Of course Canadian women are very concerned about the whole question of health. We will expect the Government to implement the Canada Health Act as it has promised. I am sure this will be an important and difficult challenge for the new Minister, in view of the fact that undoubtedly he will be battling, despite the intention of co-operation, strong resistance from Conservative provinces in implementing health care provisions.

Also we welcome the mention in the Speech from the Throne that the federal Government will provide assistance to community-based health services. I think this is very important. There are many ways our health dollar could be used more effectively. Certainly one way would be to apply medicare and to develop community health clinics which employ more paraprofessionals, nurses and other health care practitioners. We look forward to hearing more about these proposals in committee.

The most shocking revelation of the new Government is its intention to redesign universal social programs, particularly Old Age Security and family allowance, despite the promise of the Prime Minister that universality was sacrosanct. This will come down very hard on the view of Canadians who expected the Prime Minister to keep his promises. One of the first things he proposes is a review of these programs, with very provocative questions, indicating that they are considering a targeting of programs and the development of a means test approach with benefits only to those with the greatest need. If this happens, it is unlikely to increase programs in that respect.

The document, A New Direction for Canada, indicates several possible changes. We hope very much that any debate will involve the people directly affected, as well as Canadians from the middle class who feel very strongly that it is their right to have universal medicare, health services, old age pensions and family allowances. That group pays most heavily for these programs through their tax system and certainly expects to retain some benefits.

Surely it goes without saying that a bank manager earning over $500,000 per year should be taxed back for old age pensions or family allowances. The Prime Minister raised this point with me in the House the other day. However, let us not be fooled by the suggestion of tax reforms in a Mickey Mouse sort of way. The Prime Minister should have said—and this should have been indicated in the Throne Speech—that Canadians demand major reform in the tax system and that the regressive tax system which allows wealthy people to pay little or no tax at all places the burden of the tax load on middle income Canadians. We believe—and I thought the Prime Minister supported out Leader's position on this during the election campaign—that upper income Canadians should pay a minimum of 20 per cent of their income in tax. If we had this money, we could beef up family allowances for families most in need and we could continue to maintain social programs for middle income Canadians.

I am very concerned that the Tories will follow the Liberal lead. We saw this happening in the six and five program where they really chopped into family allowance programs. Senior citizens vote; they have a very strong block of votes, which every political party knows. Let us face it, kids do not vote. Thus, when governments want to chop something, it is the family allowances and children's programs which are the most in jeopardy. I am concerned that these are the programs which will face the chopper. Of course we will oppose it.

I should like to refer to some excepts from a statement by the National Council on Welfare in 1983 entitled "Family Allowances For All". In part it read:

> We see no compelling reason at the present time to change the family allowance program . . . From an equity point of view, it makes far more sense to cut the regressive children's tax exemption rather than tamper with the progressive family allowance—
> Universal family allowances recognize the value our society places on child-rearing. They constitute a modest but significant source of independent income for mothers, especially for those who work full-time in the home; ending universal payment of family allowances would simply widen the economic gap that persists between men and women. By stimulating consumer spending, family allowances help create and sustain employment; more jobs might be lost than gained if funds were diverted from family allowances to direct job creation schemes that provide only temporary work—
> The most compelling argument in favour of universal family allowances is the role they play as part of the foundation of Canada's social security system.

It continued:

> The abandonment of universal family allowances would threaten other universal programs and, in time, weaken public support for necessary improvements to selective programs designed for those in need. In the end, poor people could lose most from a retreat from universality.

This group has considerable expertise in this matter. I hope the Minister and the committee which will look at cut-backs and will study that report thoroughly.

The Government's review of social programs should not only review the cost of programs but the conditions in which families are living in Canada. Most of us know that the cost of raising children has risen phenomenally. It is very difficult for families with several children to meet those costs today. Family allowances help in this regard.

The impact of financial stress on families with young children is very great. There are many single parents, particularly mothers raising children on their own, with very marginal incomes who go on welfare because of their children. They do not have any other basic security. If it were possible to have increased family benefits for those children, many single parents would be given the option to work, and to ensure that their children have the total family income which is needed.

I urge the Government to consider an increase in family allowances to help families stay together and to help marginal earners remain off welfare. This would ensure that the next generation has the nourishment and opportunity they need for healthy development.

I do not know how many Hon. Members realize that most family allowance cheques these days for families in the lower income group go toward basic food. In most cases those families also have to line up at food banks at the end of the month. This is disgraceful in Canada.

Finally, I remind the Government that true economic renewal and social justice require a fulfilment of the rights of all Canadians. The rights of Canadians cover many different areas; the right to a decent job, to adequate incomes for those who cannot work, to affordable housing which is being ignored by the Government, and to universal health care which should include more health promotion or prevention of illness. We need more, not less, post-secondary educational programs to help prepare our youth for a rapidly changing future, a future in which they have very little hope of obtaining employment.

Economic and social recovery must go hand in hand. The best way to maintain and improve social programs is to put people back to work. We will certainly be stressing job creation. It will save on unemployment insurance as well as increase Government income from taxes. A reform of our tax system, as I said earlier, is overdue and absolutely essential so that higher income Canadians pay a much fairer share of the cost of our universal programs. Reduced interest rates would also help.

Canadians, especially, Canadian women, will not tolerate a return to a pre-depression system which treats people as charity cases, dependent on food banks and private charity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. She spoke at length about the present family allowance system. I agree with her that it needs changing. Would she look at the fact that presently under the Income Tax Act there are four separate ways in our transfer system that we help families. The first is the deduction for children of $710. Then there is a youth allowance as they become older. That deduction is worth more to those earning high incomes than to those earning small incomes. To a person with no taxable income, the deduction is worthless.

Second, there is the family allowance which she spoke about of roughly $30 a month. In addition, there is the $367 this year, rising to $384 next year, for the child tax credit. I point out to her that the child tax credit, while income tested, is a lump sum payment. A lot of that lump sum payment winds up going to tax discounters.

Lastly, there is an allowance of $2,000 for those who must use daycare. The $2,000 allowance from taxable income is worth a great deal to someone in a 50 per cent bracket who sends their kids to private school, but not worth a darn to a woman who has no taxable income or a family with no taxable income.

Would she and her Party agree that this system of assistance to families with children should be totally reviewed so that we can ensure that the money is paid to those who need it and not to those who do not need it? Does she agree that we should look after the needy, not the greedy? Does she agree that rather than go after the family allowance program alone that we should go after all of these programs together to make sure that the money is channelled where it is needed most?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend who used to sit near me on this side of the House, and I have had discussions on this before. I agree with his analysis of the family benefit programs. Certainly the child tax deduction is very regressive, as is the daycare deduction. Both those programs benefit people who pay taxes. We certainly agree that they are regressive and that perhaps there needs to be a review of them.

On the child tax credit, I would also agree. The National Anti-Poverty Group has appealed to us on different occasions. Because poor families are desperate for that money, they cannot wait until the end of the year. Therefore, they often go to people who will buy the tax credit from them and charge them very unfair amounts.

Our concern is that in doing this review, and in possibly making changes to some of these programs, the family allowance program will suffer. That is why I stressed it particularly in my remarks. It is the basic program. It is the program that recognizes that children belong to all of us. I do not have any children, but I am delighted to pay my taxes to pay for your children and to have benefits that will go to all families, particularly to recognize the value of children.

We must also keep in mind that if we had a progressive tax system generally, this would automatically be taxed back. It is very nice for the wives of some of the gentlemen sitting in this House to get a cheque in their own name. For many of them it is the only cheque they get in their own name.

I am not against some reforms. However, I want to stress over and over again that we believe the basic universal family allowance program is the most important program. As I said earlier, it recognizes the middle income earners. I can tell the new Government that if it is going to take away all benefits from that group, then politically it will be in real hot water. That is a little bit of advice.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I always listen very intently and with great interest to any of these discussions, and to the speakers from the New Democratic Party on this critical question. I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) whether she realizes that a lot of the inequities in the welfare and social contract system have to do with the fact that Canadians are sometimes deprived because of where they live. Poor people living in isolated areas of the country, for example on remote Indian reserves, are suffering because of the universality system.

The Department of Indian Affairs has a statutory requirement not to make any welfare payments that would exceed those paid in the provinces. I always like people who haven't any children lecturing me, one who has four children, or people who have never run a business telling me how to run my business. Has the Hon. Member not realized that it is because of the universality, because of the very nature of the system, that poor people are being deprived?

The Hon. Member says that higher income Canadians should pay more. I would like to pay more, but I would like to know that it will get to the right place. My ability to pay more is limited by the fact that I am already paying for something that the Government wants to give me back. Rather than paying more, I would like to have the choice of saying "Don't pay me my old age pension and don't pay me my family allowance." I will gladly contribute because nobody has a monopoly on a social conscience. However, we want to know that what we are giving goes to the right place, that it is not skimmed away by some bureaucracy, or whatever.

I would like the Hon. Member, who comes from British Columbia, to tell me what the solution would be for my people in Fort Ware, for instance, where the cost of living is four times what it is in Vancouver, or in some of the isolated communities up and down the coast.

The old age pension cheque is the same because it is universal. The family allowance cheque is the same because it is universal. By the 12th or 15th of the month, these people go hungry. I am not overstating that. We have malnutrition and starvation on some of these Indian reserves because of the universality of the system. That is a problem. How do you overcome that?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I agree completely with the Hon. Member that people in remote areas, and particularly those on Indian reserves, are suffering desperately from poverty. This certainly must be a very major concern. What I think the Hon. Member is doing is confusing the concept of universal family allowances or old age pensions with basic social assistance programs.

Mr. Oberle: It is the same thing.

Ms. Mitchell: No, it is not the same thing. The basic social assistance plan is administered under the Canada Assistance Plan. It is 50 per cent provincial and 50 per cent federal responsibility. In the case of native people, there is a special federal responsibility for those on reserves. It is a basic raising of those rates and some adjustment for remote areas that is required.

In some cities, the cost of housing is much higher than in others. There should be an adjustment for a more flexible housing allowance. That is where the solution has to come from in order to meet the basic needs for food and shelter for these people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall now resume debate.

● (1600)

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate you, Sir, and the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) on your appointments, and to express my personal confidence in you and your office. I would also like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Ms. Jacques), the mover and seconder respectively of the address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. In particular, I would like to commend them for their eloquent and sincere addresses.

As a new Member of Parliament, I am sure that I can speak on behalf of all new Members in thanking the veteran Members of Parliament on both sides of the House for the assistance they have provided us in these first few weeks. I know many of my colleagues would agree that the sheer volume of information that has been thrust upon us has made us feel much like we are trying to paddle a canoe up a waterfall without a paddle.

Having the opportunity to present my maiden speech in the House so early in my parliamentary career is both difficult and exhilarating. The institution of Parliament is steeped in history. However, it was not until the division bells rang and I walked through the curtains behind me into the House for the first time that I realized the gravity of my new responsibility fully. For me personally, it was a time for deep reflection.

On September 4, our Party was given a mandate for change; not just a change in Government but a change in the nature of the relationship between Government and the people. I am deeply honoured to be part of the new Government and to meet this new challenge.

I represent the Riding of Etobicoke North which is geographically situated in the Northwest corner of Metropolitan Toronto. I am proud of the fact that I am the first local resident of my community ever to represent our riding in the House of Commons. I have lived in the riding for 26 years. It is where I have made my home, founded my business and raised my children.

I have a deep sense of commitment to the people of Etobicoke North who placed their confidence in me. For that I thank them. They can be assured that I will work diligently and effectively on their behalf because I look forward to representing them from the government benches for many, many years to come.

The name "Toby Cook" appeared on the maps of early Upper Canada and it referred to the rivers and land now known as Etobicoke. Toby Cook was a mispronunciation of the Indian word meaning "the place where the alders grow". Although the Constituency of Etobicoke North has only been in existence since 1979, the communities of Thistletown, Rexdale and Albion which largely make up the riding have long and deep histories. These villages were first settled in the early 19th century by the Queen's Simcoe Rangers and the United Empire Loyalists.

Today in Etobicoke North we have a cross-section of people from all ethnic, religious and socio-economic backgrounds. The diverse blend of ethnic groups adds to the flavour of our community. In a sense, Etobicoke North could be viewed as a replica of the larger Canadian ethnic mosaic. Many of the residents are new Canadians, just as the United Empire Loyalists were 150 years before them.

If I had to describe my constituency in one word, it would be the word "mixture". As I have mentioned, we are blessed with an ethnic as well as a socio-economic mixture. Businesses in our community are quite diverse and range from small single proprietorships to primary industries, from small construction firms to advanced high-tech industries active in research and development. There is even a balance between single-family homes and apartments.

When I first moved to Etobicoke North, farms, orchards and cow fields were the predominant features. Today our community offers the residents a variety of social services and recreational facilities. There is everything from bachhi courts to the new Woodbine race track. Perhaps in the very near future, Hon. Members will be able to refer to Etobicoke North as the home of the dome. Although Etobicoke North is primarily an urban riding, it still contains two farms.

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada have given our Party a mandate for change. The Throne Speech has provided our Government with a blueprint for that change. The people of Etobicoke North join with me in applauding the Government for its sensible, honest approach in dealing with Canada's truly difficult and complex problems. The Speech from the Throne addresses those issues of concern that have been voiced to me throughout the course of the recent election campaign, including economic growth, social issues and legal reform.

Etobicoke North is no different from any other urban industrialized riding in that the recent recession has caused unemployment. Many factors contributed to the recession and to the corresponding rise in the unemployment rate. Personally, I see no merit in dwelling on the past. The Throne Speech spoke in very positive tones with new approaches to dealing with the issues. The past is the past; what concerns us is the future and the best security for one's future lies with a steady job. However, the key to long-term job creation is economic renewal.

On Thursday, November 8, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) put before the House an economic statement which outlined the Government's economic agenda. The responses I have received from my constituents thus far indicate their strong support of the Government's initiatives, particularly with respect to its approach to fiscal responsibility. The people of Etobicoke North recognize the necessity of tough policy during tough times. They have tightened their belts and expect the Government to do the same. They know that through responsible Government, renewed growth and prosperity in the future is achievable.

The problems facing our youth today go beyond the economic ones. During the election campaign I promised my constituents that I would create a local task force adopting a similar approach to that contained in the Throne Speech. The idea was to bring together local businessmen, educators, labour representatives, youth groups and representatives of the three levels of Government to discuss long-term job opportunities in a spirit of consultation and co-operation. We must work in a harmonious environment with the provincial Governments to ensure that our educational system is training young Canadians for jobs that will be in existence 5, 10 and 20 years into the future.

The private sector forecasts its employment and technical requirements in advance. Only through co-operation with that sector will we avoid the unfortunate situation that is occurring today, a situation in which young people have been or will be trained for jobs that do not or will not exist.

The fact that the Throne Speech equally addressed social as well as economic issues serves to reaffirm to the Canadian people the Government's commitment to the maintenance of our social programs. The Canada of today is not the Canada of 20 years ago. Alterations in the economic and social fabric of our country have created new circumstances. My constituents applaud the Government's commitment to positive action in dealing with these new circumstances. I would like to deal briefly with some of these circumstances.

Issues that concern women are very important to me personally. My wife has always been my partner; first in marriage, then in business and now in politics. I also have two teenage daughters and, like all fathers, I wish to ensure that they have the opportunity to attain their goals, whatever those goals may be. Today, because of economic conditions, technological changes and a desire for personal advancement, women have become a more integral part of every sector of the work force.

I am proud that our Government has reaffirmed its position of favouring equality for women in all sectors of society. The principle of equal pay for work of equal value remains a cornerstone of the Government's social policy. As well, I am pleased that the Government intends to place greater emphasis on employment opportunities for women in the public sector.

In Etobicoke North, as in the rest of Canada, we have witnessed a significant rise in the number of single-parent families. The issue of daycare is, therefore, becoming increasingly important to us. It is encouraging that the Government has proposed the creation of a Parliamentary Task Force to study the future of daycare. Undoubtedly, positive solutions will be proposed to effectively deal with this important issue.

Seniors' issues are as well vital to my constituency. More than 18 per cent of the population of Etobicoke North is over the age of 60. There are several large senior citizens' developments in the riding. We must ensure that those Canadians receive sufficient benefits in their retirement. I am pleased to report to my constituents that positive action in this direction is forthcoming in the Government's proposed legislation to extend the income-tested Spouses Allowance to those aged 60 to 64, and as well, in the legislation to enhance the financial situation of veterans.

The Government has shown its progressive nature through the proposals put forth in the Throne Speech which dealt with legal reforms. It has only been within the last 10 years that the Government and agencies have made positive steps toward aiding those individuals who, tragically, have become the victims of crime. It is a most unfortunate situation when a society spends much of its taxpayers' dollars incarcerating criminals and only a fraction on aiding and assisting the victims of crime. I am pleased that the Government intends to work in conjunction with the provinces toward developing policies designed to provide more assistance to those who have fallen victim to crime.

I am also pleased that impaired driving will be addressed. The issue of impaired driving has received much publicity in recent years and is a truly vital concern. One only has to speak to the parents of a victim of an impaired driver to realize the importance and gravity of this issue. My constituents are no strangers to this problem. The programs to reduce impaired driving, now being used by police forces all across Canada, were initiated in Etobicoke North. However, government legislation is not the only means by which to curtail impaired driving. Equally as important is education. Through education we can teach our children the dangers of such actions.

In conclusion, I would like to add a few personal comments. As I look around the House and see my colleagues, I am filled with confidence and hope. With some of them I have become good friends. I look forward with anticipation to working closely with them all. But, what I see most is tremendous potential; potential that I am confident will translate into success. Why am I confident? Because Canada is a country which is truly blessed. We have enormous potential for development, not only with respect to our natural resources, but, more importantly, with our human resources. It is individual Canadians who are the key to our future. No doubt there will be difficult times ahead. Everyone will have to pull together and contribute. I believe that our Government has set a fine example.

To be very honest, this is a totally new experience for me. I have much to learn, but I believe I have something to offer. I am excited by the prospect of being a member of the team which will put Canada back on track. Under the leadership of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), Canada will once again become a great and prosperous nation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). Question or comment.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate my hon. friend from Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) for speaking so eloquently to women's issues.

[English]

I want to tell him how proud I am to be a member of the caucus with enlightened people such as himself. I would also like to assure the House that a combination of men like the Hon. Member and the 19 women who have been elected to the Government of Canada will ensure that the women of Canada make the progress for which they have been waiting for a very long time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no further questions or comments, we shall continue the debate. The Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin).

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for giving me this opportunity to take part in the debate. I suppose you realize what it means to rise in the House of Commons for the first time, even if one has been pleading cases in court for many years.

I also wish to take this opportunity to congratulate you on your appointment. I know you personally, and I am sure that you will perform your new duties with great skill and competence. From my seat, which is quite near the Chair, I can see it is not always easy to bring down impartial rulings, and I am sure you will perform your new duties with consummate skill.

On this occasion, I would also like to say a few words about the work done by my predecessor in the House, Mr. Claude Tessier, who was the Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead for ten years. During that time, he worked very hard, both in the House and in his riding, in a riding that, I must say, is not an easy one.

The riding of Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead has 65 different municipalities, and for the benefit of my Western friends, I should explain that this means 65 different mayors. Whenever the Government launches a program like Canada Works, for instance, 65 mayors, often responsible for very small communities, each want a piece of the pie, in other words, their own program for their own municipality.

This very large riding—130 miles long by 50 miles wide—borders on six other federal ridings. To give Hon. Members an idea where my riding is located, to the west and north it borders on the ridings of Brome-Missisquoi, Shefford, Sherbrooke, Richmond-Wolfe, Frontenac and Beauce, while to the south and east, it borders on three U.S. states, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine. Obviously, a riding of this size can be a problem, especially where travelling is concerned. It takes me longer to travel across to the other end of my riding than to go to Montreal, which is already a fair distance. It is easier for me to go skiing in the Laurentians than to go to Woburn. My predecessor weathered these problems as well as he could, and he also gave me a few tips for dealing with them after I was elected. I now realize that the entire country has the same problems. In Canada, these are problems we have to live with. It is so often a matter of distance, whether we are thinking in the geographic sense, and that of course is clear to everyone, or about economic and political "distances".

For instance, when the previous Government had a majority in the House, but hardly any Members from the West, it could not govern the country in a way that would be accepted by all Canadians. Only a truly national Government, a Government representing all parts of Canada, can govern this country. It is the only way to overcome the political distances that separate Canadians and tell Canadians: All parties in Canada are represented . . . The only way to avoid friction, to avoid the problems we have had for years, the only way to prevent the West from saying: I am not represented. Or Quebec from saying: We were not there when the decisions were being made. The distance problem is also present in the economic sphere. We have cities like Toronto and Montreal that are economically far stronger than the towns in my riding. We must constantly try to overcome these distances and do so in any way we can. We have to live with it, but we also have to overcome it, in the same way we live with and overcome the rigours of winter. If we refuse to overcome these distances, we might as well all go south and live where the sun shines all year. This is important. Within each government program, there should be room for the most sparsely populated areas or those furthest from the urban centres, such as my riding, across the border from Maine. These areas should be considered a part of Canada on the same basis as other areas and be given the same opportunities enjoyed by Canadians in Montreal or Toronto. However, I am confident that the Progressive Conservative Government will give us programs that will overcome these differences, that will help small municipalities like Lac-Mégantic or Woburn or Lac-Drolet to overcome the problems facing them every day. Industries located 100, 150 or 200 miles from Montreal, far from the markets, are going to find it harder to provide jobs for local people. If we do not make an effort to provide those jobs, to give them that extra opportunity, those people are going to react like some Quebecers and some people in Western Canada have reacted, to express their disappointment and frustration. Today, however, the same people are encouraged by the fact that a Progressive Conservative Government is in power, and by the new programs the Government wants to introduce. These people have confidence once again, and I believe they have reason to be confident.

My riding, which has a population of a little over 80,000 is 15 per cent English-speaking, reflecting a duality that has always existed in Canada. In the Eastern Townships, the two communities have always lived in harmony. The riding has always had a number of English-speaking citizens, like my birthplace, Coaticook, where at one time, there were as many Anglophones as Francophones. We live quite happily together, sharing each other's culture and enjoying the best of both worlds.

Because of the riding's excellent geographical location, we have made representations to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) asking him to restore the VIA Rail link, not in order to give one specific community its own rail service but to restore the Halifax-Montreal route, the Atlantic route, which would be a tremendous importance to the development of our area, the Beauce, Mégantic, Frontenac and Sherbrooke. We also made representations aimed at upgrading the Sherbrooke airport, not to make it possible for the Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead to fly instead of driving his car to be in attendance in the House, but to spur real regional development.

We certainly hope that the government will react positively, if only because those measures were promised during the election campaign. We are quite confident that they will be translated into specific projects in the coming months. That would help the region fight against an unemployment rate of 14.4 per cent and go a long way toward convincing those Canadian citizens that they are not as far removed from the decision centres as geographical distances might at first lead them to believe. I think that the people of Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead did get the message we gave them during the election campaign, a message of hope and a message of renewal.

Last Saturday, two days ago, I attended a meeting of a group of people from my riding and I explained to them the economic problems with which the government has to cope.

I am referring to the rather difficult problems left behind by the previous government. Those problems would surely have created more unemployment and might even have led the country to bankruptcy.

Last week, I listened to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) about the Speech from the Throne, when he said that he had nothing against it and that, much to his surprise, he agreed with it. I commend him for saying that because it does him credit. He has been a Member of this House for many years, so he can appreciate the problems he has left us with.

The same thing goes for other Members from the Montreal region. I heard a few who kept saying that the Speech from the Throne had a new and worthwhile approach and that we ought to steer in the direction indicated.

The issue of universality is one which, I believe, people understand quite well in the sense that they know it has to be debated, that such a debate is not necessarily a new step but rather part of the normal evolution or review of the system which should have occurred perhaps a few years ago, instead of just allowing the country to sink into a total indebtedness of more than $190 billion.

People agree, I think, not so much that the less fortunate should have less money, but that there should be a redistribution which is more equitable and more in line with the country's aspirations.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support this motion calling upon the House to concur in the Speech from the Throne, as it incorporates all the principles for which I have been fighting for the past 20 years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member?

[English]

If not, we shall resume debate.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate in this debate. I would like, first of all, to congratulate you, Sir, on the position you hold. I would like to congratulate as well all those who hold office. I may say that so far the House has witnessed the toughness, the firmness and yet the sensibility with which you have governed. We appreciate that. I would also like to congratulate the mover and seconder on their addresses in reply to the Speech from the Throne and, indeed, all Hon. Members who have participated in this debate, particularly those who have addressed the House for the first time.

I want to thank those who have seen fit to elect me to this House for the fifth time, Mr. Speaker, and to tell them that I appreciate the confidence they have shown in me. I will certainly do my best to see that I serve them to the best of my ability, as I have in the past.

I would like to direct some comments to the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, as well as to the economic statement which followed it. The central message seems to be that private enterprise is the engine of the economy and that it must be put front and centre. I have no quarrel with that particular philosophy. Second, and more specifically, it is said that the deficit must be reduced. Again, I have no quarrel in principle with that particular philosophy. However, it is the application which bothers me, Mr. Speaker. I believe the question is; if that is the direction in which the Government wants to move, is it moving in that direction in an evenhanded and fair way? From what I have seen, Mr. Speaker, of the effects of the Throne Speech and of the economic statement, it seems to me that the people in Atlantic Canada and in my riding will be particularly hard hit by certain economic measures. I would like to point out what they are.

Bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that the province from which I come has the highest unemployment rate in the country and the highest cost of living. Historically we have been heavily dependent on transfer payments. Over $200 million a year goes into the Newfoundland economy by way of unemployment insurance. That is the second largest contributor to the provincial economy. I point that out, Mr. Speaker, not because I am proud of the fact, and not because I am satisfied with that situation. I point that out to indicate that sudden and massive change in transfer payments, in unemployment insurance, is going to have a negative effect on the economy of our province.

In the economic statement we were told that the Government was going to increase premiums, which indeed is a raise in taxes. At the same time people would be cut off the rolls and benefits would be cut. The reason given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for that situation was that people did not look hard enough for jobs. That is the interpretation of what he said. Therefore, he is cutting down on unemployment insurance.

I would like to tell the Minister of Finance and the other people on that side of the House that there are 8,000 Newfoundlanders in Fort McMurray, Alberta, who went there to look for jobs. They are in Faro in the Yukon, they are in Thompson, and they are even in Tuktoyaktuk. How far do we have to go to look for jobs, Mr. Speaker? Do we have to swim the Pacific to Japan to look for jobs? What must we do to prove to the Minister of Finance and the Government that Newfoundlanders really do want work? The reason given by the Minister of Finance for changing the unemployment insurance system is that people were not looking hard enough for jobs. In my province at the present time there are no alternatives and people are doing their best. They go anywhere in this country where they can find employment. I know that the Minister of Finance is a fair and honourable man. I just think that he does not quite understand the situation in that province and in the Atlantic area generally.

The Minister assumes that the private sector will create those jobs if the safety net that we have created for unemployed people is changed in some way. What is the evidence of that and what is the motivation? We have had tax breaks in the Atlantic provinces before. In spite of the programs that we have had in the past we have had difficulty attracting capital and creating those jobs. No one was more diligent in that than this Party when we formed the Government of Canada. A constant, considered, important and paramount plank in our platform was always regional development. It seems to me that we have somehow lost sight of that objective.

Let us look at the major industries in my province at the present time. We are told that the offshore holds a great deal of promise. I think that is probably true. Obviously an agreement is imminent. One was talked about and negotiated when the present Government was the Opposition. I hope that that agreement comes to fruition soon. If it is a good agreement for Newfoundland and for Canada my Party and I will support it. However, if that agreement comes into effect and Hibernia does start until maybe in 1989 or 1990, given the world price for oil and all the other factors that have to be considered in starting a commercial development, how soon will those new jobs come? What do we do until then? Even if Hibernia comes into existence it is not going to solve all our employment problems.

Let us turn to a second economic mainstay which may be the most important one for my province; that is the fishery. Fishery Products International is one of the largest companies in the world. It was created when we formed the Government of Canada. I think that company must be given time. That company and that industry is struggling, not just in Atlantic Canada, but all across the country. The marketplace is not sound at the present time. Therefore, our main industry in the province is still struggling.

The inshore fishery which is very important to my constituency in particular has had a particularly bad year. The fish just did not come ashore. No Government, of whatever political stripe, can ensure that. Hundreds of fishermen, through no fault of their own, are not going to be able to get the numer of weeks necessary to qualify for benefits this year. Given that fact, I submit that now is not the time to change the system. Now is the time to do what was done before; that is, put special programs in place to help those fishermen who will not receive those benefits, through no fault of their own.

Instead of tightening up on unemployment insurance it seems to me that we have to ensure that that net is in place. However, there has been a toughening of unemployment insurance and, as far as the fishery is concerned, these other measures had been taken. Capital projects which were to proceed, such the Smokes on the Labrador coast, have been cancelled. The Government is going to cut out the advertising program that was put in place to advertise fish products abroad. Insurance is going to be privatized. I wonder how many companies are going to get into the business of insuring inshore fishermen, their nets, gear and boats. So far there has not been much interest shown. That is why the Government is involved in those activities, because the private sector has not responded. Maybe we will find companies all across Canada suddenly insuring longliners, but I wonder and worry about that. If it does not happen there is going to be a severe burden on inshore fishermen.

Berthage fees are going to be doubled at a time when the fishery has had a particular bad year. Fishermen are going to have to pay more for maps and weather forecasts. All of these may seem insignificant to a large business, but when they are added as a burden to a small inshore fishermen, a small businessman, they add up to a very heavy burden indeed. That kind of measure is not going to create jobs in a struggling industry. Rather, it hits the little guy when he is down and needs a hand up. It is going to put massive economic pressure on those who can least afford it.

With regard to the forestry industry, in spite of the fact that our mills in the province are now in good hands and that modernization is underway, technology in and of itself is going to mean a loss of jobs. While the situation is stable in the forest industry, which is the third economic mainstay of the province, jobs have been lost. I do not foresee in the immediate future where those new jobs are going to be created. Yet, we are told that the forestry centre which was to be put in Corner Brook is going to be cancelled. That would have been an alternative for employment in that particular west coast area.

There is evidence in the Speech from the Throne and in the economic statement particularly, Mr. Speaker, that the people in the Atlantic and the North are the forgotten people. I would like to talk about the North for a minute. Consider what has happened to the people up there. The cost of gasoline has gone up. The airport tax has gone up. Bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that air travel into the North is not an alternative, it is not luxury. It is the only way in and out. I do not know if the Government understands that, but when you live in that particular area the only way you can get out of the Northwest Territories, the Yukon and Labrador is by air. If you increase the cost of gasoline and airport taxes it will place an additional burden on people who already experience the highest cost of living in the country.

As a matter of fact, those measures which have been taken are exactly the measures which the Canadian Transport Commission recommended against last week. In one of the best reports issued by the Canadian Transport Commission it said that to do away with airport taxes and fuel taxes would give the people in the North a break which they deserve and require if they are going to continue to live in the North. If we continue to put that kind of burden on people in the North it will depopulate northern Canada.

What else was done as far as the North was concerned? The moratorium on the taxation of northern benefits which had been put in place is only there for a year. It was my understanding that northern benefits would not be taxed indefinitely, for the foreseeable future, and I understood that to mean for all time. Many of us fought that issue very hard and I can say that we will continue to fight it. The Minister of Finance said this would last only one year, and then he will review it. He said there is a possibility that northern benefits could be taxed at the end of this year. I give notice that I will fight that as hard in the future as I have in the past, because if such a measure were implemented it would depopulate the north, an area that we need to build up.

Let me talk about the plight of the youth. It is a serious situation all across the country, but particularly in the Atlantic area. In Newfoundland, 50 per cent of all eligible young people are unemployed. In the meantime, a mere $27 million is allocated to youth employment as opposed to the $100 million that had been promised by this Party when we formed the Government of Canada. Moreover, there have been cuts in the industrial training allowance.

Let me give a small example of what that means to a northern community. The radio station in Nain, Labrador, and Inuit community, was depending on that industrial training allowance to employ trainees to operate a radio station for the whole of the northern Labrador coast in the Inuit language. If those industrial training programs are cut, then that project will have to be cancelled. It is a very important project for their communication purposes and the development of their area and society. That is an example of the effect it will have.

I wonder how many members of the Opposition realize those effects when they put those programs in place? We do not know what further cuts there will be. For example, we do not know about the transfer payments for education. What will happen to the Established Programs Financing? We already know that all of the money that goes to the provinces does not get to the universities, into education and to the students. We know that the provincial governments can use that money for paving roads, or whatever they want. If the EPF is cut further, the universities and post-secondary institutions will find themselves hardpressed, and I submit that the students will be carrying the burden in the final analysis. They will not only be carrying an educational burden but a financial one as well. We do not know what further cuts are coming but we do know that young people have seen an immediate cut to systems which they had taken for granted for job-creation.

I have said that I have no quarrel with the idea of giving priority to the private sector. I have no quarrel with cutting the deficit. However, when one embarks on such a policy, one must take regional differences into account. This country is not the same everywhere. Downtown Toronto and Labrador are two entirely different regions. The Government does not consider regional differences when it applies one policy right across the country.

We on this side gave a high priority to regional development. Now I hardly hear it mentioned. It is as if the Atlantic and the North do not exist. It is as if they are the forgotten people in this country. I have not heard any provincial premiers from the Atlantic say anything about the economic statement. Have any Government Members from the Atlantic Provinces said anything about it? Were they consulted and was there advice taken? If they were consulted they could not have been listened to. Either way they stand condemned.

I hope that I am wrong but I believe this budget will be a severe burden on the people in the extreme regions of this country, particularly in the Atlantic and in the North. It will be a long cold winter for those people. Newfoundlanders and Labradorians and people in the North will come to fully understand this winter the meaning of the old saying, "Tory times are hard times".

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, first I must congratulate the Hon. Member for his fifth election. That is shocking news, indeed, but we must congratulate him for that.

When he finished his remarks he said that he hoped he is wrong. I am raising right now to tell him that he does not have to wait any longer for that hope to be fulfilled. He is wrong. He was wrong in just about everything he said during his comments.

He said that he had no quarrel with cutting the deficit, and then spent 20 minutes opposing in every way he could every suggested cut to the deficit. If the Hon. Gentleman has no quarrel with cutting the deficit, why is he quarreling with it? Why is he on his feet bringing forward all these objections if he does not quarrel with cutting the deficit?

The hon. gentleman tut-tutted about transfer of payments for education. There has been no suggestion by the Government whatsoever that transfer payments for post-secondary education to the provinces will be cut. As a matter of fact, the hon. gentleman was a minister in the government that, several years ago, put a ceiling on transfer payments to the provinces for education, contrary to agreements with the provinces. Now the hon. gentleman, the "Uriah Heap" of 1984, gets up and wrings his hands over some problem there will be with transfer payments for education when the hon. gentleman's government did exactly that by imposing a 6 and 5 per cent ceiling. The honourable "Uriah" should not come into the House and heap this kind of hypocrisy before Members of the House. He is saying "Please don't do what we did". I can convey the message to him that we will not do what he did.

The hon. gentleman weeps about northern benefits. He was a member of a government that announced it was eliminating the tax allowance for northern benefits given to people who live in the North. That government only changed it after the Opposition in the House sent out an outraged howl and the people of the North added their voices to it. Therefore we are glad to have him aboard and we know now that he is opposed to taxation in the North. We hope to have him on our side fighting for the cause of not letting that happen.

I did not hear a word from the hon. gentleman about the spouses' allowance. We did not hear him say that he was opposed to the increase in spouses' allowance this year that we are implementing for single persons in Canada between the ages of 60 and 64. They are primarily women who desperately need the assistance they will get this year, to the tune of $200 million, from the Government by way of an improved spouses' allowance.

We did not hear a word from the hon. gentleman about the veterans who will receive increased benefits this year as a result of the increase of $22 million with respect to veterans' benefits.

We heard the hon. gentleman complaining that a forestry centre would not be moved from St. John's to Corner Brook. Of course, there was a unanimous report recommending that it not be moved from St. John's. Further, the hon. gentleman forgot to say that partly as a result of this Government's efforts the Kruger firm is going ahead to take over the Bowater Pulp and Paper Mill so that it will continue to operate in Corner Brook. I suggest that a living, breathing operating pulp and paper mill is 100 times better than having a forestry centre located in the community, any day of the year, any year of the century, any century of the world's history since recorded time began.

The hon. gentleman did not say a word about the fact that we are helping the fishermen, farmers, miners and loggers of this country by giving them relief with respect to the payment of gasoline tax. We are eliminating 12 cents to 14 cents a gallon of the gasoline tax. That is approximately two cents a litre, I believe—I am like the Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm). Whatever it is, nothing could be sweeter than to measure in the litre. We are removing the fishermen's burden of 14 cents a gallon or three cents a litre of federal sales tax for gasoline. Did I hear the hon. gentleman say that?

That adds up to far more than the petty annoyances he mentioned. He alleged that berthing fees would increase and they would have to pay to get the weather forecast. What twaddle! One needs only to turn on the radio to listen to a free weather forecast on any channel. Very few people will have to pay any more for weather information.

The hon. gentleman forgot to tell his constituents about the tax reductions we are bringing in on taxes that that the hon. gentleman increased over the last five years. Remember, they were elected in 1980—

Mr. Allmand: A point of order.

Mr. Crosbie: They do not like to hear the truth.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to remind the House of Standing Order 35—I just had it.

● (1650)

Mr. Allmand: Just a minute, Mr. Speaker, it is Standing Order 35(2)(b). This is one of the new provisional standing orders which provides for the ten-minute period following the twenty-minute speeches. It reads; in part:

—ten minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses thereto.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I did not see any other Members rising. I felt if the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was going to comment and take up the ten minutes, I should stop him very shortly anyway and allow the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) to answer or rebut the comment. But I do not recall seeing other Members rising. They are entitled to speak, and if I see them I will definitely recognize them.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognize the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) on a point of order.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the response and the comments you made on my point of order. But this is a very serious point. These are provisional standing orders that are being tried in this House. We introduced the ten-minute debating period after twenty-minute speeches so that Members could ask questions and make brief comments, as the rule states. I think, as a matter of precedent, your ruling is very important. If Members are allowed to carry on and make full speeches after twenty-minute speeches, we will violate this provisional rule. I think it is important for the Chair to give direction on that ten-minute period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I have already made a ruling on it. I see the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) rising. Is it to ask a question?

Mr. de Jong: No, Mr. Speaker, I am rising for debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) would like to give an answer?

Mr. Crosbie: Could I get to my question, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) put his question.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, Mr. Speaker. What does the hon. gentleman think about the fact that the cupboard was bare respecting the unemployment and Canada Works funds when we got into office? We devoted, I think, a further $480 million to a Canada Works program that is coming into effect November and December this year, including additional funding under section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act? Did that happen to slip the Hon. Member's mind or would he like to congratulate us on doing what we can to overcome the worst effects of unemployment in districts like his own this year? The Hon. Member's own district, by the way, is going to get $3 million from that program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: Yes, my own district is going to get $3 million, Mr. Speaker. It got almost $3 million last year because Canada Works is a program that was brought in by this party when we were the government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: The use of Section 38 was a use of the Unemployment Insurance Act, a creative and imaginative use brought in by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) when he was the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Those program are not Tory programs. They are Liberal programs being continued. I welcome them and I hope they continue.

I ask the Hon. Member not to talk to me about the bare cupboard. As far as the deficit cuts are concerned, Mr. Speaker, yes I agree with them. But I am saying to the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) that the Conservatives are going about that in the wrong way. The Conservatives are cutting the wrong things. If the Hon. Member for St. John's West is prepared to stand up in Newfoundland and defend the cutting of unemployment insurance and to defend all the other cuts, I would like him to come to my riding, because if he does I will be in for a sixth term, Mr. Speaker. I hope he will come and defend what the Government has done.

As far as northern allowances are concerned, it was this government in the last measure taken that said there would be no taxation on northern benefits. That was a definitive statement. That is the situation. It was not the opposition that put up a fight. It was those of us from the North who said to the government of the day, "This is what you must do." And we were listened to—

Mr. Crosbie: Who was the government?

Mr. Rompkey: —unlike members from the Atlantic area who were not listened to in this budget and in this Throne Speech.

Mr. Crosbie: You were the government. You were a minister in the government. You were speaking to yourself.

Mr. Rompkey: People in the Atlantic area are the forgotten people. As far as the forestry centre in Corner Brook is concerned, the Hon. Member says, "yes, we have the Kruger Mill going". The agreement for the Kruger Mill was signed when we were the Government of Canada. Like a lot of other agreements, ribbon-cuttings, and press conferences, the Conservatives are taking credit now for things that were done when we were the Government of Canada. The money that was put into the Kruger Mill—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allocated for questions and comments is now expired.

[English]

The ten-minute period has concluded. Let me say to the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) that in future if he would like to be recognized I would very much appreciate it if he would rise as soon as the speaker has finished. I will then recognize him.

Mr. Allmand: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There is no requirement that Members rise immediately after a speaker has finished speaking. I was only prompted to ask my question after hearing the question put by the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). I think that is my right. If he had not taken so much time I would have had time to put my question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would now recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney).

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by congratulating my friends and colleagues, the Hon. Member for Sarnia Lambton (Mr. James) and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Ms. Jacques) on their excellent beginnings to this debate. I would also like to congratulate all new Members on both sides of the House on their election and to say to them and to all Members of this House how proud I am to be part of the Thirty-third Parliament of Canada. I am well aware that the honour of being here is a privilege that has to be earned every day. I am grateful to the electors of Ottawa West for the confidence they expressed in me in such overwhelming numbers on September 4.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, as a long-time resident of Ottawa, Ottawa West is an interesting and exciting community. It is an attractive community, so attractive in fact that I am pleased to say several Members of this House and one or two Cabinet Ministers reside in Ottawa West while they are in the capital.

Ottawa West comprises an area of about 26 square kilometres in the west end of the City of Ottawa. The eastern part of the riding is visible from the windows of the Government Lobby directly behind me. The riding follows the historic Ottawa River along the beautiful and well-travelled Ottawa River Parkway to the Ottawa-Nepean boundary in the west and then south to Baseline Road and east to the Central Experimental Farm, the only farm in my riding. I have the honour of having as the only farmer in my riding the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise).

Ottawa West is a largely residential riding which boasts a population of approximately 90,000 and a labour force, as of the last census, of 48,520 people.

Many of my constituents are in the Public Service of Canada; many are in the commercial and business industries, particularly in the high technology sector. I will have more to say about the Public Service and high technology later.

English is the language most frequently spoken in the homes of my constituency. It is spoken by about 86.5 per cent of the people.

[Translation]

French is the language spoken in 7.4 per cent of the homes in Ottawa West; in 6 per cent of the homes in my riding, a language other than French or English is spoken, and 26 per cent of the population speak both French and English.

[English]

In terms of formal education 14.5 per cent of Ottawa West residents, aged 15 and older in 1981, had a university degree.

I am particularly honoured to represent Ottawa West in this House because it has been represented by so many capable members in the past and, indeed, by several prominent figures in Canadian history, including two distinguished Prime Ministers of Canada. Both Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Robert Borden represented my area under its former name of Carleton. So did George Drew when he was here as Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. More recently, the Hon. Dick Bell, for many years national director of the Progressive Conservative Party and later a distinguished Minister in the Diefenbaker Cabinet, represented Ottawa West. Mr. Bell is still a leading figure of the legal community in the City of Ottawa and was a partner of that distinguished servant of the House, the late Hon. Walter Baker who I was proud to call my friend.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Daubney: I would be remiss if I did not mention as well my immediate predecessor as Member of Parliament for Ottawa West and yours, Mr. Speaker, as Speaker of the House, the Hon. Lloyd Francis, who was the only Liberal to have ever been elected in Ottawa West. I take this opportunity to congratulate Mr. Francis upon his appointment as Ambassador to Portugal and wish both him and Mrs. Francis well in their important new duties.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Daubney: As all Hon. Members appreciate, it is always a pleasure to note a constituent's achievement.

I mentioned earlier that many of my constituents are public servants. I myself was a public servant for three years until my election. In fact, I was the only federal public servant elected to the Chamber on September 4. I am also proud to say that my great-grandfather was a public servant in this city in the late 1800s and the early years of this century. Indeed, one of the highlights of the election campaign for me on a personal level was encountering a constituent in his 90s who had worked with my great-grandfather in the Ottawa post office before World War I.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said on a number of occasions, we have a good Public Service in Canada. In most cases public servants are a dedicated, hard-working group of people who have oftentimes been the subject of abuse that might better have been directed in the past at their political masters. Public servants like all Canadians are people who care about their jobs, their families and their country. They are people with the education and the experience to make a valuable contribution to the public life of Canada, not just on the job but outside their work as well. In my view they are people who have the right to expect that they will be treated equally under the Constitution. This is why during the campaign I made a commitment to push for an extension of political rights and freedom of expression for public servants.

The Public Service Employment Act, enacted by the House in 1967, establishes some very restrictive and narrow rules on political activity by public servants. The Public Service Commission in February of this year issued guidelines on political activities which in my opinion went beyond the scope and intent of the Act in extending restrictions on such activities even further.

[Translation]

I will therefore recommend to my colleagues that a special parliamentary committee be struck to draft a piece of legislation with the following objectives: first, to give political rights to public servants as recommended in the D'Avignon Commission report and, second, to indicate to all public servants in clear and precise terms to what extent they are allowed to participate in the political process, regardless of the category they fit in on the basis of the D'Avignon report.

[English]

I mentioned earlier that many of my constituents work in the high-tech industry. In fact, Ottawa West is home to several high-tech companies as well as to the Ontario Centre for Micro-electronics. Ottawa West has a large stake in the success of high technology industries. A good proportion of the new private sector jobs we need in Ottawa may come from these industries—from communications, laser, aerospace or other high level technologies, the same technology which other Canadian communities need if they are to prosper.

There is more at stake here than just the creation of new jobs in the high-tech sector itself. The fact is that Canada's economic health rests on the increased productivity of existing industries. To survive in the world we have to sell what we produce, and we can only do that by drastically increasing the productivity of our mature industries—the industries where there are jobs for more than just scientists and engineers.

I am talking about our forestry, agriculture, mining, petrochemical, textile, shoe, steel and automobile industries—the areas where there are large numbers of jobs at stake. The problem we face here is that we cannot match many of our Third World competitors in these areas in terms of wages. I am referring to countries such as Mexico, Taiwan or Brazil where the lessons of competitive international economics have been learned well, countries where labour-intensive industries are productive and thriving.

It is obvious that we cannot hope to compete internationally on the basis of labour costs. We can only compete, we can only keep our existing jobs and create new jobs if we can increase our productivity or if we can produce innovative products at a price people want. This means developing new technology, creating new high-tech industries and learning how to integrate new technology with our existing industries, to help us produce better products more cheaply than before in our existing industries. We should not think for a moment that only blue collar jobs are at stake here. We have all seen the vulnerability of the scientific and engineering community to staff cut-backs.

Because of the small investment required for equipment and high labour costs involved in office work, a number of U.S., Canadian, Japanese and Australian companies have already begun exporting data processing clerical work to Third World countries. Labour costs are less. These countries can acquire data processing technologies cheaply and they can produce high quality work. The concept of the offshore office has been born, and one more brick in the wall of our economic complacency has tumbled to the harsh demands of international competition.

The loss of jobs is a problem, but the loss of our complacency can only be good for us. We have to learn from our competitors. We have to encourage new technological development, and we have to plan very carefully for the integration of new technologies into our existing industries.

The Japanese have demonstrated how useful and how necessary social consensus is for the introduction of new technology to society. Their social and cultural patterns cannot and should not necessarily be duplicated here, but we need co-operation between all sectors of our community if we are to make some of the difficult economic and technological decisions which are necessary for economic growth. That is one of the key messages of the Government's Throne Speech and economic statement—consensus and co-operation.

I was happy to see the appointment of my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon), as Minister of State for Science and Technology. For the first time in many years we have a Minister devoted solely to this fundamentally important sector of our economy. Technological innovation does not come from wishful thinking. It comes from the creation of an economic environment which rewards risk and rewards research.

The Speech from the Throne and the economic statement clearly lay the groundwork for the creation of an economic environment that will stimulate confidence and encourage Canadians to take the risks which research and development involve. There is a long pay-back period on research and development. Investors, entrepreneurs and scientists need to know that government is serious about long-term growth before they will invest in research and development.

There has been a lack of confidence in the country bred in part by the poorly co-ordinated and recklessly expensive projects of the previous administration. In my opinion this has been the prime inhibitor to greater research and development in the past. In fact, the shamful statistic is that Canada spends less on R and D as a percentage of our Gross National Product than any country in the western world except Iceland.

The fact that our Government has shown that it means business on the deficit has already had a positive influence on business confidence in this country and abroad. I am confident that Canada can look forward to increased investment in research and development, increased productivity and increased competitiveness for Canadian industry. As a result we can look forward to more jobs for Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions, comments?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on many aspects of the Member's speech, but I will focus on the area of political rights for people working in the Public Service of Canada. I appreciate very much that the Hon. Member has indicated that he personally favours giving political rights to people working for the public service and that they should not be forced to continue with the kind of restrictions that now exist, restrictions which have existed since 1966, and which were reinforced by the directives sent by the Public Service Commission to all members of the public service during the months of February to July this summer.

The Hon. Member did not comment, however, on the specific promises that were made by his leader, now the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and by the Conservative Party during the course of the summer election campaign. Perhaps he recalls that in response to questionnaires from the Professional Institute, and also from the Public Service Alliance, that the promise was made that a Progressive Conservative Government would in fact set up a parliamentary task force or parliamentary committee and would assign that committee the job of looking into the question of political rights of public service workers with a view to taking early action.

While the Conservatives in the campaign did not say specifically what they intended to do, they made it very clear that they felt that most people working for the public service should have political rights. My question is whether the Hon. Member recalls that promise. I presume from his statement that he supports that action. Has he pressed the Government to in fact set up the committee which was promised? Can he give us a report, as a backbencher from the Government side, as to when that will likely take place?

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), my neighbour, for his question. I, of course, am aware of our position during the campaign. It is one that I support, as is clear from my remarks. It is one that I as a private Member will continue to work toward achieving.

In answer to one of the Hon. Member's subquestions, I have had discussions with certain Members of the Cabinet. I am confident that this question of political rights of public servants will be one that will form the subject matter of negotiations in due course between Treasury Board and various Government unions. As I said, I will certainly press for a parliamentary committee to investigate further. I think the D'Avignon Committee, which reported a few years ago, has gone a long way toward recommendations which in my view would be acceptable and workable. They are ones that I would be prepared to recommend to my colleagues on the front benches.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the Hon. Member. I think I made clear that certainly my Party has felt for a long time that these political rights should be given to people who work for the Public Service of Canada. My colleague from Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has on several occasions brought forward Private Members' Bills for debate. In fact, that was the only occasion on which this matter was raised in the previous Parliament between 1980 and 1984.

I mention that because when the Liberals were in opposition in 1980, prior to that election, they made the same promises as the Progressive Conservatives made this summer. That is why people in the public service and in the public service unions may rightly be forgiven for being just a bit jaundiced about what is there, although it is my impression that the Conservatives were perhaps more intent on acting than the Liberals had been.

I am disturbed, however, to see that this is now going to be a matter of negotiation and discussion. It is a matter that, if not acted upon early, may well get either forgotten or may get bound up in bureaucratic boondoggles or hornwaggles and not get acted upon. I would just ask the Hon. Member to join with me in pressing the now absent President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) to see that the parliamentary committee be set up before Christmas with a specific view to maintaining a momentum on this issue. If the momentum does not exist, I fear in fact that the action that both he and I would like to see will not be taken in the life of this Parliament.

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre that I will do what I can to ensure that the momentum is in fact not lost on this issue. He will appreciate, of course, that I am not in a position to make any commitment on the part of the Government. However, I can assure him that I have a real personal interest in this issue. I know that many of my constituents do as well. I recognize that the principles involved are not black and white. We are balancing two essential principles here. One is the impartiality and neutrality of the public service which, of course, must be maintained. The other is the right of individual public servants to freedom of expression and political activity.

This is not an easy question. It is probably fair to say it is not one on which there is any consensus on this side of the House, and probably not on the other side either. As an Ottawa area member and a former public servant, I assure the Hon. Member that I will continue to press for this. I hope, with him and other members from the Ottawa area and other interested members from across the country, that this matter can be referred to a parliamentary committee in the very near future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): As there are no more questions or comments, I will now recognize the next speaker.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for giving me this opportunity to speak in the House for the first time. I am very proud of the fact that I am here at last, after all the attempts made during most of the last decade.

I would like to thank the people of Gatineau who have given me a mandate of which I am proud. I would also like to tell them that I do not intend to waste a single minute of my time and that I am going to take advantage of this opportunity to get Gatineau the development it needs, as a riding that has tremendous potential but has been terribly neglected, especially during the last twenty or thirty years.

Gatineau was one of the ridings of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Although I have great respect for that great French-Canadian who put his mark on our history, I must say I am proud of the fact that I managed to win the riding for my Party, at a time when this country needs people with the courage to change its course and guide it in a direction that will help develop its great potential.

Mr. Speaker, this Government is accused of being vague in the throne speech, despite the fact that it contains the broad outlines of the new direction this Government wishes to take in administering the country. Heaven knows, planning and direction are something this country needs very badly! Too many ad hoc programs! Too many solutions based on political reasons, have adversely affected development and our ability to provide economic solutions.

[English]

We needed to have a new direction in our country. We needed to lay out the foundation for this new direction. It is very difficult to turn the Queen Mary around just by wishing so. You have to plan it. You have to make sure you know where you are going. You have to announce to the various technicians and experts, even to the engineroom, that you are going to change direction with this enormous equipment.

There is a similarity between what we have attempted to do as a new government, because the mess that we were left with by the previous administration and its previous administration and its previous administration is not something that can be changed overnight. Therefore, I would quarrel with the approach that has been taken by the Opposition, that in our Speech from the Throne there is nothing but generalities and pipe dreams and that there is nothing substantial.

• (1720)

On the contrary, the throne speech defines the structural problems of our economy which, for instance, have prevented us from providing for the lean years. Because of the enormous debt load, we did not have the flexibility required to act when, for instance, the economy of our biggest trading partner, the United States, was under pressure and buyers on the other side were unable to place the orders we needed to keep our factories going. Because we did not have the requisite flexibility, every time the U.S. elephant sneezed, we had no choice but to jump.

We must build this flexibility into our relations with our neighbour to the south who has a tremendous influence on our lives. While building this flexibility, we also want to ensure our country's sovereignty. We want to be able to make independent decisions to promote our growth and deal with the problems that occur from time to time. We cannot have equal growth, because there are too many factors involved, and therefore we need this flexibility in order to cope with the rainy days.

In the Speech from the Throne, we gave a clear picture of how we are going to obtain the flexibility we need to cope with the lean years. We also discussed a new approach to consultations with the provinces. My Government's management of federal-provincial relations will pursue three basic objectives: to harmonize policies of our two orders of government, to ensure respect for their jurisdictions, and to end unnecessary and costly duplication. These are not just words but very definite goals. There is a good example of all this in my constituency today, where Canexel, a CIP factory, has just received an order to close down by February 14. As soon as I heard the factory was going to close, I got in touch with the mayor of the City of Gatineau, with the Liberal Member of the National Assembly for Gatineau, with the president of the Société d'aménagement de l'Outaouais and with people in the riding who I knew were very much motivated to protect employment in the riding. I did not say: Well, why should I want to work together with the provincial Liberal Member? He might get all the credit, so I should leave him out of it. I did not say: Well, as far as the Société d'aménagement de l'Outaouais is concerned, they have a pequist government and we do not agree on the constitutional issue, so why should I want to work with people who do not share my opinions? No, I said to myself: Our objective is to save 250 jobs at Canexel. That is why we got to work right away. Tomorrow we are having meetings with officials from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, to bring together potential buyers and experts from the federal and provincial development services, to make sure that the decisions we want to make will be both favourable to Gatineau and not detrimental to the area where the factory was to be transferred. So this is all very concrete. When we say consultation, we mean consultation.

My Government is also committed to ensuring that the equality of both official languages is respected in fact as it is in law.

[English]

Most people are in favour of bilingualism in Canada. The problem arises from the methods which are used to establish the bilingualism of the country. There is also a great deal of fear in those Canadians who live in certain regions of the country and who have not the advantage of living with people who speak a language other than English, except perhaps some European languages. They have been used to hearing people from Europe speaking various languages, but perhaps have not been exposed to North American French-speaking people. There is a great deal of fear.

I feel that if the previous administration made a mistake in its bilingualism policy, it was in not considering that when we want to have something adopted which deals with emotions, culture and attitudes, the first thing we must do is remove the fear which will be the greatest obstacle to making progress. That is why I am very pleased that my Party and the Government have realized that we must push bilingualism, but on the other hand that we must address ourselves to the legitimate fears of a great many people who are unfamiliar with life in a dual-language society. This is why it is a very important part of the Speech from the Throne.

We want to respect the equality of both languages. There is also reference to the methods that will be used to make all Canadians, whatever their mother tongue, aware of the importance of bilingualism in Canada in terms of justice, intrinsic value and the cultural wealth it represents. The constitutional agreement will remain incomplete as long as Quebec is not part of an accord. While their main responsibility is to achieve economic renewal the Ministers will work to create the conditions that will make possible the achievement of the prime objective.

Furthermore, this Government is committed not only to reconciliation but also to creating an economic consensus. Here again, creating a consensus is not a vague statement. It is a very practical statement. For instance, if we do not start the consultation process, we will never develop the solutions we need to deal with our very complex problems. We must have balanced development in the regions. We must also stop the duplication of efforts by provincial and federal governments because we no longer have the tremendous growth we experienced in the sixties. It is therefore imperative that we maximize the funds earmarked for economic development. That consensus is absolutely essential. There can be no progress without it.

Not only will the next summit seek to achieve a consensus but it will also gather under one roof spokespersons for consumers, women, native people, businessmen, unions and government officials. We will then have the wide variety of consultations needed to choose policies that will reflect real conditions in all regions as well as the country's real economic situation. As soon as the situation improves, we will be in a position to implement all the necessary programs or changes.

I am convinced that throwing lots of money left and right to score points or impress people will not solve our problems. On the contrary, I believe that the reason why Canada finds itself in this predicament is that this method has been used too often. They wanted to impress people instead of sitting down in a way which some people who like to show off would describe as being less dramatic and less ostentatious, but such methods will be far more constructive, competent and effective to solve the problems.

Perhaps there will be other summits on increased productivity. Everybody knows that we must increase productivity. When we talk about productivity, we do not mean that people ought to work harder and that they are lazy; no, we mean that the machinery is obsolete, that markets are not properly studied, that some products are simply left on the shelf. That is what productivity is all about, it is a lot more than simply telling people that they have to work much harder during their working hours. I even think that this last problem is disappearing gradually and that our efforts should be aimed at modernizing the equipment and coming to grips with the latest technology. Speaking of the latest technology, we in the Outaouais region are still lagging behind the technological breakthrough. That is why I made it a point during the election campaign to tell the people that I would make sure that the Outaouais residents, French- and English-speaking alike, will very soon be part of that technological breakthrough.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about social justice, as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. The role of women in all spheres of Canadian society and the equality which they rightfully claim are indeed the most significant development in recent years. True equality between men and women stems from economic equality. That is why I decided to join the Progressive Conservative Party in the first place. I came to the conclusion that, without economic equality, women can dream all they want about social equality, but they will never achieve it.

I knew that there can not possibly be economic equality unless Canada's economy is strong, and that the government in office must have the courage to make the necessary changes to spur the kind of economic growth which I, as a woman, as well as my sisters and my grandchildren—I have a son, so perhaps I will have granddaughters some day—need if ever we are to have that equality. This is why I believe that the efforts already made by our Government and by our Prime Minister, a true leader, are not only valuable, but essential to ensure women's equality.

Indeed, you will be asked to consider a number of important legislative measures, including removal of the discriminatory provisions in the Indian Act, certain amendments to the Divorce Act, and measures to control pornography and sexually abusive broadcasting.

It is also time to recognize the responsibility we all share for those of our fellow-citizens who suffer from physical and mental disabilities and this is why the throne speech also gave priority to this issue.

In addition, there will be a comprehensive overhaul of the Canadian pension system, particularly such matters as portability, vesting, survivors' benefits and pension coverage of women. These are very complex issues which require consideration if we want economic progress for women. As we all know, an astounding proportion, something like 60 percent, of women over age 65 live below the poverty line. Many of these women find themselves in that situation either because they have spent their lives bringing up their children and taking care of their husbands or because they have held jobs which provided no pensions or only a very meager one. If we want equality for women, it is therefore essential to overhaul our pension system. It is also essential for men because our society has changed. There is now much more mobility than before, and we must have even more because workers have to go where the jobs are and Canadians must be able to move anywhere in Canada, wherever job opportunities are, because it would be sheer deception on our part if we were to believe that a country as vast and diversified as ours could one day be evenly and equally developed. Mobility is therefore essential, and without pension portability, we cannot have the necessary flexibility to guarantee that unemployment will be eliminated or at least reduced to a rate which our society can absorb thanks to temporary assistance programs.

Canada owes much to those who have dedicated themselves to cultural, artistic and athletic endeavour. The throne speech says that the Government will address itself to this issue. However, it must be understood that we are in the middle of an economic crisis and that we are trying to give a new economic direction to our country. Unfortunately, priorities must be set and areas such as culture, the arts and athletics may not receive as much attention at the beginning of our mandate as unemployment and job creation. This is normal because we really must pay more attention to the jobless, many of whom are now on welfare, than to other matters; even though these issues, such as culture, arts, fitness and competition, are very important to us, we shall have to wait a while before we can find the necessary funds to provide assistance in these areas. On the other hand, there is a lot we can do which does not require grants or enormous amounts of money. For instance, we can review the tax system to make sure that artists are not penalized because of their way of life which is different from that of people who work for wages.

There is much to do if we are to make existing rules more flexible and simplify the tax system.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of her remarks in commenting on the Speech from the Throne the Hon. Member repeated what many Members, as well as the Leader of her Party, have stated, that it was not possible to put forward in the Speech from the Throne the many items which were promised during the election campaign, because after September 4 they found that the finances of the Government were in such a terrible state. The Hon. Member used the argument that the cupboard was bare. My question to her is very simple and straightforward. Is she not aware that during the election campaign her Leader and many Conservative candidates said that the country was in a terrible financial situation? As a matter of fact, they said that the deficit was between $36 billion and $37 billion. Despite the fact that they said the deficit was going to be between $36 billion and $37 billion, they made over 300 promises which the Leader of her Party estimated would cost approximately $4 billion.

The other night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated that the deficit this year would be approximately $34 billion. However, the Hon. Member and many of her colleagues are using the excuse that they cannot move forward with many of the election campaign promises because of the financial situation. How can they say that they cannot move ahead with those promises because the deficit is now $34 billion—according to the Minister of Finance—when during the election campaign promises were made when they said the deficit would be between $36 billion and $37 billion?

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to answer that question. I mentioned at the beginning of my speech today that one of the problems we wanted to address in the Speech from the Throne was the structural problems in the economy. Those problems have been neglected for many decades.

One of the structural problems is the growth of the debt which we discovered once we were in government and could look at the books. We did discover, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said, that there had been great waste. We had to wait until September 17, when our ministers could get a look at the books, to find out how big a waste. That is number one.

Number two is that the debt was growing at an even greater and alarming rate than we had anticipated. When we were talking about $36 billion, $34 billion or $35 billion, we were talking about the year 1984-85. We could see only the tip of the iceberg. I believe the Hon. Minister of Finance made it very clear in his statement that it was the shock of seeing the direction which the debt was taking, compared to the growth that could be possible, that made him decide if we did not stop adding to the debt now, three or four years in the future we would be in even greater trouble, and we would never have the freedom to address the problems. Not only that, we would not be able to do anything about the 1.5 million unemployed people.

The last thing I would like to say about the promises made during the election campaign is that the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made it very clear that we would not keep all of those promises in the first 15 minutes or the first 15 days of government. We are only in the third month of our first mandate. I believe the Hon. Member would enjoy waiting around and seeing this unfold. He will be quite surprised to see how many of those "so-called promises"—which are actually only solutions to problems which had been created by the Hon. Member's own Government—are going to come up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Another brief question. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

[English]

Mr. Allmand: I am not used to getting that much applause from the Conservative Party, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member did not answer the question as to why they made—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: I listened to the Hon. Member very peacefully and quietly. She did not say why the Conservatives made over 300 promises amounting to $4 billion when they knew that the situation was serious. She did not answer that question. However, let me ask the Hon. Member this. She said, "We are going to deal with the deficit, the structural problem, by cutting out waste". Is she telling this House that over $9 million which is being cut from the budget for social housing is waste? There was the even bigger cut the other night from the amount for the rehabilitation for old housing in older districts of our city. Is she saying that was waste?

Mrs. Mailly: No!

Mr. Allmand: Is she saying that the cut to the foreign aid budget was due to waste; that the cut of $5 million from the student loan budget was due to waste? I would like to hear the answer to that. I would like to hear her tell us clearly and simply if that is really waste they are cutting from the budget.

Mrs. Mailly: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker, those were not the wastes I was referring to. I was referring to the fact that we are stuck with this enormous debt which is growing like a balloon and we have to do something. We have to take the measures with the courage you did not have in order to do it yourself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mailly: We could have done as your Government did in 1980 and announced to the world that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I wish the Hon. Member would address the Chair.

Mrs. Mailly: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Mailly: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, it was precisely because the Government of the hon. gentleman did not have the courage to address these problems that we wound up with them. We had to look at all of the programs. We had to be equitable in the way we were going to distribute this bad news. And this was because of the fact that the Hon. Member's Government never did have the courage to look at any bad news. Even in 1980, Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member's Government was re-elected, after saying all had gone to rack and ruin, it did not have the courage to change one iota in the direction in which it had been going.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That will be all for questions and comments. I recognize the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

[English]

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, like all other Hon. Members of the House, I wish to extend to you my warmest congratulations on your appointment as Acting Speaker. I know that you will fulfil that position with honour, grace and fairness to all Hon. Members of the House. My personal congratulations to you, Sir. My congratulations as well to our new Government. Certainly, it received a very impressive mandate during the last federal election. There are many new Hon. Members in the House, as well as some older Hon. Members, and on a personal level, we wish them well.

There was no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the message which the people of Canada gave during the last federal election was very clear. They were tired of the type of runaround they had received from the previous Liberal administration. I believe they were tired of double talk and mismanagement. Over-all, there was a sense that we had a Government in Ottawa which was essentially a Government of crisis management, a Government that did not know what to do nor did it have any idea of where to lead the country. The people of Canada on election day felt that a major change was needed. Even though this new Government has only been in power for less than three months, we are still anxiously awaiting that new direction.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Speech from the Throne and to the economic statement, that what we are experiencing is just a continuation of the old, perhaps accelerated a little bit. There is no doubt that we are living in very difficult times. There are tremendous social, economic and technological changes. There is a general sense of insecurity in the land. Young people do not know the type of future with which they will be faced. Workers today do not know whether the job they are doing will be around a year or two years from now. Older folks who are on the verge of retiring are not certain whether their pensions or meagre savings will suffice to provide for decent shelter and food in the coming years. There is a tremendous sense of insecurity. There is also a sense that the traditional solutions and answers will not solve the problem which most of the world is facing today.

Let us look at some contradictions, Mr. Speaker. We have high unemployment, a high deficit, and at the same time, generally, over the last number of years, cut-backs in government services. In terms of traditional economics, Mr. Speaker, that just does not make sense. Generally, during periods when there are deficits, it means the Government is injecting more money into the economy in order to generate more economic activity and growth. Therefore, you should not have unemployment. However, we have deficits and unemployment occurring at the same time. Normally, one does not have cut-backs in government services and programs and deficits at the same time. But again, Mr. Speaker, we find that we are receiving from the Tory Government what we received from the previous Liberal Government, ongoing cut-backs to government programs while, in fact, the deficit has increased. Something just does not make sense, Mr. Speaker.

There is no doubt that cutting the deficit is an important item which must be addressed. I understand that between 25 per cent and 30 per cent of public revenues—in other words, the moneys which Government takes in in terms of taxes, fees and so forth—goes to pay off our debt. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is unacceptable. Any person trying to balance his books at home knows that one cannot operate a household when one has to pay out 30 per cent of one's income to pay off past debts. No person can live that way and no country, either.

The types of solutions we have been hearing from Hon. Members of the Government just do not make sense to us. They have trotted out the slogan that Canadians are living beyond their means, that government programs and expenditures, particularly in the social area, are bloated. They say "We have been too good to the Canadian people. There are too many of these rich social welfare programs". But, Mr. Speaker, when you look at the programs we have in Canada and compare them with the programs in most western European countries, we come off pretty badly in that comparison. There are countries in western Europe, Mr. Speaker, with a fraction of the resources we have, which are able to offer their old people, their unemployed and disabled, much better economic security. So when I hear the slogans that we have been living beyond our means, all I can say, Mr. Speaker, is, that is hogwash.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the reason we have this high deficit is that Governments have not been collecting the revenue they should have. It is not that we have been overspending but we have not been collecting the revenues which should be going into the public coffers. Look at the figures, Mr. Speaker, which show that we have some $18 billion in corporate tax loopholes. That is $18 billion which normally should have gone into the public coffers but which have not because of tax breaks. The banks of this country pay less taxes than all of the clerks who work for them. Look at all of the uncollected taxes.

The Government did make an attempt in the financial statement to collect some of the revenue. It hopes to collect some $400 million of the $4.5 billion that everyone agrees is owed to the Government. Approximately $1.6 billion of the uncollected taxes are owed by the corporate sector. I would suggest that a fair number of those corporations are large multinational corporations which have not paid the taxes which they and the Government both agree are owed to the public purse. Yet the Government is content to collect only $400 million of these taxes. That just does not make sense to me, Mr. Speaker. If we are going to balance our books in the country, which is important to do, we must look at the revenue side rather than just the expenditure side. I am afraid the Government really believes that Canadians are living beyond their means.

We have heard the same type of rhetoric in the Province of Saskatchewan, Mr. Speaker. The irony there is that since we elected a Conservative Government in 1982 the deficit in the Province of Saskatchewan is now, on an accumulated basis, around $1 billion. That is larger than all of the previous deficits in the history of Saskatchewan. The Conservatives in Saskatchewan have been able to accomplish this while at the same time cutting social programs, education, highway construction programs and capital programs, and selling off our resources and Grown corporations.

One must wonder how the Tories have been able to increase the deficit while giving the rhetoric of reducing deficits. They have been able to create the largest deficit in the history of Saskatchewan while at the same time cutting social and human programs. They have been able to do it because they have given so many rich tax write-offs, particularly to the oil industry, that now we in the Province of Saskatchewan find ourselves with a debt of some $1 billion which we and our children must pay off in the years to come.

That is crazy economic thinking that originates in the Chicago School of Economics. Dr. Friedman is the great exponent of that. It is called the trickle-down theory and it is basically the notion that if you feed the horse a lot of oats, eventually the sparrow will get some. If you give the corporate sector a lot of tax breaks and special incentives, eventually this will get spent in new capital production and eventually we will have more employment and all these extra profits will find their way into the economy. Therefore people will have more dollars in order to buy the goods and services which they need. Well, Mr. Speaker, as has been illustrated in Saskatchewan, in British Columbia, in Great Britain and in Chile, where this experiment has been carried out to its greatest degree, we have found that massive unemployment, disinflation and economic chaos have resulted. It is a theory which just does not work.

The other area which we must address, Mr. Speaker, is that of interest rates and a "made-in-Canada" interest rate policy. Unfortunately, there was nothing in the Speech from the Throne or the financial statement which would indicate that the Government is prepared to set an independent course to determine a "made-in-Canada" interest rate policy. The previous Liberal administration told us in the New Democratic Party that we were whistling in the wind on this subject. They said that it was impossible to have a "made-in-Canada" interest rate policy. We in this Party, Mr. Speaker, maintain that we can. It is not surprising that when representatives of the provinces met in Nova Scotia this summer they called upon whatever Party formed the new Government to implement a "made-in-Canada" interest rate policy?

Interest rates are high. They have dropped marginally in the last little while but the real interest rate stands at a historic high. Normally interest rates are two points above the inflation rate. We have an inflation rate of approximately 4 per cent. Why are interest rates not at 6 per cent? I am even willing to concede 7 per cent, Mr. Speaker. At 7 per cent our deficit would be manageable. At 7 per cent young people could afford to buy a house or a car, to start farming or fishing. Seven per cent would be a reasonable interest rate and we would see some economic activity occurring in this country.

Interest rates are not at 7 per cent for essentially one reason: the American deficit. The American Government's deficit is now so high that total U.S. savings are hardly able to meet the interest on their deficit. Their deficit is so high in large part because of the arms race. The arms race is sucking the capital out of this world. It is destroying the economies, not only of the western world, but I would venture to say of the eastern socialist world as well. The $1 trillion that the world pours into armaments, into the death machine, is economically bankrupting this world.

The capital needs of the American Government are so high that in order to service its debts it must attract capital from Canada, western Europe and the rest of the world. The only way in which they can do that is with a strong American dollar and a high interest rate in the United States. Therefore, in order for us to maintain some of the capital at home we must jack up our interest rate. So it goes, Mr. Speaker. It continues to get jacked up and the people who benefit are the bankers and the international financiers. They are having a great time, Mr. Speaker.

Is it not about time that we had a Government in this country with the political determination to say we are not going to play that game again, we are not going to be blackmailed, we are going to develop an independent interest rate policy in this country, and we are going to keep the capital at home in this country? Is it not about time that we had a Government with the political guts to tell our banks and the multinationals that the profits made in this country will be kept in this country for this year? The Government should impose exchange controls and stop capital from being sent to wherever it is felt that profits can be increased and optimized. It is about time that the bankers and the large corporate sector of the country exhibited some responsibility to the economy and the well being of this country. However, Mr. Speaker, we are not hearing any of that from this new Government.

In preparing my remarks I went through some of the old files and I came upon a document which I think is still very relevant today. It is the Bishops' statement which was brought out on January 5, 1983. They talk in terms of present strategy. In January of 1983 the major concern was inflation. Here are some of the things they said:

> There is a very real danger that these same structural and moral problems are present in Canada's strategies for economic recovery. As recent economic policy statements reveal, the primary objective is to restore profitability and competitiveness in certain Canadian industries and provide more favourable conditions for private investment in the country.

That sounds very similar to the rhetoric we are hearing from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and all of the other Government Members so far. The statement continues:

> The private sector is to be the "engine" for economic recovery. To achieve these goals, inflation—

In this case it is the deficit.

—is put forth as the number one problem. The causes of inflation are seen as workers' wages, government spending, and low productivity rather than monopoly control of prices.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. It being six o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 12(3) the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the amendment.

Mr. James, seconded by Ms. Jacques, moves:

That the following Address be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To Her Excellency the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, a Member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

Mr. Allmand, seconded by Mrs. Pépin moves:

That the following be added to the Address:

But this House regrets that your advisors not only failed to make open government a high priority but also, in their actions, have sought to reverse the direction of previous administrations by severely restricting the availability of information on decision-making in government and by attempting to inhibit access to both the elected and non-elected participants in that process.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Allmand) which was negatived on the following division:

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Monday, November 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in my remarks last night before the adjournment of the debate, I was quoting from the Bishops' statement which was issued on January 5, 1983. I was explaining to the House how the rhetoric then is similar to the rhetoric we hear now. For example, we hear that we must be more productive, that the private sector is the engine for economic growth and recovery, that we must make our private sector more competitive, and that the private sector must have a greater return on profits, that this is the key to economic recovery. The Bishops pointed out in their statement that at the same time working people, the unemployed, young people, and those people on fixed incomes are increasingly called upon to make the most sacrifices for economic recovery, but it is these people who suffer most from lay-offs, wage restraints and cut-backs in social services. The Bishops went on to state that yet there is no clear reason to believe that working people will ever really benefit from these and other sacrifices they are called to make. For even if companies recover and increase their profit margins, the additional revenues are likely to be reinvested in more labour-saving technology or exported to other countries, or spent on market speculation for luxury goods.

The Bishops and we in this Party endorse an alternate vision of how society can operate. Let me quote the following passage from the Bishops' statement:

> There are, of course, alternative ways of looking at our industrial future and organizing our economy. This does not imply a halt to technological progress but rather a fundamental re-ordering of the basic values and priorities of economic development. An alternative economic vision, for example, could place priority on serving the basic needs of all people in this country, on the value of human labour, and an equitable distribution of wealth and power among people and regions. What would it mean to develop an alternative economic model that would place emphasis on—socially-useful forms of production; labour-intensive industries; the use of appropriate forms of technology; self-reliant models of economic development; community ownership and control of industries; new forms of worker management and ownership; and greater use of the renewable energy sources in industrial production?

Yet we see in the Speech from the Throne and in the economic statement exactly the opposite type of vision, Mr. Speaker. It is not a vision of self-sufficiency, because the Government cuts back on the home insulation program, and on research and development into alternate energy technologies. These are regressive steps, steps that make us more dependent upon capital intensive, large scale energy projects. This removes the element of self-sufficiency and protection which individual Canadians can have.

We see again in the Speech from the Throne and in the financial statement the belief that only through catering to the large multinationals will Canada recover economically. This is a wrong vision, Mr. Speaker. It is a vision that has been tried in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Great Britain, Chile and in many other countries. It has proved to be a disaster for ordinary working people. I warn this Government that if it continues on this path it will destroy the economic and social fabric of Canada. This will result in poor people and working people having to rise up in anger against their plight.

This Government was given a tremendous mandate, a mandate for change. Canadians want to see a government develop and form new visions for economic development. They do not want to see Reagan economics as practised in the United States. They do not want to have the industrial and labour strife that has occurred in Great Britain.

I plead, therefore, with this Government to reverse its directions and to develop, on a co-operative basis, a new vision for Canada, a vision in which ordinary men and women can join, a vision based on fairness and equality for all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment. I share the Hon. Member's concern that our technological development be accompanied by sufficient opportunity for human work. To supplement what the Hon. Member said, however, I would caution him that simply emphasizing the need for human labour is as bad as giving one's priority only to capital intensive development. If the Hon. Member has been in countries such as India, which I have had the privilege of visiting, he would see projects that involve much human labour. There are gangs of men and women making roads by hand, using hammers to break up stone for the road-bed. Such people know nothing else other than this dreary, almost animal-like kind of work. These people are the next in several generations of their families and clans committed to such labour. But one can go elsewhere in the great country of India and find that the level of life has been lifted, far above the kind of life I have just described, by technological development using large scale capital-intensive industries. What we in the western world are struggling to find is a balance which provides sufficient technological development and expansion to continue and indeed advance the standard of living and quality of life of Canadians and at the same time provide adequate employment opportunities.

With all respect to the Bishops' statement, I have not found sufficient recognition of the need for this balance. They have served us well in calling us back from an unbalanced reliance upon technology, but I wish for a far greater recognition of the need for balance in their statement and in the Hon. Member's address.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has a point. The fact is that the balance right now tips so much to the capital intensive side that there is very little recognition by industry or by government of that which the Bishops call appropriate forms of technology. In their statement, the Bishops said:

> This does not imply a halt to technological progress but rather a fundamental re-ordering of the basic values and priorities of economic development.

I should like to give the Hon. Member one example in the energy field. If one invested the same amount of capital needed to build a nuclear reactor into home insulation, one would save more electricity than the nuclear power plant would ever produce. Home insulation is not capital intensive. It produces more work and it provides self-sufficiency for the consumer. The consumer would be no longer dependent upon the utility company and would no longer have to pay tremendous bills every month to pay off the cost of the nuclear power plant plus the interest on the debt.

Here are two different visions of development. We can go the nuclear route, which is capital intensive and environmentally questionable producing very expensive electricity; or we can go the route of home insulation and conservation. The same amount of money spent on the conservation side would surely bring much more benefit to ordinary people than going the nuclear route. Yet the Government in its statement slashes the Canadian Home Insulation Program and the program of developing alternate energies. Alternate energies can provide capital savings and produce greater self-sufficiency for the country, for communities, for individuals. The nuclear area, however, was never questioned or slashed in the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

The nuclear industry has cost the country billions of dollars. Underutilized heavy water plants have had to shut down. Nuclear power plants have been decommissioned at tremendous cost to the taxpayer. However, the Minister of Finance never touched one cent of the money that we continue to pour into the nuclear industry. Surely the Hon. Member must recognize that the balance is leaning toward capital-intensive programs, not programs for alternatives and for appropriate technologies, which would be more beneficial to Canadians in terms of creating jobs and being less capital intensive.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, what the House needs to recognize and the nation needs to appreciate, as I believe most Canadians do, is that the Hon. Member has set up a false dichotomy between capital intensive and labour intensive projects, illustrated by his example of home insulation and nuclear reactor hydro electric generators. This is not a dispute over ecology and conservation. It really is a matter of providing that adequate technological development take place in our society and in other parts of the world which have a greater need of it, and at the same time of not ignoring the vital human need for useful employment opportunities.

The stark fact in a great part of the world is that their need is for technology and the kind of advance that we have known in the western world. In terms of electrical energy, the fact is that we could have all the conservation and insulation in homes that we could wish, but we would still have a desperate need for electrical power to be generated in sufficient quantity to serve the massive requirements of our society for electrical power. We need both.

Our need is not necessarily for nuclear reactors. They are an alternative. Nonetheless, we need highly technological generative plants. Whether they should be nuclear powered or powered in some other way is another issue altogether. However, we simply cannot maintain the level of life that we have come to enjoy and expect in this country without adequate technological development. That will be as great a human need as the other.

Mr. de Jong: Exactly, Mr. Speaker. The question is what type of technological development. Technological development that benefits people, that reduces the cost of production, that is environmentally sound, that has some social use as well, or technological development that is really exploitive? Third World countries cannot afford nuclear reactors. It is a technology that is of very little use to them. What they need is appropriate technologies. Vertical turbines, wind, solar are the types of technologies that make the most sense, not only for Third World countries but for Canada and the rest of the industrialized world.

In his statement, the Minister of Finance goes the road of highly capital intensive megaproject forms of energy generation. He cuts the areas that I believe are our future: appropriate and small scale technologies, such as wind, solar and conservation. A mix of those technologies is the solution to our problem. That is how we will either generate or save more energy than the capital intensive nuclear route.

My criticism of the Government is that it continues along the same path that the Liberals have taken in all these years. It has not struck a new direction. If it cut the nuclear sector and if all the billions of dollars in subsidy that have gone to that sector were directed toward home insulation and alternate energy programs, I suggest to Members opposite that it would create tremendous political goodwill among the men and women of Canada. They would applaud this Government. They would realize that here is a Government with some new ideas, with a sense of new direction, not one that is tied and beholden to the financial interest. Unfortunately, it did not do that. Therefore, we must judge it not on its words and not on its wishes, even though I sympathize with what the Hon. Member is telling us. I think we are saying the same thing. He has to recognize that he is out of step with the wishes of his Government. His Government is taking a different direction from the one he is talking about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The time for questions and comments on the Hon. Member's speech is now over. We will now resume debate.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the constituents of York-Peel, it gives me great pleasure to be able to enter the debate today on the Speech from the Throne. It is a little over two weeks since Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada outlined the broad measures the new Government would be taking in this session. The measures announced in the Throne Speech symbolize, I would suggest, a new day for Canada. They symbolize indeed a watershed in this nation's history.

Canada has now joined the movement which preceded us in Europe, the United States and Asia. Those who have grasped the significance of this movement will understand that it is a movement in which the vitality of free enterprise will again be allowed to flourish in this country.

The new Progressive Conservative Government has committed itself to fostering economic growth. As the Minister responsible for regional industrial expansion, I and my Department have been given a tremendous responsibility in shaping the economic turnaround the Government has pledged to accomplish.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, since the Government took power some two months ago, we have been examining various government programs with a view to eliminating those that are no longer relevant and then fine-tuning those remaining to better serve Canadian needs. For example, the day after the Minister of Finance's (Mr. Wilson) economic statement was delivered in the House, we in our Department announced adjustments to the Industrial and Regional Development Program, adjustments designed to improve the program's efficiency, and focus assistance on innovation projects that will increase industrial productivity and help international competitiveness. They were designed to ensure that support is provided in areas of the country where it is most needed. We were able to do all of this, and we now anticipate that in the coming year, we will be expending 35 per cent more than was expended in this area in the current year. The acceptance of these changes by the business and working community of Canada convinced me that our new streamlined version has taken into account the concerns and priorities of Canadian business, and is one small step in the restoration of business confidence in Canada.

In announcing the changes to the Industrial and Regional Development Program, we have given instructions to give priority to those IRDP projects that emphasize R and D and the development of new projects and processes. We have asked that there be a targeting of funding to those areas of the country where it is needed most. At the same time, we have instructed the Department and particularly our regional offices to increase the non-monetary assistance that they provide to the Canadian business community. In this context, we intend to raise the profile of regional offices so that they become centres of information and assistance rather than simply centres for processing grant applications.

The regional offices have been directed to emphasize assistance to business and to industry in terms of expertise in identifying export opportunities and opportunities for import substitution. They will become centres for assistance in the fields of information, advice and co-ordination of various forms of support. To allow them to assume these added duties, we have streamlined the administration of IRDP by providing automatic eligibility for cases involving support under $100,000, provided the basis criteria are met. This is turn will reduce the bureaucratic burden and speed the processing of applications, thus relieving staff from much of the paperwork and allowing them to undertake more fruitful tasks for the business community.

The changes we have announced have the added benefit of reducing the forecast—and I emphasize the word "forecast"—expenditures of our Department by some $200 million a year in this and other programs, while at the same time maintaining the stated objectives of the Department that I have the honour to head at the present time.

Another area in which we will be active is industrial R and D, with a particular emphasis on the development side of that equation. Canadian industry must maintain its competitiveness on domestic and international markets by increasing its productivity and inproving, wherever possible, the quality of its products. Canadian firms must innovate if they are to remain competitive, grow and provide adequate employment opportunities in a world in which they are constantly being challenged by rapid technological advances from an expanding number of countries. One way of achieving this is for firms to make a far stronger commitment to research and development than ever before.

However, the ability to import technologies, apply and build on them is also of critical importance. Product, process and managerial innovations around the world are creating new products and reducing unit costs, yet there is considerable evidence that Canadian firms are slow to embrace and exploit them. We find a similar slowness in adapting Canadian research—in some areas research that is among the finest in the world—to the needs of Canadian industry.

Of course, this is not true of all industries. For example, I was recently asked to participate in the announcement by Northern Telecom of an $80 million commitment that company made to the development of new micro-chip technology. It is a development which will maintain Nortel's commanding lead in the world of digital communications.

Canada has no choice but to join the technological revolution to which I am referring. We must do so with vigour if we are to supply Canadians with the newest goods and services and if we are to be a part of an increasingly competitive world market.

Not only must we have more research and, particularly, development—as well as acquire and build on technologies from abroad—we must also focus on accelerating the diffusion of these powerful new processes. I believe the way to encourage this is through better information exchange, technology transfer and demonstration. This is an area in which I see our regional offices taking a much more aggressive stance, in particular, with reference to our small and medium-sized businesses. Too often the day-to-day pressures of maintaining current production, meeting payrolls, and completing government forms diverts the management of small businesses from the task of investigating new and better ways of operating.

By becoming centres of information on new developments, the regional offices can provide a much needed interface between the Canadian research community whether at the university, private or governmental level, or in searching out on the international markets research-driven technologies which can assist Canadians to remain competitive. This supportive role of government Departments and agencies is one that all Canadian entrepreneurs will welcome. For too long they have been harassed by the paper burden, the duplication and the demands of big government, especially the type of big government that preceded this Government. All of those measures are in support of the central theme of this Government, which is to get government out of the business community's hair and let it get on with the task of undertaking new initiatives and providing new jobs for Canadians.

On October 30, we announced the new management and new mandate for the Canada Development Investment Corporation. The new management has been charged with the responsibility of privatizing the assets of CDIC as quickly as possible and consistent with the concern for value of the Canadian taxpayer's dollar. Sound management of the portfolio as well as protection of the workers' interests has been included in our direction. Many people have suggested that our desire to privatize the CDIC member companies was hastily conceived. I have been in this House since 1972 and have witnessed the growth of Crown corporations. At the time they were brought under the federal umbrella, it was generally said that it would only be for a limited duration and that they would be owned by the federal Government in the strict anticipation that they would be put back into the private sector. I find it almost beyond belief when those self same people today ask why we are moving so hastily with respect to the possibility of privatizing some Crown corporations, the same Crown corporations which they themselves have consistently maintained they intended to put back into the private sector.

On November 5 I announced the new management and new mandate for Fishery Products International, the Newfoundland fisheries conglomerate which is owned jointly by the federal Government, the Province of Newfoundland and the Bank of Nova Scotia. The intention is to make that firm, which is vital to the economy of Newfoundland, economically viable through sound business management and eventually to return it once again to private enterprise. Returning these assets to the private sector is not only better for the firms and their workers in the long run, but I would suggest the action serves as a further signal to the business community that the Government places ultimate reliance on the private sector as the source of economic growth.

Further announcements can be expected regarding the approach of Government to the general subject of assistance and support for small and medium-sized enterprises. We intend to review the various support instruments which are available at the federal level to help small business, including the Federal Business Development Bank. We are well aware of the role played by small business in economic growth, particularly in the context of regional development, and of the fact that small and medium-sized businesses are by far the largest creators of new jobs in Canada. We will, therefore, take steps to ensure that federal support gives priority and is appropriate to the needs of this sector.

Another area of my portfolio in which I am taking action is in regard to the need to increase non-Canadian investment in Canada. In the near future there will be legislation which will provide long overdue changes to the Foreign Investment Review Agency. It is our intention to transform FIRA into a positive agency for the encouragement of Canadian and non-Canadian investment so that investors throughout the world will get the message that Canada welcomes them and is willing to assist in their endeavours. The changes to FIRA will emphasize small business and will encourage partnership between Canadian and non-Canadian interests. No more will we hear the lament of investors who say that they tried but could not invest in Canada.

At the same time, we are convinced that by breaking down the barriers to international investment in Canada, we can once again convince Canadians to invest in their own country. As a Government, we are too painfully aware that Canadians are reluctant to invest in Canadian enterprises in spite of the fact that their level of savings is twice that of our American neighbours. A better investment climate will encourage Canadians to reverse this trend and once again invest in their own country, whether through direct investment or through joint venture with non-Canadian firms.

These changes, some of which will be immediate and some gradual, reflect the role of government vis-à-vis industry which underlines the Speech from the Throne. The role of government is not to take over but to support. The role of government is, first of all, to ensure an appropriate investment climate and then to act as a catalyst. The role of government is to intervene only where the achievement of national objectives is beyond the resources of the private sector.

It is difficult to forecast the future, but many of the studies which have measured the impact of the economic policies of the Government are truly optimistic. The policies put forth by the new Government are expected to increase employment dramatically, to increase real growth and to increase productivity. Inflation and unemployment will be reduced, and there are positive indicators that the federal deficit and debt will fall. The key to these favourable impacts is the dual stimulation of business investment and the furthering of exports by Canadian firms. Together the two will help pull the Canadian economy back toward its potential.

The resources of government can be quite usefully employed in support of private sector growth, particularly in terms of export development, co-ordination of effort, achievement of consensus and provision of information. However, the resources of government should be employed to support private sector growth and not to compete with it.

We will not arrive at our objective overnight. There is no magic wand which can be used to reduce to zero the deficit we have inherited. There is no easy formula by which economic growth can be forced. To achieve national consensus on approaches to difficult and contentious issues will take much effort and considerable time. What is required is a consistent and persistent pursuit of agreed objectives, and I believe we have made a start in that direction. While work has already begun, lengthy and painstaking work and discussion is in front of us. However, I am confident that over the coming months the business community of Canada will come to realize that through sound fiscal management; through effective federal-provincial co-operation; through consultation with business and labour; and through consensus on major economic issues, the Government of Canada will do all that is possible to ensure the regeneration of private sector driven economic development in this country. In the process, the new business enterprises, as well as our existing enterprises in all regions, will not only survive but will thrive, thereby creating the employment and well-being which Canadians have a right to expect and which they were so obviously denied by a Liberal government which ruled this country for almost 16 years.

I am further confident that Hon. Members will be able to agree with me that when it comes to economic development, this Government, in the true sense of that phrase, means business.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the statements of the Minister. I must say that this is perhaps the first time I have heard set out as clearly the economic direction the Government intends to take. Apparently, we are to use the resources of Canada to fatten the pockets of those who have much at the expense of those who have little.

I wonder if the Minister has considered the long-term implications of opening up Canada for unrestricted investment from wherever, at whatever time or in whatever sector the investor determines he or she might want to invest. Has the Minister seriously looked at what has happened in this country over the last 20 years? The overwhelming majority of private-sector corporations in Canada do little if any research and development here. They draw almost entirely on the research and development facilities of their parent corporations wherever they are located. In spite of the grant structure put in place by not only the Liberal Government that was here prior to the last election as well as the Government of Ontario and many other provinces, some of them Conservative, in spite of their attempts to hand over taxpayers' dollars in an effort to get research and development to be the focus of the multinational corporations, they failed on almost every single occasion.

What does the Minister believe he can offer that will get the major multinational corporations to locate their research and development facilities in Canada? What kind of guarantee is the Minister prepared to extract from those who are eager to extract from the Canadian economy, those who want to come in and invest, that there will be research and development facilities which will allow Canadians who have gone through the educational system to find employment in their chosen field?

Finally, how does the Minister reconcile the emphasis that he puts on research and development with his Government's actions? The Government, in its budget statement, slashed and cut, as is the Minister's penchant, in every single area of crucial importance in terms of research and development. How are we to believe that this Government has an overriding view of the importance of that particular element to the future of Canada when in fact the Government's own actions make it quite clear that it does not give a damn about research and development?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in replying to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), I could say first of all that I sense a slight glimmer of hope for him. I think there is some sadness in his tone as to what in fact occurred over the last 20 years. He is taking an earnest look at it now, and I hope he remembers how often his Party came to the rescue of the Liberals when they needed that help to keep them in power.

When he describes what has happened in the last 20 years, he is undoubtedly referring to the fact that 20 years ago we had fewer than 500,000 Canadians out of work. Now, partly because of the alliance between his Party and the Liberal Party, we have almost 1.5 million Canadians out of work. That, I say to the Hon. Member, is totally out of the question. It cannot be tolerated, and it is time that those government policies, aided and abetted over the bulk of those 20 years by him and by his Party, were changed to allow a healthier economy in Canada so that Canadians can once again get the jobs to which they are rightfully entitled.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I sense a glimmer of hope when he refers to the changes that we anticipate for the Foreign Investment Review Agency. He of course must recall that that agency has been in place since 1972, and that much of the deterred investment in Canada, much of what has been denied Canadians in the form of non-Canadian investment, could have gone into job-creation industries in this country. I think he has a tremendous, if you like, past which he has somehow to explain to the Canadian public with respect to his Party's support of so many of these previous initiatives.

Believe me, Mr. Speaker, after hearing the two opposition Parties demanding that spending and the deficit be maintained, I can only ask them: When will they learn the lesson? If deficits were the solution to our unemployment situation in Canada, we should be booming today instead of having 1.5 million Canadians out of work. So if we are making some earnest efforts to narrow that deficit, I would think he would be shouting hallelujah; at last someone is trying to get the economy back on a more satisfactory basis. Deficits have not worked. When are you fellows ever going to learn that?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Minister spoke glowingly about selling off the assets of CDC, and one of those assets is Eldorado Resources Limited. Does he really believe that he will be able to sell off a corporation like Eldorado Resources when the Government continues to give exemptions to the further processing of our uranium resource? There has been a policy in this country for some 10 years that we upgrade our uranium in Canada. The Government has gone to the expense of building a uranium refinery in Blind River and another one in Port Hope to upgrade these resources. That was done on the basis that the Canadian uranium being sold to the U.S. or West Germany or wherever would be processed in Canada. Now, as recently as in the last month and a half, the Government has given a further exemption to upgrading, and our refineries and upgrading facilities are operating at about one-third of capacity. Does the Hon. Minister really believe that you can ever sell off an industry which is operating at one-third capacity, and will he stop giving these exemptions to further upgrading in Canada, which is really taking jobs away from Canadians and giving them to workers in other countries?

The other question I wanted to put to the Hon. Minister concerned his reference to creating new business enterprises and getting the Government out of the business community's hair. There has been a policy in Canada for many years that the Department of National Revenue would give advance rulings on corporate mergers and partnerships. The Government withdrew that in October of this year after it came to power so that companies such as Algoma Steel and Tembec could not go ahead with important business developments. Why not clear that away? The Government has made some changes in the last week in that policy, but there are still three or four hurdles where the company has to make a proposal before a certain time and has to complete its deal by December 15. I think those requirements are unreasonable. If you are going to apply a grandfather clause to a policy like that, it should be wide open so that projects like the one by Algoma Steel can get under way. It would mean 700 jobs would be created and the Government would really be getting out of the business community's hair instead of creating this kind of interference in which the Government has been involved in the last couple of months.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) let me say that he touched on the possibility of selling Eldorado back to the private sector. I know that most Liberals have a very pessimistic streak about them, but I can assure the Hon. Member that he would be most encouraged if he knew the interest being shown with respect to the possibility of acquiring or buying Eldorado itself. In due course I think we will be very pleased to be able to tell him what actually is transpiring with respect to the privatization of that company.

He also referred to the moratorium placed on tax rulings with respect to the setting up of certain partnerships. Again I am rather startled to hear the Hon. Member defend this process, which was a boondoggle that the former Liberal government allowed to continue. It became a tremendous rip-off. Brokers were making hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars simply on the flushing of funds through corporate entities. I am startled that the Hon. Member would suggest that we should not have drawn back and said that there has been enough and we must put a halt to what the previous government tolerated, for whatever reason. If he checks the facts, I believe he will find that that was a very prudent move on our part.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and comments is now over. We will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to participate in this Throne Speech debate, coming as it does so closely after the wonderful rendition and readings from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). I am also pleased to be able to participate as a result of the judgment and wisdom of the electors in my constituency who have now elected me some five times in a row both provincially and federally. I know it was a matter of some deep interest to certain members of the Conservative Party, particularly the Leader. I am glad to be able to come back and share with my colleagues our notions about how the country should or should not be governed.

The Throne Speech is giving us an opportunity to finally flush the wolves out of the sheep's clothing. I know that using the word "wolf" is somewhat sensitive to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and I apologize for it. However, the fact is that we have been given the opportunity for the first time to shear away—

Mr. Stevens: Why are you shearing a wolf?

Mr. Axworthy: We will find out more about the wolves in sheep's clothing this evening. We will leave that for the national television network to deal with.

My point is that we now have the opportunity in this debate clearly to come to grips with the differences between the rhetoric and the reality; between the honeycombed, wonderfully modulated, deeply versed words of change, confidence and consultation, and to what is really happening. It is totally different from all the public relations presentations we have heard since September 4.

We have heard much about the fact that the new Government is one that wants to restore confidence in the country. It is going about it in a very interesting fashion. First, it is doing so by breaking all the promises it made during the election campaign, so that hundreds of thousands of Canadians who expected those tens of thousands of jobs to come tumbling out of the system on September 5 are now finding that the reverse is taking place.

Mr. Stevens: No.

Mr. Axworthy: Instead of tens of thousands of new jobs, the Government is cutting a minimum of 50,000 to 60,000 jobs as a result of its economic statement. Moreover, that is only what we can count at the present time.

Mr. Stevens: Jobs went up last month.

Mr. Fennell: They will keep going up.

Mr. Axworthy: Let me comment on that for a minute. The Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion stated that the Liberal Government was at fault in all the previous problems, but he gives us no credit for the fact that the interest rates have gone down because the inflation rate has gone down. Therefore, I suggest to the Hon. Minister that he should be consistent once in a while in his economic statements. I know that he is suffering after having been dethroned from his title of the great slasher of the Conservative Party by Mack the Knife over there. He is trying to regain his reputation, but I will tell him that compared with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of Industrial Economic Expansion is a piker. Compared with what the Minister of Finance is able to do, he does not even know how to go about slashing.

More important, we now have the opportunity to analyse clearly what the economic blueprint for this country will be. It is those expectations of growth and development with which we must really come to grips.

First, there is the question of the deficit. The Government believes it has been endowed with almost magical powers to cut the deficit. It believes that by cutting the deficit, all else will fall by the wayside and Canadians will be walking the streets of this country whistling and dancing because the deficit is being cut. I have not noticed too many people walking around whistling and dancing full of new confidence because of the Government's actions. In fact, it is quite the opposite. There are people in the villages, towns and cities of this country who are hurting deeply because of that cut. They are losing their employment and their opportunity for an economic future. They are losing an opportunity to develop their country as a result of the mindless slashing of programs without any consideration having been given to whether those programs have any importance in terms of economic growth.

The Government is not applying any industrial or sectoral strategy. It is simply implementing the same policies across the board. That is the situation which Canadians are facing.

Why is the deficit such an obsession with Members opposite and to our side? They say that it will stir new capital investment and revitalize the capital markets. We are well aware that the problem in Canada is not the shortage of capital but where that capital is being used. Almost 14 per cent of our disposable income is in private savings, yet, when one examines the economic statement, it contains absolutely nothing to stimulate the use of those savings for productive purposes. There is nothing in that statement to suggest how we could release that capital. Government borrowing is not pressing against the private capital market because that is not part of the economic system in Canada. Our problem is that the capital is not being allocated into useful, productive, industrial purposes. Yet there is nothing in the statement to provide for that.

The only tax measures that the Minister of Finance brought in were those which our Government introduced. He is simply picking up on those tax measures. The only valuable and constructive tax initiatives are those which were introduced last spring. Nothing else has been designed for the small business person in order to bring forward new capital, except for those measures which we introduced in our last budget.

The Government also states that the deficit will have an impact on interest rates. I suggest that that is simply woolgathering. I believe that any honest economic analyst in this country would recognize that our interest rates are very much conditioned by what takes place in the money markets in the United States.

There are some intelligent economists in the Tory caucus who were newly elected. They should tell their new Cabinet that it is the money markets in the United States which dictate our interest rates to a large degree. When the Prime Minister takes hollow credit for the fact that he is bringing down interest rates, he need only read the newspapers or financial papers to discover that interest rates are simply tracking the American money market as they have for a number of years. Why does the Government have this obsession? While it is cutting the deficit, it is not providing any strategy or blueprint to stimulate growth. It is only concerned with reduction. While we have always known that the Minister of Industrial Regional Expansion has a lot of nerve, we did not know that he was so full of bluff that he was prepared to tell the House that he is a believer in regional distribution. That has to be the greatest joke by far in this session.

The Government in its economic statement has introduced initiatives that add substantially higher costs to small business right across the country. There are close to $700 million in hidden taxes in that economic statement.

Who will be affected by the higher cost of transportation? It is people in the regions, the Atlantic, the North and the West, who must ship their goods and exports farther distances than those in other parts of Canada. Yet the price of gasoline is going up. The price of air cargo traffic is going up. The Government has added an additional tax to the business community in the outer regions of Canada where they can least afford it. That is an example of the Government's economic strategy.

The Conservatives declare that it is a national Government, with its members elected from across Canada. However, when one looks at the impact of the Government's initiatives, one sees that the cuts it has introduced are in those areas where the private sector is not strong. The Government says that its reliance on economic growth will be on the private sector. We do not argue with that view, because the private sector has been the engine of growth in our country for most of its history. However, it should also be recognized that ours is a mixed economy, because this country is not the same throughout. One cannot see all of Canada from the top floor of an insurance company or a bank in downtown Toronto. The fact is that in many parts of this country the ability of the private sector to provide jobs is very thin. In some places there is almost a non-existent private sector or one that does not have the same kind of critical, dynamic mass to create jobs.

The basic position of our Party, which we will continue to take, is that it is the responsibility of the federal Government to provide a balance within Confederation and to ensure that the benefits of economic growth are shared by all Canadians and not concentrated in one or two areas. That is the reason we react so severely to the kind of cut-backs brought forward by the Minister of Finance.

Let me speak for a moment about my own city. In one way it provides an interesting composite of the kind of stupidity in which this Government is engaging and the lack of sensitivity to regional economic development. We talk about the necessity for all parts of this country to share in the new information technology and how the basic industries, whether forestry, food processing or the textile and garment industry, can become competitive. The way is for them to apply new technology to their products in order to get costs down and to allow them to compete in foreign markets. We also know that new technology really is the breakthrough, the leading edge, for new economic growth across Canada. There has to be a Magna Carta for the application and distribution of high technology.

What do they do, Mr. Speaker? In my City of Winnipeg, the Tories cancelled the National Research Council lab for applied robotics. What would that lab have done? First, it would have enabled another region of the country to become a centre for first-class research in the very important area of artificial intelligence and robotics, which has its primary application to small business. It was not an esoteric academic group because the lab designed to provide a place for business, scientists, researchers and engineers who would come together to develop new techniques that could be applied to the garment trade, to mining, and to food processing. Therefore, it could enable those industries in western Canada and throughout Canada to acquire new technology and to apply it to their manufacturing and processing bases.

A building was already under construction. Equipment had been ordered. People had been hired and were already in the city. What does this Government do? It slashes, cuts and eliminates that area. What has been the impact of this, Mr. Speaker? Four major manufacturers, two of which were American, already planning to come to Canada to set up new businesses in the City of Winnipeg because of the application of that research centre are now changing their minds. This is a government that says it believes in economic growth and says that it want to attract industry from other countries. This is a government that says it believes in fair and effective distribution. But by one stroke of the pen it has eliminated the economic future of Winnipeg. That is the kind of government we have. That is the reality and not the rhetoric that we are facing.

We have a government that does not give a damn about the regions. It does not give a damn about economic growth or regional distribution because it is obsessed by its own theology and so preoccupied with its religious catechism, which it has to recite every day as it appears before Rasputin of the North, otherwise known as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). Members of the Government have to repeat their loyalty oaths and their promises of silence and they have to say, "God bless the new catechism. Thou shalt not touch the private sector". What the Government has done in the meantime is to eliminate a very important investment designed primarily to work with the private sector to develop new technology and new robotics for future industrial growth in a major region of Canada.

How do you explain that, Mr. Speaker? How do you explain such silliness and insensitivity? This is a government that was going to consult and to confide in all Canadians. I did not find anybody in my City of Winnipeg, including probably the Members of Parliament from the Conservative Party, who were consulted about those cut-backs. If they were, they should hang their heads in shame for having been so insensitive and so disregarding of economic prospects. But this Government talked to nobody. It did not talk to the business community, the universities or the provincial governments. In fact, this Government denied every single one of the precepts, conditions and promises which it had made.

Let me speak about the question of confidence and consultation. I want to address my remarks to members of the Conservative Party who have been in their constituencies preaching this new theology. Let me ask them why it is that the President of the Food Products and Manufacturing Association, a very large industrial group in Canada, criticized the Government this morning for lack of consultation and lack of involvement when it made decisions relating to metric and to wheat pricing. Those people were not consulted. They were not involved nor were they asked for their opinion. This decision will result in higher costs and in major changes. Were they asked for their opinion or their judgment? Is this the new kind of consultation? Is this what we can now expect? Are we going to have Ministers of the Crown preaching from on high new sermons on consultation but going ahead and making decisions in total disregard and ignorance of the groups primarily affected by those decisions?

I think it is time Canadians began to understand that there is a government run by public relations hand-buts, but the reality is much harsher, more severe, and much more destructive of the economic prospects.

We should also look at the question of foreign investment. The Minister was proud. He said, "I have given new instructions to the management of CDIC to change and to privatize". But the Minister did not provide any discussion, any prescription about what the industrial impact of that privatization would be in the aerospace industry. He has given no guarantees about the question of foreign ownership of those Crown corporations.

I ask the Minister now, although he is engaged in important conversations—

Mr. Rodriguez: And that is insulting.

Mr. Axworthy: Is he prepared in this House, he was not prepared in his oral statement, to say that he will, in critical areas, such as aerospace, communications, uranium mining, put very clear conditions on whether foreign countries can buy major industries in those areas? There are enough Members in this House who are old enough and some of us who have read enough history, to remember the example of the Avro Arrow.

Mr. Benjamin: And VIA Rail.

Mr. Axworthy: Here we have on the chopping block two of the major aerospace companies, and the Minister is prepared to say, "I am selling them off to anybody. If the purchasers strip these companies, gut them and take the technology, move away, I do not care". That is the kind of industrial strategy at which we are looking. It is simply devoid of any concept of what we must do to make sure that there is a healthy aerospace industry in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, or Vancouver.

Mr. Caccia: How about R and D?

Mr. Axworthy: Then we have Teleglobe. We have the same kind of commitment that we are going to sell off Teleglobe, which is one of the major pioneers and leaders in international telecommunications. Will we have a foreign owner of our telecommunications satellite system? Will some sort of foreign private corporation dictate the use of that corporation and, therefore, cut Canadians off from any opportunity of maintaining any involvement in that very critical area of industrial development? The Minister has not said anything. He has covered up. This is the new open government that we have. Where is the Minister's statement and his opportunity to explain? I do not see it, Mr. Speaker.

Similarly, we have the Minister's statements about FIRA, that he is going to make major changes in foreign investment. What the Minister has not been prepared to say to Canadians—and again I pose a question to him that I hope he will get around to answering—is whether, in the changes he is proposing for FIRA, he will eliminate the test of significant economic benefits for Canada. In his changes, will the Minister eliminate the ability of the Foreign Investment Review Agency to negotiate with proposed foreign purchasers of Canadian business what they intend to do in the provision of jobs, in the provision of new research and development, and in the provision of significant economic world mandates for Canadian business? I suspect not. I suspect the so-called open-door policy of that Minister who does not care about those kinds of requirements. He has not placed those conditions because if he had, he would have already said so. As a result, what we have is the prospect of a number of Canadian businesses that are beginning to advance and develop new technology and new products that can be purchased without any kind of restraint and deterrent immediately moving their research and technology south of the border or east or west of us, and Canada will once again become simply a hewer of wood and a drawer of water for the rest of the world. That is the kind of prospect we are facing.

The Minister talks about his commitment to small business. The Foreign Investment Review Agency has been protecting small business because we recognized that with the disparity in dollar value there is an immediate economic advantage for the American purchasers as a result of the value of their dollar. They could come in and take over almost all small businesses without any constraint.

We have a number of questions. I am simply saying that we have heard the rhetoric and now we are seeing the reality. Reality really requires that the Official Opposition provide clear alternatives. We want growth and we want jobs, but we do not want them at the expense of Canadian sovereignty, the regions of the country or the small business community, the victims of the economic statement. The Official Opposition will provide those alternatives and show Canadians that there is a better way to generate growth in Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a comment, not so much to ask a question. Now that the Liberals are the Opposition, they will be resuming their economic nationalist stance. We will be hearing great things about the importance of FIRA, with no recollection of the fact that FIRA began to be weakened under the previous Liberal administration.

I do not often find myself, as I think the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) will attest, in a position to agree in most part with what he has to say, but with the exception of his very selective memory when it comes to FIRA. I agree with what he had to say about the manufacturing technology centre in Winnipeg and the utter stupidity demonstrated by the Government in cancelling that project.

Because I have the responsibility of looking into cuts in environmental services on the part of this Government, last night I thought I would take a look at the book of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) which he wrote a number of years ago entitled Where I Stand. I looked for any reference to the environmental dimension of our problems, either with respect to research, technology, economic strategy or whatever, something upon which I could hang a question in the House. I was unable to find any reference or any acknowledgement that the problem existed. However, I found a statement by the Prime Minister concerning research and technology. It indicated that the budget for the NRC should be increased by at least 20 per cent, because it was one area where it made absolute sense to invest, particularly when it came to manufacturing technology. That was one area which required a lot of attention. However, what did we get? Instead of what the Prime Minister wrote in those days when he was trying to obtain the support of Canadians, we got the cancellation of an obviously worthy project. This is something which flies in the face of the need for research and development. It also flies in the face of what the Prime Minister promised prior to his election.

With the caveat that I think the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry displays a selective memory with respect to FIRA and the way in which the Liberals moved with respect to FIRA prior to the election, I think all Members of Parliament from Winnipeg should join in censuring the Government for that action. Not all Winnipeg MPs have done so, such as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Saint James (Mr. Minaker), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), and others. They have been absolutely silent while their own city has been savaged by this cut. It was the one chance that Winnipeg had to reverse the long-standing concentration of manufacturing and technology in eastern Canada. Those same people moaned for years about western Canada not having enough representation in Cabinet and in government, but they are absolutely silent when this happens to Winnipeg. I think that is disgraceful.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) for his comments. His reference to the book of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) Where I Stand reminds me that the Prime Minister is very much like the man who cut down a redwood tree, then got up on the stump and made a speech about conservation. Again he is simply contradicting himself. In addition to the very savage cuts in the NRC, the elimination of the ongoing major research and development programs of environmental and atmospheric testing in Gimli and Churchill is equally disastrous. It will eliminate some 25 jobs. It will totally eliminate the opportunity for Canadians to be involved in high atmospheric research. More important, I discovered just this morning that it will eliminate a number of money-making contracts with the National Aeronautics Space Administration in the United States. It contracted that atmospheric group to conduct tests. The group was actually turning a profit, it was actually paying its way. The cancellation of a $5.8 million project will mean a loss of $22 million to the Canadian national account along with 85 jobs. That is what we call Tory economics. There is almost a religious catharsis in cutting something rather than endoring something, allowing it to grow, and nurturing it so that it becomes a useful product.

We are trying to say that we are no longer talking about economics or politics. We are now talking about theology or a cast and bound ideology which is satisfied more by the adherence to some remote and abstract theory, which they picked up by reading books written by Margaret Thatcher or someone, than by looking at down-to-earth, practical realities in terms of what will make the country grow. That is what we are objecting to. When they reach the point of deciding upon an economic blueprint, they should look at what is practical and effective.

As far as FIRA is concerned, I point out to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill that in fact we made administrative reforms in FIRA which substantially cleared up the time necessary to service applications. There was a real complaint that they took too long. In 1983, as a result of administrative changes, we could turn around applications, some 70 per cent to 80 per cent of them in the first 45 to 60 days. We were able to say to someone applying that we could give them a proper and effective response. This did not eliminate a vital necessity, that is, the test of economic and significant benefit to Canadians. We used FIRA as a way of calling to account various proposed purchasers of Canadian business and negotiating with them. FIRA became a negotiating agency in order to ensure that we obtain world mandates, commitments on R and D, on purchasing and on job creation. That was the purpose of FIRA. We want that maintained. We need it as a continuing control agency. We do not want it eliminated, as the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) proposes.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was fascinated during this debate by hearing the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and many other members of his Party speaking about the economic answers which they seem to have. To my mind, they have extremely short memories. They do not seem to remember that the economic difficulties which we are now facing were created while they were in power and in government. They seem to have forgotten, for instance, the enormously high inflation rate of not so long ago. It was an inflation rate in double digit figures which reached in excess of 12 per cent. Their answer to that—those great solutions which they now say we should be following—was to raise interest rates. What did that do for the country? It created bankruptcies, both business and personal, such as we have never seen before. It created the unemployment which we have now, which is in excess of 11 per cent and reaching 1.5 million people. It created a situation where the industrial capacity of the country was operating at only about 65 per cent instead of 100 per cent. These were the great answers the Hon. Member and his Government gave to the country.

Apparently he is now suggesting that we should have more of the same sort of answers which created unemployment and reduced the standard of living in Canada from something like the third highest in the world to the thirteenth highest.

If the policies of the Hon. Member and his Government were so wonderful and answered all our economic problems, why has our standard of living slipped to where it has, and why do we now have 1.5 million unemployed people?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, it seems like old times now that we are getting questions about the policy of the Government. Let me try to reply very quickly to the Hon. Member.

First, I remind him that what we went through during the early part of the 1980s was something that was a world-wide phenomenon. He may have had his head in the sand during that period. Most of us were dealing with the fact that unemployment and high interest rates were effective in Europe, the United States, Great Britain, Canada and Japan. Every single industrial country was faced with the same problem. One cannot point to one Government and say it was the sole cause.

During that period of time, we were trying to get at the sources of the problem. We did achieve a substantial reduction in the inflation rate. The fact that we now have a 3.8 per cent inflation rate has nothing to do with the Conservative Government of the last two months. It is because of the six and five program that was introduced 18 months ago. We brought that inflation rate down. You are fortunate enough to be the beneficiaries of it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall now resume debate.

Hon. G. S. Gerry Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to make my inaugural address in this House on the occasion of the debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. This is particularly so because I have the honour to hold a new portfolio, that of Minister of State for Forestry, which was created by our Government and our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in recognition of the enormous importance of the forestry sector in our economy.

It is just as important to me, however, to be here fulfilling my more immediate responsibilities as a Member of Parliament for Saint John, New Brunswick, Canada's most dynamic port city. I want at this time to thank the citizens who supported me in Saint John for the confidence they have placed in me over six elections in the last 13 years, one municipal, four provincial, and, most recently, for a convincing win on September 4.

The City of Saint John is one of eastern Canada's major industrial centres, boasting a population of over 100,000 people, mainly of British, Irish, Scottish and French descent. Our city was the first incorporated city in Canada. Next year we will be celebrating our 200th anniversary. A meeting, by way of coincidence, will be held this week to commemorate the first provincial Cabinet meeting which was held in Saint John on November 22, 1784. To mark that particular event, the Government of New Brunswick's present executive council will meet in our city on Thursday of this week to commemorate this important date in our nation's history.

Saint John is, first and foremost, a port city. It is also an important industrial city with major industries such as Saint John Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. Ltd., a large brush and broom factory, one of the largest in the British Commonwealth, an oil refinery, two pulp and paper mills, and a growing number of small and medium-sized businesses.

The people of Saint John are also very proud of our city's efforts to modernize the downtown core. This venerable city recently initiated a major facelift built around the now famous Market Square complex, which includes a new trade and industry centre, an office complex and a library and, of course, very attractive common areas. Those people who have not chosen to have a convention there are certainly welcome to come and experience our Saint John hospitality.

Despite its age, the city and its people are modern and forward-looking. The people of Saint John are by tradition entrepreneurs, willing to accept the challenge of the marketplace, looking for opportunities to create and to prosper. It is a community that was, of course, positioned to feel very directly the hardships of the recent recession. Dependent on the marketplace, vulnerable to the disasters affecting international trade, the people of Saint John suffered through all of the economy's failures over the past five years.

They also suffered through the paralysis of federalism which prevented national solutions to national problems. As a provincial Minister of Commerce and Development for six years and later as Minister of Natural Resources of the Province, I was forced to witness the long, bitter battles of businessmen faced with crippling interest rates and sagging markets.

Believe me, I saw firsthand the impact of bankruptcy and unemployment on Canadians as they realized that their dreams for the future would have to be postponed or forgotten. Like every Canadian, especially those of us with children, I worry about the effects that economic uncertainty and unemployment might have on the next generation. As Minister, I turned around to find only slogans and arrogance at the federal level. There was no sense of national crisis, only jealous protection of what they called their turf.

Like every Canadian, I recognize the human waste behind the statistics of alcoholism, crime and suicide. I know that the first duty of any government must be to restore a sense of purpose and hope to individual Canadians. I am proud that our Government has signalled in its Throne Speech its intention to rebuild that confidence and to balance major programs. On the one hand, the Government will give Canadians the freedom to invest and to build. On the other hand, the disadvantaged will be protected through our social programs.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the themes of the Throne Speech are as welcome as birds in spring, especially when we hear the words reconciliation, consensus, economic renewal and social justice. These are themes that were forgotten by an entire generation of Canadians, and will now provide the key to a new era of government.

[English]

The Fathers of Confederation knew very well what they were doing when they designed our country. They built a state which functions only when Canadians work together. When they fight each other, as they have for the past decade, it hardly works at all. Nowhere is there a need for co-operation more apparent than in our massive resource industries, the pillars of our economy.

I have the honour to serve as the first Cabinet Minister solely responsible for forestry since 1968. I take on this role with enthusiasm. Forestry in Canada involves not just planting and managing trees, but also logging, sawmilling, pulp and paper and other manufacturing operations which use the forest as their primary resource. As Canadians add value to their exports, it will come to represent a growing secondary manufacturing and processing sector as well.

There can be no more promising, no more challenging, no more exciting job in Ottawa today than to try to build a partnership between the two levels of government and industry to rescue this vital sector. Nor can any task be more difficult than trying to rescue this sector when the federal government's Treasury has been emptied by the previous administration. We face the problem of building an organization where there has been none for a decade, establishing new centres of talent and authority.

We must work toward increasing investment in a business community which is forced into survival strategies after four years of dismal markets. Throughout all the struggles, the greatest priority will be the re-creation of a genuine spirit of co-operation between the federal and the provincial governments.

Having served for 12 years in the provincial Government of New Brunswick, I know the frustration of trying to deal with the federal Government, which has forgotten any sense of partnership of co-operation. I can speak for my Party when I say that we are committed to a new spirit of team-work.

I have been a federal Minister for only two months but have already met with almost all of my provincial counterparts. I have met with labour and industry groups all over this country. In some cases, I have taken up negotiations on agreements which were begun before the change in Government, and I can tell the House that I was amazed at the petty, trivial points which had blocked agreements in the past. When I met with the Hon. Alan Pope of Ontario, we settled within half an hour the outstanding points which had blocked an agreement for well over a year.

As a maritimer, I am very conscious of the relationship between the regions of Canada and central Canada. This is a relationship which has been a key to Canada's economic development. For the first century of this nation's life, the regions supported the development of the industrial heartland, providing central Canada with the cheap raw materials and food supplies which made its growth a possibility. Today the balance has shifted. One of the chief activities of the central Government is the redistribution of wealth back to the regions in equalization and other payments. That is not to say that in our part of the country and, I suspect, in all parts of the country, we will not work hard to develop a thriving, prosperous secondary manufacturing sector.

I see the federal Government's decision to rescue the forestry sector as being a very far-sighted and progressive one. It will mean the continued economic independence and self-sufficiency of hundreds of communities in every region of this great country. By rescuing the main industrial activity of our regions, we will save billions of dollars in future support which would otherwise have to be spent to prop up these regions as they sink into economic idleness.

This is more than just pragmatic management. As Progressive Conservatives, we know that if the regions do not have indigenous employment, then Canada fails as a nation. The central concept of the confederation of provinces will be destroyed.

The forestry sector is the biggest industry in British Columbia and in my home Province of New Brunswick. It is an essential part of the economies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Quebec, northern Ontario and the northern prairie provinces. To nurse it back to health is to offer these areas a chance to continue as viable places to live. To fail is to condemn them to ever-increasing dependence on charitable support.

The forestry sector, the largest employer in the nation, is also our biggest foreign exchange earner and one of the largest purchasers of manufactured goods in Canada. In other words, while it may take place out of the sight of cities, its impact reaches into every Canadian home.

Lately we have heard with increasing frequency that forestry is a sunset industry. This is a popular viewpoint among the elite groups in Canada. They see the traditional industries as being embarrassing, perhaps even old fashioned and doomed to extinction because of modern technology. Our Party rejects that attitude outright. We know that the resource industries are facing massive change and perhaps great hardship. However, if we abandon the fight and treat the renewable resources as sunset industries, we announce our intentions to consume the heritage that belongs to all Canadians living and as yet unborn. We will be telling our children that they will have to find something else to do with their lives and with their nation because we have used up the forests and the fish. That attitude is unpalatable to me, Mr. Speaker, and certainly it is unpalatable to the Canadian people as a whole.

Every day in Ottawa we make decisions which will determine the world our children will inherit from us. This is especially true of the Throne Speech. By making forestry a major priority, we keep a promise to the next generation that is similar to our national commitment to environmental protection, to education or to health care.

The Government has renounced that previous attitude. In the resource sectors, we have committed ourselves to rebuilding and preserving the natural gifts that we possess.

The Throne Speech made reference to encouraging domestic and foreign investment. When we make the effort to bring our forests back to the mills, we show the investment community that it can rely on Canada in the decades to come. The raw materials for growth will be there.

[Translation]

There again, industries based on Canadian forestry products and also our efforts in forest management will provide jobs for thousands of young people during our mandate. Few job creation programs are as valuable or as cost-efficient as those which hire young people to plant and manage our forests.

[English]

Few job-creation programs are as valuable or as cost-efficient as those which hire young people to plant and manage our forests. A sector experiencing such profound change is the ideal place for creative entrepreneurs to capture a niche in the new marketplace.

The Throne Speech also made extensive reference to social justice. The opportunity for economic prosperity is a key aspect of social justice. We see the sustained utilization of the natural resources of Indian lands as an opportunity for native Canadians to develop a self-sufficient industry and employment on federal reserve land.

Many experts have calculated that Canada's forest reserves could be sustained and expanded for a relatively small investment. If only a quarter of the tax revenues produced annually by the forest sector were returned to the resource in planting, management and protection, we would be equipped to take advantage of the expanding market opportunities predicted by Canadian and international agencies. However, to get that investment, Canadians must understand its importance. They must place it in the context of transportation, education and health care as being a major ingredient of the Canadian standard of living.

The Liberal Government threw up its hands at the primary industries and particularly at the forestry sector. It said that it was a provincial matter. It is not a provincial matter, Mr. Speaker. It is a shared problem legally, morally and economically. The excuse for idleness was that old refrain: "The provinces will not allow us to move in this field". That is nonsense. As someone who was there on the other side of the table just a few months ago, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the provinces are not against federal activity in forestry; they welcome it. They never have been against it. What they are against and have every right to oppose is the old pattern of federal involvement in which Ottawa would make all the decisions and take all the credit.

One entire section of the Throne Speech deals with Canada's success on the international stage. As Minister of State for Forestry, no question could be of greater interest to me and, I am sure, to the people of British Columbia, New Brunswick and other areas which do a great deal of exporting of forestry products.

Canada is an exporting nation. Her biggest export is forest products which earn more in foreign exchange earnings than oil, minerals, fish and agricultural exports combined. Protecting our access to these markets, opening up new market opportunities and adapting to changing customer demands are the great challenges for the Canadian economy. The federal Government will have a role in facing these challenges.

The Throne Speech is not a laundry list of specific promises; it is a statement of general intentions and philosophical commitments to action. As the mandate proceeds, we will introduce legislation and programs to live up to the promises our Party made during the recent election campaign as far as the depleted resources of the federal Government will allow. Even more important, we will ensure that the themes of this Throne Speech, social justice, co-operation and internationalism, are a constant characteristic of Canadian life.

As a Minister of this Government, I look forward to the next few years with excitement. As the Minister responsible for the forestry sector, I envision a period of challenge but also one of rewards and satisfaction. As a representative of Saint John, I see the Throne Speech as being the first step taken by a government which will serve my city, my Province and my country very well.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister on his appointment to the Ministry of State for Forestry. There are a few questions I would like to put to him in light of what he said and in light of what went on during the election campaign. On page 49 of the PC campaign handbook it reads:

We will establish a new Department of Forestry at the federal level.

That has not yet been done. There were also some interesting comments in the PC campaign handbook which indicated that the Liberal Government presided over a "decade of neglect", bringing us "within sight of a national disaster".

During the campaign I found it interesting that the Tories campaigned throughout my province on the promise of a $1.2 billion five-year rescue program. I would like to find out whether that was factual and whether it is supported by the new Minister. The Tories also promised that they would provide $300 million a year in federal funds for British Columbia. That is somewhat in line with what the University of British Columbia Department of Forestry concluded is required to deal with the Not Satisfactorily Restocked lands in British Columbia, which now comprise several million hectares. UBC estimated that it would cost $660 million a year over the next five years to deal with the NSR lands in British Columbia.

As the Minister knows, the Premier of British Columbia has offered only $60 million a year for the Canada-BC Reforestation Agreement. That agreement would not, in any way, deal with the NSR lands. It would marginally deal with insect infestation, fire suppression and other programs which are automatically required every year. I would like the Minister to comment on what has happened in B.C.

Last year an agreement could not be reached at $130 million a year, and B.C. received an $11 million agreement. As the Minister knows, that is less than what was spent on Section 38 jobs in my constituency. It was a real tragedy that a better agreement could not have been reached. I would like to know what level of agreement the Minister sees as acceptable for British Columbia. Is it $660 million a year, jointly split between Ottawa and Victoria, as proposed by UBC? Or is it something less than that? If it is less than that, I would like to know what the Tory promise was about during the election campaign—the promise of a $1.2 billion five-year rescue program which would provide $300 million in federal funds per year over five years. I intend to speak to my constituents about those Tory campaign promises, and compare them with what the Minister says in the House.

Outside of that, I am pleased to see that the government side has taken the need for a Ministry of Forestry more seriously than did the Liberals. It is the largest industry in Canada. One Canadian in ten is involved in that industry. However, over the last two decades we have seen less than five cents out of every federal dollar, brought in in terms of federal forestry-industry related taxation, going back to the industry, either for nurseries or for any kind of silvaculture-related activity. Under the Tory Government of 1979 that level of expenditure dropped. I would like the Minister to comment on that. It raised alarm among many professional foresters in the country because they did not know in which direction the Tories intended to go during that particular year. More money was spent by the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) on forestry projects outside Canada than was spent inside Canada. I would like to know if the Minister intends to continue that kind of approach.

The final point which I would like the Minister to respond to is this. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is going to create a department of forestry—which I certainly support and I know the Minister supports—why would he take it from the Department of the Environment and put it under the Department of Agriculture? I know it sent a signal to the forest companies that the Tories would take a softer posture in terms of pesticide and herbicide applications. One of the key reasons for permitting forestry to move from the Department of the Environment to the Department of Agriculture is to get rid of environmentalists who are too interested in safety and health and who are opposed to spraying the forests. I would like the Minister to explain why forestry will move from the Department of the Environment to the Department of Agriculture. Why will it not simply remain under the Department of the Environment until such time as a Bill can be introduced to create the Ministry? That was only done once under the Government of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker in 1960. For a very brief period of time Canada had a Ministry of Forestry. However, since 1966 the Department has been downgraded in the number of its staff, its budget and its over-all access to Cabinet funds.

Could the Minister tell us what are the specifics and what he feels is a reasonable and realizable five-year rescue program? We know what was in the Tory campaign handbook, but we do not know what is in his mind. Could he tell us what there is for British Columbia? We were promised during the election campaign that $300 million a year would be made available. Is that true or is that false? What level of expenditure does the Minister feel is realistic? It is five cents out of a dollar now. Does he feel it should be raised to 20 cents, 30 cents or 50 cents? I think Canadians would like to know what the signal is. How soon does the Minister anticipate a full ministry and a separate department? Most Canadians who know anything about the industry will support that.

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member spoke of his concerns, as have other Members from British Columbia as well as members of all Parties. The platform on which a Party campaigns is not for a one-year period, or a two-month period, but one which covers a five-year mandate. Things can be done and will be done by a government that is concerned about forestry. The Government will spend those dollars as dollars become available. The very fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Party saw fit to establish the Ministry of State for Forestry is a very good indication, because it provided for the industry a clear signal that the Government is interested in Canada's largest industry. If nothing else, it will provide to the industry the assurance that someone in Cabinet will be speaking for the industry.

With regard to the mandate which has been given to me as Minister and to the Ministry of State for Forestry, the Prime Minister did what he could under the legislative authority which was before him. At this time there is no legislation in place to establish a full department. Over the intervening years I am sure that the Government will be dealing with such issues as what the Government should be doing for the industry, the kind of organization it should have, and how it can best effect what it wants to do for the industry. That will come in due course. In fact, it is under review at the present time.

The five-year rescue program is one in which I totally believe. I served for two years as the Minister of Forestry and the Minister of Natural Resources in the Province of New Brunswick, as well as serving for six years as the Minister of Commerce and Development. During that time I worked very closely with the forest industry. For once, I think the industry, the Government, labour and all provincial governments realize that perhaps in the past what needed to be done to ensure that there would be a forest industry for our children and our grandchildren was neglected.

The kind of dedication which was expressed in the election campaign and the intentions which we have expressed as to what needs to be done is a realistic goal. The extent to which we will be able to achieve that goal is another matter. Through no fault of our own, we have inherited a fiscal and financial situation that is deplorable, to say the least. However, we will take steps, in conjunction with the provinces, to put into place the programs which are needed.

In the two months I have been Minister I have met with the majority of my provincial counterparts to discuss the kind of programs they desire. I have signed an agreement with the Province of Alberta. As well, last week I signed a $150 million agreement with the Province of Ontario. In that agreement we attempted to deal with the aims and the needs of the industry in Ontario. The aims and needs of the industry vary from province to province, and we respect the right of the provinces to express their individual views. I have met with Mr. Waterland and his staff on several occasions regarding the B.C. agreement. I agree that there is a very definite need for a new program. That Province did not take advantage of a modernization program, which many other provinces undertook, in terms of pulp and paper modernization. British Columbia chose to go the route of forestry regeneration, new silvaculture activities, research and development and so on. It is my intention to sign an agreement with that province as soon as possible. I cannot at this point in time give the exact date for that. However, we are dealing with it at the present time in the Regional Development Committee. I can only state that I will fight on behalf of the people, and certainly on behalf of the industries, in British Columbia for a fair and equitable portion of the funds which are available.

The Hon. Member did mention the move of forestry from the Department of the Environment to the Department of Agriculture. I can tell the Hon. Member that I was not privy to the kind of discussion and thought which went into the decision made by the Prime Minister. I can, however, assure the Hon. Member that it was not done because the federal Government thought the industry would find it a lot easier to work within the Department of Agriculture because of its registration function and review of pesticides and herbicides. That is not the indication at all. I believe it does fit in the way in which we are trying to portray the industry, not as people who attend the land, but people who farm the land—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would ask the Hon. Minister to please conclude his remarks.

Mr. Merrithew: I certainly will, Mr. Speaker. In the next few months and few years, Mr. Speaker, I intend to deal with the issue of forestry, to be a strong voice for that sector of the economy around the Cabinet table. I very much regret what happened over the 1970s to the Canadian Forestry Service, at which time its staff, and, therefore, its activities were cut almost in half. That was regrettable, it was very wrong, and I certainly hope it will not happen now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall now proceed with debate. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I see that it is close to one o'clock. May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent of the House to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being unanimous consent, I will call it one o'clock. It being one o'clock, the House shall stand adjourned until two o'clock.

At 12.52 p.m. the House took recess.

HOUSING

RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, Canadian consumers with dreams of conserving energy and improving their homes emerged as the big losers after the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) took the axe to many programs. Of particular concern to me and my constituents is the reduction in funds for the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. This very worth-while program was instituted for home owners and land owners who wanted to improve their properties.

This cut of approximately 50 per cent in RRAP funding affects not only home owners in my constituency but will have an equally devastating effect on small contractors, 50 per cent to 60 per cent of whom will go out of business. The building supply dealers will be no less affected. If there are no repairs to be done, there is no need for building supplies. These cut-backs are continued evidence of the uncaring attitude of the Government toward the poorer regions of the country. This action must be stopped.

FORESTRY

IMPORTANCE TO ECONOMY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in the recent election campaign the Conservative Party promised: "We will establish a new Department of Forestry at the federal level". This will be found at page 49 of the PC Handbook. This promise has been broken. In fact all that has occurred is the appointment of a Minister of State in the Department of Agriculture.

One Canadian in 10 is directly or indirectly employed in forestry, Canada's largest industry. According to Richard Herring, the Assistant Deputy Minister in charge of forestry, funding for the new Ministry would have to double to at least $300 million to live up to some Conservative promises made during the election. Not one thin dime has been added to forestry expenditures by the new Tory Government.

Under Prime Minister Joe Clark and Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, of every dollar raised by the federal Government in forestry-related taxation, less than 5 cents was returned to the sector for replanting, silviculture, marketing, and R and D.

During the election the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that a PC Government would initiate a five-year forest rescue program, a "massive co-operative effort to save this vital element of our national heritage and national economy". According to the PC campaign manual the Liberals, and Joe Clark, presided over a "decade of neglect", bringing us "within sight of a national disaster".

Right across Canada, Mr. Speaker, voters are awakening to the fact that the forests and the environment are at the bottom of the list when it comes to support by right-wing politicians. In British Columbia, Bill Bennett proposes to spend $60 million on forestry when the UBC Department of Forestry calculates the need at $660 million per year.

Canadians have been tragically misled and misinformed by the—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member his time has expired.

ABORTION

PROTECTION OF UNBORN ADVOCATED

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, many people in my riding are very disturbed about the acquittal of Dr. Henry Morgentaler. By telephone and letter, over 800 individuals have contacted both myself and a provincial Member whose riding overlaps mine. On the basis of much scientific, medical, and ethical information, I believe that human life begins with conception and must be protected by the law.

The jury selection process in the trial was very disturbing to many Canadians. If we applied that procedure to this House, then many Members would be disqualified from hearing some issues. To some, the acquittal was a victory for lawlessness since Dr. Morgentaler never denied that he broke the law. The role of a jury is to determine innocence or guilt based on the law and the evidence provided during the trial. Surely it is for this House, not a jury, to decide what our laws will be.

I respectfully urge the Minister to address the issue of abortion during the term of this, the Thirty-third Parliament. If the study finds that a foetus is a human being, which I am confident it will, then we must protect that defenceless life with all the power and full weight of the law.

INCOME TAX

REGISTERED PENSION PLAN CONTRIBUTION LIMITS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my concern and that of many Canadians about the limit for income tax purposes on contributions to registered pension plans.

Individuals are limited to a maximum of $3,500 in contributions as far as income tax deductibility is concerned. This limit has remained unchanged since 1976, through a period when significant increases in the Consumer Price Index have eroded the real dollar value of contributions and of the limit itself. Further, it has remained unchanged when other tax deductions were indexed to the Consumer Price Index. Therefore I call upon the Government to take an equitable position on this serious problem and soon bring forth the necessary legislation to correct this injustice.

PROPOSED WEATHER SERVICE FEES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment, in her fanatical desire to satisfy the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), is instituting some illogical measures. She says that those people receiving weather information other than through the media, will be charged for this service. This will stop people from calling the weather office, Mr. Speaker, people like fishermen who need frequent updates on ever changing weather patterns.

She also says that she will work with the telephone company. Well, everyone knows that the telephone company is not permitted to act as a collection agency, even for the Minister of the Environment. This will not increase revenue to the Department, but it will stop people from calling the weather forecast office.

The Minister also said that guided tours will be replaced by self-guided and volunteer-guided tours in national parks. What is a self-guided tour? Is the Minister going to erect a sign saying "Seek and ye shall find", or "Enter at your own risk"? Or is this an excuse to beef up search and rescue? The Minister is clearly fishing beyond her quota, Mr. Speaker.

COST OF EMPLOYING EXTRA OFFICIALS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Government has come up with a novel way to create employment. Rather than create jobs to put Canadians back to work, the Government is hiring 700 enforcement officers to police the Unemployment Insurance Act. During the election campaign the position of the Conservative Party was crystal clear—no quotas in Revenue Canada, and fair dealing with the public. Now that it is safely in power the Government has somersaulted and will demonstrate its toughness by punishing the unemployed and by bringing in the goon squad. Believe it or not, the cost of this harrassment is $30 million per year, Mr. Speaker. Is this increase in the power of the state the kind of creative job creation Canadians can expect from this Government?

The Government's approach to economic problems is to punish the victims of unemployment, rather than come up with solutions. If there is unemployment, blame the unemployed. If we need more tax revenue, tax the poor and give loopholes to the wealthy. I suggest that the Government transfer the $30 million to the Canada Works Program and get the Government off the backs of the people.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

OPPOSITION TO CN/CP APPLICATION FOR TELEPHONE SERVICE DEREGULATION

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, it is as a firm believer in fair competition that I stand today to speak against the CN/CP Telecommunications application now under consideration by the CRTC. If it is approved, CNCP will hook into existing BC Tel and Bell Canada equipment in order to provide competitively priced long distance telephone service between major urban areas in Ontario, Quebec, and B.C. That would reduce revenue to the Telecom system, revenue shared by the Manitoba Telephone System and used to subsidize local service rates. If CNCP were willing to meet the less lucrative service and investment commitments which companies such as MTS must meet, then that would be a quite different story. But such is not the case, and that is why the application does not constitute fair competition.

In addition, a recent study supports the view that telephone deregulation could adversely affect the cost and level of local service in outlying areas. In recent weeks well over 600 people in my constituency have expressed to me in writing their opposition to the CNCP application. Many are seniors on fixed incomes who cannot afford to pay substantially more for basic telephone service.

While I recognize that the CRTC is presently considering the application, as the elected representative for Brandon-Souris I must express my personal opposition to this proposal.

EXTERNAL AID

AFRICA—REQUIREMENT FOR TECHNOLOGICAL SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, a quarter century ago Africa was self sufficient in food supplies. Today, Ethiopia and 21 other countries in Africa are in danger of being overridden by the apocalyptic horseman of famine.

Their immediate hope lies in the kind of massive aid which, under the lead of the Government, Canada is sending Ethiopia. But their long term hope requires another kind of aid; leadership in advancing scientific agriculture, developing technology, and building infrastructures.

If the need of the West is to humanize our technology, the need of Africa is to technologize its humanity.

Here is a service opportunity for Canadians with knowledge and skills to offer. Through such programs as CUSO and CESO, Canadians have already made an impressive contribution to the world's needs. We can now make an even greater contribution by creating a partnership of Government and voluntary agencies, a partnership to recruit and maintain an army dedicated to peace.

Canada can be proud of its Armed Forces and what they have done for peace. Can we now think of unarmed forces that Canada can send abroad to offer life to people facing death?

Canadians have made an inspiring response to the Government's appeal for money and goods in the past two weeks. They will respond just as readily if their country calls them to offer their skills and knowledge.

THE ECONOMY

BUDGETARY CUT BACKS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the present Government claims it is creating a climate of confidence for businessmen so that they will invest in the Canadian economy. How can the Government create a climate of confidence when the first thing it did upon coming to power was to increase the very sales tax it had criticized so severely under the previous Government? It then immediately proceeded to raise the price of gas and unemployment insurance premiums. All these tax increases have raised the direct production costs of Canadian businesses, thus reducing their ability to compete on international markets and automatically involving the loss of thousands of jobs. During the election campaign, the Prime Minister promised to create thousands of jobs as soon as his Cabinet was sworn in. Mr. Speaker, to this day we have seen only employment cutbacks, involving at least 50,000 jobs. Mr. Speaker, has the Prime Minister misled the Canadian people?

FINANCE

INDEXATION OF TAXATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of Members of Parliament the provision for indexing set out in the supplementary information tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8 last. The index for next year's increases in tax is 4.6 per cent and, as a consequence, there is a reduction in federal tax revenues of over $1 billion, and in provincial revenues of over $375 million.

This might not be much of a benefit if the true rate of inflation were in fact 4.6 per cent, but Members will know that the inflation rate is now only 3.4 per cent year over year, and is much less than 2 per cent in the last months. Indeed, there would be no inflation at all if it were not for increases in taxes and charges by Crown corporations.

The effect, then, of the 4.6 per cent index is to assist Canadians substantially. As you know, Mr. Speaker, it is a policy of the Conservative Party to leave people with their own money because that will stimulate employment better than anything else.

Members should report this significant reduction in tax to their constituents as an indication of the first benefit they are receiving from the Progressive Conservative Government.

RESEARCH

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF FACILITIES AT CHURCHILL, MAN.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is with grave concern for the future of Canada's potential involvement in space research, and for the subsequent and immediate effect on Churchill, Gimli, and Winnipeg, that I rise today.

In its economic statement the Government announced the closure of the research program in Churchill and Gimli. It has certainly killed the future of ionospheric research in that area, which will create a real danger to future employment in this field. Those scientists who wish to pursue their involvement in this field, now and in the future, will be forced to leave our country.

A further loss of revenue will occur when NASA scientists are forced to withdraw their current and potential use of the Churchill research range.

The cost to dismantle and remove the facility is an additional $10 million to the Government of Canada. These are the immediate costs and revenue losses to the people of Canada. The cost to our future and our young people is completely unknown, and the Government should reverse its decision.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It appears that the Government has developed an extraordinary obsession for secrecy. In fact it is elevating the phrase "no comment" to an art form. Just listen to the headlines about this keyhole administration. "It is secrecy time". "Paranoia starks Parliament Hill".

For diplomats, mum will definitely be the word.

[English]

"Tories keep us in the dark"; "The Great Stone Wall"; "Finance Minister refuses to release information on social program cuts".

Why is there this frosty silence? Why has he thrown a cloak of secrecy over his administration?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret that my right hon. friend interprets it that way because—

Mr. Gauthier: It is the press.

Mr. Mulroney: —I would like to give him and the House, in response to his entirely legitimate concern, the assurance that that was certainly not my intention nor that of the Government.

I want to indicate that we, as a new Government, came in with much to try to accomplish in a brief period of time. This required some degree of co-ordination.

It was brought to my attention by Mr. John Ferguson, at a press conference that I held last week, that guidelines did exist in the past and the question was whether they applied. I indicated that I would be happy to review them, which I am in the process of doing. Hopefully at a press conference this coming Friday I can impart to the press guidelines that will be reasonable and proper, and which ensure access to the press and availability of information for the Opposition and us all.

There was no intent at any time to curtail the legitimate flow of information. It was an attempt by me to bring a modest degree of order to a new situation. We hope that when I am able to deliver the guidelines that Mr. Ferguson was properly seeking, they will clarify and improve the situation, to the satisfaction of my right hon. friend.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is a very seductive answer.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in helping the Prime Minister to come to a final decision, I want to remind him of his words in Kingston on August 12 when he said:

> If the Canadian people see fit to give us their trust, we will always give them ours. That means an end to the obsession with secrecy. Secrecy in government . . . is an addiction; the more the Government can have of it, the more it wants of it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There may be another addiction at play, the addiction of power. However, I ask the Prime Minister to contrast the actions of his Government to date with those very eloquent words, and will he issue a fiat to his Ministers, including the Deputy Prime Minister, to fulfil that promise which was made in Kingston? Will he lift this veil of secrecy, and turn on the lights in the corridors of power?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the understandable wishes of my right hon. friend, I could not issue a fiat to the Deputy Prime Minister privately because, as he knows, it would be leaked to the papers immediately. It is the garrulous dimension of his personality that I find most attractive.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I am delighted that my right hon. friend referred to my Kingston speech, because I thought it was one of my better speeches.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The thoughts raised in that speech were indeed serious. They speak to some of the most important concerns that we all have. Even though I suppose I am somewhat like the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and do not always agree with what is written in the papers, there can be no doubt of the right of the press to know, and that the press constitutes an indispensable cornerstone of our parliamentary democracy. We want to enhance that.

REQUEST THAT DIRECTIVE ISSUED TO EXTERNAL AFFAIRS OFFICIALS BE RESCINDED

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, since the Right Hon. Prime Minister seems to be feeling very mellow this afternoon in the House, could he perhaps do something positive today and order his Secretary of State for External Affairs who has put a humiliating gag on his department's officials, to remove this gag immediately, until such time as new guidelines have been set by the new Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps I should comment on this guideline in the near future. I can inform the Hon. Member that I expect to be able to do so at the next press conference I intend to call this Friday at the latest. The Hon. Member has raised an important question which deserves a complete answer, and I expect to be able to give him all the details very shortly.

THE PRESS GALLERY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an assurance from the Prime Minister concerning this gag order which is making officials in External Affairs a joke around the world today. The impression has been created that they cannot talk to anyone, even over cocktails.

Does the Right Hon. Prime Minister subscribe to the view of his Secretary of State for External Affairs that anyone who criticizes the Government, reporters such as Geoff Simpson, Doug Fisher, and others, are members of the establishment? I hope he will say to Doug Fisher: "Doug, baby, you have come a long way from Thunder Bay to be part of the establishment today".

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot see why anyone would want to criticize this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: With reference to the names raised, and indeed to all members of the Press Gallery, I view with respect their necessary, indeed indispensable, occupation of legitimate criticism of the Government and the Opposition—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No; the Opposition do that themselves.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —and I commend them. This Government will conduct itself in such a manner as to facilitate and not inhibit their work in any way.

Mr. Chrétien: Lift the gag.

JUDICIAL REVIEW OF CABINET DOCUMENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I suspect the Liberals are putting gag orders on one another.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: My question is for the Prime Minister. When in opposition the Prime Minister's Party, through the late Walter Baker, promised that a top priority, a fundamental government priority, was amendments to access to information legislation, permitting full judicial review of all disputed documents, including cabinet documents. Indeed, such a provision was included in previous Conservative legislation on access to information. Why is it that the Prime Minister's Government is now breaking this fundamental commitment that was made by his Party through Walter Baker?

Why, in turn, has the Prime Minister adopted the Liberal policy of secrecy and of refusing to trust the courts with cabinet documents?

Mr. Nystrom: Leader.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Government House Leader, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chrétien: Do you have to consult Erik before opening your mouth?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question posed by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, who has long been involved and interested in this whole area of access to information, and who served on the committee, he will know that we have just now referred the question of the operation of the access to information legislation to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. This committee will have a wide-ranging ability to look into the operation of the legislation and to make recommendations with respect to that legislation. I invite the Hon. Member to make his representations, as I do all Members, to that committee, and I am sure they will receive the attention they deserve.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Justice. Would he explain to this House his statement that the cabinet system of government would crumble if judges were allowed to examine cabinet documents? Why is it that he and his Government have turned their backs on the fundamental commitment that was made by Walter Baker to allow full judicial review of all cabinet documents? How is this going to result in the crumbling of cabinet government in this country?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the whole system, and the hon. gentleman, might crumble if we opened up Privy Council confidences.

Mr. Deans: That was pretty kookie.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Am I to be allowed to answer the question, Mr. Speaker? We are not even allowed to answer questions in the House, and you ask about access to information!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: It is not our fault. Speak to your Leader.

Mr. Crosbie: Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I was asked by the press about the case of the Auditor General versus Petrofina Petro-Canada and the Government of Canada. I said the issue there was that we could not agree to give the Auditor General access to confidences of the Privy Council in that particular instance; one, because there is a commitment that we will not go into the documents and cabinet confidences of previous administrations, including that of the Leader of the Opposition and of the administration of Mr. Trudeau, which was a little longer than that of the last Leader of the Liberal Party; two, because it would be wrong for the Auditor General to have access to those confidences. They are not necessary, in our view, for him to carry out his auditing functions properly.

That is not to say, and I never said, that judges should be prevented from having access to certain documents. That is another issue. As a matter of fact, in a great blow for liberty, I just instructed the Department of Justice not to go forward with an appeal in the Ternette case. The hon. gentleman should be congratulating me for a great step forward.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REQUEST FOR DOCUMENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): My final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Prime Minister. Perhaps the Prime Minister might care to recall the speech he made in Kingston and explain why it is that behaviour which was totally unacceptable, then, according to the Prime Minister, that is, the refusal to disclose the documents requested by the Auditor General, is suddenly acceptable now? Why is his Government refusing, and continuing to stonewall the Auditor General in his pursuit of information concerning the expenditure of millions of taxpayers' dollars? Why is there continued stonewalling and secrecy? Why the breach of another sacred trust by this Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Justice has just indicated, I think the information being sought can properly be segregated into categories. One apparently is with respect to an attempt by the Auditor General, prior to our coming to office, to seek out information that is contained only in classified cabinet documents or memoranda. I undertook, on behalf of this administration, not to ferret about in the documents of previous administrations, as has been done before me. But for information that is requested there is a proper channel for me to secure it through the Clerk of the Privy Council. I think that is proper, that Cabinet be able to function under the British parliamentary system in that way.

With regard to the second part of the information being sought, which is basically the same kind of information, we are trying to help the Auditor General secure all of the information possible. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Justice and myself are very much committed to ensuring that all information available to the Government of Canada, excluding that which has been for good reason covered by the reference I have just explained, will be made available to allow the Auditor General to put a spotlight on the transaction. Apparently we had a little difficulty in finding the proper formula, because it was an unusual kind of request. I hope we will be able to satisfy all requests by the Auditor General so that this information can be made available to Canadians and to the Parliament of Canada.

SECTORAL FREE TRADE PROPOSAL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As he knows, yesterday the Chairman of the Royal Commission on Economic Union and Development Prospects introduced a very important discussion on the issue of free trade. Yet, at the same time, a member of the Prime Minister's staff, Mr. MacMillan, dismissed the option of free trade in a speech even though various Cabinet Ministers, including the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion last night on television, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, endorsed the notion of sectoral free trade.

Could the Prime Minister indicate whether the Government, as a policy, has abandoned negotiations with the United States on matters of sectoral free trade in a number of very critical sectors, like urban transportation and agricultural equipment? Could he indicate who in his Government is speaking on the very vital question of trade—which of the three or four Ministers who have spoken on it, or will it be his personal policy adviser?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the paper submitted by the Minister of Finance clearly indicated, it is a vital sector for public consideration and debate. It is presently being reviewed not only by Cabinet and caucus. I had the pleasure of listening to the Hon. Member last night on television express his views on the issue. I learned a great deal from them. They are at substantial variance with those of his Party, but I thought it was a great contribution to the debate.

In this important areas we are presently evolving a policy which will be announced pursuant to thorough consideration by Cabinet. As the Hon. Member knows, Cabinet speaks for the Government in these important areas.

Mr. Axworthy: As the Prime Minister knows, in our Party we are always encouraging free and open discussion. That is the hallmark of liberalism.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I am afraid the Prime Minister did not answer the question.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER'S POLICY ADVISER NOT MAKE STATEMENTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we have a statement from a very important member of the Prime Minister's Office dismissing the idea of sectoral free trade at a time when we are in negotiations. We also have a circumstance where the United States has already undertaken open hearings on how Canadian protective barriers would inhibit any free trade area.

First, will the Prime Minister's policy adviser no longer make statements on this vital issue so that we do not confuse the issue? Second, will we have an opportunity to debate the free trade issue in Parliament? Third, will we also have an opportunity very soon to begin examining the way in which the United States has protective barriers to Canadian trade in that country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a remarkable spectacle. The Member is suggesting that I throw a veil of secrecy over my policy adviser.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I would have thought that consistency would require openness and people speaking out. Mr. MacMillan, with all his remarkable talents, is not the spokesman for the Government. He was delivering himself of a personal and informed view which will be put into the mix with the opinion of others in the House and elsewhere. I hope we will come out at an early moment with an appropriate response to the query raised by my hon. friend that will be beneficial to Canada in terms of job creation and our longer term trading future.

REQUEST THAT COMMISSION BE DISBANDED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to pursue the same question. It is apparent that there is an irreconcilable difference of opinion between, on the one hand, the chairman of the royal commission who says that we must make a leap of faith into the area of free trade, and a senior policy adviser to the Prime Minister on the other. In this matter there can only be one decision—either we go ahead with the discussions or not. Given that it is costing millions of dollars to pay for this royal commission, is the Prime Minister in a position to tell the royal commission to report its findings to date, disband it, and save public money?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am at a loss to understand the Hon. Member's outrage.

Mr. Deans: You are?

Mr. Mulroney: What we have is a former Minister of Finance, who is chairman of a royal commission, delivering himself of what I understood was a personal view at a conference in New York. I read it along with the Hon. Member. I did not conclude that Mr. Macdonald was trying to pre-empt or anticipate the definitive conclusions of his colleagues. It was clearly stipulated to be a personal view on the one hand. On the other hand, Mr. MacMillan, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, and many others, have different views on this vital matter, which will form the object of a discussion paper. We hope there will be debate in the House to obtain the benefit of the views, experience and knowledge of Hon. Members on all sides of the House of Commons so that we can design and implement a trade policy which will create new jobs and new wealth for Canadians. That is what we would like.

COSTS OF COMMISSION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that his House Leader at the time the royal commission was established indicated that the money which was to be spent would have been better spent assisting those on UIC to extend their benefit period, or perhaps assisting those in need of family allowance, with some kind of indexing? Does he not now feel that all that money may well have been wasted, given that the decision which will be taken by the royal commission was pre-empted by a senior policy adviser who claims that the Government is not likely to proceed with sectoral free trade?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would not necessarily disagree with the view held by the House Leader if it was expressed many months ago. The royal commission has been under way for a considerable period of time. Indeed it has been a costly royal commission. It may very well be that, upon reflection, even my hon. friends, were they still in government, would have decided to do something different.

However, we were confronted with a situation where the royal commission was just about to report. It will, very soon. We felt that it was prudent and proper in the circumstances that we receive the benefit of whatever extensive work has been done, and not chop it off eleven-twelfths of the way. Hopefully we will receive some value for the very substantial amount of money expended in this area.

TRANSPORT

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE TOLLS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport.

Whereas the Government of Quebec has decided to abolish tolls on the Province's expressways and a start has already been made with dismantling toll booths, and since the Champlain Bridge, which is federal property, is the only federal toll bridge in Canada—I am referring to the bridge between Montreal Island and the South Shore—could the Minister inform this House as soon as possible of his policy on the Champlain Bridge toll?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Quebec Government has decided to abolish tolls on Quebec highways. That is the Quebec Government's decision and it is not for us to comment. On the other hand, it is also true that considering the present state of our finances, we cannot afford to spend $6 million in addition to the $3 million we are spending already on the Champlain Bridge. However, we are prepared to consider other options should the financial situation improve.

IMMIGRATION

NUMBER OF IMMIGRANTS TO BE ADMITTED IN 1985

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the Minister announced plans to admit between 85,000 and 90,000 immigrants to Canada for 1985. This is a reduction of 5,000 to 10,000, including a reduction in the family category to 45,000. Considering the Minister and her Leader forecast improvements in the economy and increases in jobs in 1985, would she explain why she targeted for immigration reductions, particularly reductions in the family class category?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the past two years immigration has been below the projections that were announced annually by the Liberal Government. In the consultations that took place with the provinces and with a number of groups over a period of months during this year as to what the level should be for 1985, it was felt that the announced level was far more realistic.

I also said yesterday that I am very concerned about the immigration trends in this country, that we are not satisfied with what is happening. It is for that reason we have announced a full review of immigration policy. We will, therefore, be looking at immigration levels in the light of what the country really needs.

Mr. Allmand: I should remind the Minister that there were reviews, by W. G. Robinson in 1983, and a complete review and overhaul in 1976.

SCHEDULE OF APPLICATION FEES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In the financial statement made by the Minister of Finance on November 8, the Minister announced plans to raise $4.4 million by charging fees for immigration applications and social insurance numbers. Can the Minister tell us the exact fee she has in mind for immigration applicants? Will the fee be the same for all categories, including refugees?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there will be no fee for refugees. I would like to advise the Hon. Member and all other Hon. Members that the fee schedule is still being worked out. As soon as it is, he will be advised of that fact.

CONFIDENCE OF INVESTORS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who, in his economic statement, projected that the economy would move in a particular direction over the next two years. By the day, starting off with the Conference Board, Informetrica, and the World Bank's trendicator, more and more projection houses are suggesting that the exact opposite is going to occur. Instead of moving in the direction as projected, we will be moving in another direction. The Minister refers to the necessity of building investor confidence. He knows that confidence will depend on stability and consistency, and on how people view the next number of months and the next number of years. Will the Minister explain to the people of Canada, through this House, how confidence is going to be built, when the Government marches to one drummer and the rest of Canada marches to another?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member will be quite aware that there are a number of points of view on the direction of the economy. The point of view that I expressed in my financial statement the other day was very close to the consensus view of something like 25 different economists in the country. There are always others like the Conference Board who will be out of step with that consensus. They have, however, been coming back closer to the consensus of the 25 other forecasters.

Mr. Riis: The Minister refers to the 25 out of 80,000 economists who agree with the direction. Perhaps we should be paying some attention to the others.

INTEREST RATE POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The assumption in the economic statement is based on the fact of a decrease in the deficit of the United States and a consequent reduction in interest rates. In the last couple of days, we hear from the projection houses in the United States—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a little bit unfair to the Member. Others today have been pushing supplementaries with preambles. We have started that practice again. I am sorry to rise when the Hon. Member is speaking but today we have got longer and longer and longer. I would, therefore, ask the Member please go to a question.

Mr. Riis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If things go wrong in the United States, will the Minister indicate to the House whether a "made-in-Canada" interest rate policy is part of the contingency plan that he has?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been asking, both in this Parliament and in previous Parliaments, for a "made-in-Canada" interest rate policy. I should say to him that I believe, as do many other expert observers of the financial scene, that the "made-in-Canada" interest rate policy that his Party would propose is totally impractical and totally unworkable. We have felt that we can get more independence in our interest rate policy if we strengthen the economy. That is the basic direction of the agenda paper and the economic statement that I put out a week and one-half ago.

COSTS OF ELECTRICITY IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with an election promise that the Prime Minister made in May, 1984, to the people of Prince Edward Island when at that time he pledged that he would, if elected, reduce energy costs to Prince Edward islanders. That was reiterated by his Party's candidates in the election campaign in Hillsborough, Malpeque, Cardigan, and Egmont. Three months have gone by since this campaign pledge was made. We still do not see any reduction in energy rates. When can Prince Edward islanders expect a decrease in electricity cost?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Prince Edward islanders waited 20 years under the Liberals and got no satisfaction. After two months, they are starting to get some satisfaction under us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I had a meeting with Premier Lee on this matter. I met with the Premier to review matters in which we might be helpful. The Minister of Energy held conversations in this regard with her counterpart vis-à-vis Prince Edward Island. I hope that we will be able to advise the Hon. Member and the House pursuant to these consultations.

Oral Questions

POSSIBLE TRANSMISSION OF ELECTRICITY FROM PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister initiate a meeting with the Premier of New Brunswick, the Premier of Prince Edward Island, and the newborn Canadian Premier of Quebec? The problem is trying to get electricity from Quebec to Prince Edward Island, transmitted through New Brunswick. Will he initiate a meeting immediately so that the problem can be solved of getting cheap electrical energy from Quebec to Prince Edward Island, transmitting it through New Brunswick at cost?

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the Hon. Member putting a question, but normally it is not necessary to put it twice.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I say to my hon. friend that it is a very important matter for Prince Edward Island where power rates are so high that they preclude the possibility of attracting industry. The energy component almost obviates the attractiveness of the Island to these investors. I thank the Hon. Member for raising this matter. It is very important. I understand there have been discussions among Premiers in this area. I have, both in writing and verbally, raised this with Premier Lee. I hope to be able to do so with the other Premiers affected, at an early moment. I share the concern raised by the Hon. Member. There is a strong element of unfairness when the energy component costs are so high that they prevent the building of industry.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY INTO INDUSTRY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns the nuclear industry in Canada. Given the Progressive Conservative commitment to open government, to accountability of Crown corporations, to reviewing areas of significant government spending, and to respecting public opinion, can the Minister tell us whether the new Government intends to initiate a full parliamentary inquiry into all aspects of the nuclear industry in Canada, as the Progressive Conservative Government in 1979 intended to do?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the commitment made in 1979 to have a task force or parliamentary committee look into the nuclear industry. When I meet with the officials of AECL, which I will be doing in the next two weeks or so, I will discuss that option with them to see if it is still a valid arena in which to discuss the problems which our nuclear industry faces.

Mr. Blaikie: I would hope that the Minister would not be taking her orders from AECL in this respect.

INDUSTRY'S ACCOUNTABILITY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister again whether she will consider initiating a full parliamentary inquiry into the nuclear industry so that we can have some accountability from that industry with respect to the nuclear energy future that was imposed upon Canadians by the former Liberal administration. I would urge her to do that.

● (1450)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that I was giving consideration to reviving that concept. However, I wish to point out that there are a great many players in the nuclear game. One of the things I would do before taking it to our House Leader is find out whether or not the industry, in New Brunswick, Ontario or wherever, would find it a useful arena in which to have discussions.

Mr. Blaikie: It is not just the industry you should consult.

Miss Carney: Yes, there is a need to find out if that is a useful role to play. Otherwise, the problems may perhaps lie more in the marketing area.

COMPLETION OF AUTOROUTE 50

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Transport). First of all, I would like to congratulate the Minister on his decision to meet with groups from the Laurentian area and especially those with concerns about transportation issues. There was a sizeable delegation from Argenteuil-Papineau which made representations to the Minister on two important priorities for the region. My question is: Now that he has had a meeting with the Quebec Minister of Transport on final construction of Highway 50, could the Minister inform the House what transpired at the meeting he had with the Quebec Transport Minister?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, we discussed the highway issue with Mr. Léonard—that is correct. However, the federal-provincial agreement on highways in Quebec expired in March 1984 and has yet to be renewed. If and when the agreement is renewed, we can then discuss with the Province, which after all is responsible for highways, what to do about the highway to which the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau is referring.

EFFECT OF BANK INTEREST RATES ON FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. There is an emergency situation facing many agricultural producers today, in western Canada and other parts of the country, because of high bank interest rates on loans. Such is the situation being faced by a producer in Kisbey, Saskatchewan, and one in Choiceland, Saskatchewan, who contacted my office today. As well, during the election campaign, the Government made a commitment to provide additional funding in order to write down existing bank loans to current-day interest rates. In view of those facts, is the Government prepared to move immediately on the commitment made in the election campaign to reduce interest rates on existing bank loans?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question of the Hon. Member. I am very much aware of the very serious problem that exists in the agricultural community. On the other hand, I think we do not wish to over-emphasize the problem.

I have indicated in the House before that we are working with our provincial counterparts. I have met with them all. I am in the process of holding discussions with people from traditional lending agencies.

At the moment, we have under suspension the farm bankruptcies and foreclosures of the FCC. Indeed, that is the only area in which we have legislative authority to do so. I met with my provincial counterparts a couple of weeks ago and we are looking at three or four options. One of the options mentioned by the Hon. Member is an option that is being studied at the moment.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister justify this lack of action when the recent report of the Farm Credit Corporation indicated that 1,700 agricultural producers are facing total financial collapse this coming winter and when the Government, in its own campaign literature, indicated that it would be prepared to write down these farm loans to current-day interest rates? It does not seem to me that that depends upon the provincial Premiers. It depends upon the Government, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture acting now.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why the Hon. Member should take that position. Indeed, we have not been waiting. We must recognize that write-downs require legislative changes to the Farm Credit Corporation Act.

We have put the bankruptcies into suspension. We have provided some $60 million to western Canada for the drought. We have provided the $123 million final payment from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. The Minister of Finance gave a break to the food producers of the country to the extent of at least $100 million.

I do not think that we have waited. I do not think that we have ignored the problem. I think that we have acted appropriately, and have acted within our legislative authority.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POTATO MARKETING IN EASTERN CANADA—DISCONTINUANCE OF COMMISSION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. After 12 years of reorganizational studies and discussions of marketing proposals for the eastern Canadian potato industry, a commission of inquiry under Judge Carter was established to investigate the many charges and allegations of wrongdoing and exploitation in that industry. Since the Minister has apparently felt that the inquiry's very existence and its ability to subpoena witnesses is a threat to the existing establishment in the potato industry, can he tell the House how he has aided the potato farmer by stopping this inquiry?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, no one is more anxious to improve the marketing conditions in eastern Canada than I. I am certainly very well aware of the problems which exist there.

If the Hon. Member really knows about the problems in the industry, I think he will recognize that that industry has been studied to death. I can tell the Hon. Member that I have had conversations with all of my provincial counterparts in eastern Canada and they have given me their advice with reference to the advantages and disadvantages of continuing the Carter Commission. It was obvious that the bottom line was that the Carter Commission was probably going nowhere. What is the use of using public funds to study that industry again if the political will is not there?

What will happen is that the submissions that have been made to the Carter Commission will be turned over to the National Farm Products Marketing Council. The Council will update its 1981-82 study. We will get that information—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

FUTURE PLAN

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has turned the information over to the National Farm Products Marketing Council, can he tell us what alternative plan will be put before the producers of eastern Canada? Will there be a marketing proposal put forward for those producers in both eastern and western Canada so that a plan may be decided upon in the near future?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the logical approach would be to let the National Farm Products Marketing Council have an opportunity to update its submission. I would then want to have an opportunity to talk to my provincial counterparts and then provide an opportunity for my hon. colleague to make his own views known.

EMPLOYMENT OF EXTRA OFFICIALS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister has announced that $200 million will be saved through intensified interviews with unemployment insurance recipients. Since the average UIC payment in Canada is $155.88 per week, and since the average period for drawing unemployment insurance benefits is 26 weeks, then in order to save $200 million the Minister would have to knock 50,000 people off the UIC rolls. How many extra staff members will the Minister's Department hire to persecute, prosecute, or prevent these 50,000 people from drawing unemployment insurance?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the Hon. Member thinks, the objective of claimant interviews is to ensure that we are doing everything that we possibly can to help people find jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I would like to give an example of this to the Hon. Member. Just the other day the President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business said that there were 170,000 jobs that were going unfilled. We want to find out where those jobs are, and we want to match them to those people who are unemployed so that they will be put back to work again. That will reduce the amount of money that is being paid out of the unemployment insurance fund.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question. I wanted to know the number of people who would make up "Flora's heroes".

CONSULTATION QUERY

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister, in the spirit of co-operative federalism, consulted with the provincial Ministers of Welfare to find out if they are willing to accept this extra burden on the welfare rolls of the provinces?

● (1500)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, where the Hon. Member and I differ is that we do not agree that there will be an additional burden on the welfare rolls. I want to reassure him that we are aware of the regional difficulties with respect to employment in this country, and where there are no jobs available, obviously people will continue to receive unemployment insurance benefits. It was for that reason that we entered into a direct job-creation program at the beginning of our term, worth some $430 million, which will provide jobs for 70,000 Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Members may want to examine today's Question Period. They will discover that the lengths of questions and answers today were the longest since the beginning of the session. I say this because I am in some difficulty. I suggest to Members who are asking questions that they should recognize the difficulty of the Speaker in policing the length of an answer if a question is long. I have the sense that the House wants the Question Period to work well and to work quickly, but I require the assistance of the House for that purpose.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PEACE CAMP ON PARLIAMENT HILL—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday, I informed the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) on Friday, November 16, 1984, met the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form. I also informed the House that there was some doubt in my mind as to the acceptability of this petition since it contained signatures from non-Canadian citizens not resident in Canada, and I referred to Citation 668(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition.

On reviewing the Canadian and British precedents, I found no clear answer to the admissability or non-admissability of a petition which is signed by Canadian citizens and, at the same time, by non-Canadian citizens not resident in Canada. In October, 1983, Madam Speaker Sauvé ruled that a petition signed by American citizens was not receivable. That petition was signed exclusively by American citizens. Our precedents on petitions relating to Private Bills indicate that petitions from foreigners have been accepted, from time to time, when the subject matter related to legislation or an area of jurisdiction of the Canadian Parliament.

Accordingly, since I could find no clear direction in our practice and procedure, and so that those Canadian citizens who signed the said petition not be denied their ancient right to petition the House of Commons, and since this is the first time this issue has arisen in this Parliament, I ask the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre be received by unanimous consent. I also suggest that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization give early consideration to the presentation of petitions, since this is not the first time that the Chair has raised issues related to this procedure.

May I seek the unanimous consent of the House for this proposal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: As there is consent, the petition is so received.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the business of the House for the last two days of this week. I have had the benefit of consultations with House Leaders of the Opposition Parties and I would like to advise the House that it is my intention to call the following business for Thursday and Friday.

On Thursday, November 22, the first item of business will be the consideration of the six Ways and Means motions relating to the economic statement of the Minister of Finance. The second order of business will be Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. The third item to be dealt with on Thursday will be a motion to establish the task force on the reform of the House of Commons. It is anticipated that this motion, which is outlined in the Speech from the Throne, will be called immediately following Routine Proceedings. If time remains following the debate on the motion to establish the task force, the House will then conclude consideration of Bill C-4. If Bill C-4 has been passed at all stages, the House will proceed to the consideration of Bill C-6, an Act to amend the Saltfish Act.

With respect to the business of the House on Friday, November 23, I would like to announce that I am designating this day as the second allotted day of the current supply period. I think it is also fair for me to indicate, with respect to Bill C-4 and Bill C-6, that notwithstanding the fact that the second reading motion involves reference to the standing committees of this House, there will be a disposition on the part of all Parties to have those Bills dealt with at all stages on the floor of the House.

TABLING OF REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 46(2), I am tabling in both official languages two copies of a report entitled "Equality in Employment: A Royal Commission Report".

Introduction of Bills

ACCESS TO INFORMATION AND PRIVACY

TABLING OF REPORT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Solicitor General I am pleased to table the access to information and privacy report for the Ministry of the Solicitor General, pursuant to Standing Order 46(2), in both official languages. This report should be referred, pursuant to Standing Order 46(4), to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, I am sure, knows that we can apply the rules of the House.

PETITIONS

NUCLEAR ARMS POLICY

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of 44 constituents in the riding of Simcoe North and other places in Ontario calling for changes in regard to Canada's policy on nuclear arms.

NUCLEAR-WEAPONS-FREE ZONE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to present a petition to this House on behalf of the undersigned residents of Canada, many from the constituency of Prince Albert, who are deeply concerned about Canada's role in the nuclear arms race. The petitioners call upon Parliament to refuse the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada, to declare Canada a nuclear-weapons-free zone and that wasteful spending on the arms race be diverted to fund human needs and to ensure prosperity through peace.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE HULL IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-207, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (national capital of Canada).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to change the boundaries of the national capital of Canada so as to include the city of Hull and any other area that the Canadian Parliament could designate in the future. A capital is not only the seat of government, it is also the symbol of the strength and unity of a country as well as the image of the nation throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

AIRPORTS

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF OTTAWA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-208, an Act respecting the international airport at Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to rename the International Airport at Ottawa the International Airport of Ottawa-Hull as it serves the region of the Canadian capital located in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EXECUTION OF MASS MURDERERS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-209, an Act respecting the execution of mass murderers.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in moving the first reading of a Bill which, when passed, will bring about the execution of mass murderer, Clifford Robert Olson. Unless he is executed, Clifford Olson will be paroled some day and will then be a threat to every child who lives near him. We have no right to subject our boys and girls to such a threat.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ken James for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate you on your election to the office of Speaker of this House. Since this is my return to the House of Commons after four years of toiling in the field of Nickel Belt, I feel I should thank all the workers on this Hill, such as the messengers, the bus drivers and all of those who responded to my return with a very warm welcome. I would also like to thank Hon. Members on both sides of the House who have so warmly welcomed me as a representative of the people of Nickel Belt. I must not forget the people of Nickel Belt who saw fit to return me to the House of Commons as their Member of Parliament. I say to them that I will do as I pledged on election night. I will work as hard as I possibly can to represent them in a fair, just and open manner.

In the four years I spent in the field in Nickel Belt, I had the opportunity to be associated with young people in my profession of teaching. It was very important to me because I had the opportunity to really see from the grass roots how young people view politics and politicians and how they view the House of Commons. I felt moved to speak in this debate because it is seldom we have an election, followed by a Throne Speech, followed by a mini-budget. When one event is superimposed on another, one gets a picture. Something which struck me about this whole process over the last three weeks is that the election campaign, the Throne Speech and what followed had to do with credibility, and today young people are rather incredulous about politics and politicians. In the election campaign, these young people hear one thing, then the Government outlines what it intends to do over the next four years in what is called the Throne Speech, and then, of course, we have the economic statement, which is the reality. The young people see there is much to be desired. There seems to be a "slip between the cup and the lip" in that loose lips prevailed during the election campaign, and once the Tories received the majority they wanted, lo and behold, it did not matter any more. Now they have the prize. They are sitting over there, they are sitting over here, they are sitting to the right and they are sitting to the left.

What was the big issue of the election campaign? It was, "Jobs, jobs, jobs". But we have the reality of the Tories now that they have their 211 seats. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I was secretly delighted that finally the Liberals were turned out of office. I had hoped that a new dawning was taking place and that finally we were going to go into a period where what a government said in the election and what was done in fact would restore confidence in and the credibility of practising politicians and politics in general. But lo and behold, what was "jobs, jobs, jobs" during the election campaign, is not "jobs, jobs, jobs" any longer. It has become "cuts, cuts, cuts".

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) very clearly outlined that the priority was jobs. However, what was said about jobs in the Thone Speech? I quote:

> My Government views unemployment as Canada's most debilitating problem and most critical national challenge.

That is one sentence, Mr. Speaker. What happened in the time between spring and fall? Obviously there were whisperings in the ears of those who now have power, and those whisperings were Roland Frazee of the Royal Bank, and the John Bullochs of Bay Street who have the ears, and I would say some other part of the anatomy of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Those are the louder voices, Mr. Speaker. Those are the voices which count. I do not know of any working class people in this country with whom the Minister of Finance consulted before he brought down his financial statement. I do not know with which working class group the Prime Minister consulted before he brought down the Throne Speech. Those people were not consulted.

Young people are looking for credibility, Mr. Speaker, and they do not see it in this Government. This Government has a new fixation, and that is the deficit. This Government is transfixed like a cobra by a flute player. It is transfixed with the idea of a deficit. However, that is not what was being said during the election campaign. The deficit was not the big concern at that time. The Prime Minister said on July 10 in Ottawa, when he was seeking to be elected, "All of our policies are designed to create jobs. There is a cost in everything and I indicated there is a short-term cost to get the economy moving again". In Vancouver on August 24 he said, "Clearly there can be no drastic reduction in the deficit until interest rates are lowered and the country gets back to work. Massive cuts now would guarantee a recession".

What happened, Mr. Speaker? Why is there this great fixation with the deficit? I feel that fixation comes from the boys on Bay Street. It is obvious that the Prime Minister is more concerned with what his friends on Bay Street have to say about the deficit and it is to those voices he listens. During the election campaign he agreed on television with the Leader of our Party that there ought to be a minimum tax. But was there anything about a minimum tax on the wealthy in the Throne Speech? You bet your bottom dollar there was not! The Prime Minister is going to fight this deficit on the backs of the working people and on the backs of the unemployed. Yet the banks of this country are the wealthiest in the world. At a time when we have an inflation rate of 3 per cent, they are lending money at 14 per cent, 15 per cent and 18 per cent. They are raking the money in. Are they contributing to the reduction of the deficit of this country?

What about the conglomerates in this country, the concentration of power? John Bullock should be more concerned about the concentration of corporate power in this country than about trying to give people jobs at less than the minimum wage, and then suggesting that the Government should prop it up to the provincial minimum wage. At the same time, the Government hires 700 members of a goon squad to come in and harass people on unemployment insurance. The victims are being blamed for problems they have not caused but of which they are the victims.

The cynicism of Canadians about politics and politicians is brought on by that kind of doubletalk, Mr. Speaker. During the campaign you say one thing, and when you are in power you say and do something else. There has to be some sort of consistency in politics and politicians. The people of Canada turfed out someone who did a lot to tear down the credibility of politicians. We had the spectacle of Pierre Trudeau running against wage controls in 1974 which had been proposed by Robert Stanfield. Once he was elected with a majority in 1974, he brought in wage controls. Another example is the 18 cent a gallon excise tax. Sure, we introduced the subamendment which brought the Clark Government down. Of course we did. They had a responsibility to govern and they flubbed it. But then the Liberals ran a whole campaign against an 18 cent a gallon excise tax, and once they were in power, the tax far exceeded 18 cents. Try 54 cents.

We hoped that we had put all that behind us when Pierre Trudeau and the Liberals were tossed out of office, but what we have here is the building anew of a dynasty of incredibility. That is not healthy for Canada and for young Canadians.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we have the example of British Columbia. Now there is another gang, the Social Credit Government. They went after the deficit. It is amazing that the phrases and the words in their Budget of 1983 are very similar to what we have heard here. I just want to quote some of the phrases, and you tell me if you have heard them before.

For example: "Unless expenditure restraint is embraced in a major way, recovery could be very sluggish. In fact, it could falter or even collapse". Another statement: "The strategy for British Columbia is clear. Only by focusing on restraint and productivity can the public and private sectors return to the basic reality that prosperity must be earned." Or: "It is essential to recognize that this is not restraint for the sake of restraint, it is restraint for recovery, for a return to earned prosperity." Or: "The Budget provides what is needed to contain the size and burden of government so the private sector will have the climate needed to ensure our fragile recovery gains momentum." That is what they were saying when they attacked the budget. Those were their phrases and sentences. It is very reminiscent of what we have heard here in the last three weeks or so.

Mr. Riis: Did it work?

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, has it worked? Here is the economic analysis of British Columbia, the 1985 outlook. It says that real output will decline by about .5 per cent this year. Retail sales fell for the third consecutive year in 1983, and they are expected to decline another .3 per cent in 1984. Although the volume of production in these industries has grown to exceed pre-recession levels, employment and profits have not. It goes on and on. We do not have to look south of the border or to Margaret Thatcher's Government. We do not have to go outside Canada; we can look right here at a home-grown Conservative-Socred Government in British Columbia. There is a hybrid right out there. As a matter of fact, this Government cannot wipe its hands clean of that Socred Government because it was members of the Ontario big blue machine that went out there to help Bill Bennett get elected in British Columbia. Pat Kinsella is one of the big blue machine cogs over here.

Mr. McDermid: You should be so lucky to have them.

Mr. Manly: Then they help these guys.

Mr. Rodriguez: Then they help the Tories across the way. Very good point.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we have seen an example of how the deficit is being attacked. We have seen it in Canada, in British Columbia. We have seen the dismal results. Why do we keep repeating the mistakes? Why do we keep doing the same things over and over which will only exacerbate unemployment in this country?

Another area of credibility deals with social programs. During the campaign, the Prime Minister said that universality of social programs was a sacred trust. He said it would not be violated. Now all of a sudden everything is under review. He is going to review the social programs of this country. And who does he hire to help the Cabinet Ministers decide on recommendations for social programs? Why, that darling of the Chatham Chamber of Commerce, Darcy McKeough.

Mr. McDermid: Great Canadian.

Mr. Rodriguez: Darcy McKeough is absolutely opposed to the universality of social programs. So we have this kind of incestuous Tory relationship. We do now know who is doing what to whom in that group. I do not know what Darcy McKeough is being paid. I am sure it is very restrained wage. But here is the hachet man from the Ontario Tories who is going to help this Government decide on the universality of social programs.

Another area covered by the Speech from the Throne and the budget statement was justice. Justice for the unemployed. To listen to these Tories across the way talk about unemployment you would think that the unemployed are just sort of numbers. They do not really care about the unemployed.

Mr. McDermid: No, no. That is the way you treat them.

Mr. Rodriguez: They do not really care, not when they bring in something so chintzy, cheap and chiselling as the financial statement which attacks programs designed to relieve unemployment in this country. As I sat in my office yesterday, I read a letter from a constituent. She writes that her letter concerns her husband. He is a hard-working man who will try any kind of work available, as we can see by the attached resumé. He is a proud man who wants to support his wife and six-month-old son. He has been trying to get a job since December, 1983 with no success. He worked for eight weeks in our community, but when the Government workers supervising the project noticed that he was 27 years old, they laid him off. He was too old for the project. He is too old for all the youth projects and too young for the middle-aged programs. What can he do? He will work at anything, anywhere, as long as the pay and benefits are reasonable. He will even go out of town or out of province for work. He has an opportunity for employment, but it will not come through until April of 1985. What should he do until then? He and his wife could manage if he could receive unemployment insurance, but he only has eight weeks of employment so he cannot even apply for that. They do not want welfare, he wants to work. His wife is working at the moment, but she will be laid off very shortly. They asked me to see what I could do to help them.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that Ministers get removed from the realities of unemployment. They do not get to see the realities of unemployment. I know they are good people at heart and if they saw this reality they would understand. However, they are mistaken. Their idea of putting people to work is by tightening the unemployment screws and whipping them so that they will manage to find jobs which do not exist.

If the Government is sincerely interested in creating employment I suggest that there are three sectors in Canada which have potential for creating much employment. First, there is the forestry industry. Second, there is the fishing industry. The third is the transportation industry. These are sectors in which the Government should be running up another deficit—I suggest a $30 billion deficit—to put people back to work. If there was a war tomorrow the Government would find another $30 billion to $50 billion. During the Second World War the Government of Canada ran a deficit of some $80 billion in 1984 dollars.

In fact, if the vast majority of Canadians could be put back to work the Government could save $76 billion. The Government could make a substantial saving by putting people back to work through stimulating the economy in those areas which provide the best opportunity for work.

The constituency I represent is a regionally disparaged area. We have been suffering this circumstance under successive Liberal and Conservative governments since Confederation. We want a better deal. We want an industrial strategy that speaks directly to the question of eliminating regional disparity. We want a government that is more concerned with devising means to bring down unemployment with goals for creating employment rather than setting targets to cut deficits. If this were done I believe that those of us in areas of the country which need an industrial strategy and employment would be much better off, by working and maintaining our dignity in our community.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, it surprises me that the Hon. Member would criticize the Liberal Government for its programs when, in 1980, his Party voted with them, as he stated in his remarks today.

Mr. Fulton: It was 1979.

Mr. St. Germain: It was 1979 but you continued in 1980. You have been bed partners with them for so long that there is no difference.

Mr. Althouse: You voted with them more than anybody else.

Mr. St. Germain: I do not know the Hon. Member's background but he advocates not only leaving the deficit alone but adding $30 billion to it.

I can tell the House where the jobs have gone. Small businesses have been destroyed by high interest rates that have been brought on by the deficit. The Hon. Member opposite is advocating more of this.

The major concern of every economist and anyone who knows anything about business is high interest rates. The Hon. Member stands in his place and advocates escalating the deficit. I would like him to explain that.

Furthermore, he said that he advocates throwing more money into job-creation programs that are merely band-aid programs. Their bed partners, the Liberals, have been doing this for four years. What has this accomplished? We have one of the highest levels of unemployment in the western world.

The Hon. Member talked about the unemployment which the people of his area are suffering. He should visit Mission-Port Moody to see what unemployment is like as a result of the devastating deficit and irresponsible government.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for giving me the opportunity to enlighten him. If he were to examine the records—I recognize he has only been here a short time—he will notice that the Conservative Party voted with the Liberals more often during that minority period, 1979 to 1980.

Second, while I am not endorsing what Ronald Reagan has done in the United States, the fact is that he increased the deficit in the United States. While our Party would never agree to increasing the deficit in defence spending, and does not applaud President Reagan for doing so, it is an example of a conservative president—the arch conservative of conservatives—in the most powerful nation in the world being unconcerned about the deficit. He went on a spending spree in defence spending. The United States has an unemployment rate of 7 per cent that we would be quite happy with here.

Mr. McDermid: That is on defence spending. Do you support that?

Mr. Rodriguez: We have not suggested throwing money at make-work projects. It has long been our belief that the central bank in this country, which is controlled by the Government, ought to set the interest rates. Interest rates should be related to the inflation rate, but we have an inflation rate of 3 per cent and an unemployment rate of 11.2 per cent. That is shameful but the Hon. Member supports that. It is no wonder that the Canadian banks are the richest in the world. We should establish an industrial strategy which deals with interest rates.

I am sure that the Hon. Member's constituency is comparable with mine. We have problems in attracting secondary industry to our area. The deterrents include transportation costs, the availability of power and the accessibility of capital. There should be an industrial strategy developed with the federal and provincial governments—the Ontario government in my case—to ensure that we have the means to attract industries to those areas which only have one industry at this time. As well, there should be deterrents to keep industries away from highly developed areas such as the Golden Horseshoe, where the environment will not be able to sustain the millions of people estimated to be living there by the year 2000. There should be a two-pronged industrial strategy.

We agree that it is necessary to lower interest rates, but it should not be left to some magical downward flow from heaven. We believe the Government has the responsibility to lower interest rates and should exercise that responsibility.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) on a short question.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I wish to welcome the Hon. Member back to the House after a long absence. I do not know if that will be completely advisable in the long run. The Hon. Member was also interested in summer employment for students. What are the prospects for next summer?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member asked that question. Nickel Belt has one major employer, International Nickel, and a minor employer, Falcon-bridge. In the past, the children of the employees of those companies looked for jobs within the company. Since those companies have been facing some difficulty, those jobs have not been available for the students. Those students need some employment in order to go to post-secondary institutions.

I was hurt and indeed angry that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has eliminated Summer Canada. It was a direct job-creation program for the summer so that students could use their creativity and energy at jobs in areas where there is only one industry. That was very important for the students, because without that employment they either have to leave the area and get the jobs which Mr. Bulloch might have, paying less than minimum wage or close to it, and they will not be able to save for their education costs, or they end up borrowing from OSAP. They have to borrow with the government being the surety on those loans. Of course, when they graduate there is no chance of a job, and then the government sends out its collectors to start collecting the money the students owe.

I find that the elimination of Summer Canada was really a low blow, not maybe to Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal, Winnipeg, Brampton—where Brampton Billy lives—but to areas that are single industry areas, for instance, to northern Ontario, eastern Canada, Newfoundland, northern parts of British Columbia and to the Prairie provinces. This Government has been cheap, chintzy, and chiselling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is one minute left. The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid).

Mr. McDermid: I will make my question and comment short, Mr. Speaker. I thought I would never say I wanted to see the former member for Nickel Belt back in this House, but after the speech the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt made today I wish she were back.

Mr. Benjamin: Would you like to know where we wish you were?

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member has been very critical of the committee that has been established by this Government. It has labour representation, and has been supported by the Canadian Federation of Labour. The committee chose its own chairman. I was surprised the Hon. Member did not mention in his speech when he criticized the committee that one of the members was from the Canadian Federation of Labour and does support it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is always good for this Government to have its tokenism. The trade union movement in this country represents some 38 per cent of the workers.

Mr. McDermid: Fifty-five per cent voted for the Tories.

Mr. Rodriguez: As I said 38 per cent of the workers in this country is unionized. How much of that committee is made up of trade unionists—how many? Two out of how many? It is two out of 20, Mr. Speaker. Who is the Hon. Member kidding? We will have a made-in-Chatham proposal.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, nonsense—the Hon. Member—

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time allocated for questions and comments has expired and we shall continue the debate with the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan).

[English]

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak during the Throne Speech debate. I would like to thank my constituents for re-electing me to this House. I can assure them I will do everything I possibly can to act in their best interests.

I would not like to speak so much about the document itself, because the Speech from the Throne is very vague on any kind of specifics. It seems the Throne Speech gave a more or less two-part scenario. First, we had the speech itself on Monday afternoon, November 5, which appeared to be a preamble for the second document, the economic and fiscal statement which was brought down November 8. It seems in the latter document we are getting a very good idea of what the Government is thinking and what its attitude is toward the Canadian people.

The Government is certainly saying at the present time that reducing the deficit is first and foremost in the Government's thinking. I do not disagree that reducing the deficit is extremely important. But, while we have to look at the economic health of the country, we cannot completely forget about the social fibre and the fibre of the Canadian people. I think in that regard we must look at what this means to low income and unemployed Canadians.

The Government has reduced the industrial and regional development plan by $175 million, and other industrial incentive programs by $25 million. This is an extremely important indication of exactly what the Government is doing. The Government seems to be an elitist government, Mr. Speaker.

As I have mentioned, reducing the deficit is important, but there are many Canadians who cannot continue in the way we expect Canadians to be able to live if this Government's policies are followed to the letter. The Government says it wants to increase employment through private sector and public job opportunities. In areas such as mine, there is no private sector, and the public sector has reduced its employment level by over 5,000 jobs in the last 10 years. What are we going to do, are we going to talk about engines for growth or what our objectives are for five years hence? What is going to happen to those people who do not have jobs now, this year, next year, let alone in five years time? There has to be concern for the individual. That is extremely important.

In my constituency the Government has cancelled a $2.1 million program which was the decentralization of the income security office, a move from Halifax to Sydney. This was an office with a potential of 75 to 85 jobs. These jobs were coming from an area in Nova Scotia which certainly needs jobs—everybody needs jobs—an area with one of the lower unemployment rates in the country, and the jobs were going to an area in my constituency which has, by Manpower's own admission, an unemployment rate of over 30 per cent. This decentralization was planned, the leasehold accommodation was renovated at a cost of $400,000, and over $1 million has already been spent on this decentralization from Halifax to Sydney. People were trained. People were taken from other jobs. People gave up other jobs. They stopped looking. They turned down other job opportunities to be part of the work force of Incomes Security that was going to be operating in the City of Sydney.

What kind of treatment is that for people? What kind of way is that to treat Canadians? Not only are these people unemployed, not only can they not get back the jobs they had, not only will they not have the other job opportunities they turned down, but, because there is the possibility lurking that decentralization will go ahead when the government changes again in four years time, the people who worked for Incomes Security in Halifax who now have other jobs will not go back to the Income Security office when it re-opens in Halifax. This means more retraining. You have to take other people and retrain them for the office when it re-opens in Halifax. What sense does that make?

There is also an unemployment factor that results. The people who would have had the jobs in Sydney, a higher unemployment area, are unemployed. Without the economic stimulus in this area which this office could provide the natural economic spin-offs are no longer present.

What is the reason for this cancellation Mr. Speaker? The reason is political, of course. There is a political ideology at the back of this particular decision. It is important to look at what is being done. This Government is denying areas, such as mine, job opportunities and the chance to develop themselves.

If there is to be growth in the private sector or in the public sector, you either have people who will voluntarily choose to locate in these sectors, or the Government has to provide directives in the placing of companies in these regions. Which will it be? If the Government is asking for jobs to be created through the public and private sectors then it has to create an economic environment which will be conducive to this happening in areas of regional disparity.

What is happening? Nothing. What has been planned in these areas is now being cancelled. Initiative for regional development is being removed by the Government. The services have to be there. Subsidies to VIA Rail are being cut back. CN Marine is a vital link in Atlantic Canada between various provinces. It has been cut back substantially. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is now saying that there will be a reduction of 300 jobs in the next five years. This will be in addition to the 1,000 jobs lost in my area alone. When the Government is asked where these 300 jobs will come from it cannot tell us. It is really promoting a name in the hat economic policy. It says that 300 jobs will be cut back but it cannot tell us from where. It is not saying that the subsidy of $6 million provided to a private sector shipper, Atlantic Container Express, to operate direct water service between Montreal and Newfoundland will not be renewed when it expires at the end of March. We have the possibility of a subsidy to a private shipper to ship between Montreal and Newfoundland at the same time as a complaint about the subsidy to CN Marine, which is higher because of the subsidy being paid to the private sector. In both cases there is a higher subsidy through this name-in-the-hat economic policy of the Department of Transport. Also the Government indicated that the capital investment program for dredging will be cancelled.

In addition to cutting back jobs and destroying potential for economic growth, which is time consuming enough, it is now saying that the people in these areas who are undergoing severe economic hardship will now be faced with a social housing budget reduced by $9.6 million and a Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program reduced by 25 per cent. These people have to maintain their homes. They are on low incomes, are unemployed, and some are senior citizens. Not only will there be reduced employment in low-income areas, but these people will be told that they will be unable to maintain their homes during the period of time when the Government says it is vehemently searching for job opportunities. Not only will there be an erosion of economic possibilities, there will also be an erosion of infrastructure and social and residential aspects in these particular areas.

What about students? The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) realizes that students need summer work, yet she cancelled the $85 million Summer Canada program. She said that would be replaced but she does not say how; she did not say by how much or when. Even now students are looking for summer jobs. The Government says that jobs have to be created through the private and public sectors. Now it is telling students in Atlantic Canada and elsewhere in the country that if their parents are not wealthy, and they cannot obtain jobs through the private and public sector, then they cannot return to college. What kind of way is that to treat university students? What kind of investment in the future of our country is that? To make it worse, the Canada Student Loans Program has been reduced by $5 million. A program must be put forward for students who are now faced with the next academic year without the prospects of the employment they enjoyed for this academic year.

The Government indicated in the economic statement that it will commit an extra $1 billion to job opportunities through the private and public sectors. At the same time it reduced the employment assistance entitlement by $200 million. It is also reducing the mobility program of CECI by $2.8 million. The Government is not only saying that Canadians cannot work, but they cannot fix their homes or maintain the infrastructures in their communities. Even if they find jobs in other parts of Canada they probably cannot go to them.

Where will people be able to turn? Where is the engine for growth about which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has been talking? The engine for growth will be rusted to the tracks if something is not done soon for people in the country who need assistance and cannot find it through the programs of the Government. Where do they turn? From where will these job opportunities come? Will they come from manufacturing? As has been previously stated, the manufacturing sector has been hard hit by the recent recession. A tremendous amount of pressure is being put on it by banks which want their loans repaid. The manufacturing sector feels that in order to compete it must modernize and bring its business more in line with the competitive practices which are prevalent internationally at the present time.

We must turn to the resource and service sectors of the country. Again this leads to the engine for growth advocated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister said that she would not make major energy decisions until she felt the world price had stabilized. What does she consider to be stability in the world price? When will we have these important decisions? Atlantic Canada is waiting daily for some news of what position she will take on offshore oil and gas. Frontier exploration is at a standstill. Up to 30 per cent of the wells involved in frontier oil and gas exploration agreements may never be drilled. The pace of exploration on Crown-owned frontier land is slowing down. Unless Ottawa sets new ground rules soon, drilling on the East Coast and in the Arctic could dry up after 1986 when the present agreement terminates. Every day we lose now means another day we will have to wait in 1987 and beyond.

The planning stage should be now. If the Minister is serious about creating employment in the oil sands, why is she not developing a policy? She can never be absolutely sure as to what the world price will be. If she is sure today, she may not be sure tomorrow. This does not mean that we have to sit back and wait until we have a perfect frozen world price. That will never come about. Something has to be done at the present time.

What about the fishery? The economic statement levies wharf fees and cuts back on other expenditures. It is already a severely hit industry on both the East Coast and West Coast. These important questions must be answered. People have to live in the meantime. People cannot wait on the basis of engines for growth and policies for the future. Of course it takes time to put projects forward, but people need jobs. They need some kind of income at the present time. Employment is not only jobs; employment is people's lives. We as a government and we as Canadians should be able to provide a hope of fulfilment through employment. That is very important.

What about young people who are unemployed today? If the position is better in five years they will be met with increased competition because new people will have come on the job market. There will be people in government who will say that they are lazy because they have not worked. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was quoted on November 9 as saying that the unemployed in this country are not looking hard enough for jobs. Does he mean that all of these people in Canada are not looking hard enough for jobs? That is ridiculous, it is callous. Something has to be done about this very serious unemployment, not only economically but from a human standpoint.

The youth of this country deserve more help than is being given to them at the present time. What I am saying does not constitute, as was mentioned by one Member to another, a voice of gloom. These are avenues which I hope the Government will explore. These are considerations I am hoping the Government will take. It is in the interest of all Canadians and all Members of Parliament, regardless of their political stripe.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise more on a comment as opposed to a question. I congratulate my colleague from Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) and to say how I agree with what he has said here in the Chamber. He made mention of the cancellation of the decentralization program which was earmarked for his constituency, but which served a greater population than that of the City of Sydney. It serviced all of industrial Cape Breton. Those individuals who were hopeful of meaningful employment with the Health and Welfare office in Sydney were amazed at the callousness and the unfairness that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) gave to them on the occasion of the economic statement by the Minister of Finance.

Members opposite have a philosophy that they are against decentralization as a tool for economic development. That is more important when you look at the poorer regions of this country. In the poorer regions, decentralization of Government services, or, indeed, services of the private sector are paramount when you are talking about economic development. This cold and callous move by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance has to be read in the light of the operative word which was contained in the Speech from the Throne. That operative word was "consultations". Then we had $4.2 billion in cuts.

In that specific cancelling of decentralization there was no consultation with the employees involved. There was no consultation with the municipal authorities in the City of Sydney. There was no consultation with the Member of Parliament who represents that area. There was no consultation with the Premier of the province or, as we say in my riding, those seven Tory silent backbenchers. There was no consultation; just a ruthless cut by the Prime Minister who has the gall to travel around this country and try to echo the sentiments of compassion and concern for the less fortunate areas of this country.

We will remember the cold, hard, ruthless way of the Prime Minister, but I would hope that Members of the Tory caucus, who are the silent ones over there, will rise to their feet and try to support a decentralization move, and to put pressure, as will my colleague and I, on the Minister of National Health and Welfare to change that position. There are Senators who are of the same political stripe as colleagues across the way who are deploring this type of action. They are really upset, as I am, and as my colleague is.

In conclusion, we will continue to raise these concerns to the Minister in the hope that he will change this regressive step. The record ought to clearly show that the Tory Party nationally, confirmed by the Premier of the province, agrees with such callous measures.

I have a question for the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys. I would like to ask him what other avenues he is going to explore to try to have this measure changed and corrected so that those jobs that were promised in a hard economic area of this country will be restored to those people.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), who feels as I do about this particular project having been cancelled, and the insensitivity and utter disregard for people in an area, who need jobs, being left completely out of the thinking of the Government when it made its decision. Before I answer the Hon. Member's question, I want to quote from the economic and fiscal statement. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said:

> I want to underline this Government's commitment not to act prematurely or with insensitivity on these issues.

Try to rationalize that quote with the action of the Government in that regard. I have spoken to the Prime Minister about my feelings toward the cancellation of this project. I have spoken with the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I have written a letter to the Prime Minister with a copy to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). I am hoping that this decision will be reversed, not in my interests or in the interests of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, but in the interests of the people of Cape Breton who need the jobs so badly. They know, as we their representatives know, that the jobs will take a long time to come about. They require a great deal of planning. The 85 jobs that were there will take a long time to replace, certainly with the programs this Government has brought forward and with the attitude of this Government in its economic and fiscal statement.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. They speak of insensitivity and they cite the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald): I would say $430 million to maintain programs that had not even been previously initiated is a definite indication that there is sensitivity on the part of this Government. That sensitivity towards the working and the unemployed will continue.

I would like the Hon. Member to explain something to this House. For the last four years his Party tried in vain to improve the plight of Canadians. The deficit has increased, unemployment has increased, and interest has risen to rates that we have never seen before in this country. The Canadian people have spoken. On September 4 they gave this House, this country, that Party and that Party a clear message. I understand that they are now in Opposition. We are going to keep them there for a long time. They have a job to do in Opposition. Why do they not give this new administration a chance? Why do they not show leadership to Canadians and to the country, showing that everybody is behind this change for which Canadians asked on September 4? They should put their shoulder behind the wheel and let's all work together. I would like a reply as to why they will not give this new administration a chance and then carry out their job in Opposition when the time is ready.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys on a one minute answer.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly prepared to give this Government a chance. There are people who are unemployed; they need jobs. They face a winter without any income. I refer to those situations where neither the husband nor wife is working and where there is no unemployment insurance, no welfare, no income of any sort. How long can we expect them to sit back and gaze gaily at their television screens while the Government cavalierly jokes about the plight of low-income and unemployed Canadians, as was done here today?

The Hon. Member mentioned a $430 million Canada Works Program, a follow-up to the program the Liberal Government has had in place for years. That program was brought in every year. It is great that this Government has brought the program in again, because it is important. Do you know what that program does, Mr. Speaker? It gives people an income. It allows people to work and have an income for themselves and their children. It also allows projects to take place in areas that are experiencing difficult economic times, it allows organizations and businesses to spend money in order to redevelop their operations and buildings which would otherwise fall apart and decay. This allows communities to stay together.

I feel sorry that the Hon. Member does not have the compassion or feeling toward ordinary Canadians that would allow him to understand the plight of these people. I would like to mention one more thing, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very quickly, please.

Mr. MacLellan: I would like to quote from the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). As reported on page 102 of Hansard, the Minister of Finance said:

> We are considering the introduction of a tax designed to ensure that the effective tax rate for high income individuals does not fall below some minimum level.

He goes on to say:

> We must also take care not to complicate the tax system unduly—

The Minister will wait and wait to tax wealthy Canadians to the extent they should pay, yet people with low incomes, fixed incomes and those who are unemployed have to suffer as this Government has dictated they must.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall now continue the debate. The Hon. Member for Chicoutimi.

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I take great pride in having been given this opportunity to speak in the House for the first time as the Member for the riding of Chicoutimi, which includes the entire Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, probably one of the worst examples of the disastrous and bankrupt administration of the former Liberal Government.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that individual Members alone cannot change the way this country is administered, but as a Member of the Progressive Conservative Party, I am convinced that this Government has the will to make very decisive changes in the way the affairs of this country are administered.

A few days ago, the Government announced to all Canadians its main political and economic objectives. On the whole, reactions have been very positive. This is because for the first time in twenty-two years a government, and in this case our new Government, has put the cards on the table so that all Canadians can understand the gravity of this country's financial situation. Our Government looks to the future, Mr. Speaker, but we cannot shake off the legacy of the past. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have highlighted the main problems facing this country. If we compare the country's finances to other budgets, be they family, municipal or provincial, the gravity of the mistakes that have been made suddenly looms very large.

Anyone who, over a period of fifteen years, manages to go from a deficit of zero to $35 billion is bound to be in serious trouble. Increasing the deficit certainly does not create jobs. Our Liberal friends opposite are claiming that budgetary cutbacks will bring about the loss of between 50,000 and 100,000 jobs. If increasing the deficit is supposed to create jobs, I wonder why the Liberals, who increased the deficit by more than 20 billion over the last four years, did not create 500,000 jobs instead of 1,500,000 unemployed? This means that the actual situation, if we look at the figures, is far more serious and should be taken far more seriously than our friends opposite have been doing during the past few weeks.

Most families or municipalities or provinces would be in a very bad way if over the last ten or twelve years, they had multiplied their debt load by ten. Most people who owed $18,000 twelve years ago and were living on a very strict budget, would be in serious trouble if twelve years later they owed $180,000. That is exactly what we are up against in this country today.

Mr. Speaker, all this illustrates the relevance of some comments by Mr. Jérôme Choquette, who for a long time was not opposed to Liberal views. Mr. Choquette said, on the basis of his considerable experience in municipal affairs, that many provincial and federal administrators would do well to get some experience in managing a municipal budget, with the obligation to explain to the community why their taxes are being raised.

One of the main reasons why the public reaction has been positive is that the government is open. The second explanation for the satisfaction expressed by the people about the reasons given by the government to justify the significant change of course we are about to make is that over the past three months, our government has heeded the overwhelming desire for change voiced on September 4. The people did not put us in office to steer the same course but to change it altogether. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for a Member to agree to get down to politics with restricted prospects. We are not being asked to tour plants and visit social organizations handing out grants for electoral purposes, no, we are being urged to act as a responsible administration and implement short-, medium- and long-term policies.

That is a challenge for a politician, but I suggest that it is the only way to come to grips with the very serious problems facing our society and Quebec, particularly the riding of Chicoutimi and the Lac-Saint-Jean area. These are not empty words: the unemployment rate in my region is not 5, 10 or 15 per cent, it is 25 per cent, nothing less. I happen to represent villages where the rate of unemployment under the Liberals in office for 22 years has soared to 50 per cent. Given such hard facts, Mr. Speaker, I simply have to make a summary analysis of the political orientations advocated in the Speech from the Throne and their impact on my riding. I intend to devote a few minutes of my speech to that aspect.

The first of the four major orientations contained in the Speech from the Throne has to do with national reconciliation. If there is one theme which matters to Quebecers, if there is one theme which is significant in a region like Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean where most people voted yes in the referendum, that theme has to be the national reconciliation. To put it in another way, everything must be done to end the polarization of the ideological debate between Quebec and Ottawa, not to mention the municipalities. We had to live through—in any case that was my personal experience as municipal administrator—conflicts sparked by endless arguments between Ottawa and Quebec, and we had a rough time because costs keep soaring when both sides cannot agree on anything. Major projects slated for my region have not been implemented for five, ten or fifteen years as a result of the ideological debate between Ottawa and Quebec. There are quite a few. How can I refrain from mentioning the case of the Saguenay National Park? We do not have eight parks in our province, only one and it is dear to us. The area I represent is confronted with enormous problems and I am convinced that all Quebecers are aware of the Saguenay National Park issue.

The Liberals ran many campaigns on this issue. They ran not one, not two, but up to five campaigns on it. Therefore, we promised during the last election campaign that we would not follow their example. Beside we were able to find grounds for agreement on everything except the Saguenay National Park issue, Mr. Speaker. For instance, there is the Alma-La Baie Highway. Highways are important in Canada, but nowhere in this country is the road network as bad as in our area. We have the shortest highway in the world: it is only five kilometers long. The problem has existed for 10 years and the federal Liberals made use of the intermunicipal disagreements to withdraw their support. In my opinion, this is not the way to promote regional progress.

Therefore we strongly believe in the theme of national reconciliation because this has cost our region a lot economically and socially, Mr. Speaker.

Another important issue related to national reconciliation is the priority that our Government will give to the Economic Summit, and I may say that economic summits are something which people in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean region understand quite well. In a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, I shall be tabling the recommendations of the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean Economic Summit at which 2,000 people worked for two years formulating recommendations and setting development priorities for our region. How could I not point out that this summit, where major areas of consensus were found, took place in the absence of the Liberal MP's from the region?

As for the second theme reflected in the Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, namely the importance of economic renewal, it is impossible not to believe that a major change in the economic management of this country is absolutely essential.

How can anyone possibly fail to realize that we simply must make a sharp turn in the economic management of this country? Obviously, Mr. Speaker, that cannot be done in three months. We keep talking about research and development because it is important. During 22 years, the Liberals invested about 1.2 per cent of the GNP in research, as compared with 2, 3 and 4 per cent in countries like Japan, Germany and many others which were convinced that research was the only way out, aware as they were that productivity and job creation are directly proportional to investments in research. The forestry industry is the most striking example of that. In the next four years, we as a government intend to make huge investments in research. Tens of thousands of jobs are related to that industry in my riding.

According to all the reports available, the forest industry will not survive unless it earmarks at least 20 per cent—not 10 per cent—of its profits for research. We are talking in terms of $200 million, not $100 million, if we do not want our competitors to widen the gap even more rapidly.

Mr. Speaker, we have a regional university back home which has the utmost difficulty in obtaining federal and provincial government grants. That is why we intend . . . I am convinced that the course set by this government will open the doors of many departments so that we will be able to assume our regional responsibilities with respect to research and job creation.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot of things about the Foreign Investment Review Agency, FIRA for short. Not so long ago, I read a report on enquiries made of foreign companies which had to deal with FIRA. Seventy-five to 80 per cent of those 67 companies, including 50 with 250 employees or more, had serious misgivings about FIRA operations. Needless to say, that is hardly conducive to Canada's economic growth.

Mr. Speaker, much has been said about the universality of social benefits allocated to poor Canadians. Judging from the over-all orientation of this government concerning pension reforms, family allowances and old age security pensions, I am sure that the government, with such a strong mandate from the people to change course, will not carry out those reforms on the back of poor Canadians. The government intends to do the opposite, Mr. Speaker. We will be in a position to recoup some of the taxpayers' money, Mr. Speaker, and I have in mind the Crown corporations which grew from 38 to 400 in 12 years. The Progressive Conservative Party is not the one claiming that the previous government did not have the political will to avoid wasteful expenditures.

Last December 12, the Auditor General of Canada, Mr. Dye, said this: The government has not shown enough political will to reduce wasteful spending. That statement was made by Canada's Auditor General, not by the Progressive Conservative Party. Indeed, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) himself said that there was a lot of waste, that much financial recuperation had to be done. We agree with them, Mr. Speaker. We have begun to do just that and we will continue to do just that.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to reopening the universality issue of our social programs, it seems that some editorialists are a lot quicker to understand the situation than some Hon. Members. I would like to quote Mr. Wagnière of La Presse. Universality is a problem which must not be glossed over; it must be debated until we can find a solution acceptable to everyone, Mr. Speaker. The philosophy of universality is attractive because of its simplicity and fairness. However in practical terms, it is often neither simple nor fair. There are probably better ways to help children and low-income families than to distribute indiscriminately the riches of the state, only to take a portion of them back through personal income tax.

Mr. Speaker, one of the last themes discussed in the throne speech concerns world peace. It might seem contradictory to support our full participation in NATO while advocating peace. In my view it is like being on a team. When you do not do your own part, no one listens to you. This is true in military matters, in social affairs as well as in politics. I therefore believe that the commitment of the Progressive Conservative party to honour its obligations to NATO is a guarantee for the future allowing us to be a responsible and worthy partner.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that in spite of the fact that all the Liberals can talk about these days is jobs, jobs, jobs, the best way to give jobs to the unemployed, and they are not simply 175,000 as in 1968, but 1.5 million because of the Liberal policies, is to seriously and strictly manage our public affairs and to explain our policies to the Canadian people. In so doing, I am convinced that there will be significant changes in the area of job creation in a short while.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the residents of the Chicoutimi riding and the entire region, as well as all Quebecers of my commitment to job creation and to all the endeavours of this Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments about the speech made by the Hon. Member? The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) for a question or a comment.

Mr. Robinson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I first want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his maiden speech in this House. He mentioned the high rate of unemployment in his constituency, which I think is over 25 per cent. How then can the Hon. Member support the decision of the Government to cut back the funds allocated to the program designed to provide summer employment for students? The Government has decided to cancel this major program entirely with the result that many more students will be unemployed. Does the Hon. Member agree with this decision?

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, as concerns the job creation programs, Hon. Members too often omit, intentionally or not, to speak about the billion dollars which will be injected into employment programs. The programs which we shall implement will certainly be innovative. To reply to the question asked by the Hon. Member, I can assure him that the student program will be replaced by another job creation program which will meet the needs of students even better than the old one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) for a supplementary.

Mr. Robinson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Is the Hon. Member in a position to assure the House and the students in his constituency that there will be that much money to replace all of last summer's jobs? That in other terms, although this important program has been terminated, it will be replaced with enough money to create the same number of jobs as last summer?

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Right Hon. Member—and this indeed would be a very good question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), and we should learn to respect each other's jurisdiction—but anyway I can assure the Hon. Member that, on the basis of the discussions held to this day and the orientation of the Minister of Employment and Immigration and all the emphasis she is putting on job creation, both for students and indeed for the heads of families who should not be ignored, I am convinced we will have an imaginative and interesting program which will generate jobs for everybody by next spring.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa for a question or comment.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey) what are his grounds for suggesting that there will be a student program, Summer Canada Project, which we in the Liberal Party had implemented, now that the Minister of Employment and Immigration herself has stated that this program was completely abolished? On what basis can he suggest that the program will be implemented?

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, clearly this Government is not anxious to create permanent jobs, and I will come back in a moment to the student aspect as referred to by the Hon. Member. When one represents a constituency with a 25 to 30 per cent unemployment rate, and even 50 to 55 per cent in certain rural communities, one realizes all the seriousness and reflection that must be applied to job creation programs. People in our area are fed up with band-aid projects. They are simply complementary programs, but we want to direct all our funds to permanent job creation. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, this would be a very pertinent question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration during tomorrow's question period, because this Government as a responsible Government and I feel certain of their as a responsible Member will not terminate the student employment programs for next spring and summer. As far as the details of the program are concerned, I would ask the Hon. Member to direct his question tomorrow to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Supplementary question. The Hon. Member for Bourassa.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that I did put the question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. That is why I wonder how he can state that there will be a summer youth employment program. Also how can one talk about band-aid programs when it comes to the Summer Youth Employment Program?

We all know that students are on holidays for two or three months and that they cannot work for more than three months. I do not think that jobs for students are a band-aid program. For students, a summer job is a steady job, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Harvey: I think that we will take this opportunity to show that most job creation programs under the Liberal government are an excellent example of the basic theme of the Throne Speech about national reconciliation. Quebec had its job-creation programs, the federal government had its own and it is always painful, Mr. Speaker, to agree about very significant programs.

For example, on what do I base my suggestion that our government will offer an interesting direction for students? I can make this kind of statement because we are a responsible government, Mr. Speaker, and I am convinced that the program which will be announced in a few months will deal not only with a single aspect of job creation but will also most certainly call for the co-operation of other levels of government. An example I have in mind is the program for the integration in the private sector. It is essential that it is carefully considered. As for details of the programs to be set up, it is obvious that I rely on the Minister of Employment and Immigration who will disclose in due time her over-all policy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North has a question.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Hon. Member who has just spoken. Naturally I and every Member of Parliament would agree with him, that permanent jobs are much better than the kind of short-term job created by programs such as Summer Canada. However, I would ask the Hon. Member if he has seen the report of the Conference Board, which was reported in the Globe and Mail today, in which it estimates that while growth in Canada reached 3.9 per cent in 1984, next year Canada's Gross National Product will increase by only eight-tenths of 1 per cent. In his province, which has so much unemployment, growth next year will be just six-tenths of 1 per cent. Unemployment will still be at 12.5 per cent. How is this going to change when the Government has announced cut-backs in expenditure of well over $2 billion? Those cut-backs will mean unemployment for thousands of Canadians who have worked for various departments and agencies on very necessary jobs created by the federal Government.

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest to my hon. friend that the parameters which are used as the basis for some economic forecasts may change considerably following a major political realignment.

Mr. Speaker, the cutbacks which have been made, I am sure . . . As a matter of fact, concerning the loss of jobs resulting from the budgetary restraint measures, I shall show in a moment that an administration should not try to create employment by simply increasing the deficit. Liberal governments over the past 20 years, but more specifically over the past five have clearly demonstrated that truism. They have multiplied the number of the unemployed by seven over the past 12 years, while the number of people on the labour market has certainly not increased sevenfold. The new government must therefore do things differently. It is going to create new full time jobs with the co-operation of the private sector, especially on the basis of research and development. That is the area where it should make its major investment effort over the next four years in its search for new orientations. I am sure that the temporary programs will remain, but I feel that we should not put the major emphasis on make-work programs. We should have an economic and political orientation directed toward permanent job creation. We must find openings for our young people in industry. It is clear that small ditch clearing jobs are all right for a while, but there is more challenging work to be done, and that is what our young people want, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the time allocated for questions and comments has now expired, we shall resume debate. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle).

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to congratulate you on your appointment and inform Hon. Members that I was very pleased to see our present Speaker elected in the riding of Verchères. I also would like to offer my congratulations to all new Members of this House and to all those who were re-elected. I believe we all share at least one objective, that of making Canada a better place to live for all Canadians and doing our best to the best of our ability.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to congratulate the Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey) who in an excellent speech showed his concern for his constituents and his grasp of the situation in his riding. Quite a few Quebec Members have come to see me, and my hon. friends opposite will understand I am very pleased to have some company in this great Party of ours which has now formed the Government of Canada. And of course, as so many newly elected Members have done, I would like to thank the people of my riding who have re-elected me for the seventh time, I imagine that occasionally they may have found the odds discouraging, but in any case, today I would like to take this opportunity to thank them for the support they have shown since 1968.

Mr. Speaker, today I would like to make a few comments on the Government's economic statement and on the Speech from the Throne. I would like to do so as objectively and as impartially as possible, because I believe that in today's context, we should not indulge in the kind of petty politics that has so often proved costly to this country.

First of all, I wish to announce before the House my unconditional support for the economic statement made by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and for the measures proposed therein. It is the aim of this Government to reduce government spending and to promote economic growth, it being understood that the latter will depend on channelling the energies of all social partners and on their co-operation. I also want to urge Hon. Members opposite to realize the need for unprecedented co-operation and objectivity if we are to truly serve the interests of a country that has placed its trust in us as its elected representatives, whatever our political allegiance.

The measures outlined by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, contain figures and statistics, but I am thinking of the human beings behind the statistics and of all Canadian citizens affected by the deficit problems Canada is facing today. We have been living too long on credit. It is time to wake up out of our pipe dreams and face reality. Mr. Speaker, there are more than a million and a half people out of work in this country. These are people who are able to work, who want to work and who do not have jobs. More than a million and a half that is the entire population of Montreal Island, half the population of Toronto Metro. There are hundreds and thousands of men and women and young people out there who have the right to work, who are entitled to share in the wealth of this vast and beautiful country of ours and for whom today there are no opportunities at all.

It always hurts to share what we have and to pay taxes when we realize how hard we have to work for the money we earn. It is quite human to want to keep our hard-earned money to ourselves. However, it is also a fact that Canadians know how to be generous when they see other people suffer. Need I recall the recent trip to Ethiopia made by our colleague, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the film sequences that showed thousands of elderly people, women and children literally starving to death in the most desperate circumstances you can imagine? All over Canada, thousands of Canadians reacted quickly to help the people of Ethiopia. Of course, the situation is different in Canada. But I want to appeal to that same spirit of generosity and sharing and co-operation, and I hope that at least we Canadians who have jobs will realize we must help our brothers, sisters, parents and friends who live in this country as well and have no jobs and no opportunity to make something of their lives, and whose incomes are below the poverty level.

Mr. Speaker, if we do not change our spending habits, if we do not get rid of the credit card attitude, there may well come a day when we will no longer be able to pay unemployment insurance to the unemployed, which would be unthinkable. It would be the greatest tragedy that could befall our country if our young people were to inherit a national debt they could never repay, with not a cent left in the Treasury.

The problems facing this country today will require a joint effort and constant co-operation on the part of business, corporations, labour, all levels of government and Members of all three political parties.

During the last twenty years, Mr. Speaker, the number of young people in Canada has increased significantly. This country has invested large sums of money in education at all levels to help our youth enter the labour market with the best and most advanced technical and professional training available to meet the challenges of the 20th and 21st centuries. Today, all we have to offer these young people is a very uncertain future. We must act now, if we want our young people to ever see the light at the end of the tunnel.

Mr. Speaker, it would be irresponsible to consider maintaining the financial commitments made by the previous Government. It would be irresponsible to allow 25 per cent of the total budget to be used to service the national debt. It would be irresponsible to think we should maintain a debt load of $190 billion, created within the last ten years, as the previous Government has done.

I think the Canadian people have decided who they want to govern them, and because of this, we must make an unprecedented effort to put Canada back on the road to prosperity. This will of course involve a number of sacrifices. And that is exactly what this government intends to do, Mr. Speaker. The responsibility of the private sector is to find employment for young people trained in our educational institutions. The responsibility of the labour force is to do its share to boost productivity. The responsibility of each one of us is to share with others, show initiative and creativity so that together we can find ways to spur the Canadian economy, create jobs and reduce the national debt. But we cannot have one without the other, Mr. Speaker. I am calling upon the spirit of co-operation which has sparked Canadians over the past century, as much in the field of housing as in the field of investment, as much as in the field of forestry as in the field of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, I know that Canadians can undertake even more joint endeavours in agriculture, reforestation, housing construction and creation of small and medium-sized businesses. I know that the various levels of government can work closer together to initiate consistent measures and coordinate their efforts without needless duplication.

Should each of us regain confidence in our capabilities and our future and, as individuals, join in the common effort of our society, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the economic and intellectual potential in this country would enable us to have an overwhelming economic revival and a significant reduction in the number of people out of work. Naturally, I repeat that it calls for co-operation and uninterrupted dialogue based on confidence and mutual respect. In that context, I am quite pleased and I have every confidence that positive results will be achieved in the forthcoming discussions the government intends to launch with business circles, labour and the various levels of government.

I have personally, and I must say with a great deal of pleasure, initiated and re-established a dialogue with the people of Mirabel and the Quebec Government for the purpose of giving back to the farmers of this area the good farmland which was taken away by a Government whose grand designs are responsible for the present economic crisis. I am pleased to see that, in spite of the terrible conditions now facing Canada, and for which we cannot be held responsible, we can still come up with a solution which will allow us, once certain adjustments are made to provide for a fairer redistribution of the financial potential of this country.

I also appreciate the fact that we can allow full indexation of taxes for 1985. However, I know as you do too, Mr. Speaker, that the private sector, business and high finance will have to agree to participate in this collective effort and to accept our invitation to work together at putting the Canadian economy back on its feet, by creating a favourable climate for investment, and by providing jobs and a brighter future for our youth.

Mr. Speaker, names like Terry Fox, Gaétan Boucher, Sylvie Bernier, Steve Fonyo and Marc Garneau arouse a lot of admiration and national pride in Canadians. There are now ten of thousands of young people between the ages of 15 and 25 who also want to develop their full potential to meet challenges and reap the fruit of excellence. Hundreds of thousands of young people need our assistance, our support, our confidence, because they are waiting for a job. This is why, Mr. Speaker, in closing, I make an appeal to the Canadian people and I urge all sectors of the economy to pool their resources and their know-how to provide better job opportunities for everyone, and particularly to make it possible for our young people to succeed.

In this context, Mr. Speaker, and I shall close with this comment, I know the House of Commons and I know the kinds of attacks to which on occasion I have been subjected in the past, but I also know that we are here essentially to discharge our duty and that, if vicious partisanship pervaded our proceedings in this House, we would severely be judged and rightly so by the public. There are no magical solutions, but those opposite are already asking us to put right within 24 hours conditions which were created over a period of 20 years.

The Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey) said earlier that a new direction has already been given to the economy involving the private sector. This does not please a certain political party I know, but with incentives and even benefits related to job creation, the private sector will achieve our purpose, and I am confident that the budget to be brought down early in 1985 will clearly indicate the type of programs that will be provided for the private sector, as it needs to know the long-term direction and economic policy of this Government. I believe that, in this way, if we take our job seriously, which we do, we can give back this country a minimum of confidence and give investors a new reason to invest and speculate; in this way we shall succeed not only in providing our senior citizens with the security they desperately need but also in giving new hope to our young people who have some at the present time. That is our commitment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

[English]

If not, we shall resume debate with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

• (1700)

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I am pleased to enter this debate Mr. Speaker. I had wondered for some time as I watched the election campaign unfold what the outcome would be. I want to congratulate all the Members who have either been elected for the first time or returned to the House of Commons. I might say something more about that in a moment. I want to congratulate you, Sir, not only on your appointment, but also for the fine way in which you have conducted yourself in the Chair—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: —and to say through you to the Speaker how pleased I am at the way he has taken on the role and established the presence he has in the House of Commons. I had no doubt, of course, that he would do that. I thought upon hearing of his appointment that there could have been no finer choice. I am happy therefore that all the feelings I had were an accurate reflection of his performance.

Like all Members I want to thank my constituents. I am not sure they knew exactly what they were doing—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: —but I want to thank them nevertheless for the overwhelming vote of confidence they gave me. I must say I was taken aback by the magnitude of the victory. I had thought perhaps it would be somewhat closer, given the tides of the time and given that the Conservatives were moving with considerable force toward government.

Mr. Blaikie: They wanted you here to keep them honest.

Mr. Deans: My colleague says they wanted me here to keep them honest. I would like to think that that was true. I am not absolutely sure they gave that a great deal of thought however.

I want to congratulate both the mover and the seconder. I have listened over a number of years in politics to speeches moving and seconding various and different debates. The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. James) and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Ms. Jacques) performed admirably in the functions that were assigned to them.

I should congratulate other Members too for the interesting way in which they have presented their views today and on other days, and on how they were able to interweave the affairs of their own constituencies with the affairs of the nation, and use as examples of their support or opposition to the Government's those measures matters which directly relate to their own constituencies.

Let me take just one brief moment to say to new Members that the role we have all taken on is of vital importance. There are times when the people of Canada wonder, I am sure, whether or not what we do makes much sense. There are times, I am positive, when they watch us on television, as my mother no doubt is doing now, and they wonder whether or not we know what we are trying to achieve or have any idea of where we are trying to get to.

I urge Members not to be disillusioned by the comments they will receive over the course of their time here. The work that we do is of vital importance on both sides of the House. The work done by the Government and by government supporters is important in the sense that it provides for the country an idea, a view, a vision, of the way in which this country should grow and develop. The work of the Opposition I venture to say is of equal importance inasmuch as we provide alternatives, alternatives to that which the Government is attempting to achieve, hopefully having in mind the sense that there has to be some co-operation and understanding.

I approach, as does my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and my colleague from Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) a new session with a sense of anticipation. I listened to the then government throughout the election campaign and watched as it floundered, worried as I am sure its members did, about the imminent loss of power. But I want to say to them that the loss of power is not necessarily a bad thing. Not withstanding my partisan views, the fact that there has been a change in government will do some credit to the system itself. It is a vital part of the political system that there be a change in government from time to time, and while I may not subscribe to the change that took place in a personal way I nevertheless subscribe to the fact that a change was inevitable, that change is necessary, and I look forward to the day when yet another change will take place, as inevitably it will. I hope in some way to be part of that change; whether in a major or a minor sense only the electors will tell.

I watched also with interest the then Leader of the Opposition as he went about the country setting out what it was he hoped to achieve. I must say, and perhaps the first partisan comment I will make, that while I listened with great care to him and understood, I think, what it was he was trying to impart by way of a vision of Canada, I am frankly disappointed in the way in which he has chosen to implement it.

My colleague, from Chicoutimi I believe, who spoke some time ago said that the Government was to be judged on the merits of its proposals. I had some questions in my mind as I listened to what he was saying, as I had on the day when the Throne Speech was read, and then on the subsequent Thursday when the budgetary statement was brought down. The first question I had was, is the Government being frank? I have come to the conclusion over the course of the last two or three weeks that although the Government speaks with a sense of openness and frankness, that the Government is attempting to impart a sense of understanding and a newness about Government involvement in the community at large, there is something sorely lacking.

This is a Government which when in Opposition was adamantly and vociferously opposed to secrecy. I must say that in the short time the Government has been in office it has embarked on a path of secrecy that I have not yet seen in my political lifetime. I worry about that. This Government is a government that asks people to have faith and says there will be need for co-operation, that there will be a need in the country for confidence. Yet this is the Government that is apparently afraid to give to the people of Canada all of the information necessary in order that they can make judgments about whether or not they want to place their confidence in this Government's measures. I warn the Government now that it cannot get away with that indefinitely. A government cannot do that indefinitely.

The people of Canada have a right to know not only what it is the Government hopes to do for them, not only what it is the Government hopes to achieve with them, but also what the cost will be. The people ultimately must decide. It is not enough to say to them, "Well, you can decide at election time". People have the right to make decisions day by day and to influence if they can the direction that the Government is taking, based on the knowledge they have been given by the Government.

If, for example, we were to tell the people of Canada what the cost would be in terms of jobs as a result of the economic policy now being pursued by the Government, setting aside the claim by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and others that somehow or other some great confidence will envelop the country and everything will turn out well, and if we were to look statistically at what the Government has proposed, analyse it carefully and then present it to the public of Canada on the one hand as what we want to do, and on the other hand what it will cost, then the public will be able to discuss with their individual Members of Parliament in Government and in the Opposition benches whether or not they believe that is the course they are prepared to follow, and whether or not they are prepared to have their individual Member of Parliament vote for or support that course of action.

I suggest if there is to be openness in government and if you want people to participate, to begin with the Government must make available to the people all of the relevant information. To this point members of the Government have not done that. On a test of frankness, I think quite bluntly that they have failed that test to this point in time. I ask them to reconsider the direction in which they are going. I also ask them to reconsider the economic direction.

However, more important at the moment, I ask the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) to consider whether or not it is incumbent upon a government to provide the information necessary for people to make learned and accurate judgments about its policy direction and the impact of it. Perhaps he could take that to caucus tomorrow. Perhaps he could urge upon Cabinet, if Cabinet deigns to show up,—perhaps he could not tell me even if he did since the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) is not likely to allow him to talk to me anyway—that that would be one of the first things it could consider.

The second point is: Has the Government been honest? We have to wonder about that. I remember not long before election day the Prime Minister saying that he would be able to create tens of thousands of jobs almost immediately after the Conservatives were elected to govern. I must confess that I doubted it, but I did not say it. It was said by the Prime Minister. Whether or not I doubted it, the Prime Minister apparently believed it to be true. Yet when he took office, did he create those jobs? No. What did he do? He set about to eliminate jobs, saying all the time that if things worked out somewhere down the road a piece, maybe things would improve and therefore maybe things would be better.

Mr. St. Germain: They have.

Mr. Deans: I hear the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody. If he were to be entirely up to date he would understand that the numbers of jobs available in the country today are fewer than the numbers of jobs available in the country on September 4. Therefore, that indicates to me that the action of the Government in total over that short period of time, if it created any jobs at all—and it has not directly, at least—or if it has had any impact at all, it has been a negative impact. Notwithstanding, the Prime Minister did not say on those days just prior to the election, when he was going around telling everyone everywhere that somehow he would be able to perform minor miracles, if not major miracles, and that individually they would find work somehow somewhere, that one of his first priorities would be to go to Ottawa and eliminate jobs. I am sure Mr. Speaker will remember that when the Prime Minister was confronted with the suggestion that he was likely to eliminate a significant number of jobs in the Public Service he denied it. I think the evidence is now in. Quite clearly his denial was based upon a false premise. In fact, the Government had a hidden agenda. Notwithstanding public pronouncements about its intentions on behalf of the unemployed, it in fact intended to cut out a certain number of jobs in the Public Service and in so doing affect detrimentally the number of support jobs in the private sector. Therefore, when we apply the test of honesty, we have to say that it comes up somewhat short.

Then we get to the question of sacred trusts. They are not like trusts at trust companies. These are sacred trusts, the kind one never breaks. They are just a part of one's soul; nothing would make one change a sacred trust. That does not seem to be the interpretation of members of the Conservative Party. Sacredness to them is an erstwhile thing; if something is sacred today, it may be sacred tomorrow but then again it may not. "After all, these things are open to interpretation", says the Prime Minister. He did say it, but then again he did not, he says. What he really meant was something else, he thinks, and then he smiles. I always thought that a sacred trust was something not to be violated.

When they said that social programs were sacred, I thought that meant that they were there to stay. Apparently for this Government it means something quite different. Taking that into account, along with its actions on the job front, maybe in the test of honesty it dropped a little short over the first two and a half to three months.

Then we have to go to the test of government understanding. Did they show the kind of compassion and understanding about which the Prime Minister so often talked, that civility which the Prime Minister told us was absolutely necessary in the dealings between government and the public?

Mr. King: It is.

Mr. Deans: I want to say again that I do wonder. They have struck fear in the hearts of many people in this land with their inability to recognize the problems which would befall those whose unemployment insurance benefits have been changed as a result of the economic statement of the Government. They have clearly indicated to those facing retirement in the not too distant future that the system will be changed in some way so that whatever planning they have done or whatever they may have anticipated may or not be there. They certainly have not come forward with jobs.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall quite clearly the questions I asked of the last government about people between the ages of 55 and 65 who were unemployed through no fault of their own and no longer qualified for unemployment insurance or welfare benefits. They found themselves at that very delicate period in their lives when they were building up equity for their retirement, faced with the real possibility, if not the probability, that they might never work again or, if they did, chances were that it would be at low-paying jobs. Thus they would not be able to contribute in the same amounts to their pension programs, and they would probably lose their pension programs because there was no portability. I remember the now Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) with tears as big as crocodile tears running down her face. She almost had to use the hem of her dress to dry herself. It was terrible; how she bled openly for those people. However, when I asked her the other day about the exact same thing; where were the jobs, where was the concern where was the Government's automatic understanding, and where was the compassion and the civility, she sat there supporting this. There will come a day, I tell you, when you will desert them. They will let you down just as they have let down so many others, the people about whom I am speaking. The Minister of Employment and Immigration knows what those people are going through. Does she come forward with a special program? Does she extend the UIC benefits? Does she have some kind of a special development program so that they can get back into the workforce, a special training program aimed directly at them and taking into account their skills and needs? No.

Mr. Manly: She talks like a Liberal.

Mr. Deans: As the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) says, she talks like a Liberal.

Mr. St. Germain: That is not nice.

Mr. Deans: That is probably true. Probably some day it will become unparliamentary in the House of Commons to say that about somebody. I realize that I have but a minute remaining.

• (1720)

The tests which the Government has to take are clearly not being met. They have not been frank. They have not been honest. They have not been understanding. They have not done those things they said they would do. They have done those things they said they would not do. They have not provided the jobs they said they would provide. They have done away with jobs that were already there. They said they were going to create new research and development, but they do away with the only effective research and development in this country. They are going to hand the country over to the foreign invester without any quid pro quo, without any demand.

In closing, this Government has failed the test. It has been a short time, and I recognize that. I cannot really say that they will not recover. I certainly hope on behalf of this country that they do. Up until now it has been a dismal showing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech?

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. Between 20 and 25 per cent of the budget of the Government of Canada is occupied with paying interest on the national debt. The equivalent figure in the United States, which the Hon. Member chooses to be critical of on many occasions, is 12 per cent. My question to the Hon. Member is what proportion would be acceptable to the Government of Canada, the Opposition and the people of Canada? What proportion of the national budget does he believe should be expended on interest on the national debt?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is a direct answer to the question. Let me try, however, by saying to the Hon. Member that he will recall that when he sat in the back row over on this side that during the years 1980, 1981 and 1982, when interest rates were rising at a very rapid rate, interest rates which incidentally contributed significantly to the size of the national debt as they contributed to the high levels of unemployment because of a decrease in purchasing power and the inability of corporate and smaller industry to maintain itself, we in this Party were arguing for a measure which would have controlled interest rates. Had he and his Party supported us instead of going off on some other tangent in support of the Liberal administration, had his Finance critic now Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson) been prepared to support us instead of supporting the former Minister of Finance, and the one previously, in trying to press the Liberal administration of the day into bringing interest rates down, the national debt would be nowhere near where it is today.

I want to say to the Hon. Member who asked the question that it is upon his shoulders that the national debt rests. It is on this Member's shoulders, along with his colleagues who were here, that the national debt rests. It was they, together with the Liberals, who refused to deal with the primary problem in Canada, that being interest rates.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. He referred to the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) being in the back row. I cannot see any difference being in the front row or in the back row. We all represent Canadians regardless of where we sit.

The Hon. Member blamed us for causing the deficit to rise. He said we are responsible for the deficit, which is related to high interest. How does he expect to reduce the deficit and control interest when he is advocating the same type of irresponsible spending that his friends to the right of him have been carrying on for the longest time? He is advocating make-work programs. He does not want to recognize the great social benefits we have already brought to the country through improving the widows' allowances and veterans pensions. The Member wants to ignore the improvements and the good things that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has done since taking on the leadership of this country.

The Hon. Member is not giving the Government a chance. He is coming totally negative, like he was before. He does not seem to have the smallest bit of positive attitude within him.

The only way we are going to get this country together again is by working together as Canadians, you and I and all Canadians. I would like the Hon. Member to elaborate on this aspect. He blames us for the spending. He blames us for the high interest rates. How would he have done it? I would also like his comment on whether he would have brought in exchange controls.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I know now how Ministers feel when they are asked 72 different questions at the same time. With regard to the interest rate problem, the Hon. Member will remember, I am sure, although he was not here for the entire last session of Parliament, that the New Democratic Party on numerous occasions attempted to move amendments to the Bank Act which would have made the banks much more responsive and responsible. We were defeated at every turn by the combined Liberal and Conservative Members on the committee. That is for starters.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that he does not have to be far-sighted. He can look within his own constituency. I defy him to tell me where things are better now than they were before the beginning of September. I defy him to tell me where the jobs are. I listened to him earlier talking about how many people were unemployed in his constituency.

It is not a question of being negative. It is a question of not being given anything to be positive about. I come to this House the most positive person you have ever met. I want to be enthusiastic about this Government. I want to be able to applaud their every measure. I want to be able to stand up and be happy in endorsing the things that the Government does. How can I endorse what the Government does when the Government has not lived up to its promises, when it has done the very opposite to the things it said it would do when it was seeking office? Am I to support the Government when it does what it said it would not do and does not do what it said it would do? I could not do that. It would not be honest of me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) on a short question and a short answer.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I have just a brief comment. I hear Members opposite talk about direct job creation programs as not being the answer to solving the unemployment problems in this country. I would not agree. I do not believe that my Party or the NDP have ever advocated that that is the sole measure to cure all of the unemployment in this country. However, I take strong objection to Members opposite who are not in favour of direct job creation programs for the unemployed.

I would ask the Hon. Member if he and his Party are committed to direct job creation programs in substantial dollars for student summer employment as well as for Canada Works. As we know, the Conservative Party both in philosophy and in terms of the fiscal measure are totally against any financial assistance for direct job creation.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, my answer to the question is quite simply yes, we are. It is obvious to anyone who has to deal with the unemployed that it is better to have a short-term job than to have no job at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Another question by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil); a short question with a short reply.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a comment directed towards the New Democratic Party in general and the Hon. Member's speech.

• (1730)

I represent a riding in which the largest employer is a foreign-owned corporation. It is owned by Stora Kopparberg and is the largest industry and major employer in the riding. It continues to irritate me to hear representatives of the New Democratic Party rise and chastise foreign investors. I cannot help but conclude that members of that Party would rather see Canadians out of work. I can assure the Hon. Member that the unemployed in my riding would much prefer to work for a foreign-owned corporation than not to work at all.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the Hon. Member that we also would rather that people worked for a foreign corporation than not work at all. However, we would also extract from the foreign corporation commitments that would be in the best interests of the country. Foreign corporations are far too often dominated by the decisions made in their home offices and do little if any research and development in Canada. There is no long-term value for this country if we do not derive long-term benefits. We do not get those benefits from many foreign corporations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, today, on the occasion of my first speech in the House, my thoughts are of course with the people of the riding of Rimouski-Témiscouata. I want to thank them for their support, and I would urge them, as I did throughout the election campaign, to take an active part in the Canadian democratic process. I would ask them and all Canadians to engage in a constant dialogue with me and other Members of the House on the issues that concern us all and the policies they would like to see adopted by this Government. Dialogue is the very essence of our system of government.

Mr. Speaker, as was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne and confirmed by my colleagues the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), we shall be facing some formidable challenges during this thirty-third Parliament. The decisions we shall be making in the years to come, or the lack of decisions, will have a significant impact on the economic future of this country and the employment opportunities available to our children.

Our economy is in a precarious state, and the Government's economic message has provided a keen and in-depth analysis of the situation. The problems are many and largely due to twenty years of Liberal rule. During those two decades, the standard of living of Canadians dropped from second to thirteenth place in the world. Our net federal debt was multiplied by ten, rising to nearly $200 billion. Our economy suffered because our predecessors saw prosperous industries as a source of revenue, and not as the key to future economic development. They drained the resources of these industries to support weaker sectors of the economy instead of dealing directly with the weaknesses themselves. This had the unfortunate result of undermining all sectors of the economy.

Twenty years of Liberal economic policy have left us with a dollar that is worth only a meager 75 cents in terms of the American dollar.

We have also inherited an unemployment rate of over 10 per cent. This disastrous legacy has been reflected in the large number of farm and business bankruptcies that have occurred during the past few years.

Mr. Speaker, the economic statement of November 8 was adamant on the subject. If we pursue the economic policies of the previous Government, an already massive national debt could very well compromise this country's future. When we realize that nearly half the money borrowed by the Government must be used to service the national debt, we have a clear understanding of the challenge awaiting this Parliament.

Unlike our predecessors and Members of the New Democratic Party, we do not believe that the deficit can be left to grow ad infinitum and that extravagant spending will resolve our economic problems. The status quo must not and cannot be maintained. The mandate we received in September is sufficiently clear on that point.

Mr. Speaker, the Throne Speech and the economic statement have shown that unlike our predecessors, we have listened carefully to Canadians and responded to their concept of what a federal government ought to do. Canadians are fed up with short-term and short-sighted economic policies. They are sick and tired of seeing job creation funds used to renovate picnic tables instead of being invested in a long-term strategy for creating permanent jobs. They have had enough of watching the federal and provincial governments fighting needlessly over their respective jurisdictions. The demagoguery and the "divide-to-conquer" mentality shown by the previous government are no longer acceptable to the Canadian people.

Last September 4, Canadians indicated that they can no longer stand cynical and unilateral initiatives which are taken to score political points while the economic issues remain unsolved. They no longer want their taxes used to finance re-election campaigns. They are tired to see that their opinions are not taken seriously and that the Liberals do not even consult them. They have had their fill of condescending policies.

Mr. Speaker, it stands to reason that we will have to make some decisions in the coming years. We will have to decide where Canada is going and what is the best way to get there. Once the government is committed to take the necessary steps to solve our economic problems, we will have to make sure that the men and women whose subsistence depends to a large extent on the generosity of the federal government are well protected.

That responsibility has been clearly acknowledged in the Speech from the Throne and in the economic statement, urging us to study the conflicts, maintain the dialogue and hold consultations before making major decisions.

[English]

I was surprised and saddened when I heard the response of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) to the Throne Speech. He saw our call for dialogue and consultation as a sign of weakness. Has he not learned? Have members of the Liberal Party not learned? Canadians will no longer tolerate having their views ignored.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Vézina: When decisions affecting the people are to be made, they want to be present at the discussion table, not out in the corridor. When programs are established which may affect their livelihood, they want to design them. Yet when calling for dialogue, consultation and co-operation, our efforts are denounced. If it is a political sin to have trust and faith in Canadians that they themselves know what is best for the country, we are truly lost.

So far, Mr. Speaker, I have been speaking to the House as member of a team which has been closely associated with the initiative taken by my colleagues the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). I commend them for their courage.

By appointing me as Minister for External Relations last September 17, the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was giving me special responsibilities in the field of international development. He was asking me, and my colleague the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher), to devote all our energies to assist the Secretary of State in the management of the vital relationship linking Canada with the rest of the world. I assume those new responsibilities, anxious to draw inspiration from the professional experience I gained within organizations concerned with regional development.

Mr. Speaker, the generosity of Canadian men and women is such that, despite the current economic difficulties, they are quite sensitive to the predicament of people in less affluent countries. The government shares their concern, as evidenced by our decision to maintain a steady growth in public development assistance over the next ten years so that it will amount to 0.7 per cent of our GNP by 1995. A number of people are blaming the government for the flexibility it is demonstrating in deferring for five years the achievement of this level of assistance by Canada. I am sure that Canadians support the government's decision. As a former French Minister of Cooperation said so aptly, one must avoid introducing too much budgetary rigidity into the financial management of the State, otherwise the sum total of sectorial commitments precludes any national policy.

During the next few months, a special Parliamentary committee will thoroughly examine the major areas of our foreign policy. I would like to share with the House some preliminary comments on international development. The problems with which the so-called Third World nations are faced are extremely serious. I refer here to natural phenomena such as drought and desertification. I refer also to the bloody wars which are being fought in a number of regions and countries. I refer to the serious problem of indebtedness which prevents these nations from buying new equipment at a time when they badly need to increase their food production. I am also thinking about the population explosion, which is a source of major concern in view of the limited increase of food production in these countries. The complexity of these problems makes us feel very humble. However, we must have every confidence in the potential of these peoples to ensure their development.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to our obligation to provide rapid assistance to nations struck by natural disasters, I cannot overemphasize the fact that our intervention must also have a long term impact. Instead of providing spectacular assistance to these countries, our challenge must be to help them to take charge of their development and to become responsible for it.

As rightly underlined in the throne speech, we need to support the effective and extremely valid humanitarian work of voluntary organizations. This is what we have already done to help the victims of the drought in Ethiopia and of desert encroachment in Africa. The drive of these voluntary organizations and of all Canadian men and women involved is fantastic and provides a guarantee of efficiency for any Government which decides to rely on them.

Mr. Speaker, I invite the Hon. Members to avoid specious issues in any future discussion on development assistance. In some circles, development assistance is too often opposed to international trade. As I was saying at a meeting of the Dakar Club in Montreal recently Canada intends to work on increasing its economic relations with Africa, while fully aware that private investments and trade relations are as significant in terms of development potential as traditional co-operation projects.

In the same context, Canada must not be ashamed to get involved in other countries in the fields it knows best. I am proud to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being 5.45 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 42(5), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith the question necessary to dispose of the main motion. Accordingly, the question is the following one. Mr. James, seconded by Ms. Jacques moves:

That the following address be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To Her Excellency the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, a Member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)) moved:

That the Address be engrossed and presented to Her Excellency the Governor General by Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

At 5.48 p.m. the House adjourned.

DISARMAMENT

UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the United Nations Disarmament Committee voted 111 to 12 for a verifiable bilateral nuclear freeze. Canada was one of the 12 that voted against the resolution. Among those countries that voted for the resolution were two NATO countries, while two other NATO countries abstained. Also voting for the resolution for the first time was Australia, which last year voted against it.

I know that last year, under the Liberal Government, Canada also voted against a similar resolution. I was personally opposed to that position at that time. The vote yesterday was unfortunate, but now is the time for all of us to rethink that position.

The Committee's decision will go to the General Assembly in about two weeks for final disposition. The Government has said that it will re-examine foreign policy. I urge it to put this matter high on its agenda and to reverse its position before the General Assembly vote.

At the present time there are 50,000 nuclear weapons in the world which have a destructive force one million times the Hiroshima bomb. Last year those weapons cost approximately $1 billion. These weapons could destroy over 800,000 people in less than one day. Now is the time to stop this race to destruction.

REQUEST FOR ABOLITION OF CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE TOLLS

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign, the newly elected Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) promised in his campaign brochures and advertisements to abolish tolls on the Champlain Bridge, and he made this a big issue. On "Face à face" on CKVL, the Hon. Member also mentioned that this promise had the blessing of his party and his leader. But now, Mr. Speaker, it is a different story. It must have been a shock to the newly elected Member for La Prairie on Tuesday, when the Minister of State (Transport) (Mr. Bouchard) answered that he had no intention of doing away with the tolls in the near future. I suppose from now on the Hon. Member will perhaps refrain from asking questions in the House without first knowing the answer. Meanwhile, the people in Brossard, La Prairie and on the South Shore are still paying to cross the Champlain Bridge, despite all the promises made by the Member for La Prairie and his party.

I therefore want to ask that tolls on the Champlain Bridge be immediately removed as promised by the Conservative Member for La Prairie and otherwise, that the new Member for La Prairie resign, Mr. Speaker.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

CALL FOR EARLY DEBATE

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, as a new Member of Parliament I rise for the first time today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gervais: I had not planned to make a statement today. As a matter of fact it is not a happy occasion for me, due to the nature of the topic. I refer to the nationally tragic incident which happened in my riding last Friday, more particularly in my home town. Of course I refer to the senseless shooting of OPP Officer Vern Miller of the Matheson detachment.

During the weekend I was inundated with calls from constituents in my riding expressing their view that capital punishment should be reintroduced in the House as soon as possible. They mentioned that, through polls and surveys, an overwhelming majority of Canadians wish the capital punishment issue to be brought before the House. On their behalf, and on behalf of all Canadians, the majority of Canadians who wish capital punishment to be reintroduced, I urge the Government to place it on its agenda as soon as possible for debate and a free vote.

CALL FOR REINSTITUTION OF 1986 ENUMERATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Romans recognized even in ancient times the indispensable requirement for a census in the determination of public policy. Of course the census counts people, but it appears that to this Government people do not count, at least not until 1991, in view of the announced cancellation of the 1986 census. This action has escaped critical notice until now.

Now we have the Royal Commission Report on Equality in Employment. Its recommendations for legislated employment equity indicate a critical requirement not only for census data but for an expanded data base respecting numbers and employment patterns for women, the disabled, native people, and visible minorities.

Indeed the report is complex and will require time for implementation. However, the Government has an easy way of quickly signalling its commitment to the achievement of employment equity—it must reconsider its cancellation of the 1986 census and implement it with an expanded data base, in light of the additional statistical information necessary for the effective implementation of the Abella report.

This is a step that must be taken. Otherwise, it will again reinforce the impression of the Government that social justice or sacred trusts should not stand in the way of prosperity for the privileged few.

TOURISM

IMPACT OF GOVERNMENT ACTIONS ON INDUSTRY IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the recent government financial statement contains several changes which are of great concern to the tourism industry on Prince Edward Island, from increases to ferry rates, to increases to the cost of entering and using facilities in our national park, to increases in gasoline prices. The entire industry will in some way be affected.

Applications from the tourism industry for assistance under IRDP will no longer be accepted by DRIE. Instead, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) has indicated that tourism projects will be dealt with through instruments such as federal-provincial agreements. I trust the Minister has taken steps to ensure that the tourism industry will be fully represented in the months ahead while the transition from IRDP to the new and as of yet unnamed program is introduced.

It is my sincere hope that the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan), as an islander with a great interest in the future of the industry, has brought to the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, and the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), the dire implications that these changes will have on the Prince Edward Island tourism industry, not to mention on islanders themselves.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

DEMAND FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) if she intended to initiate a parliamentary inquiry into all aspects of the nuclear industry as the Progressive Conservative Government of 1979 intended to undertake. In her response the Minister conveyed two impressions which should be cause for concern on the part of the clear majority of Canadians who are concerned about any further investment in nuclear energy, whether their concern arises from the increasing cost of this energy option, the environmental hazard it poses, or the connection between nuclear power and the nuclear arms race.

The Minister said that she would have to consult with AECL to see if it thought an inquiry would be useful. This is like asking the Mafia if it thinks an investigation into organized crime would be useful. Then she made sense of this incredible answer by commenting that an inquiry might not be in order because, after all, it might only be a problem of marketing. She appears unable to ask the question whether the product should in fact be for sale either here or abroad. In this she has revealed just how uncritical an approach the Conservatives may be taking toward this issue—reminiscent of the Liberals.

I call on the Government to initiate an inquiry into the nuclear industry in consultation with groups like the Canadian Coalition for Nuclear Responsibility, and to reverse the cuts in environmental services, conservation, and alternative energy. Let us have some evidence that we are on the eve of 1985 and not at the beginning of some terrible flashback to 1955.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY—REACTION TO ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian petrochemical industry was to some extent pleased with the financial statement made in the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8. The announcement that the petroleum compensation charge, PCC, would not be increased on crude oil used as a feedstock for the production of petrochemicals, was one the industry had been waiting to hear from the new Government. It has demonstrated the intent of this Government to aid, without resorting to financial bail-outs, an industry that has suffered under an unfair tax burden for years. The PCC will, however, be increased on this industry's crude oil consumption for energy requirements.

The recent announcement by the Government of the Province of Alberta to the effect that ethylene producers there would receive bridge financing amounting to 25 per cent of their tax burden to relieve the fiscal problems of our gas based Canadian petrochemical industry, is an indication that Alberta felt it must take the initiative while waiting for federal government energy policy action. I submit this action by Alberta has swung the pendulum over to the gas-based petrochemical side of the arc and something must be done to equalize the situation.

The Ontario oil-based companies, which are now paying more for their crude oil used for energy requirements, can ill afford any increase in their tax loads. I must serve the Government with notice that the situation is, for some, fast becoming intolerable. I submit the job is not nearly finished.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

POSTPONEMENT OF MEMBERSHIP INCREASE URGED

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise to request that our new Government curtail the cost of government. In his speech to the House on November 8 the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) set Canada on a new course of restraint and review, urging Members to find ways not only to reduce the federal deficit but, in his words, "to reduce the burden of unnecessary government". Surely my colleagues in this House will agree that Members of Parliament are effective legislators and problem solvers and that they perform a valuable service to our nation, but how many members are enough? Two hundred and eleven? Two hundred and eighty-two?

The Canadian Electoral Boundaries Commission, under the authority of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, will soon recommend that our number grow to 310, five new members in British Columbia alone.

Members of Parliament perform a valuable service, Mr. Speaker, but we are expensive. Now that my Government has shown the lead by reducing the salaries of senior Ministers, I repectfully ask that my Government postpone the readjustment of electoral boundaries until the economy of our nation improves. The savings to the treasury would total in the millions.

Oral Questions

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION ADMINISTRATION

DELAY IN LAND TITLE TRANSFERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, a number of Canadians have expressed concern at delays they have encountered in securing expeditious transfer of title to land from the Crown, particularly in their dealings with the PFRA. The PFRA during the 1930s and 1940s constructed a number of water storage reservoirs and irrigation projects which it continues to operate. Some years ago the sale of land by Canada within the irrigation projects commenced at the individual lessee's request. Agreements for sale were made, and now, when the purchaser wants to acquire actual title to the land, considerable problems arise.

The purchaser requests letters patent and makes final payment for the land. From that point forward the request follows a complex series of procedures involving surveys, searches, translation, ministerial approval, Privy Council approval, preparation of documents by the Department of Justice, reviews by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and land titles office processing.

Transfer of title requires up to 20 months following the existing procedures. These excessive time delays cause considerable hardship to those individuals involved. They ask the Ministers to review this currently untenable situation with a view to streamlining the process.

ABELLA REPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Report on Equality and Employment prepared by the Commission headed by Judge Rosalie Abella says clearly that equal pay for work of equal value is an essential part of employment equity and contract compliance. My question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. During the Party Leaders' debate in the course of the election campaign, the Prime Minister said that not only he supported the principle of equal pay for work of equal value, but he added, and I quote: "I am prepared to go even further." My question is: Has he already given some very clear directives to his ministers, to use his own words, for starting the job classification process, as promised during the election campaign?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yes, I have initiated the process. Meanwhile, I am reading and analysing Judge Abella's very impressive and timely report, and I expect to be able to give the Hon. Member further details in the near future.

[English]

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister has had an opportunity to digest Judge Abella's report, and when he meets his provincial colleagues at the First Ministers' meeting on St. Valentine's Day, will he urge, particularly his Conservative colleagues, to legislate equal pay for work of equal value, and to legislate affirmative action or, as Judge Abella puts it, employment equity for women, visible minorities, the disabled, and native peoples, or will he seek only, in the words of the Throne Speech, to further define the matter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I urge not only my Conservative colleagues. This is not a partisan issue. Fairness for women is something that concerns us all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We plan to seek the support and guidance of members of the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party for programs that are designed to do what is long overdue and something which, dismayingly, and I say this with regret was not done in 20 long Liberal years, and that is to bring about a degree of equality for women in this country. That is what we are going to try to do.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I would think that the Liberal record on women's issues stands for itself as an example to us all.

COMPOSITION OF BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on May 25 in Toronto, the Prime Minister promised to double the representation of women on federal boards and commissions. There happen to be no women on the Deputy Prime Minister's cost-cutting advisory board, no women on the CBC chopping block committee, no women on the new VIA Rail advisory committee, and no women among the new CDIC or fisheries projects. I believe the Prime Minister got off to a good start by nominating eight women as cabinet Ministers. Would he talk to the cabinet Ministers and ask them to follow his example when appointing people to boards and commissions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know of the Right Hon. Member's very substantial degree of concern and record of accomplishment in this area. I would like to assure him, because it is not a partisan issue, that we shall be giving the highest priority to ensuring, in a way that I hope meets with his agreement, the proper and fair representation of women throughout the Government of Canada. That may, and indeed will, require legislative considerations that we will bring forward. At all times, I know that the principal objective will be fairness and economic equality for women and, as Judge Abella points out, for other groups in our society as well.

ENFORCEMENT MECHANISM SUGGESTION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, last night on the television show The Journal, the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration announced with fanfare and pride that the commitment to equal pay appeared for the first time in the Throne Speech of 1984. I would like to bring to her attention that equal pay has been part of the Canadian law since 1978. The issue now is how to make that principle work. I am pleased that the Prime Minister calls it a high priority.

• (1420)

The Minister stated on The Journal that she would have a lot of trouble with enforcement, and that further studies would have to be undertaken. Does the Minister agree with Judge Abella that the enforcement mechanism is necessary? Does she so agree?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member and the House that no Government heretofore ever had the courage to incorporate the phrase "equal pay for work of equal value" in a Throne Speech. I am glad to inform her of that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there are 117 recommendations in the report. It is a very valuable report, and I hope that every Member will take the opportunity to read it. One of the most valuable parts of the report is the introduction of the term "employment equity" into the language, so that we do indeed know about what we are talking about. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that all of the recommendations will be considered by Cabinet. Then we will decide whether legislation will be necessary to bring about the desired end.

STUDY OF REPORT

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I believe I heard the Prime Minister allude to legislation. However, there is a difference between law and rhetoric. Just apply the law.

Could the Minister inform the House and women in Canada today which department is analysing the Abella Report and when appropriate legislation will be introduced in this House, covering the areas of affirmative action, contract compliance, training and equality before the law?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my Department, the Department of Employment and Immigration, is primarily responsible for examining the report's recommendations. The recommendations are later examined by the whole Cabinet, while any decisions are made by the entire Cabinet.

DISARMAMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last night the Political Affairs Committee at the United Nations took a very important vote on the profoundly important question of nuclear disarmament. A motion submitted by Sweden and Mexico called for a mutual, verifiable, balanced nuclear freeze applicable both to the Soviet Union and to the United States. That motion was carried overwhelmingly by a vote of 111 to 12. I want to ask the Prime Minister why the Government of Canada joined the minority of only 12 nations in the world to vote against that important resolution.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the abstention was taken by Canada at the United Nations, as it has been on previous occasions by ambassadors representing Canada, because we believe that if the world is to make progress toward a reduction of nuclear arms—as this Government is dedicated to helping the world do—we must seek effective actions which persuade the superpowers. It is our judgment, reflected by Canada's vote at the United Nations, that a declaration on the freeze would not have advanced the cause of reducing nuclear armament.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs offered some interesting rhetoric, but he did not give us a single reason which led him to reach that conclusion.

VERIFIABLE NUCLEAR FREEZE PROPOSAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Since the Prime Minister, who expressed concern about disarmament during the election campaign, has now decided not to deal with the question, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs this. Considering that the House of Representatives in the United States, and countries as different as Australia and Greece, all support a mutual, verifiable nuclear freeze which has to be accepted both by the United States and the Soviet Union before it becomes operative, why, in Heaven's name, could not a Government, which was elected in Canada in part to produce some change in international affairs, support initiatives already taken by people outside of our country who are working seriously—not simply rhetorically—toward nuclear disarmament?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of the gravest importance. I believe that is understood by all Members on both sides of the House. The Leader of the New Democratic Party asks why we did not support initiatives taken in the past by other countries. The simple reality is, sadly, that those other initiatives have not worked. Adding Canada's voice to the motion would have had the effect of causing tensions within the Alliance. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization is the instrument by which we have the greatest opportunity to bring the most influence to bear upon the United States, and an action of that kind would have been counterproductive, in our view.

Mr. Broadbent: The Government will clearly have a lot of influence with President Reagan if it agrees with everything he does. That is not influence, that is supine acquiescence to what the United States wants to do.

REASONS FOR CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us why it is that Walter Mondale, a candidate for the Presidency of the United States—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I hear some of the Minister's back-benchers, 61 of whom called for a nuclear freeze during the election campaign, that is, 61 of the Members over there. Many Canadians, including many of his own back-benchers; Walter Mondale in the United States; members of NATO, such as Greece; members of the regional equivalent of NATO in Southeast Asia, such as Australia, could all stand up on this profoundly important question of nuclear disarmament and show a little initiative, show a little leadership. Would the Minister tell us why Canada could not?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party is asking me why other countries voted as they did. That question is better put to them. The question I can answer is why Canada voted as we did. We are seeking every practical means to reduce the danger of nuclear armaments—

Mr. Deans: But what?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —and of nuclear conflict in the world. I am asked to name one. One means is to use the strong and privileged position which Canada enjoys as an influential and respected member of NATO, and to use that position—

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Allan MacEachen. Thank you very much.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —by maintaining the strength of the Alliance, which would not have been maintained and, indeed, might have been weakened had we cast our vote in a different way. We voted at the United Nations in a way in which we solemnly believe will move the world away from the danger of nuclear war.

THE CENSUS

JUSTIFICATION FOR CANCELLATION OF 1986 CENSUS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services.

Since, according to the Abella report it is imperative every five years to collect census data on the participation of target groups to the work force, and since the 1986 census would have provided the new data required for any affirmative action program concerning women, native people and the disabled, how can the Minister now justify the cancellation of the 1986 census?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the reasons for the decision the Government took were outlined by my colleague, the Minister of Finance. They have to do with the terrible financial situation of the Government. As to the question of whether Statistics Canada can and will provide the data necessary for government Departments to make the decisions which are so necessary in order to tackle the problems alluded to by the Hon. Member, I can tell him that he can be well assured that Statistics Canada will, in fact, be in a position to gather this data. It has a variety of techniques. It has very able professionals—

Mr. Axworthy: They have no work to do.

Mr. Andre: —who will ensure that we have adequate data to accomplish these goals.

REQUEST THAT CANCELLATION BE RESCINDED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, how can the Government be serious about affirmative action when it wants to destroy the data base on which such programs are established? Will the Minister stand up in this House and tell those big bullies in front of him, Erik the Dreaded, and Mike the Knife, to go and do their cutting elsewhere and keep their hands out of the census?

• (1430)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that his concern about the data that Statistics Canada produces for Government and others in our society is shared by myself and my colleagues, the Minister of Finance and the Deputy Prime Minister, indeed by everyone in the Government. We will be doing everything necessary to ensure that adequate data are available.

ABELLA REPORT—IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and also relates to the Abella Commission report on employment equity, which report I think makes tremendous sense concerning the direction in which we should be going. The American experience also shows that it makes economic sense in terms of productivity in that country. Therefore, in view of the fact that last night the Minister said she agreed in principle with this report but had some problems concerning the enforcement agency, I wonder, if instead of leaving it to voluntary approaches, as the Liberal Government did in years gone by, will she now make a commitment to this House that she will implement some of the recommendations in the report, and tell us when.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that, with 117 different recommendations, it would be difficult at this point to single out those that will be implemented, or when. Having said that, I assure the Hon. Member that, yes, we will be implementing certain of the recommendations just as quickly as we can.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said on August 15, I believe it was, during the debate on women's issues, that it was inconceivable that a Government accept a principle but not implement that principle. In light of that, will the Minister take the Prime Minister's advice and assure this House that she will be implementing the major recommendations in the Abella Commission report within the next three or four months?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the report that Judge Abella handed down is in two major sections. The first half of it makes a very fair and compelling case for employment equity, as she calls it. The second part of the report talks about the various ways in which this might be implemented. She makes a number of recommendations and those are the recommendations we will be studying. She does not say: "This is the way, and the only way". She makes a number of recommendations. It will take a bit of time for Cabinet to look at these and decide which we think are the best methods of implementation. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that will be done very quickly.

FINANCE

RELIEF SOUGHT FOR LOW-YIELDING ANNUITY HOLDERS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, the same question I have put to various Ministers of Finance for the last seven or eight years, always with negative results. In the past people purchases federal government annuities in good faith, and these annuities are now paying a very low return. Will the Minister take the necessary measures to introduce some relief for these annuity holders either by increasing the rate of return, as recommended by a committee back in 1976, or failing that, take action to redeem these low-yielding annuities, some of which were purchased 25 to 30 years ago and more, redeem them at full face value and thus eliminate this unfortunate problem once and for all?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of the Hon. Member's concern about the returns paid on these annuities. I know he is aware that the annuities were originally a contract between the Government and the purchasers, so that is a consideration which has to be taken into account. However, I assure him that I will look into the matter as I know he is very concerned and has expressed these points of view over a number of years, and I will get back to him.

HIBERNIA OIL FIELD ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STUDY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. There is a great deal of concern in the oil and gas industry about the federal Government's agreement to the Province of Newfoundland's request to postpone release of the environmental impact study on Hibernia production prepared by Mobil Oil. Can the Prime Minister confirm that the Canada oil and gas lands administration has in fact received a copy of this study?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that is the case. Were the Minister here she might be able to provide the Hon. Member with more detailed information. That was the advice I received, but I will check into it and convey a more detailed answer to him.

REQUEST THAT STUDY BE TABLED

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that they have a copy of the study. If that is so, will the Prime Minister undertake to obtain a copy of this study and table it in the House?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, I will make that undertaking on behalf of the Minister.

ABELLA REPORT—CONTRACT COMPLIANCE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration on the very important subject of contract compliance. The Liberal Government's voluntary approach to affirmative action in the private sector failed dismally, with only 71 out of 1,400 companies making any progress in this area. Does the Minister intend to carry on the Liberal approach or will she commit herself, as the Prime Minister committed himself, to recommend contract compliance to Cabinet immediately?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows, as I do, that the Prime Minister's statement was to the effect that we would insist that companies providing services to the federal Government create and implement programs and timetables for attracting, training, and advancing women. That would be applied to other groups mentioned by the Abella report as well. The recommendations made by Judge Abella will help us to bring about implementation of that statement by the Prime Minister.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister really is letting women down who I think want action now.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: Will the Minister immediately carry out what she is entitled to do under the Human Rights Act? Will she move now on the whole question of implementing employment equity, as she can under the Human Rights Act?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that I am not letting women down, I do not intend to let women down, and I will never be in a position where I am accused of letting women down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

RECOMMENDATIONS RELATING TO VISIBLE MINORITIES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. The Abella Commission identified and declared war on the many economic inequalities facing visible minorities. It was forcefully stated that the war must start with an attack on racism. This and other courageous recommendations were the product of long consultations with numerous visible minority groups across Canada. They deserve and demand government action. My question is very simple. Will the Minister assure this House that he will pursue, without delay, implementation and advocacy of those recommendations in the report relating to visible minorities in Canada?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the fundamental thrust of the Abella report coincides in a great many ways with the report Equality Now!, an all-party committee report, one with which most Members of this House agree. This Government, as indicated by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immmigration, is looking at the recommendations. Multicultural Canada is also looking at the recomendations. We intend to act just as quickly as we can on many of the recommendations which directly affect the visible minority community in our country.

Mr. Marchi: I hope someone starts to act rather than just to look.

DISCRIMINATION IN TAXI INDUSTRY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Transport. He is surely aware of the serious racial discrimination practices against blacks, East Indians, and Haitians in the Canadian taxi industry. Since his Department—

Mr. Speaker: No. With great respect, the Member asked his first question with regard to the Abella Report. This is hardly a supplementary to that question. I appreciate the Member's concern, but I must establish does the Member have a supplementary question to his question with regard to the Abella report.

Mr. Marchi: I respect your decision, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of Multiculturalism is surely aware of the discrimination against East Indians, Asians, and members of the Haitian community, in the taxi industry in this country. Will he petition the Minister of Transport to revoke any taxi licences of companies that are shown to be practising racial discrimination and are operating out of airports across the country? Will he, in fact, bring in new guidelines to ensure that such discrimination employment practices will stop in the future?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that I am in touch with my colleague and good friend, the Minister of Transport, on literally a daily basis. We will be discussing his concerns.

POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It also deals with the Abella report. Yesterday Judge Abella pointed out that among the groups she was dealing with, disabled persons and visible minorities had suffered from systematic discrimination in the past. There are various possibilities for redressing that situation. What possibility does the Minister see for taking early action on this, beyond the matter of contract compliance?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I explained, there are some 117 recommendations in the Abella report. We will be studying them as a Cabinet and as individual Ministers to see which ones can be proceeded with most quickly.

LINGUISTIC DIFFICULTIES OF IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, what plans does the Minister have for those members of visible minorities who are recent immigrants to Canada and have difficulty speaking English or French? What plans does she have for expanding instruction in English or French, depending on where the persons are resident, in order to facilitate entry into the workforce by these members of the visible minorities?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that this question should more properly be directed to the Secretary of State with whom language requirements really lie.

Nevertheless, there are two areas in which this could be addressed. One is in making changes to the agreements under the National Training Act. Those will be on the agenda for the discussions which will take place in the forthcoming year. The other is with regard to ISAP, the Immigrant Settlement Adaptation Program, in my Department. I am sure that the Hon. Member will have noticed that the budget for that was increased by half a million dollars just the other day.

HIGHWAYS

YELLOWHEAD HIGHWAY—REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION AS NATIONAL HIGHWAY

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Yellowhead Highway which extends from Winnipeg, Manitoba, to Kamloops, British Columbia, is the busiest highway route through the Province of Saskatchewan. The volume of traffic on that highway is even greater than that on the Trans-Canada Highway. With increased traffic, there is a critical need for twin-laning of this highway.

Mr. Fulton: It goes to Prince Rupert.

Mr. Gormley: In light of this, is the minsiter planning to designate the Yellowhead Highway as a national highway route? Will there be federal assistance for twin-laning of this particular highway?

An Hon. Member: It goes to Prince Rupert. Tell him where it goes.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my NDP friends across the way wanted to remind the House that this route goes to Prince Rupert as well.

I share the views of the Hon. Member. The Yellowhead is indeed a very important artery. I also agree that it is a highway which carries a tremendous amount of traffic, and a mixture of traffic.

The Member will probably be aware that in 1979 the Government undertook a cost-sharing arrangement with the provinces whereby the federal Government and the provinces would have shared in the upgrading of the Yellowhead. Unfortunately the Liberal Government chose to cancel that particular agreement. At the present time there is not in existence a provincial-federal highway agreement. The highway agreements which are in place are currently under review. I am sure that I will have an opportunity to explore this issue with the Yellowhead Highway Association.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications, but first I would like to congratulate him on his appointment. My question relates to drastic cuts imposed on some of Canada's cultural organizations, and I refer of course to the CBC which will have to manage with $75 million less, but also to other entities such as the National Arts Centre, the CRTC and the Canada Council. Many people who work in that field are concerned and want to know whether those cuts apply only to fiscal year 1985-86, or whether they will be maintained throughout the Progressive Conservative mandate. Would the Minister therefore assure the House that the reduced budgets for fiscal year 1985-86 will not be the basis for the preparation of those cultural organizations' budgets in subsequent years? Can the Minister answer that question?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the budgetary cutbacks, which have prompted a review of certain bureaucratic practices so as to enable us to allocate more funds to creation and production, will of course be a permanent feature.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am experiencing some difficulty because the Hon. Member has put two questions at the same time. They ought to be put separately. For the time being, the Hon. Member may put a supplementary. However, Hon. Members should indeed keep in mind the fact that they are not allowed to ask two different questions in the first question and then rise for a supplementary. This time, the Chair will allow a supplementary question.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I appreciate your tolerance, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—IMPACT OF CUT-BACKS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): My supplementary question is for the same Minister. It appears that the CBC cuts would affect mainly the outlying areas. In other words, the hardest hit would be the regions of this country. Is the Minister able to tell us whether he will be ready to intervene to ensure that regional programming and jobs in far away regions of the country will be protected when the axe falls?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed by the CBC management that they have issued a denial today concerning press reports alleging that decisions have been made as to how they will cut their budget for the year 1985-86. The CBC President himself has stated that no decision has yet been made and that the results of that exercise will not be known until the Department of Communications and the CBC have had consultations on the impact of budget cuts on the corporation's services.

The management has also indicated that, at head office as well as at the Montreal and Toronto network headquarters and in the regions, various scenarios are being studied to find a way to reduce the CBC budget by $75 million in 1985-86. As announced in the House, the priority in the decision-making process is to eliminate the less productive expenditures first and to maintain program services as much as possible.

ALLEGED ABUSE BY OLDER WORKERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. When the Minister was in the Opposition she developed a reputation for being concerned about the aged and the unemployed. Indeed, she became known as a red Tory.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, in light of a recent report issued by the Minister's Department which accuses 55 to 65-year olds of ripping off the UIC system, is the Minister prepared to table in this House the impact studies which show where the so-called 55 to 65 year-old rip-off artists are located? Is she prepared to table the employment profile showing the jobs that are available to older Canadians?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that that report was given to the former Government last June, and it is not a report I have seen. However, I do want to tell the Hon. Member that my concern for older unemployed Canadians still exists. I do want him to know that it is because of that that we have already allocated $1 billion for new job opportunities and human resource development which will apply to older workers as well as to others in our system.

Mr. Deans: Come on, Flora, that is nonsense.

Miss MacDonald: We have as well, I may say, made the announcement concerning spouses—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do regret to interrupt the Minister but I think she has answered the question.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is a sad day that this Minister has changed colour, Mr. Speaker. She is now blue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to put another question directly to the Minister, Mr. Speaker. I think Sinc has cut off her oxygen.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): To the Minister through you, Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact that indeed this is a well orchestrated campaign based on alleged abuse of the plan, to prepare and condition Canadians for amendments aimed at punishing older Canadians who are unemployed, when in fact the main purpose of these future amendments will be to shift the financial burden for the program from the Government to the employer-employee section of the plan?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker. That is not a fact.

STIPULATED ENTRY LEVELS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It was announced this week that between 85,000 and 90,000 immigrants would be admitted to Canada in 1985. This represents a decrease since 1980 of about 40 per cent. In excess of 50,000 people leave Canada each year and, therefore, the net increase in population in 1985 is going to be very modest. Part of the Government's success in achieving an economic renewal in this country will be to increase significantly the number of immigrants at the right point of time in the economic recovery cycle. I would like to emphasize the right point of time.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Attewell: Would the Minister advise this House when she would predict that a reversal of the current downward trend in immigration would occur, so that we would be strategically poised to capitalize on the recovery?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the number of immigrants to Canada in 1983, and again this year 1984, is below the 90,000 level. Indeed, consultations that led up to setting the levels for 1985 were begun last April, long before this Government came to office. In other words, Sir, we will have had three years in a row where the immigration levels are below 90,000. That is a great concern to me, and it is for that reason that I plan to have a review of immigration policy, including the setting of the immigration levels. At that time we will be able to review, as well, the restrictions imposed by the former Government.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHY PENSION REVIEW COMMITTEE DISSOLVED

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

First of all, I want to congratulate him on his recent appointment, and I hope that he will assume his responsibilities as dutifully as his predecessors.

Last June, a special committee chaired by Judge Marin was established to study the provisions of the Pension Act. This Committee was supposed to report within six months and suggest ways to improve the services guaranteed by the Veterans Act. Everyone will recall that one of the better reports, the Wood Report—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Isabelle: My question is as follows, Mr. Speaker.

Did the Minister consult the Royal Canadian Legion and the National Veterans Council before cancelling the Special Committee and can he also tell us his reasons for doing so?

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: — I would like to thank my colleagues on all sides of the House for their generous gesture, and to tell them I am so glad the Hon. Member has asked me this question because I was beginning to feel like a singer who went to a party, took his music, and nobody asked him to sing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Play it again, George.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am on the verge of becoming a conductor who has his orchestra out of control.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer very much indeed for his congratulations on my appointment, and I would like to congratulate him—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: —on being appointed the opposition critic for the most important Department in government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: In answer to the Hon. Member's question, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: What was the question again? Repeat the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Don't rush into it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Please answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: I cancelled this commission, Mr. Speaker, because I calculated, judging by the number of organizations and individuals who had indicated a desire to be heard by the commission, that it would take at least six months for these presentations to be heard all across Canada, and a further three months for the report to be written. I was not willing to wait nine months to receive this very important information, so I wrote a personal letter to the head of each veterans' organization that had indicated a desire to be heard, and to every individual who indicated a desire to be heard by the commission, and asked them to write to me direct exactly what they intended to present to the commission. These presentations have been coming in at a very good rate. They are being studied. They are being assessed, and I can assure the Hon. Member and Members of the House that where action is called for that action will be taken promptly, generously, and courteously.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT 1985 ENTRY LEVEL BE INCREASED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration a question which is supplementary to the answer that she gave a moment ago about the immigration level for 1985. She knows that she has the authority to set that level. In view of the economic recovery which the Government confidently predicts, could not the level be set for the coming year at 100,000, bearing in mind the number of divided families who want to be re-united in Canada, and bearing in mind the important contribution that immigrants make as consumers and as workers in our country? Let us not try to spread the responsibility to the provinces. It is her job to set the levels. Why can they not be at 100,000?

• (1500)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that family reunification, as he mentioned, remains a number one priority for people coming to this country. As many people as are eligible under that category can come, so that means it can raise the levels above 90,000 to 100,000 during the year. I also want him to acknowledge, if he would, that we took steps when announcing these levels so that the number of refugees to this country will be increased next year as well.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—TRANSPORT BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford) (for Mr. Ouellet) moved:

That this House condemn the Government for its failure to carry out its election promises in the field of transportation and, more particularly, for its savage cuts to Government programs in the less advantaged and more isolated regions of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in a debate whose purpose is to raise, at the beginning of this session, the issue of the problems facing the transport industry in Canada, and especially the discrepancies between what was said by Government Members during the election campaign and what was done subsequently in terms of budgetary cut-backs or decisions that were made and announced to the Canadian public.

For months during the election campaign some incredible commitments were made, especially in Quebec and I shall be focussing more particularly on this aspect. Mr. Speaker, I remember reading that the Progressive Conservative Party and Party candidates, especially Members on the South Shore of Montreal, were committed to abolishing tolls on the Champlain Bridge. Yesterday in the House, the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard) went so far as to contradict his colleague from La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais). Yet, during the election campaign, the candidate from La Prairie had been saying: This is ridiculous, the Liberals are totally ignorant of what the people on the South Shore need. We are going to close the tolls on the Champlain Bridge. We are going to follow the example set by the Government of Quebec when it removed tolls on the Autoroute des Cantons de l'Est and the Autoroute du Nord. And after making these solemn promises, Mr. Speaker, and saying on television in front of all Canadians that this was not just a personal commitment on the part of the candidate from La Prairie but a commitment by the Progressive Conservative Party yesterday, the Minister of State for Transport rose in the House and said that well, six million dollars is too much to spend on the people of the South Shore. Let them be discriminated against and let them go on paying the toll.

That was not the tune they were singing during the election campaign. Another commitment out the window, another promise broken. Now he says: Well, maybe when the economic situation improves. In other words, don't hold your breath.

Mr. Speaker, this has been going on since this Government was sworn in. During the election campaign, that great Montrealer, who is now the Leader of the Government, said that Montreal must once again become Canada's metropolis. He said that at Place Ville Marie. Two weeks after his swearing in, he had to decide whether to keep an office in Montreal or move it elsewhere, what did he do? Montreal's role as a metropolis and the commitment made at Place Ville-Marie were forgotten and it was decided to move the Canadian Aviation Safety Board to Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) would be very pleased with this decision, but the truth of the matter is that this Minister who claims to be in favour of consultation and to practice party solidarity, this same Minister made this decision without consulting the main parties concerned, although he claims he did. However, we have been informed by some important people in Montreal, by groups that are concerned about Montreal's future, that they were not consulted before the decision was made.

Mr. Speaker, in the field of transport, promises are becoming more and more . . . the Minister of State for Transport is here, and I am glad to see that, because not long ago he was in my riding, supposedly to engage in ministerial consultations. Ministerial consultations my eye, Mr. Speaker! The Minister of State for Transport sent invitations only to Progressive Conservative Members. I do hope that expenses were paid by the Progressive Conservative caucus because the Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) and the Member for Shefford had something to say to the Minister of State for Transport. We had regional problems to submit to him and we were convinced that, this being a supposedly ministerial consultation, all interested people would be convened regardless of their political affiliation. They claim that their consultations are at the Minister's level, Mr. Speaker, but they were consulting the caucus, period.

An Hon. Member: As the Péquistes used to do.

Mr. Lapierre: But look at what he did. Mr. Speaker, you will realize just how strangely that caucus can behave.

Naturally the Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) had convinced his caucus to support the VIA Rail service. Never mind everybody, he said the day after: We will form the new government.

• (1510)

Not to worry, VIA Rail will be back in business and people will still see those trains crossing the Eastern Townships.

The budget has been slashed, Mr. Speaker, but that did not prevent the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard) from stating, as reported in the Tribune of Thursday, October 25:

> VIA Rail services will be restored.

Mr. Speaker, that statement appeared in the paper.

An Hon. Member: He speaks the same language as the Péquistes.

Mr. Lapierre: Since the Minister made that solemn commitment and claimed that he would honour his election promise, everybody in the region has been saying: Finally, they have lived up to their promise. But today, Mr. Speaker, the people realize that they were mistaken, as they were in the case of most other promises, because they were sure that services would be restored. The government is not so sure anymore, and that is why a month later, on November 19, it decided to set up a task force on rail passenger services. Should the task force ever come to the conclusion that services ought not to be restored, neither the Minister nor the government will bear the blame, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Blame the others.

Mr. Lapierre: But in spite of all that . . . You know, Mr. Speaker, if this government keeps bending backwards it will break its back. In all cases where they had firm commitments, they are conducting studies and keep saying they are consulting people. In my opinion, the people of Quebec will realize that, generally speaking, the election promises were only a smoke-screen. The people of the South Shore heard this confirmed yesterday by the Minister himself. People in the Eastern Townships also knew it because of the statements which were made subsequently. I note, for instance, that the press release is in the name of the Minister of Transport. In fact, the senior Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) may want to deny the statement made by the Minister of State for Transport. At times, one might wonder who speaks for what.

An Hon. Member: They are in consultation with each other.

Mr. Lapierre: They are in consultation with each other, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the Minister of Transport will take care—

An Hon. Member: He is coaching him.

Mr. Lapierre: —will take care of the commitment made by his Minister of State, that they can discuss it, and most importantly, that they can act upon it Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Exactly.

Mr. Lapierre: I am convinced of one thing, Mr. Speaker, namely that, when a decision is made, it will not be submitted to the committee.

The Minister of Transport is probably explaining to his Minister of State that he should not have committed himself so quickly because you must first consider the issue, and then delay the process. Mr. Speaker, who promised the moon to the Canadian people, and especially to Quebecers before this Government was elected? Of course, everyone knows this, but it is especially true as concerns transport, and the Members opposite have not delivered yet. They have had opportunities to make firm commitments, but in every case, the matter has been referred to review committees. Will they be considering these issues until the next election so that they can make the same promises a second time, Mr. Speaker? This is the question which we must ask ourselves. If they believe transport to be so essential for the economy of Quebec and of Canada as a whole, why are they still trying to hide behind a multitude of review committees?

I am anxious to hear the Minister of State for Transport in coming weeks and months speak to the House about the Crow rate, and I am anxious to hear the Quebec Members opposite speak about the Crow rate, about the question of whether the payments should be made to the railways or to the farmers, and so on. I am convinced that they will set up another review committee and that they will again consider the matter for quite a while in an effort to reconcile their differences.

Mr. Speaker, I think that, during the last few months, all Canadians, and especially Quebecers, have realized that most of the commitments that were made are now being postponed or shelved. I hope and trust that the Minister of State for Transport intends to solve certain issues, and I am convinced that, if he had the authority to do so and if his colleague, the Minister of Finance, did not put roadblocks in his way by cutting the VIA budget and if the other Minister of Transport stopped piling up review committees, he could make decisions to follow up on the commitments made by his own colleagues. I come back once more to the people of the South Shore because everyone knows how important this issue was during the election campaign. Everybody knows it was promised to the South Shore people. Everybody knows that in the Eastern Townships, VIA Rail was the main issue during the election campaign, and now he comes here and says he is going to do it. But then there will be studies. Well, who is running that department—the task forces, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), or the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen)?

Those are a few examples which show that, in transportation as in many other areas, after bringing down the hatchet, after reneging on their commitments, the Members of that Government try to hide behind one or any number of committees. Hopefully they will have the courage to go back to the constituencies where they made those commitments. Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that all our Canadian airports should be getting new asphalt runways if we were to believe the promises made by the Progressive Conservative candidates during the election campaign?

In the Eastern Townships, the Sherbrooke airport should be extraordinarily well repaired. The Bromont airport should be extended to 9,000 feet, if I am not mistaken. Honourable Members may know that the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard) would prefer 10,000 feet, while we might be satisfied with 9,000 feet. However, that was a commitment. What did the Minister say in the course of his non-partisan consultation? He said: Well, we are going to consider the matter. But when those election promises were made, what he had in mind was not consideration but action. Once more we find he is trying to put off the issue, in order perhaps to work on it before the next election, or better still to promise it all over again. However, the people will not be fooled, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the Minister of State for Transport is ill at ease. I sympathize with him for realizing that he cannot deliver what was promised to the people in La Prairie, Brome Missisquoi, and Sherbrooke.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps they did not have enough pull with the Minister of Finance, and when this Department did not get its full share, they simply said: Let us announce cutbacks and then we shall make the same promises again; there will be no problem. But this is not what had been promised, and we shall be following with keen interest the actions of the Department of Transport during the coming weeks and months. I am now drawing up a list of all the commitments that were made. Should the memory of the Minister of State for Transport fail him, we will send him a copy of this list and he can then advise us of the dates on which the commitments were met. I hope it will be within the next four years, Mr. Speaker! This will certainly run into millions of dollars, but I hope that the Minister will convince his colleague, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) to grant him all the funds required. The Minister of State for Finance must also be convinced . . . I am certain that also she is ready to let the axe fall.

Mr. Speaker, this is the type of situation that we wanted to draw to the attention of this House and this Government to show that, in our opinion, transport is vitally important, expecially in Quebec, and that we have no intention of letting the Government dodge the issue during the coming weeks and months by establishing all kinds of committees and task forces allowing it not to honour its commitments.

The motion now under consideration allows us to bring this particular issue to the attention of the people and to make sure that pressure will be exerted in the right places. I know that some bankbenchers are as concerned as we are, about the commitments which were made and that they will help us to put pressure on the Minister of State and the Minister of Transport to deliver once and for all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments?

[English]

Since there are no questions or comments, I will recognize the next speaker.

● (1520)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I was simply hoping to outwait the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) or his second in command, the Hon. Member for Roberval (Mr. Bouchard), in the hopes that one of them would rise and respond to the motion put by a Member of the Liberal Party.

Before I go any further, I would like to say that I wish the Liberals would at least have the courtesy to blush when they have the nerve and the gall to move a motion involving transportation this soon after the election. Perhaps if they had waited a year or two until memories had gotten shorter, some things might have been forgotten. However, they have the nerve of a tom-cat. They bring in a motion about the cuts made to government programs and the election promises of the Conservative Government regarding the field of transportation.

I was anxious to hear from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, (Mr. Axworthy), the former Minister of Transport, on this motion. In fact, the motion should have been in his name. Since Liberal Members have that much nerve, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry should have been the one to rise and take the Conservatives to task for doing what he and the Liberals began. In fact, this action began back in 1974 with Otto Lang, of unlamented departure from this place.

Members of the Liberal Opposition should have decided to say nothing at all on this subject for at least a year or two. They should have given Conservative Members a chance to do something different. They chose not to do so. They have presented us with a motion with which we agree.

Let us begin by dealing with all of the talk, promises and speeches of Members of the Conservative Party before and during the federal election campaign. Commitments and promises were made. I will not read all of the Conservative press announcements and the notes from the Leader's speeches and the statements of the present Minister of Transport. However, we did hear about research and development. We heard about how the Government was going to increase its commitment to research and development and transcontinental passenger cars. What did we get? We got a cut of $1.9 million in funding for research and development. That is what the Liberals were doing already.

Mr. Axworthy: We added to it. You are wrong again.

Mr. Benjamin: They added to it every year and then put it off each year. In fact, my good friend, the Minister of Transport, will recall how frustrated we as members of the Transport Committee were when dealing with Supplementary and Main Estimates. Each year the Liberals had all those items in the estimates and each year the items showed up again. Each year these estimates got transferred. They were transferred year after year after year. It did not matter whether the estimates were for VIA Rail, for airports or for anything else. It took 11 successive years to finally begin the airport expansion in Regina. I have been here while six Ministers of Transport have been in this place. I am a little tired of the same kind of activity being undertaken by all six of them, and that includes the present Minister of Transport.

Another small commitment dealt with VIA Rail. In Toronto on August 27, the now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said not only that there would be no cuts to VIA Rail but that there would be an additional $10 million provided for 1985-86, and another $10 million for 1986-87. What did we get? We got a $93 million cut. I suppose one could add it all together and say that that totals $113 million.

That cut will only make things worse for VIA Rail and for rail passenger transportation in the country. The increases that were once proposed by the now Prime Minister, while inadequate, would at least have further advanced the viability of VIA Rail. However, that is down the drain, not only for 1985-86 but for the year after as well.

There is another minor detail, Mr. Speaker. I would remind the Hon. Minister of Transport that we were to get, on an urgent basis, legislation to remove the grain cap. The Prime Minister said on August 27 that there would be an additional $1 million allotted to that for 1985-86.

Mr. Mazankowski: It would not make any difference.

Mr. Benjamin: And an additional $5 million for 1986-87. Of course, with the drought, all those Russian thistles, too much water in the North Saskatchewan, all of those grasshoppers and too many Tories and what not, the entire thing was meaningless. We exceeded the cap in the 1983-84 crop year. The ink on the legislation was hardly dry and we had already exceeded the cap. The Tories saved us from that. We have had a short crop season and the Hon. Minister of Transport could at least bring in a Bill to remove the cap.

Mr. Mazankowski: Sure.

Mr. Benjamin: The Bill would require only one page; we are still waiting for it. In fact, we will use the Hon. Minister's amendment made in committee last year. I will put the title on the Bill for him if he wants and I will help him move it. I will second it for him.

Mr. Axworthy: I will second it.

Mr. Benjamin: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry said that he would second it. Who was it that voted down my amendment and the amendment of the Hon. Minister of Transport last September? It was the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. The Liberals have a lot of nerve bringing up anything to deal with transportation or grain.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will hold you to your word.

Mr. Benjamin: Okay. Removal of the crap—

Mr. Mazankowski: Removal of the what?

Mr. Benjamin: The removal of the crap on the Government side that took place on September 4. I only hope that we do not have to go through that again with the present Government.

I wish the new Minister of Transport a lot of luck. He is going to need a lot of help from this side because I believe that his colleagues on the cabinet committee, on the committee which is headed by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Cabinet as a whole will not be overly sympathetic to the things I know he would like to get done. In fact, his Department has been one of the hardest hit. As I read it, the cuts to his Department amount to $288 million. But I think there has been a dispute, and it has been suggested that they amount to only $282 million. In any event, $282 million was taken from the Department of Transport. All of that is self-defeating. It means that VIA Rail will barely struggle on even longer under the same kind of policy and with the same criteria it had since 1976. Nothing has changed.

The present Minister of Transport will agree with me about how frustrating it was for us when, for six or seven years in a row, three different Ministers made their reports on estimates. All we heard about was the purchase of new passenger locomotives and the purchase of new transcontinental passenger equipment. We got the same thing every year for six years in a row.

Mr. Axworthy: You got the trains this year.

Mr. Benjamin: They are still not there.

Mr. Axworthy: Open your eyes.

Mr. Benjamin: I would invite the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry to take a train for a change.

Mr. Axworthy: I did.

Mr. Benjamin: I would invite him to take that transcontinental. I have not yet been able to find a new car on it. That kind of cutting back and that kind of delay is now being continued.

• (1530)

We are so far behind in this field it makes the whole country feel embarrassed. We used to lead the world. I have been on trains in the United States, Europe and Australia where they have copied the technology which Canada developed. Those countries have new passenger equipment on service. Even British Rail, which does not have very many long hauls, has an overnight sleeping car train which runs from Inverness to London. It puts our trains to shame.

I would like to refer again to something I spoke about last Thursday in my reply to the Throne Speech. Where a debt is acquired or a deficit is enlarged for productive purposes, that debt is self-liquidating. When new equipment is purchased for VIA Rail that new transcontinental equipment would pay for itself within three years in reduced operating and maintenance costs, and increased use by the travelling public. It is a self-liquidating debt. It is an investment, not an increase in the deficit. It is not used to pay off interest charges and other debts. Most of that investment would go into the private sector. It would keep people in Thunder Bay, Trenton and wherever they make railway equipment working, or it would put those people back to work. Certainly, it would put an end to the waste of the millions of dollars which are spent every year by VIA Rail on the maintenance, repair and refurbishing of old passenger train equipment.

The real tragedy is that VIA Rail started off with the deck stacked against it. It was designed to fail. The first thing which VIA Rail faced was having to go to the taxpayers for $77 million or $80 million to reimburse CN and CP for old passenger equipment. At worst, VIA Rail should have bought that equipment for $1 a car. All of the equipment has been depreciated down to zero and written off. The expenses of that depreciation had been deducted from the income tax of the railway. The taxpayers got stuck a second time around. VIA Rail began with that kind of a handicap and nothing has changed. Nothing has changed since Otto Lang started it; his next two successors continued it.

The present Minister could have announced—and maybe he will do it today—the placing of orders. A year and a half lead time is required. Even if the orders are placed today it will be a year and a half to two years before the equipment will be on track. We have waited long enough.

VIA Rail does not need a $93 million cut, it needs $93 million more in investment. That investment would pay for itself within a very few years. If that means increasing the deficit by $93 million, so be it. That money will go into something which the country needs. It will provide jobs, which will put people back to work, and they will again pay income tax.

I would like to speak about the cuts in the CN Marine ferry services on the East Coast. Those of us who have sat on the Standing Committee on Transport for the last 16 years—which includes the Hon. Member for Vegreville and the Hon.

Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan)—have had to listen year in and year out to a litany of inadequacy of service, particularly in the ferry services on the East Coast. I remember that we boys from the Prairies were fully in support and in sympathy with our colleagues from Atlantic Canada. What did we get? We got a $16.1 million cut.

Being a nice, good Edmonton boy sitting there with that benign and saintly countenance, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you would agree that those ferry services need not be cut, but need to be improved. Any money expended on those services is an essential part of the fair treatment which Canadians should receive, no matter where they live. We must quit discriminating against people because of where they live. The NDP maintains that the ferry services on the East Coast and the West Coast should be treated as part of the highway system. They should be toll-free. The municipalities, the provinces and the federal Government do not charge tolls on the Trans-Canada Highway or other major roads. Surely it is not appropriate to charge for the ferry services.

CN Marine will now be a separate Crown corporation. That might make CNR look better because its deficit will be lower. It might make the CNR happy, but it does not do a thing for marine services in Atlantic Canada. The money will go from one losing operation into a separate losing operation. The Government calls it a cut of $21.5 million. The Government is taking it out of one pocket and throwing it away.

Finally, I want to say to the Minister of Transport that I fully agree with and support many of the points which were announced in Prince Albert, and reiterated by the Prime Minister in Toronto, concerning the Western Grain Stabilization Act. I expect the Minister of Transport to announce within a very few days that he will be implementing what he and his Leader promised—a freeze. They promised a freeze on the western grain freight rates in July and August. At best, that should mean that the freeze should take effect as of August 1 last. They made that promise during the election campaign. The Minister objected when I quoted what he said at the Transport Committee meeting of last September. He said that was not what was promised during the election campaign. I am asking the Minister and his Leader to do what was promised during the campaign. I do not expect the Minister to implement NDP policy but, at best, I do expect him to implement the freeze retroactive to August 1. At worst, I expect him to order the freeze as of today. The rates should revert to what they were on July 31. When the court case is settled, the rates may revert back to what they were on January 1. I would ask the Minister to carry out that commitment on the grain freight rate freeze.

There has been a cut in the rehabilitation of the Prairie branchlines which is part of a $50 million cut. The rehabilitation of those branch lines will be delayed unless the Government intends to renege on its promises and commitments to not only retain, but complete the rehabilitation of the Prairie branchline system. All it is doing is putting it off for another day. I am suspicious, Sir, when things continue to be put off. The next thing you know they are not going to be done.

I hope the Minister of Transport, or his second in command, will rise and tell us what they are doing to carry out what was said in Prince Albert on July 5, and what was said in Toronto on August 27. If this is going to be implemented, then my colleagues and I will applaud them for it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to this debate for some time with interest. I find it amazing that the Hon. Members opposite still believe in the perpetual motion machine. In science there have been two myths thought to be believable, but which have been proved false. One myth is the perpetual motion machine, and the other was advanced by the alchemists of the Middle Ages who spent their time trying to turn base metals into gold. Today there is a modern myth believed by the socialists that somehow with a snap of the finger they will be able to spend all the money they want without any fiscal responsibility. This Government is showing some fiscal responsibility, but these Hon. Members opposite are saying, "Let us not cut back, let us spend, spend, spend".

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I will say to my hon. friend that all I was asking is that he and his colleagues implement what his Party said they would implement in the coming year and the year after. That is all. I am not asking that they go on any kind of a "socialist spending binge"—in the mind of my hon. friend—I am just asking that they do all of the things for which his colleagues stood in the committee on transport and in this House of Commons, yea, these many years I have been here. If that is a spending binge, then I believe the Conservative Party should now be honest and say to us here in this House, and to the people of Canada, that they have changed their minds about what they told us they would do last July and last August. If they do that, fine. Everyone is entitled to a change of mind. But do not give us the typical Liberal "crap" which we have heard for the last 20 years. Do not promise it and then space it out for another year, another year and yet another year. The Government should make up its mind to do it or not to do it and quit kidding around about it. All we are asking the Government to do is to implement what it said it would do in July and August.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to briefly comment on the remarks of my colleague, the Hon. Member opposite. The Hon. Member makes particular reference to the fact that he has been around "yea, these many years". We know that he is rapidly becoming an institution of the House. Perhaps it is beginning to show in what he has to say. It is patently apparent, Sir, that there is an absence of reality in what he says. In 1974, the circumstances of the Canadian economy were not quite what they are today. In 1979 and 1980, the circumstances of the Canadian economy were not quite what they are today. Indeed, many things have changed. The only thing which has not changed is the New Democratic Party policy, which is circa 1954. That is where the Hon.

Member's problem is. He is still tied up in the 1950s policy of his Party. When that Party snaps itself out of that element, perhaps it will then understand why this Government has had to take the initiatives it has taken, and perhaps it will understand that we did not know just how bare the cupboard was at the time we were making assurances to Canadians regarding matters we would see initiated.

Those things of which the Minister of Transport spoke over many years in committee and in this House, are a matter of record. They are a part of our policy. I know the Minister of Transport will see that they are fulfilled when the opportunity prevails. However, he is not going to do it for the sake of doing it, for the sake of creating a much greater deficit and denying Canadians the employment opportunities which they so richly deserve and which they have been denied by the actions of the people across the way.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, again may I say to my hon. friend from the Kootenays that I was not asking the Minister or the Government to spend money for the sake of increasing the deficit. I was asking the Government to spend not only the moneys it promised but to spend at least those moneys which would be a sound business investment and which would allow a public need and necessity like rail passenger services or ferry services to function better and more efficiently.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is right.

Mr. Benjamin: The return on that investment would be recovered within a two, three or four-year period. That is all we are asking, Mr. Speaker. The new passenger equipment will pay for itself within three years. Instead, the Minister of Transport is going to continue on with the policies of his Liberal predecessors and keep forcing VIA Rail to refurbish and frantically try to get by with that old worn out equipment.

Mr. Mazankowski: Oh, no!

Mr. Benjamin: And we will have to go through another winter—probably another two or three winters—with the same thing all over again. The Minister has to order the equipment, but it is an investment. It will in subsequent years reduce the amount of subsidy that has to be paid to VIA Rail. I hate to sound like a free enterpriser, but surely that is sound business investment practice. If it happens to raise the deficit by that many millions of dollars more for the next two years or three years, so be it. At least it is a productive investment.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is relevant that another Hon. Member from British Columbia would have previously made this statement. However, in the Province of British Columbia the Social Credit Government has set a precedent for the kind of activity undertaken by the new Government in Ottawa, an activity which has virtually destroyed the economy of the Province of British Columbia. The Social Credit Government made the promise during its election campaign that it was going to practise restraint and revitalize the economy. But there is no province in this country which has been more badly harmed than the Province of British Columbia by the same kind of activity which this Government is now undertaking.I say to my colleague that the same people who guided the Province of British Columbia on this path of destruction, Patrick Kinsella and Norman Spector, are certainly back here in Ottawa laying a path of destruction for Canada.

I would wonder, Mr. Speaker, about making cuts in transport, an extremely important public utility in this country on which people and businesses of this country depend. Perhaps those cuts should be referred to a committee before they are implemented by the Government? Rather than approaching it from a strictly ideological point of view, perhaps if we could examine the total budget over a period of time with the Department of Transport, we could find the cuts and economies which everyone desires.

Mr. Mazankowski: Would you show up?

Mr. Skelly: We would also like to see a situation in which the investments which are needed are also put in place. The kinds of promises which were made by that crew over there, and their candidates in the field, should be honoured.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am sure we will have an opportunity when we are dealing with supplementary estimates to raise the matter of the cuts with the Minister of Transport. I know he will want to appear. British Columbia is nothing more than a prime example of the symptom of the disease. When one reduces the deficit for wrong reasons, one increases unemployment. For anyone to say we must reduce the deficit in order to reduce unemployment has got it backwards. It is not how much the deficit is, but what the deficit is for, and if the deficit is for sound investment for which the Government will receive a full return, whether it is two years or 22 years. If the Government follows this mindless proposition 13 syndrome imported from California which was applied in British Columbia and Saskatchewan, then it will duplicate in spades what happened in British Columbia.

Mr. Brisco: What would you cut?

Mr. Benjamin: If I can have another half hour, by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, I can point out some cuts for my hon. friend.

• (1550)

In any event, you cannot have it both ways. When you bring in deficit reductions of this nature, you are going to increase unemployment. It cannot be helped if you follow that route. I suggest adding $1 billion or $2 billion more to the deficit now, which will be repaid over the next two or three years, makes far more sense.

Mr. Mazankowski: You said that five years ago.

Mr. Benjamin: You would put people to work, they pay taxes and government gets the money back.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now over.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have had an opportunity to speak in the House with you in the Chair. I would like to extend my sincere congratulations on your appointment, and echo the sentiments of my friend across the way. I wish you well in your lofty position and I know that you will preside over the House in a very dignified fashion.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) for presenting the motion today. I regret he is not able to be here and I hope his illness is not serious. I think he will be aware that the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) did a very good job in introducing the substance of the motion. It gives us all an opportunity to discuss transportation issues, and I am very grateful to the Opposition for this opportunity.

I believe, and I think my view is shared by many Members of this House, that transportation is indeed the vital link that binds us together as a nation, both socially and economically. For the Opposition to have chosen transportation for their first allotted day I think is a significant gesture, and indicates the importance they place upon transportation as well.

Mr. Benjamin: But they have a lot of nerve.

Mr. Mazankowski: I must say, though, that I had hoped I would hear something of a substantive nature, some new initiatives. We waited for initiatives for many, many years from those who are now on that side of the House. We did not really hear anything different today. Nor did we hear anything different from the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: You have not done it yet, that is why I have to keep repeating it.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member for Shefford spent a great deal of time in his speech criticizing us for reviewing and consulting. At the same time the Opposition, every day in the House and outside the House, is harping at us for being too secretive. Well, we are not trying to hide anything. We believe there are some very fundamental decisions to be made. We have to review a number of programs which have been in existence for a number of years and which clearly are not working. We are doing it in an open and consultative way. We do not function as a Government on the basis of issuing edicts from upon high and imposing them upon the Canadian people, such impositions as the savage cuts in VIA Rail passenger service in 1981, the imposition of the National Energy Program, or the methodology used in unilaterally imposing constitutional change on this nation. That really set the nation in a mood of disharmony and bitterness which we are still trying to overcome today. This is a different style of Government and I think that is what the Canadian people voted for. They voted for change, a new direction in economic and social policies. They voted for a change in process and for a Government that would listen before it acted. That is precisely what we are trying to do.

Mr. Lapierre: How about air safety?

Mr. Mazankowski: We do not have to take a back seat to anyone on air safety. It was this Government that commissioned the Dubin Inquiry which laid the groundwork for a safer aviation system in this country. We will continue to carry out the recommendations of that inquiry, and not procrastinate and footdrag as the Liberal Government did after the inquiry completed its report.

As I said earlier, the Hon. Member for Regina West has not revealed anything new. He merely dredged up one of his old speeches, added a few items regarding cuts and made a few comments about the Speech from the Throne. He put a few finishing touches on it, and that was about it. We have heard that speech in the House and committee time and time again. Basically his solution is to throw more money at the problem and then turn and walk away. With respect, and I have a lot of respect for my hon. friend, we cannot continue along that same path. When people voted for change on September 4 they voted for genuine change, and we are trying to carry out that mandate.

The substance of this motion is silly, Mr. Speaker. To suggest that we should carry out our election promises within two months is absolutely absurd. Especially so when it is sponsored by the Official Opposition, particularly the Hon. Member for Papineau who spent most of his time as a member of a Cabinet and a Government which broke more promises, imposed more hidden agendas and misled the Canadian people on more occasions than any other Government since Confederation.

Mr. Keeper: You are neck and neck on that one.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, give me a little time. We have only been in office for two months. We are committed to fulfilling our pledges and obligations.

I have to genuinely question the sincerity of this motion, particularly when it was backed up with the kind of hollow, shallow commentary we received from the Hon. Member for Shefford. He talked about savage cuts. Well, it is very interesting to note that the Liberals were going to cut rather significantly the budget of Transport Canada. When the then Prime Minister, now the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was looking for ways and means to fund his $307 million election promises, he said that $76 million was going to come from Transport Canada, most of it from VIA Rail. That was part of their hidden agenda as well. It was exposed but we do not hear them talk about it too much any more.

Transport Canada spends roughly $4.3 billion a year and takes in a little over $1.1 billion. That is a $3.2 billion expenditure not covered by revenue. There has been, roughly, a $200 million cut in the expenditures of Transport Canada.

That excludes the transfer of CN Marine to a Crown corporation, at $21.5 million, and disregarding the CN debt, which is an overpayment made by Transport Canada to CN of $46 million. So we are really looking at $200 million. That is less than 5 per cent of total departmental spending. It seems to me that any Government department that cannot improve its revenue expenditure position by less than 5 per cent really is not worth its salt. That is really what is wrong with this country. That is why we are in trouble. That is why the people of Canada rebelled against that Government. They are sick and tired of paying more and more and more and getting less and less and less. They are sick and tired of deficits, mounting debts, and sick and tired of the continual increase in the cost of servicing the debt and the impact that has on the economy. There are also sick and tired of irresponsible government.

Throughout the election campaign we said first and foremost we were going to restore fiscal responsibility to this nation—above all else. We are well on our way. The confidence factor is improving day by day. Throughout the election campaign we did identify several areas in which we believed there were improvements needed in transportation. We did make commitments.

● (1600)

In his speech to the House on November 8 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said:

> We are committed to implement these policies within an overall framework of fiscal responsibility over the course of our mandate. And this means that to do more in some areas, we must do less in others.

That is the guiding principle. I can honestly say to the House right here and now that the transportation commitments are not excluded, because we believe that the country needs and deserves an effective, efficient, innovative and reliable transportation system. That is vital to this nation.

Transportation is a vital component to our nation's economy. It is vital in so far as our commitment to economic renewal. It is vital in terms of achieving balanced economic growth. It is vital to providing long-term productive jobs in the country and to our desire to overcome regional economic disparities.

This nation is probably the most transportation dependent nation in the world. We move more tonne miles of freight per capita than any other industrialized nation in the world, and 40 per cent of it is moved by rail. We move a lot of bulk commodities and we move them long distances before they get to tide water. For example, our grain moves on average something in the order of 1,250 miles. Australia, which is one of our major competitors, moves its grain 200 miles. Argentina moves its grain 125 miles and the United States of America moves its grain 700 miles. In terms of coal, British Columbia coal moves an average of 700 miles while U.S. coal moves an average of 300 miles and Australia coal moves less than 50 miles. Therefore, we see that the transportation costs represent a very significant component of the final price of the product that we deliver to tide water. It represents a very important percentage of the value of our export commodities. As a matter of fact, some 60 per cent of our exports have a transportation cost component of more than 10 per cent.

Given the fact that we are a trading nation and that we must put greater emphasis on expanding our international markets and recapturing our fair share of the international trade, we must ensure that we have a competitive transportation system. We must ensure that we have the lowest net cost possible, because 30 per cent of our gross national product depends on trade. Competition is keen and we all know that we are price-takers and not price-setters. We appreciate the importance of that, and it has been referred to in the economic statement submitted by my colleague, the Minister of Finance.

I believe that one of our first challenges is to keep the unit cost of transportation down. We must be innovative. We must employ the latest technology. We must improve our systems and operations. We must achieve better utilization. We must improve the infrastructure where necessary, and we must cut out waste and inefficiency. In short, we must find more effective ways of doing things.

Safety must be held as a high priority. Any transportation system which is not safe is not worth having. We have made a good start. We commissioned the Dubin inquiry and the Grange inquiry when we were in office. A number of very important and major recommendations have flowed from both of those reports. I commend my predecessors for taking action on many of them. There has been some foot-dragging, but many of these things are very costly.

We intend to bring forth a new Aeronautics Act. This Act was being drafted when I was Minister of Transport in 1979 and the work has continued. There will be changes to the Canada Shipping Act. These Acts relate to the matter of safe transportation of goods and people. The regulations with respect to the transportation of dangerous goods are very complex. We are continuing the consultative process with industry and the transportation system. The RAMP system, the new radar system, is going ahead. That represents an investment of something in the order of $800 million. We must strive to improve our total air navigation systems, particularly in the isolated areas in the North. We must beef up our enforcement in the air sector, particularly now with the trend toward a deregulated environment, with the emphasis more on prevention, rather than investigating accidents after the fact. Therefore, there will be a continuing challenge and continuing pressure to put a great deal of emphasis on safety.

Our third challenge, which comes to the point being made by the Member for Regina West, is how to fund and maintain the system. A first class system requires the necessary resources to maintain its stature. Resources are scarce. It is going to require a very frugal allocation of public and private expenditures. Some would suggest that by the end of the century we will have to invest something in excess of $90 billion to $100 billion in the transportation system. We have $10.5 billion invested in the airport transportation system alone just to maintain the status quo. To maintain the system at an up-to-date operating level we require some $450 million annually.

I must tell the House in all sincerity that the cost recovery, the expenditure revenue ratio, is on a decline. The cost recovery in the air administration, for example, is 35 per cent. In the marine administration it is 26 per cent. In the surface administration it is 17 per cent; in CN Marine it is 19 per cent; in VIA it is 23 per cent; and in the coastguard it is 1 per cent. I am not suggesting for one minute that we can get 100 per cent cost recovery, nor would I ever strive for that. However, we must try to achieve efficiency, cut out waste, and find ways and means of doing the job more effectively. That is in the interest of the system, the nation, and Canadians as a whole.

The fourth challenge I see, Mr. Speaker, is for us to put in place a legislative and policy framework which will indeed reflect the realities of the 1980s and 1990s and meet the challenges of the 21st century. We have a National Transportation Act that was adopted in 1967. Times were different then. It has served us well, but we are functioning in a new environment. We are going to be charged with the task of responding to the transportation challenges, and of doing so in a flexible framework within which we can ensure that there is maximum opportunity for innovation and flexibility, and ensure that we get the best out of the effort and resources that we put into the system. I think that we will do that.

Canada has always responded to challenge. If there is anything unique about Canada in terms of its ability to address issues, it is that we have consistently resolved the transportation issues which have faced us. We have resolved many of our transportation impediments by working together in our own unique Canadian way. I think we have the expertise, abilities, know-how and technology to continue to stay one step ahead of other nations in transportation. I see this as a very major challenge and one which I look forward to.

I would like to discuss some of the elections commitments we have been talking about. The Liberals and the NDP did not have anything significant to say about transportation. As a matter of fact, I went to the Library of Parliament today to try to find out what was the Liberal and NDP policy on transportation. I drew a blank. On September 31 the Globe and Mail reported that the only Party that had anything to say about transportation was the Progressive Conservative Party. I find that very interesting.

Then I went a little deeper and got the Liberal agricultural policy which had a couple of very interesting commitments. One was that "a new Liberal Government is willing to consider both raising the 31.5 million tonne volume cap and lowering the safety net". The other one was that, as specified in the Western Grain Transportation Act, the federal Government has established a commission of inquiry under Judge Hall which is examining all matters pertaining to the method of payment which would be most conducive to agricultural development in Canada, and that the committee will report before March 31. That is the substance of the Liberal agricultural policy.

Let us go to the NDP. They really shifted during the course of the election campaign. They stood in this House and fought tooth and nail to maintain the Crow. But then they moved an amendment which, in effect, cancelled the Crow. This amendment concerned a safety net which in effect nullified the Crow statutory rate. The Hon. Member shakes his head. But at least the NDP are consistent. The position of the NDP during the election campaign was "we will continue to press for restoration of the statutory Crow rate and will fight any further increases in freight rates". That is quite a change. But as I said, at least the NDP are consistent.

I see that my time has come to an end, Mr. Speaker. I had hoped I would be able to get into some of the other issues such as VIA, the issue of trucking and changes to the Western Grain Transportation Act. Hopefully I can cover some of those in my responses to questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments on the Hon. Minister's speech?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I was not going to speak today—

An Hon. Member: And comment.

Ms. Copps: Excuse me, but the Finance minister should well be aware that in my question I have a certain period of time in which to build up to a crescendo.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I was going to tell the Hon. Minister that I was not going to speak today. I was just going to sit back because I had heard the Hon. Minister was actually a very nice individual and had done his best when he was in opposition to provide constructive criticism. I heard not only the Minister but the former speaker on behalf of his Party state that they were unable to carry out the promises they had made during the election campaign. In his remarks, the Minister made some allusion to the fact that because of the situation and because the cupboard is bare—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Question.

Ms. Copps: —they cannot go ahead and carry out their promises. My question to the minister is this. The Minister and his colleagues were fully aware of the situation leading into this last election. As a matter of fact, he may remember that his leader over-estimated the severity of the deficit situation by some $2 billion, $4 billion, or $6 billion.

An Hon. Member: Which one?

Ms. Copps: Not Joe Clark, I mean the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He over-estimated the severity of the deficit problem by $2 billion, $4 billion, or $6 billion, depending upon which press report he happened to have read that morning.

Can the Minister tell us what has changed before and after September 4 to prevent you from telling the Canadian people here in the House today in a clear and lucid way just which of the promises you intend to break and which of the promises you in fact fully expect to carry out? Let us be specific. You accused the Liberal mover of the motion of being a little vacuous in his comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Ms. Copps: I would like to ask—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Would the Hon. Member please address the Chair?

Ms. Copps: I have addressed the Chair, Mr. Speaker. I think if you review my comments I have addressed them to the Chair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Could the Minister specify here in the House which of the promises he fully intends to break and which of the promises he intended to break even before he made them on September 4?

Mr. Mazankowski: I am very pleased to answer that question, Mr. Speaker. I thought I made it very clear that we intended to fulfil all the election commitments that we made in the area of transportation—

Mr. Skelly: VIA rail cuts?

Mr. Mazankowski: —consistent with the comments made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his statement on November 8.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address two questions to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) in light of the VIA rail cuts. On Vancouver Island the E and N Railroad for years has been trying to get an upgrading and an improvement in the service on that particular railroad. There has been a substantial reduction in bus transportation and the lower end of the highway is not conducive to safe movement of large volumes of goods. Will the Minister indicate what he intends to do for the E and N Railroad?

I would like to suggest to the Minister in terms of cost cutting an improvement in spending. Your subsidy to the coastal ferry system in British Columbia is simply a grant to general revenue in British Columbia. They have destroyed the ferry system on the coast of British Columbia. Would the Minister consider making that grant conditional to service of the small communities up and down the coast of B.C. if we are going to continue to provide a federal subsidy?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's part of his question, the issue of the E and N Railway was clearly a subject that will be considered by the rail passenger action force which was established this week. If the Hon. Member had a chance to look at the terms of reference I think he would see that the mandate is to define a basic national railway passenger network. This includes those services to be restored. It is also to review all current services, and among-other things, to define and oversee a new rail passenger investment program with emphasis on the acquisition of new rolling stock. I hope this answers the Hon. Member for Regina West. It should make him very happy because he has harped about it just as long as I have, and I would have thought he would have been my greatest ally in support of the cut-backs. He has said time and time again that the costing formula is too generous for the railroads; it is a waste of money. We are trying to get at that waste.

Mr. Skelly: What about the money you are wasting on the ferry service?

Mr. Mazankowski: I remind Hon. Members that, notwithstanding the $93 million reduction, there is still $600 million being pledged by the Canadian taxpayer to VIA Rail, of which some $200 million plus will be used for capital expenditures. We could have thrown more money at the VIA Rail problem and walked away from it, as the Member has suggested, but we believe it is time to make some fundamental decisions, conduct a thorough examination and try to put VIA Rail on a sound economic footing. We intend as well, to put in place a proper legislative mandate that will ensure that it will continue to work and provide the type of service that will make all Canadians proud. That is what we are really trying to do.

Mr. Skelly: What about the ferry service? Where's the beef?

Mr. Mazankowski: I am sorry that I took a little longer, but knowing the Member's interest in the rail passenger service I thought he would have been interested.

The grants to general revenues is a point very well taken. I cannot make a commitment at this point in time, but suffice to say that we are examining that particular issue. I know of what the Member speaks, and I think he has a very valid point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the next question to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). A short question and a short answer please.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have three very short questions. I know the Minister can answer them very quickly. The first one concerns VIA Rail on the northern run from Prince Rupert to Prince George. As the Minister knows it operates three days a week and it is terribly inconvenient to a lot of the small communities. Is there going to be a change in that regard?

My second question is in terms of the northern transportation agreement. I think the Minister is aware that the B.C. Government has cut the Port Hardy to Prince Rupert run to once every two weeks. The B.C. Government has put a totally inadequate vessel on the Prince Rupert to Port Simpson-Kincolith run. Could the Minister comment on whether or not he is prepared to re-open the agreement which was signed in 1977 by Otto Lang? It is very important that that be renegotiated.

Third in terms of the Prince Rupert elevator, could the Minister comment on the accessibility of grain and boxcars to the old elevator? As I believe the Minister knows, 75 per cent of the jobs from that old elevator are about to be lost some time this month or next month. It is a real black eye, and a sore point for Prince Rupert which expected the new elevator to take on far more than 26 workers, and with a net gain rather than a net loss.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's first question, I would think that with respect to the VIA Rail three days a week passenger service to Prince Rupert, that too will be one of the subjects the rail action force will be looking at. They will be empowered to examine all existing routes and proposed routes. If the Hon. Member has any points of view on that particular run, I would certainly advise him to communicate either directly with me or with the action force. Suffice to say that the mandate of the committee is to ensure that services are provided where there is a need and where the services are well supported. Judging from the comments of the Member, if there is that kind of need we will certainly look at it in a very positive way.

Regarding the other question having to do with the ferry services, that too is somewhat related to the issue raised by the Hon. Member's colleague. I will be meeting with the officials of the British Columbia government to discuss the ferry service issue in that northern region, as well as to discuss the point made by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

On the issue of the Prince Rupert Grain Terminal, I share the Hon. Member's concern. I am deeply disturbed by the prospect of the loss of jobs. I had an opportunity to meet with members of the union during the course of the election campaign, at which time I set out to explore whether there were other ways and means by which the existing terminal could be utilized. There has been some demonstrated interest in that. I think there is a way in which that terminal might be used for non-grain services, such as specialty crops, pellets and things of that nature. I will be discussing this with some members of the provincial government, and other interested parties, with a view to attempting to maintain that facility, even on a one-shift basis, to help alleviate some of the problems affecting workers. More important, in the long term we should make sure that we do not close down a facility, something which we may regret later on.

The Hon. Member made the point that it is the only facility which accommodates boxcars. Clearly that is another consideration which should be taken into account. I thank him for drawing the matter to my attention. I am aware of it, and I hope I can count on his support in trying to find a solution.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I have a very quick question. Before the day is over, I presume I will have an opportunity to engage in a somewhat longer discussion about some of the issues raised by the Minister. My specific question relates to the transportation agreement signed with the Province of Manitoba under the Industrial Regional Development Program which included major restoration of the Port of Churchill, major development of new CN grain cars at the Transcona shops and the expansion of Winnipeg, Brandon, Churchill and The Pas airports. The package totalled some $230 million, and it was between the province and the federal Government. It has been on hold, no action has been taken on it. It is causing a high level of uncertainty and anxiety in several parts of the province because much of its economic development is contingent upon the continuation of that program.

Would the Minister be kind enough to tell us whether he intends, as one of the Ministers responsible under this program, to continue with that agreement and the major benefits it brings to the Province of Manitoba?

Mr. Mazankowski: In answer to the Hon. Member's question, I should like to indicate that I had an opportunity to meet with the Minister of Transport for Manitoba last week. We discussed in some detail the elements of the subsidiary agreement. There are many aspects on which there is unanimous agreement. Indeed those programs will go ahead. One concerns the development of a light grain car, the rail-bus car prototype project, and there are a number of others. The provincial Minister of Transport indicated that he hoped there would be some negotiated changes in other elements of the program and that they would have to be done on a bilateral basis. We agreed to that. I am to get back to him within a week or so.

Primarily the agreement stands, subject to some modifications which will be negotiated on a bilateral basis. To suggest that the whole matter is stalled is inaccurate. We agreed to give the green light on a number of the points. I could provide the Hon. Member with that information in detail, perhaps in writing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments has now terminated.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents I bestow best wishes on your elevation to such a high and distinguished office in this Chamber.

The motion put by my Party is an attempt to have the Government of the day focus some of its attention on improving the economic plight of the poorer regions of Canada. This appears to be in direct contrast to what the Government is doing. It is attempting to destroy an already weak economy in the poorer regions of the country, particularly in Atlantic Canada.

The general thrust or thesis of the election campaign of the Conservative Government can best be summarized in three words—jobs, jobs and jobs. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) repeated this theme time and time again. In fact, he is on record as saying that tens of thousands of new jobs would be created upon the election of the Conservative Government. This theme of long-term, permanent jobs being created overnight was frequently reiterated by Members of Cabinet and indeed his entire caucus. The message was clear and unequivocal—vote Progressive Conservative and jobs, jobs and jobs will be created for Canadians seeking new employment opportunities.

This message touched all Canadians. They responded to that request by voting overwhelmingly, unfortunately, for the Progressive Conservative Party in the federal election. Since the creation of employment opportunities was the priority of the Conservative Party, it had a particular significance to various areas of Canada, such as the Atlantic region. It also responded by voting overwhelmingly for the Conservative Party of Canada. This commitment touched the hearts and souls of young people, women, minority groups and Canadians from every walk of life, so much so that those expectations for greater opportunity and new jobs swept the country on September 4 much like a tidal wave.

Canadians believed the Prime Minister's declaration that tens of thousands of new jobs would be created after he assumed office. Canadians trusted that regional development would be increased and many disparities would be corrected. Canadians trusted the Prime Minister to aid the small inshore fishery and to keep his commitments to the energy sector by creating additional opportunities. They also believed that activities and projects which supported the achievement of national defence objectives would be maintained.

Young people trusted the Prime Minister when he said that the Tory Government in its commitments would allow the youth of the country untold opportunities for future employment. Women in the country trusted that the Prime Minister would see to it that equal pay for work of equal value would no longer be an exception but a rule in Canadian life. Thus Canadians gave the Conservative Party a clear and unequivocal mandate to create jobs, jobs and jobs.

Let us not consider just the rhetoric of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) or other Ministers of the Government. Let us look at the facts since they assumed office on September 17. The economic statement totally washed out the priority of jobs, jobs and jobs. At page 6 of that statement is stated that "controlling the deficit must be our priority for this year and for each year of our mandate." The priority has changed from job creation to cutting the deficit. In more than five places in the Throne Speech the key, operative word was "consultation". It indicated that a constant process of conciliation and co-operation must be restored.

What have we had since they assumed office? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced a $4.2 billion cut without any consultation whatsoever with provincial premiers in those areas of the country which it dramatically affects. It is hypocrisy for the Minister of Transport to stand in his place today and talk about consultation when in fact major cuts have been made within his own Department without any consultation.

As many Members know, the Atlantic region is a complex geographical area comprising a number of major islands and peninsulas. Its transportation system is a complicated network; it is not a corridor. Reductions in services and expenditures in Atlantic Canada by the federal Government cut deeper into the socio-economic life of the East Coast than in any other area. Transportation has traditionally been used as a tool for regional development. Unfortunately, under this Government it is the exact opposite.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) talked about promises. I will quote a promise from a document of the Atlantic caucus of August 2, 1984. It reads:

> A Progressive Conservative Government would ensure the continued development and maintenance of reliable and efficient ferry services in the Atlantic Region.

That particular quotation flies in the face of their actions. I can cite a specific example in my own Province, that of the ferry services between Yarmouth and Bar Harbour. What happened there? This Minister of Transport has not consulted with the Premier of the Province or with the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau). He has unilaterally reduced services in that area by six months. So much for the rhetoric of consultation.

My Government recognizes that ferry services are an important ingredient in the economic life in Atlantic Canada. We were to retain a number of services for a period of time, with the Yarmouth-Portland ferry service to be terminated. However, we allotted certain dollars to be allocated to the Yarmouth Bar Harbour ferry services for terminal modifications both in Bar Harbour and Yarmouth, and dredging in Yarmouth was undertaken in 1983 to take account of the upgrading which was needed in that area.

The Premier of our Province wrote some time ago to the former Minister of Transport saying that the Bluenose ferry, which would be travelling from Yarmouth to Bar Harbour, was an important ingredient and that we needed it on a full time basis. The document that was signed by my Government in the Province of Nova Scotia talked about joint consultations on matters of this nature. This is a public document. I quote from the last page:

> Both Canada and the Maritime Provinces anticipate that agreement will be reached on future programs and they will consult regularly to that end.

There was no consultation. It was a unilateral move by the Minister of Transport to cut off that particular service. I support the Member of Parliament for Southwest Nova in his attempt to have this rectified by restoring the service back to a 12-month service, because it affects a great deal of Canadians in that area. It will cost Canadians jobs in that area. It will cost jobs in the Atlantic region if that service is not restored to a 12-month service.

I could go on and deal with a number of other areas. However, let me say this. This cut-back in Yarmouth will force fish processors to ship their fish via the ferry from Digby to Saint John, New Brunswick, and truck it to the United States. This will be quite costly. It will place truck drivers in a dangerous situation during icy winter months.

Problems and risk will arise by shipping $300,000 to $400,000 worth of lobsters along the Saint John-New England route. Added to this is the risk of not being able to secure reservations on the Digby-Saint John ferry. The objective in this business is to get the fish to market as quickly as possible.

This will cost producers money. They will have to bear the additional transportation time and cost.

Another area of concern to the Atlantic region is the additional cost of ferry services. In one instance the Minister has broken a trust, which was that there would be consultation, and he acted unilaterally. He has broken the agreement that his predecessor signed with the provincial governments by unilaterally raising the fares of ferries in Atlantic Canada by 15 per cent. That means an additional cost to individual passengers. As well, those who are travelling for commercial purposes will face an additional cost.

The Minister of Transport says that we will have to make accommodations, if you will, for those who use the service on a regular basis, but he has not given the details of that information. The situation as it relates to the management centre at the Strait of Canso will result in its being closed, resulting in the loss of at least nine jobs. That is not very important to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or the Minister of Transport, but it is vitally important to the less prosperous areas of this country.

That is the situation in the field of transportation. This motion states that there are other savage cuts that this Government has implemented. I want to talk about employment. There have been savage cuts in the Department of Employment and Immigration. With regard to employment pension incomes, there has been a $30 million reduction by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). Separation payments have been cut by $60 million, which affects Atlantic Canada more than any other area of this country. Employment assistance and entitlement has been cut by $200 million. If one had the philosophy of the Minister of Finance, who says to the 1.5 million unemployed Canadians that they are not looking hard enough for a job, one could understand why they would make a cut in excess of $200 million. I say, shame on the government Party for singling out unemployed Canadians, those who are trying to obtain unemployment insurance, and trying to reduce the deficit on the backs of those individuals.

Unemployment insurance payments have been cut by $5.8 million. The mobility program has been cut by $2.8 million. The program delivery services of the Department of Employment and Immigration are being reduced by $1.3 million. Those were the reductions of programs in just one Department.

What about the elimination of programs which affect us in Atlantic Canada and the poor regions of this country? There has been an elimination of the General Industrial Training Program, a cut of $40 million. Can you queue that up with what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said during the election campaign about jobs, jobs, jobs? Now we have cuts, cuts, cuts. There will be 50,000 Canadians out of a job because of the Minister of Finance. Surely we cannot trust the Prime Minister or this Government to carry out what they say because they do not mean what they say. They are doing the complete opposite. This affects the lives of all Canadians, particularly those Canadians in the less fortunate areas of this country.

With regard to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the "Happy Hacker" talks about a reduction of $175 million. He refuses to give Members of Parliament information as to where those cuts will take place. He does not want to share that information. We put sufficient pressure on him. Now we are to have a briefing, not now but next week. It will probably be postponed again and again.

What about the cuts as they affect the poor regions of this country? The maximum levels of assistance have been reduced by one-half and one-third. The maximum level of assistance under the innovation element has gone down from 75 per cent of eligible project costs to 50 per cent in tier 4 areas. Tier 4 areas are the poorest regions of this country. So much for a compassionate, concerned Tory Government. They laugh. The Tories laugh.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We are laughing at you.

Mr. Dingwall: Tier I areas, the rich areas, have had the level of assistance reduced by 16 percentage points while tier 4 areas, the poorer areas of this country, have had a reduction as well, not by 16.7 per cent but by 25 per cent. Where is the equity there? It is Tory equity to hurt deliberately those poorer regions of the country.

• (1640)

If one were to look at some tables of expenditures for regional industrial expansion, one would see that from the period July 1983 to March 1984, $38 million was spent in tier 1 while in tier 4, $6 billion was spent. Yet, in his wisdom, the Minister of Finance has indicated that it will be reduced even further than that. If that is Tory compassion for the poorer regions of the country, then I would hate to see the Government deliberately, in a Throne Speech or economic statement, hit us any harder.

The facts are there, Mr. Speaker. There is an instance of government members speaking of jobs, jobs, jobs, whether they be in transportation, employment or through the federal Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

What about the fisheries? Fishermen were told during the election campaign that a Conservative Government would support and maintain the inshore fisheries which are so vital to the Atlantic area. Through the inaction of the Government, expenditures for the fishery sector have been reduced by $11.7 million, with fees for licences being increased by more than $6.3 million.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is not relevant.

Mr. Dingwall: Hon. Members opposite say that that is not really relevant. They have obviously not read the motion, because the motion talks about cuts that the Government has imposed upon the people of Atlantic Canada and the poorer regions of the country.

When we talk about energy—

Mr. Bradley: Transportation.

Mr. Dingwall: That Hon. Member has not read the motion either. In the field of energy, there was a reduction of $250 million under the Petroleum Incentives Program. Whom will that affect, Mr. Speaker? Will that affect the richer parts of the country? It will directly affect the Provinces of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. So much for the rhetoric of the members of the Conservative Party. Their actions are entirely different.

I could go on to deal with the other sectors of our economy that the Government has hurt so badly. However, transportation has been singled out by the Minister of Transport. We in Atlantic Canada have been assailed by the Tory Government. We in Atlantic Canada have been hit by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. We have been devastated by the actions and statements of the Minister of Finance. The Prime Minister has the gall to say to the people of the poorer regions of the country that government members have compassion for them. However, those cuts will drastically affect those of us in Atlantic Canada.

I would hope that those Members on the back-benches who sit there silently will rise to their feet and, over the heads of the front-benchers, many of whom were put there by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), I might add, say that these cuts must stop. They must stop because the Government is taking away from the less fortunate areas of the country and giving to the richer areas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I certainly look with some misgivings at what the present Minister is doing in his Department. Perhaps he will be able to clarify his actions for me. However, at this point I do not think that they compare with the complete disaster that the Liberal policies inflicted on the country.

I would like to suggest that perhaps the Hon. Member who just spoke would like to rise and indicate why, if they were so concerned about the remote areas of the country, the previous Minister of Transport and previous Liberal Ministers of Transport would not tangle with the Social Credit Government of British Columbia and insist that its subsidy was conditional on servicing those areas. The previous Liberal Minister of Transport did absolutely nothing. He left them hanging out to dry.

As a matter of fact, all this goes back to a previous Liberal Minister of Transport, Otto Lang, who cut off the subsidies for northland navigation thus detroying the marine transportation system on the coast of British Columbia. If those Ministers were concerned, perhaps they could now stand up in the House and repent for some of their activities.

Perhaps something else that the Hon. Member who just spoke would like to do is to explain why the last Liberal Government almost drove private civil aviation out of business by jacking up airport and fuel costs and insisting on irrational inspections and licensing conditions. It is like the situation which created the Dubin Commission gone mad. Those things harmed a great many people in the rural and remote areas of Canada. They drove up the cost of living and cut down the availability of transportation.

I could go on and on. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to repent for the previous Government's role in transportation in the country.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, it is always nice to try to respond to a question put by a member of the New Democratic Party. As we know, those members have been in bed with the Conservative Party for some period of time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: We know that their life expectancy is very short and that their importance is not as great as they would like it to be. However, the only persons to feed on their egos, of course, are members of the Conservative Party.

I would like to tell the Hon. Member that the previous Minister of Transport, during his term of office, showed himself to be an individual who not only listened and consulted with the poorer regions of the country, but who also, beyond the shadow of a doubt had compassion.

It should be noted that when the present Prime Minister was the Member of Parliament for Central Nova, he rose in the Chamber to speak about maritime freight rate assistance. It was then that our Government, under the previous Minister, initiated a study with regard to possible cut-backs to that. That study recommended that there should be no cut-backs. At that time, although the Tories and members of the NDP were alluding to the fact that perhaps cut-backs ought to take place, we as a Government and he as a Minister took very concrete and specific action. The previous Minister maintained those subsidies which were so vital to the poorer regions of Canada.

Further, I would like to say to the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party, a Member who is always articulate but never really says anything substantive, that this Opposition does not need any lessons and we do not need to hear any rhetoric from members of the New Democratic Party when it comes to compassion and understanding for the less fortunate areas of the country.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for his speech and for the vigour and enthusiasm with which he delivered it.

Mr. Benjamin: Too bad he did not give it last year.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is too bad he did not give it last year and it is too bad that he did not include in it a few more facts.

The Hon. Member, quite correctly, pointed out that our Party made a commitment to provide reliable and efficient ferry services in the Atlantic region. Would he not agree that the actions that are proposed, such as the provision of three new vessels of the latest state of the art in addition to the Caribou on the gulf service and a new vessel on the coastal service, will constitute to a large extent the fulfilment of the commitment that was made? After all, these vessels are getting older and are outdated. There are newer, faster, more reliable and larger vessels that are capable of providing that service. Perhaps there may be a reduction in the frequency of service, but in terms of achieving an economy of scale and providing the kind of reliable service that I think we all wish to see in that region, would the Hon. Member not agree that that is a very positive step?

Furthermore, would he not agree, given the fact that we have such a tremendous problem in the shipyards of Canada, that this kind of initiative would provide a great deal of relief for the shipbuilding industry in Canada and perhaps provide some hope and optimism for the many hundreds of Canadians who will find jobs in the shipbuilding industry as a result of the construction of these vessels?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Up to $2,000.

Mr. Mazankowski: As the Government House Leader said, it is up to $2,000. I think that has a very positive dimension to it.

With respect to the Yarmouth-Bar Harbour route, if the Hon. Member can tell me how we can effect some cost savings, I would be glad to discuss that with him. However, the fact of the matter is that during the six-month period about which we are talking, that service has generated about 10 per cent of its total revenue. At the same time, it has generated about 45 per cent of its total annual operating expenditure. That results in a loss of some $5 million. I know the Hon. Member will have very clearly thought out his statement. However, I would appreciate it if he could tell me how we can bring about the kind of cost saving which is necessary. It is obvious that if the service generates only 10 per cent of its revenue during that period of time, it is not being fully utilized. I think the Hon. Member would agree with that.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Minister asked for my advice and I am pleased that he would seek it. However, as the Hon. Member for South West Nova has stated, there should have been consultations with respect to the reduction of services between Yarmouth and Bar Harbour. To say in one instance that we will have meaningful consultations, and then, unilaterally, to reduce by six months the ferry service between Yarmouth and Bar Harbour is totally unacceptable. I am certain that if individuals at the municipal, provincial and federal level were consulted, perhaps an arrangement could have been made whereby the objectives of the Minister of Transport and the individuals who reside in that area could be met.

With respect to his second point, in terms of the new ferries, yes, we appreciate that and we think it is important. However, whether those ferries will be more efficient and reliable remains to be seen. What is important is that he is saying to the people of Yarmouth-Bar Harbour, Saint John-Digby and Borden-Cape Tormentine that there will be a 15 per cent increase in the ferry rates. That is what the Minister is saying.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is not right.

Mr. Dingwall: If the Minister is not saying that, he should clearly spell out to Canadians and to the users of those services that that will not be the case. It is a complete breach of what the Government promised during the election campaign. But that is typical of Tory policy—say one thing and do the complete opposite.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated. I will recognize the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard) on debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate being given this opportunity to speak in the House for the first time on behalf of the people of the riding of Roberval who elected me and who, I think, would be even more inclined to do so today, considering the approach our Government has taken to a situation created by the previous Government.

First of all, I can inform the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) that I was unaware there was a second in command with regard to Transport. I would put it down to inexperience, but in any case, that is not the position the Prime Minister asked me to take.

Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, address my comments more particularly to the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre), who agreed to stand in, at very short notice, for the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), and who did so with remarkable presence of mind. I would like to inform him that his assessment is as considerable as the time he had to prepare it.

I believe that although this Government has been remarkable in doing what it has done in two months, it should not be expected to do more than what the Hon. Member's Government did over a period of twenty years. As far as the tolls on the Champlain Bridge are concerned, I made it clear to the Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdonnais) yesterday, that in view of the administrative consistency we are trying to instill in the less than brilliant legacy we have here, that if this country's finances improve, we might be able to review a situation that the Hon. Member's Government did not see fit to change for twenty-five years. Yes, the situation has existed for twenty-five years, and the previous Government did not see fit to change the situation, so I think it would be somewhat pretentious to claim that we can do it in two months. I said it and I say it again, as far as tolls on the Champlain Bridge are concerned, this Government will assess the possibility for taking corrective action, always considering our financial situation.

About the Canadian Aviation Safety Board which is a matter of great concern to my hon. friend, he ought to know that we do not set up investigation offices as a matter of prestige but on the basis of operational needs. The services connected with the Canadian Aviation Safety Board are all located in the National Capital Region. The vast majority of agencies directly concerned are located there as well. The staff already consisted of people working in the region for Transport Canada. For all these reasons, it was and still is preferable to have the office in Hull, and I might remind the Opposition that Hull is located in Quebec, contrary to what I think the newspapers were saying or almost said.

I repeat, this is all part of the new framework we want to give this Government: the administrative consistency that will allow us to keep the promises we made that can be realized within a reasonable length of time, all of which we would have been unable to do if we had not acted to correct a situation that has been deteriorating for so long and which the previous Government should have corrected when it was time to do so.

My hon. friend has been referring constantly to VIA Rail. I might remind him, in connection with these "savage cuts"—quite an eloquent turn of phrase, I might add—that a committee was formed by the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to examine the issue of VIA Rail and will be expected to report. I can confirm what I said in Sherbrooke at a meeting where the Hon. Member was not invited, because we assumed that his constituents were very well informed, that they had told him about their concerns, and that the Hon. Member would surely take the trouble to pass their recommendations on to us. In this context, I said that I was in favour of restoring the Montreal-Atlantic route, and I want to repeat here in the House that if our present information is confirmed, I will make sure this is done, if it is in my power to do so.

You seem to be very worried about the Crow Rate. I would ask the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) to let us settle our own arguments. They will have their hands full with their own debate on the issue among the Members of the Opposition.

I admit I was somewhat taken aback by the vehemence of the comments made by the Member for Cape Breton-Richmond East (Mr. Dingwall). I wonder where he was when the former Government was administering this country. I wonder whether he was part of that Government that managed to accumulate this incredible, astronomical deficit we have now inherited. He should have realized that accumulating deficits could only lead to further expenditures which eventually must be answered for.

When your Government was in power, spending was done in such a haphazard fashion that all services in this country were in danger of being affected. I have been listening very carefully over the past few days to the questions being directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). I admit I am rather amazed that people should be surprised at a situation they have done nothing to prevent. The big thing now is the universality of social programs. Unemployment has been with us for longer than two months, much longer. You people were personally responsible for raising the number of unemployed workers in this country to 1,500,000, and you certainly cannot lay the blame at the doorstep of a Government that has been in power for only two months.

The country's economic situation is incredible, but here again, this did not happen in two months. A Government's financial credibility is not created in two months. It is based on situations that have been going on for years, and the previous Government did not have the political courage to deal with them when it was time to do so. I have the impression, especially since the statement by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), that you are really blaming us for having had the political courage to take the action required to deal with unemployment with our own money and not other people's money. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, it may be my inexperience because nine months ago, I was, like most Canadians, watching what the Government was doing and wondering when it was all going to end. Maybe that is why I fail to understand why they did not act far more quickly than we must do now to correct situations that have brought this country to the brink.

Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I travelled through Quebec, and though it is not typical of the situation in Canada as a whole, I did get a good idea of what Canadians expect of their transport facilities. I appreciate the vision offered earlier by my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), and I believe that the expectations of Canadians are along those lines. After realizing the seriousness of our present financial situation, I think we must have, and I did so emphatically to my fellow citizens and compatriots, made it clear that the Government had to rethink its expenditure plan, not to make cutbacks but to do what must be done within the transportation network. The needs are considerable and expectations are not necessarily the same. For instance, the Montreal area and the Gaspé do not have the same needs, so our response to those needs cannot be the same in each case, but we will have to respond with the funds at our disposal. In this connection, Quebecers, and I would extrapolate to include all Canadians, are now able to tell the Government they are prepared to support the redeployment of expenditures that is essential if we are to cope with all the needs identified within the transport sector.

I am surprised, in a way, when I analyze the total cutbacks for Transport: $287.1 million. The VIA Rail cuts, for instance, which were so vehemently criticized and commented upon, will be mostly obtained by reducing costs charged to VIA by the other two railway companies, by reducing operating costs, by a new investment strategy and by a new rate strategy. How can anyone say these measures as a whole will result in drastic cuts in service to Canadians? That is just not the case. I said earlier that we would be taking steps to restore the Atlantic service, that is, Montreal-Halifax, and also, if possible, the Toronto-Havelock and Edmonton-Vancouver routes.

Once again, within that structure, I think it is possible to do it, but certainly not in accordance with the financial criteria of the previous government, but rather by keeping in mind the funds at our disposal. It was easy enough to spend money every which way, so much so that they could at least have maintained the services needed by the people. The CN budget has also been reduced by $46.8 million, but that is just a bookeeping measure. For three years now the Auditor General has been asking the government to recover that money which was in fact an overpayment, but no action was taken. Capital projects will be rescheduled and that will enable us to save $51 million, not to mention $23.5 million for transportation services and $34.6 million in air transportation and air cargo taxes. I rather doubt that air travellers will go broke if we raise from 8 to 9 per cent the tax on airplane tickets, which amounts to about $1 or $2. I think the people who use that means of transportation can more easily afford it.

Mr. Speaker, given the current situation after two months, I think I was quite justified in welcoming the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I said earlier that a lot of political courage was and is still required to assume responsibility for setting our financial house in order. Members of the Opposition can say what they like, but we as a party firmly believe, as the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and others have stated, that we will be able to restore the economic climate needed in Canada and to provide the services we are expected to offer.

Mr. Speaker, how easy it is to turn a blind eye to reality, easier still than spending money. The most challenging endeavour is to get some sort of order in our expenditures and to do what the Canadian people have elected us to do. It was on September 4 that we heard the clearest response to our promises and commitments to rationalize public outlays in 1984. That is why we are here and we intend to continue along those lines.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Shefford.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have heard the speech of the Minister of State for Transport. In my opinion, his arguments are a distant echo of the remarks made by his colleague the Minister of Finance. But there is one thing which does not sound quite right; he talks about rationalizing, cutting and so on, but if the Minister of State had made that commitment to his electors prior to September 4, he might not have had the same response because Canadians are not stupid, Mr. Speaker. Throughout the summer, before September 4, the Minister of State and his fellow candidates did not say openly to the Canadian people that the axe would fall. That is not what they did. They made every promise imaginable, Mr. Speaker, but as soon as they were in office after resorting to dubious schemes, they made an about-turn and said: Listen, it is worse than we expected. Nobody believes that. Either the current Prime Minister ... He referred to the deficit in his statements, telling Canadians it was huge, even making it worse than it is. So why should the Minister of State for Transport and his colleagues now claim that they are surprised? Surprised by what? That is where the problem lies. It is a problem of credibility when they tell us now that they discovered something which they did not expect and that they are forced to renege on their election promises. That is where the government team has a problem of credibility, Mr. Speaker.

For instance, the Air Safety Board. The way the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard) sees it, everything must be centralized in Ottawa since everything else is already here. If that is so, Mr. Speaker, the same thing would be true of all government operations. If we follow the reasoning of the Minister of State, all government services would be in Ottawa so there would be no justification for decentralizing. That is it. The government could easily claim that everything had to be centralized in the national capital because it would be cheaper. But is it proper to think that the national capital region alone has the right to benefit from Canadian government jobs and everything that goes with them? That is the question. That would be true and logical if he is talking about a centralizing government in Ottawa. That is where his philosophy and ours differ because, as much as possible, we wanted to spread the benefits of government throughout the country.

An Hon. Member: It costs more.

Mr. Lapierre: Of course it costs more, as the Hon. Member opposite is saying. It costs more, but then should the residents of the Magdalen Islands be relocated? Should the Gaspé region be closed down? Is that what the Hon. Member is saying? That is not the philosophy we advocated as a government. Regional economic development, the potential of the various regions, I think the Minister of State sitting next to him could explain what a region is.

Mr. Speaker—

• (1710)

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. According to the Standing Orders with respect to this time period, it is a time for brief comments, questions and answers so that as many Members as possible can be heard. I would ask the Hon. Member to take that into account.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to recognize the Hon. Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard) in reply to the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

[Translation]

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) may be tired, but he caught absolutely nothing of what I said. What I said was that the choice of an enquiry office which is close to being a court of justice, is not made on the basis of Montreal or Hull, but on the basis of where it is operational. What were the reasons given by his Government for locating such an office in Montreal? I enquired. The answer was: Montreal has the facilities for the air industry. In my humble opinion, the air facilities of a city are not enhanced by the presence of any court of justice. I was told: It is a matter objectiveness. The court must be kept at arm's length from the Department of Transport. Why is that? A court does not get recognition in terms of its distance from a department. It gets recognition for its expertise, the quality of its finding on the issues that are referred to it. If the court had been in Montreal, would they have said it was not impartial because it was close to Air Canada? That has nothing to do with it. Essentially, my view is that the previous government should have used that same kind of energy in finding the real reasons that could have put people to work. We have a $35 billion deficit, besides those million and a half unemployed. What did that solve? The deficit, in terms of jobs? On this side of the House we have been lambasted for the past two months. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) for a question.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have two brief questions to put to the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard). I am sorry I was not here earlier so as perhaps to have had the opportunity to question the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski).

In his remarks, the Minister referred to the cuts in VIA Rail and, quite rightly, pointed out that not all of them were on the capital expenditure side. Some of the cuts are to be made because they are listed in the document produced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I was wondering whether the Minister of State for Transport could give this House any assurances as to the fate of the VIA Rail repair shop scheduled to be located in Winnipeg? Is he able to assure us that that project will go forward?

While he is answering that, he might also comment on whether or not he has been able to take an interest, and if he has not, will he, in the whole question of car inspection, public safety and the plans of the CPR to replace trained car inspectors with people from the running trades?

[Translation]

Mr. Bouchard: In answer to the Hon. Member I would suggest that on the first question, actually, the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) refers to a rescheduling of investments in VIA Rail, and this, we are now considering in that context, also within the terms of reference of the committee created by my hon. colleague. The terms of reference of that committee provide among other things for an assessment of the relevancy of those facilities, and on the basis of the report of the said committee, that is its contents and recommendations, we will take the appropriate course of action.

As far as the Hon. Member's second question is concerned, I would prefer, if I may, that the answer be provided by the Minister of Transport. I think he is more at home on that aspect of the question than I am.

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I want to follow up on the question on the VIA Rail cut-backs, particularly the capital expenditure cut-backs. Can the Minister indicate whether that will have any effect on possible future contracts for doubledecker rail cars? Secondly, along the same line, can he indicate what this Government's intention is regarding the development of doubledecker cars for use on VIA?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, in line with my earlier answer, the overall consideration of the investment in VIA Rail comes within the terms of reference of the committee set up this week, and the answer to your question could be within the purview of the recommendations that will either be accepted or turned down by the Minister of Transport.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): End of questions and comments.

[English]

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly glad to see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) here this afternoon because I think they can make good use of many of the remarks I am going to make. These are issues which have affected the northwestern area of British Columbia for a long time.

First, I want to touch on what the Minister had to say regarding the possible joint federal-provincial agreement on the Yellowhead highway. I hope that his remarks this afternoon will apply to Yellowhead 16 between Prince George and Prince Rupert. I would like to spend a few moments commenting on a major transportation bottleneck starting to raise its ugly head on the north coast of British Columbia. It arises from an agreement made on April 18, 1977, between Ottawa and Victoria, an agreement which has never really been lived up to by British Columbia. In fact, it has been broken in Clause 4(2), as I will point out in a moment. The docket number is 104897, and it was signed by Mr. Bennett and Mr. Lang some seven years ago now. Clause 4(2) says that the Province agrees that in accepting the subsidy from Canada, as provided herein for ferry and coastal freight and passenger service in British Columbia coastal waters, it will assure reasonable and adequate service and appropriate supervision thereof. I think the background is well known by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), but there is a very appropriate quote taken from a Library of Parliament study I had done some time ago. It says that the reasons for withdrawing the subsidy are cited in the following. Many years ago we had Northland Navigation which had a number of coastal freighters that operated in and out of the smaller coastal communities, out of Prince Rupert and down the coast, and provided both passenger and freight transportation. I think this quotation indicates what the Government of that time thought would occur but of course never did occur. It says:

However, Transport Minister Otto Lang followed up by refuting that the withdrawal of the subsidy would either reduce services to northern B.C. communities or distort rates. The decision to lift the aid, he said, was taken after talks with the B.C. Government and various shipping companies in the province had revealed that the services would not be impaired by this action. These companies were interested in expanding their operations in northern B.C. he added. The removal of the subsidy would end what he described as 'present inequities,' and put non-subsidized carrier in better competitive positions to serve these communities.

What has happened, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Minister is well aware, is that the service between Prince Rupert and Port Hardy is now going to be cut down to once every two weeks. That means everyone in northwestern British Columbia who wants to go to Vancouver will have to drive 1,000 miles. That is 1,000 miles back and forth, particularly in the winter when the new twice a month scheduling is going to come in. In fact, as my colleague from Comox-Powell River knows very well, it eliminates regular ferry routing in and out of the community of Bella Bella and the linkage of course to Bella Coola and other communities.

We, and the Minister of Transport, have to look carefully at what the Alaskans are doing. They are bringing their state ferry service down into Hyder, a community of 200 on the north coast of British Columbia. They have recognized the economic viability of bringing their ferry service in to allow loopings for transport. I am glad to see the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan) here because it is important that he be involved in studying how this agreement, signed by Canada and the Province of British Columbia, should be renegotiated. We should have looping ferry service going from Stewart to Kincolith to Port Simpson and back into Prince Rupert. We should maintain the barge service which regularly goes from Prince Rupert to Masset, providing an opportunity for propane and other commodities to be moved without having to have the driver and the tractor on board. You can put a drop trailor on and move it to the Queen Charlotte Islands. We must also maintain the regular passenger service between Prince Rupert and the Queen Charlotte Islands.

The federal Government, through this agreement, has now given over $70 million to Bill Bennett. Bill Bennett is shuffling that money into general revenues. This year, in excess of $14 million goes to the Province of B.C. The B.C. Government is on the record as saying that the whole cost, including depreciation on the vessels, salaries, and everything you can imagine, is $10 million. They are actually making a net benefit. Ottawa now pays entirely for the north coast service, and Bennett takes a $4 million cut and puts that into south coast services.

If a community like Hyder with 200 people can have the Alaska state ferry service regularly, why cannot a community like Stewart, with 2,000 people, be hooked into the system? Other smaller communities could be hooked into the system. The little passenger vessels from Port Rupert out of Port Simpson and Kincolith are unsafe. I can say quite honestly in the House that I fear there will be drownings. That vessel is not large enough. We have just lost a number of lives. It is endangering the lives of those people who must take those routes.

I know the Minister is seriously interested in this. He said earlier today that he is going to be meeting with officials in B.C. to deal with it. The clause of which the Minister should make use from docket 104897 is Clause 4(2). The Province of British Columbia is simply not living up to the original agreement, and that contract and clause can and should be reopened for negotiation.

My second point is in terms of VIA Rail. As the Minister knows, we have seen an erosion over a number of years to the point where now fewer and fewer people take VIA Rail from Prince Rupert to small communities such as Usk or Cedarvale. There is really no other way either for freight or for passengers to get in and out of those communities. It is a real, identifiable need. However, it has become a self-fulfilling prophecy. When you downgrade the service and make it less accessible, people will find other ways. If one can only catch the train Tuesdays, Thursdays and Sundays, and one wants to buy groceries on Wednesdays, one must find some other way. Over time, the number of people using the service naturally declines. Then VIA can say that this route no longer has the kind of passenger utilization that makes it a viable service. That, of course, leads to greater and greater cuts.

I received a letter in March of this year from the Minister's Department saying that, because of Expo '86, the new prototype equipment may well be identified for use on the Prince George to Prince Rupert run. That is one of the most beautiful areas of the country. It has great potential for hooking into the kind of offshore tourist traffic that we have historically seen in Banff and Jasper. We could get the type of routings which would allow people to take circle tours. They could take VIA to Prince Rupert, whether from Edmonton or from Montreal. Having arrived there, they could take the Alaska state ferry service or the B.C. coastal ferry service. All of these services are interlinked. As one part of the over-all transport sector erodes, we lose the opportunity to upgrade other parts of that sector to bring more growth and tourists to northern British Columbia, an area which has been identified by many studies as having great potential in that respect.

My third point this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is with regard to the Prince Rupert elevator. The Minister of Transport has already responded to the subject today, but I would like to give a very brief overview of what has happened in Prince Rupert. In 1979, the Minister signed what I believe he felt in good faith was a very good agreement. Ultimately, the people of Canada put about $30 million into the infrastructure costs at Wrigley Island for the new grain elevator, which is now very near completion. However, Prince Rupert Grain I has a very unique ability to load very rapidly a lot of the small Pacific Rim freighters that come in. That is not to say that the new elevator cannot do that. That is a very popular route for vessels from China and a lot of other Pacific Rim countries. That is not a state of the art elevator, but it can unload boxcars. In recent years it has set records, year after year, moving more than 1 million metric tonnes at a time. Last year it moved 15 per cent of the West Coast grain that was moved out of this country.

I am glad to see the Minister conferring with the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). I am also glad to see the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) listening. This is important.

Mr. Mazankowski: This is more attention than you have ever had.

Mr. Fulton: In 1979, the Wheat Board identified $600 million in lost offshore sales because of bottlenecks in our grain system.

Mr. Mazankowski: We fixed that.

Mr. Fulton: That is right. The Minister did a good job. The Prime Minister should know that. The only Tory who could ever get elected in Prince Rupert is the Minister of Transport, but fortunately he is going to stay in Vegreville.

That same year, as the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board will know, $100 million in surge capacity was identified as needed for Prince Rupert. That money was starting to be put in place. I agree that the potential for the old elevator for surge capacity is limited. The Minister has already written to me about that and I recognize it. However, there is a real social and export need in terms of the good faith of the people of Prince Rupert. They did not expect to lose any jobs out of this. They expected to gain some. As it stands now, of the 100 grain jobs in Prince Rupert, we lose 75. That is a net loss of about $6 million a year to the City of Prince Rupert. To a small community, that is a huge loss. To small business the roll-over dollars are very high. For about $25 million the docking and galleries can be repaired. That would not make it a state of the art elevator, but it would be a good functioning system.

Farmers make 30 cents more a bushel shipping out of Prince Rupert. Small freighters save 500 navigation miles each way sailing from Prince Rupert to the Orient rather than from Vancouver. The Orient is very rapidly becoming our principal trade partner in terms of grain movement. Therefore, there are good, sound reasons why this elevator should remain open, hopefully with two shifts, maybe with three. I see the Minister of Transport and the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board smiling. I know they are going to move on it very soon. We have got it. That is good.

Mr. Mayer: I did not say that. You were just getting to the best point to be made. Keep going.

Mr. Fulton: That is right. We can move some pelletized material. We can move some alfalfa and some of those more exotic feed stocks through there. I still think—and I think the Ministers will agree if they look at the 1979 report of the Wheat Board—that there is potential to keep it going. The Tories believe in competition. It may well be that Prince Rupert would be better off with some competition. I may not want Cargill or some of the other heavies in there, but needless to say, I do not think the consortium has a gilt-edged requirement for having a monopoly on the part of Prince Rupert in terms of grain sales and movement.

The federal Government used to own that elevator. I must remind the Minister of Transport that he gave it to the corsortium for a buck. That is a pretty good deal for a $50 million elevator. Prince Rupert lost 75 jobs out of the deal. I know that the Minister will deal with it expeditiously.

My fourth point is with regard to the Digby Island airport. When you buy a ticket from CP Air that says you are going to Prince Rupert, you land on an island in the middle of the Hecate Strait. You get off to find there is nothing there and you wait for half an hour. You get on a privately operated bus on Transport Canada land. You drive down to a landing wharf operated by the Port of Prince Rupert. You then get on a ferry owned by the city, and the driver comes around and is forced, because of corporate regulations, to extort $6 from you. You have flown on that plane supposedly to go to Prince Rupert but you have to go through all this hassle.

I think the Minister of Transport needs to look at the brilliant options I have brought forward, such as for Transport Canada to operate some kind of hovercraft or ferry system that could be used for search and rescue. That is one module option. The other option, with the possibility of the LNG at Port Simpson, is for the Minister to move some money for the connection of Digby Island on to the peninsula and back across the Rapids and into the City of Prince Rupert. These are options that are not too expensive and would provide for greater and easier access between the city and Digby Island. Things are coming to a crunch. The ferry is wearing out. People's patience is getting thin. Every year when we use the system it has gone up another buck. Pretty soon it will be $200 to fly from Prince Rupert to Vancouver and $300 to take the ferry.

Mr. Forrestall: We may never see you again.

Mr. Fulton: We need to move on this. I know the Department of Transport has a responsibility in terms of finding some options and participating with the City of Prince Rupert, the Province of B.C., and some of the industries that are planning on coming into the area, so that we can get it off the ground.

Now let me deal with airports. Let me name some of the airports I have to fly in and out of, such as Sandspit, Prince Rupert, Terrace, Smithers, Watson Lake and Whitehorse. All these require some kind of additional navigational aids. Terrace is the most dangerous right now in that the number of days when jets cannot land there is very very high compared with any other airport in Canada. It is very important in terms of safety that there be additional navigational aids. The Sandspit airport and the Watson Lake airport are just long enough for Boeing-737 landings. The Prince Rupert airport is a large airport. It does not have great difficulties with navigational aid problems. Certainly Smithers, Terrace, Sandspit and Watson Lake require upgrading.

Next is search and rescue. The Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence are hopefully going to provide fairly shortly two new 400-class cutters, one for the Queen Charlottes and one to operate out of Bella Bella. I am sure the Minister is aware of the most recent loss of life, which was partly tied into a complex jungle of mistakes that occurred as a result of weather reporting systems, some of which were off the air and some of which were not reporting fully. One can only surmise from talking to a lot of fishermen who knew the fishermen who drowned that some of them were among the most careful fishermen that ever cruised the coast of British Columbia and who would never have gone out in the kinds of wind and weather that occurred. I know the need is there for a couple of 400-class cutters, particularly for the Hecate Strait, to a certain extent the Dixon entrance and the west coast of the Charlottes, but also going down into the Queen Charlotte Sound. There is a real, identified need for that size and class of vessel. The "123" operating out of Prince Rupert cannot go out in anything other than a light chop. The Derby is large enough to go out.

There is also the potential for the early signing of an agreement with the State of Alaska to combine our helicopter efforts by moving a helicopter from Comox either to Masset, where we have a DND base and from where a helicopter could operate, or out of Prince Rupert. Again we have some search capacity with Buffaloes and other fixed-wing aircraft. But what we really require is rescue capacity. We require helicopter rescue capacity. Most recently, George MacDonald, head of the Museum of Man in Ottawa, was rescued by the U.S. Coast Guard. The U.S. Coast Guard helicopters came and lifted the people out of the water before they drowned. In almost all situations now in the Dixon Entrance, the Hecate Strait and on the west coast of the Charlottes we rely upon the Americans. I think it is about time we moved one of those five choppers from Vancouver Island on to the north coast. This is identified in various transport reports and recommendations. At the same time we should rubberize and upgrade the Coast Guard helicopter that operates out of Prince Rupert which is not now able to rescue but is simply capable of search capacity.

I think I have covered a few things in terms of transport. I notice there is a little time left to me. I would like for a moment to come back to the question of marine transport. I think the Minister, in seizing himself of this matter in the next week or so, needs to know how to deal with Alex Fraser and Mr. Bennett on this issue. It is a long-festering one and one that I think has a solution. You cannot base the statutory mileage rate from Port Hardy to Prince Rupert, which is what the subsidizing formula is based on, and say that you can still consider it a highway if it operates only once every two weeks. It is a damn poor highway if that happens. If you closed the highway between here and Toronto and had it open only once every two weeks, it would not be much of a highway. We have to use that same argument with the Government in Victoria, that if the formula is based on statute miles between Port Hardy and Prince Rupert, then you have to operate it as a highway linkage. Rather than forcing people to drive one thousand miles from Prince Rupert to Vancouver under very treacherous conditions, people should have access to that highway both for freight and for safe passenger movement. We should have a vessel moving out of Prince Rupert that links Kitimat to Prince Rupert to Kincolith to Port Simpson and to Stewart so we can get those little circles of tourist and localized movement that is safer than the kind of operation we now have. I am thinking particularly of the vessel now on the Prince Rupert-Port Simpson-Kincolith run which is totally inadequate. The previous vessel was barely adequate. This one is endangering lives. If the Government in Victoria proceeds to cut the Masset to Prince Rupert barge service, it will mean all of the explosives, propane and so on, will have to be put on the dedicated passenger run between Prince Rupert and the Queen Charlottes, and the whole system will have to be cleaned up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like to hear questions and comments now.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I am certain that my colleague has experienced a number of problems with civil aviation. I would like to run through a couple. Would the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) be prepared to indicate that he is hearing these problems from people in the riding and indicate that he would like to see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) do something about them?

First is the example of the Dubin Commission gone mad. I am sure the Hon. Member for Skeena has had cases where RCMP officers in pursuit of the objectives of the Dubin report go to the local airport and check to see whether a pilot who has just come in has his log book. The individual ends up being fined $100 because he does not have the journey log book in the aircraft or he does not happen to have his pilot's licence on him. Fines are occurring in situations where the Dubin Commission has gone mad.

The Hon. Member might also have had a second situation where requirements for instructors at flying schools in his riding have been boosted to the point where they are not quite sure whether they should give the students 40, 50, or 60 hours, because they, the instructors, may wind up losing their licences or having them downgraded. The largest number of accidents in the flying business happen in the private sector from continued flight in bad weather. They have absolutely nothing or very little to do that can be demonstrated with additional serious upgrading of instruction. Maybe the Hon. Member could comment on that.

Mr. Fulton: I will try to be brief, Mr. Speaker. I think the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) knows that I spend a great deal of my time flying around in Beavers, Otters, Geese, and various other kinds of aircraft. I am abundantly aware of the difficulties that pilots, private and commercial, are running into as a result of the bureaucratization within the aviation industry. I agree with the Hon. Member that there needs to be some big scissors taken to the kind of bureaucracy that is applied to many commercial and private fliers. At the same time, it is very appropriate that the Minister should look carefully at how to ensure that state of the art safety procedures are in place. I think all aircraft, both private and public, should carry ELTs. It is a very important step which has to be taken. I am thinking in terms of places such as Dease Lake. The federal Department of Transport should put forward the very limited number of dollars required to install directional aid beacons that provide return signals for aircraft, such as the one I was on during the election campaign. We got lost flying over the Tuya River, trying to fly from Dease Lake to Atlin. We just simply flew into a cloud, not knowing where we would come out. There are positive steps in terms of safety which the Department of Transport can take. However, providing more bureaucracy for private and commercial fliers is not really the way to go.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some reluctance because I think there is something in the tradition that once one has been defrocked, one should not write about what went on in the seminary. However, I should like to follow the example of my successor who maintained his continuing interest in the area of transportation.

This resolution is targeted at a very important question, that is, the impact of very severe and destructive transportation cuts on regional economic growth and development in the country. We have seen time and time again total insensitivity on the part of Conservative speakers to that fundamental issue. They have decided en masse, as if there were some kind of large Kool-Aid tank in Georgetown from which they are all drinking, to worship at the shrine of the deficit cut. It has been raised to the level of theology. It has become a matter of utmost and critical importance to them, almost as if the search for the Holy Grail was insignificant compared with this great magical search for the deficit cut, as if all will be solved by reducing the deficit.

The fact that this is challenged by a number of quite sound economic analysts does not seem to bother them very much. In their haste to cut the deficit, they are reaching into programs which are of vital importance to a wide variety of cities, towns and regions throughout Canada. This totally escapes them. They are so totally preoccupied with the kind of theology we have heard, that they are prepared to sacrifice the economic security, stability and potential of Atlantic Canada, the northern regions of Canada and western Canada.

I want to talk particularly about my own region. The best way to express what westerners think of the position taken by the new Government, which they rewarded with a great deal of election trust—and there is no doubt about it—would be to quote from an editorial appearing in the Manitoba Co-operator, which represents the largest number of farmers in the Province of Manitoba. The November 8 edition contained a blank message which read, "Dear Brian: Just thought we would drop a note to you and your Members of Cabinet to say thanks for nothing". It continued in the same vein to say that westerners placed a certain amount of trust in the promises and commitments of the Government and looked vainly in the Throne Speech for some indication that those promises would be fulfilled. As the editorial said, they came up with nothing. There was nothing to respond to their needs. There was nothing directed toward them. Perhaps the greatest disappointment was in the area of transportation, the area where in some ways the most grand and eloquent promises were made. They were to freeze the rates. It is now November 21, and we have not seen hide nor hair nor sign of any indication that the Government is prepared to make any move in areas affecting the interests of farmers as they were promised by the Conservative Party. I am not saying that they were right, but that was their promise. If we begin to wonder why at times people become somewhat cynical, I think we have to look at the fact that a bald-faced, straightforward commitment was made in the famous Prince Albert statement. People have been looking in vain somewhere in the nooks and crannies of the various speeches, yet all they have heard is the Gregorian chant of Members of Parliament saying, "We must cut the deficit". That is their only answer to all that ails the world.

An Hon. Member: What is your answer?

Mr. Axworthy: We have answers and we will talk about them. In fact, we had answers, many of which have now been put on hold, have been frozen, are under study or under review. If they had been allowed to go ahead, they would have had the kind of economic impact about which we are talking.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the Hon. Member wants to read the Prince Albert statement, he will realize that several things have been fulfilled already, and we have barely been in office two months. If he wants to talk about what went on in Prince Albert, he should read the full statement. Let us get some balance into what is being said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Minister that that is debate.

Mr. Axworthy: When and if the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) is prepared to make a speech in the House, we will be glad to respond to him. Other than that, I think he should desist from using points of orders for frivolous reasons. That is what he was just doing. It was not a point of order.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order.

Mr. Axworthy: And he should not be so sensitive.

Mr. Mayer: If the Hon. Member is suggesting that he is prepared to give up his time so that I can make a speech, I would be more than happy to accommodate him. If that is what he is saying, I would be more than happy to do it right now.

Mr. Axworthy: Obviously the Hon. Minister is as effective at getting his name on a list as he is at defending the interests of Manitoba in Cabinet. It also amounts to nothing, as the editorial indicated.

Let us return to the point under discussion. We have not heard much about transportation other than from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). However, we have heard a lot about deficit cutting.

We have only 14 minutes remaining and there are many other areas which I would like to cover, but I should like to indicate that we in western Canada have been awaiting with some expectation an indication from the Government as to when it intends to bring forward legislation dealing with the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, so that $400 million or $500 million of necessary funds will be put into the hands of farmers within the next weeks or months. My Party has promised that it will be committed to letting that legislation go through within one day if the Government would only take some initiative and do it. However, we have heard nothing from them.

Mr. Mayer: You were in power for four years and you did nothing.

Mr. Axworthy: I think the Hon. Member should try to get to Cabinet meetings more often to put his proposals on the table. He should not be spending all his time stargazing with commissioners from the Canadian Wheat Board and causing problems out there. Why does he not get back to Cabinet and do something useful? We are awaiting a stabilization fund. Farmers and western Canadians are waiting for it, yet the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board is travelling around and speculating about agriculture in the year 4000.

Mr. Mayer: What did you do when you were Minister? You showed how much you knew about farming. You did not know the front end from the back end of a plough.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I hope you bring the Minister to order. He should learn, if he is going to be a Minister of the Crown, not to be too sensitive.

An Hon. Member: When you were insensitive you ended up with 40 Members.

Mr. Axworthy: Oh, we have them riled up now. I hear them baying, cackling, groaning and moaning. They do not like to have their unfulfilled promises thrown back at them. They recognize that every minute, hour and day which goes by there is another Canadian saying, "There goes another promise down the drain which they cannot fulfil and will never fulfil". That is the problem with Conservatives. They are seeing their promises falling like autumn leaves.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I should like to continue with the discussion of transportation, if I might. The fact of the matter is that we must also look at the kinds of initiatives in transportation which were under way. I will talk about VIA Rail for a moment. A great deal has been said about it this afternoon. What have we actually received?

Mr. Forrestall: Let's talk about it.

Mr. Axworthy: Let us deal in factual terms. We have had the setting up of another task force to study the problem, and a $93 million cut. That is the sum total of actions on the part of the Government in terms of VIA Rail. What was under way already was a major capital project, which committed $200 million over a five-year period to the modernization and re-equipping of VIA Rail. That was put on hold, that is the unstated message. We had already committed money to the establishment of four maintenance bases in Halifax, Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg. We know why they would not stop the one in Toronto; we know where the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is from. The reason why those maintenance bases were absolutely essential to the modernization of VIA Rail was that that was the way to bring down substantially the maintenance costs, which occupy about 40 per cent of the operating cost of VIA Rail. Those maintenance bases were already contracted and under way. This Government has put them in the deep freeze. As a result, the ability of VIA Rail to save substantial amounts of money on its operating budget have thereby been frustrated until we get to the commission's study.

That was not something that had to be frozen or held. It was a clear-cut investment in modernization to bring about a substantial reduction in the cost to the taxpayer. The Minister of Finance talks about bringing the cost of Government down, but what does he do? His Minister of Transport takes an action that will keep the cost way up. Do you call that good economics? Of all those new back-benchers who have come here waiting to save the world I ask whether cancelling an investment that will save money on operating costs is good economics.

We also talked about new equipment. The Minister of Transport might be good enough to confirm this because he has seen the document. Under way already was a plan to provide new locomotives for the Atlantic region. That has been put on hold. There was a plan to convert all the cars on the Atlantic track region to electrical upgrading. That was a commitment—

Mr. Forrestall: That was pie in the sky, and you know it.

Mr. Axworthy: That was no pie in the sky. It was part of the capital budget of VIA Rail. I challenge the Member opposite and the Minister to show that that was pie in the sky. That was part of the capital budget of VIA Rail until it was put on hold by this Minister of Transport.

Mr. Forrestall: For what year?

Mr. Axworthy: Beginning this year. In addition, we had reintroduced the new service between Winnipeg and Edmonton. We had made a commitment and a decision on the reintroduction of the route between Edmonton and Vancouver. To provide for new equipment on that, we had leased new Amtrak trains, which are presently on the tracks operating between Winnipeg and Edmonton. I invite the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) to ride on it some time. That is the way of testing the application, of developing new equipment under contract with Bombardier on which construction can start next year. I do not know where that is going. I strongly recommend to Members opposite who are vitally interested in the future of VIA Rail that they get to their Minister of Transport at the first opportunity in caucus and ask him to go ahead with the Amtrak experiment to see whether it is valid, then purchase the cars and get them on the track. That was already under way.

Furthermore, we had committed a major investment to the Cancar factory in the Thunder Bay constituency so that Canada will develop its own technology for short trains. We had an agreement between Bombardier and Cancar to develop that new research and development at the Thunder Bay plant so that we would have a new form of Canadian-made trains under development. That has been put on hold.

They cannot get up in this House and say, "We are the Party of progress", when decisions that have already been initiated have been put in the deep freeze, put on hold. There is nothing wrong with another action committee to study it. That is okay, but why frustrate initiatives already under way? Why delay? Why put back? Why retard? What is the value of that, especially when it comes to the vital question which every Conservative Member has spoken about, the need to get costs down? That was the intended purpose, to bring costs down.

Let me move to a different subject, the whole question of how we stimulate growth and competition. I agree with the Minister of Transport. Every Minister of Transport has said that the transport of people and goods is vital to the economic health of this country. There is no question that what is very important is that we establish a way of getting higher levels of productivity and lower costs.

To initiate that, last year we introduced a new airline policy to deregulate the airlines, to bring new competition into the system and to provide higher levels of productivity. From every statement that I have read, the Minister of Transport has agreed to go along with that policy. He is in agreement with the thrust of that airline policy which we established last year. I will take him at his word.

What disturbs me is that last year we had also started the deregulation of the trucking industry. We had unanimous agreement with all the provinces at a federal-provincial conference last spring. Every single province agreed that we undertake major changes and reforms in trucking regulations to change the onus of proof so there would not be that ability to frustrate any regulatory change. We had instructed public servants to prepare a plan of action that was to come before a meeting on September 15, where it would be ratified and the new regulations could be put in place.

What happened? The meeting of September 15 has come and gone. All we have, to quote from my friends in the Manitoba Co-Operator, is nothing. We had made a decision. We had an agreement from the provinces. We had developed a system that would have substantially brought down the costs of interprovincial and intercontinental trucking. In its economic statement, this Government lauded the concept of deregulation and more competition. However, it has put on hold a decision that had already been negotiated and arrived at and was already to be implemented.

How do you decide whether this Government is serious in its commitment to the Canadian poeple or economic reform and adjustment when it already had a ready-made package handed to it? It was a gift to them, something they could have put into place right away. For reasons that maybe are academic preoccupations, they have to restudy everything. They have put it on hold. As a result, I am afraid that it will become unravelled. We will find that the agreement we have already received will not be implemented. We will have set the clock backwards in enabling the federal and provincial governments to undertake an effective form of cost reduction at higher levels of productivity.

Some of my colleagues have pointed out that we want to improve our export capability and our cost performance by reducing the cost of transportation. That is a very laudable, very important, objective. What has this Government done in its economic statement? It has added close to $700 million in hidden taxation, mostly on the backs of small business people and particularly in the realm of transportation. While we were attempting to get costs down through deregulation, the Minister of Transport has added substantially to the user costs in our airports. He has brought in airport fees and is now talking about imposing fees on the transportation of cargo.

That is a good bureaucratic answer, but what really amazes me is that when the Minister of Transport was occupying the role of critic on this side of the House, in fact as recently as three months ago, he was arguing for a major change in airport pricing so that we could start decentralizing the ownership and control of airports. That was an important objective.

What does he do instead? He raises the cost. As a result, he is going to provide a countervailing force to the dergulatory impact that we have by increasing costs both to the passenger and to the cargo user.

By what form of logic does a government that is attempting to bring about a transportation system, which is a service industry to enable passengers and shippers to move quicker and faster and at lower costs and therefore expand the marketability, increase the cost of transportation by adding a user fee? That is not good economic sense.

Once again we are filled with a series of contradictions, wrapped in an enigma, all sort of bubbled up in a pile of rhetoric about the great new economic revolution that the Conservative Party is about to perpetrate upon the Canadian people. Instead, they are victimizing them. They are adding to their costs. They are providing a dampening effect on the ability of the business community to have lower cost transportation and, therefore, providing a reduction of growth, not an enhancement of growth.

That is the kind of economic analysis that Members opposite should apply, rather than simply standing in Pavlovian fashion worshipping at the Minister of Finance's icon that deficit cutting is the only thing that counts. They should peruse that document and realize that there are substantial fallacies in their economic analysis. Nowhere is that more important and more clear than in the area of transportation.

POINT OF ORDER

QUORUMS IN HOUSE COMMITTEES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do so somewhat reluctantly. I feel it is important to raise in the House at the earliest possible moment a matter that I believe is of considerable importance. It may in fact constitute a grievance. It may even be a question of privilege at some future date.

As you know, Sir, it has been the practice in the House of Commons to establish the need for the presence of both government and opposition in order to conduct business. I recognize that it may not be absolutely necessary under certain circumstances, but the practice has always been that, for the business of the House to be conducted properly and adequately, there would be representation both from the government and from the opposition at the start of the business of the day. I suggest this practice has been a good practice, one that has resulted in a harmonious relationship in the House of Commons which in turn has resulted in the House being able to deal with questions in a way which brings about their resolution.

At the moment, there appears to be a deviation from that practice, if not in the House itself, in the committees of the House. I would ask Mr. Speaker if he would consider motions that were put in committee—given that the committees have the right to establish their own rules of procedure, they must do so within the generally accepted framework of the rules of procedure of the House of Commons—that have resulted in the establishment of a practice which could disrupt the orderly procedures both in the House and in the committee. In a number of committees, decisions have been made by the Government members that a quorum shall be established based not on the normal practice of representation from both sides, but—

Mr. Speaker: May I be clear that the Hon. Member is in fact raising a question relating to practices in committees? Does the point of order relate to that issue?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am raising the practices that have been pursued in the past.

Mr. Speaker: In committee?

Mr. Deans: The committees are an emanation of the House. The committees operate by the same rules as the House of Commons. They do not set separate rules. They may set with unanimous consent, as can the House, different rules, practices and procedures, but only with unanimous consent.

I suggest that what is happening is going to cause grievous difficulty not only in the committee but in the House. All I am asking is that there be some attempt made to ensure that the practices that have been followed, both in the House of Commons with regard to quorum and in the past in committee with regard to quorum, be followed during this Parliament. At the moment I have reason to believe that is not the case.

Mr. Speaker: The Member may have reason to believe that is not the case. The Member is an experienced parliamentarian. He knows the traditions of the House are that the Speaker has no right to intervene in procedures or decisions taken in committee. The committees are masters of their own affairs. The Hon. Member knows well enough that the issue that he is raising may at first blush be an issue that the procedural committee or a committee on reform of the House may want to consider.

The rulings in the past with regard to these questions have been very clear. The committees are master of their own destiny. An appeal from a decision taken in a committee shall be made in the committee to the chair of the committee and, if necessary, resolved in the committee, but cannot be brought before the House. The Speaker has no authority to decide on something that has happened in a committee unless it is reported by the committee in its report to the House. Only in that circumstance does the Speaker have any capacity to deal with a question or a grievance or a point of order that the committee has dealt with. I think the Hon. Member knows that.

I regret to find that, while he may have a point of serious concern, and I appreciate the point he is making, I cannot at the moment find that it is a point within the grounds of a point of order in the House. I therefore think that the matter should end at this point. However, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain may have a supplementary comment. That is certainly my current view and I am prepared to rule in that manner unless the Hon. Member has something else to say.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I do not deny for a moment the validity of the comments you have made; neither do I question them. My concern is that I may well find it necessary to attempt to raise a question of privilege.

My problem is that the practice that is being followed will cause disruption in the House of Commons as it will cause disruption in committees. That worries me. I raise the matter since it is of worry to me and I alert the House to the fact that there are problems in committees.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should leave the matter as I indicated earlier. I feel that a point of order for the purposes of the House has not been established.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WAYS AND MEANS

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act and Related Statutes, laid upon the Table on Thursday, November 8, 1984, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mrs. McDougall moved that Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, laid upon the Table on Thursday, November 8, 1984, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mrs. McDougall moved that Bill C-8, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act, laid upon the Table of the House on Thursday, November 8, 1984, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

EXCISE ACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Excise Act, laid upon the Table of the House on November 8, 1984, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should explain something to the House. There is a technical difficulty with proceeding with the Bill regarding this matter because the recommendation for the Bill has yet to be printed in the Order Paper. I believe the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) knows the problem. That is why we will proceed to the next Order of the Day.

• (1115)

CUSTOMS ACT—CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff, laid upon the Table on Thursday, November 8, 1984, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mrs. McDougall moved that Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS INTERPRETATION ACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that a Ways and Means motion with respect to the interpretation of Canada's International Conventions relating to Income Tax and the Acts implementing such Conventions, laid upon the Table on Thursday, November 8, 1984, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mrs. McDougall moved that Bill C-10, an Act respecting the interpretation of Canada's International Conventions relating to Income Tax and the Acts implementing such Conventions, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The motion is to refer the Bill to the standing committee. However, there have been discussions between House Leaders with respect to this legislation and it has been agreed that the Bill would be dealt with in Committee of the Whole in the House. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you seek the consent of the House for the amendment to the motion at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for Bill C-4 to be referred to Committee of the Whole?

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we agree. We have no objection to the Bill being referred to a Committee of the Whole or to considering all stages today. There may, however, be someone on our side who will be speaking to the Bill.

• (1120)

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I would like at the very outset to express my appreciation to my House Leader, as well as to the respective House Leaders of the two Opposition Parties, and particularly to the agricultural spokesmen of the two Opposition Parties, for their understanding and co-operation.

It is with concern for a group of financially hard-hit farmers that I wish to speak briefly this morning. Those particular farmers are tobacco growers and their plight is a common one. They are caught in a very significant cost-price squeeze between rapidly rising input costs, dramatically lower prices and some very significant tobacco acreage cuts. As a result of this, tobacco growers have studied their marketing situation. They have assessed their options and have approached the federal Government with a request. It is in response to their request that I am introducing today for second reading Bill C-4, a Bill to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

This piece of legislation would simply amend the Act to include tobacco as a commodity which may be regulated by supply-management provisions. I want to stress that it is, however, only a facilitating piece of legislation. While the amendments would not immediately provide for a national supply management agency for tobacco, they would allow growers to explore the possibility of establishing such an agency.

Specifically, the legislation would designate tobacco as a farm product for which an agency could fix and determine the quantity of product which could be marketed in interprovincial or export trade circles. The Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act currently restricts the application of supply management to eggs and poultry and their products. At the present time, tobacco production is regulated by provincial marketing organizations and tobacco prices are negotiated between those provincial agencies and the buyers. However, tobacco growers want the legislated ability to work together on a national basis and to act in a unified manner. Surely they are entitled to the same rights as egg and poultry producers if they so wish.

It is well known, Mr. Speaker, that tobacco production was once one of the most lucrative sources of farm income not only in the Province of Ontario but, indeed, in the four other producing provinces in Canada. However, that is no longer the case. The domestic market for tobacco has been steadily declining while production and input costs have continued to increase. Domestic demand for tobacco has declined by some 20 per cent since 1983. As a result of these factors, Ontario growers expect to take a significant loss on their 1984 crop. At the moment estimates of that loss run between $50 million and $60 million and it may well exceed the $60 million figure. A loss of that magnitude, of course, is more than just a loss to the farmers. It means a loss of employment for some 5,000 migrant workers and university students who rely on the tobacco harvest to get them through the winter or through their next term at university.

There is as well the impact on the local communities. When tobacco growers do not have any money to spend it affects not only farm machinery and car dealers, but grocery and department stores, travel agencies, indeed virtually every commercial operation in the community.

The tobacco industry has been good for Canada and for tobacco farmers. What makes it extremely significant, Mr. Speaker, is that the amount of tobacco moved out of the farm gate on the average tobacco farm, whether it be in Ontario, Quebec, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, contributes somewhere in the vicinity of $1 million to $1.5 million in tax revenue to the two levels of government. Tobacco is a big earner of foreign exchange and it brings in well over $100 million a year.

Of course, many people applaud the decline in smoking and the beneficial impact it will have on the health of Canadians, but we also must recognize that tobacco is an important crop in international markets and Canadian farmers grow some of the best in the world. The researchers at our Delhi research station have worked closely with growers over the years and have been extremely successful in developing new varieties of tobacco which are lower in tar content. They have assisted in developing production techniques and labour saving equipment. At present they are also working on alternate crops that may assist growers to diversify and reduce their tobacco production without accompanying losses of income. That has always been the case, Mr. Speaker, but realistically, although no comparable substitute has been found, we must strengthen our resources, both financial and human, in this direction in the future.

Again realistically, Mr. Speaker, this will not be an easy task. A farmer with 100 acres of sandy soil could make a good living growing 30 or 40 acres of tobacco in rotation with other crops. However, those 100 acres will not earn a living for the farmer if he only grows corn and soybeans. Unfortunately, soil that is ideal for tobacco production is not particularly good for most other crops without a dramatic increase in the use of fertilizer.

Tobacco growers are going through a crisis and they believe a national agency is necessary to help them stabilize their industry. Some critics have suggested that the supply management provisions of the Act should be opened up to include all other agricultural commodities as well. However, today we are concerned only with tobacco because of the urgent cost-price problems of tobacco production and because producers are seeking this change themselves. In contrast, producers of some other commodities have reservations about having the Act altered to include their products and I share that view.

The legislation to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act was one of the final pieces of legislation considered in the House before it rose last summer. It is worth noting that this Bill is one of the first Bills to be introduced in this new Parliament. It demonstrates very clearly the commitment of this Government to amend the Act on behalf of the tobacco producers in Canada.

I urge Members of this House to support Bill C-4 and encourage its speedy passage. Once the Bill is passed the National Farm Products Marketing Council may hold public hearings to explore the possibility of establishing a marketing agency for tobacco, and negotiations would then be held with provincial signatories to work out details of the actual agreement. It is only fair and reasonable that tobacco producers should be allowed to look into the option of playing a larger role in the marketing of their own product.

In conclusion, I would like to draw to the attention of the House that I have had brief discussions with my counterparts in the two other Parties with reference to a slight drafting problem. Perhaps it would more accurately be described as a bit of a conflict or another legal opinion with reference to making a further slight amendment to the Bill. In the section of the Bill that we are amending we are placing the word "tobacco" in line 9, and line 10 goes on to refer to "the products of".

We were satisfied by legal advice which we received from our own Department that the simple insertion of the word "tobacco" would cover parts of tobacco. However, to be consistent with the Bill, there is some question as to whether we should again insert the word "tobacco" in line 10 as it relates to products of. My two counterparts appear to be receptive to this. Although I have to be guided by the Chair, I understand that if the agreement holds true, as I am certain it will, rules dictate that it is not possible for me to move the second amendment. However, I understand that another Member of this Party could put this amendment forward. I expect that my colleague, the Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley), will be in the House at committee stage, and I would like to serve notice now that this second amendment will be moved at that time.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C-4, a Bill to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. I would like to congratulate the Minister on his appointment as Minister of Agriculture. He is a gentleman whom I have known since our days at the University of Guelph. He is a man who has demonstrated his concern and interest in the agricultural community of this country over the past many years.

I would like to indicate our support for the Bill before the House today which adds the commodity of tobacco to those commodities which can have a national marketing agency in our country. The tobacco producers in southwestern Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes have indicated their support for this Bill. They have indicated how desperately important it is for them in the marketing of their products, as it was for other commodity groups that have taken this step in their marketing procedure in the past. We understand the problems they face with a commodity for which the demand is dropping each year. We understand as well the problems they face in dealing with multinational corporations which travel around the world playing one set of producers against another in various countries.

If this legislation is passed it will allow producers to control their production. This will allow Canada to set limits on imports from other countries. I understand imports have fluctuated from below 8 million pounds a year to as high as 15 million pounds. Such violent fluctuations of imports will be controlled with supply management imposed on our own producers.

We agree with this legislation. We agree with other commodity groups having the opportunity to establish marketing agencies as well. We wonder why Bill C-56 was not reintroduced. That Bill would simply have removed the section from the Act and made it possible for all commodity groups within which the majority support a national marketing agency to take the same step. We wonder why the Government is limiting this to tobacco. There are other groups facing difficulty in the country. When the majority of the producers of a commodity want to establish a marketing agency and present a plan to the National Farm Marketing Council which is accepted by the Government, they should have the opportunity to take the same step. However, this Bill limits it stricty to tobacco.

My concern is with regard to why we are debating this Bill today. The Bill was filibustered last June 29, the last day that the House sat in the previous session. From reading a report in the London Free Press it is clear that the Tory House Leader spent a lot of time that day talking about many other things, effectively killing Bill C-56 which would have allowed this agency to be established. By this time it would have been established for five months. The tobacco farmers certainly vented their wrath at that time. The report of the London Free Press of June 30, 1984 states:

> Irate tobacco farmers surrounded Conservative MPs outside the House of Commons chamber Friday and accused them of killing a bill that would have enabled establishment of a supply management agency.

The article goes on to mention that the tobacco farmers had met in the morning with the Minister of Agriculture and the Conservative caucus. The article continues:

> Liberal House leader Yvon Pinard offered to add 15 minutes to debate time but his Conservative counterpart, Ray Hnatyshyn, refused it, insisting instead that the House not set a limit on debate time. Liberal MPs and apparently the farmers believed the Tory tactic was used to stall the bill.

Outside the chamber, farmers were seething.

The report goes on to indicate that the PC Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley) said later:

"I'm going to be thinking about my future in this place over the weekend." Bradley, one of the chief proponents of the bill in the Tory caucus, was bitterly disappointed by the turn of events.

Although we are glad to see this Bill passed today, Mr. Speaker, we feel that it really should have been passed last June 29. The Tory handbook and election campaign included an item which indicated that they would support farmers in the efficient development of marketing systems of their choice. If that was part of the Tory platform, we wonder why Bill C-56 was not passed as proposed. It would have allowed all commodity groups to establish a marketing system of their choice.

Although marketing is of the utmost importance, I suggest we should be providing this kind of assistance to other commodity groups. We want this legislation to be passed. We also want the Government to introduce legislation to deal with the urgent cost-price squeeze being faced by other commodity groups such as the red meat industry and the grains industry. Their situation is perhaps more crucial in terms of that cost-price squeeze than at any time in many years. One has only to read the report of the Farm Credit Corporation which indicates that some 39,000 producers are facing very critical financial times. In fact, 1,700 producers are facing financial collapse.

The Speech from the Throne contained no proposals to deal with our important resource industries of agriculture, mining and forestry or with tourism. According to the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the question of agri-bonds will simply be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. There is no legislation forthcoming to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to provide set-aside provisions. There is no legislation forthcoming such as there was in the Bankruptcy Act to provide for pre-bankruptcy arbitration.

We do not see any activity to lower the cost of money for farmers as was promised in the Conservative campaign platform, or set-aside legislation such as was introduced in the United States with respect to their farmers' home administration. That legislation permits them to set aside a portion of outstanding loans in cases of an individual who is a good producer and is capable of meeting his commitments if he could have a little short-term relief. It is a very ingenious arrangement applying to the commercial banks as well and I believe similar legislation here is urgently needed.

Since these measures have not been announced in the Speech from the Throne or in the economic statement, I am concerned that such legislation is a long way off. Consequently, those 1,700 farmers who are facing bankruptcy this winter will not get any relief.

The Official Opposition recognizes the urgency of this matter and we support this Bill. The production level of tobacco is dropping precipitously and those producers are facing a monopolistic situation with the international corporations that buy tobacco from ouside the country. We want to see this legislation passed so that this group of producers can work together to address this declining situation.

We hope that the Government will provide the additional research assistance in the hope that some of them will adopt their land and production techniques to meet other opportunities for agricultural production in the months and years ahead. With that, I want to indicate our support to see this Bill go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate on Bill C-4 to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. It will have the effect of permitting tobacco producers to include their product within a marketing plan that will limit the amount of production that is permitted into the country or the amount produced on the farms.

This amendment concerns part of the Marketing Agencies Act which has its roots back in the 1930s. It was a copy of initiatives taken by those in Australia and New Zealand who were looking for methods that would permit their farmers to have similar powers that the state granted to large corporations and to workers to set up labour unions. The purpose of that legislation was to allow agricultural producers to put their products on the market through a single desk-selling agency. In some instances it also provided for a reduction in quotas, the setting of quotas to regulate the amount of product put on the market and even the amount of product produced in some cases.

I am concerned about this section of the Act because I believe it is rather unfair that it prescribes a limitation to producers at all. In any event, this proposal will limit the amount of imports or production in the country to only three groups of producers. They are egg producers, producers of poultry or similar products and now tobacco producers. I will come back to this subject because I believe it is a negative imposition of a set of rules and guidelines that are an unnecessary hardship on agriculture. I will prove that by illustrating how our existing legislation already provides sufficient safeguards without forcing producers to jump through another hoop.

The House is aware that tobacco farmers have been required to lobby for the last two years, including having to picket in the rain for several weeks last spring. The silly attitude taken by various governments forced them to lose another season of benefits from this proposed legislation. After two years, many of them are no longer able to remain in business. They have been forced to come to the House of Commons, hat in hand, to get permission to use that last bit of regulation which would allow them to stay in business.

This type of procedure is no longer required for corporations. We long since gave up sitting in judgment on whether a group of individuals should be allowed to form a corporation. We no longer require such a lobbying procedure by a group of workers in order to set up a union. This is all accomplished through Order in Council according to very clear procedures. Unions and corporations can be set up almost instantaneously.

However, the producers of any agricultural products other than eggs, poultry and tobacco, after today, must go through a long process of bargaining with the Government, lobbying Members of Parliament and even picketing occasionally. This often results in havoc being weaked on the industry before getting a lawful right which should naturally be theirs.

National products marketing agencies are set up in two stages in this country. That in itself is a fairly rigorous hoop to jump through. First, producers must organize on a provincial basis. Depending on the provincial organization, a majority of producers in most provinces—as much as two-thirds majority in some—must agree on a marketing plan. But that is not all. After havig organized themselves within their province, they still do not have powers to regulate the sale and marketing of the product for interprovincial trade or for international export trade. In order to do that, they have to go to the national legislation. They have to prove, depending upon the requirement, that from 50 per cent to two-thirds of producers are proposing to become part of the national legislation.

One can imagine the way in which the political process works in farm organizational terms. To reach that point they have probably spent five years or six years but are not in a position to regulate the amount of product going into the market or to regulate imports of the product. Then they have to convince the Government to introduce a Bill before the House of Commons. This requires the Government finding time in the House to debate the Bill so that it can be passed through all stages and proclaimed. At that point they finally get what they set out to do. As a result of the period of time required, often the initiators of the program have gone out of business. Some of them have died by natural causes. It is a long, stupid process.

In this case it would have been much better to have simply deleted Clause 17(3) from the Bill. This would have permitted producers of any product who had jumped through the two sets of hoops at the provincial and federal levels to get what they wanted initially. Again I indicate that in some cases as many as two-thirds of the producers have to be in agreement. With the deletion of that clause and producers having gone through two road-blocks, they would have been able to have those powers and to begin to function as part of the Canadian society, as is the case with large corporations and unions.

It is a discriminatory practice to continue with these limitations. We will be permitting the tobacco amendment to go through. Later on at the proper stage I should like to introduce an amendment which would in fact eliminate this particular clause of the Bill. I am not sure what Mr. Speaker's ruling will be on such an amendment since the Bill in front of us is a very short one. However, Hon. Members should look into the procedures required to set up a marketing organization and to conduct that organization in a business-like fashion, having some control of imports and some control of the amount of goods offered on the market. Such an amendment is certainly required. If we cannot get it today, certainly we will in the near future.

There is a great deal of difficulty facing tobacco farmers in the country at the present time. There are approximately 185,000 acres of land, in southern Ontario mostly, which lends itself to the production of tobacco. It is almost too sandy to produce any other crop which yields the same amount of income. Farmers have been under pressure for a number of reasons. There is reduced demand for tobacco because of the fear of lung cancer, as well as various environmental demands of society today. They are under pressure from imports. The Minister's proposed amendment would help provide some protection from various parts of the tobacco plant coming into the country as imports. Also they are under some pressure as a result of potential substitutes and some experimentation which has been conducted with various varieties of lettuce and the processes through which that crop has been put. There is a very clear need for some control of the amount of product introduced into the market from outside the country. The farmers require the ability to continue with acreage controls which they have placed upon themselves.

The cut-backs in the industry to this point have been quite substantial. There are approximately 2,000 or more growers in the industry now. They took a 21 per cent production cut last year by agreement. This has meant approximately 5,000 fewer tobacco workers at harvest time and probably between 500 and as high as 1,000 workers no longer having jobs in the manufacturing and distribution parts of the business. Probably close to 500 of those 2,000 farm families are faced with being forced out of business. This particular change to the law will give them the power to control the amount of imports with which they are faced, but it will reduce only marginally the pressure facing the industry at the present time.

We think it is a necessary amendment to help the tobacco industry. My only regret is that the Minister did not see fit to do away with the limitation clause so that producers of all farm products, having jumped through two sets of very strict requirements at the provincial and national levels, would have been able immediately to control their products in a manner which would provide them with adequate incomes.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, indeed I am pleased to be here today representing the constituency of Oxford. Having gone through the recent election promise that we would do certain things with respect to agriculture, I am pleased that within a matter of a couple of short weeks we are able to bring before the House something for which we have been fighting for months and months. In the last Parliament the then government refused to bring forward an amendment which would have easily suited the needs of the Canadian tobacco industry.

I will not become involved in a long dissertation about the steps which took place going back almost a year now. At the wish of a large majority of tobacco producers, approaches were made to the government. It promised to have an appropriate Bill in the House within a few weeks, and then within a few months. One promise after another was made. Finally, by the end of June the Liberal government had broken several of its commitments to the tobacco industry. The Bill was brought in at the last minute, not even as a priority. It was about fourth on the list for one of those last days. As a result of that deliberate attempt by the Liberal government, the Bill did not pass.

Tobacco growers in southwestern Ontario were concerned about that. I will have to modify what I say somewhat because it is fair to say that the majority of tobacco growers wanted a simple amendment passed which would allow the inclusion of the word "tobacco" in the federal Marketing Agencies Act. As it was, a significant number of growers had reservations about it. However, it was certainly the feeling of the Progressive Conservative Party that producers of the country should have an opportunity to decide whether or not they wanted to be involved in a national marketing board. Our intent last year during those preliminaries leading up to the introduction of the Bill in the House was for tobacco growers to have that opportunity. That is all we asked. We wanted the former government to give them the privilege, as producers producing a particular commodity, of deciding how they would like to go. The next step would follow according to what they decided. As we all know, it was not possible with the attitude of the former government to do that. It brought forward a complicated Bill. It was not a simple Bill that could be voted on in a hurry, the way we can here today. As a result, it did not pass.

Agriculture, of which tobacco is a significant component in this country, is one of the basic components of our economy. Whether we are on the Government side or Opposition side, I sometimes wonder whether we really understand the significance of agriculture as the basis of our Canadian economy.

I have occasion to meet from time to time with repesentatives of the Federation of Agriculture, in my constituency the Oxford Federation of Agriculture. They continually impress upon me the importance of the agricultural sector. No matter which side of the House we are on, all of us must bear in mind that even though we are pretty well agreed on the need for some cuts in our over-all economy in order to get at the deficit problem, we have to look very seriously at whether we can afford to cut very significantly in the agricultural area.

As it is now, the input costs of most farmers, whether they are in tobacco or any other field of agriculture, are far in excess of what they used to be, more so than their revenues. As a result, farm incomes have dropped in an absolute manner from five years ago. The agricultural community across this country is suffering as much as, if not more than, many of the other economic sectors. We had better look very seriously at to what extent we can afford to limit support for the agricultural community in Canada.

One of the most important commodities in my constituency of Oxford is tobacco. The Town of Tillsonburg, which is known as a tri-county town, lies in the constituency and County of Oxford. It touches the border of Haldimand-Norfolk. It is within a mile or two of the constituency of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), which is Elgin. Tillsonburg is the headquarters for the Ontario Flue-Cured Tobacco Growers Marketing Board.

The amount of tobacco grown in Oxford is not as great as the amount grown in Haldimand-Norfolk. My estimates are not precise to the nearest decimal point, but approximately 60 per cent is grown in Haldimand-Norfolk, 20 per cent in Oxford, and 20 per cent in Elgin. Smaller amounts are grown in Durham-Northumberland. On a national basis, small amounts are also grown in western Quebec, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. If my recollection is correct, 90 or 95 per cent of all tobacco produced in Canada is produced in the area around Tillsonburg.

If I were here today to defend the dairy farmers of this country, I could cite many proud facts which have a bearing on this tobacco Bill as well. In these stressful times being experienced by the farming community, those farmers perhaps least stressed are the dairy farmers. In the last three years I have received very few letters from dairy farmers indicating problems, with the exception of young men and women wanting to get into dairy farming who are having difficulty finding money to purchase the farm and quota. We must ask ourselves why the dairy farmers are having less problems.

By way of an aside, I am proud to speak of the dairy industry in my area. Although the constituency of Perth, and my friend and colleague from Perth (Mr. Brightwell) will understand and agree, has more cows than we have in Oxford, what is interesting is that we produce more milk. I do not know whether that suggests that we have better farmers in Oxford. I would not want to say that. Maybe they are better farmers in Perth. However, we have expertise which allows them to be the highest producers of milk of any constituency in this country.

They have had some help. Not only do they have ideal land conditions, a very temperate climate and so on which is conducive to dairying, but they have good organizational skills. The Ontario milk marketing plan provides for them, along with what is provided through the Canadian Dairy Commission, the opportunities to market their milk in a satisfactory manner. This has prevented them from suffering quite as much as other farmers have from the economic downturn in recent years.

Tobacco growers have observed this. It does not take a very acute mind to see that dairy farmers, both in Oxford and across this country, have done reasonably well over the last while. We should give some credit to the fact that they have had in place a national and provincial plan which has given them the opportunity to market their milk in an orderly fashion. It has provided them with returns that are reasonable, certainly in comparison with other commodities.

On that basis, I rise today in support of Bill C-4 which represents an attempt by tobacco producers across this country to gain some of the opportunities the dairy farmers have had. There may be some resistance to this from other parts of the country. I am not here today to get involved in that kind of an issue or conflict. I am here to speak on this Bill and also to do so on behalf of the producers who I know are anxious to have this Bill passed as quickly as possible. These producers are working and trying to earn a living under desperate conditions in the constituencies of Elgin, Haldimand-Norfolk and Oxford. As I mentioned earlier, I am proud to state that the headquarters for this constituency are in Tillsonburg in the constituency of Oxford.

I have received representations from constituents asking why the Member for Oxford, who himself does not smoke, is trying to support the tobacco industry when he is a physician and should be opposed to the use of tobacco. I understand their concerns. As a physician, I realize that there are definite health hazards from the use of tobacco. I accept that. As a physician, I am convinced that that is the case. However, I remind these constituents who write to me in this vein that, be that as it may, I still represent the tobacco farmers in Oxford. They are involved in the legal business of the growing of tobacco. There is nothing illegal about it. I have an obligation to them and I indeed want to support anybody who has a problem that should be aired in the House of Commons and I may be of assistance to them.

A number of things have happened that make it difficult for the tobacco growers, and this makes me want to speak today on their behalf. For instance, in the past both the federal Government and provincial governments have deemed it fair and wise to impose extra taxes of one sort or another on the tobacco industry largely at the retail level. By so doing, these governments are greatly increasing the amount of tax to which that particular industry is subjected in an over-all sense. I sometimes ask myself whether or not that is quite fair.

There are various approaches one could take to influencing people in their daily habits. Whenever I get to my medical office, which is very seldom these days, I try to influence people not to smoke or certainly to cut down on their smoking for health reasons. That is fair enough. I believe it is fair enough for those of us, either collectively as governments or as individuals, who are convinced that tobacco is a health hazard to try to influence people that it is probably not wise to smoke. I have no difficulty with that.

However, when it comes to taxation of the tobacco sector, I want there to be some fairness and equity. The way we should be exerting that kind of influence on people is through an educational process at the federal and provincial levels and through the various health groups. I do not want to see the Government indulging in over-taxation which is discriminatory to one particular sector.

It is a pleasure for me to be here today because we now have a Government that is prepared to look after the interests of the farmers of the country. The Government has now selected this one particular sector which the previous government refused to help and we have before the House today Bill C-4, a Bill which I am fully prepared to endorse. I hope my colleagues on both sides of the House will see the wisdom of this very simple amendment that will hopefully make the lives of tobacco growers much more acceptable to them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday)?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. It seemed to me that he stepped tenderly on the actual Tory filibuster that took place last June when this Bill was before the House. The Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley) is not present today. Obviously the Hon. Member for Oxford could not have been present last June 29 when the previous Bill, Bill C-56 which provided for the tobacco marketing agency to be established at that time, was before the House. At that time the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk said in an interview with the London Free Press:

"I'm going to be thinking about my future in this place over the weekend." Bradley, one of the chief proponents of the bill in the Tory caucus, was bitterly disappointed by the turn of events.

I wonder if the Hon. Member was actually present in the House when the previous Bill, C-56, was filibustered and did not pass last June 29.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have a great deal of respect for my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). He has brought up the name of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley), who is not present today. I think the Hon. Member for Algoma will recognize the danger of quoting from an article published by any newspaper. The London Free Press is a newspaper with wide circulation in my part of the country. It is usually accurate. However, the Hon. Member knows that it does not accurately reflect—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think that that is a point of order. I would like to have the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) reply to the comment.

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question put by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). To answer his question specifically, in actual fact I was not present in the House that day because I was in Vancouver on parliamentary business. Unfortunately, I was unable to be here to take part in that debate.

It is my memory, and I would challenge my colleague across the way to deny it, that there was a commitment made by the government on the day before or two days before the 29th of the month to the effect that it would bring in the tobacco Bill as the second order of business on that day. Instead of bringing it in as the second order of business, it was brought in as the fourth or fifth order of business. That is why that Bill did not get passed. It was not a filibuster on the part of this Party at that time but a deliberate attempt on the part of the then Liberal government to put another Bill before the House that it knew was controversial and would take the whole day or even longer to debate. That is the reason the Bill was not passed. The Hon. Member for Algoma knows that and should have admitted it when asking his question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Algoma on a further short question.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) to check his facts, not only with Hansard of the day—page 5343 indicates the actual debate that took place—but also with his colleague who was bitterly disappointed that the Bill was talked out. As well, the tobacco producers from southwestern Ontario who were present were bitterly disappointed that the Bill was filibustered and not passed. If the Bill had not been talked out, then we would be well on the way to forming the agency right now.

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that that was a question but I would certainly like to reply to it. Although I was not present on that day, I have it from reliable sources that what actually appeared in Hansard that day may not reflect exactly what was shown on the audio-visual record for that day. As I read Hansard, I found that it was very confusing and I daresay that those who were present recall that day as being very confusing. It is my understanding that what is indicated by the audio-visual recording for that day is not precisely the same as what was recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I was listening to the exchange which just took place. I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) that while he may want to believe that his interpretation is entirely accurate, there are certain flaws in it. I remember the day very, very well. I was involved in the negotiations that took place in an attempt to have the matter resolved on that day. In fact, I offered to sit beyond the appointed hour of adjournment in order to allow the question to be resolved in its entirety. As I recall it, and I am sure I do recall it accurately, the Government indicated that it would sit for an additional 15 minutes. The Official Opposition indicated that that would not be long enough. During the course of the exchange, which lasted for about 15 minutes, it became apparent that the question of how long it would take would not be resolved. The Speaker rose and adjourned the House at that point.

Mr. Wise: Two Members saw the clock.

Mr. Deans: The clock was seen. I think it is fair to say that the only people who were trying desperately to find a solution were members of the New Democratic Party. Members of the other two Parties involved found themselves playing a silly game which cost the farmers the passage of the legislation that they so desperately needed.

If the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley) were here, I think he would be on my side of this particular issue. I can well remember the discussion that he and I had and I can well remember the bitter disappointment in his face at the actions of his own colleagues, in addition to the disappointment that he felt at the actions of the Government.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, unaccustomed as I am to being drawn into debate on this issue or on any issue raised by the distinguished House Leader for the New Democratic Party (Mr. Deans)—

Mr. Deans: Are you going to talk this out too?

• (1220)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No. I simply want to reject out of hand the suggestion that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has made with respect to what transpired in a period of five minutes at the end of the last Parliament.

We could sit in the House and argue about who is right and who is wrong. However, I think it has been demonstrated by the new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise)—as his first initiative—that he is bringing forward, in terms of agricultural legislation in this House, a Bill which will do precisely what we suggested to the previous Government. The Bill will assist the tobacco growers of Canada. My hon. colleague should be given kudos and not be subjected to carping and detailed criticism. He should be applauded by members of the New Democratic Party.

In conclusion, I am sure the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain will be leading the cheering on behalf of our great Minister of Agriculture.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. The Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais).

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise in the House to speak to this Bill. I must say I am also very pleased to see that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), and the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) are in the House. We had a little discussion yesterday on absenteeism in another context, and I am very happy to see they are here today.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to remember that the Bill we are considering is not one of the Bills that were tabled in the House before, whether it was a year or six months or three months ago. We are not considering those Bills. We are considering a Bill tabled by the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), and I think the debate should focus on this particular Bill and not on previous Bills. Of course I am not as experienced as the Hon. Members to whom I referred earlier, but nevertheless, I feel that as the Hon. Leader of the Government (Mr. Hnatyshyn) just mentioned, the important thing is that we have a Bill that is, after all, a minor one and concerns a single word, and I think that if we really want to help Canadian farmers, we should expedite this legislation and refrain from obstruction and from going through the whole history behind this legislation. There may have been previous debate on the question, but now we should adopt this new legislation as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker, this week, in the presence of the Hon. Minister, I had an opportunity, to meet producers in this sector from the Province of Quebec. Various groups of tobacco growers may have expressed some concern in the past, but I can assure the House that the legislation proposed by the Hon. Minister of Agriculture has taken into account the comments of Quebec farmers and, if I may say so, the concerns they have raised previously. In fact, they are quite pleased and they agree with the Bill now before the House, and although growers in Quebec and the four Atlantic provinces represent only a small percentage, namely 7 per cent, of Canadian tobacco growers—93 per cent are from Ontario—it would seem that the fears that such a program would have an adverse impact on the smaller growers across Canada are unfounded. Everyone seems to agree with the legislation.

It is too bad that the criticism we are getting concerns debates in the previous Parliament. I feel that if we agree with the present legislation, we should decide to adopt it as soon as possible. Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, my parliamentary experience is far from extensive, but to me, if a Bill is on the Table of the House and Hon. Members agree with its content, it should be passed as quickly as possible. Mr. Speaker, I am appealing to common sense, not to parliamentary procedure. I support this Bill. It is the first Bill introduced by the Minister of Agriculture, and I think we should proceed quickly with its passage, and then go on to something else, because Canadians, whether they are farmers or active in any other sector, expect a great deal from this Government, and that is why I think it is important that we should proceed quickly with these minor details so that we can deal with the really important problems facing us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There being no questions or comments, we shall continue. Mr. Wise, seconded by Mme Champagne, moved that Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—Limitation

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I believe the Minister is going to propose an amendment. After he does, I would like to propose an amendment.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if the Minister is going to make a statement or whether we are going to proceed with discussion on Clause 1?

The Deputy Chairman: I believe the Minister is going to make a statement.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, during my remarks on second reading debate, I indicated that there was a wish expressed primarily by the industry that we amend the Bill in line 10. The Act is amended in line 9 by the insertion of the word "tobacco". Our legal counsel is satisfied that it would be sufficient to include the products of tobacco. Those of us who come from farming areas and speak of leaf, stems, cuttings and things of that nature would prefer to use the word "particles" or "portions" of the tobacco plant. However, in an effort to satisfy the industry, we will move that line 10 be amended to insert the word "tobacco" as it relates to any part of tobacco.

I have the amendment and I have discussed it with my counterparts in the Opposition Parties. It is not possible for me, as Minister, to introduce the amendment. I have discussed it with the Hon. Member for Oxford and he is quite prepared to put the amendment if we can get some indication from you, Mr. Chairman, as to the appropriate time.

The Deputy Chairman: Would the Hon. Member for Oxford please put the amendment.

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Chairman, the amendment reads as follows:

That Clause 1 of Bill C-4 be amended by striking out line 10 on page 1 and substituting the following:

"ry or any part of tobacco, eggs or poultry shall not"

● (1230)

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment. I wish at this moment to provide an amendment as well in line 10, which would be an amendment to the amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry, we must dispose of this amendment first.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, we are in Committee of the Whole. Are we going to be permitted time to put questions to the Minister concerning the Bill generally? If I can do that under the amendment which has been proposed by the Minister, I will be happy to do so.

The Deputy Chairman: You may ask all the questions you want of the Hon. Minister right now.

Mr. Foster: On the basis of this amendment or on the basis of the Bill itself?

The Deputy Chairman: Of the Bill.

Mr. Foster: In that case, I have a number of questions I would like to put to the Minister concerning the Bill. The Bill does not really deal with a number of concerns which have been expressed by various groups in the country; for example, the idea of strengthening the powers of the National Farm Products Marketing Council, of making that council stronger and more in control of the individual agencies and perhaps having more responsibility right back to the Government itself.

I had the opportunity last year of working on the Crown corporations Bill and its provisions which required greater accountability and reference not only to the Minister and to the Government but to Parliament itself. This was done so that Crown corporations would have a responsibility to put before Parliament on a regular basis their corporate plan. They would have a budget which would have to be approved by the Government. They would have annual reports, and so on, and there would be a continuing flow of information ultimately to Parliament. It has been said that the National Farm Products Marketing Council does not have much control over the agencies nor are they ultimately accountable to the Government itself, which is then politically accountable here on the floor of the House of Commons.

I wonder if the Minister agrees with that view, which has been expressed by many groups in the country and by, I believe, some provincial agencies and legislatures as well, and whether he foresees a need for greater financial accountability as well as just the over-all supervision by the National Farm Products Marketing Council. I ask that question because much of the previous legislation before the House provided for that in the way in which the estimates will be coming before the House in much more detail. Does the Minister feel that those kinds of amendments are ultimately desirable?

I would also like to know why the Bill only covers tobacco rather than other farm commodities. There are other groups in our society, such as consumer groups, which would like to see more accountability to Government so that the Government can respond to criticism of individual agencies. Could the Minister comment on that aspect of the legislation?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I certainly welcome the opportunity to comment on the intervention and comments made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma. Indeed, what the Hon. Member is talking about is the same thing we are now discussing with reference to a Bill to be brought forth in the future regarding financial accountability and more or less authority for the supervisory body, the National Farm Products Marketing Council.

These are things which concerned our Government, as well as myself as Minister of Agriculture, back in 1979. Indeed, some discussions and meetings were held—not many, but a few—on that very subject between myself and the chairperson—who still occupies the chair quite capably—of the National Farm Products Marketing Council. However, of course, political events overtook us during that time. I know that discussions have been held with my predecessors, the council and the three agencies which fall within the authority of the National Farm Products Marketing Council. It was some of those problems which the previous government tried to address in the final days of the last Parliament.

I believe there was a message there. One cannot move on legislation of that kind, particularly legislation which removes power which has been in the hands of the three existing national boards, without full consultation and some type of agreement. That is what we do not want to duplicate here today.

I agree with the Hon. Member that these matters must be addressed, and I can assure him that I hold them in high priority; but I have not had ample time in which to look into these matters. I have had one discussion with the chairperson of the National Farm Products Marketing Council. In fact, I am meeting with one of the national agencies this afternoon.

That piece of legislation is an important piece of legislation. The work of the council is indeed also very important because it involves supply management, the producers, the industry, the consumers, the federal Government and the provincial governments. The federal Government, the commodity groups and the provinces are signatories to those national plans. I have met with my provincial counterparts on two occasions and we have discussed some of the possible changes which should take place in that Act. However, I am not going to move unilaterally. I am not going to move prematurely regarding those issues which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma, quite rightly raises. They must be addressed but discussions must be held with those people who are involved.

I can assure the Hon. Member that this will go forward. However, I want time to talk to the council members and to my provincial counterparts, and particularly to those commodity groups which are governed by that board. To this point in time I suppose I could say that we have been going full steam ahead on other things. I am not going to go into a long list of benefits which have been flowing and will continue to flow to the agri-food industry. If I did that I might provoke some partisan discussion and I would prefer to avoid that, recognizing that the clock is moving on.

Am I concerned about them? Yes, I am. Do they have a priority? Yes, they have. Will they be addressed? Yes, they will.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, Section 18(3) would allow any commodity group, with adequate planning and approval of the Farm Marketing Council and the Government, to establish marketing agencies. Is the Minister opposed to removing that section?

That is one question at one end of the pendulum. The other question at the other end is this. We hear reports from time to time that this Government's philosophy and approach will be to move to deregulation, and that marketing boards and agencies are not favoured by this Government. In view of this legislation which establishes one more agency, is it the philosophy of the Government that ultimately we will move away from marketing agencies where an industry seems to be at a stage where it no longer requires them? Also, will the Government move to allow any group of producers of unregulated commodities to establish marketing boards?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I have no hesitation whatsoever in placing on the record the fact that I have no personal hang-ups or problems in removing that section. I am speaking from a personal point of view, but the fact is that that simply ignores reality. I am not about to say to people in the non-supply management areas, the producers of agricultural commodities in any part of the country, that indeed they need not be afraid of government imposing some type of a marketing system on them. There are producers of various commodities in all regions of the country who are just not satisfied with a government or minister of agriculture making that statement. I have to respect their position. We have to accommodate the people who are anxiously waiting for this type of legislation, the tobacco people, and still satisfy the concerns which are out there. I cannot understand why but those concerns are there. To say they are not is to ignore reality. So we recognize reality, we want to make progress and this is the way we are doing it.

In addition, the Hon. Member for Algoma raises the old problem of marketing boards. He comes from the Province of Ontario and knows that we have 40 or 50 marketing boards, commissions and agencies in one form or another in Ontario. Many of them are celebrating 40, 50 or 60 years of operation. He knows that across the country we have about 130 or 140 marketing boards, commissions and agencies. A lot of people think they are all under our jurisdiction but they are not. Basically there are only three under our jurisdiction and we are making provision for four. It is an old political argument, one that the Opposition Parties have worked very successfully in Ontario and elsewhere over time. If anyone questions that, they should examine the record. Every time the Opposition get into difficulty politically, they haul out the old marketing board question. They go back to the position of the Party during the national agencies' debate in 1970 and 1971, but I tell them to look at the position this Party has taken consistently without exception since 1976. We campaigned on that time and time and time again.

We recognize that an agency that works well for one commodity could well spell disaster for another. This Party is not about to impose any marketing system on any commodity whatsoever. However, through legislative changes we will permit commodity groups to take advantage of the Act and to decide for themselves what type of marketing system they want. If there is any doubt about that, and there should not be because hopefully in a few minutes there will be ample proof, I can take you back to 1979. We have three national boards under the jurisdiction of the council. The National Chicken Marketing Agency was first thought about in 1970 or 1971. Discussions and negotiations were held. We had an opportunity during the brief period of time we were in government, when I was the Minister of Agriculture, to proclaim the National Chicken Marketing Agency. Where do we stand on marketing boards? It is there for the world to see.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, provincial legislation essentially acts as a screening mechanism of those who apply to operate under a national marketing plan. As the Minister knows, producers in each province must first approve the principle and concept within their borders. What real function does this limitation clause perform given that producers must first decide within their province to market their products through a marketing board and then agree a second time to go to a national plan?

Given those two tests of the acceptability of a plan, why do we still have this limitation which permits producers of eggs and poultry, and now tobacco, to actually go all the way with their marketing board, so to speak? Does it not seem an unfair restriction of the rights of those producers who have already gone through the pain and organizational problems to get themselves organized and approved provincially and then federally? Now they will have to go through yet one more set of road blocks. First of all they have to agree and then find time to deal with their particular commodity. Why does he not simply recognize that there are enough ways of making certain that the majority interest is well take care of both at the federal and provincial levels? Why do we require this third step? Is he prepared to open it up further?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre raises basically the same question which our colleague, the Member for Algoma, does. Personally I have no problem with that. I think there are enough checks, balances and safeguards in the system to prevent any problems. However, it ignores the reality of the situation. In this country we still have producers of agricultural commodities who are not satisfied with that. I say again that I have no problem with that but it ignores the reality.

If we were moving forward today with those other provisions which would open it up, I am sure that the galleries would be filled. I am sure that the producers would be on the front steps or front lawn and perhaps all the way down to Wellington Street. Instead of the number of Members who are in the House now we might even have 211 here. There may perhaps be 50 or 60 Members wanting to participate. I think there is a need here. There is a group of people who want this provision, so let us go forward.

The Hon. Member suggests that we should open it up. To be honest, Mr. Chairman, I am aware of two other groups, the pullet producers for the egg industry and the pullet producers for the chicken marketing agency, that are going forward in the hopes of achieving a national plan. However, the Act provides for that. The only people I know of who are pressing for the change at this moment, and have been for the last 12 months, are the tobacco producers. We are accommodating them. If the Hon. Member is aware of two or three other commodity groups that are demanding a national plan, I want to hear about them because I do not know about them now.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I have spoken with a number of farmers over the past 20 years on this subject. I think the Minister has probably been made aware by producers, as I have, that there is virtually no incentive for them to begin the organizational requirements or even to begin discussions on such a board as long as the restrictions remain here at the national level. There is no point organizing themselves if they cannot get control of their product and if they know they are going to have to fight for three, four or more years to get the changes through the House of Commons. They do not see their lives being long enough to bother beginning.

The limitations contained in this Bill are doing a great deal of harm to a lot of producers of commodities who would like to see their commodity under the control of a national marketing plan. However, they realize that the condition of their farms, which may be in some economic trouble at the moment, will get even worse if they spend the time necessary to organize a national farm marketing plan. They know it will be a six, eight or ten-year program and they do not have that amount of time, Mr. Chairman. They cannot afford that kind of time. I believe that if we left the law open we would see a great many commodity groups rushing in to form provincial marketing boards with the idea of going into a national plan immediately to control the amount of imports and production they permit themselves to sell on the domestic market.

I think the circumstances should be changed so that they are treated the same as other producers of products in this country. They should be treated in the same way as people who want to form a labour union or a corporation. As I pointed out in my initial speech, we no longer require them to come to the House of Commons and jump through hoops. It does not take three or four years to set up a corporation, an association or labour union any more. There are laws which permit that to be done and the regulations are quite clear. We are discriminating against the producers of most of the agricultural produce of this country. I believe it is time we opened up the law while it is in front of us here today.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Halliday) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1, as amended, carry?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce an additional amendment to the amendment that was proposed. I move:

That the Bill be amended by deleting line 10 at page 1 and replacing it with the following: "re, livestock, grains, fruits or vegetables or any part of eggs, poultry, tobacco, livestock, grains, fruits, vegetables shall not".

That would be the new line.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I was just considering what would happen in the country if someone did not rise to indicate that it would not be possible to accept the Hon. Member's amendment. We have had a full discussion on this Bill. The Hon. Member has made his point, as has our colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma. I have indicated that I have no personal hang-ups with that because I am an old dairy farmer. I have lived, prospered, and paid my bills under a supply management system that has worked well for the dairy industry. However, I recognize the difference, and therefore I bring you back to the Party policy which has been in place since 1976, which is that a marketing agency that works well for one commodity could spell disaster for another.

I appreciate the Hon. Member's intervention. I appreciate his efforts to bring forth the subamendment. I believe he has done that to emphasize his comments and I appreciate that. However, I regret that I have to reject the amendment on behalf of the Government.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment please rise.

An Hon. Member: Which amendment?

The Deputy Chairman: The subamendment. There is only one amendment before us now. The first amendment was carried. This is a new amendment by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre. The amendment is defeated because nobody rose.

• (1300)

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: I will not see the clock. I have asked Members to rise. All those in favour of the amendment please rise.

Amendment (Mr. Althouse) negatived: Yeas, 8; Nays, 23.

Clause 1, as amended, agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

416 ALL WEATHER FIGHTER SQUADRON—DECOMMISSIONING CEREMONY

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, in these, my initial and brief remarks to the House, I should like to advise it of the end of an era in my riding of Northumberland-Miramichi. The 416 All Weather Fighter Squadron will be stood down as an operational unit at Canadian Forces Base Chatham at the end of December this year.

This weekend, in a special dedication ceremony, their colours will be encased, a pedestal mounted, and a CF-101 Voodoo aircraft will be dedicated to the base and to the people of Miramichi. The officers and men and women who served in this unit throughout the years have made their contribution to NORAD and to the safety and security of our country. Were it to be permitted by the rules of the House, I would indeed pay recognition to them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

UNITED STATES—REPORTED THREATS TO CANADIAN EXPORTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, recent reports indicate that United States food industry groups are planning to curtail a wide range of Canadian farm products going to that country from Canada, worth some $1.5 billion. These reports also indicate that President Reagan has lent his personal support to the United States pork producers' drive to block Canadian exports to the U.S.A. Also they have petitioned the International Trade Commission to impose countervailing duties. The value of this trade to Canadian farmers is estimated at $500 million this year. The Canadian Government should take action immediately to prevent the imposition of these duties on Canadian exports to the U.S.A. Action at the highest possible level must be taken directly by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), with the Reagan administration in Washington.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has portrayed his relationship with the President as one of sweetness and light. If this is really true, why has the President cut off sugar exports from Canada to the United States? Why is the U.S. Government in the process of cutting off fruit exports from Canada to that country? Why is the United States conducting investigations to cut off fish exports from Canada to the U.S.? We have to ask ourselves whether the whole love affair between the Prime Minister and the President is a one-sided relationship.

WILDLIFE

CARIBOU DEATHS—QUEBEC INQUIRY SOUGHT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, last month Canadians learned with horror about the death of over 10,000 caribou which were swept away while crossing the Caniapiscau and Koksoak rivers on their annual migration. Native peoples of Canada in that region depend upon caribou herds for their nourishment as well as their economic wellbeing. The tragedy is made that much greater by the fact that it could have been averted.

Over 10 years ago biologist Alexander Banfield predicted that the hydroelectric project at James Bay could lead to disastrous consequences, not only for the region's caribou but for other wildlife as well. In addition, native leaders had requested, prior to the disaster, that barriers be erected to protect the herds from high waters.

It is important that the causes of the caribou deaths be clearly established. Many different reasons have been given, but none are conclusive. Therefore we ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), as the Member of Parliament from the area affected, and the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) to urge their provincial counterparts in Quebec to launch a public inquiry to establish the exact causes of the disaster in order that this never happens again.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—TRIBUTE BY CANADIAN JOURNALIST TO WORK OF MINISTER AND OFFICIALS

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, I have seen a communication from Jonathan Mann, the Canadian journalist who was imprisoned briefly in India. It expresses his heartfelt thanks for the work of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and members of his Department to secure his quick release after he was arrested for illegally entering the Punjab.

He states that during the six days he was in police custody he was in regular contact with the Second Secretary of the Canadian High Commission in New Delhi. Those efforts were discreet and little publicized. Also, careful diplomatic activity by the High Commission during those six days was extremely helpful in setting him free.

Because of the success of the Minister, his Department, and the High Commission in this regard, I hope that similar efforts, if they are appropriate, will be exercised on behalf of a husband of a constituent of mine, Mrs. Alice Kozumplik. Michael Kozumplik was arrested in Czechoslovakia for an offence which may also be relatively minor. He has been under arrest since mid-August.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, this Thirty-third Parliament of Canada has been summoned to the work of national reconciliation. It is my duty this aftrenoon to remind Hon. Members of a long-standing injustice that cries out for remedy by the Government of Canada.

The National Association of Japanese Canadians yesterday informed Canadians that their community was attacked during World War II for political reasons, not for reasons of national security. The Liberal Government's dispossession and internment of Canadians of Japanese descent was opposed at the time by military and police authorities who were more concerned about racist attacks on this visible minority than about any subversive activity among them.

Noble principles of democracy were trampled underfoot as thousands of Canadians of Japanese origin were taken from their homes and lost their property to Canadian government authority. This fact was recognized by the former Liberal Government which regretted what had happened. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), then Leader of the Opposition, asked for more last June when he sought a formal apology from the departing Prime Minister. Now that he has the authority to offer redress to Canadians of Japanese origin, it is the solemn duty of the Prime Minister to ensure that a resolution stating a formal apology for the injustices perpetrated, and providing for proper negotiations to establish compensation, be placed before the Parliament of Canada.

GASOLINE PRICE INCREASE

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, on November 8 of this year, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) raised the tax on gas by 10 cents a gallon or 2 cents a litre.

Surprisingly, this incredible and totally injustified increase in the price of gas is not being shared with the provinces or small retailers. What is even more surprising is the silence of the Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) who during the last election campaign claimed he was fighting for the rights of small retailers and now is sanctioning by his silence a measure that is a very real threat to retailers and car owners. The Hon. Member's silence, Mr. Speaker, is most eloquent.

Who would have thought that the Hon. Member, who was telling everybody he would make himself heard in Ottawa, would be doing just the opposite? Not one word, Mr. Speaker! He could at least have defended the Government's position, but not a word! He could have stood up for the retailers and car owners, but not one word!

Mr. Speaker, it would seem that the Member for Duvernay has bowed down to the rule of silence, probably imposed by the Deputy Prime Minister.

I suppose the next time we hear from the new Member for Duvernay will be the night he goes down to defeat in the next election.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PLIGHT OF MIDDLE-AGED UNEMPLOYED MEN

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to plead for an invisible minority, the middle-aged, unemployed men of Canada. Over 60,000 Canadians between the ages of 55 and 65 are receiving unemployment benefits. When added to the number of men between ages 45 and 55 in the same need, the total comes to about 200,000. That number can be expanded still more when we add those who have become too discouraged by relentless rejection to continue seeking work. Together they form Canada's largest prison. It has no walls, it has no bars. However, it holds more than a quarter million men fast. It incarcerates them by the despair that they may never work again. Together they form an unrecognized invisible minority.

Like women in the same age group, they need affirmative action to break down the barriers of "agism", that socially effective form of discrimination against which there has been so little protection.

I know many of these men, especially those in the constituency of Scarborough West. They do not look for grants, or subsidies, or incentives, or privileges. All they seek is opportunity.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

ATTENDANCE OF CANADIAN DELEGATION AT NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, very recently it was my honour to lead Canada's fifteen-person delegation to the thirtieth annual session of the North Atlantic Assembly in Brussels. We met with delegations from the other NATO countries to receive a very major report on "Nuclear Weapons in Europe", to debate the new strategy for NATO, and to exchange views on the current state of the alliance.

Most members of this delegation were attending these sessions for the first time. Even so, Canada was represented on all five of the Assembly's working committees. I want to tell the House that Canada can be proud of the contribution made both in committees and in the plenary sessions. In particular, I would like to underline the report on alliance security presented on behalf of the Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr.

Forrestall), rapporteur for the military committee, and the report dealing with science and politics as presented by Senator Tom Lefebvre, rapporteur for the scientific and technical committee.

We were able to reassure our allies of this Government's firm support for NATO and that the objectives of this Government are clear and firm: to defend freedom and preserve the peace, to work with other nations to halt the spread of nuclear weapons, and to prevent their development and use and, lastly, to work with our allies in NATO to build a healthier world economy.

LABOUR RELATIONS

AIR CANADA—NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, Air Canada has filed a spurrious nitpicking charge before the Canada Labour Relations Board against the Canadian Air Line Employees' Association, accusing them of concerted action to strike while the collective bargaining process is going on; for wearing union pins in the workplace, which is authorized in Air Canada's own bulletins; for refusing temporary appointments to managerial positions, which is voluntary, and for a concerted ban on overtime, which is totally untrue.

I would ask that the Minister of Transport assure that Air Canada conducts meaningful negotiations with its unions, specifically CALEA, so as to ensure that there will be no disruption of service during the Christmas and New Year's period.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the establishment by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of 10 provincial PACs, that is PC Provincial Advisory Committees, across Canada to ensure the PC Party members are placed in the thousands of jobs available to the Prime Minister and his Ministers, flies in the face of the Prime Minister's statement on patronage during the election campaign.

In the November edition of Saturday Night magazine, the Prime Minister of Canada, in responding to Ian MacDonald's question about the $300,000 raised in 1972 by the Conservative Party to persuade Claude Wagner to run as a federal PC, said, and I quote the Prime Minister:

> I didn't find anything outrageous in the proposition at all.

In the same Saturday Night article Mr. MacDonald points out that during the 1976 leadership campaign the Prime Minister was fond of quoting Senator Allister Grossart on patronage. I quote the Prime Minister from Saturday Night. He said:

> What this party wants is its two feet right in the goddamn trough.

The Prime Minister has now created the mechanism, through the establishment of PACs, to fulfil his leadership ambition of 1976 to put his Party's two feet in the public trough, and his thinly disguised attempts at naming a prominent liberal and a prominent New Democrat to diplomatic posts will not convince this House or the Canadian public otherwise. These PACs should be dismantled immediately before the situation gets worse than it already is.

PIPELINES

VANCOUVER ISLAND GAS PIPELINE PROJECT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I call to the attention of this House the spurious nature of Conservative Party election promises in the last election campaign. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) promised a $325 million subsidy to the Vancouver Island gas pipeline. The Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) promised more than half a billion dollars to the Vancouver Island gas pipeline. The defeated Conservative candidate in the Comox-Powell River constituency promised an equally generous subsidy. Last week in the House, on a question from the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni, the Minister of Energy said this project was on hold.

She has put the pipeline on hold, just as she put on hold an investment of $800 million in a fertilizer plant in Powell River. She has in fact put on hold 20,000 person-years of work on such a pipeline, and the opportunity of people on Vancouver Island to have natural gas. In effect the Conservative Minister of Energy has demonstrated how spurious these election promises were, how the people of Canada, British Columbia, and Vancouver Island have been betrayed. She has also driven an $800 million investment in a fertilizer plant offshore to Thailand or Mexico. I urge the Government to reconsider its position and support this worth-while project.

DISARMAMENT

NUCLEAR FREEZE PROPOSAL—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my condolences to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs on having been called into the office of the Prime Minister and having been slapped on the wrist for what the Tories think of the press. For the first time in a long time, I am in a position to agree with the Toronto Sun today when it called the Prime Minister "Benito Mussolroney". Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs give to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence a reference to permit the Members of this House to review the question of nuclear disarmament? Within three weeks there will be another vote at the United Nations. Some 81 members of the Minister's Party have expressed the view that there should be a freeze.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can quite understand the note of envy in the voice of the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice in my situation of being able to go into the office of my Leader and have a cordial conversation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I, of course, cannot comment on the accuracy of the press reports that might relate to his relationship with his Leader, but I can assure the Hon. Member, knowing the depth and sincerity of his interest, that for the first time in the life of the Southam News organization it printed, this morning, a story that was absolutely 100 per cent false.

In relation to the specific question asked by the Hon. Member, it is my understanding that the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence will hold its organizational meeting today. I would imagine that supplementary estimates will be before that committee. We will be prepared to discuss any questions at that time. The former Minister will also know that, contrary to the practice of his Government and his Party, we have announced a full, public, parliamentary review of all aspects of Canada's international relations. That will include the question which he has addressed here in the House today.

Mr. Speaker: I will grant a supplementary to the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice, but I would ask him at this time to relate the preamble to the question.

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN AMBASSADORS APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I just want to state, in relation to the House of Commons, that my Leader did not have to put two Members between myself and him, like the Leader of his Party has done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Perhaps the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs could inform the House whether the Members of this Committee will be able to invite his ambassador to the United Nations and his ambassador for disarmament to appear before the Committee very shortly, since these two gentlemen have made it clear for some time what their views are and have said that a nuclear freeze should be put in place immediately.

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the problems faced on this side of the House is that we have more Members for which to find seats. One of the realities of the Liberal bench is that everybody sits beside everyone else.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): With regard to the request that Ambassador Lewis and Ambassador Roche come before the standing committee, I am sure that, if there is a request made by that standing committee, they will be pleased to come. They would then speak in their capacity as representatives of the Government, as they are doing with effectiveness and force at the United Nations and elsewhere.

• (1420)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I just want to tell the Hon. Member that Mr. Stanfield had Mr. Diefenbaker closer to him than the Prime Minister has the Right Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Chrétien: It is an historical fact. There is nothing I can do about that. I am sorry that my memory is so good.

FORTHCOMING MEETING BETWEEN AMERICAN AND RUSSIAN REPRESENTATIVES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from the Right Hon. Member if he has anything to report to the House today about the meeting that is supposed to be held in January between Secretary of State Shultz and Mr. Gromyko. Does he have anything to report to us about the nature of that meeting and the nature of the debate? Are they beginning new negotiations, or will they continue with the old negotiations on disarmament?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has several people who are closer to him than the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I think all of us were very much relieved and encouraged by the fact that the leaders of the U.S.S.R. and the United States have agreed to meet to discuss questions of nuclear disarmament and, more particularly, discuss moving the world away from the perilous situation in which it finds itself. It is my understanding that those discussions should, in fact, be seen as new discussions and not as simply the continuation of discussions that occurred to this point. It is my understanding that it does, in fact, mark a new departure and a new development, and I am sure I speak on behalf of all Members of the House of Commons in welcoming the initiative that has been shown by the leaders of both the Soviet Union and the United States.

REQUEST THAT PRESS GUIDELINES BE TABLED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I questioned the Prime Minister on the Government's obsessive concern for secrecy and he assured the House that, to use his words, the press was indispensable to the proper functioning of our democracy, and that he wants to enhance that relationship.

Less than 48 hours after that assurance we find the Deputy Prime Minister skulking around the corridors of power that he knows so well, taking circuitous routes in order to avoid the press. We find the Minister of Finance lecturing the media about criticizing his mini-budget.

The Prime Minister has undertaken to meet the media with some guidelines tomorrow. I would ask him if he would recognize as well that this is not a matter for the media only, no matter how important its role is in conveying information to Canada, but also for Parliament. Would he table those guidelines in Parliament immediately so that the people's representatives would also have his assurance that Ministers and government officials can talk freely to the media without fear of reprisal?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be delighted to table all the documentation relating to the issue raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. It is true I intend to meet the members of the press tomorrow. I expect to announce the parameters of our initiatives at that time, and I shall be tabling them as soon as possible here in the House.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ADVISORY GROUP FUNCTION—REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY HEARINGS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on the subject of the Canadian people's right to information, I am a little disturbed by reports that there are cut-backs to the CBC affecting remote communities in northern Canada and parts of western Canada in which live farmers and fishermen. I would like the Prime Minister to guarantee, if he would, that the CBC cuts committee, made up of outside experts, will answer to Parliament. Will he also allow the regional directors of the CBC to appear before a parliamentary committee in order to assure us that the distribution of information across the country will not be curtailed as a result of these cuts?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly not in character for the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to distort fundamental information. In point of fact I thought that I had clearly stated that the advisory group—and I assume that that is the group to which he refers—was precisely that, an advisory group, and that all determinations in regard to reductions in expenditures would be undertaken by the CBC. May I say that when Mr. Juneau visited with the Minister, I think I remember him saying in a "scrum" that it would be childish to assume that, with the public finances of the country in difficult shape, the CBC should be excluded from a reasonable application of the same principles. We are trying to be fair in bringing a degree of sanity back to the public finances of our country, finances that have been devastated by 20 years of mismanagement.

INCOME TAX

MINIMUM TAX FOR UPPER-INCOME GROUP

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it was certainly a pleasure for me to hear the Prime Minister speaking of fairness this afternoon. I have a question concerning the minimum tax for upper-income Canadians. I am sure the Prime Minister will vividly recall that during a certain evening this past summer he made an interesting observation about all of those upper-income Canadians who are not paying taxes at all. If I remember correctly, and I think I do, he said that the rich should pay, and should pay handsomely. The Minister of Finance, however, is quoted to today's press as saying that the Government is not necessarily committed to a minimum tax. He said that the Government is pretty committed but it is not definite. Are we going to impose a minimum tax on upper-income Canadians and, if so, when?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party would refer to that evening last summer. He was not supposed to mention it in public. It was supposed to be a secret.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: In point of fact, it was a delightful evening. I think the Hon. Leader of the NDP and I enjoyed it a great deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: In fact I think that he and I enjoyed it almost as much as did the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

The commitment I made that evening was to the minimum tax and to that sense of fairness that inspires both of us. We will follow through with regard to a minimum tax.

TIMING OF IMPLEMENTATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister regrets deeply that it was not an affair, if I may use that word, between just the two of us. There were eight or ten million Canadians who heard him and saw him say that he was committed to a minimum tax.

I enjoy the kind of repartee in which he indulges almost as much as he does—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —but, Mr. Speaker, considering that the Government has already imposed on ordinary Canadians increased taxes amounting to about $500 per family, including increases in indirect tax, federal tax, federal sales tax, income tax, and increases in the tax on gasoline, can the Prime Minister tell us that he will put in place an equivalent tax on upper-income Canadians before Christmas so that they will pay their share?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the Hon. Member will be disappointed with the provisions that we will bring forward in a budget to deal with the question of fairness in taxation, a question which involves having people pay their fair share of taxes at all times.

My hon. friend refers to tax increases that may have been imposed on Canadians. I hope he would refer to the benefits which were brought forward for widows, and veterans, and the relief for farmers and fishermen, which have already been announced by this Government.

REQUEST FOR IMPLEMENTATION BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, pleasantness, civility, and charm are wonderful political virtues, as they are in terms of personal relations, but considering that we have a task in this House not only to be civil but also to be fair, and considering that the Government is now talking about singling out Canadians over the age of 55 and cracking down on the so-called cheaters in unemployment insurance, and considering that it has imposed a tax of $500 on the average family, will the Prime Minister agree that he already has taxed ordinary Canadians handsomely? Why will he not apply the minimum tax before Christmas to the rest of Canadians, in order that the rich can pay their share of the burden?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will acknowledge readily that personal income tax, particularly for lower and middle-income Canadians, is too high. They are paying an unfair burden of government spending which has been absolutely out of control for the last 20 years. Those Canadians are paying to service the debt which has been imposed on generations of Canadian youth. That is the burden which we are trying to get out from under so that we can bring new prosperity to our country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend quite properly refers to the dimension of fairness. I think the only disagreement may be on timeframes. He requested before Christmas; I give him the assurance that it will be in the budget.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

POLITICAL APPOINTMENTS IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have read in the media that the Conservative Government is putting on the ritz, and that a committee has been struck—of which the manager of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in Montreal is a prominent member—to advise the Government on political appointments in the Province of Quebec. That would certainly add some elegance to the pork-barrel. However, the fact is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. "Wonderful Wednesday" now appears to be happening on Thursday. The first round of questions took approximately four or five minutes longer than it normally should have. Therefore, may I ask the Hon. Member to please put his question.

Mr. Tobin: You should treat the Opposition the same way you treat the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I am perfectly happy to hold questions and answers to the same length.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the campaign, and on the evening last summer which has been referred to, before eight million or nine million people the Prime Minister told Canadians that political appointments to positions which would have a determining influence on our lives should be subject to the approval of a committee of parliamentarians.

How will the Ritz-Carlton group, for example, relate to a House committee? Or has the Prime Minister scrapped the idea of having such a House committee to approve political appointments?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the elegance of the Ritz. It is no match for the elegance of the meeting of the two apostles of affection which we witnessed the other night at a party held for the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: It is our intention to bring forward provisions whereby nominees for government appointments would be subjected to a criticism or an analysis of their records and proposals by parliamentarians. I have been meeting with the Government House Leader to attempt to find an appropriate manner in which this might be done. Because we have been preoccupied with economic matters we have made few appointments. The appointment of Stephen Lewis as Ambassador to the UN, and the appointment of Bruce Phillips today as Minister Counsellor in Washington are an indication of the high quality—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Prime Minister, I must be fair to both sides of the House and ask for brevity.

FORMATION OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary question. When can we look to the formation of such a House committee, and what will be its composition? As well, in the view of the Prime Minister, what are the agencies, commissions and other appointments which have a determining influence on the lives of all Canadians? We require some criteria against which their performance could be measured.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House Leader will be meeting with his colleagues to draw up guidelines which are fair and helpful to the process. It will be a new concept, but it will be one which will be beneficial to the House of Commons.

Mr. Broadbent: What about Charlie Lynch?

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to Charlie Lynch, we can do nothing as he is protected by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EMPLOYMENT

MEASURES TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Yesterday, Statistics Canada announced that 100,000 people were not included in the official unemployment figure of 1.3 million here in Canada. They are not included because they are completely discouraged and have stopped looking for work, but they still want to work.

My question is: what concrete measures does the Minister intend to take to make it clear to these 100,000 unemployed that the Government's number one priority is to create jobs here in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, according to that Statistics Canada report, indeed 100,000 Canadian workers had given up looking for work in September. Last March the figure was approximately 300,000. That is a recurring tragedy and one which we know must be addressed. However, it is due in part to the fact that the old remedies have not worked. For that reason we are going through an intensive consultative process to restore confidence in the economy, and to come up with new programs and new approaches which will deal with these very problems.

CANADIAN FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS—LISTING OF JOB OPENINGS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister speaks of confidence in business. The other day the Canadian Federation of Independent Business indicated that there were 170,000 jobs which were not filled.

Since the Canadian Federation of Independent Business indicated this morning that they will not release the names of companies looking for workers because "they don't want every Tom, Dick and Harry banging on their doors looking for a job", will the Minister approach the Federation and demand that they make public the list of companies which are looking for workers, so that the unemployed will have an opportunity of finding out where those jobs are? Is that not her responsibility?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that we have agreed with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business to establish a system which would assist the unemployed in finding the jobs that were identified by the CFIB report. In other words, there will be one person designated in each of the Canada Employment Centres throughout the country to work with a representative of small business designated by the CFIB. Jointly, they will place unemployed persons into the jobs which are available.

GARRISON DIVERSION

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it concerns the statements which were made by the U.S. ambassador on the very critical issue of the Garrison Diversion. As the Minister may know, the U.S. ambassador, who may have been expressing a personal opinion, said that as far as he is concerned it is not much of an issue. As the Secretary of State will know, it is very much an issue with Manitobans and, indeed, with all Canadians. Has he had conservations with the U.S. ambassador to bring home to him what a vital issue the Garrison Diversion is for this country? In addition, has he raised this matter with the Secretary of State in the United States to ensure that the Americans fully understand that this is a diversion which must not be allowed to be built because of the serious economic and environmental effect it will have on this country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to raise with the Secretary of State for the United States earlier in the fall the Garrison question, and to express Canada's very real concern. More recently, indeed yesterday, representatives of the Canadian Government and the Manitoba Government met with United States officials in Washington to present, in a diplomatic note, Canada's concerns about the Garrison plan, and to seek assurances. We received those assurances. There will be no action on any commission hearings which are undertaken in the United States without full prior consultation with Canada.

REQUEST THAT DIPLOMATIC NOTE BE TABLED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Minister for his reply. However, he still did not indicate whether in fact he has been in direct communication with the U.S. ambassador who, after all, is a major line of communication with Washington, at least from the Ottawa post. In relation to that diplomatic note, which is very vital, would the Minister be prepared to table that note in Parliament so that Manitobans and all Hon. Members of this House will know exactly what is the nature of the Canadian response to the technical report, considering that it has very major implications for the economic and environmental concerns of our province, and for the country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would have to consult precedents on the possibility of tabling a note which was jointly prepared by this Government and another Government in another jurisdiction in Canada. If it is possible, and within the practices of this Parliament to table notes of that kind, certainly it will be tabled. I believe it goes without saying that this Government seeks the active co-operation of Hon. Members on all sides of the House and, indeed, Governments in all jurisdictions, in order to ensure that nothing is done with regard to the Garrison which imperils the Canadian interest.

LEVEL OF BENEFITS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Just a few moments ago she acknowledged to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville, that she agreed with the CFIB, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, that there are 170,000 jobs going begging, even though neither the Minister nor the CFIB know where they are. In the government paper, "A New Direction for Canada", the Government notes that the unemployment insurance program, "may create disincentives to job search". That sounds remarkably like the claim made by the CFIB that, "In Canada we have workers who are not willing to make a downward adjustment in their income in order to get a job", and that this is the fault of the unemployment insurance system.

Does the Minister agree with the CFIB that the unemployment insurance system is already far too generous when the average recipient of unemployment insurance benefits last year was living on an income $2,000 below the poverty line? If she does not agree, why has the Minister supported the action of her Government in making the deepest cut of all to the unemployment insurance program?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I stated just a few minutes ago that we would be working with the private sector, notably the CFIB, in order to determine where those 170,000 jobs are and how quickly unemployed people can be put into them so that they can go off the unemployed rolls and back into the work force. I would hope that the Hon. Member would agree that that is the approach we all want to take.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, that simply is no change. That is the present system.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Yesterday the Minister informed me that in spite of the study done by her Department on exhaustees as abusers, her concern for Canada's older workers still exists. If this is so, would the Minister tell us why she has already agreed to cuts in the unemployment insurance program with respect to this age group? These cuts will save the Government $30 million but will be done on the backs of workers who will be forced to use up their pension savings before claiming unemployment insurance benefits.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I mentioned to the Hon. Member, and to others the other day, that the intent of the interviews is to help people find jobs.

Mr. Rodriguez: There are no jobs.

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member says there are no jobs. At least we can try to help the system move forward by providing the confidence in the economy which is needed, by attracting investment, by creating new jobs, and by putting people into them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: You are just trying to cut them off.

Miss MacDonald: I know that the approach of the Hon. Member is entirely different.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR CROP LOSSES IN REGIONS OF QUEBEC

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

Could the Hon. Minister inform the House what is being done about reimbursement for crop losses suffered by certain regions in Quebec in 1983?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague refers to harvest losses in the Province of Quebec. I want to tell the Hon. Member through you, Mr. Speaker, that during my trip to Quebec City I had the opportunity to discuss the matter with my provincial counterpart, the Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Quebec. I have also had an opportunity to talk to the President of the UPA and I have requested the officials of my Department to study the losses. When that study is completed within a matter of two weeks or three weeks, I will have a look at it, and then I want an opportunity to discuss the matter with my provincial counterpart.

ABELLA REPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday, in response to a question from the Hon. Member for Mount Royal, the Minister said that the Cabinet would study the Abella recommendations and decide whether legislation will be necessary to bring about employment equity. In the same breath her Leader told the Leader of the Opposition that to bring about "proper and fair representation of women throughout the Government . . . . That may, and indeed will, require legislative considerations that we will bring forward". Can the Minister tell this House which position stated yesterday was the correct one, her position or the position of the Prime Minister?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that there is absolutely no difference in the position of the Prime Minister, or of myself, or of any member of this Cabinet, this Government, or this Party—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: —with respect to its total commitment to the economic equality of women, of the disabled, of the minority groups, and of native people. As I said yesterday, we will be studying the recommendations in the Abella report to see which ones can best be utilized to move this commitment to the desired goal.

EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister stated yesterday, "I will never be in a position where I am accused of letting women down". The Abella commission clearly called for legislation to replace the voluntary approach which has been an abysmal failure in the Minister's own Department.

Mr. Skelly: What about the Liberals?

Ms. Copps: Why will the Minister not live up to the promises made to the women of Canada? Or is it simply a case of a promise a day to keep women at bay?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that I am in agreement with her with respect to the way in which affirmative action programs have not been carried out in Departments which were administered by the Party of which she is now a member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I would tell the Hon. Member that that Party has a record which is indeed shameful. So I would say to the Hon. Member yes, we are going to be looking at affirmative action and, yes, we are going to be doing something about it.

Ms. Copps: What and when?

Miss MacDonald: I would invite her co-operation.

RESEARCH

FUTURE OF CHURCHILL ROCKET RANGE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. It relates to the closing of the National Research Council rocket range in Churchill and related facilities in Gimli, Manitoba. Can the Minister confirm to this House that by the closing of that base we will not only lose valuable research into the environment but we will lose the NASA contract which the Americans are in the process of negotiating for increased use of the Churchill rocket range? We are also entering into discussions with respect to the use of that base for the research related to the space shuttle program.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Hon. Member has jumped to the conclusion he has. Indeed, I met yesterday in Winnipeg with officials of Bristol Aerospace Limited and we discussed the fact that the lion's share of the work which Bristol performs at that base is carried out for universities and for U.S. and other interests. The direct Canadian sponsorship by the Government of Canada was only a small portion of the over-all program. We discussed the prospects that Bristol Aerospace might bring cost recovery into the program and, through Canada's ongoing involvement in the space program, a number of exciting options will be presented which will create more employment rather than less.

GIMLI FACILITIES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems confused. Once you close the facilities in Gimli, how can research be done by anyone? That is the question. Once the base is closed down, no one, Canadian or American, private or public, is going to use those facilities.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): The base being spoken of is a Canadian Forces Base.

Mr. Murphy: No it is not.

Mr. Siddon: The Member is speaking of the launch site at Churchill. The Government has decided to discontinue, over a three-year period of phasing down, the operating expenses that were being absorbed by the National Research Council. This does not constitute a closing of the base. Indeed, we are negotiating with Bristol, as I said a moment ago, to find a number of other attractive uses for this facilitiy.

MINES AND MINING

DISCOVERY OF RARE EARTH METALS IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Mines. In recent months exploration teams working east of Yellowknife have delineated deposits of rare earth metals which have the potential to be the largest in the western world. In view of the importance of these rare earth metals to the high technology industry, can the Minister comment on whether any discussions or studies are in progress leading toward the establishment of a rare earth metallurgical centre in western Canada?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, at present there is no production of rare earth minerals in Canada. We understand that the world market is limited. However, these new discoveries, along with others in our country, perhaps present a new opportunity. We will be discussing this in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and I will be happy to provide a report to the Hon. Member.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

COMPLIANCE WITH COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State who was in the House of Commons when the Special Parliamentary Committee on the Handicapped was created in 1980. This committee made a large number of unanimous recommendations, and later made reports showing compliance by the Government with a high percentage of those recommendations. Will the Minister tell this House what specific action he has taken, or is taking, to ensure compliance with the remainder of that committee's recommendations concerning the handicapped?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for that important question and assure him that consultations have already begun. This past weekend I met with the Ministers responsible for the handicapped in Atlantic Canada to begin the process of discussing implementation of many of the recommendations. As the Hon. Member will know, many of those recommendations require serious funding from a provincial base. There was a recommendation for federal-provincial consultation, and that will take place once we have looked at the agenda and set the framework for that type of consultation.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, in view of all these consultations I can now understand why they have to call the report Obstacles.

ABELLA REPORT—LEGISLATION RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, in view of our concern for the handicapped, and in view of the conclusion of the Abella Commission that the elimination of all forms of discrimination requires more rather than less legislation, is the Minister prepared to support mandatory legislation of the kind recommended by Judge Abella on behalf of the handicapped?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in her report Judge Abella quite rightly indicates the difficulty handicapped people have in finding employment opportunities. The question is one of charter application, and the discussions around April and the mechanisms to find appropriate entry into the workplace are, as my colleague, the Minister of Employment, has been outlining to the House, a top priority, not only in relation to women in the workplace but also in relation to the handicapped, natives, and visible minorities.

Oral Questions

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—EFFECT ON WINDSOR TELEVISION STATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Communications intimated the $75 million spending cut at the CBC would chiefly involve overhead, and that programming might in fact be improved. Today the people of Windsor are outraged, as am I, to learn that 30 per cent of the budget of CBET Windsor is to be cut. By order of the CBC bureaucracy, those cuts are to be applied to programming, resulting in the loss of 40 staff members.

In view of yesterday's assertions, will the Minister assure the people of Windsor and Essex County that these drastic cuts at Windsor will take into account the following: that CBET is the only source of local and national Canadian TV in a market with 12 U.S. stations; that CBET is the single most effective defence against the overwhelming cultural dominance of the U.S. media; that CBET is a Canadian window on the U.S.; and that increased, not decreased, national and local programming are necessary to community unity and identity in Windsor?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can inform the people of Windsor that up to now, the entire preamble of his question is just rumours.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—EFFECT ON ACID RAIN RESEARCH

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. To date he has given no satisfactory justification for the cut at the National Research Council. He simply refers to the fact that these programs are of lesser priority. How does he square that response with the report of the Wright Commission, to which he has referred approvingly, which states that government sponsored research into acid raid is virtually mandatory, and that government research into air and water pollution, pesticides, and radiation levels, constitutes a large and legitimate market for federal laboratories?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, of course I have never said that the research programs of the National Research Council are not pertinent and necessary. As the Hon. Member confirms, we had to look at all options on a scale of priorities. If he would read further in the Wright report he would find that it suggests the work of the National Research Council could be better managed in terms of the determination of priorities. Therefore, I see nothing inconsistent in anything that I have said to this point.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the report says that government sponsored research is virtually mandatory. I simply ask the Minister, as I did the other day, whether he would not refer these cuts to an appropriate parliamentary committee so we can see if they can be implemented in a more appropriate fashion.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the decisions the Government has taken, as announced by the President of the Treasury Board, will stand. However, any Member is, of course, welcome to bring matters of concern before the appropriate standing committee at the time the Estimates are tabled.

AIRPORTS

AUTOMOBILE RENTAL CONCESSIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Last spring the Minister, along with numerous other Members of this House, some now in Cabinet, convinced the former Minister of Transport to change the policy concerning airport vehicle rental concessions. We were all successful in convincing the former Minister to change these policies because in essence they were preventing a Canadian company, Holiday Rent-A-Car, from successfully bidding for space at airports. Why has the Minister changed his mind on this important matter?

● (1500)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this Minister has not changed his mind. I have taken every step available to work out a negotiated settlement with Holiday Rent-a-Car. As the Hon. Member knows, the Holiday Rent-a-Car organization is in considerable arrears at several airports throughout the country. We have proposed a number of options to Holiday Rent-a-Car to allow them to enter into the bidding process. They have basically taken the position that the arrears should be written off. That is contrary to the provisions of the contracting arrangements under which the agreements were entered into. Mr. Speaker, we have tried and we have negotiated, but we have not been able to arrive at a settlement yet.

Mr. de Jong: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The time for Question Period has expired.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

CORPORATE TAX BREAKS—JOB CREATION

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr.

Heap) on Wednesday, November 21, 1984 meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the House that I have received three written notices of questions of privilege, one of which I take it has been withdrawn. I have received notices which I must take in order. I believe the Clerk's office telephoned the Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). The two questions of privilege, one from the Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe and the other from the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), turn out to be effectively the same question of privilege. I therefore propose to hear them both, if it is appropriate, at the same time.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: You cannot raise a point of order during a question of privilege. What is the point of order?

I now recognize the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to ask you . . . I can understand that there are questions of privilege, but now that most Members are in the House, would it not be preferable now to ask the House Leader what the House business will be for the coming week?

Mr. Speaker: I presume the Hon. Member is rising to enquire about the business of the House.

That is not possible when the Chair has received notice of a question of privilege one hour earlier. I presume that the Hon. Member knows full well that the Chair must entertain questions of privilege immediately or at the earliest opportunity. He is aware of that, I presume.

[English]

SERVICES OF LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have given notice of a question of privilege because a matter which I believe directly affects the ability of Members of Parliament to carry out their duties and responsibilities has been brought to my attention. The Speaker will know that the services of the Library of Parliament are historically of crucial importance to Members of Parliament in carrying out research to ensure that they are as fully informed as possible on all matters that are brought before the House.

It has come to my attention, Mr. Speaker, that a very significant part of the services provided by the Library of Parliament to Members of the House in all Parties is at risk of being lost to Members. I understand that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) has requested that the third floor reading room of the Library of Parliament in the Confederation Building be closed and that its services no longer be available to Members to allow for additional office space in what are already palatial surroundings of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Speaker: Could I ask the Member to inform the Chair whether in fact the space has been reallocated? If the space has not been reallocated, how could there possibly be a question of privilege about a matter which has not yet happened?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, you have asked a very good question and I propose now to give you the answser. I understand that without consultation with any of the three Parties in the House a request has been made—

Mr. Speaker: A question of privilege is a very special parliamentary situation, as the Member knows. I have asked the Member a very simple question which he should answer, please. Has the fact happened? If it has not happened, how could there possibly be a question of privilege? I give him about 30 seconds to find some way to turn this into a question of privilege, if he has one.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, if you will give me 30 seconds I will come right to the point. The problem is that a request has been made to your office, without consultation with any of the Parties. That request may put the Speaker in a position where he will appear, or at least his appearance—

Mr. Speaker: No, with due respect. The Speaker receives hundreds and thousands of requests from Members. To argue that somehow a request made to the Speaker puts the Speaker in a position other than that for which he is paid is hardly a question of privilege.

I have to recognize the Member for Burnaby. Does he wish to rise on the same Question of Privilege? Does the Member have an angle he wishes to present to me before I rule?

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Speaker appears to be rejecting the unbridled arrogance of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) in his totally unreasonable request to expand his already palatial space.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Member for Burnaby for recognizing the difficulty the Speaker is put in on this question. I must find, for the record, that there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Just refuse the question. Just say no.

Mr. Speaker: In all seriousness and dignity, I accept the representations that are being made by various Members of the House, which I have also received in writing, that I deal with this matter seriously, and I shall, recognizing the use that Members wish to make of library material.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will now ask the Government House Leader to tell us his plans respecting the business of the House for the coming week.

An Hon. Member: In French!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I speak French very well, but very slowly.

[English]

Therefore I will make my remarks in my native language of English.

Mr. Speaker, we have again had the benefit of additional, productive and constructive House Leaders' meetings in which I have been able to advise the House Leaders of each of the Parties with respect to the business of the House. I will now indicate to you and to Members that we intend to carry on today with Government legislation as indicated to the House. We will proceed after Routine Proceedings with the order of reference with respect to the creation of a parliamentary task force for the reform of the House of Commons. After that it is my intention to call Bill C-6 which is the Bill dealing with the Saltfish Corporation.

Tomorrow is an allotted day. Next Monday I intend to deal with Government business. It is my intention to call the Bill relating to the Income Tax Act which was the subject of a Ways and Means motion this morning. When we have finished with that Bill it will be followed by the Customs Act and Customs Tariff legislation.

I am informed, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) will be introducing a borrowing Bill tomorrow.

Mr. Deans: Shame, shame!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The cupboard is bare, Mr. Speaker, I therefore anticipate that there will be a borrowing Bill brought forward.

Mr. Deans: More borrowing on top of what you have already borrowed?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, if I could conclude this dissertation, I know that the Hon. House Leader has heard this all before so his surprise is not exactly real.

Mr. Deans: No, but I am no less surprised.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is my intention to designate Tuesday next as the third allotted day in this Supply period. On Wednesday next I intend to return to Government legislation to carry on with those financial Bills which I indicated we will begin on Monday. We will see if we make progress. We will try to carry on in that sequence.

I of course reiterate the caveat that there may be a possibility of changing priorities. Depending on the progress, I may in fact change the order of business and the designation of days indicated. However, that is my present intention. I hope that we can hold to it and make substantial progress in the business of our country through the legislative program being put forward by the Government.

NUCLEAR-WEAPONS-FREE ZONE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present a petition to the House of Commons on behalf of the undersigned residents of many parts of Canada who urge that Canada be declared a nuclear-weapons-free zone, in accord with similar initiatives by other nations, and to become actively involved in working for multilateral de-escalation of the arms race.

REQUESTED AMENDMENT TO FORMER BILL C-47

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition.

To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled.

The petition of the undersigned "Femmes autochtones Abénaquises d'Odanak et de Sorel", who now exercise their ancient and unchallenged rights to present a grievance, with the assurance that your Honourable House will provide a remedy.

Humbly sheweth that:

An amendment be made to Clause 11(2) of Bill C-47—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but it seems to me that he is reading the introduction to the petition, and that is not allowed. I realize that he is a new Member and, for that reason, I think it is my duty to point out that he may explain very briefly the nature of the petition, nothing more.

Mr. Plamondon: If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I will do so in two paragraphs, or I will simply give it to you.

Mr. Speaker: That is not for me to decide. Our Standing Orders allow a summary of the contents of the petition, but the Hon. Member is not allowed to read the entire petition.

Mr. Plamondon: Mr. Speaker, I have read one paragraph, as allowed under the Standing Orders of the House. When you interrupted me, I was about to read one of the two introductory paragraphs of my petition. I was following the formula recommended in the Standing Orders.

That an amendment be made to Clause 11(4) of the same Bill.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly call upon the federal government to amend Bill C-47 which denies reregistration rights to all the generations concerned.

And, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

That is the accepted formula.

Mr. Speaker: I fully appreciate the difficulties, and perhaps I should explain for the benefit of the other new Members that, in my opinion, the Hon. Member used Beauchesne's formula to read the introduction to the petition. I can understand that. For the future, however, I would point out that Hon. Members are not allowed to read the petition or the introduction in the House. I presume the Hon. Member used the formula for the preparation and the official presentation. But I point out that, henceforth, the only thing allowed is a summary.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-210, an Act to stabilize the representation in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, briefly, I have put this Bill before the House on two previous occasions. It concerns not wanting to expand the number of members in the House of Commons. The reasons are self-evident. While I have great trust in this brand-new Government, I am still putting in my Private Members' Bill just in case.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

That changes in the membership of the Committee be made only pursuant to Standing Order 69(4)(b); and

That the Committee shall report to the House finally no later than June 28, 1985.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I regard it as a great privilege to be able to move this motion. As Members of Parliament, we share the honour and duty of serving an institution which helps to bind this nation together and which helps to define and defend the rights and interests of the Canadian people.

Edward Blake, one of our predecessors in this place, described his understanding of the importance of this institution in the following terms:

The privileges of Parliament are the privileges of the people, and the rights of Parliament are the rights of the people.

It is for that reason that reform of the House of Commons is not undertaken lightly by this Government. As I have expressed on other occasions, the results of the September 4 election indicate that there is a public will for a change in the operations of the central institutions of government. That desire for change expressed itself in the mandate received by our Government.

However, no matter how strong the mandate, change in a democratic society must be the result of consultation and consensus. Let there be no doubt that the Government has its views with respect to the aspects of this institution that are in greatest need of reform. Indeed, there are reforms that we could undertake on a unilateral basis. But reform without consultation is no reform at all.

Thus, the action that we take today reflects the Government's belief that real progress is achieved when, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said, "First you listen, and then you act". The motion we are currently debating provides the proposed task force with the widest of possible mandates. The committee will have the authority not only to consider the rules of the House of Commons but will have the power to examine the role of the Private Member in the House of Commons and the funding, facilities and support services made available to Members.

The Government believes that it is important to ensure that the duly elected respresentatives of the people have a say in the legislative process and that the views of all Canadians are represented in decisions which will shape the nation's future.

To ensure, therefore, that the process of reform is carried to both sides of the House and impacts upon all aspects of our deliberations, the Government is of the view that it is important that proposals for reform be the product of an all-Party review and that the opportunity is given for the widest possible consultation in the course of that review.

We have proposed the establishment of a task force because we believe that parliamentary task forces have proven to be of the proper size and flexibility to bring focused attention to the major issues on the public agenda. We are not insensitive to the fact that by creating a seven-member committee the Opposition Parties are limited to one member apiece on the task force. We have therefore taken the rather unusual step of providing for alternate members. It is our hope that the alternate members will take the opportunity to participate in the deliberations of the task force and that the task force will benefit from their input.

There may be some who feel that this task force will merely repeat the work done by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure during the Thirty-second Parliament.

It is true that the task force will have the authority to review the reports of the special committee and the operation of the provisional Standing Orders which were adopted on the recommendation of that committee. It is not surprising that almost two years to the day from the time the experimental rules were adopted such a review would be undertaken. However, this task force is expected to go much further. I was a member of the special committee, and it was a disappointment to me that that committee dealt with a fairly narrow range of matters. Its mandate was to review the Standing Orders and make recommendations for change. Unfortunately there were any number of Standing Orders that we did not have the opportunity to consider and which, because they relate to archaic procedures, are badly in need of review.

As well, the special committee was constrained to considering merely procedural issues. If our concern is to ensure that Members of Parliament and the House of Commons as a body perform a valuable function in the legislative process and in scrutinizing the affairs of government, then procedural change is but one means of achieving our objective. Equally important is ensuring that the institution runs on an efficient basis, has all powers necessary to do its job and that individual Members have the tools they require in order to make a genuine contribution.

These are the objectives of the Government, and that is why the task force will be empowered among other things to:

—examine the powers, procedures, practices, organization and facilities of the House of Commons, bearing in mind the balance between the respective constitutional responsibilities and roles of the House of Commons and the Government, such an examination to include, but not be limited to, the following matters:

(a) the Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders;

(b) the role of the private Member in the House of Commons;

(c) the accountability of Ministers to the House of Commons;

(d) the legislative process;

(e) the funding, facilities and staff support services made available to Members of the House of Commons;

(f) the administration and management of the House of Commons; and

(g) the procedures and powers of Committees of the House of Commons and the role and use of parliamentary task forces.

This is a very broad mandate and the task force will have a relatively short period of time in which to conduct its study. I am confident, however, that the members of the task force will bring their full effort to bear on this important study and that their deliberations will prove fruitful. Mr. Speaker, you will see by the names listed for that committee that we have asked among our number competent and dedicated Members of Parliament to serve, not only in terms of permanent members but, with respect to all Parties and all members, to serve as alternates to this important committee.

It is almost a truism to suggest that unless reform is undertaken early on in the mandate of a new government it will not be undertaken at all. Frankly, it is human nature that once patterns of behaviour are established they become rather hard to set aside. It is significant, therefore, that the pledge of reform took priority in the Speech from the Throne and that the establishment of this task force is one of the first initiatives undertaken by our Government in this Parliament.

Reform is not a new issue, nor is it the result of a sudden public dissatisfaction with the operations of Parliament. It is the nature of democratic institutions to be subject to public criticism, scrutiny and debate. The roles of Parliament and of parliamentarians have been the target of criticism for as long as Canada has been a nation. A couple of quotations from the last century serve to illustrate this point.

In Canada: A Guidebook in 1894, Karl Baedeker had the following to say about Members of Parliament and the institution they served:

Few of the speeches delivered in the House of Commons can be called inspiring. In fact, when not personal, they are prosaic. This can hardly be helped, for a Canadian Parliament, like Congress in the United States, deals, as a rule, with matters from which only genius could draw inspiration.

A more pointed criticism of the inhabitants of this place is to be found in an advertisement which was run by an Ottawa furrier during the 1870s. I present this for the edification of current members of the House of Commons. It reads:

Re the new government (having carefully perused the press)—it consists of: Anarchists, 17; Horse Thieves, 22; Burglars, 10; Would-be Burglars if they had the pluck, 31; Judas Iscariots, 19; Counterfeiters, 27; Forgers, 19; Highwaymen, 46; Murderers, 29; Arch-fiends, 1.

Under the circumstances it is needless for me to say that I decline to sell my new Spring Hats (by the way, they are just opened) to any Member of the new House of Commons.

It was signed by R. J. Devlin. How little times have changed! Even in the 1870s the press had full access to the secrets of government, as it does today.

We will never be able to please all the people all the time, but we have the responsibility to try to inspire Canadians through our actions here. Also we have the responsibility to ensure that Canadians can reasonably believe that their elected representatives are conscientiously working to advance the public interest.

If speeches in this place sometimes appear to lack inspiration, it may not be that the matters being considered are mundane or trivial but that Members of Parliament lack the tools or the motivation to get at the substance of the issues which are before the House. There are remedies for these conditions, and it is the mandate of the task force to outline those remedies.

If I might be permitted a personal observation, it often seems that everywhere but on Parliament Hill Private Members are important participants in Canadian public life. I believe that ways must be found to enhance and expand their role and importance in this place. The relevance of this institution and its continuing ability to provide the means for ordered and peaceful social and institutional change rest in no small measure on its ability to provide an important part in its functions and the exercise of its powers to as many representatives of the people as possible. I cannot overstate the importance of this aspect of the task force's mandate.

The emphasis on the role of the Private Member is also of interest when considering other aspects of the committee's mandate. For example, a review of the procedures and powers of the committees of the House of Commons is a specific part of the broad mandate of the task force. The increasing importance of the standing committees since their creation in the late sixties has been one of the most significant developments in the changing face of this institution. In considering the committees and the use of parliamentary task forces, of course the task force will be aware of the important part which Private Members have to play in these fora and will want to consider the mechanisms which can be used to enhance their role in committees.

The importance of the work done by committees in considering legislation should not be underestimated. However, the work of all committees has increased and the task force may want to consider the means by which this work can continue without conflicting with the other competing and legitimate demands placed upon a committee's time.

Respect for the institution of the House of Commons is independent not only upon the work of individual Members but also upon its organization, administration and structure. In recent years changes in the management of the House and the services it provides to its members have been undertaken. Many of these changes were the result of the excellent report of the Auditor General on the operations and management of the House. I am certain that these changes have resulted in certain cost savings and have caused the services of the House to be placed on a more regular and professional basis, which is more in keeping with practices in other public sector institutions. However, the task force may want to review these services and the changes made to ensure that they are meeting the needs of Hon. Members while at the same time ensuring that they are being delivered in the most effective and efficient manner possible.

The task force will realize that Parliament is unlike any other institution of government and must obtain and demand the highest standards of professional and discrete services to ensure its effective functioning. It is not always enough that the services available to the House and its Members meet or exceed the standards which exist in Canada's public sector because the demands which are placed on the servants of the House are often quite distinct from the demands placed on public servants.

I am sure the task force will be cognizant of these factors in its review of the services now being provided and in considering the changes which have been made to those services in recent years. May I say in passing that in my view those services are of the highest standard and are provided by a dedicated and thoroughly professional body of employees. This is a fact of which you, Mr. Speaker, can be justly proud.

In the event that the task force recommends changing or altering the services provided by the House or the organizational structure of the House, the members of the task force might also want to concern themselves with discovering the most cost effective way of delivering those services or instituting those changes. In this manner they will be able to ensure that the budget of Parliament is subject to the same restraints to which the rest of the public sector is now subject. By doing so, the task force will have done a great service, not only for the House and its Members, but for the taxpayers of Canada.

In that light, it is my hope that the task force will take the opportunity to spell out in one of its early reports to the House its anticipated budgetary requirements and its tentative agenda. I am sure that all Members of the House will be watching the activities of the task force with interest and would be grateful to be informed of the studies that the committee proposes to launch and the schedule that it intends to keep.

It will be of particular interest to the House if the task force determines that it will make use of its power to travel in Canada or abroad. As well, I am sure that Members will want to be kept informed if the task force decides to invite representations from the public or from past or current parliamentarians.

As I mentioned earlier, we have chosen the vehicle of a parliamentary task force to undertake this review because we believe that the small size of a task force lends itself both to the tackling of difficult problems and to the opening up of dialogue between Parliament and the public which it serves. In turn, the very use of task forces is a matter to which the committee will be asked to address its attention.

As the role of the standing committees changes, there may as a consequence be a changed mandate for task forces. For the time being, however, we believe that the smaller size of a task force encourages a greater spirit of co-operation among the members of such a committee. That fact is of considerable importance given the Government's objective of ensuring that whatever reforms emerge from the work of this task force they do so on the basis of consensus among the members of all three Parties.

I would like at this point to address an aspect of the terms of reference of the task force which I have not previously touched upon. That aspect is the balance of the constitutional responsibilities between the House of Commons and the Government. There can be no doubt that the growth of government in Canada has placed considerable strains on the traditional relationship between the roles of the Ministry and of Parliament. As Arthur Beauchesne noted in the preface to the fourth edition of his Parliamentary Rules and Forms:

> Definite rules are necessary if Parliament wants to solve its two main problems: first, how to find time for disposing of the growing mass of Government business, and secondly, how to reconcile the Government's demands with the rights of the minority. The House cannot now carry on with wholly customary law—

It was 1958 when Arthur Beauchesne wrote those words, but that sentiment is, if anything, more valid and telling today.

The task force is not being asked to rewrite the Constitution. Quite the contrary. The task force is being reminded that the constitutional balance between the institutions of government exists for good reason and that reforms that affect the balance on one side of the equation require some form of compensation on the other side.

It is my view, and I hope that of the members of the task force, that the need of governments to gain passage of their legislative programs and the duty of Members of the House of Commons to hold the Government to account for its actions are not mutually contradictory. When the balance of responsibilities is working well, the result should be that legislation is improved rather than impeded by the House and that governments seek the advice and consent of Parliament when initiating new policies.

Within the context which I have just outlined, the task force is being asked to consider not only the legislative process and the role of the private Member but also the accountability of Ministers to the House of Commons. Needless to say, as a Government, we will commit ourselves to being as forthcoming and responsive in the House as possible. Nonetheless, Canadians have the right to expect that the proper functioning of their institutions of government rests on more than simple assurances of good faith.

The task force is being asked to bring forth recommendations in this regard and the House will have the opportunity to debate those recommendations. Even at this early stage, the Government is attempting to demonstrate that it is prepared not only to say the right words but to take the right steps.

My party, the Progressive Conservative Party, has long been the Party which has stood for reform of the institutions of government. For example, it was this Party which was instrumental in pushing for access to information legislation. It was this Party in 1979 that established parliamentary reform as one of the early priorities of our administration.

Nonetheless, constructive ideas which lead to real reform are not the sole preserve of any Party or any small group of Members of this House. It is with that fact in mind that the Government has chosen to place the question of reform before a committee of Members and has given that task force a broad far reaching mandate to examine all areas of the powers, practices and organization of this place. It is my hope that working together, Members from all Parties will be able to propose workable solutions to the challenges facing this institution.

As Arthur Beauchesne noted, changes in the demands placed upon the institutions of government have required that we step beyond the mere evolution of customary laws and practices. Novel problems require novel solutions, and that is why we have decided not to restrict the task force to a simple review of the Standing Orders. I look forward with great anticipation to receiving the recommendations of the task force, as do all Members of the Government. As recent members of the Opposition, we are well aware of some of the systemic obstacles to the full participation of private Members.

It is my hope that as a result of the work of this task force we will be able to banish from our vocabulary once and for all the term "back-bencher". It is our objective to ensure that in this Parliament there are no back-benchers. All Members must feel that they have a full voice in the proceedings and decisions of the House. I admit that our motive is not entirely selfless in this regard. We believe that a better, more effective House of Commons will lead to a better, more responsive style of government than Canadians have become accustomed to over the years.

For all of the reasons which have been outlined in my remarks, I would simply like to close by wishing the task force the best of success in its deliberations and by inviting all Members to give their input and support to this very important committee of our House.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, are we allowed to ask questions at this stage?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, there is a 10-minute period for questions and comments.

The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith).

[English]

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Government House Leader, perhaps in a very circumvented way, hinges upon the desire of his Government and of all Members of the House to undergo parliamentary reform. Whose advice was it to each of the committee chairmen this morning and yesterday afternoon in the area of reduced quorums to allow the requirement that only government members need be in their place in order to hear evidence? There has been a long tradition in this House, going back some two decades, I believe.

In 1980, with a Liberal majority government, when these motions were established in committee, they were worded in such a way as to recognize the right of the Official Opposition to be present when evidence was heard. I cannot speak for other committees. I can only explain what happened in the health and welfare committee. A motion was presented by the Government side which stated that for a reduced quorum for the purpose of hearing evidence, only four members of the committee need be present. I put forward a motion to amend that motion to read that a member of the Opposition as well as the Government side be present before any evidence could be heard.

I recognize that nowhere in the Standing Orders, which are the rules and procedure which we use in the standing committees, is there anything to the effect that a member of the Opposition need be present in order to hear evidence. However, there has been a long-standing practice in this House that was broken this morning by members of the Government. I would like to know if it was the Government House Leader's instruction to those committee chairmen to follow through with that abuse of my privileges in committee or if it was done by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, let me try to put this in some perspective. I think the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), who has worked on many committees during the time he has been a Member of Parliament, will know that the premise upon which he bases his proposition is simply not correct. Each committee determines its own rules of procedure subject to Standing Orders which indicate the rules respecting a quorum. Once the quorum is met, each committee can consider, for the purpose of hearing witnesses, who often come long distances at some considerable personal expense, the circumstances under which evidence may be received.

As the Hon. Member knows, there is a system of transcription of all the evidence that is received. This involves the receiving of documents in support of the work of the committee. I fully acknowledge that in some instances arrangements have been made whereby a quorum will be reduced for the purposes of receiving evidence.

I have been here for 10 years and most of that time, unfortunately, has been spent in the Opposition so I know of what I speak. In some instances, there has been some provision that a member of the Opposition will be present in a reduced quorum for the sole purpose of receiving evidence and hearing witnesses. In other instances, that has not been the case at all. The arrangements made within the committee have been silent with respect to any lesser quorum, and in some instances, I am informed, there have been provisions whereby a reduced quorum has been available without any specification as to the political affiliation of any of the members on that reduced quorum.

I have heard what the Hon. Member has said. I think we will have to carry on with the committees on the basis of a mutual respect between Parties. It is a matter of concern to me that if there were to be such a provision, it is conceivable that an opposition Party could hold up the process by simply not appearing on a parliamentary committee. I would not suggest that that would be the case.

The matter has been raised. I am going to look into the situation to see what has been transpiring there. I am glad to take the matter under advisement for the Hon. Member.

I believe that under the provisions of our rules, Hon. Members receive sufficient notice of meetings. In some cases, that notice is 24 hours by agreement within individual committees. After this matter was brought to my attention, I understand that in one committee at least, there was an arrangement made at the suggestion of a member of the New Democratic Party that there be a 24-hour notice given for committee meetings.

Why do we not look at what is happening and see whether or not we can work something out? That is the spirit which I would like to bring to the House and one which I think has been manifested by my responsibilities as Government House Leader up to this point.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I realize that I will have an opportunity to speak on this entire matter some time later this afternoon. However, I would like to point out to the Hon. Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) that the abuse that occurred this morning in the health and welfare standing committee has also been perpetrated in every other committee. Those committees use the same formula that was put forward by the government side. I do not understand for the life of me the paranoia of the Government in this matter.

In 1980, when there was a Liberal majority Government, a majority that was far smaller than the majority of the present Government, we allowed for reduced quorum purposes in committees the wording that a member of the Official Opposition had to be present in order to hear evidence. I did not even go that far this morning. I did not even ask that the Official Opposition be present to hear the evidence; I only suggested that at least a member of an opposition Party need be present in committee to hear the evidence. The Government used the tyranny of its majority to gun down that motion by a vote of 11 to 4. I am told that that occurred not only in my own committee but in other committees as well.

What is the Government's obsession or its paranoia? Is it fearful that the 70 Members of Parliament who sit in opposition will suddenly tie up the business of Government?

Mr. Hnathyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting that paranoia is the private preserve of any Member on any side of this House. It would be quite a different thing if we were suggesting that henceforth, the membership of only one Party would be allowed to participate in hearing the deliberations. I did say that I would be glad to take the matter under consideration. We are now suggesting that we define some reasonable rules under which evidence may be received by the committees.

Because the resources of the opposition Parties are somewhat limited in terms of numbers, I have taken a number of initiatives to try to make sure that the membership of these committees will be expanded. I worked toward making a concession of which I am proud. We were able to see that the Opposition was over-represented and the Government underrepresented on committees. We made sure the opposition Parties will have more members on each committee than should technically be available to them. We have tried to do everything we can to make sure that we will not be stretching the resources of the Opposition.

We have gone along with every suggestion with respect to the composition of these committees. However, I think the Hon. Member will have to admit that there are instances in which a reduced quorum may be advisable in order to get information before a committee. If we can resolve this matter through some form of mutually satisfactory arrangement, that is well and good. I believe it is a matter of balance and I am glad to discuss it further.

I am glad that the Hon. Member raised this issue with me because he is a Member for whom I have a great deal of respect. I know that he would not be spurious in his observations and that he would not try to make a mountain out of a molehill. I am sure he is not trying to do that in this instance.

I am sure that we can arrange our affairs to make sure that the committees co-operate in a reasonably effective manner, that all Members have reasonable notice of the meetings, and that full opportunities are made available to all Members to participate in votes. We would like to make sure that people who come before the parliamentary committees of Canada are not being unduly inconvenienced in terms of time and money. We would like to try to find some reasonable consensus in terms of this small problem.

I appreciate being afforded the opportunity of speaking to this problem, and I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member for Sudbury raised the matter. I see that he wishes to say something further.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. We will resume debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, aside from the, in my view, rather unorthodox and unfair manner in which our Members have been treated in the committees, hardly the way to treat an Opposition that has been reduced to almost symbolic numbers in this country's Parliament—and I shall get back to this—but in case the Government House Leader should leave during my comments, not that I expect to be particularly boring, but he may have other work to do in his office, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that although he said earlier it was up to each committee to establish its own rules and procedures, although he repeated one of those adages so often used in Parliament, he will have to admit it is a strange coincidence that in every single committee, there was this same uniform resistance on the part of Government Members. In one of the other committees where I was sitting this morning, we had to argue for forty-five minutes and we had to retreat before a vote. I must say all this is very odd, and I think it is more than a coincidence.

As your backbencher mentioned earlier, this also happened on the Committee on Communications and Culture. Another coincidence, of course. If the Government House Leader intends to look into this matter, as he said, I wish he would examine the coincidence factor as well.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that aside from this unfortunate incident on which I intend to elaborate later on, in principle we have no objection to the creation of a special committee or task force on the reform of the House. We believe it is essential, and in fact it has been done at regular intervals. Your humble servant who has been sitting in the House since 1968 has seen a succession of such committees, which have examined the Standing Orders of the House and parliamentary procedure with a great deal of competence and made many recommendations, all of which has helped to make this institution what it is today.

We cannot but wholeheartedly agree with this Government's decision to take the same route as its Liberal predecessor and in turn establish a task force to examine the Standing Orders and procedures of the House.

Hon. Members will recall that in the previous Parliament, a very active committee chaired by the Member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle, Mr. Tom Lefebvre, who can now be referred to by name since he is sitting in the other place, sent several reports in succession to this House reflecting the work done by his committee.

We owe them our congratulations and we can only hope that the new committee will show as much zeal in dealing with the various problems that await it and that it will be able to submit to the House a series of recommendations that are as sound as the work done by the committee I just mentioned.

However, Mr. Speaker, I may say that much has already been done, especially during the last two or three years, and I hope that the new committee will not try to re-invent the wheel. It would, on the other hand, do well to take a closer look at some of the Standing Orders that require clarification.

I have had the pleasure of sitting in the same chair as you, Mr. Speaker, and trying to interpret the Standing Orders in the course of the debate, as situations arose. I must admit that over the years, the Standing Orders have been clarified and are becoming easier to understand and generally speaking, easy to interpret, but . . . and I am afraid that is the extent of my euphoria with respect to the Standing Orders. There is often a regrettable lack of precision, and I imagine committee members will do well to consult the Clerks at the Table, who are well versed in the intricacies of the Standing Orders and could certainly point out to the Committee some of the points that have created problems for your predecessors in the Chair, Mr. Speaker. I think you yourself as well as the new Speaker should be asked to appear before the Committee. The only problem is, of course, that you, Mr. Speaker and your colleagues may have to spend some time reading up on past procedure and precedents to be able to understand what was wrong with the Standing Orders.

In any case, the Clerks, whose position in Parliament is less precarious than that of an elected Member, would certainly be able to make a contribution if asked to take part in the Committee's proceedings.

I hope the Committee will be an active one that will make specific recommendations, and without wishing to be nasty, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Committee will not spend its time studying and meditating, because I would not want it to follow the Government's example, which since the beginning of this session has had only one answer to the problems that have been put before it: We will study the matter.

In any case, I hope that after the short time the Committee will be allowed to study the various issues, it will be able to report to the House next June with some specific recommendations.

Personally, I have a few suggestions to make concerning the Committee's mandate. I noticed that one of the first points the Task Force will be expected to deal with is an examination of the Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders. I would recommend that the Task Force do everything in its power to maintain the new parliamentary calendar, which is established on an annual basis so that all Members know where they are with respect to leave periods and when they can be in their ridings.

Hon. Members who have been sitting in the House for a number of years will remember that it took many Members years of crusading to get this permanent parliamentary calendar. If I had only one recommendation to make to the Committee, it would be to maintain this practice, which is a great convenience to all Members.

Another point which I feel should be brought to the attention of Task Force members is the body of measures concerning the consideration of the Estimates, both in committee and in the House of Commons. Hon. Members who are now on the government benches will recall—and I heard them when I was on the other side of the House—that they were forever complaining about the way the estimates were considered in committee and in the House of Commons. For instance, they had a lot to say against the fact that the committee was forced to refer the estimates back to the House by a given date, whether its study was completed or not, so Members of the then Opposition, now sitting across the floor, can still remember that they were left fuming.

I also recall that, on the last supply day when the House is called upon to vote huge amounts in a hurry, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, Mr. Marcel Lambert, would invariably rise on a point of order to tell the House how ridiculous he thought that practice was and how he would have liked to change it. Now that all those who used to criticize that practice for the consideration of supply are on the other side with a majority, perhaps we can expect that changes will indeed be made to the manner in which the estimates are examined, and that is something we will be watching closely in committee.

Mr. Speaker, I notice as well that one of the points which will come under the scrutiny of the committee is the role of private Members, those whom we commonly call backbenchers. For years now, both here and outside on city streets, everybody has been saying that we must upgrade the role of Member. Those of my colleagues who have been here for a few years and were never appointed to Cabinet readily understand that the role of a Member has to be something more than being only a messenger between the electorate and the government. Unfortunately, often as a result of the limited resources at the disposal of Members, quite a few of them did very little besides acting as messengers. Now that we have many new Members sitting on the other side of the House, hopefully the committee will make sure that backbenchers on the government side will be given adequate means to be more than rubber stamps called upon to support government policies. To do that, we will have to enhance the role of Member and make it more challenging, keeping in mind the fact that this year there are . . . I am told that nearly 134 new Members sit in the House for the first time in this Parliament.

I would also suggest that the committee consider the fact that a long time ago—my God, more than 20 years, we have to go back to 1958 when the parliamentary Opposition was practically reduced to a rump, as it is now. It seems essential to me that the Members who will examine the Standing Orders realize that the Opposition will find it more difficult to discharge its responsibilities, and that the committee Members do everything in their power to give the Opposition adequate means to defend the views of those who do not necessarily endorse every government initiative. We believe that the government Members will do their best to introduce good legislation over the years. That is exactly what we in the Liberal Party did when we were on the opposite side of the House. Still, time will undoubtedly come when the Opposition will have to stand up and oppose. As I recall, it was Mr. Winston Churchill who said that the role of the Opposition is to oppose. We have no intention of acting inconsiderately, but should we ever have to show our opposition, we would like to have the proper tools at our disposal.

I am thinking of adequate research budgets as one example. Another example would be a guaranteed quorum for the Opposition on standing committees of the House, which would solve the problem we had this morning and yesterday when the committees were struck. It seems to me that the Task Force should be able to provide a satisfactory solution to all these problems.

I would now like to discuss another aspect of the mandate given this special committee, and it concerns the accountability of Ministers. I feel that even in this pristine Parliament, it may be one of the areas where there is the most room for improvement. Our brand new Cabinet already seems to have trouble answering questions. This Government is certainly not at its most accountable during question period. I remember that when our Conservative friends were on this side of the House, they often accused the Liberal Ministers of not answering the questions and of being evasive. However, if I compare the situation then with what it is today, I think the previous Government certainly has a better record. Ministers will have to start answering questions and providing the information the public is demanding, instead of hiding behind a veil of secrecy. This is also something the Committee could examine. Ministers will also have to stop gagging civil servants. They will have to lift this veil of secrecy.

With only a few minutes left, I would like to get back to the point that concerns us most, namely part (g) of the Committee's mandate which says that the Committee will be asked to review the procedures and powers of Committees of the House of Commons. Well, a lot of changes will have to be made, considering the mood in the Official Opposition yesterday and today. I can also inform my hon. friend the Government House Leader that the New Democratic Party Members are not very happy either. We are very concerned about the government's attitude to committee membership. Refusing to guarantee the Opposition membership on a minimum quorum smacks of dictatorship on the part of a Government with this kind of massive majority. We think it should be a matter of principle, and I think Hon. Members will have to admit that this is one of those unwritten rules. We feel perfectly entitled to demand that the Government guarantee the Opposition a place on minimum quorums in committees, because when we were on the other side of the House, the Official Opposition had that privilege, and moreover, Mr. Speaker, in committee it was always customary to recognize as the lead-off speaker a Member of the Official Opposition. It was said:

• (1600)

We said that lead-off speaker will always be from the Official Opposition. That is the way the Liberals used to treat the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party when we formed the government. At no time were we heavy-handed in striking committees.

The most ludicrous arguments were used this morning, for example, by a large majority in the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. One Hon. Member—and I will excuse him because he is a new Member of Parliament—said, "We do not want to grant you this post because we do not want to run the risk that the Opposition would boycott a meeting". Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, that he was afraid we would boycott? Certainly, the Hon. Member shows an ignorance of what has been happening here. I have never known the Official Opposition to boycott a committee meeting in which it would hear witnesses. Who would gain when witnesses come from both ends of this country, spending taxpayers' dollars to do so, if we, as the Official Opposition, boycotted the meeting? We would look silly. We could not win in the eyes of the public. No Official Opposition, not even the Tories, would dare do that. Why would these motives be imputed to us? Why should we do such a silly thing?

We thought it strange that government members of that particular committee this morning had that sort of inferiority complex, being such a giant majority with 211 Members of Parliament. It is amazing that they would be afraid of being defeated by one or two opposition Members.

Mr. Speaker, we even felt that Government Members on several committees were showing a kind of siege mentality, as though they were afraid the tiny number of Opposition Members on committee might gang up on them!

I was astonished to hear one excuse proferred by Members who voted down guarantees that have always existed for the Opposition—it was for the sake of efficiency. The thought behind this was, of course, that the Opposition might stay away from a number of committee meetings, which would delay the proceedings, I imagine, and for the sake of efficiency, they had to make sure the Government could proceed.

I still think this shows a certain contempt for the democratic process. Let Parliament be efficient, but let us not expect the Government to be as efficient as the private sector. God forbid!

An Hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): The newly elected Member says: Why not? When he has been in the House for a while, the Hon. Member will realize that this is not the place to engage in bulldozing. The House is an exponent of democracy. And maybe he will understand some day when he is on this side of the House, that what is left to the Opposition is the right to speak and the right to be heard.

We can assume that the Official Opposition will not win many votes in this Parliament. In think that is pretty obvious. However, the Opposition must have the assurance that it can express here in the House the views of those who do not agree with certain Government policies.

I think that this desire to take away the Opposition's traditional rights and guarantees for the so-called sake of efficiency shows contempt for the democratic process.

They said: Well, it is about time changes were made. Traditional rights or not, out they go. They said: In the last election, Canadians voted for change, and the Opposition does not seem to understand that. Well, I disagree!

The kind of change Canadians wanted was certainly not a change from the generosity we showed the Opposition when we were in power. I am sure that is not the kind of change Canadians wanted. They may have wanted change in other areas, and we shall see whether the Government can deliver, it, but they certainly did not want any changes in the democratic guarantees that were always maintained by the Liberal Party of Canada when we formed the majority in the House.

I also found appalling the refusal in many committees to let the lead-off speaker be a Member of the Official Opposition.

[English]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that in no way are we going to accept this situation. We are happy that the Government House Leader has indicated he is going to look into it. We hope he comes up with a more reasonable proposal. In order to show our deep dissatisfaction with what has happened over the past few days, on behalf of my Party I would like to move an amendment to the motion which was put forward by the Hon. House Leader. The amendment is as follows:

That the motion be amended by adding the following words:

"And that it be an instruction to the committee that it shall include in each report its assessment of the effects of its recommendations on the role and the rights of the Opposition".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

● (1610)

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to comment on the Hon. Member's speech because he has sat in the chair of this House and I think it is very appropriate that he has put forward this amendment. When the Conservative Party was the Official Opposition, they always demanded that there be at least one member of their Party present in committee even for the taking of testimony. Yesterday, they smothered both opposition Parties and rejected the requirement that there must be an opposition member present for the taking of testimony. I assume from what the Hon. Member has said, that the same thing happened in many other committees.

Obviously we do not have too many Members on this side of the House. If it is not possible for us to be in a committee meeting, if meetings are called on short notice, then you end up with only Conservative Members in the committee. People are making a formal presentation to a formal committee of the House of Commons and there may be no representation from the Opposition there. The brief is presented to the committee as if it were an all-Party situation, when in fact it is not. When we put forward a motion to have representation from the Opposition at those times, we ended up with its being voted down.

I was glad to see that the Government House Leader suggested that this was not an organized matter, and the Parliamentary Secretary indicated as much in committee today, and that it was being done in every committee. In fact, in every committee of which I have heard they actually did that. So it seems to me that the instruction was either sent out by the Government House Leader or by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), who is supposed to be the enforcer of this Government. I really wonder what is taking place over there.

Even more disconcerting is the question of a quorum. Whenever a vote is being taken or whenever a Bill is being studied clause by clause, a quorum is required, which in our committee would be eight members, but not necessarily including an opposition member. I have been around here for 16 years and I have never seen a vote taken in committee when there was no representative from the Official Opposition. Yet when the motion was put in our committee that there be present at least one opposition member from either Party, it was voted down. The Government House Leader says, "Well, just don't show up and the committee will not go on". That will not happen in the Standing Committee on Agriculture because they already voted it down, saying there did not have to be an opposition member present. I think this matter really has to be dealt with by the House Leader, otherwise the whole committee procedure just becomes a committee of the Tory caucus.

Mr. Frith: Dictatorship.

Mr. Foster: I know that the Hon. Member who is going to chair this committee, had he been on this side of the House when we were in government and had we tried to muzzle the Opposition like this, would never have accepted it. He would have been a very strong opponent. That is why I think the amendment of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) is a good one. It defends the rights of the Opposition.

I hope the Government House Leader will review this situation and send instructions to parliamentary secretaries and various Ministers who enforce the Government's position on these committees not to proceed in these areas without a member of the opposition being present. The bells rang night and day for two weeks in this House because the Speaker would not take a vote without opposition members being present. If that is not the most glaring example of the need for opposition members to be present for a vote, I do not know what is. The Government has to back down on the procedure it has adopted and be more concerned about the rights of the Opposition as they were when in Opposition. We cannot move ahead with legislation in committee without adequate representation from the opposition Parties.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques has had broad experience in this place; he has been a Member since 1968. Has he in that time ever seen the kind of procedure I have described carried out here?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it is very evident that at no time over the 16 years I have been here have I ever seen anything like this. The Government House Leader was right when he said it is up to each committee to set up certain rules. The rules governing each committee are not all the same. They vary slightly one from to the other. But one thing is certain: we have never seen a move like this to keep the Opposition from having any power in committee.

This morning in the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture we went into the background of the motion to set up the minimum quorum in the last Parliament. We found it was a very simple motion which said that the committee is authorized to hear witnesses when there is no quorum.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is exactly what this is.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): No, I remember having chaired this committee years back and there was a requirement for a minimum quorum of five members including one from the Opposition. There was even a rule that the Opposition was always the lead-off speaker. So it varies from committee to committee. However, one thing that has not varied in the past two days, is the voting down of every attempt by every Member who has tried to put forward something in each of those committees. That has not been varied, it has been constant from one committee to the other. It is a very funny coincidence, a very heavy coincidence. If there had been some variance from one to the other, I could live with that because it has been the practice. But we have seen uniformity in looking down at the Opposition. That is what I do not like.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—Financial Institutions—Existence of committee study; the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand)—Employment—Youth Training Option Program. (b) Government's position; the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker)—Unemployment Insurance—Newfoundland fishermen—Request for Assistance.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO ESTABLISH TASK FORCE ON REFORM

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

That a Special Committee of the House of Commons to be composed of Mrs. Bourgault and Messrs. Blaikie, Cooper, Ellis, Friesen, McGrath and Ouellet, be appointed to act as a Parliamentary Task Force on the Reform of the House of Commons to examine the powers, procedures, practices, organization and facilities of the House of Commons, bearing in mind the balance between the respective constitutional responsiblities and roles of the House of Commons and the Government, such an examination to include, but not be limited to, the following matters:

(a) the Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders;

(b) the role of the private Member in the House of Commons;

(c) the accountability of Ministers to the House of Commons;

(d) the legislative process;

(e) the funding, facilities and staff support services made available to Members of the House of Commons;

(f) the administration and management of the House of Commons; and

(g) the procedures and powers of Committees of the House of Commons and the role and the use of parliamentary task forces;

That the Committee have the power to retain expert, professional, technical and clerical staff;

That the Committee and members of the Committee have the power, when the committee deems it necessary, to adjourn or travel from place to place inside and outside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the required staff accompany the Committee or members of the Committee, as the case may be;

That all the evidence adduced by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure and the reports of that Committee as tabled in the House of Commons during the 32nd Parliament be referred to the Committee;

That notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when an interim or final report of the Committee is completed, that the Committee shall report its findings by depositing its report with the Clerk of the House and that it shall thereupon be deemed to have been laid upon the Table;

That the Committee be authorized to include in its interim and/or final reports drafts of proposed permanent or temporary Standing Orders drawn to give effect, if concurred in by the House, to any permanent or temporary change or changes proposed by the Committee;

That the Committee be authorized to include in its interim and/or final reports recommendations as to the implementation of any reforms proposed in the reports of the Committee;

That Messrs. Penner, Binns, Comeau, Duguay, Jardine, Ravis and Young be appointed as alternate members of the Committee;

That changes in the membership of the Committee be made only pursuant to Standing Order 69(4)(b); and

That the Committee shall report to the House finally no later than June 28, 1985.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques) (p. 508).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with three matters, two of them quite briefly, and the other I think is really the question before us.

Let me begin by saying that this morning at eleven o'clock I raised the problem which has taken up much of the attention of the House this afternoon. I did so because I feared it would cause Members to develop a sense that would result in less co-operation. When we started this session, the Government said it wanted co-operation, and I can well understand why. I think it is fair to say that the public of Canada was sickened during the last Parliament by the actions of the Conservative Party. I can well understand that the Conservatives, now in Government, do not want to have happen to them what they inflicted upon the Parliament of Canada during the previous Parliament. I must say that I cannot recall in all of my parliamentary experience, which goes back a long way, an example which comes close to the night that the Tories charged the Speaker's chair.

An Hon. Member: Awful.

Ms. Mitchell: Shameful.

Mr. Riis: A black day.

Mr. Deans: I say that in sorrow because I felt at the time that it set a mood in the House of Commons that resulted in rancor and bitterness which lasted through much of that Parliament. I said so at the time and I say it again. I did not support it and I will never support such a thing. We in this Party will deal with the Government in the appropriate ways with an eye to improving the conditions for people in Canada, but never in such a way as to create a scene that will result in Parliament suffering in the eyes of the public. I can appreciate that the Government wants now to set that behind us and go on from here. The Government House Leader said that he does not look back. He is looking forward to better things, and so am I.

Having said that, I was therefore disappointed this morning when I was informed of the mood that had developed in the committees. I want to make it quite clear that it is not my view that what went on in the committees is a direct breach of the rules of Parliament, because the rules of Parliament are set up in such a way that there is latitude and leeway afforded to committees, as is afforded to the House of Commons. That is necessary in order that changing times and conditions can be accommodated. However, what happened in the committees, as I understand it, was more a breach of the confidence of the committees. It was a misunderstanding, I hope, on both sides. It was not intended to be the heavy hand of the Government coming down on the Opposition, although I can well appreciate that those who were there could have interpreted it that way given that, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), has just indicated, it was a consistent act through every committee. One could not help but come to the conclusion that somewhere in the background someone had orchestrated, or at least advised the Government membership on the committees that that would be an appropriate way to act.

I do want to see the kind of co-operation that others want to see. We will get that kind of co-operation if we are assured that the way in which committees will conduct themselves will be consistent with the way that committees have conducted and deported themselves in the past. My colleague, speaking on behalf of the Official Opposition, has quite clearly set out what some of the problems were. I felt anxious when I was told of those problems and I raised them, both in the House and subsequently with the House Leader privately, in an effort to try to come to grips with them. I am confident that, if the House Leader has any sway over the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), and I am sure he does, he will be able—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What does the Deputy Prime Minister have to do with this?

Mr. Deans: That is what I am worried about. I am not sure what he has to do with it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't presume the worst. You are too good natured for that.

Mr. Deans: I will presume the best, that by tomorrow this matter will have been resolved and that the membership of the committees will be prepared to deal, as we have always dealt, in a spirit of co-operation and good humour. I will assume that the committees will work effectively together and that the Official Opposition, followed by members of this Party, will be able to participate as we have participated in the past. I will assume that there will be a recognition that, notwithstanding the numbers required for a quorum, the committees ought not to sit on matters of extreme importance without both sides of the House being represented.

I can assure the Government House Leader, and I say this on behalf of my colleagues, that we will not abuse that. We have not abused it in the past and we will certainly not abuse it in the future. We will be there to do our job as we always have been. I would like to say in addition that it is not always the Opposition that is to be blamed when things do not work well. There are times when the government is to be blamed. In the last Parliament, for example, on one occasion in the Agriculture Committee, it was the government members who decided not to show up, therefore thwarting the committee's attempts to hear evidence from the Canadian Dairy Commission on a matter of urgent importance. It was a matter the government did not really want to have heard or to discuss. I think these things must be viewed in perspective. I am confident that by tomorrow morning this matter will be resolved. If it is resolved, as I think it will be, we will go on to develop a better relationship.

With regard to the amendment to the motion, I have sympathy with the intent. However, to be honest, I am hesitant to support it. I am not suggesting that I will not, because I will think about it over the course of the afternoon. I am hesitant to advise support on this matter. It sets out the committee in a "them and us" type of atmosphere. I do not really want to see that happen. I would like to see this committee operating as the last committee operated. We should all work together for the same general good of the institution and the public. If we structure the terms of reference in such a way as to require the committee to take into account in a particular way the effect on the Opposition, rather than the effect on the Members, then I think we may, in one way or another, undermine the ongoing good work of the committee. I suggest that the Official Opposition should consider that.

I think this committee will operate on behalf of all Members. I have the utmost confidence in the chairman to be named. I think the chairman of the committee will prove to be a man of considerable insight, as he has always proven to be. I anticipate that he will make sure that he gives the kind of leadership which will pull the committee together to ensure that the committee will deal fairly, openly and reasonably with the problems of Members, not only in the operation of the House itself, but also in terms of how they can best serve the public they are here to represent. Therefore, I am opposed to any inhibition being added to the terms of reference.

As to the task force itself, there is no perfect system. When I spoke the last time we set a committee such as this, I said quite frankly that the parliamentary reform that was most needed at that time was a reform between the ears of the Members. It was not necessarily structural change that was going to alter the way Parliament worked but attitudinal change. To a large degree, that is part of what I said just a moment ago about the committee structure and the way committees can be set up. If we are going to require that this committee study matters as wide-ranging as the terms of reference will permit, we need an understanding from the Government, which we did not get from the last government, that if the committee sees fit to recommend unanimously that certain things should occur, the Government must undertake the obligation to implement those things.

There is no point in our going through the exercise over and over again in an attempt to find that Utopian situation that will make everything work. It will never be that way. However, if those Members appointed to this committee do their job well and offer unanimous or near unanimous recommendations to the House which represent the views of both Government and Opposition, then there must be a clear understanding that the Government will not place those recommendations on a shelf to gather dust and become fodder for yet another study after the next election. I say that on my behalf and I hope that of the chairman and members of the committee, because I am sure that that is what they want.

Let me also say a few words about the 11 reports that came from the previous committee. That committee worked extremely hard. At one time I was the vice-chairman and we worked very hard in trying to find a compromise that would satisfactorily recognize the different roles between Government and Opposition while also guaranteeing equal access to all Members of Parliament to the institution itself. I believe that we did a very good job on that committee. Quite frankly, those 11 reports represent many hours of work and input from all sectors of the economy and the public of Canada as well as from the Members themselves.

Perhaps it will be necessary for the task force to review those recommendations in light of the new parliamentary experience. However, I hope it will not be necessary, nor can I imagine its being of any use for the task force to go back over all the old ground again. It has been gone over a number of times, the last time being only a couple of years ago.

Perhaps after a relatively speedy review of those recommendations has been made—even if that is necessary—the task force can indicate whether implementation, appropriate or otherwise, can be made. It could then tackle the new areas that need to be considered.

I suggest that there are two matters that must be dealt with if we are going to improve the operations of Parliament. First, we must ensure that Members of Parliament do in fact have access to all of the structure of Parliament and that they are able to assure themselves and their constituents that they are functioning on the most up to date and best possible information base. It may be necessary to review that sometimes attempted but seldom successful process of requiring the Crown to place more of the documentation and background material respecting the decision-making process before Parliament. I know that the Government House Leader probably shares with me the view that it is important, for the purpose of having the public understand what we do, that that access be readily available. It should not be necessary for there to be a requirement to use the freedom of information process to get information that should be made available to us in any event. I hope the task force will consider that as it conducts its deliberations.

I also believe that it should bear in mind that in order to ensure an orderly process in the affairs of the country, that the system of Parliament must be protected.

In spite of what the public may think as a result of viewing us from time to time, Parliament works quite well and does provide the checks and balances. While it does not always provide all the information, it does afford an opportunity for checks and balances to exist.

Recently I spoke at a conference at which I was describing the role of the Opposition. For many people, the role of the Opposition is somewhat of an enigma. It is a role that is not easily understood. I was attempting to explain that the role of the Opposition is in fact to oppose, albeit constructively wherever possible, but by whatever means available.

Although the Opposition may be seen to be obstructionist from time to time, it is absolutely necessary to ensure that a government, particularly one with a large majority, does not proceed at a rate faster than the public is able to absorb. Its role is to ensure that as change is proposed, there is ample opportunity for input not only from Members of Parliament or through Members of Parliament but from the various groups and individuals who have a concern for what is happening. Therefore, it is the Opposition's role from time to time to stall the government in order to make sure that the information that is necessary for those who are not in Parliament to reach learned decisions is able to reach them. Once the Opposition is able and has the time to review that information, it can place those concerns back into the process or state caveats that it feels are necessary from time to time.

I know it frustrates the Government when its measures are held up for reasons that are not immediately evident. But that right and obligation to be able to slow the process down is a vital part of the parliamentary system.

I have said to some people that there is no doubt that they may get angry when we delay legislation which they want passed, but they should remember that as they want that legislation passed, there are others in society who want it held up at least temporarily because it may be of some detriment to them. Frequently the shoe fits on the other foot. People must recognize that. I hope that the task force, through its chairman, will take this into account as it contemplates changes either to the Standing Orders or to the procedures of Parliament.

It should remember that there are times when it appears that the Opposition is delaying a measure that is of very little consequence. While the explanation for that delay may not be readily understood, there is a reason. A reason for this delay in the past has been that the next piece of legislation or one further down the list is particularly contentious in nature. Therefore, it is an attempt to allow time for more input into the contentious legislation.

This is all part of the planning in the day-to-day operations of the House of Commons. It is an example of the collective planning we do in this caucus and what was done collectively in the Conservative caucus when they were in Opposition. No doubt, it is an example of what is done in the Liberal caucus. This process must be understood by Members on both sides so that we do not undermine Parliament by leaving the impression that such a delay tactic is destroying the parliamentary process, when in fact it strengthens it.

The problem as I have seen it in my time here is that parliamentarians—next to certain jaundiced journalists perhaps—are our own worst enemy. We do not defend the system. We do not defend Parliament from the criticism that is unjustified and unwarranted. While we can be justifiably criticized for a number of things that we do, I do not think it serves us well as Members of Parliament to become part of the uneducated, carping criticism that is unfounded.

I say to new Members in particular, but also to some Members who have been here before, that it is you and I who are the custodians of the process. We must understand and learn the process. We must understand how it works and why certain things are done so that when we are challenged with questions about why there are delays or problems within the process, we can at least understand how the process works and why it may be necessary for Members to use that process on various occasions to make sure that everyone in Canada can have proper access to Parliament and to the Government.

I have sat here on many occasions when members of the last government—and I have sat in Queen's Park under Conservative governments—wanted to ram things through. I can remember saying on numbers of occasions that it would be wrong, that a gestation period was required, that there were people who had not yet become aware of the importance of the legislative change, and that as they become aware of it they would want to have input into it, and that time must be taken in reviewing and considering it. Yet government members went ahead and pushed it through anyway because they had a narrow view. I am not necessarily suggesting that they were wrong, but they had a somewhat narrow view and could not see the broader implications of what they were doing. And it was not six months before they were back changing it. I urge upon Hon. Members, particularly those who sit on the committee, to keep this in mind as they go through the processes of deciding what ought to be and what ought not to be allowed within the parliamentary process here.

I see Mr. Speaker indicating that I do not have much more time remaining. I happen to know that the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre will ask me a question, which will permit me to complete my remarks.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I was listening to what the Hon. Member said about how the process works. His concern reflects very much the concerns which I felt as I went as a first-time participant to a meeting of the organizing committee for the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. I should like the House to understand what a sense of sadness I felt as a first-time participant when I realized I was both a participant and a witness to an absolute mockery of the democratic process.

There is a statement indicating that a democracy is measured by the way it treats its minorities. I sincerely hope that the Government will take into consideration the question of whether in this instance the minorities are the judge of how the Government will handle its legislation.

Here in what I have been calling, as I watch it unfold, the theatre of the absurd, I thought that was one thing and that it was a good public show. However, I was really anxious to participate in what I consider to be real democracy at work and the real role and responsibility of government. I was looking forward to meeting my colleagues in a spirit of collegiality and to addressing pressing issues in today's society with a sense of fairness and equity, with the knowledge that justice would be heard and that we would be together acting in the best interests of all Canadians. It is a sad day when I stand here to say that I was dreadfully disappointed. I sincerely hope the matter will see some redress from the Leader across the way. I believe it was Talleyrand who said that it is not a crime, it is just a mistake. I sincerely hope he looks at this as a genuine mistake, because I did not find it a farce and I would like very much to see the whole situation rectified.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) has said very elegantly and eloquently what I frankly felt about it. I think it posed a problem. There is no doubt about that. I said that at the beginning of my comments. However, I would suggest to her, through the Chair, that not all the real work of Parliament is done in committees. I want to make that point, which I hope is important. Some of the real work of Parliament is done in committees, but not all of it. It is in this Chamber that Members have an opportunity to discuss en masse their concerns. I do not want ever to shift the focus of responsibility so totally from the Chamber of the House of Commons to the committee system. The committee system is good, and if allowed to work well—and I hope it will be after this misunderstanding is corrected—it will serve the public in the way it was intended. I believe the Chamber itself is an important part of the democratic political process and must be maintained with opportunity.

I should like to add one comment, which I know the Hon. Member is interested in hearing although she did not raise it directly. I am concerned about another aspect of Members' work, that is, operations within the constituencies. It has been clear to me over the course of what is nearly the last five years that the work-load of Members in their constituencies has risen dramatically. The requirements of Members to find ways to solve sometimes difficult and sometimes not so difficult problems have grown by leaps and bounds. As the committee deliberates I would ask it to look at the problems now confronting those who work on our behalf in our constituencies. I know the committee intends to look at the problems of those working on our behalf on Parliament Hill, but I beg it to spend some time looking seriously at the problems in constituencies to know how we can better serve our constituents and ease the work-load of constituency assistants.

I never cease to be amazed that my constituency assistant stays in that job. It has to be the most onerous of tasks. It is heart-rending. It requires tremendous physical, mental and emotional capacity. It is paid pitifully. As well, that single individual, particularly in urban areas, is required to work countless extra hours without any additional help. The chairman of the committee in his early deliberations should ask it to look at this situation which has been allowed to arise to see if there is a way to give assistance to the assistants so that we do not overburden very dedicated individuals who are underpaid and overworked and who are the front-line troops in the ongoing service of constituencies. They are the ones who five, six and seven days a week, ten twelve and fourteen hours per day, are meeting and dealing with the problems face to face. While we may have some oversight responsibility in many of them, we do not have to see the agony as much as constituency assistants do. I ask the chairman to consider that too.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). He was a very distinguished member of the last special committee. Indeed, he was vice-chairman of that committee. He will be aware of the matter I am about to raise, although he omitted to include it in his remarks. The special committee in the last House was always very careful or very diligent to resist any suggestion that it set itself up as a judge of how its own recommendations were working. It felt that that was the role of the House or of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) who moved the amendment did not have the advantage of being a member of the committee. If he had been, he would have known that the committee, quite rightly and quite wisely, resisted any attempt—and there were suggestions that it do so officially and unofficially—to judge how its own recommendations were working over that two-year period. I would suggest with great respect that the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques who moved the amendment should take that into account.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I agree with the Member for Saint-Jacques, (Mr. Guilbault). If I understood it correctly, the amendment was drafted more in frustration over the events of yesterday and today than with the intention of being an inhibitant. I feel confident that if the Government said that it will make things work as they always have, this would not be necessary. The Member is absolutely right in saying that the committee was not, nor should it be, the judge of whether its recommendations are right. That is up to the House. That is up to us once they are in place. That is why there was an opportunity provided in the report for a debate on the recommendations, a debate which will not now take place, but which nevertheless has been pre-empted by the debate we are having today.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I can certainly agree with the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) about the importance of taking proper interest in the work of assistants in our constituencies. I wonder if he is aware, on the subject of the amendments put forward by members of my Party, of the erosion of the rights of the Opposition that has already begun in the short life of this Parliament with the policy of government members to change the longstanding traditional rules for quorums in committees on hearing witnesses. It has been the practice in all the Parliaments that I can remember, at least the last six, that when a full quorum is not present, the committee can sit with fewer members provided that opposition Parties are represented.

I have just come from a meeting of the Justice Committee in which that traditional and longstanding right of the Opposition has been removed. The Committee can now meet without a quorum in the absence of members of opposition Parties. I do not know if the Hon. Member was aware of that because it just happened while he was on his feet. I would like to ask him how he feels about that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member should not mention what goes on in a committee unless it is at the report stage.

Mr. Kaplan: I am not calling on the House to act on what happened in the Committee. I recognize that the Chair would not presume to do that. I am talking now about a practice of a Government with so large a majority that it should comfortably be prepared to recognize the traditional rights of the Opposition in the same way that they have been in the past. It is in fact taking steps at each committee to exclude the Opposition and to upset traditional rights. Does the Hon. Member know that?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Hon. Member to be brief in his answer, please?

Mr. Deans: As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am always brief. I was aware of that in other committees, although I was not aware of it happening in the Justice Committee. I just know that the Government House Leader is going to rise and say that it has stopped.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and comments is now over. We shall now resume debate on the amendments.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see that the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has taken the opportunity to remain here this afternoon to listen to the viewpoints put forward by members of the Opposition. I know he has just briefly gone out for refreshments. As chairman of the committee that is being struck here today, he will have to defend not only the rights of Members on the government side, but, more important, we will have to take into consideration the rights of members of the Opposition.

There was a time when Members of Parliament could arrive on the Hill with special interests, which in some cases did not lie within parliamentary procedure. I must confess that I was one of those individuals. During my years as a Member on the government side, my interests were taken up largely with my duties as a parliamentary secretary in addition to my role as chairman of a parliamentary task force on pension reform. As a result, in my confession here today, I have to admit that I did not take much time to learn the rules that are outlined in this little book called Standing Orders.

I was fortunate because I was part of a political Party that respected the rights of every individual Member of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Frith: Over those four to five years in committee—

Mr. Dick: Even you are laughing.

Mr. Frith: I might be laughing right now, but I can assure Members opposite that what happened to me this morning in the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare was no laughing matter. As a matter of fact, it struck at me. Most Members of this House realize that I rarely lose my temper. If I am not mistaken, this was the first time in my five years in Parliament that I have ever lost my temper in committee. I felt that my rights had been abused so badly by the majority presence of the Conservative Members of Parliament on that committee that I had no recourse but to stomp out of the committee.

I mentioned before that there was a time when you did not have to become a procedural expert. After the happenings of yesterday and today in various committees other than the Health and Welfare Committee, everybody on the Opposition side will have to become well versed in the rules and procedures of this House. This is mainly because there seems to be a concerted attempt being made by the Conservative Government.

I respect the attitude that the Government House Leader has always taken toward this House. I am not sure that it was a directive issued by him. Certainly I suspect that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), as in fact is evident, issued directives to each of the committee chairmen to remove one of the essential rights that we have always had in committee, that when evidence was heard there had to be a member of the opposition. Parties present to preserve the right of democracy.

I want to read something because since this morning I understand that, from a procedural standpoint I have been on very weak ground. The Standing Orders do not indicate that there is any rule that would require the presence of an opposition member when evidence is to be heard. I want to have placed on the record the fact that at this morning's committee meeting, I read into the record the same motion that was presented to that committee in 1980 when it was being formed. In that motion the then government recognized the requirement that a person form the Official Opposition needs to be present in order to hear evidence. This morning I did not even ask for the right that the Official Opposition be present. I just asked for the right that a member of the Opposition be present for the hearing of evidence. The majority Conservative Government, for whatever reasons or whatever paranoia, decided on a unanimous vote of the committee to reverse that long-standing tradition in this House.

I want to read something into the record that was aid by a former Member of this House, Mr. Stanley Knowles, who now sits at the Table. Here is what he said about the role of an Opposition:

> It is the opposition's right to insist at all times on the full protection of the rules of debate. The government is entitled to that same protection, but in addition it has its majority with which to establish its will.

A majority of 211 seats is a pretty powerful weapon. It is powerful enough in its own merit not to go the added step of removing the rights of a minority, namely, those of the Official Opposition. He went on:

> The opposition has only the rules for its protection, hence the authorities on parliamentary procedure emphasize the great importance to the opposition of the only protection it has, the protection of the rules.

I want to talk a bit about those rules. I have learned a lot in the last three and a half hours. I went to the Library and picked up a book by Erskine May. This should be informative to the newer Members of Parliament, and it was an interesting exercise for me today. I wanted to find out exactly how these rules and regulations come about that dictate the manner in which we operate this Parliament. Here is what Erskine May had to say about the parliamentary rules. A lot of it is written and even more is what is called unwritten procedure. I quote from page 209:

> On its smaller scale, the study of English parliamentary procedure presents the same difficulty as the study of English law in that its rules are not covered by any comprehensive and authoritative code. It is true that in both Houses one portion of procedure—private business, which is concerned with local and personal legislation—

On the whole, a great many of the procedures which dictate the conduct of Members of Parliament, whether here in the House of Commons or in committee, are based on what is called unwritten procedure. Let me read into the record a passage from page 215 of that same book. This passage deals with the historical relation between practice and the Standing Orders. It reads as follows:

> It cannot be denied that there is a marked contrast in spirit between the historical practice of the House of Commons and its modern standing orders. That practice dates from a time when the Commons regarded themselves as in opposition to the Crown and the executive, and their forms and rules were largely devised to delay and temporise.

It goes on to indicate that over the years, the executive has tended to enhance its role in the parliamentary process and therefore it became even more important that the rules and procedures be adapted so that we as Members of Parliament could ensure that the rights and the voices of minority groups could be heard in Parliament.

I would like to recount to Hon. Members opposite something that was said by a man for whom I had a great deal of respect in the last Parliament, a man who passed away. He was the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, the Hon. Walter Baker. When he was the President of the Privy Council and Leader of the Government in the House, he put forward in November 1979 a position paper entitled The Reform of Parliament. About the committee structure, he said that the following proposals were intended to give committees some investigative initiative, provide more staff resources and stabilize memberships by reducing them. A mild restraint was placed on the process of initiating investigations to prevent a multiplicity of studies at any one time.

He went on to say that it should be noted that the committees' role is expanded to improve the accountability of Government—that was one concept that he had in mind—and not to give committees executive functions. He went on to indicate that committees may hold serious investigations that are against the will of the Government. This is not at present possible.

How can a Party, which, some five short years ago, had in its midst a man with that kind of vision of what parliamentary procedures should be all about, reverse itself completely in the last two days and, through its parliamentary majority, impose its will upon the Opposition in Parliament? I might want to remind Hon. Members that the Opposition numbers only 70 Members versus 211 government members. If we are looking at parliamentary reform, surely some of the first things that should be looked at are changes to the Standing Orders that would prevent the abuse of my rights as a parliamentarian, such as the abuse which occurred to me in committee today.

The Government House Leader indicated earlier today in response to a question that I asked of him that he would be willing to investigate this matter. I do not think an investigation will be enough. What will be required is a complete reversal of the passage of those motions which were passed not only in the standing committee which I represent this morning but in all standing committees, with one exception. I understand that one committee bucked the trend today at 3.30 p.m., probably as a result of the pressures put on its committee chairman and the cries of outrage that have been heard since the meetings at 9.30 this morning. I understand that this afternoon, the Employment and Immigration Committee refused to pass a motion which would have allowed the committee to sit without representation from opposition Parties. I think the Member of Parliament from Calgary deserves credit for having bucked the directive of the Hon. Member for Yukon by allowing Members of the Opposition at least the privilege of being heard.

I would like to return to the government position paper written in 1979 by the then President of the Privy Council. He said therein that a mild restraint would be placed on these reforms by putting a caveat limiting the number of committees that could be struck at any one time. That the motion was put that committees could hear evidence without the presence of an opposition member means in essence that every one of those committees can now strike up a committee of four members of the Conservative Party to travel across the country.

In essence, we have created a system in which abuse is now possible. There could be a whole series of Conservative task forces travelling across the country hearing evidence without any representation by a member of an opposition Party. I am not suggesting that the Government would be crazy enough to try that. The point is that we should never allow motions to be placed on the minutes of committees that would allow that to happen.

Surely, one of the primary functions that will be required of you, Mr. Speaker, and of others in the chair, will be to protect the minority rights in this Parliament. The Chair surely understands that when there is a massive majority of 211 government Members of Parliament facing a puny Opposition of only 70 Members, it will be required that the 70 of us spend most of our time in this House, or at best 200 yards from this House, working and doing the job that an Official Opposition member should be doing in committee. If this motion is allowed to stand, I think we will see an abuse of the system by the majority Government. There will be very little opportunity, I can assure you, for members of the Liberal Party to travel outside of Ottawa to hear evidence.

I would also suggest, Mr. Speaker, that I know that no one Government has a monopoly on its members. The Hon. Member from British Columbia had the pleasure of being the vice-chairman of one of our task forces. When we were a majority Government, there were times when we invited members of the Opposition not only to be there to hear evidence but to be vice-chairmen of some of these committees. During this morning's procedure, I entertained no thought of suggesting that one of us might want to be a vice-chairman of a standing committee. I knew, simply by seeing the gleam in the eyes of government members caused by what they were about to do to me, that there was no sense in even advocating the elevation of an opposition member to the position of vice-chairman of a committee.

The Hon. Member for St. John's East has the respect of Members of Parliament on all sides of the House. I would hope that one of the things he would do as Chairman of this committee is to ensure in even more detail the right of the minority in Parliament to establish itself. I expect the Hon. Member to do that.

As I mentioned earlier, I have no intention of taking up the full 20 minutes. However, I hope that the Government House Leader, and if not the Government House Leader then the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), will issue a directive to each one of those committee chairmen to reverse the decisions that were made today and return to the opposition Parties the right to be present when evidence is heard.

In an esoteric sense, this is not a prime concern of only the Official Opposition. I am not concerned only because I am worried about what that decision means to the Liberal Party or to the New Democratic Party. My concern is for the groups that will appear before our committees.

Let me use a very absurd example. I notice that the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has left the House. However, let us assume that the Government is following some of the directions that were outlined in the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Let us assume that the Government desired to make cut-backs to the social service programs of the country. As a result of that, let us say that a committee was empowered to hear evidence. It is quite possible that some poor person who would be adversely affected by those kinds of cuts would come before the committee, and because the rule states that no member of the Opposition need be present to hear the evidence, find himself being questioned by only four Conservative Members of Parliament, none of whom would solicit viewpoints from him that would tend to embarrass the government position. That is the abuse that becomes possible when motions are passed like the one that was passed in the committees this morning.

This is not going to go away, Mr. Speaker. I do not know how long it will take, but that motion must be rescinded and reversed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Government House Leader on a question or comment?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech of the Hon. Member. In the course of his speech, he pointed out that even as we sit here, one committee on which the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) participated has now put forward a motion which calls for a reduced quorum with a member of the Opposition represented. Even as we speak now, committees are passing resolutions like those to which the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) has referred.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques pointed out that he was a member of the Communications and Culture Committee and that before the last election, that Committee did not have a requirement for opposition members to be present when evidence was being given. Therefore, the Hon. Member complains that the tradition in the committee continues. I understand that opposition members are concerned that evidence can be taken even if they are not present. I am not concerned about the proposition which has been put forward. It is one which we could easily live with. If that is a matter of such concern to opposition members, I would once again demonstrate that we in this Party are receptive and understand the position which is put forward by an opposition Party or Parties, regardless of the numbers in the House.

I have given chapter and verse of the times when I have attempted to accommodate the opposition Parties. I indicated to them, in terms of the numbers on the committee, that they were asking for trouble. With the 120 positions which they have asked for in the committee system, the 40 members of the Official Opposition will have a hard time fulfilling their obligations.

The committees do not want to shut out anyone, including opposition members. Indeed, that is not the purpose of the rules which committees establish at the beginning of their mandates. Committees are only saying that they have a responsibility to carry out committee business. They try to allocate the membership in accordance with the numbers in the House. In addition, the committees are saying that, if people are attending to give evidence, then they want to try having reduced quorums for the purpose of hearing the evidence. It is not a matter of excluding anyone.

I would put this proposition to the Hon. Member. The Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, of which the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East is a representative, would have the proposition that we in the Government would have no rights, because there would have to be at least one opposition member of a reduced quorum of four members. There could be four members of the Opposition in attendance and the Government would be without any recourse. There would only be opposition members sitting in the committee taking evidence. The argument could be taken from one extreme to the other. I am quite concerned about that. There was no instruction about that. There has been an unfortunate suggestion that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) somehow—and it makes for interesting rhetoric and is a lot of fun—

Mr. Deans: It makes a lot of sense.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, it is absolutely not true. The Deputy Prime Minister is an honourable servant of the people. This is an allegation made against an honourable person, one which is without any foundation whatsoever. It is the kind of suggestion which I know Members would want to withdraw. I know they would want to say that they were wrong and had made a false accusation and that, having respect for this institution, they would not indulge in flights of accusation which are simply non-existent.

I hope this will set aside any apprehension which opposition members may have, that we will have committees with reduced quorums for the purpose of hearing evidence. i will have an opportunity to speak with members of the committees with respect to their organization. I take the words which were articulated by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain and with which the Opposition agreed, that there will be good faith shown on the part of the Opposition that members will be in attendance at all meetings and that the Opposition will not prevent the committees from hearing evidence by not being present at meetings when they are called. I expect to see the committee work carried on with camaraderie. The committee system will only operate if there is a spirit of co-operation. When that spirit is not present, the whole institution suffers. I hope I have specifically stated the position. The committees are in charge of their own destiny.

I hope that we can get on with the business of dealing with this very important resolution. I understand the concerns of opposition members, but I would like them to address the content of the terms of reference of this important task force.

It is a task force which will operate on the basis of consensus and co-operation. It is a task force which has an opportunity to address all matters, not only the matters which were raised by the Opposition today. I look forward to this legislation being passed to enable the task force to address the wide-ranging examination of this institution.

With regard to the composition of the task force, I am sure that it will be made up of people of honour, competence and ability who will bring forward a report of which we can be justly proud.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not want to raise this matter while the Hon. Member was speaking, but it is one which I raised the other day, and I believe that the Chair must give direction to the House on it.

The provisional Standing Order which deals with the 10 minute period following the 20 minute speeches, clearly indicates that there can be questions or brief comments and that the Speaker must attempt to distribute the comments and questions among Members of the House. That provisional rule was never intended to allow long speeches. It indicates very clearly "brief comments".

When I raised this matter the other day, the Speaker indicated that he had not seen another Member rising to ask questions or make comments, and therefore he allowed the Hon. Member who was speaking—I believe it was one of the Ministers—to continue. I do not expect a direction on this immediately, but I think it is important and should be addressed. In the 10 minute period the comments and questions should be brief. Members on any side of the House should not be allowed long speeches.

I admit that the Hon. Government House Leader was making some points in his rebuttal, but the 10 minute period is not meant for rebuttal. That period is meant for brief comments and questions. I think the House must have some direction on that particular point.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I only tried to respond to your concerns.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the concern of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) on this matter and will shortly report to the House with a directive.

The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith).

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I understand the difficulty that the Hon. Government House Leader has in this matter as he has no direct control over committee chairmen. It takes no stretch of the imagination to maintain that the direction—because it should never have happened that the 27 committees of the House of Commons all had the same motion on the Order Paper—

Mr. Dick: Twenty-three committees.

Mr. Frith: It was done by design. Whoever is responsible for the design of that motion—whether it was the Government House Leader or the Deputy Prime Minister or whoever—should go to those committee chairmen and outline the concern that the Privy Council has with respect to the abuse by the majority in those committees, and indicate that they would have same preference for the reversal of the motions which were placed before the committees yesterday and today. I would welcome that. In addition—and I can only speak for the committee which I represent—as a member of the steering committee, I hope we can have a steering committee meeting shortly at which I could outline my concern about the passage of that motion. I also hope that the chairman of my committee will reverse his position.

I think the Government would be foolhardy to continue using its majority in this manner. It will only upset opposition members and delay the implementation of new legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over.

• (1720)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I attended the organization meeting this morning of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I must say that after attending that meeting I was infuriated. It was my intention to come here this afternoon and let this House know how I felt about what took place there. I calmed down this afternoon after attending the meeting of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration because in that committee, after some discussion, the Conservative members were willing to put forward a motion that, for purposes of hearing evidence, there need only be three members of the committee present, two from the government side and one from the opposition side. The fear of the Hon. House Leader, therefore, that three or four members of the Opposition could meet without the Government was not well-founded. The proposal which was accepted was one, by the way, which we tried to make in the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development this morning. We tried to amend the motion which was put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary. We felt that out of four members of the committee, at least one member should be from the Opposition. That was voted down and the motion was rammed through to the effect that only the chairman or vice-chairman, with four members, need be present on the committee, and no opposition member had to be present.

With the exception of what happened in the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, all the motions in all the committees yesterday and today were handled in the same way. In every case amendments allowing opposition members to play some role in the quorum were refused. I was particularly upset with the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development because that is a committee which, over the last five or six years, has operated in a very non-partisan way. As a matter of fact, it has been an innovative committee, one which has served as a model for parliamentary reform in this House. It was the first committee to invite ex officio members to work with it in the Indian self-government study. It was a committee in the last Parliament where we used to work together.

In answer to some of the points which were raised by Hon. Members opposite, in the last Parliament, when the Liberals had the majority and were asked to give place to the Opposition in the quorum, we did so. We could have rammed through motions as the Government did this morning and yesterday, but we did not do so. We respected the rights of the Opposition. As a matter of fact, in the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the last Parliament, the Official Opposition had to be represented. That was accepted by the Liberal majority of that committee. The Official Opposition had to be represented, not just the New Democratic Party or any other opposition Party. In the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the last Parliament we met together and drafted a report condemning the then Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs on his handling of the James Bay situation. Committee members both from the Government and the Opposition, after listening to evidence and discussing it among themselves, drafted a report taking to task a Minister of the Crown, even though he was a member of the Government. The same thing was done with respect to the Conne River incident, the fact that the Conne River Indians had not been granted status after years of lobbying to that effect.

What has taken place in most of the committees up to this time, with the exception of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, is unacceptable. It is unaccetable that the Government with its great majority would crush the rights of the Opposition.

I would like to point out to the Hon. House Leader that there is another situation where this is happening as well. Perhaps, the Hon. House Leader is not aware of it. I do not know if anyone has raised the matter thus far in the debate. In the motion to set up this task force on parliamentary reform, there is no provision for minority reports. I can recall very well when we set up the task forces in the last Parliament—and I was Chairman of the Task Force On Employment Opportunities for the 80s—the Opposition insisted that written into the reference should be the right to have minority reports included in the majority report, printed, and given as much space as was necessary to express its views. That right is not included in this motion today, and I do not know why it is not included.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not know either, because I gave a copy to your House Leader some months ago.

Mr. Allmand: It could be an oversight and I would hope, because of this debate, that provision will be made, as was made on several occasions on task forces in the last Parliament, for minority reports to be printed in the volume setting forth the full report. With respect to the Task Force on Employment Opportunities for the 80s, two Conservative opposition members filed minority reports on three or four recommendations and the New Democratic Party filed them on other recommendations. They were allowed to write those reports themselves. The same thing was done on several other task forces, and I cannot see why anyone would be opposed to that being done now.

I know that with respect to standing committees, minority reports are not allowed. However, in task forces during the last Parliament this had been allowed, and I would hope that some change could be made to permit minority reports, because we are dealing with a wide range of matters.

With respect to reform of the House, the Speech from the Throne said that Members of the House of Commons will be asked to approve the appointment of a parliamentary task force on reform of the House. The central focus of this task force would be the enhancement of the role of the private Member. From that perspective, the task force will examine and make recommendations concerning the powers, practices, organization and resources of the House of Commons. I listened to the speech of the Hon. House Leader and his intentions are fine, but Government Members are doing exactly the opposite in committees. They are reducing the rights of private Members. They are doing the very opposite to what was stated would be done in the Speech from the Throne and in the resolution which was put before us today.

The Hon. House Leader, for whom I have a great deal of respect, said that no order came down from him or elsewhere. However, it is very odd that in every committee, the Parliamentary Secretary put forward motions which deliberately excluded opposition members in the formation of a quorum. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), pointed out, this would allow these task forces to go on the road without any opposition members. It is going to be difficult for Hon. Members on this side if government members decide, because of their majority, to travel throughout the country, or throughout the world, as this motion would allow them to do. We have no way of preventing that because Hon. Members opposite have the majority. What we, in fact, will see are Conservative task forces travelling throughout the country and throughout the world—probably throughout the country because that is better politics—but not at their own expense. The Conservatives had some very good task forces during the last Parliament, for instance, the task force on national revenue which examined tax problems. There was as well an earlier task force on some other matters. That is fine. It was financed by that Party. However, to manipulate the orders of the House and the rules of the committees so that that can be done flies completely in the face of what is stated here today and what was stated in the Speech from the Throne.

I was with the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on a committee on reform. We worked very intensely. We heard a lot of witnesses and put out ten reports. Seven of those were substantive reports and dealt with every item which is in this motion from (a) to (g) except for item (e). Item (e) states that the task force should study:

> the funding, facilities and staff support services made available to Members of the House of Commons;

We did not study that. But we did study item (a), namely, the permanent and provisional Standing Orders. Of course, we studied them intensely. Item (b), the role of the private Member in the House of Commons, was dealt with in reports Nos. 3 and 10. Item (c) concerning the accountability of Ministers to the House of Commons was dealt with at great length in report No. 7. Item (d) regarding the legislative process was dealt with in report No. 3. Item (f) on the administration and management of the House of Commons was dealt with in report No. 9. Item (g) reads:

the procedures and powers of Committees of the House of Commons and the role and the use of parliamentary task forces;

That item was dealt with in reports Nos. 3, 5 and 6 of the last special committee. Therefore, there is a lot which has already been dealt with. Ten members of the present Conservative caucus worked with that special committee at one time or another, and those Hon. Members are still sitting in this House. Three members of that special committee are now Ministers: the Government House Leader, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), and I believe the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). The Hon. Member for St. John's East was on the committee, and most of our reports were unanimous.

• (1730)

Mr. Dick: All.

Mr. Allmand: They were all unanimous. I did not want to say "all" because it sounded so absolute, but they were all unanimous.

Mr. McGrath: All on consensus, no minority reports.

Mr. Allmand: Right. We all agree that that committee worked very well. We went at the work of that committee from our base of experience in the House of Commons, and I think not in any partisan way because the reports we ended up with provided a balance between the rights and the powers of the Opposition and the right of the Government to get its business through. Even at that time the members of the Conservative Party anticipated they might be the government shortly and they did not want to overload the report too much in favour of the Opposition.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I had no idea.

Mr. Allmand: But it was a good balance.

Members of this House and the public will know that most of the things in the third report, which was the first substantive report, are now part of the provisional standing orders, and we are dealing with them right now. It dealt with such things as the parliamentary timetable, the length of speeches, the fact we now have a 20-minute speech with a 10-minute period for questions and comments. It dealt with the committee system, the fact that reports tabled under Acts of Parliament are automatically referred to committee, not by special order. It referred to Private Members' Business and so on. All this was done by agreement among the Parties at that time, and today those recommendations are in effect, but on a provisional basis.

Of the other reports that we agreed on unanimously, the fourth report dealt with the election of the Speaker, but it was not followed. I do not say that in any way to criticize any of the Speakers of this House, but the fact was that we agreed unanimously on a new way of electing the Speaker, but it was not carried through.

The fifth and sixth reports deal with committees and their power. Nothing in those reports has been implemented.

The seventh report deals with the financial control of the Government by Members of Parliament. A lot of time was spent on that report and a lot of credit is due to two former Members of this House, Ron Huntington from Capilano and Claude André Lachance from Montreal. Both of them did a lot of very good work which led to that report.

The ninth report dealt with the Commissioners for Internal Economy and it attempted to give more power to Members of Parliament, including the Opposition, in controlling matters which affect all Members of this House, such as offices, secretaries and support services. Again that report was ignored by the Government when it appointed the Commissioners for Internal Economy in the same way as has always been done. I realize that the law says that the Commissioners for Internal Economy must be Privy Counsellors, but it does not say that all those Privy Counsellors have to be on the government side of the House.

The tenth report dealt with statements by Ministers, questions of confidence in the Government, how to deal with Ways and Means motions, what happens when we have votes on Friday, the recognition of Members in the House, Private Members' Business, and a new and more effective way of voting.

In a period of time of over one year that committee dealt with nearly every item which is going to be dealt with here.

It seems to me that the Government could show its good faith with respect to reform of Parliament if the Government House Leader were to meet with the House Leaders of the other Parties and discuss with them how to implement immediately some of those recommendations that had been unanimously agreed to. If the Government did that and did not carry on the kind of skulduggery we saw in the committees this morning, then we in the Opposition and maybe other private Members would be able to say that the Government is serious, that it is acting in good faith and wants to do something about the reform of Parliament. But we become a bit dubious when there is no attempt to implement the recommendations made unanimously in the last Parliament by that special committee. Then we have the sort of thing that went on today. I also point to the fact that in the resolution before us there is no provision for minority reports.

It is my firm belief, Mr. Speaker, that we will not see drastic reform in this House until we do something about the question of confidence. We discussed this at great length in the last Parliament. The fact that any vote can be considered a vote of confidence inhibits private Members in committee and in the House from putting forward amendments to criticize, even in a constructive way, because they feel that to vote against their own Party when in government, or to be in opposition with their own Party, might lead to a question of confidence which would defeat the Government and cause an election. That is hard to imagine in the present circumstances, but that parliamentary tradition affects the House in that way. In the tenth report, I believe, we made a recommendation that on Opposition Days, when a vote is attached to an opposition motion, it should not be considered a confidence vote unless it is expressly set out in the motion. If the motion drafted by the Opposition said that the House expresses a lack of confidence in the Government because of whatever, then it would be considered a want of confidence motion. But if it does not do that, then every motion put forward for a vote on an Opposition Day should simply be dealt with on its own merits.

Last year we had a motion put forward by the New Democratic Party to reject testing of Cruise missiles. There was nothing in its motion that expressed lack of confidence in the Government, but the NDP wanted the House to express itself on that very important point. At that time, six Members on the Government side abstained altogether because they were against the testing of Cruise missiles, but they said they did not want to vote with the opposition motion because they did not want to precipitate an election. They were caught in the dilemma of being in agreement with the opposition motion but they did not want to precipitate an election. I personally voted with the Opposition because I thought the question was serious, and in any case I did not think the Government would call an election on that.

I think the new Members of the House, especially those on the government side, will find as they work in these committees that there will be times when, after listening to the evidence, they will want to amend the Bill. They will feel deep inside that that is what should be done. But unless we can change the rules that will allow them to do that without expressing a lack of confidence in their own government, they will not do it. I can understand that this large number of Conservative members would prefer their own Government to any other government, but they may differ with the Government on certain points from time to time. They should have the right to vote against those Bills or amend them without expressing lack of confidence in the Government. Until we do something about that, Mr. Speaker, I think we will not change radically what happens in this House.

If committees are going to be meaningful, we have to give them more support services. If you are going to be a counterbalance to the great power the Government has with large Departments, advisers and counsellors and so on, if you are going to take issue with some of the proposals put to you, you need at least some expertise on economic and social matters, statistics and so on, to help you question and put forward alternatives. I think that is extremely important and goes to the very base of parliamentary reform.

I came to this House today originally to oppose this motion with all the force I had. I am a bit encouraged by the statement made just a few moments ago by the House Leader that he is willing to reconsider what was done in some of the committees today and correct it. If that is the case, I think he shows good faith. We will be waiting for him to act on that. I would also ask if he would try to make provision for minority reports in this task force and other task forces that will be set up. That is what was done in the last Parliament and it was done at the request of members of his Party. They insisted on it and the Government agreed to it. It was agreed upon through consultations.

Let us have reform of Parliament. It is essential. Let us have it in a way in which all Members of the House participate, even those of us in the Opposition. Give us a chance to participate too. Many of us have something to put forward.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the Hon. Government House Leader to clarify a statement he made a few minutes ago in the House. I was not here for the full statement. I just returned from the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry where a motion was passed by the Government majority giving the committee the right to hear evidence and to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but I do not believe that is a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to you that I think it would be in the interest of both the Government and members of both Opposition Parties if the point that I wish to raise with the House Leader were clarified. It would perhaps put an end to some of the acrimony—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair rules that that is not a point of order. Are there questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke whether he understood the Government House Leader to have suggested, while he was speaking, that members of the government Party would be prepared to reconsider the rule, passed in so many of the committees that have had their organizational meetings already, reducing the rights of the minority. I ask the Hon. Member that question because of the emphasis that he placed on the rights of private Members and the importance, as the Government launches a task force into parliamentary reform, that is not be a task force that will lead to measures to reduce the rights of private Members contrary to what was said in the Speech from the Throne, but that in fact the spirit of the enterprise will be as as stated in the Speech from the Throne. Is that the understanding that the Hon. Member has?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in listening to the Hon. House Leader when he was making comments after the last speech, I found that he gave hints to the effect that he was willing to reconsider. However, as my hon. friend from Newfoundland has pointed out, it is not absolutely clear. It would be helpful to this debate if he would be very clear as to whether they are willing to put forward the kind of resolution that was passed in the Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration and was attempted to be passed in all the other committees, including the standing committees on Fisheries, on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and on Justice and Legal Affairs, but was voted down. If that could be reconsidered I think it would show a certain amount of good faith. It is not clear in my mind whether that is what he intended, but I thought he was hinting at changes in that direction.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment. The Hon. Member expressed concern that the reference contained no provision for a minority report. The Hon. Member knows full well that if this task force is to succeed, it must have a unanimous report. Otherwise, if there is a minority report, it has failed to bring in any meaningful recommendations for any meaningful parliamentary reform. That is precisely why no provision was made for a minority report in the last reference setting up the special committee. There is nothing to stop Hon. Members from bringing in a minority report if there is a very serious difference of opinion on any single aspect of any single report of the committee.

Second, the Hon. Member knows full well that when the special committee, in its second report, which is now a part of the provisional Standing Orders, addressed itself to committees, it referred specifically to parliamentary task forces. It made no reference whatsoever to parliamentary task forces being empowered to bring in minority reports. I refer the Hon. Member to that recommendation. It refers to membership and the usefulness of the task forces. It recommends that they be an ongoing part of Parliament. However, it makes no reference whatsoever to minority reports.

I agree with the Hon. Member on the outstanding reports of the special committee. There are six of those and one which merely deals with unsubstantive changes in one of the previous reports. I agree that it is a pity that these reports did not go on. But I would remind the Hon. Member that there is a special reference in the order referring the outstanding reports of the last committee to this committee. In other words, the Government is serious about getting on with the recommendations of the last committee and has in fact used this committee as a vehicle to get them back before Parliament again, if the committee so decides. I am surprised that that fact escaped the Hon. Member's attention. I would refer him to the order of reference where it states that all the evidence adduced by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure and the reports of that committee as tabled in the House of Commons during the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the committee. The committee has to deal with the work of the last committee, including the outstanding recommendations of the last committee. It would seem to me that that would be the first priority of the committee.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. With respect to the Member's last point, of course, I was aware of the fact that the motion would refer the reports of the special committee in the last Parliament to this task force. I was critical of that. I do not think that is enough, although it is better than nothing at all. I still believe that it would be better if those reports were the subject of immediate negotiation between House Leaders to see if some of the points could be implemented. In my opinion, they were studied long enough. We took twice the time that is set aside for the task force which is now being set up. We agreed unanimously on certain things. Why must they be referred back to this committee? I am aware that they are referred to this committee. That is a good thing, but it would not be my first priority.

On the other point with respect to minority reports, I still believe that all task forces set up should have the rights to put out minority reports. One would hope they would not take place, but it was the Hon. Member's Party in the last Parliament, when we were setting up the task forces in 1980 immediately after the last election, that insisted on the right to minority reports. That was granted.

The Hon. Member is correct that if you have too many minority reports, the report of the majority loses its effect. You could have a situation, Mr. Speaker, where they may make 50 or 60 recommendations. There may be unanimity on 90 per cent of those recommendations.

Mr. McGrath: There were 107 in the last one.

Mr. Allmand: That is good, but I still think there could be a situation where, on certain recommendations, there may not be unanimity. I think then the public has a right to know in the body of the report that there are dissenting opinions. I would hope that that would not be the case, but I would refer the Hon. Member to the debates in the House when we discussed the task forces at the beginning of the last Parliament. Today I would make all of the arguments that were used on that occasion for including minority reports. I hope it would not be necessary, but the right should be there for opposition members, if necessary, to make minority reports. I use the same arguments which were made by the Conservative Party members at that time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a brief question. In the course of presenting this order of reference, I consulted with representatives of each of the Parties. We looked over the terms of reference and I asked them for their suggestions and input. I consulted fully with respect to the form of this order of reference and received the approval of the respective House Leaders. I understand that the House Leader may not act on behalf of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). Maybe he does not feel constrained by that arrangement. I can say that I did everything within my ability to make sure that there was the fullest consultation with the Parties before we brought this resolution down.

First, that is not satisfactory to the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. Second, there is now an amendment before the House which strikes me as being inconsistent with the fact that I had fully discussed this matter. It has been in their hands now, not for days but for weeks.

All that I can say is that this is not an attempt to introduce something that was not first fully canvassed. I tried my level best to be open and above board with the opposition Parties. I appreciate the information and suggestions the Hon. Member makes, but he should consider that. I go back to the statements made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), who said that this whole process will work if there is consensus. I addressed that in the introduction of this motion.

I ask the Hon. Member if he will not now allow this matter, which has received the fullest consultation, to pass so that we can get on with the task and address it? The Member is an alternate on this committee and will be fully involved in terms of the whole process. I am sorry, he is not now an alternate, but he will have an opportunity to make representations to this committee. We have first-rate people on the committee. Will he not now let us get this matter to a vote so that we can get on with the job and make sure that we can make progress on this very important topic?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) on a short answer.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I will be as brief as I can. I do not accuse the Hon. House Leader of lack of good faith in consulting. I understand that he consulted with the House Leaders on this issue. However, this is what Parliament is all about. No matter how wise our House Leaders are, the fact is that we have 282 Members of Parliament, and the reason that we have Parliament is that government, the Cabinet, must submit its proposals to Parliament. If Parliament works properly, there should be discussion within Parliament about how to improve what has been put forward by the wise people in Cabinet and, in this case, the wise House Leaders.

Let me explain what probably happened. We have a number of Members, including our House Leader, who were Cabinet Ministers for a long time. The Hon. Member will find out that when you are a Cabinet member for a long time, you lose touch with the ordinary day-to-day happenings in parliamentary committees and in the House. You do not have to deal with them in the same way as a back-bencher or opposition member. Ministers are used to approaching the House in a different way than the rest of us. I have had experience on both sides—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask the Hon. Member to conclude?

Mr. Allmand: Despite the fact that he consulted and did a good job, improvements can be made, and that is the reason for debate in the House. It is so that improvements can be made.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss the motion to set up a special committee on House of Commons reform. It is a committee that our caucus and our House Leader have discussed and approved. We gave that approval on the basis of consensus and in a spirit of co-operation. I believe those were the guidelines set out at the opening of Parliament. They are very important principles to keep in mind in order for the House to function in its traditional way.

I believe that this motion would have passed in a matter of minutes had we not had the unfortunate experience in the committees yesterday and today. That spirit of consensus and co-operation was dashed when the Government used its very large majority in an attempt to change a parliamentary tradition around the world that recognizes minority rights whether they be those of the Opposition in Parliament or of groups outside of Parliament. That right has been a longstanding tradition of parliamentary practice.

That tradition was ignored and trampled on in the various committees in the past two days and has sent a very important signal to members of the opposition Parties. I believe it has set the tone, a very unfortunate tone, for future practice in the House.

Yesterday, when I left the committee which I attended, I discovered there was a breach of tradition. I thought it was an isolated case and recognized that, it being an agricultural committee, perhaps it had been overlooked somewhat. The government members of that committee had not attended committees in previous Parliaments and perhaps could be forgiven for not understanding the necessity of following the unwritten rules, procedures and traditions of parliamentary practice. That was my feeling when I left that committee. I was giving it the benefit of the doubt.

I was trying to maintain that sense of spirit and co-operation that is so necessary to the functioning of this place. However, after consulting with my colleagues from other committees I found that the practice in those committees was precisely the same. There was no recognition of the need for both sides of the House to be represented in minimum quorums for hearing of evidence. There was no agreement or recognition by the government side that both sides should be represented when major decisions are to be made with a quorum. There was no recognition of continuing that longstanding practice in the steering committees.

In our committee, the Chairman or the government members did not even concede that there was a recognized need for a notice to be given before a meeting is held. The Chairman informed us that all meetings would be at the call of the Chair, with no time set for an advanced notice of meetings.

There is really no guarantee of the rights of the minorities in the House, even to know when a meeting would be held. It leaves no chance for parliamentary traditions and practices to be recognized.

I think that is the reason for the Government's problem. We are having second thoughts about renewing a committee that will study parliamentary practice. A previous committee did a very good job in studying this issue, and some of its recommendations have been acted upon. In fact, this particular debate is being conducted as a result of the implementation of some of those recommendations. We cannot feel comfortable about approving the establishment of such a committee when there has been such a recent and unfortunate indication from the Government about its thoughts on minorities and opposition Parties. It leaves us suspicious about hidden agendas. It leaves us insecure about what the Government's intentions are.

Until such time as the Government gives a clear indication that it has made a mistake with respect to these committees, I do no think it would be appropriate for us, in the interest of parliamentary tradition and practice, to proceed with a review of parliamentary practice. Until the Government rethinks its attitude with regard the parliamentary process, I think we would be loath to go into any further negotiations at this point in time.

May I call it six o'clock?

• (1800)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to make it quite clear that the opposition Parties, notwithstanding the fact that they had agreed to this matter going ahead, are not prepared to have this motion come to a vote today and have called it six o'clock. Am I clear in that regard?

Some Hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I thought I had made myself quite clear with respect to the questions raised. I do not want to waste the time of the House now, but the matter was discussed very briefly by the House Leaders, if they speak for their Parties at House Leader's meetings. I said that I would be glad to look into the whole question and make sure that we bring about some resolution of this matter. I repeated that on the floor of the House. If it is a question of passing this resolution—and that would be helpful—we could deal with the matter now and with the whole question of a quorum for the hearing of evidence in committees. I just want to know whether or not the Hon. Member is prepared to let the matter go to a vote at the present time.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I consider the practice of the last two days in committee a breach of faith and would suggest that until it is rectified we have some difficulty proceeding, even though we had an agreement. We consider some of the practices in committee to be inconsistent with the normal practices of the House. Until we have those rectified and returned to normal, I think co-operation will take some time to follow.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS—EXISTENCE OF COMMITTEE STUDY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the issue I raised with the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) on November 19 dealt with the appointment or alleged appointment—in fact there really was no committee—by the former Minister of State for Finance of a committee which was to deal with problems besetting the entire financial intermediary community.

Briefly it can be said that there are four pillars of financial intermediaries, or however one may want to describe them—banks, trust companies, security dealers and insurance companies. I think we should include the credit unions. That would be at least five pillars. Some people have suggested that perhaps lawyers, notaries and others dealing with assisting people in financing might also be included.

The problem has been that these various companies and organizations involved in the financial community are attempting and have been attempting over a period of time to take over the business of each other. For example—and I only use this as an example—the Royal Bank of Canada was heavily involved in automobile leasing. The Bank Act was altered and automobile leasing was specifically excluded from banks. Now the Royal Bank of Canada is involved in a program where it buys back automobiles. It leads a person money and at the end of the term the car can be sold to the Royal Bank to satisfy the loan balance. It is a form of leasing by the back door.

Apparently it was also involved, according to the latest release, in organizing equity financing in Canada for those who might want to invest in Canada. It is in the financial security business. It operates out of the Cayman Islands. That is another activity. We have the banks and security dealers taking money on deposit and selling treasury bills and securities of all kinds. We have insurance companies selling annuities for one year. Imagine a one year annuity. It is really a rolling over of a one year promissory note or guaranteed investment certificate.

We have a problem where the whole discipline in the financial market has gone. Organizations under one ruse or another are able to go beyond what was originally deemed the scope of their powers. We have developing the concept of a financial supermarket. This whole matter must be addressed by Parliament and must be addressed as soon as possible.

The former government knew this. Rather than have Parliament address the matter, the former minister appointed a little select committee. That select committee was supposed to be a task force. He went around the country telling people that he had a task force deliberately looking at and studying the matter, and that it would make sure it made a report of some kind.

It turns out from the answer given by the Minister of State for Finance that there was no task force at all. A group of people were appointed from across the country. They were given free airline tickets. They came to Ottawa to discuss things with the officials of the Minister of Finance, had a "din-din" and a lovey in the hotels in Ottawa and then went back home. Rather than have Parliament and the people involved, we had people who were responsible perhaps, and perhaps not, to the insurance companies, banks, trust companies and credit unions discussing among themselves how they would divide up the laws and regulations that affect financial intermediaries.

I and other members of our party called on the then Minister of State for Finance and Minister of Finance to set up a parliamentary committee to inquire, study the matter and report to Parliament so that laws and statutes could be passed to amend the current law with respect to financial intermediaries.

I say again today to the current Minister that this group, which is now winding up its activities, should be dismissed. It was an interesting group, but it did not accomplish anything. It cannot accomplish anything. The matter should be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs or a task force set up, if that is the pleasure of the Government, to study this issue so that we can come to grips with it.

Financial intermediaries are very important in the development of Canada. Our laws with respect to them have to be amended. They must be brought up to date. If not, our country will suffer. It will be more difficult to move money from one investment activity to another. It must be dealt with as soon as possible. I hope this Parliament will come to grips with that issue.

[Translation]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise in the House to answer this question. I also wish to thank the men and women of the riding of St. Paul's and the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for having given me this honour.

[English]

No one is more aware of the confusion in the financial intermediary system than I am. I have spent 20 years of my life working the financial sector. In fact, I worked for three of the four or five pillars, depending on how one defines them. I am also, as all of us are, a consumer of financial services.

In response to my colleague's question, there is indeed a private sector Advisory Committee on Financial Institutions. It is probably not constitued as he would have constituted it, and probably not as I would have either, but let me just give some history of this committee.

It is chaired by William Dimma, the President of A. E. LePage, and is known as the Dimma committee. Its composition is mainly of senior executives from major private financial corporations with some consumer and academic representations. It was formed in January 1984 by the previous government. Its purpose was to provide the then Minister with a private-sector perspective on the structural changes in the industry, many of which were outlined by my colleague in his question. The Dimma Committee was also to comment on the Finance Department's working papers on the modernization of the legislation for financial institutions.

On behalf of the Government, I decided to allow the committee to convene for one more meeting. I believe it is important to allow the committee to continue to study the working papers of the Department of Finance and, more importantly, I believe it is important to proceed with legislation in this important area as rapidly as possible, and in that process to present papers to the House.

I will be furthering the consultation process in this important area in a very specific way to ensure that the harmonization of financial institutions legislation is complete. This consultation will be carried out in a very specific and limited time frame.

As the House knows, our Party had launched the most comprehensive consultative process of any Government in our history. With no disrespect to members of the Dimma Committee who are persons of distinction, I agree with my hon. colleague that this committee is a good example of the consultation process gone wrong. The financial institutions in our country have been in need of revised legislation for many years. Indeed, the Trust Companies Act and the Loan Companies Act have not been substantially revised since the early part of the century.

Instead of action, the industry leaders were given, as my colleague has suggested, a series of dinners and asked to comment on papers produced by the Department. I intend to speed up the process that my hon. colleague has outlined by way of better consultation and by proceeding to legislation.

EMPLOYMENT—YOUTH TRAINING OPTION PROGRAM. (B) GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, November 7, I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) how she justified the cancellation of the First Chance Program which was implemented to train and employ young people by replacing it with the Youth Training Option Program. First Chance was ready to begin on October 1. It would have provided $100 million in its first year to help young people train on the job, and it would have provided $1 billion per year over a five-year period. In 1985, it would have provided for 100,000 trainees.

I was extremely supportive of that program since it fell in line with certain recommendations made in the report of the Task Force on Employment Opportunities for the 80s, a report made by a task force of which I was chairman in 1980 and 1981. By the way, those recommendations were given unanimous support by all members of the task force.

The Minister cancelled First Chance and replaced it with the Youth Training Option Program, a similar but more limited program. Instead of providing $100 million in its first year, the Minister received only $27 million to carry out that program. Instead of it being a permanent program, it was to be a pilot project. This has happened despite all the rhetoric and promises made during the election campaign with respect to training and employment.

The Minister explained to me that she had an obligation to consult with provinces, business and labour. My answer to that is twofold, Mr. Speaker. First, the fact that the Minister had to withdraw the First Chance Program and put in place a pilot project and consult further was an admission that she and the Government had no plans or blueprints for training when they made these promises during the election campaign. They were going to start from scratch and develop a program through consultation.

Second, why was it necessary to consult all over again as if nothing had been done before? I would like to point out that since 1980 there have been approximately 10 task forces and commissions dealing with this very subject, eight of which have reported. I can refer to some of them.

There was the Task Force on Employment Opportunities for the 80s, the Dodge Commission Report, a Report called In the Chips which dealt with employment in the micro-electronics industry, two reports by the Economic Council of Canada on this subject, the Commission for Part-time Work, the Commission for Paid Educational Leave, the Major Projects Task Force, the Task Force on Employment Outreach Programs and the Michelle Jean Report from Quebec. Those reports were presented in the last five years and were all on the same subject. They involved much consultation with all the groups the Minister indicates she will consult.

In addition, the Conservative Party had its own task force in 1983-84 under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). That task force consulted broadly and published a report which included recommendations with respect to training on the job.

Now is the time for action with respect to training on the job and employment programs for young people. It is not a time for further study. I strongly urge the Government to move ahead and provide hope to young people who are unemployed and need training. It should be done now, and we should not have to wait for further studies and consultation.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), I am pleased to explain to the Hon. Member why this government has introduced the $27 million Youth Training Option Program. This government has said on many occasions that it was committed to do something about the tragic lot of unemployed youths. The Youth Training Option is a new approach to the problem. The Hon. Member claims that this approach has been examined and tried many times. That is not true. A similar program is in force in the United Kingdom and has proved to be a resounding success. The Youth Training Option is similar to the British program, but the fact is that the idea has never been implemented in Canada.

When the Minister announced the program, she said that it was a pilot project. We would rather not spend too much of the taxpayers' money on a program which has yet to be tested. I might remind the Hon. Member that, last May, the previous government had announced a $30 million experimental program called Youth Training Option. In any case, during the election campaign that experimental program was suddenly replaced by another $1 billion program called First Chance, despite the fact that the original Youth Training Option never did get off the ground and that there were no consultations with the provinces.

As the previous government knew very well, the $1 billion was never made available. No one knew how that $1 billion would be financed in 1985-86. Our government would rather not follow that example. The Minister will meet with her provincial colleagues and consult them to make sure that any federal program aimed at reducing youth unemployment meshes with any proposed or existing provincial initiative. Businesses and unions will also be consulted so as to ensure their support and cooperation. The only way to find effective solutions to fight against youth unemployment is to work with all sectors of the Canadian economy.

The Youth Training Option will be launched immediately to provide training and practical work experience for 3,000 or 4,000 young Canadians. With the cooperation of the provinces, businesses and unions, we will be able to help more young men and women. We do not want to act irresponsibly nor promise something we as a government cannot deliver. Should we find out that the program does work, and once we know the provinces, businesses and unions agree, we will make a huge joint effort which will undoubtedly meet the requirements of the Canadian labour market and those of young Canadians.

Now, in answer to the Hon. Member who asked: Why consult? If we are to set up a joint and coherent program with the provinces, other federal agencies, municipalities, unions and what have you, consultation has to be the order of the day. In that respect, I must say that the previous government was not much in favour of consultation.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am so pleased to keep hearing from government Members that the Government will have consultations. It has bothered me sometimes in listening to recent answers given by Cabinet Ministers in the House to learn that exactly the opposite is true. Exactly the opposite is true in the worst way imaginable.

I realize it is difficult for Ministers to know what the facts are, because they have a lot of work to do and they have to prepare for Question Period. However, we have reached the point in the House where we are dealing with primary producers who are forced to turn to welfare to live and who cannot feed their families, yet the Minister stands in this House, as she did on November 13, and says the following:

It is my understanding that in the last few weeks there have been sufficient fishing opportunities so as to permit fisher people to qualify for the ten weeks that would allow them to collect unemployment insurance benefits.

While the Minister was saying that, Mr. Speaker, she had on her desk a recommendation from the Federal Department of Fisheries with respect to instituting a special program so that fishermen could qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. In that report from the federal Department of Fisheries and in the report from the union in Newfoundland, it was said that there were 1,600 families affected by a poor fishing season in that province alone. I am not talking now about the other provinces in Atlantic Canada. Therefore, the Minister had that information on her desk the day before she stood up in the House and gave the answer she did to the question which was put to her.

In answer to my question in which I pointed out that the snow was falling and there were no longer boats out in the water she said she was waiting until the season was completed. She said:

We have made a commitment that we are prepared to go to the limit of $3 million for all constituencies so affected.

Here are the facts, Mr. Speaker. It was a poor fishing season. It was a poor fishing season last year as well, and the Liberal Government approved—throwing money at problems, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) keeps reminding us—a special program whereby fishermen and fish plant workers could receive enough work to qualify for unemployment insurance. In that way they would not have to go on welfare, because they consider drawing welfare is really not right but that unemployment insurance benefits are a legitimate source of income. The Liberal Government approved that special program and the fishermen and the fish plant workers, as they received enough to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits, were laid off.

This year we have the situation where the fishing season was even worse. The Canadian Salt Fish Corporation—there is a measure presently before the House—states that its product is down 15 per cent to 20 per cent because it was a poor fishing season. The Minister, in responding to that question said that she will increase the allocations for Canada Works up $3 million without knowing that the very constituencies affected were already up to $3 million. She repeated in this House that she would not increase the Canada Works allocations any further and she would bring in a special program.

I would like to remind this Minister, Mr. Speaker, after deriding the former Government for doing what was legitimate, that even if she increased the Canada Works allocation to $3 million, there are rules and regulations in that program which prohibits fishermen from being hired.

I have listened to a lot of debate in this House recently. There was a report concerning women, handicapped people, young people and old people who could not get jobs. Yet a week ago in this House this very Minister tabled qualifications for getting hired on federal works programs which eliminated everyone who had not worked before it eliminated anyone who has been out of the work force for two years; and it eliminated anyone who had had enough gumption to go out and work for a week in the previous two months. That is outrageous, Mr. Speaker.

It is odd that the person writing the report did not discover, or perhaps just did not know, that the Minister would table the guidelines as she did. However, these very guidelines would discriminate against the very fishermen or fish plant workers for whom the Minister says she is going to increase the assistance allocation. To put it very briefly, Mr. Speaker, this Government has refused to bring in a special program in order to assist these poor, unfortunate people who could not afford to buy school books for their children in September of this year; those 1,600 families. That is amazing, Mr. Speaker, because most of them are in Tory ridings. Surely, there must be enough pressure on the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to get her to change her mind.

The Minister has said she is going to increase to $3 million the allocation to take care of those people, at the same time realizing that the worst hit constituencies were already up to $3 million. The Minister said in this House that some of the fishermen have now received their unemployment insurance benefits. They received ten weeks, and I will tell you how, Mr. Speaker. They went out day after day in rough weather to get an $80 stamp. That is what they had to do because they knew no program was coming. They will live throughout the winter, those few fishermen, having their income supplemented by welfare. What a way to treat the primary producers of this nation. It is despicable, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as indicated by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), and I will repeat her words, we have been monitoring very closely the Newfoundland Fishermen issue. The most recent figures provided by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans have been confirmed by the United Fishery and Food Workers' Union. They indicate that 1,100 fishermen might not—might not, I repeat—be eligible for unemployment insurance this winter. We will have more information in November when fishermen's unemployment applications are processed.

As the Hon. Member knows, funds have been allocated under the Canada Works Program. Electoral ridings are eligible for the $3 million in case of need and if the maximum amount has not yet been paid out. If the Hon. Member knows of any specific cases where fishermen continue to be ineligible for unemployment insurance, even after the Canada Works projects are set up, I would ask him to bring them to the attention of the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Canada Works funds were also allocated last fall, to help fishermen become eligible for unemployment insurance benefits during the winter. However, the program to which the Hon. Member is referring was probably the special allowance provided in the spring for fishermen who were prevented from fishing during the normal fishing season because of ice conditions. Allowances were paid through the Canada Employment and Immigration Center but did not come out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

We feel that increasing Canada Works funds for Newfoundland will help many fishermen become eligible for unemployment insurance benefits this winter. If upon termination of the projects the number of insurable weeks is still insufficient, the Minister is prepared to review the situation.

IMMIGRATION

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to hear that this Government, following the example of its predecessor, has decided to further reduce immigration levels for 1985. It is a tragedy for our country as a whole and for the thousands of people who would like to settle in Canada.

The present act and the immigration levels set each year are based on the false assumption that immigration ought to depend on the state of the economy. This is merely a pretext to close the gates. We are trying to stimulate the economy in every possible way, and Canadians should know that immigrants create jobs. They bring with them a very special genius which is their determination to succeed. They want to show that their adopted country was right to admit them. Since 1982, we have in effect closed our doors to independent immigrants who do not have pre-arranged employment and are not entrepreneurs. These people often have relatives in Canada but may not enter the country because they are over 20 or 21.

I hope the day will come when the Minister of Employment and Immigration will be worthy of her title and stop acting like a border guard.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CHILE—PLIGHT OF PSYCHIATRIST, DR. FANNY POLLAROLO

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Pinochet dictatorship in Chile held its 11th anniversary in September, celebrating the blood-bath in which it drowned half a century of constitutional democratic government in Chile. Canada's ambassador joined in the celebrations, thus making Canada party to the vicious repression that Pinochet has renewed during the last three weeks of government terror.

Over 1,100 people have been arrested, and 467 people have been exiled internally. That means that they have been banished to isolated towns where they lack family, means of livelihood, and medical care. In other words, that is a sentence of slow death. Police have ignored habeas corpus orders made by the courts, have apparently killed one prisoner by beating, and have arrested 11 civil rights lawyers. Dr. Fanny Pollarolo, an internationally-known psychiatrist, was seized from a taxi and disappeared. In addition, 8,000 people have been arrested in police raids on the poor districts.

I call on the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to censure Canada's ambassador for implicitly endorsing such systematic terror and violation of human rights, and to demand information as to the whereabouts and well-being of Dr. Fanny Pollarolo.

LIFTBRIDGE MALFUNCTION AT VALLEYFIELD, P.Q.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the House a serious incident that occurred in my riding a few days ago.

The liftbridge over the St. Lawrence Seaway at Valleyfield is now stuck half-way.

According to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, the bridge cannot be made operational again before the middle of December.

As a result, road traffic between the two shores of the Seaway is blocked as well as all traffic on a waterway that is extremely important to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, the economic repercussions are obvious.

However, there is also the social impact, because for all practical purposes, most of my riding is now cut off from the services it usually depends on, and especially the Valleyfield hospital.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Minister that this problem is not a recent one. The bridge has been out of commission in the past, for more or less extended periods, and I am sure that unless the Minister intervenes this time, there will be another recurrence.

S.O. 21

Mr. Speaker, I therefore urge the Minister to take the necessary action as soon as possible with a view to finding a definite solution to the problem.

Solutions proposed in the past included building an elevated bridge or digging a tunnel. These proposals should now be made the subject of a serious and thorough study.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that it is unthinkable that in 1984, users—

IMMIGRATION

POLICY STUDY—SIZE OF POPULATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, according to the background paper released last Monday by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), if our birth rate remains constant, then 35 years from now deaths will exceed births and Canada's population, which is presently 25 million, will decline over time to only 10 million. This will happen unless we have an annual net immigration of approximately 125,000 people. This presents us with the need to make a major policy decision. Just how large should our population and our immigration quota be?

Years ago we had an open-door immigration policy, but today there is a great difference of opinion in Canada on the subject of immigration. On the one hand the unemployed, their families and friends, quite understandably advocate restricting immigration at least until the economy improves. On the other hand, equally understandably, new Canadians want to reunite their families in this country.

The study of the immigration policy announced earlier this week by the Minister will deal with all of the immediate problems that concern Canadians. I urge the Minister to take the study one step further and to begin to address the larger and longer-term question of whether our population should increase, decrease, or remain stable, and what impact each of these options may have on the economy and on the delivery of government services.

TOURISM

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): On many occasions during the last parliamentary session, Mr. Speaker, several Members of the Opposition took the former administration to task for failing to implement a coherent tourism policy for the various departments and organizations of the federal government. Specifically, I am referring to the Opposition Member who stated in this House last February 8:

[English]

There is a lack of co-ordination between the various government Departments regarding regulations which end up being detrimental to the tourist industry.

[Translation]

And another Member said this last March 22nd:

[English]

—but our message should be that we as politicans realize we cannot raise taxes without first knowing what effect they will cause.

[Translation]

The same day, another Member stated:

[English]

"We will ensure departmental co-operation so that all federal decisions are arrived at with the complete understanding of their effects on tourism."

[Translation]

Now that they form the government, Mr. Speaker, where is that coherent policy? It would seem that there has been no consultation whatsoever between departments. First, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources increases oil prices, the Department of the Environment hikes user fees in our national parks, Transport Canada charges more for VIA Rail services, raises the air transportation tax and reduces ferry services.

The Department of Employment—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time alloted to him has expired.

FLOOD DAMAGE COMPENSATION FOR FARMERS IN NORTHEASTERN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, last May, June, and probably July, there was considerable flooding in northeastern Saskatchewan. At that time the Prime Minister said that assistance would be provided for the farmers in that province and indicated that the assistance would be on a two-to-one basis from the federal Government. In other words, some $16 million would be provided by the federal Government.

There was an election campaign and the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that he would keep that commitment. In fact the Conservative candidate, who is now the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen), said that it would not be on the basis of two-to-one, or $16 million, but that it would be on the basis of three-to-one, or $24 million.

A lot of time has passed and there has been no pay-out. The farmers should have received money in September, but they did not. They should have received money in October, but they did not. As yet, the farmers have not received the money in November. Where is that money? Why is there not a pay-out? The farmers are waiting. They are telephoning our offices to ask where is that money and what has happened to the promise which was made by the Conservative Party. The farmers were flooded out last May and June, now they are being frozen out by the Conservative Party.

PORNOGRAPHY

PRESSURE FOR INCREASED PENALTIES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the last few weeks I have received a fair amount of mail from constituents concerning pornography and the necessity of passing meaningful legislation to help stamp out this cancer from our society. It is my opinion that we will never deal seriously with pornography until we have substantial fines and other penalties, such as loss of licence for those who profit from this scourge.

Recently there have been new initiatives to fight pornography in the United States. This is certainly welcome in Canada. A crack-down on pornography in the U.S. will have a positive reaction here, as the United States is the chief source of our pornography.

In the United States, increasing fines to a $100,000 possible maximum for a first offence and $200,000 for a subsequent offence will, I believe, take the profits out of this industry, and industry is what pornography is all about. In Canada, by comparison, the fines in recent cases have been at the level of a few hundred dollars—not enough to be a deterrent.

In the United States, federal and state authorities are working together to get offenders more speedily to court. This is not happening in Canada.

Some of us who were here in the last Parliament pressed the former Government, without success, to deal with pornographers more swiftly and with greater clout, by having amendments passed to the Broadcasting Act and to the obscenity provisions of the Criminal Code. It is my hope that the Government will soon bring the proposed changes before Parliament. I feel confident that, if appropriate legislation is brought forth, it will result in swift passage and will be supported by all Members of the House.

DISARMAMENT

ARMS VERIFICATION CONTROL TECHNIQUES—CANADIAN ROLE

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the announcement that the United States and the Soviet Union will meet in January to negotiate an agenda for talks on limiting nuclear arms gives Canada an opportunity for leadership in the cause of arms reduction.

In view of the American announced willingness to discuss all issues, Canada has an opportunity to recommend that items of special concern to this country be on the agenda. One should be to strengthen existing non-proliferation agreements. A second should be the reaching of a comprehensive test ban treaty. More important still should be an agreement on mutually verifiable reductions of nuclear weapons. Most significant in the long run should be a pre-emptive ban on satellite and anti-satellite weapons in high altitude orbits.

To show our commitment as a country, Canada should continue its current reasearch on arms control verification techniques and make no expenditure reductions in this area.

In view of the disappointing history of previous arms control talks, Canada can contribute to the potential success of these discussions by calling now on both superpowers to commit themselves to continue the negotiations until adequate agreements have been made.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FAMINE AND OTHER TRAGEDIES

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as we are all aware, the eyes of the world are focused on the tremendous tragedy that has evolved in Ethiopia and other parts of Africa.

As someone who spent a number of years living and working in East and Central Africa, I can testify to the unfortunate conditions that the vast majority of African peoples live with on a daily basis.

The contributions that Canada is making to assist the victims of the current crisis are remarkable. The people of my riding have also been extremely generous with cash donations, time, and services.

I ask the Government, however, not to lose sight of the many other human tragedies, acts of indiscriminate violence, and powerful discrimination in the world today. In particular, I refer to the murder and suppression of the Tamil people of Jaffra in Sri Lanka, and the untold horror which has taken place in recent months in the Hindu-Sikh conflict in Punjab state and other parts of India.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

TREATMENT OF OLDER WORKERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There is a growing concern in the country with respect to plans of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to crack down on older workers.

The Minister knows that many older workers, male as well as female, do not have the physical capacity to accept any job which is offered to them. Many of them have spent their entire lives in certain skills and trades and it is difficult at a later age to transfer into a new type of work. Many older workers have spent the greater period of their lives in one community and find it difficult to relocate.

This Party is in favour of cracking down on abuses but, in doing so, it is important to consider the special situation of these older workers. Would the Minister assure us that she will bring the considerations I have mentioned relating to older workers to the attention of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and ensure that it will deal with older workers in a humane and compassionate nature under any new initiatives?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. The Hon. Member is right to be concerned about older workers. Too often their plight has been ignored. Programs have been developed for one group within society too often at the expense of others. I give the Hon. Member assurance that this Government is working on programs and new approaches which will be able to help workers who, too often, have crashed into the future of the new work world and have had no resources to help them.

EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING DIFFICULTIES FACED BY OLDER WORKERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Recently, the Minister indicated that she was prepared to hold consultations with the provinces, business and labour concerning these new employment and training programs, and referred especially to youth related problems. Could the Minister assure the House now that during these consultations special consideration will be given also to the employment and training problems of older workers?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker I have already held meetings with representatives of both business and labour and I can assure the hon. Member that the issue of older people and workers is quite important to us.

APPLICATION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in the spring of 1985, Section 15, the equality section in the Charter of Rights, will come into effect. That Section, first of all, outlaws discrimination on the basis of age, among other things. It also provides for affirmative action programs. Would the Minister assure us that, in re-examining the laws and programs of her Department, the provisions of the Charter dealing with discrimination against the aged will be respected? And would the Minister consult with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Labour, and other Ministers who are concerned with this problem, so that there will be fairness in the marketplace for our older workers?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Hon. Member that a cabinet committee under the direction of the Minister of Justice has already begun to meet on those very critical issues. I can assure the Hon. Member, as can other hon. members of this Cabinet, that the lot of older workers will not be overlooked or ignored. The matter is very critical.

1985 ENTRY LEVELS—REUNIFICATION OF FAMILIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On November 21, when the Minister reduced the ceiling on immigration levels for 1985, she claimed in this House that family reunification would not be affected. I hope the Minister now realizes that this is only partly true and that the ceiling does include the vast majority of relatives, that is, older children, married children, nephews, and nieces. Would the Minister, in this time of economic recovery, recognize that immigrants to contribute to a recovery? They create jobs, they are willing workers, and are consumers and customers in the Canadian market. Will the Minister stop punishing families and raise the level to at least 100,000, as my caucus has been urging?

● (1120)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the Hon. Member, having been in Cabinet, would have known how the immigration levels were arrived at and that there is no ceiling on family reunification. He should know that. He should know that anyone who qualifies under the family reunification section of the Immigration Act is a top priority. He should also recognize that the Government that put restrictions on brothers and sisters, and other relatives, was the Government of which he was a member.

Mr. Kaplan: I hope the Minister recognizes that different considerations should apply to setting levels in times of economic recovery as opposed to the past few years of recession. All Members of Parliament have cases in their offices where the ceilings do apply and where we are talking about relatives, brothers, sisters, older children, married children—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Member have a supplementary question, please?

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister admitted in the House that she was having further studies done, will she, while waiting for these studies, at least ease up and not make it more difficult for the reunification of family members?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Hon. Member and the Government of which he was a part did in the past, but I can tell him that this Government will take a very humane, and very fair, and very compassionate approach to the question of immigration. One of the reasons why we are not going with the three-year projections that the former Government announced is that we want to see a review of the Immigration Act and immigration levels, so that the very problems he raises can be addressed. I look forward to his co-operation in this effort.

CONTENT OF GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and concerns the guidelines adopted yesterday by Cabinet on government communication with the public. These guidelines effectively make a mockery of the Government's commitment to openness and accountability. For the first time ever, these guidelines put a gag on public servants in their dealings not just with the media but with Members of Parliament as well.

How can the Prime Minister possibly justify this Draconian new rule which bars all off-the-record, background briefings, even on factual information, not just for the media but for Members of Parliament as well? How can he justify this massive denial of information to the media and Members of Parliament?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that we are not going to do what the Hon. Member says. His statement is silly, inaccurate, and he knows it. The reason he knows it is that he was at my press conference this morning.

The fact of the matter is that we have released guidelines which are designed to provide access to information in every reasonable circumstance consistent with our obligation to try to present government policy first of all in the House of Commons. It is intended to open doors to the media and Members of the House of Commons. It is designed, as well, to ensure that public servants who are called upon to comment on government policy are allowed to do so on the record, and in full freedom. It is designed to open the doors and windows of secrecy which have existed here for 20 years.

• (1125)

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister should read his own guidelines which are effectively designed to ensure that one message, and one message alone, goes out from the Government and that is the one which the Prime Minister and his Deputy approve.

OFF-RECORD, BACKGROUND BRIEFINGS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister not confirm that, pursuant to Guideline No. 2 with respect to off-the-record background briefings, although these briefings were permitted up to the present time, they are not to be permitted in the future, either with the media or with the respect to Members of Parliament who are defined as members of the public in paragraph 1? Why on earth is it that Members of Parliament are being denied the basic right to off-the-record briefings with public servants who work on behalf of the people of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that they are not. There are guidelines, but we circularized as well, this morning, a letter that I sent to Deputy Ministers and Ministers. As I indicated at the press conference, it is to be read concurrent with the provisions of the guidelines. On page 3 of the letter it states: "The guidelines also stress that all contacts with the media by public servants should be made in an open on-the-record basis. Off-the-record background briefings will be permitted in exceptional circumstances and must have prior ministerial approval."

That is entirely appropriate because it is entirely consistent with the oath of office of a public servant. The oath of office of a public servant is to make available information and to explain public government policy, not to criticize or defend it. That is the commitment of a public servant.

We want to ensure that the integrity and non-political dimension of the Public Service be retained at all times. We believe in the integrity and independence of the Public Service. That is why we are establishing what we believe are fair parameters which place them——beyond criticism or suspicion.

[English]

We are trying to take them away from partisan criticism so that they can feel free to speak on the record so that the Canadian people can feel comfortable with them.

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—REQUEST THAT IMPACT STUDIES BE RELEASED

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister makes the Secretary of State for External Affairs look like the Apostle of Light.

In view of the Prime Minister's alleged commitment to openness in government, will he in fact confirm that background studies have been completed with respect to the impact on ordinary Canadians of the budgetary statement, the increases in sales tax and so on? In this spirit of openness and accountability to the public, will the Prime Minister not agree to table and make public the statements of the devastating impact that these financial cuts and increases in taxes will have on the people of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State is not only an Apostle of Light, he is one of reason, thoughtfulness, and concern for the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: He is an outstanding Secretary of State for External Affairs as the Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount said, quite properly, this morning. I agree with what he said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: All information with regard to the economic program, which has received wide approval—

Mr. Berger: What is this, a mutual admiration society?

Mr. Mulroney: What is wrong with that? The NDP have been holding hands with you fellows behind the curtains long enough. It is time they were nice to us.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the Prime Minister would like to complete his answer.

Mr. Mulroney: Consistent with the guidelines and our philosophy, the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board set out various reductions in public expenditures first in the House of Commons. I hope they were detailed to your satisfaction. Ministers and governmental officers were made available to respond to any further inquiries you had.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Multiculturalism. Throughout, and immediately following the election, he promised that a formal apology to the Japanese-Canadian community would be forthcoming. He also favoured the establishment of a committee to examine redress. When will this apology be forthcoming? When will he establish and define the terms of reference, as well as the membership from the community and from Parliament, on this committee?

• (1130)

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the apology to the Japanese Canadian community is certainly uppermost in my mind and that of the Government. What happened to those Canadians during and after World War II is and was unforgettable and unforgiveable. The Government is determined to make changes in light of the grave injustices that took place. Hopefully there will be an announcement in the not too distant future.

DISCUSSIONS WITH JAPANESE CANADIAN COMMUNITY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my grave concern is that there is no consultation with the Janapese Canadian community. In that respect will the Minister confirm that he has unilaterally proposed to Cabinet a chair for Japanese Canadian studies as compensation and, if so, will he immediately stop that proposal and first consult the Japanese Canadian community?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Hon. Member that his information is incorrect. That is not the case in terms of the chair for Japanese Canadian studies. There have been ongoing discussions with the Japanese Canadian community. My staff and I have met with them. I will be meeting with them this weekend.

The President of the Japanese Canadian Community is a good friend of mine. He lives in the City of Winnipeg. We have good relations, and we intend to keep them that way.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INFORMATION ACCESS—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given the new guidelines, is he now prepared to apologize both to the diplomatic corps and the journalists whom he maligned in recent statements, and in the guidelines that he set out within the last week, for what I consider to be his somewhat intemperate and certainly impudent lack of respect for their good judgment?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would not question the Hon. Member's status as an authority on impudence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I will take no such action, because no one was so maligned.

Mr. Deans: I studied impudence by watching the former Prime Minister who once thought that he had a majority.

GUIDELINES APPLICABLE TO DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, given the guidelines that were set out today, how does the Secretary of State anticipate that senior diplomatic officials abroad will be able to carry on their day-to-day functions which, out of necessity, require that they discuss not only the policy that is now in place but also how they anticipate policy will be developed? The guidelines set out today state quite clearly that public servants shall not speculate about policy deliberation or future policy discussion. How can they exercise their function abroad, given these guidelines?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that has been in the guidelines of Canada for at least the last five years.

Mr. Deans: That is true, but they were never forced in this way.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Canadian representatives abroad have been able to carry out their responsibilities with effectiveness in the past, as they will be in the future.

MERCHANT MARINE

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

The people in my constituency and many others are eager to learn the intentions of the government with respect to the progressive establishment of a merchant marine in Canada.

I know that the matter was referred to a committee set up last May. If the government would rather wait for the report of that committee, will it,in the meantime, at least make a policy statement which would be a step towards a real maritime policy in Canada, especially concerning coasting vessels and those sailing under a convenience flag?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, a committee on the merchant marine was indeed set up last year. Its terms of reference were extended to April 1985. We will of course wait for its recommendations before considering any future policy. I think that we will then evaluate the conclusions of the report and act accordingly.

REASON FOR TERMINATING INDUSTRIAL MANPOWER TRAINING PROGRAM

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

She has just cancelled the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Program, which provided financial assistance to employers willing to meet the training needs of their employees. Nothing is more important during this critical period, especially for young people and women. I would therefore like to know why the Minister chose to cancel this program, on what criteria she based her decision, and even more difficult to understand perhaps, why she decided at the same time to cancel the Summer Youth Employment Program.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I may say that an analysis of that program showed that it was not working effectively. I wish the former Government had taken a hard look at it. It was not working effectively because it was not leading to permanent jobs. Too often it was offering short term subsidies only to businesses, and was not reaching its desired goals. Therefore, we have undertaken a whole new approach to training which will lead from school, to work, and into permanent jobs. Let me also say that one of my concerns about that training program was that fewer than 25 per cent of the training places were allocated to women.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, that is good rhetoric when we talk of permanent jobs, but one program about which I asked the Minister was the summer program for students. During this critical period students depend upon summer employment to finance their educational costs. This program is being terminated—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Johnston: —with no replacement. Why did she do that?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question came after I rose. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to put his question now.

Mr. Johnston: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I missed that.

Mr. Speaker: I rose because the Member was making a long preamble before his supplementary question, which he knows is not our practice. Perhaps he would now repeat his question.

Mr. Johnston: My question is: why was this Summer Canada Program terminated so abruptly?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Hon. Member has not been in the House when this question has been raised on a number of other occasions.

Mr. Gauthier: We never got an answer.

Miss MacDonald: I will tell him and other Members that we have allocated $1 billion for new job opportunities and training programs.

Mr. Johnston: Summer programs?

Miss MacDonald: I can assure him that there will be summer job opportunities for young people in place in time for next summer.

IMPLEMENTATION OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Prime Minister, concerns consultation. The Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance have said that they intend to consult with the rich before moving with any kind of a minimum tax. Would he comment on the double standard that is being applied here? Why is there not consultation with those groups that have now gone public to say they want to know and be involved in the kinds of slashes that will be applied to the CBC before the process of program cuts in the CBC proceeds?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is endemic to the NDP personality, but I do not know why he would make inaccurate statements by way of prefatory remarks. At no time did I say we were going to consult with the rich; I said very clearly that we were going to introduce a minimum tax in the tax system to assure fairness for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The President of the CBC is quite properly responsible not only for the running of the CBC but to make determinations as to where cut-backs could most properly be made. He is conscious of the wish of the Government that they be least hurtful in regard to individuals, and he is conducting himself in that spirit, as he always does.

When he and his colleagues have decided, pursuant to their consultations across the country, where they believe these decisions can be made in the best interest of the CBC, he will be advising the Government and we shall impart that information to you.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the day before yesterday the Minister of Finance, whom, I assume, the Prime Minister supports, told The Globe and Mail that the tax will not be imposed without the Government first hearing from those who would be affected. That seems to me to mean that the rich will be contacted in some way for some kind of consultation before the tax is introduced.

• (1140)

Mr. Speaker: Can I be absolutely clear to the Member? I have already cut off one Member for trying to use a long preamble prior to a supplementary question. If the Member persists in a preamble this time, he will not be recognized for a supplementary question. The Member for Skeena.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is in terms of consultation. Would the Prime Minister explain to this House why, in terms of the environment cuts, there was no consultation whatsoever with environmental groups who have roundly, soundly, and properly condemned those cuts as being the most inappropriate that could possibly occur in the environment field?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, even though we are fundamentally committed to the process of consultation I do not claim perfection in that area or any others inasmuch as, and I think the Hon. Member will agree, it was proper that Parliament receive the first advice, on the floor of the House, of the intention of the Government. Within those constraints and because of that requirement, we were, prior to the filing of the documents here in the House, somewhat limited in the extent to which the consultative process could be on-going. I want to assure the Hon. Member that if there are deficiencies, as I am sure there are in our consultative process, this in no way diminished the genuine commitment that we have to involve all sectors of society in the evolution of governmental policy.

LIFTBRIDGE MALFUNCTION AT VALLEYFIELD, P.Q.—MEASURES TO BE TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Transport). He is certainly aware of the situation involving the bridge over the St. Lawrence Seaway near Valleyfield. The mobile section of this liftbridge is now locked at midlevel, with the result that both highway and maritime traffic will be paralysed for at least two weeks at a time of the year when shipping is at a critical stage. Can the Minister tell the House whether he intends to take immediate action to prevent a recurrence of such an incident?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, we are indeed aware of the incident involving the Valleyfield bridge. This incident causes the bridge to be too high for road vehicles to travel on and too low for maritime traffic to go under. We took the necessary action to correct the situation immediately, but the information received suggests that it will be at least two weeks before the situation is back to normal. We are perfectly aware of the consequences for shipping on the Seaway. However, it is impossible to act more quickly. As for future policies in this regard, we shall have to look into the matter.

BILINGUALISM

STANDING COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS—MOTION TO TABLE UNILINGUAL DOCUMENTS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my honourable friend, the Government House Leader.

Earlier this week, the Leader of the Official Opposition questioned the Deputy Prime Minister and brought to light the conspicuous absence of French-speaking members on the powerful committee advising the Government on budget cuts. The Deputy Prime Minister recognized his error, saying it was an honest error, and on this side we trusted him. Now, Mr. Speaker, for the second time in the same week, there was another honest error committed against French-speaking citizens and their rights in this country . . .

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I am stating the facts, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday, during the setting up of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources put forward a shameful motion to allow on grounds of efficiency the tabling of unilingual documents in that committee. Can the Minister indicate whether this is a new Government policy aimed at retroducing unilingualism through the back door in the House of Commons committees? I put this question to him particularly in his capacity as High Commissar in charge of committee organization.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): The answer to that question is no, Mr. Speaker.

RESEARCH

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS AFFECTING TOXICOLOGICAL AND ENVIRONMENTAL RESEARCH

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the question put by the Hon. Member for Skeena to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

In his answer, the Prime Minister seemed to indicate that because of parliamentary constraints, he may not have been able to make all the necessary consultations on cut-backs concerning the National Research Council, and more specifically, its toxicological and environmental research.

Would the Prime Minister be willing to allow a committee of this House to meet with officials of the National Research Council and see whether there is a more effective way to implement these cuts?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend has any suggestions as to which approach would be most effective, we would be pleased to hear them.

The Minister and his colleagues proceeded with the budgetary cut-backs in close co-operation with the scientific community, believing, and I think rightly so, that it was the best they could do in the circumstances.

I am sure we can learn more on the subject from the Hon. Member and other colleagues, and we are prepared to listen and to take note of any information you may have received from the scientific community.

However, we do feel that the cuts were done properly and objectively.

CHURCHILL ROCKET RANGE—MEMBERS' APPROACH TO DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday I asked a question of the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In his answer to me with regard to the Churchill rocket range and the Gimli testing site, he said that the closing down would be phased in over three years. In talking with departmental officials I found out that the Minister was wrong and that the shut-down will occur on March 31, 1985.

Mr. Deans: And he had permission to do it.

Mr. Murphy: Under the Prime Minister's new guidelines, would it be possible for me to find out from the departmental officials when the Minister is indeed wrong?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite capable of making that determination because, according to the Member's honourable tradition, the Minister is never right.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: In point of fact nothing in the guidelines precludes honest and open communication between a Member of Parliament and a member of the Public Service. They encourage it. We invite the Hon. Member, as indeed we all have the privilege and the right to do, to communicate with public servants in that area. I want to assure the Hon. Member that I view his observation seriously and nothing should be read into these guidelines—because it does not exist—that would do anything other than try to be helpful to the free and proper flow of information.

Mr. Deans: The free flow of proper information.

APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES TO DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's guideline No. 2 says that off-the-record statements can only be given in exceptional circumstances with the Minister's prior approval. In this case the Minister did not approve. I went directly to the source and found out—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, under the new guidelines would departmental officials be able to come to Members of Parliament and say: "No, my Minister is wrong"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the guidelines, I think, I hope anyway, properly cover it. If the Hon. Member refers to paragraph two it reads:

> Public servants should be prepared to openly provide factual information to the public and the media within their areas of responsibility that describes or explains programs and policies that have been announced or implemented by the Government.

Indeed, we invite the public servants, in the interests of openness and to avoid unfair accusations against the Public Service which would affect their integrity, consistent with the spirit of openness we believe they should be on the record. We encourage them to be on the record and to be identified, without any fear of reprisal of any kind. We think this is part of an important new step toward openness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Even Ministers are afraid to say something in fear they will be cut down.

THE CENSUS

ESTABLISHMENT OF AFFIRMATIVE ACTION PROGRAM—ACQUISITION OF NECESSARY DATA WITHOUT HOLDING 1986 CENSUS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Supply and Services, I will direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Answering my question last Wednesday, the Minister said that Statistics Canada will be in a position to gather the data required for the establishment of an affirmative action program, without the 1986 census. Considering that an internal Statistics Canada report, which I have here, indicates that the census is the only source of detailed information on professions in the labour force, how can the Prime Minister explain this obvious contradiction?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not have an opportunity to read the full report, part of which was published in an Ottawa newspaper this morning. But I can say that government officials have given us the opposite advice, and it was on the basis of that advice that the Minister has made the decision of which you are aware. I will be pleased to take a closer look at the report and attempt to reconcile the facts; should there be a contradiction, the appropriate measures will be taken. However, we did receive objective advice to the effect that we could proceed this way without undue concern.

AUTHOR OF OBJECTIVE ADVICE RELATING TO CENSUS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the Prime Minister tell me and the House who gave him that objective advice, because all the information we have had so far from all interested parties in government, in the public at large, in social groups and in industry is the exact opposite?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The committee of Deputy Ministers which had been established on the basis of our analysis; a fair amount of the data referred to this morning can be found in monthly reports of the Department of Labour. Other data is available elsewhere on a monthly basis. The collation of this data is an important responsibility of the Minister and some of his Cabinet colleagues. I should think that the Deputy Ministers did consider those facts before providing us with the data in question. I can assure my colleague that I will again look into this matter and discuss it with the Minister who will certainly get back to the Hon. Member.

FLOOD DAMAGE COMPENSATION FOR FARMERS IN NORTHEASTERN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, during their unsuccessful invasion of Prince Albert the Conservatives promised that they would relieve all of the farmers' financial problems. My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Last week the Minister of Agriculture indicated that the request for aid to the disaster-ridden farms of northeastern Saskatchewan was before the Treasury Board. Since his Government and the Hon. Member for MacKenzie have promised this aid, will the Minister tell the House the present status of that proposal? Will he confirm that the amount to be paid will be $16 million, which is what the legislative level would be in provincial pay-outs of that kind?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond again to that question. It was put to me last week, at which time I indicated that I had been to western Canada. I discussed the matter with my provincial counterparts, particularly with the Minister in Saskatchewan. I indicated in my response last week that we had prepared a submission and that it had gone to Treasury Board. When I met with my provincial counterparts, we agreed that perhaps we should enter that project on a 50/50 cost sharing basis. The minister from Saskatchewan agreed. That is exactly where we are at the moment.

Mr. Hovdebo: The promise was three to one.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

PAYMENTS MADE TO FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. When can we expect payments from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, which should have been made already? Also, when can we expect a change in the formula which would allow further payments from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. If he goes home this weekend he will find that the cheques for the final payment are in the mail. They were put in the mail on Wednesday. I am sure that some of his neighbours will have them by the time he gets home.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: This leads me to address the concern that all of us have over providing enough financing for farmers to get their crops in the ground next spring. We intend to do everything we can to have an interim payment in their hands prior to next spring. We will not be fooling around like the previous Minister did. We will get some action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNITED STATES SULPHUR EMISSIONS—CHEMICAL POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment or whomever wishes to reply in her place. It has to do with a meeting that is to take place in a very short time with her U.S. counterpart, William Ruckelshaus, the head of the Environmental Protection Agency. What arguments will be used by the Government to convince the U.S. administration of the necessity of cutting millions of tonnes of sulphur that are being dumped by the Americans on Canadian lakes and forests? Also, what arguments will be used to persuade him to take immediate action to halt the flow of chemicals into the Niagara River and Lake Ontario?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank the former Minister very much for his question. I assure him that the Minister has had discussions regarding this very important question. I am pleased to take his very specific question to the Minister for her response on her return to the House.

DISARMAMENT

ARMS CONTROL VERIFICATION TECHNIQUES—CANADIAN ROLE

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the Canadian people's hopes for limiting nuclear weapons being raised by the announcement that the United States and the Soviet Union will return to the bargaining table, and in view of repeated disappointments over the years with previous arms control talks, will the Minister consider calling on both superpowers to commit themselves to continue their negotiations until adequate agreements have been reached and, to show Canada's good faith, will the Minister assure the House that the Government does not plan to reduce its current expenditures on researching arms control verification techniques?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can give the assurance that the Government of Canada intends no reduction in our current level of expenditures on arms control verification techniques. I welcome this opportunity, and I am sure all Members of the House of Commons join with me in urging both superpowers to pursue the discussions and negotiations, which have been so recently renewed, relentlessly and with the knowledge that the people of this country and the people of the world are waiting and looking for some break in the deadly buildup of armaments on both sides.

MEDICAL CARE

GOVERNMENT'S FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO PROVINCES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Canadian Health Coalition is meeting this weekend regarding health concerns in Canada, will the Minister guarantee that federal financing to the provinces for health care will not be chopped by his Conservative Government?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I assure the Hon. Member that this Government, and the Prime Minister has stated this many times, views health care as a program that is not only a sacred trust but one that we will maintain. It is a universal program. We have no intention to follow the suggestion made by the Hon. Member in her question.

PREVENTATIVE COMMUNITY HEALTH DELIVERY SYSTEM PROPOSAL

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, what initiatives will the Minister take to begin to move into a preventative community health delivery system for health care, which would be far more cost effective in the long run?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct in putting forward that proposal. There are many areas that we can work on jointly. There have been reports in recent days in terms of tobacco and its effects both on smokers, and secondary smoking, the question of alcoholism, and the question of fitness. Obviously the long term preventative health care benefits are a great quality of life and a return in terms of the Treasury, short term or not, in terms of financial aspects. I welcome the Member's encouragement. We are obviously moving in that area as quickly as we can.

INSTALLATION OF CABLE TELEVISION AT MATSQUI PRISON, B.C.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Government House Leader, who is answering on behalf of the Solicitor General today. While the unemployed see the world coloured in grey, the inmates at Matsqui prison will see it in living colour because the Government is installing cablevision there. Is this an expenditure that was allocated by the previous Government, or is it a more recent one? If the country is supposed to face cut-backs fairly across the land, would it not be good to include this as an element of fairness?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, this installation took place before the last election. There is a provision, though, with respect to the installation of cable into the prison whereby the inmates will pay for their own television sets and bear part of the cost of this installation.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's occurrences in the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, to which I referred earlier during the oral question period, were a breach of my rights and privileges as a Member of this House.

Mr. Speaker: I have a bit of a problem here, because the Hon. Member is now referring to something that happened yesterday in committee. No, no, no. He referred to it during the oral question period, I agree, but he was referring to something that occurred yesterday. I assume the Hon. Member is aware he is entitled to give me notice of a question of privilege, but I must be given one hour's notice, and I think the question of privilege he is raising now does not arise from events that occurred during the oral question period.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I shall do as you suggest. In any case, you now have been advised verbally of my intentions. I will make sure you are sent notice in writing, and I reserve the right to raise a question of privilege on Monday.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—FINANCIAL NEEDS OF CANADIAN FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre) moved:

That this House urges the Government to take immediate action to address the financial needs of Canada's farmers by immediately:

(1) declaring a moratorium on bankruptcy and foreclosure proceedings;

(2) establishing a debt review agency to act as a neutral third party between borrower and lender with power to change repayment schedules and to reduce the accumulated interest; and

(3) setting out a clear mandate for the Farm Credit Corporation in order that it can make viable, low-interest loans through Agribonds or other means for farmers, including such financing for operating credit over the first five years of the loan, and further, that a farm incomes policy based upon a guarantee of production costs for domestically used farm products be implemented to provide parity pricing for Canada's farmers.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Opposition motion that has been put today. Our motion recognizes the extreme hardship in which Canadian farmers have been placed over the last several years.

This is not a situation that has suddenly faced us. It has taken years for this situation to develop. It has taken years of neglect by the public sector and, I suspect, years of neglect by the consumers of Canada as well. At any rate, right now in November, 1984 we are faced with a situation in which one in five of the viable farms of this country is facing severe financial hardship. For most of these farms, the situation will end in either bankruptcy or foreclosure.

The information that we have now departs radically from the information that we were being fed through official sources during the past year. A year ago the banks pooh-poohed the circumstances of Canada's farmers. Bankers said: "Oh, it is not so bad as all that. Perhaps only 5 per cent of farmers are in trouble". Even the then Minister of Agriculture suggested that perhaps the banks' estimate was just a bit low.

We now have a report prepared by the Farm Credit Corporation which did a fairly thorough survey of farms. The Farm Credit Corporation reports that in fact a total of some 39,000 or almost one in five farmers are indeed in severe financial distress. The report defines that by pointing out that a farmer is in severe financial distress when interest payments exceed 40 per cent of a farmer's total sales revenue or when the net worth of the farm is less than 15 per cent of its total assets.

That criterion is not particular stringent, Mr. Speaker. I am sure a great many farmers whose interest payments exceed 30 per cent of their total sales revenues are also having great difficulty surviving and I am sure that farmers whose net worth is 20 per cent or 30 per cent of their total assets are also facing great difficulty. However, using that criteria, the Farm Credit Corporation has arrived at a figure of nearly 20 per cent of farmers who are in difficulty.

As of October, there were 465 official farm bankruptcies. That is up almost 20 per cent from the same period last year. More important, the total debt load of farmers continues to increase. It is now in excess of $21 billion, an increase of $1 billion over last year. In addition to that, the assets farmers have to place against that debt load have been reduced by $4 billion, indicating that machinery is depreciating and not being replaced but mostly indicating that land values are going down in response to the economic realities facing farmers.

I have been raising this question in the House for the last four years, ever since I became a member of the House of Commons. I must repeat again something I have repeated many times in this House because there has been no change in the situation. In 1974, 10 years ago, the net income of Canadian farmers was $3.5 billion. This year, in spite of inflation and in spite of the fact that the cost of running a farm has gone up by more than three times, we are looking at an expected net farm income of $3.4 billion. While the rest of the economy has been able to keep up with inflation to some extent by keeping incomes in line with costs, farm net income has taken a real cut of 300 per cent. Farmers have one-third the net income they had in 1974. No wonder farmers are in great difficulty.

I submit that knowing that, Hon. Members must take quick and immediate action. For that reason, we have proposed for debate and I hope for the serious consideration of Government members today the immediate declaration of a moratorium on bankruptcy and foreclosure proceedings. There should be a moratorium on not only those proceedings that are under review by the Farm Credit Corporation. The Minister has already placed a moratorium on those few hundred bankruptcies until January 15, 1985. After that point in time there is no clear indication from the Government where those particular farmers will go. The Government will have seen them through Christmas and have avoided the embarrassment of pushing farmers off their farms during the Christmas season. However, there is no indication what the Government is proposing to do after January 15.

We feel it is time for the Government to take immediate action and establish the debt review board, which was often mentioned during the election campaign. The Government should establish the debt review board to act as a mutual third party between borrowers and lenders. The Bank Act, which was passed in 1981-82 with the concurrence of both the Liberal and the Conservative Parties, no longer gave consideration to farmers. Banks decide when a bankruptcy should occur. The banks place the receivers into position. In effect, the receivers are working for the banks. Therefore, farmers feel that there is no recourse. There is no third party in the process, which is mutual. The farmer is always short-changed.

To begin with, farmers do not have enough money. They cannot afford to hire a lawyer—if a lawyer can be found who will act against the banks. In addition, lawyers could not be certain of payment and are therefore loath to take on such cases. It is clear discrimination, which has placed great pressure on farmers and their families. I think it is time that we recognized the pressure which has been placed on the people in rural areas.

The people who are isolated are the farm wives. They are the partners in the farms. In many cases they have no one to talk to other than their husbands. Over the last four or five years, some of them have recognized the great pressure which they and their families are under. Some of them have set up network groups which have become prominent in various parts of Canada. There is a group in Prince Edward Island, one in eastern Ontario and another in the Grey-Bruce area. In addition, some have developed on the Prairies. The National Farmers Union has a special women's group which has looked into these problems over the last number of years.

The problems which emanate from the financial pressures show themselves in several ways—many of which are predictable. Those pressures often result in drinking and family squabbles which may involve the beating of spouses and children. There is no place for these people to turn for help. Often the pressures result in murder and suicide.

The amount of income available to farm families has been reduced from the 1974 period, when over 40 per cent of the sales which the farm made resulted in net income. At the current time, approximately 15 per cent of total sales may result in net income. There is great pressure to produce more and to sell more. Meanwhile, the costs have increased three to four times since 1974. Essentially, farm families are being asked to live on the same income which they had ten years ago.

This situation is not forced on any other group, yet the Government and the provinces—because the provinces have some jurisdiction in this area—have not taken proper account of the terrible pressures under which we have placed these people.

As the resolution indicates, immediate action must be taken to put in place a moratorium which will provide a third party to review cases in order that they can be dealt with clearly and fairly. There must also be a clear mandate given to the Farm Credit Corporation, hopefully before January 15, in order for it to be able to handle these cases and provide the means to set out repayment schedules that will make it possible for farmers to remain in business. Otherwise, Canada will lose 20 per cent of its rural population over the next year and we will no longer have viable organizations in rural Canada.

This resolution also calls for the Government to set out immediately to attack the whole farm incomes problem by implementing a system of guarantees for production costs on domestically-used farm products. Steps have been taken in this regard with several products. Eight or ten years ago guarantees were implemented for dairy farmers. Dairy farmers receive a guarantee on the cost of production of an efficient unit for their milk and the milk that goes into other dairy products. A similar arrangement has been established for products which are included in national marketing plans with supply management. Egg producers receive a guarantee on their basic production costs as part of their pricing formula.

Poultry producers, who produce broilers or turkeys, also have a similar set of guidelines and rules for establishing their prices. However, for the remainder of the commodities produced in rural Canada, the market has produced very low returns for farm families.

The inadequacies of the market indicate that immediate stabilization programs are required to recognize the cost of production as a base for the pay-outs, rather than an inadequate market, which is the current method of deciding whether pay-outs under stabilization should be made. There must be either a change to the stabilization programs or a change in the marketing systems to ensure that producers will be guaranteed the full cost of production for the products which will be sold.

I have outlined the resolution quite briefly and succintly. I could spend all afternoon discussing the way this situation has been affecting farmers and their families. However, I will only mention one very typical case. There are many more cases listed in the Farm Credit Corporation's study which are very similar to this case.

This case is not as emotionally telling as some, because the young farmer involved is not married and has no dependants. However, it will give an idea of the kind of pressures that have been created and the kind of giving that has occurred in farm families. In this particular case, the parents provided a security of a half section of land for their son, along with $130,000 to enable him to buy additional land. The irony is that he had the assistance of an agriculturalist from one of the banks helping him set up his operation. They took the half section of land and the $130,000 and purchased nine quarter sections of land in northern Saskatchewan. It was agreed that he would pay approximately $75,000 twice a year as payment and interest. Why an agricultural specialist would make that recommendation I do not know. It is virtually impossible to generate those kinds of funds with that size of operation. However, the farmer and his parents were told that it was a viable operation.

Predictably, after having run the operation for two and a half years, and having paid this extra $400,000 to the bank, they are now losing everything. There goes a lifetime of work for the mother and father who have no retirement funds because their land and money were given as security in order to help their son. That family has now lost everything it had for two full generations. That is just one of the less unfortunate stories we could tell here.

Action must be taken immediately, Mr. Speaker. I urge the Government to declare a moratorium not just on Farm Credit Corporation cases which are in front of it, but an immediate moratorium on all bankruptcies and foreclosure proceedings until such time as an incomes policy can be brought forward which will ensure that farm families can survive in this country of ours. If something is not done, about 20 per cent of them will be forced into bankruptcy within the next year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), regarding the situation of farm women, having talked to a number of these women in my contacts with women's groups across the country. The Hon. Member referred particularly to the isolation of women who are living in rural areas and carrying a very heavy work load. I am told that with the increasing economic stress, it is not unusual for farm women not only to carry on the traditional role of wife and mother and help with the farm work in peak seasons, but to carry another load, either part-time or full-time work in town, in order to pay off debts or to provide cash flow during tough times.

Could the Hon. Member indicate whether or not this is becoming a fairly general situation? This is more evidence of the stress rural families face, particularly rural women. Could the Hon. Member also indicate whether there is any trend now to provide more financial recognition of the contribution of farm women? I am particularly thinking of the situation where farm women have an income as, perhaps, a member of a company, or an employee. Is there a trend towards splitting pensions as well?

Mr. Althouse: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can report that the number of farm wives who have off-the-farm jobs has always been fairly high and has increased substantially over the last number of years. I do not have accurate data in front of me but I do know that there is a statistically significant increase of off-the-farm jobs for farm women. This creates further pressure within the family.

It attempts to alleviate some of the financial pressure but it means that child care has become the responsibility of the family. Often times in rural areas there are no day care facilities available. It is quite common for pre-school children, in particular, to accompany their father around the farm as he does his farm work. They ride in tractors and occasionally get hung up in grain-moving or haying equipment. There are reports virtually every harvest season of children being killed or maimed in that type of equipment. This happens in part because one of their parents has to work off the farm and the remaining spouse is left to do the farm work and look after the children at the same time.

Facilities for day care in rural areas are virtually non-existent unless there is a grandmother or an in-law to help look after the children. In many cases, however, the financial situation has reached a point where most of these persons are putting their shoulder to the wheel as well, trying to keep the farm operation going by doing farm work.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, would my hon. colleague comment on one part of his motion, which is the reduction of accumulated interest and the change of payments. This accumulated interest appears to be a major problem. Does the Hon. Member have any comments as to what can be done?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I believe this is one of the key powers which a debt review agency must have when it sets itself up between the lender and the borrower. It must be able to extend the repayment schedule, but even that is not enough power. It must also be able to set aside some of the accumulated interest.

The reason most of these farmers are in financial difficulty generally goes back to the extremely high interest rates which existed in 1981 and 1982. Some of these people were paying 22 per cent to 24 per cent interest. That interest accumulated and they had to borrow in order to keep paying the interest on the interest. The banks, in my opinion, have been fairly adequately compensated with those interest rates. I feel that in the interests of keeping the Canadian agricultural economy going, a debt review agency should have the power to reduce some of that accumulated interest as part of the repayment scheduling which is set out as an answer for the particular problem with which it is dealing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): If there are no other questions and comments, we will move on to the next speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, it is customary and almost a tradition that in a debate of this kind, the Official Opposition is entitled to present its comments; the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) was ready. However, I understand that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has an important engagement this afternoon, and we agree to allowing the Minister to rise in the House before the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Thank you. The Hon. Minister of Agriculture.

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): I would like to express through you, Mr. Speaker, my appreciation for the co-operation given to me by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and, particularly, to my long time friend and acquaintance, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). Indeed, we are not setting a precedent. I acknowledge on the record that I am speaking second only through the kindness and courtesy of my colleagues across the floor. I appreciate their co-operation because it will allow me to keep my commitment to meet with some farm organizations later this afternoon.

I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) for bringing forth his motion today. It provides us with, I would say, one of those all too few occasions in the past, when we can discuss important issues in this Chamber and bring these problems to the attention of other areas across the country. I think we would all have to agree that, if past records were looked at, it would be found that the occasions were all too few when we could bring to the attention of the House, to the Government and, indeed, to the country, the serious problems which we face in the agri-food industry.

Having made those comments, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that as Minister of Agriculture I represent roughly some 318,000 of the most important businessmen and women in this country. These 318,000 persons make a significant contribution to the Canadian economy. They are Canada's 318,000 farmers.

Together our farmers form the basis of an agricultural industry that generates about one-sixth of all economic activity in Canada. It is a giant industry with a huge growth potential. It is also an industry with some very, very serious problems, the most serious of which is low and declining farm income. Out of 318,000 farmers it is estimated that a relatively small but very significant number, perhaps as high as 17 per cent, are experiencing serious financial problems. This fact, revealed in a recent survey by the Farm Credit Corporation, is distressing, particularly so because these financially troubled farmers tend to be younger operators. They are bright young people who started or expanded their operations during the optimistic 1970s. The FCC survey also showed that generally these farmers, the ones with low equity and a high debt burden, are among the most productive, indeed the most efficient, producers that we have. These people we will depend on for abundant supplies of food in the future. As a matter of public policy we cannot afford to lose tomorrow's farmers to today's high production costs.

The federal Government recently announced a number of steps to help strengthen the farm sector. First we have the three cents per litre fuel tax rebate for gasoline and diesel fuel purchased for off-farm highway use. In addition, a further rebate of 1.8 cents per litre will be given to offset the increase in the petroleum compensation charge. These rebates will put between $90 million and $100 million into the hands of Canadian farmers next year. This will help a great deal to lower farmers' production costs and improve their profit margins.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, Parliament will soon be considering several major agriculture taxation issues. Hopefully the Government will be able to act on the results of the parliamentary study for the next fiscal year. The third priority is the establishment of a new voluntary stabilization plan for red meat producers, a plan that would help the producers remove the peaks and valleys in their income and help them raise cattle with greater assurance of longer term profitability.

More important than all these initiatives is the Government's commitment to deal with the immediate financial difficulties of this nation's farmers. This has been the focus of most of my work since being reappointed as this country's Minister of Agriculture some two months ago, and it will continue to be at the top of my priorities in the coming weeks.

It was suggested by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre that the federal Government should declare a moratorium on bankruptcy and foreclosure proceedings. I am afraid he is a couple of weeks late with that suggestion because two weeks ago I instructed the FCC to suspend loan foreclosures until early next year. This action gives the Government time to take a closer look at the farmers' problems and, more importantly, decide what programs would offer reasonable solutions and be affordable at this time when our resources are extremely limited. To extend such a moratorium beyond the FCC so as to apply to all bankruptcies and foreclosures would require an Act of Parliament. Moreover, it could very well have the effect of jeopardizing the private farm lending market.

I remind the Hon. Member of the moratorium on farm bankruptcies more than 50 years ago during the great Depression. That action drove away virtually all private sources of farm financing and eventually resulted in the establishment of the FCC. It was not until the 1970s, some four decades later, that the banks again became active in long-term lending to farmers. Insurance companies, I might add, were so soured by this experience that they still have not returned to the farm financing market. That is a lesson we should not forget.

At the same time I point out that the Canadian banks deserve credit for their efforts to be accommodating in at least those cases where the lender believes there is a promise of good management to rebuild farm equity. The banks are not getting much publicity for these actions but every week private lenders are writing down farm loans, believe it or not, and some of us who are involved in cases between our constituents and the lending institutions will have to face that. Not everyone is cut out to be a farmer, Mr. Speaker. Nor can all farmers facing bankruptcy and foreclosure be saved. Let us face the facts. A farm is a business and must be able to compete. There are potentially good operators who just need some time to get on to firmer financial footing and there are others who will always keep sliding backwards.

I have met with the provincial Ministers of Agriculture to discuss the alternatives for helping those farmers who can be saved. On November 7 and November 8 we met in Toronto to review the report of the task force on farm finances. A number of proposals came out of that meeting and they include extending the FCC's special Farm Assistance Program to provide debt consolidation loans and interest reduction to farmers in difficulty; expanding the advance payments for crop legislation to areas beyond that covered by the Canadian Wheat Board; establishing a registered farm investment fund; extending the Small Business Bond Program to 1989; permitting farmers with bonds coming due to negotiate new bonds; and amending the Farm Improvement Loans Act to allow for fixed rates of interest on intermediate term credit. We discussed a number of proposals that would involve changes to the Farm Credit Act and we discussed ways of improving co-operation with our private lenders.

Although a number of other proposals were considered, the common thread running through all of our discussions was the need for co-operative action. The solution to the farm credit problem in Canada does not lie solely with the federal Government or the provinces or the lending institutions. We must all work together co-operatively to ensure the future of Canada's food supply.

During the election campaign a number of commitments were made to the farmers of this country and I have already discussed the action which has been taken on several of them. The 4.3 cents a litre rebate on farm fuels will offer Canadian farmers about $100 million next year in tax relief. We promised tax relief on farm fuels and indeed we have delivered. In the Minister of Finance's economic statement there was reference to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, the capital gains tax, and the subject of agri-bonds, all of which were referred to a parliamentary committee for study. It should be noted, however, that any changes to these tax measures will be retroactive to the 1984 tax year. Again, we are moving along on our commitments.

As well, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre has called for the establishment of a debt review agency. During the election campaign my colleagues and I recommended the establishment of a farm finances review board to act as a neutral third party between the borrower and lender. However, to establish such a review board legislation is required. I would also caution the Hon. Member that the establishment of a debt review board agency would have to be done carefully and responsibly. If not, we could run the risk, as in the case of the broad moratorium, of scaring private lenders out of the marketplace.

We have, Mr. Speaker, taken several other actions towards the fulfilment of our commitment to improve the financial situation of the Canadian farm community. My colleague, the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), has announced a final payment of $123 million under the Western Grain Stabilization Act, bringing the total payment for the 1983-84 crop year to $223 million. This payment was welcomed by western farmers and is a positive step towards relieving some of the financial pressures which they are experiencing.

We have announced assistance in the order of $60 million under the Canada-Alberta-Saskatchewan-Manitoba Prairie Livestock Drought Assistance Program. This federal-provincial program will help producers maintain their livestock herds in the face of serious drought problems experienced this year. By assisting the farmers in these areas to maintain their existing herds, we have made the coming years more secure for many farmers.

During the election campaign we promised to include tobacco in the National Farm Products Marketing Act to allow farmers in the tobacco industry a marketing board with supply management powers if they so choose. Yesterday I was happy to see that all Members of the House were co-operative in giving the Canadian tobacco producers that option. I hope that the Senate will act in the same manner.

Another commitment which we are fulfilling is the one made to the Ontario grape producers. In concert with the Province of Ontario we are working toward fulfilling the commitment to purchase Ontario grapes. During the election campaign we spoke of the need for fair and equitable treatment of all commodity groups across Canada. We pointed out that in the case of advance payments the previous government doubled payment levels for western grain but neglected commodities in the other parts of Canada. As I indicated earlier, we are moving through the normal channels to introduce amendments to the Advance Payments for Crops Program.

We have also recognized the deficiency of the Agricultural Stabilization Act and have recognized that tripartite stabilization offers the best opportunity for improvement. Again, we are moving ahead with that commitment and I hope soon to be able to bring this legislation forward. When I say soon, I mean within a matter of days.

With a $35 billion deficit hanging over our heads this year, it is important to recognize the fact that the manoeuvring room of the Government is severely limited. For this reason, it is incumbent on all of us, as responsible representatives of the Canadian public, to ensure that any expenditures are carefully weighed and considered. We are committed to developing fiscally responsible methods of assisting the agricultural community.

I have only touched on a number of the areas in which we have made significant progress in the very short time that I have been in office. With regard to some of the suggestions that were raised by my hon. friend, the Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre, I can assure him that in the very near future we will be in a position to make some very major and significant decisions as to what we can do with and without legislative authority and what we can do in the best interests of Canadian agriculture with the resources we have available to us.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is such a thoroughly nice and decent man that I can hardly get over his being so hard-hearted. There was a previous 1.8 cents a litre refund on farm fuel tax. The Minister's Government has raised that by another three cents which will be collected from the farmers. As I understood it, the Government is then going to pay rebates of $90 million to $100 million, unless the Minister plans to give all the farmers a blanket exemption from paying the tax in the first place.

Is it not correct, Mr. Speaker, that that is not new money for farmers? They are either not going to pay a tax or they are going to get a refund on a tax they have already paid. Therefore, there is no additional money there.

My second point is about the grain stabilization pay-out of $123 million or $130 million. Once again, that is the farmers' own money. The farmers have already contributed over $300 million into the grain stabilization fund and the Government is not going to give them even that much back. What is the Government doing with the farmers' money? There is nearly $1 billion in the grain stabilization fund and the Government is going to give them back $130 million. That is not additional money from the Government. It is not costing the Government anything. Why is there such a low pay-out from the grain stabilization fund? At least give the farmers back their own money, which amounts to more than twice as much as the Government now proposes to give them.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I cannot assure the Hon. Member that my response will be completely accurate with reference to his first question regarding the farm fuel rebate tax. However, it is my understanding that that tax is taken off from the source so it is in fact of significant benefit to Canadian farmers. A number of people have made representations that it would be better to do away with the rebate process as well. However, if one looks at the mechanics involved one will see that we can hardly get out of the rebate business and ensure that the tax savings will flow to the primary producers, the people in mining, fisheries, or forestry. At the moment that appears to be the only tax method which can be utilized by the Government to ensure that some $100 million will flow to the benefit of Canadian farmers.

The Government is determined to maximize every opportunity, with the financial resources which are available to it, to ensure that every possible benefit does flow to primary producers. In the opinion of the Government this is the best way to approach the matter. If this were tallied up, I believe it would show a benefit to Canadian agricultural producers in the vicinity of 25 cents or 26 cents a gallon.

Mr. Benjamin: It makes them no better off.

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member says that it makes them no better off. I cannot agree with him because if we had made a decision not to carry on with the rebate program or not to introduce these two new measures, then they would be worse off by about $100 million. That is not what we want.

The Hon. Member said that the western grain stabilization plan is a very good plan, as we all know. We know that farmers contributed one-third into the plan. One-third of any payments made out of the fund would be producers' money. However, I well remember the debate which took place last June during the committee hearings. An amendment was made last year to allow an interim payment to be made. I attended that committee hearing and my colleagues and I introduced an amendment which indicated that that amendment should not be only a one-shoat deal but should become a permanent feature of that Bill. All the members on the committee agreed that it should not be a one-shot deal but should authorize the Minister to make an interim payment in years thereafter.

Even though we were united in that the government of the day rejected it and we are now back in the situation—

Mr. Benjamin: Will you bring it in again?

Mr. Wise: You have heard me talk about it in earlier speeches. You have heard my colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, give a very positive indication. We are looking at every possible way in which we can provide financial benefits to Canadian farmers. Given the limited resources that we have, we must look at the western grain stabilization fund as a way to deliver additional dollars to farmers in the spring of the year to enable them to improve their financial position to buy—

Mr. Hovdebo: Is Eugene Whelan back in town?

Mr. Wise: He turned it down. We are not turning it down. We want to enable the farmers to buy fertilizer and seed and to enhance their position to secure operating credit from traditional lending institutions.

• (1250)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). I remind Hon. Members that there are approximately four minutes left for questions and comments.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief in my question to the Minister. It concerns agricultural issues in eastern Ontario.

Could he enlighten us about the state of the new Canada-Ontario agreement which I understand is under negotiation between himself and his colleagues in the Ontario Government? The previous agreement expired earlier this year and it had serious repercussions on improvements in the area of tile drainage for farm land in eastern Ontario.

The Minister has just related the cordial state of relations between himself and Mr. Timbrell of Ontario. Perhaps he could explain to the House the status of the new Canada-Ontario development agreement. Has the subsidiary agreement for agriculture been signed yet? What is the status of those projects?

If and when the agreement is signed, will it include a component to improve farm drainage? In eastern Ontario, I believe that the key to improvements in agriculture is the improvement in tile drainage. That is really the only way that we can become competitive with farmers in other parts of the province and the country.

The Minister, being an Ontario farmer himself, will be knowledgeable about this issue and perhaps he could enlighten the House as to the progress in this respect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I would remind the Hon. Minister that he has approximately two minutes.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. I have some appreciation for his concern, particularly with reference to the part of this province that he represents. I am aware of the importance of the agreement because I can recall travelling to Kemptville when we were in government in 1979 and indeed signing the agreement.

As an old municipal politician, I have an appreciation of the importance of farm drainage. I must apologize to the Hon. Member that I cannot give him an exact, accurate update as to where we now stand with reference to the agreement or the subagreement. However, I would invite him to call my office where my officials would be very happy to brief the Hon. Member on the status of the eastern Ontario agreement. That is, whether or not a subagreement has been signed.

I think something must have progressed because when I met the farm leaders of eastern Ontario last Tuesday, I believe, in their documentation one of the members applauded us for taking immediate action in providing funding for that agreement. They were extremely appreciative, so we must have made some type of progress.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The ten-minute period for questions and comments is now over.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would simply ask you for some guidance. Since there are only five minutes left, and in the same spirit of co-operation that we demonstrated approximately half an hour ago, I wonder if you could call it one o'clock. At the resumption of the House this afternoon, I would be able to make my remarks in full instead of their being split up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): We will consider it one o'clock. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 12.54 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) had been given the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I notice that you had some trouble recalling the rather lengthy name of my constituency. I can assure you you are not alone, since even some of my colleagues have the same problem. I am sure that in time, all Hon. Members will find it a bit easier to remember.

[English]

It is a pleasure today to speak on behalf of our Party in this debate on the state of the agricultural industry, and more particularly on the need to act urgently in revising certain procedures, such as imposing a moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation interest rates, debt review and other issues involving the agriculture sector.

Before we discuss those issues, I think it important for us to reflect on what has happened in the agricultural industry and elsewhere over recent years. Of course, some of the problems we have in agriculture relate to the high interest rate cycle that we have had recently, but there are other causes as well. For instance, I am sure you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that the very low commodity prices to which farmers are subjected and have been subjected in recent years are certainly cause for great concern. Much of the cause for low commodity prices relates to the international situation and the subsidies other countries provide for their agricultural products.

In this respect one can look to the European Economic Community and to the United States of America, both of which have created downward pressure on farm commodity prices in Canada because we live in a global village.

How do we solve the dilemma? The previous government attempted to have price stabilization programs, market sharing quota systems and so on. By and large, where those systems exist they have had a meaningful impact on assisting farmers through the very difficult situations in which they live. But more has to be done, particularly now that we are picking up after the economic recession.

We notice that agriculture is much slower to recover than other industries but there are reasons for this. Agriculture is a very capital-intensive industry. It has often been said in the past that farmers live poor and die rich. A new variation of that is that in recent years farmers lived poor and, unfortunately, died poor even though they have all the riches of the farm, the implements and everything that goes with the farm operation. This has created a very difficult situation.

In an attempt to redress some of this, during previous elections the former government enumerated a few select programs which we felt could be achieved in the reasonable future. We felt those programs, if adopted, would assist this country's agricultural community.

The present Government has made quite a few promises. Those promises were not only in the area of agriculture. There were 331 promises made, out of which 20 were in the area of agriculture. I could read them all into the record today, but I am sure Members do not want to be subjected to having to listen again to all those promises which obviously will not be fulfilled by this Government. However, we should think of the few promises which the Government is bound to realize in the very near future and concentrate on those.

I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) on his appointment. He obviously has a very strong feel for the agricultural community, coming from that community, unlike his provincial counterpart in the Ontario Government who has very limited qualifications in that area. I am being generous when I say that because many people argue that the Ontario Minister of Agriculture is totally devoid of any qualifications for such a position.

It is the hope of Members on this side of the House that the Minister of Agriculture will succeed in mustering the clout required to obtain from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)—"Mike the Knife", as I referred to him a few days ago—the funds required to fulfil the 20 election promises made by the Conservative Party during the election campaign.

When we talk about the in depth review process and the moratorium Bill, we are obviously dealing with very important issues. One of my Party's Members in the last Parliament introduced a Bill on farm foreclosures. Unfortunately, that Bill was not passed. We promised to reintroduce similar legislation if elected as the government. With the present Government in power, we hope it will introduce such legislation in the very near future.

There is another aspect to the Farm Credit Corporation that we should talk about today. I do not believe it has been addressed in the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). Nevertheless, it is a very significant issue. I refer to the delays in processing Farm Credit Corporation applications. As Hon. Members know, justice delayed is justice denied. Of course, a benefit delayed is also a benefit denied, in my opinion. A farmer applying for a Farm Credit Corporation loan may be refused six, eight, ten or twelve months later and then has to go through the whole process again. That does not constitute justice, in my view.

With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I will take a few minutes to make Members aware of some of the hardships that have been created by delays in the Farm Credit Corporation in my constituency.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, one of my constituents wrote to tell me she had applied to the Farm Credit Corporation on April 16, 1984. She said she handed the papers to the Farm Credit Corporation officer ten days later, and that at the time, she expected to get a loan at a rate of 13.25 per cent. It seems that on June 7, 1984, when she went back to the FCC office, she found that the rate had gone up from 13.25 to 14 per cent. She was told the application she made several months previous could no longer be "entertained" and that she would have to wait. So she waited a few weeks and then applied at the Ontario regional office—I am told the office is located in Guelph—and there was more delay. A week later she phoned again and was told the officer concerned was on holiday. You can appreciate that in late June or early July farmers have a lot of other things to do besides standing by the phone and waiting for a government official to call them. They are quite busy bringing in the crops and working the fields.

Finally, it seems that she got an answer from the Farm Credit Corporation on July 16, 1984 telling her that some information was missing. Hon. Members will recall that the whole show began in April. The two allegedly missing documents had been sent to the Farm Credit Corporation on May 31. Apparently they got lost. Anyway, the documents were found two days later on July 18. We are already several months later, Mr. Speaker. And so it went on and on—I will spare you the details—until September 1984 when my constituent still had not been told by the Farm Credit Corporation whether she was eligible for a loan or not.

I am told that she has now received that answer, that she has been turned down and has now initiated the appeal procedure. And we wonder whether the Farm Credit Corporation will provide a final answer in time for next spring. Such delays are unreasonable in my view. If for instance the farmer has to ask a bank to wait for refund payments, I am sure the bank would not wait until next spring. Nobody can afford to wait that long. Certainly if another industry was waiting for a Government loan, it would go elsewhere if it was unable to get grants within a reasonable timeframe. It is my view that farmers also should be entitled to government service within a somewhat more adequate time period.

Mr. Speaker, being from Eastern Ontario, I find it hard to discuss farming without referring to the poultry farm situation in our area. They are faced with very special financial difficulties because the various levels of Government, especially the Ontario Government and its chicken marketing board, but also the federal marketing board have cut their production on the grounds that they have not reached their quotas in the past. That matter has been dragging now since 1978 before all sorts of administrative courts, courts of justice and so on and so forth, and has not yet been settled. However, producers still have to go on making payments on their facilities, and they have to live like everybody else, without their problems being solved and without their being able to find someone to help them so they can keep on operating their farms.

This is another example of a delay which creates great hardship for the farmers of the Glengarry-Prescott-Russell area.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to an issue which was mentioned yesterday morning by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), the Liberal critic for agriculture, namely the problems of Canadian hog producers. As we all know, most of the pork produced in Canada is exported. As is the case with other farm industries, hog producers were affected by very low prices. However, they must now face a new problem, that of marketing their product, since there are many rumours to the effect that the United States will curtail their pork imports from Canada.

• (1420)

I would urge the Minister of Agriculture to get together with his U.S. counterpart as soon as possible with a view to ensuring that the levels of exports of pork from Canada to the United States are retained and possibly enhanced. We do not want to see the loss of those pork exports to the United States. Those exports are very meaningful, not only because of the price but because the survival of that entire industry depends upon them.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), is also very concerned about some remarks that have been made in the House today by the Minister of Agriculture concerning the grape growers of the Province of Ontario. The Minister, who is not present in the House at this time, did say this morning that there would be assistance for the grape growers. I am sure all Hon. Members of the House would want to know in more detail about what kind of help would be given to the grape growers of the Province of Ontario.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to reiterate a point that I raised this morning, and that is the need for a new Canada-Ontario development agreement. That federal-provincial agreement, particularly as it affects the part of the province in which I live, is indeed very important for the agricultural sector, particularly because of the farm drainage, farm improvement and other grants that are made available to farmers. We do not see how the farmers of eastern Ontario in particular will ever be able to compete with the farmers of the rest of the country until improvements are made to the technology and drainage of those farms. I would urge the Government to continue its negotiations with the Province of Ontario, not only so that a general agreement between Canada and Ontario is signed, but also so that subsidiary agreements as they pertain to the agricultural sector are signed, thus ensuring the enhancement of the agricultural sector of the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is a particular pleasure for me to take part in this debate today. Had I not done so, it would have been the first time in 22 years that a debate on agriculture had not included the Member for Essex-Windsor. I was tempted to mark the occasion by bringing a green stetson with me! However, I have resisted that temptation. I must say as well that I have promised my colleagues that I will try to speak in both official languages, unlike the previous Member for Essex-Windsor who claimed that he did not speak either official language!

Our Party's agricultural critic has described the national farm crisis in considerable detail. He has described the credit squeeze which has been hitting farmers throughout the country and the consequences of that squeeze not only for farmers but for the small communities which depend upon farm income and indeed for farm equipment manufacturers throughout the country. He has also outlined in today's motion some of the suggested emergency measures which we feel are crucial.

What I would like to do today is deal with two additional points. First, I want to discuss the dimensions of this problem as it affects Ontario. Second, as the economic development critic for our Party, I would like to suggest some of the broader economic development questions to which the agricultural sector must relate.

The Farm Credit Corporation has recently reported that the crisis that is hitting the farmers of the country is also present in Ontario. It has been reported that 18 per cent of Ontario farmers face severe cash flow difficulties, more than in any other province with the exception of British Columbia. In addition, 5 per cent of Ontario farmers are facing moderately difficult circumstances.

These circumstances are particularly severe for those farmers who live in Huron County, Bruce County and Grey County. It is in those counties of Ontario that the farm survival movement developed over the last few years as a demonstration of just how serious that crisis has become.

We can see this crisis reflected very clearly in the Farm Credit Corporation's 1984 report on the financial circumstances affecting farmers across the country. That report shows that the net worth of farms in Ontario has declined by 14.2 per cent between 1981 and 1984. That is far more than the 4.3 per cent decline that has affected Canadian farms as a whole. This negative impact has been particularly hard on cash-crop farms, for which the decline in net worth has been 21 per cent as compared to a .2 per cent increase in Canada as a whole. It has as well been particularly hard on hog farms for which the reduction in net worth has been 35.7 per cent while Canada as a whole has only seen a decrease of something over 12 per cent.

From an economic development point of view, what is particularly significant is that the farms that are being hit are the middle and higher-level producers, the farms that are particularly effective and efficient. In the case of middle-level producers of Ontario, the decline in net worth has been over 20 per cent. In the case of the most highly efficient and effective producers, the decline has been over 18 per cent. Both these figures are far higher than the average for the rest of the country. The result is that the average Ontario farm in 1984 is carrying over $25,000 in short-run debts as compared to just under $3,000 in 1981. In three years it represents an increase of $22,000 in short-term debt. Again, that figure is much higher than it is for Canada as a whole.

The result of this is evident from what has happened to farm investment in the most recent years in Ontario. There have been decreases from 1981 of 42 per cent in equipment investments, 37 per cent in new livestock investments and 33 per cent in new land purchase investments. As the president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture has recently remarked, the result is that 65 per cent of the farm income of Ontario farmers is being used to pay interest costs.

[Translation]

There are also major problems in Quebec. There has been a 12 per cent decrease in the net assets of field crop producers. There has been a decrease of 17 per cent in equipment investments and of 24 per cent in new livestock investments.

[English]

I want to focus briefly on the situation in my constituency of Essex County. It is a relatively rich area. It is an area which has a fair mixture of products—soybeans are particularly important, tomatoes, grapes, livestock, market gardening and some dairying. Despite the richness of the area, farms in that county are being hit by increased bankruptcies. In facts, bankruptcies have almost doubled in the last year. Land prices have fallen dramatically as a reflection of that. In the case of land used by small livestock producers and those farmers who produce lambs, the value of land has dropped from an average of $2,500 per acre in 1980 to $1,500 per acre in 1984. In the case of farmers with land suitable for producing tomatoes, the reduction has been from $5,000 per acre to approximately $3,500 per acre. Many of the farmers cannot sell their land because the bottom has been taken out of the agricultural economy in that area.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture leaders in Essex County suggest that young farmers have been hit particularly hard. Farmers who began farming in the late seventies have been forced to assume the major debts associated with starting their enterprises. It is not only the young farmers who are suffering; even the more efficient and more established, older farmers find that economically they are not able to keep their farms viable and intact.

We are very pleased at some of the initiatives which have been taken by the new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). He has established a freeze on foreclosures by the Farm Credit Corporation. That is very important in Essex County, because as recently as this past summer the FCC foreclosed on at least one farm in the area. However, not nearly enough is being done in the face of the very significant decline in the viability of the agricultural economy. That is why we have put the motion today.

I have spoken with Ontario Federation of Agriculture leaders in my constituency. Their feeling, which is quite non-partisan, is that the kind of program which we are proposing today—a freeze on foreclosures, an independent tribunal to deal with debt renegotiation, and a serious effort to refurbish the Farm Credit Corporation—is a package which would represent a very important response to the real problems which Essex County, Ontario and Quebec farmers are experiencing.

A small point which I would like the Minister to consider is the Conservative Party's commitment of the removal of capital gains tax on the sale of agricultural land. One of the points which we made during the election campaign that is worth considering is this. Rather than a complete removal of the capital gains tax, why not tell farmers that the tax will be removed if they put the money that they receive into agri-bonds under the Farm Credit Corporation? It would be a significant way by which to get the private sector and the farm sector to refurbish and rebuild the financial base of the FCC. Farm leaders in Essex County are quite willing to view that as a satisfactory alternative to the much more costly effort about which the Conservative Party has talked—the removal of all capital gains tax without those conditions.

Finally, I want to emphasize that this is not only a debate about the agricultural sector. The agricultural sector in Canada, historically and today, is a base of growth, potential prosperity and employment for the whole economy. We are not talking about a response to a special interest group or a response to a particular problem of a particular sector. It is one example of a philosophy which could be taken in an attempt to rebuild the economy. It is a philosophy which suggests that we must build on the resource base we have in Canada, not just in agriculture but in forestry, the fisheries and the mining sector.

We must make use of the resource base we have in Canada. We must build on that base and use the output from those sectors as the input to our industrial sector to help us rebuild the industrial sector. In the case of agriculture, we should be building a much stronger and more effective food processing industry. We should revive agriculture to help rebuild the agricultural implements industry. Finally, we should rebuild agriculture and deal with the serious credit problems to ensure that small businesses in the small communities across Canada which depend on agriculture will once more have an opportunity to grow.

It is crucially important for us to deal with these problems in agriculture now. As an economist, I am shocked to see the survey figures which tell us about the major decrease in the net worth of our agricultural production land. Let us get involved in a major effort to rebuild the agricultural sector. Let us solve the cash flow problem in an emergency way and, in doing so, contribute to the rebuilding of our whole economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deans: You are not in your own seat!

Mrs. Mailly: I am sorry; I shall go to my own seat. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) whether requiring people to funnel the profits from the sale of the farm into agri-bonds rather than letting them save completely on the capital gains would harm the freedom of the farmer to use these funds for his retirement or in some other way? Would it not put a constraint on the farmer who is selling his farm if he has to channel part of the receipts from the sale into agri-bonds in order to benefit from not having to pay capital gains?

I would also like to ask the Hon. Member if he does not feel that there needs to be another flow of investment capital towards the agri-bond other than which already exists in the farming community. In other words, should not the agri-bonds be made attractive to other investors rather than just the people already involved in farming? If there is a constraint on the disposition of the profits from the sale of the farm, being the obligation to channel some of it into agri-bonds, is that not going to restrict the flow of capital other than from the farming community into the agri-bonds?

Finally, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether this particular constraint would also harm what we call in Quebec—

—the transfer of family farms from one generation to the next, because very often, a problem arises when parents are selling their farms to their children: when the family farm is assessed, the children cannot afford to pay a price which would enable the parents to support themselves during their retirement years. The children are then compelled to borrow on the public market, and if interest rates are too high, or if there is a limit on capital, they have a hard time taking over their parents' farm. That is why I wonder whether if we restrict the capital flow, we do not make it more difficult for children to buy their parents' farms.

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her questions. What our Party has said with respect to this whole area is, first, that there should be incentives for an agri-bond program. Therefore, I would start, Mr. Speaker, by saying that the interest received from agri-bonds, under our approach, would be exempt from taxation. So there would first be that incentive and that would be an incentive which would apply to farm income and farm receipts put into agri-bonds and to other capital put into agri-bonds. I expect that would be an incentive, dealing with the second concern of the Hon. Member, which is the degree to which we could get other kinds of capital flow besides that from the farming sector.

To give a little more detail with respect to farmers themselves, I would say that our approach has been that the first $100,000 of capital gains made on a farm would be completely exempt from capital gains tax. We could give that much freedom to farmers so that they could put that money into the purchase of a house in town or wherever they wanted. Beyond that our concern would be to see that there is an incentive given to see that capital which is in farming stays in farming. I believe that could be accomplished by saying that to be free of the remainder of capital gains tax, you must put your funds into agri-bonds. It is a matter of judgment, Mr. Speaker, what the impact of that would be. My own feeling from discussions with farm leaders in Essex County is that many of those people share my concern that capital in farming should stay in farming, and the system of getting tax advantages if money is kept in the farm sector is quite appealing to a significant number of farmers.

I might also say, Mr. Speaker, that what it does is meet two objectives at once. It succeeds in helping to refurbish the funding base of the FCC and it provides relief for farmers so that they are able to receive income, which in itself would be tax free because of the way we treat agri-bonds.

With respect to the third point raised by the Hon. Member, my own feeling is that this system could be adapted much more effectively to the rather complicated, informal methods of financial exchange which are involved when a farm moves from one generation to another. It would be possible without very much money actually changing hands for that change to take place with the next generation incurring a debt to the parents and the parents having that debt, in effect, covered by an agri-bond with which they would be able to avoid paying capital gains.

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the indication by the Hon. Member for the great riding of Essex-Windsor of his desire to work together to solve what we on this side of the House consider to be a major problem facing agriculture. I have some concerns, however, about some of the recommendations of the Hon. Member. Modern agriculture today depends on large amounts of operating capital. I have a great deal of concern about where those farmers who require this operating capital are going to get it if we bring about a freeze which will scare away investors in agriculture. That is one point.

Many of the problems which we face in agriculture today have their roots in a lot of advice which was given in the 1970s by people who are called "economists". I want you to be assured of that, Sir. When the farm sector was trying to move ahead at a moderate pace, economists in the banking sector, in government and in other advisory capacities urged farmers not to creep, but to jump and jump big. That is where all our problems started and most of that advice was given by economists. The other thing I was interested in was the allusion to the problems of the dairy industry in Essex County. I understand that there is not a dairy herd left in Essex County.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of points raised by the Hon. Member that I would like to reply to. My predecessor from Essex-Windsor also had a problem with economists. I think I may have personally contributed to that problem. Just as there are Members of Parliament and then there are Members of Parliament, so there are economists and then there are economists. Some have some wise advice, if I may so, concerning agriculture. Others perhaps less so. In fact, I think the push to expansion to which the Hon. Member refers came not so much from economists as it did from bankers. A good many banks were assuring their farm customers: "No problem, borrow more". All of this occurred in the late 1970s when banks had a great deal of money to lend and interest were not particularly high compared to what followed. However, once those debts were incurred, the banks became far less interested in helping their farm customers.

I do not think you would scare investment away by a moratorium which dealt with this emergency, especially if it was tied to the other two points noted in our resolution concerning the desire to set up an agency which would renegotiate and reschedule payments. After all, Mr. Speaker, we do it with foreign countries like Argentina and Chile and we should be prepared to do it with our own farmers.

Finally, I think the cash crisis is so severe that we must take this move even if there is some potential danger in the short run of scaring some of the banks. The banks in this country have done very well out of the farmers, thank you very much, over the last few years. I think they should now be asked to help carry farmers through this crisis period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question and comment period is now over.

The Hon. Member for Richelieu.

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign, the Progressive Conservative Party made a commitment to help Canadian farmers. Well, we have already taken steps to meet that commitment and we intend to continue. Since this Government came to power, we have been consulting actively with members of the agricultural sector and we have had some frank discussions. One comment that often came up concerned the role of the Farm Credit Corporation. This Crown corporation plays a very important role in Canada's agricultural industry. The corporation was created by the Conservative government of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker in 1958. It was set up in response to the definite desire of farmers to be able to obtain long-term loans. Farmers themselves gave their opinion on what the role of the Farm Credit Corporation should be. From the time of its inception, the FCC has shown great initiative and energy. It is time to give it the means to do what it is capable of doing. Mr. Speaker, there are many agricultural organizations that would like to see the FCC take its rightful place on the market.

Unfortunately, increasing restrictions on its activities and the lack of financial resources that have plagued it in recent years have been instrumental in diminishing its impact.

Mr. Speaker, our Government does not intend to follow the example of the previous Government and ignore the Farm Credit Corporation.

I might remind my hon. colleagues that the role of the FCC is an entirely indispensable one. It is very active in long-term financing. In fact, it occupies 39 per cent of the market and is considered to be the principal lender, followed by the chartered banks which rank only second, with 24.4 per cent. The FCC lends primarily to young farmers, "beginners" and those who cannot obtain favourable terms in the private sector. The majority of the loans offered by the FCC are made to farmers operating a family farm. The FCC makes it possible for such farmers to contract long-term loans at fixed rates for five, ten or fifteen years. It can even lend money over a period of twenty-nine years.

Considering the conditions peculiar to the agricultural sector, longer term loans make it possible for borrowers to balance their income and expenditures. Loans at variable rates or rates that are adjusted at frequent intervals like the ones offered by commercial lenders do not always allow for these conditions.

We now have a situation that is sometimes problematic. What is the situation? During the last decade, farm credit has risen spectacularly, from about $5 billion in 1972 to over $20 billion in 1982, the most significant incease being in the long-term market.

As far as short- or medium-term loans are concerned, the chartered banks and other institutional lenders have always played a significant role. Indeed, the private sector must continue to be very active in financing this industry, and my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) made this commitment before the provincial Ministers of Agriculture.

During this decade, Mr. Speaker, the real inflation rate, that is, the current nominal interest rate less the inflation rate, has always been lower than 7 per cent. In two or three years, however, the situation has changed dramatically. Interest rates are up, inflation rates are down, and on top of that, the value of farmland has dropped significantly.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that many farmers have very few debts. At the other end of the spectrum, a number of farmers have net assets that are proportionally weak, and they will have trouble surviving.

Farmers with an average proportion of net assets are facing problems, to varying degrees. The problems depend on three factors: first of all, the farmer's management skills; second, the nature of the operation—regulated or unregulated, new or well-established—third, the farmer's debt structure. In addition, there are some farmers who although they are very good managers, are nevertheless in difficulty. They have piled up deficits and find themselves in a bind as a result of high interest rates and the carry-over of a series of losses. Although that problem was solved to a certain extent by programs such as the special agricultural financial assistance program administered by the Farm Credit Corporation and by the Small Business Bond, their restricted availability did create difficulties. Besides, the FCC program is not available and the first applicants cannot even benefit from it any more. The first issues of Small Business Bonds are maturing, but no provision has been made for their renewal. While the Liberal government was spending money right and left, Canadian farmers were working like slaves on their farms. We must do something, Mr. Speaker. What should we do?

Last November 5, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) asked the Farm Credit Corporation to suspend most of its current recovery proceedings until next January 15. It would have been unfair and irresponsible to force about 300 farmers off their property at a time when we are considering the agricultural situation. In addition, some of those farmers will have their files reviewed by appeal commissions and the FCC which are themselves made up of farmers. In any event, farmers are expected to play a larger role within this Crown corporation. Since that time, we have met frequently with FCC representatives to decide what program might be set up and provide acceptable solutions.

Not all Canadian farmers are in a desperate situation. We must also help those who are in a situation which, although not critical, does require special attention. We are now trying to find mechanisms to enable farmers to refinance their debts at interest rates somewhat lower than prevailing rates in recent years. In our opinion, more than 3,200 farmers would stand to benefit from such a measure and thus bring their interest rates in line with the Farm Credit Corporation's current rates.

We are involved in a process that is calling into question all of the corporation's programs. We have asked the corporation to make sure that each one of them is relevant. As far as the Farm Credit Act is concerned, various avenues are being explored to make sure it better fills the needs of those who comply with its requirements. We have discussed a shared-risk mortgage program that could be implemented whenever interest rates reach highly volatile and very high levels. There are still a few problems involved in such a program, however.

We have also discussed the possibility of developing a mortgage rate increase insurance program. That kind of program could be managed in part by the Government, or better still in my view by the mortgagees. There are similar programs in existence elsewhere in the world. We will undertake a study of the cost and risks involved in such an endeavour. There are similar programs in private industry, and it is important that they be respected.

The Minister of Agriculture met with his provincial colleagues at a federal-provincial conference on farm financing and credit, in early November. Following their discussions, the ministers of Agriculture have recommended that the special farm assistance program be maintained for another two years.

We are now discussing this with the Farm Credit Corporation which administers this program. We are in the process of evaluating the costs of extending it. Need I remind the House, Mr. Speaker, that under this program, farmers facing severe financial difficulties would obtain special loans to consolidate their debts. They would also benefit from reduced interest rates. They would then have a much better chance to get back on their feet.

Agribonds were also discussed at this meeting, Mr. Speaker. I should point out that the agribond project is being reviewed in the context of the Farm Credit Act. Agribonds can be described as a financial tool designed to allow farmers to borrow at interest rates lower than regular market rates. Since there is a tax rebate on interest income from investments, this instrument is quite similar to the small business bonds. The difference is that small business bonds provide tax rebates to lenders such as chartered banks and not to individual investors as would be the case with the agribonds.

This idea offers many possibilities. However, it should be carefully scrutinized. In theory, it has many advantages. It would provide farmers with lower interest rates. It can be directed to specific types of farmers, which would make it even more effective. Losses in tax revenue could be shared between the federal and provincial Governments. Investors would certainly welcome this kind of initiative. There are many other positive points which should be considered as opposed to the problems created by this program. Our tax system is already complex. It is difficult to assess the cost of such a program as the loss in revenue is hard to evaluate. Lower interest rates could be capitalized as agricultural shares. The initial costs of such a project could be high, especially with regard to advertising and monitoring.

I would like to get back to the costs of an agribond program. The cost of such a program, whether we are talking about losses in tax revenue or direct subsidies, depends on the volume of loans to which the program applies, on the repayment period for these loans and on the conditions chosen. If we were to grant direct subsidies, farmers would receive greater and more direct benefits from Government expenditures than they would in the case of tax rebates. For instance, let us suppose that bonds are issued for a period of ten years at the rate of $200 million a year, with a direct subsidy of 5 per cent, the cost would be about $10 million the first year, $20 million the second year, and so on up to $100 million the tenth year.

In his financial statement, the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) asked that a committee of the House examine the issue of agribond management. This committee will have to report before the budget is brought down next spring. We strongly hope that the provincial departments of agriculture will make representations to the committee. Their co-operation is very important and even essential.

The committee of the House of Commons will also have the mandate to consider such issues as the capital gain tax on farm lands, as well as the administration of income tax in the case of part-time farmers.

Another avenue which we will explore together with the Farm Credit Corporation is a possible amendment to the Farm Syndicates Credit Act, to reduce from three to two the number of required participants. Such an action would encourage the co-operative purchasing of farm machinery. Moreover, we are considering the possibility of raising the ceiling for eligible loans from $50,000 to, say, $250,000.

There are also steps beyond the area of the Farm Credit Corporation which we could take. In this economic statement, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated that Canadian farmers would benefit from now on from a sales tax rebate on farm fuel, a rebate which will amount to some 4.5 cents a litre. Surely, such a move will not be prejudicial to farmers' interests. Quite the contrary!

On the other hand, the Farms Improvement Loans Act will lapse on June 30 of next year. The government is now looking into the possibility of amending its regulations. The Ministers of Agriculture have suggested amending this act to allow for fixed rates of interest on intermediate term farm loans. This recommendation will not be disregarded. If we decide to go ahead with this plan, we will certainly consult our farm organizations.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has indicated to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that he intended to encourage private lenders to make greater use of the Small Business Bond Program.

We made a commitment to improve the well-being of the farming community, Mr. Speaker, and I am convinced that the direction we have taken is the right one. We have sought the advice of the provinces and, with their co-operation, we have decided to take certain steps. We have also asked the working committee on agricultural financing to consider some innovative mechanisms in order to meet the financing and credit needs of farmers.

To correct present conditions, a government program will not be enough, Mr. Speaker. The needs vary according to crops and regions.

A program could be quite satisfactory for a group of farmers and almost ineffective for another. To improve the farmers' situation, we will need the co-operation of the provinces, chartered banks and other credit institutions.

In the agricultural industry as in many other sectors of our economy, this government intends to take all means available to restore confidence.

The agricultural policy is a priority of our government. We are convinced, Mr. Speaker, that it is unreasonable to ask farmers to take all the risks in their sector while all Canadians benefit from their labour.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), I must ask Members if there are any questions or comments.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise today on this allotted Opposition Day and speak to the NDP motion urging the Government to take immediate action to address the financial needs of Canada's farmers. The motion sets out a number of points which I will deal with more specifically later on.

Of course, I have some doubts about some of those points, but there are some which I feel deserve consideration. Indeed, the new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has already acted on some of the issues raised in this motion. I am sure that Members opposite would agree that the Minister of Agriculture has done more for agriculture in two months than the last government did over a period of 10 to 12 years.

There is a real sense of optimism in the farming community that for the first time there is finally a government in Ottawa that is prepared to address their issues. I have spoken to a number of provincial ministers of agriculture. They were absolutely elated as a result of their joint meeting with the federal Minister of Agriculture. It was the first time they were genuinely consulted and their views were taken seriously. I have a list of joint actions that are being taken which are of great comfort to the farming community.

Let me make it clear that a very large portion of our agricultural community is in very deep trouble. Indeed, there is not enough money in this or most countries of the world to save every farmer in this nation who would like to be a farmer. It does not matter whether it is farmers in the free market end of agriculture, such as the beef farmers in my riding, whether it is farmers in the supply management form of agriculture, the dairy industry or the poultry industry, there are farmers who are facing collapse and will not be saved. This is due to the policies that were imposed upon this nation for the last 10 to 15 years. Of course, I speak of inflation. It has been a curse that has destroyed many civilizations before us. Not only has inflation had a severe impact on much of our farming community, it has affected ordinary citizens who have worked their whole lives to save a modest amount of money only to see it halved and indeed quartered during the last ten years as a result of this pernicious disease of inflation that was imposed upon people by the Liberal government. Any time that there is a government that will practice deceit with the people who put them here—

Ms. Mitchell: You are in government now, not Opposition.

Mr. Thacker: That is exactly what I am saying. We are in government and it is not going to happen again. The Liberals and the NDP would offer the people all sorts of solutions to their problems by throwing money at them. They would offer programs—

Mr. Riis: Talk like a government member for once. Tell us what you are going to do. Be positive.

Mr. Thacker: I am always amazed at how the NDP members jump in even now to defend those past Liberal policies that have reduced the number of farmers in this country.

Mr. Riis: Be positive for once. You are whining, snivelling and complaining. That is all we hear from you guys.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, $24 billion worth of Canadian taxpayers' sweat and toil will come off the top to service the debt.

Ms. Mitchell: What are you going to do?

Mr. Riis: Protect the banks. Say one negative thing about the banks.

Ms. Mitchell: Tell Canadians how many reforms you will bring into the tax system.

Mr. Thacker: The Hon. Members should sit patiently because then they will find out what this Government is doing.

Mr. Riis: Tell us what the Government will do.

Mr. Thacker: I just want Canadians to know that the NDP is once again defending the Liberal policies of the past.

Mr. Riis: There you go again. You are going to make a whole speech without saying one thing positive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): May I remind all Members that there will be a period of questions and comments after the Hon. Member has spoken.

Mr. Benjamin: But it is so quiet in here.

Mr. Thacker: It is quiet, but I can always get the NDP members out of their lethargy when I remind them and Canadians that their inflation and tough times today are clearly still the result of the Liberal-NDP liaison.

• (1520)

As I said, the PC Government, and particularly the Minister of Agriculture, has done more in two months than the Liberals have done over the last ten years. It was just in a matter of days that the Minister of Agriculture signed a $60 million contract with the western provinces to help the farmers in times of drought. Just like that, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture responded to a genuine problem in the West. The stabilization agreement was negotiated and signed within days so that the grain industry would have a degree of stability. For 10 years that had never happened in the West.

Concerning gas taxes, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) moved almost instantaneously, a three-cent tax is to be removed and as well the 1.8 cent tax is not going to be applied. Farmers will probably be paying 25 cents or 27 cents a gallon for gas. That is how much cheaper gas and diesel will be when they start to farm again.

Mr. Riis: Is this a history lesson?

Mr. Thacker: That is incredible action. For the five years I have been in this House, from 1979 to 1984, we kept asking for that type of relief. We got absolutely none. As a result, 10 per cent to 15 per cent of our farming community likely will not make it.

Those young farmers had no option. When the Government brings on an inflationary period, people have to jump into the fray, otherwise they would find their operations just too small. For instance, if you have an average size farm and the government brings on a period of inflation, a farmer has to expand, because when inflation is over, the farmer will find he had been left behind. When inflation sky-rockets and then starts coming down, 10 to 15 per cent of farmers cannot survive. This is tragic. What Liberals and New Democrats fail to realize is that there are human beings out there. In the agricultural sector we are losing very valuable skilled people. The average age of the farming community is about 55 years.

Mr. Riis: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Thacker: We need young people in agriculture. We are in the process of putting policies in place where a young man or a young woman will have the opportunity to get a long-term source of capital through agri-bonds so that a young man or woman can take the risk but have the chance to be rewarded at the other end.

The NDP has called for a moratorium on bankruptcies. That has been done, Mr. Speaker. There is a moratorium on the FCC in order that we can get a handle on what is happening. Members of the NDP would like to blame the banks. They have this insane belief that the banks deliberately misled people. The banks were caught up in that inflationary period as well.

Mr. Riis: What are they doing today?

Mr. Thacker: The farmers had to borrow heavily. They did. Now they are paying for it.

Mr. Riis: The banks made a lot of money. Canadian banks are the richest in the world.

Mr. Thacker: The Member is absolutely right. The way to keep banks from getting rich is not to bring on inflation. Banks always benefit from inflation.

Mr. Riis: It was 4 per cent last year.

Mr. Thacker: The banks are getting rich.

The Minister of Agriculture has appointed a task force. This is the proper way to look at some of these issues. It is easy to say that the problem is with Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. But when you get into that section a little more deeply you find that Section 18 of the Income Tax Act has some very severe ramifications also. I think the Minister was wise to put this issue before a task force so that both sides of the issue can be looked at fairly and with some degree of concern over a period of time.

What about the capital gains tax? I have absolutely no doubt, based on experience in my riding, that we have to do away with capital gains tax, just as the high cost of operating today is knocking off cash flow for farmers. But in the longer run we have to eliminate the capital gains tax. We are a young nation, Mr. Speaker. We should not be taxing the creation of pools of capital. Why are we taxing away those pools of capital? As a government we should be encouraging people to work hard to accumulate wealth so that they are able to pass it on to their children. We should have independent sources of capital. If you were to follow the NDP philosophy, Mr. Speaker, you would find that no one would be permitted to act other than the central government, and then everybody would be dependent on that government. With the PC philosophy, we want people individually to have enough money to be able to thumb their noses at the government and say, "I don't need you. I will arrange my own pension. I will arrange all of my own affairs. Get out of my life, government." That is what we need.

Mr. Waddell: You are not serious.

Mr. Riis: What have you been smoking? You don't want pensions? You don't want medicare?

Mr. Thacker: Listen to them yelping on the other side, Mr. Speaker. I always tell a little story about the NDP. The New Democrats have a special school. We have never been able to locate it exactly. We expect it is in Saskatchewan. The Member who has been yelling does not really fit in the NDP. The school is called the "whiners' and snivellers' school".

Mr. Waddell: You have graduated from it.

Mr. Thacker: You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that their voices have to take on a certain cut. I think that by the end of this next term, we will know where the school is. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) does not really fit because he does not have quite the edge on his voice. He is almost a decent fellow.

Ms. Mitchell: You are astounding.

Mr. Thacker: I often wonder why he belongs to that Party. Where will we be in five years?

Mr. Waddell: In the Opposition again.

Mr. Thacker: What we really want to talk about is the future. I believe that within five years we will have lost a fairly substantial portion of our farms. As the depression took hold, many farmers lost equity in their land. There is no way they can be saved. They will simply have to disappear. What about the 85 per cent who will survive? What do we need to do for them? First, we need higher prices. When you look at all the facts and you get to the bottom line, you find that the ordinary working Canadian spends only 13 per cent of his or her disposable income on real food. If you add all the potato chips and other fast-food items, 16 per cent of disposable income goes to food. This is simply too little.

The cheap food policy of the previous government—kept in by the NDP members, who are starting to quiet down, I better fire them up again—resulted in fewer and fewer farmers. This enabled consumers to have a cheap food policy, and the Liberal government could continue getting elected time and time again.

In Europe, the average disposable income spent on food is well over 20 per cent. It is between 25 per cent and 30 per cent depending upon which country it is. In any country governed by a socialist left-wing government, the amount of disposable income spent on food goes up to 50 per cent to 55 per cent. That is what happens when you get centralists and people who believe that governments can do everything.

We have to have higher prices. If the previous Minister of Agriculture had done his job, not just going around speaking to farm groups but also speaking to urban groups and explaining to city people why they have to pay more for their food so as to have a stable, solid, family-oriented farming community, Canadians would have accepted it. If we destroy the family farm, people will pay an enormous amount for their food. The family farm without a shadow of a doubt is the most efficient mechanism for the production of food. It provides stability and can carry on for generations.

In the international sphere, our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) must take it upon himself and as government policy to direct our efforts toward the European Economic Community. The most destabilizing influence in agriculture in the world sphere is the European Economic Community. Its common agricultural policy, which is another way of saying subsidies to agriculture, is costing something like $24 billion. That has disoriented and disrupted the honest and legitimate flow of goods. We have a natural economic advantage in producing beef, grain and food which we can send around the entire world at the cheapest possible price. They take $24 billion out of their taxpayers' pockets to subsidize agriculture. They are producing food, but to excess. Then they ship it around the world. Grain farmers in my riding as well as ranchers are going out of business because of Irish beef coming in which is being subsidized to the extent of 45 cents per pound. It is absurd and it must stop.

Within our Canadian sphere, there is much that we can do. The first is already in place. The Minister of Agriculture is genuinely working with provincial ministers of agriculture to come up with national programs. Over the last 15 years we have destroyed the Canadian common market—and it is supposed to be a common market where goods, capital and labour can flow back and forth freely—as a result of the federal Government not being co-operative and not coming up with good policies. The provinces have had to step in. We now have 10 agricultural countries in this country, and it is affecting us all badly.

We have to so stop those programs which permit provincial top loading. We cannot do that by passing a federal law and then imposing it. We have to work with the provinces and convince them that we would all be richer if my region of the province were producing beef for all of Canada. On the east side of the Rocky Mountains we have miles and miles of natural prairie grass that is not worth a cent unless you can run a cow over it and turn that grass into protein. We have a natural economic advantage. We must look at the Crow rate because it is distorting beef production in the West.

We have feed freight assistance. While that gives the appearance of helping the eastern provinces, it is actually hurting them. By subsidizing the export of grain from the Prairies to the Atlantic provinces, we are cutting out farmers who could develop an operation there. We have to look at that. I know the Minister is starting to do that.

The Minister is extending the special farm financial assistance program, improving the cash advance program, establishing a registered farm investment fund, extending the Small Business Bond to 1989 and providing fixed rates of interest for terms of one to five years. In short, things are coming on hand. It is going to be better in the future. I am sorry we will have to lose some farmers. I do not want them to forget for one second that the inflation brought on in this country hurts the very people whom the NDP and the Liberals purport to protect. You do not protect senior citizens by bringing on inflation which reduces their pension plans by 25 per cent. What kind of protection is that? They rely on us in this House to be in a trust relationship. They should be able to trust us. We will not bring on inflation. I do not want them to forget who brought it on the last time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I found the comments of the last Member rather interesting. On one hand, he is in favour of de-regulation. On the other hand, he extols the virtues of supply management. He wants a red meat stabilization program, but he says the federal government should not impose anything on the provinces. He says the farmer should not go out of business, yet he says that red meat producers should not exist in my riding, only in his riding. I find that difficult to accept.

I also find it difficult to accept the Member's statement that the previous Government did not devote the required attention to agriculture. In the announcements of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), dairy programs are being cut by $6.2 million, departmental operations are being cut by $9.4 million, and Canagrex is being cut by $6.6 million. That would have been a very useful tool for the marketing of our agricultural products. The Government is deferring $4.9 million in the testing laboratory and research facility to be built in Trois-Rivières, Quebec, and Victoriaville. All this is from a government which pretends it is going to pay more attention to agriculture. How can it direct more attention to agriculture when it does not want to invest the funds required?

In the same document, we see that $32.3 million will be cut in agricultural services. The document states that fees are currently charged for services such as food inspection, agricultural input quality assurance and so forth and that the level of these will be increased. I find it very difficult to accept that this Government would make cuts in agriculture while at the same time saying that it is interested in agriculture. Where I come from, you put your money where your mouth is.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the comments of my friend opposite were rather interesting. I do not think I said I was in favour of supply management. I am in favour of each agricultural producer group being able to make that decision based on the unique circumstances of its own industry. The difference between the Government and the Hon. Member's Party is that when his Party was in government, it tried to impose supply management on every producer group for every type of problem they had. That was the solution of the former Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Boudria: That is not true.

Mr. Thacker: That is absolutely true. If you want to check it, you will find it is true. Look at the beef industry. For years he denied the beef industry a reasonable stabilization program. To him the only solution was supply management. He knew full well that if supply management were brought in for the beef industry it would destroy the open border with the United States, which always worked to our benefit. By the end of every year, we have a substantial positive balance in beef trade with the United States.

There are cuts, and it is a tragedy. However, there is a tragedy that is far greater. If we do not get the fiscal management of this country under control, more and more of our tax dollars will flow to service the debt. I want the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) to appreciate what happens. In 1974, 10 years ago, 16.6 per cent of our revenue went to service the debt. Ten years later, it is over 46 per cent. That means that off the top a greater and greater proportion of the tax dollar goes to service the debt. Tax dollars are the sweat and toil of our constituents. It is the miners who are getting black lung who are paying those dollars. The interest on that debt goes to people who already have enough money that they can lend it to the government, sit back in their chairs and get richer.

Look at the Third World countries. A small number of people at the top are fabulously wealthy and the rest have nothing. That came about as a result of inflation. It was Liberal government policies that brought inflation to this country.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member's speech. I have before me a letter from one of my constituents, a Mr. Deptuck, East 15th Avenue, Vancouver. My constituent wrote to me saying that his gasoline costs have just risen two cents a litre, his telephone rates have gone up 15 per cent, his hydro company is going for another increase, his income tax went up in July with the announcement that he will no longer be receiving the standard deduction of $100 for medical expenses, but he has not had a raise for two years and is getting cut back to three days of work a week.

Did I hear the Hon. Member correctly when he said that he did not want to see more inflation but he was advocating increased food costs? Did he say that my constituent should have to pay more for his food? Did I hear him correctly?

Second, did I hear the Hon. Member correctly when he said that the goal that he saw was that people could arrange their own pension schemes and things like that? How far does he extend this goal? Does he extend it to medicare, to unemployment insurance, to family allowances? In other words, is his goal in fact to dismember the welfare state and to dismember all of these schemes? After all, I believe it was Sir Winston Churchill, and I believe he was a Conservative, who said that by having everyone contribute, we could provide a better deal for everyone.

Finally, I would like to ask the Hon. Member another question. He is almost a nice fellow. Why is he picking on members of the NDP? We were not government members last time, Liberal members were. We did not support the National Energy Program, contrary to what the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said when he was in Vancouver. We did not do that. The New Democratic Party governs in only one province. The Conservative Party governs all over the place. Why are Conservative members picking on us? I would like to have the Hon. Member answer those three questions succinctly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) that there is approximately one minute left in the question and comment period.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I will deal with Mr. Deptuck's letter because it covers the entire field. I have never had any trouble with anyone from the city; not even from the unemployed. It is easy to show them that if we let the agricultural community down and if we kill the family farms, Mr. Deptuck and people like him will pay three or four times as much as they are already paying. We need only look at socialist countries run by governments with the same philosophy as that of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). In those countries, people are not only paying more for their food but they are having to stand in food lines for four or five hours. When people from those countries immigrate to this country, they are just astounded by the amount of food that our farmers can put on the table.

Regarding pensions, how did we help the senior citizens and all of the people who contributed to the Canada Pension Plan and their own company plans, by bringing on inflation? These people worked for 20 years and finally received a pension of $800 a month. Within 10 years, that pension was worth $300 a month. We have not helped those people by bringing on inflation.

I am saying that inflation came about because of Canadian policies. We had to pay more for energy. If the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead had been left in power and if members of the NDP had not entered into an illicit relationship with the Grits in order to knock down the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead, Mr. Deptuck would have a job today. He would have a job and he would not be suffering under this kind of inflation. His pension plan would still be secure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question and comment period is now over.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure for me to have the opportunity today to rise in support of the motion that has been put by the New Democratic Party regarding the very critical situation facing Canadian food producers. I would like to take a moment to read the motion into the record. At the beginning of today's debate, we simply overlooked the actual motion having already read it on the Order Paper. The motion reads as follows:

That this House urges the Government to take immediate action to address the financial needs of Canada's farmers by immediately:

(1) declaring a moratorium on bankruptcy and foreclosure proceedings;

(2) establishing a debt review agency to act as a neutral third party between borrower and lender with power to change repayment schedules and to reduce the accumulated interest; and

(3) setting out a clear mandate for the Farm Credit Corporation in order that it can make viable, low-interest loans through Agribonds or other means for farmers, including such financing for operating credit over the first five years of the loan, and further, that a farm incomes policy based upon a guarantee of production costs for domestically used farm products be implemented to provide parity pricing for Canada's farmers.

We felt that it was important to set aside an entire day of debate, not so much to hurl criticism at the past provincial and federal governments, not so much to harp about the nature of the problem but, more important, to identify ways and means of resolving the very difficult problems being faced by the food producers of this country.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that what we are really debating here today is whether food producers in Canada will be family farmers and family ranchers or whether they will be agri-businesses. We must make a choice between the corporate farm and the family farm. If the Government does not take significant action and take it quickly, we will continue to see the slow movement toward agri-business and corporate farming as the main vehicle by which food will be produced.

I come from central British Columbia. There are literally hundreds and hundreds of both large and small cattle operations there. On an almost weekly basis, I come across a situation in which an often-times young family finds that the banks are initiating foreclosure proceedings. A receiver is identified and goes on to the land, padlocks are changed, machinery is taken away and cattle are sold. A young family, which has usually spent two or three generations on a ranch, finds itself no longer bona fide cattle ranchers but in fact wards of the state collecting welfare. This takes place day after day in my constituency, as I am certain it does in most of the rural or urban-rural constituencies of the country.

The important thing for us to recognize is that most of these failures have resulted through no fault of the operators. They have resulted from high operating costs and an interest rate policy of the past Liberal government and the present Conservative Government that encourages high interest rates. When a farmer is expected to maintain payments to the Farm Credit Corporation or to one of the traditional lending institutions at interest rates of 15 per cent, 16 per cent or even 17 per cent, there is simply no way he can make money and maintain his food production operation.

It is important that we recognize that the problems being faced by food producers today are, to a large extent, created by governments. Thus, by definition, many of these problems can be solved by having the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces take particular action. I believe that we have the opportunity, and indeed the obligation, to lay out what we feel are appropriate solutions to these problems.

I would like to take a moment or two to put into context just how serious the situation is and just what motivated members of the New Democratic Party to ask that an entire day be set aside to explore solutions to this virtual crisis situation. Very recently, we found out from the Farm Credit Corporation that about one in every five farms totalling nearly 40,000 farms are in severe financial distress. Severe financial distress is defined as a situation in which interest payments exceed 40 per cent of sales revenue or in which the net worth of a farm is less than 15 per cent of its total assets. I become particularly concerned, as a Member of Parliament from British Columbia, to find that the highest percentage of food producers who are in severe financial distress happen to be from British Columbia.

The Farm Credit Corporation report goes on to suggest that there are 1,700 farmers headed for inevitable collapses either this year or in the beginning months of 1985. Again, by and large, it is not the fault of the farmers but is the result of high production costs and an interest rate policy which makes it virtually impossible to be successful under these conditions.

It is important to recognize that we are dealing mainly with young farmers and ranchers who perhaps entered the business in the early seventies. Those are the people who are experiencing problems today. Farm bankruptcies until October of this year total 465. That is an increase of 19 per cent from the same period last year. When we are talking about the hundreds and hundreds of farm bankruptcies each year, we are only talking about the tip of the iceberg. For every farm bankruptcy, there are approximately six farmers who simply walk away from their operations. They voluntarily liquidate their operations. Of course, the major benefactors are usually the banks. They now own a good portion of Canada's farming units.

The total debt load of Canadian farmers is in excess of $21 billion. It represents an increase of more than a billion dollars over the last year. Meanwhile, over the past four years, the value of Canadian farm equity has fallen by more than $4 billion. When we ask ourselves how serious the situation is, it is important to compare it, for example, with the last decade. If we compared 1974 with 1984, we would find that in 1974 the net farm income in Canada accounted for approximately $3.4 billion. In 1984, ten years later—recognizing the ravages of inflation as was drawn to our attention by the previous speaker—one would expect that the net farm return would be significantly greater than $3.4 billion. However, in 1984, the net farm income was again approximately $3.4 billion. In other words, the real cut which has occurred in farm incomes has been in the neighbourhood of 300 per cent. Today, farmers are receiving a net farm income which is approximately one-third of what they received in 1974.

Over the last number of years, the average farm investment has decreased, yet the average debt per farm has increased significantly over the same period. Investment went down and debt went up. It is interesting that the average debt increased across Canada by 16 per cent over the last three years. It is also interesting to look at the relative per farm capital investment levels. In 1981, British Columbia had an average per farm capital investment which was 56 per cent above the national average. It represented tremendous capital investments in the food production units of British Columbia. In 1984, that 56 per cent was reduced to 3 per cent above the national average. It is clear what is happening to the farm community in that province; it is being devastated.

One could go on and speak of the very difficult problems being faced by the food producers in Canada. However, it is more important to consider the solutions. I listened carefully to the speakers from the Liberal Party earlier today. They had some ideas of what might be appropriate in terms of resolving some of the problems, but I think it is important to remind those Liberal members that last spring two Bills were introduced by the Liberal Government. One was Bill C-653, an Act to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. In essence, that Bill was an effort to bring in a third party to negotiate when borrowers and lenders were in dispute. That Bill was talked out by both Liberals and Conservatives in committee. A subsequent Bill was introduced, Bill C-17, which was an amendment to the Small Business Loans Act. Again, it was permitted to die on the Order Paper. When the Liberals tell us that they have great ideas and suggestions, we must ask where they have been in the last 10 to 15 years. Why were those suggestions not introduced?

There are actions which could be taken. As our motion indicates, we should immediately put a moratorium on all farm foreclosures. We have seen that action taken by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), and I applaud him for it, as the Government is associated with the Farm Credit Corporation. However, we must recognize that the moratorium will only be in effect until January 15, 1985. It is clear that the moratorium must continue until the Government tells us what will happen with the other support programs it may introduce. I suggest that it would be appropriate to place a moratorium on all financial institutions. After all, the record demonstrates very clearly that one of the reasons so many young food producers have got themselves into financial difficulty is that the banks of Canada tried to shovel money into them. The banks encouraged young farmers to expand, and farm advisers told them that, with the kind of cashflows which were projected, they could handle large debts. People had money pushed at them. What happened? The banks foreclosed on food producers across the country. These are banks which have the largest real interest rates in the industrial western world. They also represent a national banking system which is the most profitable in the entire world.

It is not unreasonable for the Parliament of Canada to ask the national banks to participate in a moratorium program until the Government can put into place financial support systems. That is not an unreasonable expectation, nor is it an unreasonable request. As the Minister of Agriculture has indicated, it would require an Act of Parliament. I suspect that Members on all sides of the House would be only too anxious to pass such a Bill quickly.

Of course, the whole matter of stabilization programs must be raised. We have heard from our constituents and we have heard in the House of Commons that our red meat industry is competing with Irish beef, which is subsidized to the tune of up to 45 cents per pound. That means Canadian beef producers cannot compete. Countries around the world are promoting exports of foodstuffs and supporting their industries in one way or another, but Canada still retains a policy from another era which expounds the virtues of free enterprise. The only players in this particular area now are some sectors of the Canadian food production industry. We cannot have it both ways. We cannot have the Government of Canada stepping in either to impose quotas on subsidized Irish beef, to bring in countervailing duties, or to ask for a voluntary restraint program on imports. It is time for Canadian food producers to recognize that there is a real need for stabilization programs based on basic production costs. We would not find many sectors of the Canadian economy with a price which is lower than the cost of production. However, that is the case of most commodity areas within the agricultural industry. The time has now come, Mr. Speaker, for the Government to take very seriously this need for stabilization programs.

I would like to comment as well on the need to take action on the agri-bond front. The concept of agri-bonds has been before us now for many, many months. The matter was at one time referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The inquiry was completed. We saw there was, indeed, an excellent opportunity for food producers where an agri-bond could be floated by the federal Government, an investor could obtain 6 per cent or 7 per cent return on his investment, and, with a tax credit, could equal the kind of return he would get in the open money markets. What that would do, Mr. Speaker, is to provide a large pool of money, costing about 6 per cent or 7 per cent, which the Farm Credit Corporation could lend for 7 per cent or 8 per cent. That is the kind of cost of money which would enable not only the young people to get back into the field of agriculture but would enable many existing food producers to be successful during these difficult economic times.

In terms of dealing with the moratorium on foreclosures either by the Farm Credit Corporation or by traditional lending institutions, there should be a debt review board instituted to act as a third party and, again through an Act of Parliament, to arbitrate where there is a difficulty between a lender and a borrower, and to be able to extend the period of repayment. Perhaps in some cases it could recognize that the bank or other lending institution might well be able to take a small loss. After all, as previous speakers have indicated, we are quite prepared to ignore the debts of certain large corporations. I think it is time that we did the same for the food producers of Canada.

I believe the important thing is that there are solutions, there are answers, and many have been presented today. If the Government is concerned about the viability of the family farm or ranch, and if it really wants to take action to assist the agricultural community, there are a variety of options from which it can choose. Most of these options have been presented today, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to suggest that the first step ought to be action through an Act of Parliament to place a moratorium on farm foreclosures.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I have been most interested in the comments of the speakers from the New Democratic Party and, in particular, in their motion as it relates to the agri-bond. I come from an urban riding. Although I do not claim to know an awful lot about agriculture or, for that matter, about the agri-bond, part of my riding is represented by the Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Ontario, so we do have some connection with the agricultural community in that sense. I was most interested in the comments relating to the agri-bond and the whole concept of trying to encourage investors, apart from the farm community, to come in and invest in farms and in agricultural endeavours by offering this tax incentive, a lower interest rate, I take it, and then some sort of tax exemption in order to induce the investors to come in. That sort of thing seems to make a good deal of sense to me and to people who may think in the same way as I do.

I am interested in two of these aspects from the point of view of the New Democratic Party. I wonder if perhaps the Hon. Member could say whether or not this would create another one of these tax loopholes about which the New Democratic Party has indicated some concern over many years. In other words, does it not create a situation where the rich can put their money into investments and receive a tax break and, therefore, would not have to pay any taxes or not as much in the way of taxes?

Second, if we impose or superimpose on top of the agri-bond concept the idea of a minimum tax on the rich, would that not perhaps discourage those people who might otherwise want to invest in agri-bonds from doing so, and would that not then be counterproductive to the whole concept of agri-bonds and the assistance to agriculture which they would create?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. The topic of agri-bonds is something which the Government in its economic statement has indicated it now wants to pursue. It will be striking a committee, hopefully soon, to examine the variety of routes which one can take to implement an agri-bond program. Other countries have different kinds of agri-bonds, and they are something we need in our country as well.

In terms of conflict with the position of the New Democratic Party on the tax system, we have always believed very strongly that there are certainly very legitimate tax incentives. Many of the provisions in the Income tax Act, in fact, do serve Canadians well, such as appropriate types of home construction, the agricultural community, the fishing community, and one can go on and on. Our Party says that there are hundreds of tax loopholes and there has never been in recent times an adequate review of who benefits. We are simply suggesting that many of those loopholes, in our estimation, in fact provide no general gain to the country. As a matter of fact, they often result in a net loss to Canada. There is no job creation or economic expansion as a result of these loopholes. If it is going to cost us hundreds of millions of dollars, nay, billions of dollars each year in lost tax revenues as a result of these tax incentives, I feel it is not unreasonable to obtain a very clear statement on who benefits and to what extent, so that we can measure whether or not a tax incentive is in the best interests of our country.

To answer specifically the question raised by the Hon. Member, I will say that we feel that a minimum tax, and an incentive program which would result in a pool of low interest capital for agricultural purposes, is not inconsistent one with the other. There is room for both. We feel very strongly, however, that with a tax system which is voluntary—and I think it is important that we as parliamentarians remind ourselves of that fact—we must operate in such a way that the billions of dollars presently operating in the underground economy are brought to the surface. We must have a tax system which people perceive as being fair, where equity is part of the entire system.

All we are saying is that when we find that year after year thousands and thousands of individuals whose incomes are in the $500,000 to $1 million range, are paying no income tax whatsoever, and when we find year after year that large corporations, which are extremely profitable—and I emphasize that—pay not a single penny of income tax, we say that our tax system has got out of control. I do not believe there is a single tax lawyer or accountant in Canada who would not agree with that observation.

Mr. Pietz: The Hon. Member genuinely expressed concern for the plight of the Canadian farmer and, most particularly, for the Canadian farm family. During the election campaign, the Leader of our Party, now the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) while campaigning in the Niagara Peninsula promised assistance to grape growers, who are experiencing a serious problem this year because of surplus grapes. This promise was also supported by the Ontario provincial Minister of Agriculture, the Honourable Dennis Trimbrell. He also promised provincial funds. The federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has today announced that the new federal Government will keep its promise and has in fact arrived at an agreement with the province and a decision has been made to purchase the surplus grapes from the growers.

This past weekend I visited grape growers in my riding and they were very pleased with this decision. Many growers, because of a lack of markets, would be ruined without this help. Grapes are a major agricultural product in Canada and in my riding in the Niagara Peninsula. I am pleased that the Government has kept its promise in this regard. I would ask the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) if he does not agree that the Government has kept its promise to the grape growers? And would the Hon. Member tell us why, when he is so genuinely concerned with the plight of the small farmer, he does not give recognition to this excellent effort by the new Government to assist grape farmers who, in almost all cases, are made up of small family farm units?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member raised this issue because it is important. I have no hesitation in recognizing that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) had in fact assisted farmers across the country by his action with the Farm Credit Corporation. Indeed, he took steps to assist hard-pressed farmers in various parts of the country, and the Hon. Member named one.

I want to make the observation that before I spoke we heard a speaker from the Conservative Party going on and on about the abhorrence of having government play a role hand in hand with agriculture. He espoused the myth of the free enterpriser. Quite frankly, it is a pleasure to hear this Hon. Member stand in his place and say, thank goodness there was co-operation between the federal and provincial governments and producers in the Niagara Peninsula. That is what the NDP has always stood for, the benefits and value of a mixed economy, recognizing that there is a role for the private entrepreneur and there is a role for government to play. I think the Hon. Member explained that mix extremely clearly and extremely well, and I thank him for that.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, my colleague is an urban planner and I want to know whether he feels there is a potential in the agricultural business for urban greenhouses. There has been extreme interest in some communities in my riding in this and I wonder if he has any ideas on this issue.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, urban agriculture is obviously a growth industry along with aquaculture and a whole variety of new and creative ways of producing food. We are still, by and large, producing food in the traditional way as we did 3,000 years ago. There are many new initiatives that ought to be taken, and urban agriculture is certainly one of them.

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to this House on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). I represent an urban riding. As such, I think it is important that some of us from urban ridings put forward our views to demonstrate that the Government and its actions are supported not just by Members from rural areas, but in fact by all members of the Government.

The economy of Alberta is built on three foundations, Mr. Speaker: agriculture, energy, and transporation. The two primary industries, agriculture and energy, are of importance, not just to agricultural and rural communities but to the urban communities and the people I represent. I have some knowledge of rural life and farm life in that I grew up in a rural area of Alberta. I spent the first 18 years of my life in an area now represented by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowsky). I must say that over the years I have taken lessons from watching how he has conducted himself in his distinguished career, and I can only hope that mine will be as long and that in the next election I can achieve a majority similar in size to his.

The importance of maintaining a strong and dynamic agri-food industry has always been well understood by my party. Indeed, much, perhaps the majority, of federal agricultural legislation and institutions were established by Conservative governments. Going back to the days of the government of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker and Ministers such as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), people from the West, indeed farmers and agricultural people from all over Canada, have recognized that it is the Progressive Conservative Party that represents their interests. This is in large part the reason we have enjoyed continual electoral success for many, many years no matter what the political winds happen to be. The Canadian Wheat Board, the Farm Credit Corporation, crop insurance, the Agricultural Stabilization Act, ARDA and PFRA are primary examples of our concern for Canadian agriculture. These are examples of the items our Party has brought forward over the years to respond to the needs of the agricultural community.

However, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that these institutions, organizations and legislation are only support mechanisms. They were never intended to interfere with farmers' personal freedom and responsibility for their own success. As a farmer himself, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre is aware of the harsh realities of agricultural life. He knows farmers have to be careful, frugal, work hard and live within their means because of the narrow margins, traditionally poor returns on capital, and the terrible risks they face both through natural hazards and market forces.

The market-place is no less threatening to farmers than flood or drought or frost. Each farm family must take primary responsibility for coping as best it can with the hazards. Farmers understand this. They understand there is no escape from the harsh realities, no excuse for bad management. In short, they must carry their own weight, take their own risks and live with the consequences. Every independent businessman must maintain that sort of attitude towards his or her enterprise.

However, the federal Government recognizes that there are some aspects of agricultural life which are unique, such as, for example, the vulnerability to weather and international political and economic forces, plus the historically low rate of return on capital, all of which require governments to adopt special programs for farmers. This is not done to guarantee every farmer a living, but to ensure a general environment and climate in which Canadian farmers may prosper, and also to ensure that Canadian consumers have a continuing supply of high quality food at reasonable prices. In addition, government support of the agricultural industry enhances that industry's contribution to the national economy, such as to the balance of trade.

Federal and provincial governments have adopted a wide range of programs to help the industry. At the federal level nearly $2 billion is being spent annually on agriculture. In ballpark figures, this includes $60 million a year in stabilization payments, $300 million a year in dairy subsidies, $140 million in federal contributions toward crop insurance, $250 million on federally sponsored agricultural research, $200 million on inspection and regulation, $650 million through the Crow benefit, and $110 million a year to the Western Grain Stabilization Program. In addition, there are many market development programs, including advance payments programs which provide around $450 million a year in interest-free cash advances to farmers. There is also freight assistance to areas hard hit by drought and other natural disasters and for feed deficient areas of Canada. There are agricultural subsidiary agreements under which we encourage market development, technology development and improvements to the natural and human resources of agriculture. Designed in co-operation with the provinces, these programs are tailor made to get the most from the agricultural area of the country.

Through the Farm Credit Corporation, Mr. Speaker, the Government provides loans to thousands of young and beginning farmers who do not have enough equity to get loans from commercial sources. As I said, I grew up in a rural area. In fact, I might still be there. However, as all Members know, unless one has a family farm to take over, or a sizeable family fortune, going into farming today is nearly impossible. As a result of this, I chose to emigrate to the city and become a chartered accountant. I still hope, however, that I may be able to return some day to farm life in the rural community. If we can get things straightened out in the Government of Canada in the next few years, I may still be able to realize that objective. I realize of course that with the requirements of farming being what they are, I do not have too many years to wait. I must do it in my relatively younger years, but I hope to still have that opportunity.

In recent years, in response to financial problems that have arisen as a result of high interest rates, several special programs were introduced including small business bonds, small business development bonds and the special farm financial assistance program. Most recently, the Government has placed a moratorium on recovery actions by the Farm Credit Corporation to give us time to develop innovative credit programs for farmers.

One part of this motion calls for a moratorium on foreclosure. I think that we must realize that such a call must be viewed with skepticism in light of the fact that a moratorium has the potential to reduce the availability of credit for farmers who are in fact currently in a strong and healthy position, able to carry debt and take out new loans. We would not want to dry up the sources of capital that are available to farmers who are currently strong by imposing a debt moratorium. Any move in this direction must be viewed with caution. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, the Minister has placed a moratorium for a temporary period until January 15 of next year to give our new Government some time to study the problems farmers are facing. We also need time to determine what programs can be made available which would offer reasonable solutions.

Inter-generational transfers are being facilitated. We intend to proceed with the previous government's proposal to allow farmers to deduct up to $120,000 in taxable gains on the sale of farms after December 31, 1983, provided these funds are invested in an RRSP. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government is co-operating with the provinces in exploring a whole range of credit and tax options. These were discussed at the federal-provincial Ministers' meeting in Toronto earlier this month.

In his economic statement to Parliament, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that the Government will soon be referring a number of agricultural taxation issues to a parliamentary committee. These include the taxation of part-time farmers, the question of agri-bonds, and the taxation of capital gains on farmland. The Government will issue a background paper on these issues and will request the parliamentary committee to report expeditiously. Although not directly related to farm finance, the Minister of Finance also indicated that farmers will be eligible for a fuel tax rebate which, after considering fuel price changes, should be about 4.5 cents per litre. This should assist all farmers in strengthening their cash flows. I would hope that provincial Ministers of Agriculture would appear before this parliamentary committee on the issue of agri-bonds united in a common purpose.

I believe that the Western Grain Transportation Act, when considered with the motion and its mention of input costs, is very significant. The first review regarding the method of payment is in progress and will be completed early in 1985. With regard to the method of payment, I believe that paying the Crow benefit directly to the railways distorts local prices for grain and thereby creates a disincentive to raising livestock or to processing grain locally. By paying the railways directly there is also a clear bias toward using rail for transporting grain. Other transportation modes or other services might be more efficient in some instances, but they are at a cost disadvantage under the present method of payment.

Mr. Benjamin: That is not true.

Mr. Dorin: It is true. I believe that farmers are in the best position to decide how to allocate their resources and, in doing so, would introduce the greatest efficiency into the grain handling and transportation system. As such, I would suggest that the Crow benefit should be paid to producers, thereby giving the widest scope for choice to be exercised in the market-place.

Very soon the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) will be introducing amendments to the Agricultural Stabilization Act to allow for the creation of a national tripartite red meat stabilization program. Hopefully, this will be passed with the co-operation of Members opposite in the near future. That is another example of how we are looking for ways of providing better services and support more economically.

Even a cursory examination of the present stabilization program shows its flaws. Farmers do not know how much support they will get under the program until long after they have made their production and marketing decisions. It is a case of justice delayed is justice denied. Furthermore, under the present program, farmers often receive their stabilization payments just at the time when market prices are recovering. That is not only bad timing, but can also distort production decisions.

However, the program which we intend to bring in will be prompt and voluntary and will provide an improved level of support, without costing the federal Government much more than the program which it will be eclipsing. In short, Mr. Speaker, the new approach to stabilization will be in keeping with the whole thrust of the Government's fiscal strategy to spend smarter rather than more.

To summarize, it is clear that farmers understand their fundamental responsibility for the success of their individual operations. Second, an extensive system of supports is already in place. Finally, new, innovative programs and policies are being developed by the Government to provide more effective protection and encouragement for farmers, but in a more economical fashion.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment to make and a question which I would like to ask of this Member and the Government generally. I have heard Members speak on various agricultural issues today. There was only a very brief mention made by the Government about the wine industry. I noticed that the Minister and another Member gave themselves considerable praise for so-called rescuing the wine industry for this year by buying surplus grapes.

There is a much larger concern there for Canadian consumers. That is the fact that we must make Canadian wines more appealing to the Canadian consumer. I am thinking especially of practices which are in existence now in the Province of Ontario which clearly discourage consumers from buying Canadian wines. I believe that in the Province of Ontario and other provinces Canadian wines should be made more readily available than are imported wines. I am thinking, for example, of wines being available in grocery stores.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that this relates to the provincial authorities. I had the privilege of serving as a member of the Legislature in the Province of Ontario for a number of years. I introduced a private Members' Bill for the sale of wine in grocery stores. That was continuously refused by the Conservative government of the Province of Ontario.

Have initiatives such as this been entertained in the dialogue which the new Government is supposed to be having with its Conservative provincial counterparts? In view of the fact that the love affair between the provincial government and the federal Government is still on, I think it would be incumbent upon them to have this bedside chat about Canadian wines being available in grocery stores. Also, I think we should have a clear policy to serve only Canadian wines on-board Air Canada. Certainly if we want to demonstrate that we have a certain pride in this agricultural product in our country, we should do it with this institution. Has the Government entertained that idea as well?

Perhaps we could hear comments from the Member about that very important sector of agriculture. It is very important in certain provinces, especially in Ontario and British Columbia.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I would have to preface my remarks by saying that I come from Alberta and we do not grow many grapes there. Therefore, I am not particularly familiar with the subject of the comments made by the Hon. Member. However, I believe that we can take some heart in the fact that the comments by my colleague, the Member for Welland (Mr. Pietz), earlier in the debate, seemed to suggest that the Minister of Agriculture is in fact reviewing with his provincial counterparts what might be done. It appears that action is forthcoming in this area. I think he may wish to take that matter up with the Minister at a later time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): If there are no further questions or comments, we will resume debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I too could not resist the opportunity as an urban Member to address the subject of agriculture, which is an issue that is critical to all Canadians. As Members well know, one in five jobs in Canada is dependent upon agriculture. Therefore, it is not simply a question of equity for farmers or the cessation of capital gains for farmers, but an issue of jobs for all Canadians.

Just as there are many Canadians who are directly employed as farmers or employees of farmers, there are many, particularly in my part of Canada, the Niagara Peninsula, who work in the processing industry.

I was very happy to see the quick action of the Government today on the question raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). Not only did he raise the issue of the grape purchase in the area of Welland, he was able to get an answer from a representative of the Minister. I am sorry that the Member for Welland is not here because I would like to congratulate him for making that quick announcement, particularly in view of the fact that he acted very quickly as a result of the efforts made by Liberal members on behalf of his constituents.

Since there are no opposition members from the area of the Niagara Peninsula at the moment, I believe it is incumbent upon Members such as myself and the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell and others to ensure that issues like the grape purchase promise of the Government are not simply a package of goodies which the Conservatives have no intention of delivering but are promises that will be kept in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I might just stress that the crisis in the agricultural community is something which all my constituents and all Canadian electors share in. We are talking about food in Canada, but in a much wider context, there is the worldwide food issue, food to feed everyone on earth. In the past few days and weeks, and even in the past few years, we have been made aware of the difficulties faced by Ethiopians who simply do not have enough food to feed themselves.

[English]

We heard a Government member say that Canadians have spent only up to 16 per cent of our disposable income on food. This includes money that is spent on potato chips and similar items. Yet there is a situation in other parts of the world in which people are dying of starvation on a daily basis. I speak specifically of Ethiopia.

The spokesman for External Affairs was quite clear in pointing out to Canadians that the current Government recognized the work that had been done for Ethiopian family relief by the previous government before any other nations throughout the world began to understand and recognize the very serious problem of famine in Ethiopia.

I am sure the Government would also agree, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) already stated, that the former Member for Windsor-Essex was a Member who was extremely effective in bringing to the attention of Canadian people the importance of not only a Canadian agri-food policy but of a world agri-food policy. In fact, as President of the World Food Council, he brought to the attention of the world the concern of Canadians that we have food not only for our tables but for people all over the world.

The former Member for Windsor-Essex had many years of experience as Minister of Agriculture as well as the tandem experience in his private life in the farming business and involvement in communications. I believe he had a real passion for the notion of expanding food policy in Canada and developing a buy Canadian policy by the former government. You can imagine my shock and dismay and the shock and dismay of a number of Members on our side of the House at the shabby way he was treated by the present Government when, in an attempt to sweep clean the slate of Liberal past sins, it decided to deny him a role which would have put him at the forefront of developing a food policy not only for all Canadians but for people all around the world.

I hope that at some point in the future the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) will stand in the House and say that the cancellation of Eugene Whelan's appointment was an insult to all Canadian farmers and particularly those who have spent a lifetime trying to develop a comprehensive and universal food policy for people all over the world.

Politicians and parliamentarians are occasionally asked to take a more global approach. There are times when we must set aside our petty partisan differences. If there was one person who set aside those differences in the area of food policy and tried to develop an all-encompassing strategy to fight world famine, it was our former Minister of Agriculture. In the Government's deliberations about developing a more comprehensive approach to the situation of the Ethiopian famine, I hope it reconsiders the decision it made concerning the appointment of Eugene Whelan.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. However, I believe there is a rule of relevancy. I do not see anything in the motion before the House concerning the welfare and good order of the former Minister of Agriculture. I do not see anything in the motion about foreign food aid or Ethiopia, as important as that is. I was wondering if the Hon. Member could address her remarks to the motion.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Member has such limited understanding of the importance of international trade with respect to the agricultural community. I am sure he must realize that in order not only for the Canadian economy to thrive but for Canadian farmers to venture into foreign markets, we must develop those markets with respect to an international policy. Incidentally, the agri-business was referred to by his colleague in the House, to which the Hon. Member did not object. If he is suggesting that the current situation of farm bankruptcies in Canada is not at least in part due to our difficulties in marketing on an international basis, then the Member obviously does not have a very solid understanding of the agricultural community.

Mr. Benjamin: It still is not in the motion.

Ms. Copps: As I understand the motion, it deals with the critical situation facing Canadian farmers. It seems to me that if Canadian farmers could find markets for their products, they would not be in the situation they are currently facing in which, according to figures quoted by a Government member a few moments ago, at least 15 per cent of family farms will disappear over the next five years. I believe that my Party, and certainly the former Minister of Agriculture, have a clear record in trying to develop policies that will prevent the kind of bankruptcies that are currently being faced by farmers across Canada.

• (1640)

I think the other issue that I would like to touch on very briefly, bearing in mind the limitations of time, is the issue of the buy-Canadian policy, especially as it pertains to the wine and grape growers industry. Hon. Members will no doubt be aware that the lush vineyards of the Niagara Peninsula have produced some of the finest vintage grapes to be found anywhere in the world. Because of the limited marketing practices of certain provincial governments, it has been very difficult for farmers, producers, vineyards and vintners, to have full access to ready Canadian markets and international markets.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Pietz) made some remarks a few minutes ago concerning federal grants to buy grapes, I think. I was thinking of eggs, I do not know why. I am sure that farmers will be pleased should the government decide to buy grapes this year.

That is why my colleague the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) made a representation, and that is why I also wanted to say something about that.

But the over-all problem is not limited to buying grapes for one winter or one fall season only; instead we ought to open up new markets to sell Canadian wines. As my friend the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell pointed out, will the Canadian government buy them, for instance, even if they cost more, and if we go eat in the parliamentary restaurant next week, will everyone be drinking Canadian wines? Do they always sip good wines from Kelowna or Niagara Falls? Most people drink foreign wines. Even now, a big advertising campaign is underway about the arrival of the Beaujolais nouveau. In my opinion, our Canadian markets would be much better off if the Canadian government were to promote Canadian wines, much as they are already doing in the Province of Quebec. People in every province of Canada should have the right to sell beer and wine in small corner stores—Canadian beer and wine, of course—so as to give our farmers an opportunity to expand their markets.

[English]

I think it is excellent and I am very happy the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Pietz) made an announcement on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture with respect to the purchase of one great crop.

What is needed in order to develop a comprehensive strategy which will mean more grape and wine sales in the future is a decision by this Government to enter into an aggressive buy-Canadian policy with respect to our agricultural products. I need not even look beyond the Chamber where we are today, or even beyond the House of Commons, to know that wherever we go we are constantly facing the promotion of wine coming from other countries. We are now seeing the embarkation of the Beaujolais nouveau campaign with the Beaujolais coming from France. Why not embark, along with our provincial agricultural ministers, on an aggressive policy of buying Canadian that would include allowing beer and wine stores across Canada to sell Canadian grapes, wine and beer? This would permit the small independent entrepreneurs, who I know are so dear to the hearts of my Progressive Conservative friends, the chance to get out and market a Canadian product. At the same time it would allow the great vintners of the Niagara region, which happens to be one of the golden regions of Canada—and I invite all of you to stop in on your way to Hamilton if you are passing by going to Niagara Falls or the new James R. Allan Skyway bridge, depending upon your perspective—to market its great grapes to all Canadians along with the great grapes of British Columbia and other areas of Canada.

We do have an excellent product which should be sold not only to Canadians but also world-wide. We need a government prepared to set an example in this area. We need a government prepared to say to its provincial counterparts across the nation—and I look to the great dry province of Ontario—"Let us give our Canadian entrepreneurs a chance, let us give our Canadian small businessmen and women, who are scraping the bottom of the wine barrel to make ends meet, an opportunity by giving them an edge." Why not give them a chance to sell their products in independent grocery stores across Canada?

There are many challenges facing us in the agricultural field. As I said at the beginning of my few remarks, I realize that the agricultural field is one of the primary producing industries in Canada and is one of the areas that will create jobs for all Canadians. I urge the Government to take up the challenge of a universal global food policy as proposed by the Minister's predecessor, the former Member for Windsor-Essex. The challenges are great, the rewards are many. If we can market the Canadian product on an international basis, we will find the jobs, jobs, and more jobs promised by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) will have some possibility of coming to fruition.

I think the Minister of Agriculture has some real challenges ahead. I know that we on this side of the House want to assist in meeting those challenges because we recognize that where there is growth in the agricultural industry, there is growth for Canadians. I just have one comment to make on this in passing. I think it was one of the Members for Vancouver who aptly questioned one of the Government Members on this issue. He talked about how the Government felt that the percentage of Canadian income spent on food was far too small. He quoted figures ranging from 20 per cent, 25 per cent to 30 per cent as perhaps a more realistic expectation of what Canadians can expect to pay for their food dollar as a percentage of gross income. Would the Government clarify, for the purpose of those Members who are trying to determine which is Government policy and which are individual Member's meanderings, whether the figure of 15 per cent, 20 per cent, 25 per cent, or 30 per cent most accurately reflects the percentage of gross income which the Government will expect Canadians to pay for their food?

I am sure Canadians are most interested in this departure into new agricultural policy for Canada. I am looking forward to some clarification from the Government and the Minister as to whether a doubling of the cost of food in Canada was one of the campaign promises which the Prime Minister either failed to announce or is one of the unannounced promises he intends to deliver.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, to get back to the motion that is before the House, I would like to say a few words concerning the last paragraph of the motion which calls for parity prices for food produced for domestic use in Canada, and remind the House that of all the sectors of our economy just about the only people who cannot set their prices in order to recover their costs of production and maintain a decent standard of living, are the agricultural producers. Organized workers, organized labour can bargain for salary and wages to cover their costs of living and of raising a family. Our lawyers, doctors, chartered accountants and what-not can set fees to cover their costs of production and their costs of living. Our manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers set the prices to cover their costs of production and of doing business. With few exceptions, the agricultural producer cannot set prices. He is a price taker, not a price maker.

• (1650)

I do not know of anyone else in our society who would accept an income below his costs of production. He would not stand for it. For decades we have not only expected but required our food producers to operate at less than the cost of production. That is why we have lost three quarters of a million family farms in this country since the end of World War II.

I do not know of anyone else who would stand for that. It is only fair and reasonable that the Government should be able to implement a system of prices for farm products that are consumed in Canada that cover a farmer's cost of production.

If given his costs of production, which include high interest rates and high freight charges, he will be able to pay that. Until we do that, we will have nothing more than a perpetuation of the present situation.

The whole area of capital funds required to be borrowed by farmers for capital costs and operations has been a continuing problem since the end of World War II. There is nothing new about it.

I am amused when I hear the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) and others who come here and tell us to leave them alone, they want the free and open market, the free enterprise system for the marketing of food. When the free enterprise system breaks down, however, who are the first to come to Ottawa with their hands out? It is the same free and open marketers. The so-called free and open market has not worked for food producers in the history of this country.

We expect our farmers to compete against the treasuries of competing nations. The European Economic Community subsidizes grain producers anywhere from $20 to $28 a tonne. The United States subsidizes grain producers $8, $10 and $12 a tonne. In Canada, the so-called Crow benefit amounted to $4 a tonne. Then we got the former Liberal government throwing the Crow rate out and the Tories acquiescing. They voted against the destruction of the Crow rate. They said they would put on a freeze. That still has not been done. Maybe by next spring they will put on a freeze on what has already been increased. They should be rolling back the statutory grain rates to what they were last January 1, or at least last August 1, if they want it to be a benefit to grain producers in western Canada.

I listened to a couple of Members on the Government side talk about private lending institutions, those poor fellows not being able to collect on their exorbitant interest rate loans from agricultural producers, fishermen and small businessmen. To hear them tell it would wring tears out of a jury full of bankers. Parliament and the Government have to tell the financial institutions, the banks and mortgage companies that they will get so much and no more. What they now collect used to be a criminal offence. It was called usury.

Farmers are still paying off loans at 18 per cent, 19 per cent and 20 per cent. That used to be illegal. Nobody can operate a farm or any other business with those exorbitant charges. There would be nothing wrong with saying to the financial institutions that, in light of the profits they have had, they must contribute to the welfare of our farm industry, fishermen and small businessmen.

They have been amply repaid in interest rates. Therefore, they should be told they cannot collect any more interest for the next year. A moratorium should be declared on all foreclosures and two choices given them: it is either compulsory or they have to, because they are not going to do it voluntarily. They have fleeced farmers for too darn long.

I remember in the 1950s the then Conservative Leader and members of all Parties talking about parity prices, that farmers were entitled to recover their costs of production and their living. Everybody agreed it was a great idea. We have accomplished it to some extent in a few small areas of agriculture, but we have barely scratched the surface.

We could be doing a lot more about self-sufficiency of food production in Canada. We need to be into massive greenhouse operations and using all available technology to make ourselves more self-sufficient.

We need to do something about the consumption of food that we produce. Two or three weeks ago, apples from France were being used in the Parliamentary Restaurant. In British Columbia they were throwing apples in the garbage. What the heck is going on? It is not a big deal, but it is a symptom of the disease in this country. We place too much emphasis on importing fresh fruit and vegetables from the United States during the winter. We have to import them because we do not grow them in the winter. Why not import from countries like Mexico, which desperately need foreign exchange and could use Canadian dollars? That gives farmers incomes that allow them to pay interest rates—

Ms. Copps: I rise on a point of order to ask what this discussion has to do with the motion.

Mr. Benjamin: The Hon. Member was not listening. I am talking about parity prices and exports that allow farmers to pay their present interest charges. I am not talking about Ethiopia, as my colleague was doing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): There are approximately two minutes left to this day. Let us try to finish on a good note.

Mr. Benjamin: I think we are finishing on a good note. In fact, I would be game to sitting past five o'clock. I will sit down in a minute and somebody else can get up.

The proposed requirement of a moratorium on bankruptcy and foreclosure proceedings has occurred off and on since the dirty thirties. There is nothing new about it. There should be some permanent legislation the Government can invoke when we are in a situation such as we are in now.

Finally, with regard to freight rates being charged to western grain producers, my friend spoke glowingly in favour of what the government did last year. I knew the Tories were hand in glove with the Liberals on that item. We got the evidence today. Farmers in my province, the Saskatchewan

Wheat Pool and the Association of Rural Municipalities do not support that. Those rates have to be rolled back to reduce farm costs of production in order to lessen this terrible financial plight. This is no time to charge them higher costs by way of freight rates. It is inexcusable and needs to be corrected. I am patiently waiting for the Government to roll back those rates as it said it would do in September of last year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 62, proceedings on the motion have expired.

This House stands adjourned until Monday morning at eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5.01 p.m. the House adjourned.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to introduce amendments to the Income Tax Act. The Government recognizes the importance of these amendments to the small business community. Therefore, the Bill has been brought forward early in the session to allow Canadians to benefit from the changes. As the House will know, most of the measures contained in the Bill were first proposed in the February 15 Budget of the former Government. A number of provisions which facilitate the implementation of the tax laws were contained in a draft version of the Bill, together with technical explanatory notes, published in August.

The present Bill is virtually the same as the Bill which was drafted in August except for some minor improvements. The changes to the Income Tax Act contained in the February Budget included important measures to simplify tax computations for small business. This Government is fully aware that small business is the lifeblood of the economy and employs two-thirds of Canadians. The new measures will significantly alleviate the paper burden which has fallen unduly on small business. The following changes are now being introduced to help small business to continue productively.

The small business tax simplification package will be effective for the 1985 and subsequent taxation years. It will provide certainty to taxpayers. The test to determine the eligibility of small corporations for the 35 per cent rate of credit on research and development, and the eligibility for a 40 per cent rate of refundability of investment tax credit, as well as an extra month to pay the balance of tax, will be based on a taxable income for the preceding instead of the current taxation year. This measure will provide more certainty in planning.

A special rule to prevent corporations from obtaining the low rate when they are controlled by means of options by public corporations or non-residents is being deferred and will start to apply in 1986 rather than 1985. This measure will provide taxpayers with adequate time to rearrange their affairs. These legislative changes will simplify and shorten the corporate income tax form. In addition, the cost of tax compliance for small business will be reduced. That is why this Government is proceeding quickly to introduce these changes in the first session of the Thirty-third Parliament.

Also included in the Bill are a number of changes to the income tax provisions which affect registered charities, primarily charitable foundations. These changes are the result of very extensive and successful consultations with the voluntary sector. The charities are most anxious for these amendments to be passed into law. This Government recognizes the tremendous contribution of the voluntary and charitable sectors to the prosperity of Canada. In fiscal year 1979, 2.7 million people, or 15.2 per cent of the working age population of Canada, were involved in unpaid voluntary work. Canadians volunteered 373 million hours of labour in 1979. A calculation of the value added to the Canadian economy by the 40,000 charities which are registered in Canada suggests that this sector contributed $4.5 billion to the Gross National Product in 1980, which represents roughly 2 per cent of the total Gross National Product. The contribution and the dedication of the voluntary sector to the well-being of all Canadians should be commended and encouraged. That is why I am pleased to announce these changes to the income tax provisions affecting registered charities.

The Bill further contains a broad range of other important tax measures which will promote the growth and economic renewal of Canada. Changes to the provisions relating to employee stock option plans are designed to promote greater employee participation and increased productivity in the workforce. Another measure allows farmers a deduction of up to $120,000 of taxable capital gains on the sale of qualifying property where the money is invested in a registered retirement savings plan. This change will better enable farmers to plan for their retirement.

In addition, amendments are provided to further facilitate the transfer of family farms and shares of small business corporations from one generation to another.

The decision to proceed with these changes reflects the Government's commitment to the preservation and development of family farms and small business. The Government will establish a parliamentary committee to examine a number of agricultural tax issues. If changes are to be made to the treatment of farm losses in the next Budget, farmers will have the option of applying the 1985 tax regime to their 1984 tax returns.

I will not take the time to enumerate all the measures included in this Bill. They have been announced previously and have benefited from substantial public consultation. However, I would like to mention some of the important provisions relating to the administration of the tax system.

The Bill provides increased exemptions from the requirements to make tax instalment payments. The new thresholds will benefit some 480,000 individuals, most of whom are senior citizens, from tax instalment requirements. The four-year limit on reassessments is being reduced to three years. The Tax Court of Canada will be allowed to establish guidelines for the award of costs to appellants. The Bill allows a taxpayer who files a waiver of the usual time limit on reassessments to revoke that waiver.

A number of other administrative improvements are introduced in the Bill. These measures deal with a range of matters including three refund mechanisms for certain taxes in dispute and measures allowing for the revision and late filing of various taxpayer elections.

The Government is pleased to proceed with these important measures because they are in keeping with our efforts toward improving the administration of our tax law. I would like to add that the economic statement and the accompanying agenda paper entitled "A New Direction for Canada" are documents of substantial importance to all Canadians. They are evidence of the determination of our Government to change the approach of government in the formulation of public policy. Such a change is critical, not only to my income tax amendments but to other legislation, because we believe the key to successfully managing change lies in building greater understanding of our problems and casting a broad net in our search for solutions, at all times being fair and open.

Further amendments to the Income Tax Act will be brought forward as the need for revision is identified and after close consultation with Canadians during the consultative process following our economic statement.

The provisions of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, have had a lengthy period of public review. Most of the amendments were published in draft form in April for public comment and those draft amendments were reviewed in the last Parliament by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The response to the draft amendments was very positive.

Prompt passage of this Bill will enable taxpayers to benefit from its many simplifying and relieving amendments. I urge all Hon. Members to support the Bill and to encourage its speedy passage.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief in my remarks because, indeed, most of the measures in this Bill before us are measures which originated from the Lalonde Budget in February and which have been further examined by a finance committee in the last Parliament.

It is interesting to note that out of the economic statements of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) the only concrete steps which are before us are those which were adopted from the Lalonde Budget. The economic statement included promises, or perhaps threats, but the only real measures which have been implemented have come from the Lalonde Budget. Therefore, despite all the rhetoric about the bare cupboard, the prescriptions of the last Minister of Finance are being adopted and, clearly, the present Government have found that they are significant building blocks for economic recovery.

I commend the Government for adopting from the Lalonde Budget two very good measures, in particular, which would be helpful to Canadians. They are the proposals for tax simplication and the measures to help small business. These were good measures last February and they are good today. I am happy to see them being implemented.

I am concerned, however, about two provisions. I hope that they will be addressed by other speakers from the government side. The first provisions is the reduction of the period of filing a notice of objection to a tax assessment from 180 days to 90 days. The Government claims that the February 15, 1984 proposal to increase the time to file a notice of objection from 90 days to 180 days is not being proceeded with due to more efficient procedures being introduced into Revenue Canada. However, this longer period does work in favour of the taxpayer and I regret that it is not being proceeded with. Surely what is at issue is not the efficiency of Revenue Canada but fairness in allowing the taxpayer adequate time.

My second concern is the matter of security for taxes payable. The February 15, 1984 proposal to require a Minister of National Revenue to accept satisfactory security for dispute taxes is not being proceeded with. We are told that this is because of the work which is actively underway to allow for the postponement of payment of such taxes until there has been a court resolution of the matter. I do have questions about this matter. Will there be a hiatus? How soon will the Government be prepared to issue a directive allowing for the postponement of such taxes? And if there is a hiatus, how will it be covered?

Finally, the Government has suspended advance rulings. The Minister referred to the desirability of providing certainty in planning for business and we all support that. However, many businesses relied on advance rulings to assist them in their planning and I have difficulty in understanding why the provision for advance rulings has been dropped. I trust that these matters will be responded to by someone on the other side, either immediately or when we are in Committee of the Whole.

One final comment, Mr. Speaker. The Minister said that the Government intends to establish a parliamentary committee. We have seen some regrettable examples in the last week of the Government behaving as though this were a one-party state. May I remind the Minister that parliamentary committees are established by Parliament, not the Government, and this cannot be a unilateral decision of the Government.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to rise in this debate, and I would like to extend my congratulations to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). I look forward to a number of years of interesting dialogue and useful discussion on ways and means of improving the tax system of this country in particular. I know she comes here with impeccable credentials and I assume that she is well aware of the boondoggle that we find our tax system in today. Undoubtedly we will be anxious to get into consultations and discussions to make the necessary changes and I welcome her to her new position.

As the previous speaker indicated, I think it is only right that we recognize that the Bill that we are debating today, Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes, is really a Liberal Bill. Its provisions were introduced in the last Parliament by the Liberals. I vividly remember the debate. For days and days the members of the Conservative Party railed on and on, hour after hour, about the rack and ruin this Bill would bring to the people of Canada if it was ever passed. They went on and on about how this clause would absolutely drive business out of the country if it was introduced, or how that clause fell so short of what the agricultural community was requesting that, again, rack and ruin would be the order of the day. Now we have those same provisions, almost verbatim, being introduced in this Bill today by the Conservative Government, which describes it as a fantastic breakthrough, a new advance, enlightened legislation which will send a clear message to these various sectors of the community.

Mr. Thacker: A small step in the right direction.

Mr. Riis: Or, as some Members are calling out, a small step in the right direction. Why were those words not used only a few months ago when exactly the same Bill was introduced? I just wanted to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that we are debating a Bill, introduced by the Liberals not so long ago.

Having said that, in spite of the Liberals having introduced this Bill, there is very little in it that is going to bring about any significant change. I recognize, as with any Bill, that there are provisions in this Bill which have some merit. In a Bill of about 125 pages, you will have a number of provisions that are long overdue and which should have been introduced many months or years ago. We have to recognize that as being advantageous.

To be specific, I refer to the small business sector and the item that will assist that sector in particular. Up to this point businesses had to keep track of their cumulated income until a target of $1 million was reached. After that, they were no longer eligible for the small business deduction. Many small businesses have made the case that year after year they struggle until they finally reach the magic cumulation mark. They then become a large business and consequently must pay the corporate tax rate. That was not fair and this Bill is going to remedy that problem. However, that same clause will allow doctors, lawyers, accountants and the like to qualify for a tax rate of 25 per cent as well. That points out the very essence of the problem with our tax system.

We are talking about the Bill in principle at second reading but I would like to refer to two or three of the specifics in the Bill. As all members of the House are well aware, as our tax system is presently constituted it results in thousands of individuals with incomes in excess of $200,000, $500,000, and in some cases $1 million, paying not one single penny in income tax. Granted, there are just a few thousand people in the $200,000 or $300,000 income range who do not pay any income tax year after year.

We can also identify large corporations which find themselves in a very similar situation. We recognize that during these difficult economic times many businesses, large, medium and small, do not pay any income tax because there is no income being generated. However, that is not the case with all corporations. In 1982 in the heart of the recession, companies like the Hudson's Bay Company, Steinbergs Incorporated, Simpsons-Sears Limited, Domtar Incorporated and many others were very profitable. That is fine, but if your profits are high, surely you should pay some income tax whether it be $2, $50 or $1,000. In spite of being profitable, the companies which I named paid no income tax whatsoever.

The existing tax system has become a laughing stock. Ordinary working Canadians are asked to pay their fair share to enable the Government to provide the necessary services—medicare, children's allowance, pension programs and veterans' programs. Ordinary Canadians willingly pay taxes for the services which they receive, but they become disillusioned when they learn that people in the upper income levels and profitable companies pay no income tax. In 1982 when a teller in the Royal Bank of Canada or the Bank of Montreal paid a few hundred or a few thousand dollars in income tax, or even $1 in income tax, that teller paid more income tax than the entire Royal Bank of Canada or Bank of Montreal. There is something wrong with a tax system in which a teller who pays $200 or $300 in taxes is actually paying more than the entire bank for which she works. This system is wrong. It has gone mad.

There is not a single thing introduced in Bill C-7 which alleviates these unbelievable and unfair practices. There is not one clause within this 125-page Bill that will result in those people in the upper income ranges paying any income tax. There is nothing mentioned about those many extremely profitable corporations, like the Bank of Montreal and the Royal Bank of Canada, who pay no income tax.

• (1125)

When the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was Minister of Finance back in 1979, he introduced something called the tax expenditure account. Such a measure should be introduced again by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) alongside Bill C-7. That tax expenditure account identified all of those tax expenditure programs and the costs associated with them so that Members of Parliament and Canadians generally could identify a program and what it cost in lost revenue. It could then be determined whether that particular program was benefiting Canada and Canadians.

I applaud the Hon. Member for St. John's West for that particular measure and I suggest the Minister of Finance has a responsibility if not an obligation to introduce a similar measure so that we can identify those loopholes and see what they are costing Canadians. We would then be able to determine if such programs should be continued, curtailed or perhaps even expanded.

There are reports out now that indicate that various tax expenditures to corporations are costing Canadian taxpayers approximately $11,000 million a year. I wonder if the average Canadian taxpayer who pays from $300 to $2,000 in income tax recognizes that the Parliament of Canada gives an average of $11,000 million each year in tax breaks to the corporate sector in Canada? Are we getting what we should in return for that expenditure?

If one examines the record carefully to see how most of this money, which they do not pay in income tax, is spent by corporations, it would show that it is not spent to expand their operations for new lines of production or new venture opportunities elsewhere. Those corporations use that money to finance mergers and takeovers that often result in reduced producivity and job loss. If we had a mechanism for reviewing these programs we could evaluate whether Canadian taxpayers are getting their bang for the buck.

The Liberal Minister of Finance introduced a scheme which was a research and development quick-flip scheme. I recall his saying that this scheme would encourage research and development in the critical areas of our economy in the months and years ahead. He said that it would not cost much, perhaps $100 million or $200 million at the most in lost revenue while resulting in bountiful research and development opportunities. We discovered that this did not happen. The Minister's quick-flip research and development scheme resulted in the loss of well in excess of $1 billion in simply a matter of a few months. Did it result in new R and D opportunities? No. It was simply another opportunity for tax accountants and lawyers to take advantage of a loophole for their clients. If the facts were known, those who believed that there would be more research and development will be sorely disappointed when they face the reality of that so-called tax break.

I applaud the Government for seeing fit to shut that drain of public funds. It said that this scheme was not working in the best interests of the country and it stopped that nonsense. How many other nonsenses are there within the system? There are dozens of tax breaks, bribes or loopholes—however one wants to call them—given to corporations.

I think one of the most sorrowful sights was when the Minister of Finance said during his economic statement that the Government will stop one of these incredible loopholes called the PIP grants. PIP grants refer to the thousands of millions of dollars we give each year to oil companies to explore for gas and oil.

• (1130)

I want to give an example of what another country does. Norway has natural gas and oil reserves off its coast. It depends on corporations in the business to explore. The Government of Norway tells the corporations that if they want to explore they will not be given a single penny, that they must fund their exploration 100 per cent. But if they find oil and natural gas, automatically the Government of Norway gets 80 per cent and will negotiate the other 20 per cent. All the oil companies are there, Mr. Speaker, and basically there is no incentive for them. The split is 80-20, with the 20 being negotiated.

We have a different idea here.

Mr. Benjamin: We give it away.

Mr. Riis: We say to the corporations: "If you folks want to come in and explore, we will pay up to 80 per cent of the cost and if you strike oil or gas, for our 80 per cent participation we want 25 per cent of the action". This 80 per cent is taxpayers' money. This is not a bad deal for the oil companies. Not surprisingly, all the companies are taking advantage of that opportunity. But in Norway where there is a similar situation, there is no 80 per cent funding. There is no 25 per cent cut of the action. It is an 80-plus per cent cut of the action.

These are the kinds of tax giveaways that must stop. We hear people saying: "We have to come down with a heavy hand on all those people collecting UIC because we think they might be getting an extra $3 a week or an extra $17 a month and we have to stop this nonsense". Nothing, however, is ever mentioned about $11,000 million of corporate tax giveaways each year.

Mr. Benjamin: That is called free enterprise.

Mr. Riis: Some of these giveaways are worth while. Some of them result in an excellent payback to the people of Canada. It is certainly not the case for all of them, and they need to come under the same kind of review as the UIC is to undergo.

Members listening to this discussion or people looking in via television must believe that these are sensible people on the government side.

Mr. Benjamin: Maybe.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Riis: But why do they give away all of these particular bribes to corporations which obviously do not want them? As a matter of fact, the President of the Bank of Montreal, not many months ago, said that the Canadian corporate sector is awash in tax incentives. They do not know what to do with them any more. If Government members are intelligent, as we all know they are, why do they continue to do this? Why do they continue, if you like, to allow thousands of people each year to pay no income tax whatever? Why do they allow hundreds of corporations in some years to pay no income tax whatever? It is because of this old belief that if you assist those folks in the upper income levels and if you give tax breaks to large corporations, domestic and foreign, eventually good things will trickle down to folks.

Mr. Benjamin: The crumbs.

Mr. Riis: I think my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) explained to me not long ago about feeding the horse oats. Here we are shovelling and jamming oats into this horse in the name of tax breaks or tax incentives. Eventually the oats will flow through the system, and out the other end will come the odd kernel. That is what we are getting. The ordinary Canadians are getting kernels, Mr. Speaker. We do not like to dig around and pick up those kernels any longer. Has that trickle-down theory worked anywhere? It does not work, but that is the myth on which this tax system is based. Whether it is the Conservative Party in power or the Liberal Party, it is the same old assumption. It does not work.

We are going to debate Bill C-7 in some detail over the next number of hours. I have identified one of what I think are very important clauses that will assist the small business sector, particularly regarding the elimination of the ceiling. On the other hand, I hope the Minister will explain, when we get into clause by clause study in Committee of the Whole, why doctors, lawyers, accountants and so on were included so that they too should have a special tax rate of 25 per cent. Why is it that we have included those particular professions and not other professions? I suspect again it is a reflection of the assumption under which this tax system is based—that if we can assist those in the upper income brackets, then benefits will accrue because they will invest. That investment has not happened. We have been giving tax breaks to individuals and corporations for years and years on that assumption, but the investment is simply not happening.

I remember when the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) was out on the campaign trail; he was saying that virtually the day after the Conservative Government was elected there would be this swelling sense of confidence in the country, a sense of confidence in the ability of the new government, and that jobs, I think he said hundreds of thousands, would be created overnight.

Miss MacDonald: He got 100,000 in the first month.

Mr. Riis: Maybe it was only tens of thousands of jobs that would be created overnight.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We lost 80,000.

Mr. Riis: We have now been under this new Government for many weeks. That confidence does not seem to be boiling up. On the one hand the Government is saying this, and on the other hand the Government is saying that. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) says: "We are now going to treat people fairly. To do that we are going to hire 350 goon-squad members to beat the bushes to try to squeeze more tax from people". The reason people are not paying taxes out there is not because they do not want to pay tax. They are not tax evaders; it is because they do not have any money to pay. You cannot beat them over the head and bash out more money because people simply do not have it, Mr. Speaker.

We all know that when we go back to our constituencies every week we meet with people who say: "I owe Revenue Canada $16,000. I am a rancher. I do not have any money. I cannot pay it but I want to pay it. If I can come up with some kind of repayment plan, I will". When you say one thing one day and your behaviour is different the next day, it is not the kind of thing on which confidence is built, Mr. Speaker.

I want to say a little bit about how this Bill affects agriculture. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), will certainly have more to say about what this Bill means for agriculture.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Nothing.

Mr. Riis: I want to talk about the capital gains rollover to assist farmers in their retirement years that will enable a certain amount of money to be rolled into an RRSP and as a result be protected from tax as part of their retirement plans. One of the most encouraging parts of this Bill which will help many, many people is Clause 61. It makes the point that up until this time individuals who do not have income tax deducted at source have been required to pay quarterly tax instalments. Especially for pensioners, this has been a real problem. The quarterly tax instalment has also been a problem for many farmers and small business people. It is more red tape, to coin a phrase. It is something that will be eliminated, in part at least, by this provision, and I welcome that.

While there are some aspects of this Bill that have been long overdue, they are simply band-aids on top of band-aids on top of other band-aids. We have a tax system in this country that is so complex that I doubt there is a single tax accountant or tax laywer who could say that he or she is on top of the tax system. If anybody says that he or she understands the Tax Act, or is on top of the regulations, I think, Mr. Speaker, you should be looking for a new accountant or a new tax lawyer.

So much is based on decisions made by various tax officials. One might find a decision made in Ottawa that is quite different from one made in Winnipeg, which again is quite different from a decision made in Surrey, B.C. So much is dependent simply upon the interpretation of an individual for which he or she is not accountable. When you start looking at the tax system and recognizing the complexity in which we find ourselves in terms of the financial world, so much of income now being nothing more than paper income, we recognize that our tax system is out of control. It is unfair, particularly in that it has a bias toward a certain sector of the community. Of course, the bias is in favour of upper income earners, particularly those whose income is derived from sources such as dividends.

In fact, a dollar is not a dollar. For certain taxpayers a dollar is only 50 cents when it is looked at for tax purposes. It is time to dust off the covers of the old Carter tax report. We should look at some of its recommendations of a number of years ago. It was suggested at that time that perhaps it was time to bring fairness into the tax system and call a buck a buck or a dollar a dollar. For example, if one had a dollar of income, one paid income tax on it. We have called for a minimum tax recognizing, as even people like Ronald Reagan recognized in the United States, that there is a place for a minimum tax. Also there is a place for a tax system which is by and large based upon voluntary information regarding one's financial affairs for the year. We are asking people to co-operate in the most serious sense of the word. We are asking them to co-operate in determining moneys received, in identifying the taxes payable and in ensuring that the taxes are in fact paid. We ask them to co-operate as volunteers in this tax collection system. To have it work effectively, we must have a fair tax system. People filling out their tax returns must know that they are paying their fair share and that everyone else is paying their fair share as well. However, at present Canadian taxpayers know that that is not the case and that people often do not pay their fair share. They know that it is not a fair system and that it is biased in favour of certain individuals and businesses.

Turning to the business side of things, if we identify the 200 most critical tax incentives provided for business, the number set aside for small businesses is three; three out of 200 tax incentive programs designed for business refer to small business. Very clearly the emphasis or the bias in the tax system is toward the large corporate sector.

In terms of where jobs will be created in the future and recognition of the need for a fair tax system, Bill C-7 fails in moving toward either of those directions. It is simply a last ditch attempt by the past Liberal Government to bring in a few band-aids to be used on some obviously glaring errors in the tax system. Various sectors lobbied and lobbied for years for remedies to these errors. Finally government could not hold back any longer nor argue that this should not be done. Bill C-7 is a recognition of some of the most glaring examples of problems associated with the tax system. It does nothing to change it. It does nothing to improve the tax system. Basically it is the placement of a band-aid over another band-aid. That is all it really is.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for this opportunity to address the House on a subject as important as Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes. The two previous speakers said that we more or less copied the Liberal Party's Bill C-107. Quite frankly, if that is the only thing they did right in twenty-five years, I do not see why we should not make a few changes and present it to the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, considering the precarious state of the economy, Canadians have no other choice but to opt for change, and that is what they did and they did so very wisely. The Canadian people chose a Party commensurate with its aspirations, a Party that would be able to promote sound economic growth for all Canadians, after the dictatorial socialism practised by the previous Government which kept Canadians from realizing their full potential.

Mr. Speaker, juggling with truncated constitutional agreements is not enough to bring Canadians back to their rightful place within the Canadian economy. We must above all, think as Canadians, with Canadians and for Canadians. We must restore this country's pride, and that is what the Progressive Conservative Government has undertaken to do and is doing at this time.

However, although our Party is more than willing to do everything it can, it is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that the legacy of the previous Government has left us with a shambles—

[English]

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member be kind enough to explain to us what connection his remarks have with Bill C-7?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He is supposed to be relevant.

Mr. Foster: He is supposed to speak to the subject matter before the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. Members are correct. It is a point of order——and I would ask the Hon. Member to see to it that his comments are relevant to the Bill.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, our economic strategy will require the introduction of many changes, and I believe the Minister made this clear earlier, including the Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes, which cannot be delayed any longer. As the House is aware, a number of tax measures require significant changes and fast action. It is therefore necessary to clarify our tax proposals as soon as possible, and that is what this Government intends to do by means of Bill C-7.

Mr. Speaker, the Government intends to make changes in the tax system as it applies to small businesses. These changes will have a positive impact, since they will simplify and shorten the corporate tax return, reduce the cost of tax compliance for small businesses, increase tax savings for expanding small businesses and also reduce by more than two-thirds the legislation on the low small business tax rate.

Mr. Speaker, changes will also be introduced to simplify the rules on personal services business, specified investment business and connected partnerships.

To qualify for the low tax rate, personal services businesses and specified investment businesses will no longer have to meet the criterion that they must have five full-time employees who are at arm's length. This will simplify compliance. For companies formed by corporations, the long and complex provision that deals with corporations that are connected with several companies will be replaced by an anti-loophole provision drafted in general terms. These changes in the small business tax system will apply to fiscal 1985 and thereafter.

However, a related measure dealing with control options will become effective starting fiscal 1986. The purpose of this measure is to prevent a corporation from being eligible as a private Canadian-controlled corporation if a non-resident or a public corporation has an option or the right to take control of the corporation. The year's grace provided before this measure becomes effective will give non-residents and public corporations now holding such rights or options a chance to reorganize their business so as to keep the corporation concerned eligible as a private, Canadian-controlled corporation.

Mr. Speaker, there will also be two changes in the rules on tax instalment payments. The first change will provide an exemption from such payments for individuals whose instalments will be $1,000 or less. At the present time, all individuals paying more than $400 in taxes must make quarterly instalment payments. Furthermore, the cut-off point of $1,000 will be extended to corporations. These changes will be effective as of fiscal 1984.

• (1150)

Roughly 350,000 older taxpayers will no longer have to pay tax instalments. For example, a married taxpayer over 65 who uses every interest income deduction will no longer have to make quarterly tax payments, provided the couple's income does not exceed $18,000. Another 130,000 Canadians and more than 50,000 corporations will no longer have to meet that requirement. Most of those corporations are small family businesses and farms.

An exemption will be made concerning interest due on late or insufficient instalments. Interest of $25 or less on late or insufficient federal and provincial tax instalments will be waived.

With respect to the operating costs of an automobile, the current legislation provides that the employee who makes personal use of a car supplied by the employer must include in his income the automobile benefits related to the operating costs, such as gasoline, repairs and insurance which are paid by the employer. He must also include in his income the benefit represented by the use of the automobile, commonly referred to as the standby charge in respect of the automobile. To figure out the benefit involved in operating costs, the employer must keep track of all expenses of each vehicle and distances travelled by each employee on a personal or business basis. This is a complex and time-consuming exercise and a simplified formula will make it easier to take this benefit into account.

For a great many employers and employees, combining the operating costs benefit and the standby charge in respect of the automobile will result in much fewer expenses for simply abiding by tax regulations.

As to moving expenses, the Income Tax Act now provides a deduction for such expenses when someone ceases to be employed and must move elsewhere in Canada to get a new job. This deduction will be available to anyone who was unemployed and moved after 1983 to get a new job or open a business.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, alimony payments made before the date of a court order or a written separation agreement are neither deductible nor included in taxable income. A number of taxpayers who thought they could benefit from such fiscal reciprocity have been affected by this restriction. Generally speaking, that is the case of a taxpayer who makes maintenance payments to his or her spouse and children after the marriage breakdown, but before the formal separation agreement is signed.

The new provisions will amend the rules applicable to payments made before the date of a legal order or a written separation agreement when, if it were not for this date, the payments would have been deductible and taxable.

Taxpayers can now deduct, within prescribed limits, the payments made by their spouse under a Registered Retirement Savings Plan or RRSP. A special rule prevents the use of the spouse's RRSP to transfer income artificially from one spouse to another. According to this rule, when money is withdrawn from a RRSP by one of the spouses, the other spouse must include in his income any payment to this RRSP during that year and the two previous years.

The new provisions will state that this rule does not apply if, following a marriage breakdown the two spouses are living apart when the money is withdrawn. This provision will apply to the sums withdrawn from a RRSP after February 15, 1984.

As the Minister said earlier, Mr. Speaker, other issues will also be examined, such as charitable organizations, tax assistance to farmers, tax incentives for businesses, and so on.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, these are some of the initiatives which we consider essential to meet our objectives. They reflect the honesty and integrity of a Government which has set for itself this goal of rebuilding our economy.

We are united by a common will to have a strong and prosperous country. Meeting this objective will improve the situation of every one of us. We can reach this goal if we all work together.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) on a question or comment?

Mr. Edwards: I have a comment to make, Mr. Speaker, if I may. I wish to congratulate the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) for her lucid exposition of these amendments and I would like to congratulate the analysis made by the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard).

I think it is fitting that the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) made such a substantial contribution to this debate.

Mr. Nickerson: He did?

Mr. Edwards: Yes. I think he underlined that neither the Government Party nor the Official Opposition holds a monopoly on wisdom and genius. It was a refreshing dose of fiscal and economic orthodoxy, with one or two exceptions. I know the Hon. Member would love to get his mitts on a chartered bank.

I wish to speak to one or two of these band-aids, as they have been called, and I would invite the Hon. Member to stay tuned. There may be some major elective surgery coming—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member whether he is making a speech or participating in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard). We are dealing with questions and comments right now. Does the Hon. Member wish to speak during the ten-minute question and comment period?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I stand corrected. I was about to make a speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize you in a moment. Are there any Members who wish to make a comment or question the Hon. Member for Laval on his speech? Very well. We will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards).

Mr. McDermid: It was a great opening.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will do it again if you wish.

These changes which have been introduced will simplify and shorten the corporate income tax form, will reduce the cost of tax compliance for small businesses, will increase access to tax savings for growing small businesses and will reduce by over two-thirds the amount of the legislation relating to the low tax rate for small business. As we have been told, this is accomplished by the elimination of the accumulated deduction account which limited access of the small business tax rate to $1 million of accumulated income. As well, this is accomplished by the repeal of the provisions concerning non-qualifying business; namely, the professional practices of accountants, dentists, lawyers and medical doctors. I beg to differ with the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap by stressing that among these professions are a number of substantial individual investors in our economy. Further, these objectives are accomplished by simplifying the provisions affecting personal services businesses, specified investment businesses and corporate partnerships.

The oil and gas industry, which should be the major engine of our economic recovery, will be pleased, I believe, by the retroactive relief rather than the retroactive penalty involved in the provisions which offer relief to a taxpayer who, after 1983, disposed of property or supply services that qualified for earned depletion. As well, there is some measure of reliability and predictability in the scheduled modification of law treating expenditures made for wells after 1983 as development expenses rather than exploration expenses, thereby having the deduction from 100 per cent to 30 per cent postponed for two years to January 1, 1986.

The primary producers of our country are looked after and their needs are addressed by the tax assistance to farmers, with the farm capital gain rollover up to $120,000 of taxable gain on the sale of qualifying property now being deductible if invested in an RRSP, and the transfer of family farms from one generation to another has now been facilitated. The meaning of a child of a taxpayer has been extended and family farm bequests and inheritances are put on the same basis as inter vivos transfers.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I applaud the initiatives taken in the personal income tax field with the ability to deduct moving expenses extended. There are a great many people in our nation today who, through no fault of their own, have been dislocated from their employment, whether by early retirement or by lay-off. Clause 62 of the Bill will provide a deduction for the qualifying moving expenses of an individual who moves to a new location in Canada in order to take up employment or start a business. Under the present law, in order to qualify for that deduction the taxpayer must have ceased before the move to carry on a business, to be employed at another location in Canada, or to be a full-time student at a post-secondary educational institution. This amendment eliminates the requirements relating to the taxpayer's occupation before he moves. As a result, the amendment ensures that an individual who is unemployed immediately before such a move will be entitled to claim a deduction for moving expenses. The amendment is applicable to relocations which occur after 1983.

• (1200)

There is a bias in these amendments which is in favour of the great middle class of Canada—investors, entrepreneurs and those who care about the revival of the economy in Canada. I believe there is an all-Party consensus that small business will be the major generator of employment in the foreseeable future. I applaud the Minister for her initiatives and the attendant humanity, simplicity, efficiency and predictability that goes with the amendments. They are small steps in the right direction, but in them we see some measures for the freeing of enterprise and the reinforcement of the sense of confidence which is present in Canada today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the comments of the Hon. Member and I look forward to his participation in this debate.

In his opening statements he referred to the banks. I would like to ask him, first, what are his views with respect to a tax system which permitted one of the largest banks in the world, namely the Royal Bank of Canada, to operate in 1982, when most Canadians were experiencing extreme economic and financial difficulties, in a tax regime where absolutely no income tax was paid and millions and millions of dollars were deferred to the 1983 tax year? I would like to hear his views on a tax system which permits that.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I believe the subject of this debate is primarily the subject of small business simplification, relief for farmers, personal tax, et cetera. However, the subject was raised previously by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap and, therefore, I will endeavour to answer the question.

Frankly, I do not think very much of a system which permits a major corporation not to pay tax—if the Hon. Member has his facts correct, and I will give him the benefit of the doubt. I think it is a declared policy of this Government that everyone will pay a reasonable share of tax. Of course, that includes corporations as well as individuals.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to an important part of the Bill, assistance to small business. He has identified, and rightly so that it is a critical sector in terms of creating jobs in the country in future years. He was also correct in saying that it was this sector which should be encouraged.

While this provision will take a significant amount of red tape out of the hands of the small entrepreneur and the small business person, would it not be much more advantageous for that individual, in terms of being able to expand and develop as a small-scale business, if the Government were to take action and significantly reduce interest rates?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I am of the view that the more free the market, the better.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a further question, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member gave his speech this morning it sounded as though this Bill was originally proposed by the Progressive Conservative Government. In fact, the Bill which is before the House is part of the Budget which was brought down by Mr. Lalonde last April 19. A number of changes were made to the tax system at that time, many of which the Tories castigated during the election campaign. Matters such as reducing the threshold for senior citizens who are required to pay quarterly tax, in order that they will no longer be required to pay income tax on a quarterly basis. In addition, the removal of the cumulative index for low-income tax levels in small business. That would reduce the amount of paperwork and taxes for small business by over $100 million a year. The Hon. Member mentioned that it favoured the largest sector of the income scale. It includes approximately 300,000 small business people.

I simply wanted to be clear as to whether the Hon. Member was aware that the proposals in Bill C-7 originated from the Budget which was brought down last spring and did not come from the Economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). That statement put forward practically nothing for small business, except that the proposals of the previous Liberal Government would be implemented. Perhaps the Hon. Member could clarify whether he is aware that the beneficial provisions of the Bill came from the Budget of last spring.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I thought that I had given proper credit to the original initiative when I remarked that neither the Government Party nor the Official Opposition held a monopoly on wisdom or genius.

I believe that even the principles of the prodigal may be embraced when they are uttered as a last gasp of deathbed repentance. We recognized the marvellous improvement in Mr. Lalonde in his latter days.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Hon. Member. He referred to the elimination of the cumulative deduction account, which is certainly a wise move. Would he be able to venture an explanation as to why this special consideration was extended to certain selected professional groups, such as doctors, lawyers and accountants, to enable them to qualify for the 25 per cent tax? I recognize that the Hon. Member may not have an explanation and may be looking forward to an answer from the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall).

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I thought I previously addressed that question when I said that the people in these professions invest handsomely in the economy. They take risks which, I would submit, very few Canadians are prepared to take. I congratulate them on their bravery, especially with the state of the economy at this time, and in particular the western economy, with which I am sure the Hon. Member is very familiar.

• (1210)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to pursue this beyond rational limits. I appreciate the point made by the Hon. Member that we need investment in this country, and, indeed, these professional individuals would probably invest in various capacities. However, what about all the other professions which are not identified? Is the Hon. Member saying that only the professional groups identified as lawyers, dentists and doctors invest in the economy and all the other professional groups which are identified in the Income Tax Act as professional groups do not invest? I do not understand why there is a distinction between one set of professionals and another.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, following the band-aids probably will come the tourniquets; then later, as I suggested, the major surgery. I stress that that surgery is elective surgery because an election was held on the issue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments on the speech of the Hon. Member is at an end. We shall now resume debate.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Riis: Oh, no!

Mr. Nickerson: Who said that? I suspect that remark came from the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). My hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards), in my opinion, Sir, was all too charitable to that Hon. Member in his opening comments. I would never say anything like that about the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap because I have listened to him for several years in this House. I listened to what he had to say today with respect to Bill C-7, and for the most part, Sir, his comments were typical New Democratic Party tax garbage. The Hon. Member did, however, zero in on one particular group of Canadians—dentists, doctors and persons in allied professions. For some reason, obviously, the New Democratic Party do not like dentists.

If anyone has gone to a dentist of late he will have easily seen the similarity between a dentist's office and the ordinary small business. The dentist has a staff, he has equipment to buy and he has an office to run. It is my personal opinion, and it is the opinion of the Government of Canada, that there is not much difference between that type of operation and what we would normally consider to be a small business. Therefore, I am particularly pleased that the provisions of the Income Tax Act as they apply to so-called non-qualifying businesses have been repealed under this Bill.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap did make one valid observation, Sir, and that was that this bill is largely a Liberal Bill. To a great extent it comes to us as a result of the Budget brought in by the Hon. Marc Lalonde on February 15 of this year. That observation, which was also made by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), was quite correct.

I believe what we are faced with in this Bill is a series of technical amendments to the Income Tax Act. There is no real change in the way that taxation will be levied in Canada. However, the amendments which are before us are, on balance, good ones, ones with which this House should deal as expeditiously as possible. In a sense, the February Budget of the former Minister of Finance was a way of drawing back from the disastrous MacEachen Budget of 1983. The Government of the day realized just how badly it had fared with the MacEachen Budget and in order to have a system of taxation with which Canadians could live, even if they were not particularly happy, brought in the Budget of February 15; and the Bill which was brought forward in August was the model for Bill C-7. There have been some improvements made in this Bill since August and we hope it will suit even more the present Canadian financial and taxation situation.

I am pleased that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) brought this Bill in so early in the session. It shows that we on this side of the House intend to give high priority to tax matters. If one looks at the provisions of the Bill, one sees that they deal predominantly with small business taxation. The reason for this is that we believe that the small business sector of the Canadian economy is most important.

I would like to speak about some of the provisions as they affect small business. This Bill will reduce by over two-thirds the amount of legislation relating to low tax rates for small business. We, together with Hon. Members on the other side of the House, have been trying for some time to reduce the volume of the Income Tax Act and to bring in progressive simplifications.

Bill C-7 will increase access to tax savings for growing small businesses. It will reduce the cost of tax compliance, again for those small businesses. I like the provision for the elimination of the cumulative deduction account, and other speakers agree with me. Even the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap agreed with that provision so we must be doing something right on this side of the House.

The provisions dealing with the 35 per cent research and development credit and the 40 per cent investment tax credit are good. These provisions should assist investment in research and development on the part of small business. I am pleased to see that the working out computation will be dealt with on the previous year rather than on the current year in which you are claiming those tax credits, which makes it a lot easier. That is one simplification.

Some other provisions of the Bill which is before us include simplifications in the realm of taxation of charities. The Bill does not reflect the give-and-take proposals in their entirety. In fact, they reflect very little of the give-and-take proposals which have been made from time to time in this House. However, they are a step in the right direction and, as a step in the right direction, I am sure all Hon. Members of the House will support them.

There are provisions in the Bill which deal with employee stock options and the taxation consequences of giving employees stock options. I think this is, on balance, good. The intention here is to encourage stock options to be given to the employees of corporations so that they will have a vested interest in that business and will wish to see it grow and prosper. A lot of these recommendations came out of the good work of the parliamentary subcommittee which was established at the instigation of a private member of the Liberal Party in the last Parliament. Sometimes in this place we wonder whether anything eventually comes out of all the work we put into things, but this is one case where something came out of that parliamentary subcommittee. The lady who headed that parliamentary subcommittee and who originally presented the private member's motion to establish that committee is to be complimented, even though she is no longer with us.

With respect to taxation of energy and resources, the provision for recapture of depletion will assist people who invest in the oil and gas industries in Canada. There are provisions for the modification of the law which deals with expenditures after 1983 on certain wells, the treatment of them as development rather than exploration expenses, and the effect which that has on the deductions. I believe it is 30 per cent for development wells and 100 per cent for exploration wells. This is to be the changeover; it will be postponed for some two years until January 1, 1986. It will be a spur to the oil and gas industry, especially in western Canada which was hit so badly by the national energy policy.

• (1220)

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap brought to the attention of the House the fact that these are minor modifications, and I do not think they go quite far enough. They are technical amendments that help things for the next couple of years or so, but we really have to look at the whole tax regime for exploration and development in the resource sector, oil and gas in particular, between now and 1986. We have to have something in place. It is all right to continue the present regime of PIP grants and so on until 1986 because people are locked into these programs and it would be unfair to rip up valid contracts. But we really need a new regime in Canada so that the oil and gas industry will know where it stands and will be able to make rational investment decisions based on the permanency of tax and other legislation dealing with the disposition of natural resource rights.

It will be a major task of this Government and this House of Commons over the next two years to bring in a new and steady regime to replace the existing situation which arose out of the national energy policy and a lot of other things that have upset both members of this House and the oil and gas industry for so long. I notice as well that this Bill contains a provision for a tax free roll over when, in certain circumstances, an individual transfers resource property to a taxable Canadian corporation. That will be helpful to people in that line of business.

I have a few comments, Sir, on tax assistance to people engaged in agriculture. Farmers have been having a particularly tough time over the last few years with low commodity prices and high taxes, expecially taxes on agricultural inputs such as farm fuels, et cetera. There have been a lot of discussions in the commons and in the country over capital gains taxes as they affect farmers. I am pleased with the amendments regarding the $120,000 amount not being subject to capital gains tax when it is rolled over into an RRSP, as well as certain provisions dealing with the transfer of family farms from one generation to another. This is a step in the right direction and something which all Members should support.

Of course, in the view of members from agricultural areas, it certainly does not go far enough. I was pleased to hear the Minister say that this matter will be referred to a parliamentary committee so that agricultural taxation, not only in respect of the Income Tax Act but customs duties and other types of taxation on agriculture, can be looked at again. Perhaps we can put a rational system in place.

By way of an aside, the three cents a litre tax rebate on farm fuels will come into effect as a result of the economic statement handed down in this House a couple of weeks ago. It certainly will be of assistance to farmers, fishermen and other people in the resource industry. As an aside to that aside, I would like to say that that tax rebate also ought to be extended to trappers. They were not specifically mentioned in the statement but they certainly are in the same line of business, renewable resource development, and the rebate ought to be extended to the fur harvesters of Canada.

We need a radical change in the taxation of capital gains in Canada, Mr. Speaker, not only for farmers. Sometimes it is hard for someone who comes from a non-agricultural area to understand the difference between a farm, which I look upon as being small business or in certain circumstances a large business, and any other type of business. I would like to see us get out of the capital gains tax business altogether. That would be the greatest spur to investment in Canada that we could imagine. I do not think the capital gains tax brings in any great amount of revenue in comparison with the difficulty it imposes on taxpayers. Very often we are collecting taxes not on real capital gains but on inflationary gains. So this Bill is good in that it alleviates the capital gains tax in certain specified instances dealing with agricultural land, but certainly it does not go far enough and we have to look at getting rid of it altogether in Canada and going back to the pre-Benson days.

The tax provisions of Bill C-7 extend to personal income tax measures and maybe I will just go over these point by point. The ability to deduct moving expenses has been extended. This has been brought to my attention on several occasions where people have moved from Newfoundland to the Northwest Territories. In my particular area of the country long distance moves are quite common.

Then there is simplification of rules applicable to the breakdown of marriage.

Another area concerns eligible medical expenses. As you will recall, someone had to be confined to bed or to a wheelchair before they were eligible to write off the cost of certain medically required equipment. I am pleased to see that will no longer be the case. I remember question after question being asked in this House about people who common sense would say should be able to get a tax deduction for a piece of medical equipment, yet the word for word provisions of the Income Tax Act were such that they could not. This is certainly a good step.

As well, fairness in tax administration, as the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) has said on many occasions, both as Minister and as opposition critic, is something we feel very strongly about on this side of the House. We feel taxpayers should be treated honourably and fairly, and Bill C-7 contains provisions which will enable that to be done.

I see I am running out of time, Mr. Speaker, so I will have to speed up a little bit. Perhaps out of all the provisions dealing with tax administration I will simply pick two items. The one dealing with revocation of waivers I think is important. Once a waiver had been given there was no way of revoking it and in certain circumstances the taxpayer might feel that he or she would want to do that. So this is a good move.

We on this side of the House have been talking about award of costs for many years. I am pleased to see that it is included in the legislation before us today. Some taxpayers have incurred great expense and put a lot of time and effort into fighting tax cases. Some of those cases were brought by Revenue Canada in order to determine what the law was. I am pleased to see that there will now be a provision for the award of costs.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, these are mainly technical amendments. They have been a long time in the pipeline. Members on all sides of the House can be pleased with the input which they have had into this. It has been a combined effort by members on all sides of the House. I hope these provisions will be dealt with expeditiously in order that we can go from here to change the whole concept of taxation and address some of the matters which I have brought up in my presentation.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I found the remarks of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) very interesting. I have a question with regard to his proposal to abolish the capital gains tax. I recall that during a recent election campaign a certain candidate for Prime Minister said that the rich would "pay handsomely". Could the Hon. Member explain to us how "paying handsomely" fits in with abolishing the capital gains tax? Does the Hon. Member feel it is reasonable for a millionaire who owns paintings and sells them for 100 times his original investment not to pay income tax on that gain? That is the conclusion I am arriving at from what he is saying. After all, those kinds of sales are taxed only through the capital gains mechanism. Or is the Hon. Member proposing to replace the capital gains tax with some other method of payment through which the rich will pay handsomely, to use the expression of his Leader?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, let us consider a few examples. In the days before taxation of capital gains there was a lot of incentive for prospectors to go out in the bush and look for showings. If a prospector found one mine in his lifetime he was doing much better than average. A lot of that incentive was taken away when capital gains taxes were introduced. The same is true with people who have accumulated a few dollars and want to build an apartment house. It is no longer as attractive to do that as it was in the pre-capital gains tax days.

As a result of that there are less prospectors looking for mineral showings. There are less people building apartment houses and this is showing up in the low vacancy rates in housing. I am sure that is happening in the Hon. Member's own riding. People are just not investing money in that area. Therefore, if we could reduce or eliminate the capital gains tax it would be good for Canadian society because people would make investments. People only invest if they think they are going to show a profit. They do not do it for fun. If we take away all the incentive that will not happen.

I suggested that this topic should be a prime one for discussion and examination during the course of this Parliament. There are certain difficulties with regard to transferring income into capital gains, so we must study it carefully. I make no apology for suggesting that in my opinion we would be doing the nation a favour. We would be mobilizing capital and human energy if capital gains taxes were eliminated.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, as usual, I have listened to the eloquence of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). When he was in opposition on this side of the House he was very articulate in outlining the areas which the Government should change with regard to the tax system. Now, as part of the Government, he is in a position to implement these changes. Over the next weeks and months we will look forward to seeing these changes incorporated into the tax system to make it more attractive to the investor and to make it a fairer tax system.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources recently published a book about two inches thick which identifies all of the mineral resources which are sitting dormant and theoretically could be mined. Therefore, while his concern for the prospector is valid, there is another more pressing need, and that is to find ways and means of getting those deposits developed. I propose that the only way to do that is to take action on interest rates as opposed to leaving it to the free market place, as we have, in theory, at the moment.

The Hon. Member referred to the employee stock option section of this Bill. He suggested that this was going to provide an opportunity for employees to feel much more part of an operation. Would the Hon. Member explain how someone working for Imperial Oil who owns 20 shares of that corporation is going to feel that he is a meaningful part of that corporate entity?

The Hon. Member referred to tax collection and how the Government is sensitive to the need to be compassionate in the collection of taxes. Why was it necessary to spend millions and millions of dollars and hire 350 tax collectors to collect taxes? Does the Member see this as a way to develop confidence in the people of Canada and the small business sector? Will having more tax collectors badgering people to pay taxes develop a new sense of confidence in the country?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I wish that I had 20 shares in Imperial Oil. I do not think it really matters whether you have 20 or 2,000 shares in Imperial Oil, there is still an incentive attached. You own part of it and you can keep it or dispose of it. If you keep it and work harder, presumably you will see the value of those 20 shares increase. It is pretty obvious that unless you happen to be the chairman of the board or the president you are not going to have a great effect on the fortunes of a corporation as large as Imperial Oil. However, to deny that there is any effect whatsoever would be exactly the same as to deny that a Canadian citizen has no effect whatsoever on the Government of Canada when he or she casts that one vote out of 10 million.

A lot of corporations that give employees stock options are small corporations. Had the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap listened diligently to the presentations which were made before the parliamentary committee, he would have understood that. Very often this mechanism is used in much smaller corporations than Imperial Oil. I think it is valid not only for the small corporations but also for the large ones.

• (1240)

The second question dealt with the hiring of more employees for Revenue Canada. Perhaps it was wrong to describe the extra employees as tax grabbers. There will be a lot of people required in the operation of Revenue Canada.

One of the difficulties we have now is that the people who have been employed there have been overworked. Anyone who has tried to call up the Department of National Revenue to make an inquiry with respect to an assessment or whatever knows that one cannot get through. I tried this once as an experiment. I attempted to call Zenith 4000, the office in Edmonton. I tried ten times and let the phone ring about 20 times on each occasion. It is just impossible to get through.

Many of these new employees will not be going out hounding people to pay their taxes but providing the service that taxpayers require. We will now have people who will be able to meet with a delinquent taxpayer and work out a schedule for repayment rather than just going in with a garnishee stamp. The idea behind hiring more people for the Department of National Revenue is to make the tax system more fair and equitable and to provide services that the taxpayers require.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments being over, we will resume debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this Bill is as important in terms of what it does not do as much as what it does provide. It makes no effort to deal with some of the real inequities and unfairness in the tax system.

The Bill addresses some of the necessary changes that are required in the tax system. These matters have been discussed on many previous occasions by Conservatives when they were in opposition and by Liberals when they were in government. It is surprising to note the changes in attitude with respect to some of these clauses. However, that seems to reflect the kind of political structure we are in. Bill C-7 does not deal at all with corporate capital giveaways, nor does it address the increasing number of loopholes within the system.

My colleague who spoke earlier suggested that there are many Canadians in this country who pay no tax at all. There is no attempt in this Bill to deal with those people, whose numbers are growing every year. In 1971 there were only eight people who made over $100,000 and paid no tax at all. By 1981 that number had increased to 1,490. The reason for this increase of almost 1,500 people who pay no tax is that there have been more and more loopholes introduced into the tax system to allow them to do so. I believe it is the Government's responsibility to review the tax sytem, to make sure that this no longer happens and that those people are taxed in some manner.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) spoke about capital gains and suggested that this was one possible method for increasing the amount of investment. However, I would also point out to him that within the present tax system it is also a method for increasing the number of people who make more than $100,000 or $200,000 without having to pay any tax at all.

The capital gains structure as it presently exists is very unfair. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic made some very valuable comments about the need for studying capital gains and how this should be done. One of the inequities of capital gains is that one pays taxes on only half of one's capital gains, whether it is $50,000 or $500,000. You pay only on half, as if you had earned that same amount of money working. This Bill does not deal with that unfairness which has been built into the system.

It has been our view that during the past decade, while the government systematically increased spending to provide a government that cared about the people, at the same time it proceeded systematically to diminish the tax base. Consequently, that reduction in tax revenues has resulted in the kinds of deficits that we now face. The Government must now look at ways to restore that tax base which has been lost over the past 20 years. Most of that tax base has been lost as a result of tax credits to large corporations.

I am particularly interested in the attempt in this Bill to achieve some fairness for farmers. I speak particularly about that portion of the Bill which allows RRSPs to be purchased by farmers who are selling their farms and the rollover provisions for farms moving within the family.

The Conservatives came to Prince Albert in large numbers to reveal the Prince Albert manifesto. They promised real relief from the farm financial situation and have taken a couple of steps in that direction in this Bill. However, the Government has not yet made an effort to deal with the main problems facing the farming community.

Be that as it may, I am pleased that this Bill has revived the measure from the previous Bill to provide an opportunity to farmers to buy RRSPs for half of the capital gains, up to $120,000. It has been widely stated that in many cases the capital that a farmer has developed in his land is the only retirement capital he has. Consequently, he needs a mechanism that will allow him to use that capital without much of it being siphoned off for tax purposes. I congratulate the Government for introducing such a mechanism.

The Prince Albert manifesto addressed a number of other important issues which needed consideration. The Minister has indicated that these were up for study, but many of these have been studied before. I think the Conservative Party when in opposition put forward a very acceptable approach to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act and the inequities which caused farmers a lot of trouble in the last few years.

In this Bill there is a definition of a full-time farmer. I suggest that later on in Committee of the Whole deliberations it will be necessary for the Government to define exactly what it means by a full-time farmer and exactly what it means by that ability to purchase RRSPs. Over the last four or five years the definition of a full-time farmer and a part-time farmer has become so involved, that they are so difficult to define, that no farmer who happens to work off the farm for a period of time really knows how he is going to be classified. Will this definition allow a person losing money, one who has to work off the farm, to take advantage of the RRSP situation?

We have heard from this Government about what it is going to do to help relieve the financial problems of farmers. We are looking forward to a little more action than we have in this Bill. Up until now we really have had nothing which amounted to a great deal of action to help farmers with their financial problems.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? If not, we will resume debate.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this is clearly an attempt on the part of our Party to make certain that the changes that go through as part of Bill C-7 do not do so in some kind of automatic and carefree way, but instead become subject to scrutiny and a general discussion about the direction in which we should be proceeding in tax policy. This is, after all, the first piece of legislation that has come before us from the federal Government dealing with the tax system. For ourselves we have felt that the priority in the tax system should be to bring in measures that establish some serious move toward fairness, some real advance toward a system that treats ordinary Canadians in at least as equitable a way as the many rich taxpayers who benefit from so many loopholes and the many corporate and personal tax advantages that allow them to escape from paying their fair share of the tax burden.

We as a Party would have brought in for priority action not the discredited past regime's efforts at some small tax changes, which were efforts many members of the Conservative Party attacked. We would have aimed to bring in changes that started to establish once and for all through at least a series of dramatic gestures a new sense in the country whereby Canadians can look forward to a tax system which is fair and just instead of a tax system which is unjust, unfair, and incredibly complicated.

We would first have moved to do something about the incredible tax breaks for the corporate sector of the economy. We would look at capital allowances provided to companies over and above the normal depreciation which can be taken off a company's corporate income. We would look at the very fast write-offs which have been provided for new investment, fast write-offs given automatically, not given to projects that otherwise would not go forward. For instance, there are the regional industrial development expansion grants which go only for specific jobs in a context where companies would not otherwise move forward. We would look at the very fast write-offs for exploration and development within the resource sector. We have seen the way in which these have increased dramatically. We have seen the conclusions of economists, quite universal on this matter here in Canada, that this attempt to funnel more money to the corporate sector has not resulted in increased jobs. It has not even resulted in increased business investment in Canada. Instead we have seen a slowdown in investment. Despite the incredible tax breaks, we have seen the corporate sector really not establishing new jobs for Canadian workers.

We think there has to be action on the very high level of tax advantages provided the corporate sector here in Canada. That is not because we do not want to see serious efforts made to help the business community establish more employment for Canadians. We have been the people who have defended programs like the industrial and regional development program against the significant cut-back of planned expenditures which this Government has recently initiated. We believe that the way the corporate tax system has been used to provide a whole set of automatic tax credits, not related to performance, does not make economic sense. It is not fair, it is not effective, and it should not be happening.

We feel the priorities of this Government with respect to tax avoidance are simply wrong. The Government has hired a significant number of new tax inspectors to go after ordinary Canadians. At the same time officials admitted privately before the changes in secrecy rules which will make it a little more difficult to do so in the future that the largest source of tax avoidance, tranfer of payments made by corporations outside this country, do not receive the scrutiny they should.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, who will of course continue after the recess, but it being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

IMMIGRATION

ANNUAL REPORT—FUTURE IMMIGRATION LEVELS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, last week, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) tabled the annual report on future immigration levels. I am somewhat skeptical, since I am afraid this report shows a drastic change in our immigration policy, a change for the worse. In my humble opinion, the Progressive Conservative Government is about to give up our traditional humanitarian stance for a more opportunistic one, by favouring the more prosperous immigrants to the detriment of certain less fortunate groups.

The new economic direction the Minister of Employment and Immigration seems to be adopting is an alarming one. From the moral point of view, it is unacceptable to continue to close our doors to workers and selected workers, because after all, their ancestors built this country when it needed them to clear the land and do backbreaking labour. At the time we did not care whether immigrants had thousands of dollars to invest. Today, now that Canada is developed and is gradually recovering from the recession, must our admission criteria be financial ones, from now on?

If that is the case, it denotes an attitude that is to be condemned, because it ignores those people who are trying to join their family members in this country, while there are also thousands of people for whom Canada could be a place of refuge and provide a better life.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE BETWEEN MASSON, P.Q. AND CUMBERLAND, ONT.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, some Hon. Members on the government side seem to be both confused and divided. With the apparent support of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner), the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has decided that a bridge would be built between Masson (Quebec) and Cumberland (Ontario) and that a preliminary study would be started very shortly, with the approval of the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard). On the other hand, the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) has made the following statement, as reported in the Le Droit daily:

> If such a study ever takes place, it will certainly not be funded by Ottawa, for this bridge has never been listed among the government's priorities.

Are we witnessing a tempest in a teacup? Knowing the atmosphere of secrecy within which this government likes to operate, I suggest that one of its Hon. Members should at least have the decency to tell the other the time of day, unless this is a case of two Hon. Members fighting to get the upper hand. Is the government going to clear up the matter, or will he let fate decide on the taxpayers' backs whether or not we will get a bridge or a study? The Deputy Prime Minister may be the only one who knows the answer to this question, but alas, as you know, Mr. Speaker, he was struck by a strange disease on September 4 which has rendered him totally mute.

Mr. Speaker, this rightist government is acting awkwardly, and it is clear that one right hand does not know what another right hand is doing.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING—ADVANCE NOTIFICATION OF CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, recent reports would have it that Cruise missiles might again be tested in Canada this coming winter. There were several complaints last winter dealing with inadequate notice to civil aviators along the test route which traverses the western Northwest Territories and northern Alberta. In order to avoid unfortunate accidents, civil aviation should be advised well in advance of the time, date, and route of missile tests. Also the altitude and speed of the missile and the tracking aircraft should be published. The Department of Transport ought to issue NOTAMs with this information, not at the last minute but sufficiently in advance of the tests so that the many pilots and passengers who regularly travel along the test route will not be placed in any unnecessary danger.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

SUSPENSION OF CABLEVISION PROSECUTIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), and Members of the House, a situation which has serious implications regarding confidence in the Government. Last week the Government stopped all prosecutions against cablevision operators who had ignored the regulations of the CRTC. In some of the communities involved, legitimate licensed cablevision operators who had sought and obtained CRTC recognition, and who had met all the rules and regulations contained in their licences found themselves in competition with cable operators who were operating without CRTC approval. Until recently the Department of Justice had decided to prosecute those cable companies operating in contravention of the CRTC in recognition of the legal, legitimate, and licensed cable operators, but now the Department has stopped the prosecution process.

What signal does this send to licensed cable operators? How is the licensed cable operator able to compete in such an unfair market situation? I would ask the two Ministers involved to take immediate action to stop the stay of prosecution, especially for those communities where a licensed cablevision firm is operating in competition with an unlicensed firm.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

INCIDENCE OF SUICIDE AMONG YOUNG INUIT—PLEA FOR GOVERNMENT CONSIDERATION

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, the Inuit, who comprise 85 per cent of my riding, have gone through a period of tremendous cultural upheaval for the last 20 years. Although all 33 communities can now boast of modern conveniences such as education, public housing, and satellite television, the appearances are misleading. This weekend another Inuk youth terminated his own life in frustration at coping with the laws of the land.

This is not an isolated case. Many of these unfortunate events take place in communities where cultural clashes are the greatest. Many young Inuit are finding it more and more difficult to cope with modern problems affecting the North, where jobs are few and far between. The problem is compounded by the fact that our young Inuit can no longer live off the land like their predecessors.

Although many Inuit leaders are trying to address this problem, they are hampered by a lack of funds for effective programs. I am therefore calling upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) to look into the serious problems confronting Inuit youth in the riding of Nunatsiaq.

RESEARCH

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT RESEARCH CENTRE—BUDGETARY CUT-BACK

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the International Development Research Centre is one of the country's most important agencies which helps developing countries. Set up in 1970, it has built a fine reputation by helping research in poor countries into agricultural problems, health concerns, and social and economic issues. The annual budget of IDRC is in the $80-million range. Now, as a result of the Government's cuts, $10 million has had to be chopped from this year's budget. This is tragic for the poorer people of developing countries, sad for the international reputation of our country, and extremely demoralizing for IDRC staff.

It is especially tragic that these cuts hit IDRC this year as it is especially active in helping increase food production in Africa. A special focus has been on Ethiopia, where IDRC help has been going to the Institute of Agricultural Research and its Commission on Science and Technology to find more drought-resistant crop varieties and low-cost farm improvement systems.

We urge the Government to stop these cut-backs. The tragedy of African hunger cries out for more Canadian support through IDRC, not less.

METRIC CONVERSION

FREEDOM OF CHOICE ADVOCATED

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Sir John A. Macdonald was a great Canadian and a splendid parliamentarian. His legislation reflected the thinking of the great majority of his people. For example, both metric and imperial were placed in the statutes, and Canadians could use the one of their choice. As a result we have a metric money system, and imperial is used in measuring land. This made sense to the rank and file of the nation and to everyone else, that is, until the last Liberal Government came along. It said: "This freedom of choice is too simple. We will force everyone to use metric".

It was sensible where small measurements were used, such as in medicine, but completely stupid to change an excellent system of land surveys. That did not bother the Liberals; it fitted right in with their totalitarian concept of telling the people what was good for them. Scores of farmers exclaimed: "We are foreigners in our own land. We don't know how much we are getting for a bushel of wheat any more". Shoppers were dumb founded, not knowing how many pounds of meat they were getting for their dollar.

The simple fact is that there is a place for metric and a place for imperial. The people should make the choice, not the Government. Canadian people are not illiterate—they will not be changing acres to hectares, or bushels to hectolitres.

GUELPH GRYPHONS VICTORIOUS IN VANIER CUP FINAL

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, if the House would quieten down, I would deliver a significant message.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Winegard: Last Saturday the attention of many Canadians was focused on a contest witnessed by the Governor General of Canada and the Hon. Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek). I wish to assure the House that the contest was well played and was a credit to Canadian university sports.

I also wish to assure the House that the Vanier Cup will be well looked after in Guelph. I regret that the rules do not allow me to congratulate that fine team.

ABORTION

PROTECTION OF THE UNBORN—PLEA FOR LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, the acquittal of Dr. Henry Morgentaler has made a mockery of our jury system and is clear evidence that our abortion laws require immediate review to ensure more protection is given to the unborn. The acquittal is a serious indictment of the integrity of our criminal justice system. How can anyone have confidence in any justice system when a self-confessed criminal gloats over being acquitted after having committed a crime?

Abortion is wrong, Mr. Speaker. Human life is precious. From the moment of conception, life begins, and absolutely no person has the right to take that life under any circumstances. It is uncivilized and indecent for a nation to condone murder in whatever form, and in my view, abortion is murder.

While visiting our country, Pope John Paul II had this to say about abortion:

> This unspeakable crime against human life which rejects and kills life at its beginning sets the stage for despising, negating and eliminating the life of adults and for attacking the life of society.

I call on the Government, Mr. Speaker, to amend the Criminal Code to afford greater protection for the innocent unborn of our society, and to petition the Province of Ontario to appeal the Morgentaler acquittal immediately. To do otherwise would be to breed disrespect for the rule of law and the sanctity of life.

ABORTION

DECISION BASED ON MEDICAL CONSULTATION—PLEA FOR REPEAL OF LAW

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I too rise to make a few comments with respect to the acquittal of Dr. Henry Morgentaler by a jury in Toronto. I believe it is time that Parliament recognized that Canadians demand a change in this unjust law. Four times Henry Morgentaler has been tried before a jury and four times he has been acquitted. When will Parliament recognize that the fundamental decision on the question of abortion should be left to a woman in consultation with her doctor?

I disagree fundamentally with the views of the Liberal critic of the Solicitor General's Department with respect to this matter, and I urge Parliament to recognize that the present law is unworkable. The law has resulted in delays being faced by women from rural areas and women in areas which do not have therapeutic abortion committees. Those delays can in some cases endanger the life of the mother.

The present law is unworkable. Rather than returning to the days of the dark ages as advocated by the Liberal Member, I suggest that we move forward by repealing the provisions of the Criminal Code and listening to the voices of Canadians who are crying out for justice in this area of the law. I believe that Henry Morgentaler has blazed a path for Canadian women. He has been tried and has served time in jail. I think it is about time that Canadian Members of Parliament recognized that this law should be repealed.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

PROPOSED RELOCATION OF OFFICE FROM SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I., TO CHARLOTTETOWN

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, last week the people of my riding were given the unwelcome news that Prince Edward Island's conservation and renewable energy office is being moved from Summerside, which is in my riding, to Charlottetown, which is in the riding of the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan). To the people of my area this means a loss of 12 federal jobs, in an area in which federal jobs are a real rarity.

Prince Edward Island is in the unfortunate position of having to rely on oil as an energy source, and this results in islanders having to pay the highest energy costs in Canada. The CHIP and COSP programs which are being abandoned by the Government are very important to the people of my riding and to the people of Prince Edward Island as a whole. There are still many islanders who have not yet been able to afford to participate in the programs and it now looks as though they will not have the chance to do so.

I have two problems associated with the Government's change in policy. It is costing the people of my riding both jobs and higher energy costs, in a province in which energy costs are the highest in Canada. Therefore I would ask that the Minister reconsider both the move of the energy office and the abandonment of these programs.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INQUIRY WHETHER "CONSULTATION" IS THEME OF NEW GUIDELINES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

In the light of the new directives issued by the Prime Minister last Friday, concerning communications between the Public Service of Canada and reporters and the Canadian public, could the Right Hon. Prime Minister inform the House whether, before making this decision, the Government, as it has since the beginning of this session, used the word "consultation" as its theme, and could the Right Hon. Prime Minister inform the House whether his Government consulted the press gallery, the institutions that communicate with the public and the Public Service unions, before issuing directives that effectively prevent any communication between public servants and the Canadian public?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course the end of my hon. friend's question is entirely erroneous. The purpose and in fact the wording of these directives is such that we are trying to expand communications, not restrict them. I think the person in charge of communications in my office had a meeting with the president of the press gallery. I do not know whether other consultations are taking place, but I know there have been several.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In his book entitled Where I Stand, the Right Hon. Member indicated that all of the briefing papers related to the development of any policy should be made public. How can it be that he can write such a thing before the election campaign, but today he will not permit any bureaucrats to deal off the record with background information? How can the Prime Minister not allow bureaucrats to give the press background information about the different political options faced by the Government at the time of making certain decisions? How can the public understand these policies if bureaucrats cannot say anything without being quoted in the press?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that my hon. friend has read my book. However, it is clear that he did not read the guidelines. While I acknowledge that the guidelines are not perfect, they are designed to be helpful and to be open. The public servants are not there either to defend or criticize government policy. Pursuant to their oath, public servants are there to explain policy objectively at all times. The guidelines provide for that in abundance. Moreover, in the spirit of openness, they suggest to public servants that they ought to feel completely free in regard to their comments, and to be on the record and be quoted. That is consistent with a policy of openness. Those guidelines were prepared not with a view to shutting down communications but to opening them up and placing them in a reasonable perspective, and that is all they were about.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, if a bureaucrat were to decide to give some background information to the press that would show to the press and to the Canadian public that there were flaws in policies but that there were ways to remedy the situation by giving the public different options, can the Prime Minister give the House the guarantee that this bureaucrat would not be penalized by curtailing his advancement in public life?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if a public servant found a serious flaw in public policy, then, pursuant to the oath taken by that public servant, he should inform the Minister of it and not anyone else. That is his responsibility and that is what parliamentary democracy and a sense of responsibility are all about. We are trying to ensure that that public servant, if contacted by anyone, quite freely and objectively explains government policy in the manner that he feels is appropriate, without any recrimination or reprisal by us. It is an invitation to public servants to feel free to go on the record, in those areas where they are responsible, to explain public policy and to do so with the full knowledge that they have the backing of the Government and the House of Commons.

PRIME MINISTER'S LETTER TO MINISTERS AND DEPUTY MINISTERS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister just said that public servants are to feel free to speak to the public. In answer to another question raised by my hon. friend, he said that the guidelines, while not perfect—the understatement of the century—are designed to assist public servants to be helpful and open, and that they should feel completely free and open. Could the Prime Minister explain to the House why, in his letter to Ministers and Deputy Ministers, he said the following:

—Ministers have also agreed on the need to review with their Deputy Ministers the current communications policies, procedures, resources, and management structures within their departments to ensure that communications with the public is managed effectively in accordance with the priorities of the government.

Why does the Prime Minister, in his letter to his Ministers and Deputy Ministers, place the management of the news in accordance with his priorities above the openness he now says is important?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I could respond to that if I had been accurately quoted. That is a distortion of not only the letter but the spirit of my communication to Deputy Ministers. Indeed, we inherited a situation of unprecedented secrecy which was imposed on the Public Service by the previous Government. We are trying to correct that in a manner which is fair to public servants to ensure the integrity and independence of the Public Service. That is what we want to do.

OFF-THE-RECORD BRIEFINGS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure my hon. friend that my intention was to quote verbatim from the letter which was published on Friday. My remarks can be compared with that letter.

If the Prime Minister is saying that he wants to change what he alleges was unprecedented secrecy by the preceding Government, why did he do something to change the guidelines followed by the preceding Government, the same guidelines which were put in place by the last Conservative Government; why did he make a change which would take away the right of officials to have off-the-record briefings without the specific consent of the Minister? That gag was not in the preceding guidelines. So much for his claim of taking away unprecedented secrecy. He has added to it; he has not taken it away.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That was not a question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

IMPLICATIONS OF GOVERNMENT POLICY—APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES TO PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is also with respect to the guidelines. Although the guidelines are an invitation to the Public Service to openness, apparently the Public Service Alliance of Canada has accused them of being a gag on their freedom of expression.

As the Prime Minister is well aware, public servants in the past have frequently been prepared to discuss the possible future ramifications of various public programs and policy decisions which have been taken by the Government with respect to jobs, implication for services and so on, after the programs have been announced.

I want to ask the Prime Minister to assure the House and the Canadian people that the guidelines announced on Friday last will in no way impede the possibility for public servants to discuss, both with the media and Members of Parliament, the possible implications for the future of policies which have been announced by the Government. Of course I am assuming that such discussions would be on the record as per the guidelines of the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy once again to provide that assurance. It was covered generally and, I believe, properly in the guidelines. Those guidelines are to be read in conjunction with my letter to Ministers and Deputy Ministers. The spirit of what we were trying to do is not inconsistent with the point raised by my hon. friend.

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF BACKGROUND PAPERS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly pleased to receive that assurance from the Prime Minister. In light of that assurance and the commitment to openness, the recent financial statement made by the Minister of Finance involved a series of cuts in services and increases in taxes which were very similar to the program of the Social Credit Government in the Province of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: Is there a question?

Mr. Robinson: I would like the Prime Minister to indicate whether any background studies or background papers were prepared to discuss the impact of the cuts in services and increase in taxes. If so, in light of the assurance which the Prime Minister has given to the House, is he prepared to make those documents public?

Mr. Speaker: I will now take the opportunity to remind the House of two things. First, a supplementary question should be supplementary to the first question. Second, there are rules in the House about continuing repeatedly to ask a question which has in the past been answered. In this case, on the basis of the first issue, it is not supplementary to the first question and I will not allow the question.

The Hon. Member for Gauthier.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: It is a good thing I do not record the votes. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR GUIDELINE DETAILS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. He stated that the guidelines would clarify the situation, but I submit to you, Mr. Prime Minister, that matters are getting more and more confused. Could you first give us the names of the three commissars, the triumvirs, the troika, the three musketeers you have appointed as substitutes for the President of the Privy Council? Their names first. It is important that we know them, because the newspapers do not seem to have much of an idea who this threesome will be. Second, could you supply us with a list of departmental information officers, their telephone numbers? All this is factual information, simple information—the names and telephone numbers of all those people, in order that we may phone them. And finally, have they been authorized to speak to reporters and Members of Parliament?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member for Jean-Robert that the names of the three ministers have been made public. They are the Government House Leader, the Minister of Communications and the Minister of National Revenue, if I remember right. As for the names and telephone numbers referred to by the Hon. Member, they are all listed in the Government Telephone Directory.

UNAUTHORIZED OFF-RECORD REMARKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is playing hide and seek.

An Hon. Member: He is skating.

Mr. Gauthier: He is used to playing hide and seek with figures. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could tell us if actually—

[English]

Does he really trust public servants when he imposes guidelines which state that off-the-record remarks will not be allowed unless authorized? What will happen to a public servant who speaks off the cuff to me as a Member of Parliament, or to a member of the media?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my experience public servants are all very prudent and able people. It would be unlikely for them to speak off the cuff to the hon. gentleman.

The question was raised in the press conference as to how we propose to police the guidelines. The answer is, there will be no policing. We trust in the integrity of public servants.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEPARTMENTAL BUDGETARY CUTS—INQUIRIES ABOUT EFFECTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is on the same subject matter. I listened with interest when the Prime Minister stated in answer to an earlier question that, in his view, the guidelines would permit public servants to talk about the future impacts of government policy in an open, on-the-record way. I think that is commendable.

Since a number of Departments—for example, the Department of Employment and Immigration which will have $400 million cut out of its budget, the CBC which will have an $85 million cut, and the Department of the Environment which will be cut by more than $30 million—will have job impact implications for the future, assuming these assessments have been done, and assuming what he said will be the case, that public servants will be able to talk about future impacts in a factual on-the-record way, will the Prime Minister assure the House that when questions are put about these matters factual answers about impacts in those areas will be given?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the public servants are completely free to explain government policy. That is what was stipulated and has been the case. All we are asking, to ensure objectivity and protection for the Public Service, is that this be done pursuant to these guidelines. It is not in any way intended to do anything other than, first, to ensure the right of the public to know and, second, to ensure the independence and impartiality of the Public Service.

IMPACT STUDIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, it is encouraging so far, but let us be more precise. In the case of the CBC an $85 million budget cut has been announced, and in the case of Employment and Immigration $400 million has been cut. Specifically, have impact studies been done within these Departments—I assume they have been—on the consequences of these cuts and what parts of the programs are going to be affected? And, if so, is the Prime Minister now telling the House that if an inquiry is made, either by the media or by a Member of Parliament, we will be able to get that impact information from a civil servant?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, not at all, Mr. Speaker. What we are saying is that government policy, and this has always been the case in this country, once fairly arrived at by the duly elected Government of Canada, is explained by public servants, is defended by the Government, and is criticized by the Opposition. The Public Service is there to explain the policy of the duly elected Government.

I am sure my hon. friend quite understands the impropriety inherent in his suggestion because it would effectively paralyze the Public Service in its right and obligation to provide Ministers with unfettered and unvarnished advice. I am sure the Hon. Member, given his respect for the parliamentary system, would not want to paralyze the operations of Parliament in that way. We want to protect the public servants. We want to make sure they are not criticized for being political, and we do not want to politicize the Public Service. That is why the protection is described in the manner in which it is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUDGET INFORMATION QUERY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I say to the Prime Minister that he cannot have it both ways. He cannot, eight minutes ago, say that civil servants can give information about impact in the future, and eight minutes later say: "Well, if you are going to be specific, they cannot". Either the Prime Minister is for open government, freedom of expression within the parliamentary system, or he is not.

The Prime Minister must make himself clear. Is he now telling the House that the kind of information which has been traditionally provided with budget documents in the past, even by this gang of Liberals to my right, will not be forthcoming? In the past we have been provided with forecasts of the impact of programs. Is the new Conservative Government not even going to give us that information?

Mr. Robinson: It is the same old bunch.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I believe I have responded quite adequately, Mr. Speaker, to the question.

HIBERNIA OILFIELD—ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STUDY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Contrary to statements by both the Newfoundland Government and his own Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, last Wednesday in this House the Prime Minister confirmed that the federal Government has received a copy of the environmental assessment impact study which was prepared by Mobil Oil on the Hibernia development. The Prime Minister promised to table the report in this House, Mr. Speaker.

Would the Prime Minister now confirm, while we are awaiting the document to be tabled, that Mobil Oil has determined, contrary to the wishes of the Government of Newfoundland, that the mode of production for Hibernia will be the use of semi-submersible rigs instead of the floating concrete platforms which had been proposed by the Government of Newfoundland and which could be constructed in that province?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm or deny that specific statement. However, in response to a question from my hon. friend from Cape Breton, I have been communicating with him in regard to the information he sought in his question. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was in Newfoundland last week putting in train the process of negotiating an offshore agreement to the benefit of Newfoundland and Labrador, something which escaped the capabilities of the Liberals for 15 years.

CONTENT OF REPORT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister tell this House why he was able to confirm last Wednesday that the federal Government had received such a report, and yet at the very same time in the Province of Newfoundland his Energy Minister was saying it would be withheld for six months because of an agreement with the Province of Newfoundland? What is being hidden in that report, Mr. Speaker?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question raised today is entirely different from the question raised last week. I believe my response to the question by my hon. friend from Cape Breton is one which has the overriding importance.

Mr. Chrétien: You will table it?

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister—

Mr. Tobin: You are wasting your time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You wasted all of our time.

Mr. Langdon: The Government has damaged the Industrial and Regional Development Program by eliminating aid for restructuring business climate and tourist projects and by cutting half the help to Canadians for modernization and expansion projects, thereby creating great uncertainty for investors. Is the Government prepared to suspend these changes in order to permit the affected business enterprises, unions, and communities, to consult with the Government and plan fair and more effective changes in this program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is presently in British Columbia in the process of signing that kind of agreement, as we have been doing in a number of areas across the country. The object of the exercise is to restore a degree of stability to the political climate, to ensure that the private sector ceases to be clobbered to death by a Government which has been repudiated by the people. We are trying to work together with the provinces and the private sector to create a climate within which that new degree of prosperity can be brought about.

CONSULTATIVE PROCESS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister would agree that this IRDP case—and we are talking about the program in general, not about agreements with the provinces—is an example, to use his own words, of "deficiencies" in the Government's consultative process? Would the Prime Minister, therefore, commit himself to consult with businesses and communities before undertaking these changes which so badly hurt communities across the country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of consulting with the provinces and with the private sector. Should the application of this policy bring about an injustice with which the Hon. Member is familiar, I will be happy to take it into consideration, because the object of the exercise is to provide a better climate for the attraction of investment capital and the creation of jobs for Canadians.

IMPORTATION OF BEEF FROM IRELAND—IMPACT ON CATTLE INDUSTRY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Given that the last Liberal Government did nothing for eight months to stop the importation of highly subsidized beef from Ireland that filled the quota, to the detriment of our cattle industry and U.S. importation, what is the Government doing to make sure that such a catastrophe will never happen again?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I can take some comfort and satisfaction in the fact that I am getting a question rather than a statement under Standing Order 21 from the Hon. Member.

Mr. Broadbent: Wait until tomorrow!

Mr. Wise: I can assure the Hon. Member that shortly after assuming the job of Minister of Agriculture I held discussions with the people in that industry. We have had a series of interdepartmental meetings. We have concluded those meetings and I have a cabinet submission going forward. I hope to be in a position within a matter of days to announce a program and a policy which will indeed ensure that what has happened to the beef industry—which has cost that industry between $25 million and $50 million in 1984—will not happen in 1985.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION INTO EXPORTATION OF WEAPONS TECHNOLOGY

Mr. John V. Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It was reported last Thursday that the RCMP is involved in the investigation of a U.S. company suspected by U.S. authorities of shipping weapons technology to the People's Republic of China. This U.S. company is said to have links with Canadian companies. This information was revealed to Neil MacDonald of the Ottawa Citizen by the Solicitor General. In our view it was improper for him to comment on the RCMP investigation of this matter. Will the Minister indicate to the House whether it is the policy of his Government to reveal and comment on criminal investigations prior to charges being laid?

• (1440)

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I believe it has been the tradition to confirm, when asked, that an investigation was under way. That is all the information that was given.

ENERGY

VENTURE OILFIELD PROJECT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I am sure he shares my optimism for the potential of the Venture Field off Nova Scotia. The problem is that the Government does not yet have its fiscal regime in place, yet the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that Mobil Oil must move forward in the next few days on the Venture project. How can the Government expect the Venture partners to proceed when the fiscal regime is not yet in place?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister was conveying to Mobil that, indeed, the Government is highly enthusiastic about offshore development in Nova Scotia, as it is about development off the coast of Newfoundland. The Minister was conveying to Mobil and other interested partners our view that we would be very helpful in the development of the field, and assuring them that the fiscal regime as it is brought in will not place them at a disadvantage vis-à-vis anything that might have been available in the past.

NEGOTIATION OF OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, in June the Prime Minister announced that he had reached an accord on an offshore agreement with Nova Scotia, yet this accord now seems to have evaporated. Can the Prime Minister tell us why this accord is no longer in existence and why he and his Government are now saying that it may be at least six months before an offshore agreement can be reached with the Province of—excuse me—Newfoundland?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am sorry, indeed it was with the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador where we felt that an extraordinary resource available for the benefit of the people of Newfoundland and Labrador could be developed for the interests of all of Canada. This development had been unnecessarily and unfairly stymied for 15 years, and we went about—

Mr. Tobin: Answer the question, for God's sake. Cut the blarney.

Mr. Mulroney: —in a reasonable way and brought about a program designed to benefit Newfoundlanders in this regard. We are pressing on with good progress in searching for a definitive accord which I am sure will come very shortly, to the satisfaction of all Members of the House with the possible exception of the Hon. Member from Corner Brook.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POLICY AFFECTING SEVERANCE PAY AND RETIREMENT BENEFITS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration who will know the shock that employees for Tranquille Institution in Kamloops received recently when the provincial Government closed it down and sent lay-off notices to many of the employees that would extend well into January. She will know they also received a second shock when they found out that she had introduced a policy whereby severance pay and—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, does the Hon. Member have a question, please?

Mr. Riis: Is the Minister aware of her policy on reduced UIC benefits relating to earnings from severance and retirement benefits? Does she realize what this is going to do to the people who have already been so adversely affected?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the severance pay program announced means that those people receiving severance pay will have their unemployment insurance payments delayed until that severance pay has accomplished its purpose.

REQUEST THAT INTRODUCTION OF POLICY BE POSTPONED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in a spirit of consultation, and because of the fact that it has been promised by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of Employment, would she take it upon herself to extend the period whereby this policy will be introduced for, say, two months, to allow adequate consideration and consultation to take place, so that she will be well aware of the consequences for those affected by this very disastrous policy, before she continues?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is certainly a very worthwhile recommendation by the Hon. Member and I will take it under consideration.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

PROPOSED RELOCATION OF OFFICE FROM SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I., TO CHARLOTTETOWN

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, and in her absence I will direct it to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Last week it was announced that the conservation and renewable energy office located in my riding in Summerside was being transferred to Charlottetown in the riding of the Minister of State for Tourism. This will result in 12 jobs being lost in an area where there are very few federal jobs. Did the Prime Minister consult with the Province of Prince Edward Island, with the Mayor and Town Council of Summerside, or with the Chamber of Commerce, before this decision was made? If not, why not?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will be back tonight and will be happy to respond to the Hon. Member's question tomorrow, I am sure, and provide him with all the information. However, I understand that the implementation of that decision has been delayed pending her arrival.

RESEARCH

PROPOSED TOXICOLOGY CENTRE PROJECT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Environment. The cancellation of the $15.2 million Toxicology Centre at the University of Guelph and the University of Toronto will have a very adverse effect on the development of toxicology expertise in Canada. This was to be a centre of excellence. It will also have a very negative impact on industry and our competitive position in the products we sell abroad. It will also reduce our ability—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question? I have been rising consistently on Members whose preambles get longer and longer. With great respect, does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I was just pointing out the adverse effects of this decision by the Government. Why has the Government cancelled this project which is so important to the health and safety of Canadians and which will have such an adverse impact on the sale of our products abroad?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is true that construction on the Toxicology Center at the University of Guelph has stopped. This was a joint project financed by the Province of Ontario and the Federal Government which was supposed to cost $32 million, but the latest estimates show that construction costs alone may reach $50 million.

I would remind my hon. friend that we are talking about construction costs, about construction of a building and facilities, and not about expanding the capacity for toxicological research. In fact, we shall continue to finance toxicological research, and the Federal Government is giving the Province of Ontario $3 million this year for research in that area, of which $700,000 will go to the University of Guelph.

CONSULTATION QUERY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Government talks about increasing R and D budgets and talks about consultation. I ask the Minister if there was any consultation with the Province of Ontario before this announcement was made as a result of the slashing activities of the Minister of Finance? It seems to me that this is an important project which should have been continued, and I would be surprised if even the Tory Member from Guelph, who is a former president of the University of Guelph, was consulted on this action.

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a correction here. The plan to cut this expenditure was made within the Department of the Environment, recommended to Government authorities and approved by Cabinet. Furthermore, I am consulting with my Ontario counterpart, Mr. Brant, with whom I had a long meeting last Friday.

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—EFFECT ON WINDSOR TELEVISION STATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I will make this short. My question is for the Minister of Communications. Last week the Minister indicated that the reported savaging of CBC television in Windsor was just a matter of rumour. Is the Minister prepared to assure the House and the people of Windsor that the bureaucratic nabobs at CBC will not be allowed to emasculate the programming mandate of CBC in Windsor, or elsewhere in Canada, as a result of the $7 million cuts?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in respect of everything concerning this question, as long as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, through its president, Mr. Juneau, does not tell me its plans concerning the implementation of budget cuts, and as long as I have not heard from them, those are only rumours as far as I am concerned, in the sense that anything suggested, predicted and written within and without the CBC is a rumour until such time as I have received official confirmation.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, there has been a good deal of discussion today about the promise of the new Government to consult with the Canadian people. However, I would like to know what the Minister intends to do to help people who live alone, are aged 55 and have no income.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ENFORCEMENT OF MAINTENANCE AND CUSTODY ORDERS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Following a two-day meeting with Justice Ministers from across Canada, the Minister stated that he was prepared to make accessible information from federal data banks so that defaulters of payments of maintenance orders could be traced more easily. The Minister stated that 80 per cent of all men can afford to pay but 50 to 75 per cent of them default, and provincial police cannot find them.

Will the Minister give Canadians his assurance that the promised new Divorce Act will include an effective national system of enforcement of maintenance and custody orders, thereby assuring a mechanism whereby such awards will be respected, and assuring that women and children are not forced to become wards of the state?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is yes, and I hope you approve of that.

APPLICATION OF LAW

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, as divorce falls under federal jurisdiction, maintenance and custody orders emanating from divorce decrees should be included in the Act and should apply equally across Canada. Will the Minister assure us that the law will be the same for all women, and will be applied equally across Canada in order that we can expect justice and equity in this matter?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the law will not only apply to all women, it will apply to all spouses. I do not discriminate against men either.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

"A CAPITAL SHIP FOR AN OCEAN TRIP"

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence I would like to address my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. At a time when the Department of National Defence is suffering a $154 million cut-back as announced a couple of weeks ago, why is the Prime Minister allowing the Vice Admiral's yacht, known as the Admiral's Barge, to be outfitted with an additional $50,000 worth of equipment, including shag carpeting and such tactical things as ice-making machines?

Mr. Benjamin: It is a perfectly legitimate question.

Mr. Speaker: It is a perfectly legitimate question. It might be a legitimate question for the Minister of National Defence, if he were here. My problem is that in his absence that is probably an Order Paper question. I will let that question stand if the Prime Minister chooses to answer it. I just want to make that point for other days on these types of technical questions. I will let it stand. The Prime Minister may choose to answer.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, may I then put it to the Prime Minister another way. Why is the Admiral's Barge, or this 40 foot craft, being sent to the Caribbean when it has never been sent there before? It happens to be going in January and February of 1985.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: For your Christmas holidays.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): It was either the Caribbean or Baie Comeau—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —and because we believe in freedom of information we let them make the choice. We do not want to put muzzles on civil servants or military.

I am sorry, but in the absence of the Minister of National Defence I cannot provide the detailed response to which my hon. friend is entitled. However, since the Minister will be away for a number of days I will look into it and provide the detailed answer as quickly as I can.

I should say that the prefatory observation is inaccurate. The commitment of the Government is to enhance the conventional military capacity of Canada and to treat service men and women with the kind of respect that they deserve.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. Considering that, since 1967, all the Prime Ministers of Canada were involved in the development of Canada's national capital, here is my question: since all the Prime Ministers have been involved, does he intend to appoint a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate to consider the future of the National Capital Commission, in light of the fact that the weekend newspapers reported that many people have expressed the desire to become chairman? Now that the Gréber plan has been completed and implemented, I should like to ask him whether he intends to set up that special joint committee to consider the future of the National Capital Commission?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we do intend to proceed without undue delay with some appointments within the National Capital Commission and to depoliticize it. The commissioners will undoubtedly want to meet with Hon. Members of all political stripes with a view to discussing that issue.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we are continuing to debate the principles associated with Bill C-7. In our opinion, it is a question that concerns the degree of priority the Government has given to what is essentially a housekeeping Bill as opposed to some more fundamental initiatives that would do something about the unfairness of the tax system.

We are particularly concerned about the way in which the Government, in an effort to draw more tax revenue, has focused on individual taxpayers through the establishment of a new set of inspectors to deal with them as opposed to focusing on the corporate sector.

Before we rose at one o'clock I was dealing with the question of transfer of payments by large corporations, both Canadian and foreign, and the way that permits tax avoidance to take place. That costs us money.

In the past we have heard comments from officials in the Ministry of National Revenue that indicate very clearly that they do not have enough inspectors to be able effectively to police the large number of transactions that take place across borders by Canadian and foreign corporations dealing with their own subsidiaries. There are classic cases, such as Canadian companies with subsidiaries in the Bahamas, or Bermuda, which on paper will sell items to that subsidiary and then buy them through other subsidiaries, with the material never actually moving back and forth from one country to another. In each case, the effort is to avoid tax responsibilities and tax levies here in Canada.

Instead of concentrating on these important examples of tax avoidance where literally millions of dollars are lost to the Canadian authorities, the tax department in this country has focused on small Canadians. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), has talked about a number of these cases in the context of British Columbia. With respect to my constituency of Essex-Windsor, we have discovered that many low-paid waitresses have been the focus of detailed investigations by the tax authorities of this country. We have seen dozens of women who often work part-time for very low wages being harassed by the tax authorities because of suspicion on their part that these women have not been declaring the tips which they received as waitresses.

In fact, as a result of detailed investigations by the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) and myself, we have discovered that people affected in this case are being attacked by Revenue Canada even though in many cases these women have kept careful records of the tips they have received. Their strong feelings have been conveyed to those tax authorities that this was deliberate harassment rather than any kind of fair attempt to get a sense of what was really going on in their personal finances.

We suggest that the Government, rather than giving priority to tidying up tax matters left by the last regime and making a systematic attempt to harass yet more individual Canadians through new tax inspectors, should be making an effort to tackle the tax avoidance problem associated with transfer pricing and attempting to establish more fairness in the tax system by improving the corporate and personal tax system.

It is fairness in the personal tax system which is perhaps the largest problem about which we have heard from our constituents throughout the country. Our Party believes that the tax system should be a good deal more progressive. While the tax system looks progressive on paper at the moment, when one actually examines the effective marginal rate of taxation as analysed this past year by the National Anti-Poverty Organization in a detailed report, one finds that the effective marginal tax rate for those making over $50,000 a year is only 29 per cent. The rate for those earning between $40,000 and $50,000 a year is only 29 per cent. Even for those earning $35,000 per year the effective rate is only 28 per cent once you take into account income which is exempted from tax through various exemptions. That is not a very steep increase in the tax system reflecting the principle to which I think most Canadians hold. If you earn more you should pay a higher share of the dollars you are receiving to the personal income tax system.

We are also concerned within the income tax system about the way we continue as a country to rely on deductions rather than tax credits. As we know, a tax deduction for a registered retirement savings plan of $5,000 is worth very much less to somebody who is making, let us say, $25,000 a year than it is to somebody who is making $50,000 a year. Even though the progressive nature of the tax system is not great, nevertheless the marginal rate of tax is higher on that $5,000 for the person who is earning $50,000 a year.

We urge the Government to move to reform our system by shifting from a system based on deductions to a system based on tax credits, following the principle of the child tax credit scheme which is one of the few examples in the tax system of a tax credit rather than a deduction approach. We also suggest that the system of tax expenditure needs to be brought back into our budget. A number of my colleagues have already made this point. We consider it serious and important that we have as taxpayers a continuing record in which various tax exemptions and tax advantages are being shared across the income classes and throughout the country.

Finally with respect to the income tax system, I urge the Government as it conducts a more comprehensive analysis of changes that need to be made to take a careful look at the tax credit for children. At present this tax credit has given us a lump sum. The result is that many poor women go to tax agencies of various kinds and receive their tax credit prior to receiving it from the income tax department. They have to pay from 10 per cent to 15 per cent of the tax credit to the tax agency.

I suggest we establish a system which sees to it that that tax credit is paid in monthly sums to families affected so that people receive the money not in a lump sum but automatically, in the same way as family allowances or old age pensions are received. It seems to me this would make it easier for families who need the child tax credit; they would then receive it in a more effective way and it would make more of a contribution toward alleviating poverty.

We as a Party have been arguing on tax issues for many years. We have had reference to the Carter Commission by a number of speakers. We feel, and it is one of the reasons we are prolonging this debate today, that it is very important to have a full-scale, comprehensive and effective review of our tax system. Our leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), suggested in the election campaign that we should set up a royal commission on taxation. This could take in the whole set of issues we have been talking about today. A royal commission could bring some of the best minds in our country to look at our tax system and see if we could not make it a much fairer instrument for economic growth and equity. Many people in this House have been speaking about this since the start of our parliamentary session.

We have today what is, in effect, a housekeeping measure from the past regime. We hope in the future that we will see serious efforts at tax reform in the areas I have been talking about. We hope the Government will be prepared to take up our suggestion of a royal commission on taxation to try to establish a sense of fairness, a sense of efficiency and a sense of contributing to economic growth which all Canadians hope to see in the tax system.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? If not, we will resume debate.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention originally to debate this Bill but I think I must make some comments on suggestions made earlier today by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). He proposed that there be no tax on capital gains. I thought that was a rather interesting proposition when one considers it in the context of the over-all philosophy of income tax in general. It seems to be inherent in the whole structure that if one owns land and makes money on it, if one makes an investment and makes money on it, or if one has dividend earnings, this is in some way superior in the kind of treatment it deserves compared to income earned by dint of hard work.

I do not think I have ever heard it suggested that there be a depreciation allowance for the physical damage that results from a lifetime of hard work. It seems to me, from the point of view of the Canadian worker, that there should be some focusing on this aspect of our taxation system. Why do we have a taxation system that is so determinately punitive to the poor and to those who must make their earnings by physical labour? What is the philosophical premise on the basis of which those who invest in fine art or property may keep much more of what they earn compared to those who work in the mines, in the factories, in the restaurants and so on?

My colleague the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has referred to the situation in Windsor where waitresses have been harassed because it is assumed that some trivial amounts of money are not being reported for income tax purposes, irrespective of the fact that upon request to do so they have supplied all the information on the basis of which they can be properly taxed.

I note this strange dichotomy also permits Revenue Canada to harass those who plead their cases to those who would want to be their elected representatives. There is clear evidence that those who have reported their circumstances, recorded this pattern of harassment, have been harassed yet more. I hope in the future, the not too distant future, that this Government will begin to right the disproportionate imposition on the poor of the taxation burden.

• (1520)

There have been repeated references to the Conservative progressivity of the tax system and to the need for a minimum income tax. There have been references to the lightening of the burden of large corporations and to the special treatment accorded to doctors, lawyers, dentists and so on. I do not think we need a further recital of those facts to make it clear beyond any reasonable doubt that there is a need for considerable reform, reform which will be fair not only with respect to particular types of tax incentives, deductions and so on, but in addressing the fundamental issue to which I referred earlier, that is the fundamental difference in treatment or the way in which we regard those who make their money by physical labour compared with those who make money simply because they have money.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Accordingly, the said Bill stands referred to Committee of the Whole.

CUSTOMS ACT
CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to put Bill C-9 before the House today. It would enact the amendments to the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff set out in the notice of Ways ands Means motion tabled on November 8. Our Government is proceeding with this legislation early because of its vital importance to Canada's trade performance.

All Hon. Members of the House know that there is a general movement toward freer trade world-wide. This Bill enhances Canada's commitment to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. These measures were originally brought before the House by the previous government on February 15, 1984. Bill C-9 is particularly important because it will enhance Canada's participation in the multilateral trading system by implementing a new method of valuing goods for customs purposes in line with our GATT obligations.

The Bill also introduces certain amendments to the Customs Tariff related to the implementation of this new valuation system. It expands the duty-free product coverage of the Customs Tariff in line with the expanded coverage under the GATT aircraft agreement. It removes the condition for certain tariff items that goods must be of a class or kind made or not made in Canada in order to qualify for specified rates, as well as providing for a number of miscellaneous tariff changes.

With respect to amendments to the Customs Act found in Part I of the Bill, it might be helpful if I described the context within which Canada decided to change its valuation system as of January 1, 1985. For many years there has been a growing recognition among the world's major trading nations that the openness of the international trading system could be strengthened by moving to more standard and transparent procedures which affect the flow of trade.

Since Canada relies to a great extent on international trade for our economic well-being, it is crucial that we support and participate in these multilateral efforts to harmonize international trade procedures.

One of the major initiatives of the Tokyo Round of multilateral trade negotiations concluded in 1979 was the establishment of a customs valuation code, under which all major trading nations of the world would establish the value of imported goods for the purpose of assessing customs duty in the same manner. By knowing the rules of the game in advance, exporters and importers alike would have greater certainty in conducting their business transactions in international as well as in domestic markets. Under the customs valuation code and in the proposed legislation now before the House, the price paid by the importer to the exporter for the imported goods will be the value on which duty is applied unless certain clearly defined conditions exist.

Those of us who are familiar with the current Canadian system realize that this approach is quite different from the one currently applied wherein the value for duty is, as a general rule, the price at which like goods are sold in the exporter's domestic market.

In spite of the advantages foreseen in adopting this code and the fact that Canada was able to obtain greater access to more markets as a result, this decision was not made without costs.

Many of our trading partners had customs valuation systems which closely approximated the provisions of the code. Their adherence to the code required only minor adjustments on the part of their business communities and customs officials. Canada's system of customs evaluation, on the other hand, was unique and our implementation of the code required a substantially greater reorientation of customs procedures.

In addition, analyses indicated that the base upon which some goods would be valued for duty would be lowered and the level of protection afforded to Canadian manufacturers by the tariff would be diminished. Thus, during the Tokyo Round Canada attached two conditions to the adoption of the customs valuation code. The first was a four-year extension to the deadline for implementing the new valuation system. While our GATT trading partners agreed to bring their systems into line with the code by January 1, 1981, Canada's obligation to implement the code will be January 1, 1985.

The second was our right to increase tariff rates, wherever necessary, to maintain the same level of production. Against this background it was extremely important for the Canadian business community to have the fullest opportunity to comment upon the legislation implementing the code and upon the effect its implementation would have on their tariff protection. Through the Tariff Board individuals were encouraged to make their views known and public hearings were held. The vast majority of recomendations made by the Tariff Board following these hearings were accepted for implementation. In summary, these amendments to the Customs Act will provide over the longer term more certainty and clarity for importers.

Since these provisions are also reflected in the statutes of our trading partners, we can be sure that a similar certainty is available to our exporters. Indeed, this type of transparency and openness can help to strengthen the multilateral trading system and increase world trade to the benefit of all.

Three aspects of the proposed Customs Tariff amendments contained in Part II of the Bill are related to the new valuation system. They are intended to maintain protection which could have been lost by Canadian producers resulting from the implementation of the new valuation system. I must emphasize that we are not proposing—and it is important to mention that we cannot propose—under our international obligations increased or new protection for these individual items.

First, tariff rate increases are contained in Schedule I of the Bill of individual items where the termination of the current system would lower the value of the goods on which duty is collected. These rate increases have been recommended by the Tariff Board following a series of public hearings. However, certain adjustments were made to the Board's proposals to reflect the scheduled Tokyo Round multilateral trade negotiations reductions and to reflect certain concerns of the business community and our trading partners.

Second, the customs valuation code does not allow the use of the current ministerial prescriptions whereby the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) can establish values for duty for certain classes of goods in cases where values cannot otherwise be determined under the law. To replace some of these ministerial prescriptions, the Bill would implement an advance of 25 per cent of the existing tariff rate for used and less than prime quality goods. This was also a proposal of the Tariff Board developed after discussion with interested sectors of the Canadian business community.

● (1530)

In order to ensure that this advance is applied only where necessary, the legislation would allow the Governor in Council to make regulations to define these goods, to exclude certain goods from the application of the advance and to allow for suspension of the application where appropriate. Finally, as a new measure, importers will be able to avail themselves of the appeal procedures contained in the Customs Act when used and less than prime quality goods and the tariff rate advance are in question.

I might add that consultations with our trading partners have also been completed. They accept these measures as being compatible with our international rights and obligations.

Effective January 1, 1985, Part II of this Bill will also implement the expanded duty-free product coverage of the GATT Agreement on trade in civil aircraft. Since Canada already extended duty-free entry to most of the 32 new-product categories now covered by the agreement, only minor inclusions need to be made to our duty-free provision. However, export opportunities to markets of the signatory nations including the United States, European communities and Japan will be improved as a result of their removing tariffs on these 32 categories of products.

As a result of Tariff Board recommendations, this Bill also removes a condition established for 19 tariff items that imported items must be of a class or kind made or not made in Canada in order to be allowed entry at specified tariff rates. The changes being proposed represent only some items contained in the board's proposals. The remaining items are being held for consideration at a later date.

Effective February 16, 1984, the Bill also introduces a number of miscellaneous tariff changes. One change is an increase in the limit for duty and tax-free entry of unsolicited gifts from $25 to $40. This will be welcomed by Canadians who receive gifts from friends and relatives abroad and is also consistent with the limits established by other countries.

Duty-free entry is also being extended for a wide range of capital equipment used by semi-conductor manufacturers. These companies now export over 90 per cent of their production, and this measure will assist them in lowering their costs and help them in export markets. A number of other minor changes are included in the Bill which respond to requests from the private sector or which resolve certain technical administrative problems for customs officials.

In conclusion, let me emphasize that the measures proposed in this Bill are very significant because they will enhance Canada's contribution to the multilateral trading system by bringing Canada's customs valuation procedures into line with those of our trading partners. They are also significant because they are of benefit to many sectors of the Canadian business community. I hope that the House will agree that they are worthy of speedy passage, bearing in mind Canada's international commitment to implement the GATT valuation code by January 1, 1985.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, we had a most interesting morning as we heard Members of the government side discover new virtues in the measures introduced this morning, measures which in most cases were identical to those introduced in the last Parliament through the Lalonde budget. It is interesting how measures which would ruin the country in February have now become, under a new Conservative Government, measures well worthy of support.

We find ourselves in the same situation with the current legislation. This legislation seems to be virtually identical to measures introduced in the February 15 Budget. The present measures to amend the Customs Act and Customs Tariff have been combined, but I cannot see any essential difference between the two. There are some small differences in drafting, one or two differences in timing, and the lack of seven further tariff rate increases which were proposed in 1984. Otherwise, the measures seem to be identical to those of February, 1984.

I shall now wait with great interest to hear Members on the government side tell us what good measures these are, whereas last February they were telling us how disastrous they were.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am again pleased to have an opportunity to comment on Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff. The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has very clearly outlined the nature of this Bill and its importance in terms of bringing Canada's trade practices into line with those of her major trading partners. For that reason, and recognizing the important role that trade plays in Canada's economy, we are certainly quite prepared to see quick passage of this Bill. This would send a very clear signal out to those people involved in importing and exporting that Parliament wishes to see their entire sector expanded.

Basically, Mr. Speaker, this Bill does two things. It changes the way in which goods imported into Canada are valued before they are assessed customs duty and it changes the customs tariff on a number of goods. The Minister has indicated that this is simply a move in the direction of the GATT customs valuation code that ought to be in place by January 1, 1985. This was agreed upon during the Tokyo round of GATT negotiatons. It was there that Canada made that commitment, and this Bill basically ensures that that takes place by that identified date.

Bill C-9 provides that goods being imported into Canada will be valued according to their transaction value or the value of the goods as paid by the importer. At present, the value of a good being imported is assessed at the fair market value of the good in the country of export. Perhaps I can use an example. If a Canadian importer were to import Sony television sets from Japan, under the present system, the Sony television sets would arrive in Canada and would be assessed a customs duty based upon what Canadian officials would determine to be their fair market value in Japan. Under this new provision, we have a system in place under which the Sony television sets would arrive in Canada and would be assessed by customs officials a duty based upon the value the Canadian importer paid for those television sets. That simply brings us into line with the system used by most of our trading partners and certainly by all of our major trading partners.

I believe it is important to recognize that the present system under which we have been operating and which is in place at the moment carries with it the potential for erecting a form of non-tariff barrier. If the Government wanted to slow down the flow of a particular good into Canada, it might lower its estimation of the fair market value of the good being imported. Then the good would be coming into Canada at a price lower than it sold for in the country of export. That would then allow Canada to lay a charge of dumping and the Government could proceed with anti-dumping actions. Essentially, Mr. Speaker, that erection of a not-so-subtle tariff wall could happen if that were the kind of action we wanted to take.

The new system that we are debating presently and that is currently being followed by our major trading partners would remove the potential of setting up a non-tariff barrier. The valuation of imported goods being in accordance with their transaction value will eliminate this arbitrary nature and establish a fair and therefore more neutral system. I think anyone who has either worked in the area of import-export or is familiar with the customs process would recognize the advantage of this particular change. For that reason, we shall certainly see that the Bill receives rapid passage.

I would like, however, to use this opportunity to mention two or three other things. When dealing with the nitty-gritty of Bill C-9 and looking at the various changes to the tariffs, we see that it poses all sorts of questions. I do not think that second reading is the time to raise those questions. For example, to make the case, toilet bowls imported into Canada that are made of a certain china mix would be charged a general perferential tariff of 9 per cent. However, urinals that are being imported into the country would come in free under the same tariff. These are some of the interesting questions which could be addressed during the clause-by-clause discussion, to identify why toilet bowls are treated differently from urinals.

I would like to take a moment during second reading debate on this extremely important Bill to reflect on the discussion which has occurred across the country in recent weeks, with some enthusiasm, concerning the whole matter of free trade. It involves either sectoral free trade, as has been witnessed over the past number of months with respect to the farm implements, computer information and the like, or general free trade. I have not been enthused or encouraged by the love-in which has occurred between the new Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States in terms of their coming together as friends and the indication of what it might mean for Canada in terms of developing a sound national economy. Neither have I been encouraged by the comments made in recent weeks by the Government with respect to FIRA. I have never sorted out in my own mind what the fear of FIRA was all about, recognizing that almost every country of which I am familiar has some form of FIRA process in place. Many of those processes are much more involved and complicated than our present and past FIRA regulations. I have never been convinced that legitimate investors and legitimate businesses have been hindered in entering into the Canadian economy as a result of FIRA. If they are not prepared to lay out clearly how their activities will be of benefit to our country, I am not certain that we should be so enthusiastic about welcoming them to Canada.

Canada today has some real problems associated with the branch plant economy. The fact that Canada has had tariff walls to a certain extent has resulted in certain firms being forced to open branch plants in Canada in order to have access to the domestic Canadian market. That has created both advantages and disadvantages. The advantage is that there is a plant in place, jobs are being created and there is a value added to the general economy. If the tariff walls were removed and there were to be free trade between Canada and the United States—and if there were a North American common market, which President Reagan speaks of and for which many Ministers opposite have indicated enthusiasm—then the branch plants would have no reason to be in Canada. We would find many of them simply moving back to their head offices. Consequently, a free trade situation might result in a significant reduction in economic activity and job creation in Canada.

On the other hand, we must recognize the downside of the branch plant economy. It has resulted in a situation where, for many, there has been little if any incentive to expand their operations and to seek new market opportunities elsewhere. If their total rationale for existing in Canada is simply to serve the Canadian market, why would they expand overseas? Why would they open up research and development facilities if all they really are is a branch plant of an American or other foreign parent company?

It is a Catch-22 situation. But we should not simply fall all over ourselves in enthusiasm over free trade, particularly when in the United States virtually every single action before Congress today that touches on the American economy is one of protectionism. The Americans are implementing stronger procurement policies. "Buy American" has never before been so strong. All sorts of subtle tariff walls are being thrown up in terms of imports. When that process is going on in the United States Congress, and there are approximately 27 Bills which Congress is to examine that will essentially place a protective wall around a certain sector of the American economy, for us to be leaping for glee at the concept of free trade somehow makes me very nervous. For that reason, we should move very cautiously.

Recognizing how important trade is and how important it is to develop a strong manufacturing sector within the Canadian economy, we should look for a moment at one of our major trading partners other than the United States, and that is Japan. In 1983, we exported coal, lumber, rape-seed, wood pulp, wheat, meat and other commodities to Japan. We imported automobiles, telecommunications equipment, photographic goods, televisions, radios, phonographs and similar types of good from Japan. I think that serves as an example of one of the fundamental problems which we face as an exporting country. The goods which Canada exports encourage the development of our traditional resource sector at the expense of the development of a strong manufacturing sector. That manufacturing sector is labour-intensive. It will create jobs, and a stable long-term economy will be developed.

In short, as we move into discussions of free trade, particularly with the United States, it must be done in a much more open fashion. Those discussions must allow all major players to have an opportunity to express their views, whether they be small manufacturers, large national corporations, labour groups or others involved at various levels of government. We must provide an opportunity for them to ensure that whatever decision is made, either on a general basis or on a sectoral basis, is made in the best interests of Canada.

I would like to return briefly to Bill C-9 which I am pleased the Minister has introduced. It is a step in the right direction in that it allows us to examine the whole business of what goods should be kept out of the country as a result of tariffs and what goods should be attracted to the country. Particularly, I want to bring to her attention the differentiation in tariff rates. Of course, the Minister is well aware that there are different rates. The Bill cites the British preferential tariff, the most favoured nation tariff, the general tariff and the general preferential tariff. As Canada takes on its rightful role as a major trading nation, that being to assist developing countries which have commodities that Canada wishes to use, I think it is important for us to recognize that in some areas our existing trade categories may not reflect the concern which we have for many developing countries. Perhaps the time is not far off when we will have to look at the manner in which we categorize our trading preferences. By looking at that area we might be able to take steps which would enhance our trading relations with certain developing countries.

We look forward as a Party, Mr. Speaker, to examining the clause-by-clause element of Bill C-9. I would like to indicate to the Minister that she can be assured of our speedy support to have it in place.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to just say a few words in connection with the Bill. There are really two cases to which I want to refer. The first case happened in Calgary where a dentist ordered supplies from the United States. The dentist lives about 35 miles or 40 miles outside of Calgary and the day these goods came in he was very busy and unable to go into Calgary to pick them up. He wanted to send someone else, so he phoned the customs office and asked what the cost was so he could send along the money. They would not tell him the cost and told him he would have to come in himself. I feel it is pretty ridiculous that the dentist could not send a messenger to pick up a parcel which was sent from the United States in his name. There was nothing illegal about those goods. The customs people refused to tell him the amount so he could send a cheque.

I would like to urge the Hon. Minister to look at the way in which some of these customs officials have been acting in the performance of their duties. There is no call for this type of procedure at all.

The other point I want to mention briefly is that for a long time there seemed to be a practice of not putting any duty on equipment which was going to be used to produce food, in other words, farm equipment. Within the last few years this practice has been gradually changing. Last year a move was made to put custom duties on this equipment, and the farmer had to wait for as long as six months in order to get his money back. When one is buying heavy equipment which costs $18,000, $25,000 or $50,000, one does not have the resources to wait for six months for a refund.

I would like to urge the Minister to consider that equipment that is coming into this country for the production of food should come in duty free. There should not be a customs tax on this type of equipment because otherwise it simply means that we increase the cost of food to the consumer and put the farmer in that much more of a difficult position. If this tax is going to be refunded later, why go through all the rigmarole of collecting the money from the farmer, have him apply to get it back, and then make him wait six months for a refund? It is just a rigmarole which should not be tolerated. I would urge that there be no customs duty on agricultural equipment, because we want to keep the cost of food as low as possible. The layer after layer of costs we pile onto the shoulders of the farmer will eventually have to be paid by the consumer. I believe there is a sound argument for saying that any equipment which comes into Canada for the production of food should come in duty free.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that what I want to do in my remarks, really is to agree with the Hon. Member who just spoke, to some extent. The concern of our Canadian West about tariffs is not a new phenomenon at all. For a long time the western farmer has been faced with having to buy everything on the protected market and sell everything on the free market. Consequently, there is a section of Canada, and, unfortunately, it is the western part of Canada, which is much more affected by tariffs and customs than are other parts of Canada. Therefore, the West has generally objected to the level and the structures of both tariff and non-tariff barriers for two basic reasons; first, as pointed out by the previous speaker, tariff barriers or non-tariff barriers do increase the price of goods to the consumer. Therefore, the consumer pays a great deal more, particularly for production costs, than he would otherwise have to pay. Second, quite often the West has trouble selling goods on the foreign market because of import barriers. Our trading partners are much slower to deal with us when they know that we have high tariffs for goods which they want to sell.

It is very difficult, Mr. Speaker, to measure the actual costs or the benefits of Canada's protectionist policies. So much depends on the consumption patterns and on the degree to which domestic producers use the products. However, if one recognizes that the consumers' price is higher as a result of tariffs and that this tariff cost is distributed across the country according to the distribution of the consumers, then by dividing the costs by the number of consumers, one can actually come up with a cost per individual. Using this method one finds that each man, woman and child in Canada paid an extra $132.62 in 1983 as a result of import tariffs.

It becomes, therefore, important that we take a look at what industries in the country and what parts of the country are affected by these import tariffs. In western Canada the tariff cost to consumers was close to $1 billion in 1983. Yet it ended up affecting only 271,000 jobs in the manufacturing market. If one compares this to the eastern part of the country, to Quebec and Ontario, there is a much more positive effect. In fact, if we look at the tariffs in Canada and compare the East with the West, we find that the effect of tariffs on the West is negative. It costs us money all the time. We do not get enough effect from the barriers to be of any value to us in the West. In the East, in Ontario and Quebec, the tariffs are positive. In other words, removing them would be harmful, but removing them in the West would do us good. That is something that we must recognize and balance out in some way so that no part of the country is hurt. The Hon. Member who spoke previously indicated that one way of doing this would be to pick certain specific products or certain areas of the country and make sure that they would be less affected than they are under present circumstances.

• (1600)

I think it is important, Mr. Speaker, when looking at a Bill like this, that we consider the total tariff structure and its effect on the entire country rather than on specific areas or specific industries.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions and comments on the Hon. Member's speech? If not, we shall resume debate.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity to participate in this debate, and I will do so very briefly. I wanted to raise a few concerns I have about the shoe industry which is very important in my constituency. It employs several hundred people, principally around the Alexandria area which has one plant manufacturing all of the Adidas tennis shoes in this country as well as several other makes.

The previous government had extended the quotas on shoes until March 31, 1986, I believe. Beyond that, we still do not know what the plans are for that particular industry. We know that the industry is extremely concerned and has serious worries as to the future. It would like to know if the Government has yet formulated any plans and, if so, would it be willing to share them with this House at this time? I think we should remember that it is very difficult for our country to compete with some of the other shoe manufacturing countries, especially when you consider that almost 50 per cent of the shoes manufactured in the world are done so in the underdeveloped or so-called developing countries. Their labour is much cheaper than ours. We must recognize the fact that many people who work in our shoe industry here in Canada are indeed very low paid workers. Shoe imports in Canada in 1966 were only of the order of 10 per cent. By 1970, it had increased to 20 per cent. By 1977, it was 36 per cent, and I understand that it is now somewhere around 60 per cent. All this, notwithstanding the fact that the anti-dumping tribunal made several investigations in the area and succeeded in eliminating some of the damaging dumping of shoes onto our markets. Notwithstanding all of the restrictions we have had in the past, our industry is still suffering, and it is an industry which is very important to our country. Certainly it is very important in Ontario and Quebec as it is indeed in the riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

We should also be aware of the fact that most employees of shoe factories in this country are women and they are, as I stated previously, in low paying jobs. Therefore, we cannot say that shoes are expensive because of the high salaries paid in that industry. Indeed, the opposite is true, Mr. Speaker, as you will have recognized.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the Minister could take few minutes to respond to the statements I have made and use the occasion to outline government policy vis-à-vis shoe imports and indicate the current state of affairs. More particularly, will she explain to us if she is aware of the policy of the Government toward the quota system which, as I understand it, is supposed to expire some time in 1986? Perhaps the Minister could respond to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would bring to the attention of the House that once the Minister speaks, the debate will be terminated. Are there any questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask one question of the Hon. Member in connection with protecting shoe manufacturers in Canada. We have a shoe manufacturing firm in the city of Calgary which employs anywhere from 20 to maybe 200 people. They make cowboy boots, which are in great demand in the West. However, they get no protection whatsoever from tariffs. In addition to that, when they bring inspectors in from the United States to check their highly complicated equipment, there is a hassle every time and they are held up for seven or eight hours. I think this is information that the Minister should have.

My question to the Hon. Member is this: Was he aware that the western shoe manufacturers get no protection whatsoever?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious that what the Member wants to do is to bring this matter to the attention of the Minister rather than to mine, and possibly to the attention of the House. It does sound like a very legitimate concern. As to why officials of American equipment manufacturers are held up at the border, perhaps the Minister would be in a better position to reply to that than I. As to whether or not there should be tariffs on boots, cowboy boots in particular, I was unaware that there was not as page 41 of the new Bill talks about tariffs on boots, shoes, slippers and so forth. Apparently the Hon. Member is saying that such tariffs may apply to boots but not to cowboy boots, which is something of which I was certainly unaware and of which quite possibly the Minister is unaware as well.

I do believe that if we are to protect the footwear industry in this country, then the whole industry should be protected, be it cowboy boots, tennis shoes or any other kind of footwear. I do believe that in temporarily protecting the industry with a gradual phasing out of those protections, we could revitalize the industry, enabling it to obtain much needed new equipment and technology in order to compete on a long-term basis with other countries. It is obvious that the industry needs a certain period of time in order to be able to compete with those so-called developing countries with which it is very difficult for us in Canada to compete, even with the very low wages which prevail in that industry at the present time.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Hon. Member. His presentation did not really deal with the question of tariffs proper, which are under discussion, but rather with quotas, an allied matter. Is it true that the under-the-counter value of shoe quotas is something like $5 a pair? Does that not mean that the present practice of establishing these quotas costs Canadians an average of $5 a pair extra for every pair of shoes he or she buys?

Is it not a fact that those firms which squawk the loudest in support of shoe quotas are themselves guilty because they are at the same time the biggest importers of shoes? It is the same firms that manufacture shoes in Canada that want to import shoes. I wonder if any of the shoe manufacturers in the Hon. Member's constituency are guilty of that.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is asking me whether I want to pass judgment on corporate practices of companies in my riding and elsewhere. Obviously I am not in a position to do that, Mr. Speaker. I do not think you would want me to take the time of the House to evaluate the practices of corporations which manufacture cowboy boots. That would be highly improper.

In terms of tariffs costs on shoes, I bring to the attention of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic page 43 of the Bill which describes exactly what the tariffs are. They range between 18 per cent and 40 per cent. That would obviously not make a $5 pair of shoes worth $40 or $50 because 20 per cent or 40 per cent of $5 would not increase the amount by that much. However, it is a very necessary feature at the present time in order to enable the industry in our country to compete with similar industries in so-called developing countries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any further questions or comments? The question and comment period now being terminated, I recognize the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to make some comments with respect to Bill C-9. As my friend, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), mentioned, there are a number of areas on which I believe the Department would do well to focus so as to see if we cannot clean up some old legislation which is of nuisance value. I draw the attention of the House, and in particular of the Minister, to the practice of placing an exercise tax on farm wagons.

Historically, agricultural equipment has been brought into Canada without tariff. At the turn of the century and into the 1920s the farm wagon was used for a dray to pick up the mail and the goods for the garage and the store. Farm wagons were driven by horses around the villages and hamlets across Canada to deliver the dray to various points of business. Because the wagon was used for those purposes, it was classified as a commercial vehicle in customs and tariff regulations.

At the present time, farmers will import forage harvesters from another country. Often the undercarriage of that harvester is of a light weight and the farmer wishes to have a heavier weight carrier. If the new carrier is imported separately, it enters the country unattached to the forage harvester and is called a wagon. At that point the customs and excise tariff must apply. That really related back to a 1920s regulation which no longer makes sense. There are a number of people across the country in agricultural communities who would be pleased if the Department would study this inequity.

I would also like to bring to the attention of the House the matter of bees and beehives. The production of nitrogen-fixing clovers in the country and the importing of woodstock for beehives is a very important aspect of the food producing industry. Its capacity in terms of both the leaf-cutter bees and the honey bees is important as an industry in all parts of Canada. It is simply not good enough to say that the product is made in Canada and therefore there should be a tariff on it. If the product is not of sufficiently quality for the people who use it in the industry to be satisfied with it, there should be some exemption from the tariff. That product is made in Canada, but every year representatives of the Canadian bee industry say that they want to use hives that are made in another country. I believe that we should be allowed to do that until the Canadian industry produces a quality product that is satisfactory to Canadians. I have no doubt that Canadians can make that product to satisfactory standards. Giving a monopolistic licence to market a product without there being any competition or any regard to the quality of the product is detrimental.

This will be the first time in history that anyone has ever corrected the Hon. Member for Bow River, Mr. Speaker. However, he made reference to cowboy boots. There is no such thing as cowboy boots except that which you give to your four-year-old children at Christmastime. However, there are western boots. There are manufacturers of western boots in Canada. They make western boots for adults but not for children. When stocking a rack with boots you must have several pairs of each size. As there are Canadian manufacturers, you must buy from them, but they do not supply children's western boots. If you wish to get your young child cowboy boots, as my friend from Bow River calls them, you will find that they are not in ample supply on the shelves because there are no Canadian manufacturers of them and we can import only a small number. I believe that that ought to be reviewed within the regulatory process. Suppliers ought not to be restricted in the number of children's boots they can import simply because the larger sizes are available.

• (1620)

The final point I wanted to make concerns grain drying equipment. Farm implement dealers everywhere are bringing in grain drying equipment. They bring it in as models and set up fans, screens and floorings from separate components parts. Because the fans and the screens could be used for another purpose, when they are sold the dealers must pay the full brunt of the tax. I am simply saying that as long as there is an end user certificate for the use to which they will be put, I do not believe it matters whether grain drying equipment is sold as one component or in parts.

Those who are in the grain drying import business will say that there is a problem with selling component parts. It is often not necessary to bring in the full equipment because component parts can be added to existing facilities. It should not be mandatory to buy a full set of equipment when it is satisfactory to add component parts to the existing facilities.

My comments were intended simply to point out that there are some inequities in the customs and excise tariffs which can be improved upon in the regulatory process. I would encourage the Minister to review those and, if possible, to make the necessary changes.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Cultural Affairs—Budgetary Cut-backs—Consequences for Cultural Community. (b) Artists' Income; the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria)—The Census—Justification for Cancellation of 1986 Census. (b) Request that Cancellation be Rescinded; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Agriculture—Flood Damage Compensation for Farmers in Northeastern Saskatchewan. (b) Request for Immediate Payment.

CUSTOMS ACT
CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's comments about western boots in particular, as well as concerns raised by others about the boot industry. As an experienced outdoorsman in western Canada, does he know that a similar situation exists with firearms? This is in terms of duties that are paid on firearms that theoretically are available in Canada. However, upon examination, one finds that the firearms that are available to western retail outlets must be sourced in central Canada at a significantly higher price and in some cases, by their own admission, at somewhat lower quality. The same applies to ammunition. Does he have any experience with this as well?

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I can only attest to the fact that I am in fact aware of and in agreement with the observations that were made by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that a number of the Bills which are coming before the House in its early stages permit us to set out some of our philosophical approaches to such issues as taxation, which we dealt with this morning, and trade, with which we are dealing now. Since the Minister has launched consideration of Bill C-9 by giving us an outline of her approach to trade and the approach that the Government is taking toward trade, I want to comment on that approach and offer some counterpoising of a different approach which our Party intends to put forward.

In my opinion, the Minister was speaking very much in a framework which saw the need for us to move toward more free trade. It was in a framework that saw that movement taking place in a multilateral context, with GATT playing a very important role in the process, with safeguards being maintained for Canadian industry as this process is developed.

Of course, there are a number of other variants on this commitment to greater free trade. Some people are talking very much in terms of establishing our free trade with the United States unilaterally rather than with all the countries throughout the world. Again, there are variations within that approach. Some people talk in terms of sectoral approaches to such free trade, while others talk about an approach that moves across the board.

When we consider international trade in the 1980s, our Party questions the strategy of developing greater free trade. When one looks at the evidence, the reality is a movement throughout the world toward managed trade.

This type of trade operates at two levels. First, there is managed trade at the level of governments themselves. We have seen a movement by governments, both in developed countries and less developed countries, whereby a great deal of special financing is available for exports. They have many agencies operating in an attempt to promote trade expansion and penetrate new markets. In short, we see an attempt by governments to build for themselves new areas of comparative advantage in the international economy which will provide their respective countries with jobs and growth prospects in the future. This is not only evident in western European countries but it is evident also in the United States where, despite the free trade rhetoric of the Reagan regime, there have been a great many moves in recent months that threaten our economy and other trading economies throughout the world as a result of new forms of restrictionism within the United States. The most recent example is some provisions in the steel industry which have established particular labelling requirements for steel exporters to the United States. This has the effect of making our capacity to export to that economy a great deal more difficult.

I think most Members are aware that in addition to the Government's efforts to manage trade, we must recognize the effort on the part of large-scale firms to manage and organize trade internationally. In this respect we can talk of two kinds of development. First, there is the effort on the part of large corporations to set up for themselves an international system of sourcing abroad. At present, large international corporations use subsidiaries in different parts of the world to supply particular components to parent companies in the United States or western Europe. For instance, estimates of the situation in the United States indicate that close to 60 per cent of U.S. manufacturing trade takes place in the internal framework of the corporations themselves. This means that the prices that are established in that trade are often quite arbitrary and questionable.

In addition to this effort to set up international corporate structures to organize trade throughout the world, we see an increasing effort on the part of corporations to attempt to develop trade strategies based on a careful working through of new product developments and heavy expenditure on research and development within those product areas. They attempt then to allocate to particular subsidiaries throughout the world responsibility for that product once it is developed by the company.

We see a good many companies here in Canada which now have world mandates for particular products which have been developed through research in their parent companies. In these and other ways we have a movement toward managed trade in the corporate sector as well as in government legislation and regulation. I think for us to respond in the world as it is changing by being a good boy scout, by talking about freer trade when nobody else is practising it, by suggesting that, left to the market, somehow the trade that we as a country need to grow will just emerge, represents an incredible exercise in naivety. It represents an abdication of responsibility as a Parliament to the millions of workers in Canada who could be affected by this. It represents irresponsibility with regard to the thousands upon thousands of small business people who could find their hopes and opportunities eliminated.

I agree with my colleague from Saskatchewan who made the case for free trade that it is something that could benefit many of us. But free trade is not on the agenda of the world today. We can look all over the world, we can look at Southeast Asia, western Europe and the United States. Freer trade is not the direction in which countries are moving. Managed trade is the direction. For us as a small nation in this difficult and open environment, faced as we are with our own severe economic problems, simply to back off and say we will leave it to free exchange throughout the world, is not only naive but incredibly irresponsible.

It is particularly irresponsible to talk about establishing this kind of free exchange system with the United States. It is above all within the United States that the corporate sector is moving effectively, and because it makes sense for them, in the direction of more and more manged trade. We would find ourselves like the poor fly caught up in a spider's web. We would be at the outer extremities of a system of trade that has been built on the U.S. market itself. We would find company after company that presently has subsidiaries here looking to rationalize operations continentally and leaving us without any capacity to safeguard jobs and to protect our potential for growth for the future.

We will be bringing before this House tomorrow a case where precisely this kind of thing has happened. I am speaking of a takeover by an American company of the operations of a segment of Westinghouse responsible for small appliance production. Black and Decker has taken over these operations and is now in the process of rationalizing production. At the moment it can only rationalize production within Canada because we still have some trade restrictions. FIRA still exists and can still operate, but the result is that an operation is being shut down in Barrie, Ontario, which presently employs 600 people who are represented by a good Conservative Member of Parliament.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is incorrect. He referred to Westinghouse when he meant General Electric.

Mr. Langdon: The Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) is correct. It is a General Electric subsidiary rather than a Westinghouse subsidiary. I apologize.

The point is that a company has been taken over by another parent company, which in turn is attempting now to rationalize its world-wide operations, and in the process of doing so is threatening the jobs of 600 workers within a community in Ontario.

We see the chance of this kind of development in the future becoming more and more prevalent if we move in the direction of free trade with the United States. Some people are talking about an alternative which they call sectoral free trade. This moves in the same direction but will do so industry by industry. We have had some experience with that in the case of the automotive sector. We have seen that such movements can be beneficial to the Canadian economy, but only if safeguards are established that defend the industry by committing subsidiaries here in Canada to a specific level of Canadian content production in what they sell here. In the case of the auto pact, for instance, companies have committed themselves to 60 per cent Canadian content as an equivalent for each dollar's worth of sale of their vehicles here in Canada. We feel that that principle of Canadian content has to be there within any movement to sectoral free trade with the United States, or indeed with anybody else.

We believe strongly, and we have had it on good faith from negotiators from the United States, that they are not prepared to initiate and include safeguard arrangements in any of the sectoral free trade movements which they are presently talking about.

We would put ourselves in a situation where we would not be able to protect ourselves as we have been able to do in the auto industry. Rather than moving in this direction of freer trade, Mr. Speaker, we think the world as it is requires us to talk about what we in this Party call fairer trade, an attempt to establish, through the activity of government in close consultation with the corporate sector, with trade unions, and with communities across the country, a system of safeguards that will permit various key sectors of our industrial economy to expand effectively, to initiate more research and development and to use that research and development to penetrate new export markets, not on the basis of special arrangements with those markets but on the basis of competitive quality products which can be produced by Canadian workers and communities. We think particularly of sectors that are crucial to our future, for instance, the automobile sector.

It is important for us to accept the principle of the recent task force on the automotive industry of establishing Canadian content rules, not just with the United States and American companies as we presently have, but with Japan and Japanese companies. As I have stressed previously in the House, this industry now cuts across the country. It is not just an Ontario and Quebec industry. There are automotive investments in provinces such as British Columbia and on the other coast in Nova Scotia. If we move in the direction of serious efforts to build in Canadian content laws as the task force report suggested, we will have before us 30,000 to 50,000 new jobs which will benefit the entire country, not only central Canada.

Also I want to make it clear that when we talk about fairer trade, we are not talking about always building in more restrictions. We are also talking about seeing to it that our restrictions deal fairly with the different trading partners with which we are involved. For instance, at the moment we apply quotas in areas such as textiles and clothing to poor developing countries when those countries themselves are often not the threat. If we look at the case of textiles and clothing, we see that many of the threatening imports these days come not from Sri Lanka, against which we have quotas, not from Malaysia, against which we have quotas, not from India, against which we have quotas, but from the United States, against which we do not have quotas because frankly we are frightened to do so.

Our argument is that in establishing a system of fairer trade, it is important that we treat our trading partners equitably and that we approach them in an even-handed manner. We should stop making the Third World and poorer countries pay the price for competition in some of our poorer, more difficult industries. This competition is in fact coming much more from the United States and other parts of the world which are a good deal better off.

We lay before the House today an approach to trade strategy which emphasizes fairness rather than the freeing of the economy. If we adopt that approach, we will be safeguarding jobs for the future and much more effectively building the capacity to expand our economy through exports and through growth in the future.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment or two and then a question for the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). I disagree that the world is not moving toward free trade. If the Hon. Member as a member of these parliamentary committees will be able to visit Hong Kong, Korea, parts of the Philippines and Malaysia, he will find that the future lies with free trade if we get on the ball and capture our fair share. The whole sense of his speech was that he was fearful of free trade. We should look at Canada with its magnificent resources, our population, the fact that we have a higher standard of education than anywhere in the world, a stable political environment and an effective economic infrastructure. We have huge multinationals. Our banks are huge multinationals. There are four or five big oil companies in Canada, with 700 oil and gas companies mostly based out of Calgary. A good number of them operate on the international sphere. They are incredibly productive and valuable.

Why does my friend fear for their ability to operate? Why does he want to have protections which will hurt us? Indeed, a closed trading pattern will hurt our country more than any other country in the world. We trade even more than the Japanese for our wealth and welfare. Why does he want protections? Would he not think that Austria's trading practice vis-à-vis Germany is a good example to follow? That country has opened itself up, and its productive citizens have found thousands of niches within which they can fit and send products to Germany. As a result, its national wealth has risen enormously. Why does my friend appear to be fearful?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. It is a very good one. However, I suggest to the Hon. Member that his assumption is wrong. I certainly do not have a sense of fearfulness about the capacity of our country, our companies and our communities to compete. I am concerned about our country sending out our companies on which workers depend into the international market-place unassisted, unaided or unsupported by our Government and our trading strategy.

I have had a certain amount of experience with Southeast Asia. Recently I visited South Korea, Singapore and Hong Kong. I assure the Hon. Member, as indeed I am sure he is aware, that South Koreans do not let their companies go into the international market-place unsupported. We should ask why it is that Hyundai has succeeded in penetrating the market for automobiles in Canada in such a spectacular fashion. There has never been a more spectacular entry into the auto sector than in the case of Hyundai. Hyundai is strongly supported by the Korean Government. There is a major effort on the part of the Koreans to promote such exports and at the same time a very strong effort to see to it that Hyundai cars which are exported have a far higher Korean content than anything we require.

In the case of Hyundai and the Pony cars which come to Canada, over 93 per cent of cars produced in South Korea are produced with Korean content; 93 per cent of the value added in those vehicles is Korean. If we are to realize our tremendous capacity, the way to do it is not to leave our companies on their own. It is not to pretend that the world is some kind of easy picnic in the international market-place these days. It is to be out there supporting our companies, working closely with them and developing a strategy to build effectively upon our capacity.

This is what we are talking about when we talk about fair trade. This is why we make a distinction between that and free trade, which I think is a recipe for leaving our companies unprotected in what is a terribly difficult world. Some of them will still succeed, some of them will still do well. However, many of them could do much better if we worked aggressively with them and we recognized how naive it is to pretend that the world is not moving toward a managed trade system rather than a free trade system.

Mr. Thacker: The Hon. Member opposite referred to the automobile industry. Would he agree with the action taken by the government in the early 1970s? When the oil price was rising, our government stepped in and said that we would not be subject to any blackmail from the Arab community, and we subsidized it. The effect of that was to send signals to Canadians to continue to buy big cars and to manufacturers to continue to build them. In the meantime, Japan, Germany and many other countries with governments that faced reality used their top brains to create more efficient and lighter cars. The reason they are whipping us in the market is that our industry was misled by the government and led down the garden path. It happened because of that action taken by the government.

I suppose I am asking the Hon. Member to consider that as being a case which argues for government being very circumspect in its decision-making and that if it is to help industry, it be very careful in the way it does so. That was a clear example of a government decision that mortally injured the industry. Tens of thousands of people were put on the unemployment rolls because of the decision that was made back in the early 1970s.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, having read the Hon. Member's speech earlier, I have heard that argument before. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the direction in which the auto industry moved in the early seventies was a function not of Canadian Government policy but of what was happening in the United States. Unfortunately, the great overwhelming majority of research and development in that industry is now concentrated in the United States and responds very much to changing incentives and regulations imposed by the U.S. Government.

My own view is that the U.S. Government, by forcing its auto companies to move in the direction of more fuel-efficient cars, saved that industry for the 1980s. Without those government regulations, the U.S. auto industry would not have moved fast enough. It would not be in a position to compete in the way that it is finally beginning to compete internationally.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Hon. Member. Who really speaks for the NDP on this issue? Is it the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), who argued in favour of liberalized trade to help the developing nations? Is it the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), who also argued in favour of liberalization by showing figures to the House indicating that western Canadian agriculturalists were subsidizing inefficient industries in eastern Canada? Is it those two gentlemen from the West, or is it my antediluvian friend from the East, who continues to argue in favour of protective trade or managed trade or trade of whatever name he wishes to give it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) for a very short answer.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, we talk in terms of fair trade, an approach that would look sector by sector and region by region across the country to find ways in which our trade strategy can help to build our economy. Unlike the Conservatives, we do not believe that there is a single easy answer to everything. We do not believe that there is some ideological answer sitting in the textbooks that can be picked out. Instead, we speak for a strategic effort to use trade strategy to build our economy. This in some cases would lead to more restrictions and in other cases would lead to fewer restrictions.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over.

[English]

Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because I know that the Government is anxious to move to the question on the issue of the Customs Act and Customs Tariff. Most of those proposals were in fact proposals that had been introduced by the previous Liberal government. Naturally I am anxious, as are my Liberal colleagues, to move ahead with its passage.

At the same time, I wonder if the Minister who is carrying the Bill might clarify something to this House. Was the omission from this particular Bill of any particular response to the U.S. Government's congressional decision to limit the importation of steel products, particularly with respect to the labelling issue, intentional? The labelling issue has been brought to the attention of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) by myself and as well has been brought to the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) by myself and by my Liberal colleagues. I wonder if the Minister might clarify for the House what action she is contemplating with respect to customs and tariff changes that may come about as a result of the U.S. Congress decision to restrict steel imports into the United States because of peculiar labelling procedures?

I understand that government members have been endorsing the concept of free trade, not only on a sector-by-sector basis but also on an over-all basis. I know that those same Members would be most happy to agree with me and my Liberal colleagues when we say that if there is one industry in the world in which Canadians have shown themselves to be competitive on an international scale, it is the steel industry.

Perhaps the Minister could clarify to the House if, in fact, the labelling situation cannot be resolved through the efforts of Canadian lobbyists who are now working feverishly in Washington on this issue. Perhaps the Minister could clarify to the House what action she would be prepared to take with respect to tariff admendments which would in fact enforce similar restrictions on importation of foreign steel products into Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Tradition requires me to inform the Minister that if she speaks, she closes debate on this matter.

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that. In answer to the Hon. Member's question, the Government is looking at the question of the steel industry. It does not relate particularly to this Bill. I cannot answer the Hon. Member directly on the labelling issue but I will refer it to my colleague and we will respond to her. However, the matter does not relate to this Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the second time.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, the Bill stands referred to Committee of the Whole.

I suspect that it is probably in the best interests of the House to consent now to call it five o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper. Shall all orders and items preceding Number 6 stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

THE OFFICIAL DESIGNATION OF NOVA SCOTIA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants) moves that Bill C-201, an Act respecting the official designation of "Nova Scotia", be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the true tradition of private Members' hour, there should not be much debate on this Bill which is so patently fair, progressive and highly principled on the face of it. I certainly do not wish to take the entire time of the House between five o'clock and six o'clock, but I do want to describe briefly my private Member's Bill which I brought before the House on another occasion several years ago. After that, I remained quiet about the Bill because of the sensitivity of the bilingual question that seems to come up whenever I raise this Bill.

As far as I am concerned, if there ever was a reason for a private Member's Bill, there is a reason for Bill C-201, which is comprised of only one paragraph. It is a private Member's Bill which deals with a matter of public interest to the people of Nova Scotia involving no more and no less than the proper use of a proper noun in the proper context.

The proper noun we are dealing with, of course, is the name "Nova Scotia", which is Latin and, in my humble submission, therefore is not translatable to either English or French. If, under the BNA Act and under its original Charter, Nova Scotia was called "New Scotland", then in our day of bilingualism, the translation for that would be "Nouvelle Écosse". However, the fact of the matter is that the name is Nova Scotia. It is a proper name that comes from a grant made by King James I to William Alexander in 1621. This was before Canada was ever even conceived of in terms of any constitutional arrangement. There were Indians present, and I shall return to that.

There are many names in Canada, historic names which reflect our history and heritage, which are not and should not be translated. I must say that this Bill germinated when I was a new Member of Parliament. This is why I am glad to raise it again in a new Parliament which consists of so many new Members. I was a Member of a new Parliament back in 1966 when in this far corner of the Chamber a very eminent Canadian, who happened at the time to be an independent Member and the ex-mayor of Trois-Rivières, Mr. J. S. Mongrain, rose in his place every time an anglophone mentioned the words "Three Rivers". He would bring the proceedings to a halt. I suppose there were times in that new day of bilingualism that anglophone Members were irritated at the question of privilege or point d'ordre being raised on the use of the name Three Rivers.

Then there was the interesting situation of another eminent federal Member at the time, who has had some eminence in Quebec politics since that time, Gilles Grégoire. He represented part of the riding which now encompasses Sept-Îles. I worked in a place which was known as Seven Islands when the Iron Ore Company was only a dream. Before the railway was built along the Moisie River there was a fishing village with a population of 1,500 which was known as Seven Islands. However, quite properly attention was drawn to the fact that under the Charter of Seven Islands the proper noun for Seven Islands was Sept-Îles. Those points were made and they were accepted.

I submit that my case is even stronger than the cases which I have mentioned. I am not talking about a translation; I am talking about the use of a proper noun in the proper context. If there are Members, Nova Scotians or Canadians, who feel more comfortable using other appellations for my Province, then let them use them. The Bill does not restrict anyone or make it illegal to use any other name. Obviously I know the name that a majority of the people in my Province are familiar with, that is the name of la Nouvelle Écosse. If in their social context and in their dialogues they feel more comfortable using Nouvelle Écosse, so be it. Depending on the results of this debate today, the point of truth, frankly, Mr. Speaker, may become perhaps a problem between you and me. I believe it is high time that a name which has existed for three and one-half centuries, which is neither English nor French but is Latin, should be the proper noun which is used for my Province. I will have to consider my position and how obstreperous I will become if this Bill does not find favour with the House.

I will not quote all of the Latin of the King James Charter which was given to Sir William Alexander, although it is beautiful stuff. There are pages and pages of Latin which relate to Nova Scotia. That is the first part of my case.

One can say, "What is in a name?" I will cite some interesting and ridiculous situations with respect to what is in a name.

When I was first in this House, Mr. Speaker, one of your eminent predecessors was Mr. Speaker Lamoureux. He was a very gracious Speaker and obviously a great predecessor of yours. However, on the English side we did not call him "Mr. Lover". Nor did we call Gilles Lamontagne, the former Minister of Defence, "Mr. Mountain". We did not call and do not call Madam Sauvé, "Madam Saviour", although she was a Speaker who certainly saved the decorum of the House from completely breaking down from time to time. We did not do that because it would make a mockery of the sincerity and seriousness of bilingualism for us to become too fervent in deciding that every word should be translated, especially proper nouns. It is grammatically incorrect to translate proper nouns into another language, be it from English to French or from French to English.

In the present Cabinet we have Roch La Salle. Are we going to call him "Roch the Room"? We also have John Wise. Are we to call him "Jean Le Sage"? That obviously points to the absurdity of the matter. We could do it with Andrée Champagne, who is a lovely lady. I have not had the pleasure of formally meeting her too often, but I will certainly call her by her name and not "Andrée Field". That would be a mockery and an insult to her.

All I am asking is for fairness in using the proper nouns in the proper context. The Bill is very simple. Paragraph 1 reads:

> This Act may be cited as The Official Designation of Nova Scotia Act.

That is simple. It does not pose a problem. The second paragraph reads:

> In every place where the words "Nova Scotia" appear in any Act, regulation, statutory instrument, report, contract, lease, licence or other document the proper designation of such name in both official languages is and shall be "Nova Scotia".

I will not get into the situation of wanting rewritten all the laws which must be translated. I simply want to ensure from this day forward that we will not translate proper nouns when those words are not translatable.

I know Members in this House are versed in history and I do not want to take much of the time of the House, but I found it interesting, when I researched this matter, that the very name of Canada is an Indian name. We do not translate that. Ottawa is a very interesting Indian name. It perhaps typifies what we do in this city, but it is not translatable. Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan are other well-known proper nouns which are not English or French, but Indian and, therefore, not translatable. In terms of the name of Canada, there is some conflict in history which obviously occurred when Jacques Cartier sailed up the St. Lawrence and picked up some guides along the way. Those guides were probably Iroquois. They referred to the villages along the St. Lawrence as Kanata or Canadia. In effect, the translation from Iroquois was that this was the place of cabins or lodges. The translation of that into French from Iroquois became "Canada". That is fine. We do not want to destroy the heritage of 1867. We have the Constitution Act, the flag, the national anthem, and a Supreme Court which can stop things in Ottawa. We have done things to emancipate our national identity and to develop our heritage. Surely we do not want to turn back the clock in this context.

In terms of other names, we could take the great Province of Ontario. "Ontario" comes from two Iroquois words. I will not try to translate them, but in effect Ontario means "beautiful lake". Quebec is Algonquin, and means "where the river narrows". The other side of that is Detroit, but I will not get into that. Saskatchewan comes from the Cree language and means "rapid current". Manitoba again comes from the Cree language and means "the strait of the Manito" or "the strait of the spirit". The most interesting example is that of the capital city itself, Ottawa. I believe "Ottawa" comes from the Algonquin language and means the place to barter or the place to trade. I must say that the Indians knew years ago, before anyone ever thought of this place—which used to be called Bytown—that it would be the place where we came to trade or to barter.

These names are not translatable and they should not be translatable.

I would like to delve into history for a moment to amplify what I said about Sept-Iles and Trois-Rivières. The history of this is perhaps the evolution of Canada and of Quebec. There was a Bill introduced in 1915 in the Statutes of the Province of Quebec which referred to the City of Three Rivers. Then, because of many happenings and obviously the emancipation and the movement of the English and the French, in 1925 there was an amendment under the Statutes of the Province of Quebec which amended the English name "Three Rivers", and in effect said that the inhabitants and ratepayers of the City of Three Rivers would henceforth be known as inhabitants of the "City of Trois-Rivières". It was because of that history, Mr. Speaker, and I believe, quite properly, that Mr. Mongrain, as an independent Member of Parliament—and I sat back there against the back wall—whenever Three Rivers was mentioned by any speaker, would stand and in a very proper way draw to the attention of the House that this was not the proper name.

● (1710)

I will quote from an excerpt of Hansard of March 25, 1966, at page 3195. With regard to the estimates of the Department of Transport—that was when we had full supply in the House—Mr. Mongrain said this, among other things:

For the last 15 years, Mr. Chairman, the municipal councils, Chambers of Commerce, both junior and senior, and the school boards of my home town and riding have been writing to the various federal departments to underline the fact that the name of my home city is Trois-Rivières. This is true even in spite of the English version because the city is incorporated under the name of Trois-Rivières. A proper name is not translated and it is a grammatical error to translate a proper name. For instance, the name of our Speaker is Mr. Lamoureux but I would not speak of him in English as Mr. Lover. Mr. Batten is an English name but I would not call him. Mr. Planchette if I were speaking French to him. We have a minister by the name of Mr. Winters but I would not call him Mr. Hiver if I were speaking to him in French. The name of my riding is Trois-Rivières and I do not know how many hundred times we have to emphasize that fact.

Mr. Mongrain continues, in another part of his discourse, saying this:

But the pride we show in wanting our city's name to be expressed in our mother tongue should not be held against us.

This is the point I want to make. I take great pride in Nova Scotia even though I am basically of Irish heritage. We have a fine Scottish heritage. There was a grand fellow by the name of William Alexander. We have the celebration of the meeting of the clans. We have the tartan and the kilt. We take pride in our heritage. The fact that I am today pushing for the use of the proper name when referring to my Province is because of the respect I hold for my province, and for no other reason. It is a principle, as far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker. I only ask for the same fairness given to me as was given Mr. Mongrain with "Trois-Rivières" today and in the future.

I will not go into the whole evolution of history today, Mr. Speaker, because I would like other Hon. Members to contribute to the debate. But I repeat that I believe we make a mockery of bilingualism by translating names which have the strength of history behind them without the popular acceptance of the people who believe in their heritage. My home town, Mr. Speaker, is a place called Wolfville. It happens to be the seat of Acadia University. The whole history of the area comes from the Acadians. Every Nova Scotian and every constituent in my constituency talks about Grandpré. We do not talk about the "Big Meadow". We do not call Wolfville "La Ville du Loup". My mother was born in a place called Canard. I have heard about canards being used in canard à l'orange, but I have never known the area surrounding my mother's farm being known as "The duck land", Mr. Speaker. We do not call Whitehorse "Cheval Blanc". We do not call Mont Joli "Mount Jolly". We do not call the riding of the former Prime Minister "Royal Mountain". And, Mr. Speaker, we do not call Baie Comeau "Como Bay". I do not think we should.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that in fairness, equity and in history, this Bill goes right back to the 1621 Charter. I have a photostat of the BNA Act which is in English because we had evolved from Latin to English. We were not bilingual then. I would like an Hon. Member or the Table Officers to point out to me where there has been the legal move to use the name "Nouvelle Écosse" or "New Scotland" in referring to the Province of Nova Scotia. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that by the proclamation of Queen Victoria which brought us into nationhood—and Nova Scotia, of course, was one of the four founding provinces—the Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are united into one dominion under the name of "Canada". I suggest and submit, Mr. Speaker, that the 1867 proclamation brought us into being. Even in the Constitution Act of 1982, or whenever it was, which in effect reaffirmed the BNA Act and made the Constitution more modern, there is not a section in the statute which gets close to what they did with Trois Rivières—Three Rivers officially to designate the change from Nova Scotia to any other name.

It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that I am happy to have had the chance to speak for these few minutes before the House. I hope I have not over-stressed the point, but I do believe it is time we considered this matter seriously. One can say, "What is in a name?" But long ago an Hon. Member of this House, the Hon. Member from Shawinigan, stood in this House during a private Member's hour and wanted the name of Trans Canada Air Lines changed to that of Air Canada. There was quite a debate and the Bill went through. That was many years ago when that Hon. Member was relatively new. I do not expect the same hallelujah if my Bill goes through today. That was one of the first Bills to, in effect, make a name almost "alingual", but I do not even have to face that. The proper name of my Province is Nova Scotia; it is not New Scotland, it is not Nouvelle Écosse.

I ask the consideration of the House to reflect on my remarks. Hopefully, the reflection will conclude before six o'clock so that this Bill can be properly referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I believe that if we do get it that far, it is high time that Nova Scotians, including its Premier, addressed this problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be taking part in the debate on this Bill.

In fact, I was reading about past debates on the subject in some old volumes of Hansard, and I cannot help wondering why another attempt is being made to bring this legislation before the House today. I must say that I wish it were a quarter to six or six o'clock or whenever we are going to vote on this Bill this evening, because it will be very interesting to see how our Quebec colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party vote on this particular Bill.

I intend to be very brief to give these Hon. Members an opportunity to take part in the debate and show us how they intend to vote.

Mr. Speaker, the history of the Acadians in Canada is very important, although at times many Canadians have trouble remembering that particular history.

The Hon. Member who is sponsoring the Bill referred to the Acadians earlier, but I think his remarks need some elaboration. We should remember what happened in 1755, remember the deportation of the Acadians and their arrival in large numbers in Louisiana and related events.

Today, we should also remember the day when the Conservative Government of our country closed the consulate in Louisiana, which I think was a slap in the face of the people of Louisiana, especially Acadians. Today, this Bill is once more before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that as a Francophone outside Quebec, I am very reluctant to support this kind of legislation. That is why I fully intend to vote against the Bill, and I also wish to take advantage of this opportunity to urge my francophone colleagues here in the House of Commons to do the same, especially our colleagues from Quebec on the other side of the House. I would urge them, first, to rise in the House and let us know what they think of the proposed legislation and give us their views, and second, before the House adjourns this evening, to vote against the Bill.

We are told that the reason for presenting this Bill is that in 1621, the province was given the name "Nova Scotia". That may be so. In fact it must be so, because the Hon. Member said so. However, Mr. Speaker, in 1621 legal texts were probably all written in Latin. I therefore fail to understand why it is so important for us to remember this particular incident today. It is quite possible that at the time, a lot of other things were given Latin names as well, but today, these have been translated into other languages. Prince Edward Island is called "l'île-du-Prince-Édouard" in French, and when I go to the Maritimes next year, I want to be able to go to Nouveau-Brunswick, if that is what I want to call that province, and to "la Nouvelle-Écosse", if that is how I want to call that province. If the Hon. Member wants to go on calling his province Nova Scotia, he is welcome to do so. I think we should keep the province's French name, the way it has been translated for centuries. It is correct, and I think especially in the present context, it is a way of showing the Acadians of our country some small recognition, and we certainly owe them at least that.

• (1720)

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as this is my maiden speech in the House as Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State, I would like to start by congratulating you on your recent appointment.

I would first like to provide a few explanations on the origin, the functions and the responsibilities of the Committee responsible for geographical designations in Canada.

The first organization in charge of controlling geographical names in Canada was created by Order in Council in 1897 under the name of Geography Commission of Canada. In 1948, this Commission became the Canadian Commission of Geographical Names, and in 1961, it received its present designation of Canadian Standing Committee on Geographical Names.

The Committee is made up of seven representatives from Federal Departments and one representative from each province in Canada appointed at the provincial level. The Committee rules on all nomenclature issues involving Canada. Toponyms within the provinces become decisions of the Committee upon a ruling by the provinces involved. The Committee is assisted in its work by four advisory committees in charge of names, linguistic policy and research. There are about 300,000 officially approved names in Canada.

The Official Languages Act and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms determine the policy of the Federal Government as far as the policy of the Canadian Standing Committee on Geographical Names is concerned. The Committee must therefore see to it that when members of both official language groups use federal maps they are served with consistency and fairness. Toponomy is also one of the essential elements which help create our national image as a country where both official language groups share a common heritage, each one designating major geographical entities in its own language.

To better meet the needs of Canadians of both official language groups, names which appear on federal maps must first of all match those used in legal documents, that is the names adopted by the provincial authorities within their own province and by federal authorities within the regions under their jurisdiction.

The purpose of a federal approach would be to determine which are the place names of geographical entities that are of national interest in both official languages. These names should be considered part of the collective ownership of the Canadian people, or in other words of its national heritage.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Permanent Committee on Geographical Names has been guided for a long time by the principle that, excluding entities under the jurisdiction of the Canadian government such as Indian reserves, national parks and Canadian Forces bases, geographical names are a provincial matter. The names of the provinces themselves, of course, are a different problem. According to the Department of Justice, the name of a province is that used in the Constitutional Act under which that province entered Confederation. In the case of Nova Scotia, that act of course is the British North America Act, a statute originally passed in English only. The Department of Justice is currently preparing an official French version of that act. However, all previous French versions of that act referred to "Nouvelle-Écosse". There is therefore no reason to believe that the latest text will be any different.

Be that as it may, since constitutional documents are involved, the Canadian Government could not make changes without having them approved by the provinces. In the same way, provinces could not change their names without requesting the Canadian Government approval. We may therefore conclude in my view that this is an area of joint jurisdiction, where the lead should preferably come from the Legislative Assembly of the province concerned.

With respect to geographical names, past and present practice has been and is one of the main elements to be considered. Now, the use of the name "Nouvelle-Écosse" in treaties, in historical works, on maps and in geographical documents dates back to the 18th century. It has been in continuous use since then and remains current usage not only among French-speaking Nova-Scotians and Canadians generally, but throughout the French-speaking nations. That was the name used in the 1713 Treaty of Utrecht, under which France finally yielded Nova Scotia to Britain. It must be remembered that, first settled by France under the name of "Acadie", Nova Scotia was under French rule from 1667 to 1710. On the other hand, even if the name "Nova Scotia" is indeed of Latin origin, it has long since ceased to be perceived by people in that province and Canadians in general as anything but the English name of a very predominantly English province.

Mr. Speaker, this may be but a technicality, but one should not overlooked the fact that if Nova Scotia's official name were to be changed, changes would have to be made not only to federal statutes but also to all official documents, maps, and so on, bearing the name of that province. On the other hand, such a change, at a point in time where over-all Canadian attitude to bilingualism is entering a phase of greater tolerance and more general acceptance, might very well stress relations between those two linguistic groups and polarize their mutual positions. The name "Nouvelle-Écosse" is part of the cultural heritage of Nova-Scotians and all Canadians.

[English]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, as the great great grandchild of a person who came to Cape Breton from the great country of France in the 17th century, it pains me to see that the motion introduced in this House today would see only one version of le beau nom de la Nouvelle Écosse in documents from this day forward if this Bill were to pass. It also pains me as a student of Latin who has taken some interest in how languages are developed to look at the rather irregular logic of the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) in proposing this. He is suggesting that, because the origin of the two words "Nova Scotia" are Latin, it continues to be a Latin name. I think if he takes the opportunity to study the evolution of languages, including English, he will no doubt be aware, as was stated by the previous speaker, that when a word is incorporated into a language for many years, in some cases for many centuries, it becomes part of the idiom of that language. This is clearly the case in the use of the two words "Nova Scotia". The words "Nova Scotia" are incorporated into the English language and, as such, deserve a French translation.

• (1730)

I would point to other current uses of words in the English language which can be drawn from French origin such as the word "serviette". Serviette is a French word which has been incorporated into the English language to illustrate a small piece of paper towel which we use to clean ourselves after a meal. At the same time, the origin of that word is from the French word "serviette" meaning a towel or towelling. Would the Member then suggest that all use the word "serviette" should be struck from the English language because of its origin in the French language? Of course this would be ludicrous.

Any student of language will know that as time evolves, so does a language. "Nova Scotia" was incorporated as the English appellation of the Province of Nova Scotia at the time of its introduction into Confederation. The Member will agree full well that it must, of need, have a French translation for those of us who have seen official documents translated since that time.

I do not want to speak for very long on this issue, Mr. Speaker, because I too am excited about the prospect of the Government's coming to a vote on this issue. For those Members from the Province of Quebec who were elected in great numbers to represent the Progressive Conservative philosophy in the Province of Quebec, as well as for other francophones hors Québec, it must be an absolute embarrassment to see that two weeks into the discussion of private Member's Bills, at a time when Nova Scotia is facing extremely high unemployment rates and difficult economic times as well as a ferry shutdown perpetrated by the Government, the Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) can find nothing of greater urgent and pressing public importance to discuss than a private Member's Bill which was roundly defeated back in 1981.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the people of the House of Commons have spoken. I hope that we will have an opportunity today to hear from the Members on the Government side of the House who will see fit to allow this issue to come to a vote. I am convinced that this particular proposed piece of legislation must be as embarrassing to the government members as it is to those of us who have our roots in Cape Breton and recognize that Nova Scotia has been incorporated into the English language as the name of a province of which every Cape Bretoner, Nova Scotian and Canadian can be proud. It is a province with a strong francophone and Acadian heritage which would certainly find this Bill to be a blot on its contribution to Confederation.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would hate to disappoint a couple of the speakers on the opposition side of the House who have recently joined us here in the House of Commons from the provincial Legislature, but there is a distinct possibility that sometimes Bills do not come to a vote in private Member's hour.

Ms. Copps: Because you don't want them to.

Mr. Gauthier: We are ready.

Mr. Dick: I have not seen very many do that.

Ms. Copps: We are ready.

Mr. Dick: That is fine. You can be ready all you want to. I did not say that I was ready. There may be some other Members who are not ready. In this place we have the privilege of speaking our minds. I happen to think that the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) did a wonderful job in introducing this Bill. I think it shows the freedom a person has to speak his mind and express a point of view. I do not think we have to be locked into the narrow version we heard from a couple of speakers from the official opposition Party who are perhaps titillated by the idea that there may be a vote which they think is going to split the government Party. I hope that there will be votes on days to come when government members will be allowed to express their opinions on both sides.

Mr. Gauthier: Never.

Mr. Dick: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) says "never". Never is a pretty strong word. In politics I have learned that you never use the word "never".

Mr. Gauthier: You just used it twice.

Mr. Dick: I just want to tell you that I will never say it.

Mr. Gauthier: Never mind. Get to the point.

Mr. Dick: That is good of you. If you want any further interjections, go right ahead. I think the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants was quite proper in bringing forth a very interesting argument. Having listened to what he had to say, I think he was very persuasive. He said that the name of Nova Scotia has a Latin origin and is a proper noun.

Then unfortunately I heard the speech made by the Hon. Member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mrs. Landry) who explained that in centuries gone by before Confederation the name appeared as Nouvelle Écosse on a number of maps of the world. It appears that the words "Nouvelle Écosse" have been part of our heritage before some of the items which the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants brought up. He said that it was just in the Latin language that it was brought into our British North America Act in 1867.

We must be very sensitive. In the last 15 or 20 years this country has moved a long way toward accepting two languages from coast to coast. That has been an advancement in the country. If we are going to do anything which will derogate from that step forward, we must approach all corners of society very carefully and get their concurrence. Instead of simply having the Bill introduced in the House at this early date in the new session, a person who was serious about getting it passed may have lobbied various government ministries. Perhaps the Province of Nova Scotia itself may make a petition to the Government to have the name used only in the Latin language and not have it translated. Until that sort of lobbying has been completed, I think it would be premature to move away from the use of two official languages. I accept the argument that although Nova Scotia may have been derived from Latin, it has in fact been adopted into the English language as if it were an English word.

I would therefore reserve any final decision on that to see whether there is a wide scope of endorsement of the private Member's Bill. If the province itself wants this to come forward, hopefully it will endorse this. Perhaps it will pass a provincial Act and petition the federal Government. It would be interesting to see all the provincial Members sign a petition and send it to the House of Commons to be presented as a petition in the House of Commons. If some Act of that magnitude did come forward, the House of Commons would have to consider very seriously the representations being made.

As I indicated earlier, until something of that nature happens, I think we must derogate from the bilingual nature of this country, albeit improper nouns, with reticence. I would hope this matter will receive more consideration before it comes back to the House of Commons.

I do appreciate and am thankful, as I believe all Canadians are, that there is freedom of speech and of ideas in the House of Commons. Members can present their ideas in the form of a Bill which may get accepted on the first, second or third attempt, or may never get accepted. It is a right which private Members have. I hope that in the foreseeable future many private Members will take advantage of the opportunity to raise possible controversial matters. I think it is good for us.

• (1740)

Mr. Boudria: This is supposed to be relevant.

Mr. Dick: I think it is good for the House of Commons. Bill C-201 is a clear example of a Member introducing a Bill about which he undoubtedly feels strongly. It is obviously very controversial as evidenced by some of the comments from the two speakers from the Official Opposition.

Ms. Copps: It is embarrassing.

Mr. Dick: I do not find it embarrassing.

Ms. Copps: Let us vote on it, then.

Mr. Dick: If the Member is able to stick around here long enough, she might even find out how the rules work in this place. They are quite different from those in Ontario.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would ask and entreat you to bring the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) to order. His speech has deteriorated entirely into vague generalities.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member obviously does not know the ruling in Beauchesne which indicates that one does not have to be anything less than vague to be relevant.

Mr. Hovdebo: We are even helping you out.

Mr. Dick: I appreciate that. I was rather hoping that the Hon. Member would make a longer intervention. However, seeing that he did not wish to make a longer intervention, I will have to continue with some vague generalities about the Bill, which is very interesting for our first private Members' Bill. Since this is not a long Bill, I cannot spend much time going into its numerous clauses.

However, our country has increased its use of the two official languages so much in the last 20 years, that I believe there would have to be a wider consensus before we could proceed with something which I believe derogates from our most recent past. Perhaps this issue could be considered more fully together with the province involved. If it wishes to change its name, perhaps it could bring some evidence to the attention of the federal Government to show that it is taken very seriously by the entire population of Nova Scotia.

Although I have some time remaining, I am sure other Members would like to participate in this debate on this intriguing private Members' Bill. Therefore, I would like to give them that opportunity.

Mr. Al Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member proposes that the name of Nova Scotia be the official designation of that Province in both official languages. No doubt, there are practical reasons for such a proposal, the most obvious being the administrative simplicity of a single name which does not need to be translated from one language to the other.

There is also the appearance that one of our official languages, that is, French, is being slighted by the removal of the French name "Nouvelle Écosse" which is a name that has been officially used since France ceded Acadia to the British Crown in the 18th century.

The Government, through the Official Languages Program of the Secretary of State, is making a great effort to promote the equality of the two official languages.

[Translation]

People are what really matters to us in the Secretary of State. To foster a legitimate national pride, we are seeking to help Canadians gain a better understanding and appreciation of Canada, its history, cultures and traditions. In fact, our activities affect almost all Canadians.

Canada is an officially bilingual country, French and English having an equal status enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which was promulgated in 1982.

The Charter, however, does not limit the power of Parliament and the legislatures to further the progression toward equality of status or use of French and English.

The fundamental objective of the Canadian government's policy is to reinforce the equal status of French and English and to contribute to the development of the two linguistic groups in Canada. In other words, the government wishes to see the right to use either of both official languages extend to all sectors of our society and serve as a factor of identity, understanding and unity.

The implementation of this policy has been entrusted to the Department of Secretary of State which has redirected its programs and activities with a view to helping Canadians fully realize the equal status of both official languages and enhancing the opportunities for them to live their lives fully in all areas of endeavour in either French or English. Its services, which take the form of financial or technical assistance, in some cases through the provision of human resources, are directed to the Canadian public as a whole, the communities of both official linguistic groups, the communities of other linguistic groups, the immigrants, as well as the education sector.

The Department of the Secretary of State offers its support and co-operation to voluntary organizations and to the private sector, as well as to governmental and para-government organizations which are seeking information and are anxious to take initiatives to promote the use of both official languages.

Here are the services offered by the Department of the Secretary of State: firstly, financial or technical assistance to national and regional non-profit organizations to develop programs dealing with bilingualism, linguistic exchanges, the use of translation and interpretation services during annual conferences, or to carry out a number of special projects. Secondly, technical assistance to the world of business, industry, trade and commerce. Thirdly, financial or technical assistance to other levels of government to provide or extend services in both official languages. Fourthly, financial assistance to individuals or groups initiating legal proceedings that will contribute to elucidating the purpose and meaning of constitutional provisions on official languages, including those of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms dealing with the equal status granted to the English and French languages, with the right of English-speaking communities in Quebec and French-speaking communities elsewhere to have their children educated in their mother tongue.

Moreover, thanks to the skills of the Translation Bureau, the Secretary of State provides Canadians with a number of linguistic tools, of which in particular, terminological information drawn from the constantly updated computerized terminology bank which various specialized private or public organizations can obtain under certain conditions, and bilingual standardized glossaries.

The translation and interpretation services which are available only to federal departments and organizations take part in the implementation of various programs dealing with official languages and help the government of Canada to communicate effectively in all languages throughout the world.

Services are provided to French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec and to English-speaking Canadians in Quebec to encourage and help them to set up and maintain their institutions, to develop their organizations and take part in their own language in the activities of the Canadian community. They include financial assistance to voluntary organizations that are trying to promote community interests or to provide them with linguistic services; a financial contribution for the setting up of institutions and permanent services; and technical assistance under the form of exchanges or the assignment of experts from the federal government or elsewhere to organizations and institutions in the community. As part of the multiculturalism policy adopted by the Government of Canada in 1971, the Department of the Secretary of State provides grants to support the preparation and publication of works of a historical, literary or educational nature illustrating the cultural diversity of Canadian society, and also for the translation of such works in both official languages. Grants provided for this purpose do not cover all expenses.

Another aspect of the official languages programs concerns the teaching of English or French as a second language to adult immigrants. The Department of the Secretary of State has placed special emphasis on official languages classes for immigrant women, a group in Canadian society that is particularly isolated and disadvantaged.

Since 1970, the Department of the Secretary of State has given the provinces and the territories financial assistance in providing English-speaking communities in Quebec and French-speaking communities in the other provinces and territories with the option of having their children educated in their own language at all levels in the school system.

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not mean to interrupt the Hon. Member who is reading to the House a departmental document about the programs that are available. However, Mr. Speaker, relevance is important, and I for some time now have failed to see any relevance in the Hon. Member's comments to the bill presented by the Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) to change the name of his province.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge the Hon. Member, and perhaps I may rely on your good judgment, to comment on the Bill before the House and not to read a document. We know all about official languages. We know all about the programs. There is a committee of the House that deals with this subject. If the Hon. Member wants to read this to us in committee tomorrow morning at 9:30, that is fine, but today, I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member spoke to the Bill before the House.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am reasonably certain that the Hon. Member accepts the comments made by the Hon. Member and will now explain to us very clearly the relevance of what he has been trying to put before the House. I am sure that will now happen.

[Translation]

Mr. Girard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is because in New Brunswick, which is a bilingual province, we—

Mr. Gauthier: The bilingual province.

Mr. Girard: Thank you. Perhaps I could explain why it is so important for me to talk about these programs. My reason for doing so is that I am from a bilingual province, the Province of New Brunswick, where at one time people suggested that we make similar changes. And here we have a Government Department, the Department of the Secretary of State, which explains a policy and explains its services, and I think it is a good thing for Canadians to see what the Government of Canada is doing to provide Canadians with bilingual services across Canada, from British Columbia to Newfoundland. That is why I was explaining all this.

To recapitulate: Since 1970, the Department of the Secretary of State has been helping the provinces and the territories financially to provide English-speaking communities in Quebec and French-speaking communities in the other provinces and territories with the option of having their children educated in their own language at all levels in the school system.

Two other programs, fully financed by the Government of Canada, are administered by the provinces in co-operation with the Council of Education Ministers. I am referring to the bursaries for language summer courses and the official language "monitors", a program under which post-secondary students—

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to get back to . . . why I read it? Well, it is done.

[English]

The proposal before us that the term "Nova Scotia" be used exclusively is one that should be negotiated under the official languages policy. The term may be Latin. We are proud to live in a country that has kept its heritage and its tradition. Nevertheless, the term "Nova Scotia" is perceived as being English as a result of standard usage. We should like to recommend, not necessarily from a judicial or from an historical point of view but from the context of Canada having two official languages, that the name for the Atlantic Province which is designated as Nova Scotia should also be La Nouvelle-Écosse when referred to in French.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, as the only Member from Nova Scotia—

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not interject as the Opposition Whip did who gave a very interesting dissertation outlining all the services provided by the Secretary of State (Mr. MacLean), which ate up about 25 minutes of the one hour provided for the private Members' Bill. This raises the question, which obviously government members and opposition members have to discuss in their respective cauci—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: —and cauci is the proper word—as to the place of private Members' Bills in this new Parliament.

There have been several references that this Member's Bill is for a change in name. That is totally wrong. I just want to ensure that we use the proper name.

I thought we had reached a degree of maturity in bilingualism that that canard would not always be raised especially by the migrant from Cape Breton who used that canard and spoke very interestingly. Is the main question for her and for everyone else who participated in this debate—do I understand that to be the drift and the consensus of this Chamber—that if there is a word that has a definite English name it should automatically be translated into French and vice versa?

Ms. Copps: I have a question of privilege. And this is not a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: That is what I would like Members to direct their attention to, Mr. Speaker. For instance, "Mount Royal" and other names that are good in French or English.

Mr. Parry: This is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: I want to speak on my own behalf—

Mr. Speaker: It is very difficult in the middle of a point of order to hear a question of privilege. I will now rule that the Member does not have a point of order. What is the Hon. Member for Hamilton East's (Ms. Copps) question of privilege?

Ms. Copps: I have a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, I was referred to as a transient—I think the Member changed the word transient to "migrant" Nova Scotian.

Mr. Speaker: What is the Hon. Member's question of privilege?

Ms. Copps: My point of privilege is that I was not born in Nova Scotia. I was born in Hamilton, Ontario, and if the Member had listened to my speech—

Mr. Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of private Members' business has now expired.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

An Hon. Member: It is not six o'clock yet.

Mr. Speaker: We started Private Members' Hour a minute or two early. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) participated in the creation of the ruling sometime ago that produced the ruling that Private Members' Hour lasts precisely one hour and no longer. He will remember the ruling, I am sure, very well.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS—BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—CONSEQUENCES FOR CULTURAL COMMUNITY. (B) ARTISTS' INCOME

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the promises made by the Conservative Government in the course of the last election campaign in the area of arts and culture were very clear. The Government said very specifically that funding for the arts and cultural agencies would be maintained at least at present levels. They are not rich levels, but the Conservatives promised that at least there would be cost of living increases, if not a better deal for our artists.

The Conservatives said there will be full consultation with the arts and cultural community and consultation came out in every press release and every speech made on the subject. They were also very firm about the principle of an arm's length relationship with the arts and cultural agencies, that there would be no interference with decision-making within these agencies.

The Government has violated all three of these principles with the announcement of the recent cut-backs. The cut-backs are far greater than in other areas of the economy, although this is an area that has suffered from cut-backs in the past. The cut-backs are at least twice the level of the non-cultural areas. There has of course been no consultation with the arts and culture community. The arm's length relationship has been violated by the Minister saying in what areas he wants to see the cut-backs, specifically in the area of administration. We cannot disagree with the area he would choose for the cut-backs, although I wonder whether it is possible to cut back that amount of money in the area of administration.

The Minister is trying to have it both ways. When one raises the issue of cut-backs to artists and the ensuing suffering, because these are people with very poor incomes, the Minister replies that he is trying to avoid that by having administrative cost cuts, not cost cuts to the standard of living of artists or to programs. When we ask him for specific assurance that there will not be cut-backs in real programs and that creative artists will not be suffering, he says he has to respect the jurisdiction of the arts and cultural agencies and he cannot say what they will be. Suddenly the arm's length relationship is re-established.

More seriously, the Minister announced a review of the mandate of the CBC, a major cultural area and a major area of independent programming in Canadian broadcasting. He suggested that this will be a very fundamental review of the entire mandate, purpose and activities of the CBC. It is not clear what consultations will take place.

[Translation]

Why is the Minister in favour of budget cutbacks for cultural agencies? Is the Minister unaware of the economic situation of Canadian artists? Does he not know that a great many artists live under the threshold of poverty? Artists are the patrons of cultural life in Canada. Artists are the ones who give grants through their salaries and incomes subsidize Canadian culture, for us and for all Canadians who watch their programs, read their works, listen to their music. The Government claims that cuts have become necessary now as a result of the fat years we have been through. However, Canadian artists never did get a fair share during those years of prosperity, they never did enjoy budgets full of economic benefits. There has been no such life for artists in Canada. Cultural agencies have never been given generous amounts of money. Cuts have already been made in the area of administration because their increases have not kept up with the rise in the cost of living in recent years.

[English]

I suspect there is not much more fat to be trimmed from budgets and that cuts now will be cuts into the muscle, bones and vital organs of the cultural life of the country. We do not need budget cut-backs. We need increases. The Applebaum-Hébert Commission in most domains recommended very substantial increases to give artists the financial support they need.

Why do we need good support for our cultural life? We want to have an independent society. We have made that decision politically, socially and economically. We could have assimilated into the United States if we had wanted, but we chose not to do that. We chose to develop our own country. That was a political decision. We have to back it up with our cultural life. It costs money, and will always cost more money to develop our own programs, to publish our own books, to have our own poets and to have our own cultural life here than to import extra runs from other countries, the United States, or from other European countries such as France, Britain or wherever.

While there will be economic costs, I suggest they are important to bear because there will be economic costs from the cut-backs as well. There are good economic reasons for resisting cut-backs in cultural areas. The arts and cultural industry employ large numbers of people at good jobs. Often they are low-paying jobs, but they do valuable and interesting work which is very satisfying. The cultural industry is very important for tourism in Canada. There are areas where it is the attraction of the theatre or music festivals which brings in the tourists. There are estimates that for every dollar invested in museums, $4 come back in expenditures on the part of tourists for goods and services in the area. There are good economic reasons for saying no to cut-backs.

However, I would want to make the case on the basis of the political, cultural and social life we want for Canada. We have artists of whom we can be proud. They deserve our support. More important, we need them more than they need us. We need to have an independent country—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry. I now recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth)).

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, before dealing with the most important matter raised by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), may I say how delighted I am to be working once again with the hon. lady in this significant field of Canada's national identity. The Hon. Member and I have shared similar views on many committees in the past, and I must say that when it comes to the dignity, preservation and viability of the Canadian cultural community, we are in agreement again.

As has previously been noted in the House by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), the Government believes that the impact of any budget restraint measures on individual artists and arts organizations can be greatly minimized by the Canada Council and the National Arts Centre through reductions in administrative costs and non-essential services. We have no doubt that this task will challenge the wisdom and determination of the agencies concerned. However, the current rate of growth of the national deficit makes it imperative that every possible savings in program administration and delivery be made by government Departments and agencies.

These decisions will, quite naturally, demand a fundamental re-examination of the roles, objectives and activities of the Government of Canada in support of the arts. The Government is committed to undertaking such a review. The Government's objective in this review will be to ensure that the public resources devoted to support of artistic expression are employed in the most effective manner possible and that budgetary restrictions do not jeopardize the federal Government's investment in the cultural development of the nation.

With specific reference to the CBC, the Minister has emphasized that he expects the cut-backs to be made primarily in administrative areas and not affect Canadian producers and artists whose development the Government intends to encourage. According to the Minister, real change at the CBC must be based on the creation of an environment that will make it easier for creators, artists and producers to work and to develop. The objective is to ensure that the public resources now committed are being used as effectively as possible to contribute to Canadian cultural development. To this end, the Minister has hired three consultants to advise him on the budgetary cut-backs proposed by the CBC. Regarding consultations, the Minister specified that they will take place with due regard for the respective responsibilities of the Ministry of Communications and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and will not infringe on their respective mandates.

With respect to the Canada Council and the National Arts Centre, the budget reductions were $3.5 million and $1 million respectively. In the case of the Canada Council, this represents 4.8 per cent of the current parliamentary apppropriation of approximately $72.5 million and 4.2 per cent of the council's total operating budget which totals almost $84 million. The council's total operating budget—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, but the Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE CENSUS—JUSTIFICATION FOR CANCELLATION OF 1986 CENSUS. (B) REQUEST THAT CANCELLATION BE RESCINDED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of the House the entire matter of the census and the reply that the Minister gave to me on Wednesday of last week regarding the cancellation of the 1986 Census. I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the answers I have received thus far are most unsatisfactory, as I am sure you will agree.

The 1986 Census of this country cannot be totally cancelled since there are obligations under the Alberta Act, under the Saskatchewan Act and perhaps under other provincial legislation preventing the cancellation of the 1986 Census. Of course, you will know, Mr. Speaker, that the Alberta Act and the Saskatchewan Act now form part of the Constitution of our country. Therefore, there is a constitutional obligation to continue with the census, and the Government recognized that when it made its announcement a few weeks ago. However, in reply to a question that I put last week, the Minister answered the following, and I am sure that you will recall it vividly, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

As to whether Statistics Canada will provide the data required by the various departments to make sound decisions about the problems mentioned by the Hon. Member, I can assure him that Statistics Canada will indeed be in a position to gather this data. They have every technical resource at their disposal and can rely on very competent professional staff. But,

Mr. Speaker, we are not here today to question the competence of Statistics Canada personnel, we know of course that they are quite competent. It is the competence of the Minister who gave that kind of answer which prompts me to raise the question today.

Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to page 7 of a document entitled "Working Paper, Plans for the 1986 Census" published by Statistics Canada in August 1983. Here is provision 13 of this document:

As indicated earlier, as a result of a Cabinet directive, Statistics Canada has considered the possibility of using administrative and investigative resources instead of census data for 1986.

Here is the significant part, Mr. Speaker:

The conclusion was that it is impossible and that there is no other solution for the 1986 census.

So you can see the obvious contradiction between the answer the Minister gave me recently when he said that there were other sources of information to prepare affirmative action programs, other sources of information to do all the rest of the work related to the five-year census, when it is definitively not so, at least not according to Statistics Canada the very agency which the Minister claims told him it was possible. How was it possible for Statistics Canada to have set up a whole new administrative structure, to have developed an entirely new approach, an entirely new course of action, and an entirely new mechanism to gather information since their report of August 1983? That is what matters and that is what the Minister's parliamentary secretary should address today. It is unfortunate that the Minister was unable to be in the House and set the record straight himself since he misled the House. I am sure it was not intentional, but in any case, Mr. Speaker, the Minister himself ought to set everything straight.

Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to a letter I received from the Social Science Federation of Canada. I quote the concluding statement of the letter:

• (1810)

[English]

The scholarly community fears that the Government may have sacrificed an irreplaceable national resource for a short-term gain which may never materialize. We hope, therefore, you will reconsider your intention to cancel the 1986 census.

This is an example where academics, social groups, the Opposition Parties in this House, and big business are in agreement. I have never seen another incident in which all of those groups were in agreement. Everyone is of the opinion that it is imperative that the 1986 Census should proceed, including Statistics Canada, in spite of what the Minister has told us.

It is important for the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister to inform the House that the Government has changed its mind, that the previous scheme will be withdrawn, and that it will immediately implement the 1986 Census. The plans for that census were complete. I have a copy of the Order-in-Council which was signed by the Clerk of the Privy Council. That is evidence that the Government was ready to proceed with the census.

Much, if not all of the work has already been done. The only thing left to be done is to place the people who will collect the information which will be used to provide the necessary programs which must be established.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a privilege to be able to respond to the Hon. Member on behalf of the Minister, as well as on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who he questioned the other day.

First, let me reiterate that all decisions of the Government announced in the Minister of Finance's (Mr. Wilson) Economic Statement were taken in light of the Government's determination to take action to control the federal deficit. Many programs were reduced or eliminated. They are indeed socially valuable, but are not fully cost-beneficial in view of the financial position of the federal Government.

Second, let me again make it clear that this Government recognizes fully the requirement for comprehensive and reliable statistical information to run the affairs of the nation. We are committed to meeting those information needs, and we support the mandate of Statistics Canada to meet those goals. Moreover, we have full confidence in the management and professionalism of Statistics Canada to fulfil that mandate.

The issue regarding the previously authorized 1986 Census is not the value of the information or the competence of Statistics Canada, but rather the cost effectiveness of the program as authorized by the previous Government.

Coincident with the Government's decision, the Minister has directed the Chief Statistician to re-examine user needs and develop options for more cost beneficial alternatives to the previously approved 1986 Census. This re-examination of priority needs and development of lower cost alternatives is vigorously underway, aided by the substantial number of reactions and representations which have been volunteered by various organizations and respected professionals. This Government has pledged itself to full consultation in its decision-making process, and I can assure you that that pledge certainly applies to the information development responsibilities of Statistics Canada.

It is too soon, and this is not the proper forum for a report on possible alternatives to the previously authorized 1986 Census. Suffice to say at this time that there are various possible approaches which would improve cost benefit and cost effectiveness. Those approaches may lead to a somewhat reduced information availability, but that would be justified by corresponding cost savings in view of the essential need for control of government expenditures.

In summary, we fully recognize and support the requirement for accurate and objective statistical information. We believe the priority information which the previously authorized 1986 Census would have produced can be obtained by more cost beneficial approaches. We are expecting from Statistics Canada in the near future a report on more cost effective alternatives to the previously approved 1986 Census.

AGRICULTURE—FLOOD DAMAGE COMPENSATION FOR FARMERS IN NORTHEASTERN SASKATCHEWAN. (B) REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE PAYMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on November 13 I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) when the Government was going to get on with the payment of flood compensation for five rural municipalities in northeastern Saskatchewan. This question arose because this Government has not filled a commitment made by the previous Government. During the summer months the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a commitment that some $16 million would be paid for flood damage to about 1,700 agricultural producers in the northeastern part of Saskatchewan. This was based on the province putting up $8 million and the federal Government putting up $16 million. When I put the question to the Minister of Agriculture on November 13 he indicated that the matter was before the Treasury Board and that he was not sure whether or not it had been approved. I checked with the Treasury Board a few days before putting the question to the Minister and I was told that indeed the funding had been approved in mid-August but was being held up for a further review by the new Government.

The background of this matter is a devastating two years for some 1,700 producers in those five rural municipalities in which serious flood damage was suffered. There was a commitment by the two levels of Government in the early part of the summer. The Province of Saskatchewan came through on its part of the bargain. The cheques went out, I understand, in July. We are now waiting on the federal Government to come good on its funding.

The day after I put the question to the Minister, he indicated to me that he understood that some $7 million was going to be approved. He suggested that I check the details of that. We have checked further with his office and it was indicated that in fact the matter went to Treasury Board last Thursday, but the funding has still not been approved.

There is considerable urgency for those producers in that part of Saskatchewan. The deadline is November 30, just four days from now, when they have to make a commitment as to cash advance payments. Some producers are waiting to find out whether the Government is going to come good on this commitment. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary wants to be helpful this evening, and perhaps he will indicate that the Government is going to honour its commitment and approve the funding. I hope the Government will move on that before November 30 for the benefit of these producers who have to signify by that date their acceptance of cash advance payments on farm stored gain.

It certainly appears that the Government is procrastinating on this decision. The early indications are that the Government will either not make any payment at all, or at best make a payment of some $7 million, half the amount the previous government authorized and the Prime Minister announced early this summer, and which Treasury Board approved in mid-August. I certainly hope, for the sake of these producers who have been waiting now for several months, that the Parliamentary Secretary will not further embarrass the Government by not making a decision tonight. I hope he will announce that the Government is going to come good on its commitment, just as the Saskatchewan Government did, so that these payments for flood damage can go out within a very short period of time. They are urgently needed by those producers in northeastern Saskatchewan.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) could probably have asked his question to the Hon. Member for Shawinigan since he volunteered the information with a sly smile that the cupboard was indeed bare when his party was defeated last September 4. This partly explains the answer to his question.

The week before the election, Mr. Speaker, more specifically on August 29th, the previous Government announced assistance payments of $20 an acre would be made to farmers in north-easthern Saskatchewan in view of the losses they had incurred as a result of floodings the two previous years.

[English]

The payment was to be based on the provincial Government's program criteria, but the federal payment was to be twice as great per acre as the provinces. Immediately following the election the federal Government initiated a general review of discretionary spending, including the assistance program for northeastern Saskatchewan.

[Translation]

As everyone knows, this review proved to be necessary so that the new Government would be better informed about financial commitments for the present fiscal year and could take action to reduce the deficit, and especially to stabilize it.

The review of this specific program is not yet completed, but I hope that a decision will be made in the near future. We are conducting an objective review of this program, but we cannot view it separately from other requests for assistance. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that they are numerous and come from everywhere.

I wish to emphasize that the Minister is aware of the nature and extent of the problem in northeastern Saskatchewan as well as in the adjacent areas in Manitoba. Indeed, the Minister has discussed the situation with his provincial counterparts and also with his Cabinet and caucus colleagues.

We share the concerns of the farmers who have suffered heavy losses over the last few years and we shall certainly take their concerns into account when reviewing the program. The Minister will make another statement on the subject as soon as these programs have been fully examined.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.20 p.m. the House adjourned.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NO-CONFIDENCE MOTION—INFORMATION GUIDELINES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the guidelines issued by the Prime Minister on November 23, 1984, with regard to the provision of information to the public, are inadequate and retrogressive and confirm the Government's mistrust of and cynicism toward Canadians.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I almost did not get to the House this morning because of the fog. The trip from Vancouver Quadra was a little longer than I had expected. Mind you, this fog has been descending over the capital ever since the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced his guidelines on Friday.

I rise today, Your Honour, on a very serious issue which goes right to the heart of this institution of Parliament and to the good workings of democracy itself; the right of every Canadian to complete information on the policies, plans and projects of the Government. Openness in government, Sir, is absolutely vital and fundamental to parliamentary democracy. It reinforces the confidence of Canadians in the way our system works and it promotes sound and intelligent debate among the citizenry of our country.

The Prime Minister, at his press conference on Friday, introduced guidelines for public servants as to how they must deal with members of the press, the news media and the public, indeed as to how they must deal with Hon. Members of this House. He indicated a willingness to table these guidelines in the House when I questioned him last week, but as yet I do not believe he has done so.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's guidelines are important because they affect the right of all Members to be informed about Government policy in order to serve their constituents, and also the right of Canadians to have this information. However, the guidelines will not give us the open and accessible government we were promised. Far from it!

[English]

The effect of these guidelines, Mr. Speaker, will be an even tighter control on information. The Prime Minister made a solemn pledge during the campaign which I recited during Question Period a week ago and which is found in Hansard of November 20, 1984, at page 404. These are his words:

Secrecy in government . . . is an addiction; the more the Government can have of it, the more it wants of it.

The Prime Minister also said: "The first benefit of the first day of a new government will be the knowledge that the public business will be once more in the hands of those who trust the people and seek their goodwill and trust in reform". Those were his words. Like the economic commitments the Prime Minister made to the Canadian people, this commitment for openness in government has already been broken. First, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) gagged all the Ministers. They could not talk. As I said on Leaders' day during the debate on the Throne Speech, they would be fired unless they "checked with Erik". The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) then gagged his Department, gagged Canada's ambassadors and gagged our trade representatives around the world. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was particularly concerned that someone might learn something at a cocktail party.

[Translation]

Senior officials were hesitant to go to conferences to discuss nuclear disarmament, because they were afraid their Minister would insist on controlling whatever they said. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) even refused to give us information regarding the effects of severe cutbacks on the employment situation.

• (1110)

[English]

So we asked the questions in the House of Commons. We pressed the issue and forced the Prime Minister to go before the national press gallery with the guidelines. The result was that he finally came up with some rules and regulations, but instead of being the road to open government we expected they are nothing more than a forced march down the dead-end street of government secrecy. Yes, the Prime Minister lifted the gag order all right, but he replaced it with a straight-jacket on all our public servants and the complete government apparatus in Canada.

Background briefings are no longer in order. We are told in the guidelines they will only be permitted in exceptional circumstances and must have prior ministerial approval. These guidelines raise more questions than they answer. We know this Government puts a high priority on managing the news, but what constitutes an off-the-record, background briefing? If a member of the news media, for example, asks a public servant for information on a previous policy announcement which may not be consistent with current policy, will he have to check first with the Minister before giving out that information? Does it mean that every time a policy is changed all previous policy announcements must be deep-sixed? Is every statement in support of government policy a fact and every critical statement an off-the-record briefing?

The Prime Minister's letter accompanying the guidelines says that Ministers must, and I use his words, "ensure that communication with the public is managed effectively in accordance with the priorities of the Government". The key word in the statement is "managed". What about the public interest and the public right to know? Are public servants going to be punished for talking about subjects affecting the public interest which are not necessarily priorities of the Tory Government? If a member of the public wants to know why a particular policy option was chosen over another, does the public servant in question have to check with his Minister to give that information?

What is at issue here, Mr. Speaker, is that it is one thing to allow facts to be confirmed or revealed by public servants within an umbrella of government policy, but what is important for public debate and public scrutiny is that members of this House, the media and the people of Canada know the options in front of the Government. Why was one choice made rather than another? What were the reasons and facts and policies behind that choice? What were the choices that were disregarded and refused? In other words, by limiting, in the guidelines, public servants to the mere relevation of facts within a very tight stricture and under a very strictly controlled parameter, the Prime Minister is, in effect, controlling the ability of this country to debate options, choices and to understand the reasons why the Government made a decision. That is absolutely true.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We have now seen the sophistication of managing the news taken to a new height in the history of our country. This is a cosmetic government, one that is operating in imperial, even presidential style, everything having to be channeled through the Prime Minister's office. I tell you, it is an awesome machine, Mr. Speaker, reinforced through the Prime Minister's office by the appointment of chiefs of staff, personally appointed in every department of government. I have called them political commissars; they are the eyes and ears of the Prime Minister in every department of state.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and our system that we are not, despite the Prime Minister's inclination, living under a presidential system. We are living under a parliamentary system and every day he and his Ministers will have to appear before this House. I warn him that the system he is trying to constrict and construct will not work because, while we may be short in numbers at the moment, the House of Commons will insist that this veil of secrecy be torn aside and this shroud lifted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in an editorial entitled "Mulroney Shuts Out Public" The Toronto Star makes the following point on the impact of these guidelines in restricting information to the public. I use The Toronto Star's words: "By reducing the opportunity for informed debate before the Government decides what it wants to do, this limits the public's ability to help shape that decision".

[Translation]

The Government has a very sizeable majority. Why is it so afraid that the press and the federal public service are going to gang up on it? Does the Government have so little confidence in its programs and policies that it has to resort to this kind of gross manipulation?

• (1115)

[English]

Why do they assume that public servants will not tell the truth? Or are they afraid that public servants will tell the truth?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As a result of the pressure put on the Government by the Official Opposition, the Prime Minister has quietly shuffled the Deputy Prime Minister out of the sensitive role of communications overseer in the Cabinet. He has been replaced with three new Ministers; the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn). The question is, who is the spokesman? Is this the new communications troika? Will a dissenting report be published when they do not agree unanimously? How will they interlink with the political commissars to control the flow of information from the Government?

Instead of policy objectives which stand or fall on their own merit, we now have government by one-liners, government by 30-second clip, government by photo opportunity, in short, government by controlled access. If ever I saw one, this is a peek-a-boo government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Perhaps they want to manage the news because they are afraid they cannot manage the Government. The Prime Minister says that public servants are not to defend or criticize, only to explain. How can public servants explain when they are not allowed to say anything except to spout the Party line as dictated by Ministers and political commissars? The Government's attitude to the Public Service of this country is churlish and patronizing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister says that his Government is open. Well, the opposite is true. I suppose he feels that if he repeats it over and over everyone will eventually believe it. Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House do not buy it. I do not believe the media accepts it, and the people of Canada certainly do not accept it.

I have said on other occasions that it is a matter of trust that governments will do what they say they will do. The Prime Minister and his colleagues said that we were to receive open, accessible and available government. That is not happening here. What we are seeing is symptomatic of an attitude, a tone and a style of government. It is manipulative and operates on imagery. It is contrived. What is the Prime Minister afraid of? Is he afraid of the inexperience of the Ministry? He could be excused for that. Is he afraid of the incompetence of the Ministry? Is he afraid of an informed electorate? Is he afraid of the revelation of his failure to live up to his promises during the election campaign?

In putting this motion to the House I say to the Prime Minister, let the people judge. Take Canadians into your confidence. Come clean with the citizenry of our country. Disband these guidelines and open up the Government to the light and corridors of power and let us have some fresh air.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to thank the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) for a very amusing speech. He will, of course, want to answer some questions. He has come forward with a new spirit of openness previously unknown to the Liberal Party.

With regard to manipulation, could the Leader of the Opposition explain why, before the last election, the Liberal Party increased the advertising budget of the Government of Canada by some 65 per cent over what it was in previous years? How can he justify standing before the House and making specious allegations with respect to the whole question of alleged secrecy when we are the most open government Canadians have ever had in the history of this country? How can he make this allegation when he is part of an administration which has increased manipulative advertising? How can he stand in his place and make these kinds of allegations with a serious face?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has tried to regain some momentum here this morning. At least advertising of public programs is increasing the information flow to government, not stemming and choking it as the hon. gentleman and his colleagues would like to do.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) a question with respect to this new-found interest of the Liberal Party in openness in government. Is he prepared, unlike the former Prime Minister and his colleagues, to trust the courts in this country with respect to the view of claimed exemptions under access to information legislation?

One of the glaring loopholes in the freedom of information legislation which was brought forward by his Party and unanimously condemned by all of the groups in this country who are concerned about openness in government was the Mack truck exemption clause in the Bill which meant that the Government did not trust the courts to review claimed exemptions with respect to the possibility of Cabinet documents. That flew in the face of the previous government's Bill. Although the new Government has been silent on that particular question so far, one can always hope that it might practice in government what it preached in opposition.

Is the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition prepared to change the position of secrecy and cover-up of the previous government and trust the courts of this country in order to allow full judicial review of any claimed exemptions under access to information?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I would think that the legislation to which he refers was a great step forward in this country in opening up the avenues of public scrutiny of legislation and also of the inner workings of government.

With respect to whether the courts should review any particular claim for an exemption, this is a classic case of parliamentary review versus judicial review. I have an open mind about it. We might well respond in a constructive way if the new Government were to move along the lines that the Hon. Member suggests.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the Right Hon. Member's speech. He made it sound as though there have never been guidelines produced by any government before. I remember when the government in July 1981 produced the document entitled "Communications Roles and Responsibilities". It states that Ministers:

> —have the responsibility for establishing, with their Deputy Ministers, the framework of priorities, strategies and objectives for communications with the public, and the communications responsibilities which are appropriate for their personal staffs and department officials?

Is it not true that this document was produced before, that there have always been certain guidelines and that in fact one of the guidelines was that public servants were not to be quoted by name in the press?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, of course, I have not seen those particular guidelines. I suspect that they resemble those drawn up by the previous administration under the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In any event, what makes this particular debate so crucial is that we were led to believe by the Hon. Member's Party and his Leader, the Right Hon. Prime Minister, that whatever the history of openness in this country—we believe that we had an open government—he gave an explicit undertaking to the people of Canada in obvious reference to the past that his was going to be an open and accessible government that would tear away what he believed were the traditions of secrecy in parliamentary life and conduct.

It is because of those undertakings which he has breached that this debate assumes the proportions it does, not only on the principle that open government is necessary for the proper workings of a free country but as a result of the fact that the Prime Minister once again is reneging on a commitment made to the Canadian people in a free and open election.

• (1125)

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, first would the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) go to his House Leader and get a copy of that famous Liberal document passed by Order in Council entitled "Communications Roles and Responsibilities" of July, 1981? The Leader of the Opposition is so complaining on this matter. Is it his view that the Public Service should be politicized, that members of the Public Service should be out there arguing policy issues in a partisan sense, as the former Liberal government attempted to use public servants? Or is it his view that the Public Service should act in a responsible management fashion, answering proper questions, as our guidelines indicate, and not be politicized? Does the Leader of the Opposition want to politize the Public Service? Does he want the Public Service to be part of the political debating process? Is that his attitude?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No, of course not, Mr. Speaker. We do not want a politicized Public Service. We want a Public Service that is free to explain the policies of government as dictated and organized by their political masters, the Ministry of the day. That means they cannot be limited to merely factual explanations. They have to be free to explain within the mandate given to them by their Ministers the reasons for their choice and for policy decisions. They have to be able to do that.

The problem here is that by forcing each public servant to reveal his or her name at every interview, in effect a discreet silence will be imposed upon the Public Service of Canada because an individual public servant will not take the chance that what he has to say, even in a factual sense, does not meet the approval of his Minister. That is what is happening here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is very upset about this matter.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You are damn right.

Mr. Blenkarn: He is worried about public servants giving their names out. Surely to goodness, if somebody is going to make a statement of fact, he or she should be prepared to give his or her name. If these people are not prepared to give their names they should not be giving a statement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: Why does he want to have it so that some un-named public servant said some un-named thing? Is that the way to build confidence in government? Is that the way to build responsibility? Is that his attitude? Is that the kind of government he would have us run?

Mr. Foster: You sound brainwashed, Don.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Qudra): Mr. Speaker, I think the tone and substance of the hon. gentleman's remarks indicate the innate suspicion he has of the Public Service of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette), for questions or comments.

Mr. Bissonnette: Mr. Speaker, as far as the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) is concerned, senior officials may make all the statements they want. They are only being asked to identify themselves, which should be seen as a form of protection, should certain points be misunderstood or misinterpreted.

I think this is a very important point. During the last election campaign, we saw what poor communications could do to our hon. friends opposite. We would rather not have that experience.

Mr. Speaker, I interpret the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition as provocation. Why should anything be off the record? Why can we not identify ourselves when we have something to say?

I wish the Leader of the Official Opposition would answer that question. Why not identify oneself?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I think that the upshot of all these guidelines, especially the emphasis on public servants being identified, is that public servants are de facto silenced.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The comment and question period on the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is now over. We shall now resume debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak today about secrecy in government. Not since the last war have Canadians had a government so obsessed with secrecy as they have today. Of course, the reason for government secrecy in the last war was to keep vital information from the enemy, but the reason for government secrecy today is to keep vital information from the Canadian people.

Secrecy and stonewalling have become a habit with the Government of Canada. We will never break the habit until we change the Government. I should like to say that I am plagiarizing the words of the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was the Leader of the Opposition and stated: "The differences between the present administration and a new Conservative government is simply this: the present government believes you only have limited rights to know; Conservatives believe you have every right to know". That was the statement of the Prime Minister last August when he was Leader of the Opposition.

The people of Canada should not accept such secretive behaviour. Secrecy, stealth and stonewalling have become trademarks of the present Government. What do they have to conceal from the people of Canada? What sort of parliamentary government is it when we have a system within which Cabinet can create a corporation by Orders in Council, staff it with patronage appointments at undisclosed salary, and then lock the door to keep out the Auditor General, to keep the watchdog of Parliament at bay? That was the position of the current Prime Minister with respect to the responsibilities of the Auditor General when he was in fact the Leader of the Opposition. However, when he in fact became the Leader of the current Government, he denied the access of the Auditor General to the very information which he had pledged as part of his open government and his open government policy prior to the election.

As my Leader has stated, it becomes an issue of trust, an issue of whether the statements made by the current Prime Minister when he was Leader of the Opposition were in fact pre-election pap or whether he had every intention of developing the kind of open government which he promised when he was in Opposition.

It seems to me that when we look at the policy guidelines, the mumming effect of this Government on public servants across the country since the appointment of his political commissars and since his new move into media management, it is clear the Prime Minister had no intention of introducing the kind of open government which he pledged to Canadians.

I should like to bring to the attention of the House a very simple incident in which I happened to be involved as an invitee of the Edmonton Jaycees. A few weeks ago I agreed to participate in a conference on, of all subjects, women in politics and how we could get more women involved in politics. The Jaycees had invited representatives of all political parties to attend and to discuss a subject which I think the Prime Minister has stated is a policy and a priority of his Government.

Nonetheless, when I arrived at the conference I was advised that political commissar Elizabeth Willcocks in the office of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) was ordered by the Prime Minister's office not to attend this conference for fear that in fact she would say something bad about the involvement of women in politics across the country. The political commissar in question had been invited to this conference as a result of her pursuit of the presidency of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. I find it incredible that this Government would attempt to muzzle a political commissar who had past experience and certainly past involvement with Progressive Conservative policies relating to women. It is just another indication of a government that says one thing when it is in opposition with the full intention of not carrying out its political promises when it is elected.

Let us look at the very first initiative of the Government with respect to the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It has become clear from questioning in the House that the Minister of Finance had information which would tell Canadians that, as a direct result of his Government's policies, his Government's short-term financial intervention, there would be a loss of jobs. In fact, the Government refused to table that information in the House. It refused to make available to Canadians information which would have clearly shown that the economic statement tabled by the Minister of Finance would in fact reduce jobs. I cannot agree more with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he states that Canadians will not be fooled. It is my understanding that Canadian voters in the Province of Prince Edward Island were not fooled by this Government. I suppose I should congratulate the Finance Minister because he handed the Liberals of Prince Edward Island an election issue on a platter when he introduced an economic statement which wrought tremendous economic difficulties for the Atlantic provinces, in particular the ferry situation with respect to Prince Edward Island. I should congratulate him on his initiative. I should say that the Canadian people will not be fooled by secrecy or by the broken promises of the Government because they are recognizing that the trust factor which became an issue during the election campaign has not subsided.

When I read the statement of the Public Service Alliance of Canada—I think it puts the question very carefully to Canadians—to suggest that there need to be more restrictions placed upon public employees is to suggest that there need to be two classes of citizens in this country. The Alliance agrees that Public Service employees should provide information to the public and the media regarding government programs and policies and that in the past government employees have been needlessly prevented from doing so.

The issue here is a promise made by the current Prime Minister to run an open government and to tell Canadians upon what basis the current Government will make decisions with respect to economic policy. What we have instead is a government run by political commissars, a government run by "check it with Erik", a government where the Prime Minister has clearly violated the promises which he made to Canadians for an open system.

I suggest that if the Government is to begin to go back on the road of broken promises upon which it has already set itself, the first issue it should address is the issue of secrecy in government. Instead of issuing guidelines to muzzle public servants and instead of having Ministers such as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) memo departments on witch-hunts for former Liberal employees, et cetera, the Government should in fact tell Canadians that as of this day forward public servants will certainly have the right to speak out on issues and to lay out policy options and let them know that the Government is not afraid of letting information out.

If I look at the department responsible for housing, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation organizations across the land know that CMCH is developing its priority list for housing projects. Yet I was advised earlier this week that in fact the housing priority list cannot be given out to interested groups and organizations because again the Government is attempting by media manipulation to manage the news and to prevent information which is of vital importance to interested parties in the housing industry from in fact being exposed.

I refer also to a simple peace conference which was held recently and an article indicating that the muzzle may affect that peace conference. There is no Hon. Member in the House who would disagree with the initiatives of the peace conference. The Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), notwithstanding his reticence about the media, would agree that information of the sort which would emerge from this peace conference will be very important. However, it was indicated in a recent newspaper article that organizers of a university seminar on nuclear disarmament said that they had been receiving telephone calls from worried public servants who were reluctant to attend meetings because journalists were also scheduled to attend. I know there are a number of former journalists on the government side of the House. I am sure they would agree that it is appropriate, when trying to give out information to allow policy decisions to be made, that all policy options be explored and that public servants have the authority from their Ministers to give out this kind of information.

This Government through its political commissars, media management and mass manipulation has denied that right, not only to the Canadian people but to Members of Parliament who of necessity have the need from time to time for off-the-record briefings with Ministers' staff and departmental officials.

If this Government is willing to repair its current image in the minds of Canadian voters—and I do not have to remind Government members of the massive mandate for change they were given in the last election—it will not refuse to open the doors of information, allow Canadians access to information and allow Members of Parliament the tools that we need to carry out our function as an effective, critical Official Opposition. If not, it will have broken the first of many promises it made to the Canadian people.

I am sorry that the Prime Minister is not here currently to join in the debate. He stated last August that he believed in open government. He stated that Conservatives were not afraid of letting information out to the Canadian people. He said that a new government would result in a massive new direction, including access to information by the Auditor General. Having said all that, I am sure that he will stand in his place this afternoon and clarify to the Canadian people why his Government has changed course, why he has broken his promises and why the open government which he pledged last August has become a government of secrecy, a government of manipulation, a government which is not prepared to let the Canadian people in on the economic situation of this country.

I expect the Leader of the Opposition, as he has done so ably in the last few weeks, to continue to press on this issue. It is a matter of liberty and rights, not only for Members of Parliament but for all Canadians. All Canadians have a right to know how many jobs were eliminated as a result of the financial statement. Canadians have a right to know what policy initiatives this Governmment will be studying with regard to universal accessibility.

Is this Government going to do away with the baby bonus, as has been suggested in the economic discursives of the Minister of Finance? Is this Government going to jack up the cost of unemployment insurance benefits and reduce them to the point that unemployment insurance will become the right of welfare recipients only?

Is this Government going to do away with the child tax credit in a move that has been described by some as the most anti-child and anti-young people initiative ever ventured upon by any government in this country? Is this Government going to carry out these initiatives or will it allow the Canadian people to be involved in a full and open discussion on the initiatives introduced in the economic statement tabled by the Minister of Finance?

Canadians want to know the answers to these questions. They want to know whether old age benefits are going to be reduced as a result of this Government's lack of commitment to universal access. Canadians want to know what the future of the child tax credit will be. They want to know whether it is government policy to eliminate summer jobs for young people. Canadians want to know what kind of two-step shuffle this Government was embarked upon when it made promises to the Canadian people last August that it refuses to deliver upon in November.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I just want to add that Canadians have a right to know what kind of policies the Government is considering. Before being elected, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised all Canadians they would have open government, government that would give all Canadians access to information. We know what happened. As soon as he was elected, the Prime Minister forgot all his promises and now, we have a Government where secrecy and political commissars are the order of the day. As they say in Parliament, you always have to—

[English]

"Check it with Erik". That is the hallmark of this Government: "Check it with Erik". The Canadian people did not elect just one Member of Parliament. They elected Members of Parliament on all sides of the House, all of whom are charged with the responsibility of getting access to information and ensuring that the Canadian people have access to information so that we can make informed policy decisions, and in the case of the Official Opposition offer constructive criticism. That is our role in Parliament.

[Translation]

And I believe the Government made a number of promises in that regard during the election campaign. But after election day, all those promises went out the window, and they have been replaced by a Government that wants to run this country as though Members were political representatives appointed by the Prime Minister, by the leader of the Government.

It is clear that with all its promises, this Government never intended to give the Auditor General access to all Cabinet documents, nor did they ever intend to inform Canadians. Why? If we look at the economic statement made recently by the Minister of Finance, for instance, everybody knows that prior to the statement, discussions within his department had made it clear that there would be cuts in employment as a result of this Government's policies. Obviously, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) does not want to give Canadian information and does not want to give them the facts. He knows perfectly well that the Prime Minister promised that as soon as he was elected, the Conservative Government would create thousands of jobs. In fact, as soon as he was elected, he decided that jobs would be cut, to concentrate on reducing the deficit. That is a complete turnabout on the part of a Government that came to power promising Canadians jobs which, as we all know, never materialized because the Prime Minister and his Cabinet never intended to stimulate employment. Their intention has always been to reduce the deficit on the backs of Canadian workers, although they were not going to tell Canadians this before they were elected. As soon as they were elected, we saw this Government do an about-face.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to focus on a question that should be addressed by Canadians. It is a question of confidence. Canadians have given the Progressive Conservative Party an extraordinary mandate. Why has this Government, why have the Conservatives now decided that they are not going to keep their promises? Because they never intended to do that. They never intended to keep all the promises they made from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

In Prince Edward Island, in a recent election, it was very clear that although Canadians there also expected the Conservative Government to keep its promises, the Government never intended to do so, and I am thinking of the ferry service. This is being done on the backs of the Conservative Members from the Maritimes who are not very happy about the Government's policy in this respect, and also on the backs of people working in Prince Edward Island who need the service year round. Mr. Speaker—

[English]

The Canadian people have to look at this Government and examine its mandate. They must recognize, as has been recognized by the Official Opposition and in the press, that the paranoia and media manipulation that has been the hallmark of the first few weeks of the mandate of this administration is totally unacceptable. It is an abrogation of this Government's promises to the people. It is a clear indication that the road of broken promises which has been embarked upon by this Government is only the precursor of what we can expect over the next few months.

I challenge the Prime Minister to stand in this Hosue this afternoon and clarify once and for all to the Canadian people the impressions that Canadians have about this Government, its trail of broken promises and media management. This Government has to lay all the facts on the table, including the economic information that led this Government to introduce an economic statement that was going to result in direct job reduction in this country. If the Government is going to put its political money where its mouth is, it can demonstrate to the Canadian people by tabling those documents in the House today that it is clearly prepared to let the Canadian people have all the facts. Where the Prime Minister's promise of tens of thousands of jobs is concerned, the Canadian people have a right to know why the Government chose to emphasize deficit reduction at the expense of jobs for Canadians, on the backs of the working people.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the born-again Liberal from Hamilton East. I listened with great interest to the comments of the Hon. Member with respect to the decision of the Government to refuse access to documents which were sought by the Auditor General regarding the Petro-Canada takeover of Petrofina. The Hon. Member waxed eloquently about the shortcomings of the Government in refusing to grant access to those documents. I share that concern. However, perhaps she could enlighten the House as to whether the previous government was not the first government which refused the request of the Auditor General for those documents, explain why it was that the Auditor General had to demand that the documents be released, and that when the previous Liberal government refused to release those documents the Auditor General went to court?

We have hypocrisy on the part of the Liberal Party. I appreciate that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) was not a Member at that time, but she might explain to the House if she supports the decision of the previous Government in stonewalling the Auditor General with respect to the documents, or if that Party has changed its position on this very important question.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to explain to the Hon. Member that I was a Liberal before he was born.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: If not in spirit, then in my mother's womb.

I am not sure whether the Hon. Member had an opportunity to hear all the arguments which were put by myself and by my Leader. If he had, he would know that we are discussing an issue of promises broken. It is an issue of promises broken by a government, not my government but a government which was elected with a massive mandate by the Canadian people on September 4. It was elected on the mandate of open government, which included the full exposure of documents to the Auditor General. I am not here as an apologist for the broken policies and promises of the Government. I would suggest that the Hon. Member should embrace his role as a constructive critic in opposition and deal with the issues in 1984 as they exist.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. She talked about this Government manipulating the ladies and gentlemen of the Press Gallery. Could she give us one example of how this Government has manipulated the Press Gallery?

Ms. Copps: As a sometime former journalist myself, I know that part of the job of a journalist includes being involved in off-the-record briefings. Journalists should not be denied access to information about policy initiatives which may be embarked upon by government departments.

We could take, for example, the issue of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. As a Member I have been trying desperately, as have members of the media, to get information about the policy initiatives which are being explored with respect to cuts in CMHC. We have seen a part of the social housing budget decimated by 25 per cent cut-backs and we cannot find out what initiatives are being considered with respect to where those cut-backs will be applied.

If the Hon. Member had taken a look at the article which appeared in The Toronto Star last weekend, he would know that any member of the media who is attempting to write a think-piece, perspective-piece or an introspective piece on government's past and future records must have access to off-the-record briefings. The decision by the Government to abolish off-the-record briefings is a denial of information. It is an attempt to run government by photo opportunity, much in line with the kind of policies and politics which we have seen south of the border over the last number of years.

I am not surprised that the Prime Minister has jumped in bed with the President of the United States. He has taken a page from the book of the United States in that access to information is being extremely limited. The Prime Minister only wants pictures of himself having tea with the President in the Rose Garden.

I asked the Prime Minister previously, when he visited the President of the United States, why he did not discuss the issue of steel quotas. He was too busy having a photo opportunity in the Rose Garden. The issues about which Canadians and journalists are concerned were never exposed for public discussion. That is the kind of off-the-record briefing which has been a hallmark of Parliament since Confederation and it is one which should be continued.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made quite a thing about the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). She will be apprised now that the Minister of Finance will appear before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to answer questions on Wednesday evening at 8.00 p.m. I expect her there. However, before she goes to that meeting, would she take a look at the discussion paper which was filed with the financial papers in the economic statement? That discussion paper goes into a whole series of questions on policy options. Perhaps she and her Party would contribute to that discussion, instead of contributing to the crying, wailing and gnashing of teeth about political commissars that we have heard this morning.

I want to ask the Hon. Member, seriously, what is wrong with demanding that when people give interviews they give their names and set out the record for attribution? What is wrong with that kind of a rule?

Ms. Copps: I would like to throw a couple of questions back at the Hon. Member. I realize it is unparliamentary, so I will simply do it rhetorically. In his long experience as a Member of Parliament has he ever had an occasion to have an off-the-record discussion with a journalist? If he can state categorically that he has never had such an off-the-record discussion, that his Party has never had such an off-the-record discussion, or his departmental officials have never had such a discussion, I think the Hon. Member is clear in making that statement. However, I would suggest to him that in an attempt to gather information about a number of policy options—and I raised the issue of CMHC because it is a case in point—as a Member, I cannot obtain information about where the prospective cuts are being considered.

With respect to the question regarding the Minister of Finance and his appearance before a parliamentary committee, I am pleased. I know it is part of the parliamentary process for Ministers to appear from time to time before committees. I realize that some government political commissars may like to replace them in this regard, but since they are unable to do so I welcome the appearance of the Minister of Finance at this committee meeting.

The point which I made in my brief discourse, is that the Minister of Finance has a responsibility to Canadians to table the documents relating to the economic statement, and in particular, those documents which clearly demonstrated that the short-term results of his economic statement will be the reduction of jobs for Canadians. When the Minister of Finance tables those documents, including the number of jobs which will be lost and the sectors in which they will be lost—and it is predicted that the number will be in the thousands—then I will be very happy to stand in my place and say that the Government has returned from the road of broken promises back to an open government. However, I do not see that forthcoming.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief supplementary question. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East has quite properly criticized the Tory Government for its position in refusing to expose documents to the Auditor General. Is it Liberal policy that those documents should have been disclosed?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will no doubt know that as the Liberal critic in the matters of labour and housing, I am not the Party spokesman on that particular issue. I am sure the relevant spokesman will be very happy to answer that question.

I am glad the Member gave me an introduction to an issue about which I have not had the opportunity to speak. As the housing spokesman I have spent the last month apprising myself of the national housing situation and the labour situation across Canada. I have not been involved in the discussions but I am sure the Hon. Leader of the Opposition would be very happy to enlighten the Hon. Member on that subject and I welcome his intervention.

• (1200)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for comments and questions is over. We shall now resume debate with the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, entering into a debate of this sort is a pleasure for me because I am anxious to respond to the very questionable proposition put forward by the Opposition. I waited for a reasonable period of time, Mr. Speaker, to see just who was the real opposition. Where is the other Opposition Party; where does it stand with respect to this matter; and what were those Hon. Members going to say? I was interested to find out whether the other opposition was going to sing from the same song sheet or whether it might take a more enlightened view with respect to the whole question of "seek and see" and communications from government.

I would have thought that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) would have started off this debate by demonstrating that the path taken by the Liberal government in years past was a mistake, that it has accepted the error of its ways and is now prepared to disclose and reveal all of the information which it so candidly kept behind closed doors during the time of its administration of this country. I am referring to things we pointed out during our time as an opposition, the same things we are now bringing forward; for instance, improved accessibility and consultation in terms of going to the Canadian people and allowing them to have a real input into government policy.

What we are doing now is changing the shameful record of the Liberal Party and I would have thought, Mr. Speaker, as a simple gesture, that the Leader of the Opposition might have tabled at the outset the letter which he wrote to Mr. Trudeau with respect to the $84 million patronage deal which was made. If the Leader of the Opposition was really interested in disclosing information, certainly this kind of letter, a factual letter, a letter which probably has some interest and impact on the question of whether a government has the confidence of its people and is doing the right job in its appointments, should be disclosed. Of course, the Leader of the Opposition is not prepared to do that.

I want to ask the Leader of the Opposition if moving forward with respect to the question of secrecy is a new idea. We have a story to tell. We have a policy to put forward. We have an openness which is unprecedented in the history of our country. We are going to demonstrate that to the Canadian people because we are proud of our record.

I will wait for the New Democratic Party to speak. I am sure the Leader of that Party will have something to say about this subject. Perhaps he can tell me, as someone who comes from Saskatchewan, why his Party in that province has a long record of resistance and opposition to any form of access to information legislation? It has for years refused to bring in any of that kind of legislation notwithstanding the requests made by many of us in that province.

I would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that we would have heard from the Leader of the Opposition about the fact that we in this Government in a very short period of time have accomplished enormous gains in terms of an agenda for policy and planning for our country and a sense of direction which was lacking for so many years. But perhaps we will hear about this from other Hon. Members opposite.

I must say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we came in as a new government and those of us who are privileged to be members of the administration and of the Cabinet worked very hard because we had a lot of serious problems we had to face. We worked very hard in terms of Cabinet work, consultation across the country and dealing with our caucus colleagues in order to prepare a Speech from the Throne. We worked very hard at a variety of other demands on our time including, I might say, a visit by Her Majesty the Queen, the papal visit and a visit by the Prime Minister of France.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, it has been a burden!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There were a number of other demands upon our time but, notwithstanding that fact, Sir, we were accessible and open to any member of the press who wanted to come to our office, and we continue to be so at any time. In fact, I always invite Hon. Members of the Opposition Parties to present any queries or questions to us and we are prepared to give them the information which is available in order for them to do their job. We have set out a number of consultative initiatives which I believe the people of Canada appreciate.

Starting with the economic statement, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is preparing extensive discussion documents. He is preparing documents which will allow the people of Canada from all levels and pursuits, from all minorities, to participate fully in an examination of options which we have on the economic front. This kind of initiative is unprecedented. Consultation with the public has never taken place to the extent to which we are now prepared to do so. The people of Canada want it that way. That is why they elected us as their government, so that they could have full access to policy development, full input and full opportunity for exchange of views.

This is our attitude. This is the way in which we approach government. We trust the people of Canada. We do not believe, as the previous administration, that the word "management" is tantamount to and synonymous with "manipulation". I say that, Mr. Speaker, because that is the underlying drift of everything which has been said by the Leader of the Opposition. When he says something about management of communications, what he is talking about is the Liberal definition of that word, "manipulation". When we on this side talk about management, what we are talking about is the effective release of information and the effective delivery of information to Hon. Members of Parliament and to members of the Press Gallery. By the same token, the average member of the public in Canada should have the right to have this information to the same degree that it is available to any Hon. Member of Parliament or to any member of the Press Gallery.

There are a number of other initiatives in a parliamentary sense which we are taking. We are opening up the process. The motion which I have the privilege to move with respect to reform of the House of Commons is unprecedented in the extent and scope of the ability of Members of Parliament to have full input into the operation of this institution. This will be done in a spirit of openness and accountability. I challenge any Hon. Member of this House to come forward with any terms of reference which have been so broad and encompassing with respect to the operation of the House of Commons as is in this motion. At no time have Ministers of the Crown been so accountable. We have accountability in committee. We have the ability of Private Members of this House to operate within the democratic system. This is another initiative we have taken.

I simply point out that the Government said in the Speech from the Throne that we are now going to have a full-ranging and wide discussion of foreign policy undertaken in this country. It is not going to be a unilateral, behind-closed-doors investigation. It is going to be not only an all-Party investigation but an examination which is going to go out to the people of Canada so that they can say what they think we should be doing in terms of public policy with respect to international affairs. I would ask you to think back in the course of history, Mr. Speaker, and remember the last time we had that kind of openness demonstrated in terms of the policy of any government of our country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A lot has been said, Mr. Speaker, about the guidelines put forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I was very interested in the responses we received with respect to these guidelines. You would think, Mr. Speaker, that we have brought forward some sort of new monster, some draconian set of rules which are unprecedented in terms of public policy. Nothing could be further from the truth. I believe what we have now, Mr. Speaker, is a very responsible initiative taken by the Prime Minister.

These are not new guidelines. They are in effect the guidelines which were first initiated by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) when he was Prime Minister. Ultimately, after some public pressure, they were accepted by the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, when he was Prime Minister, and his administration. These are the same guidelines, with one exception. I want to address myself to that exception because it has been the subject matter of some comment not only in Question Period but also in statements made by spokespersons for the Liberal Party.

I think we all recognize the basic premise as stated by the Prime Minister and enunciated in the guidelines. The Public Service has not only a right but an obligation to give full and factual information to the people of Canada. This is not the preserve of a few people in the Press Gallery or those few of us who have been privileged to be elected as members of the House of Commons. The people of Canada have a right to information and the preservation of that right is one that we in this Party and the Government regard as the most serious undertaking we have.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: You might call it a sacred trust.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) has this condition: Whenever he hears a statement of fact he twitches and shouts. I want to tell him that if he twitches and shouts much more I may have to ask for an extension of time, because he is interrupting a very important message.

What we are determined to do, Mr. Speaker, is ensure that information is obtainable from the Public Service to everyone in Canada. We want to establish the clear and understandable precedent that people in the Public Service have an obligation to give out this information. Indeed, we feel so strongly about that that we have no compunctions about this being done without any concern on the part of public servants about making their identity known when making information public and on the record. Now, what could be more helpful to the dissemination of information? Public servants know that when they give information out they cannot be subject to any disciplinary action because they are in fact quite free to say: "Yes, I am a public servant but I say these are the facts". This does not require any clearance from any Minister.

Unlike the Opposition, we in this Party have the highest regard for the Public Service of this country. We believe them to be intelligent people of great judgment. We do not say that they have to speak off the record. These people are enormously talented, they are working in the interests of Canada, and we have no compunctions about saying that if you are a member of the Public Service it is quite all right that you speak for attribution. You have responsibilities in your department and there is nothing wrong with that.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what do we want to have in this country? Do we want a situation where every story that is written refers to sources from certain departments who refuse to be identified and are quoted as saying this or that because under previous guidelines there was great confusion as to whether or not they had the right to speak to the press or to anyone else? Are we going to continue this kind of regime or are we going to offer an up-front, straightforward set of guidelines that everyone understands? We say that they have an obligation to deal with certain areas concerning public policy. They are entitled to give the facts and do not have to worry about whispering it over the phone or whether it is attributed to them or not.

I do not have a suspicious mind, Mr. Speaker. Unlike some members of the Opposition who see everything in very grey areas, we believe the members of the Public Service of this country are worthy of the trust we have demonstrated in them through these guidelines. I simply say that we intend to make sure the system works efficiently, not because of any interest we have in putting ourselves in the best possible light, but because we think the public, and particularly the media, must have full access to government information. We want the Public Service to have a very clear understanding of their role in communications. We do not want them to feel they are somehow going to be our advocates on a political position we have taken. We want them to speak out and give the facts, notwithstanding that we have taken a political position. We want to ensure that deputy ministers and senior public servants realize that this Government takes seriously its communications with the public. We want them to understand the basic premise that we must be prepared to deliver information to the public. We want to ensure that each department has people to whom there can be access, either by the media or the average citizen. We want to make sure they get answers on specific issues and do not get that run-around which everyone who has tried to get information from government knows exists within our system. We want to make sure there is a clear understanding of the responsibility of the Public Service to give out the maximum amount of information.

We have not tampered with any policy on communication first enunciated by the Clark Government and subsequently by the Trudeau Government. We want to ensure that there is a clear understanding of what we are doing in the interests of freedom of information and freedom of access to the Public Service. We view this most strongly.

We have taken some initiatives which I think even the Opposition will applaud. What we are going to do in two or three areas will be a clear indication that we are not going to try to manipulate the news or use taxpayers' funds for the purpose of putting across our point of view and political philosophy, as the last government did during the Constitution debate and the energy debate. Hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money were used for crass political purposes. We are going to stop that regime and do it on a sensible and fair basis. We are going to do it through a substantial reduction in the advertising bill of this Government with respect to what transpired in the past.

We are going to take some other initiatives, as we already have by doing away with the propaganda arm of the previous government; the Canadian Unity Information Office has been terminated. No longer will we have a situation where a government has had—and I say this for the benefit of Liberals who do not understand the difference between the proper meaning of "management" and the word "manipulation"—an arm whose sole function was to manipulate the news, manipulate opinion poll sampling, and manipulate everything that went on in government for the political well-being of the Liberal Party.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada understand fairness and the idea that there is a message which has to be delivered concerning government services. There are many services we deliver. But we are going to move away from the crass political way in which the previous government attempted to politicize the Public Service of this country. From now on the tradition of an independent Public Service is one which we are going to defend and bring to people across Canada, and it will be seen to be a fair policy and a fair initiative on our part.

I see you are indicating that I am near the end of my time, Mr. Speaker, so I simply want to say in conclusion that we in our Party have a history of consultation. We had the Revenue Canada task force, and task force on VIA Rail. We have gone out to see the people. We are not embarrassed or ashamed to take the people of Canada into our confidence. That has been demonstrated by us as a historical tradition, and it is a policy we will continue within this Government.

One has to ask the question: Why has the Liberal Party brought this issue before the House? Where do they stand on the important issues with respect to the economy? What policies do they have to bring forward with respect to unemployment? What is their attitude concerning economic thrust? Who speaks for the Liberal Party? What does that Party stand for on the issues the people of Canada want to hear about? I simply say that we have the opportunity to deal with important issues. I make the commitment to you, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party that we are a Party of openness and we will continue to operate in the best interests of accessibility. We have the most consultative government in the history of our country. We intend to carry on with our mandate by consulting with the Canadian people and we will see the results of the policies we are initiating after full consultation in a spirit of openness.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn). He has just said that he and his Government are not embarrassed or ashamed to take the people of Canada into their confidence. If this is an accurate statement, why has the Government steadfastly refused to table in the House the studies carried out for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the preparation of his economic statement? He admits that the studies show there will be a loss of jobs as a result of his policies. He says he does not want to table the statement because the impact on jobs is statistically insignificant.

If my hon. friend and his Government are not embarrassed or ashamed to take the people of Canada into their confidence, why does he not show his Government's confidence in the people of Canada and table those projections right now?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, like a broken record, the Hon. Member repeats questions which have been answered very effectively by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. Not too long ago the Hon. Member was a member of a federal Cabinet. He of all people will understand that in terms of Cabinet documents and advice which one receives from public officials, there is a question of confidentiality which must be examined with regard to the parameters within which we operate in the country.

I was pleased to bring forward a motion dealing with review of the Access to Information Act which includes the question of Cabinet confidences. That matter will be examined by a committee. I made that offer to show my determination to have a full examination of the access to information legislation by a special committee. That was not acceptable to the Opposition. My second preference would have been to refer it to the Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments Committee, but that was not acceptable to the other Opposition Party. It has now been referred to the busy Justice and Legal Affairs Committee.

We believe that parliamentarians should be involved in defining the rules. This shows our determination to carry out our commitment made before, during and after the election. That area should receive the fullest attention of all Parties through the process of a parliamentary committee.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Walter Baker, who spoke on behalf of the Conservative Party in opposition, promised the people of Canada that one of the first initiatives of the next Progressive Conservative Government would in fact be to restore the power of the courts to review all claims for exemption, including claims for exemption on the basis of Cabinet confidentiality. As I well recall, the Hon. Member supported that position while he was in opposition.

How can the Governmet House Leader possibly defend the position which he is now taking, which is not to bring forward legislation to amend access to information legislation? That commitment has suddenly been shelved and rather than amending the legislation the Government is going to ask a committee to study it. That is not the commitment which was made by that Party when it was in opposition. The commitment was in fact that the Government would change the Bill. How can the Government House Leader possibly defend this significant step backward from the commitment which was made to openness in government when he was in opposition?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that question because I think it is a fair question. The statement by our very revered colleague, Mr. Baker, who is no longer with us, is an indication of a serious proposal which was put forward. Legislative initiatives will be taken under consideration in our deliberations in Cabinet. I am concerned about the rights of all Members of Parliament to participate in this process. We now have a review which takes place within three years of the operation of that Act. This was brought about primarily by the initiative of Mr. Baker. The Leader of the Opposition said today that the jury is out with respect to that matter. I have a problem in terms of acting unilaterally because I respect the ability of Members of Parliament to come to grips with the matter and work on consensus to attain the best possible solution.

The are two options. The first is to move ahead without consultation. The second is to allow the process to proceed, to have a full examination and hopefully reach a consensus with respect to the matter which will give us the best possible result.

I am not moving away at all from the statements I have made in the past. I have a belief in this institution. I believe that Members of Parliament can operate in the best interests of the people of Canada. I am hoping that this committee will deal with these issues and reach a consensus upon which we can operate.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. House Leader has attempted to wax eloquent and convince us that the Government will be more open than any we have ever seen. He has the face of a robber's horse to make that kind of speech in the face of the editorial comment, discussion and publicly articulate comments we have heard from people who are concerned with civil liberties. That he would make that kind of statement is unbelievable.

The Hon. Member talks about consultation. He says that the Government is going to consult and then move. It is going to be decisive. How does he square that commitment to consultation with the fact that in Atlantic Canada alone 24 major cut-backs, reductions and freezes were put in place as announced in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance, the mini-budget? Who was consulted about the cutbacks in ferry rates? Who was consulted about the $16 million reduction in the fisheries programs? Who was consulted about the cancellation of the federal forestry centre in Newfoundland? Who was consulted about the cancellation of the Summer Youth Program? Who was consulted about the dramatic reduction in the RRAP Program? Who was consulted about any of the 24 measures? The new buzz word, Mr. Speaker, is freeze. The new buzz word is going to become a reality. A lot of people in Atlantic Canada are going to freeze this winter. Who consulted them, their representatives or spokesmen before these measures were put in place?

How can the House Leader, on the one hand, with the face of a robber's horse, talk about openness and consultation, and on the other hand gloss over and ignore a $4.2 billion so-called media management economic statement that in fact was a mini-budget and dramatically affects people where they live in the small towns and communities of Atlantic Canada? Where was the consultation? Can the Member show us the action papers which were prepared that singled out these 24 programs for cuts?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Government House Leader to be brief in his answer.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, from one pretty face to another, I would like to respond to the Hon. Member's question. The Hon. Member has a pretty face and I accept all the descriptions of my own inadequacies.

• (1230)

I think the Hon. Member must have been sleeping and, mysteriously to all of us on this side, he woke up and was re-elected. I do not think anything could have been clearer during the election campaign than the fact that our Party indicated that responsibility and management of the affairs of this country was a very key part of our policy.

I will tell you with whom we consulted, Mr. Speaker. We consulted with the people of Canada. As a Liberal, the Hon. Member would not understand this concept.

Mr. Tobin: What you promised was not what you delivered.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In terms of these policies and programs, we have attempted to be even-handed. We have an even-handed approach to bringing control of government spending within our ability to manage the affairs of this country. The result will be a new prosperity and a new economic beginning for this country for which we in the Progressive Conservative Party will work morning, noon and night to accomplish.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great care and the usual attention I give to the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) when he speaks. I will deal with his very interesting comments in just a few moments.

First, in speaking about this very important subject, I want to make a few observations about the Party to my right that moved the motion. I listened with care to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). She raised concerns about not being able, as a Member of Parliament, to get information about housing programs. When her Party was in government we tried to get information about housing, agriculture, the fishery and the automotive industry but received no information at all. If she thinks that the situation is bad with the new Government, she should have been here last spring.

Perhaps it is understandable that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who moved the motion did not have much to say about the preceding Liberal government with respect to the important question of the public's right to have access to information. However, what disturbs me is that if one goes beyond the rhetoric of what he had to say about the right of the public to know, the importance of open government and his opposition to a manipulative approach to the news, we did not get a specific criteria laid down by him about what a Liberal government would do if it was in office. He did not make one specific suggestion. All that we heard was the usual rhetoric and general condemnation of the Government in power that comes from the Opposition Party. There was no specific commitment to make a policy change that is different from the new Government if the Liberals were back in office.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East said that what the Conservative Government was doing amounted to so much pap. With respect, I say that what I heard from the opposition members today amounted to so much mush. I believe the people of Canada are tired of both. They do not want pap and they do not want mush. They want the freedom to know what the Government of Canada and public servants are producing. They want information.

Before I leave the Liberals and deal with what the Government is doing, there should be no illusion about the fact that the last debate we had in the House on the access to information legislation that was passed in 1982 was followed up in committee with an amendment moved by the Liberal government of the day that took the substance out of the legislation. The Liberals moved what has been appropriately called the "Mack truck" amendment in which the Cabinet gave itself the right to decide upon matters that were to remain confidential. If there was anything designed to vitiate the substance of a measure, it was that amendment moved by the Liberals to their own legislation. The Liberal Party of Canada is the last Party in this country that has anything relevant or credible to say about the right of the people of Canada to have access to information.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I notice that the Conservatives are clapping. Let us see what they have to say in a few minutes.

Throughout the campaign I listened to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had to say about a number of interesting subjects. On August 12, he told the people of Canada: "The past few years have seen a veil of secrecy fall over vast areas of government activity". Then he lowered his voice and we all listened, took it in, and paid careful attention to what he had to say, as I am sure Hon. Members in the Cabinet do daily. Of course, he was right. He was right about the government of the day and the same is true for the Conservative Government of today.

I say with complete candour that in his criticism of the Liberals he was following the good tradition of his predecessor, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), when he was in office. I believe that when that former Conservative Prime Minister was in power for that short period he did move in a commendable way in terms of providing the people of Canada with greater access to information. I believe he used his power correctly to provide greater access.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You threw him out.

Mr. Broadbent: That was the one good thing the Conservatives did. They were in office all of seven months and they might have tried to accomplish more.

The people of Canada had some reason to have positive expectations about a new government moving in a systematic and democratic way to provide more access to information. The present Prime Minister made statements and indeed the former Conservative Prime Minister had taken action when he was Prime Minister that gave us reason to be plausibly optimistic.

What happened after September 4? First, there was the reaction of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) whose approach to what the Cabinet and the new Government was doing clearly did amount to an attempt to manipulate the news. What we say from the former Prime Minister, the current Secretary of State for External Affairs, can only politely be described as a slight case of paranoia with regard to the media. A most extraordinary set of statements came out of the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs about some powerful elite in the country, which is actually rather a scruffy group, given the three names that were used. They would be the last people whom I would describe as an elite. However, personalities aside, for a new government that preaches openness and concern for democratic rights, the response of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs was totally reprehensible. In a matter of days they began to reverse what the Conservatives had promised during the summer campaign. The Conservatives no more believe in freedom of information than they believe in a number of other promises that they made during the election campaign.

Let me deal specifically with the substance of the issue at stake here, as I see it. Within the Cabinet system of government what limitations, if any, ought to be imposed on the public who, in an ultimate democratic sense, have a much deeper and profound right even than Members of Parliament to have access to information? I noticed that the Government House Leader did not spell this out in his speech. Certainly the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition did not lower himself to suggest a specific criterion that the Liberals would believe acceptable.

I want to suggest a criterion that is consistent with the principles of democratic government, particularly a parliamentary democracy, and ought to be applied by the Government of Canada. I would like to hear some Government members respond to the view of my Party.

● (1240)

In terms of documentation prepared by public servants, whether of a factual or analytic nature, concerning present policy, or factual and analytic nature in terms of an assessment of future impact of present policies, if such studies do not contain material that would impinge negatively on the security of the state, if they do not contain material that would be clearly libellous, if they do not contain material that is pertinent to on-going negotiations of an intergovernmental nature, if, in short, they do not cover one of these three bases, all such factual analytic material ought to be made available to the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That is the important point and that is precisely the point being denied by the new Government of Canada which claims it is going to be more open than its predecessor.

I want to take a minute, Mr. Speaker, to explain clearly why I think the Government of Canada is not practising what it is preaching. The Prime Minister gave it all away yesterday in Question Period. I and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), were asking questions about the new guidelines. At one point in the Question Period concerning these guidelines I asked the Prime Minister if it were his interpretation that if members of the public, the media, and Members of Parliament requested factual, analytic information with reference to the future, that it was part of the task or the obligation of a public servant to provide information consistent, I believe, with the second guideline that, factual matters of public policy ought to be made available by a public servant. The answer from the Prime Minister, when asked in that form, came in a lowering of the voice. In a sincere tone he said: "Of course. Yes, it should be provided". But when I got more specific and asked if that therefore included studies that might have been done about the impact of multi-million dollar cut-backs in employment programs, multi-million cut-backs in the CBC's operations, multi-million dollar cut-backs in a whole variety of programs, he gave what I can only describe as an incredible answer. He said: "No, not at all". He said that information should not be given. He went on to suggest that if it were, this "would effectively paralyse the Public Service". He described as an impropriety the revelation of such factual studies, such analytic material. He said impropriety would be the way he would describe it in the context of parliamentary democracy; that somehow it would be wrong for a public servant working for the Government of Canada to provide such information.

My response to the Prime Minister's answers yesterday, and I repeat here today, is that he was talking complete and utter nonsense when he said that would be inconsistent with the requirements of parliamentary democracy. What he did and what has been systematically done by this Government in the last week is to equate any kind of factual documentation or analytic study as an item of concern with the right of a civil servant to make private advice and recommendation to his Minister. I see the Government House Leader says that is right.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No.

Mr. Broadbent: On the one hand he said it was right and now he shakes his head. He has changed his mind in three seconds.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, you are confusing yourself.

Mr. Broadbent: I ask him to check the record and the guidelines, specifically guidelines two and three produced by the Prime Minister last Friday. What the Prime Minister said yesterday is that such information, analytic studies, impact studies, should not be made available. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because it would be inconsistent with the right of the public servant to make confidential recommendations to a Minister of the Crown.

In my view, we are at the heart of the matter in a discussion of this particular matter. It is one thing for a public servant to have his traditional right respected, namely, judgment that he offers—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is right.

Mr. Broadbent: —or proposals that he offers to his Minister—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Absolutely.

Mr. Broadbent: —are to remain confidential.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are against that?

Mr. Broadbent: No. The Minister says I am against that. Quite the contrary. I am in favour of maintaining the traditional right of a public servant to advise a Minister of the Crown and to have his personal advice kept a matter of confidence.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We do not disagree.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister says "We do not disagree". I tell him to read his own Government's guidelines. He should read Hansard with care in terms of the Prime Minister's answer in the House.

While my Party accepts that, what we do not do is equate any kind of study, any assessment of government policy that may be prepared in a department, with private advice being given by a public servant to a Minister of the Crown. There is a world of difference between the two. A public servant may indeed offer advice, as I suspect was the case with the Minister of Finance, when he was talking to his deputy minister, and was given some advice on the impact of his mini-budget. It is one thing to say there is some advice forthcoming that can be given to the public, but it is quite another, I repeat, to say all such advice, of a personal or confidential nature traditionally, which we are not demanding, ought to be made public. It is one thing to say that the tradition of confidentiality ought to be respected. It is quite another thing to assert that all studies, any assessments, that that senior civil servant might have had prepared of a technical nature by his officials ought to be kept confidential as well. There is a world of difference between the two points.

That is precisely what the Opposition in this House have been trying to get at ever since Parliament came back, and more precisely since the Minister of Finance brought down his mini-budget. The Minister seems to be shaking his head in a way to suggest that he still does not understand the point.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You do not understand.

Mr. Broadbent: Maybe he will understand it if I put it this way. When he was on this side of the House, he used to castigate the Liberals, with the rest of us, for keeping so many matters confidential. He nods his head in agreement. During that period of time when he was in opposition and before I became Leader of this Party and had a specific area of critic's responsibility, for example, the automotive industry in Canada, I used to go at least once a year to Washington. Why did I go once a year to Washington, Mr. Speaker? I knew that I could go into any three branches of the government in Washington, walk into a civil service office and get statistical information about the operation of the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement, not only current information but assessments of future trends. They would provide it so quickly that when I first had the experience I was flabbergasted.

Then I would come back to Canada, participate as a member of the Opposition in Question Period, demand equivalent sorts of information be made available to Canadians and to me as a Member of Parliament, and it was systematically denied. It was denied under the same rubric as the Prime Minister used in his reply yesterday in the House and that the Minister of State (Government House Leader) is now using today, namely that any such documentation and analysis prepared by civil servants, financed by the people of Canada, ought to be kept privy, ought to be kept a Cabinet secret, because it all ought to be within the framework of confidential advice to the government of the day.

I repeat that that is the essence of the question. The clear view of the New Democratic Party is that Cabinet has a right to confidential advice and that the public servant giving personal advice has a right to remain confident that it will be kept private. However, we also say that all studies and all analytical material prepared by public servants of Canada which do not impinge on national security, which do not involve libellous material and which do not have a bearing upon current financial negotiations, ought to be made available to the people of Canada. That is what we are demanding. If the Minister does not understand that, he does not understand very much.

We are not talking of something about which only we in the House are concerned. Just the matter of an hour or so ago I was given a wire service story out of Winnipeg. It indicated that a briefing book was left by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his hotel room in the City of Winnipeg. If the Minister thinks that we are talking about some abstract matter of news manipulation and if he suggests, as his back-benchers said earlier, that we are a little off base in terms of our concern, then I advise him to read his colleague's briefing book. There are stories now going across the country about what was in that briefing book. Part of what was in it is very disturbing to me as a Member of Parliament, as I think it would be disturbing to all Canadians. What was suggested in there was nothing less—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, but I have to ask the Hon. Member to conclude his speech shortly.

Mr. Broadbent: If I have the permission of the House, I will conclude my comments very quickly. I should like to give one quotation from the news story:"The notes warn Wilson not to deliver too harsh a message to Manitoba right now in light of the controversy the federal cuts have already created here". In short, it was advice to the Minister upon which he was clearly acting to keep back information not only from the people of Canada, which we have seen in the House of Commons for some weeks, but also from another government in Canada which was concerned about the employment prospects of citizens within its own borders. This kind of manipulation or keeping secret data from another government which wants to act is what we regard as being totally unpalatable in a democratic system.

I conclude by saying that we have a government of secrecy. Perhaps for the first time in the history of our country we have a government which does not say that people have the right to know. We have a government which says that people have a right not to know or that people do not have the right to know certain things which we believe they ought to know.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Government House Leader.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the comments of the Leader of the New Democratic Party. In fairness to him, I think he raised a question which is the subject of legitimate debate. I am very interested in the fact that he wants to pursue the question of what kind of information should be regarded as having Cabinet confidentiality.

I preface my remarks by reminding him that had it not been for the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, the Party which started the freedom of information legislation and pursued it with vigour, we would not have access to freedom of information legislation. It was our Party which gave leadership in that role. Our legislation was the basis upon which the Liberal government was finally forced to move during the course of the last Parliament.

On the basis of his analysis, is the Leader of the NDP suggesting that advice given to the Government, a Minister or Cabinet should be dissected by someone and that those parts of the information, such as certain charts or statistics used in the course of that advice with approbation and approval to Cabinet or to a Minister, should be hived off and made public? Or does he not believe that in the course of giving advice—and he will understand that Ministers obtain advice which is backed up by a variety of statistics and information—information should be kept in its proper context and that the Minister should be allowed to receive the advice of public servants and not be concerned about its being the subject of partisan and acrimonious debate on the floor of the House of Commons or in the press across the country because it was taken out of context? In the context of advice to a Minister, does he not agree that statistics form part of the advice, or does he want to hang public servants out to dry so that anything they say can be hived off and the Deputy Minister to the Minister of Finance, or to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) or whomever, will not have any opportunity to put it back into the context within which it was given to the Minister? Is that what he is proposing, or does he have some other way in which he would propose providing this factual, so-called analytical material?

I am simply saying to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that it is very easy and very facile for him to make these observations and suggestions, but when we have statistics and information forming part of the advice being given to Ministers, how does he propose to deal with it?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister asks a reasonable question to which there is a reasonable answer. I wish he would act upon it. Clearly, as I indicated in my comments, judgments about the wisdom or lack thereof in terms of the pursuit of certain policies of a judgmental nature that are submitted in writing to the Minister for consideration in reaching a decision should be kept confidential. Of course, from time to time in such documentation or such argumentation some statistical reference would be made.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Quite often.

Mr. Broadbent: We all know that in presenting arguments—I hope this is the case with the present Government—some facts will be relevant to the argument and therefore some data will be submitted. However, if I agree with the Minister on that point, he must surely understand that, in addition to the argument, advice or proposal which might be offered, there are other supporting documents or supporting analytical information, for example, the assessment of cut-back proposals running through the economic model of the Department of Finance. This is technical information which is fed into a computer. Data are submitted and results come out which are analysed by economists who are trained to do that job.

All such analyses or documentation which do not come with the judgment as to whether or not one should act upon them and which are strictly speaking, an analysis of the consequences, whether it is in finance, agriculture or industry, have been available in the United States to ordinary citizens for years. They have been denied year in and year out in this country by Liberals. They are now being denied by the Conservatives, and we say that they should be made available.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

SOCIAL SECURITY

PURPOSE OF REVIEW EXERCISE

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, in a recent interview with George Radwansky, the Editor in Chief of The Toronto Star, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), when asked if money saved by a review of social security would be used for deficit reduction purposes, replied 'No, absolutely not—absolutely not'. At the same time, however, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was saying that any money saved in such a review could be used to reduce the deficit. I take this opportunity to urge the Prime Minister, in concert with his Finance Minister, to clarify for the Canadian people whether the real purpose of this review exercise is income redistribution as he would have us believe, or deficit reduction as the Finance Minister would like.

ELECTION ACT

EFFECTS OF ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES REDISTRIBUTION

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the new redistribution of electoral boundaries.

Basically, my comments will concern three points.

First, costs. We are now in the midst of a period of budgetary restraint, and adding new electoral districts will bring about an increase in direct and indirect costs which would be difficult to justify, considering the state of the deficit.

Second, regional boundaries. New electoral boundaries are always a problem because they may cut across natural regional boundaries. The sense of community remains a very strong concept, and any changes will have a social and economic impact on our constituents, in addition to the fact of having to adjust to a new administrative and political milieu which is complex enough as it is.

Third, the solutions proposed. These almost always require shifting populations from one constituency to another. However, since there is an increasing movement towards the urban centres, why not consider a more practical and permanent solution based both on the number of people and the geo-economic milieu?

Mr. Speaker, we hope that these items will be taken into account when the Election Act is discussed.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—LIBERAL PARTY'S WIN IN BY-ELECTION

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the people of the provincial riding of Fourth Kings on Prince Edward Island registered their scores on the performance of the federal and provincial Parties on P.E.I. The final score: NDP, 161; the Conservatives, 1,061; the Liberals, 1,428.

Islanders have said no to higher energy costs, no to higher gasoline prices, no to higher ferry rates, no to increases in national park fees, no to cuts in agricultural programs, no to increases in berthage fees for fishermen, no to reductions in housing programs and, most important, no to the provincial Conservatives who have said that the Mulroney Government understands Prince Edward Island's problems and needs. Islanders have said: "Where are the jobs, jobs, jobs?" The federal Government has given each and every Islander a job—a snow job. Perhaps now Premier Lee will see that being a yes man to Mulroney's Government is not enough. Perhaps now the federal and provincial Tories will sit up and listen.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

CNCP APPLICATION TO ENTER LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE BUSINESS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, over the past 50 years Canadians in all parts of Canada have benefited from telephone systems which are almost universal, systems that provide them with good, efficient telephone service at a moderate price.

At the present time the CRTC is considering an application from CNCP Telecommunications to enter the long distance telephone business, which would change the whole system of telephone usage in Canada. That application is being opposed by a variety of groups. It has been opposed by the three prairie Governments. I quote from a letter from the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of the Conservative Government of Saskatchewan:

> It is the Saskatchewan Government's position that CNCP's entry into long distance service would benefit only a few select customers in Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia.

If the CRTC were to approve that application, it would change our whole system. The application raises a policy question which should be dealt with at the federal-provincial level. We urgently call on the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to convene a federal-provincial conference on telecommunication policy and to instruct the CRTC to hold its decision until a national policy is established by the elected representatives of the people.

ABOLITION OF TOLLS ON CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that one of the important issues during my election campaign was the abolition of tolls on the Champlain Bridge, a personal commitment that was never mentioned during the campaign, and that I had the blessing of my leader and my Party. I want to give the House and my constituents in La Prairie the assurance that I will continue to meet the commitments I made, especially concerning the Champlain Bridge tolls, an issue that my Opposition colleagues never bothered about when they were in power. I also want to say that I have every confidence in the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Cabinet, because of their open attitude to dialogue and consultation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I am not going to let my Opposition colleagues tell me what to do, and that I have no intention of resigning, even if I am the only Member to have been elected twice during the same election.

MARITIME LIVESTOCK AND POULTRY INDUSTRIES

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my statement is to draw the attention of Hon. Members to the urgent problem facing the livestock and poultry industry in the Maritime provinces.

Livestock and poultry production in the Maritimes was worth $375 million in 1983. That industry has a labour force in excess of 6,500 people and the economic activities related to the industry inject $1 billion into our economy every year. However, the survival and future growth of the industry rest on the possibility of equalizing feed grain prices between the Maritime provinces and the rest of Canada.

[English]

In 1966 the Livestock Feed Assistance Act was passed. One of its stated objectives was "the fair equalization of feed grain prices in eastern Canada". In 1984 this assistance covered only 20 per cent of the transportation costs, creating a $30 a tonne difference in costs between the Maritimes and central Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the solution would be that the Maritime provinces become self-sufficient in the production of feed grain. Self-sufficiency would make for a secure and stable industry and contribute to better agricultural land use. The Maritime provinces have enough land to achieve self-sufficiency within 15 years, but immediate action must be taken.

[English]

In summary, we have a feed cost disparity problem which is creating an emergency situation for our pork industry and a heavy burden on other livestock sectors. Left unattended, we stand to lose 4,000 to 5,000 jobs. Properly addressed, we could add 4,000 to 5,000 new jobs.

RETIREMENT OF GUY LAFLEUR, HOCKEY PLAYER EXTRAORDINAIRE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in most of the world "flower power" may have come and gone with the 1960s, but in Montreal it started in 1971 and lasted until yesterday when Guy Lafleur finally said:

[Translation]

"Enough is enough".

This is the end of a great era. Yesterday, after playing 14 years in the National Hockey League, Guy Lafleur announced that he was hanging up his skates permanently. With a career total of 518 goals, he was the second best goal scorer in the history of the Montreal Canadiens, just behind Maurice Richard. He is one of a very select group of nine NHL players with a career total of more than 500 goals. Between 1974 and 1979, he had six consecutive 50-goal seasons.

During 14 years, Guy Lafleur was truly a great star, an idol of the 1970s. He is the last in a line of superstars which included Jean Béliveau and Maurice Richard.

I am sure the House and all Canadians wish him the best of luck in his future endeavours—

INDUSTRY

PETROLEUM SECTOR INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, this brief statement is naturally addressed to all the Members of this House, but it is particularly intended for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

Hon. Members as you are probably aware, the total value of shipyard production decreased by 18.3 per cent during the first three quarters of 1984 as compared to the same period in 1983.

In view of the fact that my constituency is particularly affected by this situation, I would like the Ministers concerned to only consider granting financial assistance under the Petroleum Incentive Program to companies which are being supplied in Canada or which maximize the Canadian content.

We know that this program is now being reviewed and will perhaps be cancelled, only to come back in a new form. In any case, the basic problem being the lack of protection for the industry, I hope that the Ministers concerned will take my proposal into account and will add it to the existing or completely revised program.

As I have already mentioned, this proposal is certainly not unreasonable in view of the fact that Section 19 of the GATT allows a country to take protectionist measures when a national industry is threatened. I will want to come back to that because the shipbuilding industry was clearly forgotten by the Liberals for more than 30 years.

To improve the situation of the entire shipbuilding industry—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

ENERGY

HIBERNIA OILFIELD—ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STUDY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premier of Newfoundland have engaged in a conspiracy of silence regarding the report of Mobil Oil, the operator of the Hibernia oil field, its environmental assessment impact study. This study outlines the mode of production, the timetable for production, and the environmental damage, if any, which would occur as a result of moving that development forward. It is a critical document which was scheduled to be given to both Governments on November 15.

Last week the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, (Miss Carney) at a press conference with the provincial Minister, agreed to delay the release of that document for six months, despite the fact that both last Wednesday in this House and again yesterday the Prime Minister of Canada admitted, because he does not have his homework done—the right hand does not know what the left hand is doing—that the federal Government had received a copy of this very sensitive report.

What is being covered up? It is known that the Government of Newfoundland is on record as insisting that the mode of production for Hibernia oil be floating concrete platforms to be constructed in Newfoundland. It is equally known that Mobil has determined that the mode of production should be semi-submersible rigs, eliminating 45,000 jobs from the Province of Newfoundland.

The Government has the report in its possession. The Prime Minister promised to table it a week ago. The report has not been tabled. It is time now—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

REQUEST THAT STUDIES MADE BY SAGUENAY AND LAC-SAINT-JEAN REGIONS REMAIN PRIORITY

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, as the member for the constituency of Lac-Saint-Jean, I should like to point out to the House that in the past, several reports and reviews have been delivered to the government by various organizations in outlying areas such as the Lac-Saint-Jean region.

One of those reports was the study submitted in 1981 by the Regional Association of Economic Councils to the Canadian Transport Commission about the transportation problems facing our area. Mr. Speaker, in view of the efforts and consultations devoted to those studies, we expect that they will be considered by the departments concerned and will remain a priority of this government, so that remote areas such as Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean may finally hope to play a more substantial role in the Canadian economy.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I was quite amazed at the comments made by the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) on the report "Democracy Betrayed" issued by the National Association of Japanese Canadians.

The Minister's reaction is just another example of those loud promises that are put off indefinitely. As a matter of fact, on the very day he was sworn in, on September 17, 1984, the Minister stated that Japanese Canadians would receive national apologies and compensation of a form to be later specified. That was two months ago, and the Minister has yet to start on the process that thousands of Canadian men and women of Japanese descent whose rights have been seriously encroached upon during World War II are looking forward to.

Since the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) is dragging his feet on this issue by setting up a committee to better postpone any decision as long as possible, the Prime Minister should assume responsibility. Because, as reported in the Globe and Mail of May 16:

[English]

Conservative Leader Brian Mulroney says he is in favour of compensation for Japanese-Canadians who were unfairly interned during the Second World War.

Why set up a committee, when the Prime Minister has already stated that he has agreed on the principle of a compensation?

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

MANITOBA REQUEST TO EXTEND EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS—DEPUTY FINANCE MINISTER'S ADVICE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Of course he is aware that a debate is currently being held in the Chamber regarding open and accessible government. My question concerns the $1.3 billion memo which was left behind in Winnipeg by the Minister of Finance, that being the estimated cost of raising equalization payments for Quebec, Nova Scotia, and Manitoba.

The question concerns the integrity of the Prime Minister's Government and the commitment which he made to open and honest government. A CP story from Winnipeg today states that the documents left behind by the Minister of Finance indicate that the Minister has been less than forthright with the Government and people of Manitoba, and indeed, the people of Canada.

The Minister of Finance told the Government of Manitoba that he would consider its request to extend equalization payments. At the same time the Deputy Minister of Finance is quoted in the documents as telling the Minister that he should not build hopes in Manitoba for a review of the equalization payments, and that "no compelling arguments have been advanced thus far which suggest you", meaning the Minister of Finance, "should encourage Manitoba to believe that such assistance is a possibility".

Did the Prime Minister tell the Premiers at their recent meeting that the cost of honouring commitments to Manitoba, Quebec, and Nova Scotia in terms of equalization would be $1.3 billion? I assume that the Prime Minister spoke to the Minister of Finance about that $1.3 billion this morning. After that conversation, did the Minister of Finance tell the Government of Manitoba that he already had advice from the most important public servant of the Government of Canada, the Deputy Minister of Finance, which contradicted that Government's arguments? Why did the Minister of Finance not tell the news media and the people of Canada of this conflicting advice?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my right hon. friend has inadvertently committed an egregious error. He has quoted one line from the advice which was tendered by the Deputy Minister of Finance. In the sentence which follows immediately thereafter, the Deputy Minister is apparently advising the Minister that perhaps the Minister of Finance from the Government of Manitoba might have arguments which would persuade the Minister in a different way.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should not be too quick to believe the negative side. In fact the Minister of Finance went to Winnipeg and conducted himself very honourably, as he always does.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COST OF INCREASING FEDERAL GOVERNMENT PAYMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance was in Manitoba he said that he did not know what the cost of reviewing and raising those equalization payments would be. Yet he had in his possession a memorandum from the Deputy Minister of Finance saying the cost would be $1.3 billion.

Did the Minister say that he knew the cost on the basis of the memorandum, and yet not tell the people of Manitoba that he had the cost in his hands? Did he mislead the people of Manitoba by telling them that he could not estimate the cost?

In order that the House may see the entire document, because I believe that I have quoted from it accurately, will the Prime Minister table these documents in the House so that we will all have an opportunity to see them?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no idea of what document the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is referring to.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The Minister of Finance went out to Manitoba. He had in his possession, I am informed, advice from his senior departmental officers. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will not be a stranger to that kind of information. The Minister dealt with the Manitoba Minister of Finance in a proper and above-board manner. The Hon. Minister is a man of unimpeachable integrity. I know that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would not allude to anything to the contrary.

The best information I have is that the meetings went well, and we hope there will be others which will be mutually advantageous to Manitoba and to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister says he does not know about a memo from which he has just quoted.

Mr. Mulroney: You quoted.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You indicated I quoted from a single line, and that you had information which indicates that that was not a substantive report of what the memo said.

REQUEST THAT DOCUMENTS BE TABLED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I ask the Prime Minister to table the documents, Mr. Speaker, so that we can compare what the Minister of Finance said in Manitoba with the advice he received prior to that meeting.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was selectively quoting from a memorandum and I was merely attempting to correct it for his benefit and to bring forward the evidence.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I indicated to my right hon. friend as I had been informed. The documents in question were apparently removed from an area that the Minister had been attending. I am not informed of what was in his confidential file, but I will be happy to meet with the Minister as soon as he comes back, to review it with him—

Mr. Deans: It does not sound good!

Mr. Mulroney: —and to deal with it in a fair and open manner here in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. I should say that we do have some admiration for the ingenious way in which the Minister of Finance has gone about getting around the guidelines tabled by the Prime Minister last Friday. Hotel lobbies, I guess, are the new repository of information.

The Prime Minister has promised open consultation with the provinces. It is clear that the Minister of Finance had in his possession information relating to a very important economic issue with respect to the Province of Manitoba which he did not share with the Manitoba Minister of Finance. Is it to be standard procedure that, when this Government consults with the provinces, it will not give the provinces full, honest and forthright information on matters affecting that region? And will the Prime Minister instruct the Minister of Finance to consult from now on in a more honest and open way?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I hope, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend is not suggesting that when he was a member of the Ministry and negotiated with the Government of the Province of Quebec, he opened his files and said "Here is the federal position". I hope that is not the suggestion, because that was never the case.

The Minister of Finance is a representative of the Government of Canada. He went out to deal with his provincial colleague. The Minister of Finance had information, I assume prepared by his senior ministerial officers, which put the federal case. His vis-à-vis on the provincial side, I am sure, was equally well briefed from the provincial perspective. That is the way in which consultations and negotiations take place. Background information and advice to Ministers have always been—to protect the Public Service and the integrity of the process—have alway been privileged. I know my hon. friend would agree with that. I know he would not read anything into that beyond a complete statement of truth by the Minister of Finance.

REVIEWS OF EQUALIZATION PAYMENT MADE TO MANITOBA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said that he wants to continue this process of consultation. Is he aware that there was a commitment made by the previous Government to undertake a review of that equalization payment and to share the information with the Province of Manitoba? If so, would the Minister tell us if that review has been completed, and will the Government share that information with the Province of Manitoba? Will the Government table those documents in the House? And will the Prime Minister, in terms of his own letter that was revealed in those hotel caper documents, indicate why he is contradicting his own Ministers—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Axworthy: —when he said you must continue—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Axworthy: —negotiating, when the Prime Minister—in fact says he cannot?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Axworthy: That is an important issue to my province.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not up to the Speaker to decide the quality of the issues. It is up to the Speaker, when an Hon. Member tries to put three questions in a supplementary question, to stop it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, clearly, the funds to which the people of Manitoba are entitled were impacted negatively by decisions taken by a Government of which my hon. friend was a member. The provincial Government of Manitoba has raised concerns about this attitudinal problem which developed under the previous Government. These concerns have been conveyed to us. The Minister of Finance, together with my Manitoba colleagues, is trying to work out a formula which might perhaps be more equitable. The intention of the Government is to repair some of the damage done in the past by the Liberal Government.

CONTENT OF ADVICE GIVEN TO MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister on the same subject. The Prime Minister has talked about the need for open government on the one hand, and about the need for open consultation with provincial Governments on the other hand. Considering that in the brief which was left behind was advice to the Minister that he ought not to "leave too harsh a message to Manitoba right now" would the Prime Minister tell the House—because we are talking about facts here—what the "harsh message" was in terms of facts which the federal Minister had and which he refused to share with his provincial counterpart?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are not even a good fisherman.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I suspect my hon. friend would agree with me that if a Minister of Finance for the Government of Canada is sent off to negotiate with provincial Governments, he is entitled, as a representative of the duly elected Government of Canada, to seek and obtain private information from his Deputy Minister which bears upon the manner in which these negotiations might be conducted, consistent with the desire of the Government of Canada to be fair and open. I believe that when the Minister of Finance went to Manitoba—as he went elsewhere—his officers tried to brief him as best they could, and I believe that information should not be considered as isolated variables. It is a package of advice which is given to a Minister of the Government of Canada who is negotiating with a provincial Government in the interests of Canada and that province. Surely there is nothing wrong with that.

ECONOMIC STATEMENT—EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS ON MANITOBA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to come back to the "harsh message" about the facts. If the Government is going to preach open negotiation and frank consultation, it ought to practise what it preaches. Considering that the factual dispute between the Manitoba Government and the Government of Canada, as reported in newscasts, concerns the number of jobs which would be lost in Manitoba as a result of the cut-back policy announced by the Government, does the Prime Minister not think that it is entirely appropriate for the Government of Canada, through its Minister of Finance, to give to the Manitoba Minister of Finance, and to the people of Manitoba, its own factual analysis of the economic consequences of its own program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am far from certain that that is the document which may or may not be available. However, I point out to my hon. friend—

Mr. Broadbent: Well, what is?

Mr. Mulroney: I do not know. I did not pilfer the document, so I do not know.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I do not know. However, I point out to my hon. friend that consultation, indeed, is indispensable. Here is an observation from the Winnipeg Free Press:

> The provincial Treasury Board of Manitoba has asked Cabinet Ministers to scrutinize department expenditures and submit programs and services that could be cut back or eliminated, a senior Cabinet Minister has confirmed.

● (1430)

They are cutting back in Manitoba, but they did not consult with us. I respect the fact that they are entitled to act within their sphere of competence entirely, and that is what we are trying to do.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it is a curious world when a Cabinet Minister is so sloppy and careless to leave behind a document that the Prime Minister accuses someone else of pilfering. It is a strange Government we have.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROVIDE INFORMATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has acknowledged that there are going to be jobs lost as a result of the cut-backs announced in this House a couple of weeks ago. Many of those will affect the people of Manitoba. That Government, as well as other provincial Governments, have the right to know the consequences of the federal Government's policy. Will the Prime Minister not live up to what he promised the people of Canada and the Provinces, and provide such necessary information?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we have been trying to do. That is the basis of the ongoing consultation with the First Ministers. That is the kind of information that will be exchanged prior to the First Ministers' Conference on the economy. I can tell my hon. friend, because I know he would be pleased, that all provincial Premiers have expressed delight at the improved climate of federal-provincial relations.

QUOTATION FROM ALLEGED LETTER TO MINISTER OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister just told us that all provincial Premiers have expressed delight with the spirit of consultation. If that is the case, why is it that the material in yesterday's hotel caper revealed a letter the Prime Minister wrote to his Minister of Science and Technology on November 20, 1984, which reads, and I quote in part: "I wish to remain—"

Mr. Axworthy: "consistent".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): "—consistent about our determination to achieve economic renewal which may have to override specific concerns of various groups about the hard decisions we have reached in making expenditure reductions"?

Does this letter not make a sham of everything the Prime Minister said about consultation? He is singing one song in public—

Mr. Speaker: The Member had asked a question, I believe.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —and singing another song in private.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the record will show that my hon. friend choked on the word "consistent", and I can understand why.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: He seemed to be dismayed at the fact that all of the Premiers were delighted. I meant all of the Premiers except the Liberal ones.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

LETTER QUERY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister worries about the revelation of the text of his letter, but is he denying that he sent such a letter to his colleague, the Minister of Science and Technology, saying that the strategy of his Government is to override specific concerns of groups in the community about budget cuts and their impact on jobs? Is he denying that in the House?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, flatly.

REQUEST THAT EQUALIZATION FORMULA BE RENEGOTIATED WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister and relates to the memo which was either lost or pilfered, and to the consistency that the Prime Minister is talking about. Will he be consistent and keep the promise he made during the election campaign, and renegotiate an equalization formula which affects so many provinces? That is the real question. Will he renegotiate those equalization payments which are so necessary?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I agree with my hon. friend; that is indeed the question. The provinces are confronted with new situations as a result of unilateral decisions taken by the previous Government. That is the genesis of the problem. The Minister of Finance is in the process of meeting with his provincial colleagues to see the extent to which we might be able to satisfy the points raised by my friend.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): I repeat the question. Are you going to renegotiate the—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Murphy: —equalization formula? Are you doing that? That is not what this memo says. The memo says the exact opposite. Are you going to negotiate?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, clearly the agreements have a term and they all must be renegotiated. We will renegotiate agreements at an appropriate time in the interests of Canada and the provinces affected.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CHEMICAL POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of the Environment how she proposes to rationalize the cut-backs in her Department with a report not yet released but quoted in the Ottawa Citizen this morning as saying that Lake Ontario, as a source of drinking water for 4.5 million Canadians, faces destruction unless more is done to stop the flow of toxic chemicals into the Niagara River?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, my colleague seems to be referring to a report drafted by two department officials who comment on certain parts of the report I intend to table this afternoon, namely the report of the joint commission on toxic chemicals in the Niagara River.

The interesting aspect of this report by two department officials is that it has been made public a few hours before the tabling of the 600-page joint commission report and that it was drafted in June 1984. One might wonder about the advisability of releasing that report to the media. It has now been made public and I quite agree that it should be examined. My department will make an appropriate response within a few days. In answer to my colleague, I would add that we are still concerned about toxic chemicals in the Niagara River.

PROPOSED WEATHER SERVICE INFORMATION CHARGE

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans but, as he is not here, I will direct it to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister announced that her Department would be charging Canadians for telephone information on weather services. This will not increase revenues as the Minister claims, but it will alienate people from calling the weather office, people like fishermen who should be calling for weather updates. How is the Minister going to impose this ridiculous charge on the Canadian public?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we are still considering the possibility of imposing user fees for the public at large on certain calls to the weather services because, in any case, that kind of information is always available on a continuing basis in the media.

I repeat what I have already told other media, including certain newspapers and radio broadcasters: fishermen and special clients will not be affected by service cuts.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Try some more spurious indignation, George.

Mr. Baker: I have a great teacher.

METHOD OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister not agree that, if she is going to exclude certain occupational groups, it will be impossible to police and control via the telephone, and the interpretation process will actually cost the taxpayers money and no money will be raised?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): I think I have already answered the question, Mr. Speaker, and it stands to reason that we will not implement a measure which might lead to administrative chaos.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. What precisely were the harsh measures that the Minister of Finance was not to reveal to the people of Manitoba?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I have not read the document. I know my hon. friend would want that any document be read in its entirety and that we should not be isolating phrases therefrom.

• (1440)

It is clear that all provincial Governments have had to cut back on their public expenditures. The Government of Canada, in the interest of restoring a degree of economic sanity to the finances of the nation, has done the same thing. There have been impacts in Manitoba, which we regret, but we hope that the renewed economy will mean more jobs for Manitobans.

IMPACT OF MEASURES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister believe that it is an appropriate action of the Government to refuse to tell the people of a province the impact of the federal Government's measures?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I hope my hon. friend would agree with me that there is nothing improper in a Minister of the Crown for Canada visiting with a provincial counterpart and having in his possession briefing documents received from his superior officers in the interests of the Canadian position on all matters. It seems to me this is an entirely logical and consistent position to take. His provincial counterpart would have similar documentation. That is the necessary dynamic of negotiation. That is what we are trying to do in Manitoba and elsewhere.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REPORT ON EFFECTS OF ACID RAIN ON QUEBEC MAPLE TREES

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): My question is directed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment. I would like to know whether there has been a report on the effects of acid rain, and more particularly on the effects on maple stands in Quebec.

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. colleague is referring to a study being conducted by Quebec. The Province is concerned about the possible effects of acid rain on maple trees in Quebec and the fast deteriorating condition of these trees in the Province. The study follows a joint study prepared by my Department and Quebec in 1983. We receive all the data on these studies because we have a federal-provincial committee on long-range pollution. We are working together with Quebec and exchanging expertise to keep a close watch on this problem.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE CARS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister has just announced his forthcoming visit to Japan, and he is of course aware that in the spring of 1985, which is quite soon, restrictions on Japanese car imports will be lifted. I know the Minister will be meeting with his Japanese counterpart, and I would therefore like to know what position the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be taking on these restrictions, namely, whether they will be continued or lifted.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, any decision on this policy will be announced here in Canada, in the House of Commons, before being announced elsewhere.

STATEMENT BY UNITED STATES OFFICIAL

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what he thinks about what Mr. William Brock, his American counterpart, said, and I quote:

[English]

"I would think that there would be no alternative but to fall in line with the American decision". What is the reaction of the Secretary of State to that?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that Canada's policy is determined by Canada and not by U.S. spokesmen. Second, I am not in a position to indicate today when an announcement will be made with respect to the points raised by the Hon. Member.

FINANCE

TAX BREAKS FOR CORPORATIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, does the Right Hon. Prime Minister agree with the chairperson of the Economic Council of Canada when he says that tax expenditures, usually in the form of tax breaks to corporations, are too numerous, greatly overused, expensive, inequitable, and, worst of all, create very few jobs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I agree with the spokesperson of the Economic Council of Canada who said today that the deficit has helped erode business and investor confidence and slowed the growth of jobs in the private sector, and it could be an even more serious problem in the future unless government takes steps to control it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA—STATEMENT BY OFFICIAL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, if I had wanted that answer I would have asked that question. I will, however, repeat my question. Does the Right Hon. Prime Minister agree with the chairperson of the Economic Council of Canada when he says that tax breaks to corporations are too numerous, greatly overused, expensive, inequitable, and, worst of all, create very few jobs?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes or no?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this is an opinion that deserves some consideration.

EFFECT OF GUIDELINES ON PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Considering this Government's obsession with secrecy and the fact that we have no way of obtaining any information on the studies being conducted by the Deputy Prime Minister on 1,000 programs, $92 billion and 170,000 person-years that are under review, could the Prime Minister inform the House whether guidelines will be published for lay-offs resulting from the Government's review of federal programs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should explain to the Hon. Member that the idea for the task force chaired by my hon. friend was born as a result of a statement by the Leader of the Opposition who said during the television debate on the French network that billions and billions of dollars were being wasted in Ottawa. That is why the Deputy Prime Minister is now trying to find those billions of dollars.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, once again, I did not get an answer to my question.

Have public servants been consulted on the guidelines that will apply in the case of lay-offs subsequent to the studies being conducted by the Deputy Prime Minister, and can he, and this is my supplementary, give us the assurance that the merit principle will be strictly applied in the guidelines issued by this Government?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is jumping to conclusions. We have not reached that point yet. This task force, which, we hope, is a faithful reflexion of Canadian society, has only one objective, and it is not any different from the objective being pursued by my hon. friends opposite, and that is the proper utilization of taxpayers' money. That, and nothing more. We want to spend the taxpayers' money as effectively as possible, and that is the purpose of my hon. friend's task force.

FINANCE

ENCOURAGEMENT OF PRIVATE INVESTMENT

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Canadian businesses need more equity investment, not just to create jobs but to help improve their balance sheets and reduce the excessive burden of debt. In the United States about one in four adults invests in common stocks—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, at this point a question is appropriate.

Mr. Attewell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister please comment on what measures are being taken to encourage Canadians to invest more in common stocks, and specifically the whole subject of capital gains tax?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to answer the Hon. Member's question. The Government agrees, as I certainly do, that the country does need more risk capital and investment which creates jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: With regard to the specific taxation policy the Member is addressing, I can only say that we are reviewing all aspects of taxation policy with a view to fairness and equity. We are, of course, concerned that more Canadians take risks in the private sector to create the jobs we need.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BUDGETARY CUTBACKS—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications and concerns the budgetary cutbacks affecting the CBC.

Can the Minister explain how he can possibly consult with the cultural community, the unions and Parliament within the prescribed time frame?

Is the Minister aware that any lay-offs, and there will probably be some, must be announced before next December 7?

If such is the case, how about the promised consultations, when and with whom will they occur?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is well aware that it is up to the CBC to present a program to the Minister of Communications and that this should be done within a few days.

• (1450)

NATURE OF CONSULTATIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister flesh out his answer and the answer given by the Prime Minister last Friday to a similar question about CBC cut-backs? The consultations referred to so far only refer to internal CBC consultations. Is this what the Government meant by consultations when it was understood that they would be with the cultural community, not just internal consultations? How can these take place? The Prime Minister referred to informing Parliament of the answer—

Mr. Speaker: The Member has put a supplementary question. Perhaps the Minister should be allowed to answer.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the CBC is now reviewing how to use its budget for next year. The Minister will receive the program of the CBC around the beginning of December, and we shall look into the matter at that time.

PETRO-CANADA

RESIGNATION FORMS PRESENTED TO DIRECTORS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Chief of Staff of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has confirmed that blank resignation forms have been presented to the members of the board of directors of Petro-Canada. Will he tell us what members of the board have been asked to resign, and what criteria have been used in asking for resignations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the same criteria that applied for their appointments.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is saying, then, that resignation is asked for purely on the basis of politics.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

FUTURE OF BLACK AND DECKER PLANT AT BARRIE, ONT.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my subject is slightly more serious. I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Last month 600 Black and Decker workers in Barrie, some of whose representatives are here today, were told that their plant was going to be shut down even though Black and Decker had promised FIRA this past spring to keep its operations open as long as it was profitable. All evidence shows that the operation is profitable.

Will the Minister require FIRA to review Black and Decker's figures and plans, which the union feels were not accurately put to FIRA, and direct FIRA to tell Black and Decker to keep the plant open as promised?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the House that a representative from my office met with the union officials today. We heard their representations and I will be taking up the representations with the officials of FIRA later in the day. I can assure the Hon. Member that we will not allow their representations to go without getting to the facts of what did occur.

CONSULTATION WITH COMMUNITY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister also consult with the community involved, which is particularly hit because of the possible changes in UIC as well, and then urge his Cabinet colleagues to move on this matter?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I can assure him that that has already been done. That community has excellent representation at the federal Government level in the Hon. Member for Simcoe South.

POLICY APPLICABLE TO PENSION INCOME AND SEVERANCE PAY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immmigration. As the Minister knows, the Minister of Finance stated in his economic statement that "social policy is about people", and "this Government is committed to the principle that people come first". Would the Minister explain why she has allowed the Minister of Finance to treat pension income and severance pay as income for the purposes of defining unemployment insurance benefits for older Canadians?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I replied to these issues yesterday, in response to a question by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, that we would take his points of view into consideration. However, I want to say to the Hon. Member that indeed we do look upon the economic statement as having social values. That is the whole purpose of the economic statement. It is to create jobs. It is to tackle the deficit. It is to attract investment—

Mr. Speaker: With due respect, I hate to interrupt any Minister but I think it is important for me to indicate that bootlegging is not popular with the Speaker.

CALCULATION OF BENEFITS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in view of the rhetoric of the Minister and the Government about their commitment to social policy, will she give an undertaking to the House that pension income and severance pay will not be included for the purposes of calculating unemployment insurance benefits, so that thousands of older Canadians will be rid of the fear which the Government has struck in them?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you that I am not a bootlegger, although I have heard the term before.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: I want to tell the Hon. Member that these benefits will be calculated in a way that is equitable and fair and which treats every Canadian the same as far as unemployment insurance benefits are concerned.

ENERGY

HIBERNIA OILFIELD—ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STUDY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has had a chance to reflect for 24 hours. I ask him again if he will clarify whether or not his Government has received a copy of the environmental assessment impact study on the Hibernia development, prepared by Mobil Oil? The Prime Minister said last Wednesday, and again yesterday, that it had.

His Minister announced in the press last week that in fact the study would not be released and not formally received for six months. Could he please clear the air?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hoped that the Minister would be back in the House today. She has been detained in Toronto. She will provide my hon. friend with an answer as soon as she returns.

RECEIPT OF REPORT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister indicate to the House on what basis he answered a question last week, and again yesterday, confirming that such a report had been received by his administration?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the basis of accuracy.

SPORTS

SPONSORSHIP OF AMATEUR SPORTING EVENTS BY TOBACCO COMPANIES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. There is much concern about the financing of amateur sport in Canada, especially when the present Government believes that every area of Canadian life must suffer the consequences of its misguided economic policy of cut-back and trim.

Sports bodies are being encouraged to seek corporate support. Would he confirm reports in the press—another was published in yesterday's Citizen—that he supports tobacco company sponsorship of sporting events?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that. I said that the Government is studying the situation in Cabinet at the present time. We are meeting with officials from the Sport Medicine Council, the sports associations and, in fairness, from the tobacco companies.

I have said that my personal view is that we should not cut back tobacco sponsorship immediately until we come up with a fair and equitable solution. That solution will be forthcoming in the very near future.

REQUEST FOR BAN ON TOBACCO ADVERTISING

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister take under advisement the call which came at a conference on preventative medicine over the weekend for a total ban on tobacco advertising, and to discourage sports bodies from spotlighting tobacco companies in their activities?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered the Hon. Member's question in my response to his first question. I can assure him that I do not support the promotion of the smoking of cigarettes or any of the other stuff that the NDP is so used to.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: I can only repeat that I, along with the Minister of National Health and Welfare and other Cabinet colleagues, am studying the situation and we will resolve it in the very near future.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I just want to take this opportunity to outline the Government's intention with respect to the calling of House business for tomorrow and Thursday.

As a courtesy with respect to the House, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a clarification of last Thursday's initial statement on House business. I want to advise the House that the business for tomorrow, in light of the progress we have made for which we are very grateful and appreciative, will be the consideration at second reading of Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority. If the House completes second reading of Bill C-11, we will move on to the consideration in Committee of the Whole and third reading of Bills C-7 and C-9, in that order.

In the event, Mr. Speaker, that we complete that business, and if there is a spirit of co-operation in this House, which has been the case since the beginning of this session, we propose consideration of Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

On Thursday morning I propose, depending upon the progress being made, to proceed again with the same order as I have outlined for Wednesday. However, following Question Period and Routine Proceedings on Thursday, it would be my intention to call the motion establishing the parliamentary task force on the reform of the House of Commons. That motion now stands as item No. 3 under the heading of Government Business on the Order Paper. If the House concludes its consideration of this motion prior to the commencement of Private Members' hour on Thursday, we will return to the business that was before the House prior to the midday break.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Government House Leader) (Mr. Hnatyshyn) was both giving information and seeking information and I want to help him in planning the next two days. Unless there are changes to the Borrowing Authority Act, it will not go through tomorrow.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that we will have the benefit of the point of view of the Hon. Member and any of his colleagues for whom he speaks.

Mr. Deans: I was just trying to be helpful.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: First we listen and then we act.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NO-CONFIDENCE MOTION—INFORMATION GUIDELINES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

That, in the opinion of this House, the guidelines issued by the Prime Minister, on November 23, 1984, with regard to the provision of information to the public, are inadequate and retrogressive and confirm the Government's mistrust of and cynicism toward Canadians.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on the motion before this House. I think it useful that I remind Hon. Members of what the motion says in light of the extraordinary Question Period we have just witnessed. The motion reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, the guidelines issued by the Prime Minister, on November 23, 1984, with regard to the provision of information to the public, are inadequate and retrogressive and confirm the Government's mistrust of and cynicism toward Canadians.

I want to underline two words from the motion, "mistrust of" and "cynicims" toward Canadians.

We have just had the spectacle of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) desperately reaching way back to his St. F.X. debating days, to his Laval debating days when he was for two years in a row, we are told in his official biography, the student club debating champion, to try and find some way to gloss over what was very apparent in this House—an attempt by his Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to be, on the one hand, presenting as government policy and the official position of the Government facts a, b, and c, while in his back pocket the real position of the Government of Canada, the real facts with respect to the transfer of payments as they affect the Province of Manitoba, were disguised. They were available to him but deliberately withheld from the representatives of the people of Manitoba and indeed Manitobans themselves.

My real concern, having witnessed that spectacle of the Prime Minister flippantly defending that action by his Minister, is that somehow the Prime Minister, who comes here every day with 210 cheerleaders and 210 who clap their hands, misunderstands the mood of the country. He misunderstands the very serious state at which his Government after only a few months in office has arrived. Each day, no matter what the issue or how flippant and cynical the Prime Minister's answer, he hears 210 pairs of clapping hands in this House. He has taken to listening to the applause. He goes out of this House believing that he has won the day because he has heard the most applause, believing that the fundamental issue of a government's relationship to the people, and the fundamental issue of openness and honesty between jurisdictions, has gone by the wayside.

I have a piece of advice for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. If he wants to understand how deeply the concern is by Canadians today about the approach of this Government and its dealings with the public, with Members of this House and with provincial governments, he should bring a pair of earplugs into this House and stick them in his ears so that he can weigh questions and the flippant answers he has provided more objectively. For days I have been asking the Government, which claims that it wants to consult, to be open and honest, to clarify what has happened to a report known as the environmental assessment impact study by Mobil, the operator of the Hibernia development. Last Wednesday and again yesterday and today, the Prime Minister told us in the House that his Government had the report. In the November 23, 1984 edition of The Globe and Mail, an article concerning the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) headlined "Carney awaits Hibernia decision" read in part as follows:

I delayed Mobil's acceptance . . . pending clarification of how the resource should be developed—

She has not accepted the report. The Premier of Newfoundland has risen in the Newfoundland House of Assembly almost daily for the last two weeks to deny that he has seen the report. The Prime Minister fell into a trap, the trap of truth. He answered a question truthfully. He said: "We have the documentation, we have the information", but he forgot to find out what his Minister of Energy was saying in Newfoundland to a reporter from The Globe and Mail. I wonder how he will square that one when the Minister of Energy returns.

What is in that report? What does that report address? How will Hibernia be developed? That is a very complex question with dramatic economic impact for Newfoundland, be it floating concrete platforms or semi-submersible rigs. It is the difference between 1,500 and 50,000 jobs. The answer is contained in the report which has been mugged and gagged by order of both governments for six months. How fast will production take place? What will be the rate of development? That is addressed in the report. How will the federal-provincial management agency function? Who is the great Solomon who will be the neutral chairman proposed by both agencies? That question and how that should be undertaken and accomplished is addressed in the report.

How will the so-called 25 per cent back-in provided to Petro-Canada, a portion of which is to be shared with the provincial government, be handled when the federal Government committed itself to getting rid of the 25 per cent back-in? Indeed, the Government of Newfoundland—and the Government of Nova Scotia already has an agreement—has as part of the agreement a share of the 25 per cent back-in provision.

These are not esoteric questions. These are questions which will impact directly on how Newfoundland can expect to share in the benefits of a resource adjacent to its shores. We have seen nothing but a conspiracy of silence from this Government.

Earlier this morning the Government House Leader stood and told the House that this was the most open government in the land, that this Government in all matters affecting Canadians, regardless of where they live, would consult them, ask for their opinions and ensure that they understood the impact of government policy. He even assured us that he would try to understand the impact of government policy.

In the economic statement of November 16, 1984, presented by the Minister of Finance, we see either cancellations or dramatic cuts in Atlantic Canada alone affecting 24 programs. They will impact negatively upon the people who live in the poorest provinces of Canada. They involve 24 programs and there has been no consultation. A Liberal member of the House of Assembly in Prince Edward Island was elected yesterday. The member who vacated that seat to run federally sits across from me now. The fine gentleman that he is, he knows why they lost that seat. It was because without any consultation in an island province a rate increase was applied to ferry transport. It is not a scenic route by the sea or a pleasant way to spend a day; it is a mode of transportation to move goods and services. Ferry transport was attacked by the Government and a rate increase of 15 per cent was applied with no consultation with the people of P.E.I. There was no discussion. There was no regard to the reality that 99 per cent of the goods consumed by the people of P.E.I. is moved by ferry traffic. It is not flown in. It is not trucked in. It is not driven in. It is not flung in. It is moved across the water. The same is true for Newfoundland. Therefore the people of Prince Edward Island returned a Liberal member to the Hon. Member's vacated seat because they were not consulted. They did it because they did not hear the voice of Conservative members from P.E.I. in this Chamber demanding redress for the arbitrary and unilateral action of the federal Government.

Where was the consultation when RRAP was scrapped? Where was the consultation when COSP was scrapped? Where was the consultation when CHIP was scrapped? Where was the consultation when the Prime Minister of Canada broke his solemn word in cancelling the federal forestry centre for Corner Brook, Newfoundland?

I should like to relate a little history. For two years I fought inside and outside the House, publicly and privately, with Ministers, including members of my own Party, to have the forestry centre moved from St. John's, Newfoundland to Corner Brook. It was a $16 million project approved by Cabinet. The funding was provided by Treasury Board under the adminsitration of the former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau. During the election campaign it became an issue. I suggested to my constituents that this Government, taking its orders from the hon. joker from St. John's West, would cancel that centre if it were elected. The local candidate in my riding was so aggrieved that he announced that unless the matter was clarified he would cease to be a candidate. He sent a telegram to the Prime Minister saying: "Will you confirm that if our Party is elected this forestry centre will proceed?" The Prime Minister sent a telegram to the candidate in question. He also sent one to the mayor of Corner Brook, George Hutchings, in which he said:

> The allegations by the Liberal MP for your area to the effect that I or my party is opposed to the proposed federal forestry centre being located in Corner Brook are completely without substance. I assure you as I have assured our PC candidate, Mike Monaghan, that I fully support the establishment of the federal forestry centre in Corner Brook.

Those were the Prime Minister's own words over his signature. What did the Minister of Finance announce on that fateful Thursday when he brought down his financial statement? One of the cut-backs he announced or one of the programs cancelled was the federal forestry centre move from St. John's to Corner Brook, Newfoundland.

I do not know what kind of definition the Prime Minister of Canada applies to truth. The people I represent face an unemployment rate of 27 per cent, according to the latest statistics of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). These people have seen 750 industrial jobs lost in a pulp and paper mill a year ago April. They have just been advised that another 160 jobs will be lost in the next six months. They have seen a very serious decline in the fishing industry. They live in a geographic area of 550 miles wherein 60 per cent of them live in communities with populations under 500.

The people I represent believe that a man's word is worth something. It is not having the Prime Minister on paper that was important. That did not really matter. It was a piece of correspondence to a mayor. What was important was that they had his word. All 90,000 souls, most of whom live in small isolated communities, saw him on CBC, the only television network they receive. They heard him on CFCB and on CBC radio. They heard his words—"I am not opposed to this move which will create jobs for your area. If my Party is elected, the move will go ahead as budgeted for under Treasury Board". They believed him because they are good, decent and believing people. They think that any man who aspires to be Prime Minister of Canada would keep his word when he gives it. That is the right, proper and decent thing to do. They do not expect to see a man stand in his place and treat flippantly and as a joke, to the applause of 211 pairs of senseless clapping hands, that kind of important question.

I would ask the Prime Minister, were he here, whether he thinks that is a good joke, or is the Prime Minister a liar? That is what I would ask him. The people in the area I represent take as an act of faith a man's word. They do not mince words. That same man has played them for a fool. It is a simple one word description. They ask him if he is a liar. If he were here, I would be interested in seeing how he would answer.

I did not expect and no member of this House expected, whether it be NDP or Liberal, that a few months after the election we would be sitting here engaged in this kind of debate about the fundamental credibility of the administration elected on September 4. I thought we were going to proceed with caution but not with paranoia. I thought we were going to see a government be decisive, but not unduly quick, not to the point of riding rough-shod over the rights of journalists, Members of Parliament and the public of this country.

I thought there would be what has been traditionally described as the period of grace before any heated words were exchanged in this Commons. Much to my surprise and I am sure to the surprise of the people of Canada—and we knew they could not meet the promises of the summer of 1984—not only do they refuse to keep their promises, but they have put under attack the fundamental social programs that are the underpinnings of the least advantaged areas of this country—Atlantic Canada, the North and parts of the West. I give the Prime Minister warning to draw upon all his oratorical skills and great debating experience because I will have the opportunity in a few days to ask him in this House if he has lied. I will ask him is he a liar. I will put that question to him.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It doesn't enhance your reputation.

Mr. Tobin: The House Leader suggests it does not enhance my reputation. However, as I said earlier, the people who sent me here took as an article of faith the word of the Prime Minister of Canada. It is quite simple. It is not complicated. They did not ask for it in blood. They did not even ask for it in writing, although they got it in writing. They will equally want a straightforward and simple definition of what has gone wrong.

How could such a promise made by a Prime Minister be contained in the list of programs to be cut in a budget provided to this House under the direction and with the approval of the Prime Minister by the Minister of Finance? That is the question that is addressed in this motion today. The cynicism is not the fact that this Government has broken promises. It is the ease with which it is prepared to break promises that is bothersome. It is not the fact that it is prepared to be secret, not the fact that it wants to manipulate and manage the news which bothers us so much; it is the flippant way in which they defend it, with big grins on their faces, as the crowd applauds. The best advice I can give this Prime Minister and his Cabinet is to get some ear plugs and wear them. They might be able to get a much more objective view of this country. I warn them that the eyes of the people of Canada are on you in those first few months. They best not try their patience much further.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Question or comments?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to hear the death rattle of the Party to my left in this discussion of cynicism. Certainly those of us who were here in the last Parliament recall all too well the manipulation and secrecy which characterized the Liberal government. It was interesting to hear the Hon. Member talk about respect for Parliament and for the role of the Member of Parliament when it was his Prime Minister who talked about parliamentarians being nobodies 50 feet from Parliament Hill. There must be a new attitude. As I said this morning, they are born-again Liberals.

The Hon. Member indicated that he is concerned about openness in government, the spirit of openness, accessibility and trust. What is the position of his caucus with respect to the decision of the Auditor General to ask for confidential documents which relate to the Petro-Canada takeover of Petrofina? Do the Hon. Member and his caucus support the request of the Auditor General or do they not?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spent so much time preparing his question and was so anxious to get to his feet that he began to talk about the death rattle of the Party to his left. I believe that the Tories are in big trouble, but I think it is a bit much to go that far when they have only been in this House a few months. The Hon. Member would much better serve himself, those wo are interested in this House and the listening public if he would bring himself to a position of relative calm before he gets to his feet so that he can stay oriented.

With respect to making information available about Petro-Canada's takeover of Petrofina and with regard to Petro-Canada's development in the offshore, for example, something I am very interested in and have spoken about at length in this House, I as a Member of Parliament would be totally in favour of seeing whatever documents can be placed on the Table of this place. That is my position. I give it openly and with great joy in my heart. I hope it makes the Hon. Member feel a little better.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker I have a question for the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member will permit me, I would like to make a short statement on this, and on the matter of supplementaries.

On Thursday, November 22, 1984, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame de Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) asked for clarification on the application of the 10-minute question and comment period covered in Standing Order 35. I undertook at the time to comment at a later date, and now might be an opportune time to reiterate the guidelines under which this 10-minute period should operate.

Members will, of course, realize that the recognition of Members during this 10-minute period is totally within the discretion of the Chair. However, as much as possible the Chair will operate under certain guidelines. These were clearly set out by Speaker Sauvé on January 17, 1983, and Members may wish to refer to this statement for more complete details.

To summarize briefly, the Chair will attempt to give priority to Members representing Parties other than that of the Member who has just spoken. Members recognized should keep their questions and comments short, in order to allow as many members as possible to participate. The Chair will cut off any Member who attempts to monopolize the entire 10-minute period when other Members are attempting to participate. Questions or comments must relate to the Member who has just spoken and should not be used as an occasion to bring forward new issues.

With the co-operation of all Members, these 10-minute periods will operate efficiently and to the benefit of the House as a whole and will enhance the quality of debate which, of course, was the intention of this new rule.

I would like to add that on the question of supplementaries, the Chair would prefer that these supplementaries be asked at the end of the 10-minute period so that the Chair is able to see as many Members as possible within the short 10-minute period that we have.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I trust that that time taken did not bite into the 10-minute period that we have to question the Hon. Member.

In the last few days the Hon. Member has been raising in the House the situation in Newfoundland regarding offshore resources and the delivery of same. Could the Hon. Member inform the House—if he can speak on behalf of his caucus—of what method of delivery of that natural resource they favour?

● (1530)

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member right now what method I favour. I favour the use of floating concrete platforms which would be constructed in the Province of Newfoundland. I am four-square behind the position as articulated by both the Premier of Newfoundland and the Leader of the Opposition in Newfoundland. I do not have to consult with my caucus to tell the Hon. Member where I stand with respect to the unacceptably high level of unemployment in my province. In my own riding, the level of unemployment is 27 per cent. I am four-square behind the Premier of the Province, the Leader of the Opposition and every Newfoundland MP—which I hope would include the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie)—in ensuring that a method is used which will bring some economic benefits to the poorest province in Canada. That is the reason for the decision by the federal Minister and the Minister from Newfoundland. There is a large area of controversy between the federal Government, the provincial government and the industry about putting a gag order on the release of the documents which were ready to be made public on November 15.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member criticized the Government throughout his remarks for giving him information, for answering questions and for supplying the details of changes in programs. He did not like the changes in the programs, nor did he like the information. I was wondering if he could tell the House, is he supporting the Government on this motion, or is he supporting the Opposition? The motion calls for further information. In that respect, could he perhaps tell us where he has been missing information on the Government's attitude with respect to programs?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would take the time to read the motion, he would realize that it condemns the cynicism and the mistrust with which his Government approaches the people of Canada. I can think of nothing more cynical than a government which, on the one hand, preaches consultation with the public and with the people who will be affected by government programs, but, on the other hand, unilaterally announces in the House—consulting nobody, least of all those affected—that there will be $4.2 billion in cuts, especially when one examines those documents and finds out that the cuts apply mostly to the rural, northern and most disparate parts of this country. If the Hon. Member were doing the job he was sent here to do—that is, to be his constituency's spokesman in Ottawa, not Ottawa's apologist in his riding—he would be on his feet and joining me in condemning the actions of his Government.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member inadvertently failed to answer the question which I asked initially, so perhaps I might ask a supplementary question.

Does the Hon. Member support the decision of the previous Liberal government to refuse access to the documents requested by the Auditor General with respect to the Petrofina take-over?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I did my best. I tried hard. I jumped up and down in the House and tried to do my homework, but I never made Cabinet. I was not there when those discussions were held. I do not know the context in which they were made.

However, I will tell you as a Member—because in our Party we do not have to check with the Whip in order to open our mouths—that I will support, and do support, access to all the documents that can be made available and tabled in the House. I can say that in this Party—unlike members of the Party opposite—without consulting anyone.

My constituents sent me here to represent their interests, not the interests of my Pary first and my constituents second. That is an unusual position for the NDP to come to grips with. They often speak with one voice. They all sound the same. Surely to goodness when we see that kind of unanimity all the time, we know that the mind has ceased to function on its own and that the ability to receive instruction has been enhanced greatly in that Party.

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is so concerned and sensitive about this particular issue, would he indicate whether he has made an inquiry of his caucus as to why the information concerning Petrofina was not furnished when it was requested?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I have an earth-shattering revelation which is long overdue in this House. This is November 27, 1984! While it may be mentally overwhelming, Members opposite are in the Government. We must go forward and get on with the job. We are the Opposition. As I can tell by the strained look on the Hon. Member's face, we are the Official Opposition—the only Opposition in this House. I can tell by the glow on his nose that he found that out.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. The debate will proceed with the Hon. Minister of Communications.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in our democratic system, communications and information are the very basis of our decisions. Information helps the citizen find out what statutory benefits are available to him. Information ensures that the citizen is informed of the decisions of the State. It means that the citizen is aware of what Cabinet, what the Government has decided in a specific case. Information and communications are fundamental aspects of a democratic system.

In today's debate, it is surprising that the motion moved by the Liberal Party should be couched in terms we heard earlier. If ever a political party abused information and communications in this country, the Liberal Party certainly did, and it did so for years. One remembers their attempts at objective information on the Canadian Confederation in Quebec, to name only one instance. It is certainly ironic that today, the Liberal Party should be addressing the issue of information.

If Quebeckers and Canadians had been properly or at least better informed, with less cynicism, less propaganda, less patronage and fewer campaign promises by the Liberal Party when that Party held the reins of government, far more Canadians would have been inclined to appreciate the real advantages of the Canadian Confederation.

The issue before the House today concerns a guideline approved by Cabinet for a number of altogether positive and laudable reasons. At a meeting on November 22 of this year, Cabinet agreed that open and effective communications with the public were a matter of the highest priority for this Government. In this connection, ministers reaffirmed the Government's commitment to the principles of the Access to Information and Privacy Act and endorsed the guidelines made public by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and sent to the Government's deputy ministers. In fact, the Prime Minister himself explained several hours later that he was fully aware of the Government's duty to be open and accessible to all Canadians, and that this responsibility should be shared by all his Cabinet colleagues and all public servants. The Prime Minister was reaffirming commitments he had made during the election campaign when, on his behalf of his party, he promised to examine the guidelines which has served to govern, I would not say the Government's information policy, but the Liberal Government's policy of secrecy.

At the time he had raised a number of questions with respect to the role of public servants and their responsibility concerning communications with the public.

It would perhaps be useful to see exactly what these guidelines are, what they mean and what kind of questions they raise, if any. The guidelines are as follows: First, communications with the public, including particularly Members of Parliament and newsmedia representatives, are part of the duties and responsibilities of managers in the public service. This means that for a public servant who is informed of the facts, informing Canadians is part of his duty. After all, if citizens are not aware of the real facts, they do not know what is covered by legislation or regulations and cannot enjoy the benefits thus provided. It is therefore imperative that the responsibility of a public employee not be limited to the management of government business, for he ought as well to make sure that the general public is aware of the consequences of that management. That is why the guidelines indicate that a staff function in support of this management role is performed by information officers in all departments.

Each department, Crown corporation and government agency has officials whose professional responsibility is the daily management of information, and their colleagues who are not directly involved in information are expected to consult those information officers. This way, public servants should be prepared—within their areas of responsibility, not in somebody else's bailiwick—to openly provide factual information to the public and the media that describes or explains programs or policies that have been announced or implemented by the government.

Can anyone ask for more open information? Can any government be expected to be more readily available to the people in order to tell them what government is all about? What is it in those guidelines that smacks of secrecy? What is wrong with guidelines urging public employees to ensure that the people are fully aware of each new measure, of the extent of legislation, regulations and administrative guidelines? It is amazing. This debate is a distortion of reality. Some of the people responsible for launching this debate are guilty of mythologizing! The only way to appreciate the true nature of the innuendoes of the Opposition is to consider closely the motion now being debated.

To contribute to open government, such interviews shall be on the record and for attribution by name. What does it mean? It means that if a citizen calls at the Canadian Government office in Caraquet to get information, he finds himself actually facing a public servant whom he knows. The latter tells him about the scope of a regulation, the nature of a benefit or a directive issued by a department. He knows that person, he can quote him or her any time by name, anywhere in town. But then, because this is Ottawa, there are people who are outraged because a bit of public information given to some people for public use is not published.

Why should a certain number of public servants here in Ottawa not be allowed to give meaningful information, to explain the actual meaning and scope of a regulation or a legislation, nor to do it outside the context of public use? If that were so, those people could be suspected of mischievously or meanly distorting the facts about a legislation or a regulation. And because the Government wants to make sure, first that the information given will be truthful, and second that such information could be used at any time, the Government wants to make sure that public servants are fully aware that such information is public and is to be used publicly. This is the least that can be done.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, we know very well that at times it is essential that technical briefings be provided for the media, for a group of citizens, for a Chamber of Commerce, for a business group. Reporters are not the only ones to be interested in information. All citizens may be. It may therefore happen that at certain times or periods, there has to be briefings, and in that sense, off-the-record background briefings could be given, but only in exceptional circumstances. And this is normal, because normally things must be done publicly. Therefore, briefings can only be held exceptionally, and must get prior ministerial approval.

Guideline No. 3—what does that guideline provide? It provides that public servants should not go beyond this discussion of factual information. A public servant's foremost responsibility is to enforce laws and regulations. His responsibility with respect to information is to make sure that people perfectly understand laws, regulations or directives. This is why we say that what may be discussed by public servants is what exists under statutes or regulations. It amounts to interpreting or clarifying something he is responsible for administering. In other words, what has already been established by the Government, or authorized by the Cabinet as Government policy.

Therefore, it is not proper in that sense for public servants to recommend or discuss recommendations or advice which they themselves have provided their ministers, or to question decisions of principle that could be made or business currently being addressed. This is normal. If we are to have a government working in harmony, ministers who can trust their officials, if we are to have people work in an absolute peace of mind, looking for the best solution to a problem facing the Government, such discussions can only evolve under a minimum of confidentiality, and within the parameters of the oath of office that they themselves have taken. Otherwise it is impossible, and indeed altogether impossible, whether here in government or in any firm, to have discussions, to go through the process leading to decisions, when you cannot trust the people around you. Because we would never know who would use an outside lobby or a newspaper leak to exert pressure on the group entrusted with the developing of policies.

We have to make sure that during the period needed to write the budget, or during which my department for instance, is drafting a Canadian communications policy, or another department is developing some other policy, there is a climate of confidence between the minister and his advisers. And in that sense, since there has been as yet no government decision, no act passed by the Government, nor any order in council, it is normal that during that preparation stage, during that period of collective and joint reflection between officials, such a point in time be placed under the seal of confidence, because then no decision has yet been taken. But once the decision is taken, once the Prime Minister and the Cabinet have issued an order, then the public must be informed of the scope and meaning of that decision, so that people may benefit from what the Government has decided.

Those guidelines, Mr. Minister and Mr. Speaker, and this is guideline number 4, cannot and do not authorize the disclosure of information which is specifically prohibited by law. This is simple common sense! From the point of view of national security, as in the case of the Department of National Revenue, disclosing information on the income of individuals, is something specifically prohibited by law. Clearly then, the guideline reinforces the decision that is already generally known not to publicly disclose things that are specifically prohibited by law. Public employees acting in good faith under the guidelines I have been explaining, will not be considered as having violated their oath of secrecy. People must know that civil servants, like cabinet ministers and Members of Parliament, perform their duties under an oath of secrecy. They must stand by that oath.

I would also like . . . in my view, Mr. Speaker, all that noise, that scramble, that failure to seriously reflect on serious provisions cannot stem from those guidelines issued by the Cabinet. I would like to come back to a normal information and policy process.

Whatever its colour, when a new Government takes over, it is very homogeneous, the Cabinet solidarity is strong and there is much consultation among caucus members and Cabinet colleagues. This is true of all new governments, such as the Government of Mr. Trudeau in 1968 and the Government of Mr. Lévesque in 1976, and if news reporters will look at what themselves or their colleagues wrote at that time, they will see that they were describing the same situation. Those people acted in secrecy. Why? Because that new Government was replacing a previous one which had often ended its mandate in the most total anarchy and confusion, and there was a world of difference between the Pearson Government of 1966, where everyone was talking in the end, and the authority evidenced by the homogeneous Liberal Government in 1968, which the press dubbed a new era of secrecy. However, it was not a new era of secrecy, but rather a new Government which applied the usual standards for any Government coming to power instead of the confusion typical of the last days of its predecessor.

The same thing is happening today. For a year and a half, reporters were informed of everything that can occur within the Government and the various departments because, as the Ministers of the previous Government knew quite well that their Leader would resign as Prime Minister, they were all trying to position themselves, not by having a positive program or a positive decision, but rather by destroying a colleague or criticizing the policy of another Government Member. Naturally, the newspapers found a gold mine in all this and there were many issues to comment. But was this a normal way to administer Canada or a reasonable way for a democracy to operate? Should we have done the same! No, Mr. Speaker! It is not with anarchy and confusion that a Government can guarantee good management to its people, but with homogeneity, caucus cooperation and exchanges among colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that this Government has no gossip to feed all the tattle-talers in Canada does not mean that its information policy is wrong. On the contrary, it is a good information policy, but with no gossip to give out. This is a good example of it. Indeed, to a certain extent, the same thing happened in Quebec. When the present Quebec Government came to power in 1976, the same discussions about government secrecy in Quebec took place. There are two possibilities. Either some members of the Press—and I emphasize "some" because in this spurious debate there is no consensus—some members of the Press did not take the time to read the guidelines or did not understand them, or on the contrary, because almost total anarchy and decay in Government which are the characteristics of the last days in power of a party, appeal more to them. Unfortunately for them, this Government is just beginning its mandate and it will keep the mentality of a new government for a long time, Mr. Speaker. We want to provide and we shall provide information to the people because well informed people can support Government action, but we want this information to be factual and not about conflicts within the Government.

I know that the opposition feeds on gossip, but the people live on objective information and the benefits of legislation and regulations, and that is the difference, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, we would like the Canadian people to be well informed in order to enjoy the benefits of the legislation and regulations because that is how the government will secure their continuing support. The opposition may have less to say but it will be only better for the government because it will explain more thoroughly the benefits made available to Canadians.

This is the government policy, Mr. Speaker. It is clear and unbiased. It is positive and it relates directly to the commitments by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Progressive Conservative Party to provide an open government. It is a guideline closely related to the public interest because Canadians have the right and desire to know the advantages of the legislation and regulations. On the other hand, the guideline gives the cabinet and the ministers a peace of mind and confidence to work with their officials. Thus, Canada will be administered by a team that trusts its officials and a government that gives all the information needed on the benefits of the legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the statements just made by the Minister of Communications. He is a Minister who must be impartially responsible for communications, but he has shown clearly that, as far as he is concerned, he wants all information provided by the government to be favourable to the government. He stated clearly that, in his opinion, the public must understand the consequences of the actions of the State, and he said that the information provided by the State must be favourable to the Conservative government and the Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications: does he believe that factual information must be released by public servants to the public or to Hon. Members if that information is unfavourable to the government? Yes or no?

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, one thing is clear, and that is that the Hon. Member did not understand the guidelines since he did not understand what I said.

I said clearly and simply that the responsibility of public servants is to inform the people about the reality of the law and regulations. I am talking about hard facts. I never did ask public servants—and there is no reference to that in the guidelines—to make a distinction between what might be favourable or unfavourable to the government.

The directive is clear and specific, and it has to do with facts and reality. We have never claimed that public servants should provide only the kind of information which is in the interest of the government, not anymore, I am sure, than my colleague would urge Canadian public employees to release only information detrimental to the government so as to serve the short-term interests of the New Democratic Party.

What we all want—and if my colleague is honest in this debate on information, what he would want to know and what he would want to see as a reality—is that Canadians be kept well informed about the facts. If that is what the Hon. Member is seeking, he ought to read the guidelines and apply them as do public servants, and the people will be well informed.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain to us how it is that public service officials have refused to release the results of the recent impact studies on jobs which have been carried out by the government? Why have officials of all departments refused to do that, and why have the government and ministers of the Crown also refused to release the results of these studies which assess the impact of these measures on employment in various regions of our country?

If you really believe that objective information must be made available to the public, so that Hon. Members and the Canadian people as a whole can make an informed judgment on the government's action, why is the government refusing to release this information and why are government officials also refusing to release it?

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member seeking information to understand the scope of the legislation, or is he merely seeking information as an Hon. Member? I think that the guidelines are directed first and foremost to the Canadian public as a whole who has the right to know the scope of legislation and regulations.

● (1600)

If the Hon. Member is referring to background documents which are currently serving as the basis for the development of government policy, it is not yet government policy. Once it becomes government policy, there will be information papers which will advise Canadians as to the scope of the regulations and the benefit of the legislation. What we want, Mr. Speaker, is better public information on what the government is offering, not necessarily public confusion due to a host of conflicting documents originating from here and there and everywhere. What we want is to be able to work with our officials in an atmosphere of trust and serenity until legislation is passed and regulations authorized. From then on, we are dealing with "factual" facts which are known to the public, and we want the public to be well informed, because we feel that well informed people would return this party to power for a long, long time, since our legislation and regulations will benefit the Canadian public.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on a question.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister referred to the importance of having a well-informed population. I would like to ask him a question concerning a very specific population, namely the employees of the CBC. If the Minister is sincere when he refers to the importance of having well-informed people, I would ask him why he did not enter into the required consultations before announcing the $85 million cut, if I remember right, in the CBC budget? Why did the CBC employees have to learn about the details of those cuts in the newspapers? The Minister's duty in my view is to explain that to the House and to all Canadians. The question is, first, were there specific studies made on the impact on the CBC employees, as to how many will lose their jobs. And second, Mr. Speaker, will he publish these studies?

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is fully aware of two things. The choice is his. Either he is setting a huge trap, big enough to completely engulf the Parliament of Canada, or else he is badly informed. Since the beginning of this month, I have been explaining in this House, and the Hon. Member has always been listening very closely to my answers. But perhaps I should give him further explanations. It is not my responsibility, as Minister of Communications, to get involved in the day-to-day operations of the CBC. The Hon. Member would be the first to blame me if I were to decide how the CBC will be organized, with a station in this town or in that city, how programming should be developed, or that the CBC should have so many hundreds or thousands of employees. The Hon. Member would be the first to blame me for interfering in areas where I have no business. I am therefore convinced that he did not ask the question out of ignorance. He knows I cannot answer that question. It was a trap, Mr. Speaker, a bear trap or whatever you want to call it. You know very well, Mr. Speaker, that this is absolutely not within my responsibility! The responsibility lies with the management of CBC. They have to develop the budget and send it to the Minister of Communications, who will discuss it and introduce it into the budgeting process within the parliamentary system.

But I would never attempt, and certainly never with your approval, Mr. Speaker, or that of my hon. colleague, to enter the CBC's innards and work my way up to its thinking process. The CBC is an institution which as we must recognize, has been historically very important both to the French-speaking and the English-speaking population of this country. And you may rest assured that the CBC, established as it was by the Progressive Conservative Party many decades ago, will not be destroyed by any disciple of that party, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The question period being over, we will proceed with the debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa-Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about the speech we just heard by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), and I think there is considerable confusion on the part of the Government, which is talking about open information and favours a communications policy. It is quite clear, however, at least from the perspective of the Minister of Communications, that although speaking is communicating, what we are talking about is propaganda.

The Government wants to impose a propaganda policy that will promote the Government and the Progressive Conservative Party at the expense of the Members of this House, the press here in the gallery and all Canadians, every single Canadian citizen. This is 1984—of course the title of George Orwell's novel comes to mind—and we have had a clear demonstration that the Conservatives prefer a policy that leads to the management of information, to an open information policy.

The Liberals have just criticized the Government for its cynical attitude, but I would say their Government had a similar policy from 1980 until this year. There is very little difference. For instance, it was the former Liberal Government that refused to give the Auditor General the information he needed to examine the purchase of Petrofina shares by Petro-Canada. Today, after criticizing the Liberal Government's policy, the Conservatives are pursuing the very same policy now they are in power. Both parties take the same view that information must be controlled to benefit the Government in power and should not be used to benefit the public and government in general.

[English]

I would like to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that in August, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), as he now is, then the Leader of the Conservative Party, said in Kingston: "The present Government believes that you have only limited rights to know. Conservatives believe you have every right to know". That was a quote, Mr. Speaker, but there were some words left out. It now appears that Conservatives believe you have every right to know what the Conservatives think you ought to know, and nothing more. That is the chilling effect of the new guidelines which were put down last week by the Prime Minister, the interpretation in the communication to deputy ministers and, more recently, as I know from listening to this debate, by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse).

I found the interpretation and propaganda which came from the Minister of Communications deeply disturbing. It reminded me a bit of the New World Information Order which has been discussed in UNESCO and strongly criticized by the Government and the people of Canada, the journalists of the free world, the United States and most of the other industrial democracies. That is a policy of news management which has been discussed by some Third World countries, which we have been right to reject in UNESCO, and which I would hate to see imposed in this country.

[Translation]

If I may continue, Mr. Speaker, as Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, the Prime Minister promised a fundamental change in the Government of Canada if the Conservatives took over from the Liberal Party.

This is why they were elected on September 4. What we see now certainly is a fundamental change, but it is designed to restrict even further the freedom of information of Members of Parliament, members of the press and the Canadian people.

[English]

As in so many areas, it seems to me that the Government has reversed its stand and has rapidly and precipitously abandoned its promises of making fundamental changes, the promises on which they were in fact elevated to power. These implications are severe for the press and for us in this Chamber. They are particularly severe for the 250,000 men and women who work for the Public Service of Canada. Many of my constituents are in fact in that position. They are public servants and they work for the people of Canada. The message which they have received in the first 10 weeks of this Government has been very clear and unmistakable. At first it was, "Check it with Erik. Do not say a thing".

Ludicrously, ministries, including the chiefs of staffs of ministries, were not prepared, at the political level, to give any information to the public or the press without checking it with Erik. We heard the rather overwrought and over-reactive responses of the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in his speech in Alberta and the directives he passed down. It got to the point where diplomats had to carry a ten-foot pole so that they would not get too close to members of the public or the press when they attended social events. During its first ten weeks in office, the Government sought to throttle the flow of information. It got to the point where the Prime Minister and his advisers finally realized they had gone too far.

What has the Government replaced that with? We must examine the statement of policy in the Prime Minister's release last Friday as well as its context. We should also bear in mind that the Government has learned a great deal from the Republicans in Washington whose desire it is to put the electronic media in the forefront, to discourage investigative reporting in the print media and to attempt to deliver one message per day.

I believe that in our vast and complex country with which the Government must deal and because of the fact that we have 70 or 80 missions abroad, it is impossible for the Government to function with one message a day. It is not possible to meet the concerns of dairy farmers, those concerned with acid rain, those who want to know its position on Cruise missiles and those who want to know about a small business program in Nanaimo. Too many people require too much information simply to wait in line for some information from the Prime Minister or whatever Minister is designated to deliver such information.

However, it is the Government's clear intention to have a managed and active policy on what it calls "communications". I suggest that this smacks of private sector thinking. I presume that it comes from some of the Government's advisers here. I would suggest to those people who advise the Prime Minister, such as Mr. White, that this is not the private sector. The Government of Canada is not the private sector and it cannot be managed like a private sector company such as Brascan or Imperial Oil.

When the Progressive Conservatives were in Opposition, they criticized the government for delivering a single message through its advertising strategy and for spending too much money for this purpose. However, the Government's letter to deputy ministers states quite clearly that deputy ministers and Ministers should get together to review current communication policies to ensure that "communications to the public are managed effectively in accordance with the priorities of the Government". The Minister of Communications stated this very clearly in his speech. He said that objective information should be put out, which, in his view, would be information that would favour the interests of the Government, that is, in other words, the priorities of the Government. Those guidelines for public servants must be read in the context of a communications policy which wants government information to be in accordance with the priorities of the Government and to be carried by primary spokespersons.

[Translation]

There must be a primary spokesperson in each department and each region who will be responsible for departmental communications with members the press, members of Parliament, politicians and the general public. However, we all know, and I have experienced this myself, not simply as a politician, but also as a reporter, that the role of a primary spokesperson is to block information, not to facilitate access to it. For those who are sufficiently knowledgeable to be aware of what information they want, it is also necessary to know the details of a policy or of a government activity.

I was myself a corespondent for the Financial Times of Canada. This is a well-known newspaper with no socialist leanings, but it does a good job of discussing government policies. As a journalist of the 60s, I sat here in the press gallery and I did my job of communicating with Members of Parliament and public servants asking for explanations about government policy. If it had been necessary to always speak to the primary spokesperson of the Government, I would have wasted so much time that it would have been impossible for me to do my job, or else, in most cases, that primary Government spokesperson would not have had the necessary information to help me in my work and I would not have been able to meet my deadlines. Each week, I had to write articles to inform my readers, and it would have been nearly impossible for me to do my job.

In addition, as a journalist, I also had to know, not only things like how many tons of steel were produced the month before, which is factual, but what would be, for instance, the impact of the cutbacks just announced by Mr. Wilson, the Minister of Finance. What will be the impact on the Maritimes, for instance, of the policies recently announced by the Government? Will the regions without the backing of a strong private sector, be able to react with the necessary buoyancy to the action taken by the Government, as it relies increasingly on the private sector and not only on the public sector as was perhaps the case in the past?

These are typical questions which are often asked by ordinary people, journalists, members of the private sector, as well as politicians who want to form an opinion about Government policy.

[English]

What the Government is saying, however, is that that kind of information will simply not be available. That kind of discussion will not be available because public servants have been told that it is not appropriate to speculate about policy deliberations or future policy decisions. They must not go beyond the discussion of factual information.

I believe we should interpret what factual information is in light of the comments made earlier by the Minister of Communications. In his view, facts are the kind of information which favours the views of the Government.

When the Minister was asked for facts about the impact of the cuts in the CBC, he would not give that information because it was not desirable. He said it would create dissension, tension and problems because such information would cause anxiety for those involved. His advice is to wait until the information is complete and the decisions are made.

An Hon. Member: Until it is factual.

Mr. Cassidy: I suggest to the Hon. Member that factual information could mean that in a year there might be some evaluation paper which indicates that the decisions taken in October of 1984 had the effect of costing more than 1,000 jobs in Radio Canada, particularly in the regional services across the country. That is factual but is still open to judgment, because the CBC could have made those cuts as a result of a reorientation of its policy. Perhaps only 800 of those jobs resulted from cuts, while 200 jobs may have been the result of a separate policy decision. In other words, "factual" is a matter of judgment.

Facts, as they pertain to government, are substantially relative in nature and a matter of judgment. However, matters of judgment, according to the Government, are not to be speculated on or discussed by public servants.

What will happen? There will be a chilling effect, with no information, or the public and the press will be asked to talk only to the political assistants to the Ministers. Those political assistants will eventually say that they cannot do their jobs because people are constantly calling them. They will cease to return calls and information will be throttled in that way.

Perhaps certain journalists, members of the Opposition or even deputies from the Government will have some of their channels restored, but public servants will always face the risk that they will be told to make a note of who they talk to. They may be questioned about what they said. Although journalists or deputies may not consider a certain matter to be on the record, it might be on the record as far as the Department is concerned. We do not know what consequences that will have.

Eventually, when public servants are deemed to be talking too much or are seen with the wrong people at lunch, they will be brought on the carpet and shown these guidelines. They will be told to shut up and not to do anything that might be deemed to be giving succour to the public or to the press.

In conclusion, the Government is giving a very clear message to public servants that if they want to progress they should keep quiet, give as little information as possible and discourage free discussion. The Government does not want to allow the free flow of ideas, which is a concept upon which western society has been based. It frightens me that a government that believes in free enterprise and the free flow of ideas in the commercial sector would want to throttle the free flow of information with respect to its policies.

We in the New Democratic Party think that basic changes in the direction of openness should have been implemented by this new Government in its first three months in office. We all know that once a government is in office for six or nine months, the old ways set in and it is very difficult to go in a new direction.

I happen to think that the statement made by the Joe Clark Government in 1979 was a positive statement that went in the right direction. I wish that that had been repeated rather than superseded by the statement made by Mr. Mulroney just a couple of days ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Cassidy: I mean the Prime Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have already reminded the Hon. Member a couple of times. The Right Hon. gentleman for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) should be referred to as the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead. The same refers to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Cassidy: When the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was head of the government I thought that government's policy was going in the right direction. I am sorry that that particular precedent has been thrown to the wind.

I would remind members of this House that in Sweden, where there has been a Social Democratic Government for most of the last 50 years, the policy was one of total openness, to the point where correspondence with the ministries is made accessible to journalists, deputies, or whoever wants to look at it along with responses from the ministries. A person can go to any government bureaucracy at nine o'clock and look at correspondence day after day after day. The Swedes have pioneered that kind of openness. It has made for an excellent level of public debate. The Government has not been undermined because different options are being thrown around. People enjoy free discussion. People have the kind of information that has been systematically shut off by our Government over the course of the last few weeks, Mr. Speaker. I point out, in contrast, that when we have sought information about the impact of government measures and cut-backs, that has been consistently denied. Mr. Mulroney said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Cassidy: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister in August stated that Conservatives believe people have every right to know. He made a promise to that effect.

That is a broken promise, one that has been broken not only by the Prime Minister but by all his Government. I call the attention of the Government to the kind of model which the Social Democrats have pioneered in many nations of the world, rather than this propaganda mentality which says that the only information that will come out is that which is favourable to the Conservative Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Since he represents the Ottawa Centre constituency, he must have had the opportunity over the weekend to see his constituents, as we all do, to discuss some of these issues. Could he let us in on any reaction he may have had from civil servants who are likely to be affected by these guidelines?

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I will remind the Hon. Member the response of the Public Service Alliance which has quite correctly detected the dangers of the policy just stated by the government. I have had a few reactions from public servants but I think that many are frankly afraid to speak openly with a member of the opposition. It will take a little time. Then some of them will perhaps begin to show some courage. However, it is a good thing that some officials could discuss with me the impact of cuts, for example at the National Research Council. They knew quite well that they were taking some risks since the government had clearly said that even factual information given to the opposition about the impact of the cuts could jeopardize their careers.

[English]

I believe if that were the case in the early days, the elaboration of the policy as it is now being explained by the Government will simply continue that chilling effect where people will have to meet members of the Opposition in parking garages. They will be making clandestine appointments late at night. This will turn 250,000 civil servants into a bunch of "deep throats", Mr. Speaker. They will have no other option in terms of how they get necessary information, which they believe it is their duty to communicate, because, as the Minister of Communications seems to indicate, factual information, entirely factual information even, will not be permitted to get out if it is unfavourable to the Government.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member aware of the document which was produced in July, 1981 entitled, "Communication Roles and Responsibilities" which the previous government put out? Does he not think that the present guidelines as laid down by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are far more fair, far more reasonable and will promote more openness than those restrictive guidelines the Liberals had in their heyday?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. member looks and compares the guidelines set out by the Conservative Government in 1979 and then the guidelines set out in 1980 by the Liberals, he will find they are similar. They are almost the same. The guidelines set out last week are drawn largely from that source, with the exception that there is a prohibition on off-the-record interviews. That in itself has a chilling effect. But it is what surrounds those guidelines in terms of the directive about communication policies to deputy ministers, the designation of spokespeople and the way the Government has behaved with respect to information over its first 75 days in office that has created such disquiet, in my opinion, not just among us on the opposition benches but among people working for the civil service as a whole.

The Hon. Member asked whether I am not upset over the guidelines that existed under the former Liberal government. Yes, I am, Mr. Speaker. As Mr. Mulroney said in August in Kingston—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Cassidy: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister said in August in Kingston, the present Government believes that people have only a limited right to know. I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker. I have to ask for your forbearance. I will change. It is difficult for me to accustom myself to different rules.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If I bring it to your attention often enough, I am sure you will.

Mr. Cassidy: I think you will, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: As the present Prime Minister said in August, the present Government believes people only have a limited right to know. He was referring to the guidelines that existed in 1981. If he believed those guidelines were wrong, why has he made them more restrictive rather than more open?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now over. The Hon. Minister for Supply and Services (Mr. Andre).

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to direct a comment to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and suggest that he try to make up his mind. On the one hand he offered as an example the Swedish procedure where apparently anybody can look at any letter. Yet, on the other hand, he criticizes the guidelines that suggest that when our public servants talk in that open way to the media they must also identify themselves. Surely you cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. You cannot call it sinister when, first, it is suggested that when you talk to the media you are to be identified, and, second, it is suggested that you keep things open.

Mr. Cassidy: Make everything public. This is news management.

Mr. Andre: I want to address the Hon. Member's comments about the so-called policy of releasing only factual information that is favourable to the Government. That is nonsense, and the Hon. Member knows it. One of the biggest releasers of information is an agency responsible to me, namely, Statistics Canada. Every day it releases information, some is favourable to the Government, some is not. There is not the slightest suggestion anywhere from the Government, in these guidelines or anywhere else, that this would somehow be filtered and that only factual, favourable information would be released.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: Where are the impact studies?

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member is making absurd judgments or comments on the intent. He quoted the Prime Minister's statements made during the election campaign. I am glad he did. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre also quoted a part of the letter which the Prime Minister released, a letter to Ministers and deputy ministers indicating the Government's policy toward communications with the public. The Hon. Member quoted only a portion of the paragraph. I should like to read the whole paragraph to demonstrate that in fact it is entirely consistent with and a fulfilment of the promise in Kingston. The opening sentence reads:

• (1630)

In view of the Government's commitment to openness—

There is a statement to deputy ministers and Ministers, made public, that the Government is committed to openness. It is exactly consistent with the promise made during the election campaign. It continues:

—Ministers have also agreed on the need to review with their Deputy Ministers the current communications policies, procedures, resources, and management structures within their departments to ensure that communications with the public is managed effectively in accordance with the priorities of the government.

Mr. Cassidy: That's it, that's it.

Mr. Andre: Exactly. The priority of the Government is openness. We are instructed to examine our structures and methods to make sure that we are consistent with the priority of the Government, which is openness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: If the Hon. Member would read that paragraph objectively instead of pejoratively, he would in fact be applauding the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for this letter. It is an indication of our commitment to openness. The paragraph continues and suggests that at long last we have a government in Ottawa which recognizes that there is a lot of country outside the capital region. It suggests that Ministers and deputy ministers be particularly sensitive to communications to the regions of the country and that they have communication capabilities so that not only the tight little group on Parliament Hill knows what is going on but the whole country knows what is going on. That is the commitment to openness the Prime Minister introduced in fulfilment of his promise which the Hon. Member quoted to the House earlier.

I am surprised, although I suppose I should not be, at the crass hypocrisy of the Liberals in claiming that the Government is overly secretive. I cannot count the number of times when, as a member of the Opposition for nearly 12 years, I was stonewalled by the then Liberal government and told that it was none of my business what the government was doing. I cannot count how many times I wrote to Ministers, talked to Ministers, talked to government and talked to officials trying to get some information, only to be told that it was none of my business. Perhaps it is an exercise through which we should go. I wonder how many questions were left—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During debate one can exaggerate, but the Hon. Minister is saying that he talked to Ministers, to public servants and to people over the years as a member of the Opposition and never got a true answer or an answer. I think that is an exaggeration. I know him to be an honest man who talked with us before. He has had information from the Public Service and from the government, and he knows it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: No, but it is a good point.

Mr. Andre: At the end of my statement the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will have an opportunity to make his comments. However, it would be an interesting exercise to count the number of questions left on the Order Paper over the last 16 years which were not answered by that government. Perhaps we could have a pool. Personally I would like to pick a number somewhere in the vicinity of 10,000.

Mr. McDermid: And those were only Tom Cossitt's questions.

Mr. Gauthier: Eighty-five per cent were answered.

Mr. Andre: They were questions by Members of Parliament asking the government for factual information. They were not asking for opinion.

Mr. Gauthier: As of today, you have only answered five questions out of one hundred.

Mr. Andre: That factual information was not permitted. For the Liberal Party of Canada, with its record, to accuse this Government of excessive secrecy is like the Ayatollah Khomeini accusing Ronald Reagan of being a dictator.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who spoke earlier delivered a tirade crammed so full of hyperbole that it was almost worthy of her predecessor. If she were sincere in her remarks, I cannot imagine what objectives she would use to describe the behaviour of the previous Liberal government.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party in his remarks acknowledged—and I give him credit—that advice from officials to Ministers should remain secret. He acknowledged that the functioning of our parliamentary system, imperfect though it is, requires that officials be able to provide advice to government and to Ministers in secret. Then he went on to say that something called "studies" should be made public. It makes one wonder just what the Leader of the NDP believes regarding the form or type of advice officials give to Ministers. Surely he recognizes that, depending upon the issue under consideration, all manner of studies, analyses, proposals, opinions, et cetera, are given to the Minister. If it were to prevail that advice which might be considered to be studies must somehow be hived off from the rest of the advice and made available, surely the Leader of the NDP must recognize that studies as such would never be committed to paper. That is the sole consequence, just as I am certain that the consequence of the Swedish experiment about which he talked is less letters and more telephone calls.

As I indicated, the Leader of the New Democratic Party recognizes that in fact it is essential for the workings of our system that advice be available to the Government on a confidential basis. He recognizes that. I applaud him for that. If he truly believes that, he would not continue this absurd charge that somehow the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is not releasing information he ought to release. I believe he must be sincere in his statement that ministers should have the right to receive confidential advice from their officials prior to the formulation of policy decisions, that is in the policy formation stage, that that advice is to be kept confidential for the workings of this place, and that the Minister must then stand in his place and defend the decision taken. If so, then, in all conscience he cannot turn around and say that he has a suspicion that some of the advice the minister may have received from his officials may not entirely support his decision and then demand to be given that information so that he can stand in the House and beat him over the head with it. He cannot be on both sides. If he believes, as I do, that as the system is structured advisers must be in a position to advise the minister in confidence, then he cannot turn around in all good conscience and say that he wants some of that advice released.

As important as the confidentiality factor is in advising Ministers and government, it is equally important, in fact very important, that the Government communicate with the public in terms of its decisions, programs and activities. It is essential to the operation of our democratic system that there be that kind of openness and that kind of communication.

It is for that reason that the Prime Minister issued these guidelines. Hon. Members should read the guidelines objectively prior to reaching their decisions. The opening statement reads:

1. Communications with the public, including particularly Members of Parliament and news media representatives, are a part of the duties and responsibilities of managers in the public service.

It simply says that communicating our activities, our decisions, our programs, is an important part of the function. It is a direction to the Public Service to be open and to communicate. It is not a restriction; it is a direction. It continues:

2. Public servants should be prepared to openly provide—

It instructs them to be prepared, and then continues:

—factual information to the public and the media within their areas of responsibility that describes or explains programs and policies that have been announced or implemented by the government.

The instruction is that public servants are to be prepared to be open on all these questions. To call that somehow a gag rule and to suggest that we are restricting openness is absurd in the extreme. It is a flight of fantasy, it is imagination. It continues:

3. Public servants should not go beyond this discussion of factual information. It is not appropriate to discuss advice or recommendations tendered to Ministers—

That is simply stating in these guidelines what the Leader of the NDP agreed to in his comments earlier this day when he said that that kind of advice must be kept confidential. He acknowledged that it is essential for the operation of our system that the advice be kept confidential. That fact is stated in point 3. How can that be viewed as a muzzle on the press, a restriction, a gag rule when it merely states in the terms of reference what everybody in the House, I believe in all honesty, agrees is absolutely necessary to the operation of our system?

● (1640)

In his remarks, the Leader of the New Democratic Party said that other jurisdictions have situations where advice is given to Ministers in a formulation. I believe he indicated that that is the situation in the United States. He is totally wrong, as he frequently is. Every democratic jurisdiction recognizes that you have to be able to have open discussions with some confidentiality, discussion with advisers of a confidential nature or you will not get the benefit of that advice. That is all these guidelines state. Discussion on policy alternatives, be they in the form of surveys, studies, opinions or whatever form, which are part of the decision-making process should be kept confidential. Everything else should be open. More than that, Departments should be in a position to provide that information, not just here in Ottawa but around the country. It is an explicit statement here in support of the commitment to openess of the Prime Minister during the election campaign.

It is absurd to have this debate today criticizing guidelines which are a declaration of our openness. It is absurd to say that they are somehow restrictive. Perhaps more absurd is to have that motion introduced by the Liberal Party. It has to be the height of absurdity that the Liberal Party with its record would introduce this kind of motion and suggest that this Government is not being open.

Perhaps the new Government is not perfect, but one area where we do not need lectures from the Liberals and in which I am totally confident is the area of communications. It is the height of hypocrisy and nerve for that Party to stand up in the House and rant and rave about secrecy, given its history. A new era started on September 4. It is an era of openness and accessibility. These guidelines simply make sure that that will happen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I shall now entertain questions or comments.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre). Apparently the minister has not read the letter with the former guidelines which was circulated. That letter was signed by the then Prime Minister, now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). That letter contains a couple of interesting paragraphs which are omitted in the letter signed by the present Prime Minister. I want to draw this to the attention of the Minister and then ask him a question. One paragraph reads as follows:

> One of the things we can do is to encourage open and responsive behaviour among public servants in their day to day dealings with the public, including particularly Members of Parliament and representatives of the news media.

That paragraph is completely missing from the present Prime Minister's letter. Instead, we have directives to deputy ministers with veiled threats that their performance appraisals will be affected if they do not clear up their act. Second, referring to Ministers, we have the following:

> It is for your decision which levels of public servants in your department are to be authorized to deal with the media. However, in the spirit of the guidelines, this list should be broad rather than narrow.

Nowhere in the present Prime Minister's letter is there any reference to broadening the number of public servants who will be accessible to Members of Parliament and the media. Instead, we have the creation of a primary spokesperson who will be some sort of media czar through whom all information will be channeled. The author of the 1979 letter and guidelines should be concerned about the extent to which they have been subverted.

I want to ask the Minister a specific question. I have before me a copy of the guidelines written by the former Prime Minister, now Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have the guidelines which were drawn up by Cabinet on Thursday of last week. In Kingston on August 12, when campaigning for office, the Prime Minister said, "Not since the last war have Canadians had a government so obsessed with secrecy as they have today".

Looking at the guidelines which are in effect today, comparing them with the guidelines which were in effect during the Liberal term in office, where in the new guidelines is there any indication whatsoever of an attitude of greater openness? The only change in these guidelines is to prohibit off the record conversations with Members of Parliament and with the media.

I agreed with the then Leader of the Opposition that what they have done is to impose a gag or muzzle. How can the Minister stand in his place and suggest they are more open when in fact they have taken a step backwards?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to again read the opening sentence in the guidelines:

> Communications with the public, including particularly Members of Parliament and news media representatives are a part of the duties and responsibilities of managers in the public service.

It is a declaration. It is part of their duty to communicate. In the letter it says:

> In view of the Government's commitment to openness—

If that was not the Government's commitment, why in heaven's name would the Prime Minister write that in a letter to deputy ministers? Why would he write to deputy ministers of this Government's commitment to openness if it were his intention to do exactly the opposite? That is absurd. You are fabricating. You are beating the blazes out of some straw man that does not exist, a straw man of a secretive Prime Minister, of a secretive government, and you are pummelling the devil out of that straw man. He does not exist. Read the document, "This government's commitment to openness". It instructs officials not only to be prepared to communicate with people here in Ottawa, in our cosy little cocoon, but to communicate with people throughout the country so that they might know what we are doing. It instructs Departments to be open and to communicate with the rest of the country. Calling it secretive and imposing a gag is to be at least unfair, if not worse.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems to be living in some outside world. I remind him that it is not this Government, this Party, or this Opposition, but the media who are seeing you as being secretive. "It is secrety time". "Paranoia starks Parliament Hill". "Tories keep us in the dark". "The Great Stone Wall". "Finance Minister refuses to release information". There are headlines in the media every day. You should read The Globe and Mail.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Will the Hon. Member address the Chair, please.

Mr. Gauthier: In an article in last week's Globe and Mail, Patrick Martin stated as his fourth rule for the Tory dynasty, and I quote:

> Centralize the message. "If this Government is going to centrally run anything, its the media," admitted one senior Mulroney adviser on the condition that he not be identified.

This was an off-the-cuff remark.

> "Its going to be managed," he said, referring to the message that the Government will allow the press to record.
> The Mulroney administration has already become known for this. Ministers have been muzzled—

This Minister has the gall to say that he is part of an open government. It is perceived in the real world as being one of the most closed keyhole administrations we have ever had in this country. On top of that, he has the gall to come here today and say to the House that the former government did not answer questions on the Order Paper, when the record will show that 85 per cent of the questions were answered. But his own administration, out of 100 questions, has answered only four. Only four questions have been answered in three and a half weeks. Who is withholding information? The Government is. I beg to say to the Hon. Member, that 85 per cent is a damn good average compared with his Government's, which is about one-twentieth, or about 5 per cent.

• (1650)

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I am heartened to note the Hon. Member's faith and belief in the writings of the media. Apparently he agrees with the view of the media. Therefore, I look forward to his challenge to the Leader of his Party, that is if he supports the view of the media and I look forward as well to his admonition to his Leader to release the letter he and his predecessor exchanged which, as the media has suggested, is most proper.

Mr. Gauthier: The election is over.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is a new Liberal Party.

Mr. Andre: Oh, I see, this is a new Liberal Party.

I would only reiterate to the Hon. Member that he should take the facts. There have been suggestions all afternoon that factual information about government activities should be transmitted, and everyone agrees. Will he please take this factual statement of fact. The guidelines state quite specifically that this Government views communications with the public as very important and that the Government has instructed the officials to put in place the mechanism to communicate with the public, not just here in Ottawa, but across the entire country, so that the people in the so-called regions of the country can have the same access to information and can be communicated with in the same way as people in this nice little cocoon in Ottawa.

As I indicated earlier, the reality is that the Opposition is beating to death a straw man with no substance, no soul and no reality. In fact, the real substance of the situation is a government committed to openness and communication with the Canadian public.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): One short and succinct question, with a short and succinct answer. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a factual question. I would remind him that a member of the Public Service was rapped over the knuckles for giving an answer to a certain question. The question was, "Does the Prime Minister have a nanny on the payroll?" If he will recall, the reason the public servant was rapped over the knuckles was that the answer was no, that he had someone who was a maid and who helped out with the kids. Is the question, "Does the Prime Minister have a nanny on the payroll?" a factual question? Could the Minister indicate to the House what is a factual question?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I thought we were talking about factual information. I do not know what is a factual question. I cannot get my head around that. However, I know about the communication of facts. The facts the Hon. Member was alluding to were communicated by the Prime Minister's press secretary. So if he can read, he knows the answer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments is now terminated. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier).

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I was not going to speak in this debate, but in view of the irresponsible attitude taken by the Liberal Opposition and especially the article by Jeffrey Simpson published in the Globe and Mail this morning, "The door stays shut", I think I have a duty to take the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the communications guidelines. I must say that since it was elected on September 4 of this year, this Government has been acting very wisely, considering the economic shambles we inherited from the previous Government.

Mr. Speaker, there has been far too much "laissez-aller", and that is why corrective action is necessary and why Canadians have endorsed such action, as expressed in the policies announced by the Conservative Government.

At my riding offices, Mr. Speaker, and everywhere else in Quebec and Canada, constituents favour the measures adopted by this Government. When we came to power we said we would clean up the mess, and that is what we are doing.

Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister said during the election campaign that the deficit would be over $30 billion, the Government at the time said he was wrong. Now we know that the Prime Minister was right. When he asked for papers on the economy, the then Government steadfastly refused to provide them. The Leader of the Liberal Party kept saying: No, sir, you are wrong. The facts were different, however. One might say that our predictions were substantially accurate. This Government must now find an acceptable way to deal with the situation. Why were public servants not allowed to provide this information last summer? Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that perhaps they were afraid to release for public consumption information which would have put many people to shame. Perhaps they were hesitant under the previous government, hiding behind the smokescreen of confidentiality or for any other motive, hesitant to come clean with the people. They did not want the people to know anything about the administration of public funds.

People who have been in office in the past know very well that the government had full discretion when it came to releasing information. In that context, unfortunately, all information which Canadians rightfully expected to have to be able to pass their own judgement on the administration was practically unavailable or, at best, diluted. The government did not reveal more than it wanted the people to know. Had the people of this country been kept well informed, it is a safe bet that the Liberal government would have been thrown out a long time ago. Now that we have come up with communication guidelines, the Opposition screams foul play. Yet those guidelines are designed to guarantee open and responsive government.

During the election campaign, we promised to review the guidelines on Government secrecy, especially those governing the role of public servants and their responsibilities when communicating with the Canadian public. We told the people that we would take action in this area. We did not wait for years as did the previous Government to establish guidelines on communications.

During the Cabinet meeting of November 23, the Prime Minister and all the Ministers reaffirmed our commitment that open and effective communication with the public would be an absolute priority for this Government. The Ministers also confirmed the Government's commitment to the principles contained in the Freedom of Information and the Protection of Privacy Acts. This is a positive, practical and realistic approach on the part of a Government which is open to the people. On the other hand, under our system of Government a Minister, normally chosen among his peers in Parliament, is traditionally accountable to Parliament, and only to Parliament, for the action taken by his department. This is the basic principle of ministerial accountability. In view of this, it is normal for certain restrictions to exist or for certain matters to remain confidential.

In spite of this, our Government will be known as an open government accessible to every Canadian citizen. If after 20 years in power, the Liberals were unable to establish clear and satisfactory guidelines on communications, they have only themselves to blame. If they refused to act and if we have inherited the results of their inaction in this area, they should be the first ones to congratulate us for the initiatives we are taking after less than three months in power.

However, to avoid giving out inaccurate or erroneous information, it is standard practice to provide guidelines for public servants asking them not to comment upon political decisions or certain documents which must remain confidential for security reasons. This is not censorship, but the provision of appropriate information to the people concerned. In this spirit, we can be certain of providing accurate information without distorting its meaning. Government information will therefore be clear and to the point. This is why the guidelines emphasize that all the contacts between public servants and members of the media must be on a non-confidential basis and for attribution by name. I am convinced that public servants should be prepared to openly provide factual information to the public and the media within their areas of responsibility that describes or explains programs and policies that have been announced or implemented by the Government. It is a responsibility and a duty to undertake to do that, as I do with my constituents and people from the media in my constituency.

People wishing to discuss recommendations or advice as provided to the Minister or to question decisions that might be taken or business currently being addressed should get in touch with the Minister. We are elected representatives, we have received a very definite mandate from the people and it is our duty, especially the Minister, to answer and provide details on the policies of this Government.

Most importantly, we cannot have everybody at liberty to say what we are doing. This is something we have to tell the Opposition and the media, and let them comment if they so wish. We have been elected in a democratic way, and we are assuming our responsibilities, quite simply.

If in the past, guidelines such as guidelines no. 45 issued by the then Liberal Cabinet in March 1973 did put limitations on the information held by the Canadian government, the Conservative Government has attempted to remedy the situation in October 1979 by introducing Bill C-151, the Freedom of Information Act. Had that Bill been passed, it would have made Canada the first federal government with the British type of parliamentary system to have a legislation giving the public access to government documents. In July 1980, the Liberal Government introduced in the House of Commons Bill C-43, the information bill which dealt with the Freedom of Information Act and the Protection of Privacy Act. The legislation was given Royal Assent in July 1982. While Bill C-15 would have provided for an exemption for Cabinet documents, the Freedom of Information Act states it does not apply to such documents. The difference means that under Bill C-15, Cabinet documents would have been subject to provisions concerning judicial review, but they are not subject to such review under the Freedom of Information Act.

By unduly criticizing the guidelines issued by this Government, the Liberals simply confirm their disregard for some of their own bills.

Reference is made to muzzled civil servants, Mr. Speaker. Why, we make sure that public servants can communicate with the public under the guidelines issued by the Liberal Prime Minister who was in office in July 1981. Ministers, so he said, have a responsibility to establish, to delegate adequate powers of communication and information to their own staffs and officials. Public servants are not there to defend this party's policies. In this morning's Globe and Mail, columnist Simpson attacked the government. The government wants its officials to release factual information only and prohibits them from expressing opinions on future policies "in the making". As Hon. Members can see, the third part of these guidelines issued by the Right Hon. Prime Minister have not been changed by the Conservatives.

As to regional information, Mr. Speaker, it used to be badly circulated. As members of the Conservative Party, we want to make sure that officials in the field are fully informed about the various government programs or, when this information is not available, that they are aware of the avenues to get it. You are certainly aware that a one year study on regional communications, a study commissioned by former Minister Johnston, has just been completed; its findings are that regional information officers cannot properly carry out their duties because they are kept in the dark by Ottawa. The report blames the very low level of knowledge of these officials. We are saying to the Deputy Ministers that they must ensure adequate regional information, so that all Canadians can benefit from it and not only those living in Ottawa, where 80 per cent of all information officers are residing.

Much has been said about the part played by Deputy Ministers in the area of information. We are being blamed for assessing the performance of Deputy Ministers and senior officials in part on the way they manage communications. In fact, as early as 1981, the government added its own criteria in the assessment of its officials. Historically, governments have tried to have it recognized that communications were part of the responsibilities of senior officials. We are emphasizing again this point now that we are trying to clarify the guidelines concerning the information officials may release. And in this evaluation process, we are emphasizing again communication planning. This is nothing new, it is a global approach to management.

We will remind the medias that they will criticize the government if they cannot communicate efficiently. For example, if the government does not keep the regions properly informed, we will be handed as insensitive to their needs.

Mr. Speaker, I think that those comments had to be made and I believe that the media will play their part. We have been elected and I do not believe that a single journalist in Canada was elected to make comments in his paper. If they want to administer the country, let them get elected as we did and support a government who has done very much to promote freedom of speech in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. I regret—

[English]

There are no comments or questions. We will proceed with debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. It is indeed encouraging to hear the talk from the Government side about openness and consultation. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that when one considers the motion which is being debated here in the House today and the reasons behind it, one can understand why in Canada today there is confusion in the minds of people as to what happened between the time of the election campaign and today.

I would like to quote some of the comments made at that time by the New Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on social programs. The Prime Minister said:

We are committed to ensuring the full participation of every Canadian in the country's economic and social life. We will work to pull down the barriers which restrict full participation.

● (1710)

On regional development funds, the release says:

— in consultation with local and provincial authorities.

Consultation is the big word, it says:

Consultation will be the hallmark of the New Progressive Conservative approach to regional development.

On the offshore, it says:

—fairness, equity and opportunity govern the federal response—

On Atlantic Canada, it says:

—respected and consulted as partners. The Liberal legacy of conflict and bitterness will be replaced by a new approach based on co-operation, consultation and understanding.

On fisheries management, it says:

—mark the end of bureaucratic management of the fishery. The days of highly centralized control of the fishery . . . are over. We will usher in a new era of co-operation among the federal government, the provinces, the fishermen and processors.

On policy, it says:

—participate directly and openly in the formulation and monitoring of federal . . . policy . . . More decentralized decision making will result in quicker response times for resolving local problems.

Then we go to the PC handbook in which this is said:

We are committed to giving Canadians a well-managed, efficient and productive government. It will be a government open to public scrutiny—

At all times. On the PC Party in power, it says:

The Progressive Conservative Party of Canade believes that new attitudes and new approaches in government are the most important priority to bring about real change in Canada.

Then we got to reasons for voting Progressive Conservative. It reads:

We will put Canada back to work . . . free from excessive government intervention—

We can solve our problems together . . . working closely with other levels of government, with labour and business, and with individual Canadians to solve our problems together. We will be a government that listens carefully, and determines national policies after consulting with the people.

They will be open with the people of Canada. It says:

You can trust us. We have been calling for necessary changes to the style and management of government for the last 10 years.

We will achieve equality for women. We will work closely with the provinces, with voluntary organizations and training institutions—

The PC commitment . . . open, honest and accessible government begins with respecting the role of Parliament and giving it the power required to ensure government accountability.

Then the Conservatives say they are looking to the future. They are going to reduce the barriers to full participation. Well, Mr. Speaker, they might still be looking to the future but they are walking backwards.

When you look at the guidelines which have been talked about here today—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Is that the end of the good part of the speech?

Mr. Baker: —selective vision was certainly displayed by some government members. They talked about the guidelines, saying that it is necessary to communicate with Members of Parliament and the general public and media, and then they forgot to read this:

> Off-the-record background briefings will only be permitted in exceptional circumstances and must have prior Ministerial approval.
> Public servants should not go beyond this discussion of factual information. It is not appropriate . . . to speculate about policy deliberations or future policy decisions.
> Public employees acting in good faith under these guidelines will not be considered as having violated oaths of secrecy.

Then two Cabinet Ministers stand up in the debate and say, "Oh, we have information officers."

I want to make a few points now which have not been made here at all. They have not even been touched on. I think they are perhaps the most important points dealing with any guidelines affecting the behaviour of public servants as they communicate with Members of Parliament, the general public and the media. What if you do not have open consultation? What if you are afraid as a public servant to communicate, exchange ideas or act as a sounding board to let people know what is being considered by the Government? In other words, when you have openness, when a public servant is not afraid to talk to a Member of Parliament or a union or a representative of the people no matter what their position, then you do not have the mistakes that are sometimes made by a government in power.

The question here today should not only be concerning whether public servants are permitted complete openness with Members of Parliament. What should be debated here today is whether the public servant is aware of the decision and formulation of decisions which affect him directly and which he has to administer and answer questions about.

I will give you a couple of examples. The other day a policy was announced which would do away with the fishing vessel insurance plan for all fishermen. It was administered by the federal Government and the policy decision was that it would be privatized. That is along the lines of the policy enunciated during the election campaign by the Progressive Conservative Party. However, it does not do me or a fishermen's union or anyone else much good to phone a public servant and ask: What is the situation today? What is the policy of the Government? If will not do me much good because that public servant has to turn around and say that the policy of the Government is to privatize this insurance scheme. That does not tell you anything. You could turn around and say: Yes, but are they taking into account this and that bit of information? Are they taking into account that perhaps private insurance companies will not be willing to insure certain fishermen presently insured under the scheme? Or: Do you know that this will mean an increase in the rates to the fishermen, perhaps double or triple, which will mean in some cases an extra $20,000 or $30,000 out of the fishermen's pocket this year? Without openness, Mr. Speaker, the public servant answering the question will not have the information and two things will happen. The Minister can stand up here in the House and give a false answer to a question. Given the input respecting the measure concerned, the information is not complete.

For example, when I asked the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) a question concerning weather information, she had to say, "Well, we have not really formulated that policy yet. It is going to be done. We are going to charge Canadians for calls to the weather office but we do not know what Canadians we are going to charge". Then the question arises about who is going to make the decision. The Minister says to the media that the Government is consulting with Bell Canada and the telephone companies. Well, you can consult all you want; no telephone company can act as a collection agency for anyone, even a Department of Government. Even more important than that, the general thrust of that policy is to discourage people from calling the weather office, even though that person might be exempt from that charge. The policy is still there. In other words, in the formulation of that policy by the Government of Canada it was operating on misinformation. Someone other than even the Public Service laid that down as a policy for that Department.

If you ask a public servant whether a specific policy has been implemented within the Government, the public servant may say no. If you ask him when it will be implemented, he will say he does not know. If you ask him what is in the policy, he will tell you that it has not been worked out yet. That is certainly not appropriate. Members of Parliament must not be restricted to responses from public servants that this is the policy of the Government or this is the law of the land as it has been laid down.

I will give you an example of lack of co-ordination between government Departments. We often get a reply from the Public Service on what a policy is, without being given an explanation or the opportunity to discuss the matter with the person who is formulating that particular policy with the Minister. In responding to a constituent, the Department of Employment and Immigration gives a particular piece of information about a policy. A policy statement from the Department of National Revenue gives a policy position completely contrary to the first one. Then, through a decision of a judge of the Federal Court we get another interpretation of that policy.

Decisions have been made by the Government since it took power which were ill-founded and based on misinformation. Unfortunately, it is almost too late to change them because the Ministers have been backed into a corner and are not going to change their position. For example, in responding to the royal commission Report on Equality of Opportunity, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) said that the Government is going to do this and that. A public servant could have told her that the worst examples of discrimination in hiring were in the very rules for federal job creation programs which she tabled in the House two weeks ago.

How can that be changed, Mr. Speaker? It certainly will not be changed by my questioning the Minister in the House and trying to influence her decision accordingly. I do not think that will enable everyone who is available and able to work on federal programs because, as matters stand, if you have not worked in the previous two years, you are not eligible for a referral. If you did not run out of unemployment insurance, you are not eligible for a referral, and if you worked one week in the previous eight weeks, you are not eligible for a referral. The Minister tabled that document in the House two weeks ago and then, in response to the royal commission report, said that she would see what could be done within her Department, not knowing that two weeks previously she had tabled guidelines which violated that very report.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, unless there is openness, public servants will not know the truth. Public servants will not discover the grave error which was made in policy and in the carrying out of that policy within the Department. The Minister of Employment and Immigration stood in the House the other day and said that they will wait until the fishing season closes before considering whether to assist the fishermen in eastern Canada. There was snow on the ground at that point. There were no boats in the water and there was no fishing activity. That night, in response to follow-up question on the Late Show, the Parliamentary Secretary said that there was no special program instituted last year by the former Liberal government. Mr. Speaker, there was a special program but the Parliamentary Secretary was acting on information which he received typed up by a public servant who obviously did not know the difference.

The Minister should be telling public servants who advise the Minister on policy and communicate with Members of Parliament to speak to every Member of Parliament and everyone on the street as openly as possible in order to get all the information. In that way the Government would not continue to make the tragic errors it has made since it took power. The only way to stop those tragic decisions is to have a more open government, as was professed by the Progressive Conservative Party during the campaign. My remarks today apply to any government that is in power. We must have openness or we will have policies which are discriminatory toward the people and do not serve the public good.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, people in the Gallery or Members of the House of Commons who have been here for some years may have the feeling of having fallen through the looking glass. Hon. Members opposite have for years run the tightest ship in terms of secrecy. They are now becoming born-again advocates of open government.

I have served for 12 years as a Member in the House, Mr. Speaker. We, as members of the Opposition, attempted to get factual information from the Government about its activities. Year after year we encountered stonewalling on the part of the Liberal government, attempts to cover up information, systematic abuse of the roles of public servants, and the massive expenditure of public funds for partisan purposes through extremely large advertising campaigns financed by the taxpayers of Canada.

In a few minutes we will be having a vote on the motion of non-confidence which has been moved by the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner). Many of the people who will be voting to condemn the Government on its policies of openness are the very same people—

Mr. Boudria: And rightly so.

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member says "rightly so". Mr. Speaker, we are delighted to hear from Hon. Members at any time when they criticize Government policies, if they want us to be more open. However, I think the Hon. Member has an obligation to speak to his colleagues who will be rising to vote. He should ask them whether they can, in conscience, vote in the way in which they will after their experience in the last several years. It was the Liberal government that imposed an Order in Council making it an offence to talk about the uranium cartel. That was a massive cover-up attempting to hide an international conspiracy which was designed to drive up energy prices for consumers in Canada. That government passed a gag order, an Order in Council, which made it an offence for Canadians even to refer to that information.

When we were debating the Constitution, the Liberal Government used the Canadian Unity Information Office, a massive propaganda arm of the federal government paid for with federal tax dollars. They commissioned a large number of public opinion surveys. These were the people, Mr. Speaker, who classified public opinion surveys and refused to release information disclosed in the public opinion surveys to Members of Parliament. To this day the Liberals refuse to release that information, although the surveys are years old.

The Liberal government was responsible for an explosion in publicly funded government advertising designed, not to provide factual information to Canadians, but to provide puffery which was to polish the image of the Liberal Party. Canadians rejected that. They said that something was wrong when a government was incapable of differentiating between the national interest and the partisan interests of one political Party in power. They could not condone the kind of waste of money which took place through the Canadian Unity Information Office. That is why one of the first actions of our Government was to scrap CUIO. It was a message that we would not allow that sort of abuse to take place in the future.

It was the very same Liberals, who will be voting to condemn our Government for its policy on openness, who abused the roles of public servants.

Mr. Gauthier: Nonsense!

Mr. Beatty: The Liberal Whip, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), sat on this side of the House this spring while I, as the PC spokesman on Revenue Canada, asked for information from the Minister, Mr. Bussières. He sat there silently while, day after day, Mr. Bussières either gave false information or simply stonewalled. He sat there without a murmur of protest when Mr. Bussières sent out a directive to every employee in my present Department that in no way were they to be permitted to speak to Conservative Members of Parliament on the PC task force on Revenue Canada.

Mr. Gauthier: That is nonsense. Prove it.

Mr. Beatty: In a few moments the Member for Ottawa-Vanier will be rising as a born-again advocate of open government. But his constituents and the people of Canada have the right to ask him where he was a few months ago and where was his commitment to open government at a time when Canadians were asking for factual information with regard to Revenue Canada. He sat there mute or he defended the policies of the previous government.

On September 4, Canadians asked for a change. They said that they had to put an end to this sort of abuse and bring a new government to office that was prepared to open up. In dealing with my Department, Revenue Canada—the same Department that had a gag order on it before—if he wants to get factual information, as the task force did, he can feel free to do so and to request the information. Indeed, I am here daily in Question Period. My officials are under instructions to provide factual information.

That was precisely the point of the guidelines that were issued in the past few days. It was to say on behalf of the Government that we recognize that there is access to information legislation—which we were finally able to press the Liberals into passing—which gives a statutory right to Canadians and Members of Parliament to have information. It was a right that was systematically denied them in consistent cover-ups by the Liberal administration.

Mr. Nunziata: Not this Party.

Mr. Beatty: We are saying that it is not simply a matter of the Government not passing the sort of gag orders the Liberals had on the uranium cartel and not systematically covering up, but that the new administration has the responsibility to communicate effectively and take its message to the Canadian people.

That is why I addressed 2,000 tax practitioners in Toronto recently to talk to them about the reforms we are introducing in our Department to make it more accessible and open to Canadian citizens. I was the first Minister of Revenue in recent memory who had even gone to the Canadian Tax Foundation to be available to them. The tax practitioners who were present found this extraordinary because they were not used to having someone from the federal government listen and communicate. The Hon. Members opposite with their constant barracking are attempting to shout down a Minister of the Crown who is attempting to give information.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: They talk about freedom of information and cover-up, yet when a Member on the government side attempts to give information, they attempt to shout him down. This is exactly the same policy they followed when they were on this side of the House.

Mr. Boudria: If you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen.

Mr. Beatty: Our Government is committed to opening up government and providing information to Canadians. We are committed to ending the cover-ups of recent years and to cutting back on federal advertising that was designed simply as puffery to polish the image of the Party in power.

We are also committed to communicating effectively to Canadians the policies which are designed to serve their needs. One of the goals in the guidelines and in the letters sent to Ministers and deputy ministers in the past few days was to say that it is time to communicate far more effectively with Canadians in the regions.

For example, when dealing with my Department in the future, I want Canadians throughout Canada to feel free to contact the district offices to get information on a factual and timely basis. I believe that our Department has an obligation to solicit the views of Canadians and provide information to them as fully and factually as possible.

It is a dramatic change from the policies that have been followed by Revenue Canada in recent years. We saw that the Liberal government shut the public out.

The Hon. Members in the back row were not here during the controversy of the past year. If they were, they would have noticed that when questions were raised there were constant denials. The Liberals denied that there were quotas, that there were abuses and problems, until eventually Members of Parliament, the public and the press were able to prove that the Minister himself did not know what was happening.

When we attempted to get information from the government and talk to public servants, a gag order was issued to every official in the Department not to talk to us. Indeed, there was even an article in the papers which indicated that the then Minister of National Revenue had indicated that if Conservative Members of Parliament wanted information, they would have to use the access to information legislation to get it. Yet those Members today condemn the Government on its policies on openness.

Mr. Boudria: Rightfully so.

Mr. Nunziata: It is a question of honesty.

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member says that it is a question of honesty. That is exactly what it is. Nothing could be more dishonest than a government which, during the 12 years I have been here, systematically covered up, systematically withheld information, systematically abused the position of public servants, and systematically abused the tax dollars to polish its own image. Suddenly they say that they are committed to open government.

They have a record, and that record speaks for itself. The record shows that they cannot be trusted when they talk about open government because they have abused every opportunity they have had to come clean with Canadians. They refused every opportunity to consult with Canadians. Yet today, in Opposition, suddenly things would be different if they had the chance again.

The Hon. Member says that it is a question of honesty, and indeed it is. I call upon him to ask his colleagues who sit in front of him whether they are being honest when they portray this masquerade that we see today after that systematic cover-up that we saw taking place for so many years.

An Hon. Member: We have heard your case.

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member, having raised the question of honesty, says not to mention honesty any more. We should not discuss it. I do not blame him. If our record had been as appalling as that of the Members opposite, I would not want to talk about honesty.

However, I do want to talk about honesty, and Members on this side want to talk about it for a very good reason. We are committed to opening the Government. We are committed to saying that Canadians have a positive right to get information according to access to information legislation. We are committed to directing public servants to give information freely, factually, and on the record.

Members opposite are saying that it should be given in secret and off the record. While they talk about openness, they say that when interviews take place in the future, they should take place in secret. That is the Liberal idea of what constitutes openness.

We want to open the doors and put it on the record. Let us not have secret discussions but open them to the news media.

These guidelines are also designed to protect public servants. The Revenue Canada episode in recent months showed that the Liberals were abusing the position of public servants and making them defend the discredited policies of the Liberal government. Many Members here will have seen The Journal earlier this year when that odious computer film was shown. It was paid for with $200,000 of taxpayers' money. The Liberal Minister did not have the courage to defend the policy himself. He put his Deputy Minister on The Journal to defend it rather than defend the partisan actions of the government himself. That is an example of the abuse of the position of public servants.

Our Government differs from the discredited Liberals opposite by the fact that we believe it is the responsibility of public servants to give out factual information. When it comes to attacking or defending the record of the government, that is the role of the politicians, and it is a responsibility from which we do not shy.

When our task force finally arrived in Ottawa after travelling across the country, it was clear to everyone, including the Government, that Canadians acknowledged that there was a serious problem in the Department of National Revenue. Was there ever a willingness on the part of the members of the Treasury benches to acknowledge any culpability or default in terms of their responsibility? Was there any feeling of remorse about what had been done to ordinary Canadians? Their response was to fire the Deputy Minister. The Minister remained in his job. This will not be done again by this Government for 12 years. My colleagues and I who were elected in 1972 have fought to restore the principle of ministerial responsibility. The Liberals were there to snip ribbons when new plants were being opened, Mr. Speaker. They were there to present cheques. But when there was a problem, was there any Liberal Minister who was prepared to say, "It was my responsibility as Minister. I stand behind my officials. I take the responsibility"? Those Members who were in the House during that period, do any of them remember hearing the Liberals say that?

Mr. Taylor: Never.

Mr. Beatty: Let me ask Members who were here during that time if they heard three words. What about the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) when he lost $120 million of taxpayers' money on Consolidated Computer? We had questions raised in the House about that. We had leaked correspondence which the Minister would not table in the House and would not acknowledge—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: —did anyone here hear the Hon. Member for Windsor West or any of his colleagues say these three words, "I was wrong"?

Mr. Taylor: No.

Mr. Beatty: In 12 years I cannot recall an occasion when a Liberal member rose in his place and admitted that a mistake had been made. Yet the Liberals talk about openness. Blame would be shifted to the Public Service; blame would be shifted to the Americans if the economy turned sour; blame would be shifted to the Opposition; blame would be shifted to the Parti Québécois or to the provinces. It was a policy of blame anyone else, but take the credit when things go right. Blame belongs to somebody else. If the polls started to slide—the Liberals loved polls—you would hear them say, "Don't worry. The taxpayers will fork out several million dollars more for new advertising campaigns". The Canada geese were scrambled and put on display. If there had been an honest portrayal of the Canada geese, they would have been shown flying south like everyone else during that period.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: The geese have flown south and the chickens have come home to roost.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: This Government is committed to openness, Mr. Speaker. We are committed to the concept of ministerial responsibility.

I was interested to listen to the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker)—an Hon. Member whom I respect who is a skilled and experienced parliamentarian—talking about the roles of Ministers, the roles of public servants, and whether or not it was appropriate for public servants to be asked to comment on policy matters or whether a Minister should be doing that. The Hon. Member has served, as a member of the government, on parliamentary committees when public servants have been there, for example, on the Estimates. What is the rule the Liberal chairman followed in parliamentary committees in the days of Liberal rule? It is pretty straightforward, Mr. Speaker. It was the role of Ministers to comment on matters of policy. It was the role of public servants to comment on factual matters and to give technical information. But when questions were raised under Liberal chairmen by members of the Opposition which touched on policy, what would the response be? "It is inappropriate to ask a public servant to be drawn into an essentially partisan debate. Those questions should be directed to the Minister".

That is precisely the position we are taking today in the Government. We are saying it is the role of public servants on a timely and factual basis to provide information to the public and to do so quickly, to do so as fully as possible and to be as helpful as possible when inquiries come from Members of Parliament, the media, or from members of the public. But it is the role of the politicians and not of the public servants to attack or defend policy. If we allow that blurring to take place, coupled with the abuse of public servants the way it took place under the Liberals, we will contaminate the public servants and put them in a position where their effectiveness and their ability to do their job is put into question.

These guidelines which the Prime Minister announced on Friday are designed to take the public servants out of that grey area, to give them clear guidelines on what is appropriate and to put a positive onus on them to be forthcoming in providing information and service to the people of Canada. That is to be the goal of this Government, Mr. Speaker. What we will be doing is ensuring that Canadians have information on a timely basis. We are making every effort to open up the doors and windows. We are hearing already from Canadians coast to coast that they feel the change which took place on September 4 was a change important to all Canadians.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 62(9), to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings.

[English]

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Supply

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is the following one. Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), seconded by Mr. Gray, moves:

That, in the opinion of this House, the guidelines issued by the Prime Minister, on November 23, 1984, with regard to the provision of information to the public, are inadequate and retrogressive and confirm the Government's mistrust of and cynicism toward Canadians.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour, please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed, please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)) which was negatived on the following division:

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INCREASED CONTRIBUTIONS—EFFECT ON SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, small business leaders unanimously agree that payroll taxes are high in this country. They also agree that such payroll taxes penalize the future of small business. Small businesses are not encouraged to hire people when the Government taxes them whether they are profitable or not. During 20 years in opposition, and particularly during the last election campaign, the Conservative Party advocated less government intervention in Canadian business. The first thing this Government did was to increase UIC deductions which are a payroll tax. An increase in payroll tax is a typical example of government intervention.

[Translation]

Based on the steps it has taken so far, Mr. Speaker, it is abundantly clear that this government says one thing and does something else. How could the Canadian public trust such a government when they daily break their promises?

FORESTRY

OPPOSITION TO LOGGING RAIN FOREST ON MEARES ISLAND, B.C.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, more than 500 groups, including environmentalists, native groups, and tourist associations, are desperately trying to preserve the rain forest on Meares Island off the west coast of Vancouver Island. Given the area's immense natural beauty and potential for tourism with Canada's largest red cedars, some more than 1,000 years old, and many native heritage sites, we in the NDP call upon the federal Government to assist these groups as well as approach the B.C. Government in an attempt to have the logging stopped.

North of Meares Island is South Morseby, a cluster of 140 islands, part of the Queen Charlottes. This area contains large rare bird colonies, and the plan to log this area but leave enough trees standing to preserve the view from the water is unacceptable.

[Translation]

Environment Canada has provided some help in that last case but we ask the Department to take a stronger position to ensure that South Morseby remains in its natural state.

FISHERIES

DEVELOPMENT OF EASTERN QUEBEC INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT SOLUTIONS

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, now that a new Progressive Conservative Government has been elected in Ottawa, expectations among people working in the fisheries industry in Eastern Quebec and on the North Shore are running very high.

The House will recall that, in recent years, fishermen have suffered the consequences of a battle for jurisdiction over this sector, a battle instigated by the Liberal Government which was futile and paralyzed the industry. After recent meetings with many members of this industry, I must say I am very anxious to see a new era of consultation and open dialogue with the Government of Quebec regarding this vital sector of our regional economy.

There are many problems in the fisheries industry, including fishing zones, resource definition and management and licensing. All this requires consultation.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore urge my colleague who is responsible for this vital sector in Ottawa to meet his Quebec counterpart as soon as possible, in order to make proposals in the best interests of fishermen and the development of the fishing industry in Eastern Quebec.

ENERGY

HIGH PRICE OF GASOLINE IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, it is very gratifying to see how interested the Opposition has become in the price of gas, in the last two weeks. I am referring more particularly to the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

S.O. 21

I would like to draw the Hon. Member's attention to the fact that the problem is not the 2 cent increase. He may not be aware of the fact that there is a difference of 13 cents per litre between the price of gas in Quebec and Ontario. I have been looking at the problem for many years.

If his Government had bothered to read my proposals in this 725-page book . . . It is because of the previous Government's energy policies that Quebecers no longer understand the importance of the petrochemical industry for Quebec, and more specifically Montreal East. I am referring to the Montreal East refinery complex, which used to rank first in Canada and second internationally. Gas is so expensive in Quebec because of the rigidity of the Liberals' energy policy.

Soon we may have to form a buyers' consortium to get any of this precious stuff in Quebec. Where was the Member for Bourassa? Where were the Liberal Government and our Liberal friends, at the time?

EMPLOYMENT

ABOLITION OF CERTAIN ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS TO GIVE JOBS TO YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I might say in passing that the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) ought to do something constructive instead of beating his gums in the House. He should look after his riding instead of making empty statements in Ottawa.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) told the committee that the First Chance Program has been scrapped. Launched by our government, this program was designed to help youths find jobs and add experience to their curriculum vitae.

On the eve of the International Youth Year, we are rightfully concerned about Canadian youths, because not only will those looking for a first job be penalized by the Progressive Conservative government, but so will others seeking summer employment since the Progressive Conservatives have also axed the Summer Canada-Student Employment Program which enabled thousands of our students to work during the summer. They could thus pay their tuition fees and make their parents' financial burden that much lighter.

I suggest that all Canadians ought to denounce those ill-advised decisions of the Progressive Conservative government with respect to young Canadians, and to ask themselves just what the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) does besides standing by the door listening to her Cabinet colleagues argue among themselves.

EMPLOYMENT

FUNDING OF WINTER WORKS PROJECTS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to call upon the Government to provide a large increase in the funds granted for Winter Works projects. Many of us were concerned about the announcement in September by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) that only $200 million was to be allocated for this winter's projects. Allotments of only $100,000 for many ridings are clearly inadequate in the present circumstances of high unemployment. Grants of more funds for other ridings are just as inadequate when one recognizes that unemployment figures are underestimated because of the Government's refusal to use all of the information available to it.

The people of Canada have now been informed that the applications for Canada Works projects total $1.2 billion, or six times the funds allocated for such job-creation projects. Clearly the supply of potential employees and of valuable projects is very large, and the new Government has equally clearly underestimated the need. It is imperative that the funding decision of September be reconsidered and the Progressive Conservative Government authorize a large increase in funds for Canada Works. If it does not, we shall all shortly be rejecting entirely worthy projects in our ridings across the country.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR PROGRAMS TO PROVIDE DURABLE AND PERMANENT JOBS

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the constituency of Témiscamingue which I represent in this House has one of the highest unemployment rates in Quebec according to the latest Statistics Canada figures, and ranks among the five hardest hit areas in Canada. The situation is especially dramatic for young people between 18 and 25, who in ever increasing numbers no longer trust the government to get their problems solved. This sad situation is mainly due to the nearsighted employment policies put forward by the previous government, which are largely responsible for destroying and depreciating work ethics among our young people. It was that kind of cheap political programs that helped unseat 58 Liberals in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that this Government during its term of office will develop genuine employment programs that will prove to be lasting and permanent and will put Canadians back to work. Further, it is my wish that the Minister of Employment and Immigration will affect large sums of money to job creation where the unemployment rate is indeed a human tragedy.

• (1410)

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON THE ELDERLY

Mr. Edouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, over 50 per cent of senior citizens in Quebec live under the poverty line. We must ask ourselves what we can do to improve the situation of these venerable Canadians, who have always sacrificed so much so that we would have a country with a great potential for the future.

Last October 10th, Mr. Speaker, I informed the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs of my great disappointment upon learning that, last July, he had allowed the specialized institutions housing these needy people to squeeze out of them most unfairly nearly all of the $25 increase in the old age security pension provided by the Canadian Government. The reason given was the increase on the cost of accommodation and board.

In a few days, our Government will provide a new increase of $25 a month to our senior citizens and we want to avoid a repetition of such a despicable and odious action. Mr. Speaker, we, of the Progressive Conservative Government, should like the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare of Canada (Mr. Epp) to ask his Quebec counterpart to agree to this.

INDUSTRIAL AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

DESIGNATION SOUGHT FOR CONSOLIDATED BATHURST IN HAMILTON

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Government is aware of the dismal unemployment situation facing many older Canadians, particularly the former employees of Consolidated Bathurst in my riding. The Government has put up a number of Members in the House today who spoke about government programs. In fact the first actions of the Government have been to harass older unemployed people, and to develop a system whereby 700 jobs will be created to harass people between the ages of 50 and 65 who have been unemployed.

I hope the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) will respond to a request by the former employees of Consolidated Bathurst that an ILAP designation be given to that particular industry in order that these workers, many of whom had more than 30 years of service, can finally get financial relief, which was not forthcoming in the recent budget statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RECONSIDER FUND ALLOCATION FORMULA

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): On September 24th, 1984, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration earmarked $430 million for the Canada Works Program, including $582,000 in my riding where the unemployment rate was estimated at 8.9 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge that the unemployment rate in my riding far exceeds 15 per cent, but the rate was set according to the then-Liberal government formula, which assumed that people had lost every hope of finding work.

So far, Mr. Speaker, I have received $4,316,000 worth of applications under the Canada Works Program, which goes to show that Canadians now feel confident that their chances of landing jobs are better with a Conservative government.

Mr. Speaker, I have urged the Minister of Employment and Immigration to reconsider the fund allocation formula so as to make it more equitable towards remote areas and to give people who do not draw unemployment benefits a fighting chance to return to work some day.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

REPRESENTATIONS MADE BY EMPLOYEES OF BLACK AND DECKER, BARRIE, ONT.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, yesterday representatives of 600 Barrie Black and Decker workers presented hard information which conflicts with company information submitted to FIRA. The only safeguards for their 600 jobs are the promises made by Black and Decker to FIRA and, through FIRA, to the Minister. Without FIRA there would be no chance to save these 600 jobs.

• (1415)

This situation clearly demonstrates the value of a tough and strong FIRA. Only FIRA can assure that multinational corporations do not have a completely free hand here, and that Canadian communities have a voice in their future.

We need a FIRA that will protect jobs, the "jobs, jobs, jobs" that once were so important to the Conservative Party. We urge the Minister to respond quickly to the plea by these workers, and to see to it that FIRA gives them the protection which they need and deserve.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSION WITH PREMIER OF MANITOBA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will be aware by now of the very deep sense of outrage that is occurring in Manitoba over the indiscretions, or gifts, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs calls them, that have been perpetrated by the Minister of Finance, along with the apparent deception and sense of injustice that appear to be applied to that province.

In the spirit of trying to clear the air and provide some rebuilding of this breach of trust and confidence, would the Prime Minister tell us whether he has responded to the Premier of Manitoba and invited him to come and meet with him to discuss the transfer payment problem and other economic injuries facing the province?

As a further step in that reconciliation, would he agree that the background papers that provide the rationale and evidence used by the Department of Finance to advance certain policies, should be made public and therefore tabled in the House and made available to the provinces?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the deep sense of outrage to which my hon. friend makes reference was not apparent in the very civilized and productive conversation I had with Premier Pawley earlier today. We discussed at great length matters of importance to the Government and the people of Manitoba.

Indeed, my hon. friend is quite right. We did spend some time on the question of the injustice to which he refers, an injustice that I hope we will be able to deal with, one which, as my hon. friend knows, was the result of a unilateral cut-back by a Government of which he was a member.

Mr. Axworthy: Without debating the merits of that, since we discussed it fully yesterday, he knows there was a review under way.

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENTAL DOCUMENTS BE TABLED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in light of the quote that I read from the Prime Minister's book entitled Where I Stand, which is available at all retail book counters, incidentally, recommending that the Department of Finance make such matters available, is he prepared to table those documents and background papers? Is he also prepared to table the letter that he sent to the Minister of Science and Technology in which he said there should not be any review of the cut-backs affecting that province?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the documents have apparently become public—even though they ought not to have—I will review those questions with my friend, the Minister of Finance, when he returns at 4.30 this afternoon.

The Minister is absent. He is making a speech in Toronto, and he is not using notes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I should ask the Prime Minister if that omission and ban also includes tapes, considering other indiscretions.

QUESTION OF PRESS ETHICS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister made the comment in the House yesterday that the reports of the Minister of Finance were pilfered. He essentially called into question the ethics of the press person. Now that he has had the opportunity to check the record, and recognizing that the press person in question was only living up to the standards for open communication by the Government, which the Prime Minister has called for, is he prepared to apologize for that remark and begin to repair the breach of trust he has with members of the media?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I have offended anyone, including the Hon. Member, I apologize.

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS FORMULA—POSSIBLE LOSSES FOR QUEBEC AND NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Because of that indiscretion, the Winnipeg press was able to announce a few days ago that the Province of Manitoba may stand to lose $72 million if the guarantee formula for equalization payments to the provinces is dropped. Could the Prime Minister inform the House what amounts are involved in this formula and thus what Quebec and Nova Scotia may stand to lose in 1985-86?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Hon. Member is referring to dropping the guarantee formula for equalization payments. If I am not mistaken, that refers to the radical change in policy implemented by the former Liberal Government. It led to the problem that now exists between the Government of Manitoba and the Canadian Government. The Hon. Minister of Finance is now, as I myself tried to do today in a conversation with Premier Pawley, proceeding with consultations in order to conclude an agreement that will satisfy the legitimate demands of Manitobans and the Government of Canada.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, if I understand Prime Minister's comments correctly, he is proceeding with the review of the equalization formula that was undertaken by the previous Government. Incidentally, could the Prime Minister inform the House whether the figure I was given in an "off the record" conversation, according to which Quebec would lose 229 million in 1985-86 if the formula is not revised, is correct?

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, Mr. Speaker, provided my hon. friend identifies his "off the record" source. In fact, we have started negotiations with the Government of Manitoba. The Hon. Minister of Finance will be meeting with other provincial counterparts in the near future, and we shall try to find an equitable formula in this respect.

[English]

ALLEGED TAPING OF MEETING BETWEEN FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It relates to the meeting between the Minister of Finance of Manitoba and the federal Finance Minister. Does the Prime Minister condone the fact that federal government officials taped that meeting between representatives of the federal Government and of the provincial Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my hon. friend that I was just given an indication that that may have happened, and I can tell him that I can see no circumstances that would justify that.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ALLEGED TAPING OF CONVERSATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister admit that either the Minister of Finance or his assistant made a very serious mistake, which is completely unforgiveable, by secretly taping a conversation between the federal Government's representatives and the representative of a Government of a province?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): And that is civility?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without getting into the details, because I have yet to have an opportunity to discuss the matter with the Minister, although I shall later on in the day, I have no hesitation in telling my hon. friend that at any time or in any circumstances the taping of a private conversation without prior approval is unacceptable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FUTURE CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister tell us, this House, and the representatives of each and every provincial Government, that this occurrence will never happen again, that open and honest consultations and conversations will from now on not be taped by federal government representatives, and, if it ever happens again, that there will be a request for the Minister to resign?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in invoking an important precept in regard to civil liberties, my hon. friend would not want me to violate another, namely, the presumption of innocence. I have not heard firsthand from any of the participants as to what may or may not have transpired. However, I could tell my hon. friend that I find that kind of conduct in any circumstance to be repugnant and unworthy.

BRIEFING OF OPPOSITION CRITICS BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister has a personal dictionary in which government aircraft become sacred instruments of travel, and open Governments become closed Governments. My question concerns the role of critics. We critics in the House, both in my Party and the Party to the left, have had access for background briefings to senior officials of Departments. Will the Prime Minister revert to the wonderful days of "closed" government so that we will be able to have those briefings? Or, must we go to "open" government and have to prove exceptional circumstances, as I recall the release, and also have to obtain ministerial approval? If we have to prove exceptional circumstances, could the Prime Minister tell us whether he issued directives to his 39 colleagues as to what criteria should be applied in determining those special circumstances?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend was busy outside the Chamber playing the piano, and was not listening to the answers we have been giving here. It is widely accepted that he is a better piano player than questioner. All the answers in response to the question of my hon. friend have been given many times in the House, most notably during his absence last week.

Mr. Johnston: There are a number of piano players in this caucus. If we could get together with the brass and the wind on that side of the House, we might do well together.

REQUESTS FOR OFF-RECORD BRIEFINGS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would he assure the House that these "exceptional circumstances" will be applied objectively, whether they be journalists who are friends of the Party, such as Dalton Camp, as opposed to the elite journalists to whom the Secretary of State for External Affairs made reference? Would he agree to table in the House on a periodic basis the requests which have been made for off-the-record briefings with senior officials so that we will know exactly what exceptional circumstances apply?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to give my hon. friend the assurance of reasonable and thoughtful application of guidelines which are only designed to be of assistance in making the truth available to the Canadian public. Inasmuch as he referred to distinguished members of the Press Gallery, I point out to him that we received a letter from the President of the Press Gallery who was inviting Members of Parliament to join the Press Club. It says: "The Club is an ideal place for parliamentarians to relax and make contact with members of the media, particularly in view of the fact that the premises are strictly off the record".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ANSWERS GIVEN BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Like all Members of Parliament we were pleased with his announcement that this would be an open Government. When we received an offer from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to be briefed by senior officials, we accepted that offer. We spent an hour and a half with senior officials of his Department yesterday. We went there asking for factual information on important issues such as the competition policy, metrication, and so on. After an hour and a half, not only could we not receive any useful answers about future policy, but we got no answers on facts. What was the point of the offer?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say, with respect, to my hon. friend that it would be unlikely that any public servant would want to explore future policy with a member of the Opposition. It is the role of the Government to develop policy. Once that policy is developed, it is the role of the Public Service to explain it.

• (1430)

REQUESTS FOR FACTUAL INFORMATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Prime Minister understood the question I was asking. I understood that we would not get future policy advice. We were asking for factual information, whether there were new updates on competition policy and so on. Nothing came forward. We wondered if the reason we could not get any information was because the legislative secretary to the Minister was there taking notes and the public servants would not answer. They were afraid that the guidelines would get them in trouble.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is certainly nothing in the guidelines that would inhibit the kind of legitimate information to which my Hon. friend seeks access. With regard to the reluctance of public servants and others, the answer may be that the normal course is for the Public Service to refine the ideas as indicated by the Cabinet, and bring them forward. Once Cabinet approves, they are introduced in the House as legislation.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

DISRUPTION OF SHIPPING CAUSED BY DAMAGED LIFT BRIDGE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the shutdown of the St. Lawrence Seaway system at Valleyfield, Quebec. The Minister is aware that as of this morning 85 ships are tied up waiting to enter the Seaway system, and that an additional 117 ships are inside the Seaway system waiting to get out. In light of the fact that the Valleyfield Bridge No. 10 will not be repaired until December 7, and that the Seaway officially closes on December 15,—December 20 at the latest—will the Minister inform this House what measures are being contemplated by the Government of Canada to avoid what appears to be the inevitable bankruptcies which will occur as a result of the tremendous losses that have already been experienced by the companies involved, and by those companies whose vessels will be frozen both inside and outside the Seaway system this winter?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know that all Members are concerned about the unfortunate mishap which occurred at the Valleyfield Bridge. I want to assure the Hon. Members, and all Members, that everything possible is being done to restore the bridge to operation. There are some 100 vessels currently being affected. The men and equipment are on site, repair is on schedule and is to be completed by December 6. There are some very important incentives incorporated into the contract which could conceivably result in the work being completed before then. With respect to other contingencies, we have assured the shippers that an extension will, in all likelihood, be made to the Seaway Season, with adequate icebreaking and back up facilities being provided.

Mr. Tobin: I thank the Minister for his answer. Everyone in this House recognizes that the matter is being rectified as quickly as possible.

CONSEQUENCES FOR SHIPPING COMPANIES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Ships will be caught in that system this year and tremendous losses will be incurred. We know that some companies will go bankrupt and that there is a limited liability by the Seaway. What measures are being contemplated by the Government to prevent bankruptcies and the loss of jobs throughout the length and breadth of the Seaway system?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are no ships caught in the system as of now. We will do everything in our power to see that there are no ships caught in the system. The Minister of State for Transport will personally visit the site, either tomorrow or Friday, to ensure that everything is going well. I can assure the Hon. Member of that.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CORPORATE TAX LOOPHOLES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Considering the Government's concern with our deficit, the Minister put forward a most novel proposition in Toronto the other day. He believes that business people are spending too much time looking for tax loopholes. The Minister's solution is to let the experts at Revenue Canada find the loopholes and determine the legality of setting up dummy companies, at the expense of the taxpayer of course. Will the Minister agree that the job of Revenue Canada should be to help close loopholes in the tax system which do not have a socially useful purpose such as creating jobs or doing research and development?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this is a happy day for me. I have finally had a question from my hon. colleague opposite. First, I thank him for his question. Second, I want to indicate to him that setting up dummy companies is not appropriate, now or ever, under the Income Tax Act, and would never be condoned by my Department. We are saying that the Income Tax Act is 5 lbs. of some of the most incomprehensible legislation ever passed by Parliament. We think that the Government has responsibility when a taxpayer comes to us and asks what the law is. We have a responsibility to answer in a forthright and complete way. This is consistent with the Prime Minister's commitment to open government.

USE MADE OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT TAX CREDIT SCHEME

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. Tax scams like the R and D tax credit scheme introduced by the Liberals will cost us hundreds of millions of dollars. It is called a quick flip scam. We now learn that the moratorium the Government placed on the scheme is meaningless because of a special grandfather clause. Will the Minister tell us what the damage will be when this scheme finally comes to an end, and will he place an immediate moratorium on the grandfather clause?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is not a scam. It is a proposal that was written into the law by the Liberal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: I do not know whether the hon. gentleman wants to shout me down, or wants an answer. I will be glad to give him an answer. Members opposite wrote this provision into the law. The Government is very much concerned about the way in which quick flips have been used. As a consequence, my colleague, the Minister of Finance, put the lid on that and said that we wanted to have that provision looked at again. What we did was opt to stop what we thought was a loophole in the system. We thought that this sort of appropriate action was justified. I am surprised the Hon. Member did not support us in that.

TRANSPORT

ALMA-LA BAIE AUTOROUTE

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State (Transport).

Can the minister tell us whether there are discussions now under way with the Quebec Government for the purpose of renewing the blanket agreements for the construction of freeways? If so, will the Alma-La Baie freeway project, which is vitally important to the people of the Saguenay Lac-Saint-Jean area, be covered by those agreements?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, there are no discussions under way with the Quebec Government. The new Quebec Minister of Transport was appointed only very recently. We will give him time to settle down in the Quebec government. Later, we will consider entering discussions. This is not to be taken up immediately. I think this answers the second part of the Hon. Member's question. There being no discussions, the highway referred to is not on any agenda of any non-existing discussions.

SMALL BUSINESS

INCREASED UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CONTRIBUTIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Minister of State for Small Businesses.

The increase in unemployment insurance contributions announced by the Government will mean a higher tax on wages as it will add to the tax burden of the small businesses which are responsible for creating most of the jobs in Canada. Can the Minister explain to the House the position of his Party, which on April 7th, 1984, was willing to consider unemployment insurance contributions as tax credits rather than expenses but, now it is in power, has decided instead to raise those contributions?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulate my hon. colleague for Saint-Léonard-Anjou on his appointment. I find his question very interesting. This matter is now under consideration and I shall probably be able to provide an answer personally to the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou within a few days.

SMALL BUSINESS CONFIDENCE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, can the Hon. Minister tell us what his plan of action is to restore the confidence of small business in this two-faced Government?

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I did not understand the question. If the Hon. Member could repeat it either in French or in English, I shall be happy to answer it, but I did not understand him the first time.

PUBLIC WORKS

OLD PORT OF QUEBEC

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works.

Could my hon. colleague advise the House why he has hired an accounting firm to investigate the administration of the Vieux-Port de Québec? Has the accounting firm already started its investigation and when does the minister expect to table its findings in the House?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for his concern over the interests of Quebec City's Old Port. Why this investigation? You will recall that a great deal has been written about Quebec City's Old Port, and that major cost overruns have been incurred in conjunction with the projects that have been carried out in the Old Port of Quebec.

Under these circumstances and in view of the comments we had received from various quarters, I suggest that a full assessment of the administration of these projects was urgently required in the public interest, and so I ordered one made and I have so decided; I hope I can table within the next few months a full investigation report, so that the general public may find out why and how public funds were spent.

EMPLOYMENT

PROVISION OF JOB-CREATION FUNDS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment. I am sure she shares my dismay that some senior business executives said on The Journal last night that the Government's confidence building program will not create many jobs for at least one year. In light of the fact that the Minister confirmed in committee yesterday that the $1 billion which has been allocated for creating jobs will not, in her words, be made up of any new money whatsoever, could the Minister go to the Prime Minister and to the Cabinet to see whether or not they will allocate several billion dollars to create jobs in the immediate term?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that since I came into office, a short period of just over two months, we have allocated $430 million for direct job creation this winter. That means some 70,000 jobs are to be created. We have also re-allocated $1 billion from other programs to job creation and new job opportunities. I would think that the allocation of $1.5 billion toward job creation, new job opportunities and human resource development, in just over two months is really a pretty good record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT OF EXTRA STAFF BY UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in committee yesterday the Minister said:

—I suppose one would say none of it was new money—

In light of that, I wonder if she could tell the House that, instead of spending some $30 million on the 700-person force designed to persecute people on unemployment insurance, she will now spend that $30 million trying to create jobs for people.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member's question indicates that there is a very fundamental difference between members of the Conservative Party and members of the New Democratic Party. There is a very fundamental difference between the two.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Minister would like to finish her answer.

Miss MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The money to which I have referred is not new money in the sense that we have not dipped into the pockets of the taxpayers, as members of the NDP might wish to do. Equally important, the money that will be allocated to intensive interviews will be used to encourage people to return to the paid labour force. We feel that Canadians would prefer to have jobs. Obviously members of the NDP would prefer to have Canadians stay on unemployment insurance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

UNLICENSED CABLE TELEVISION OPERATORS—STAY OF PROSECUTIONS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Attorney General of Canada. No doubt the Attorney General has by now been briefed on the nature of his prosecutorial discretion—the fundamental principle that he should decide, without politics, such things as whom to prosecute, whom not to prosecute, and whether or not to launch appeals; and that this is a discretion that should not be shared with Cabinet, caucus, or even with the Prime Minister. Yet on November 27 a government back-bencher announced a stay of prosecution against unlicensed—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kaplan: I would like to ask the Attorney General if the report in The Globe and Mail, which reveals that he himself had decided to go ahead with the prosecutions of the cable t.v. operators but that his decision was overturned by caucus and that the final word came from the PMO, is true. Did the Attorney General accept direction or advice from his caucus, or the Prime Minister, in the exercise of that discretion?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I always accept direction and advice from the Prime Minister. If that was not the case, I would not be a Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: However, contrary to the actions of members of the last Government, if I think the Prime Minister's advice or direction is wrong, I give him my advice in return. It is a two-way communication.

In connection with the prosecutions—

Mr. Tobin: What did you tell him about finance just before you went to justice?

Mr. Crosbie: I will deal with the question of the other gentleman later.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: In connection with the prosecutions that were requested by the Minister of Communications, the Department of Justice acts as a legal agent of the Department of Communications. If the Department of Communications decides that it is reviewing policy and does not wish to go ahead with prosecutions, we naturally accept those directions. That Department is our client and we are its legal agents. What could be simpler for anyone to understand?

MINISTERIAL DISCRETION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the Attorney General not recognize that the discretion which he has in prosecutorial matters should not be submitted to caucus or to the Prime Minister? Does he not realize that that is a fundamental principle of our system of justice?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have not said that this was ever discussed in caucus. We cannot reveal what is discussed in our caucus. As the hon. gentleman knows, we are leak-proof at the moment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

UNUSED FUNDS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour who is responsible for housing. Given the Government's announcement of a $9.6 million cut in the CMHC social housing units program, and the fact that only 53 per cent of the planned CMHC housing allocations have been taken up so far because some groups were unable to use them, will the Minister tell the House whether all of the planned but unused allocations will be re-assigned for starts in 1984, or whether he intends to cancel allocations not yet taken up, in order to achieve his $9.6 million budget cut?

● (1450)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member on his appointment as housing critic. As the Hon. Member will recall, in the committee last evening I explained to him the phasing of those take-ups which had not been committed. It is not unusual that only 53 per cent of the take-ups in social housing are taken up at this time of year. Those units which have not been taken up for reasons of rezoning, and because of the inability of the client groups to make their financing available, will be reassigned this year. However, those units and those groups will become eligible for those same units in the corporation's 1985 fiscal year.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS FOR CO-OP HOUSING

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his part answer. What he has left out is that it is unusual to arrive at the end of November with no word about the reallocations. In light of the Prime Minister's condemnation of the Liberal Government two months ago for cutting the co-op housing allocations almost in half, would the Minister tell us whether he intends to reassign the allocations which cannot be taken up, so as to fill the very serious gap in the co-op housing program which was left by the Liberals?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member, through you, that it is not the intention of this Government to reduce co-op housing by some 41 per cent, which was the direction taken by the previous administration. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that co-op housing be the only commitment and the only direction under public housing which this Government takes in reallocation of those units, the Hon. Member and I do not share the same view.

DENIAL OF INSURANCE TO SUBDIVISION IN FORT McMURRAY, ALTA.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Labour and has to do with his duties with respect to CMHC. Would the Minister tell us when he will direct CMHC to stop the discriminatory practice of denying whole subdivisions within Fort McMurray CMHC insurance? I refer to the Abasands subdivision which is less than 10 years old.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has my assurance that my officials in CMHC are aware of the concern he has expressed. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I find it very strange that the Hon. Member takes up the time of his colleagues in the House when he could speak to me at other times about these matters.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKnight: However, on a serious note, Mr. Speaker, I do share the Hon. Member's concern. The officials in CMHC have been made aware of the problem, and the subdivision within his constituency to which he has referred will, I hope, be able to become again a client of CMHC in the mortgage insurance fund.

RED MEAT STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In his absence perhaps I could direct it to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. The Government has promised to establish a red meat stabilization program this year for hard pressed farmers, many of whom are facing bankruptcy this winter. In the agreement reached by the federal and provincial agricultural Ministers last July, only the three prairie provinces and Ontario agreed to the program. Would the Minister tell us whether the federal Government is going to go ahead with the establishment of this red meat stabilization program without the participation of the Atlantic provinces, British Columbia, and Quebec?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government intends to proceed with enabling legislation. Presently there are agreements between the four provinces to which the Member refers. The legislation will be enabling and, hopefully, after a period of time other provinces will see fit to join.

INTRODUCTION OF ENABLING LEGISLATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. I wonder if the Government will bring in that legislation within the next few weeks so that the enabling legislation can be in place by the first of January. Otherwise the Ontario Minister of Agriculture has indicated that he is going ahead unilaterally to establish a program in that province which will further fragment the whole situation across the country.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Government intends to introduce that legislation very shortly. I would like to add that, from the tone of the Hon. Member's question I take it that he would actively support that legislation. Let me say that the legislation will be introduced within three months, or thereabouts, of our new mandate. The Hon. Member's Party was in power during the last four years and did nothing on that matter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

GREAT LAKES FISH QUOTAS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Keeping in mind that the Province of Ontario has been somewhat ham fisted in its dealings with Ontario's commercial fishermen, would the Minister indicate what agreement, if any, he reached last night during his private meeting with Ontario's Minister of Natural Resources regarding the jurisdictional dispute over fish quotas on the Great Lakes?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I am very pleased to see that, from the conversation which we were able to have last night, the Hon. Member has taken this opportunity forthwith to ask a question. It is a serious and important question.

I met with the appropriate Minister of the Government of Ontario last night to discuss further the difficulties which he has had in the administration of the fishery in the Great Lakes, which is, of course, a responsibility of the Government of Ontario. We clearly understood that there has been some misconception as to where the authority and responsibility lie for the administration of that fishery. We are going to have further discussions so that the arrangements between the federal Government and the Ontario Government are clearly perceived and set out.

HARDSHIPS TO FISHERMEN

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister indicate whether there was discussion about conditions which the federal Government might include in any agreement with Ontario to ensure that any of the hardships which have been created, because of the manner in which the quotas have been implemented in Ontario, will be eliminated?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the federal jurisdiction in this regard is primarily and fundamentally to ensure that the stocks of fish are maintained and enhanced, and it is most clearly not, in view of the delegated authority to the Province of Ontario, the administration of quotas or other arrangements which are directed by the Government of Ontario with respect to the fishermen. Therefore, we agreed that that distinction must be very clearly understood by all fishermen and by the public generally, who, of course, have a very understandable concern in the matter.

THE CENSUS

CANCELLATION OF 1986 CENSUS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it concerns the "great hotel caper" which informed us that Manitoba was not to build its hopes on getting an extra $72 million in federal equalization payments which had been previously requested. Recognizing that the census is used as the base for establishing equalization payments, will the Prime Minister tell us whether the cancellation of the census was in fact part of a scheme by his Minister of Finance to reduce or shortchange payments to the provinces?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could address the answer to my hon. friend. I would like to indicate to the Hon. Member, as I have indicated in the past, that we are well acquainted with the fact that the Government requires certain data and information in order to make its decisions, including provincial population data, and so forth, for the Minister of Finance.

We have great confidence in the professionals at Statistics Canada to use a variety of techniques in order to gather this information, be it statistical surveys, polling, administrative data, census or a whole lot of other areas. We will guarantee that the Minister of Finance, and other Ministers who require such information, will obtain the information as accurately as possible and in a most cost effective method, so that the concerns of the Hon. Member will be addressed.

STATISTICS CANADA REPORT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister give the House this answer today, when a Statistics Canada report dated August 1983 says the following, and I quote:

He concluded that it was not feasible and that there was no other solution but to hold the 1986 census.

Could the Minister explain the apparent contradiction with the StatsCan text?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I reiterate that, after much consultation with some very able StatsCan professionals, they have assured me, and I have great confidence in them, that all of the information the Government requires to make proper policy decisions will be obtained. The Hon. Member has my assurance on that.

PETITIONS

VIA RAIL—SERVICE IN CASSELMAN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition.

To the Honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled:

We the undersigned residents of Canada now avail ourselves of our ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy.

We humbly sheweth:

That the Via Rail Company having chosen to make changes in the services provided to the community of Casselman, Ontario, that the same company having neglected to provide adequate notice to the population and its Member of Parliament and that such changes—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, when I rise the Hon. Member should wait until I have something to say. I have to advise him that the explanations for petitions—

[Translation]

—the explanation has to be very short. This is our practice and the explanation given by the Hon. Member is somewhat overly detailed. I think that it is enough.

Does the Hon. Member have a second petition?

Mr. Boudria: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Very well.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the petition which I have just presented was signed by 786 people.

VIA RAIL—SERVICE IN GLEN ROBERTSON

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present another petition with a similar text asking that a moratorium be placed on the cancellation of another VIA Rail service, this time in Glen Robertson; this petition was signed by 300 people.

CORPORATION TAX BREAKS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents of the City of Toronto, asking Parliament to change the appropriate laws in 1984 so that in 1985 large corporations will receive tax breaks only in proportion to the new jobs they create, and that the new jobs and tax breaks be reported quarterly to Parliament.

CALL FOR RESTORATION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and duty to present a petition today signed by approximately 1,000 residents of the Beaverton area of my constituency of Victoria-Haliburton. These petitioners believe that the Government of Canada must allow a return to capital punishment. They have been thoroughly disgusted, as have I, at the senseless murders of police officers in recent days, especially in the Province of Ontario. We must have a strong deterrent.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 18.

[Text]

DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION LAWYERS

Question No. 18—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed by the Department of Employment and Immigration?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): There are five lawyers assigned to the Department from the Department of Justice.

[English]

Mr. Dick: I would ask that all other questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, can the Parliamentary Secretary indicate when the answers to Questions Nos. 96 and 97 will be forthcoming?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, so far there have been 99 questions put on the Order Paper. Obviously his are the most recent. We have answered—

Some Hon. Members: Four.

Mr. Dick: —which is a higher percentage of answers than were given in the Thirty-first or Thirty-second Parliament at this stage.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, on a different point of order, I have tabled a number of Order Paper questions, including a four-part series which involved 27 responses. To date I have heard absolutely nothing from the Government even though they included such "private" information as the number of housing starts predicted for Canada in 1985. I think the Government's record should be better. I want to hear why he has not answered Order Paper Questions Nos. 12, 24, 27 and 18?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that the information is coming forward, and it has come forward faster than it did in either of the last two Parliaments.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), her office has been in contact with my office. We have discussed it with her and informed the Hon. Member that the Department is working on the answers to her questions and they will be available as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect, I understand what is going on but neither the Hon. Member for Hamilton East nor the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) actually had a point of order. It is perfectly legitimate to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about when a question will be answered because we are at that stage. It is not in fact a point of order because we are at the stage of a motion concerning whether the remaining questions shall stand.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I have 12 questions on the Order Paper and I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary when I can expect some answers to the questions?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has listened to my last two answers, he would have a better understanding.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I tabled a question in the House on November 5 concerning such simple matters as what did it cost to change the carpeting in front of the Prime Minister's office. I am sure you will agree that such questions can be answered in less than a month.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, the bill may not be in yet.

Mr. Speaker: The question indicated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85 (No. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present this House will Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority. The practice of obtaining new borrowing powers for the Government has always been at minimum an annual event, and Parliament has examined these Bills on many occasions in the past. Consequently many Hon. Members are familiar with the details of borrowing authority Bills. However, there are many new members of the House who are not so familiar and therefore I will present the new Bill in some detail and briefly explain the need for borrowing authority.

I bring forward this Bill on behalf of the Government fully aware of the increased pressures government borrowing authority puts on capital markets. However, this Bill is guided nonetheless by our efforts to restrain government spending in order not to affect adversely capital markets. Under the Financial Administration Act, statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament in order for the Government to increase its outstanding debt, and Part IV, Section 36 of the Act, requires that no money shall be borrowed or security issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of Parliament. This refers to new money only, Mr. Speaker. That is because under Section 38 there is continuing authority to borrow funds to repay maturing debt. Thus for the Government to implement a regular debt program to meet its financial requirements, statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament.

As some Hon. Members will recall, Parliament has already granted borrowing authority amounting to $24.6 billion for the present fiscal year, an amount based on the previous government's financial requirements of $25.5 billion. However, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) pointed out in his economic statement, our Government's inherited financial requirements for fiscal 1984-85 have increased to $29.9 billion. Therefore, because of the sorry plight left us by the previous government, our Government will require supplementary borrowing authority for the current fiscal year.

In addition, the financial requirements for 1985-86, inclusive of the new expenditure and tax initiatives which the Minister of Finance announced in his economic statement, are now projected to be $29.2 billion, almost $6 billion higher than estimated last February.

I would now like to discuss the Bill itself and how the amounts requested were arrived at. Part I, Clause 2(1) of this Bill, seeks additional borrowing authority for 1984-85 of $7.3 billion. This amount is made up of $5.3 billion, an amount equal to the increase in financial requirements for 1984-85 of $29.9 billion less the $24.6 billion already granted, plus a reserve of $2 billion.

Clause 2(2) states that all borrowing authority conferred by the above section that remains unused, to the extent that the unused portion exceeds $2 billion, shall expire on March 31, 1985. The intent of this provision is to enable the Government to carry forward the reserve. Thus, we are not requesting a further reserve for 1985-86. This clause also ensures that not more than $2 billion will be carried forward.

The request for a non-lapsing reserve is intended to cover unpredictable changes in the financial requirements. In other words, Mr. Speaker, it is money for a rainy day. It does not permit spending beyond what has been approved by Parliament or that has been given ongoing authority by Acts of Parliament. The reserve amount is designed to accommodate the impact of unpredictable changes in financial requirements caused, for example, by foreign exchange operations. When the Canadian dollar is under upward pressure, for example, Canadian dollars are sold into the market and U.S. dollars are purchased in order to maintain an orderly market in the Canadian dollar.

Because of these stabilizing operations, the Exchange Fund Account accumulates U.S. dollars. To finance this increase in official reserves, Canadian dollars must either be taken from cash balances or borrowed and charged against the borrowing authority. On the other hand, when the Canadian dollar is under downward pressure, U.S. dollar reserves fall. The depreciation may need to be supplemented by drawing on the standby credit facilities the Government has. These are held at Canadian and international banks. In the alternative, Mr. Speaker, the need must be met by other types of foreign borrowing. I should make it clear that any of these borrowings must be charged against borrowing authority. Insufficient borrowing authority could limit the Government's ability to maintain orderly conditions in the foreign exchange market and disrupt the domestic borrowing program.

In Part II of the Bill, Clause 4(1) requests borrowing authority of $16 billion for fiscal 1985-86. The amount should be sufficient to meet borrowing requirements through to the fall of 1985. The Minister of Finance will introduce further borrowing authority legislation following his Budget next spring seeking the remainder of borrowing authority for the full 1985-86 fiscal year.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Clause 5 states that the borrowing authority granted in Part II of the Bill will come into force on April 1, 1985, the date on which the fiscal year commences.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that borrowing authority permits the Government to implement a regular financing program. I should make clear that the Government has made cost reduction one of the major goals of its new administration. Given the relative importance of public debt charges in total government expenditures, it is a primary goal of the Government to minimize these charges.

As Hon. Members are no doubt aware, Government of Canada securities currently outstanding amount to more than $155 billion. The financial requirements are such that the level of outstanding debt will increase by over $2 billion every month. In addition, previously issued debt is coming due and must be refinanced. Consequently, each new issue is carefully tailored to meet the prevailing market conditions and investor demand, and to avoid, wherever possible, pressures on the capital markets.

Thus, another important objective of debt management is to promote the smooth and efficient operation of the financial markets. Besides being cost effective, this helps to ensure that federal borrowing operations do not interfere with borrowing activities by other levels of government or the private sector.

As a matter of interest to Hon. Members, I would like to outline how the Government has made use of the borrowing authority that was provided by Parliament for the current fiscal year. The total amount of authority provided for 1984-85 was $24.5 billion. To the end of October domestic borrowing operations used about $13.8 billion of borrowing authority; $11 billion through the issue of Treasury Bills, $7.3 billion through the sale of marketable bonds, and net redemptions of $4.5 billion of Canada Savings Bonds.

Foreign borrowing has added a further $1 billion to the use of borrowing authority. The impact of foreign borrowing on the borrowing authority was the net effect of a one billion borrowing in the Swiss franc market in May, a 120 billion yen bank loan in the Japanese capital market in July, and a redemption of a 500 million Deutschmark private placement in May which reduced the total use of borrowing authority.

As a result of these domestic and foreign financing operations, the total use of borrowing authority to date in this fiscal year has been $14.8 billion. At the beginning of November there was about $9.7 billion of unused authority remaining. Of course, Mr. Speaker, this borrowing request is greater than we would have wished, but it is indicative of the fiscal situation we have inherited from the previous government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the additional borrowing authority will enable this administration to manage the affairs of the Government more effectively. I would therefore urge all Hon. Members to expedite the passage of Bill C-11 so that this Government can go on serving all Canadians more and more effectively.

[English]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, as the days progress we find more and more candidates for the television series "That's Incredible". We seem to have a new definition of arrogance in politics emerging in the House. First we had a budget boot-legged in as an economic statement. Now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), speaking through the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), is seeking borrowing authority not only for 1984-85 but for next year in the amount of $16 billion. If parliamentarians, responsible to the Canadian people for funds borrowed, do not pause and reflect on that, I do not know whether we would be discharging our duties.

The Minister of Finance was caught without his briefs the other day. Perhaps that will add a little humility to the Minister and his Department. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is not uncommon for people to forget their briefs in a hotel room. However, these were not Stanfield's. These were the briefs of the Deputy Minister of Finance. That is a luxury which the Minister of Finance really cannot afford.

● (1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we are all aware in this House that when we have deficits, it is necessary to borrow to finance them. Fine. There is no problem there, except that it is altogether unacceptable for the government to seek such a borrowing authority without providing estimates for next year.

They have the impudence to ask us for a $16 billion borrowing power without providing us with estimates for next year. Therefore, before giving our approval, we should wait until the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tables in the House his budget for next year.

[English]

When there is no Budget or estimates for next year, how can responsible parliamentarians be expected to entertain a demand for $16 billion for next year? I see that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) is smiling. I am aware that they deal with big numbers on Bay Street but when we are asked to approve $16 billion without one scintilla of evidence about how that money is to be spent, I ask the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) what he would do if he was in our position.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would ask the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien).

Mr. Johnston: I know what he would say if he was allowed but tomorrow morning he would be out on the new carpet in front of the Prime Minister's office.

Apart from the fact that we have no estimates or Budget, my colleagues and I are still trying to recover from those extraordinary numbers presented by the Minister of Finance in his economic statement a few weeks ago, which was a mini-budget.

There is certainly no way that we could entertain a request of this kind without at least having access to the facts and data in an economic statement which indicated that the deficit for 1985-86 would increase by $9.1 billion beyond the amount presented by the same officials through the predecessor to the Minister of Finance in February of this year. There is another candidate for the program "That's Incredible". I suggest that something is rotten in the state of Denmark when one looks at the agenda and the requests presented here.

The Minister of Finance agreed when we asked him to come before the committee. We want him to appear before the committee as soon as possible because we need that explanation. We require the estimates and his final Budget before we could possibly entertain a request such as this. There are too many questions that we want answered. We want to examine the Minister and his officials in light of this demonstrated incompetence, with an increase of $9.1 billion during that brief period of time. We want to know whether the numbers presented in the November economic statement have any more credibility than the numbers presented last February. I suggest that they do not.

Why should we assume that the November numbers which presumably underlie this outrageous request are correct? There is no evidence in the Government's document, "A new Agenda for Canada", which was tabled in the House, to justify that extraordinary increase of $9.1 billion.

Let me quote some of the language used in this document to justify this change in the projections. It states that "The economic outlook is bleaker in 1984 and 1985". I would point out that in the document that was presented the real GNE in 1985 was estimated at marginally less than what the Minister of Finance had provided in his earlier documentation. The same is true for economic growth to the end of the decade.

It is certainly not the issue of growth which has created this deficit because the numbers do not justify that. For example, let us look at the Consumer Price Index. The CPI for 1984 is estimated at 4.5 per cent in this new agenda. It is interesting to note that when one sees the CPI increases this year, we have moved from a base point of 119.6 to 123.2 for the period January to October. When that is annualized it translates into the number of 3.61 per cent. That is the real increase in the cost of carrying on government this year. Do we have inflated numbers in future years, particularly next year, which brings this deficit up to $37 billion, as we appear to have in the current year? Is it not appropriate for us to have answers to these fundamental questions before we write a cheque for $16 billion to the Government? Let us look at some of the other data.

Mr. Fennell: That sounds familiar. We have heard this song before.

Mr. Johnston: I will deal with the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) later.

It is my submission that there is a real conflict of interest in the Government and in the Department of Finance. There is an obvious desire to bloat the deficit in order to make it look as unreasonable as possible. This is not only meant to intimidate and scare the population but to allow the Government to say later, when the real numbers come in, that it did a great job.

I have an article from which I will quote later which is probably known quite well to the Minister of State for Finance. It is a marvellous article that was written in The Atlantic Monthly in December, 1981. It is entitled "The Education of David Stockman". I suggest that the Washington connection that we have witnessed with the Government goes far beyond the relationship between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President. It would appear to go right down to Mr. Stockman. We saw the techniques that were used, the numbers that were run and the attempts that were made to change the numbers in the data. We saw how easily the numbers were changed. We saw that exercise which was celebrated at the time. It seems to me that there is a David Stockman buried close beneath the surface of the Department of Finance. There are some interesting quotations in that article which I will touch upon in the course of my remarks.

I suggest that there is a real conflict of interest and I am very suspicious of the numbers. Furthermore, we have solid evidence upon which to be suspicious. Let me draw some of the evidence to the attention of the Minister of State for Finance.

We know that one of the celebrated cuts was that of $154 million out of the Department of National Defence. Of course, this came on the heels of trips by the Minister to NATO and Washington where he said the Government was going to increase the defence budget. I am tempted to say that I suspect that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) is now regarded by his NATO colleagues as the "minister of oral rearmament", because that is all that we have heard to date. The minister of oral rearmament, when questioned in the House with respect to the $154 million cut, said, as reported at page 340 of Hansard on November 19, 1984:

As a result of that decrease in the rate of inflation and of more realistic purchases by officials in the National Defence Department, a saving of $154 million was effected without interfering in any way with present or future commitments which we have made.

I ask members of the House to reflect upon the seriousness of what the Minister said. He said "as a result of that decrease in the rate of inflation". In other words, a Treasury Board reference level adjustment has been put forward by this Government as an expenditure cut.

If that is true with respect to the $154 million in the Department of National Defence, what is the situation with respect to all programs of government which are indexed through the relevant fiscal framework period with respect to anticipated inflation? We know that inflation has come down. We know that inflation is still falling. We know from the numbers that over the last several months it is something in the order of 1 per cent to 2 per cent annualized. The Minister of National Defence has told us that there is no cut here, that this is an inflationary adjustment. How many other cuts are inflationary adjustments? How many inflationary adjustments were not made in arriving at these outrageous numbers for the deficit in future years?

The Minister of State for Finance may not be able to answer that question today. I suspect we will have to get at the officials, and a great effort will be made to rationalize the numbers. One should look at the statement by Mr. Stockman when he refers to the exercise that was carried on in 1981, a similar exercise by the Reagan administration. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that this article should be compulsory reading for all members of the budget exercise, the hatchet exercise, formally carried on by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), for which the Minister of Finance surely has ultimate responsibility. As Stockman said:

None of us really understands what's going on with all these numbers. "You've got so many different budgets out and so many different baselines and such complexity now in the interactive parts of the budget between policy action and the economic environment and all the internal mysteries of the budget, and there are a lot of them. People are getting from A to B and it's not clear how they are getting there. It's not clear how we got there.

It sure is not clear how this Government and this Minister of Finance got from some $27-odd billion to $37-odd billion in terms of the deficit for 1985-86, never mind what happened during subsequent periods. And when I hear from the Minister of National Defence that some part—we do not know how much—of that $154 million is simply a Treasury Board reference level adjustment, it makes us suspicious. With that kind of suspicion, how on earth can the Minister come into this House and ask us to authorize a $16 billion borrowing for next year? It is a totally unreasonable request.

If that number is inflated there is a good precedent in Washington, and as I said, with a strong Washington connection the Tories may have learned something. Stockman is reviewed pursuant to having established a number of cuts and it is reported that he was somewhat disappointed and perhaps not willing to take as much credit as many thought he deserved.

It is reported in this article:

Because he knew that much more traumatic budget decisions still confronted them. Because he knew that the budget-resolution numbers were an exaggeration. The total of $35 billion was less than it seemed, because the "cuts" were from an imaginary number—hypothetical projections from the Congressional Budget Office on where spending would go if nothing changed in policy or economic activity. Stockman knew that the CBO base was a bit unreal. Therefore, the total of "cuts" was, too.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we are confronted here with an analogous situation. We are presented with a hypothetical deficit for next year and for the following years against which we are now being asked to borrow real dollars. The analogy holds. I suggest that it is something which responsible parliamentarians, not only on this side of the House but I hope in the Conservative caucus itself, would raise. It goes right to the integrity of the role which this House has to play in terms of raising money from the public to finance public expenditures.

We all have to be suspicious of projections. Just to give some comfort to the Minister of State for Finance, when next year all her numbers and all her projections prove to be wrong, the only question is how wrong.

In the New York Times for Monday, November 14, we find 10 economists' forecasts for Reagan's second term. In 1985, believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, from these established economists we find that real GNP growth ranges from a low estimate of 0.6 of 1 per cent to a high of 4 per cent. That is in 1985. Of course, this deficit number we are looking at is also based upon projections, presumably projections of our own Department of Finance. When we get the Minister before the committee with his officials, perhaps we will find out what input data was put into the model. But the fact of the matter is that the Department of Finance has discredited itself completely in terms of projections simply by moving forward with a number which is $9.1 billion higher than the number the same officials developed, presumably using the same methodology, only a few months ago.

We cannot put ourselves in a position of accepting that kind of smoke and mirrors upon which to accept a demand of this kind. David Stockman once referred to the numbers that appeared in these budgets as "political numbers". I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is what we have here. That is what we have seen in the economic statement. That is what we are going to continue to get from what I see, namely, political numbers. But the $16 billion for next year which the Minister of State for Finance stood up and asked in a short five or six-minute part of her speech is not a political number. That amount is real dollars that have to be financed through borrowings on Canadian markets.

We want to know how the Minister of Finance got to that number. I suggest that we—and I come back to the point—as responsible parliamentarians cannot roll over and play dead. We have a role to play here notwithstanding our numbers. We have to impress upon this Government at the outset of its mandate that we expect more information, more data, more openness and more accountability. We have had none of it so far. Of course, we have seen what the guidelines have done. They have created almost a travesty of any system of open government under this gang so far. Hopefully in the next few weeks or few days the Tories will learn their lesson.

We do not want to have to get our data from briefs left by Ministers in hotel rooms. We want to get our data and our material here in the House and before the committees. So far we have been singularly unsuccessful in doing that.

I would like to make reference in closing to one more short passage from this article in The Atlantic Monthly, which I belive the Minister has read. Everybody in the financial community read it at the time. The statement at the end by Stockman reads:

> Whenever there are great strains or changes in the economic system—

This Government itself has certainly created strains and changes in the economic system.

> —it tends to generate crackpot theories, which then find their way into the legislative channels.

That is what I am worried about. That is my greatest fear, that we will see crackpot theories finding their ways into legislative channels before this House. If they do, it is our job as an Opposition to ensure that those crackpot theories are not imposed or inflicted upon an unsuspecting public. We have to do that job, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to propose something to amend—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has 40 minutes—

Mr. Johnston: I do not think I will need them, Mr. Speaker, for this is nothing but an arrogant request. I do not feel I need 40 minutes to deal with such an request.

I merely ask the House to accept my amendment, which is reasonable in view of the evidence I have just given to the effect that the request before us is utterly preposterous.

• (1540)

[English]

I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word 'that' and substituting the following words:
> 'this House will not proceed with a Bill to provide borrowing authority for a fiscal year for which the Government has not provided complete details of spending requirements or revenue projections'.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Blenkarn: They can't do that.

Mr. Andre: I should like to bring to the attention of the Chair, if I am correct about what the Hon. Member is attempting to do, that I believe the amendment is out of order. A motion that the Bill be given second reading is very limited in terms of amendment. If the Chair will look at the precedents in this regard, I think it will conclude that indeed this amendment is out of order.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I refer the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, page 226, under the heading 'Reasoned Amendments', where the following appears:

> It is also competent for a Member, who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move what is known as a 'reasoned amendment'. This amendment leaves out all the words in the main question after the word 'that' to add other words. A reasoned amendment is in the form of a motion and many fall into one of several categories:

Some of the principles are that the amendment must strictly relate to the Bill and that the amendment must not be concerned in detail with the Bill. I suggest that the amendment is quite appropriate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): At first blush I would like to say that the amendment appears to be in order. I would like to take it under advisement, carry on with the debate, and later this day come back with a ruling.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I had difficulty believing my ears in the last two or three minutes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: I can recall absolutely crystal clearly, vividly, not many, many months ago in this same Chamber when the Party of the Hon. Member who has just spoken stood in the House and asked Parliament to consider exactly what the present Government is asking us to do. At that time speaker after speaker rose in their places and explained the need for this proposal. They explained why this was totally appropriate. Then, one after another, members of the opposition stood in their places and explained that it was unacceptable. As a result of a long battle, the then government came to its senses and realized that in fact it was not an honourable thing to do.

To see the finance critic for the Liberal Party, in just a matter of a handful of weeks, standing in his place with indignation and asking how the Government could be doing what they themselves did just a few short weeks ago is the kind of behaviour which makes people question how serious members of the Liberal Party are. They say one thing one month and something totally different another month. That is why the people of Canada, when they had a crack at them, said that they had had enough of this crazyness and two-faced politics. Having had enough of their saying one thing one day and one thing another, they said: "We are going to kick these folks out of office so far they will never come back". And that is what they did; that is exactly what they did. With this kind of behaviour they are ensuring that that process will continue.

It is unbelievable that that man, the finance critic, can stand there and smile and laugh. That is why the reputation of politicians is on the same level as, I suppose, child molesters almost in the country, or tax collectors.

Ms. Copps: Oh, come on!

Mr. Riis: That kind of behaviour from the Liberal Party, day after day, month after month—

Ms. Copps: That is outrageous.

Mr. Riis: —the hypocrisy, the two-facedness, the conflict—

An Hon. Member: Sit down; at least have the decency to do that.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I do believe that it is unparliamentary language for the Hon. Member to refer to politicians as the equivalent of child molesters. I think every Member in the House would agree that he should withdraw that statement.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege—

Mr. Keeper: We did not interrupt your speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I did not hear anything in that regard. If I see something in Hansard tomorrow that I feel should be withdrawn, I will bring it to the attention of the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) is rising on a point of order or privilege.

Mr. Johnston: I rise on a point of privilege. I am sure the Hon. Member, when he gets over his temporary bout of hysteria, will recognize that "hypocrite" is also unparliamentary. I believe it has been defined as such and has been discussed before in the House. I would add that to the list of withdrawals which should take place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): "Hypocrite" is on both lists; it depends on how it is used. Let me have a look at Hansard. I do not know whether there is a full moon tonight or what is happening here. However, we should have a little decorum. I will look at this tomorrow and I will see what Hansard indicates. I would like the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) to carry on, but first I will recognize the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I too will be interested in hearing the results of your deliberations on that question of privilege. On a point of order, I would just like to seek clarification. I understood, subject to the rules which were brought in in the last Parliament, that speeches given in this Chamber during this time were subject to questions and answers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member please take his seat. The initial part of this debate provides for 40-minute speeches with no questions. Thereafter there are 20-minute speeches with questions and comments.

Mr. Tobin: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap will be able to carry on with his speech.

Mr. Riis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think enough has been said.

An Hon. Member: Show some courtesy.

Ms. Copps: To make a comment about child molesters—

An Hon. Member: On the level of—

Ms. Copps: To make a comment like that is absolutely—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Riis: I seem to have touched a nerve among those of the Liberal Party in the House today.

An Hon. Member: That's right, a very sensitive nerve.

Mr. Riis: I certainly have touched a nerve.

Ms. Copps: Because we are concerned about that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, in light of your ruling in terms of unparliamentary language, of course if you find that I did utter unparliamentary language, I would be the first to stand back from it.

Ms. Copps: It does not become you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) that this is not the Ontario Legislature.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If we are to carry on with business in this House, I would appreciate the proper decorum—

Mr. Tobin: There were Members across the floor speaking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Thank you.

Mr. Tobin: That is an unbecoming comment from the Chair, I must say.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have heard the Hon. Member's remarks. I heard him yesterday too as he was getting awfully close to the point where I think it was unparliamentary of him also. I will not carry on any more as far as that is concerned, but I would like to bring it to his attention also.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw!

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to abuse the privileges of the House, but when I spoke about the issue of child molesters, I had no intention of impinging on the integrity of any Hon. Member. I frankly find it a very serious allegation, and I would have only hoped that members of the New Democratic Party would have taken that issue more seriously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): He has withdrawn the statement.

Ms. Copps: I say that in a very serious vein.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I thank you very much.

Mr. Riis: Again I think enough has been said about the approach of the Liberal Party saying one thing when it was in office and now decrying the Government for doing exactly the same thing. It is hard to believe.

● (1550)

I want now to turn my attention to the matter before us, a motion asking us to consider Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority. The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) spoke for nine minutes. During that nine minutes she asked us to approve $23,300,000,000 in borrowing authority.

I recognize that she is acting on behalf of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It would have been appropriate if during the deliberations over that introduction some efforts were made to point out more clearly how these dollars are going to be used. Nine minutes for $23.3 billion is hardly the explanation one would expect from a government which prides itself on indicating that it is open and is quite prepared to share information and build confidence among the people of Canada.

Part I of Bill C-11 asks for authority to borrow $7.3 billion for the present fiscal year, 1984-85. What is interesting is that this amount of money includes a $2 billion slush fund or contingency fund. The Government is suggesting that some contingencies may arise and the $2 billion may be required before the conclusion of this fiscal year. Perhaps it wants to add to the 350 tax collectors being brought on staff to try and wring more tax money out of the hard pressed small business community.

Perhaps the Government wants to add another few hundred to the 700 UIC sheriffs which the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is now hiring to try and squeeze all of those people abusing the UI system, that lucrative system of income. Maybe there will be more PIP grants to attempt to bribe the oil companies into doing more exploring in our frontier areas. Perhaps there will be contingencies in terms of tax relief for the hard pressed banks. Many do not pay taxes year after year. Some still pay. Perhaps the Government is worrying about those few which still pay a few dollars in income tax on an annual basis. Perhaps the Government wants to add more chiefs of staff, more Cabinet Ministers or more JetStars to jet Cabinet Ministers around the country, or perhaps create some new patronage situations of one kind or another. It is difficult to become enthusiastic about endorsing a borrowing request that includes a $2 billion slush fund.

The difficulty in Bill C-11 comes in Part II where the Government seeks authority to borrow $16 billion, not for this fiscal year in which we are operating, but for the future, for fiscal year 1985-86. A legitimate question that Members of Parliament who take their positions responsibly would ask is what the projections are for 1985-86. What does the Government plan to do? If it is asking authority, is it unreasonable to expect that it will lay out a blueprint, some strategies, an explanation? Is it going to provide us with projections of how it is going to use this money? It is an affront to Parliament to ask for $16 billion and not indicate at all how it is going to be utilized.

Imagine if you, Mr. Speaker, as an interested businessman, went to your banker and asked for a $100,000 line of credit. The bank would say: "We certainly are interested in your entrepreneurial ideas and so on. Could we see your projections for the next year or two? Could we see the plans you have as a small businessman?". You would say: "No, I am not telling you of my plans. I have made no projections. I am not going to share them with you. I just want you to give me a $100,000 line of credit. That is all I ask". That banker would tell you to quickly go out the door. He would not co-operate. He would not say that that is an appropriate way to do business.

It is appropriate that this House of Commons say the same thing. It is not an appropriate way to do business. It is not the way to develop a sense of confidence in this Government. It is not how you build an atmosphere of confidence in terms of Canadian investors and consumers. It is time the Government took its confidence building seriously, came clean with the people of Canada and said exactly what it is going to do before we authorize these kinds of borrowings.

I listened with interest last night to The Journal. There were four of the major spokespersons for the Business Council on National Issues, Bill Mulholland of the Bank of Montreal, Bruce Howe, the President of BCRIC, John Sheppard, representing the high-tech industries of Canada, and John Newell, the President of DuPont Canada, some of the major voices for the investment community in Canada.

Barbara Frum put it to them. She asked about the business confidence associated with the new Government. Is there going to be confidence? Their response, after some fudging, hedging and a great deal of rhetoric, was that they all agreed that, by and large, until the end of 1985 there would be very little investment. Even that was qualified. It depended on what happened in the United States, the liquidity position of the various Canadian corporations and so on. With a great deal of hesitation and some caution they said that perhaps by the end of 1985 we will see some investment in the country.

It is not surprising when you consider the kind of secrecy behind which this Government has been hiding. We found out today that at a meeting between the federal Minister of Finance and the Minister of Finance for the Province of Manitoba, at which they were sharing ideas and so on as to how to co-operate, the federal Minister was secretly tape recording the proceedings. He never asked the Manitoba Finance Minister whether that was appropriate.

Mr. Keeper: Wilsongate.

Mr. Riis: This is something that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has amply suggested is unacceptable. This kind of behaviour encourages one to think in terms of George Orwell and the whole concept of Big Brother. Tape recording private meetings—for what purpose? Our colleague from Winnipeg explained in the House of Commons today that during the briefing sessions with his Minister and his deputies there was an individual present taping word for word the conservations that went on. This kind of behaviour does not result in open government and confidence being built in the country.

Parliament is here to represent the people of Canada. Parliamentarians are here to represent the people of Canada and to protect them from legislation that is not necessarily in their best interests. We are not here to feed a habit of a government that cannot or will not say where it is going. Considering the directions in which this Government has indicated it is interested in moving, I find it very surprising that we are being asked for this blank cheque, asking us to buy a pig in a poke.

The kind of directions we have seen from this new Government encourages one to ask questions and to become rather fearful at times about what it has in mind. For example, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is concerned about geting people working. However, one of her very first actions was to hire 700 sheriffs, referred to as a goon squad by one of my colleagues, to find all of these cheaters who are taking advantage of these unbelieveable UI benefits. This is probably at the encouragement of groups such as the Canadian Federation of Independent Business or the Canadian Organization for Small Business, which recently issued a report stating that 170,000 jobs are going wanting, that no one wants to work because they make all this money in UI benefits.

The average unemployment insurance benefit received by a Canadian is $153 per week. In a typical urban community such as the ones in which 80 per cent of Canadians live, a typical rental rate for a modest accommodation is probably $400 to $500 per month. When the suggestion is made that $153 per week on average in UI benefits is so generous that people are not prepared to work, I think the Government is receiving some very inappropriate advice.

When the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) was in opposition, he railed on and on about the Government's heavy hand, its jackboots and its fascist approach to tax collecting. He participated in a cross-country task force and heard story after story about how the tax collectors tried to beat tax money out of the people. What has been the response of the new Minister of National Revenue, the same person who chaired that task force? His response has been to hire 300 individuals to harass those same people who appeared before his task force. That was not quite enough though, Mr. Speaker. He had another good idea.

As the President of the Bank of Montreal said some weeks ago when referring to the corporate sector, a sector which is awash in tax incentives, many of these folks were not receiving all of the possible tax advice on how to avoid paying taxes. The Minister of National Revenue said that he had a great idea. He is now going to set up a separate tax advice department so that those firms that are not certain that they have identified every single tax loophole can seek some advice and direction to make sure that as much tax is being avoided as absolutely possible. That is the kind of behaviour that starts to make people wonder about the motives of Ministers and the Government.

The Minister of Finance rose in his place and said that he had some great ideas about how to help people and get the economy rolling. The first thing to do was to stop thousands of students from working in the summer by cutting $85 million from Summer Canada. All of those students from small communities, rural and urban areas across the country would not be able to find summer employment. He said that that was not quite enough because now those students are returning to school so he will freeze all of the student loans and will not expand federal support for students who are going to colleges, technical schools, vocational schools and universities. He then said that a great many senior citizens take advantage of the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program by improving their homes and getting more life out of them by rewiring, re-roofing, re-siding or building a new foundation. He said: "Let us reduce that giveaway. Too many people are abusing that system". He cut that program by 25 per cent.

The IRDP was cut by $175 million and the Government eliminated Tier 1 designation. This means that 50 per cent of the areas of Canada will receive no incentives or encouragements from the federal Government.

Mr. Rompkey: Tourism support is no longer available at all.

Mr. Riis: As my colleague has said, tourism support is no longer available at all. Tourism is one of the obvious future growth areas of the economy.

I think the most peculiar part of the statement made by the Minister of Finance was the suggestion that the Government would cut back on research and development programs and funding to the forestry, fishery and energy sectors. At a time when every single western industrialized nation is expanding its research and development programs, our nation is cutting them.

The economic statement went on to kill Canagrex totally. Canagrex was the Crown corporation that was put in place to assist food producers by ensuring that they have access to overseas markets and by encouraging the development of overseas marketing. The Government destroyed Canertech, another Crown Corporation which was set up to develop conservation programs and renewable energy projects. These are obviously the waves of the future. However, the future does not sit well with members of the Progressive Conservative Party. Therefore, we will not have funding and encouragement for the research and development sector.

When looking at all of the cuts, the arts community has been identified as the one which wanted to be hit the hardest. The cuts to the arts community are twice as harsh as the cuts to any other sector. One could go on and on in an effort to make the case that the Government has not clearly signalled the direction in which it intends to move. However, the Government did say that one of the reasons all these cuts are being made is to reduce the deficit.

The projections of the Minister of Finance indicate that the deficit will increase next year. More important, one of the main issues addressed by the 21st Report of the Economic Council of Canada is the matter of the deficit. That report indicated that the major problem in terms of the deficit was not government spending but the fact that we had not been collecting adequate revenues through our taxation system. When a question was put to the Chairman of the Economic Council, he said that there had been too many corporate tax giveaways. He was trying to tell the Government that if it is to reduce the deficit, if it will be able to obtain funds so that borrowing can be kept to a minimum while still delivering the desired social programs, it must start taxing that corporate sector as much as every other country in the world does.

In the economic statement there was very little that I could see that would be of help to small business. There was very little in terms of any action on interest rates. Everyone knows that the interest rate is the number one problem in the country, yet that problem was virtually ignored. There was nothing in the economic statement regarding real steps that the Government planned to take on affirmative action or contract compliance. The entire matter of equality in the workplace was overlooked by the statement. We did hear, of course, that the Government would emasculate FIRA and allow more foreign enterprise into the country, foreign enterprise that would control the direction of our economy. It indicated that being a renter in our own house is the best way to proceed.

The Minister indicated that he wants to privatize Canadair and de Havilland. Do you not remember, Mr. Speaker, what happened with Mr. Diefenbaker and the Avro Arrow? Do you not remember what the Conservative Government did to the growing aerospace industry when it had a chance at it? The Government is doing the exact same thing again. Conservative members are saying that there is a lot of government involvement in de Havilland and Canadair. Surely there is not an aerospace industry in the world that is not developing hand in hand with its government. If the Government thinks that the aerospace industry can be developed by the private sector alone, it is staring reality in the face and ignoring it.

Many of the Ministers are suggesting that we are going to open up our borders to free trade and that this will somehow help us. It flies in the face of the actions taken by every other country in the world. Whether the action is good or bad, it ignores what is happening in the United States. As I stand here today, 21 bills are before the American Congress and every one of them is a protectionist bill which raises tariff walls. Around the world, country after country has its own FIRA in place. What is our Government doing? Again, it is moving in a direction counter to the general forces in western society.

I suppose that the biggest surprise of all was the reference to defence in the economic statement. I like other Members realize that the new Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) went to Washington to say that we are going to expand our defence budget. He then went to Europe to the base of NATO operations and said: "Watch Canada now. We have a new Government, we are going to expand the defence budget". After the economic statement came out, Mr. Speaker, we found that the Government is going to cut the defence budget by $154 million.

The point I am trying to make is that the people of Canada are trying desperately to find out what the Government is up to. They want to know in which direction the Government will take us. Today the Minister of State for Finance stood before us and asked for permission to borrow $16 million into next year. The people of Canada are saying: "If we are going to give that authority, surely we must have some idea of where this Government is going". I hope it is understood from what I have said that it is not very clear where this Government is going.

Many people refer to the ghost of Mackenzie King which still lurks around these hallways. I suspect if one looks behind certain curtains one will see the ghost of Margaret Thatcher and Bill Bennett. If people want to know where this Government is going, all they have to do is look at British Columbia. It was one of the richest provinces in this country until recently. It has been a have province since its inception. It has been a province which people have looked to as one of the most thriving and dynamic parts of Canada. But in three short years, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government of that province has turned it into an economic basket case. I believe that any Hon. Member, no matter from what political party, would have trouble making a case for the actions of the Government of British Columbia.

Just look what Margaret Thatcher is doing, Mr. Speaker. If the people are wondering in what direction this Government is going, two good examples of that are the Province of British Columbia and Margaret Thatcher's Britain.

Mr. Andre: How about Mitterrand's France?

Mr. Riis: Someone across the way tells us there are alternatives. I suspect we can look at Australia to see how the economy in Australia is going. As a matter of fact, on December 1 we will see a government re-elected in Australia, which happens to be one of the most progressive governments of the world.

The advisers to Mr. Bennett, the Premier of British Columbia, when asked for advice by a young person, said: "Go east to Manitoba. That is where the growth, the investment and the jobs are". The Government of Manitoba, Mr. Speaker, is a New Democratic Government. It has a different approach. This Party sees that the country should be moving in a particular direction. Its direction now is 180 degrees different.

Mr. Andre: Thank goodness!

Mr. Rodriguez: You are moving backwards.

Mr. Riis: The confusion which exists in the country is magnified when you hear Ministers such as the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre), who has just shouted out, and other Ministers time after time tell us in this House, in press releases or in interviews that they have a top priority in this Government. Some say the top priority is jobs; that is the number one concern. They are absolutely dedicated to meeting that problem head on. Another Minister says his number one priority is women's rights. Another priority is interest rate reduction and yet another is the small business sector. We have a Minister saying that her priority is reducing deficits. Then, of course, there is the priority of aboriginal rights and fair treatment for Quebec. Then a Minister tells us that the agricultural community is the priority and we hear that the fishing sector is the priority. But one cannot have 15 priorities, Mr. Speaker. There cannot be 15 number one concerns on the agenda.

It is that kind of behaviour, Mr. Speaker, which causes us in the Opposition to become less than enthusiastic about giving the Government the authority to borrow $16 billion to take us some place; goodness knows where, Mr. Speaker. We wish we did know where. Perhaps it is in a good direction. That is a possibility, I suppose.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Tories?

Mr. Riis: It is not likely, but it is possible. We have all kinds of suspicions and all kinds of evidence which encourages us to have these suspicions.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move an amendment, and I will refer later on to other amendments I would like to move. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong):

> That all of the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "that this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than the amount which is required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle and this House therefore declines to give second reading to Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It seems to me that this is about the same kind of amendment which was initially put to the House. I will take this amendment under advisement until I have ruled on the first one. I will take both amendments under advisement and we will carry on with debate.

The Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are you not finished with your speech?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have two or three short statements left. I did not intend to end my speech by submitting that amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All right. You are entitled to the extra two or three minutes, if you wish.

Mr. Riis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I have only two or three other points I would like to make. I wanted to say, after moving the amendment, that I move that amendment based upon the Minister's own admission that portions of the borrowing authority will be applied in the next fiscal year. It is on that basis and because we believe there is no justification on the part of this Government to have that kind of borrowing authority that I introduce that amendment.

That is a quote, Mr. Speaker, from the then Leader of the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), on July 19, 1982. It is found at page 19456 of Hansard. At that time the Speaker took the amendment under advisement and subsequently found the amendment, word for word, to be in order.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of this amendment the Government, through the Minister of State for Finance, will reconsider its request. This was asked by the Official Opposition in 1982, government found that the request was a reasonable one and after consideration decided to practise what it had promised, which was an openness in terms of discussion on borrowing matters. I have confidence, Mr. Speaker, that the Government of the day will do the same in this case.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that my colleagues and I feel very strongly about the principles which we have discussed today. We, as members of the New Democratic Party, however, are not the only ones who feel strongly about these principles. The present Minister of Finance had this to say about the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Yellowhead. It is found in Hansard of July 20, 1982, at page 19513:

> The first amendment we offered was to decline second reading of this bill. There is a well established principle that Parliament only provides sufficient borrowing authority to a government to allow it to finance its operations within the current fiscal year. It is quite clear from the figures in the bill and from the statement by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) in response to my question yesterday that the government has every intention of this borrowing authority spilling over into 1983-84.
> This is all the more reprehensible because the government has not given us any projections about what will happen in 1983-84. If things are too uncertain for it to predict what is going to happen in 1983-84, then it is too uncertain for us to give it the carte blanche freedom to go on spending money like a drunken sailor. It is for that reason that we feel the government should withdraw this bill and offer something that will allow it to live within its means. This bill is clearly objectionable. I believe that amendment must be and will be supported by other members of the House.

That was a statement made in 1982 by the present Minister of Finance. Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, not too long afterwards the present Chairman of the Finance Committee, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), rose in his place and commented on the particular practice which the Government is now attempting to perpetuate. He said on March 7, 1984, and I quote:

> It is unconscionable. It is improper. It cannot be supported by any thinking Member of the House. This House should rise up, Sir, and demand an end to this, not only on behalf of us as Hon. Members and of our constituents, but on behalf of our children, our children's children and our children's children yet unborn or even thought of.

• (1620)

The motion that the NDP has put forward has received the time-honoured test of precedence in this House. We are simply asking the Government to reconsider what we believe to be an unreasonable request in seeking authority to borrow money for a future fiscal year for which there is virtually no projection and no indication of how the Government plans to spend the money. There is little, if any, indication of the direction the Government plans to take during that period and we, too, find it unacceptable.

My colleagues will have many, many comments to make about the Bill before us in the period ahead and I look forward to those specifics in later debates.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, being a brand-new Member of Parliament and, incidentally, this being my first speech in the important function of helping the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), I would like to draw your attention to the fact that I am proud to belong to a national Party and Government whose senior members show us such a good example of behaviour.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the borrowing authority legislation before the House today underlines the urgency for adopting a general and basic program like the one introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8 of this year. The Bill also illustrates the need for making a clean start. The clear verdict at the polls on September 4 was eloquent, indicating that millions of Canadians agreed there was a need for change. We feel there are four challenges that must be met by the present Government.

First, we must put our own fiscal house in order so that we can limit, and ultimately reverse, the massive build-up in public debt and the damaging impact it has on confidence and growth in this beautiful country of ours.

Second, we must clearly redefine the role of Government so that it can provide a better framework for growth and job creation and be less of an obstacle to change, development and innovation.

Third, we, as a Government that has received a mandate from the vast majority of Canadians, must adopt clear-cut policies that will foster higher investment, greater innovation, increased international competitiveness and a positive climate for the birth and control of new enterprises.

Fourth and finally, we must bring about these radical changes gradually, in a way that is fair, open and consistent with the basic sense of compassion, tolerance and justice that is characteristic of Canadian society. We shall not weaken the basic income support programs which have served Canadians so well. Finally, through stronger economic performance, we shall seek to provide even greater assistance to Canadians in general but especially to those who truly need it. It is up to us, as the Government of this country, to demonstrate that we are able to meet these challenges, to make them work for us in our efforts to bring about economic renewal, and to put Canadians back to work.

When we consider the need for economic renewal and job creation, we see that no other obstacle is as great nor as menacing as the federal deficit.

Today, I would like to comment briefly on the crucial and almost direct connection between reducing the deficit and creating jobs. One may well ask why the deficit has suddenly become an important priority within our national policy. After all, one year's deficit is not necessarily a major problem. In fact, during recessions, Government and industry have regularly registered deficits they could later eliminate thanks to increased revenue in subsequent periods of growth.

Canadians are now beginning to understand that during the last ten years, the former federal Government ran up deficits not only during periods of recession but also during periods of growth, while there was a tendency for these deficits to increase at an alarming rate. The deficits that have accumulated year after year have led to a cumulative debt of incredible proportions. This year, our public debt will reach the staggering total of $190 billion, representing $24,000 per family across Canada. This cannot go on.

I have tried to establish a connection between the increasing debt load and its impact on job creation. Although indirect, the connection between high deficit levels and job shortages is a very real one. Persisting by high deficits and increasing debt loads put upward pressure on interest rates and undermine investor confidence, so that together they are a formidable obstacle to growth and job creation.

Our government's priority is to control that deficit because, first and foremost, we want to create jobs for all Canadians of all ages. This sad situation brings to mind the case of a man who wants to renovate an older house. If I may, I should like to draw an analogy, because barely a month ago, I was actively working in my capacity as structural engineer. Before rebuilding and enlarging a house, the first thing one should do is to remove all rotting load-bearing trusses and reinforce the structure. In the case of Canada, the deficit is undermining the foundation of our economy. Reducing the deficit—that is reinforcing the structure of our economy—is the only way to give renewed confidence to the business world and stimulate productive investments which are so indispensable for economic growth and the creation of the necessary jobs.

When we first looked at that frightening balance sheet as we took office in September, it became obvious to us that we had to take drastic action about the deficit.

During the election campaign, we thought we had a pretty fair idea of what to expect with respect to the deficit, that it would go down with the diminishing pressure on interest rates.

We were quite surprised to find out that even if we stood still the deficit would increase next year and would even be higher than this year's, and that the situation would not improve before the end of this decade. All that, even if interest rates were to dip to more normal and more acceptable levels, and if the economic recovery were to be moderately strong. The reason for that is the elementary phenomenon of compounded interests.

Debt service charges rise by about $4 billion every year simply as a result of the annual increase in the public debt. We have reached the point where $25 billion of the $35 billion deficit will be set aside exclusively to pay the interest on the debt in the coming fiscal year, while the debt itself will continue to grow larger.

More frightening still is the fact that, under such conditions, the public debt grows faster than the economy. We have decided to curb the deficit, following a prudent and enlightened approach. The cutbacks and other measures announced in the economic statement will enable us to hold the deficit, at least for a while, at the acceptable or at least tolerable level of $34.9 billion, slightly below this year's level, but still considerably lower than the projected $37 billion deficit we were unfortunately saddled with.

That is only the first step. Our objective is to cut public expenditures down by $10 billion to $15 billion between now and 1990. We think it is a realistic, responsible and commendable objective. Cutting our expenses and reconsidering our priorities in respect of public outlays will not make it possible to create jobs for all Canadians. Once consumer, business and investor confidence is restored, a return to sensible management of the Government's business will contribute positively to a certain growth in the economy.

Of course, the problem of indebtedness could have been tackled differently. One of the easy alternatives would have been the status quo followed by the previous government. But as indicated by the most recent economic projections, we would very soon have been faced with a horrendous debt situation, with all the ensuing calamities. By 1990, public indebtedness would have reached $410 billion, the equivalent of a nominal amount of $54,000 per Canadian family. For obvious reasons that have not escaped your attention, Mr. Speaker, we did not find it very difficult to turn away quickly from that solution.

Another and just as simple solution would have been to use stimulating measures. However, nothing short of huge capital injections into the economy could have had some initial effect on growth or immediate employment. Since this year's deficit already exceeded the $5 billion mark in the February estimates, deliberate and huge economic stimuli would have left us in a rather precarious position. This country would have sunk deeper into the vicious and infernal circle of indebtedness, and the outlook for growth and long-term employment would have been seriously eroded. Loss of consumer and investor confidence would then have resulted in the loss of stable jobs in the years ahead.

Another alternative, just as simple, would have been to reduce the deficit indiscriminately and savagely, with spectactular and pitiless effect right from the outset. But such a drastic approach would have undermined confidence and jeopardized our country's social fabric. The cost of adapting to such a sudden turn-about in the economy would have been high, and our collective capacity to solve our structural problems would have been undermined.

There is a growing national consensus that we have to face our deficit and debt problems. Even the Leader and the financial critic of the Opposition have called for a reduction of the deficit. They support our basic objective without reservations. The previous government left us with a financial situation consistent with the incredible state of our economy.

The economic liabilities which we inherited are high unemployment, inadequate investments, shattered confidence and unwarranted individual concerns. Between the last half of 1981 and the end of 1982, we have suffered the worst recession experienced since World War II. The recovery which began in 1983 was rather moderate compared with other postwar recoveries and considerably less strong than in the United States.

After two years of recovery, or thereabouts, business and consumer confidence is still a bit shaky. Families have become cautious spenders because of the uncertainty of the job market and the low growth in real income, but savings remain at a high level. Faced with surplus capacity, large inventories and high interest rates which make their future uncertain, businesses are reluctant to invest capital and hire employees. Investment rate is 20 per cent lower than before the recession, while employment has just gone back up to pre-recession figures. We can certainly improve our economic outlook, but only if we face this major challenge realistically and responsibly. This means that we shall have to tackle the deficit and the national debt.

A steady increase in the debt to income ratio threatens growth in three ways: first, it exerts upward pressure on interest rates by feeding future inflationary expectations and by promoting competition for personal savings; second, it restricts the capacity of the Government to meet priority economic and social needs; finally, it is symbolic of bad economic management and it undermines confidence and jeopardizes private investments, our only source for creating the jobs needed in Canada. To promote confidence and employment, interest rates must therefore be as low as possible. Confidence must be renewed. This is why action to decrease the deficit cannot wait. We must assure small and big investors in Canada and abroad that the impressive results achieved in our fight against inflation will be consolidated and maintained and that our Federal Government will not subject the domestic capital market to any excessive and prohibitive demand.

Reduction of the deficit is the only key to a renewal of confidence, and this confidence is itself the key to the creation of more jobs.

In closing, I would like to say that, while our Government made a commitment not to act hastily or lightly, its first and most explicit commitment was to see to it that the state and the economy would operate efficiently in the interests of all Canadians. The years of drifting, hedging and band-aid approach are over. The time has come for Canada to take a new direction and all of us should prepare ourselves for new growth, stable employment and new opportunities.

It is Churchill who said:

[English]

"Give me the tools; I will do the job."

[Translation]

—we can apply this to ourselves and say:

[English]

"We now have the tools; just watch us do the job."

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, this borrowing Bill comes before us with a number of very unusual circumstances. This is a new Government, admittedly, and it has a very decisive mandate from the people of Canada. However, the Government has chosen not to introduce a budget. Instead, it introduced an economic statement during the course of the Throne Speech debate, which deprived us of the customary debate on budget measures. We have no inkling of when there will be a budget and there are some interesting changes in the timetable. For instance, before the election the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked as though there would be an economic summit meeting, a federal-provincial meeting, and a budget, all in the fall. Then the timetable began to change a little. The latest news is that the national economic conference will take place on March 22. Apparently the guest list and the agenda for that conference have still not been set. We are told that the consultations in this conference will be crucial to budget planning. If we take this at its face value, we can expect a budget in May or possibly June, which will be too late for a very detailed examination this session. We are being asked under those circumstances to give the Government borrowing authority for two years. We are being asked to suspend judgment, make a blind act of faith and vote borrowing authority for two years.

● (1640)

There are two issues I would like to raise. As my colleague has noted, the officials in the Department of Finance have much to explain about the fact that they gave one set of numbers to the previous government and an entirely different set of numbers two months later. We must have an explanation for this so that we can question those officials before we go much further.

The numbers are suspect for two other reasons, which are found in ministerial statements. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was being pressed to release the projections and the papers underlying his assumptions in the economic statement, he said that he would not release them because they might not be accurate. After being questioned, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) finally admitted that the claimed reduction in expenditures in the Department of Defence was fancy bookkeeping. Considering these facts in total would indeed make any responsible Opposition believe that it is time to have much more information before it can allow this Bill to proceed.

Let us set aside those particular circumstances that are strictly related to the Bill before us. In general, the performance of the Government in the two months that it has been in office has not inspired confidence. We have seen programs slashed apparently for ideological reasons rather than on the basis of rational analysis or sensible program evaluation. We have seen programs cancelled and then reinstated, or a commitment made to re-examine them.

The Government has thrown a cloak of secrecy over its incompetence. It has even been incompetent in doing that. There have been many extra costs imposed by a Government that is claiming to save money. We are told that there is an extra cost of $250,000 to train political commissars.

We hear some unusual language from the Conservative Government and perhaps we will need a dictionary to understand it. We hear planes being referred to as vehicles of sacred trust or sacred forms of transportation. However, apparently nothing is sacred about the rights of Canadians when we see some of the programs that have been cancelled recently for which we have had little or no explanation. For example, the program for residential rehabilitation was reduced by $29.4 million. This was a good program for home owners, especially those with modest incomes. It was also beneficial to small contractors, yet the Government says that it is in favour of small business.

We have seen pressure to squeeze money out of low and middle income Canadians. There are charges for social insurance numbers, charges for immigration processing, and charges for security clearance. There are increased charges for citizenship.

We have seen an economic statement that will eliminate at least 50,000 jobs. This is from a Government that was elected on a platform of creating jobs. At the same time that jobs are being eliminated, we see threats to reduce unemployment insurance. Jobs are being created in one area by the addition of inspectors to crack down on unemployment insurance recipients. This is taking place when jobs are being eliminated.

We have witnessed an attack on cultural programs and institutions such as the Canada Council and the National Arts Centre. The CBC was given two weeks to cut $750 million. How can intelligent and wise decisions be made in such a short time?

We have seen cuts in research and development, including $34.6 million from the National Research Council. We have seen the health and safety of Canadians put in jeopardy as a result of weather stations being closed. The toxicology centre in Guelph, which does some unique work, is being closed. We have seen a $9.6 million cut from the social housing program. This is from a Government which says that it is concerned with the quality of life for Canadians.

The motto for students seems to be "wait until spring". The existing student programs that create jobs for students during the summer are gone. We are told that there will be a new program to replace it but we are not sure when that will be.

The record of the Government thus far is disturbing. In the face of that record, it is not possible for us to agree lightly to giving a blank cheque to the Government to do more of the same. We must have our questions answered about the intent of the Government in many areas and we certainly must have the discrepancy in the figures explained by the Department of Finance.

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated that in her learned opinion, which I respect, she considered that this Government has been incompetent in the two months it has been in office. Would she give the particulars on which she bases that statement?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have already listed many examples of what I consider incompetence, because the Government attacks the quality of life of Canadians without producing the savings and costs that it claims will result.

However, I am delighted to have the opportunity to add a further example. It is the matter of the cancellation of the census. As a result of this cancellation, the Government has eliminated more than 500 person years of employment. It has eliminated a source of data which is essential to the shared programs legislation. In fact, census data is built right into the formula for the equalization Act. Two provinces, and possibly a third, have a constitutional requirement for a census. Therefore, the Government will have to do a partial census, which makes the figure which it gives us as a saving in the census also suspect.

Furthermore, small businesses which rely on census data will be deprived of that information. They will have to find their own money to do these studies in some way. Big business already has in-house facilities and will not suffer.

When one considers the equalization payments which constitute such a large part of the Government's expenditures, I do not believe that it knew what it was doing when it wiped out the census. Without the proper data, how is it possible to plan schools, manpower training and transfers to the provinces to support these programs? I do not believe the Government knew what it was doing when it axed the census. I am glad to see the Prime Minister has in fact admitted that and is prepared to reinstate it.

● (1650)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). I found her speech to be most informative. I have a general question for her. the Hon. Member for Trinity was here when the finance critic for the Liberal Party introduced an amendment to the motion we are debating condemning the Government for bringing to the House a Bill requesting borrowing authority into the next fiscal year. Can the Hon. Member explain how this Bill, making that request, differed from the Bill her government brought in on a number of occasions which, to my recollection, did exactly the same thing?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Perhaps the Hon. Member was not here when I began my remarks, Mr. Speaker, because I explained that it was a matter of a number of factors coming together. There is the request for moneys over two years. Added to that there is the fact that this is a new government. We have not had a budget. We had an economic statement bootlegged into the debate on the Speech from the Throne, which deprived us of the normal opportunity for debate. It appears now that we are unlikely to have a budget before May or June.

Another factor was the discrepancy between the figures provided by the Department of Finance to our government a couple of months ago and to this Government. I said the Department of Finance officials must explain those discrepancies. The other fact I mentioned as also being unusual is that Ministers of the Crown themselves have admitted that some of the numbers are inaccurate. I think there we have a number of factors over and above the request for a two-year period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there are no more questions or comments, I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I am very used to speaking on borrowing authority Bills.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: This is the first time I have spoken on a borrowing authority Bill from this side of the House. It is certainly a different feeling. I am very much opposed to the massive government borrowing that we have in this Bill. I have always been opposed to that massive government borrowing. I know the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is opposed to massive government borrowing. I know the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) is opposed to that kind of borrowing. Indeed, I know the entire side here is opposed to it, although I am not at all sure of the attitudes of members of the New Democratic Party, nor am I sure of the attitudes of members of the Liberal Party. Everywhere we go and every time we hear from them, they say: "You can't cut that out. You can't drop that. My goodness gracious, deficit financing is fine".

Mr. Deans: Borrow more.

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes, borrow more, they say, because we must have more.

Mr. Deans: Don't forget there is a question period after this.

Mr. Blenkarn: What we ought to have from the NDP and the Liberals is a proposal whereby we could develop a new form of agriculture. Maybe we could learn how to grow money trees. That is what we have here. We had a modest effort by the Minister of Finance on November 8 to try to come to grips temporarily with the financial conditions of this country. He brought forth certain cuts, terrible, disastrous cuts, vicious, brutal cuts. Why, Mr. Speaker? He had cut about $2 billion from the real expense of the country, plus another $700 billion or so out of the administration of Departments. These are terribly brutal, vicious cuts.

Mr. Riis: Can we quote you?

Mr. Blenkarn: Indeed, if there is any criticism of the November 8 statement, it is that those cuts were not severe enough, because there is no way we can continue to borrow, borrow, borrow, and borrow.

Mr. Riis: You are a walking mine field.

Mr. Blenkarn: We cannot put on the backs of our kids—the Hon. Member for Kamloops Shuswap (Mr. Riis) quoted me in previous speeches in the House on this matter—on the backs of our children's children, and children's children yet unborn, burdens that we are putting on them. Before this decade is over, if we carry on in just the way we are doing now, just with the forecasts of this Minister of Finance, we will have a national debt in excess of $410 billion.

We are in the situation of a frog in a well, only the well has awfully slippery sides. We try to get ahead, we cut expenditures, yet we cry about them.

Mr. Riis: Cut taxes.

Mr. Blenkarn: And then we find the interest rate keeps going up and the cost of interest keeps going up, and pretty soon we wind up with a situation where interest expense itself is the major cause of the deficit of the country, as it is right now. Only yesterday Members saw a release from the Minister of Finance indicating the financial position of the country for the period ending September 30. What was the financial position of the country? For every dollar we spend, we borrow 39 cents. What kind of sense of obligation, what kind of sense of purpose, what kind of sense of frugality and what kind of sense of direction of the country is that when we borrow 39 cents out of every dollar we spend? And that is for the first six months of the year. If this carries on, very soon we will not be able to borrow sufficient money to pay the interest on the borrowed money.

We are rapidly getting to the point where we are leaving our children a bankrupt, insolvent nation. Perhaps the only way we will solve our credit problems is to declare bankruptcy. Perhaps we ought to be proposing that this Bill be called "The National Insolvency Bill for 1984-85 and 1985-86", or "The Waste of Canada's Heritage Bill", or "A Bill to make sure our Children are Bankrupt".

Things cannot go on like this, Sir. We hear Members from the other side say, "My goodness gracious, you are going to charge something more for getting citizenship or a passport. My goodness gracious, ferry rates are going to go up 15 per cent perhaps". Or we hear them say, "My goodness gracious, you will have to get tough with people because they play around with the unemployment insurance scheme. Gee whiz, isn't it terrible?" We have to operate this country with a sense of frugality, Mr. Speaker. I know they have not been used to that. They believe we have one great money tree, that it is all wonderful, and spend, spend, spend, and spend. That is the attitude of this city. That is the attitude until now, and that attitude must change. It will change.

We have taken over a problem that will not easily be solved. I said before the election that we could not clean up this mess in ten years. It is at least that bad. It is going to take us at least this decade to begin to get this country's finances back in some reasonable shape. We have taken one weeny step so far and all we have are crocodile tears.

Let us talk about it for a moment. Let us talk about the Unemployment Insurance Act which they say is so sacred. Let us talk about the fact that I saw a proposal for a man here in Ottawa being offered early retirement. Included in that proposal was a statement made by his employer that he could collect unemployment insurance for a full year and not have to apply for work because unemployment insurance is paid to him. Is it fair for a person who retires early to get 98 per cent of his former wages because of unemployment insurance payments and $32,000 per year in his pay package? That is not my concept of unemployment insurance.

The other day I was speaking with my young brother who runs a construction company. He said that his fellows work 55 hours per week in the summer-time. They build up pretty good pay packages, but as winter approaches they cannot work 55 hours per week. They are lucky to be able to work five hours or seven hours per day. Some days they cannot work at all because of the weather. I would like to indicate what is done in his company. They raffle off the right to be on unemployment insurance because they can make more money on pogey than they can working. That kind of thing has to stop. If members of the New Democratic Party and of the Liberal Party want to defend that, they should come to my riding and defend it. They should defend it with the people of this country because they know that that is not cheating, but it is an absolute abuse of the system. The system must be changed. We must get at that problem. We must reduce the deficit.

We must not allow the problems raised in the financial statement, and the suggestions, which only begin to touch the problem, to interfere with our judgment as to how we come to grips with the damage that has been done to our children and our children's children. There is an amendment before the House indicating that we really cannot do this. I have spoken on such an amendment before. I do not like the situation. The Government brings forth a two-part Bill. Part I indicates that we need $7 billion when we really need $5.3 billion to the end of the year. But we need a little coverage. I will speak about coverage in a moment, but we need $16 billion on account for next year.

Why do we need it? Let us understand why we need it. Hon. Members will know that when we receive the Main Estimates at the end of the first supply period, we approve five-twelfths of the Estimate. In some cases it is more than that. We know that we will be in the hole next year and have to borrow massive amounts of money. In this Bill we come before the Parliament of Canada and say that we know we will be in the red next year. It is much the same as when we present the blue book Estimates. We know that the whole Estimate has not been approved and that we have not inquired into the figures. However, we know that we will have to spend some money to pay people, that we will have to run to Parliament and to keep the country rolling. Therefore, we want the right to have part of what we will require as borrowing for the following year.

Would it not be wonderful if a budget came out showing that we did not need a nickle more than the $16 billion? I would hope for that, but I am as positive as all Hon. Members are that we will need more than $16 billion. The $16 billion in Part II of the Bill is really only a small down payment. I would hope not, but it is a down payment on what may be required for next year.

In his economic statement, the Minister of Finance estimated that the financial requirements for this current fiscal year would be $29,877 million and that the financial requirements for the next fiscal year would be $29,193 million. Those are massive amounts of money. Indeed, it is far more money than we can afford to borrow. Yet we hear cries about cuts and that there is no way we can come to grips with these problems. We hear nothing from the Opposition but more, more, more.

I spoke on these Bills before when I was in Opposition. I made certain suggestions to the then government and to the House. One of the things I talked about was the standing committees of the House. One of our key jobs in the standing committees is to examine estimates detail by detail and to ensure that proposals made by public servants and Ministers are worthwhile. We have an obligation—and I hope we use it in this new Parliament with its new standing committees—to examine Estimates in detail. Where we feel that the proposal is a little rich for Canadians, we will come to grips with it and vote against the estimates. That is what we ought to be doing. We should all count upon opposition members to take a look at every estimate in detail. They should say that we really do not need an expenditure and that they will vote against it; that is the kind of thing which ought to be done.

Also we ought to priorize where we are going in terms of public expense. The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) said something about the poor old CBC. She said that we cannot possibly cut them, that it was terrible to have to cut them. The poor CBC had to lose $75 million out of nearly $1 billion. Is that tragic? I will tell the House where I stand in terms of social payments. You can wipe out the whole CBC budget before you affect the old age pension; that is my priority. If we have to make those decisions as Members of Parliament, we have an obligation to make them. That is what I would expect to hear from a constructive Opposition. However, we have heard crying about poor programs which are gone. It is laughable that we should have such an Opposition. It is not prepared to come to grips with the reality of the country. Members of the Opposition think that their job as elected Members of Parliament is to come here to see what they can grab for their ridings—what kind of program can I get for my people, or how much can I milk the old "you now what" for? That has to cease. It is time that we had a responsible Opposition prepared to say, "Here is what you can do—you can eliminate that expense and this other expense; that is what we think you ought to look at".

I am surprised the finance critic of the Official Opposition is not here. In his former capacity, he was Minister responsible for economic development and he led us into this marvellous R and D tax credit scam.

Mr. de Jong: That's right, it is a scam.

Mr. Blenkarn: I hear the Hon. Member. We opposed it strenuously. That scam has cost between $1,200 million and $1,500 million. Then we wonder why our revenues this year are down by $1,800 million! There is $1,200 million or perhaps $1,500 million there. That is the kind of thing the finance critic gave us when he was in charge of economic development. It is unbelievable that he should say, "Oh my goodness, you are cutting". He made sure that we did not have the revenue. That is the problem. The House should applaud the Minister of Finance for stopping the scam.

Mr. de Jong: It is not being stopped.

Mr. Blenkarn: The scam has to be changed. There is a whole series of things which must be changed.

Last year the House looked at the budget of the former government. After a serious debate on Bill C-21 in the last Parliament, a Bill for borrowing authority for $29,555 million, we were able to point out that it did not balance with the projections of the then Minister of Finance. We were able to reduce it by $5 billion. Therefore, through negotiations and through pressure we were able to reduce the last borrowing authority Bill, the one under which we are presently operating, from $29.5 billion to $24.5 billion.

• (1710)

It seems that Liberal finance people did not figure correctly in the February 15 Budget. Unfortunately, we have to come back to this House and again get that $5 billion back for the balance of this year. That is what we are talking about. There are some small changes in the mathematics and it is now $5.3 billion.

We obviously need around $2 billion to enable us to interfere in the foreign exchange markets. We obviously need to have the opportunity to borrow cheaply if such an opportunity arises over and above the regular requirements. The $2 billion lapses on March 31.

The other provisions in the Bill allow for a borrowing authority of $16 billion commencing the next fiscal year.

Mr. Deans: That is wrong.

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend says it is wrong. I have already pointed out to him that every time we vote Estimates on March 31, we vote nearly half of the Estimates through. The Cost of the estimated borrowing requirement is approximately half of the Bill. If he is prepared in the normal course of events in this House to vote Estimates that way, why can we not have the money through so we can operate effectively?

Mr. Deans: I want to see the budget.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) knows that the budget is projected for April, possibly May. The Speaker indicates my time is up. With the permission of the House, I would like to carry on for a few minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired. We do have 10 minutes for questions and comments. Maybe he can carry on then. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) on the first question and a short comment, I hope.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, when listening to the Hon. Member, I was reminded that the previous speaker from the NDP mentioned earlier today George Orwell's book 1984. This speaker is a perfect example of somebody who practises doublethink. How can the Hon. Member on one hand say that his Party and his Government stand for cutting, cutting, cutting, and that is good for the Canadian public, when his Party promised 388 individual expenditures over and above what the previous government had done during the election campaign? There were 388 promises, everything from the kitchen sink from Newfoundland to British Columbia. The Hon. Member knows that.

I would like the Hon. Member to explain why his Party did that. He knows what I am saying is correct. If their philosophy is to cut and to keep down the deficit, why did they commit so many new programs and make so many false promises during the election campaign? If the Hon. Member denies they made them, later in the debate I will stand up and read them.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member will stand up in the debate. I would like to hear from him in respect of this. He should look at the financial statement of the Minister of Finance. He will note that the policy changes thus far effected include the promise of fuel tax rebates. This is in the works at the present time and involves a net cost of $77 million. Some things have to be done in the country. Changes have to be made. Most of these promises are part of a changed direction. He knows that. His constituents know that. We believe they approve of that.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed listening to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I have always enjoyed listening to his remarks, particularly when he was in Opposition. I thought that he was one of the most effective Members in the Opposition at that time. When it came to government measures, particularly borrowing Bills and so forth, he put up some good, valid arguments. It is a little sad today to see him have to swallow some of the arguments he has used in the past. I say it is sad because I doubt if he believed half of what he said to us today. If you consider the speeches he made in the past and what he has said today, there is quite a difference.

I was intrigued when he mentioned the scam, and I agree it is a scam, of the tax credits the previous Liberal government gave to research and development. Originally Mr. Lalonde's Budget estimated a loss of $100 million. I think it is now close to $1.5 billion. Estimates are that it will cost some $2 billion in lost revenues from that tax credit. Earlier in the day I called it a flip-flop scam. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) claimed it was not a scam. He thought it was incorrect to call it a scam.

In questioning the Minister of National Revenue earlier today, I was concerned that the moratorium which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) put on the R and D tax credit scam was not very effective. There is a grandfather clause which allows all sorts of companies to apply for this R and D tax credit. It is estimated that we will lose a further $400 million to $500 million on this scheme. I asked why he does not tighten the lid and put a freeze on this grandfather clause. All sorts of other corporations are allowed to claim that they have transactions in the works, transactions that might be on the back of an envelope. Revenue Canada is allowing this. We will lose another $400 million to $500 million. Surely the Hon. Member will agree that the time has come to put a lid on this R and D tax credit scam and not allow one more penny to be lost from the public purse.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I want to quote what the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) is alleged to have said, according to Linda McQuaig of The Globe and Mail. He said:

> In some cases it is pretty tenuous how grandfathered they are. You know it is amazing that grandfathers are still having children.

The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) is correct. We have to terminate this. I know the Minister has been terminating it as quickly as possible. We must remember that when people have started an action on what has been granted to them as a legitimate tax expenditure, it cannot be terminated that easily. The only way it can be terminated is by legislation. I hope there will be legislation terminating it. People rely on the present law and do what they are legally entitled to do. The fact that you have a bad law means that the legislators have not done their work very well. It is not the fault of the people. We have to change that legislation and I think we have to change it very quickly.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, at one point in his speech the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) used the metaphor of milking the cow when talking about politics and politicians. I would like to relate a metaphor that a former colleague of mine used to tell when talking about the present state of the country. He said that the way things are going, we need a new emblem for Canada. He thought it should be a cow on the map of Canada. She is feeding in the West, they are milking her in the centre, and you know what she is doing to us in the Atlantic provinces.

I used that to start my question to the Hon. Member because he is interested in more cuts. Does he feel that these should be indiscriminate across the board, that all people in all sections of the country should be treated equally? He takes the same premise for the cuts in UI, for example, as does the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The Minister of Finance said in his statement, as repeated by the Hon. Member today, that there are people in this country who do not want to work, that Canadians are lazy and that they do not want the jobs that are open to them. We were told that there are 167,000 jobs available somewhere in this country. I wish someone would tell me where those jobs are.

I would like to tell the Hon. Member that in the Town of Fort McMurray, which is in the riding of Athabasca, there are 8,000 Newfoundlanders out of a population of 25,000. Those Newfoundlanders are there not because they want to be there. They would probably rather be back home. They are there because they want work. They borrowed money and hitchhiked to Fort McMurray to get a job. They are not on pogey but are earning wages. The fundamental assumption that there are people in this country who do not want to work must be challenged.

Does the Hon. Member agree that in addition to the cuts that have already been made, there should be more cuts in unemployment insurance in the Atlantic provinces before the jobs are created? In the Atlantic provinces, there are no job alternatives right now. If the Hon. Member believes that, how does he square it with a policy of regional economic expansion? It still has not been made clear whether or not the Conservative Party is for regional economic expansion. If it is, how does the Hon. Member square his position on UI cuts before jobs are created with a policy of regional economic expansion? If he is not for regional economic expansion, how does he square it with the equalization payments that are now being paid to provinces on the assumption that some provinces in the country are underprivileged?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I presume I have unlimited time in which to reply to that series of questions that deal with all of the policies of this Government. Briefly, the Hon. Member knows that Canadians want to work and are hard-working people. They are also pretty intelligent people.

Under the present scheme, unemployment insurance benefits are paid at a rate of 60 per cent of former income earned. If, for example, one earned $10 an hour, then, working a 40-hour week, that makes $400 gross per week. Subject to tax on both ends, that person's unemployment insurance benefits, at 60 per cent, would be $240 a week. Therefore, that person would be absolutely crazy to take a job paying less than $9 an hour, figuring the tax difference and the cost of going to and from work. There are some things about this scheme which are very anti-employment. What we must do is to put some incentives back into the unemployment insurance scheme. That is where the problem lies.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say two things. First, given the prestigious position of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who is the Chairman of the Finance Committee, I would be quite willing, and I am sure my colleagues on all sides of the House would be quite willing, to extend the question period to allow him to continue to answer the question. I do not want him to feel restricted in any way given the role that he must play in and around the House of Commons. After I have asked my question, perhaps you might, Mr. Speaker, find out whether there is unanimous consent to allow him to continue to answer some questions for a reasonable period of time, for example, another five minutes.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deans: Agreed? Could you ask that question, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) to answer questions for a further five minutes?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, I hear a "no". The Hon. Member's question must be very succinct or I will have to cut him off.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I think that that is unfortunate. I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question and it is a simple one. When listening to him, I wondered whether in fact he had ever been to Damascus. I would like to ask him now whether he has ever even taken the road. However, it seems to me that he has.

Is the Hon. Member telling the House that he no longer supports the position contained in the motion put by the former Leader of the Official Opposition in which he said:

—that this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than the amount which is required to meet the Government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle—

Is the Hon. Member suggesting now that he—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). There was not unanimous consent to extend the question period. Therefore, both questions and comments must end now. We have already gone over the 10-minute period allotted. Perhaps at a later date the Hon. Member for Mississauga South will be able to answer the question of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. I would now like to recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that Members on the government side must be very happy that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) was not able to answer that question. It just points out another embarrassing situation in which they find themselves. I am not surprised that the Hon. Member was muzzled by members of his own Party. The comments he has made about the workers of Canada are unbelievable and in fact express to the Canadian people the kind of hidden hypocrisy of his Party and the disdain in which his Party holds the Canadian workers.

For the Hon. Member to suggest that Canadians are taking advantage of the unemployment insurance system, that they are scheming and plotting to rip off the system, that they are not prepared to work and that they are prepared in fact to rip off the system, is an absolute travesty and distortion of the facts as they exist, not only in the community of Hamilton which has very severe unemployment problems, but in other communities across Canada as well. Perhaps the economy of the community of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is robust enough to withstand the kind of onslaught of fiscal slashing that we have seen in the Finance Minister's economic statement.

When the Hon. Member says to the House that a 15 per cent increase in ferry rates is no problem I know the Hon. Member is not reflecting the view of Hon. Members on this side of the House. I am not sure that he is reflecting the views of other Conservative members from the Maritimes who have been elected on a platform of creating jobs and stimulating the economy.

With this borrowing Bill, we have another indication of the unbridled arrogance of the Tory majority. In an almost unprecedented move, a decision was made by the Government to move ahead with a borrowing authority Bill, which in fact goes into a new fiscal year and which occurs at a time prior to the tabling of the Supplementary Estimates.

This Government preaches co-operation. However, if we look at the record of the Government over the last few weeks, it is clear that it has no intention of co-operating and has no intention of trying to work out an opportunity for all Members to participate. I would like specifically to draw to the attention of the House the kind of abrogation of democracy that we have seen with the introduction of this particular borrowing Bill. This Bill is in the same spirit as the Government's tactics over the last few days of trying to deny Members an opportunity to speak in their respective committees and in the House of Commons.

For those in the House who did not have an opportunity to witness this let me say that there was a ridiculous situation in the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration studying the Estimates last night in which government members convened a meeting with less than 24 hours' notice. The opposition critics could not be properly substituted. The Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) was present discussing housing Estimates and I was present in my role as Official Opposition critic but did not have the right to vote on those Estimates. To me, Mr. Speaker, and to Members on this side of the House, that is a clear indication of the Government's secretive and closed approach to parliamentary democracy.

We have heard the motion moved some time ago by the former Leader of the Official Opposition. At that time he said that borrowing provisions should not extend into a new fiscal year. It again seems to me that when Conservative members were in Opposition, they sang one tune, but now that they are in Government, they are singing a totally different song.

I think Members on all sides of the House must hold dear to their hearts our required parliamentary tools. In particular, all Members are aware of the massive mandate given by the Canadian people to the Conservative Government on September 4. That massive mandate carries with it a very unique responsibility, and that responsibility is to ensure that constructive criticism can be carried out in the House of Commons and in parliamentary committees, and this is particularly true, Mr. Speaker, when this Government preaches co-operation. This Government is saying to the Opposition, "We need $16 billion to carry on government business".

Unlike the former opposition Party which now sits on the government side of the House, we in the Liberal Party do not want to be obstructionist. We want to assist the Government in carrying out its responsibility in discharging the mandate it received from the Canadian people. However, incumbent upon the government members is the recognition that in order to be able to carry out that responsibility, they must have all of the facts at hand. It is irresponsible to suggest that on the basis of a less than one page document, in both official languages, we should give to the Government of Canada the authority to borrow $16 billion. This should not be done without discussion and Supplementary Estimates, without the kind of voting authority which should be accorded to every Hon. Member of this House, and without the tabling of documents, which have been clearly denied us by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Therefore, it would be irresponsible for us, as Hon. Members of the Official Opposition, to support this legislation.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this move by the Government, not only to muzzle the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, but to muzzle the kind of constructive opposition we are attempting to provide, is just another indication of a Government which is afraid to go to the Canadian people. It is afraid to put the facts on the table and it is afraid to let the Canadian people know about the measures it is considering when it moves on budgetary items.

I asked, Mr. Speaker, on numerous occasions in this House for the Finance Minister to table the forecasted job losses which would happen as a direct result of his economic statement. Yet the Minister of Finance has refused to do so. He knows, as his colleagues know, that his Conservative Government was given a massive mandate on a promise of jobs, jobs, jobs, but since this Government has been in power, all we have seen from coast to coast is cuts, cuts, cuts. And the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has the gall to stand in his place and suggest that the ferry cuts are just one small cut in a stream of cuts which are not going to hurt the Canadian people. He has the gall to also suggest that the workers of Canada are ripping off the unemployment insurance system. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there are some very serious questions which need to be answered but which have not yet been answered by this Government. There are questions which have not been answered by the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), as part of her job-creation program, has created an unemployment insurance police force of 700 persons. Not only is this Government not satisfied with an economic measure which will deny older workers the kind of security they need in their less than high income earning years, but it has said to these older workers, "You cannot collect unemployment insurance benefits until you exhaust your severance pay, your pension benefits and until you are reduced to the lowest common denominator". This is being done in an effort, in my opinion, to reduce our universally accessible unemployment insurance scheme to nothing more than a welfare benefit. This is the same Government which said, "Universality is a sacred trust".

I am not sure the Hon. Member will applaud when he sees the further initiatives taken by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. These measures will not only impose financial hardship on those workers who most need our help, but, to add insult to injury, the Minister has set up a 700-person police force whose job it will be to weed out the so-called abusers of the system. When the Canadian people, on September 4, gave this Government the massive mandate for job creation, I do not believe this was the kind of job creation they had in mind. I am sure that Hon. Members on all sides of the House can stand in this House and provide examples, as I have attempted to do earlier today, of the financial hardship experienced by older workers. In my own community there are corporations such as Consolidated-Bathurst, where workers with combined years of service of 25 years to 30 years have been sent out on the streets with no jobs and very little chance of future employment.

The re-employment prospects of those workers are being further jeopardized by the Government's sword of Damocles which is hanging over their heads. The Government is suggesting to those workers that not only will it root them out and push them out of unemployment insurance benefits, but it will ensure that they do not get a penny from the Government of Canada until they have used every last cent of their pension savings or severance pay. I do not believe this is the mandate which the Canadian people accorded to this Government. It seems to me that we in the Official Opposition cannot support a document of this nature. We definitely need to get more information. That information has not been forthcoming, Mr. Speaker. I hope that most Hon. Members from all sides of the House do not share the same cynical view of the Canadian worker and taxpayer as expressed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear that the Progressive Conservative Party received a massive mandate from the Canadian people on September 4 of this year. Conversely, Canadians must have the assurance, as has been customary for centuries in Parliaments not only in Canada but also in Great Britain and other countries, that this Government acknowledges its responsibility for ensuring that the Opposition's voice is heard clearly and unequivocally in all committees and in all proceedings of the House.

Up to now, we have seen a Government that promised co-operation, that it would be open, not only with the Canadian public but also with Members of Parliament, and also a Government that would like to proceed in committees and demand billions of dollars without giving the Official Opposition the information on which it can base agreement or disagreement with the Government's expenditures.

Take for instance the unemployment situation. If I am not mistaken, I heard the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) say that the unemployed in Canada are people who want to take advantage of the system, especially Canadians between 50 and 60 years old.

Mr. Speaker, when the Canadian people gave the Progressive Conservative Party a mandate to create jobs, it did not mean the Government to introduce all kinds of regulations and as it were, police unemployed managers between 60 and 65 who really have trouble finding jobs.

Canadians are willing to work and do what they can, and they will even move to another city if they can find employment there. However, it is also true that there are no jobs available for the unemployed who are older and for those who are in what is called the mid-career period.

For the Government, its Members and even the Chairman of the Finance Committee, who has a fairly responsible position in this Government, to tell Canadians that the unemployed are cheats and want to take advantage of the system is something I find incredible, and I am sure that is the reason why Members on the Government side did not want him to answer any questions, because even if he is Chairman of the Finance Committee, one of the most important committees of the House of Commons, he is revealing the Progressive Conservative Party's real policy which is only referred to behind closed doors. What he is saying now is mostly what the Conservative policy was before the election. It is also quite obvious that they never wanted to tell the Canadian public the truth, because if Canadians had known before September 4 that the Government's policy would be to make cutbacks from the Atlantic to the Pacific, if Canadians had known, they would have never given the Government the mandate they gave. The Government has a responsibility here. It has a responsibility to clarify—

Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservatives have a responsibility to show Canadians that they are going to stop this masquerade they have been carrying on for Canadians during the first two months of their mandate.

They have no credibility with the Canadian people. They speak about job creation but then they cannot take their mind off the deficit. They will make cuts, for example, within the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. At the same time, they say that their policy is to make more housing units available for workers and for the poor. However they are reducing the funds available to CMHC for the construction of houses when we know that such developments have created 20,000 jobs in Canada this year. Some 20,000 jobs have been created, but the economic policy of the Tories is to cut programs and reduce the number of jobs in Canada and that is why the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is ashamed to table in the House the papers which clearly show that his economic policy will reduce the number of jobs in Canada.

• (1740)

It is a littered trail of broken promises.

The Government comes to the Opposition now and speaks of co-operation. It tells the Canadian people that it needs $16 billion in order to carry out the work we have ahead of us over the next number of months. It is clear this Government is asking for this co-operation when its policy has been one of government behind closed doors. It has been a policy of gouvernement à huis clos.

The only exposure we have had to government policy has been the error by the Minister of Finance in leaving his dossier where it could be exposed to public view. It seems to me the Government should have a policy where the people and Governments of Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec know whether there is going to be a further $200 million reduction in transfer payments as a direct result of this Government's inability to renegotiate agreements. The taxpayers of Canada have a right to know this information, but not by way of the kind of hotel caper we saw manifest itself this week. To suggest the Minister of Finance is going to embark on open government by leaving a trail of dossiers behind him is a travesty. It was stated in the House today, and I think it is quite clear, that the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), in his former capacity as Minister of Finance, would never have committed such a grievous error. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government will take the Minister of Finance to task.

I know that a number of government members take their responsibilities very seriously. They have spent many hours pondering on those responsibilities, particularly in view of the fact that they do not have that much else to do. They will know that although we in Opposition are small in number, we have a right to be heard. The inviolate right of this Chamber is the right of free speech, and that includes the right to a free and full discussion on financial matters, such as the expenditure of $16 billion. I see the government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is nodding his head in approval. When he was in Opposition it was stated quite clearly—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Me?

Ms. Copps: Nodding your head in approval. You are agreeing.

Mr. Deans: It is an affliction.

Ms. Copps: I think it should be noted for the record that the government House Leader agrees we must all take our responsibilities very seriously. But the Government is moving ahead with the unprecedented introduction of a borrowing Bill, at a time when we have not even dealt with Supplementary Estimates, when we have been denied our voting rights as a result of the Government's inability to get its political act together, a Government that introduces a borrowing Bill which extends into a new fiscal year in an unprecedented move of arrogance. It seems to me that Members on the Government side should be knocking on the door of their House Leader and Minister of Finance and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. I hope maritime Members will confer with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South to determine whether they support his position on ferry cuts. Do they see any problem with a 15 per cent increase in the cost of ferry service?

We have a job to do, Mr. Speaker. We are going to be here for a good while in our respective roles, at least for four years.

Mr. Gormley: How long?

Ms. Copps: Pardon me?

Mr. Gormley: A lot longer than four years.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member will live to eat those words, I am sure. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Government has the responsibility to provide information, and we join with it in that responsibility.

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment.

[English]

I would like to address myself to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). She speaks and speaks and speaks with many arguments. She said very clearly that we have had a mandate since September 4, but I am wondering if it was 1984 or 1972. Her Government had a lot of chances to do something.

[Translation]

She also referred to unemployment, Mr. Speaker. She referred to unemployment; she said and she repeated that we are doing nothing, that we cut, and cut, and cut. It is again the same story that we have been hearing here. She had ample opportunity, her Government had ample opportunity to do that, to solve the unemployment problem. There were 800,000 unemployed, they brought that up to 1,500,000 and now she would have us in two months solve this unemployment problem. Those are the results that are now facing us.

The Hon. Member also refers to broken promises. We are not being given any chance of doing something here. They are already attacking what we are in the process of doing and they talk about promises. However, I am very surprise that we should suddently hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton-East (Ms. Copps) refer to Quebec. I am reminded of my colleague from Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), who is suddenly interested in something he never mentioned in four years, namely gasoline. He will not stop pestering us, and when we have the floor he speaks over and above us. Because all of a sudden he is interested. Good, I commend him for that, and I commend my colleague for Hamilton-East for her interest in Quebec. We hear so many things about Quebec these days, because they say we are a majority with 58 members. Think of what you were with 74 members! So here we are today and all of a sudden things start to come back. Anyway, I am pleased, and I commend her for her interest in Quebec. There is however something I can tell the Hon. Member. If there were then 800,000 unemployed and if now there are 1,500,000 you could ask your colleagues what to do and why it has not been done. This by way of a brief comment.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member should give me an opportunity to talk about Quebec, because I know he is new here and has only a vague idea of what goes on in the House. Well, Mr. Speaker, I had the challenging opportunity to work in the province of Quebec during the great political years between 1974 and 1976, and I met and interviewed many future politicians before they had even thought of running for office. So, if he wants to bawl me out and say that I do not know anything about Quebec, I think he should learn a few things before making such remarks.

Another thing, Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting, even laughable to hear the Hon. Member talk about broken promises. Unless I am mistaken, he got himself elected because he promised his constituents that he would do something about gasoline prices, but that is the last they heard of it. He never did anything. He said there would be no gasoline tax increase.

An Hon. Member: Beating his gums again!

Ms. Copps: We can see now, as my colleague points out, that he has conveniently forgotten his promises. The people of Quebec will no longer take him seriously because he has already shown to the Canadian people that he cannot do anything except reneging on the promises he made during the election campaign.

[English]

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to comment on several remarks made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). It is said every week when one goes back to Saskatchewan that one has been living in a cocoon. That cocoon, particularly that in which members of the Opposition and the media find themselves, has enveloped the opinion of many people here. When I return to my riding every weekend I realize that people across Canada feel that they finally have a Government which is accountable, co-operative and consultative. Would the Hon. Member for Hamilton East concede that the events which have necessitated this borrowing may have occurred some time prior to the past three months?

• (1750)

With regard to a constructive Opposition, one would have to go a long way to find the kind of vituperative, strident polemics that we have been hearing. Does the Hon. Member believe that the matters which have necessitated this borrowing have been going on for any longer than the past three months?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Hon. Member may not have past experience in this Parliament, but if one wants to talk about vituperative attacks, one should take a few pages from the book of the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), who is now the chief of the political commissars. This Member may not be in a cocoon, but he has been cuckolded by his Government.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Ms. Copps: He has been cuckolded by his Government because he has to stand in his place as one of the major bookends and defend broken promises made by his Government, which was elected on a policy of openness and job creation, but then immediately moved to cut back on senior workers and on unemployment insurance benefits and to make it tough on the workers of Canada. This poor soul must go back to Saskatchewan to defend those policies. He is being cuckolded.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I was delighted to hear the speech of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) because the more speeches we hear of this nature the longer the Liberals will stay out of power. This talk about borrowing almost makes me laugh. We are borrowing $16 million only to clean up the mess the Liberals left. When we have had 16 years in office like the Liberals had we will not be borrowing money; we will be lending money. We will have a heritage fund. We will not be wasting it the way the Liberal regime did.

How the Hon. Member can stand up without her face blushing as red as her dress, I cannot understand. She is a new Member here and I want to be nice to her. She is a very nice lady. She has a very nice dress, but she should remember that she is over there because the people of Canada got sick and tired of the Liberal regime borrowing over $100 billion. The Hon. Member should not complain that we are borrowing a little money to clean up the mess the Liberals left.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, as a point of information, my dress is a blouse, but I do not think that is particularly relevant. It seems to me that the antediluvian suggestion of the Member that he should be nice to me because I am wearing a nice dress and am in a nice Liberal colour, is a clear indication of the kind of antediluvian, prehistoric policy-thinking of his Government. We will have had enough of him after 16 months.

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say something to my colleague from Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), if only the Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) would shut up so we can speak. He did not give me that opportunity a moment ago.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East told me earlier that I am young and inexperienced. True, I am young, I have little experience, but I can still make a contribution in this House. But listening to her, one would think . . . Talk as much as you want about higher gasoline prices, my colleague from Bourassa cannot enlighten you about my election campaign because he was too busy, afraid as he was of losing his seat. He was too busy working in his own riding.

An Hon. Member: You must have been away!

Mr. Della Noce: I said during my campaign—if he does not know it he should have followed it, it is still in the newspaper—

An Hon. Member: Stop bragging!

Mr. Della Noce: I think that the Hon. Member for Bourassa, besides not telling the truth, thinks he is still on the government side.

Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am forced to advise Members that the 10 minute period for questions and comments has expired. Once the 10 minutes have expired I am forced to cut off the exchange without any further comment.

I have come here myself to rule on the amendments which were proposed with regard to the borrowing authority, having spent some time studying the precedents. I thought it would be useful it that were done now in order to advise the House on the matters which it is in fact dealing with.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) has proposed an amendment to the motion for second reading of Bill C-11, which reads:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following words:
> this House will not proceed with a Bill to provide borrowing authority for a fiscal year for which the Government has not provided complete details of spending requirements or revenue projections.

The Member is attempting to move what is known as a reasoned amendment, but he will know that specific conditions must be met for such an amendment to be in order.

Citation 744(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition states: "It must be declaratory of some principle adverse to, or different from, the principles, policy or provisions of the Bill."

The proposed amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, is not opposed to the principle of the Bill but rather is attempting to indirectly impose conditions upon the passage of such a Bill, that of requiring the provision of more detailed information relating to the Bill. This is clearly not in order and Members may wish to refer back to previous Speakers' decisions, such as that of Speaker Jerome on October 23, 1979 when a similar ruling was given.

In short, the Chair finds that passage of the amendment would not determine the status of the Bill, and therefore the amendment must be ruled out of order.

For these reasons, I must rule that the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount is unacceptable as a reasoned amendment and cannot be put.

If I may now deal with the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), it reads as follows:

Mr. Riis, seconded by Mr. Deans moves:

> That all of the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "that this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than the amount which is required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle and this House therefore declines to give second reading to Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority".

This amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, does clearly oppose the principle of the Bill and falls within the conditions as set out in Beauchesne's Citation 744(1). It is declaratory of a principle adverse to the principle of the Bill. I therefore rule that this amendment is acceptable and is therefore now before the House.

I will recognize the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow), and, with the consent of Members, will call it six o'clock. She will be the next Member to speak on the matter.

It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At six o'clock the House adjourned.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85 (No. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, November 28, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Riis (p. 694).

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate in support of Bill C-11. I would first like to commend the Minister for introducing this Bill which will enable us to borrow the most necessary funds to keep the country going. The Government must borrow to meet its financial requirements. We have produced the facts that are necessary for speedy consideration of this Bill.

In his economic statement the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) advised Canadians that adjustments, cuts and new initiatives were needed to support and encourage economic recovery, to create jobs, and to give Canadians the confidence and stability to invest in this great country in order that it will move forward. The Government promised to take control and it is doing just that. The economic situation which we inherited after years of Liberal mismanagement calls for some tough specific actions, but they will be sound. Running the country is exactly like running any business. We all know that when expenses are greater than revenues a deficit is created. The Government was elected to deal with the challenges facing the country and the deficit is one of our greatest challenges.

Canadians have given the Government a strong mandate to embark on the long, complex and painful task of building a lasting economic consensus for our nation. I believe Canadians know that the Government is approaching, and will continue to approach, Canada's problems. Paying the bills is one of our problems. The Government is moving with compassion, commitment and fairness.

To put our own fiscal house in order and to reverse the massive buildup of public debt, we must and will meet our commitments. Many of these commitments were made by the previous government. We are going to honour our commitments. We are honest, sincere and open. The people of Canada want, and shall receive, fair treatment, Mr. Speaker. They voted for a Government that will get the country back on its feet. Through extensive consultation and communication with the provinces, business people, labour and all Canadians, the Government will make fair decisions for all regions of Canada. We will no longer see confrontation and unilateral decisions, for the Government has a responsibility. It is facing reality. We can no longer meet every need. We simply cannot do it all.

My home is Calgary, Mr. Speaker. Calgary was absolutely brought to its knees by the financial mismanagement of this country and the destruction of the oil and gas industry in 1980. The Liberal National Energy Program was a disaster. The previous Government singled out a number one industry and then raped it. Half of the drilling rigs in western Canada have been idled or they have left the country. People left for a more secure and favourable climate. Those who were left behind went belly-up. The only way to make a buck in the drilling industry is to keep that iron turning.

I invite Hon. Members here today to come out west to the producing provinces. Come out and see the rigs. Come on the floor. See the pipe which is made from the steel from Ontario and the wire cable that is made in Mississauga and the Arctic clothing that comes from Quebec. The survival suits in the Beaufort are made in Vancouver.

As one can see, when the resource industry was so hard halted thousands of jobs were lost all across Canada. The previous Government's energy policy is directly responsible for hundreds of thousands of lost jobs, billions of investment dollars leaving this country and four wasted years in achieving self-sufficiency for Canada.

A PGRT was applied to gross revenues. That is a petroleum and gas revenue tax, where there were no deductions for spending on new exploration and development and no deductions for royalties paid to the provinces. The previous government then revised the corporate income tax. The old earned depletion deduction was eliminated. It then imposed a natural gas and gas liquids tax. It went on and on. In its greed, the Liberal Government heavily taxed this industry. It based its theory on high world oil prices and increased consumption. However, someone forgot to tell that government that one does not budget on anticipation but on hard facts and figures.

We in the oil and gas business need a tremendous lead time to produce. We need 8 to 12 years for geological surveys, for land acquisition and exploration. We need this in order to get development and production. This industry has to find its raw materials first before it can manufacture the product. These are unique circumstances. The up-front capital is high risk and should be treated as a high-risk investment.

I correspond with some 250 members of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and small businessmen in my riding on a regular basis. They are desperate to keep their businesses going, let alone expand their capabilities. This means jobs and we cannot foster tomorrow's increased employment until we meet yesterday's obligations.

This is what Bill C-11 is all about. If my hon. friend, the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), was in the House today, I would ask her to turn back a few pages in history to see what her government did to strangle the resource industry. When that industry turned down, we quit making hole and when we quit making hole we did not need pipe. If we did not need pipe, then we did not need steel from Hamilton. We did not need draw works and we did not need wire cable. In fact, we did not need anything. The unemployment in her riding is directly related to her government.

This Government is committed to giving Canadians a well managed, efficient and productive Government. We promised a major overhaul of planning and budgetary controls and we will produce. There are no easy solutions. Our mandate is huge but we will keep our promises. I want to tell my hon. friends how proud I am to be a member of the House and to have this opportunity to speak in support of Bill C-11 today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, in concluding her remarks, the Hon. Member talked about the promise. Of course, we know that the Government's promise to which she referred was to create tens upon tens of thousands of new jobs in this country as soon as the new Government could be sworn into office.

I am sure that the Hon. Member and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recall this statement being made. Could she tell us of the Government's progress in keeping this promise? Specifically, how many tens of thousands of jobs have been cut since the Government came to office, rather than created, as it promised?

• (1115)

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. colleague's comments. When we came into office we had no idea what we were facing. The Liberals had 16 years to create this mess and we are going to do our very best to pick up the pieces very slowly and put them in place. We are going to get Canada off its knees and on to its feet and then we are going to run. We are going to give the people of Canada an opportunity to take hold of our resources, be they natural or human resources. We are going to give this country an opportunity to be what it should be.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a further comment. The Hon. Member has just told us that her Government did not know what it was doing when it was sworn into office and did not know what was going on. It just did not know where to start doing its job, nor did it know what the books looked like. It seems that the Tories are the only people who did not know what was going on. We certainly knew—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Did I hit a tender nerve on the other side, Mr. Speaker? As I was just about to say before I was so rudely interrupted, we certainly knew that we could not make billions of dollars of promises, but we did not make promises with which we could not live. We chose to promise only those things on which we could deliver.

Mr. Stewart: That is why you have 40 seats over there.

Mr. Boudria: That may be why we got 40 seats, but we still have our honour.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: At least when we get back into power we will be able to deliver on those things we promised. We will not disappoint the people of this country, such as this Government has done since it has assumed office. They are right, Mr. Speaker, they did not know what was going on. They still do not know what is going on. They promised tens upon tens of thousands of jobs.

In this book that I have in my hand entitled "Expenditure Review", the Government has cut thousands of jobs from my riding right here in the Ottawa area as well as in the ridings of several Hon. Members. I see the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). Maybe she could stand up and comment on the thousands of jobs cut in her constituency. None has been created but thousands have been cut. That is the disappointing record of this Government so far. We had enough of a similar government not long ago after nine months. We have had enough of this one after two months.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague—

Mr. Boudria: You can't ask. I ask.

Mrs. Sparrow: Let me make a suggestion to my colleague, Mr. Speaker. Did the Hon. Member know he was giving us a $34 billion deficit?

An Hon. Member: Is that one of the promises?

Mrs. Sparrow: It started at $29 billion. I believe it was the finance minister in the previous government who made a miscalculation of maybe $5 billion.

I would like to tell the Hon. Member that we have been given a tremendous mandate. We have been handed a problem. We are very unhappy with our problem but we are going to work slowly and surely and we will get tens of thousands of people back to work. Already the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is working very closely with the provinces and with the industry on a new national energy program. We will develop that. We are working in the agricultural area. Yes, Mr. Speaker, people will see in the next four years that we will stand by our promises and we will meet them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), on questions or comments.

Mrs. Mailly: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have a comment on one made by my hon. colleague. He said that in my riding—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would remind the Hon. Member that questions and comments are to be addressed to the speech made by the Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) and not to the Hon. Member who made the other comment.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my comments to the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) and congratulate her on her realistic approach and on having had the patience to listen to the nonsense of the Hon. Member sitting nearby, who said we had not created any jobs. Since September 17 of this year, we have created 34,000 jobs in this country. I can assure my hon. colleague from Calgary South that she was right when she said we have already created a climate favourable to employment. In my riding, where factories were in great trouble as a result of neglect on the part of the previous administration, thanks to the initiative and imaginative approach of Gatineau workers, we are now reopening factories that had been closed down.

• (1120)

The Hon. Member is correct in saying that out West they are drilling oil wells with Ontario steel and the talents and human resources of Quebec and Gatineau, because I know that, as far as my riding is concerned, we have people who are working out West. Many lost their jobs over the last three years, that is true, but fortunately, a number of people are still working in Western Canada.

I know that thanks to efforts of our Government and the negotiating and conciliatory skills of our Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mrs. Carney), there will very soon be a considerable activity in the West. Canadian oil will be produced by Canadians, consumed by Canadians and used to help develop Canada's resources, and this will be done by Canadian companies, not like what happened in the past, when jobs were exported because they were buying out foreign companies and sending billions of dollars to Belgium and buying oil from other countries because the administration here in Canada did not have the political or moral courage to face up to its responsibilities.

[English]

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I should like to add some comments which would have unquestionably been made by the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow). Given the constraints on her address, there are other matters which we should introduce into this discussion or into this debate.

The challenge has been made that this Government has not acted on anything. What a facile challenge; what a simple one to respond to! I recall the Liberal Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board delaying for two months making payments to the wheat stabilization board, simply because he did not know where he was supposed to sign the cheque. We did that immediately. We froze Seaway tolls immediately. We froze the abandonment of rail lines, which guarantees and ensures that farmers in western Canada have an opportunity to get their wheat on rail. We froze the rail abandonment in my constituency, which is in the forest sector, to ensure that the mills could get their lumber to overseas markets. Those were the kinds of initiatives which were taken immediately. Also we took a very interesting initiative about which I am very happy. It was the initiative to relieve members of the Liberal Party of their seats in the House of Commons.

It is true that the Hon. Member for Calgary South did not have an opportunity to make that suggestion to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). Nevertheless, contingent upon that defeat of these people who had not been serving Canadians the way they wanted to be served was a number of employment opportunities which the Liberals themselves had created. Those opportunities without direct address to the intelligence, the capability and the area of endeavour of individuals have now been terminated. I think that is most appropriate.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in some ways I experience déjà vu entering the debate on the borrowing Bill, the request of the Government to borrow some $23 billion. I have heard these types of debates before. The actors have changed but the lines remain the same. When the Conservatives were in opposition and the Liberals were in government, very often I heard the lines which are being delivered by Conservative members today being delivered by Liberal members. We hear Liberal members today giving the lines that the Conservative members used to deliver. The actors have changed, but the lines surely remain the same.

• (1125)

An Hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. de Jong: The Hon. Member opposite says nonsense. How well I remember the debate in 1982 when the Liberals brought in a borrowing Bill ranging in the billions of dollars. Not only were they wanting to borrow money for the present fiscal year but also for the next fiscal year. At that time the Leader of the Opposition and the Official Opposition were outraged, and rightfully so. Today we hear the same lines and see the same procedures. The names of the actors have changed but again the lines remain the same.

It is interesting to see that now the members of the Liberal Party are opposing what the Government is doing, saying it is not parliamentary, it is not right. They are correct. Their objection is valid. However, how soon they have forgotten that only a few years ago they were doing exactly the same when they were in government. The word hypocrisy is a mild word to describe this behaviour. How soon our friends across the way have also forgotten.

I was somewhat disappointed in the speech last night of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). He was one of the most capable critics of the Government and of government borrowing Bills in this House. He was a man of integrity who thought out his arguments well and presented them forcefully. Members like the Hon. Member for Mississauga South and other Opposition members in both the Conservative Party and New Democratic Party succeeded in forcing the previous government to break down its borrowing authority Bill.

Let me warn the Minister and the Government that the very same tactics that the Conservative Party used in 1982 can be used again today against them. The business of this House can be brought to a standstill by the Opposition if the Government insists on breaking the rules and traditions of this House. The page that we will borrow is the page that the Conservative Party wrote in 1982. Let this Government be warned that we will not forget their opposition in the past. We will certainly raise that opposition if it continues to operate in the same manner that the Liberal government of the day acted.

It is somewhat distressing to hear the speeches of Hon. Members of this House, particularly Government members. Their depth of understanding of economic and government issues is very shallow. As I hear their remarks, I am reminded of religious cults like the Moonies. All I hear are simplistic phrases being bandied about, not just by back-benchers but by Ministers as well. They are simply solutions, as far as Government members' are concerned, to the problems facing the economy of Canada and the western world today.

The big bogyman is government—too much government spending which resulted in tremendous deficits, which in turn has yanked up interest rates. This has resulted in a downturn of economic activities. The solution is to bring down the deficit by slashing government spending; down go the interest rates, up goes growth, up goes job creation and hurrah, happy days are here again!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: I am reminded of the experiments of Dr. Pavlov. When certain stimuli were presented to the dog, the dog started to salivate. Just now, when I uttered certain key buzzwords, all at once Hon. Members of the Conservative Party break out in applause as though there were simplistic solutions to the problems that face our economy. They feel as though the tremendous economic, social and technological changes western civilization is going through can be resolved with just these simple measures.

• (1130)

As with the Moonies and as with all forms of religious cults and thought-control groups, it frightens me. It frightens me how complex and difficult problems can be reduced to simplistic phrases which, when heard by normally intelligent men and women, cause them to break out in this mad applause. The idea that there are simplistic answers to complex issues is, in the end, the essence of totalitarian thinking. It is the essence of communist and fascist mentalities.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, again we hear this rumbling. Obviously a nerve has been touched.

When looking at the evolution of human consciousness and the social history of the human race, one can see that there have been those simplistic solutions to complex issues in times of great social stress. This eventually leads to people trying to fit square pegs into round holes. I am afraid that Hon. Members are so convinced that this is the solution that, when it does not work, they will indeed attempt to fit a square peg into a round hole. That is my fear, Mr. Speaker.

Let us look at this simplistic solution that the Government has offered. The notion is that our deficit is much too high. I agree with that. I do believe that our deficit is much too high.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: Hon. Members applaud again. Let me educate them a bit. Let me suggest to them that in my home province, the Province of Saskatchewan, the Government has had a balance budget for years and years. When the so-called socialist horde composed of irresponsible spenders and freewheelers inherited the province in 1944, it was a province that was broke, that was in debt, that did not have an electrical system or a roads system. It had a population that was scattered over many, many miles. We were able to electrify that province and build a roads system second to none without incurring tremendous debts. When we were defeated in 1982, the budget of the Government of Saskatchewan had a surplus while the budgets of the Government of Alberta, the Government of B.C. and the Government of Ontario had deficits. Those were well-to-do provinces controlled by Tories.

Let us now take a look at Saskatchewan today. After two years of Tory rule, after two years of cut-backs in social programs, after two years of selling off provincial assets like Crown corporations and highway equipment, Saskatchewan has the highest accumulated deficit in the history of the province. All of the past deficits rolled into one cannot meet what has been done by the Tories in only two years.

Hon. Members are not applauding any longer. Is it a shock for Tories to realize that Tory governments have produced the largest deficit in the history of England, the United States and Saskatchewan? Surely that does not quite make sense in light of the rhetoric we have been hearing here. What is going on? Tories who are philosophically committed to balancing the budget end up in the end with record deficits by using Tory programs. What is going on here? What is the explanation for this?

Mr. Stewart: Time.

Mr. de Jong: The Hon. Member says that it takes time. How much time will it take? Will it take two years, four years, eight years? After all, the Hon. Member must realize that when the Government of Saskatchewan was elected in 1982, it was going to create instant jobs and instant prosperity, just like the Tory Party during the 1984 election campaign promised instant jobs and instant prosperity for Canada.

Ms. Mitchell: Did they do that?

Mr. de Jong: Of course they did not do it. The unemployment rate in Saskatchewan has increased since the Tories were elected. So much for business confidence in the Province of Saskatchewan.

Let us have a look at the situation, Mr. Speaker. Why do Tory times produce massive deficits? They produce massive deficits because they are committed to a philosophy and theory of economics that has been shown not to work. It is the monetarist theory developed by the Chicago School of Economics and Dr. Friedman. I will explain it in a plain and simple way which I think Hon. Members, particularly the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), will understand. The philosophy is that if one feeds a horse a great deal of oats, the sparrow will eventually get some. That is essentially the monetarist philosophy. They believe in giving the corporate sector a great many tax breaks. I say this tongue in cheek to the Hon. Member for Bow River because I know that he is a prairie populist who has as much distrust of the CPR as I have, but they believe in giving tax breaks to the CPR. The essential notion is that if the corporate sector is given a lot of tax breaks, eventually those breaks will filter through the economy and create jobs and prosperity for all. That is a nice simplistic solution except that it does not work. Because the solution does not work, we have a downturn in economic activity. The Government forgoes tremendous revenues. We see this over and over again.

As the critic of the Revenue Department, I have been following the actions of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) with some interest. This is an example of the philosophy at work. In The Globe and Mail of November 28, there appeared an article with the headline: "Ottawa makes it easier for business to avoid tax". It is indicated in that article that the Minister has announced that his Department will help the private sector find tax loopholes in order to determine if setting up a dummy company is legal or not. The third paragraph of the article to which I have referred reads:

> An advance ruling would allow a company that is considering, for instance, establishment of a dummy corporation that would reduce its tax bill, to find out whether its proposed strategy is legal.

The Minister went on to say that he thought that business people were spending too much time looking for tax loopholes. He felt they should be spending their time making money and doing normal business things rather than looking for tax loopholes. Therefore, the Government, at the expense of the people, will find these tax loopholes for them. Is that not sweet of the Government? How much are we going to lose on this? When is the Government going to realize that, in order to reduce the deficit, it should stop looking at the expenditure side and start looking at the revenue side?

Just yesterday we heard from the Economic Council of Canada which stated in its report that the problem with the deficit is not over-expenditure but lack of revenue. A newspaper article of November 28, 1984, reads as follows:

> The federal deficit, expected to reach $34.6 billion this year, has not been growing because spending is out of control, the council said. Rather, the Government has failed to keep raising enough taxes to cover its expenditures.
> Tax exemptions and loopholes combined with slow economic growth during the past 10 years have cost Ottawa almost $100 billion in tax revenues.

Is the Government concerned with the revenue side? Is the Government concerned with doing those things that create economic activity and therefore tax revenues? Is the Government concerned with doing those things that would stop some of the tax loopholes? No, Mr. Speaker, because in its simplistic solution it is the expenditure side that is the cause of our deficit. As far as the Government is concerned, spending is out of control. Again, simplistic solutions to complex problems will lead to further disaster in Canada today.

It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is not present today. I attempted to ask him some questions yesterday when we asked the House to give unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member more time for an exchange after his speech. I understand that every Member of the House was willing to give him more time except a member of the Conservative Party. I found that a bit strange.

• (1140)

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South spent a fair amount of his time explaining how some provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act allow some of his constituents, who worked many hours during the summer and who were involved in the construction business, to be eligible for UI payments and they take advantage of those payments during the winter construction slowdown, even though they are really not in need. However, legally, they are eligible for those benefits. The Hon. Member felt that that was wrong and that the requirements should be tightened. In a scheme such as unemployment insurance there are many different situations. There may be cases of people receiving benefits which perhaps they should not be receiving. In some cases it may be legal, in other cases it may not be legal. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South was very concerned about that. I accept the concern of the Hon. Member, but we should maintain a sense of proportion.

Was the Hon. Member concerned about the tax loopholes which are being provided through the research and development tax credit? He called it a scam, and I certainly agree with him. It was introduced in the Budget which was brought down by Mr. Lalonde. It was only supposed to cost the public treasury $100 million. Now the estimate is that it has cost over $1.5 billion and this scam will cost another $400 million or $500 million. It will produce very few actual research and development dollars. For example, I understand that Imperial Oil bought $500 million worth of the credits and has paid itself a fee for doing the paper transactions of $25 million. I wonder what type of research and development will result.

I congratulate the Government. When it was elected it realized that this was a scam and set about trying to correct it. It corrected it! It imposed a moratorium. However, now we realize that the moratorium had a flaw. It had an escape hatch which is called a grandfather clause. The Minister of National Revenue admitted that under the provisions of the grandfather clause all sorts of new deals are being introduced and that it will cost the public treasury another $400 million or $500 million. When I brought this to the attention of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South he told me to wait a minute, that it could not simply be cut off overnight. Agreements were made. He said that we should not have to tell business folks that this provision was part of the law and that it would be cut off overnight. The Hon. Member was quite concerned about the propriety of cutting off the grandfather provision of the R and D tax credit scheme. It is too bad that he did not have the same concern about cutting off UI benefits to those people who are eligible for them and who are planning their retirement with those benefits in mind. Those people know that his Government will cut out the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act. When the Unemployment Insurance Act is changed, there will be no grandfather clause. Those changes will be overnight. There will be no provision for those people who are earning $15,000 or $20,000 a year. But for Imperial Oil there are a lot of grandfather clauses.

That is the difference between that political party and the NDP. That party is concerned with the Imperial Oils of the world. Our concern is with the person who is retiring and who has an income of $25,000, $30,000 or $40,000 a year. That is the difference, and because of that I oppose this borrowing authority Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) said in his remarks that he was going to educate the Hon. Members of this House, in particular Members on this side, about certain things having to do with the economic policy of the Government. In his remarks he talked about simplicity and lamented the fact that the Government had outlined in a simple and straightforward manner the formula for economic renewal. While he eschews the notion of simplicity, he went on to compare the economic thinking of the Government to the Moonies. Talk about over-simplistic analysis!

In his remarks he also used the word "hypocrisy". Yet he denounced the large size of government deficits and went on to speak critically of a government which has come into office inheriting a record-high deficit and a spending level which is increasing. The Government is taking definite, specific and immediate steps to bring the situation under control. I think the word "hypocrisy" is not appropriate.

He also asked when the Government would begin looking at the revenue side and not only deal with cuts in expenditures. If the Hon. Member is asking when the Government will deal with that, his "education" of Members on this side leaves a great deal to be desired. Where was the Hon. Member when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that he would close the tax loopholes which involved the research and development tax credit? He lamented that nothing was being done to deal with loopholes. He spoke of the revenue side and the fact there were benefits for some. Where was he when it was announced that there would indeed be a minimum tax on the rich? Where was he when the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) outlined a series of fair and proper measures to ensure that tax revenues owing to the federal Government would be collected? That is concrete and precise action on the revenue side. People who have been avoiding tax will be dealt with in an effective manner, not on the basis of the quota system which was tried by the previous Liberal government.

Where was he when the Minister of Finance, outlined in his economic statement that the way to economic recovery the way to generate funds on the revenue side and the way to get the deficit down is through letting the private sector return to doing what it does best: creating jobs, generating wealth and continuing to be involved in genuine economic activity?

I would say to the Hon. Member for Regina East that if he intends to educate Hon. Members, he should first do his homework.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat amused by the comments of the Hon. Member. I will first deal with his point regarding my charge of hypocrisy. I made that charge because, as I suggested to him and to other Hon. Members, what the Government is doing now—borrowing money for the next fiscal year—is what it opposed when it was in opposition. As well, the government is asking for $2 billion in "pocket money". The Tories opposed that in opposition. They said: "What do you mean, borrow $2 billion in case of emergency?" Those were the speeches I listened to from the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. The Government is now doing exactly what it criticized when it was in opposition, and I call them hypocrites for that. I think I have the right to. Not the Hon. Member, of course.

• (1150)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Jong: In fact, he was not even here then.

I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member did not listen properly to my remarks about R and D. I congratulated the Government for putting a moratorium on this scam, but then I went on to say that the moratorium is not all that effective because of the grandfather clause which will cost the taxpayers another $400 million to $500 million. This money will be lost. That is why during Question Period yesterday I asked the Minister of National Revenue to put a freeze on the grandfather provision. He did not answer me. I am saying to the Government that it should put a freeze on the grandfather clause and save those $400 million to $500 million. Because of the deficit we cannot afford to lose that hunk of change for something that everyone, including the Government, recognizes as being so unproductive.

The Hon. Member mentioned the minimum tax. I congratulate the Government for acting on this provision. We will have to see what type of minimum tax is introduced, whether it is smoke and mirrors or whether it will be a meaningful tax which will make the system a little bit fairer. That we will have to see.

The Hon. Member talks about tax collection. The Government pointed out in the economic statement that it was going to try and collect some $400 million in taxes that no one disputes are owed to it. In fact, there are some $4.5 billion in uncollected taxes which are beyond dispute. There are almost $400 million which the corporate sector has collected from its employees which they have not transmitted to the Government even though they are legally required to do so at the end of each month. For the Government to enforce just that one provision would bring in almost $400 million, never mind the $1.6 billion the corporate sector owes but has not yet paid.

The Hon. Member ended his remarks by saying that the Government is committed to letting the private sector do its thing and if we could only do that, prosperity is here. I suggest to him that the economic history of this country and its development is one where the private and public sectors have worked together. There is a tremendous role for the public sector to play, and for this Government to destroy that part of the public sector will be disastrous to this country and the private sector as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments continue. I recognize the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley). I ask Hon. Members to keep their questions and comments short as we have only a 10-minute period.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond in light of the fact that the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) and I come from the same province. Several of his statements should be clarified for the record, particularly those dealing with the economic comparisons involving Saskatchewan.

The Hon. Member referred to cults and related activities. The hallmark of a cult is the fact that there has to be a great deal of proselytizing going on and I think the people of Canada chose us to do this. We did not have to do much proselytizing to make people understand the deficit had been running out of control and something responsible had to be done about it. The Hon. Member remarked that somehow changing politics had caused some economic problems in Saskatchewan. If one looks at a comparable period in Alberta, in prosperous times that province was able to build up a very handsome surplus; but Saskatchewan had a balanced budget. However, when the new government had a chance to look at the books it realized that, through some very creative bookkeeping involving Crown corporations and government departments, a true accounting of the state of the economy had not been given. Given the kind of economics that this Member advocates, then the deficit would be twice as large as it is. I just wanted to comment on the Hon. Member's statement that Saskatchewan's economic difficulties arose because of the change of government. That is not the case.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but the period for questions and comments is now over. I ask again that Hon. Members please try and keep their comments and questions short, as we have three other Members who have not been able to speak, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), and the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey). However, I shall give 30 seconds to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) to answer the comment.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, we could spend some time debating the situation in Saskatchewan, which debates are of course occurring in the provincial legislature. However, the facts are still very simple and clear: Saskatchewan today has a deficit higher than it has ever been in the history of the province. That deficit has been incurred since the Conservatives have been elected in Saskatchewan. For the Hon. Member to say that they did not have a look at the books gives me a feeling of déjà vu. I do not think the people of Saskatchewan buy that and I do not think the people of Canada are going to buy it either. The people of Canada voted overwhelmingly to put the Conservatives into office because they were tired of the Liberals, not because of any of their programs or policies.Those programs and policies did not exist.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. I would like to remind Hon. Members of this House that the first two speakers we have had this morning have referred to a specific absence of other Members from the House. I know this was not meant in any critical way but I ask Hon. Members not to refer specifically to the absence of a Member from the House.

We shall now resume debate with the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey).

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) said yesterday, the difficulty we have with this Bill is not so much in and of the Bill itself but that it has come to us all at once. It is hard to assimilate and it takes time to find out exactly what is happening and what the impact of the Throne Speech, the economic statement and now this borrowing Bill is going to be.

We on this side want to take the time to examine it and do two other things. First of all we want to make sure that our people know exactly what government policy is. Then, as their representatives in this House, we want to stand up and say what they would say if they were here. We are their representatives and our job is to say what they would say if they could be here. I want to try and tell the House and you, Mr.

Speaker, as well as the Government, what my people would say if they were here. I said some of it yesterday in reply to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who made the same point that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made in his speech. That is, that one of the reasons unemployment insurance has to be cut, among other programs, is that there are people in Canada who really are not trying hard enough to get jobs. There are 176,000 jobs, we are told, going begging in this country and now we have the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) hiring 700 people to go around the country and oversee the people who are unemployed. That is 700 new jobs, but what it will do for the unemployed remains to be seen. I do not think it is going to do very much.

Certainly the track record of the Department of Employment and Immigration in finding jobs for people in this country is not that good so far. But the suggestion was made that there were people who were not looking hard enough. In other words, there were Canadians who were lazy, satisfied and content to be on unemployment insurance. I and others in this House reject that as a cynical indictment of Canadian workers, particularly of workers in our own area. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) made that comment yesterday and I pointed out to him and to the House that in my area people have gone all over Canada looking for jobs and have not been able to find them. I wish someone would show me where those 176,000 jobs are, and show the workers in my area, because they certainly want them.

• (1200)

The Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow), who spoke earlier, talked about the elements in Calgary that come from all over the country. I watched her on TV as she spoke about the steel from Ontario and materials from other parts of the country that were being used in Calgary. She said that it was a truly Canadian operation. I accept that. However, she forgot to mention that a lot of the workers there were from the Atlantic provinces. They are there because there are no jobs in the Atlantic provinces. They have had to go elsewhere to look for work.

As I see it, this particular effort is not going to address the needs of the people of Atlantic Canada. I do not see that the effect of this move by the Government will be job creation in the Atlantic provinces, either temporarily or in the long run. If it has a long-run effect, it will be very, very long run.

There are a lot of cuts besides those in unemployment insurance. Eight point five million dollars is being phased out of summer employment for young people. In the Province of Newfoundland 50 per cent of all eligible young people are unemployed. That is staggering. It is a tragedy, Mr. Speaker. I do not think those jobs for young people in the private sector will come overnight or next winter. What do we say to young people in the meantime? Canada student loans as well as other programs will also not be increased. They have depended on Summer Canada but $8.5 million is going to be phased out of that program. Mr. Speaker, if you were a representative of that province, what would you say to the 50 per cent of young people who are unemployed? How would you explain that?

The Canadian Home Insulation Program is being phased out. I think there is a certain argument to be made in favour of that because that is certainly something that people should do on their own. It was an incentive program to encourage people to insulate and improve their houses at a time when energy was a factor and the housing industry needed a shot in the arm. The housing industry has picked up in some parts of the country but not in all parts. This particular move by the Government is indiscriminate. It treats all areas, groups and peoples alike. There is no consideration given for regional differences. The Canadian Home Insulation Program gave a lot of employment to small businesses, carpenters and electricians. It gave a lot of employment to many little people in the rural areas who depended on that program. What is their alternative?

With regard to the fisheries sector, $1.2 million has been cut which was designated for a marine service centre on the Labrador coast. The fishermen in that area are among the most disadvantaged of any in Canada. This will affect Inuit people and fishermen with small boats from small communities in Newfoundland who use those facilities in the summertime. That program was put in place because they need to catch up. It was put in place because the former government believed, as this Party now believes, that our job is to help first those who need it most and to put in place the things which they do not have but need to carry out their occupations. That $1.2 million was slashed indiscriminately with no thought given to what effect it will have on that particular area.

While the fishing industry in the Atlantic is on its knees and struggling for survival, $5 million is cut from the ad campaign attempting to sell fish in the United States. This comes at a time when, because of the strength of the U.S. dollar, the United States is buying a lot of European fish. I do not see how cutting $5 million from the fish promotion program squares with helping the private sector.

Relocation assistance was cut by $2.8 million. Labrador City, in my constituency, produces 50 per cent of all the iron ore in Canada. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will know it well because he was president of the company that operated that particular town. Another town called Schefferville was closed down. I give the Prime Minister his due because he made sure that there were generous benefits made available to the people in Schefferville. I say publicly that that was a magnanimous stroke. Unfortunately, however, the same thing did not happen in Labrador City. There the company was allowed to use contract clauses to renege on severance payments to workers. They were allowed to treat workers as if they were on recall for three years rather than having been laid off. If there had been an upsurge in the iron ore industry in Canada, which everyone knew was not going to happen, at least not overnight, the workers would have been recalled. Therefore, the company was allowed to use that clause to avoid giving severance payments and the generous allowances which were given in Schefferville.

The Government of Canada had to step in and use a program called MILAP which was the successor to the Industrial Labour Adjustments Program. It was specifically designed to help workers, particularly in one-industry towns that had no alternative, to find either retraining or relocation. That is what must happen because even though industries may want to look out for the welfare of their employees, there are industries that cannot do it. These are Canadians who deserve, need and demand help. The Government of Canada must be responsible to help them but relocation assistance has been cut by $2.8 million when there are people with no prospects for alternative employment who need that help. I cannot accept that, Mr. Speaker. Separation payments, unemployment insurance and employment pension income is now going to be considered as income before people can start to draw those benefits anyway.

Returning to the housing industry, in Atlantic Canada and rural areas all across the country RRAP was an important program for people who wanted to renovate, rebuild or reconstruct their houses. A lot of senior citizens and people who could not build new houses took advantage of RRAP. A lot of small businesses that could not find alternatives and needed the work were surviving, to a large degree, on the RRAP program. That has now been cut by $29.4 million. I just hope that the private sector takes that up and the housing industry responds. I just hope that there are job alternatives available for those people so that they will be able to afford it without the help of RRAP. However, I do not see that happening, at least not very quickly.

I would not like to talk about ferry services. I saw the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) here earlier. I know he had to leave but I was hoping he would stay around. If he were here I think he would have to agree with me that to cut ferry services to an island is to cut off a lifeline. The House must understand that. If I did not explain that in the House I would not be doing my job as a representative in this Chamber. There is no other way, except to fly, to get to Prince Edward Island. There are many people who cannot afford to fly, or for some other reason cannot fly in. You cannot fly a tractor into Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland. Ever since we came into confederation in 1949 heavy equipment has been transported by ferry. That ferry service is our trans-Canada highway. It is the only highway we have to that island. The Government, the House and the people who make policy here must understand the effect that policy is going to have on people who live on islands.

I can accept helping the private sector and putting business front and centre. I can accept that in the long run that is the only way we are going to create permanent, lasting jobs in the country. I can accept all that. However, I cannot accept indiscriminate cutting with no thought of the effect it will have, particularly on disadvantaged areas of this country. There are cut-backs of $21.5 million in CN Marine. Airport and marine services are to be reduced and fees are to be increased.

• (1210)

Last week the Canadian Transportation Commission made what I believe to be one of its best reports. It concerned the North. In fact, it was a Conservative Prime Minister, John Diefenbaker, who, in the 1960s, had a vision of the North. If he were in the Chamber today he would be supporting that Canadian Transportation Commission report. He would agree that it would be possible to attract and keep people in the North if the fuel tax and airport fees in the North were eliminated. This would develop the northern area of this country. But if an undue burden is placed on those who already have one of the heaviest burdens to bear in this country, it will decimate and depopulate the North. It will not only be Schefferville that will close down; many other towns in the North besides mining towns will close down. The point I am trying to get across is that the cuts we have seen in those areas of the country will be devastating. I do not see what the alternative will be.

In order to be a good representative of the people I represent, I should point out those measures that I find beneficial in the economic statement. In fact, some of its measures were good. For example, fishermen, loggers, mine operators and farmers may be eligible for a fuel sales tax rebate of three cents per litre beginning in December. That is a good step and I congratulate the Government for it.

Widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 will become eligible for the spouses' allowance program in the fall of 1985. That is a good move and the Government should be congratulated. The fact that veterans' pensions will be improved is a good step and I also congratulate the Government for that.

Finally, tax relief may be offered for termination benefits for workers in shutdowns of isolated one-industry towns. I bet it was the Prime Minister who put that in. The Government should be congratulated for that as well. Those are four measures that will help my people.

However, by and large, the message I must convey to the House is that these cuts will be devastating. I do not see what the alternatives will be. The suggestion is that private enterprise will in some way take up the slack, although we do not know when.

What is the record of private enterprise? In the fishery, for example, both major fishing companies in the Atlantic area were on their knees and virtually bankrupt. Our Government had to step in. The private sector was asked if it had any money to invest in these companies. No one in the private sector came forward to invest in the companies. Therefore, the Government of Canada invested money.

In the case of Fishery Products International, our government, along with the Government of Newfoundland, invested approximately $150 million. Much more must be invested if that company is to be financially stable. That industry is struggling and the record of private enterprise in that particular industry is anything but excellent.

Therefore we must ask if we can have confidence in the private sector in that particular industry. While that confidence may come about in the future, in the meantime I see these cuts putting a burden on fishermen who can least afford to bear that burden. The effect of that invested money has been to help some of the banks perhaps, but it has not helped too many fishermen in any substantial way.

What about forestry? The Government has also helped in forestry. While that industry is in difficulty, it is not as severe as the fishery. When the Government helps an industry in the forestry sector to modernize a mill, for example, it means the addition of new technology. New technology in and of itself does not create new jobs but eliminates jobs. Therefore, as a result of giving health to the forest industry through stability and modernization, some jobs have been eliminated. There is a vacuum in job creation which I do not see being filled by the forestry sector.

What about mining? I have talked about one mining town in particular but I believe it is general knowledge that this industry all across Canada is struggling in a very tough market-place. While some are doing much better than others, there certainly will not be a dramatic growth in the mining industry in the near future. In the meantime, how will those jobs be provided?

We are told that we should not look to those major corporations and multinational firms to create the jobs but that the real vitality in the private sector will be in small business. I support that concept. In this respect I have a great deal of time for the President of the Canadian Federation of Small Business. However, I would ask him to give details of where those 176,000 jobs are that he talks about because I want to get after the firms that have them. While there no longer is a relocation allowance, I want to find a way to send my people there.

I have a lot of time for his organization because I believe that the vitality of the economy will be with small business. However, this revitalization will not occur if the Government takes such action as cutting tourism out of the Industrial Regional Development Program. That program is one of the major tools the Government has now to assist private enterprise. I might say that the tourism industry includes many small businesses and employs many semi-skilled and non-skilled people. I believe that that industry has great potential in this country and it is surely not an incentive for private enterprise if the Government does not allow it to qualify under the IRDP.

I repeat that while the economic statement has some good points, the over-all cuts will have a devastating effect in the Atlantic area and I do not see where the slack will be taken up or how those cuts will be healed by the private sector. I believe the Government must reconsider its policy in this respect, to see how it affects the disadvantaged areas of the country, particularly northern and rural areas. I would ask the Government to do that because, if it does not, it will eventually pay the political price and will not return to this Chamber with the kind of majority it has today.

Mr. Duguay: Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on a question the Hon. Member asked during the course of his speech. He wanted to know what we would say to young people in Canada this summer. He was referring to the Summer Canada cuts.

Let me tell the Hon. Member that as a person who has spent nearly 20 years working with young people, there is one message that I do not want to give them. It is the message that the previous government gave them during the last 20 years, that the solution to the problem of jobs is to mortgage the future, to borrow money that we cannot afford to borrow and to create jobs that do not produce anything in this economy.

There are examples of some of the jobs that were created by this program. For instance, it was a young person's job to post CEIC posters, giving credit for the summer jobs to the Minister.

I am concerned about young people but I want them to learn something about the realities of life; the fact that jobs do not appear out of thin air and that make-work jobs are not necessarily jobs that create work. I want young people to learn that a free lunch is not a birthright.

The previous speaker alluded to the fact that Tory times mean massive deficits—

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought this was a 10 minute period for questions. I would like to ask a question if the Hon. member is not going to take the whole period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions or comments allows Members to make comments. I would ask, however, that the Hon. Member make his comment within a reasonably short period of time.

Mr. Duguay: My comment will be short, Mr. Speaker. The previous speaker alluded to the fact that Tory times mean massive deficits and used the NDP example in Saskatchewan. It seems to me that one look at the Province of Manitoba, the only NDP government in this country, would illustrate what kind of deficit it has created.

Mr. Rossi: That has nothing to do with jobs.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) made a very thoughtful speech and covered several areas of interest to the Government. Actually he was very complimentary to the Government in several ways. He made reference to devastation that he suggests will come as a result of the belt-tightening that we are doing with the complete mandate of the Canadian people. Could he give us any idea whether or not he feels the devastation that he predicts will be anything comparable to the devastation which his Party suffered on September 4?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to rest safe and assure the seat he has in the security of the Government, he can do that. But there is another election coming. That is what we are fighting. Right here, now, today, we are fighting the next election. My policy, and I have gone through five elections, has always been to fight the next election the day after the last one is over. What we are doing here today is fighting the next election. We will see what is going to happen in four years' time. The people of Canada have chosen. I give the Hon. Member credit. We will see what happens in four years' time. I tell the Hon. Member now, as I told the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) the other day, that if his Government pursues this policy he will see that he will not be back on that side of the House in four years' time. If the Hon. Member for St. John's West believes that, I say to him again, as I said to him the other day: "Come now, debate with me in my riding. Run against me in four years' time and we will see who wins".

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member. We hear so frequently from Conservative Members of Parliament about the tremendous advantages of the private sector and we hear criticisms of the public sector. My friend, the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay), just spoke about some of Canada's make-work projects as if that were bad. Would the Hon. Member take a few moments and explain what happened in the fishing industry on the East Coast? My impression is that private sector companies were going bankrupt, that there were so many people working in the industry that governments, not socialist governments but the federal Liberal government, and one or two provincial Conservative governments, had to step in and make it, at least in part, a public enterprise. Maybe the Hon. Member could give us a few details on that.

Mr. Rompkey: I alluded to that in my speech, Mr. Speaker. It is a good question. That is virtually what happened. The private sector was in trouble across the board. Some of the smaller companies are doing very well, but the major companies in Atlantic Canada were in real trouble. Most of them, with the exception of National Sea Products, were on the verge of bankruptcy, not because of either a Conservative, Liberal, or NDP government or the fishermen, or the stocks, or anything like that; it was their inability to compete in the marketplace with the Scandinavians and others. The private sector was just not doing the job. Both governments, the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland, are in a partnership to try and do that particular job.

I made the point, and the point has been made again, that while I support, by and large, the theory that it has to be the private sector, and particularly small business, which creates long-term jobs, you have to question certain areas, particularly the one which the Hon. Member mentioned. The private sector's track record does not lead us to believe that it is going to do the kind of excellent job that we hope the private sector is going to be able to do.

I would like to take one more minute to speak about the fishermen. The situation for fishermen is even worse in some areas of the country. When the Hon. Member talks about devastation—and I raised this problem with the Minister of Employment and Immigration—there are in-shore fishermen in Newfoundland this year who will not get any benefits at all. In the community of Griquet, for example, on the northern peninsula of Newfoundland, there are probably 100 such fishermen. Probably the total fishing force of that community will not qualify for un employent insurance because the fish did not come.

This is something you have to appreciate about fishing. It is not quite the same as farming. First, there are not the same safety nets. Second, we are equally vulnerable to the kinds of hazards nature inflicts upon us. This year was a staggering year for the in-shore fishermen. Instead of cutting unemployment insurance, what the Government should be doing is instituting special programs to help those fishermen who are affected.

Mr. Nickerson: I have a question for the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey). His presentation dealt almost exclusively with decrying the Government for trying to put some realism into the national finances and therefore having to cut back on some expenditures. He exhorted the Government to spend even more money, especially in his particular area. Do I take it that the position of the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador and the Liberal Party of Canada is that $23 billion of new borrowing authority is not enough, that they would prefer perhaps $50 billion of new borrowing authority, money that would then at some point in time have to be repaid with interest?

Mr. Rompkey: It is not my job to propose, Mr. Speaker. That is the Government's job. My job as a repesentative is to stand here in the Chamber and to say what effect the policy of the Government is going to have on my people. That is the duty of the Hon. Member as well. I would say to the Hon. Member that the increase in the fuel tax, the increase in airport fees and the other measures to be taken will be just as devastating in the Western Arctic as Labrador. I do not know how he is going to explain that to his people but I would not want to have to explain it to mine.

Mr. Baker: I have a comment and I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I have to congratulate the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) on talking about the importance of having direct job creation programs, as he said, in rural areas, high unemployment areas. It appears to be a fixation with this Government to treat everybody across the country alike. As the Hon. Member said, they are doing away with direct job-creation programs.

We had an intervention from the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay). The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) "didn't understand it at all. He said the Minister of Employment and Immigration will be developing new programs to provide permanent jobs for our youth. Therefore, the Summer Canada program will as a result be terminated".

How stupid, Mr. Speaker. You do not give a student looking for a job for the summer a permanent job. What he is really referring to is private enterprise. Private enterprise does not exist in the high unemployment areas of the hon. gentleman's province. It does not exist. You must have direct job-creation programs. A community group applies for the program to carry out an activity. For somebody to stand in this House and say that was a waste of money and that the students were not doing anything is to criticize the local community group that applied to the government for the money.

If this Government is sincere about being concerned about students, it will have to turn around next summer and have the same kind of job creation program for students as the former Liberal government had. If it does not, then it can wave good-bye to any credibility which it has in high unemployment areas of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has now expired. We will resume debate.

• (1230)

Mr. Stewart McInnes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in viewing the activities in the House I have been aroused and at times interested by the comments from the island of red interspersed with pink. However, I have gained heart and confidence when I have heard utterings from the sea of blue from time to time.

At this particular time I am compelled to recall a certain passage from A Tale of Two Cities by Charles Dickens. I should like to quote a passage from that bible and draw attention to the following well-known words:

> It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness, it was the epoch of belief, it was the epoch of incredulity, it was the season of Light, it was the season of Darkness, it was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair, we had everything before us, we had nothing before us, we were all going direct to Heaven, we were all going direct the other way—in short, the period was so far like the present period, that some of its noisiest authorities insisted on its being received, for good or for evil, in the superlative degree of comparison only.

The Liberals in their new-found station in life on the benches opposite, of course, will recognize that on September 4 Canadians said that it was the worst of times, that it was the age of foolishness, that it was the epoch of incredulity, that it was the age of darkness—and indeed it is for them—and that it was the winter of despair, which again is here for the Liberal party. If this is true, the Liberals will recognize that they were the authors of their own misfortune. Their hollow cries of objection can be nothing more than a knee-jerk reaction. If they paused and reflected, they would fully realize that they have created the mess in which we find ourselves today.

I have reservations about standing to support the massive borrowing Bill before us today, but there is no alternative. However, we on this side of the House believe, as the people of Canada agreed on September 4—and I am persuaded that they will reaffirm their belief in years to come—that this can be the best of times. They recognize that this is now a new age of wisdom, that we are at the commencement of a new epoch of belief, that there is a season of light, that we are on the dawn of a spring of hope and that we have everything before us. There is only one way to go, and that is up. Based upon the formulae, the confidence the Government has instilled in Canadians and the principles enunciated in the economic statement, that is the path Canada will now take.

I compare the situation in Canada to a dike and the sea. For the past number of years we have had a drip and a drip and a drip, increasing to two drips and three drips, until many holes appeared in the dike on which only band-aids, splashes of cement or chewing gum were applied. They were band-aid measures. There has been such an increase in the holes in the dike that it is in danger of collapse. Now more than temporary mortar or temporary band-aids must be applied to deal with this situation.

What is needed are structural changes in the dike. We have to start all over again because what we have had until now has apparently not worked. We will consult with structural engineers and architects in Canada. We will convene meetings and enter into dialogue with masons, carpenters and all people who are part of the central ingredient of our economy. It takes time to draft a new structure. We cannot build by copying the last structure, the one which failed. We have to return to the drawing-board and start again.

That is the intention of the Government. We also intend to consult with all people who are essential to and form a necessary component or part of the economic structure of Canada. We have set a course of action to speak with the provinces, labour, business and the people. We have spoken with the people. We have touched upon possible solutions. We have given them an indication of where we might go, and they have applauded. However, we have only started. We have only given a hint, a blueprint. Now we must fill in the details. But that can be done only after realizing that we have consulted and listened. We will ensure that the repercussions of our plans will be minimal on any group or any person who feels aggrieved or adversely affected. This is the new process of consultation into which this Government enters.

Indeed, we are prepared to listen to Hon. Members opposite who from time to time have given us some constructive ideas on how we might proceed. The last speaker from Newfoundland indicated that he had no obligation or duty to propose, only to criticize. He contradicted what previous speakers in his Party said only yesterday. They indicated that they had an obligation to enter into the dialogue and to participate. This is what this Government and this Party invite all Hon. Members of the House to do—to be constructive rather than just critical.

As members of the House collectively and individually, we have an obligation to rethink the process. What we have today is what we asked for. We are where we are because that is what the people of Canada asked of us. We have responded to their pleas over the years in endeavouring, particularly at election time, to appease them and console them. Collectively we have failed. I suggest the reason we have collectively failed is that there has been no leadership to indicate the direction we should take. Now we have leadership, tarting with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), down to the Cabinet, down to the Conservative Party and down, I hope, to all Hon. Members of the House. The Prime Minister indicated by way of leadership that he would take a personal salary cut. The members of his Cabinet indicated that they were prepared to accept a cut in salary. Leadership is starting from the very top. It is in the interests of this country to follow. We cannot survive and we will not respond unless we follow. Members of this Party are prepared to follow a new course, a new direction. We are prepared to accept that new attitudes are required in order to change the basic structure and philosophy of this country.

We have an obligation collectively and individually to go back to our ridings, our church halls, judo clubs, all our community enterprises, all those groups which are well merited, well meaning and an integral part of our whole system. We have to tell them that times have changed, that they must be an integral part of the new system, the new attitudes and the new philosophy, that they cannot now make their first approach to government. Everybody must say: "Government is our very last resort".

The philosophy prevailing, the course of action followed year after year, has been built into a habit that is almost irreversible. This has caused the dike to collapse. The attitude that must now be adopted by each one of us is to say: "Government is a matter of last recourse". We recognize there are certain persons in our society who are not able to respond and are not capable of handling their own circumstances. For those people we will provide, guarantee and ensure their stability and all their essential needs.

For all others for which there is an option, our thrust must now be: What can we do for ourselves? In order to ensure that there is some initiative, some stimulus, some new direction, we must ensure that there is this new ingredient, this new understanding, this new willingness, collectively and individually among all of us—you, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, myself and all Members — in order for the welfare of this country to go forward and prosper. We must gather in a united effort and say: "Yes, we are going to try something new".

We have tried all the other means. We tried those remedies that parallel the rescue effort to stem the tide behind the dike. We have heard rumblings of water over here. We threw money. There was a hole on this side of the dike. We threw more money. We have had agitations. We tried more intermediate and shortterm solutions, but never in the last 25 years has a constructive, national effort been made to harmonize and gather together the will of the nation.

Why is it that people in Canada fight for the right not to work more but to work less? Why is it that it is government this, government that, government stimulus, government monies, and pogey? Where did all this come from?

What is it that goes on south of the border that makes people there so different? What is it that compels those people to gather in line-ups outside their cities at 5.30 in the morning, bumper to bumper, to go into the cities for the right and privilege to work? What compels them? What is the initiative? It is the initiative of prosperity. They realize they have the right to gather together and enjoy the fruits of their labour, to participate and enjoy the profits. That is a joy and a happiness which they have cherished, which they have mastered. There is a national will and a national consensus because there is national leadership. That is what we have lacked for the last number of years, leadership. That is the hope and the new dawn for Canada—new leadership and new attitudes.

What should this Government do? It should not employ any more people. Government payrolls are large. They are exhausted. The Government of Canada does not want to increase the number of employees. We want to let our employees go. Where are they going to go? They are going to go to the new jobs created by the new attitudes, new initiatives and new stimulus that this Government is going to provide.

Mr. Riis: You sound like Bill Bennett.

Mr. McInnes: Perhaps the other side of the coin is President Mitterrand. Perhaps I should adopt the utterings and the philosophy, the encouragement and the initiatives of my learned friend. I have heard them. President Mitterrand and the French tried it. They are in retreat. They are in retreat faster than Napoleon could ever get out of Russia.

We can derive direction and inspiration. We have the benefit of the experience of Margaret Thatcher. Margaret Thatcher is loved by her people, not because she is a woman, not because she is handsome but because she is resolute. She has an idea. She has a purpose. She has confidence. Guess what is happening in Britain for the first time in 25 years? There is a national will. The national will has been reflected in the resolution of the people. Every time they have the opportunity to affirm her in the polls, they do so.

Mr. Riis: Read a single book about what is going on over there.

Mr. McInnes: I hear the Hon. Member, who was rather effusive in his suggestions during my last remarks, say: "What is the Government doing for small business? How is it helping?"

Mr. Riis: I said that?

Mr. McInnes: The record will show the Hon. Member said that. Small business, as large business, as individuals now have another chance. I will give an example of how the people of Canada will respond to the new direction and the new initiatives.

In conversation the other day, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated to us that he had received a telephone call from a gentleman 93 years of age. This gentleman had abandoned the economy and the business in which he had been involved. He had thrown up his hands and said: "There is no hope, there is no reason, there is no encouragement and private enterprise has no place in this society". That was some years ago when he was at the ripe old age of 85. He had been wandering, meandering, trying to find a path where he might proceed, the promised land, so to speak.

After the economic message was delivered by the Minister of Finance, this 93 year old gentleman purchased a company employing 125 people. He indicated he has plans to add another 50 employees to the payroll of that company within the next six months.

When I hear my friends on repeated occasions asking: "Where are the new jobs coming from? Give us some evidence, some indication that private companies and individuals will respond", I give this as an example of what we can anticipate. There will not be 125 or 200 jobs, but hundreds and thousands of jobs created, because this is a new Canada. We do have new attitudes. Of course, on other occasions our friends have asked: "Where are the jobs? You have been in business for two months". It takes time to build a dike, Mr. Speaker. We must create and build a new dike. We must consult and that is the direction of this Government and Cabinet.

I should like to applaud the leadership of our Party. I ask my friends to enter into the dialogue in which we are involved and return to their constituents to say: "What we tried before obviously did not work. There is new hope. Let us be constructive, let us get together". This is a new era and a new beginning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Halifax (Mr. McInnes) that I was amazed to hear him suggest very clearly that there are all kinds of people in Canada, including those in his area, who are not working because they really do not want to work. If the Hon. Member looks at tomorrows's Hansard, he will see that he did say that. I believe that that just is not true. The City of Halifax has an unemployment rate of over 12 per cent and it is the city that is the best off in Atlantic Canada. To suggest that the people of Atlantic Canada are not working because they do not want to work and would rather collect unemployment insurance benefits is to insult those people in a way which he or any other Member ought not to do.

How can the Hon. Member think that his have-not province can be helped when the Government has reduced the funding for regional economic expansion by $200 million? A substantial part of that funding would have gone to Atlantic Canada. How can the Hon. Member think that his region, a region in which two of the major industries are fishery and forestry, can prosper when the Government has reduced funding to research and development in those two fields by $1.5 million each? How does he think that the fishermen in his province can prosper when the ferry service from Yarmouth to Boston on which fish were transported at pretty low costs has been stopped? How can those fishermen be helped now when the ferry service has been taken away and they will have to travel hundreds of miles to deliver their produce, increasing the price they have to charge and making it more difficult to compete? I would like the Hon. Member to explain to the House and more particularly to the people of Atlantic Canada how these cut-backs which the Government has implemented will help those people. We believe that those cut-backs will hurt them and will hurt them very seriously.

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for bringing up this particular question. It is an area with which I have considerable experience. I have been involved indirectly in the fishing industry for a good number of years. The situation in the industry has been rather chaotic in the past number of years. The plans of this Government relative to the fishing industry will give it a direction instead of hodge-podge, massive regulation and intervention by government.

With respect to economic development, what the Government is going to provide and what the province wants are incentives. The province wants investment. Where will that investment come from? It can come from two sources. It can come from within Canada and from outside our borders. Nova Scotia has benefited dramatically and perhaps more per capita than any other region in Canada from outside investment. As an example of this, I would mention Michelin, the biggest employer in Nova Scotia. I would mention Nova Scotia Forest Industries and Volvo. There are a large number of good foreign corporate citizens in Nova Scotia. Unfortunately, this investment has slowed down because of FIRA and the attitude toward foreign investment of the previous government. It is our intention to change those rules dramatically. Our province looks forward to a new era of prosperity because people from foreign lands are knocking on our doors. They wish to do business in Nova Scotia, a province in which the people want to work and which has the climate for prosperity and making a real profit.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spoke about small business. I wonder if he is aware that all of the business associations in the country agree that payroll taxes affect the life of business. The first thing the Government did was increase payroll taxes by increasing UIC premiums. Can the Hon. Member explain how small business can put this Government in a new light?

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, it is good of the Hon. Member to remind the House that the situation in which the unemployment insurance fund now finds itself is accountable to the mismanagement of the Party of which he is a member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McInnes: It is necessary to apply a little medicine. The people of Canada are prepared to accept a little short-term pain with the confidence and understanding that, because of the new initiatives of the Government, it is only for the short term. In the long term, unemployment insurance premiums will not pose the problem they have always posed under his government.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, when I consider the speech by the Hon. Member for Halifax (Mr. McInnes), in which he said that they will be providing new stimuli for industry and help for small businesses, I find it very difficult to understand what he means. I think we do not give quite the same meaning to the words we use, especially when we are talking about the tourist industry. In his statement, the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced a number of cutbacks that will have a specific impact on ferry services in the Atlantic provinces, services that are vital to the tourist industry. It is going to cost a lot more to use the ferry. We are increasing admission fees to National Parks, airport taxes and the excise tax on alcoholic beverages Mr. Speaker, when those very same Members were in the opposition last spring they were deploring the fact that the Government was taking such measures. Now, they refer to them as stimuli.

I wish the Hon. Member would explain how these cutbacks could act as a stimulus for the tourist industry.

[English]

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, that is a very valid and reasonable inquiry. There is prima facie some merit in what the Hon. Member has said. There may be an adverse reaction in the tourism industry. The tourism industry is a very important component of my constituency and is important to all Nova Scotians. However, I have had the benefit of analysis and consultations with people in the tourist trade. They have persuaded me, as I would echo to the Hon. Member, that in order to continue to encourage tourists to come to Canada, and particularly to Nova Scotia, we must build an infrastructure. We must ensure that proper tourist facilities are in place. The quality of our tourist trade has deteriorated in the last few years. There are fewer people coming to Nova Scotia now than there were five years ago. Again, it is a very basic problem.

We need some new money to build up the infrastructure to ensure that we can compete with other countries for the tourist dollar. That is the intention of these new tolls and raises. They again provide short-term pain but we need new funds. We cannot keep grabbing and grabbing from nowhere. There must be something there to grab. That is what it is all about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) on a short comment or question.

Mr. Stewart: Whether Canadians do or do not want to work, in view of the differences of opinions between those on this side of the House and those on the other side of the House, what does the Hon. Member think about the Canadian Federation of Independent Business which identified last year that we paid out some $800 million to voluntary quits?

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the presidents of small business organizations and all business organizations across Canada are applauding the economic statement and the new principles of doing business in Canada as enunciated by the economic statement of the Minister of Finance. I believe the people of Canada, in editorial comment—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. Since it is now one o'clock, I do leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

FISHERIES

CANCELLATION OF FISHING VESSEL INSURANCE SCHEME

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the Government of Canada to cancel or revise its decision to do away with the fishing vessel insurance scheme which it announced last week.

This decision will mean the doubling and, in some cases, the tripling of the insurance costs to fishermen, when they go to private insurance companies. Worse than that, it will mean that a great many of the fishermen—I estimate about half of the boat owners in Newfoundland—will not qualify for insurance from private insurance companies. The real problem arises in that the provincial Fisheries Loan Board demands that fishermen must have insurance before they can get loans from provincial government boards. Any insurance policies which are cancelled in the meantime will obviously mean that the loans will become due.

I would strongly suggest that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should at least consult with the provincial Governments, the processors, the fishermen's unions and the insurance companies, and revise the decision which was made.

GOVERNMENT PAYMENTS TO NIAGARA GRAPE FARMERS

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on a matter that has concerned the grape farmers of the Niagara Peninsula for some time. I am referring to the grape surplus that has been anticipated by the farming community since last June. The problem has arisen for several reasons, the primary reason being the dumping of subsidized European wines in Canada. These low-priced imports have caused a decreased demand for domestic wines, which is unfortunate, because my constituents and I have known for some time that the Niagara Peninsula contains some of the world's finest wine producing land.

Last July when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) visited the area he assured the farmers that, just as in previous Conservative administrations, their concerns would not be forgotten and the surplus would be taken up. Therefore, I was extremely pleased when this past week the Department of Agriculture began mailing cheques to our grape producers, covering 100 per cent of the surplus at 100 per cent of the cost—again demonstrating this Government's commitment to the agricultural community. Therefore, four years from now, farmers, along with other Canadians, are going to be able to say: "There were promises made, but more important, those promises were kept".

THE HON. STANLEY KNOWLES

DISTINGUISHED PARLIAMENTARY SERVICE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is the forty-second anniversary of the first election to the House of Commons of the Hon. Stanley Knowles.

Mr. Knowles served in this Chamber as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre for almost 38 years. Every time we hear the words "Winnipeg North Centre", we are reminded of Stanley's unrivalled contribution toward ordinary Canadians.

His contribution is being recognized in Toronto tomorrow, which is why he cannot be here with us. So, I want to acknowledge his presence and his distinguished service, today. His mastery of parliamentary procedure enabled him to work effectively for ordinary Canadians, prodding and demanding action from successive Governments, for the elderly, the ill, and the unemployed. All Canadians can feel more secure and less fearful in their retirement years as a result of the work of the former Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Stanley, we salute you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Whereupon the Members rose in tribute.

EMPLOYMENT

MANNER IN WHICH SERVICES OFFERED BY EMPLOYMENT CENTRES

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate you on your appointment and also take advantage of this opportunity to congratulate the Members of this House, especially the women who were elected on September 4.

I want to draw the attention of the House to a situation that is prevalent in Canada Employment Centres. The way public servants who dispense the services of this Department deal with clients is absolutely appalling. I often hear about such things from my constituents, and from conversations I have had with my hon. colleagues, I understand the same is true elsewhere. It is bad enough to be unemployed, but being treated without respect is even worse. For instance, it is impossible to get through to an Employment Centre officer by phone, since the lines are always busy. People have to deal with several officers who fail to provide for follow-up. On top of that there is a lot of waiting in line, and once they get to the counter, people are often told to see another officer. The impression is that courtesy is definitely expendable. I therefore think it is absolutely essential the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) be made aware of the way services are offered in Employment Centres, so that the Minister will be able to act without delay to humanize the process in all offices across Canada.

I would like to remind Hon. Members that Parliament and the Administration are supposed to serve the people of this country and not the other way around. This is something that was forgotten by the previous Government.

IMMIGRATION

GOVERNMENT POLICY REVISION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Employment and Immigration appeared before the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration this week, I was given the assurance that any changes in immigration policy would be made in a spirit that would respect our humanitarian tradition.

To prove this guarantee was genuine, the Minister of Employment and Immigration pointed out past commitments, including the program for sponsoring refugees from Indo-China, started in 1979 when she headed the Department of External Affairs. The program was organized as follows: the Government would sponsor one refugee for each refugee sponsored by a private group. This program is not a very convincing example, because the Minister will recall that five months after the program was introduced, it was terminated by the Progressive Conservative Government which preferred to let the United Nations provide assistance to Cambodia. This decision put private sponsors in a difficult situation, since they then had to take charge of the refugees the Government had promised to sponsor. Therefore, although I certainly do not for a moment doubt the Minister's good faith, I will take her promises with a grain of salt, and I remain convinced that some drastic changes are in the offing with respect to our immigration policy.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

FUNDY-ROYAL RURAL POST OFFICES—ANNOUNCED REDUCTIONS IN SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, several small rural post offices in Fundy-Royal and throughout Canada have been advised that their hours of operation will be reduced. In some cases the reductions have come in the form of closures all day Saturday and Wednesday afternoon. The announcement has caused considerable concern to the small communities. Postal services are, for many people, a critical and vital part of their personal and business concerns.

The people of Fundy-Royal understand that the Post Office Corporation is committed to providing efficient and effective service while attempting to whittle away its massive debt. However, there is a general fear that rural service is being sacrificed in the effort. In the past few years rural communities have witnessed a steady deterioration of services, most particularly the elimination of Saturday delivery. They do not want to see their service further reduced.

Closure of post offices on Saturday eliminates the only opportunity a great many patrons have for using postal facilities. Reduced hours of operation place additional restrictions on the accessibility of rural residents to this essential service. The post office is the lifeblood of many small and rural communities, and such cut-backs are always sorely and deeply felt.

I urge the Postmaster General and his officials to study carefully the effects of these closures on the affected communities, and recommend that the services and hours of operation previously provided to these patrons be maintained.

LOCAL AND REGIONAL FRENCH PROGRAMMING OUTSIDE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, last week, the Fédération des francophones hors Québec asked the federal Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to intervene and ensure that local and regional programming at the CBC French network outside Quebec would not be cut as part of the budgetary cutbacks planned by the Minister of Finance.

I hope the Minister of Communications supports the position taken by the Fédération, Mr. Speaker. The CBC French network's radio and television programs are sometimes the only source of information in French for most francophone communities outside Quebec.

It is absolutely vital that the Minister of Communication immediately inform the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that French local and regional programming outside Quebec is an inviolable part of the CBC's mandate.

IMPORTANCE OF AID TO FARMERS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): In Quebec today, Mr. Speaker, the Union of Agricultural Producers is celebrating its 60 years of farm activism. I should like to emphasize the untiring efforts of thousands of volunteers who have worked for over half a century to defend our farmers' interests.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the House briefly of a number of claims made by Quebec farmers: a greater involvement of the Farm Credit Corporation in financing; interest rates not exceeding 10 per cent; a long term dairy policy reflecting production costs; programs oriented toward young farmers; a reassessment of the deregulation plan; the renewal of federal-provincial agreements concerning the development of privately-owned forests; an increased support for the marketing of new products such as sheep production.

Mr. Speaker, the farmers' claims have been denied for 15 years. Our government must help farmers to prosper. Only in this way will Right Hon. Brian Mulroney's commitment to make Canada a truly agricultural superpower really come true.

TOURISM

IMPACT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge the minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and, in particular, the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan), to change the regressive actions announced in the economic statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). We in this Party were amazed to learn that the minister brought in a reduction of $200 million to the IRDIA Program. In particular, he has savaged the tourism industry by making projects under IRDIA ineligible for tourism. This will have a great effect on a lot of small tourist operators right across the country, in particular in those poorer regions of Canada which have based their small economies on the tourism industry.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that some of this will be taken up by provincial and federal agreements on tourism, but the small operator in Atlantic Canada, in Quebec or western Canada, does not have any access whatsoever to dollars under the IRDIA Program. I urge the Minister of State for Tourism, and in particular the minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, to change these regressive policies and replace them with what existed previously.

STATUS OF WOMEN

IMPORTANCE OF POLICY ELABORATION

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the Abella report deals extensively with the principle of equal pay for work of equal value. I would like to point out to Hon. Members an important aspect of that issue which the group Recherche Action Lotbinière Inc. brought to light. The results of a survey indicate that 48 per cent of the respondents stated that they have some income from work outside their home, and 80 per cent of those working women are paid less than $15,000 a year. Seamstresses and baby-sitters are paid between 30 cents and $1.50 an hour and 51 per cent of them would like to work outside their home if they could.

Consequently, most women in Lotbinière, that is 76 per cent, are not financially independent.

In addition, I would like to point out that 87 per cent of the women are working in service industries which are the most affected by technological changes.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make the House more sensitive to that important issue before policies on the status of women are developed.

INDUSTRY

ONTARIO DAIRY INDUSTRY—PLEA FOR BETTER MILK QUOTA

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, cheese and butter makers in western Ontario have had to lay off workers and close factories, not because of the economy but because they have been unable to get enough milk to meet the demand for their products. Studies done for processors further indicate that this longstanding problem will get worse unless the supply of industrial milk in Ontario is increased.

It is ironic that, although Ontario has 40 per cent of Canada's population, the province is allowed only 31.3 per cent of Canada's production of industrial milk. The Province of Quebec has 48 per cent of the national quota, which is surplus to its needs. Processors there are selling tons of butter and skim milk powder to the federal dairy commission which exports these products, often at prices below cost. A better and more realistic way would be for the Ontario processors to be given an opportunity to buy the surplus quota from Quebec.

Therefore I call upon the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to use his good offices to look into this longstanding problem and come forth with solutions that would assure the continued viability of the cheese and butter industry of Ontario, which is facing a very difficult time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNLICENSED CABLE TELEVISION OPERATORS—STAY OF PROSECUTIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Prime Minister. A report in The Globe and Mail of November 27 suggests that the Prime Minister intervened with the Attorney General of Canada in order to have the Attorney General desist from prosecuting unlicensed cable television operators after he had already given the go-ahead to prosecute. The story says that the word came from the Prime Minister's Office.

I want to outline the importance of the question, Sir. I believe the principle has been established, both in this Parliament and at Westminster, that the discretion to prosecute by an Attorney General is an unfettered one and must not be interfered with or influenced by political considerations, even by his Cabinet colleagues. Sir Harold Macmillan stated the principle clearly when he said: "A tradition long supported by all political parties is that the decision whether any citizen should be prosecuted or whether any prosecution should be discontinued should be a matter for the prosecuting authorities to decide on the merits of the case without political or other pressure."

My question is: Did the Prime Minister or his staff direct that the Attorney General of Canada desist from that prosecution?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, not directly or indirectly did I ever at any time or in any circumstances intervene with the Attorney General of Canada, who is charged with and fulfils the responsibility of making these determinations by himself. He is a man of honour and conscience, and I think he does it extremely well.

NEWSPAPER REPORT OF CAUCUS PRESSURE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the same report indicates that members of the Conservative caucus put pressure on the Attorney General to desist. Can the Prime Minister affirm or deny the fact that pressure was put upon the Attorney General by members of his caucus?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my right hon. friend knows of the unquestioned integrity of the Attorney General. I can speak for myself and indicate that at no time, in any way, did I bring such a suggestion to the Hon. Minister. I believe that if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition were to address the question to the Minister of Justice he would confirm that no other member of the caucus did, as well.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Perhaps the Attorney General was simply kidding about this matter yesterday afternoon in the House? Perhaps he might make a full statement on the circumstances related to the fact that the prosecution has been stayed or ended.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. gentleman finally got around to asking me about this question because, if you want an answer, you have to go to the horse's mouth. Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: What does that make the Prime Minister?

Mr. Axworthy: We went to the other end this time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: In this case, Mr. Speaker, the other end of the horse asked the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, as Attorney General I made a decision that certain prosecutions would have to be stayed because I was advised that the Government was reconsidering its policy in the area of communications and in this area.

Ms. Copps: Who advised you?

Mr. Crosbie: I was advised by the Government that it was changing its policy—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —and the Minister—what a bunch of juveniles.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I was advised by the Minister of Communications that the Government had agreed with him to review the policy in this case, and it did not seem fair to me to go ahead and prosecute these eight or nine satellite operations in view of the fact that the policy might well be changed in the very near future. That is why the prosecutions are stayed. If there is no change in policy, the prosecutions will be going ahead again.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the assurances which the Prime Minister has just given that he did not give direction, which assurances we must accept, I would like to ask the Minister to look at the answer he gave yesterday, which is to the contrary. He said he does accept direction from the Prime Minister in the exercise of his prosecutorial discretion. Would he agree that statements like that bring the administration of justice into disrepute?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I did not say yesterday that I accepted any directions from the Prime Minister, or anyone else, in connection with my duties as Attorney General. If the hon. gentleman got that impression, may I straighten him out today. I do not accept directions from anyone with respect to my duties as Attorney General. I seek advice. I will get the advice of my officials. I will hear representations, and if any Member of the House wants to make a representation to me I will take that representation for whatever it is worth. That is how I intend to proceed. I have never been dictated to by anyone in my life, and I do not intend to start now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I gather the Attorney General of Canada has had a pretty interesting evening between giving yesterday's answers and today's.

ROLE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a statement which the Minister made yesterday which he must also correct. He said that he is a legal agent for a Department that has brought to his attention the violation of a federal statute. Would the Minister confirm that he is not in a client-legal agent relationship, but that he is in fact the chief law officer of the Crown when it is brought to his attention that a federal statute has been violated? Would he confirm that his prosecutorial authority applies to his behaviour and to the conduct of that proceeding, and that he is not just some mouthpiece or law office acting for a Department? He was wrong about that yesterday as well.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has even asked for my resignation. I did not realize that I had committed such serious offences. However, if I ever do resign, or am asked to resign, I certainly am not going to cry about it, nor stir up any interest group to come to my protection.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: It all depends on the particular case involved. As Attorney General I am responsible for seeing that the laws of Canada are administered properly and obeyed. I also look upon it as a solicitor-client relationship with certain Departments and agencies when they ask the Government to ask for them. In certain cases we act as an agent. We act as an agent for the CRTC or for other government bodies. I am always willing to accept the advice and suggestions of the official critic opposite.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair cannot accept points of order during Question Period.

ENERGY

REDUCTION IN CRUDE OIL EXPORT PRICE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Government has increased the petroleum compensation charge from $4.19 to $6.54 per barrel. At the same time the export charge for Canadian crude oil has been lowered from $6.43 a barrel to $4.68 a barrel and is currently in place at the lower rate. As the Minister well knows, this results in Canadian crude being sold on the U.S. markets at a price cheaper than it can be purchased in Canada by Canadian refineries. Why does the Government permit this to occur?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the issue addressed by the Hon. Member is a good example of why we are moving away from the terribly rigid pricing apparatus which was imposed by the previous administration. The problem that arises is that, in the very competitive oil and gas market which we face today, Chicago prices are below current world prices. That gives us a problem at the border. When we go to world prices, as we have indicated we will, we will be able to avoid this type of problem.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ELIMINATE PETROLEUM COMPENSATION CHARGE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is relatively simple. Why does the Government not move now, in the interests of the Canadian consumers and farmers who have to pay the higher price, to eliminate, once and for all, the petroleum compensation charge?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Member asked that question. It gives me an opportunity to explain that the previous administration left us with a $1 billion deficit in that account, because they broke their own agreement and refused to raise prices last year in the middle of their leadership campaign when they should have done so. We have a $1 billion deficit which we must deal with. We are dealing with it in negotiations with the provinces. At this moment we are not in position to remove that charge on the Canadian consumer. We have stated that we are going to world prices. When we go to world prices there will be no need for that charge, and the problem will be avoided.

DOMESTIC PRICE OF OIL

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, given that we are already at 96 per cent of world price, why is it necessary for Canadian consumers to pay more for the products they must have in order to survive in the unusual climate of Canada? Why is it necessary for Canadian consumers to pay more for their own oil than American consumers are required to pay for the same oil?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer is because that Party opposite supported the previous Government on the national energy policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: That is not true.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. By the way, when the Minister wants some simple facts about Nicaragua he does not have to send a tape to a radio station in St. Catherines. He has only to come to my office in the East Block and I will tell him.

I would like the Minister to tell us whether it is true that when he made his very important decision not to send an observer to the election in Nicaragua he was not aware that there was an ambassador in Canada for Nicaragua, let alone did not consult him?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not correct.

Mr. Chrétien: If it is not correct, I think the Minister should send a correction to St. Catherines because that is what the tape was saying.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER VISIT NICARAGUA

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary, I would like the Right Hon. Minister for External Affairs to tell me why he does not want to go to Nicaragua during his visit to Mexico, as our Secretary of State for External Affairs did last March, where he could see on the spot that the elections were held perhaps somewhat more democratically than the Americans are saying?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, two days ago, I had the opportunity to have a frank talk with some representatives of Canadian non-governmental organizations in Nicaragua. This conversation was very valuable in my opinion, and I believe that there is an excellent degree of co-operation between the Government and private Canadian citizens who are interested in what is happening in Nicaragua.

What we are considering now is how the Canadian Government could have a positive impact, even though it would probably be a minor one, in bringing about stability and peace in Latin America.

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAXES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and is with regard to some conflicting comments made by the Minister of Finance. The other day the Minister of Finance was speaking to the Canadian Tax Foundation and he indicated that the Government was committed to cutting back on the vast array of tax breaks available to the corporate sector. Later that same day he said that the Government was also considering creating new tax breaks to replace the system of direct grants and subsidies to the corporate sector. Could the Prime Minister explain which of these is the direction of the Government? Is it cutting back on tax breaks to the corporate sector, or is it not?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there was any confusion in the statements of the Minister of Finance. I think he was just speaking to the fact that we did inherit a rather confused tax situation that clearly has some injustices. He is looking at a mechanism whereby the tax system can be simplified and clarified. In that process I suppose some of the items to which the Hon. Member refers will be dealt with. I see nothing inconsistent at all. He is trying to bring an element of fairness into the tax system of Canada.

• (1430)

MINISTER'S VISIT TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, today the Minister of Finance is in Washington where he has indicated he is looking at American plans for their corporate tax system. If they reduce their corporate tax rate or provide more loopholes, Canada would be forced to do the same. Is the Government now not only taking direction from the United States for its interest rate policy but planning to take its corporate tax policy from the United States as well?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): As opposed to the previous Government, rather than blame our friends for all of our problems, we consult with them to see if we cannot work them out together.

Mr. Deans: Like in Manitoba?

Mr. Mulroney: The Minister is making an important trip today to visit with Secretary Regan. In the process I suppose he will be updated on some changes that Congress is contemplating in their tax system. It may be that Canada might learn something outside its borders. It is possible.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to direct my first question to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), but considering the urgency of the matter and the Minister's temporary absence—I imagine he is quite busy right now—I will have to ask my question to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister of Canada.

This morning, all Canadians, and particularly the artistic community, were quite excited to hear about what appears to be the new policy of the Minister of Communications who is quoted as saying, as reported in a major article by Mr. Hugh Winsor in the Globe and Mail:

[English]

—the Conservative Government is questioning the traditional arms-length relationship governments have had with the CBC and other cultural agencies, and is moving rapidly to apply a direct political hand to cultural policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, would the Right Hon. the Prime Minister tell the House whether that is indeed the new policy statement of the new government under this enlightened guidance? I hope all his colleagues believe so.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I hasten to reply, Mr. Speaker, because I certainly would not want the Hon. Member to be excited. It is extremely important.

I did read that article and I noted that the Minister is seldom quoted, although there is one quotation where the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) states:

[English]

My broad interest as Minister here is to be sure that as much money as possible is given to the artists and as little as possible is stuck somewhere in the pipeline by bureaucrats or by administrative costs.

[Translation]

I think that is indeed the Minister's intention, namely give as much funding as possible to the cultural communities with a minimum of intervention by the government.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, in my first supplementary question, I would like to ask the Right Hon. the Prime Minister if he can reconcile—and when I say that we are excited, I think I speak on behalf of nearly 250,000 people who depend directly on cultural activities and over 200,000 others who, indirectly, are involved in that great cultural industry. In a government policy statement—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have—

Mr. Prud'homme: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I presume the Hon. Member wants to ask a question.

Mr. Prud'homme: A supplementary. Can the Prime Minister reconcile that with this very clear statement of the Progressive Conservative Party:

[English]

"We are committed without question to the arms-length principle and regard peer review as the most equitable and consistent mechanism for federal funding to support individual . . ." et cetera.

[Translation]

How can one reconcile that new tenet of the new Minister of Communications with all the statements made by the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that you might take it easy with the Hon. Member, he is learning. He is new at this game. I say that with much respect for my colleague who has put his finger on a vital issue. I am pleased to be able to confirm that the position of the federal government in respect of, for example, the CBC and other groups, will be to stay at arm's length at all times.

Mr. Prud'homme: One last supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No. The Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson).

FUEL SALES TAX REBATE—POSITION OF BULK FUEL DEALERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I wish to direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the fuel sales tax rebate to primary producers.

There is potentially a very serious problem in the procedure for handling the rebate. Due to the varying degrees of integration, some bulk fuel dealers have tax-free inventory while others have tax paid inventory. Since those with the tax-free inventory can grant the rebate at the time of sale, the 22-cent per gallon rebate, others must collect it. Is the Minister aware of this problem which can devastate bulk fuel dealers across Canada? Is something being done to remedy the situation?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have a question from across the aisle, if not from across the House. I was beginning to think that I should turn my desk around to a more appropriate position.

In answer to the Hon. Member, it is a problem about which we are aware and our Department is studying it very closely. As he knows, this tax relief measure was introduced for farmers, fishermen, miners, and loggers. We are very anxious that it work on their behalf as a relief measure. We are looking at the best way to implement this. I will take the Hon. Member's question as notice and will give him a precise answer.

INDUSTRY

GREAT LAKES FOREST PRODUCTS LTD.—PROPOSED UNITED STATES NEWSPRINT MILL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. This morning's Globe and Mail announced that Great Lakes Forest Products Ltd. of Thunder Bay and Dryden will be entering into a partnership with five U.S. newspaper publishers to establish a newsprint mill in Washington State. The Minister will also be aware that this corporation has received upwards of $50 million in provincial and federal moneys over the last few years.

Does the Minister agree that we should not be funding Canadian corporations which are investing outside the country in direct competition with our own industries and workers? Will he move to recover the funds that have been given to this corporation?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member that that company has invested $416 million in the modernization and upgrading of plants in Dryden and Thunder Bay. I believe the Hon. Member should surely agree that, in a very international world as far as the forestry industry is concerned, it would not behoove the Government to ask companies such as the one to which he refers to restrict their activities if they believe they will become more viable as a result of the type of investment to which the Hon. Member has referred.

COLLECTION OF DEFERRED TAXES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Given the response by the Minister of Regional Industrial Development and the lack of willingness to bring back the tax dollars, would the Minister of National Revenue agree that the $116 million of deferred taxes owed by Great Lakes Forest Products to the Government should be brought into the public purse as soon as possible?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the provisions of the Income Tax Act preclude my discussing the case of any individual taxpayer. However, I will take the Hon. Member's representations as notice.

METRIC CONVERSION

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Last week I asked the Minister to give us the Government's policy on metric. His answer was unclear, indecisive and, in that sense, indefensible. What is the Government's position on metric? Is metric in or out? Consumers want to know, and producers want to know. Would he make the Government's position on metric clear?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I announced last week that we were in the midst of a period of intensive consultation and study. We are waiting to receive comments from all interested parties that want to air their views on the subject, and I think this Government will want to have all these opinions so that it can prepare recommendations for submission to Cabinet in due course.

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, on the other hand, last week the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary did make a very clear and definite statement that metric was out.

Mr. Dick: Never.

Mr. Rompkey: The Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister are both part of the Government. The Parliamentary Secretary is not a member of the Government but he is a part of the Government. If the Parliamentary Secretary is not speaking for the Government, is the Minister going to call upon the Parliamentary Secretary to resign?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is customary for the Minister who is responsible for a given department to announce policies after consultation with Cabinet and caucus members, and that is how I intend to proceed.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Why has his Governement decided that our cultural agencies will suffer budgetary cutbacks that are twice as high as cuts made in other federal areas?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all Government agencies will be subject to budgetary cutbacks, and as far as I know, a general attempt has been made to proceed equitably throughout the Government, perhaps with a few variations. Basically, however, our purpose has been to clean up our public finances, but in a manner that is fair to all. If the Hon. Member would like to indicate some specific examples, perhaps I could look into this with her.

[English]

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it is hard to see what is equitable about twice as strong budget cuts. Are they twice as less worthy as other agencies for government support? Would the Prime Minister explain how this can be justified in view of the very specific promises in the course of the election campaign that funding would be maintained at present levels, with cost of living increases? Would he not agree that there has been profound reversal of policy from the time his party was in opposition to coming into government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it would be helpful if I knew the case to which the Hon. Member refers. There has not been any precision at all in her allegations. I can only repeat what I think is widely acknowledged, that while reductions in public expenditures are always difficult and painful, I know that she will agree with the fact that indeed a colossal mess was inherited by us and we had to deal with it fairly and objectively across the board. We have tried to do that.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

PETROLEUM GAS REVENUE TAX—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It relates to the National Energy Program that was introduced by the Liberal Government with the help of our friends, the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: That is wrong.

Mr. Kindy: Some of the provisions in the national energy program, for instance, the petroleum and gas revenue tax, are extremely discriminatory, because it is a tax on revenue, not profit.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question, please?

Mr. Kindy: Would the Minister report on the status of discussions between the petroleum and gas producing provinces and her Ministry? Second, would the Minister also indicate whether there is a deadline to those discussions?
