toronto Sun of November 6. She wrote this about the Throne Speech:

> Throne Speeches are by their nature vague. This was breathtaking in its vacuity. When it was specific, it was silly. Brian Mulroney couldn't have crammed one more pretentious cliché into his Throne Speech if he tried.

The article continued:

What kind of fools does he take us all for? For thirty-three minutes his Throne Speech rolled out every tired, shopworn idea as if you, the people of this country, were a passel of idiots, unable to face reality . . . We must all hope that the men around Mulroney are better than Mulroney's ideas appear to be.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would remind the Hon. Member, when he is talking about other Hon. Members, to refer to them by their titles and not by their names.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, that was from a quotation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That does not matter.

Mr. de Corneille: Why is the judgment that has been passed on the Throne Speech so severe? After all, it is true that we have come to expect Throne Speeches to be general in nature, and this one certainly was general. But by tradition, as well as by common sense, it is required that the Government announce in the Throne Speech an outline of the policies and legislation which the Government will bring forward in the next lengthy session of Parliament. That is why the speech is read at the opening of Parliament. It is to give us a blueprint for the future. It is so important that the Members of the Senate and the House of Commons await its words with great anticipation. The media gives it national television coverage so that people can hear what the Government is proposing for the years ahead.

Of course, it is true that the Conservatives promised heaven on earth to the electorate during the election campaign but offered few specifics. So, in one way, the Throne Speech could not pick up specific policies from the election campaign. The Tories could not give us anything from the election campaign, but the Throne Speech was the time to reveal to the people and to the House of Commons what the future legislative program held in store.

If the Government actually had a program, we must conclude that it deliberately hid it from the scrutiny of the Opposition, from the media and from Canadian people; in which case it was deceptive and secretive. On the other hand, if the government really has no program, it confirms what many suspected about the Conservatives but could not prove during the election campaign. In any case, we are all at sea on a ship of fools. Either way, the prospects are less than ideal.

One would have thought that the Tories would have realized the great possibilities and opportunities of the moment. Here is a Party which was swept into power on the basis of a mandate for change. What a golden opportunity the moment presented. The Throne Speech could have placed before Canadian people the real issues and problems that beset us and this planet as we move toward the 21st century. The speech could have suggested the goals and the agenda for the next four years. It could have given us a vision of the future. Here was a chance worthy of this nation to explain what were the dangers, challenges, opportunities and directions of the future that it would choose. Instead, it was a myopic speech—a narcissistic speech. It was a speech that was intended to anaesthetize us so as to make us feel good.

The Speech from the Throne was out of touch with the real world. It did not tell us about the real problems and challenges we face, and for that reason it never came to grips with how the Government would deal with them. For example, where did the speech tell us that long before we reach the 21st century we will have already been swept up in a technological revolution of computerization and robotry which will require an entirely different orientation and adaptation? Where did the speech tell us that we will need a very highly educated population; that we will require new definitions of work, work time and work place; that there will be new experiments, models and programs for work-sharing and profit-sharing, and for leisure and productivity? Why did the Government not tell us honestly that the middle class will be eroded as more and more people will be dragged down from white and blue collar jobs into lower paying occupations? What does this Conservative Government have to say about how it will prevent this erosion of the middle class?

In the face of technological change, what does the Government have to say about the large number of experienced, valuable and talented people over 50 who will be laid off, or to our young people about ways to prepare themselves for this new age? What did the speech tell us about the world food and agricultural crisis? Did it remind us that we in Canada are using up our precious resources of soil and water at so frighteningly rapid a rate that unless we act, in 25 years we may be unable to export food because we will be barely able to feed ourselves? What did the speech say about the ravages of acid rain? What did it have to say about lead, poisons and pesticides in our soil, air and water? What did it have to say about the massive problems we have in Canada and throughout the world?

The Speech from the Throne could have given a keynote to the people and told us how Canada was going to mobilize in the face of these challenges. It could have put the truth before us about the tragic hunger and destitution of Third World nations. It could have spoken about the devastation suffered by their economies, caused in part by high interest rates in the U.S. and in part by the unwillingness of the Americans to enter into a North-South dialogue. The speech could have told us what we thought about that. It could have told us the truth about the hunger, disease and poverty that stalks most of humanity. It could have given us specific goals in legislation which the Government had to propose.

Nothing was said, Mr. Speaker, about the tragic famine in Ethiopia. Never mind about the ravages of hunger afflicting the entire continent of Africa. All of this incredible suffering did not merit a sympathetic reference other than "continuing need for developmental assistance", and "cost effective and valuable humanitarian work done by our voluntary and non-governmental organizations". No program, no plans, no solutions, no action mentioned. Just a cynical, cruel, uncaring, passive, laissez-faire Tory attitude which does not want to talk about the real problems because it wants us to feel good. It was only after media coverage of the Ethiopian disaster during the last weeks and months, and an explosion of public furore when the truth was brought before us, not by the Throne Speech but by the media, that the Government finally recognized that there are real problems which must be addressed. I am happy to see that today some positive action is being taken.

What of nuclear war, Mr. Speaker? Oh, the speech did make references to nuclear war, several times. But it did not deal with the magnitude, nor the gravity or urgency of the problem. It did not specify what action Parliament would be asked to undertake, either by way of moral or political action. It did not give us a policy direction on a nuclear freeze, on suffocation, on arms reduction or initiatives for inspection, or on diplomacy. To do that would have broken the spell that the mood manipulators over there want to create. They do not want problems and issues to be mentioned, they just want us to feel good.

I could cite many more such major global problems. Canada, the second largest nation on earth, a strategic continental nation facing three oceans, the Pacific, the Arctic and the Atlantic, has reason to be concerned about such global problems. It is because this Government wants to continue to manipulate our minds with images rather than facts, because it wants us all to feel good in a Tory world, that it did not want the Throne Speech to talk about such disturbing and touchy issues as our ecology, our survival on this planet, the economic problems of the Third World, and the impact of the technological revolution on our older people, our younger people and our national independence. We should not be surprised that the Throne Speech skirted all of these problems and issues which are most important to Canada and to this House of Commons.

Here was a moment in history that was lost. It was a cowardly, evasive and empty speech when humanity was crying out for greatness. It was a damnable betrayal of the weak and despondent of this world who are listening and waiting for just an inkling of understanding, a ray of compassion, a word of hope. It was not a speech worthy to be delivered from the throne of a sovereign who reigns over a commonwealth that spans the world and comprises hundreds of millions of people. It was, rather, a speech from a small-minded, mean and self-centred leadership that would not recognize greatness if it fell into it. The speech was not a bang, it was a whimper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments on the Hon. Member's speech?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, while not subscribing to all the rhetoric the Hon. Member used, I certainly share some of his concerns about things that were missing in the Throne Speech. However, I do get by implication the feeling that the Government of which the Hon. Member was a supporter prior to September 4 was apparently meeting and responding to many of these challenges which he feels the new Government is not doing. That does not correspond with all of my recollection of facts. Can the Hon. Member comment on the failure of the Trudeau Cabinet and Turner Cabinet to respond to the urgent entreaties of the then Minister of Agriculture, who had visited Ethiopia and, in his role as President of the World Food Council, knew what was happening months before the Ethiopian famine situation came to the attention of the world through the media in the last few weeks?

In addition, the Hon. Member indicates, rightly, the failure of this Government to respond to the need for a nuclear freeze and for Canada to take a lead in getting the nations of the world to agree to a cessation of the build-up of nuclear weapons, both in the East and the West. He seems to imply that that was a policy of the former government, and that is distinctly in contradiction with my recollection. In fact, I seem to recall that even though the wife of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) indicated her support for that particular proposal, and even though the President of the Liberal Party of Canada indicated her support as well, even though we were told from his bed and his pillow that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) favoured that particular proposal, it never became his policy while he was Prime Minister of Canada.

I would just like the Hon. Member to comment perhaps on those points because it seems to me that his recollection is perfectly at odds with the policies that were adopted by his Party when it was in power. In fact, I think most of the Hon. Member's comments with respect to the new Government would have applied equally cogently to the old government.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the observations of my colleague. His comments, it seems to me, were addressed really to the past and to what happened before.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: What did not happen before! Nothing.

An Hon. Member: Abandon the record.

Mr. de Corneille: Well, I would be pleased to run on that record.

Mr. Dick: You did.

Mr. Benjamin: You did and look what happened.

Mr. de Corneille: That is why I am here, that is right, and I am glad that I am here in fact to give witness to those same concerns that were expressed in the House. The concerns about nuclear war, for example, and the efforts made by the previous Prime Minister in this respect have certainly set an example for the world. This country's example concerning the famine in Ethiopia, as witnessed by the Right Hon. Member today, and Canada's record over the past year and years, is the finest in the world. I really do not think I am going to apologize for that.

What I was addressing myself to, Mr. Speaker, was the fact that here was a great opportunity. We are supposed to have a change, we are supposed now to be looking forward to the future, to the 21st century. A vast mandate was given to that Party, and I am simply expressing my grave amazement and disappointment that this opportunity to have provided the Canadian people with an understanding of the real issues was lost. I suggest to my hon. colleague that those are the major world issues. I am simply asking what was mentioned about it, what kind of programs were put forward and what kind of attention was given to these world issues which concern Canada as a nation, which holds a strategic continental position and to which the Third World looks with such hope and longing. What kind of example was this country being given? What kind of hope were we being given that we could have and could play a role in terms of saving our ecology and that of the rest of the world? What about the issue of human suffering throughout the world? What about the issues of nuclear arms and disarmament in general?

● (1420)

To answer my colleague, I was not proposing the answers. It is up to the Government, which asked for a mandate from the people, to put forward its program to us. I look forward to seeing what that will be. I hope it will be more concrete than this Throne Speech.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. friend from Eglinton-Lawrence whether he thinks the statement made this afternoon by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is also what he refers to as "mood setting". And the aid Canada is going to give Ethiopia, is that "mood setting", and nothing else, on the part of this Government?

I also like to ask him whether increasing veterans' allowances is "mood setting".

[English]

Is the bridging pension for widows and widowers also only mood setting by the Government? Are the $1 billion for job creation and the additional millions of dollars for Canada Works projects for this winter also mood setting? Are the 34,000 jobs which have been created since September also mood setting by the Government? Is the appointment of Stephen Lewis as ambassador to the United Nations mood setting? It is mood setting of the kind that the Liberal Government never had the courage to do. The appointment of the Hon. Doug Roche as ambassador for disarmament is also mood setting of a kind which the Liberal Government never had the courage to do. I could go on and on. Would the Hon. Member please tell me whether all of these things were only simple mood setting?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member is new to the House and to the affairs of the nation. Otherwise she would know that disarmament ambassadors have existed before. She would also know that many of the measures that she is talking about are simply the refurbishing and shuffling around of figures.

When one wants to find out what is being done in terms of the employment situation in the country, one need only look at the 50,000 jobs that the Government actually eliminated when it finally got around to making its announcements. It was unwilling to explain to the House what the implications would be.

I think the Hon. Member should remember that there are all kinds of examples which one could have talked about. I am certainly happy to see that something was announced with regard to what would be done about the veterans. I look forward to seeing just precisely what that is, because I was the Parliamentary Secretary for Veterans Affairs and watched step after step of positive legislation which was introduced in the House, partly through the efforts and encouragement of the Hon. Stanley Knowles who was then a Member of this House. He encouraged the Government and others in the House. We did make progress, so I am happy to see that take place.

I am happy to see things done with regard to the spousal allowance, but obviously the Hon. Member does not remember where all these programs began. She does not remember how they were originally put in force. The concern for child care, the pension plans, the GIS and the spousal allowance were certainly all instruments of the Liberal Government. Therefore, I think if the Hon. Member were to go back and look at the record, her questions to me would be phrased differently.

We should consider the example of Canada student loans. When the Government finally took a step to come out with something precise, the result was that $5 million was taken away from the Canada Student Loans Program. It is not even as though the Government were going to give it away. The Government was going to lend the money to the kids so that they would be able to work. This was done after the Hon. Bette Stephenson told us in April of 1983 that the amount of Government spending on student loans should be increased. That is found in her communiqué from her council of Ministers of Education on April 25, 1983.

I am concerned whether our vision is going to be big enough or whether, instead, we are going to be mean, narcissistic and inward looking.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to many of the speeches which have been given in the House. Could the Hon. Member indicate how long he thinks a Throne Speech should be? If I added up all the things that various Members think should have been in it, I think we would have been sitting here into the second day listening to the Governor General read the Throne Speech.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House are not concerned with length as much as with quality. There were several dozen references to dialogue, communication, understanding and discussion; but with regard to hard concrete understanding of where the Government is going, we are as clueless now as we were before the Throne Speech was made.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time allocated for the question and comment period now being over, we shall resume debate with the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise).

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that the New Democratic Party missed its opportunity to speak in the usual round of debate this time. The Member was present, rose, but was not recognized. I would urge that the New Democratic Party be recognized at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will tell the Hon. Member that the Chair always does its utmost to be fair to all political Parties and that the order of speakers in the House is not open to dispute. I will advise the Hon. Member, however, that the representative of his Party will be the next speaker following the Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say what a great privilege and pleasure it is for me to have the opportunity to participate in the debate on the Speech from the Throne. I would like to utilize this early opportunity to join with all of the previous speakers and all of the Members in the House in extending my sincere thanks and congratulations to the Speaker and to yourself, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I know that these are very difficult jobs. Certainly if the past few days are any indication of the future, and I am sure they are, I want to congratulate you both on doing an excellent job.

I would like to congratulate all of my colleagues on both sides of the House. I would like to congratulate those Members who have been my colleagues in the past and who have sat in the House of Commons over the years, some longer than others. I want to extend a special word of congratulations to the newly elected Members of Parliament. I think they are in for an experience of a lifetime. I am sure that they will enjoy their stay here and I certainly wish them well.

I would like to indicate as well my intentions of personal co-operation and support to all Members of the House. Once again I am not just speaking to my colleagues on this side of the House, but to my colleagues in the other two Parties as well. If they have carefully read all of the mail which they have received up to this point in time, they will note that I am not only extending a verbal commitment to work co-operatively in the interests of the agricultural industry across the country, but I have also put that commitment in writing to them. I have also undertaken to put that commitment to you in writing. In addition, we are in the process of circulating to all Members of the House a notice indicating whom they might contact within my ministerial office, both on the exempt side and the ministerial side, in an effort to speed up their inquiries. I want the record to show that I have taken that step.

This is not my maiden speech in the House of Commons, nor is it my maiden speech as the Minister of Agriculture, because I had the good fortune to occupy the portfolio of Minister of Agriculture during a very brief time in 1979.

However, I hope you will allow me to take this opportunity to say a few words in that regard. I am entering my thirteenth year in the House of Commons. I have spent some 24 years in public office, the first 12 being in various elected capacities in my community, the constituency of Elgin. I want to take this opportunity to extend to the people of Elgin my sincere thanks and gratitude for the tremendous degree of support I have had from the great people of the City of St. Thomas and the people of Elgin during the past twenty-four years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne has pointed out many challenges that we will face in this session of Parliament. In particular, it has focused on the tasks that lie ahead for a national reconciliation, economic renewal and social justice.

I would like to speak briefly today about what those challenges and those directions mean for the agri-food industry in this country. I know that Members of the House appreciate the important role that the agri-food sector plays in the economy and in the traditions and social fabric of our nation. We are talking about an industry that generates one-sixth of all economic activity in Canada, an industry that is a key to the further economic development of every region of this country. It is an industry with retail sales of nearly $60 billion, an industry that exported about $10 billion worth of products and generated a trade surplus of about $4.3 billion in 1983.

It is an industry that directly employs some 1.4 million Canadians and accounts for almost three million jobs, if one counts all the services used by primary producers and all the services used by processors, distributors, and indeed retailers from coast to coast.

Food has always been so plentiful and cheap in this country that many Canadians overlook the fact that our agri-food industry is a big business. Many people are not aware of the fact that it is a big business that, I regret to say, faces some very big and serious problems. These problems include low and declining farm incomes, stiff competition in export markets, and soil degradation.

No one can deny that the industry has problems that must be resolved, but the industry also has opportunities for growth. Our Government is pledging to revitalize and strengthen the agri-food sector so that those opportunities are not lost to Canadians.

We have already taken the first necessary steps in that direction. Last week the economic and fiscal statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) included a number of initiatives that will benefit farmers. They will benefit food processors and agri-food businesses across the country. First among these improvements is the three cent per litre fuel tax rebate for gasoline and diesel fuels purchased for off the highway use. This decision will be a big help in bringing down production costs, improving farm returns and keeping the Canadian food and agriculture products competitive on the world markets. I might say that as a result of the decision of the Minister of Finance, we are essentially delivering approximately $100 million into the hands of Canadian food producers.

The fuel tax rebate, which is roughly equal to the federal tax on these fuels, will go into effect as of December 1, 1984, until the beginning of 1987. In addition, farmers, along with their counterparts in fishing, forestry and mining, will receive rebates of about 1.8 cents per litre to offset the announced increases in the petroleum compensation charge.

Another important decision announced in the economic statement is the referral of the agricultural taxation issue to a parliamentary committee. These issues include agri-bonds, taxation difficulties of part-time farmers—that is, Section 31—and capital gains tax on farm lands. The early consideration of these issues by Parliament will permit us to act on these matters before the next fiscal year.

Perhaps even more important to the agri-food industry than these specific initiatives is the over-all thrust set out by the Minister of Finance last week. This Government is acting to address the fundamental concerns of Canadians about the state of the economy. We are acting to improve fiscal management. We are acting to reduce the deficit and to restore investor confidence. These measures are profoundly important in removing the obstacles to growth in our agri-food industry as in other sectors of our economy.

Some difficult decisions have been necessary in order to reduce expenditures and increase government revenues. Agricultural programs have been among those that have been reduced, postponed or curtailed. These decisions are not made without pain. However, I believe that the program changes announced last week will not have a severe and long lasting impact on the agri-food producers of this country.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) salary has been reduced by 15 per cent. My salary and that of my Cabinet colleagues has been reduced by 10 per cent and my Department's budget has been reduced by 2 per cent. Including increases in fees for agricultural services, Agriculture Canada's total contribution to the $4.2 billion package announced by the Minister of Finance will be little more than $60 million in 1985-86.

I readily admit that it was hard to come up with that money from an already tight budget for agriculture. However, Government expenditures must be reduced. We cannot back away from that necessity and that commitment. Canadians cannot afford the debt burden that the previous government has imposed on them. Obviously the agriculture and food sector must share in the pain in lowering that deficit. Obviously our agri-food sector will share in the benefits of the revitalized economy that will result from the Government's effort to put our financial house back in order.

The largest item on Agriculture Canada's list is the increased fees for departmental service. Over the last few years, fees for agricultural services have not kept pace with the increased costs of providing these services. My departmental officials have reviewed current fee schedules and they have applied the principle that those who receive a specific benefit from government services, a specific benefit that has a market value, should pay at least part of the costs of providing that benefit.

As a result of this review, we will be increasing existing fees for a number of departmental services. In some cases we will be introducing fees for services that were previously offered free of charge. We will be discussing these changes with affected client groups in the very near future.

While I am anxious to confer with the industry associations before new fee schedules go into effect on April 1, I must point out that my Department is committed to collecting an additional $33 million next year in fees for service.

• (1440)

Two agricultural capital projects are being deferred at this time. These are the animal drug testing laboratory planned for Trois Rivieres and the regional plant health laboratory planned for Victoriaville, Quebec. These projects have not been cancelled, but are now on hold pending further review and the availability of additional capital funds.

There are two reductions in the dairy program, the elimination of the Canadian Dairy Commission's research program and a 50 per cent cut in the special export subsidy program. The Canadian Dairy Commission's research program has been successful in building up the capacity for dairy processing research in many parts of the country, and I believe that the industry is now in a better position to carry on much of this research at its own expense. I hasten to add that Agriculture Canada's Research Branch will continue its dairy research program. The Department spends about $6 million annually on dairy research. Over time, the special export subsidy program has become less financially attractive for industrial milk producers and I believe they have not received the full benefits from this program in recent times, particularly during the time in which that program was started. I know a fair amount about that program, Mr. Speaker, because we initiated it when we were in government in 1979.

Canagrex and the Commission of Inquiry into Marketing Practices for the Potato Industry in eastern Canada are both being wound up. Existing trade promotion activities within Agriculture Canada will be strengthened in order to further enhance agri-food exports. Submissions concerning the potato marketing situation in eastern Canada will be received by the National Farm Products Marketing Council. It will review these submissions received by the Carter Commission and up-date them with its own studies. I will then consult to see what future course of action I should take. I should consult with my provincial counterparts and also with people in the industry.

The Department will be reducing its salary and operating expenditures in a number of areas where greater economy is possible. In addition, there will be cuts in research grants and contracted-out research and in grants and contributions in areas such as livestock improvement.

As I said at the outset, these changes are not done without pain. But I believe they are necessary in streamlining and rationalizing government operations. I will be consulting with the provinces and the private sector over the coming months to determine which other program areas can be changed to provide greater support and assistance to the agri-food industry at less cost to the taxpayer. I expect to be issuing at least one discussion paper on agricultural issues to help focus these consultations.

The Speech from the Throne underlined the need for a sustained, co-operative and national effort to achieve Canada's economic potential. In this regard, I am fully committed to working with all of my provincial counterparts on ways to overcome problems facing the agri-food sector.

One of my first priorities after being sworn in as Minister of Agriculture was to begin rebuilding constructive working relationships with the provinces on agricultural matters. I have met individually with most of my provincial colleagues as well as meeting with them as a group. We have had fruitful discussions about our mutual concerns and about how to work in greater harmony in the best interests of agricultural producers.

Without a doubt, the problem of farm financing is the biggest obstacle facing the agriculture sector today. Interest payments now constitute the largest single expense for the majority of Canadian farmers. And, unfortunately, a significant number of farmers are having difficulty making those payments.

Last week, I met with provincial Ministers of Agriculture to discuss what can and must be done to meet the unique and serious credit problems in Canadian agriculture. I will soon be seeking the support of my Cabinet colleagues for measures to alleviate some of those problems.

In the meantime, I have instructed the Farm Credit Corporation to suspend loan foreclosures until early next year.

Another top priority which I have been discussing with my provincial counterparts is the establishment of a voluntary stabilization plan for red meat producers. This program would involve contributions by the federal and provincial governments as well as producers. It will require amendments to the Agricultural Stabilization Act. I hope to place those amendments before the House in the very near future.

Another urgent piece of agricultural legislation has already been introduced. The proposed amendment to the national Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act will permit tobacco growers to explore the possibility of forming a national tobacco marketing agency. This amendment has been requested by tobacco growers who have recently suffered from higher input costs, lower prices and declining markets and decreased acreage.

Members of this House will also be asked to consider legislation this session to increase the maximum level of payments under the Advance Payments for Crops Act. This change will bring advance payments for commodities covered by this legislation into line with the cash advances that are available for grain production in western Canada.

The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and I announced last week that prairie grain farmers will receive a final payment of $123 million under the Western Grain Stabilization Plan for 1983-84. The cheques will be in the mail next week. Considering the smaller grain harvest that resulted from this summer's drought in many parts of the West, it appears likely that a significant pay-out will be triggered under the Western Grain Stabilization Plan in 1984-85 as well. A further amendment to the Western Grain Stabilization Act will be necessary if we want to make an interim payment to producers rather than have them wait until next November to receive another payment.

There will be minor changes to some of our regulatory Acts, as well, but I believe I have outlined the major agricultural legislation and some of the problems that we will be considering over the next few weeks and months.

This Government understands the diversity and importance of the agriculture and food industry. We will work with members of the industry and with the provinces to stimulate and strengthen agriculture's contribution to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) rising to ask a question?

Mr. Manly: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the Minister for his speech. I am concerned about his position as head of the Department of Agriculture. The Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) reports to him but he does not have a separate department. During the election campaign, the Conservative Party and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recognized in a major way the importance of the forest industry. In a speech on July 20 the present Prime Minister told the Canadian Club in Vancouver:

> A Progressive Conservative government will launch a massive co-operative effort to save this vital element of our national heritage and national economy.

To date we have seen absolutely no evidence of any such massive program in forestry. There is practically no mention of forestry whatsoever in the Throne Speech.

In the last few weeks, a five-year $300 million fifty-fifty forestry agreement was negotiated between the federal government and the provincial government. I understand the provincial government has now accepted that, but the federal Government is now stalling. According to an October 29 press release, the Minister of State for Forestry said that the funding level could change. He said that a lot would hinge on how much we could afford to flow through in the first year. During the election campaign, the Government recognized the growing deficit in our forest supply. This deficit is very important. Now it is only concerned about the financial deficit, while the deficit in timber supply threatens Canada's economy in coming years. Something has to be done about it, and the Government is not acting.

• (1450)

How long will Canada's number one industry, forestry, remain a poor cousin of the Department of Agriculture? Will the Minister ensure that while it is under his jurisdiction there will be adequate funds so that agreements such as the federal-provincial agreement in British Columbia and in other provinces can go ahead and not be starved for funding?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made an excellent speech or an excellent pitch for the importance of the forest industry in the country. I certainly agree and share most of those concerns. Let me tell the Hon. Member that he can relax because the Government is fully committed to supporting our resource industries.

The Hon. Member referred to the lack of mention of forestry in the Throne Speech. I think we all know which direction the Throne Speech took. It was not a shopping list approach. Rather, it gave some priorities. It gave Canadians some clear indications as to the direction in which we wanted to take the country. I took a great deal of satisfaction from reading in the Throne Speech that a great deal of emphasis by the Government would be placed upon strengthening and revitalizing our natural resource industry—forestry, agriculture, fishery and mining. There was a strong message to the agricultural, mining, fishing and forestry industries—and I know the Hon. Member is extremely interested in the forestry—that those industries are held in high priority.

I am not sure from what the Hon. Member was quoting when he referred to a separate department for forestry. However, one must recognize that we have a financial problem. Perhaps it might take us a little longer to achieve our long-term goals. However, as Minister of Agriculture I was quite happy to see the Ministry of State for Forestry coming over to our Department. I feel very comfortable having that Ministry associated with my Department. I place a great deal of priority on ensuring that the Ministry receives its fair share.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a few points to the Minister. First, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) on his appointment to Cabinet. Also through him I congratulate his colleague from New Brunswick on his appointment as Minister of State for Forestry.

The previous questioner rose in his place to tell the Minister that he was concerned as are many Members of the House and Canadians across the country, with simply appointing a gentleman to be Minister of State for Forestry. As well intentioned and as knowledgeable as that gentleman may be, that will not come to grips with the current crisis besetting the Canadian forestry industry.

The fact of the matter is that we are losing 500,000 hectares of forest land per year, which is more than is being replanted by forestry companies or by the efforts of federal-provincial management plans. That is just in the commercial cutting exercise. In a year like 1981 when there were forest fires and the blight of spruce budworm, et cetera, the number can rise as high as a million hectares per year. Every study which has been conducted, be it by industry, environmental groups, the Canadian Forestry Service or the Government itself—and this was highlighted in three prime time half-hour documentaries in the last three weeks on CBC alone—indicates that we have to double the amount of land we are planting if we are not to be left behind in 20 years to 40 years in what is Canada's single largest industry. The said fact is that most Canadians do not realize that the forestry sector contributes more to the balance of payments of this country than oil and gas, agriculture, for which the Minister is responsible, mining and fishery combined.

I applaud the Government for naming the Minister. But where is the Deputy Minister? Where is the Department? All we have now is a division of the Department of Agriculture. Where is the legislation setting up the Forestry Department? Where are the dollars and cents to address a problem which is in a stage of crisis now? I would appreciate hearing the Minister's comments.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised at the enthusiasm or the lack of it—and I am not so sure which—on the part of the Hon. Member. He should take a great deal of satisfaction from the formation of a new Department because it makes a tremendous contribution to the state of the general economy within Canada and on the export market. There are some serious problems facing our forestry industry. We recognize the potential and the problems of that industry, and we have done something about them.

Mr. Tobin: What?

Mr. Wise: The previous government ignored it and would continue to do so. Today we have a Minister.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is the time for questions and comments. Whether or not the burden has overwhelmed him, he is the Minister and they are the Government. Let us cut the rhetoric. It is cheap. Let us talk about what he will do.

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member is living in fairyland. We want to do something about the future. We just cannot simply forget the past. As I indicated before, we as a government recognize the importance and potential of forestry, and we are doing something about it.

Mr. Tobin: When will you bring in legislation?

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member's government did not have a ministry of forestry or a minister of state for forestry. It did not have a deputy minister, an assistant deputy minister or a director general. Today, as a result of the decision of Canadians on September 4, the forestry industry has been recognized by the Government. As a result of the Government and its decision, the forestry industry has a higher priority. It is recognized. We are in a position to do something about it. In fact, it has a Minister of State for Forestry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and comments is now over. We shall resume debate with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this Throne Speech debate. Of course it has primarily become a debate around the Government's economic statement. That is quite natural because as soon as the debate on the Throne Speech debate began, the economic statement was brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

What needs to be said is that the promises of the Government to the people during the election campaign have not been lived up to in its performance. The Conservatives in office are a much harsher and meaner group than they were in the election campaign. In the election they promised jobs, they promised employment. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that there would be tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of jobs created overnight if his government were elected. They held out the promise of ecomonic renewal and a hope for a better future to all Canadians. They said they could reduce the deficit by cutting out waste rather than cutting out needed programs. They said that they would be compassionate. Now that they are in office, the first thing they do is to question the universality of social programs.

They continue to say that day by day in this House when they are questioned about where those jobs are. The economic statement that they introduced really focuses upon the deficit. If they had said during the election campaign what they were going to do and had Canadians known what they were going to do thus far as a government, there is very little doubt in my mind that they would not have been elected to govern. They certainly would not have the number of members they have in the House today. They misled, whether deliberately or unconsciously, the Canadian people.

Their economic policy focuses upon the deficit. All of us in this House and all Canadians are concerned about public expenditures. When a government follows the simplistic formula, that reducing public expenditure leads to deficit reduction and in turn to increased employment, we are in trouble. There is much in the experience of this country that tells us that that sort of approach to economics, public expenditures and job creation leaves much to be desired. It deserves to be questioned.

A study by the Department of Finance, which the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have refused to make public, questions the efficacy of this economic policy. It questions whether the economic policy which the Government has adopted will in effect create jobs. That economic analysis which the Government refuses to make public states that their economic policy will lead to job losses. Rather than having increased employment and fulfilling the hopes of people, the hopes of people will actually be shattered. There will be more people unemployed as a result of the economic policy that this Government is pursuing.

It increases the cynicism in the public when the Government refuses to make available hard data about its economic policy. This Government promised to be open. It is fair and reasonable to measure a government's performance on the basis of the criteria that it established for its own performance. They said that it is important for a government to be open, important for the democratic process for information to be shared. However, when it comes to a piece of information that would be valuable for the present debate, and it is an important debate, this Government simply refuses to make that information available. They are a closed government. They are stonewalling us. That is completely contrary to the image that they projected to the Canadian people during the election campaign.

We have a good notion about what the secret studies say about their economic policy. A private agency has also analysed the impact of their economic policy. This organization, Informetrica Limited, has come to the conclusion that the economic statement which the Government brought down will cost the economy 50,000 jobs next year. Rather than the creation of tens of thousands of jobs overnight, we will have the loss of 50,000 jobs as a result of the actions of this Government.

There are other reasons to question seriously the economic approach of this Government, the simplistic notion that if you cut public expenditures, deficits will fall and employment will rise. All we have to do is look to the West Coast and the experience in British Columbia. The people there have experienced what is a Conservative government under a different label. They call themselves Social Credit, but in fact they are a Conservative government, a Reaganite, philosophical cabal.

That government too promised employment, freedom from want and a better future. The experience has been mounting unemployment and increased deficits rather than lower deficits. This has brought a great deal of misery to the people. It has meant that important social programs have been cut. At the same time, the amount of debt that people have to bear has increased.

This contrasts quite startlingly with the experience in Manitoba. The Manitoba Government has chosen not only in the promises in the election campaigns, but in the administration of its affairs on a day to day basis, to make employment the number one priority. Through the creation of the Manitoba Jobs Funds and through devoting public expenditures to that objective, we have the result of Manitoba having the lowest unemployment rate in the country.

We in this House should learn from the experience at the provincial level. We should learn from what has gone on in Manitoba and in British Columbia. Rather than following its ideological beacons and wearing blinders with regard to the economic facts of life in this country, this Government should re-examine the direction in which it is taking this country.

I want to note as well that while this Government focuses all of its attention upon the deficit and its hopes of reducing that deficit, and while I am concerned that the public dollar be taken care of, I want to raise some questions about the notion that somehow a deficit is necessarily a bad thing. If we take notice of the fact that Japan has an unemployment rate that is much lower than ours in Canada, we see as well that it has a larger deficit. That should give us pause to question the strategy that this Government has adopted.

The United States has a Conservative government, at least in rhetorical terms, certainly in terms of social policy and defence policy, yet when it comes to public expenditures and the deficit, it has a large deficit. Its economic performance has in large part been fueled by public expenditures in the area of defence. Therefore, this focus upon the deficit really deserves to be questioned. With the passage of time, more and more Canadians will question this focus. They will experience the increased unemployment which the forecasting agencies are now predicting.

It is essential for us to be aware of the fact that this Government with its bloated majority promised one thing in the election and, having got itself ensconced in office, does another thing. That is enough to erode the confidence which Canadians have had in this Government.

When the Conservatives were in opposition and seeking to become the Government, they said that they could cut the deficit by cutting out waste. They said they would not have to cut out needed, worth-while, productive public expenditures, that they could cut the fat without cutting the muscle. What is our experience now that they are in office and showing their true colours, now that we see the fulfilment of their actions? One area where they have cut is CHIP, the Canadian Home Insulation Program. What reasonable Canadian would call that program waste? The opportunity to insulate a home, to make it more energy-efficient, is an investment. It is not only an investment for the nation, it is an investment for the individual. That action alone belies the notion that the cuts in expenditures were just going to be cuts in waste.

They are going to cut down on unemployment insurance expenditures. What will the result be? It will simply result in those people who have no employment being forced off unemployment insurance on to welfare. Does that constitute a reduction of wasteful government expenditures? No, that is a misdirected public policy. It simply shifts the burden from one hand to the other. It makes it difficult for people.

The Government cut funding to foreign aid. It cut the few dollars that we give to the Third World, countries in which people live in such poverty that we can only intellectualize about it, poverty that we have not personally experienced. This was aid to people who suffer in ways we have no way of imagining. Canadians want to help Third World countries, yet what does the Government do? It cuts developmental aid to those countries. Is that another example of what the Government promised when it said it would only cut out waste in government expenditures?

Another program cut by the Government was Summer Canada. Everyone knows that the unemployment rate in this country is very high, particularly amongst young people, and that young people need work in the summer so that they can feel productive, so that they can gain experience and can save some money to return to high school or university in the fall. Yet the Government has the audacity to cut funding for Summer Canada which provides summer employment for students. To be fair, I understand that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has since backed away from that position and indicated that the Government will replace that program with something else. If Canadians can get their message through to the Government, perhaps there is some hope that the Government will see the error of its ways and will do something to correct its actions when those actions are found wanting.

I am disturbed as well by government expenditure cuts in the area of Indian affairs. If there is any group of people in the country who live in poverty and desperation, whose living conditions are more on a par with those in the Third World than they are with middle-class Canadians, it is the native population of the country. I am appalled that the new Government which promised to be compassionate and to give new hope to people cut funding in the area of Indian affairs. I am sure that most Canadians would be shocked by such cuts.

The list goes on and on. It is important to reiterate this list because of the fact that the Government, when it was running for election, indicated that it would reduce only the waste and would not cut out anything that is important to people. Yet when it gets into office, it cuts into programs that are essential, productive and are in fact an investment. The Government's performance belies its promise.

As another example, the Government cut out Canertech, an organization that was meant to deal with alternative energy sources like solar energy. It is important that we find alternatives to crude oil as a way of fueling our industry and heating our homes, yet this is one of the areas in which the Government made cuts. Surely investment in alternative energy is in fact an investment and not a waste. I wonder what the Government's definition of the word "waste" is.

The Government also cut the budget for the National Research Council. That investment dealt with solar energy and technology. A very good example of what the Government has done can be seen in Winnipeg. I am hoping that this is one of the areas in which the Government will reverse its action. It cut out the Manufacturing Technology Institute in Winnipeg. This is an institute which had been lobbied for for a long period of time. Unfortunately, when it finally came about it was announced by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and therefore became identified as a Liberal goody for Winnipeg.

We should not let that confuse us, Mr. Speaker, because this technology centre is very important. It assists manufacturers in Winnipeg and in fact across Canada to adjust to new technologies and to be more productive. This is in fact a use of public funds that supports the private sector and therefore it would have fitted nicely into the new Government's ideological framework and into its feeling that if we are to create employment, we need to do it through the private sector. Here was an ideal opportunity for the Government to use public funds in order to promote its own objectives. Instead, it cut it out.

I am hoping that when the Minister of Finance goes to Winnipeg and meets with ordinary residents of Winnipeg, he will learn how vital this institute is to the Manitoba economy and will give very serious consideration to reversing that decision. Once again, we can have an agency in Winnipeg that will help the manufacturers in our province and across the country become more efficient and productive, thereby allowing us to add some strength to our economic capacity.

The list of cuts goes on and on. Because time is short, I cannot complete my enumeration of that list. However, I would like to say that my great disappointment with this new Government is that its performance falls so far short of its promises. It promised to be compassionate. What did it bring to us? It brought to us a new, harsh agenda for the social scene. The Government spoke of universality as being a sacred trust before the election and now it is directly attacking the universality of social programs. It is questioning the pension programs in this country. It is questioning the distribution of family allowances, social housing, federal-provincial transfers which include those for education, and health and social allowances.

The very large and widening gap between the Government's promises and its performance will be more and more visible to Canadians as time passes. People have every reason to start losing confidence in this Government. I would ask the Government to keep that in mind because it will see that rejection in the Gallup polls of which I know they feel so proud.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member what he would consider a reasonable deficit. How high would he let the deficit rise? Around 25 per cent of our tax dollars is already going toward servicing the debt. How high would he let it go? What would be a reasonable level for the deficit?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, obviously like all Canadians I would like to see the deficit as low as it could possibly be. The point that I was making is that cutting public expenditures the way this Government has will lead to greater unemployment, and greater unemployment will mean more social costs and less revenues for the Government. Therefore, we run the very real risk of ending up with a larger deficit than we have today. That is exactly what happened in the Province of British Columbia.

I think it is important that the Government focus on employment as the key priority rather than on the deficit. That is what it promised to do. If the Government focused on employment and got people back to work, it would have revenues coming in and there would be some real prospect of reducing the deficit.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment to make. I listened carefully to the Hon. former Member for Winnipeg-St. James, the present Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). He figured he could not get re-elected in his old riding, and he was probably right, so he ran in another riding. He was condemning the Government for having said one thing before and during the election campaign and supposedly doing something else afterward.

What he was trying to do was instil fear in Canadians. He was saying: "Look at this Government that we now have. Look at what it is doing. It will decrease jobs and it will cut back on the amount of money which will be available through the Government".

• (1520)

I would like the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre to look at the facts. What has happened in the two months of the lifetime of the new Government? Is it not a fact that already some 30,000 new jobs have been created in Canada? That is the way the Government is moving.

Look at interest rates. We promised to bring interest rates down, and in just two months' time interest rates have decreased almost a full percentage point. That will generate activity in the construction industry, and mortgage rates will decrease. I invite the Hon. Member to take a look at the facts and not give us empty NDP rhetoric.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, we wanted the facts, so I asked the Hon. Member to prevail upon his colleagues in Cabinet to release the study that analyses the impact of the economic statement upon employment in this country.

The Hon. Member mentioned 30,000 new jobs. I would challenge him to tell me how many of those jobs are part-time and how many are full-time. He mentioned interest rates. We know that interest rates are coming down. They are coming down because the American economy is slowing down. That is a reason for concern. I would like the hon. gentleman to pay some attention to those facts, and release the information with regard to the economic statement analysis.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no further questions, I will recognize, on debate, the Hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty).

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, perhaps at the outset of my remarks I could be forgiven if I digress slightly to welcome you to the House of Commons and to congratulate you on the assumption of your new and important responsibilities. I know that you will carry them out with great distinction and great vigour.

On behalf of Members of Parliament from the previous Parliament, I want to welcome the large number of new Members who have joined us in the House of Commons. The new Members, with their vigour, enthusiasm and fresh ideas, will contribute a great deal to the deliberations of Parliament, and can help us to renew government and the services that it provides to Canadians. It will be an honour to work with them.

I would also like to express a word of thanks to my constituents for the confidence which they have shown in me. This was my fifth election since 1972, when I was first elected, and I can simply offer to them the assurance that I will do the utmost, to the best of my ability, to discharge my responsibilities to them and to try to live up to the high honour which they have conferred on me.

On September 4, using the most effective tool at their disposal—their ballots—Canadians charted a new course for the federal Government for the remainder of the decade. Canadians charged this Parliament with the singular obligation of renewing the national economy. They directed the Government to enhance the personal prosperity of all Canadians. They encouraged us to examine thoroughly all alternatives which would direct the bulk of government services, particularly financial ones, into the hands of the needy. Canadians cautioned us that true justice begins with the fair, sensitive and respectful treatment by government of all of its citizens. As Minister of National Revenue and as the Minister responsible for Canada Post, I take particular heed of this message.

Above all else, on September 4 Canadians told us to direct all our energies toward realizing the full potential of our land and people. It is because the Progressive Conservative Party took up this message with vigour and foresight, and dedicated itself to the fair, timely and responsible pursuit of these goals, that Canadians endorsed my Party on election day.

Proof of our continuing commitment to these concerns was heard in the Throne Speech and in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). In both of those documents, the new Government began to plot a new course for Canada.

As former chairman of the PC Task Force on Revenue Canada, and now having the honour of being Minister of that Department, I strongly support the pledge of the Government to do more than any of its predecessors to ensure the survival of the self-assessment system, a system of taxation which is the least costly and the least oppressive means for administering the tax regime. For the self-assessment system to survive, all taxpayers must believe that they are being treated fairly and equally. At the same time, the Government must believe that all taxpayers will fairly report their income and submit the proper amount of tax on time.

It is essential for mutual trust to exist if we are to strike the correct balance between the right of all Canadians to the efficient and timely administration of the tax regime, and each individual's right to protection from undue, unfair or unreasonable treatment. Sadly, actions by previous Cabinets not only eroded that trust but, in some cases, destroyed the dreams and aspirations of many Canadians.

The failures of the previous regime in this area were several. It failed to address fundamental problems in the economy and to generate growth, thereby damaging the financial well-being of every Canadian. It failed to acknowledge, let alone diminish, uncontrolled government spending and waste, thereby fueling public suspicion of the Government's need for additional tax dollars. It failed to contain the trend toward an increasingly complex tax system and a dangerously secretive budgetary process. It failed to pass Budget provisions going as far back as November, 1982. Former Ministers of National Revenue failed dismally to direct departmental officials on the application of their powers—some of which are far greater than those of other law enforcement agencies—without regard for the circumstances or the civil rights of the individuals in question. Indeed, one of my predecessors was quoted in The Globe and Mail this morning as follows:

> With delinquent taxpayers you have to put on pressure.

After all the water that has gone under the bridge, and after all the experience of the past year, Mr. Bussières continues to fail to differentiate between people who simply choose not to pay their taxes and people who are incapable of paying because they are in dire financial straits. More than anything else, what the controversy of the past year has been about is ensuring that people who are in need are treated with compassion and decency, and that honest people are treated with respect. Yet it appears that some people have not learned those lessons.

Those are the errors of the past. Sadly, they led to mistrust, non-compliance, frustration and bitterness.

At the same time, another process has been emerging which places more pressure on tax administration. Increasingly, the tax regime is being used not simply to replenish the federal treasury, but also to motivate or discourage certain actions by taxpayers in the marketplace. Although the goals of such provisions are better evaluated elsewhere, it is important to note the greater role which is played by the Department of National Revenue in interpreting and implementing the social and economic policies of the Government. The increasing responsibility of the Department, under legislation over which it has no direct authority, further reinforces the need for Parliament clearly to define its intent vis-à-vis each piece of tax-related legislation. On that note, I would like to turn to the future.

I am most fortunate to be able to come to this office, following the review of the administration of the tax regime undertaken earlier this year by the PC Task Force on Revenue Canada. The Task Force undertook the single most comprehensive dialogue which has ever been undertaken by any policital party in Canada with ordinary Canadians, on a matter which affects us all. Its 76 recommendations form the Government's blueprint for action in the tax field. Our goal is to initiate fundamental changes to the tax system which will make it more fair, more accountable and more just for the ordinary people of Canada.

In the past two months, in the name of fairness, I have already taken these measures. I have scrapped the odious quota system that the previous government was using to force assessors to assess people for money which often they did not owe. I have withdrawn the controversial film on auditing, which raised doubts about the Department's view that taxpayers are essentially honest. I have ended the practice of seeking publicity when individuals have charges laid against them. All too often the Department would encourage publicity at the time the charges were laid, and then, after the damage had been done, if the individual was exonerated by the courts, no one was there to undo the damage. That policy has been scrapped. As well, I have reversed the notion that a taxpayer is guilty until he proves his innocence.

On the last point, the Minister of Finance will soon present legislation to ensure that until an impartial hearing has been concluded, taxpayers will not have to pay taxes in dispute. Until that important amendment is passed, we have no authority to refund taxes in dispute. Neither can we relinquish the security we have accepted in lieu of payment.

• (1530)

That is why it will be essential that the House deal speedily with the amendment when it is brought down by the Minister of Finance. Until that time taxpayers will still have to observe the present law. However, I would add that I am reviewing my Department's collection policy. In the meantime I have instructed that legal collection action in the case of disputed taxes is not to be taken except in exceptional circumstances which will be judged on a case by case basis.

Our emphasis on fairness is further reflected in the documents tabled in support of the economic statement, which mentioned that we are reviewing the search and seizure provisions of the Income Tax Act and the possibility of a small claims tax tribunal. In the meantime, the tax administration measures from the February Budget will soon come into play, with two exceptions. First, the impending legislation regarding future taxes in dispute will eliminate any obligation to provide security before the conclusion of an impartial hearing. Secondly, the appeal period will remain at 90 days.

Other provisions to be introduced in keeping with the spirit of the task force report include empowering the Tax Court of Canada to award costs to taxpayers launching an appeal. In no event will such costs be awarded to the Minister of National Revenue. This measure recognizes the importance of providing taxpayers with full access to a forum in which disagreement with tax assessments can be resolved fairly. Perhaps most importantly, it removes a financial deterrent to ordinary Canadians who believe they have acted within the law. We are attempting to ensure fairness and justice for ordinary Canadians so that simple justice is not priced out of their range.

As another example, the statutory period of reassessment will be reduced from four years to three years. Unless the taxpayer has filed a waiver, reassessment may only be applied to a three-year period beginning with the 1983 taxation year. This provision will be applied to all taxpayers except in cases of wilful evasion, gross negligence or fraud.

All of these measures are designed to help the average, honest taxpayer. Two basic principles, fairness and firmness, will be guiding this Government. Fairness protects the rights of taxpayers and firmness ensures that everyone pays the correct amount owing, not a penny more and not a penny less. We will not allow the few to avoid taxes at the expense of the many.

A concrete example is our determination to collect debts outstanding and not in dispute. At present we have approximately $3.5 billion owing in this category and we will be firm in seeking payment. But we will also be fair. What is so distressing for those of us who have had a chance to work with the PC Task Force on Revenue Canada was to find that, at the very same time as the previous government sanctioned treatment of taxpayers which took away some of the most basic civil liberties, the Government allowed the accounts receivable of the Department of National Revenue to double, rising to the point where it is equivalent to roughly 10 per cent of the federal deficit today.

Additional staff will give collectors more time to work with those taxpayers experiencing difficulty in paying taxes owed. Upgraded training programs will enhance the collectors' thoroughness and, at the same time, his or her sense of fairness. As a final resort, when a taxpayer simply cannot pay all amounts owing at once, the collector will be better equipped to work out a time payment arrangement. We have also instituted a new policy whereby collection staff must make every effort to contact the taxpayer by telephone before taking legal action. One hundred new person-years are being added to this effort. I might add that this telephone contact will be made after a series of collection notices have already been issued. These notices have been completely redesigned to more clearly outline departmental policy and taxpayer rights, and now include a department telephone number.

In the past, as Hon. Members will know, computer-generated explanations of assessments or reassessments were often limited to 40 words. Fifty words may have been needed but were not allowed by the system. Our solution was to change the system to fit the needs of the taxpayer. This now allows complete explanations of assessments or reassessments and will cut down the number of notices of objection and appeals. In the past, taxpayers may have filed a notice of objection, not because they disagreed with the facts but because they simply did not know them. They were not told in plain, clear language by the Government. Not only will these measures give taxpayers a more clear picture of their tax situation, but they will also make it easier for taxpayers to contact and deal with the Department.

While the clarity of our various messages to the taxpayer is vital to a fair taxation system, our accessibility to the public is equally important. I would like to outline briefly a number of areas where service is being upgraded. First, we are operating a public inquiries counter in taxation centres where there is a natural volume of walk-in traffic. This will broaden the availability of service beyond our district offices.

Second, further to expand inquiry services this filing season, the network of seasonal tax assistance centres will be expanded and seasonal tax information clinics or storefront service centres will be introduced. There will be 35 seasonal centres which will allow us to serve a substantially greater number of people than last year. These seasonal services more than double our office locations for face-to-face assistance. In addition, toll-free telephone service in district offices will be extended to 6 p.m. from February 11 to April 19 and further extended to 9 p.m. from April 19 to the end of the filing season.

We are also installing an enhanced telecommunications system. It will help upgrade our toll-free telephone service and help us measure the demand for this service. The Hon. Member who spoke before me is from Winnipeg. He will know that this year the Department introduced a telecommunications device for the deaf in the Winnipeg district office to provide inquiry service to the hearing and speech impaired. I am pleased to announce that this bilingual service is now available nationally through toll-free numbers listed on the back of the tax guides. In addition, we are now making arrangements in conjunction with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind to provide visually-impaired taxpayers with audio tapes of the tax guide for the 1985 filing season. As well, full statements of account for corporations will also be provided every time the account changes, including details of all relevant transactions. Previously, corporations were advised only of amounts owing or receivable.

We have also made a number of improvements in our administrative procedures, Mr. Speaker. We are increasing the number of situations where we contact the taxpayer before altering the amount owing or refundable. We have already added 29 situations where this procedure is followed, and the coming filing season will see another 47 situations in which we will make this contact first. Where a decision has been made to alter the tax through initial assessment of a return, these new procedures require that taxpayers be given an opportunity to respond before any action is taken. In the same vein, for any taxpayers facing reassessment because of audits following initial assessment, opportunity to respond is also being provided before the issuing of a reassessment. In addition, as recommended by the PC Task Force on Revenue Canada, in all cases where the Department contacts the taxpayer, the taxpayer will have 30 days to respond instead of the 21 days previously allowed. Obviously this over-all approach should lead to fewer objections and appeals and, frankly, Mr. Speaker, more breathing room for the taxpayer.

We are also making a range of technological improvements in the area of storing and retrieving taxpayer data so that staff in district offices will be able to make many requested adjustments on the spot, at computer terminals in the district office. District office staff can now call up on a terminal virtually all data captured from a taxpayer's return. This, of course, cuts unnecessary delays. Next month we will bring in a system to provide corporations with a full statement of their account every time it changes. Previously, only limited information was available. Early in 1986 this same service will be provided to all individual taxpayers, as recommended by the task force.

Let me summarize briefly what these changes mean. When a taxpayer is contacted by the Department, for whatever reason, the taxpayer now has additional time to respond. Secondly, we have substantially increased our systems of advance notification before an assessment or reassessment. This notification and resulting discussions take place before a notice of assessment or reassessment triggers a 90-day period in which an appeal can be entered. This means a whole range of improved services and at the same time obviates the need to extend the period for appeals. If you look at other countries with a similar tax system, Mr. Speaker, you will find that our appeal period is significantly longer than in the United States, Great Britain or Australia.

I am pleased to announce, Mr. Speaker, to further speed up refunds, that I have directed that processing this year will begin more than a whole week earlier than last year.

Over the past year my Party has campaigned vigorously on behalf of the right of taxpayers to a simpler, more fair and accountable tax administration system. The public has endorsed these efforts overwhelmingly. I am proud that we have already acted and will continue to act until that has been achieved. If we work together in this House and continue to show the determination shown by my colleagues who surround me today to bring about a system which is more fair to ordinary Canadians, I am convinced that by the time Canadians file their income tax returns this year they will be satisfied the Government has made a conscientious effort to make the system more fair and more accountable for the ordinary taxpayer in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions. Comments. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

[English]

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) is not unaware of the concerns that are manifest around a particular magazine which is circulating quite freely. I thought the Minister might like to note that I purchased it today. That was my right as an adult. It is quite easily available.

However, my concern is with an ad which appeared yesterday which I think was an incredible affront to the people of Canada. I wonder whether the Minister of National Revenue might advise me if he believes it is the lack of teeth in the legislation that prevented his desired impact. I congratulate the Minister on the effort which he did undertake, but are revisions in the Customs Tariff Act and the Post Office Act required, or is there a lack of political will or a lack of understanding on the part of the customs officers who must apply the law?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank the Hon. Member for her question; I appreciate it very much. I had a chance to review the advertisement in question. I know that she has a copy of it with her at the present time. The publisher of Penthouse magazine ran an ad in the Toronto Sun yesterday in which he likened Canada to Nazi Germany. Mr. Speaker, I think that demonstrates that a person who is incapable of making a distinction between Canada and Nazi Germany is incapable of making a distinction between pornography and art.

I fully share the Hon. Member's concern about this sort of material. She raised a very reasonable question about the law as it stands today. Once material has entered Canada, the provisions of the Customs Tariff Act no longer apply. They apply only as importation is taking place at the border.

There are three statutes which regulate this sort of material. The first is the Canada Post Corporation Act which regulates the ability of people to use the mails to transfer this sort of material. The second is the Customs Tariff Act which allows my Department to regulate the flow of this material into Canada. The third applies after entry of the material into Canada, or if it is produced in this country, and that is the Criminal Code.

At the present time I know that in a number of jurisdictions the police are either considering or are in the process of laying charges under the Criminal Code. In cases where material is already in Canada, the obligation is now on the police to decide whether to lay charges. The opportunity for Customs and Excise to act has passed once the material has crossed the border.

If the Hon. Member has a concern about a particular municipality where the material is still available, and if she wants to bring it to the attention of the Attorney General of the Province of Ontario, for example, or of the local police department, she certainly has the right as a citizen to do that. The police would then consider what obligations they have under the Criminal Code.

I would like to make one other point. The Hon. Member raised questions with regard to the Customs Tariff Act as it stands today. She is absolutely right. One of the concerns that I have is that there are those three separate pieces of legislation, each of which may incorporate different standards for what is permissible in Canada and what is not. They tend to be fuzzy. They call upon us to make value judgments on this sort of material. I am hoping that the Fraser Committee on Pornography and Prostitution which is currently in existence and which will be making its report in a matter of weeks will be able to give us guidance on ways in which we can bring one act into conformity with the provisions of another so that there will be some certainty. Secondly, I think it would be helpful for all Canadians, for importers and for the Government if we were able to get better clarity on all three statutes so that people will know where they stand in relation to the law. To the extent to which we are capable of doing that, I think it will make the system more fair for everyone.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister for a very thorough and compassionate presentation. The Hon. Minister spoke of the future with an emphasis on fairness and justice and I am encouraged by this.

However, yesterday, to my strong disappointment, a capital expenditure of approximately $38 million for a proposed taxation data centre in my riding of Ottawa-Carleton was cancelled. I ask the Minister if this was fair and what plans he has to expand office facilities in the National Capital Region. In particular, would the Minister guarantee that any planned expansion will take place within the City of Gloucester?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say that I appreciate the Hon. Member's question and I commend him for the vigorous way in which he is putting the case for his constituents. There is no Member of Parliament who has been more conscientious or vigorous in stressing the needs of his constituents. I appreciate that very much.

The decision was made to cancel two proposed taxation data centres, one for the City of Toronto and one for the City of Ottawa. The total cost would have been $105 million in a time of restraint, Mr. Speaker. Going ahead with those taxation data centres would have done nothing to improve service to taxpayers. Indeed, there is some question as to whether or not it would have caused a deterioration of service.

From the point of view of the Department there was no need to continue with this massive expenditure at a time of restraint. As a consequence of the decision which we announced a day ago, we hope to be saving the taxpayers of Canada at least $75 million. In Ottawa we will be renovating and refurbishing existing office facilities to ensure that they are brought up to the standards required.

In anticipation, on the part of the previous government, of the possibility of moving out of present facilities, they have allowed those facilities to fall behind. We will be putting a new investment in them to ensure that public servants will be working in adequate conditions.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, the decision to cancel the Toronto and Ottawa data centres will have the result that 1,000 casual jobs will not be moved from Ottawa to Toronto, and secondly, that 250 full-time jobs will not be moved out of Ottawa to Toronto. That will result in a savings in terms of permanent jobs in Ottawa for the people of the National Capital Region.

The final point which the Hon. Member made was a very understandable one, Mr. Speaker. Obviously this decision will come as a disappointment to the people of the City of Gloucester who were concerned, obviously, about the effects that the development would have in their area in terms of the creation of jobs in construction, for example. I cannot commit the Department at this time to say that, irrespective or whatever circumstances may take place, any new construction will take place in Gloucester, but I can make one commitment. We recognize that this represents a loss to the City of Gloucester. The Hon. Member has very vigorously put that case to me personally. Before any planned development takes place in the future, I will ask my Department and the Department of Public Works to look seriously at the services that are available in Gloucester and we will make every effort to make sure that they are fully considered at the time that any such decision is made.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to make a comment. I wish to congratulate the Minister for the changes that he is proposing. I represent an area which contains many fishermen who are hard working and honest individuals. The stories of their problems with Revenue Canada have become a legend. The introduction of rules of fairness and natural justice has been long in coming and I am pleased that the Progressive Conservative Government and the Minister are taking bold measures to ensure that the ordinary, honest Canadian is well protected.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I had the pleasure of being able to travel to the Hon. Member's constituency during the election campaign and was there on his nomination night when some 2,000 people were there to support him.

I have been impressed during the time the Hon. Member has been in the House by the way in which he has brought the concerns of the people of his constituency to me. I can promise him that I will make every effort to be responsive to those concerns.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has given an assurance about the project cancelled in Gloucester where the Member of Parliament is a Conservative. The Minister said that he will do everything he can to compensate Gloucester, possibly with projects in the future.

The other taxation data centre which the Minister cancelled last week was to have been built in my riding of York Centre. What sort of message does the Minister have for the people in my area who were expecting close to 2,000 jobs, admittedly some temporary, to be created in the Department of National Revenue at that taxation data centre? What attention will be paid to people in that area?

• (1550)

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, for the past 12 years I have had the opportunity to sit where the Hon. Member is sitting. I know what it feels like to be in the Opposition with the Government systematically refusing to listen to the needs of members of the Opposition. I can undertake for the Hon. Member and for all Hon. Members on both sides of the House at any time they come to me with a concern that I will try to listen with compassion and understanding and do my best to be of assistance.

I understand that the cancelled centre was in the Hon. Member's constituency. Obviously, if we are looking at new facilities being built, we will consider the best place for them to be located in the Toronto area and I will be glad to receive any representations the Hon. Member chooses to make.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now resume debate.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to make a few remarks during the Throne Speech debate. I certainly want to join the chorus of others who have complimented you on your elevation to the high office that you have attained. I also want to compliment your boss, the Speaker of the House, on his style and the way he conducts the business of the Chair.

As a Private Member for ten years, I have listened long and hard to questions that turned out to be mini-speeches made by Cabinet Ministers, who are called front-benchers by many, both in questions and reply. The Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is sitting there. He is also one of the culprits.

It is a breath of fresh air to have crisp rulings from the Chair on the kinds of questions and responses that we tolerate in the House. It gives other Hon. Members a chance to ask questions and get their information on the record.

Mr. Keeper: That is long enough.

Mr. Friesen: All right, that is enough. Second, I want to join others in complimenting the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Jacques) on their fine speeches in introducing this particular motion. I believe that all Members, regardless of political affiliation, would agree with me that they distinguished themselves very well both in the quality of their speeches and in the quality of the representation they have made on behalf of their ridings. I think that that is a portent of good things to come.

I want to thank the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty), who just spoke, for the frank and candid way in which he has dealt with the problems of his Department and for the way he wants to service the needs of Canadians. I want to commend him especially for the focus he has given to the needs of those with handicaps, such as the visually impaired.

A report dealing with the problems faced by those we call handicapped has been tabled in the House for several years now. It is a pleasure to see that the Minister is taking some of those concerns to heart and is implementing them in his Department.

I know the subject of jobs has been a preoccupation with every Member of the House. I know that Members of the Opposition are trying to look for an Achilles heel in the Government on this particular issue. That is fair because that is their role. It is what they ought to do in order for them to carry out their functions. However, I believe that there are other issues.

I believe the deficit is an issue and is one reason why there are not enough jobs. When I heard it announced in the economic statement that we spend $20 billion in interest payments on our national debt, it must be an issue. That $20 billion could be spent on those who are in dire need in our country or spent on the unemployed or perhaps on pension reform.

I have never been able to understand the mind-set of the socialist party in that they want to increase indebtedness in order to help those who are in dire need. It is because of that kind of philosophy that we are $20 billion in debt and taking money away from those who need it. I hope they start looking at the economic statement from that perspective.

As I have indicated, there are other issues with which we are confronted. For example, there is the issue of ensuring that we maintain and live up to our campaign promises. That is a fair issue about which the Opposition Parties can hammer us hard to make sure we live up to those promises.

In fact, I recommend that we follow the practice which is carried in the United Kingdom where each party declares what it calls a manifesto at the beginning of the election campaign. Each party specifically outlines the issues as it sees them and how it plans to fulfil its promises if and when elected to office. Once a particular party is elected it has the burden of fulfilling those promises. The opposition recognizes that the elected government has a mandate to fulfil the philosophies that it has explicated during the campaign, but it also has an obligation to fulfil those promises.

I sense that the Opposition, particularly the New Democratic Party, criticizes the Government for not following their agenda instead of attacking it on its agenda for the country. We were not elected to fulfil an NDP agenda but to fulfil a Conservative agenda. If we do not fulfil that agenda, then they can criticize us. But do not criticize us for not fulfilling another Party's agenda.

For that reason I wish that we had that kind of concept being used in Canada. I might add that in the last few elections the Liberal Party has always prescribed an agenda during an election campaign and then ignored it once it was elected. This allowed the opposition to attack those governments on almost any subject. I would simply urge the Opposition that when it attacks the Government with respect to fulfilling its mandate, as it should, it should do so on the terms that the Government laid out before the people.

Another concern we face in the country is to make sure that this place functions properly once we are elected. I was pleased that this issue was addressed in the Speech from the Throne; it is time that this institution was reformed. While this concern has been expressed before, I am pleased that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is taking this question seriously and appointing a special committee to make sure that reform takes place.

I believe there is an underlying confusion in the minds of many of us about goals and how to reach those goals. The focus in this country and particularly in the Chamber seems to be on democracy; that we should be democratic and make democracy work, and all the other clichés connected with that term. Since the focus is on democracy, one can easily assume that the goal is democracy. I want to assure Hon. Members that while we do not want to overlook the need for democracy, that ought not to be our goal. Our goal is freedom, not democracy.

Mr. Benjamin: What is the difference?

Mr. Friesen: I am glad that the Hon. Member for Regina West asked what is the difference. That absolutely demonstrates the confusion in the minds of the socialist party. Democracy is the vehicle by which we ought to deliver freedom. That does not necessarily happen. I think it is a dangerous assumption that democracy is always necessarily a friend of freedom.

Let me give the most glaring example, the Weimar Republic in 1933. It was a very democratic government in Germany, a very constitutionally democratic government.

Mr. Benjamin: Democratically elected.

Mr. Friesen: It was democratically elected and it functioned democratically. It democratically elected Adolf Hitler as Chancellor of Germany. It is possible to use a good democratic institution to bring about any kind of repressive government you want. We should never assume just because we have a democratic government that we will always have freedom.

• (1600)

I think I can give another example a little closer to home. I do not want to make Members think that the odious comparison of fascist Germany—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Friesen: I ask the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) to please listen.

Mr. Manly: I am listening.

Mr. Friesen: I do not want to make Members think that I am wrenching a comparison here when I compare what happened in Germany with what has happened in Canada. I want to point out, however, that four years ago we passed an Order in Council in this country that has been widely proclaimed as the Emergency Planning Order. That Order was passed very democratically. It was passed by a democratic government but through the powers given to that democratic government that Order in Council in its potential is incredibly repressive. It is anything but democratic. There is anything but a freedom of consensus in that particular Order.

Just because we have democracy does not necessarily mean that we have freedom. We can lose our freedom through democratic institutions. I might point out it is understandable that the New Democratic Party, rather than being called the socialist party, prefers to be called the social democratic party.

Mr. Benjamin: We have been called lots of things.

Mr. Friesen: I hear the NDP using that term all the time, and I understand that. I understand also that the New Democrats want to be elected and they want people to vote for them. For a lot of people in Canada the term "socialism" has a pejorative ring to it and "social democratic" sounds so much better. I do not fault them on that.

An Hon. Member: It is like Progressive Conservative.

Mr. Friesen: Yes, that is right. Progressive Conservative is much the same thing.

There is another reason for it. Social democracy, as we have seen the experience of that particular institution around the world, has a limiting effect on freedom. It does not matter where you go, democracy is institutionalized.

Mr. Benjamin: Come off it! You are drawing a long, long bow there.

Mr. Friesen: I do not know whether the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) can follow a long bow. I do not know whether his attention span is long enough for that but I will try to explain to him. In order to make democracy function, it has to be institutionalized. The more you institutionalize it, the more you limit our freedom.

At the heart of freedom is the ability to choose, Mr. Speaker. I think even the Hon. Member for Regina West can understand that. The ability to choose lies at the heart of freedom. The more we have our choices taken away, the more we have our choices limited, the more we lose our freedom. Some of that is logical. We have local by-laws and all of those factors that make society function where all of us concede some of our freedoms in order to make society function better. The institutions of democracy thrive on passing those kinds of laws that limit our freedom.

I want to point out why the social democrats like the term so much. I recall very clearly during the campaign the leadership debate. My Leader, the Prime Minister, and the Leader of the New Democratic Party were talking at one point about the role of banks and what the banks were doing, for example, to women. The Prime Minister made the point that women have a harder time getting credit for business transactions from the banks. The Leader of the New Democratic Party agreed. The Prime Minister went on to make another point. The Leader of the New Democractic Party asked; "Will you make it a law?" That, Mr. Speaker, is at the heart of everything that the institutionalized, democratic, call it social democratic, institutions are all about, hence the question: "Will you make it a law?" The NDP mentality is: Let us legalize or prohibit everything in a catalogue of values that they have created. Everything is good according to the value structures which the New Democrats have designed. Consequently and conversely, if they have not designed it, it has to be bad.

You see, Mr. Speaker, if you make everything according to law, automatically everybody becomes a potential law-breaker. That is what is so wrong. We focus the whole citizenry on law-keeping or law-breaking and it becomes a law-oriented society. The NDP likes that. That way New Democrats can categorize everybody to the most minuscule detail according to their criteria. "Will you make it a law?" We need some laws, I do not deny that. But that takes away from the real focus we ought to have, namely, a focus on relationships and reconciliation; whereas in a law-oriented society, which they like, we focus on law-breaking and violators. We ought to be focusing on reconciliation and relationships. That whole concept, that whole mind-set, destroys the relationships we can enjoy, Mr. Speaker.

I recognize, as my friend the NDP heckler wants to point out to me, that we ought to have laws. Of course we ought to have laws. For example, we have the whole issue of pornography which came up in the House a few moments ago. This is an area where there needs to be legal prohibition for certain kinds of activities.

Mr. Keeper: Social democracy.

Mr. Friesen: The criteria which New Democrats want to focus on is what you can and cannot do, whereas the focus ought to be on expanding the whole system of choices that we have in our country so we can develop our characters and our personal growth. We can do that only if we choose. The trouble with pornography is that it destroys choice, particularly when it concerns child pornography. Children's curiosity is at its highest peak, their sense of discrimination is at its lowest, and their information base is at its lowest. They do not have the tools to satisfy their curiosity as to whether or not something will help or hurt them, whether they can grow through the experience, or is know what it will do to them in future years. They are incapable of making mature choices.

Of course we ought to protect those people. We ought to preserve them in such a way so that when they become mature they can make intelligent, informed choices about how they want to live. There are no walls that one can build high enough to make sure that everybody is going to remain pure and that everybody is going to live according to the criteria that we want to establish. We cannot do that.

I see that the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) is here and I am glad that she brought up the question yesterday because I think she was honing in on this very point, that we want people to make choices on a matter of maturation so they can grow in their person rather than have their person destroyed.

I say that about much of the advertising we see on television. A lot of the advertising is not only misleading, but it is seductive when you see the kind of lifestyle advertising that is going on. It tells a false story and we need to deal with it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member to conclude his speech within 30 seconds, please.

Mr. Friesen: In the area of advertising, Mr. Speaker, the focus ought to be on freedom so we can preserve our system of choice and develop a mature young generation of people as well as a mature population, so that we can make choices in a much more sensible way, not have a law-oriented society. There will always be laws. However, I hope that as a government we will diminish the number of laws and regulations rather than expand them. If we make laws according to the criteria of some people, they will not sit well with some others. I agree with John Stuart Mill about the dictatorship of the majority dominating the minority.

• (1610)

I want to thank Hon. Members for the attention they have given me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) on a question?

Mr. Manly: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on a question. However, first I should like to make a brief comment. From our point of view we see laws as being necessary to establish a framework within which a co-operative community can develop. I am sure the Hon. Member would recognize that there is a need for law to restrain the selfishness of certain individuals. We recognize that need. We also recognize the need for law to protect the rights of individuals and minorities. It is on that basis that we urge law, not because, as the Hon. Member falsely tried to imply we want to see people's lives regulated in every minutia. That is a complete distortion of our political philosophy. We want to see the largest possible measure of freedom for individuals in society. That means economic freedom to share in the goodness of society.

This brings me to the question I should like to ask the Hon. Member. He talked about the need for restraint. Coming as he does from British Columbia, I am sure he is aware of the 1983 budget which the Hon. Hugh Curtis introduced in that province. It is interesting that some of the same people who ran Premier Bennett's re-election campaign in 1983 were also very active in the election campaign for the Tories. They seemed to give the same advice—"Don't tell the people what you will do until after you are elected", and then whammo! The Hon. Member knows the kind of budget which was delivered in July, 1983. It promised recovery through restraint. The economic forecasts were for a 6 per cent increase in real provincial product in 1984, a 15 per cent increase in capital investment in 1984 and an employment increase of 3.9 per cent in 1984. The most recent Conference Board of Canada provincial forecasts project a decline of .1 per cent in real provincial product for this year and a decline of .9 per cent in employment. Statistics Canada projects a decline of 7.6 per cent in capital investment. In fact, the seasonally-adjusted unemployment rate in British Columbia has increased from 13.9 per cent in May, 1983 to 15.1 per cent in May, 1984. Of course, the latest figure is also 15.1 per cent unemployment.

How can the Hon. Member believe that the program of restraint being advocated by the Government will in any way improve the Canadian economy in a manner which the program of restraint of the Government of British Columbia did not? The same medicine is being prescribed by both governments. Perhaps the bedside manner of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is a little more attractive than the bedside manner of the Premier of British Columbia. However, the medicine is the same. It has not worked in British Columbia. How will it possibly work in Canada?

Mr. Friesen: I do not think I mentioned the word "restraint" in my speech.

Mr. Manly: You talked about the deficit.

Mr. Friesen: Restraint is not the same. Perhaps in the Hon. Member's lexicon of terms "restraint" and "deficit" are the same word. According to the dictionary definition of those words, I do not think they are the same. I did not talk about restraint. Perhaps the Hon. Member ought to listen a little more carefully before he frames his comments.

I would estimate that about two-thirds of his comments were about the Government of British Columbia. I was not elected to defend the Province of British Columbia on that particular score. However, it reminds me of a child yelling across a fence at a bully because the bully cannot get at him. If the Hon. Member is so concerned about British Columbia, what is wrong with its economy and the approach of its government to the economy, why does he not run for the British Columbia legislature and attack them there? Why does he go 3,000 miles away and holler his head off at the B.C. Government?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, could I just make a short comment in response to the Hon. Member?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A very short comment.

Mr. Manly: In reply to the Hon. Member, I should simply like to indicate that the conditions we are seeing in Canada are the same as those we saw in British Columbia. I do not like what happened in British Columbia in the last year and a half. I do not want that to happen in Canada. I am appealing to Hon. Members opposite to look at what happened in British Columbia so that perhaps the lessons of history can sink into their minds and there will be a change in their policy before it is too late.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) on a question.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to ask a question. I want to make a simple comment. I do not think it would do much good to ask a question. One of the faults with the public address system is that the sound of the Hon. Member's voice is increased for those watching their television sets but it does nothing for his ideas.

I have listened to him over the years. Nothing has changed the Tory philosophy of cutting back on the deficit. The Hon. Member said that it is to help people out. According to the Hon. Member, poor people are helped by cutting back on unemployment insurance, people who just barely make ends meet are helped by increasing the price of gasoline, students are helped by discontinuing student employment programs, and public servants are helped by cutting back on Public Service jobs.

He criticized the Liberals for making promises in the election campaign of 1980 and not fulfilling them. In the last election campaign never before in the history of the British parliamentary system was so much promised by so few to so many and nothing delivered. They shook your hand before the election and then they shake you after the election.

Mr. Friesen: I want to begin by complimenting the Hon. Member on his originality. He has a penchant for words, especially for phrases. Perhaps I could improve upon his phrase—Never in the field of human conflict". I appreciate the caustic barbs which he threw at me. I remember five months ago when I rose repeatedly in the House to ask him a question when he was chairman of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans. I could never get him. He was always waltzing around behind the curtain and never in his place so that I could ask him the simple question: "Why does the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans, after it has given itself a mandate to travel to British Columbia and meet with the fishermen out there, not do so?" As he was chairman of that committee, I wanted to ask him why it would not go. However, he would not stay in his place. At least I am sitting here and he can ask me all the questions he wants.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) on a short question or comment.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Hon. Member. He indicated that we should judge his performance or the performance of his Government on the basis of the Progressive Conservative agenda. One of the items which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) put on the agenda during the election campaign was the whole question of the universality of social programs. He said to Canadians that that was a sacred trust. Now that he is in office, he questions universality as it affects pensions and family allowances. I would like to judge their performance on the basis of the criteria which they established on their own agenda. Would the Hon. Member please respond?

Mr. Friesen: Why does the Hon. Member insist upon asking such simple questions? That is no problem at all. I have not seen any particular kind of consistency on the part of the New Democratic Party on any other issue, let alone universality. Just as a side comment, it is strange that a company like Aluminum Company of Canada, a good Canadian company, could not make it to build a plant in Manitoba but that rotten, rotten multinational from the United States, Alcoa, seems to be able to make a deal. That is great consistency in the New Democratic Party!

• (1620)

To go to the point of the Hon. Member's question, his Party supported the spouses' allowance. I do not think they ever voted against spouses' allowance. I think his Party supported the child tax credit and hailed that as a great boon to the low-income groups, as well as the GIS. I would ask him whether GIS is universally applied across Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for the second time, but the question and comment period is now over.

[Translation]

We shall now continue the debate. The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to take this oportunity to congratulate you on your appointment. I may say that we on this side of the House are aware of your tremendous potential, and we would even have liked to see you on the front bench opposite. Meanwhile, we are confident that you will apply your talents wisely to presiding over this House.

I also wish to thank my constituents in the riding of Shefford, who decided to resist the landslide on election day and show that they know the difference between a concrete program and an illusion. They refused to be tempted by the quick-fix solutions offered by the Party now in power and remained true to a Party that has done a great deal for this riding and to a Member who will continue to improve his record, I hope, in the years to come.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to read and listen to the Speech from the Throne, and to the subsequent economic statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and while analysing these two documents, I concentrated more particularly on the four following issues: international trade, regional economic expansion, unemployment and youth.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I intend to demonstrate that our friends opposite have unfortunately failed to remember the commitments they made during the election campaign.

If we analyse the commitments they made during the election campaign, and then what they produced in their budget speech or economic statement, we see two totally different worlds.

For instance, during the election campaign, the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party said on March 14: We must become first class international traders. We must become reliable suppliers of quality goods and services at competitive prices. He also said we would have to step up the search for export markets.

And finally, several weeks later, what does he offer us? A cutback of $6.2 million for the Canadian Dairy Commission, of which $4 million had been set aside for exports. I know some of our hon. friends from Quebec on the Government side. . .I bet this is only the first of a series of cutbacks that will affect our dairy industry. Mr. Speaker, I am confident that in the months to come, our hon. friends opposite who promised our farmers and especially our dairy producers the moon, are going to be very embarrassed if they let the Minister of Finance take care of the dairy program, especially in Quebec.

What else did they do to increase exports? They cut another $4 million, this time from the Export Development Program. The Canadian Commercial Corporation, also concerned with exports, will lose $5 million. In the fisheries industry, one of the problems is a lack of export markets, and there they have again cut $4 million.

Finally, they said they were going to increase the number of commercial attachés. That was one of those firm commitments by the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party (Mr. Mulroney). So one of the first cutbacks he makes in the Department of External Affairs, Mr. Speaker, involves making sure that in Rio for instance, where we had four people in the commercial section, those four positions are cut.

Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the opposite of what they said throughout the election campaign and, worse still, they made a $3.1 million reduction there. And now, of course, one of the major campaign commitments of our friends on the other side, particularly those who have hog producers in their riding, was a promise to sell their meat, but how? We had Canagrex. Well, Mr. Speaker, the first thing they did was to eliminate Canagrex; they lied openly to the agricultural producers, so what are they going to tell them when they go back to their ridings? It is a fact that hog production in Quebec, for example, amounts to 150 per cent of the requirements, but the agency on which the producers were relying has been abolished by the Progressive Conservative Party. As our friends opposite know full well, the CIDA aid program is one of our channels to export goods and services, but there again a cut of $180 million.

Mr. Speaker, here is a political party which had promised to increase export assistance, yet their first concrete step is to reduce direct and indirect export assistance by $216.6 million. That is like talking from both sides of their mouth, yet they have the nerve to keep on saying . . . The Minister for International Trade travels around the world to say that we are going to boost our exports, but what with? Speeches just are not good enough. The speeches and promises of our friends opposite will not accomplish anything, and exporters need help. International competition is fierce and the Prime Minister may smile all he wants and the Minister for International Trade may make speeches, but that is not going to sell our products on world markets. That is one of the examples I wanted to give, Mr. Speaker.

Regional economic development is another case, particularly in areas outside Montreal and Quebec City. I saw the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) a few moments ago and I am wondering how he can explain to the people of Frontenac that DREE funding has been reduced by $200 million. Mr. Speaker, I wonder how several members from rural areas such as those from the Eastern Townships will explain to their constituents, after having campaigned on tourism, that tourism has been cut from the Regional Industrial Expansion Program. Have they been lying to the people or has their memory failed them?

We know quite well that the cuts in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion affect all areas outside Montreal and Quebec City. Mr. Speaker, we know how badly many of our industries need restructuring and we are aware of the fact that some restructuring reviews have led to the saving of hundreds of jobs. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) should have known that some restructuring might be advisable in his own sphere of activity but he decided immediately to do away with the restructuring side of the Regional Industrial Expansion Program.

I have referred to projects related to the tourist industry. I am anxious to see how the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) will manage to meet her commitments with respect to the Sutton Ski Centre, the Bromont Ski Centre, the Owl's Head Ski Centre, which were counting on the tourist section of the Regional Industrial Development Program. I am anxious to see how the Hon. Member for Megantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) will manage to develop the Coaticook gorges. Although he had assumed specific commitments, Mr. Speaker, the first thing his government did was to abolish the tourist development section of the program, supposedly in a mood of consultation. Who was consulted? Which tourist interests were consulted about those cuts?

I would suggest that the levels of assistance have been lowered and, Mr. Speaker, since you also live in an area outside of Montreal, you know to what extent assistance from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion can be badly needed. You have a specific case in your area, where government help is needed but now you should forget about that, Mr. Speaker, your should forget about any large amounts for companies such as Petromont. They can no longer afford to do that, and I know very well that kind of explanations the Government and the Hon. Members will have to provide to their industrial commissioners. Over the coming months and years, hopefully, the Hon. Members opposite will recall their commitments to the people. To interpret their mandate as a mandate to cut is a serious error in my view, Mr. Speaker. I reckon that over the forthcoming months and years it will be our duty, as members of the Opposition, to hold them to their commitments. And I hope that during the upcoming debates I will have the opportunity to elaborate on cuts that have been decided against the unemployed. I hope they will realize their error soon enough.

• (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 4.40 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 42(4), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment. Therefore, the question is as follows:

Mr. James, seconded by Ms. Jacques, moves:

That the following Address be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To Her Excellency the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, Member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and commander-in-Chief of Canada.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

Mr. Allmand moves, seconded by Mrs. Pépin:

That the following be added to the Address:

But this House regrets that your Advisors not only failed to make open government a high priority but also, in their actions, have sought to reverse the direction of previous administrations by severely restricting the availability of information on decision-making in government and by attempting to inhibit access to both the elected and non-elected participants in that process.

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 12(3), the recorded vote is deferred until Monday, November 19, 1984, at six o'clock.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed. It being five o'clock, the House stands adjourned until Monday next, at eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 4.32 p.m. the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 19, 1984

The House met at 11.00 a.m.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Friday, November 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Allmand (p. 252).

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be a problem. I am informed that the Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) had the floor, but since consideration of the amendment has been terminated, the Hon. Member can hardly speak a second time unless he has the unanimous consent of the House.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to take part in the Throne Speech debate to comment on the Government's agenda as well as to talk about what it plans to do and to outline some of those things that the Government does not mention.

As has been noted several times in the debate, the emphasis in the Throne Speech was on consensus and conciliation. While this is commendable in some respects, it also brings some of us some concern. For example, it was stated in the Throne Speech that:

> Over time, mutual confidence and a sense of shared responsibility for our national economy must lead to consensus on even more basic issues: how to share the benefits of economic growth, how to share the burdens of economic adjustment, how to preserve the integrity of our unique natural environment, and how to ensure that the ideal of social justice is pursued through programs that meet contemporary needs and circumstances.

Consensus on issues such as these can take a very long time to develop. In the meantime, the unemployed and the working poor are bearing most of the burden and receiving very few of the benefits of technological change and the whole process of change in which we find ourselves.

A report put out two months ago by the National Anti-Poverty Organization points out that between 1981 and 1983 there has been a 22 per cent increase in the number of Canadians who must live below the poverty line. In 1981 there were 3.5 million Canadians living below the poverty line. By 1983 that had increased by some 800,000, to 4.3 million Canadians living below the poverty line.

The question that I think we in the House must address is: how long will these people have to wait while we develop a new consensus? The thought which has occurred to me as I looked at some of the measures that the Government has taken is that perhaps the new consensus is already developing to the effect that it is necessary to have more poor people in order to keep wages down and keep Canadians from expecting too high a standard of living.

It is worth while spending a few minutes asking how we develop a consensus. For example, today we have a generally shared consensus in the House about medicare. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has referred to it as a sacred trust. However, that consensus on medicare did not always exist. That consensus did not exist 20 years ago when medicare in Saskatchewan was established over bitter opposition. It was because leaders like Tommy Douglas and Woodrow Lloyd and the CCF government of Saskatchewan were prepared to risk their political lives on the issue of medicare that medicare was established. Over the years, its value to the Canadian people has been proved, so that now it is generally regarded, even by the Prime Minister, as a sacred trust.

That consensus did not come by sitting around a round table and debating. There had to be leadership. As we work toward a new consensus, it is not enough for the Government to sit back on the sidelines and host summit conferences. It must take some action to ensure that the poor and unemployed, those at the lower end of the income scale, do not get all the burden of industrial change and none of the benefits.

The Throne Speech also stated that the generous co-operation of the provinces:

> —is also needed to honour the commitment to Canada's aboriginal peoples contained in the Constitution Act of 1982. For these peoples, as for all Canadians, the high expectations that attended the act of patriation must not be disappointed.

There is no question that some of the provinces had a very mean-spirited approach to aboriginal rights in the last two constitutional conferences. There must be a more generous approach, but it is not enough for the Prime Minister to call for generous co-operation. If we are going to honour our commitments to the aboriginal peoples of Canada, then the federal Government must show leadership.

Where does the Government stand on constitutional entrenchment of the right of aboriginal peoples for self-government? Is it prepared to take an active advocacy role on behalf of aboriginal peoples? I believe that we all recognize that the new Government has a tremendous reservoir of popular support. Is it prepared to risk some of that support? Is it prepared to spend some of its popularity capital in an attempt to lead public opinion on this question of aboriginal rights? Is it prepared to put pressure on the provinces so they will act generously, or is it simply prepared to issue a nice call for the provinces to act generously in the hope they will respond?

• (1110)

I am concerned about the phrasing in this particular section. It talks about the commitment to Canada's aboriginal peoples which is contained in the Constitution Act of 1982. There is no mention in that reference to the fact that we are talking about aboriginal rights. It suggests that the commitment in the Constitution Act of 1982 was perhaps an act of generosity on the part of the Government of Canada at the time. There is no recognition that what we are dealing with here is a fundamental basic right of the Canadian people.

There is no mention in the Throne Speech of legislation respecting Indian self-government. In the last Parliament, you may recall, Mr. Speaker, the government introduced such legislation. It fell far short of what was required, but at least such legislation was introduced. Now that subject seems to have dropped right off the agenda. I would remind the Government that in the last Parliament there was an all-Party committee. It looked at the entire question of Indian self-government and concluded that the only way in which the problems of the Indian people could be met was through Indian self-government.

It recognized that there were three approaches to Indian self-government, and that all should be followed. First, there was the constitutional entrenchment, about which I have already spoken. Second, there was the bilateral approach where the federal government deals directly with the governments of Indian first nations. Third, there was the legislative approach whereby the federal government would pass enabling legislation. There is no mention of this in the Throne Speech. Unless we begin to deal with this fundamental problem that affects Indian people from one end of Canada to the other, then we are ignoring one of the basic groups within Canadian society.

The speech promised the removal of discriminatory clauses in the Indian Act. Again, this is something that we in our Party welcome, and we look forward to seeing the legislation which the Government will table. This longstanding problem has to be solved. I hope that this Government does not do as the last government did, which was to wait until the last possible moment and then to try to jam through unsatisfactory legislation without giving the committee adequate time for discussion and without giving the Indian people most affected adequate time to make their presentation.

I hope that as the Government deals with discrimination in the Indian Act it will pay attention to what the Indian people say, both to the national Indian organizations and also to the Native Women's Association of Canada.

This past spring the Native Women's Association of Canada and the Assembly of First Nations have reached a certain consensus about how this problem should be approached and addressed. The previous government chose to ignore that consensus. I hope that the present Government is a little more sensitive.

Mr. McDermid: No problem.

Mr. Manly: While the Government talks about developing consensus in some areas, in other areas it is prepared to move ahead on its own without consultation and without consensus. Here, of course, I am talking about cut-backs and increases in taxes which, in effect, are taking money out of our communities and taking money out of circulation, which will have a depressing effect on the economy.

I want to point out that these cut-backs by and large have been motivated by ideology rather than by any clear plan. This was revealed last week on November 13 when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) asked the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) about cutting the Manufacturing Technology Institute in Winnipeg. When he asked what studies had been done, the Minister replied that there had been no studies of the impact and that the real issue was one of political philosophy. We would like to see political philosophy at least brought into some context with reality.

• (1115)

It is interesting that the book of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) entitled A New Direction for Canada talked about the needs of small businesses. In part it reads:

> Keeping public sector research activities in tune with small firm needs, and the broader issue of rapid technology diffusion in the small business sector, are important subjects for discussion. We must examine the role of government-financed technology centres, and the possibility of industry-wide private-public sector research efforts.

There was no examination of the role of the centre in Winnipeg. It was simply cut.

Studies of the impact of these cuts were conducted for Cabinet. We want to see what those studies indicated in detail. We know they predicted that there would be job loss, but we do not know how much. The Minister of Finance said that it was "statistically insignificant". We would like to see those studies. We would like Canadians to see them so that they could judge for themselves whether or not they were statistically insignificant. We do not believe that they are insignificant, and we challenge the Government to release the studies and let Canadians decide. Last week Informetrica Limited indicated that, as a result of the Government's cut-backs, 50,000 jobs would be lost.

Some cuts primarily concern me. First I refer to the $200 million cut in the unemployment insurance fund through a series of what is euphemistically referred to as intensified interviews. This is a nice sounding phrase, but in practice it means that unemployed people, people on unemployment insurance, will be hassled and hounded from their entitlement by more regulations. Is this part of the Government's new consensus toward which it is working in terms of who will share the benefits and who will share the burdens? It seems to me the result is that the victims of unemployment will be sharing even more of the burden of unemployment.

There is also a cut of $175 million from the Industrial and Regional Development Program. Most of this comes from tier

1 communities. They will no longer be eligible for any assistance for establishing, expanding or modernizing manufacturing facilities. In British Columbia where there is the third highest unemployment rate in Canada, there is only one community designated as tier 3. Half of them are in tier 2 and the other half are in tier 1. We are not receiving our fair share of benefits under the program as it is presently constituted. By cutting back on the benefits available to tier 1, we will be discriminated against in doubly.

Then there is a $7.8 million cut-back from Indian Affairs, $5 million of which comes from capital funds. These funds are needed to help build schools and sewers. Over the last four years our committee looked at this, and representatives from all parties recognized the urgent need of Indian communities for infrastructure, sewers and water systems. We heard representation from one community after another about the need for new school buildings and how we were falling behind in that regard, yet the Government is cutting $5 million from capital funds.

The Government is cutting $400,000 from special needs for Indian communities like emergency assistance for communities after fires. The Government is cutting $350,000 from cultural grants that would go to Indian artists in order to sponsor Indian art displays. It is interesting to note that the Throne Speech merely gives lip service to art. Reading from page 7 of Hansard, the Throne Speech indicates:

> As a country rich in human resources, Canada owes much to those who have dedicated themselves to cultural, artistic and athletic endeavour. In a variety of areas, my Government will be addressing itself to the challenge of encouraging those individuals who inspire Canadians to new levels of excellence.

What kind of encouragement is being given to Indian artists when there are these kinds of cut-backs to the funding of Indian art?

Over the last few years, Indian art has been a great expression of the Indian people and has helped them to move toward their rightful place in Canadian society. Art has helped Indians gain a new sense of their own dignity and their own place in the scheme of things. As well, Indian art has given non-Indians a better understanding of Indians. The same is true of Inuit art. We are now cutting back funding that would help further those endeavours. As well, we have seen cut-backs to the funding of other cultural agencies.

The Speech from the Throne does not address some of the vital areas of concern in our economy. Government members have pointed out that the Speech from the Throne is not meant to be a shopping list. That is fair enough. We are not looking for a shopping list. However, I would like to ask government members if forestry is simply one item on a shopping list. We have heard of a great deal of concern about the growing deficit in the financial situation. I would like to ask government members about the growing deficit in timber supply. The Government recognized this deficit during the election campaign and promised immediate action. Where is that action now? Where are the plans to create a full-fledged Forestry Department with its own full Minister? It is not enough for forestry to be a poor cousin of agriculture.

We want to ask, where are the new programs for job creation? Where are the tens of thousands of jobs that were to be created as soon as this new Government was sworn into office?

In conclusion, I would simply like to urge government members to look to the Province of British Columbia with the hope that perhaps they can see the British Columbia experience as being a bad example. My father has said that even the worst of us can serve as a bad example. That is what has occurred in British Columbia today. In July, 1983, the British Columbia Government introduced a program of restraints and cut-backs emphasizing that these cut-backs were not introduced simply for the sake of cutting back but were introduced for the sake of recovery. Yet, since that program has been instituted, the economy has gone downhill. Investor confidence has gone down and unemployment has gone up. Now the deficit is rising.

It has been said by Santayana, I believe, that whoever will not learn from history is destined to repeat it. I hope that the Government is prepared to learn from the history of British Columbia so that all the people of Canada will not be condemned to repeat the tragic history of British Columbia, which has wasted its resources and, in the last year and a half, lost any possibility of recovery. The Government of British Columbia is now beginning to reconsider its approach. I urge the Government of Canada to reconsider its approach and, rather than bringing in cut-backs, bring in a positive program that will create jobs and ensure that the poor people of Canada receive the benefits and not only the burdens of technological change.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

• (1125)

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was most impressed with the new philosophy of the New Democratic Party. It seems to want to continue giving aid to those tier 1 areas in our country under the DRIE program and to continue the position of the former government of rewarding businesses by paying money out of the public Treasury to businesses that should, because of their location in the most prosperous parts of the country, be able to carry on by themselves. I was wondering if this was a new direction for the New Democratic Party whereby it would hand out more money to businesses—money which is paid to private companies from the Government Treasury—in areas where there is clearly less unemployment and good business activity. Is that the kind of issue that the New Democratic Party will push forward?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, in response to the question from the Hon. Member, I would like to point out that at the present time British Columbia is not getting its fair share with the way the tier system is set up. British Columbia has the third highest level of unemployment. The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), who is a government member, complained last year about the way the tier designations were set up. He asked how long British Columbia would be required to wait and how high unemployment would have to rise before it received some justice from the program.

If I could cite some figures, 43 out of 46 areas in the Atlantic Provinces have been designated for tier 3 and tier 4. Those tiers receive the maximum benefit. In Quebec, 60 out of 76 areas are in tier 3 and tier 4. As I pointed out, only one out of 29 areas in British Columbia is in tier 3 and none is in tier 4. The rest are in tier 1 and tier 2. If there is a program which will provide help for businesses, it should be going to those areas where there is the highest unemployment. We would like to see the tier designation changed so that it would recognize the real rates of unemployment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a supplementary question, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I gather that the complaint is not so much against the cut but that the Hon. Member's constituency is not designated as an underprivileged, hard-up area which needs social assistance. I am surprised that the Hon. Member would say that, because it would seem to me that his constituency is in a rather prosperous part of British Columbia where the standard of existence is fairly high and people are reasonably well off. I am wondering if the Hon. Member feels that his constituency is so underprivileged that it should be designated in a tier 3 or tier 4 category?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I have pointed out that we are suffering from extremely high unemployment in British Columbia, because the Government of British Columbia is following the same kind of repressive policies that the present Government is adopting. If this Government continues, the entire country will be in a tier 4 situation and will require maximum help.

I would like to see a tier designation system which recognizes the real rate of unemployment and makes help available to areas where there is unemployment and a program of industrial restructuring is required, such as the forest industry in British Columbia. I believe that British Columbia should get its fair share of help, which it is not receiving under the present program.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a series of questions which I would like to direct to the Hon. Member. In the last week of the last Parliament the Hon. Member, like I, suffered through some last-minute legislation, which was thrust on us, regarding the removal of discrimination against Indian women in amendments to the Indian Act. I want to ask the Hon. Member if the New Democratic Party supports the Assembly of First Nations and the Indian people at large with respect to their contention that they should have the say as to who should be members of their band?

• (1130)

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I believe that as the consensus between the Native Women's Association and the Assembly of First Nations developed last year, the approach was that the federal Government would have the responsibility for granting Indian status in terms of a general list. People would be eligible for federal Government assistance, but the access to actual membership within Indian bands would be the result of action taken by those bands themselves. I would support that position provided it is in accordance with non-discriminatory rules, so that what is acceptable to men is acceptable to women as well.

Yes, I believe that Indian first nations do have to have some control over their band membership. However, I also believe that the federal Government has a basic responsibility to make funding available to Indian first nations so that they can receive women and their children back into band membership without an increased financial burden.

I hope that when the federal Government introduces this legislation with respect to removing this discrimination, it will not forget that we have an obligation to make funding available so that the entire burden of the change is not put upon the Indian people themselves. It has been said very well that we should not put a dollar tag on justice. That applies to the Indian people as well, that they not hold Indian women up for ransom while waiting until the federal Government pays the appropriate amount of money. They are beginning to recognize that and have moved a long way in that respect, as I am sure the Hon. Member will recognize.

The opposite side of that coin, however, is that we in this House, the federal Government, should not put a dollar tag on justice. We should do everything we can to make sure that the financial resources are available to Indian communities so that they can receive women back into membership without adding to the burden of poverty which, as the Hon. Member knows, is already widespread in most Indian communities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) is rising on a question.

Mr. Fraser: I have a comment and a question, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the Hon. Member's remarks regarding forestry, I am sure the Hon. Member would want to point out that it was a Conservative Government in 1979-1980 that raised the level of the Canadian Forest Service by appointing an assistant deputy minister. The object of that exercise, of course, was to move to departmental status, and since September we have established a Ministry of Forestry, which is a dramatic change from the drift which had been taking place within the federal Government mix.

I always appreciate it when my hon. friend from British Columbia keeps pushing for the very legitimate needs of forestry. I commend him for that. However, I know he would want to recognize that this Party, unlike the former government, has recognized forestry and is moving along the lines which the Hon. Member would wish us to move.

I would ask the Hon. Member, first of all, whether he believes that the problem of the deficit must be addressed. Second, if we were to ask the Hon. Member where he would make the restraint moves which would arrest the rising rate of direct deficit debt and also the very serious problem of the indirect debt, just exactly where would the Hon. Member start?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could we have a short answer from the Hon. Member on that question?

Mr. Manly: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the subject of forestry. I do commend the Government for appointing a Minister of State for Forestry. However, we want to see a full Department which is responsible for forestry instead of its being a poor cousin to the Department of Agriculture and a poor cousin to the Department of the Environment, as it was in the previous government. I believe that forestry, as our number one industry in Canada, deserves a full Department, and I hope the Government will move in that direction very quickly.

With respect to the deficit, of course, we recognize that it is a problem. However, we believe that the fundamental need of Canadians right now is to be put back to work. That is where we thought the Conservatives were going during the election campaign. They were talking about, "jobs, jobs, jobs". They soft-pedalled the deficit. But now we do not hear anything about jobs; we hear about the deficit. We would like to hear a little more from the Government side about jobs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for comments and questions is now over. We shall resume debate.

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, my first comment must be of congratulation to yourself. Just so that the record is clear, I am addressing the Chairman of Committees of the Whole House, commonly known as the Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons. I have known you, Sir, for quite a number of years. I know what a significant role you have played in your province and how you have articulated the concerns and aspirations of your people. I know also of your outstanding achievements in the academic and legal fields. I wish you success, Sir, in your endeavours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: I would also like to say that I was most impressed by the remark of the mover and seconder in reply to the Speech from the Throne. They are two very different people who happen to sit together in the House of Commons. One Hon. Member is from Montreal, and the other Hon. Member is from Sarnia. Sarnia reflects so well what is possible for Canada from a resource development point of view, and Montreal-Mercier is, in many ways, the end product of that. I happen to be very interested in harness racing and I used to go to Richelieu Raceway. I had to pass through the constituency of that young lady of 23 years of age. I know that the people of Montreal-Mercier are going to be well served by that Hon. Member in the days ahead.

I happen to have a very outstanding constituent in my riding. Sometimes she lives in my constituency and sometimes she does not. She originally came from Springhill. Her name is Anne Murray. She has a very nice cottage compound in the Pugwash area of my constituency and she comes and visits with us. She won an award recently for a song about good news and bad news. Well, Sir, I do not know how anyone else feels on Monday morning, but I could hardly believe the news this morning. As a matter of fact, I could hardly believe the news I have heard over the last few days. First, we have a former Prime Minister, who, when he presided over the Liberal Party, watched it being decimated in the provinces until it reached a point where it did not hold a provincial government anywhere in this country. Second, he turned the Party over to another leader at the eleventh hour and watched him lead the Party to another degree of decimation which is hard to comprehend. We then hear that former Prime Minister announce that maybe if he had continued on as the leader of the Liberal Party, it would have won the election. On top of that, the present critic for external affairs is saying that it is too bad the Liberal Party did not select him. Well, he had every opportunity to be selected. He went to a leadership convention where it was decided that the present Leader was preferable. Then that critic goes on, in the footsteps of the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, and says, "If I had been selected, things would have been a lot better for the Liberal Party". All I can say is that with friends like those the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has in the Liberal Party, he does not need any enemies.

If that is not bad enough, this outstanding internationalist, who set his Party up for almost total destruction, is telling the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who led the Progressive Conservative Party to the greatest victory in the history of this nation with the first national government since 1963 at least, that he had better watch the way he is operating. Well, I think I would prefer to have him advising his former Party than advising us, thank you very much.

We have difficult days ahead, Mr. Speaker. In a very courageous statement, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) told Canadians how it really is. There is no smoke and there are no mirrors. It is the real thing, and the Canadian people know it. That is why the Liberal Party sits in the House of Commons with over 100 seats less than they had in 1980. Through total fiscal and monetary irresponsibility, they have led this country into the mess we are in at the moment.

The previous speaker said that we are not talking about jobs. Everything we do at this moment in time is geared to jobs because, unless we get deficit reduction in place, there will be no jobs. All of the money that we take from the taxpayers will go to pay interest on monies borrowed in an attempt to maintain the deficit as it increases from the present $180 billion, to something like $400 billion owing. There is nothing we can do until we get that deficit under control. Working together, the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) have given the signal to Canadians that we are going to put our financial house in order. Flowing from that will be the real, long-term jobs that Canadians aspire to and desire. We are going to ensure that they get them.

The President of the Treasury Board announced a reduction of $154 million in the defence budget. The Liberal Party felt that that was calamitous. The only useful thing that the Liberal Government did from an economic point of view was to reduce the rate of inflation in the country. As a result of that decrease in the rate of inflation and of more realistic purchases by officials in the National Defence Department, a saving of $154 million was effected without interfering in any way with present or future commitments which we have made. Therefore, the Canadian people need not be concerned about the $154 million deficit reduction which was announced by the President of the Treasury Board.

The Speech from the Throne refers to a comprehensive examination of the role of the defence forces in the strategic context of the 1980s. I am happy to say that examination is already under way. I shall be devoting a good deal of my time, as will officials of my Department, to doing what is necessary to ensure that the examination is thorough and that the result is unambiguous. I intend to ask for the co-operation of my colleagues and to draw on the resources of their Departments in this enterprise. That is not all. I shall also be seeking the expert advice and good counsel of individuals and organizations across the country in the pursuit of our objectives. The objective is clear, namely, to clarify the mandate of our military and to give them the resources they need to do their job.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, it would be helpful if I were to say a few words about our point of departure in this examination. There may also be some interest in the sort of question which we will be addressing in the preparation of a paper which I would propose to table for discussion early next year, and which the Government will be answering, following discussion, in a white paper on defence.

One thing that I want to make absolutely clear is that the Government will not be approaching this examination as a means of determining how to do less for the collective defence. There is an unfortunate impression abroad that when a government reviews its position on defence, it is seeking ways to do less. That is not the Government's intention. That is not our way. Rather, we intend to determine how best to ensure that Canada does its fair share to preserve peace in freedom. Our aim is to ensure that Canada's Armed Forces are charged with doing what they can do to the greatest effect in the common defence. Our objective for the forces themselves is to ensure that they are then able to do what we ask of them.

On a number of occasions I have had meetings with the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Jardine). I have had discussions with his Premier and with my officials. We are moving forward to eliminate the problem which exists at this moment in time with regard to Chatham. The Prime Minister made certain commitments prior to and during the election campaign with regard to Chatham. It is my intention to carry through on those commitments.

We should all be proud of the positive role played by our forces in the development of our great nation. We should be proud too of what they are attempting to do to help perserve the way of life that we share with our allies on both sides of the Atlantic.

In the course of the past month I have met with NATO Defence Ministers collectively and individually. In Washington I met with Defense Secretary Weinberger and in London I met with Defense Secretary Heseltine. I received the warmest tributes to the high standards of the Canadian Armed Forces. In all of my meetings with these and other Defence Ministers I affirmed the intention of the Government to maintain those standards, to continue real growth in Canada's defence expenditures, and to give the highest possible priority to increasing the effectiveness of the Canadian Armed Forces in carrying out our commitments within the alliance.

It is against this background of solidarity with our allies and determination to enlarge and improve our co-operation that we shall be conducting the examination of our situation. It is in the light of the need to strengthen our arms in the defence of our values and to strengthen our voice in allied councils that we will be planning for the future. The responsiveness of Canada's defence industrial base in accommodating the production needs of the Canadian forces and those of our allies in times of peace and emergency is a key element of national and collective security.

Interdependence in defence implies and requires interdependence in the economic basis of defence. Therefore, we will want to satisfy ourselves as to the vitality of our partnership with others in bilateral and multilateral defence research, development and production agreements and arrangements.

Beginning on December 3, a briefing team from the Department of Defense in the United States will be travelling across Canada to assist all those who are associated with defence procurement in Canada in finding ways in which they can participate to a greater degree than at the present time in the acquiring of contracts, either prime contracts or subcontracts, with the United States defense establishment firms. That will be of real benefit, not only to our defence industry in Canada, but to our over-all co-operation with the United States.

This is an example of the concrete proposals that flow from the type of meeting that were held with the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States. It is what is called the bread and butter which stems from that type of meeting. It involves the actual jobs that people are talking about which could flow to the various companies in Canada through new defence procurement contracts. It is an indication of our commitment to what we have been proposing.

The agenda for these meetings is as follows: December 3, in Halifax at the Nova Scotian Hotel; December 5, at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel in Montreal; December 7, at the Metropolitan Toronto Conference Centre in Toronto; December 10, in Vancouver at the Harbourside Holiday Inn; December 12, at the Westin Hotel in Calgary; December 13, at the Saskatoon Inn in Saskatoon; and December 14, at the downtown Holiday Inn in Winnipeg.

These meetings to be held across Canada will give all those in the business who are interested in defence procurement an opportunity to understand fully how they can obtain contracts from the United States to make jobs for Canadian in Canada as part of the over-all commitment between Canada and the United States in the field of defence.

However, we must always remember that industrial capacity and economic strength are only partial and imperfect indicators of our ability to serve the cause of peace and security. Our military worth as a partner and ally in the great enterprise to deter aggression and pursue the goal of arms limitations and control is measured in terms of the strength and effectiveness of our Armed Forces. The strength of our Armed Forces is measured in the men and women who can be deployed and in the quality and quantity of the equipment and supplies they have at any given time for their use.

I worry that in the event of hostilities the Canadian Armed Forces might not be sufficiently manned and equipped to carry out the tasks expected of them. Modern warfare—more particularly the deterrents of actions leading to such warfare—demands well trained personnel and reliable, up to date equipment.

The United States strategic defence initiative will also attract our interest. As Hon. Members know, in March of last year, President Reagan unveiled an initiative which, if successful, would fundamentally change the strategic relationship from one of assured destruction to one of defence assisted assured survival. President Reagan called for people, not weapons, to be protected: weapons, not people, were to be threatened.

Dr. Ikle, the American Under-Secretary of Defense for policy, came to Ottawa two weeks ago to discuss strategic defence with me and officials from my Department. During his visit he gave me a most interesting account of the extensive research program on which the United States Government is now embarked to test the feasibility of ballistic missile defences. It is in the sense that the United States is attempting to remove the nuclear sword of Damocles which hangs over all our heads that this effort should be viewed. In all of its ramifications, it is a program of immense interest to my Department, and to Canada, and it is one which we shall want to follow closely in the years ahead.

The Government is determined to meet its responsibilities to the men and women in the Canadian Armed Forces by providing them with the tools they need to carry out their commitments. We will be examining what further capital investment is required to allow timely replacement of obsolete equipment and installations. But we will not allow this to delay work on the replacement program itself. For example, we are making preparations now to enter into contracts with Canadian industry to carry out design definition studies for a second batch of Canadian patrol frigates. The purpose of these studies is to determine any changes needed to the detailed design for the first batch, and will permit the Government to move on to decisions on proceeding with more new jobs as soon as possible.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, of course, we all listened with rapt attention and interest to the comments of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates), as a Member of longstanding and great experience in the House. We were looking forward to seeing which form of gymnastics he would take to explain the apparent and real contradiction between his comments and those of his colleagues in the economic ministries.

I am sad to say that our expectations were sadly disappointed, because I noticed that the defence used by the Minister was to pass very quickly by that very obvious problem he is facing. That problem is that the commitments which he, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and his Party made during the election have been thrown in the face of Canadians and have caused very severe disruption in the planning for the National Defence forces in this country, to say nothing of a major dereliction in the NATO commitments that were made.

I would like the Hon. Minister to speak to some of these contradictions. First, the budget commitment that was made on defence in the last February Budget recommended an expenditure of $9.533 billion on defence in 1985-86. The budget cuts announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will reduce that to $9.37 billion. It is the first time that there will be less than a real 3 per cent growth in defence commitments to NATO. This is from a Minister, a Prime Minister, a foreign Minister and a Government who crossed the country and went abroad saying to NATO allies, "We will do our part". Yet it is the first time since 1979 that we will fall below that 3 per cent real growth commitment.

I believe that the Minister of National Defence owes the House an explanation of how he could make such bald-faced commitments when he was overseas at NATO meetings when he knew full well the plan for major cuts in the expenditures of his Department and therefore knew that he could not, in any way, shape or form, live up to those commitments.

That is bad enough in itself, but let us look at what the Conservative Party said during the election. At that time the Hon. Minister said that beyond the 3 per cent growth there will be a real growth of 6 per cent in spending. We have seen what has happened.

During the election campaign the Leader of his Party said in Vancouver that he knew that the budget deficit would be $34 million. Meanwhile, he had members of his Party, such as the Hon. Minister of National Defence, making other commitments in other parts of the country. If we were not in the House of Commons, one could simply say that that was leaning away far from the truth.

That is the particular question which is really at the heart of this debate, because we believe that the mandate that was established by the Conservative Party was based on commitments like those made by people such as the Minister of National Defence. He crossed the country saying that they would spend more money to buy new uniforms and equipment and make all these changes. Yet the first major action on national defence in this country is a substantial reduction in the commitment. While the Minister is going ahead with a $100 million expenditure for new uniforms, at the same time he will be cutting back on equipment procedures. It is quite clear, Mr. Speaker, that that is a commitment on the A-based budget of the Department, so that over the next five years the actual loss of the Department of National Defence will be something like $770 million. It is not a one-time cut. It is an A-based cut which will reduce the floor upon which defence expenditures are made.

• (1200)

Credulity has its limits, but I thought we would have had some kind of apology. As the Prime Minister asked in the House, "When do we get the mea culpas?" I want to know when we will get an apology from the Minister of National Defence for having made these commitments in the election campaign before our NATO allies. His Minister of Finance pulled the rug out from under him. All he has left is to go back to his office to dye some uniforms blue. The Canadian forces cannot live up to their commitments in NATO and do not have the kind of equipment to which we have committed ourselves when we were in government.

Miss MacDonald: You have to smile at that.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) said I have been in the House for quite some time. I have. I have been in the House so long that I remember exactly how his Party emasculated the Armed Forces.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: It does not make any difference how much the Hon. Member talks. When the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry talks about his Party and what it did to the Armed Forces, the best evidence I can give to him is to tell him that 71 per cent of those in the Armed Forces voted for the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Axworthy: They won't next time.

Mr. Coates: Next time that figure will probably be 100 per cent. Uniforms do not cost $100 million. That is the trouble with the Hon. Member's statistics. The Prime Minister said during the election campaign that the uniforms would cost $36 million. The uniforms will cost $36 million.

Mr. Axworthy: We know how much to trust your word.

Mr. Coates: That is the basic information my officials now give me.

We used to have in this House what we called Paul Martin's Bureau of Statistics. That is what the Hon. Member is coming up with again. The Liberals are the same old gang. They do not know anything about defence except that they emasculated it. They had no credibility internationally or anywhere else. We have credibility and we will maintain that credibility. We will carry out our commitments. Long before the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board came down with their statements, I said to the Canadian people that we would have to carry out the commitments we made to our allies over a longer period of time. I made that statement and I made it very clear. Canadians understand. There may be a delay, for instance, in putting the additional 8,000 people in our Armed Forces in the three-year period—

Mr. Axworthy: Another backing off.

Mr. Coates: —but over the life of this Government, we will get the job done, Mr. Speaker. It is important to go forward, not backward. That is where the Armed Forces were going when the Liberal Party was in office.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: May I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) with a short question, please.

Mr. Axworthy: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. This is the new parliamentary democracy, is it?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of quick questions.

Mr. Axworthy: Muzzling the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of quick questions. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has indicated there will be a cut-back of $154 million in the Department of National Defence. In view of the fact that over 80 per cent of our active personnel in the Armed Forces have served in no other uniform than the green uniform, and in view of the fact that there has been virtually no public discussion of this matter of changing uniforms, except perhaps in the naval element, and as my indication is that there is no real push for a change in colour in uniform for the air and ground elements, would the Minister at this time of restraint and cut-backs right across the board reconsider shelving that change of uniform for the time being and using what extra funds he may have to upgrade equipment on the sea, under the sea, on the ground, or in the air rather than spending money on a change of uniform which, at best, is only tokenism? For the past 16 years all three elements have served in the green uniform and every effort has been made to instil and increase support for those green uniforms.

Because in our spending on NATO commitments, on a per capita basis we are second only to the United States, what did the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) mean in the Throne Speech when he said that, "We will now live up to our NATO commitments"? This spending is extremely high, second to the US, considering our population and our financial resources.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Minister for a short answer, please.

Mr. Coates: I appreciate your concern about time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Axworthy: He wants to get out of here because he is so embarrassed.

Mr. Coates: It is Monday morning, obviously. I think I read in the newspaper that the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) announced, shortly after the government changed and I was appointed Minister of National Defence and said that there would be distinctive uniforms for the elements in the Armed Forces, that he supported that move. Now the Hon. Member is asking me to delay it. I want to give him the assurance that that will not be delayed. We are moving forward with distinctive uniforms for the three elements in the Armed Forces.

Second, I do not know where the Hon. Member's statistics come from, maybe from other members of his Party. I realize that the Hon. Member for Brant is rather supportive of our position in NATO, unlike other members of his Party who are opposed to it and who want us to leave, as with NORAD. I hope the Hon. Member can be a helpful guide to his colleagues as to where they are going. I want to say to the Hon. Member, however, that I do not believe we are second only to the United States in expenditures. Maybe we are second from the bottom.

Mr. Axworthy: You are putting us there.

Mr. Coates: I think maybe only Luxembourg contributes less than Canada. That is the problem with the Liberal Party. They play this Paul Martin statistics game so that Canadians do not really know just exactly where we are. We will see that our commitments to NATO are honoured. As far as I know they are not being honoured at this point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has now been completed. We shall continue with debate.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Brant has a question of privilege.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I want to put the record straight. My response to a change in the colour of the uniforms came before the economic statement, not after it.

Miss MacDonald: He said that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) knows, that is not a question of privilege. We shall now resume debate. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) just pointed out very clearly—a surprise to all of us—that there was quite a difference in the country after the economic statement because, for the first time, we had the truth revealed to Canadians so that they knew where this nation was. Changes have to be made. Some things will have to be delayed a few months, but before the end of this Government's term, Hon. Members will have quite a respect for those promises.

Mr. Axworthy: What did you say during the election campaign?

Mr. Thacker: I rise to support the Throne Speech which, as you know, Mr. Speaker, does set some genuine new directions for Canada. It sets forth a process that by April, 1985, will let Canadians know the absolute truth as to what the previous administration, in conjunction with its NDP allies, has done to this country.

Mr. Axworthy: It will be right-wing, reactionary and backwards.

Mr. Thacker: For the first time we have had an element of reality set forth in the Throne Speech that is truly refreshing.

Mr. Axworthy: It is really progressive. All those training programs cut. It is good stuff.

• (1210)

Mr. Thacker: It gives real hope to young people that they too will be able to play an active role in the country. If our predecessors during the 1920s, 1930s or 1940s had done to the nation what the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party did to the country in the last 15 years, we would not have the wealth, privilege and financial position we experience today. It is because they were prudent in their activities in public life that we have risen to be a powerful nation in the world. This was almost dissipated by the Liberal-NDP coalition. This is why they fill some seven rows across the way, and only seven rows. They were lucky to get that.

Before debating the Throne Speech in greater detail, I should like to congratulate you, the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House. I know the people of Edmonton North are proud of your accomplishments over many years. You bring great honour not only to yourself and your family but to the people of Edmonton North. I would say the same to the Speaker, the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley), and to the Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees of the Whole House. I am sure the electorate of Verchères is indeed proud of the high office to which their new Member has acceded. I say the same to the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest). It is truly great to see the institution of government having representatives from all across this grand country of ours. Your roles are absolutely indispensable to the public life of our country. It will take much of your time. I know you will not be able to serve your constituents in the same detail as you have before, but I am sure they will understand.

Also I congratulate all new Members sitting in the House today. After they have been here for a few months and a few years, they will come to love the country as you and I do, Mr. Speaker. They will see the great strength and capacity in being a civilized superpower in the world. I am sure they are beginning to appreciate just how difficult it is to be a Member of Parliament in Canada. They are beginning to realize how difficult it is to have two homes and never sure whether they are in one or the other. When they go to the closet to find a suit, they realize that it is in the closet in their riding, or vice versa. I am sure they are beginning to wane somewhat under the strain of long hours. The job of a Member of Parliament involves three or almost four full-time jobs—one being that of an ombudsman who solves many constituency problems. It is virtually a full-time job to be a Member in the House who has to participate in debates and to develop a feel for the life of Parliament, which in itself is a fascinating and exciting place to be. Of course it is a full-time job being a member of your own political Party and forming part of the political process and development of policy within that Party, as well as having to speak to Canadians across the land. Also I am sure they are beginning to appreciate that the number one problem with which we all struggle—and it will always be an ongoing problem—is the attempt to balance very honest and legitimate but different views of people.

When I came rolling in from Lethbridge-Foothills to stand in the caucus and in the House, I pointed out the views of the people in my riding, whether they were on bilingualism, metrication or capital punishment. I found that even members of my own Party, such as Members from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia or Ontario, stood with an entirely different view. I realized that we were coming into a balancing act. There will be harsh words in the House, in our caucuses and among the Parties. However, this Parliament and its committees is the place where the balancing act has to take place. We should do battled here verbally; civilly if we can but we will do battle nonetheless. If we fail here, the people have no recourse but to go into the streets. Of the 160 countries in the world, about 130 have to settle their disputes on the streets without ultimate sovereignty lying with the people. This makes us realize what a fantastic place this is. There are only about 30 countries of the world wherein the true sovereignty lies with the people.

The election of 1984 was an incredible statement in favour of our way of life—true democracy. The people were able to achieve an enormous change. I realize that they were slow to reach the point of anger and that it took a lot, as the previous government showed. For 16 years it was able to fool some of the people all the time and all the people a little of the time. Finally, people realized that their basic sovereighty was a stake if they put the Liberals and the NDP back in for another term. They rose and went to the ballot box.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member be willing to correct the facts in what he just said? He said, "if they put the Liberals and the NDP back in" office. The Hon. Member knows quite clearly, while it is his own rhetoric to throw the Liberals and the NDP into the same bed—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Keeper: Stick to the facts.

Mr. Thacker: Again the NDP relies on these little legalisms that it has a separate Party. Canadians themselves know that it was the NDP which put the Liberals back in, that it likes those deficits—

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member should stick to the truth. The truth is that the New Democratic Party never has been, never will be, and is not in any coalition with the Liberal Party. Consequently, I think the Hon. Member should stick to the truth and stay with that kind of situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to say that the Hon. Member should be careful in what he is saying. I bring to his attention that that is debate, not a point of order.

Mr. Keeper: It is a question of truth.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I suppose most mistresses are always annoyed with the position they hold in society. They would rather be the wife, but a mistress they are and a mistress they shall remain, I am afraid.

I would like to set forth my own view. Perhaps it will offer some advice to new Members. I know they are working hard and will continue to do so. During all that hard work, they should continue to see government as a whole. They should sit in the House and learn its fascinating life. More than anything, the Throne Speech set forth that this was a time of reconciliation and reconstruction across the country. In order to achieve this, new Members would be well advised to spend a lot of time travelling, to use those very generous tickets which taxpayers provide. They should go to Newfoundland to get to know the people; they should go out to British Columbia to get to know the people. When they have done so, they will have seen the regions which send colleagues and other Members to the House. I assure them that their love for the country and Canadian people will grow immensely after having seen people in their own environments. Then they will understand what they say.

They will appreciate more and more that when a Member from Newfoundland stands, he or she speaks from the unique and dynamic cultural background which the people of Newfoundland have developed over hundreds of years. Likewise for us from the Prairies because, while we may be only the third generation, there was a great experiment on the Prairies when people came from many countries throughout the world. We were thrown together with different languages and different cultures. Initially we tried to protect our languages and cultures. When faced with a prairie winter, when it was 40 below and the wind was blowing the colour of eyes of your neighbour, their skin or the language they spoke did not matter. We were locked into a battle against the elements. As a result, we were pulled together into a communal effort. Sons and daughters then naturally fell in love with each other and, as a result, the country was immensely enhanced.

The real advantage of travel is that one can no longer depersonalize the people of another region. When Hon. Members like myself travel home, they hear from a small part of their ridings, that 1 per cent or 2 per cent we call the bigots. It makes us shudder when we realize the extent to which they depersonalize people in other parts of the country. I think Hon. Members will find that their biggest job will be to speak out against the local myths and against that very small part of the population that we call bigots. I find even in my own riding that I am forever attending meetings at which I have to stand up and say: "No, I am sorry, you are simply wrong, my friend. Your view of the people of Ontario is wrong, your view of the people of Newfoundland is wrong". It is important for new Members to have the courage to be able to stand up to their own people and point out that they are wrong. They should have the courage to say: "I have been in other parts of the country. I know the people from Quebec and I know the people from Newfoundland. They are not as you describe them". Members will soon find that they will spend quite a bit of their time doing that.

The Throne Speech is the first of three new major changes in this country. It certainly sets a tone of civility and a tone of national reconstruction both economically and politically. That element of co-operation between the governments will pay off in the long run. The hard truth of the matter is that over the last 15 years, while we as a people and as elected Members have spent so much of our emotional energy and vitality fighting each other, whether it be federal-provincial, Francophone-Anglophone or East-West fights, the rest of the world has been passing us by. When we look now with fresh eyes at the international scene, we find that Asia is coming on strong with its high technology. If we do not get onstream, Mr. Speaker, we will be left behind for many, many years. Our children and grandchildren will not have the future we would want them to have.

The second major change forecast by the Throne Speech was the economic statement. I would like to begin my discussion of that statement by thanking the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) because, for the first time, this country has been faced with an economic statement that is truly honest, truly frank and has the courage to ask the tough questions. The difference between a successful country and an unsuccessful country is that the successful country will face reality. For 15 years, we have been trying to deny the reality of the developing Third World. Third World countries have large populations and their literacy level is rising. These countries want to participate in world affairs and they will participate in world affairs. The previous government simply denied that fact and, as a result, Canadians are now paying the price.

A classic example of this relates to the energy policy. When the OPEC nations put up the price of energy, different countries reacted in different ways. The Liberal régime that was running this country denied that reality and indicated that it would take taxpayers' dollars and continue to subsidize energy so that Canadians would not have to face reality. That indication sent signals to Canadians to continue to buy big cars and to the automobile manufacturing industry to continue to produce big cars. Initially, the same thing happened in the United States. Meanwhile, Japan, Germany and the other countries that followed that price increase turned their best brains to designing new cars that were more efficient and lighter. Eight years later, those countries are selling cars here in Canada and our automobile industry is on the ropes. Finally, we had to face the reality. Energy prices began to rise. Our scientists are just as bright as the scientists in those other countries, and our inventive genius is just as bright as the inventive genius in those other countries. Now North American cars are beginning to compete and will compete more and more.

The basic point I am trying to make is that the Government tried to deny the reality of the world. As a result, Canadians are worse off today. We are having to struggle from behind rather than being a leader. Another example of this deals with research and particularly with research in the agricultural sector. This country was once a world pacesetter and leader in developing new varieties and species of crops. As a result, we became an enormous exporter of those crops. During the last 15 years, however, under the Liberal régime, that research and development has dropped behind. How do we get caught up? We would like to have a plant breeders' rights statute implemented so that people can develop new varieties of crops again. Some Parties and church groups are opposed to the introduction of that statute. This is simply a way of condemning the country to being always behind in research and development. The Government has not put enough money into research and development and will not put enough money into research and development because it is in debt for so many other reasons.

The Minister of Finance performed a truly valuable service to this country. The next period of consultation between the federal and provincial governments and between business and labour will culminate next April in a real budget speech. At that time, the true direction of this country will be set and we will return to creating genuine wealth.

There is no doubt that the primary issue to be dealt with at this moment is the national debt and the deficit. If any of us need any further proof of that, we simply need to look at the statistics of a mere 10 years ago. In 1974-75, 16.6 per cent of our GNP was taken up by the net debt. A mere 10 years later, in 1984-85, that percentage rose from 16.6 per cent to 45.2 per cent of the GNP being taken up by the net debt. That tells us, Mr. Speaker, that the percentage is rising at a geometric rate.

Soon we will be no better off than the Third World countries, because the percentage of the tax revenue that goes to service the debt is the real bottom line issue. What is happening is that more and more of the results of the sweat and toil of our people is being taken off right at the top in order to pay interest on the debt. This money is being paid to people who already have wealth. The point is, Mr. Speaker, that if you had $1 million, there is no way you would invest it in a plant or business in this country, because you could sit back, lend it to the Government and receive an absolutely guaranteed rate of return with no risk. The rich are becoming fabulously rich.

When looking at the history of Third World countries, we find that often they went through the same process. All of the wealth was being concentrated into very few hands. There was a small group of people with immense wealth and a huge lower class with no wealth at all. That is what is happening in this country, and we must stop that.

I am always struck by the irony of comparing the New Democratic Party with the Progressive Conservative Party. I suspect that proportionately, more people of wealth belong to the PC Party than the NDP. Yet it is members of the PC Party who are saying that this concentration of wealth is wrong. They are saying that we must stop that deficit so that the rich, many of whom are members of the PC Party, cannot continue to become filthy rich. However, members of the NDP who claim to stand up for the poor, the old and disadvantaged are arguing for a larger deficit and do not seem to make the connection that that deficit hurts their people far more, particularly in the longrun, than does facing reality. I have always been struck by that irony.

We tried an experiment 200 years ago. Prior to that, we were all ruled by kings and decisions were made by a small bureaucracy. People were serfs on the land. We then tried a wonderful experiment of letting people own property individually. We let them work hard on their own land so that they could be better off and so that their children could be better off. In that 200 years, we in the western world have created a wealth that is unprecedented. Even the poor in our society today are better off than the kings, queens and monarchs were 250 years ago. Yet we have had an intrusion on that right to property and an instrusion on the right of a person to create a business and do well. Who is leading that challenge against the right to property? It is members of the NPD. When we wanted to have entrenched in the Constitution the right to individual ownership of property, they fought it. The Grits had accepted that amendment on a Friday—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): The provincial Premiers fought, and they were all Tories. Come on now. Stick to the facts.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, we cannot get around the fact that members of the Conservative Party proposed an amendment to the Constitution which Members of the Liberal Party accepted on a Friday. The Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) rose on Saturday and said that if we wanted his support on the Constitution, we should take out the right to property. Liberal Members returned on Monday and took out the amendment entrenching the right to property—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Property rights are provincial.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. Questions and comments?

• (1230)

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member earlier made the claim that the NDP is arguing for larger deficits. We are arguing that the burden should be fairly shared. The economic statement of the Government continues to put the financial burden on moderate and low-income people. If the Hon. Member wants very wealthy Canadians to share in the burden, when is his Government going to take concrete steps and bring in, for example, a minimum income tax, which his Leader indicated during the campaign the Party was interested in doing.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. colleague opposite that there will be a more fair tax system. As he well knows, the so-called progressive income tax system captures less than 50 per cent of the tax revenues. In actual fact, over 50 per cent of the revenues which flow into the Consolidated Revenue Fund are from sales taxes and direct taxes on people, which is highly regressive and detrimental to the disadvantaged in Canada. Within the progressive income tax system itself, the deductions and exemptions accrue to the benefit of people with vast amounts of wealth, rather than those of moderate incomes. With respect to on this review, I am hoping that the Hon. Member will stand and say that we have to move, for example, in the area of family allowance. People receive direct family allowances, but the income tax system brings back less than 50 per cent of that expenditure, even for the highest wage earners. Perhaps something should be done in that area. If we look at the tax deduction under the Income Tax Act, people who are wealthy receive a reduction of $710, however, poor people cannot receive a deduction because they do not have taxable incomes. Surely we can move in that area. Why can we not have members of the NDP suggesting some of those things? I always hear them arguing against cuts, even the cuts proposed by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). The NDP is fighting those individual cuts, but we have to start somewhere. I believe that in the document entitled: "A New Direction for Canada", the proper questions have been asked. I would like members of the NDP to respond to that document.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am provoked into making a small comment, because it happened, as this debate was taking place, that I was reading a background paper from the National Anti-Poverty Organization, which deals with many of the questions the Hon. Member has just raised. If the Hon. Member truly believes that doing away with universality is going to help the poor people in this country, he must deal with the fact that an organization such as NAPO, which represents those people, says that it would, in fact, hurt poor people more. Why is it that a group which stands up for poor people seems to take a contrary view to that of the Hon. Member?

Second, I believe a comment is required on the point raised with respect to the deficit. I think one has to ask the Hon. Member, where does he get the statistics that indicate it is the rich people in Canada who are benefiting from the deficit? As he well knows, the great bulk of the Canadian deficit is financed through Canada savings bonds. As well, I am sure he knows that there is a limit of $25,000 on individual investments in Canada savings bonds. When we are talking about the deficit, we are talking about a system in which the savings of people, which would otherwise be lost to our society, are recycled through government into expenditures to keep the economy going. In order to make up for that fact, in Canada we have a personal savings rate which is at least 2.5 times that of the U.S. It is a very high savings rate which must be offset by governments in Canada. Without that, the unemployment rate would be significantly higher. As a result, four or five years in the future our deficit would be greater. My analysis and that of my Party about why the economic statement is moving in the wrong direction is not that it tries to reduce the deficit now, but that the actions being taken will lead to a much higher deficit in the future. Justice happened in Britain and the Netherlands when they followed the policy of tax increases and expenditure reductions to deal with their deficits.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the latter comments made by the Hon. Member, I would like to spend some time with him because they could very well be true. Four years in the future we could be in a worse situation. However, we know that the prior system—in which government borrowings got larger and larger and the government tried to redistribute the savings of Canadians—was not working. The deficit was growing larger and the amount of tax revenue required to service that debt was growing larger.

The real key is jobs. If we can change the climate in the country and improve investment so that rather than buying a Canada savings bond people will buy stocks in a company or invest money in a plant which is manufacturing a product that can be exported, Canadians will then have real jobs rather than temporary jobs. It is a great experiment. There is no guarantee that it will work. But if we can create the proper business climate to obtain investment, plants and jobs, I believe it will work.

With respect to universality, the Hon. Member indicated that he believes universality helps the poor. I do not know how that can be when statistics show that the welfare system benefits people who are richer and the deductions help them rather than the poor. I think the real objection is to the means test, which was brought in at a time when the tax system was not as sophisticated. I believe that it is possible to use the income tax system to redistribute money to people who are genuinely poor, rather than using the means test. I do not want to see my constituents, relatives or friends being required to sit before a bureaucrat to list their assets and debts and to explain how they live. None of us is interested in that. When we speak of getting away from universality, we are not talking about a debilitating and humiliating means test. However, we can use those creative measures which have developed since the 1930s, for example, the income tax system. I am sure, if we were to put our minds together, we could come up with something which would genuinely redistribute wealth to the poor and at the same time provide flexibility and creativity so that the people who want to take a risk will be adequately compensated.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member went through a long description of the economic plans of the Government to have massive consultations between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premiers, and to have an economic summit. It sounded as though the Government would not be bringing down a budget until late next spring. In the meantime, important commitments were made in the election campaign, especially with respect to the agricultural sector which is facing bankruptcies increasing from something like 400 this year to possibly 1,000 or 1,700 next year. The Conservative Party indicated in the election campaign that it was going to decrease interest rates to current day interest rates; that it was going to establish review boards for young farmers who are facing bankruptcy; and that there would be other initiatives, like those in the United States, where farmers have a "set aside" provision.

Does the Hon. Member really think it is fair to those producers of agriculture that they must wait through this fall, through this winter and perhaps until a budget in the spring until some action is taken? It seems to me there are urgent matters out there, yet there is no legislation on the Order Paper to deal with them. There are commitments made. It is not up to the Opposition to propose legislation; it is up to the Government. I believe the Government should bring in this legislation. It campaigned, on the issue of lowering interest rates, to have review committees. It seems to me that if we move expeditiously now, this legislation could be in place before Christmas to the benefit of the agricultural community which is facing such a difficult time. I would just like to ask the Hon. Member, why does the Government not do that instead of leaving everything until a budget next April or May, or whenever?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure my hon. friend from Algoma that the Government has moved, is moving, and will continue to move. It will do many things between now and the budget process in April. For example, the very first move of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) was to go to Regina and commit the Government to $60 million in order to help the livestock producers who are in trouble because of the drought on the Prairies. That was fast action.

Mr. Axworthy: That was our program, though.

Mr. Foster: That was already approved by the Treasury Board.

Mr. Thacker: But if the Grits had been in power, we cannot be sure it would have happened, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I am sorry but the period for questions and answers has been terminated. Before I recognize the next speaker, there is a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon).

Mr. McKinnon: I intended this to be a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It concerns an interjection by the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) with respect to Canada's position in NATO and our contributions toward defence. If I heard correctly, the Hon. Member said that Canada, on a per capita basis, was in second place. I believe he was supported by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) in that outburst. I would ask the Hon. Member if he could be more explicit and tell us where he got his reference. I am looking at The Military Balance for 1984-1985, which was received in the parliamentary Library as recently as three weeks ago. It shows the contributions and comparisons of defence expenditures for the nations of NATO. Under the heading "Dollars Per Capita (in American funds)" it shows Canada in tenth place. In total budget, Canada is shown in sixth place. In percentage of government spending, Canada is in ninth place. In percentage of the Gross National Product—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. That is not really a point of order. I recognize the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) as the next speaker.

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by congratualting you on your appointment as Acting Speaker of the House of Commons. I have been most impressed with your firm deliberations and sense of fairness during the first two weeks of this Parliament. Hon. Members from both sides of this House have cause to be proud of their new Speaker. I wish you every success in discharging your new responsibilities.

May I also take this opportunity to congratulate the "Class of '84", my newly elected fellow Members of Parliament. As has been said, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth". My congratulations as well to all of the re-elected Members of the House of Commons.

Before I begin my remarks, I would like to extend my sincerest appreciation to the residents of York South-Weston for their expression of faith in my candidacy and for placing their trust and confidence in me on September 4. I am proud and honoured to be their Member of Parliament. I give to my constituents, Mr. Speaker, my solemn pledge that I will faithfully discharge my responsibilities with integrity, honesty and thoughtfulness. I will devote my full and complete energies to the task of working not only for the best interests of my constituents but for the best interests of Canadians from coast to coast. It has often been said that a Canadian can enjoy no higher honour than to be selected by his fellow citizens to represent them in this House of Commons. I wholeheartedly believe this to be true.

I feel a very special debt of gratitude to all of those who have devoted their time and energy and who have worked so very hard on my election campaign. I am here because of them and I shall always remember and cherish their generosity and friendship. Please permit me as well, Mr. Speaker, to thank some very special people in my life, my family, especially my parents and sisters and brothers, for all their devotion, love and hard work.

I would also like to acknowledge my predecessor, the former Member of Parliament for York South-Weston, Mrs. Ursula Appolloni, who served the riding with distinction for ten years. Her work in Parliament reflected her deep commitment to our country. Many Hon. Members of this House will recall that York South-Weston was represented previous to Mrs. Appolloni by the former Leader of the New Democratic Party, the late David Lewis. There is little I can add to what has been said many times about Mr. Lewis's great contribution to Canada and to Parliament. Suffice it to say that I am honoured to continue the work of two distinguished and dedicated parliamentarians.

I understand it is traditional, Mr. Speaker, for a new Member of Parliament to describe the riding he or she represents for the benefit of Hon. Members. The riding of York South-Weston is an urban riding in the west part of Metropolitan Toronto. It can be described as a multicultural working class riding. The proportion of people who describe their country of origin as being other than British or French comprises 53 per cent of the population of York South-Weston. There is a significant Italian community in my riding of which I am a proud member. In fact, 11,000 of my constituents list Italian as their mother tongue. I might add at this point, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian-Italian community is honoured to have elected to Parliament six Italian Canadians—five Liberals and a Conservative—the most ever in Canadian political history.

There are many nationalities from every corner of the globe in York South-Weston, including people from Europe, the Middle East, Asia and the sub-continent. There is as well a high proportion of new Canadians. Between 1965 and 1978 some 20,000 individuals from other countries decided to make their home within the boundaries of my riding. These new Canadians work side by side with the native born in companies such as Cooper Sports Equipment, Levy Brothers Machinery, Kodak of Canada, Canada Packers and Pepsi-Cola, to name just a few. Although there are cultural, linguistic and racial differences, both new and old Canadians regard Canada as the land of opportunity. Through their hard work and sacrifice they are determined to build a better life for themselves and their families.

My parents immigrated to Canada in the early 1950s and settled in Revelstoke, British Columbia, which happens to be my home town. For them, indeed, Canada was the land of opportunity. They worked hard, they sacrificed and they built a better life for themselves and for their seven children. Canada gave them the opportunity as it gave it to many other immigrants.

There are also many senior citizens in York South-Weston, people who have made this country what it is today. In our deliberations we must never forget the observation of historian Arnold Toynbee that a society's quality and durability can best be measured "by the respect and care given its elderly citizens". One of the most ennobling duties of government is to ensure that the elderly are accorded the dignity and security they so richly deserve.

As one of the youngest Members of this House, I am a product of the 1960s and 1970s, an era which saw incredible upheaval and change: Vietnam, the "hippie movement", student demonstrations, Watergate, and political assassinations. It was also an era which witnessed a strong undercurrent of idealism. The Kennedys and Martin Luther King challenged humanity with a vision of decency and brotherhood which we have yet to realize. Their dreams must never die and our efforts for a better world must never cease. As John Kennedy said, "We are not here to curse the darkness but to light the candle that can guide us through the darkness to a safe and sane future".

Kennedy once described himself as an idealist without illusions. As part of a new generation of Liberals, I share these sentiments. Liberals understand the power of idealism and that government can and must be used as an instrument for moral progress. Government must be fair and compassionate. It must be quick to respond to the needy in society. It must be the protectorate of our democratic institutions and the advocate of individual rights and freedoms. Caring for the disadvantaged in our society, the sick, the disabled, the poor, the unemployed, the elderly, increasing opportunities for women and our young people and sharing with the less fortunate in our society is the Liberal legacy. This is the tradition of Canadian liberalism, a tradition fostered by Laurier and continued by King, St. Laurent, Pearson, Trudeau and now Turner. It has been this leadership, during this century, that has guided Canada to its place as one of the most humane and decent societies anywhere in the world.

But, Mr. Speaker, Liberals are also realists. We are pragmatists. We are without illusions as to what can and cannot be done by government. We understand that it is the individual who, through initiatives and sacrifice, is the source of our economic strength and the engine of growth. We, as Liberals, fight to correct abuses and injustices within our society. Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere. We in the Liberal Party, now Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, intend to live by this philosophy over the course of the Thirty-third Parliament because we are the Party of reform.

The Speech from the Throne that began this Parliament is certainly a most important document. As Hon. Members opposite know only too well, a Conservative Government in this country is a rare bird indeed and one that seldom, if ever, learns to fly. Conservative Throne speeches, as a result, are such rare documents that Canadians had a right to expect much more from this one. Traditionally the Speech from the Throne affords a Government the opportunity to translate its election promises into a blueprint for legislative action.

If the recent Throne Speech is any indication, however, that tradition has suffered a serious setback. The Throne Speech repeated some of the Conservative election promises. It also spoke of re-introducing many important Liberal initiatives from the last Parliament. However, it did not reveal any substantive description of how the Government intends to follow through on its campaign commitments.

I concede the fact that Throne Speeches are, by their very nature, general. But this document is so vague and contains so few specifics, that it truly lacks any substance or depth. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it gives Canadians a very poor reference point from which to judge Tory promises against Tory action. Tory action to date is diametrically opposed to Tory election promises. The Tories made many promises during the election campaign, a number of which were irresponsible, in my view.

There were to be tens of thousands of jobs just as soon as a new government was sworn in. Where are they? We are still waiting. There was to be an open and accessible government. Where is it? It is nowhere to be found. They promised hope to our young people. Instead, they exacerbated the despair and snuffed any light of hope that existed. The list of broken promises goes on and on.

It will soon become abundantly clear as the honeymoon fades that the Tories have hoodwinked the Canadian electorate. Canadians have been seriously jilted by the Conservative Party, and I would submit, Mr. Speaker, with fraudulent intent. In their thirst for power the Tories were either innocently naive or deliberately dishonest with Canadians. Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the integrity of politicians is so often called into question?

The Throne Speech is virtually silent on how the Government actually intends to pursue solutions to Canada's problems. We are promised consultations, studies, task forces, talk and more talk, when what we need is action.

It is obvious from the Throne Speech that the Tories really do not know what they are doing. They really do not know what to do about our greatest problem, namely unemployment. Astonishingly, one of their first acts as a government was an economic statement that will have the effect of increasing, not decreasing, the unemployment roles. The Government must address the tragedy of unemployment and must do so quickly. The unemployed cannot wait for the off chance that the private sector will create much-needed jobs.

The Conservatives have put their blind faith in the free enterprise system and in the private sector creating jobs. Let us not forget that business is in business to create profit, not jobs. A corporation has no moral conscience to create jobs. It has no obligation to our unemployed. But government must and does have an obligation toward those who want to work but cannot.

Government is in business for people. We are not running a railroad. Government is not judged by its balance sheet, but rather by the way it treats its people, by the way it cares, and by its sense of justice. The Tory paranoia and pre-occupation with the deficit will only serve to create more serious hardships for those who have already suffered and for those who are less able to care for themselves. I agree, Mr. Speaker, that the Government must be fiscally responsible, but let it not be morally irresponsible. Let us manage the deficit; let us not have the deficit manage us.

The question of unemployment and what the Government has done so far leads naturally into a further discussion of broken promises. One promise that tops the broken promises list and goes right to the heart of the new Government's credibility is the promise of open government. The Tory election campaign handbook says, "We will run an open, honest and accountable national Government". It adds that a new Tory Government would be "open to public scrutiny". The handbook says that Liberals have denied Canadians legitimate access to Government. It says that the Liberal Party has refused to release Government information, and it reports that Liberals have restricted access to Government records despite freedom of information legislation.

This Parliament is not yet three weeks old and already the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has publicly repudiated directions he had issued for open government when he was Prime Minister. A severe and totally unwarranted muzzle has been placed on public servants in their dealings with the press. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) has warned colleagues that if they talk to journalists, their jobs could be in danger. Ministers' staffs are not responding to legitimate questions from reporters. There have been thwarted moves to suppress news releases from private organizations. If this is the "New Ottawa", I will take the old one any day. Parliament is truly becoming Orwell's Animal Farm under the Conservative Government.

Let us look at some of the other promises. During the election campaign the Prime Minister constantly praised Liberal social programs and medicare, calling them "a sacred trust" and pledging never to tamper with the concept of universality. Within days of this Parliament's opening, the backtracking started. Now he says all programs are under review.

The deficit is another case in point. During the election campaign, in August as a matter of fact, the Prime Minister said that the deficit was not an overriding priority. Because of the need to create jobs quickly, he could envision some increase in the deficit. Then he reversed himself in the Throne Speech by saying that an immediate and substantial cut would have to be made in the deficit in order to produce jobs. Now he is saying, based on a speech given in Toronto last week, that even if the deficit is cut, unemployment will remain high.

The question of broken promises is an important one, especially concerning the economy, but an even more important question was raised by an economic analyst in a recent column when he asked, "Does the Mulroney Government really know what it is doing?" I will leave that judgment to the Canadian public, Mr. Speaker.

Let us look at some of the other promises. In October the Secretary of State for External Affairs, repeating a campaign pledge, said at the United Nations that our Government intends to maintain Canada's commitment to reach by 1990 7 per cent of the Gross National Product in official development assistance. Several weeks thereafter, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) embarrassed the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and embarrassed Canada, by saying that the commitment made by Mr. Clark would have to be deferred until 1995. This Government's right hand does not know what its other right hand is doing, Mr. Speaker.

What about some of the other election promises? During the election campaign the Tories cried crocodile tears for the unemployed youth of the country. In Pocket Politics, their campaign bible, the Tories said, "We believe that all levels of government and the private sector face a major task in resolving the tragic youth unemployment situation".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

SPORTS

CANADIAN FOOTBALL LEAGUE—1984 GREY CUP GAME—A HAMILTON VIEWPOINT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, Sunday afternoon was a time of mixed emotions. For 15 somewhat euphoric minutes, the Tiger Cats of Hamilton outmuscled, outclassed, and outplayed the Winnipeg Blue Bombers. Oh, that football were a 15-minute exercise! What was by any standard a glorious event, with the passage of time turned into a bit of a nightmare for some, but not all.

As the voices of the stout hearts from Hamilton grew silent, the exuberance of the Winnipeg faithful grew in intensity. The best of the West drove on and in, pushing aside the protesting warriors from the East, until at last, with one final blast, it ended.

After 22 years I suppose we in the steel city must steel ourselves, smile a bit bravely, pretend it does not hurt, and recall, as some sort of solace, that it is only a game. We want to congratulate, of course, the winners from Winnipeg, and say with as much conviction as possible—

Mr. Speaker: Up until now we have been well within form, but when we get to congratulations we are leaving the form of statements under Standing Order 21.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I almost had to put that in. I want to say to the winners in Winnipeg: "Wait until next year!", and to Harold Ballard: "On with the Maple Leafs!"

NATIONAL REVENUE

CANCELLATION OF NORTH YORK TAX CENTRE PROJECT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the Government's great urge to cut, cut, cut, it has once again forgotten about people needs and people concerns.

Just recently the Government announced the cancellation of a $58 million tax centre to be built in the city of North York. Government representatives were quoted as saying that it was part of a move to trim the construction budget. Well, it appeared that they used a machete to do their trimming.

This unfortunate trim means that the City of North York will lose $1 million in tax revenues. It will mean a loss of 3,000 jobs, 1,000 full-time and 2,000 part-time. It will also mean a loss of hundreds upon hundreds of jobs that would have been created in the construction sector. It means the loss for North York citizens of the many services that were to be theirs. The City had approved the rezoning of the 20-acre, 42,000 square foot complex. Everything was in place. However, in one fell swoop we lost jobs, services, and civic pride.

This is the sad reflection of an insensitive, unilateral, job losing cut-back that looks only at statistics rather than to the people behind those statistics.

I therefore ask the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) to reverse this unfortunate decision and give credibility to the expectations that he created for the Department of Revenue when he was in opposition.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

CALL FOR FREE VOTE ON RESTORATION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in light of yet another police killing in Ontario last week, how long can we as legislators ignore this horror? Constable Miller's funeral is probably being held this very minute in Matheson, Ontario.

Are we behind our law enforcement officers, or not? Parliamentary waffling on this issue is a vote of non confidence for Canadian policemen. They spend every waking hour protecting us, yet we refuse to reciprocate.

Murder statistics in this country would be much higher were it not for great advances in medicine over recent years. In order to get a true picture of the occurrence of such crimes we must look closely at attempted murder statistics as well.

I am aware that there are two private Members' Bills in the works which advocate capital punishment. Instead, the Government should introduce a Bill allowing a free vote in the near future. This matter is far too important to put on the backburner.

I believe calling for a vote is a direct reflection of the public sentiment which is, after all, our mandate. Any confidence that we can give our policemen should be granted immediately. If the reconstitution of capital punishment saves the life of just one policeman, we shall have fulfilled our duties as elected officials. We must end this political delinquence now.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE—EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, among those affected by the cuts announced by the Government are 84 people who will lose their jobs in the Canadian Wildlife Service, which employs 384 across the nation. This means a cut of almost 25 per cent. They are highly trained biologists, technicians, and office workers.

If these jobs are terminated next spring, urgent work on the environment will be abandoned. The affected projects include the study of toxics in the Great Lakes, the tracing of toxic contamination in gull eggs, the tracing of many forms of toxic contamination in wildlife habitat, the management of endangered species, the tracking of the movement of wildlife by way of radio collars, the effects of budworm spray on wildlife and songbirds, and many other projects. Does the Government expect these people to find employment within provincial government wildlife services and, if not, does it expect them to find employment abroad?

INDUSTRY

FIVE-YEAR FOOTWEAR IMPORT RESTRAINT PROGRAM ADVOCATED

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, for some time the Canadian footwear industry has been consistently seeking a comprehensive and effective period of import relief to allow it the time to invest in new emerging technologies. Consequently, reliable restraints on footwear imports will be needed for a full five-year period if the Canadian industry is to survive as a productive and efficient industry fulfilling its potential to maintain Canadian jobs.

The restraint programs since 1980 have all been for short periods, and very spasmodic. For example, there has been a temporary termination of the leather footwear quota for one year, followed by its restoration for two and one-half years, and now a 16-month extension. These periods have seriously impeded the progress of the footwear manufacturing industry when viewed in the context of the investment process.

The industry is looking for something that is tangible and concrete—a period of reliable footwear import restraint. Therefore I call upon the Government to address itself to this serious problem, and make a positive decision which would significantly help safeguard the thousands of jobs in the Canadian footwear industry which are now in danger of being lost.

UNIVERSALITY—POSITIONS OF LIBERAL AND PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTIES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, it should come as no surprise that Liberal Leader John Turner is flip-flopping on universality. In an interview on CTV's Question Period he stated: "The Liberal Party could rethink its commitment to universal social programs". Meanwhile, the Liberal health and welfare critic, Douglas Frith, was overheard on The Nation's Business pledging the Liberal Party to safeguard the universality of social programs at all costs.

Can the Liberals really believe it possible to take both sides on this crucial issue at the same time? Perhaps Turner's true blue colours are showing and he is envious of the accolades that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is reaping from mutual friends on Bay Street. Is it the Tweedledee and Tweedledum syndrome?

On the other hand, our new Conservative Prime Minister has been taking lessons in Liberal obfuscation. He is unwilling to deal honestly with the issues of universality, which are twofold. First, Canadians, including middle income Canadians, regard universal social programs as a right, not a charity. Second, sharing the cost of universality requires not just tinkering but a major reform of the income tax system so that the rich pay their fair share.

● (1410)

Obviously the Bay Street boys have both been studying Frank Scott's poem about MacKenzie King:

The height of his ambition
Was to pile a Parliamentary Committee on a Royal Commission; to have "conscription if necessary
But not necessarily conscription"—

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes) may I remind Members of the practice in this House to refer to other Members by constituency and not by name. We are developing an unhappy new tradition of using names.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PLIGHT OF THE OLDER UNEMPLOYED

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of grave concern to the people of Canada. Last Friday I was in my constituency office in Scarborough Centre and I met a gentleman aged 51, who recently lost his job. He told me of the anguish and frustration that he and his family are going through. He told me of his mortagage payments and his son's university tuition that he can no longer pay. He told me of his long, lost days searching for work, only to be turned away because of his age.

This gentleman is one of 138,000 unemployed Canadians between the ages of 45 and 55. I urge the Government to take action on this segment of the unemployed. While I applaud the current efforts to assist unemployed youth, we can never forget the vast number of older unemployed people who find it much harder to find work because of their age.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST THAT MARIJUANA POSSESSION BE STUDIED AT NOVEMBER CONFERENCE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, today, a well-known Canadian citizen is appearing in criminal court for simple possession of marijuana. Let this case be a reminder to us of the thousands of Canadian citizens who have been forced to suffer the same treatment because of outdated legislation that makes this House look like the proverbial ostrich. I would therefore ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to put possession of marijuana on the agenda of the Federal-Provincial Conference on the Criminal Code, to be held on November 22nd and 23rd this year, and give Canada legislation that will bring it in step with the eighties.

THE CENSUS

CONSEQUENCES OF CANCELLING 1986 CENSUS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, many Members are concerned with the Government's announcement abolishing the 1986 census. Apart from the many other issues that have been raised in the past is the question of lost jobs. Some 40,000 part-time jobs will be lost through cancelling the 1986 census, or approximately 5,800 person year equivalents.

The 1986 census was to cost $149 million and it had been in the planning stages for two years. Consultations have been held with several groups since 1982, including provincial Governments, ten federal Departments, academics, and business people. This census would have resulted in several new questions being asked, specifically on ethnic minorities and disabled people. The Government will not be able to institute any new affirmative action programs without the results of the census. This census should be re-instated immediately. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should change his plan to cancel the census, which cancellation some people have qualified in the last week as criminal.

SPORTS

CANADIAN FOOTBALL LEAGUE—1984 GREY CUP GAME—A WINNIPEG VIEWPOINT

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg-Saint James): Mr. Speaker, I rise to report that we have had an end to a 22-year drought in our region in Manitoba, specifically Winnipeg.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Minaker: We were concerned in the first 15 minutes of that special occasion on Sunday when we spotted some 14 points to our eastern friends, but like good western lads we dug in our heels and showed that we did not want once again to be the best man rather than the groom. Our drought came to an end. I know, Mr. Speaker, that if I were allowed to congratulate the Winnipeg Blue Bombers I would do so, but, knowing that I cannot, I will not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I applaud the Hon. Member on his learning curve.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROPOSED REVIEW OF SYSTEM

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has told us through an interview with The Toronto Star, and I might add we are pleased that somebody over there is allowed to speak to the press, that any savings that might be derived from a review of family allowance and old age security would be applied to help the neediest members of our society and would, I believe I quote accurately, "absolutely not be used to reduce the deficit." I must say we are very pleased the Prime Minister made that statement. We are also pleased that he went on to say—

Mr. Lewis: Question.

Mr. Johnston: —that medicare would not be subject to that review. Would the Prime Minister here in this House confirm that commitment for us? Will he also confirm that the review will not tamper with the transfer of payments to the provinces for post-secondary education, so necessary, and for Canada Assistance Plan payments, so that these constituencies can proceed with the certainty of their sources of financing?

Mr. Crosbie: In other words, don't do what you did.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the previous Government unilaterally tampered, without consultation, with those kinds of programs, I want to give the Hon. Member the assurance that we will not repeat his sin in that regard. The Hon. Member so disturbed members of his Party and the Canadian public with his remarkable statements about doing away with universality and other things, during his Party's leadership campaign, that I felt it appropriate to put it right on the record that we are interested in helping those people who genuinely need help in our society, and that is what we are going to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: I think we are all pleased if that is to be taken as a confirmation, Mr. Speaker. With respect to some of the other gratuitous and unfounded remarks, I think I should reply in another forum, because I am not the recipient of questions but the poser of questions.

FINANCE

REDUCTIONS IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question now is for the Minister of Finance. He has told us in his economic statement that he intends to reduce projected levels of expenditure by $10 billion to $15 billion by the end of the decade. We have heard from the Prime Minister that certain areas have been circumscribed as a sacred trust. We also know that defence is to be increased and foreign aid will not be decreased, and so on. Without raising taxes, which the Minister of Finance has told us is not the way to go, and with these areas which are protected, where does he see, in general terms, not in specific terms, his being able to obtain cuts in the order of magnitude of $10 billion to $15 billion before the end of this decade?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would look at the agenda paper it would be quite clear to him that in chapter 4 there is a very good statement on the broad range of programs that we can consider, and the broad range would be addressing a number of specific areas. I want to assure the Hon. Member that the whole question of deficit reduction is not going to be met just simply by cutting expenditures. There is a very important common element of economic growth which will be directed to reducing the deficit, and that is going to be a very important part of the policy of this Government.

GOVERNMENT DEFICIT—DEPARTMENTAL PROJECTIONS

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I would also be pleased, as members of my Party would, and of this caucus, if there were some evidence of the projected economic growth. The 3.4 per cent which was seen to the end of the decade—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I rise with great respect to say to the Hon. Member that if I do not cut off preambles on a third supplementary question, I will be in some difficulty cutting off preambles on others later in the Question Period. I would ask him, as a leader of the House, to put his question.

● (1420)

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, could the Minister produce and table in the House before the end of this week—he did not do this with respect to jobs—for public scrutiny, the underlying assumptions with respect to the economic analysis of his Department which justify a discrepancy of $9 billion between the February projections and the November projections as early as the year 1985-86? Indeed, this would go a long way toward achieving a deficit reduction of $10 billion by the end of the decade. I think it important that that data be tabled in the House for public scrutiny at the earliest possible date.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member will look at my statement and at the agenda paper, all the information is clearly there. The assumptions are there, and there is a reconciliation between the February figures and the November figures. I said to the Leader of the Opposition that I would be happy to appear, and to have my officials appear before a committee of the House to discuss this, provided, of course, that he also gave the officials the freedom to table and to explain the assumptions and figures which were given to him in July when he became Prime Minister.

Mr. Johnston: Table them.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

COMPOSITION OF PROGRAM REVIEW ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last Friday his colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister, issued a news release in which he set forth the names of an advisory committee to aid him in the Task Force on Program Review. That committee was to advise and participate in the over-all review of government programs. I want to commend the eminently qualified committee members, and those organizations mentioned, for having provided private sector input to the Government.

While the individuals appointed are of high calibre, this extremely blue chip committee is not representative of our country. Would the Prime Minister explain why this powerful committee has no female member, no Francophone, no representative of any organization representing students, senior citizens, farmers, native people, the disabled, the environment, or the arts? Indeed, except for one member, all members of the committee have been chosen from Montreal, Ottawa, and Toronto; there is not one westerner on it.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, since this question—

Mr. Gauthier: Look at that.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Have you cleared it with yourself?

Mr. Nielsen: —concerns a responsibility the Prime Minister has devolved upon me, I make so bold as to answer it. Unlike the approach of the previous Government—the process of handpicking and selecting only those who will be favourable to government and produce reports that government wants and likes—we have gone the democratic way and have invited nine nationally based organizations thus far to participate in the work of the Task Force on Program Review. Those organizations themselves, including the CFL and CLC, which I am sure will be delighted to learn that the Leader of the Opposition refers to them as blue chip organizations, selected their own designates to sit on the advisory committee, and they themselves selected their own chairman. The building is far from complete, but because there are some, for whatever reason, in the country who believe that we should be more forthcoming with information, last Friday's press release was an effort to bring the Opposition and the people of Canada up to speed on the progress we have been making thus far. The dimensions which the Leader of the Opposition mentioned will be eventually included.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am glad that we flushed the bird out of his cover. I am also glad that we have his undertaking that this committee, representative of big business, labour, and the independent business organization, will be broadened to include the group I mentioned.

REQUEST THAT ADVISORY GROUP APPEAR BEFORE PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, could the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that the committee will be allowed, after checking with him, to appear before the appropriate parliamentary committee, so that Hon. Members of the House could have the benefit of the factors upon which the advice is rendered and will have a public revelation of what the committee gives by way of advice to the Deputy Prime Minister?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that very interesting and constructive suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition will be taken under consideration.

THE ECONOMY

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—EMPLOYMENT AND UNEMPLOYMENT PROJECTIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. The Government announced its targets for deficit reduction in its economic statement but continues to keep secret the impact and the effects of its statement on the numbers of persons who will lose their jobs due to it.

Is the Prime Minister now prepared to provide for the House of Commons the projected targets, both in terms of job creation and in terms of unemployment reduction, which the Government has set in order to provide the necessary jobs for the 1.5 million people who are presently unemployed and for the other 50,000—or however many there are—who will become unemployed as a result of the economic direction the Government is taking?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister gave the main thrusts in his economic statement. I think the Hon. Member would agree that the first action which we took was but one variable that will come together with a series of others pursuant to consultations with trade unions, the private sector, and the provinces. The full budgetary documents that will be brought down by the Minister in the spring, which will be the first full opportunity we will have to deal with the kinds of specifics the Hon. Member wishes, will be made available at that time.

JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said that at some time in the spring the analysis might well be completed and that he, or the Government, will be prepared to make the targets known. The problem is that we have about 1.5 million people who are unemployed. The Prime Minister said during the campaign that he and his Government, if elected, would be able to create tens of thousands of jobs. I ask the Prime Minister on behalf of those people, many of whom do not collect unemployment insurance or do not qualify for public assistance, when they can expect to see the benefits of the program which the Prime Minister touted around the country as being the way toward an economic Utopia.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I never at any time suggested that there would be an economic Utopia. I indicated across the country that the new Government would be confronted with grave economic problems, and that was true. However, in point of fact, since the election and the swearing in of the new Government, even though the improvements have been modest they are there—32,000 new jobs were created, interest rates have dropped to record levels, and inflation is at a record low. Those are the beginnings of the kinds of things which can be accomplished by working together.

Presence in Gallery

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): At the rate of 32,000 jobs per month, it would take the better part of five years to achieve the numbers of jobs we might require to meet the existing numbers of unemployed persons. Does the Prime Minister suggest to those 1.5 million people that they must wait until after the next election in order to see the jobs necessary for them to find work?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have made no such suggestion, and the Hon. Member knows that is—

Mr. Deans: At 32,000 a month.

Mr. Mulroney: If the Hon. Member will accept 32,000 a month, for openers that would be pretty good. Let me put it this way. It is 32,000 people, 32,000 heads of households who are back at work today who were not at work when we came in, and that is a major accomplishment. As a Member of this House, he should be proud of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

IMPACT OF ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. First, through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester on his appointment as Minister of National Defence. I would also like to offer my condolences to him because of the ambush job that the Minister of Finance did on him in his economic statement.

The Minister of National Defence has been quoted as saying that if the money is not there to keep the promises that the Conservative Party made to the Canadian Armed Forces and the Canadian people during the last election campaign, then it will have to be found. I appreciate that statement. I will back him up 100 per cent on that. How does the Minister explain the announcement in the economic statement by the Minister of Finance that the Defence budget will be cut by $154 million, while at the same time saying that Canada's commitment to NATO can be maintained, particularly at a time when he and his colleagues have been saying over and over again that Canada's commitment to NATO is not being maintained?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke how pleased I am that he among his colleagues was selected to be the critic for National Defence. He has had a continuing commitment to our defence forces, even though he has represented a Party that forgot its commitments over and over again. I want to give him the assurance, as I did in my speech this morning, that the so-called cuts in the Defence budget were indications of a reduction in the costs of purchasing equipment because the rate of inflation came down, the only achievement that his people had anything to do with during the four years they were there. We will move forward on the commitment we have given to the Canadian people in relation to our commitments to both NORAD and NATO. He can rest assured that, by the time this Government has completed its first term in office, everybody in the world will understand that Canadians keep their commitments to their defence alliances.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN COMMITMENT TO NATO

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I appreciate the Minister's remarks about me. It was the type of answer that I expected him to come forward with at this time.

Mr. Speaker: No, no. Question please.

Mr. Hopkins: How does the Minister justify the statement in the Expenditure and Program Review document by the President of the Treasury Board which states that "these savings can be realized while maintaining Canada's commitment to NATO"? Surely their own government document infers that Canada has been keeping its commitment to NATO all along, while the Conservative Party statements have been to the contrary. There is a conflict between the Minister and the President of the Treasury Board. Will he explain that to us?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to explain it to the Hon. Member. If he will read the speech I gave in the House this morning, he will find the explanation. I was subjected to questioning by the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, who is a rather new Member of this House and does not realize how the former Government emasculated our commitments to NATO and NORAD. We are putting them back together at this time.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

LEVEL OF FUNDING

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, since the Government will not release what the Finance Department's economic model shows will result from its cuts, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion with respect to one program which has been cut. The Industrial and Regional Development program has had $525 million in cuts. We estimate that they will result in 41 per cent of the grants that would have been given in the first nine months not being possible. Is the Government aware that one consequence of these $525 million in cuts will be 55,000 jobs lost to Canadians? Will the Minister release any studies which were carried out on which his decision to change the categories in this program was based? Canadians have a right to know why these changes were made.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, and as this is the first opportunity I have had to do so, I congratulate him on his new role as critic of my Department. I can only add, in response directly to his question, in which he refers to 55,000 jobs being lost, that the facts are that we are expending under IRDP grants in the coming year 35 per cent more than in the current year. Only a socialist could reason that that means a loss of jobs in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: I am perhaps a socialist, but I am also a mathematician. The Minister indicated in his statement that he was cutting the amount for that program by 35 per cent. Either the cuts are real, in which case it is $175 million less—

Mr. Speaker: Order. With great respect, does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question?

CONSULTATION QUERY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. His Government has promised to consult Canadians with respect to key policy changes. Will he inform the House which Canadians he consulted with respect to these cuts which will affect so many communities across the country?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member's question, it is a contradiction of fact to state that a mathematician can be a socialist.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What about Bertrand Russell?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the Minister like to answer the question?

Mr. Stevens: In direct response to the Hon. Member's supplementary, he indicated that I had said there was a 35 per cent reduction in the funding. It is a 35 per cent increase in the funding next year compared to this year. In my book, that will help create jobs for Canadians.

VIA RAIL

AGE OF LOCOMOTIVES—GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Transport. In view of the fact that the Canadian Transport Commission's report of the inquiry into the on-time performance of VIA Rail has indicated that no other railway in the industrialized world entrusts mainline services to a fleet of locomotives as old, outdated and obsolete as VIA does; in view of the fact that VIA lost some one million passengers between the years 1982 and 1983; and in view of the fact that in spite of the recent reductions and cuts we are still subsidizing VIA to the extent of $600 million per year, will the Minister tell us what plans, if any, he and/or the Department has for improving both VIA Rail's performance and its financial track record?

• (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that the investment plan for VIA Rail has not been cut but will be spread over a longer period of time. The amounts earmarked for improving the VIA Rail fleet will stand, and we intend to use these to improve the service criticized by the Transport Commission. However, I think the Hon. Member should give this Government a chance to make its own assessment before speaking of VIA Rail in this way.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ONTARIO PRISON SENTENCES

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General my question is directed to his Parliamentary Secretary. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary is aware of published reports concerning sentencing practices of Ontario courts. Figures contained in The Globe and Mail last week indicated that the number of people from Ontario sentenced to federal prisons during the past two years grew twice as fast as the national average. An official from the Correctional Service of Canada was quoted as saying that this large and recent influx is putting a serious strain on the federal penal system.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House when the Minister first became aware of this situation? Second, can he tell us what action, if any, is being taken to address this problem? Third, has the Minister discussed this matter with his provincial counterpart? Finally, can the Minister give the House an assurance that Ontario's sentencing practices of handing down longer prison terms are not a result of overcrowding in provincial institutions and a deliberate attempt to direct the overflow to federal penitentiaries?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to answer that encyclopaedic question. The Hon. Member may not be aware of the fact that there has been—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Please do not interrupt me. I get rattled.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I get rattled when faced with the rats, Mr. Speaker.

A sentencing commission has been appointed and is headed by Mr. Justice Sinclair. Hopefully that commission will be reporting within the next two years on the principles that should govern sentencing in Canada, in order to try to avoid differences across the country, including Ontario. The matter brought forward by the Hon. Member is certainly under consideration and is being dealt with.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, seeing that there is so little to rattle in the can, I can understand why the Minister can get rattled so easily.

STUDY OF ONTARIO PRACTICE

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, there appears to be a great deal of speculation as to why this Ontario influx is taking place. Is the Minister prepared to release the details of any study done by his Department so that the causes of this phenomenon can be understood and a solution sought among all interested groups?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it may well be that there are more bad guys in Ontario than there are elsewhere.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

UNEMPLOYMENT FORMULA APPLICABLE TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The tier system for the Regional Industrial Expansion Program continues to discriminate against British Columbia, a province which has an unemployment rate of 15.1 per cent, the third highest in Canada. While 43 out of 46 areas in the Atlantic provinces have been designated tiers 3 and 4, the tiers which receive maximum help, and 60 out of 76 areas in Quebec have been designated as tiers 3 and 4, only one area out of 29 in British Columbia has been designated tier 3. Will the Minister make changes to the tier designation formula in order to give adequate recognition to actual rates of unemployment, so that British Columbia will get its fair share under this program?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member I would like first to indicate to him that we find most distressing the present unemployment level that exists in British Columbia. He will be pleased to know that this Friday I will be meeting with British Columbia governmental officials with a view to signing a new Economic Regional Development Agreement between the federal Government and the Province of British Columbia. This agreement will undoubtedly have subagreements following it that will hopefully relieve some of the unemployment to which the Hon. Member is referring.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, any help that the Minister can give to the repressive Government of British Columbia would be most welcome.

FUNDING FOR PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is not willing to change the tier designation formula, is he at least willing to reconsider his plan to cut $525 million from Tier 1 communities over the next three years? Under the present system, British Columbia is being discriminated against in two ways. First, it is given the low tier designations and, second, it is not receiving the benefits from Tier 1 designation. Will the Minister reconsider?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again in reply to the Hon. Member, I would indicate that the reduction to which he refers is one which is not a reduction to the present year's expenditures. Next year, the present year's expenditures will rise by the 35 per cent indicated.

I can assure the Hon. Member that, with respect to the designation of tiers, these are always under review and are dependent upon the data that we receive from Statistics Canada. If there are data with respect to the unemployment situation to confirm that tier designations should be adjusted, we, of course, will do so without any delay.

IMMIGRATION

AVAILABILITY OF COUNSEL FOR POTENTIAL IMMIGRANTS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Is it correct that the Immigration Department recently issued a policy directive which will prohibit potential immigrants from having legal or non-legal counsel present during preliminary interviews at Canadian points of entry? Why was this policy directive issued? What has been the past practice of the Department with regard to allowing counsel in this situation?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in policy whatsoever. When people enter this country they meet first with persons who interview everyone entering the country. If, for any reason, these people are passed on to a second stage of interview, they are then allowed to retain counsel. There has been no change from the practices that formerly existed.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

BUDGET REDUCTION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate him on his appointment to that important position. In answer to a question last Tuesday the Minister stated that the decisions which were announced by the Minister of Finance were discussed fully with senior officials at the National Research Council. The Secretary-General of the NRC was later in the week reported as saying that the decisions about what program cuts would be made to fulfil the budget reduction were made by the Government, not the agency. Can the Minister explain this discrepancy, and will he admit that the cuts were made blindly without a proper regard to their effect?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Laurier on his appointment. In response to his question, I must indicate that he is, of course, incorrect. Indeed, we sought advice from senior officials of the National Research Council as to areas of higher and lesser priority. Then, given a certain desire to contribute to the general exercise of restraint which is so necessary, as pointed out by the Minister of Finance, the final decisions were taken by the Government.

REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION OF BUDGET REDUCTION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): How can an intelligent decision be made when workers are told not to speak with reporters and discouraged from going to their MPs?

My supplementary question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology is this: As the health and safety of millions of Canadians and the protection of our environment are at stake, will he suspend the reduction and allow a parliamentary committee to meet publicly with officials of the NRC to study whether the cuts could be implemented in a more appropriate fashion?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it was the habit of the previous Government to study problems to death.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Siddon: The people of Canada have chosen a Government which would act and take the necessary initiatives.

There were no instructions given to any of my officials not to speak to the press. Indeed, there was a key spokesman appointed, and when asked whether officials could approach their Members of Parliament, which was one of the questions discussed in the press, the employees of my Ministry were told that they should be free to do as they wished.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE—CANCELLATION OF HERRING GULL EGG PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Last week I asked the Minister whether she would reconsider the cancellation of the Herring Gull Egg Program which monitors the levels of toxins in the Great Lakes. Has the Minister had an opportunity to consider the seriousness of the cut-back and to reflect on the wide variety of concern expressed by many people about how serious a mistake it is on her part? Is she willing to reconsider the cancellation of this program for the sake of the health of Canadians?

If she is not willing to reconsider for that reason, will she reconsider it in view of the fact that this constitutes part of an agreement with the United States with respect to Great Lakes water quality and that we should be doing this, if not for our own sake, for the sake of our credibility with the Americans? It is hard to imagine offending the environmental sensitivity of the American Government, but this Government has succeeded.

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I said last week that if the cuts affecting these biologists were putting the lives of Canadians at risk, I would of course be prepared to review these cutbacks. However, I also said that was not the case at the present time, and I can inform my hon. friend that we still have 78 people working on monitoring toxic material in the Great Lakes, that we are constantly evaluating the quality of water, sediment and precipitation, and that other ministers as well have an ongoing interest in animal and water toxicology.

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: I find it incredible that the Minister can play down the seriousness of this matter.

MINISTER'S VIEW

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister had an opportunity to review the remarks made by her colleague, the Minister of State for Science and Technology, in which he set up a false dichotomy between a healthy industrial economy and environmental issues as being merely service issues? That is the problem as I see it with the Government. Will the Minister undertake to review the remarks made by the Minister of State for Science and Technology and tell the House whether it is also her view of environmental issues?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware and I have the assurance that the cuts I proposed in the Department, after consulting with departmental officials, were submitted to and analyzed before all Members of Cabinet, and we are all agreed on the general issues.

[English]

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE—FUTURE OF EMPLOYEES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate and express good wishes to the Minister of the Environment on her assignment. I would like to focus the attention of the Minister on the announcement which was made 10 days ago by the Minister of Finance, that one of our finest services, the Canadian Wildlife Service, will be cut by 25 per cent in its strength. This will mean the laying off by next spring of some highly trained biologists, technicians, and office workers, who are presently engaged in studies regarding toxics in the Great Lakes and the toxic contamination in gull eggs, the management of endangered species, the impact of lobbying practices on wildlife, and the impact of wildlife on forestry, just to name a few. Could the Minister inform the House where these fine Canadians will find employment and what will happen to the projects in which they are engaged at the present time?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my hon. friend for his kind words and in turn, I would like to offer him my best wishes on his re-election.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wildlife Service still has 300 employees and a budget of $19.8 million. I do not think the cutbacks we have made will adversely affect the survival of this program.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

EXISTENCE OF COMMITTEE STUDY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Members are congratulating others on their new appointments, and I would indicate that this is the Minister's first opportunity to answer a question in the House. She will know in taking over the portfolio that the former Minister was supposed to have established a committee to study trust companies, insurance companies, banks, security dealers and so on, with respect to new legislation. Did that committee in fact exist? If it did exist, will it be making a report to this House?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I am pleased to report that there is a private sector group which has been examining the issue at the instigation of the former Minister. This committee is not and, as far as I can understand, was never intended to report to the House. It is commenting on papers which were put together by the Department of Finance, and in due course, as soon as possible, an over-all report will be published and presented to the House. I will be happy to report on that later.

EMPLOYMENT

CLOSURE OF CANEXEL IN GATINEAU, P.Q.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Last week, the Canexel company in Gatineau announced that it would be closing down on February 14, thus putting about 200 employees out of work. During the election campaign, the Progressive Conservative Party talked a great deal about job creation. In view of the impending situation in Gatineau, I would like to know what the federal Government intends to do about the possibility of keeping this factory open and saving 200 jobs.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that we are aware of the problem and are taking every possible action to improve the present situation. For instance, we are prepared to set up a committee with the employer and employees and to consider training, mobility and adjustment programs for all employees concerned.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

PEACE CAMP ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) on Friday, November 16, 1984, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

I must also, however, advise the House that there is some doubt in my mind as to the acceptability of this petition. Citation 688(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition states:

> Aliens, not resident in Canada, have no right to petition Parliament.

The precedents in our practice are not as decisive as they are in other jurisdictions. While I must report today on the form of the said petition—I am required to do so in fact by the rules of the House—I wish to advise the House that I am entering a caveat on the propriety of certain signatures of non-Canadian citizens pending further study on the matter.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submitted this petition, and since the overwhelming number of signatories to the petition are in fact Canadian citizens, indicating that they—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The very reason that I indicated I was raising a caveat on the matter and wished to study it further is precisely the point the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is making. I wish to advise both him and Hon. Members of the House that I do not propose to make a ruling today ruling the petition out. However, I do want to make it clear to the Hon. Member—and I know it is a serious petition for him as well as for others—that there are traditions about who can and who cannot petition the House of Commons. In the past, Speakers have ruled that petitions containing any names other than Canadian are simply not receivable. It is for that reason that I am reserving a judgment until I look at the precedents further. I will be making some comment on it later.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will make representations privately. However, surely, when thousands of Canadians sign a petition, their petition should not be struck down because it happened to be—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is an experienced member of legislatures. He knows that once I have indicated I intend to think about a matter—and he may wish to make private representations to me—it is simply improper to rise to discuss that matter. The Hon. Member knows that.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO REINSTATE DEATH SENTENCE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-206, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (death sentence).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in introducing a Bill to amend the Criminal Code with respect to the death sentence. This Bill, when passed, will impose the death sentence on any adult who deliberately plans and kills another human being and is found guilty of so doing beyond a reasonable doubt.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORTS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations among House Leaders of each of the Parties. I believe you will find that there will be a disposition to accept unanimously the following motion:

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs shall have permanently referred to it all annual reports made to Parliament pursuant to section 72 of the Privacy Act and section 72 of the Access to Information Act; and

That it be an instruction to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to:

1. Consider every report prepared under section 72 of the Access to Information Act and of the Privacy Act;
2. Undertake, on a permanent basis, a review pursuant to subsection 75(1) of the Access to Information Act and of the Privacy Act, of the administration of those Acts; and
3. Undertake, within three years of their coming into force, a comprehensive review of the provisions and operation of the Access to Information Act and of the Privacy Act pursuant to subsection 75(2) of each of the said Acts.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is there unanimous consent for its introduction?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the matter be adopted?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Allmand (p. 252).

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before the luncheon adjournment, during the election campaign the Tories cried crocodile tears for the unemployed youth of this country. In Pocket Politics, their campaign bible, the Conservatives said, "We believe that all levels of Government and the private sector face a major task in resolving the tragic youth unemployment situation". But what does that Party do when it resumes power, Mr. Speaker? It cuts the Canada Summer Works Program which provides thousands of summer jobs to students. It cuts the young worker's exchange program. These and other program cuts will have a devastating effect on the unemployed young of our nation. Pity the young without hope for they will have nothing to inherit.

What is worse is that we are not even told of the effect of the economic statement on unemployment because of the Government's penchant for secrecy and surreptitious government. What is it afraid of and what is it hiding? I call on the Government, Mr. Speaker, to come clean with Canadians and to put its cards on the table.

We are not here to fight old battles or to settle old scores. Our duty is clear. We must forge ahead with vision and commitment to build a strong and united Canada, a just, equitable, decent and civilized society.

What will be the role of the Liberal Party in this process? As Her Majesty's Official Opposition, we intend to be vigorous, competent and constructive. We will fight hard for the individual and the disadvantaged in our society. We intend to examine thoroughly all government proposals. As my Leader has already stated, we will support legislation when support is warranted, we will amend when amendment will serve to improve, and we will oppose when opposition is necessary. We will seek to correct errors of omission and commission in legislation and, in due course, we will outline policy alternatives and new directions. Unlike the pseudo opposition to the left, we are not fettered by dogma, we do not live in the past, and we are prepared to change for a better future.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I put the Government on notice that the Liberal Party is but on a short sabbatical. While in opposition, we will rejuvenate, we will rebuild, and we will regain the support and confidence of Canadians. We will earn the right to be re-elected. Let me remind Hon. Members opposite that political defeat is as transient as political success.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member? If not, we shall resume debate.

• (1510)

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by congratulating you on your appointment to such a prestigious post. The manner in which you have discharged your duties today confirms the wisdom of your appointment.

I also wish to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. All previous speakers have spoken well. They have enlightened me about their parts of Canada. From the other speakers I have learned something about our West Coast, our Prairies, the North, and central Canada. Today I will be telling the House and other Canadians something about my riding in Atlantic Canada.

The differences among our regions have struck me, Mr. Speaker, but I have been more impressed by our common commitment to Canada and to the development of all our regions. It is a striking feature of our Confederation that we as Canadians accept a sharing of our national wealth. We as Canadians are prepared to share our wealth with each other and to share our wealth with the world. Canada's generous aid to Ethiopia is a fine example of this commitment to the underdeveloped world.

Many national policies are possible because we share a commitment to all Canadians. Atlantic Canadians are among the recipients of these benefits. Such programs are viewed as equitable and in the interests of all Canadians. It is therefore not prudent to suggest that such economic sharing has been done at the expense of one region more than another. In our short history there has been give and take by all Canadians. As Canadians we also hold political and social equality as a high priority. Canada is truly a country which permits each Canadian the opportunity to achieve its greatest political office, that of Prime Minister.

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is of a humble but honourable background. Notwithstanding this, he has achieved the highest political office in this land. A humble beginning was no bar, geography was no bar, nor were race and religion. That is a great compliment to our society and our system of government. Yet I agree, Mr. Speaker, there is much more to be done before we can boast of total equality of opportunity.

The election of our Prime Minister with the greatest parliamentary majority in the history of the country is a tribute to him as a man. I am proud of our Prime Minister. He is providing the sound leadership Canadians have not received in decades but have so dearly wanted. In addition, Mr. Speaker, I have a special reason to be proud. Canada's eighteenth Prime Minister is a graduate of St. Francis Xavier University, a distinguished institution situated in my riding.

My constituents, Mr. Speaker, are representative of many cultures: Irish, Scottish, English, Dutch, native and Acadian, to name only some. In an effort to better represent my Acadian constituents I have begun the process of learning the French language. My next major statement to this House will be in both official languages.

We in Cape Breton Highlands-Canso are a people of basic values. We are people close to the land and the sea. The people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso have a history of social service, having supported missions around the world and the training of Third World leaders on the principles of co-operatives at the Coady International Institute. We have a history of supporting our neighbours, not only next door, but across the world's oceans. Sharing is very much a value we hold.

The people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso regard the family as a most valued institution. I resist the urging to describe our values as traditional. To some that reference connotes a lack of worldliness. In light of the value we place on the family, it should come as no surprise, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso value the life of unborn children. It is no surprise that my constituents strongly support legislation and programs that recognize the rights of unborn Canadians. These are values, Mr. Speaker, that I share. These are values that I am honoured to express for the people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso. We regard the extent of support for the handicapped, the elderly, the infirm and the defenceless as evidence of the real progress of our society.

The people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso are independent. We are ordinary Canadians. We are proud to be led by the only Party in Canada that represents the ordinary Canadian. The Prime Minister and I have been honoured with the greatest PC vote ever in the history of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso. For this vote I am most grateful and I thank my constituents. My riding was represented just a few short months ago by the former Deputy Prime Minister, the Hon. Mr. MacEachen. He served his constituents and all Canadians with distinction. On behalf of the people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso it is appropriate that I acknowledge the contribution of Senator MacEachen and thank him for his years of service.

Cape Breton Highlands-Canso is a geographical, cultural and economic mosaic. It includes an important fishing industry with deep sea fleets sailing from Canso and Petit de Grat. These deep sea fishermen leave their families for a week or more to harvest the sea's bounty. It is hard work. These are independent persons who spend more of their adult lives at sea than on land. At the present time, they are struggling to make ends meet.

Many other constituents are hard working inshore fishermen who are also striving to meet the problems of their industry and to earn a living. These men are entrepreneurs. They own their boats. They risk their lives to make a living to provide for their families. These people talk straight. The people I represent need no education to identify hardship.

The people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso have distinguished themselves as the best pulp and paper workers in this country and among the best woodsmen in Canada.

The people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso enjoy one of the best public school systems in the world. Cape Breton Highlands-Canso is an area known for incomparable hospitality. This reputation greatly contributes to growth in our tourism industry. That is one reason, Mr. Speaker, that the Cabot Trail is one of Canada's leading tourist attractions. It is also a natural beauty surpassing in appeal any other attraction in Canada. The people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso have distinguished themselves as tradesmen, small businessmen and farmers. We view offshore oil and gas development as an opportunity and are working hard to realize its potential.

Despite these strengths, Mr. Speaker, we have been plagued by successive years of high unemployment and outward migration. In the thirties, forties and fifties, Nova Scotians left to seek employment in the United States and Ontario. Later they left for western Canada. Today we find there is no place to go. It is, as never before, imperative that our strengths be fully developed, that we strive for self-sufficiency, and that we achieve self-sufficiency.

On a daily basis my office deals with requests from many constituents looking for employment. These are people with families, children and spouses and with bills they cannot pay. That is why I ran for office and why they elected me, Mr. Speaker. These people want jobs, and I am pleased that the Government has made job creation its priority.

On September 4, I was elected on a platform which called for the rejection of short-term make-work projects as an answer to unemployment. The people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso have rejected make-work projects as a long-term solution. They want permanent, meaningful jobs. I am confident that the new Government can meet that challenge. Indeed, it has already begun the task.

● (1520)

In its Throne Speech, the Government identified our new approach. We are committed to getting this country moving quickly to achieve a new era of national reconciliation, to moving quickly to economic renewal, and to attaining greater levels of social justice.

I wish to congratulate the Prime Minister on his Cabinet selection. Nova Scotia's two Cabinet representatives, the Hon. Robert Coates and the Hon. Elmer Mackay, are distinguished parliamentarians and Nova Scotians. I am honoured to be here with them.

I have met with the Hon. Flora MacDonald, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. She has displayed an openness and empathy that was more than I could have anticipated. It is clear to all Canadians that she is a leader. I wish to congratulate the Prime Minister on his appointment of the Hon. Sinclair Stevens as the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. In our meetings, he too has displayed a driving commitment to developing areas most in need of economic activity. The Hon. Pat Carney, Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has displayed a true commitment to East Coast energy development. The Hon. Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Fraser) has also shown himself to be interested in solving the serious problems of the East Coast fishery. As Canadians, we are most fortunate to have such talented individuals willing to serve us.

I have heard members of the Opposition complain that Cape Breton has no private sector economy. That is why the previous government was defeated. It was the previous government that left that legacy. I know that the people of that area of Canada can develop a self-sustaining economy. We in the Progressive Conservative Party have confidence in the people of Cape Breton Highlands Canso. We have begun the process of attaining that result.

Our Government has established a new Ministry of Forestry, headed by a distinguished New Brunswick Member, the Hon. Gerald Merrithew. This appointment reflects our Government's decision to enhance the development of a renewable resource. It will mean long-term benefits for the people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso. Our Government has established a new Ministry of Tourism headed by another distinguished Maritime Member, the Hon. Tom McMillan of Prince Edward Island. This commitment by our Government will result in a more rational development and orderly marketing of our tourism resources. That decision will result in an increased growth in our tourism sector.

Our Government has started the process of reducing our huge budgetary deficit. The people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso realize that long-term economic security cannot be achieved simply by spending government money. Decisions to invest must have a rational business basis. My constituents know this better than any other group of Canadians because of the failure of northern Nova Scotia to establish a stronger economic base despite the input of large sums of government money.

The Prime Minister has confirmed the commitment of our Government to assist the needy. Ours is a government that is compassionate. The Throne Speech outlined the Government's commitment to the elderly, the disabled, the poor, to reducing inequality between the sexes, and to the preservation of our health care system. The Prime Minister has announced action on spousal allowances and veterans' benefits.

I am proud to be a Progressive Conservative. Our Party believes in sound management and compassionate leadership. I am proud to be led by Prime Minister Brian Mulroney. He will be remembered as the Canadian leader who turned this country around and as a Prime Minister with the courage to lead.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the new Member on his speech in the House today. However, I also want to say that it is my understanding that it is the practice in the House not to refer to Members by their names but rather by their constituencies. I think we should follow that practice in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is perfectly right. I was aware of it but the Hon. Member is a new Member in the House and not the only one to do so in his first speech. The comment by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) is well taken and should be noted by other new Members in the House.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I too want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his first speech. He indicated that he had the opportunity to meet with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). I assume that his conversation would have dealt with concerns for industrial development in the Cape Breton area. Would the Hon. Member give us his views on how industrial development in that particular area would be encouraged?

Second, would he address himself to an issue which concerns our Party? In the program changes that have been announced by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, there has been an elimination of three categories of support for industrial and regional development program grants in constituencies such as the Hon. Member's. There has been the elimination of support for tourism projects, for restructuring projects, and for business climate studies.

I suggest that these projects would be of particular importance to the steel and coal industry in Nova Scotia and particularly Cape Breton. As the New Democratic Party critic for industrial regional development, I would be very interested in the Hon. Member's reaction to the steps taken by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. With respect to my ideas for industrial development in my constituency, I believe that a basic principle to be followed is, first to develop our indigenous resources to their full potential. In the case of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, that will require that we stabilize our fishing industry, and that we fully take advantage of our marketing opportunities and fully develop our forestry sector. We have a very large and successful pulp and paper company. We must do everything possible to protect our renewable resources in forestry and the fishery.

The Hon. Member knows that the Government has established a separate Ministry of Forestry. Part of its function will be to protect our forests.

Our agricultural industry must also be protected because it too is a renewable resource. These sectors provide permanent jobs on which people must rely.

With respect to new industry, we have a magnificent harbour in the Strait of Canso. I am looking at possibilities for developing that harbour, but I must say that it is not my personal philosophy that industries should be established there only for the sake of creating jobs if they must also be grossly subsidized.

With respect to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, let me say that I am very pleased with the objectives and the steps taken by the new Minister. His goal is for stable, long-term benefits for my area of the country as well as the area which the Hon. Member represents. I am sure he will deal directly with the Minister if he has particular questions with respect to Essex-Windsor. I have full confidence in the Minister, and I believe he has good programs and ideas to bring forward.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no further questions or comments, we shall proceed with debate.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the new women parlimentarians who have joined us in the House. I wish them well and I hope that we can work together to voice the many concerns of our sisters across Canada.

Canadians from all provinces voted for a change in government in the hope that it would be a change for a better future for themselves and their children. They want a government they can trust and one with promises that it will keep. They want an end to secrecy, patronage and privileges for the rich.

• (1530)

The Progressive Conservatives come to government at a time when there are 1.5 million Canadians jobless, and technological change will displace many more. We have 4 million poor people, including increasing numbers of children. Young people have few opportunities for jobs or for further education. Women continue to be denied full equality. Added to increasing economic insecurity and family stress, Canadians live under the fear of a nuclear holocaust and the anxiety that their government is doing very little to prevent this.

Will the new government policies as outlined in the Speech from the Throne improve the health, economic, and social well-being of Canadians, particularly Canadian women? As my party's critic for health and welfare and the status of women I wish to highlight our concerns in these three areas.

First, I want to thank the residents of Vancouver East for their very strong support during the last election. I must say I am very pleased to represent them in the House of Commons. I regret to say that the Speech from the Throne unfortunately does not show many benefits for the people of Vancouver East. People in my riding need jobs desperately and a more secure future for their children. This they have not been promised in the Throne Speech.

The unemployed are told to wait by the Conservatives until the private sector develops confidence, and then by some sort of magic new jobs are going to appear. Unemployment insurance meanwhile is going to be tightened and social housing units will be cut back. Grants from the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) are going to be cut and universal social programs are threatened. If in addition to this students who cannot afford the increased fees of colleges and post-secondary education and who have no job prospects should know that this new government has cut $5 million from student loans. It has also terminated Canada Summer Works.

I am particularly saddened, coming from Vancouver East which has a very large number of immigrants settling in the neighbourhoods, that we will now welcome new Canadians with increased fees for Canadian citizenship, for immigration processing and even to obtain visas and passports.

I want now to concentrate on government proposals as they affect women and also as they affect the area of health and welfare.

First, let me deal with women. Despite the platitudes that I note in a press release put out by the Secretary of State, who, Mr. Speaker, you will recall was belatedly given the responsibility for the status of women, the new government shows a remarkable lack of awareness of the major concerns affecting women in Canada. Let me quote from the Economic Council of Canada's study entitled, "The Occupational Diversification of Women in the Labour Market":

> —only 23 per cent of "traditional male occupations" are held by women, in spite of the fact that they make up 42 per cent of the labour force, and only 8.4 per cent of women in the labour force earned over $20,000, compared to 36.5 per cent of men in 1980.

The study notes that until governments take some concrete steps to improve the position of women, "There persists an under-utilization of talent and resources that, while it affects women the most, penalizes Canadian society as a whole."

The Throne Speech mentioned no economic development targeted to women. We are very concerned about that. There was no mention of job creation programs, training programs, or even affirmative action within the existence of Canada Works projects, something which has been lacking until now. Despite election promises, there was no commitment to mandatory affirmative action and no plans to enforce the current law to which surely we should be adhering for equal pay for work of equal value.

I might mention also a matter about which I was concerned in the last House, namely, the conditon in which many part-time workers, most of whom are women, find themselves and the need for prorated benefits for part-time workers. There was nothing mentioned about that.

Women are demanding substantive changes that will improve their lot. I do not think when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) mentions that he is going to appoint more women to high places that he really understands what we mean by affirmative action and by equal pay for work of equal value. We will look forward indeed to the recommendations of Judge Abella, which I believe will be coming forward tomorrow.

We are very concerned that $9.8 million will be chopped from the grants of the Secretary of State. This is the main source of funding for women's groups, for women's centres, for immigrant and native women as well as for many other very important programs. We will be questioning the Minister to find out just what impact this cut will have on women's programs.

We will support the Government's decision to extend the spouses allowance to widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 65. I am glad the Hon. Stanley Knowles is with us in the House to hear this because it was he who for years pushed not only for increases for widows and widowers but for all people in the age group 60 to 65 who are unemployed. He was particularly concerned that these benefits not be based on marital status which is, in effect, discriminatory.

I want to mention the question of day-care also. The Prime Minister has called for a Parliamentary task force on day-care. I cannot understand why it is necessary to delay action in the whole field of daycare, action that is desperately needed for children of working parents. There has been a very active task force on daycare which has been working over the last few months which I understand will be making recommendations in the very near future. There are also excellent reports from the Canada Day-care Advocacy Association, which association consists of experts in this field. What all these groups want and I am sure what all parents want is action so they will have decent affordable day-care available to them in their communities. Too many children are being cared for in very risky situations.

I urge the Minister to consider the model day-care bill which was prepared and sent to him last week by the provincial Minister of Community Services for Manitoba. I believe that that Minister sent copies to all her provincial counterparts. I hope this bill will be studied very seriously.

We believe the federal government should take an active role immediately in providing direct funding for day-care centres as was proposed by the advocacy group. We think this should be direct funding, very similar to the way funding is provided through education and for health services, although directly to the centres would be a first step toward universal daycare. Surely children should have higher priority than the purchase of new uniforms for a generation of military personnel who have long accepted integration. I find that this kind of absorption with the past instead of with the future may be a symbol of this Tory government, and this concerns me.

The government should take steps to remove abortion from the Criminal Code. The Morgentaler case has already illustrated once again how obsolete this legislation is. It is certainly long past time, and I think public opinion in Canada supports the fact that women should be allowed to make this decision themselves. It is a very personal decision. It should not be something that we as Parliamentarians or the legal system interferes with.

There are many recommendations relating to justice as it affects women, Mr. Speaker. We agree that these Bills, which were Bills largely on the books before the last session ended, should be brought forward, particularly reforms to help with the control of pornography. This is a deep concern to almost everyone in Canada. Also we require a new Divorce Act which would provide protection in terms of the care of children. We also think that early action on the Badgley report regarding child abuse, and on the Abella report is top priority. We are glad to know that the Government will be considering these reports.
