Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, today, there are nearly 500 people from Bangladesh who are now living in the Montreal area and are waiting for a reply from the federal authorities. Many have been waiting for over a year, living with the fearful thought that they might have to go back to their native country and the military regime they wanted to escape.

Today, between 20 and 25 applicants for refugee status have received deportation orders, the reason given being that they were not political but economic refugees. It is quite clear that if these people return to Bangladesh, they will probably suffer retaliation. I therefore urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to accede to the request for a moratorium by the Bangladesh Refugee Action Committee and the Centre des services sociaux du Montréal métropolitain.

Since the present system under which applications for refugee status are processed is inefficient and is now being reviewed by Rabbi Gunther Plaut, and since Amnesty International and Development and Peace have both denounced the many human rights violations in Bangladesh, including cases of imprisonment, torture and execution, I think that cancelling these deportation orders should be a priority.

In my opinion, the Minister of Employment and Immigration should do everything in her power to defend the rights of these applicants, and this could be done if the Minister would consider the concerns of the main parties involved. Furthermore, no decision should be made until such time as the system for processing the files of applicants for refugee status has been changed.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I must apologize to the House. I have a duty to perform before we can continue with statements.

I have the honour to lay upon the Table the report of the Auditor General of Canada to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1984. I remind Hon. Members that, under Standing Order 69(1)(q), this report is deemed to have been permanently referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

We will now continue with Statements pursuant to Standing Order 21.

THE LATE JACKSON BEARDY

PASSING OF GREAT ARTIST

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, Jackson Beardy has long been a part of our lives. Now he is a part of our heritage. His name is linked with those of Morriseau, Ray, and Objig, artists who gave a solid sense of pride to Indian people.

Jackson was a midwife to the rebirth of Indian culture and tradition. In his work one could see the spirituality which underpins Indian values. In the beginning his paintings sold for a pittance while he struggled to gain the recognition which he so richly deserved. In time, his work was recognized, first in Winnipeg and later at the National Arts Centre.

Canada has lost a great artist, Indian people a trail-blazer, and Manitoba a favourite son. We mourn his passing.

STATISTICS CANADA

ACTIVE POPULATION DATA

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit to the House some views on the Canadian Labour force data provided by Statistics Canada.

I feel that Canadians are poorly informed and receive information that may seem erroneous to them since the unemployment rate is calculated on the basis of the number of people in the labour force. However, the labour force includes workers receiving remuneration and the so-called officially unemployed, that is, those receiving unemployment insurance benefits. Mr. Speaker, many workers without jobs who are not eligible for unemployment insurance are not included in the labour force. Furthermore, people receiving social benefits such as welfare, who are able to work but have no other means of support than what the State has to offer, are also excluded from the labour force. It is high time we had official or more coherent statistics that reflect the Canadian situation in all areas of the economy.

Mr. Speaker, labour force data often form the basis for setting levels of monetary compensation under Government programs, both regionally and locally. Unfortunately, on the basis of these data, some ridings are penalized and fail to receive funds that are essential for economic recovery, and especially—

THE ECONOMY

PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS TO NEW YORK BUSINESS AUDIENCE—EXPRESSION OF CONGRATULATIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, last night in New York City the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that once again Canada is open for business.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: His words won the standing ovations of American businessmen who were filled with gratification that their business initiatives are now wanted and welcomed by the Canadian people.

Great relief and pleasure were felt by both countries at learning that the Prime Minister is terminating the odious provisions of the National Energy Program. The Prime Minister has not only established a new harmony between Canada and the United States but has provided a major stepping stone toward the revitalization of our economy. Because of his warm invitation to our southern neighbours, the days of solving all problems in Canada by borrowing more money are finally coming to an end.

I am sure all Members of the House will want to join me in congratulating the Prime Minister on his successful visit to New York. A more appropriate time could not be had to provide Americans with an opportunity to do mutually profitable business with our country, and to give Canadians new hope for prosperity and a flourishing economy as we enter a new year.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

IMPACT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the cultural and artistic communities in Canada are asking themselves what happened to the Government on the way to Parliament Hill. Prior to the election these communities were wined and dined over a rich menu of promises and accolades. The Conservative Party boasted: "We are committed to real growth in federal contribution to cultural development".

The question remains: what happened after September 4? In short, with the tabling of the economic statement the cultural community was treated to the real dark colours of the Government. Not only was the CBC budget cut by a total of $85 million but cultural agencies and projects lost $15 million in funding.

The arts industry is very labour intensive. Approximately 66 per cent of its budget goes to salaries. Therefore government cuts will mean a significant reduction in jobs in this sector. These cuts will also undermine the value of the role the arts play in creating a cultural identity for all Canadians.

In recent days we have seen a Government eager to sell out its economic independence. I hope and urge that the Government does not sell out Canada's cultural industry.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

FOLLOW-UP ON CONSTITUENTS' FILES

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, my statment is of interest to all Members in this House. On September 4, 1984, the Progressive Conservative Party was brought to power by a majority of Canadians and by this very fact a number of us were entrusted with new responsibilities as Members of Parliament, as representatives and as aggressive supporters of the interests of our ridings.

After having been better than three months in office, I am amazed if not shocked by the little information and the total lack of interest shown by our predecessors with respect to the forwarding of files during the transfer of powers. This problem is even more acute, and I am sure that this shameful situation, to say the least, reflects a lack of ethics and blatant irrespect for the wishes and aspirations of our constituents.

Mr. Speaker, in view of those failures and this feeling of injustice, it is my hope that we, in this House, will be introducing measures ensuring that files are transferred whenever a new Member is elected, with this transfer being mandatory in order that our constituents may enjoy a minimum of equity. This will give a new lustre to our institutions and administrations.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SHARE OF GROSS DOMESTIC PRODUCT SPENT ON SOCIAL SERVICES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of the House a recent study done by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development which shows that Canada devotes 11.8 per cent of its Gross Domestic Product to social services compared to an average for other rich industrialized nations of 14.1 per cent. The study shows that Canada runs a poor sixth among the big seven OECD countries in sharing the returns from the economy with the poor, the unemployed, pensioners, veterans and the like.

The present Government would have us believe that social programs are the cause of our deficit. This report demonstrates that that is completely false, and that the Government is using the deficit as a cover for its own ideological agenda against universality and social programs, things which it has opposed for a long time. The fact of the matter is that the deficit is caused by the recession in combination with discretionary policies of previous Governments dealing with tax policies, interest rates, and a range of economic measures that have absolutely nothing to do with the viability of social programs in our country. What is being perpetrated by this Government, with respect to the so-called burden social programs are on the economy of the country, is nothing short of a hoax.

RESTORATION OF INVESTOR CONFIDENCE

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the Economic Council of Canada recently released its twenty-first annual review of Canada's economy. The report indicates that the deficit has helped erode business and investor confidence and has slowed the growth of jobs in the private sector. It could become even more serious in the future unless the Government takes steps to control it. The unchecked spending of the previous Liberal administration has forced our Government to make serious financial decisions to bring about order in federal government spending so that many more jobs can be created, along with future prosperity for our country.

It is, therefore, ironic that Hon. Members in the Opposition have shown such concern over the Government's initiative to restore international investor confidence in Canada through the establishment of Investment Canada under Bill C-15, which was tabled in the House last Friday. It is new initiatives like this which will begin to repay the approximately $190 billion of debt which the Liberal Government has accumulated over the past decade, mortgaging the future of our youth.

Restoring confidence in our economy will result in greater job opportunities for both young and old. However, this will not be as instantaneous as members of the Opposition demand. Canadians must judge the level of sincerity of the Liberals and the New Democratic Party who now want instant solutions and who criticize every initiative of a new Government, one which is trying to resolve the economic crisis in our country. The gloom and doom statements of the Opposition are in direct contrast to the growing optimism which Canadians feel for the future.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

NUCLEAR FREEZE PROPOSAL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, since I did not have an opportunity to speak in the nuclear freeze debate yesterday, I would like to explain my "yes" vote on that resolution. I have been strongly in favour of the Mexican-Swedish freeze proposal for some time. There are now over 50,000 nuclear weapons in the world, which have a destructive power one million times that of the Hiroshima bomb. This resolution proposed a bilateral, verifiable nuclear freeze as a first step toward nuclear reduction and disarmament. It recently passed 112 to 11 in the First Committee at the United Nations, with Canada opposing.

Some opponents of the freeze argue that a freeze at this time would be wrong because the Soviet Union is ahead of the U.S.A. Even if that is true, one does not require an absolute balance when one already has sufficient bombs to destroy all of mankind. The balance of power with respect to nuclear weapons cannot be judged in the same way as with tanks and rifles.

I voted for the Liberal amendment because it recognized the important new situation of the superpowers agreeing to meet on these issues early in the new year. I then voted for the principal motion on the freeze, despite some partisan clauses added by the New Democratic Party, because I thought that the freeze proposal was too important and should transcend narrow partisan interests.

Although the resolution was defeated, I hope we will have a chance to debate it again next year. This is a question of human survival, Mr. Speaker.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NEW MICROELECTRONICS ERA

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we live in a time when vast scientific, technological forces like microelectronics are in action and promise to change our lives. These forces hold out a promise for longer life, labour saving mechanisms, new economic wealth, and thousands of new jobs.

We are entering into a new era with microelectronics with enormous increases in processing and memory capability. It is presenting the industrialized world with fast breaking processes of opportunity and change. It has recently been suggested by the president of one of Canada's high technology companies that this industry alone, at the international level, is a $200 billion a year industry.

In 1982-1983 a committee of academic and industrial experts, formed with the support of the National Sciences and Engineering Research Council, recommended that two centres of world class excellence in microelectronics be established in Canada. The centres are to provide state of the art facilities for carrying out microelectronic research and to provide industry with access to leading edge technology. It is crucial that Canada develop prominence in microelectronics and semi-conductors if it is to compete internationally in this fast developing field.

I look forward to our present Government, which is providing such refreshing leadership, to support the development of these centres of excellence. Furthermore, Ottawa-Carleton is a logical place for one of these centres because the region is two years ahead of any other area in Canada, with the necessary infrastructure in place and the unique potential to relate to local industries.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA AGREEMENT—BACK-IN PROVISIONS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday we in Canada suffered the indignity of hearing our energy policy announced in the United States before it was announced in this House and to the people of Canada. In view of the euphoric statement made by the Premier of Nova Scotia, when the Canada-Nova Scotia offshore oil and gas agreement was signed, on the benefits the back-in provisions would have for the people of Nova Scotia, can the Minister tell the House if consent to the proposed changes in the back-in provisions has been received from the Government of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member in posing his question has ignored the fact that the energy policy was a key part of the economic statement which was presented in this House by the Hon. Minister of Finance. So the statement that it was released in the United States is simply not correct.

In view of the Hon. Member's specific reference to the back-in provisions, I can tell him that I have been in touch with Premier Buchanan, as has the Prime Minister, and with the Energy Minister of Nova Scotia, and we have committed to them that we will give them a better deal than they got from the previous administration. And they know that we will honour our word.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacLellan: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the Government does not have it in its philosophy to give a better deal to the Province of Nova Scotia.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POLICY CHANGES—REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): If the Minister is saying that the Government of Canada has not received the consent of the Province of Nova Scotia to the changes in the back-in provisions, why not? What deal is the Government going to give to the Province of Nova Scotia? What compensation is it going to give to the people of Nova Scotia for this change?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the line of questioning rather surprises me in view of the fact that the back-in provisions were unilaterally established by the Liberal administration without a word to Nova Scotia, or Alberta, or to any other province.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP OBJECTIVE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): May I remind the Minister that if this change is made without the consent of the Province of Nova Scotia, then what we have here is a unilateral abrogation of the Canada-Nova Scotia offshore oil and gas agreement. I would like to say to the Minister that the Prime Minister has said in his statement that the National Energy Program failed in its objective of Canadianization, which is not correct, because—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question?

Mr. MacLellan: I would like to ask the Minister how can it be said that the objective of 50 per cent Canadian ownership has not been achieved, when we have not reached 1990? We are ahead of schedule. If the Government is going to open the doors, the floodgates of Canada, to non-Canadians, how will we ever achieve this Canadianization?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, no.

HIBERNIA OILFIELD DEVELOPMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister will know that a key element of Newfoundland's proposal for the development of Hibernia was catch-up for that province, and a key way of doing this was the back-in provision. Can the Minister tell us if, during her recent visit to Newfoundland, she discussed the elimination of the back-in provision with the Government of Newfoundland? And can she tell us if it agreed to that?

• (1420)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member chooses to ignore the fact that the back-in, as brought in by the Liberal Government, was straight confiscation. That is a kind of policy which has never been considered a Canadian policy. In view of the Atlantic accord, presently being negotiated in detail with the Government of Newfoundland, we are in fact giving Newfoundland a great deal of the management of the offshore and the same kind of revenue regime that other provinces got. They do not need the back-in. I mean, if you give it all to them, they do not need the back-in.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the back-in was certainly not unilateral. As a matter of fact Premier Peckford asked not only for 25 per cent back-in, but for 40 per cent back-in. How can the Minister square doing away with this key element of Newfoundland policy with the fact she is negotiating a deal in the best interests of Newfoundland? How can she have any credibility now in the province in negotiating that deal?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the Liberal Government never made any deal with Newfoundland at all, on the back-in or anything else. They had no deal at all with Newfoundland. I can only point out that Premier Peckford signed the agreement in principle, which was also signed by the then Leader of the Opposition, and his Government is glad to sit at the negotiating table with us these very weeks to negotiate a deal which will be the most important thing that ever happened to Newfoundland since it joined Confederation.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

ANNOUNCED ABOLITION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome the Prime Minister back. He took his—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gauthier: Sing "Danny Boy".

Mr. Axworthy: How about the "Star Spangled Banner"?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister took his puff'n' stuff routine to the New York investment community. In fact—

Mr. Axworthy: He bought the Brooklyn Bridge.

Mr. Broadbent: —he welcomed the American investors to come up here and drink Canada dry. More than that, he offered to hold the glass for them.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister this. One of the purposes of FIRA has been to ensure successfully that the companies it monitored produced more jobs in Canada and increased their purchases in Canada. In short, it was to make sure that foreign firms with a presence in this country brought to Canada tangible benefits, not just benefits for their investors. Considering that, why is the Government of Canada abolishing this important agency which has been serving Canadian interests?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Because, Mr. Speaker, as the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker once said, the Progressive Conservative Party stands for positive economic nationalism, which means jobs and growth. That is what we are trying to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: One of the questions that I was asked in New York by the Chase Manhattan Bank was: "Where is Ed?"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I said I will be seeing him.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He is riding around in his chauffeured car.

Mr. Mulroney: Because of a situation that my hon. friend is familiar with, which we inherited, that being in excess of 1.5 million Canadians out of work, we felt it was incumbent upon us to attempt to attract, both nationally and internationally, the kinds of capital required to create jobs for Canadians and build new economic strength in the country. We felt this was a positive as opposed to a pernicious way of doing it, and we plan to do it with a view to creating jobs for Canadians.

Mr. Broadbent: I remind the Prime Minister that one of John Diefenbaker's first acts was to shut down the Arrow and ship those sophisticated aircraft production jobs back to the United States. So he is following in good order.

AGENCY'S MONITORING OF FOREIGN OWNED COMPANIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister to put aside the charming rhetoric for a minute and deal with the question. Is he aware that FIRA has done an internal study which points out that a majority of the foreign owned firms it has monitored have increased their jobs here, have done more research and development, and increased their purchase of other Canadian products? In other words, because they have been monitored by FIRA and met certain Canadian standards, they serve not only the interests of their investors but the interests of Canada. Why, in heaven's name, when we had an agency like that, and at a time when we need Canadian jobs, has the Prime Minister of Canada gone down to sell everything out to the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I know full well, Mr. Speaker, as opposed to the Leader of the NDP, who our friends are. I have no hesitation in saying that the United States of America, Great Britain, France, and other traditional allies, are friends, and will be treated by us as friends and not as enemies.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is the difference between us and the NDP.

Regarding the substance of the speech, I am not in disagreement with my right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, who said many times, and with good reason, when he was seeking the leadership of his Party, that the combination of the NEP and FIRA send out negative and hostile signals around the world, denying Canada the investment capital it needs to create jobs.

Mr. Deans: That is nonsense. The two of you are wrong.

Mr. Mulroney: I almost voted for him myself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I know we will have the co-operation of my hon. friend, the Leader of the NDP, because Canadians want jobs. They want job creation, and we need investment to create the hundreds of thousands of jobs that Canadians need.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said he and the Leader of the Opposition were in agreement on this point. That does not surprise me. They agreed on most things in the election campaign. That is not news to Canadians.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Ask him to take the car back, Brian.

REASONS FOR ELIMINATING AGENCY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister to shatter his own interesting interest in the House and deal with the question that was asked. The question is simply this. FIRA is designed to welcome foreign investment if it benefits Canadians as well as the foreign investor. Almost every other industrial country in the world, whether it is the United States, Japan, France, or West Germany, has its equivalent of FIRA. Therefore, why in heaven's name at this point, precisely when we need 1.5 million jobs, is the Government of Canada setting aside this positive instrument designed to protect Canadian interests?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what the countries my hon. friend referred to have is indeed an agency in regard to the influx of foreign capital. But it resembles infinitely more the positive dimensions of Investment Canada rather than the retrograde and regressive provisions of FIRA. I know we will have the full support of the Opposition in what we are trying to do.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount was applauding lustily last night in New York.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He was being polite.

Some Hon. Members: When?

Mr. Mulroney: During dinner.

We are going to extend the hand of friendship to the NDP and ask for their help in attracting the capital we need. That might mean the NDP will have to take a more open look at who our friends are, and where we can get investment capital to create jobs in Oshawa and elsewhere.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: That is why we have an auto pact.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for York Centre.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

REVIEW OF PURCHASE PROPOSALS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The answers given so far by the Minister have shown lack of sensitivity to the risk that foreign investment can have some negative effects. He has observed that he may have foreign buyers for the Canadair and de Havilland aircraft companies. Will the Minister confirm that the new investment agency which the Government is proposing to establish, even as weakened as it is, would have no jurisdiction at all to review the purchase of these two government owned companies?

• (1430)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must know that the sale of a Crown corporation, certainly under the Financial Administration Act, requires the approval of Cabinet and, in most instances, the approval of the House. Surely to suggest that Investment Canada should have a review, in addition to the cabinet review and that which would take place in the House, is totally unnecessary.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the corporations are not technically Crown corporations. They are private companies which are owned by the federal Government, and therefore in the same position, but not technically covered by that requirement for review.

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE REVIEW OFFERS TO PURCHASE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): In view of the statement of the Minister, and given the fact that he appears insensitive to the risks to the jobs and the prospects for these two companies, will he agree that, before any deals are made to sell these two companies, a parliamentary committee will have an opportunity to review fully the offers and ensure that Canadian interests are indeed protected?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Member would put the question in the context that he has. I will give him an assurance that the Cabinet, by Order in Council, will certainly approve of any such sale. If it is deemed necessary in the circumstances, certainly if the Financial Administration Act entails a review in the House, it would of course include a committee review as well.

INVESTMENT CANADA

SITUATION OF SMALL COMPANIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is discussing the new Bill, C-15, and its benefits. How will it help Canadian jobs to make small Canadian companies, valued under $5 million, sitting ducks for U.S. take-over?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the problem is because of the negative and hostile signals emanating from Canada. You could not get anybody to put a plugged nickel in this country because the rules of the game were being changed. What is required—

Mr. Deans: That's not true.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I know it hurts.

Mr. Broadbent: They are putting $1.5 billion in Oshawa, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: I know it hurts.

Mr. Deans: That is hogwash.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. We are getting into that situation again. Perhaps Members could agree to listen to the questions and to the answers equally.

Mr. Blaikie: Why don't we get some answers? Then we'll listen to them.

Mr. Mulroney: In response to my hon. friend, we are attempting to create a climate of confidence and to send out a signal to international investors around the world that this is a good and honourable place to do business, and that the laws of the country will apply.

Mr. Deans: That has always been the case.

Mr. Mulroney: That is the proper climate for the attraction of capital. We believe, and we hope we are right and that the Hon. Member shares this, that with 1.5 million Canadians seeking employment, a large infusion of job creating equity capital is required. We must get it from around the world. That requires signals and programs to be advanced that will attract the degree of confidence that inspires those decisions to be made. That is exactly what we are doing because we believe that the hundreds of thousands of jobs that Canadians are crying out for can best be created in that manner.

Mr. Deans: You need new business for that.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I must say that it seems that the Prime Minister has not read the Bill that has been tabled in the House.

PROVISION OF JOBS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Will the Prime Minister tell us how we can possibly be creating more jobs by allowing small Canadian firms valued under $5 million to be taken over? That is the point—taken over and possibly shut down by those companies when the take-over takes place. How does that help Canadian jobs?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): My hon. friend introduces an unbecoming degree of melodrama into a straightforward proposition.

Mr. Deans: Talking about melodrama—

Mr. Mulroney: The fact of the matter is that before one talks of take-overs one must talk about the urgent requirement in this nation—

Mr. Deans: How about Schefferville and closing it down?

Mr. Mulroney: Schefferville? I won every poll in Schefferville in the last election. How about Schefferville?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More! More!

Mr. Deans: How about the decisions made in New York?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Deans: Tell us how that benefits us.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. Would the Prime Minister like to finish his answer?

Mr. Mulroney: Moreover, we put together the most generous severance package in the history of Canadian industry, and you should follow it.

Mr. Deans: They are still unemployed, every last one of them.

Mr. Mulroney: It is a model for all Canadians, and you should be proud of it.

Now, with regard to your buddy, I think my hon. friend, with his experience, will recognize that what was lacking in the previous Government of Canada was a degree of confidence. We are trying to send out a positive signal to investment capitals which will cause those decisions to be made so that jobs will be created. I give my hon. friend the assurance that once the capital is in Canada it will conduct itself honourably and pursuant to national legislation.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Communications told the Fédération des journalistes professionnels du Québec, and I quote:

> The extent of the deficit and the debt load facing us today will impose a significant constraint on the Government's ability to meet our economic requirements.

However, during the last election campaign, a message from the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada to the Canadian Conference of the Arts made it clear that there would be not only consultations but also an increase in the amount of funding earmarked for the arts in general.

I would like to ask the Minister how he manages to reconcile the statement he made yesterday with his many promises, and I shall refrain from reading them all to you today, since I would otherwise be out of order. Considering that at the time the national debt was public knowledge, since the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition had clearly indicated to Canadians in Edmonton what the extent was of the national debt, how after making these promises yesterday, could the Minister say the words I just quoted?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as specified in the Throne Speech, there will first be consultations with the cultural agencies, especially in the radio and television sector. Thanks to the Minister of Finance's economic statement, the Canadian economy will improve and funding will follow.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister be so kind as to reconcile for the House his campaign statements with yesterday's statement and the announcement to be made by the President of the CBC at 10 past 3 this afternoon which will concern the elimination of probably 1,150 jobs in Ottawa, Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver especially, Winnipeg—

Mr. Nystrom: Sock it to him.

Mr. Kindy: In his speech yesterday to the Economic Club in New York he mentioned that he wants to have a review of energy taxation policy. Could he tell the House whether this would bring economic sense so that companies would be taxed on profits and not on revenues?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): If there is one thing I cannot stand, it is a hostile question.

An Hon. Member: How about a plant?

Mr. Mulroney: I would like to say to my hon. friend that, for too long, in the energy sector companies were crushed by taxation prior to them having any money in their balance sheet. We want to ensure that a degree of prosperity returns to the small and medium companies operating in the energy sector. As the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has often said, you tax them after they have made some money, and not before.

INFORMATION WITHHELD—PRIVY COUNCIL CLERK'S INSTRUCTIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question which is directed to the Prime Minister, concerns the Auditor General's report. In view of the fact that vital information respecting the expenditure of over $10 billion of taxpayers' money is being withheld from the Auditor General by Departments such as National Defence and Transport, on the instruction of the Clerk of the Privy Council, will the Prime Minister undertake that this kind of interference with the work of the Auditor General on behalf of Parliament will cease, and that the specific instructions that are blocking the Auditor General from doing his job will be withdrawn?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): We want to co-operate fully—indeed we have—with the Auditor General of Canada, who is an outstanding public servant. I will be meeting with him later this afternoon, but I can tell my hon. friend that I have instructed the custodian of the cabinet papers of previous Governments to review the withheld documents to confirm whether or not they constitute confidences of the previous Government.

As my hon. friend knows, there is an area involving confidential communications between Ministers which is properly within the purview of Cabinet. But it is our intention to give to the Auditor General of Canada all information, other than that, that he quite properly seeks. He has the full co-operation of the Government of Canada in this regard and I have so instructed the Clerk of the Privy Council.

F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT ACQUISITION EXPENDITURES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that the Auditor General has revealed that there is an additional expenditure of $3.5 billion on the F-18 fighter program over and above the $5 billion that the program was already expected to cost?

Is he aware that the cabinet secrecy rule has been used to deny the Auditor General access to information about whether or not that money is well spent? Will those restrictions be removed now so that the Auditor General can do his job?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the only matters that have not been provided to the Auditor General in regard to this case involve some submissions to Cabinet, very few, that fall within the purview of the custom to which I have just referred my hon. friend.

I am also informed that the Auditor General has seen some 60 cases full of documents related to this transaction. However, I will be meeting with him later this afternoon to ascertain if he requires any further documents that I can make available to him.

EDUCATION

FUNDING OF UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES—JOHNSON INQUIRY REPORT

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. He will recall that his Liberal predecessor commissioned Mr. Al Johnson to conduct an extremely important inquiry into the vital matter of funding for universities and colleges throughout the country so that federal and provincial Governments could devise a failsafe formula that was fair to all. Is the official copy, or even the draft copy of the Johnson Report on post-secondary education, now ready? Did he share those recommendations with his provincial counterparts when he met with them yesterday on this important subject?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I expect to have that report from Mr. Johnson by the end of the year. The report is on the survey he has conducted after being in touch with the post-secondary community and many of the provincial Governments, in an effort to provide a background for the ongoing discussions between the Secretary of State and the Ministers of Education. Yesterday's discussions were a first consultative step in which I was listening to the provincial and territorial Ministers of Education.

Mr. de Corneille: In other words, the draft copy and the content of that important report were not shared.

PROVINCES' USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, although he did not share the Johnson Report with the provincial Ministers yesterday, did he get a commitment from the provinces to the effect that they will not divert federal funds from their intended purpose of supporting post-secondary education, into other areas? Did he get a commitment from the provinces that they would use those federal funds for the purpose of post-secondary education?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the context of the conversation between Ministers responsible concerned looking to the future and determining the priorities of the provincial Governments and the federal Government.

As the Hon. Member knows, in the next year and a half there will have to be a renewal of the agreement with the federal Government with respect to the timetable. This is in the context of the Government's commitment to consult with the provinces about their priorities, as well as to let the provinces understand the federal priorities with regard to post-secondary institutions.

SMALL BUSINESS

PROTECTION AGAINST UNFAIR COMPETITION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Small Businesses). The Minister will be aware that, with the changeover from FIRA to Investment Canada, the Government has eliminated the review of acquisitions of small businesses by foreign investors, and also eliminated the controls and nature of new businesses created by foreign investors. Will the Minister tell the House, and Canada's small business community, what plans he has to protect already financially strapped small businesses from excessive and potentially unfair competition by well financed foreign interests, especially the large U.S. based franchises?

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, Canada's small business community is now experiencing recovery. Soon we will begin a period of consultations to reconsider the funding of small businesses and, after those consultations, we will take appropriate steps to ensure that small businesses continue to grow and provide jobs for Canadians.

[English]

REINVESTMENT OF PROFITS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not agree that the substantial increase in the percentage of Canadian ownership of small business since 1971 guarantees greater reinvestment of the profits in Canada as opposed to foreign economies? Will he indicate what plans he has to ensure that the profits made in Canada by foreign companies will be reinvested here where they belong?

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, foreign investments in Canada will not reduce the number of jobs in this country. As I said, they will be a boon to Canadian businesses, and Investment Canada will see to it that the money is reinvested in Canada and creates jobs.

FISHERIES

HERRING ROE INDUSTRY

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The herring roe industry in Atlantic Canada has now become a multimillion dollar export sales industry. Would the Minister instruct his officials to study the problem of waste disposal that was ignored by the previous administration, and report on solutions that may be implemented in the 1985 season? Would he instruct his officials to consider developing markets for the by-products so that the industry can gear up to freeze or salt the herring by-products?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for South West Nova for raising a matter which needs to be raised and was not dealt with by the former administration. The Hon. Member is absolutely right, that during the herring roe catch last year vast quantities of herring were spoiled. They were not reduced to meal because the machinery was unavailable. Consequently there was a high protein loss.

I have instructed my officials to look into the matter. I can tell the Member that this entire matter will be discussed in January with the industry advisory committee. I thank him for raising it.

Oral Questions

TRANSPORT

AUTOMOBILE EMISSIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Transport inform the House if he will announce a decision with respect to the reduction of car emissions, now that the committee appointed by him completed its deliberations and consultations a few days ago?

• (1450)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the public hearings held in Ottawa a few days ago, a consolidated report is being put together by officials of Transport Canada, E, M and R, Environment, and DRIE, which will then be submitted to the respective Ministers for consideration.

DATE OF DECISION ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, when will the Minister make a decision and announce it to the industry, the public, and particularly to those groups that are so concerned about reducing acid rain emissions in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the consolidated report is received by the respective Ministers it will, naturally, be considered, and I expect an announcement will be forthcoming soon after that report is considered.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. She indicated to me last week that some of the cuts in her Department might be reviewed. Could she confirm that, on the contrary, in conversation with senior Canadian Wildlife Service Officials, her Deputy Minister announced that further cuts were planned, including the cancellation of a 4 per cent inflation increase in Environment Canada's budget, and an additional $13 million in program cuts? Could the Minister confirm what her Deputy Minister said?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): If my colleague will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I will ask my Deputy Minister exactly what he said, or what he is supposed to have said, before I make any comment on a conversation of which I am not aware.

[English]

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to listen to a tape of that conversation, and I can tell the Minister that that is what her Deputy Minister has said.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: A tape?

Mr. Blaikie: My question is—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would like to hear the question. Is that possible?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, when is the Minister of the Environment going to become the Minister who feels responsibility for the environment? Will she either point out the ecological blindness of the Government she is a part of, or have the decency to resign?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce to my colleague that I have no intention of resigning, period.

LETTING OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN SYSTEM

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. Based on the fact, and on information received by the Auditor General, he has brought to light that only 6 per cent, and I repeat 6 per cent, of all major government contracts were let on a truly competitive basis by way of public tender, and that the remaining 94 per cent were basically awarded on a sole-source basis by the previous Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. St. Germain: Is the Minister prepared to look at substantial changes in the method of bidding for government projects which, in the words of the Auditor General, is possibly the most blatant misuse of tax dollars in the country today?

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his altogether relevant question, this being the day the Auditor General makes his report public. I am sure you will agree with me just how imperative it had become to change the government, particularly in light of the poor performance of that department. In my opinion, the same thing applies everywhere else.

Under those circumstances, I can assure the Hon. Member that there will be changes, corrections and positive recommendations to safeguard the interests of Canadians and show more fairness to those who want to do business with the new government.

AUDITOR GENERAL

RECOMMENDATION THAT AUDITS BE REPORTED ON COMPLETION DATES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): My question, Mr. Speaker, is addressed to the President of the Treasury Board. Of recent years Parliament has passed a number of laws to facilitate the work of the Auditor General—the Auditor General Act of 1977, and more amendments to the Financial Administration Act which set up the Comptroller General's office. Will the Minister say if he is now prepared to bring in legislation to give effect to the Public Accounts Committee's recommendation that the Auditor General be empowered to report audits to Parliament on a completion date basis, instead of only annually, so that problems could be addressed and corrected more quickly?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that is a question I have been discussing with the Auditor General. Yes, it is correct that we have had several meetings. This question is certainly something that we are looking at very closely. Hopefully I will be in a position to respond favourably to the request of the Auditor General in a very short period of time.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

YUKON NORTH SLOPE DEVELOPMENT—ESTABLISHMENT OF SCREENING COMMITTEE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I would like to ask the Minister about development on the North Slope of Yukon, which is one of the most environmentally sensitive areas anywhere in Canada. Could the Minister tell the House when the permanent screening committee, which is to review all development proposals, will be established, and who will be serving on that committee, so that all proposals that are submitted can be fully and adequately reviewed?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. As he will know, there has been a meeting recently in that part of the country dealing with the proposal. The interim committee idea was not adopted and therefore we are moving to the permanent screening committee. The membership of that committee is not yet filled and, when it is, of course I will advise the House and the Hon. Member.

CARIBOU HERD DATA

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the announced cut-back of the federal research work on the North Slope's Porcupine Caribou herd, could the Minister tell us whether there will now be sufficient data available on this herd to guide the decisions of this screening committee? In addition, can the Minister assure the House that the Yukon territorial Government will carry out fully, and I mean fully, all of the research work that is presently being done by the Canadian Wildlife Service?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I am advised that sufficient funds are available, Mr. Speaker. If the screening committee requires more funds then, of course, I shall be happy to receive any submission in that regard.

Second, with respect to the responsibilities of the Yukon Government, it is a Government that I trust, and I know it will carry out its responsibilities.

INDUSTRY

ECONOMIC FREE ZONES PROPOSAL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I, too, would like to welcome him back from 42nd Street.

Yesterday I asked his Science and Technology Minister how far the Government intended to go to attract foreign capital. The Minister replied that the Government had not ruled out the B.C. concept of economic free zones in spite of the fact that those zones would sometimes go as far as destroying minimum wage legislation. Does the Prime Minister agree with his Minister, namely, that the Government has not ruled out supporting economic free zones?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister used the term "the B.C. concept" at all. It is not germane to B.C. It is found in some areas where they are desirous of attracting capital and creating new jobs. It is one that we proposed to look at, along with thousands of others.

UNION RIGHTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that British Columbia's Industry Minister, Don Phillips, has said that he wants the support of the federal Government because in these zones "unions will not have any jurisdiction", is this where the Government's policy is going? Is this how far the Prime Minister will go to attract foreign investment, that is, with economic free zones where union rights will be excluded?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, why would my hon. friend read something so nasty into an open proposition?

Mr. Benjamin: We know you guys.

Mr. Mulroney: We stand ready more than any Government before us to co-operate with trade unionism in this country, which we regard as a viable and indispensable force—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —which is probably why more trade unionists voted for Progressive Conservatives rather than for the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Even Dennis McDermott voted Progressive Conservative.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order.

ABORTION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Does his Government intend to review the abortion provisions of the Criminal Code?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would refer the question to my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, but there are no such intentions being brought before the Government at this moment.

Mr. Nunziata: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No, the time for questions, I am afraid, has expired.

PRIVILEGE

REMARKS OF MR. ROBINSON ALLEGED CONTEMPT OF PARLIAMENT—RULING OF MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I am now prepared to rule on the question of privilege which was put to me the other day by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata). Order, please. I do not know whether Hon. Members can hear the ruling, given the noise.

On Friday, December 7, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston raised as a question of privilege—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I remind Hon. Members that there are certain traditions about the House of Commons.

On Friday, December 7, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston raised as a question of privilege a complaint arising from a statement made in committee by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). The Hon. Member for York South-Weston alleged that, in making the statement, the Hon. Member for Burnaby abused his parliamentary privilege. I indicated in my preliminary comments following the Hon. Member's submission that the privilege of a Member of Parliament when speaking in the House or in a committee is absolute, and that it would be very difficult to find that any statement made under the cloak of parliamentary privilege constituted a violation of that privilege.

Since then the Hon. Member for York South-Weston has made a further submission to me by letter. He argues that there are restrictions on a Member's freedom of speech. In cases where a statement might be interpreted as an offence against the authority or dignity of the House, he argues that Parliament itself can question the exercise of the right of freedom of speech even though it may not be questioned in any court or place outside of Parliament. In his submission in the House he also averred on the basis of a citation from Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada that while our privileges are defined, "contempt of the House has no limits".

The limits of privilege and contempt have never been precisely defined. However, the distinction between the two is explained in Volume 28 of the Third Edition of Halsbury's Laws of England at page 464 in the following terms:

> The power of both Houses to punish for contempt is a general power similar to that possessed by the superior courts of law and is not restricted to the punishment of breaches of their acknowledged privileges. Any act or omission which obstructs or impedes any member or officer of the House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency to produce such a result may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence. Certain offences which were formerly described as contempts are now commonly designated as breaches of privilege, although that term more properly applies only to an infringement of the collective or individual rights or immunities of one of the Houses of Parliament.

It can hardly be asserted that the statement made by the Hon. Member for Burnaby in committee had the effect of obstructing or impeding any Member or officer of the House in the discharge of his duty. In the case of accusations against

Members of Parliament, these can be made only by laying a specific charge by way of a substantive motion of which proper notice is given. This is the only course open to a Member who wishes to accuse another Member of a wrongdoing or condemn another Member for an impropriety or misdemeanour. This can be verified by reference to page 378 or Erskine May's Twentieth Edition. I suggest the Hon. Member read that.

I would also refer to a ruling of Mr. Speaker Michener on June 19, 1959 in which he affirmed that the conduct of a Member of Parliament, even though reprehensible, cannot form the basis of a question of privilege although it can form the basis of a charge by way of a substantive motion. The ruling is a long one, but I should like to quote the following sentence:

> In my view, simple justice requires that no Hon. Member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the House or a committee until he has been charged with an offence.

There are, of course, exceptions to this principle in cases where the conduct of a Member has led to the obstruction of other Members or of the House in the fulfilment of their duties. There is one further citation to which I would refer. On page 82 of Erskine May's Twentieth Edition, it is indicated:

> Subject to the rules of order in debate, a Member may state whatever he thinks fit in debate, however offensive it may be to the feelings, or injurious to the character, of individuals; and he is protected by his privilege from any action for libel, as well as from any other question or molestation.

I think this makes the situation very clear. It is not for me to discuss whether Members should or should not have this protection. It would be for Parliament to change the law if it felt this degree of immunity were too great. In terms of our practice, I have no alternative but to rule that the matter raised by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston does not fulfil the conditions necessary to enable me to accord it priority as a question of privilege.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 14 and 25.

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT LAWYERS

Question No. 14—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): There are 21 lawyers assigned to the Department from the Department of Justice.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE LAWYERS

Question No. 25—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed by the Department of Agriculture?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): There are seven lawyers assigned to the Department from the Department of Justice.

[English]

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining question be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I join in this debate because I think the Bill tabled by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) has far-reaching consequences for many regions of Canada, particularly the less fortunate ones.

There are a number of concerns, but at the outset I want to thank the Minister for bringing forward Bill C-15. This is the first opportunity the Government has taken to indicate to the House and to the Canadian people the actual type of climate it wants to see created in the country for economic opportunities. I am a little confused, however, knowing the personality of the Minister involved. Perhaps other Members can well understand what has taken place.

It seemed to me that the tabling or introduction of this legislation should have taken place well after or simultaneous to the tabling of the Budget which is to come down in February, 1985. Unfortunately, this piece of legislation has been set out by the Government and the Minister without knowing the full parameters of the economic policy of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or the direction in which the Conservative Party wants to take the Canadian economy.

I want to clarify for Hon. Members opposite as well as those to my left that we in this Party are cognizant of the fact that foreign investment is needed in Canada. My Party has never been opposed to foreign investment in the Canadian economy. For Members opposite to suggest or imply that, through innuendo, questions or commentaries, is totally misleading. I want to make perfectly clear that we are supportive of foreign investment.

That is not to suggest, however, that foreign investment in Canada should take place without restrictions or controls. This is where we differ greatly from the Conservative Party of Canada. That Party believes, as was announced by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, that basically there ought not to be any restrictions or controls on foreign investment takeovers in Canada. We disagree. There ought to be. Foreign investment is important to the Canadian economy notwithstanding restrictions. It is important to small businessmen. It is important to various regions of the country because it can, provided there are certain restrictions and levers at the control of the Government in power, assist and enhance economic opportunities for Canadians.

We have heard a great deal of the rhetoric of the Minister responsible for this legislation, who says that it will be the cure for unemployment. Respectfully, it is the same rhetoric that the Canadian people heard in August, 1984—that the Conservative Government upon election would create tens of thousands of new jobs. That is what we heard. The exact opposite has occurred because of the financial direction revealed in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance, which reduces moneys in the Canadian economy by $4.2 billion. He has displaced 50,000 people for the month of November. So much for job creation.

Now we have a new scenario. First it was inflation, then productivity, and then: Elect the Tories and we will have tens of thousands of new jobs. That did not work, so we have another vaudeville act, foreign investment. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) went to the United States and said: "Come one, come all; come to Canada. There will be no restrictions whatsoever". He says in this House that this will increase employment opportunities. I hope the Minister responsible will come before committee and place before Members of Parliament the impact studies showing how much foreign investment will come into the country as a result of these changes and how many jobs will be created.

I would like to know how many jobs will be created in the Province of Quebec as a result of the changes to this legislation. How many jobs will be created in the next fiscal year in Atlantic Canada and how many in western Canada? We hope to obtain that information. It is misleading for Members opposite to talk about job creation on one hand and on the other to refuse to place before Parliament as of recent date the statistics which would confirm their prediction that employment opportunities will be increased. I find that to be intellectually dishonest on their part.

Members opposite, particularly the Minister, have argued that the restrictions in the Foreign Investment Review Agency under the previous administration were too harsh, that somehow economies and countries around the world ought not to have restrictions. Perhaps he is blind because he refuses to acknowledge that the United States has restrictions on foreign investment. It may be a little bit "sexier," if I can coin a phrase, in terms of their anti-trust laws, but they have restrictions on foreign investment in their country. Why should Canada be different?

It is the second scene of the vaudeville act over there. Jobs, jobs, jobs will be created with the Foreign Investment Review Act changed to Investment Canada. That is the new byline of this group. Somehow there will be thousands of new jobs. I do not believe that for one moment and neither do the Canadian people. If we look at what has taken place in the past, the arguments of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion do not hold up.

For the last 10 years that FIRA was in operation, in excess of 6,000 applications were reviewed at, I might add, a success rate of over 91 per cent. That is a very substantial success rate for any country, whether it be Canada, the United States or any of the European countries. When the Minister and the Member opposite allude to the fact that we have curtailed foreign investment, I find that to be intellectually and factually dishonest because the opposite is true.

Let us look at the figures for last year. Foreign investment in Canada was substantial, despite what the Prime Minister said today in Question Period. There are a great number of people who want to invest in Canada. The significant difference between our Party and that Party is in the phrase "significant benefit to Canada", which were the operative words in the Foreign Investment Review Act. Under Investment Canada, the operative words are merely "a net benefit".

Significant benefit to whom? To the regions of this country? That was not mentioned by this Minister. We meant significant to the unemployed, to the youth and to the entrepreneurs of this country. This Government with its vaudeville act is not concerned for the regions, young people or the entrepreneur—not one iota. It wants foreign investment to come in and cherry pick, to pick off the best viable operations. Whether it be a Crown corporation or private sector, it says pick them off and send the technology back to the foreign country.

This Party does not want that. We want to encourage our young people to be involved in business. We want our young people to have jobs in the future. We want a climate of solid economic development, not one that is short term but long term, not only for the eighties but for the nineties as well.

The Minister came before Parliament and said that FIRA was too negative. He said that the name was negative, so the Government changed it to Investment Canada. My NDP colleagues call it Warehouse Canada. I call it Sellout Canada because it is a sellout. This Government will feel the crunch when it faces the Canadian people. I wish they would call an election now. They would be gone.

In a cursory review of Bill C-15, Mr. Speaker, you see that the legislation places the ultimate authority for decision-making as a result of foreign investment with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I want Members to understand fully that we in Canada have enjoyed a Cabinet system where decisions were made by Cabinet to reflect the concerns and aspirations of the regions of this country. No longer will that be the case. The authority rests with the Minister responsible. Under Clause 5 he has the authority for Investment Canada. Industries which could previously be leveraged by the Cabinet or the Ministry to relocate in less fortunate areas of the country will no longer have to do so. The Minister will sit back, as evidenced by many transactions that this individual has been confronted with, and allow the course of business to go along on its own. Therefore, the poorer regions of the country are once again being short-changed by the Conservative Government.

We saw this happen with regard to the creation of jobs. That was one priority. Now the priority is cutting the deficit. Government Members have reduced moneys to the IRDA Program for regional industrial expansion by $200 million. What are they doing now? They are relinquishing authority which was previously held by the entire Cabinet to a single Minister, a Minister whose track record in the private sector was a less than profitable or brilliant one, I would suggest.

This piece of legislation has only one phrase dealing with Canadian investors. What has the Tory Government done with regard to assisting Canadian investors through this piece of legislation? It has done absolutely nothing. There has been no compassion for the Canadian small business entrepreneur and no compassion for the small investor. It is a sellout of Canadian business opportunities to foreign countries.

What about protection for workers in the country? The Minister responsible stood in his place and said: "It is the flow of capital into the country that is germane to getting employment in Canada moving again". I respectfully suggest that that is both intellectually and factually dishonest. It is not the flow of capital into this country but what is done with the capital when it gets here that is germane to creating employment. Do we want workers in Ontario, British Columbia, Nova Scotia and P.E.I. to have more capital come across the border only to find that new machinery which will displace workers has been bought? Is that what the Conservative Government stands for? Is that what the substantive parts of this Bill are about? That is what the Bill says. There is absolutely no protection for the Canadian worker. Where are the safeguards? There are none whatsoever. There is an inflow of capital but there is no protection.

Of course, free season has been declared on Crown corporations. Those silent Members on the back-benches, sheep that they are, say absolutely nothing. Some Crown corporations were put in place because of certain economic conditions in the regions. Others were put in place for other reasons. Nevertheless, they were put in place. What is this Government prepared to do? It is prepared to sell them out as well and to sell out Canadian workers.

By introducing this Bill, the Government has not provided for debate in the House a list of draft regulations pursuant to the Bill. It has refused to do so. That is an old soft shoe and part of the vaudeville act taking place over there and over on the book-ends on either side of me. Government Members have proposed to go to committee and invite individuals to put forward their suggestions. Then at the end of the day we will be presented with a document which, through the large majority opposite, will be confirmed by the committee and obviously by the House of Commons. The Government ought to place those regulations before Parliament now so the Canadian people will have an understanding of what direction the Government wants to take with regard to the cultural aspects of this Bill.

We are going to review this Bill clause by clause in committee. Hopefully we will have witnesses from all provinces across the country come forward and testify. We want to review the Bill because the Prime Minister indicated that the appointment of any individual to a senior public position ought to be reviewed by a committee. I would hope that we would have an opportunity to review the new managing director for Investment Canada. Of course, his credentials ought to be laid before the Standing Committee on Regional Industrial Development so we will all have an opportunity to view at first hand, his other expertise and his other beliefs regarding his responsibilities in implementing the provisions of this Act. We will want to have an opportunity to peruse that information as well.

As stated by the Minister responsible, the Bill is somehow to be the cure for unemployment in the country. There is not a Member in the Chamber who does not want to see unemployment reduced significantly. However, the approach that this Government has taken with regard to foreign investment is the wrong approach. It is wrong because it does not protect workers and wrong because it does not provide incentive for Canadian investors. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, we in Canada have one of the highest savings rates in the free world. However, the Minister has refused—I should not say refused, Mr. Speaker; he simply does not have any inkling whatsoever as to how to put legislation forward which would attack the problem of having Canadians invest in their own future.

In concluding my remarks, I would like to say that unemployment is the major problem in the country. The Tories believe the major problem to be the deficit. What Tory Members are putting forward here today will in no substantial way reduce unemployment in the country. Alternatively, if they believe it will, then surely they will see that the Minister responsible for regional industrial expansion will table in this House forthwith information which will show beyond a shadow of a doubt that the Bill will reduce unemployment in the regions of the country. They will have him show the statistics and studies and produce the people who have conducted those studies.

In closing, I would say that we are going to oppose this Bill. We are going to suggest amendments to it and we are going to have a thorough examination of it, not only at second reading stage, which will take many, many months, but in committee as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments? If not, we shall resume debate.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am a little perplexed by the fact that none of the Government's supporters are interested in speaking on this debate. I would have hoped that, given the vital importance of the topic we now have before us, it would have generated a little more interest than apparently has been generated to this point in time. I say this recognizing that there are months ahead of us and that there will be ample opportunity by the end of March or early April for anyone who wishes to participate to do so. I do urge upon government back-benchers to remember, however, that the opportunity to give 20-minute speeches will, of course, run out and they will be restricted to making 10-minute comments come the end of February and into early March.

Having said that, I want to say that I doubt very much if, in the life of this Parliament, there will be another debate that will so clearly distinguish the policy direction of the Government from that which would be taken by the New Democratic Party.

I believe it is fair to say that in this debate alone there is a choice to be made. You can either believe with a sort of blind faith that an investor invests out of the goodness of his or her heart, taking into account all of the ramifications and consequences of that investment on other than themselves; or you can believe that an investor with a vested interest—which, of course, ties the two words together—invests in his own best interests and will pay only—cursory attention to the effect of his particular enterprise on those who might come into contact with it or be affected by it. I want to make it clear that I am not saying that investors do not care what happens to other people. I am sure they do on an individual basis. I am sure they do not like to see the kind of thing which has just occurred in India where thousands of people were killed or maimed or will suffer for the rest of their lives as a result of inadequate provisions for the protection not only of the workers inside the plant but of the community. I do not believe for one moment that the principals in that particular company consciously sat down and said, "We don't care what happens to those people". But what they did not do, and what they were not required to do, is to make that one of their primary considerations. They were not required to sit down and consciously factor into their costs the cost of providing the kind of environmental and human protection which would have guaranteed that such an occurrence could not take place.

I do not want to attribute to those people all of the worst possible motives. I attribute to them the motives which drive them, that is, the desire to accumulate wealth. I personally do not share that desire, but I do understand that that goal drives a large number of people in our society and, in fact, it will be held by this Government and by others, not necessarily part of the governing party, as being a worth-while motive.

When one recognizes that that is the primary driving force behind the investor and those who make the decisions on behalf of investors, then one must put in place measures which will guarantee a level of behaviour by those persons which will be satisfactory to the community as a whole. It is interesting to note that investors put those kinds of measures in place to protect themselves from each other, to protect themselves in the stock-market from dealings which would perhaps otherwise result in actions which might be detrimental to the total investment community. What we are suggesting, following along on that example, is the necessity for Members of Parliament and for the Government of Canada to recognize what it is that motivates investors and to then make sure that we have in place the kinds of guarantees which will ensure that the public interest is also served by the investment which takes place.

I would like to say to the Government, Mr. Speaker, that if we are to lose investment dollars to another part of the world simply because that country is prepared to run risks with health, safety or the environment and it is not prepared to take into account the public good, so be it. If a company decides to move from Hamilton to Mexico—as did Allen Industries Canada Ltd.—because of the fact that it can get away with paying pitiful wages, it can get away without protecting the environment, it can get away without industrial accident protection, it does not have to pay unemployment insurance premiums and does not have to provide the benefits that the people of Canada have not only become accustomed to, but deserve, so be it. If an investor is prepared to invest his money elsewhere because he does not have to make those kinds of commitments to Canadians, he can bloody well invest his money elsewhere! That is fine with me. I am not interested in turning Canada into some economic backwater. I am not interested in seeing Canada drop back from the at least reasonably acceptable levels of protection for humans and for the environment which are established. I am not interested in providing an opportunity for someone to walk in with a handful of down-payment dollars, borrow the balance from Canadian banking and financial institutions, turn all of that into a tenfold profit, then put it all in his pocket and walk away. I am not interested in that. That does not help Canada and certainly does not provide anything of value. There is no lasting value in an operation which will put $100,000 or $100 million into Canada if its only purpose is to close the plant down, take the profits it was able to make and ultimately move back to where it came from or to some other part of the world, in order to begin the exercise all over again. I feel the Government has an obligation to consider that prospect. It has an obligation to try to understand that that is the way the system works.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) today how it benefits the Canadian jobless to make available to those who would invest the opportunity to take over an existing company, integrate its operations into the present operation and simply hang on to the distribution system, then close down the manufacturing operation in Canada. How does that benefit the Canadian jobless? The answer is clear, it does not. And there are countless examples where that has occurred. Even with FIRA, that has occurred. If the Government were truly interested in trying to provide for Canadian needs, it would not eliminate FIRA but would look for ways to improve it. That is the direction in which we ought to be going.

How many new jobs are created when a company decides, as did United Technologies, to take over a viable operation in Canada, Otis Elevator, as part of its world-wide conglomerate operation, and then systematically to reduce its involvement in Canada at the manufacturing level? In the recent past, Otis Elevator was providing elevators, escalators, and all kinds of hoisting equipment all around the world. This equipment is now being provided out of New Jersey or out of Germany instead of out of Hamilton or Toronto. Where is the benefit from allowing that kind of take-over?

The Prime Minister says we are trying to create jobs. There were no jobs created there. That is an example of the kinds of major conglomerate operations which this Government is now trying on bended knee to convince to bring their money to Canada. For what? They buy the company, run it down and then take advantage of the already developed customer network by selling to that customer network from their existing operations elsewhere. They then have the nerve to write off their losses against their tax payable in Canada. The Canadian taxpayer not only does not end up with jobs, expertise or research and development, but ends up paying for the loss of these things.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what is wrong with the approach of this Government. It does not seem to take a critical view of the real world. I would like to see investment in Canada so that people have jobs. I want to see research and development taking place here. I want opportunities for our young people who are coming out of the universities and colleges to find jobs in high technology fields. I want to find in Canada the will to develop an indigenous and unique Canadian process which will make Canada first in the world. However, we will not get that in a country like this unless we require from those who are going to establish their operations here that they set out a program and make a commitment to the country as a whole. They have to talk about having Canadians running the operations and developing a research and development component indigenous to this country. They have to give a world mandate for certain product lines that they will develop here. You do not get those kinds of things unless you ask for them. You cannot guarantee they will be in place unless you have it in a contract. Even then it is difficult to try to enforce it. But it is at least possible to measure it, enforceable or otherwise. You can say to them: "You told us you would do this thing". They in turn may well be prepared to sit down and consider whether or not a commitment is something they have to live up to. But as the Minister talks about it, this is not the kind of thing we are going to see.

We hear Canada is open for business again. I predict those famous words will come back to haunt the Prime Minister. As I listened to what he was saying and looked at his objectives and desires over and against past performance, I could not help thinking that Canada is going to get the business again. That is how it seemed to me. There is no way, under this new legislation, to ensure that the kind of development we get is going to be in our long-term best interests. As my colleague said earlier, it is not as if we do not have any foreign investment. Can you imagine the debate in the U.S. Congress and Senate if 52 per cent to 53 per cent of all U.S. manufacturing and industrial component were owned by Canadians? Could you picture it? Could you imagine the debate if 52 per cent to 53 per cent of all U.S. industry and commerce were owned by the Japanese, the Europeans or someone in Hong Kong? It would never tolerate it. It would never accept it. It would be moving—I beg your pardon?

Mr. Friesen: It used to be owned by the British Government.

Mr. Deans: And it changed it.

Mr. Langdon: A revolution.

Mr. Deans: But the United States would never tolerate it. You know that as well as I do, Mr. Speaker; I can tell from the look in your eye that you agree with my every word. If this debate were taking place in the U.S. Congress, the seats would be filled. Every Congressman would be rising to defend American interests. Every single Congressman would be speaking on behalf of the necessity to develop an economy in the region he represents, an economy primarily owned, controlled, operated and directed by Americans.

Mr. Jepson: Stratford is calling.

Mr. Deans: My colleague says that Stratford is calling. Do you know what is wrong? The trouble is that my colleague seems unable to separate the presentation from the substance.

Mr. Jepson: Theatrics from the—

Mr. Deans: The substance, I want to say to him, is of infinite value, whether he knows it or not. In time to come he will look back and regret the fact that when the opportunity was given to him to rise and speak he did not take it. It is absolutely essential in this House at this time that the Members of Parliament get up off their backsides and speak for Canada. They have to understand that what we are talking about is not some passing phase. This is not just a matter of saying , "Well, two or three weeks from now things will be okay and we will all get back to normal". What the Government is doing is making a fundamental decision about who is going to own, operate and control the future of Canada and Canadians. We are deciding here today that the 53 per cent of our economy at present owned by those who do not reside or have any interest in Canada other than to make money will become 63 per cent or 73 per cent. At what point do they own enough? At what point do we say: Damn it, it is time for us to stand up and speak for ourselves. It is time for us to redirect the necessary funds. It is time for us to provide the incentives for Canadians.

Why did the Government not bring forth legislation that would have encouraged Canadians to invest? Why open up the borders to whoever wants to come in without any requirement of any kind? If this Government believes it is necessary to try, as was said earlier today, to open up and shake loose the pools of savings of Canadians, why has the Government decided to open up the floodgates of foreign investment and thereby make it virtually impossible for Canadians to compete? Why?

I find this a very aggravating situation, Mr. Speaker. It is aggravating because it is so clear to me, as I look what the Government has done or is in the process of doing, that the end result can be nothing other than that 10 years from now it will not be 53 per cent, it will be 63 per cent or 73 per cent of Canada's economy owned by other than Canadians. Many small entrepreneurs in Canada who are fighting it out, trying to survive against the much larger conglomerate operation in another part of the world, will succumb almost out of necessity to the sale of their manufacturing facility to their major competitors who may well be ten times their size. That competitor will, as they have always done, then move to consolidate. That consolidation will be done in such a way as to have most of the manufacturing done in those areas of low wage and little benefit. The Canadian operation will end up being simply a warehouse for the distribution of products made elsewhere. That is the process. If you doubt it, Mr. Speaker, then look at the process. What the Government is talking about is free trade. Add free trade to this Bill and you open up the doors for the gradual if not immediate elimination of many of the smaller Canadian manufacturing enterprises.

You know as well as I do that what we need to meet the domestic requirements of Canada can be produced with a week, or perhaps less, of production capacity in many of the operations south of the border. You know that as we open up free trade, the opportunity for Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. operations to enter the U.S. market will be severely restricted by the parents' directives. But in Canada no such requirement will pertain. You will then end up with more and more and more of U.S. and other countries' goods entering Canada without any protection for Canadian industry.

With the introduction of the economic free zones that we now hear the Government talking about, Mr. Speaker, we will see the elimination of minimum wages, workers' compensation payments and unemployment insurance. You will see people having to work in ghetto-like surroundings without any protection. The end result will be that Canadians' standard of living will suffer immeasurably.

What we see from this Government, if you look at the entire program, is a destabilization of the social fabric of Canada. This Government is moving toward eliminating the very things that many in this House have fought for and attempted to develop, in fact have begun to develop over many, many years. I want to let you know, Sir, as I sit down that this Bill is yet another step toward making sure that Canada, although it will have sovereignty in name, will certainly not have sovereignty in fact.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I just want to comment on what the Hon. Member has said. He reminds me of the newspaper editor who, in his column, prayed: Lord, save me from those guys who criticize and minimize those other guys whose enterprise has made them rise above those guys who criticize and minimize. That is all we hear from the New Democratic Party.

I want to correct his historical anecdote regarding the United States. Would it allow legislation that would let others invest in the United States? I want to remind him that the United Kingdom pretty well owned and controlled the economy of the United States until World War I. At that time Great Britain needed the money it had invested in the United States to pay for World War I. Therefore, it sold off its investments in the United States to pay for that war. It was not American legislation that drove out the United Kingdom pound; it was the need to pay for that war. It was not American walls that drove out U.K. investment; it was the U.K.'s choice to sell its investment.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the Member must understand that only 2 per cent of the entire American economy is foreign owned. If we had 2 per cent, or even 10 per cent foreign owned, I would not mind opening the doors. However, at 53 per cent I have serious reservations about the value of opening the doors even further. Equally important, as the Hon. Member knows, are the circumstances that surrounded the ownership by Britons in the United States. It was not necessarily always, or even primarily, in the area of direct investment. In many cases it was the result of loans made for the development that took place.

I would like to go back to one other point. I would like to suggest to the Member, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I do not want a war and the necessity to fund a war to bring us to our senses. I do not think we should have to wait until there is a need for a great war effort before the U.S. withdraws its funds from Canada. I would much prefer that we did this in an orderly, sane and sensible way with some economic planning involved. As the Member full well knows, it was in fact the war effort that resulted in the withdrawal, if you will, of much of the financial involvement by Britain in the United States. Quite clearly, if that were required as opposed to sensible direct and economic planning approaches, I would choose the latter.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of the Bill that has been presented on investment in Canada. I found it very interesting to listen to my colleague from Hamilton Mountain. This is a good opportunity to debate a basic concept which truly does differentiate between the points of view of those of us in the Government and those on the other side of the House. I think the Hon. Member will agree that during the campaign which took place this summer we were very clear about this differentiation. We were very clear about our view of economic growth, job creation, and the need for foreign investment in the country. I am pleased that we are able to bring forward, so early in the mandate of our Government, some concrete, specific actions to put in place those campaign promises. I might remind the Hon. Member that we have the support of the Canadian public on those policies. We have formed the Government. We have a commitment to the Canadian public to put in place the policies that were presented in the Investment Canada Bill.

I would like to spend a few minutes today discussing why this Bill was needed. I recall the time 10 years ago when the Liberals introduced the Foreign Investment Review Agency. I do not think that anyone understood at that time the very negative impact that it would have on investment in Canada. As the years went on and we became experienced with the delays and frustrations, it became very evident to our friends across the border and in other countries that Canada was not welcoming foreign investment. In fact, in many cases Canada was doing its best to discourage it. That did result in loss of jobs and a lowering of economic growth in the country. About four or five years ago when this problem was at its height, a common phrase was that investors had no fear but FIRA itself. I am pleased that today we can remove that sense of fear and say to potential investors that we do welcome their investment and confidence in this country and in this Government.

I would like to give you some examples from my own experience of what has happened in the past few years. I think we are all familiar with the story of Cyprus Anvil. In fact, the leader of the Yukon Territory was with us today. As a result of FIRA's lack of approval for foreign investors to keep that mine open and operating and to maintain jobs for Yukon, that mine has been in great difficulty. We do not know what its future will be and there could very well be loss of jobs there.

I came back on the plane this morning from the West Coast. Every time I fly across this land I am amazed at its vastness. I realize the tremendous potential that we have, but I also realize that we do not have the investment dollars in the country to turn some of those opportunities into realities. I came back on the plane with a gentleman from California. He related a story to me which took place in about 1977. His company had concrete plans to invest in a high-tech industry in Quebec. It put its plant into operation. The people here had the expertise and the knowledge they required. They were going to employ professional people to develop skills and new technology. They worked with FIRA over a period of about two years. They were totally frustrated. They were never able to get their equity position in place in this country and could not go ahead with that investment. As a result of that, those highly skilled people were not able to get jobs in that industry and that economic potential was not realized in this country.

Of course this gentleman's reaction to investment in Canada has been totally negative. Happily, I was able to relate to him what the Government is doing. I was able to explain to him the program of Investment Canada. His reaction was that his company would be prepared to take a second look. I had been hearing about the kinds of things that our colleagues have been bringing up. I asked this man why he wanted to invest in Canada, what it was that attracted him. He said that it was the fact that we have expertise and skills in this area, but also that he believed and had seen in practice that Canadians really understood the work ethic. I felt really good about that. You do not hear that very often. I believe that is true and I certainly welcomed hearing that from one of our friends from the United States. I would like to be able to say to him and others that their investment capital is welcome in this country to help us create those jobs and economic growth.

A couple of weeks ago the Conference Board of Canada produced its report. I think we all found that very interesting. In that report the Conference Board reviewed the experience of FIRA and interviewed a number of companies. I would like to relate some of the comments it received from some of the people it talked to. One of the companies said that on a scale of one to ten it would rate Canada at zero. This was in terms of welcoming foreign investment. Another official with a British holding company said that his firm considered totalitarian states such as Chile, China and troubled Northern Ireland as more attractive places to invest. The author of the study found that rather shocking and so do we. That is not the kind of atmosphere and the kind of mat that we want to set out for potential investors.

The Conference Board discovered that about half the companies it interviewed had been deterred because of FIRA. A number of specific issues were addressed in that study. One issue concerned the delays people had experienced with FIRA, the lack of clarity in the criteria as well as the cost of undertaking those reviews.

I have heard that concern echoed many times by my colleagues. In fact, friends of mine who are lawyers who were involved in assisting companies to obtain their applications through FIRA have been quite open in saying that they realize that they are the only ones who benefited from the whole experience. I do not believe that FIRA has benefited anyone else.

In addition to actual investments that have been deterred or have not come to Canada, FIRA has also been used as an excuse in some cases. I have seen examples where potential investors have said that because of FIRA they do not wish to proceed with investments here. It is hard to document that type of case and we really do not know how often that has happened, but it has existed. With that excuse no longer available we will be able to tell private companies and small and large businesses that are potential investors that we know what kind of investment we want and that they will not have to go through a review process and face unnecessary delays. There will be no excuse for them not to invest.

I believe that this legislation is a very sensible approach to the whole question of foreign investment. The fact that new businesses will be exempt from review seems to be a very commonsense approach. Why should anyone who has some money and wants to start a new business in this country be prevented from doing so? Of course, there is provision for protective measures in areas of particular concern to our cultural heritage. Of course, I support that and I know that it is important to protect.

Potential purchasers of businesses with less than $5 million in assets will be able to proceed with those investments without review. The Minister gave some interesting examples of that this morning. This means that approximately 80 per cent of businesses will be exempt from review, according to the Bill. Indirect acquisitions involving more than $50 million will be subject to review. Although it is difficult to determine such a figure, we know that indirect acquisitions of more than that sum involve major acquisitions the impact of which might be questioned. We will have the opportunity to review those acquisitions. Most other acquisitions that are relatively routine will be welcomed and processed quickly.

This legislation also corrects a number of other problems in the review process. I believe the most important problem concerns the timing. Many of us have been involved in dealing with the bureaucracy from which we cannot get an answer. Eventually people give up or not even try. This legislation makes such dealings very clear. The Minister must be efficient because he has 30 days in which to respond.

Mr. Manly: Forty-five.

Mrs. Collins: Plus the 45 days, if they are advised. If they are not advised, the acquisition is exempt. I believe that is fair because the onus should be on the Government to indicate that there may be a problem and a review is necessary. This will ensure that these issues are dealt with in a timely manner. Since the onus is on the Minister to make the decision, it eliminates the need to go through Cabinet.

We can assure those who are interested in investing in Canada and whose application exceeds the limits of exemption that their review will be conducted fairly and in a timely manner.

I am also pleased to see the change in how the assessment will be done. I have always had some difficulty in understanding what "significant benefit" meant. I could not relate it to anything from my personal experience, and I believe that a change to the concept of "net benefit" will enable us to deal with these applications in a more businesslike manner. Our method of assessing that benefit will be more clearly understood by all those involved.

We have also added criteria to ensure that these investments are compatible with cultural policy. We will look at the effect of international competitiveness to make sure that these criteria are not only fair but ensure that these investments which are subject to review are compatible with our national goals.

We need the investment. I must disagree with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) in that respect. We must remember that our country is still young. We have had relatively little time to accumulate a lot of wealth. While Canadians are among the best savers in the world, we do not have the mass accumulation of money that is required to develop our resource industries or alternative industries that are required in this country.

Several years ago, at the national policy convention of the Conservative Party, I had the opportunity to discuss this issue. One of my colleagues on the panel conducted an analysis on how much money this country needed in the next few years. His assessment at that time was that we would need approximately $1.5 trillion during the 1980s and $4.5 trillion during the 1990s. There is no way that our own economy can generate that kind of savings or equity. We must go outside to attract that equity in order for Canada to grow.

What we do have is great human energy because we are a young country. Canadians have ideas, and I believe that is what the more mature societies in the rest of the world are looking for. I believe that Europe, the United States and the Pacific Rim countries are interested in what we have to offer. I think we have a tremendous potential of developing partnerships to expand our expertise and our human energy along with the dollars from other societies.

Hon. Members opposite are concerned about the risks involved. I find this concern rather interesting because it seems to reflect a very negative attitude toward the human spirit. It is as if everything in life had to be controlled because we have no sense of faith in ourselves. I fundamentally disagree with that concept. I believe that we are a nation of risk-takers and our Government wants to encourage the risk-takers in this country. We want to encourage those who have capital to use it in partnership with other capital to take risks and invest in opportunities in this country in order to create the jobs that we so badly need.

I had the opportunity to return to my riding of Capilano on the weekend to talk to some business people there about their initial reaction to the investment Canada Bill. The reactions were all positive. I believe they see it as a sign of hope and the fulfilment of a commitment by the Government.

I also had the opportunity to get some reaction from people in Calgary where I used to live. The reaction of the energy industry, upon whom we are counting to make major new investment for the creation of jobs, has been truly positive. The Independent Petroleum Association and the CPA have both lauded the efforts of the investment Canada Bill. They predict that it will result in new drilling activity. It is another step in the right direction toward the kind of positive climate they need to make those investments.

Representatives of those industries were in Ottawa last week. I know that a number of Members had an opportunity to talk to them. Many of those representatives said that while they were interested in what we were saying, they wanted some concrete evidence that we would take action.

We hope to see changes in the FIRA legislation and in the National Energy Program. Now they can say that we have started that process. We have put in place some concrete evidence of our commitment. Investment Canada will encourage investment. I can assure my colleagues that the western reaction to this legislation is extremely positive.

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was in New York yesterday. The kind of response he had there was also positive. As we go to Japan next week, we will have the opportunity of meeting with Japan's business community. The Japanese too will see this as a positive new approach and we will once again be able to enter into discussions on joint ventures and new investments from Japan as well.

The West particularly has suffered I think from some of the problems of FIRA over the last 10 years and it is with a great sense of relief that we shed that burden of encroachment which was so unnecessary. It dampened the human spirit of this country. I am glad we have divested ourselves of that burden, that onerous and negative aspect toward investment, and instead are replacing it with something very positive that will create a new era of co-operation for us on the international scene. We will see Canada once again take its place in the international market-place and be open for business once more.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). I am enjoying this exchange with her. I heard a statement made by the Hon. Member and I would like clarification from her on it. It is one of the areas that I think is——fuzzy, as we would say.

[English]

I will not speak in French. I will continue in English. Does this Government intend to do away with some of the significant benefit clauses of the previous legislation which the Hon. Member feels are very vital in order for us to promote this atmosphere of goodwill? With words alone will we change the whole atmosphere?

If you look at the Bill itself, Mr. Speaker, there are very few real changes. I guess the real change is the mirror images. With those significant clauses that the Hon. Member describes as the untouchables, cultural policy compatible with national goals, could the Hon. Member explain what is a cultural policy compatible with national goals, please?

Mrs. Collins: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am always so pleased to have questions from my hon. colleague and I, too, am enjoying this dialogue. I think as one of the new assessment factors we are adding compatibility with cultural policy. I believe that will require some further discussion and definition. My understanding is that it would cover particularly the areas of publishing and broadcasting. These are two areas over which we feel very sensitive about ensuring Canadian control. Those are the two about which I feel most strongly.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the comments of the Member who said that Canada is a new country and has not had time yet to develop its own capital. Coming from British Columbia I am sure the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) will be familiar with the situation that we have in our lumber industry. It is of great concern to me and to other British Columbians that that resource has been depleted. Capital moved in and depleted the resource. It then moved out. It did not build up any of the infrastructure or any secondary industry. As a result, we are more vulnerable than ever to world markets.

My question is not an original question, it is the same question to which my colleague tried to get an answer from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). How does the Member feel about the provisions in this Bill that allow foreign capital to come in and take over small Canadian businesses without any kind of review? The Bill in effect creates open season for small business. The Hon. Member talked about the need for more risk. Does she not feel that perhaps this is creating an unacceptably high level of risk for small Canadian businesses?

Mrs. Collins: No I do not, Mr. Speaker, share the Hon. Member's view on that. No one has to sell his company. No one tells me that I have to sell out. It is up to me as a business person. I do not see this as a great threat to our small business community. Certainly if those small businesses that need capital to grow have difficulty getting it in Canada and they have a colleague or a friend or someone in another country who can join with them, I see that as an advantage. I do not at all share the fears which the Hon. Member has expressed. I have been a small business person and have worked in both small and large business. I do not at all share the Hon. Member's negative feeling about this approach.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I should like to start out by saying that it is not our side expressing a lack of faith in ourselves. It is not our side which seems to be convinced that everything from hairdressers to popcorn sellers should be set up by foreign investment. I am proud to be able to say that it should be the case in Canada that we provide our own hairdressers and popcorn sellers. It should not be something for which a Minister has to stand up and apologize.

I have a couple of questions for the Hon. Member. First, I will just follow up on the question my colleague asked. I can understand as a business person why the Member might be interested in seeing open season for American investors. It is very important that each of us when we enter this Chamber shift from being business people, university professors, or whatever, to becoming Members of Parliament, thinking about the people of our communities. How can it help the people of a community working for that small business person to have a company bought out and reduced in size or shut down by an American company, as will become possible under this legislation?

Second, the Hon. Member talked about routine cases, which the change in the threshold level for indirect takeovers will now permit to go through without review. How can it be routine for a plant in a community, such as Black and Decker in Barrie with its 600 workers, to be taken over without review as would have been the case under this new Bill? We have had that confirmed by the FIRA people. How can it be routine to have such an act take place, a plant shutdown and 600 people thrown out of work?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, anything is possible. I do not think that in our role as Members of Parliament we are trying to legislate to control our society totally. It is the other way.

First, I am thinking of the community. I am thinking about the people who need jobs and who are not going to get those jobs unless we get new and additional capital investment in Canada. That is who I care about. That is who I want to see prosper. I believe we need help and assistance in attracting the $1.2 trillion or whatever we need for new investment. I think our new approach is psychological to some extent and will help to create that positive climate.

I also object to the Hon. Member's first comment when he said something about an open season for American investors. To me that has a negative connotation to our American friends. What is wrong with American investors? They are some of our dearest friends. Why should we not welcome their investments? I do not share his view that anyone would invest major capital in this country in order to close something down and basically lose that investment. I just do not think that is the reason people invest. We will see in the future, but I am confident that this is not the pattern we will see.

Mr. Nystrom: I am sure the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) would tell the Hon. Member privately that we have had that theme in our Province of Saskatchewan for over two and a half years. He can tell the Hon. Member that the number of people on welfare has risen by 22 per cent and that the unemployment rate in our province has doubled. Is she aware of this reaction in Saskatchewan? Is she trying to emulate that kind of record? I know it embarrasses to a great degree Hon. Members such as the Hon. Member for Assiniboia.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I am not particularly familiar with the situation in Saskatchewan. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that our approach is to create jobs, to encourage investment and to develop economic growth which is so necessary. Our friends from across the oceans and across the border will assist us in doing so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has terminated.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson)—Government Expenditures—Work of review committee. (b) Composition of advisory committee; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—Environmental Affairs—Canadian Wildlife Service—Cancellation of Herring Gull Egg Program. (b) Minister's view; the Hon. Member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet)—Penitentiaries—Escape of three inmates from Bath Institution.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate on behalf of my Party. We are not discussing today whether or not Americans are our friends. We already know this. It was very interesting to listen to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) who seemed to suggest that because Americans are our friends, we must have no laws and we must let them come in and do what they like.

I have friends, but they do not take over my house. When they come to my place, they are guests. They usually behave in such a way that I am still the master of my own house. As Canadians, we are masters of our own country. We should ensure that our laws are such that we continue to be masters of our own destiny. Whether or not Americans are our friends is not the discussion today. We know they are our friends. However, if one is standing beside an elephant and the elephant rolls over on top of one, whether or not it was a friendly elephant, the result is the same—one is flattened like a pancake. The discussion as to whether or not the Americans are our friends need not enter into this debate at all.

We have heard the Government say, as I said previously that the United States is our ally and therefore we should be in a position of submission or do whatever it wants. It is interesting to note that not long ago—and I believe it was yesterday—we discussed the arms issue. The Government talked about the fact that our position should be a position of strength when dealing with other countries. It appears that on the peace issue we have to negotiate from a position of strength. On the other hand, when it talks about trade issues, we have to negotiate from a position of submission. I fail to realize how the Government could have those two very contradictory views from one day to the next. I think the positions taken should have been the complete reversed of the ones taken by the Government.

This morning we listened very attentively to the Minister's statement. He described the previous Government's position as outworn ideology. Moments later he described in the House the Gray report of 1973 which advocated, as he described it, that control of foreign investment be only directed at large corporations. It is very interesting that on the one hand the Government described our views as being outmoded and then it returned to views of earlier years and called them the modern and appropriate way to act now.

There is outworn ideology at times, but it does not come from the Liberal Party. It comes from the Government which has outworn views, views which are 20 years to 40 years old. The Conservatives have not been in power for many years. Now that they are back in power, they take the position that whatever worked in 1950 will work in the 1980s. That is not so. This is a different world. It is a different generation. We have to live with different realities. Of course the Americans are still our friends. We know that, but that is not what is at stake. What is at stake is being the masters of our own destiny.

Also this morning the Minister took great pains to describe how FIRA affected such industries as hamburger stands. I thought that was rather amusing, for the largest restaurant chain in the world is a chain of hamburger stands. As a matter of fact, it is one of the largest corporations in the world. To indicate that that particular industry, the restaurant industry, is not important and that foreign investment regulations were not in order does not take into account the reality with which that industry lives. The threat of multinational corporations and very large chains is indeed present for that industry as it is for many others.

I, for one, should like to know where the Bill stands in terms of the policy and philosophy of the Government regarding competition. The Government talked about the need for more competition. How can we have more competition when multinationals come here, buy our small and medium-sized industries, make them part of their conglomerate structure and eliminate whatever competition exists? Or should we have multinationals creating a temporary competitive position against small Canadian companies until they are forced out of business? Is that competition? In the long term it will result in more and more corporate concentration, not more competition.

The Hon. Member for Capilano just told us that FIRA had a bad name and that sometimes FIRA was even used as an excuse. In other words, a company which did not really want to invest here would say, "I will not invest in Canada because of FIRA". If it did not want to invest here in the first place, what is the point of including that particular element in the discussion? It was not going to come here anyway, by the admission of the Hon. Member for Capilano. If it did not want to invest in this country in the first place, it does not matter whether it used that particular excuse, the excuse that our hockey players are too big, the excuse that there was too much snow in this country or that heating bills were too high. What is the point in using alternative excuses if the Hon. Member has already identified that the company did not want to come here? To say that FIRA was used as an excuse by people who did not want to come here in the first place does not add to the credibility of this legislative initiative.

Investment Canada was an election promise. We have heard a lot about election promises lately. Some of us have reminded the Government of all the promises that were made and all the promises that have not been delivered. I have here the Tory collection of 338 promises. I have brought some of these to the attention of the House before. I will do so again today so as not to disappoint anyone.

I want to talk about the foreign investment promises. Some of these promises are contradictory. The measure before us today does not fulfil the promises that were made. Let me read some of them. The first promise reads:

> Attract more foreign direct investment in order to lessen the country's sensitivity to every upward movement in U.S. interest rates.

That is a rather interesting promise. It does not require another promise to be contradictory. It is contradictory in itself. How will having more U.S. business here lessen our dependence on U.S. interest rates? I am having difficulty understanding how this promise stands on its own, let alone against anything else. The second promise reads:

> Pass a law banning new foreign investment in at least four sectors; banking and finance, the media, energy and telecommunications.

Is that not interesting in view of the Bill before us today? The third promise reads:

> Hold public hearings to decide whether to extend this ban to other sectors of the economy.

We are waiting for the public hearings before we pass this Bill. Let us have the public hearings that were promised. That is the third promise in the investment policy of the Conservative Party. We cannot pass this Bill before the public hearings are held. We want the benefit of much input from Canadians in every walk of life, from one coast to the other, before adopting this legislative measure. After all, we on this side want the Government to deliver on its election promises. It promised to hold public hearings before deciding to extend this ban to other sectors of the economy. The fourth promise reads:

Make the entire operation overseen by an agency that might be called Investment Canada or Caninvest.

Apparently that was an alternative title. During the election campaign the Conservatives said there would be an Investment Canada agency. However, the role for it as described at that time was vastly different from what we see today. Today we see that Investment Canada will be this Government's advertising agency for attracting foreign capital. That is not the role that was described during the election campaign. All that is the same is the title. It is the same in name only. Its role is very different.

In most cases there will be no review for new investments. That is what the Minister stated this morning. If the Government has not completed its work by the end of the waiting period, the period of wait will be deemed to be approval for the process. In other words, the Government must get its act together and complete any review very quickly or approval will be deemed to have been given.

That is in direct contradiction to the Bill. Clause 5 states "The Minister shall". The duty is on the Minister. The Minister is to carry out various things. I will read some of them:

—ensure that the notification and review of estimates are carried out in accordance with this Act;—

—assist in the development of industrial and economic policies that affect investment in Canada;

Throughout Clause 5, the onus is on the Minister. It is the duty of the Minister to do various things. If initiates are not taken during the waiting period, approval is deemed to have been given. That is a flagrant contradiction. We cannot have those two policies simultaneously. The Minister cannot, on one hand, have the duty and, on the other hand, have a loophole which says if it is not done within a certain number of days, it is deemed to be an approval. That clause needs to be reviewed.

We are not here to discuss whether we want foreign investment. We want foreign investment, but we must ensure that investment from outside the country is in the best interest of all Canadians. In addition, it must be in the best long-term interests of this country. It cannot be a shortsighted initiative. We need long-term planning and long-term initiatives that will be to the benefit of this country for many years.

If adopted, this policy could do for us what it did for Central America and place us in the position where we are totally dominated by others and no longer the masters of our own destiny. We do not want that. This Government should have second thoughts, look at the Bill again and have a mindset whereby it will make major modifications to the Bill. Maybe the name does need to be changed. Maybe we need to review part of the Act. We on this side are open to constructive suggestions. However, we do not want to sell the store. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that this country was open for business. However, we are not open at firesale prices.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he thinks the sale of Petrofina to Petro-Canada has created jobs in Canada, since a number of his colleagues have suggested that the presence of a foreign company in this country tends to create more unemployment than employment.

Therefore, I would like to know first of all, whether the purchase of Petrofina by Petro-Canada has created jobs in Canada, and second, whether the Hon. Member knows how many Japanese and German companies involved in packaging, hi-tech and computers decided against setting up business in Canada because they did not want to waste time going through the screening process, and finally decided to go to the United States or Europe.

Does the Hon. Member agree that situations of this kind are indeed disturbing as far as job creation is concerned?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), is aware that in the past, 92 per cent of all applications made to FIRA were approved. It is therefore wrong to say that the screening process has discouraged foreign investment. And that is not what we are trying to do today.

Mr. Speaker, the important thing is to ensure that foreign investment is in the best interests of our country. That is what we want. And I am sure that the people of the riding of Gatineau would agree.

Mr. Speaker, as far as Petrofina is concerned, we realized that the oil industry in this country did not belong to us at all. We were, in fact, entirely at the mercy of foreign investors. We were not our own masters in the oil sector. So we made a decision, and it was a good one, that the industry should belong to Canadians. We could not start from scratch, so we had to buy existing corporations, and we had to pay the price. This had to be done. The Government made a decision, fully aware that it was necessary and that it was in the best interests of our country.

Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that in 1979, a Prime Minister mentioned selling Petro-Canada. And you know how voters reacted when they tried to sell Petro-Canada. They did not take very kindly to that decision. It is important for us to own our oil industry and the whole energy sector or at least a large part of it, to ensure that foreign investors do not do what they did during the oil crisis when oil tankers were turned away from Canadian shores and routed to other countries. This has happened, Mr. Speaker, and—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Any more questions?

Mrs. Mailly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I asked two questions to my colleague. Did Petro-Canada's purchase of Petrofina create jobs? I also asked him whether the existence of—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has a question?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). I was pleased with the remarks that he made about the need for FIRA and the fact that he is an economic nationalist and wants to be——masters in our own house, in our own country.

[English]

I agreed very much with him and am glad he is taking that position. Hopefully he will have some influence on the Government across the way. I want to ask him whether or not he was disappointed with what was happening to FIRA under the previous Liberal Government.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They butchered it, you're right.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) whom we in Saskatchewan call "Red Ray", by the way, and who is one of the few red Tories left, has said that the Liberals have butchered FIRA. That really sums up what was done under the previous Minister of Industry, the Hon. Ed Lumley, a very good friend of mine.

The Hon. Member referred to the Gray report as being good and substantive. Over the years, a number of Liberal Ministers seemed to interpret the regulations in a very tough and positive way and in more of an economic nationalist way. However, in the last three or four years, we have seen FIRA'S teeth pulled and the old hound dog was left with just a few old teeth. I am wondering whether or not this has disappointed the new Hon. Member of the House because he seems to be taking a much tougher stand than the one taken by the previous Liberal Government. Was he critical of the approach that it was taking? Does he agree with me that one reason the Conservative Government can now get rid of FIRA so easily is that the Liberals had already started down that path in any event?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Liberals had no intention of dismantling this agency. The Liberals, of course, created FIRA. Some people say that the Hon. Member's Leader did not say that our Leader was very supportive of that agency. We know, of course, that we had to modify it. We know that in the last few years during difficult economic times, we sometimes had to adjust our policies. It is a delicate balancing act. However, to go from there to the position of the Government opening the door and letting anything in, whether or not it is beneficial to our country, is a far different story. That is not the kind of policy for which the Liberal Party stands.

We want the protection of our Canadian industries. We want to own a substantial portion of them ourselves. Foreign investments are welcome, but they must be in the best interests of our country.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment on the Hon. Member's speech. I would like to try to answer one of the questions he raised during his speech, and that was, how foreign investment affects interest rates in the country in a positive way. I would like to try to explain that to him and to point out to the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), who unfortunately is leaving the Chamber, that I think it is very clear that the reason the Liberals were unable and chose not to enforce the laws—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would appreciate the Hon. Member directing his question to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Dorin: The comment that I have is simply in explanation to the Hon. Member's question regarding interest rates. As the Hon. Member knows, interest rates in this country are affected by United States interest rates. If there becomes too large a differential in rates, equity on capital flows from this country to the United States. In fact, having equity capital inflows balances off, to some degree, and puts upward pressure on the Canadian dollar. This allows the Bank of Canada some room to manoeuvre in terms of interest rates and in terms of maintaining a lower interest rate structure.

I would point out that since 1980, in excess of $30 billion of equity capital has left the country, causing problems for the Canadian dollar and forcing the Bank of Canada to respond by having abnormally high interest rates. I would point that out as the answer to the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, that was a very interesting lecture on economics given by the Hon. Member. However, I am sure you would agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that having more United States companies in Canada when there are high U.S. interest rates cannot lower interest rates in Canada. That assumption is absolutely preposterous. Those companies get their money from the U.S. capital market at those same high interest rates. The theory that we can lower interest rates in the country in proportion to what they are in the United States by getting more money from the United States comes from a school of economics that only that Hon. Member can understand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, when I rise to debate a Bill like this one, I feel that the work I put in this past summer to achieve the opportunity to speak here was fully justified. In the development of the Canadian nation, consideration of a Bill dealing with how foreign investment might come to Canada and what its consequences might be is of the most enormous importance in determining what kind of country we have now and how the nation will develop in the future.

This afternoon, particularly in view of the limited time before us, I would like to consider first of all something of the development past that has brought us to this position. It is an appropriate season to be considering the kind of Bill that is before us. If anything reflects the kind of Christmas spirit and hope that Santa Claus will be good to us again, it is surely the thinking that is reflected by the Investment Canada Bill. Here we have this conviction that if Canadians are good and the Government throws open its doors, then all sorts of good things can come to us.

When one listens to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) responding to questions about this subject, one has an overwhelming sense of the extent to which our goodness in the way of throwing open the doors is absolutely essential for good things like gifts on Christmas Eve to come to the Canadian people. Surely there should be a more careful analysis of the whole matter to determine if that is likely to be the result.

Colleagues of mine have earlier indicated the questions we must ask ourselves. There are very serious questions to ask ourselves in deciding whether it is in fact sensible to think that, like Christmas, foreign investment is going to bring us all kinds of gifts and make our economy a stronger one. The kind of fuzzy thinking which has gone into this proposal is reflected in the statement of the Minister on Friday last. We were told that Canada's interests will be advanced by encouraging Canadian and non-Canadian investment, not by discouraging it. That, I dare say, is true as a whole statement, but to put "Canadian investment" and "non-Canadian investment" together in that way reflects the fuzzy thinking indulged in by the Conservative Government over these last weeks.

As I said a few days ago with respect to the borrowing authority Bill, what the Government has served up in talking about the deficit is a great deal of descriptive material, but I could find no real reason for us to believe that it understands why the deficit has reached the point it has and whether it really has a program to deal with it. In a similar way, in the few weeks before Christmas, we debate a Bill which is designed to have Santa Claus visit Canada one more year.

I said at the outset that the question which faces us here is one of the development of the Canadian nation. I believe it is worth looking back over the last couple of decades—and even farther back than that—to recognize how concern among Canadians has developed with respect to foreign investment and its impact on Canada. Many people believe—and I expect that is true of my Conservative friends—that that was a Liberal preoccupation back in the days when a royal commission headed by Walter Gordon investigated Canada's economic prospects. Of course, it was the Liberals later on in the 1960s and 1970s who took this up. It is perhaps in a partisan way that the Government has chosen to react to it. I spent some time looking at the concerns of the Conservative Opposition around 1956, the Conservative Opposition which had the opportunity soon afterwards to form the government. When I considered, in particular, the national development program which the Conservative Opposition put before the St. Laurent government at the time, I was astonished to discover the extent to which the Conservatives were at the time concerned about national development, about the impact of foreign investment on that development, and about the need to plan in order to ensure that development took place. I find myself wondering where the Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) is these days in the midst of all of these things. I am sure he remembers all too well the effort he put into developing programs and plans for national development back in those days, which were oriented to what Canadians could do, not what foreigners could bring to this country.

I must say that as early as 1956 to 1957, I was surprised at first, then pleased in a sense, to see that a predecessor in my riding years ago, a man of singular power in the Canadian economy, the Right Hon. C. D. Howe, was also concerned about good corporate citizenship. That is a theme which, of course, became the key word of the 1960s, as at the end of the Diefenbaker Government the Liberals attempted to come to grips with the question of what foreign investment in Canada represented, how it operated and what sort of controls—although at that point they were hardly thinking of controls—or influence or persuasion should be brought to bear.

I believe what the Government now needs to realize is that through the 1960s and into the following decade, as Canadians were faced with the realities as they applied to Canada, they saw the evidence of overwhelming foreign ownership in manufacturing and resource industries. As Canadians worried about what the consequences would be in terms of lack of control of their own economy, a consensus built up in this country that something should be done about it. I say, to the shame of my colleagues to my right, who are much depleted now from the numbers they had in those days, that the Liberal Governments acted very slowly in recognizing that national concern. A number of studies occurred, a parliamentary committee was set up, and there were other studies outside as well. Eventually a cabinet committee considered the matter. However, it was not until the minority Government of 1972 to 1974 that action was finally taken to establish the Foreigh Investment Review Agency. It was recognized that harmful consequences could follow from foreign investment and it became obvious that some sort of screening mechanism was absolutely essential. Some of that concern is, of course, recognized in the Investment Canada Bill which is before us. There will be screening for larger takeovers. But there is the possibility of takeovers of smaller companies and the open door policy for new investments. These activities will not be under any control. We will clearly lose the potential screening and negotiating possibility which the Foreign Investment Review Agency offered us.

In the midst of slower business activity in this country, and in the midst of a recession, which we all hope will not slide into something worse in the next few months, the Government may feel that this is the appropriate action. But I believe that the Canadian people have a real concern about how the economy of this country might be developed. They have a real concern about the loss of control which will come. This Government may find itself bucking the tide of public opinion rather than riding it.

Because of the consequences of foreign investment in this country, as well as in other countries, the basis for decision-making should be a sound, penetrating and deep understanding of what the consequences are. I have spent a certain amount of time reading literature on the subject, Mr. Speaker, and it seems to me that there has been a failure on the part of those people who are avidly determined to have foreign investment here, and on the part of those who oppose it, to make a definitive and conclusive case for their particular perception of it.

There is less blame to be laid at the door of the opponents of foreign investment because the kind of information which is required is often locked away. One of the unfortunate aspects of the operations of the Foreign Investment Review Agency is the secrecy under which it operates and the confidentiality which cloaks the agreements it arrives at with foreign investors. It makes it impossible to do the sort of careful study which is required. Governments which are convinced that foreign investment is necessary could surely obtain access to information which is required. What seems to me utterly lamentable is the fact that the information has not been obtained and the case has not been made. There are abundant reasons for questioning the value of foreign investment.

There are a variety of points which I would be happy to explore when we take up this subject again. We have now a superficial, utterly simplistic argument that what we need to have is Santa coming in again, bringing us these gifts, then we will have prosperity in this country and all will be well.

INCOME TAX ACT

ADVISABILITY OF AMENDING THE ACT

Mr. Ricardo Lopez (Châteauguay) moved that, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to eliminate reassessments and legal actions for the payment of income tax in arrears in cases where errors or omissions happened in taxpayers' income tax returns for the pre-1984 fiscal years.

He said: Mr. Speaker, considering the economic renewal we are experiencing and want to encourage, I suggest that the Government amend the Income Tax Act, and more specifically, Section 152, in order to eliminate reassessments and legal actions for the payment of income tax in arrears in cases where errors or omissions happened in taxpayers' income tax returns for the pre-1984 fiscal years.

I am actually suggesting a kind of general amnesty. I want to propose the following amendment as sub-paragraph 4 to Section 152:

(a) Notwithstanding paragraph 152(4)(a), as of January 1, 1984, if any taxpayer or person filing a return of income for taxation years prior to January 1, 1984, has made any misrepresentation in filing the return, the Minister shall not proceed with any reassessment, additional assessment or assessment of tax, interest or penalties under this Part.

(b) Any proceedings relating to the reassessment, additional assessment or assessment of tax interest or penalties under this Part, on the basis that the taxpayer or person filing a return of income has made any misrepresentation, and started and still pending before January 1, 1984, shall be dropped and no other proceedings undertaken for the taxation years ending before January 1, 1984.

The general principle of this amendment is to prevent the Minister from issuing reassessments in cases of misrepresentation for the years prior to January 1, 1984. The amendment does not, of course, apply to taxpayers against whom court proceedings for tax recovery have already been initiated.

This is a constructive measure for economic renewal that will allow taxpayers to start with a clean slate. Mr. Speaker, I also feel that in future, we should consider a similar amendment to Section 239 of the same Act which concerns the possibility of bringing criminal charges against taxpayers who made false returns. A provision should be included to make it possible for any person anxious to set the record straight with Revenue Canada to file returns for the years prior to January 1, 1984 without fear of criminal or judicial proceedings.

Similarly, there has to be a limit on administrative penalties on returns for pre-1984 fiscal years.

Our opinion therefore is that all those measures will make our fellow Canadians regain confidence, forget about previous years and start anew without fearing that they might lose everything they had before 1984. In addition, these amendments are very much in keeping with the new government's ideology and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

In fact, the accused has the right to be tried within a reasonable time limit. It is very important that the taxpayer be deemed innocent, even in a case of infraction of the civil law.

Our proposed amendment to Section 239 closely reflects the spirit and feelings of the new government. Besides, the Progressive Conservative study group on the activities of Revenue Canada reached the same conclusion in April 1984: offenders have the right to be heard before being declared guilty. Let us not forget that most Canadians are honest citizens quite prepared to pay their taxes. They must have faith in our tax collectors rather than be afraid of them. The Minister has no time limit to review files in cases where fraud is suspected, otherwise it is four years after the first assessment notice. That certainly makes Canadians very insecure.

The same study group also pointed out that Revenue Canada was insensitive, discriminatory and disgraceful towards offenders, making them lose respect for the tax collection system which ought to have been fair and equitable. Let us be mindful of the fact that Canada's tax collection system rests on self-assessment and good will on the part of taxpayers who willingly file honest returns every year and pay any tax owing. Self-assessment has to be one of the most effective and least oppressing tax collection methods. The system will operate only as long as taxpayers support it. Their support will not be forthcoming unless they are convinced the system is fair and a climate of confidence prevails between both parties. Failing that, we breed mistrust, fear and deceit.

These amendments are designed to elicit voluntary divulgation of undeclared income by taxpayers who did not file a return, or filed one with mistakes or missing data. In one fell swoop, the State will fill its coffers by collecting—rather cheaply—taxes owing and recouping funds stashed away in foreign countries by delinquent taxpayers who are afraid to bring those funds back to Canada and draw the attention of Revenue Canada. This money could be laundered, brought back home and then invested to contribute to our economic recovery.

If the taxpayer has lost confidence in the fairness of our voluntary tax system, he will be tempted to join the so-called underground economy, which escapes taxation. By its very nature, the underground economy cannot be measured accurately, but its value is estimated to range between $40 and $80 billion. And although this is not sustained by any concrete evidence, we suspect that more and more money is being invested in this parallel economy. The greater part of this money is being exported to countries such as Switzerland and the Bahamas which are naturaly delighted to receive it. However, this money should stay in and benefit Canada, because huge amounts are involved. The delinquent taxpayer is not anxious to bring home his money for fear of incurring the wrath of Revenue Canada. As long as he feels this sword of Damocles hanging over his head, he will never try to bring his money back and invest it in this country. Thanks to these amendments, we will be able to redirect toward the mainstream of our economy a good part of these funds. In an area of economic reconstruction, it is clearly advisable to patriate as much money as possible to serve the interest of the Canadian people as a whole.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that these amendements are a great step to help Canada make a new start.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the proposal made in the motion before the House is aimed at clearing up a very serious situation that has developed over the years. To our consternation, we found out recently that under the previous Government, there had been a rapid rise in income tax arrears. The so-called underground economy expanded as Canadians became involved in an increasing and alarming number of economic activities that were liable to escape the scrutiny of the tax collector. We believe that the total amount of unpaid taxes, that is, amounts owing to Revenue Canada which are not being contested, is now as high as $3.5 billion. This is a more than substantial amount since it represents over one-tenth of the federal deficit we inherited. In addition, there are also the taxes being avoided by the so-called underground economy. Unfortunately, we still have no accurate means of estimating the amount of income generated by the underground economy and undeclared economic activities that escape the scrutiny of Revenue Canada. There are, however, many indications that it is a very substantial amount that would be more than welcome in helping to reduce the federal deficit.

The proposal made by the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez) is in fact asking for an amnesty in cases where the taxpayer made an error or omission in filing his income tax return. I must say, with respect, that this proposal does raise a number of problems and some specific questions in my mind. First of all we must determine whether this is the best way to provide a fair solution to a rather complex problem. We should also ask ourselves what the consequences would be of such an amnesty. Giving an amnesty would be the same as saying that the problem no longer exists. It is certainly true that it would no longer exist for the taxpayers concerned. However, the problem would still exist for the Government which would have to give up hundreds of millions of dollars in revenue that could and should eventually be collected.

We must consider the situation in terms of the major objectives and priorities of the Government. In my opinion, there are three major objectives: bringing about an economic renewal in Canada, putting some order in public finance after many years of increasing deficits, and providing assistance to needy Canadians.

The proposal contained in the surprising motion now before us would go against these objectives. The proposed cancellation of unpaid income taxes would increase the deficit and the Federal debt and in fact curtail the ability of the Government to contribute to economic renewal and growth. If this solution were applied, the Federal Treasury would be less capable of providing assistance to Canadians who really need it. This would be the direct and harmful impact such a proposal would have on the financial freedom of movement needed by our new Government to meet its objectives. In addition, this proposal would have major indirect effects of which the most important would be to alter our existing taxation system. This system at the present time is based on self-assessment by Canadian taxpayers. We trust Canadians to fairly report their own income and to submit the proper amount of tax. This system is based to a large extent on mutual trust and respect.

Indeed, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) described this mechanism quite well in the unequivocal speech he gave before this Chambre last November 16 during the throne speech debate when he said the following:

> For the self-assessment system to survive, all taxpayers must believe that they are being treated fairly and equally. At the same time, the Government must believe that all taxpayers will fairly report their income and submit the proper amount of tax on time.

If we were to agree to the proposal as it is worded in this motion, what would be the reaction of the majority of taxpayers who pay the proper amount of tax? Would they not be irritated by the increased burden placed on them because of the amnesty granted to others owing such a considerable amount of taxes? Would they not conclude that this type of amnesty favors those who have filed false tax returns in the past, whether accidentally or voluntarily? Would they not be tempted themselves in the future to file false statements in the hope that a convenient amnesty would eventually be granted in their own case?

I believe that the conclusion is clear. Such a procedure would greatly weaken our tax system. It would reward dishonesty while we are trying to encourage Canadian citizens to act honesty in their relations with the state. Instead of correcting the problem of unpaid taxes, this proposal would make it worse and it would degenerate uncontrollably. There is a definitely better solution, and this is the one followed by the Minister of National Revenue, who is implementing the conclusions and recommendations of the Progressive Conservative Task Force on Revenue Canada.

Let us consider the $3.5 million in back taxes which are not being questioned by taxpayers. This amount does not only represent the mistakes and omissions made in the past by taxpayers when filing their income tax returns. These are cases which the motion now before us attempts to deal with. This amount also includes taxes owed by taxpayers who have reported their full income but who are unable to pay their tax in full because they find themselves in a temporary financial bind.

The Minister of National Revenue has indicated that there was a distinction to be drawn between taxpayers who try to evade tax and those who because of financial difficulties cannot pay, at least momentarily.

The Minister of National Revenue is committed to a humane, compassionate and tactful treatment by Revenue Canada of people in need. Past experience unfortunately has shown that a stringent attitude by Revenue Canada could generate distrust, noncompliance, frustration and even bitterness. It is possible and it is important to be both firm and fair. Revenue Canada has finally taken a number of definite steps to increase the efficiency of the tax collecting process. The Department will hire additional staff, and this will enable collectors to spend more time with deserving taxpayers who momentarily find it difficult to pay their taxes. Mutually acceptable arrangements will provide for the staggering of payments. The Department's set target is to collect $400 million over and above the unpaid moneys that normally would be collected by Revenue Canada under the former procedure.

The Minister has also pondered over the problems of Canadians who fail to report income earned from so-called underground practices and activities. In his explicit address to the Canadian Association of Tax Studies, he urged taxpayers who had failed to report all their income to come forward and pay their taxes, without fear of legal action, under the new departmental regulations dealing with voluntary returns. This is but one of a number of reforms designed to give Revenue Canada a more humane, more efficient and less stringent profile.

In the area of collection, in-service training programs for tax collectors will be implemented so that the collecting of unpaid taxes will become a better and more accurate process. Where taxes are due, Revenue Canada will send out a series of notices of collection that will set out more clearly the Department's relevant policy and the rights of the taxpayers. Then, before finally taking legal action, the tax collectors will be required to try to the best of their ability to contact, by telephone or otherwise, the defaulting taxpayers and give him every possible chance to pay his debt, without having to resort to the cumbersome intricacies of legal proceedings.

Hon. Members of this dignified House will know surely that the amendments to the Income Tax Act now before the House include a number of measures advocating a legislation reform.

One of the basic causes of taxpayer resentment in the past has been the feeling that, whenever assessments are opposed, the taxpayer is considered guilty until proven otherwise. Such a position, contrary to our basic judicial system, was held because in the past taxpayers were required to pay the full amount of the objectionable assessments even before the dispute had been resolved or even examined.

The new legislation provides that the taxpayer will not have to pay the disputed tax until the matter has indeed been heard. In order to prevent the new system from being abused, the courts will be empowered to impose penalties for irresponsible appeals.

Other amendments to the Income Tax Act are actually aiming for the same goal, namely handling taxpayers with fairness, sensivity and respect. The Canadian Tax Court therefore has the power to refund appeal costs to taxpayers, so that they will not abstain from appealing a decision before a neutral, fair and impartial court for mere financial reasons. Also, the maximum period for the Department to establish new assessments has been reduced from four to three years in all cases except willful evasion, blatant negligence or obvious fraud.

Those are some of the proposals for positive changes to the Act. A number of other amendments of a technical nature that already have been or are in the process of being introduced also are aimed, as I have already said, at treating taxpayers in a fairer, more humane way.

There was a time when the Minister of National Revenue had a quota system. This method of assessing the work done by tax auditors must be dropped because they often saw it as an incentive do be unduly harsh with taxpayers. In other words, the new system will stress quality rather than quantity. Another practice which has been stopped is the premature enlightenment of the medias every time a taxpayer is accused—even before the trial—and the reprehensible habit of releasing the names of people mentioned in regular reports on inquiries conducted by the department.

A few days ago, the Minister of National Revenue announced a series of improvements to the tax administration system. For instance, when a Revenue Canada auditor checks a tax return, he will get in touch more often with the taxpayer before changing the amount of tax owing, and the taxpayer will have more time to prepare his response, 30 days instead of 21 days, as is the case now. Anyway, the 30-day delay is a common practice in business circles. Written explanations concerning new computerized assessments will provide more details and data in clearer and less ambiguous terms. That will certainly help taxpayers know exactly where they stand.

Communication services between taxpayers and Revenue Canada are being modernized, a definite plus at the critical tax-return time when the Canadian taxpayer is most in need of information, clarifications and even advice. The network of tax assistance seasonal centres will be enlarged and 24 new such centres will be opened. Business hours for free telephone services offered by district offices will be extended during the busy period when most tax returns are usually filed. Special communication services will soon be available for people who suffer from blindness or hearing difficulties.

Is this not an impressive although incomplete list of the changes which Revenue Canada intends to make where its relations with the Canadian public are concerned? These progressive initiatives are the follow up of the major conclusions reached earlier this year by the Progressive Conservative Task Force, which found that the unbending attitude too often present in the past simply frustrated taxpayers and caused them to resist and to avoid paying taxes. This fresh new attitude illustrates the firm conviction of this Government that Canadians can be trusted.

I believe that, after due consideration to the proposal made by the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez), we should feel this same confidence in Canadian taxpayers and not presume that Canadians generally will refuse to pay their tax. In the past, these taxpayers may have had valid reasons not to trust the former Government and to conclude that they had nothing to do with its financial problems. In this case, the simplistic solution of declaring an amnesty for fed-up taxpayers is definitely unacceptable. The real answer lies in providing taxpayers with every opportunity to settle their accounts and, in cases of financial difficulties, to wait for their situation to improve.

The second element of this solution which heralds a new era is to improve Government operations. In this way taxpayers will have fewer valid reasons in the future to have problems and to resent a Government which used to be arrogant. I truly believe that the progressive and positive reforms we intend to bring about in the operations of Revenue Canada are a perfect example of the type of renewal in public administration which responsible Canadians are looking forward. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): I thank the Hon. Members for the applause. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in the debate on the Private Member's Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez). I am afraid the Hon. Member for Chateauguay failed to convince me and I would venture to say he failed to convince most Members of this House of the justification for his Private Member's Bill. As the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue and Canada Post (Mr. Vincent) has pointed out, this Private Member's Bill would give in essence an amnesty to all taxpayers who might have deliberately or not deliberately falsified their tax returns in the previous year. Certainly we do not believe that this is how the problem that faces the Canadian Government and the taxpayers should be solved.

I am afraid the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister himself are somewhat naive when they believe that an honest appeal by this Government would automatically mean that hundreds of thousands of people, corporations, businesses large and small, which in the past might have cheated a little on their tax would all at once come forward and do the right thing. In this new era which the Government claims it has established, would truth and justice like a bolt of lightning hit all taxpayers and from now on we will have nothing but honesty prevailing in this field? I feel the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary are somewhat naive. I hope this is just propaganda and really not government policy. If this is government policy, we will be in some difficulty in the years ahead.

Paying taxes in an exercise that most people the world over do not relish. People feel that these are moneys they have earned either through business activity or labour. They want to keep as much of that money for their own use. Of course, in a society like ours that is dependent very much upon government activity to maintain our roads to provide health services and to do all the things a modern state must do in order for a modern civilization to exist, one of the forms of revenue for these purposes must be the tax system.

The tax system must be fair and must appear to be fair. It must appear and in reality be something whereby people are treated on an equal basis. In our system and in the system of most of the industrialized civilized world there is a progressive income tax system. The greater your income, the greater your ability to help foot the public bill, and according to our system, the greater amount you are called upon to contribute to the national purpose. Again, it should be realized that most people who earn an income do so with the assistance of government in one form or another. If we did not have our health system, our education system, our rail and road system, and what not, most Canadians could not earn an income. The ability to earn that income is dependent upon the fact that we have a modern state providing these essential services.

For the Hon. Member to suggest in his Private Member's Bill that the Department of National Revenue should be restricted to auditing returns only for this year, and that the taxpayer be given an amnesty so that the Department would no longer be able to audit returns for 1984 and prior, I do not think it will help the Government or make the tax system fairer.

When you look at Revenue Canada taxation estimates, for 1984-85, Mr. Speaker, you see two important activities that the Department carries on. One is post assessing. This operation consists of the examination of certain things for deduction or exemption which are accepted without question at the initial assessing in order to expedite the flow of returns. In other words, when the income tax returns come in, the National Revenue Department gives them a very brief look. Most of the forms are accepted at face value. Taxes are collected. Cheques are issued for money owed to a taxpayer, and so forth. Subsequently, I understand about 3 per cent of the returns are audited. As well, the Department audits to make sure income reported on the tax form is the income supported by such slips as T-4s from employers and the T-5s from the banks.

We find in the Estimates for 1984-85 that this activity in the year 1982-83 brought in some $828,948,000, which is a fair chunk of change so to speak. In essence, what this Private Member's Bill is suggesting is that the Government forgo these revenues. Remember that this figure of $828 million which the Government collected because of its audit functions really covered only 3 per cent of corporations that filed income tax returns. This means that a fair amount of money is not collected. It means that a fair number of companies, either deliberately or not deliberately, fill out their corporate tax sheets in an improper way. All of the information is not there. It means that a 3 per cent audit netted the Government, just on the corporation side, some $645 million last year. What the Private Member's Bill suggests is that the Government kisses $645 million good-bye. If we had tremendous surpluses in government revenues perhaps there would be some justification for this. I wish the Hon. Member would express his indignation at the $200 million which the Government wants to save by cutting back on unemployment insurance.

The Hon. Member, I am sure, will be supportive of the Government's cut-backs to the UIC program. I am sure there are people ripping the system off. May I suggest that those people are people with very low incomes? Yet the Government is willing to hire several hundred policemen to police UIC recipients. I am sure they will be given quotas and they will be forced to justify their income by making sure that a certain percentage of the people they interview every day will be found ineligible for UIC payments.

The Government should be as concerned about collecting the $3.5 billion which is owed to it. These moneys are not in dispute. Heaven knows the amount of money owed to the Government which is in dispute. However, there is this $3.5 billion which everyone agrees is owed to the Government. It is out there. It is 10 per cent of the deficit.

Day in and day out we stand in the House to try to imprint upon the Government that it does not have a deficit because of overspending. The deficit is there because the Government has not been collecting the taxes it should be collecting. The deficit could be reduced off the top by 10 per cent if the Government would only collect the undisputed amount of money due to it.

The area of undisputed tax which galls me the most is the $328 million or so which employers have deducted from their employees. These deductions were in the form of income tax, UIC and CCP. These moneys have not been remitted to the Government. They are held in trust. It is not even their money. It used to be some $428 million, but the Minister has already kissed $100 million off. He said that he would not bother collecting that, that it was dead, that it was gone. There is still some $328 million owing to the public Treasury by people who hold this money in trust.

I understand that such workers are eligible for UIC payments if the corporation goes bankrupt and still owes the Government money from UIC deductions. I also understand that very often these workers experience tremendous difficulty in obtaining the coverage owing to them. It is a long, drawn-out fight to gain the coverage for which they have paid. For the Hon. Member to suggest in his Bill that there ought to be an amnesty I find a little too much. In fact, it contradicts his own Party's task force on Revenue Canada. In its report the following was indicated:

> The Task Force sympathizes with these taxpayers yet recognizes that the Minister must have adequate time in which to audit tax returns. However, it also believes that four years is excessive and suggests a three year time frame, when fraud is not involved.

We will have to see the type of legislation the Minister will be introducing to limit the period of time within which audits occur. I hope the Government is sincere in reducing its deficit and in ensuring that we have a fair taxation system. All Canadians should be treated equally and fairly. I am hoping that we do not have one tax law for the rich and another for the poor. I am hoping that we do not have one tax law for big corporations which are able to hire tax accountants and tax lawyers to keep the Government spinning in circles and another tax law for the small ones. These large corporations can hold on to hundreds of millions of dollars in unpaid taxes. They can use these moneys internally and save a fair amount because the penalty charged by the Government is prime minus one. It is in the interests of these corporations to retain these hundreds of millions of dollars within the corporate sector because the amount of interest they are paying is much less than they would have to pay at the bank. I hope the Government is as anxious to go after the big guys as it is to go after the small guys. I hope everyone is indeed treated equally and fairly. We have some distance to go in this regard.

Let us look at what a salaried worker pays in income tax, the number of his deductions and the number of income tax games he can play compared with corporations. We see that fairness does not exist. There is no way a salaried worker can hide income. He does not have similar exemptions. For example, he cannot defer taxes. However, there are some $32 billion in deferred taxes owed to the Government of Canada. That is enough to wipe out the deficit. Although salaried workers are unable to defer taxes, corporations seem to enjoy that benefit. I understand CPR owes some $1.5 billion in deferred taxes.

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: I hear the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) saying "Hear, hear". He is another fan of the CPR. I am sure there are many more across the way. This is why I do not have much faith in the Government opposite that we will have a fair taxation regime and that everyone will be treated equally. The CPR should be treated in the same way as the people working for it and drawing salaries. I doubt the banks will end up paying the same amount of tax that all their clerks pay. Indeed I doubt that we will have a fair taxation system with the people who are able to afford it paying their fair share. We do not have a fair taxation system. We really do not have a progressive system. In fact, it is the inverse. The people least able to pay, average working men and women, pay the most. The people best able to pay are the ones who pay the least. The economic philosophy and policies of the Government encourage that even further. I really do not expect a fair taxation policy from the Government. We will see. We will attempt to push the Government into accepting a basic fairness in our taxation regime.

I find the Private Member's Bill of the Hon. Member for Châteauguay to be unacceptable. I expect that it is unacceptable to the Hon. Member for Crowfoot. I am sure it will be unacceptable to most Members on the government side. It makes an unfair system more unfair and therefore repugnant to Canadians.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, without wishing to take up too much of the House's time, I simply want to say that if there is a vote, we shall be voting against the present proposal. I do feel rather sorry for the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez), since he is not getting much support from his own colleagues for a proposal into which he probably put a lot of work.

I also think it is rather ironic that basically, the Hon. Member for Chaâteauguay is only putting into practice what his hon. colleagues said they would do when they criss-crossed the country on their partisan committee to seek the views of Canadian taxpayers on our tax system. The message they gave at the time and to which his own colleagues might well object today, was that there was so much abuse on the part of the Department of National Revenue, and so it seemed quite normal to the Hon. Member and in line with the Progressive Conservative policy over the last two years, to present this proposal and try to eliminate in one fell swoop all those flagrant examples of injustice.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Châteauguay will learn, as will Canadian taxpayers, that there is a considerable gap between the rhetoric of his Party's politicians and what they actually do here in the House. I feel very sorry for him, and I hope he will get some sympathy from his colleagues and will get them to understand that when a message is given to Canadians, it must be considered when the time comes to pass legislation.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I think I may say, in more general terms, that it is clear the Government of a country cannot afford to let an amendment consisting of three or four lines deprive it of all the money owed by some taxpayers just because there might have been some omission or error in their income tax returns. It would be too easy for people to avoid paying what they owe, to avoid paying their fair share to finance public expenditures, and all for reasons that are basically futile. It would also be unfair to taxpayers who are not in arrears, who file complete returns and who meet their obligations as responsible citizens by paying their taxes.

I heard the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) make some suggestions. Mr. Speaker, if there is a way to humanize the Income Tax Act, whether we are referring to the federal, provincial or municipal provisions in this respect, obviously no one can object to that. However, the fact remains that the only way to collect money is to get people to pay.

I feel that the message we are getting from our friends opposite, or at least the message they may be getting through to Canadian taxpayers, is that now the Progressive Conservative Party is in power, there are going to be lots of ways to avoid paying taxes. There are going to be plenty of opportunities for the reason who owes $100,000 or $200,000 in taxes, when the interest rate paid by the bank is higher than the fine a judge might impose, as the Member for LaSalle said. There will be a lot of people, a lot of taxpayers who will be tempted to use the tax office as a bank instead of getting their own financing and paying the taxes they do owe the Government, in any case.

I think that what the Hon. Member for LaSalle is saying—and a few days ago, I heard the Minister of National Revenue speaking in the same vein, and the House will recall most of the speeches made during the election campaign—is that it is doing Canadians a disservice to give the impression that there are many ways of avoiding taxes and putting off paying them, and finally, that this would penalize the honest taxpayer who pays his taxes on time. I think this is not the impression a responsible Government ought to give, unless sooner or later it is prepared to accept proposals like the one made by the Member for Châteauguay. If that is the case, I would urge the Hon. Member for Châteauguay to go around the House and persuade his colleagues to vote for him, because his proposal is in line with the impression this Government wanted to give earlier.

Mr. Speaker, I will not use up any more of the House's time. If it even comes to a vote on this motion, we shall certainly vote against it.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I understand quite well the concern which my colleague the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has expressed; he knows how difficult it is to collect money, in view of his occupation before his election to the House. I must say, however, that the motion moved by our colleague is one which we should consider and discuss seriously.

An Hon. Member: Until six o'clock.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Perhaps until six o'clock, I agree, Mr. Speaker; what we must take into account, however, is its impact on the Canadian public as a whole.

Clearly, there are some people who, over the years, have been lucky enough—if I can use that expression—not to pay any income tax, but that does not necessarily mean that we should set a rule and apply it unilaterally to all Canadians, as the previous administration used to do.

I shall not delay the House any longer, Mr. Speaker. I simply wanted to indicate that the motion moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Châteauguay is fine per se, but I wonder whether it was sensible to introduce it today.

[English]

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez) knows full well that his motion touches on a branch of the law which concerned the Progressive Conservative Party well in advance of the September 4 election to a very great degree, to the degree that at our own expense this Party formed a task force that travelled across the land to identify the attitude and problems and the specific concerns that affected the taxpayers of this land.

Many of those concerns were reflected in the votes that were cast on September 4, returning a Party which had a concern for the taxpayer in heart and in mind. That task force came up with a report entitled "A Taxayers Bill of Rights". During that election campaign, our Party made a commitment that this Government would be responsive to the needs and concerns of the individual taxpayer. Nowhere is this more important than in the dealings between Government and citizen as it is in the administration of our tax laws. The aims of the Government were spelled out in great detail in the Speech from the Throne opening this new session. It stated:

> The taxation system will be made simpler and fairer and more accountable to the people's representatives in Parliament. The rights of taxpayers must be protected. In particular, legislation will be presented to ensure that no taxpayer has to pay taxes in dispute before an impartial hearing has been concluded.

As an additional protection, taxpayers launching future objections will be eligible to file claims for the refund of disputed amounts already paid and these will be returned if the case is not dealt with expeditiously by the Department within a reasonable period of time. There will be protection against abuse of these new privileges in that the courts will be empowered to assess penalties where it is clear that taxpayers have launched frivolous or groundless appeals purely to delay the payment of taxes legally owed.

One of the most significant of the changes made is to exempt persons with taxes payable of $1,000 or less from the requirement to pay in quarterly instalments. In the past, quarterly payments have been required for those with taxes of $400 or more. The main beneficiaries will be 350,000 senior citizens who will be freed of the obligation to make their tax payments in instalments. This new threshold of $1,000 will also apply to corporations. It will be of great assistance to some 50,000 corporations, mainly small businesses and family farm corporations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The hour provided for private Member's business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES—WORK OF REVIEW COMMITTEE. (B) COMPOSITION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on the day after the new Cabinet was sworn in, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), along with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had been assigned the task of reviewing all departmental programs and submitting action plans for Cabinet approval within six months. This was generally considered to be a way of prescribing more cuts. That has not been denied.

Subsequently, an advisory committee of seven businessmen was named. This committee did not include any women, Francophones, environmentalists, representatives from health and social services or from consumers' associations. Two names of union officials were included but then subsequent reports cast doubts upon whether or not they would in fact be participating or what the nature of their participation would be.

At a press conference on November 18, the President of the Treasury Board said that neither the Treasury Board Secretariat nor the office of the Comptroller General had been targeted for review. "We don't take programs," were the words attributed to the President of the Treasury Board.

In terms of numbers, there are between 50,000 and 60,000 person-years involved in programs of the central agencies as compared with perhaps 170,000 or more involved in delivering services to taxpayers. If cuts are necessary, surely they should be done with great care, delicacy and sensitivity and done equally in all Departments.

This is the kind of thing that raises the question of whether cuts are being taken on the basis of ideology or on the basis of efficiency. We hear a lot of talk about how the Government means to cut fat out of the bureaucracy but we are really talking about people and their jobs and about people delivering services to other people.

A few days ago, I asked the Deputy Prime Minister if he would confirm that the central agencies were being excluded from the cuts. He answered that the premise of my question was wrong and that he was not involved in a cutting exercise but in an exercise of looking at duplications, overlaps and so on and that all Departments would be treated equally. I then asked the Deputy Prime Minister if he would restructure his advisory committee to reflect this kind of mandate. I cannot see that an advisory committee composed of only seven businessmen who have purely administrative backgrounds is competent alone without other assistance to advise on eliminating programs to do with the environment, health, social services and so on.

The Deputy Prime Minister gave me a very broad and general answer which described what appeared to be consultations with the Quebec Federation of Labour but he did not say exactly if or how he intends to alter his advisory committee. I am pleased to see the Deputy Prime Minister in the House this evening and I look forward to receiving more precise information.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member gave me this opportunity to clarify what the Task Force on Program Review was all about. I think it is important that she and other Members of the House are as well informed as possible regarding an exercise which is not targeted at cost cutting at all, but is targeted at improving efficiency and delivery to the client groups outside of the internal structure of Government and to looking inside as well.

The terms of reference of the task force were announced on September 18 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced the creation of the task force and its composition under my chairmanship. We have been asked to review government programs with the intent to produce a profile of government programs which is simpler, more understandable and more accessible to the Canadian public, to their clientele, and where decision-making is decentralized as far as possible with those in direct contact with client groups.

The task force itself has been asked and mandated to begin reporting within six months, the termination date being March 17. The work program, in order to address its task with a sense of order and intelligence, has set its objective to compile an inventory of all of those programs in Government, which has been accomplished. The second stage was to deal with those broad program categories.

With respect to the advisory committee, I can tell the Hon. Member that the task force Ministers made a very deliberate decision to involve the private sector in a very positive and meaningful way. To do this we have called upon national organizations—which was part of my announcement on November 16—with respect to the creation of a Private Sector Advisory Committee. This Committee is now, at this moment—which is some time from when the Hon. Member asked her question—made up of representatives of the Canadian Federation of Labour, represented by Mr. Austin Thorne; the Canadian Labour Congress, represented by Mr. Robert Baldwin; the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, represented by Mr. Phillip Aspinall, who has been elected Chairman by the choice of the private sector advisory committee; the Business Council on National Issues, represented by Mr. Jerry Heffernan; and the Canadian Association of Management Consultants, represented by Mr. Ted Netten. All of these individuals were designated by those organizations themselves. There is the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, represented by Mr. Peter Riggin; the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, represented by Mr. Harold Milavsky; the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, represented by Mr. Ronald Farano; the Canadian Organization of Small Business, represented by Mr. Geoffrey Hale; Conseil du Patronat du Québec, represented by Jean D'Ailly, whose name, I am sure, will be familiar to the Hon. Member; le Groupement Québécois d'entreprises, represented by Mr. Richard Bourbeau. Mr. Laberge of the Quebec Federation of Labour, who was supposed to get back to me today, has not done so, but I am sure that I will hear from him before the week is out. It is an ongoing process. In addition, Mr. Darcy McKeough, the former Treasurer of Ontario, has been appointed as Private Sector Liaison adviser in order to provide liaison between myself, in my capacity as Chairman of the Task Force, and the Private Sector Advisory Committee.

I believe that all Hon. Members of the House will want to join with me in tendering our gratitude and congratulations to these designated individuals for serving on a Private Sector Advisory Committee involving this very important work at a dollar a year. With no cost to the taxpayer whatsoever, we are involving the private sector in a very meaningful and productive way in this task of program review.

On the public side, our activities involve our appointment of Dr. Peter Meyboom as the Public Service Adviser to co-ordinate whatever studies are necessary during the assessment phase of our work. To date, as I announced on November 19, the program inventory is now complete. It contains 989 programs delivering a total of $92 billion in direct and indirect benefits to individuals, businesses, organizations or a combination of all three. A total of 126 Departments and agencies are responsible for the delivery of these programs, involving 173,000 person years.

I invite the Hon. Member, and all Hon. Members of the House, to co-operate with us in this work to streamline and make more effective and efficient the delivery of these programs to the public, and to examine those internal programs as well, which is going to result in more efficiency and effectiveness by Government.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE—CANCELLATION OF HERRING GULL EGG PROGRAM. (B) MINISTER'S VIEW

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to pursue a question I asked of the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) with respect to cutbacks in her Department. In doing so, I would like to express my concern on three fronts, if you will.

We have before us in the form of various cuts initiated by this Government a package which is cause for despair among those of us concerned about the environment, in that we seem to be moving towards rather than back from the day when we will have an economy and society based on the proper stewardship and management of our resources and our common planetary heritage. The three areas I refer to are cutbacks in the research program of the Canadian Wildlife Service, the cut of the NRC environmental secretariat, and the cutbacks in research and development in the area of alternate energy.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, with respect to that which has received the most attention, the cutbacks in the research program of the Canadian Wildlife Service, I would just like to put on the record some of the things which have been cut. We have the Wildlife toxicology projects which go under the following names. The identification and monitoring of the occurrence and effects of toxic substances on gulls and other fish-eating birds on the Great Lakes. That is a very important program and part of Canada's contribution to the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. There is the monitoring of effects of forestry insecticides on birds in New Brunswick, the monitoring of effects of agricultural rodenticides and insecticides on birds in Alberta, identifying effects of toxic substances on bird populations in the Great Lakes, and the monitoring of contaminants in birds on the Fraser River Delta in British Columbia. Then there are projects to rehabilitate endangered species which have been cancelled; the reintroduction of Peregrine Falcons in eastern Canada, in Nova Scotia, the rehabilitation of the Piping Plover in the Maritimes, and the reintroduction of the Pine Marten to Newfoundland. In this same area veterinary pathology services, and bioelectronic services have been cancelled. Programs in conservation of international wildlife, like the Porcupine Caribou program, which I have mentioned in this House before, have been cancelled. There are interprovincial and territorial agreements which have been affected, such as the CWS membership on the Beverly-Kaminuriak Caribou Management Board. There is the whole matter of support to other federal services which has been cut in forestry, national parks and other federal lands. And then there is wildlife interpretation where there have been severe cuts. Then, Mr. Speaker, we have the cuts, as I mentioned, in the NRC environmental secretariat, a body which has produced between 80 and 90 reports on subjects such as acid rain, herbicides, insecticides, fluorides, PCBs, mercury, lead and noise pollution in the past 15 years. It is an impartial source of scientific information on which governments have been able to base their decisions. It is a disaster that this kind of research is being cut out by the Government.

The third dimension of my concern, Mr. Speaker, and I have raised this in the House with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), is in relation to the cuts in alternative energy research and development, and how they compare to the absolutely uncritical approach of the Government to the furtherance of the nuclear energy option in Canada.

As a result of recent Government cuts, we have a 100 per cent cut in conservation and alternative energy research and development. That contrasts with trends elsewhere in the world. There is a trend to Government support for R and D in this area in the U.S., West Germany and Japan. That trend is not recognized by the Conservatives. In the United States alone they will spend $174.5 million in direct support while millions more is raised through R and D limited partnerships. Instead of that, from this Government we get cuts in the work of the NRC in active solar research. The NRC provided an essential base for product improvement and price reduction, reducing the price of a standard solar domestic hot water package from $4,000 in 1982 to $2,700 in 1984. The NRC was on schedule to bring the cost to $1,500 by 1988, at which time solar would be competitive across Canada with conventional sources of energy.

Before the cut-backs in conservation and alternative energy research and development, over 60 per cent of the Government's funding in energy R and D went into the nuclear area. That percentage will now be much higher, Mr. Speaker. I suppose the Tory reason for this is that they cannot figure out a way to put a meter on the sun. If you cannot make money off it, it cannot be worthwhile. We know that if the Tories do figure out a way to put a meter on the sun and sell the franchise to a multinational, then we might get solar research.

The Minister has said that a higher principle was involved. That higher principle was the cutting of the deficit. Mr. Speaker, there is no higher principle than the preservation of human life and our common planetary heritage in which that life must carry on. The Government is fond of talking about the deficit, and mortgaging our future. By engaging in the kinds of cut-backs in environmental services that it is now engaged in, it is mortgaging our environmental future. That is the kind of mortgaging of our future that cannot be paid back in the same way that a financial deficit can be. Until the Government realizes that, it will continue to lead us down the road to ecological disaster.

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my colleague for this highly emotional intervention which gives me the opportunity to provide more information on cutbacks in my department and tell Canadians that my colleague of the Opposition is indulging in pure and simple demagoguery.

As I said before in the House, my department, in cooperation with the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Oceans and Fisheries, is pursuing research on toxic products and monitoring their effects, particularly in the Great Lakes area. Environment Canada now has 78 highly qualified employees in that region.

Mr. Speaker, the cutbacks amount to 305 person-years in a department with over 10,000 employees. As I said time and again, I have always been prepared to reconsider, if necessary, those cutbacks which have to do with our federal responsibilities or international agreements, or which might possibly affect the health of Canadians. I did say I would have consultations. I spoke with many scientists, people active in the programs involved and some of our representatives within international research or monitoring agencies. The Herring Gull Egg Program has come under close scrutiny, due consideration being given to other resources in the department. I came to the conclusion that we can maintain the egg monitoring program by meshing it with the activities of Burlington's Wastewater Technology Centre.

I told the Canadian co-chairman of the Great Lakes Joint Monitoring Commission about this decision, and he gave me the assurance that it did not in any way detract from our international commitments.

I might also remind my colleague that toxicological research is going on in 24 departments, as prescribed in 58 acts or regulations, and that our efforts aimed at improving Canadian expertise in that field are being maintained and increased.

I want to reassure Canadians, Mr. Speaker. We are aware of our responsibilities. We assume them. We do not shirk them.

PENITENTIARIES—ESCAPE OF THREE INMATES FROM BATH INSTITUTION

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for this opportunity to speak further on a matter of great concern that I raised on December 5, 1984 in the House. At that time I directed a question to the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) regarding a recent escape from the Bath Institution and hostage-taking incident at Bath, Ontario. This incident greatly disturbs me.

Three inmates broke out of the Bath Institution and forcibly entered a private residence. A retired couple from Bath were aroused from their sleep, tied up with a clothes line and held at gunpoint. They watched helplessly as the inmates searched their home for money, broke into a gun cabinet and stole three weapons. The inmates then fled in the family car.

People should not have to take the time or bear the expense to bring these convicts before the courts once again. I hope that the Solicitor General will impress upon his officials that it is the primary duty of Correctional Services Canada to ensure custody and control of inmates in order to minimize the risk of harm being inflicted by inmates on the public, the staff, other inmates or themselves. At the same time, of course, we should recognize international standards of human treatment.

If inmates continue to escape, our correctional system will no longer be serving the people by protecting society from these criminals; those people who have demonstrated by their actions that they cannot and will not live by the commonsense and common decency of our society. Victims of crime are quite often forced to pay in real terms for having been at a certain place at the wrong time. I am also advised that the OPP are often called to retrieve inmates from various public places. Apparently, it is a common event for prisoners to walk to the village in order to have a few alcoholic drinks.

There are three specific points that I would like to urge on all Members of the House, specifically on the Minister, for their evaluation. First, the process involved in the classification of prisoners must be closely examined. Perhaps the principle should be altered to more accurately reflect the goal of protecting our society; not just for the protection of the individual who is incarcerated. Somehow, this has been twisted around. We are putting criminals into institutions from which the inmates can escape and go for a drink or a joy ride. This must stop. The process of classifying prisoners is in serious need of revision. We must ensure that the punishment fits the crime, not the criminals' own needs.

Another point I wish to make concerns the deterrent concept of our criminal system. There are two concepts in this area; rehabilitation and retribution. Rehabilitation implies that the purpose behind imprisoning people who have contravened the law is to rehabilitate them so that they can return to our society as someone new, ready and willing to participate in our society. This may be a noble concept but I have serious doubts as to its effectiveness. In most cases the rehabilitation concept removes the responsibility of the crime from the criminal. This is not right. Our society is based on our citizens being responsible for their actions. I am not denying that some people need help and should receive it, but I believe we have gone overboard in some cases. In our attempt to help a few we have removed the principle of being responsible for one's own actions.

The concept of retribution is the other point. Retribution means atonement or satisfaction given for injury. In order to make our correctional and judicial system work we cannot forget the value of retribution. If we do, we will fail in our attempt to provide a fair, just and appropriate correctional system. I urge the Minister to seriously examine the purpose and intent of our correctional system. If we take away the responsibility for one's action, how can that person ever return to a society in which we are responsible for our actions? Serving time for crimes against society is not enough. That is why I believe our correctional system must have punishment to fit the crime. It is hard to determine a just punishment for persons who induce terror by holding people at gunpoint. Sending two potted plants and some money may be very fine, but it is not retribution, especially when it is not from the people who are directly involved.

My third point concerns the security of our correctional institutions. When I hear of a prison escape and the terrible events that sometimes follow, such as in the recent Bath Institution case, I become very alarmed. How can we allow people who are being held accountable for some crime already committed to commit yet another crime? In order to ensure that retribution is paid for crimes already committed, we have a responsibility to the victim of the crime, society and even the criminal that the security and enforcement of the punishment is complete and not lacking anything. The people charged with securing and ensuring that the sentence be carried out must be given the resources and money to do so. That means everything from perimeter control to the authority necessary to maintain an institution at the local level. I urge the Minister to ensure that these resources are provided to the correctional systems' employees. The employees need our support.

Finally, may I add that the recent incident concerning the Bath Institution is not the only situation about which I am concerned. It is an example of the terrible things that are being allowed to happen. These must stop. I ask the Solicitor General to give this House and all Canadians his assurance that such matters as prisoner classification, appropriate punishment, and improvement of security in our correctional institutions will be dealt with quickly and carefully. These are matters of extreme importance.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to respond this evening and put on the record the appreciation I have for my colleague for bringing this serious matter to the attention of the House. I want to thank him for the meeting we had in the recent past when he brought some of these concerns to my attention in another forum.

The Hon. Member raised this question the day after it occurred in a conscientious and timely manner. As he has pointed out, there have been some developments in the interim. The three men involved were arrested the next day, December 5, and are now in custody. In a rare show of concern, and I think in an appropriate one, although as he pointed out, it did not involve the escapees themselves, the other inmates at Bath Institution took up a collection, collected a significant amount of money for needy people in the area and sent an apology and some flowers to the elderly couple their former comrades had victimized in that escape.

As the Hon. Member knows, Bath Institution is a minimum security institution. While it has no perimeter fence or outside patrol, security precautions are taken. There are counts of inmates every 45 minutes. There are other checks and there are alarmed doors.

In order to be placed in such a minimum security facility an inmate must show by his behaviour that he is a suitable candidate. Prediction of suitability or prediction of human behaviour is an inexact science at best. I believe our people in the department have done a reasonably good job, but that is not to say there is not room for improvement. We look at factors such as the length of sentence, the type of crime, the history of violence in the community and the risk of escape.

These three inmates were all serving their first federal terms. They all started their terms in medium security institutions and their behaviour up to that point was satisfactory. While they were at Bath no problems were observed. In fact, two of these men had successfully completed unescorted temporary absences. One of the three, however, had earlier this year been unlawfully at large from another minimum security institution. I am concerned about this and I will pass my concerns on to the Commissioner. This inmate did not by his behaviour demonstrate an undue risk. One of the three was due to be released on parole on December 17. It is very difficult to understand why he committed this act when release was close at hand.

Finally, the security inquiry report is not yet complete. I look forward to receiving the report and the light it will shed on this particular case. I will, of course, share it with the Hon. Member, and I want to assure him that I take very seriously the other matters he has raised. I appreciate the need to improve many of the factors which are still placing an undue burden on our system as far as the protection of Canadians is concerned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.30 p.m. the House adjourned.

IMPACT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the economic statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought cuts to the industrial support program under Regional and Industrial Development even far more reaching than many at first realized. Such an action has amounted to withdrawing large amounts of direct investment by the Government in industrial development, job creation, and the economic development of less affluent Canadian regions affecting, in particular, small community Canada.

Regional development grants represent direct assistance for the location of new industries in various regions where industrial development lags behind the primary industrial zones of southern Ontario and Montreal. The grants represent an opportunity for communities in all parts of Canada to participate in the development of Canada's economic potential. Such grants help to reduce regional disparity and make all Canadians feel part of the real nation.

Admittedly, regions receiving industrial development grants do not represent areas of economic power and influence, nor do they represent political numbers in Parliament. That is an important reason why industrial development efforts must be maintained in all regions of Canada.

The cold-hearted cuts to regional industrial development funding exposes the heartlessness of the Conservative Government and its new policy. The Government promised tens of thousands of jobs the day after it was elected. The law of the jungle is at work. The Government's new political philosophy is to let the strong survive.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member his time has expired.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

POSSIBLE CONSEQUENCES OF ESTABLISHING CANADIAN UNION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians concerned with economic recovery and full employment must be impressed by the implications of the separation of the Canadian section of the United Auto Workers from its American parent union. The possibility of this union's reorganization adversely affecting the Canadian auto industry has become clear. Already spokesmen for major auto makers are indicating it could encourage a reshaping of their corporate structures. This could mean possible changes in the role of Canadian plants in their production plans.

The auto industry's extraordinary recovery since August, 1982 has been a major reason for the measure of recovery Canada has enjoyed, especially in Ontario. In the constituency of Scarborough West, for example, the auto plant of General Motors employs 2,500 people. Any factor that can mean a production cut, or a plant closure, must be seen as a major threat to our economy. Government, management, and labour need the fullest co-operation to make sure internal re-organization plans in the industry do not threaten the livelihoods of many thousands.

CLOSURE OF BLACK AND DECKER PLANT AT BARRIE, ONT.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister failed to answer my question on how he could possibly be creating jobs by abolishing the FIRA review of direct take-overs of firms valued under $5 million. It is even more absurd to justify abolishing FIRA review of indirect take-overs of firms valued under $50 million as a way to provide more jobs.

Black and Decker's recent announced closure of its Barrie, Ontario, plant is a good example. It will result in a net loss of over 400 jobs in Canada. Workers fighting to retain their jobs have had only FIRA to turn to for recourse.

The Prime Minister seems more committed to making friends with Ronald Reagan than he is to safeguarding Canadian jobs. Ads like this 10-page spread in the New York Times yesterday—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

S.O. 21

Mr. Langdon: —will not give us a possibility of jobs in Canada. We should be safeguarding Canadian jobs.

ADVANTAGES ASSOCIATED WITH REPLACEMENT OF FIRA

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the Members of this House and all Canadians must be very happy about the speech made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister before the New York Economic Club. The Prime Minister's words were received with enthusiasm by the financial and industrial elite of the United States. I was particularly pleased with the reference to Quebec which provides excellent opportunities for foreign investment and is getting in step with the broad movement towards national reconciliation undertaken by our Government.

Mr. Speaker, it was an historic moment on the evening of December 10, putting an end to twenty years of confrontation, twenty years of coldly sterile relations under the previous Liberal administration.

Mr. Speaker, when two free and democratic countries live together, it stands to reason they do business together. Thus, the abolition of FIRA and replacing it with Investment Canada will have a very positive impact on Canada and create the jobs we so badly need.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

IMPACT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS ON PERSONNEL AND PROGRAMMING

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a black day for the more than 1,100 employees of the CBC who now face early retirement or lay-offs due to the knife-wielding approach of the new Government to the federal budget. These people represent the direct human cost of the actions of an insensitive Government. The inability of the CBC to undertake the development and production of new dramas, children's programs, and informational programs which have gained international renown, is a cruel cut to Canada's cultural and social development.

The CBC is a national institution. It has an ongoing role to play in the development of Canada's national identity and in strengthening national unity through communication. The budget cuts imposed by the Government demonstrate the ignorance of the new Government in recognizing that sometimes there are costs which simply must be borne by a Government if we are, as Canadians, to have a nation. The CBC is one of those costs. Canada, and Canadianism, are not a commodity. Unfortunately, that is how the new Government sees Canada.

The budgetary cuts inflicted by the Conservative Government will lead to an even greater cost in lost cultural development and communication among Canadians in all regions for years to come.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REDUCTION OF SERVICES IN RURAL REGIONS

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring a vast inequity to the attention of the House. While urban Canadians enjoy the luxury of daily mail delivery to their doors and are usually able to purchase postal services such as money orders, registered letters, and special delivery, within a five or 10 minute drive, rural Canadians are having their services reduced, or even cancelled, and must travel as far as 30 miles to reach the nearest post office.

In the meantime the President of Canada Post has made several speeches lauding his success in reducing the corporation's deficit and in meeting the objective of improving service. The deficit may be reduced, but I think the President is sorely mistaken if he believes that there is a renewed consumer confidence, as he puts it.

Since my election to Parliament just a few months ago, I have been contacted by an alarming number of constituents from my riding in rural Manitoba. So far, five separate cases have been brought to my attention where postal service has either been reduced or eliminated altogether. The residents of these small rural communities feel that they are paying the price of Canada Post's program of restraint.

I would suggest that the President of Canada Post should take a second look at his level of customer confidence, especially in rural areas, because I firmly believe that Canada Post's deficit reduction program is being borne on the backs of rural Canadians.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY'S POLICY ON NUCLEAR ARMAMENT FREEZE PROPOSAL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the verbal gymnastics and contradictions which attend the question of where the Liberal Party caucus stands on the nuclear freeze proposal. The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) says that there has been a change in policy. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) will not confirm that there has been a change in policy. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) says that they have a different position now because they are in opposition, thus admitting the moral bankruptcy of Liberal politics.

The fact of the matter is that the Liberals have not changed their policy on the nuclear freeze. They went out of their way the other day to make an amendment to our motion so that they could appear to be for the nuclear freeze by removing from the motion that which would have made it a concrete recommendation. The Liberals are still against the nuclear freeze, and people who support the nuclear freeze should have their heads examined if they believe otherwise.

INTERNATIONAL YOUTH YEAR

REQUEST FOR PROLONGATION OF SUBSIDY PROGRAMS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, International Youth Year will start officially in 1985. Unfortunately, many non-profit agencies and youth groups will not be able to develop their projects because they failed to receive on time the information on special grant programs.

Mr. Speaker, the previous Government did not put enough emphasis on this international event which is aimed at giving young people a say and a share in the economic, social and political life of our society. How could we forget that the previous Government always neglected young people, that it has done nothing to reduce unemployment or support training programs for, and projects by, Canadian youth?

Mr. Speaker, we must condemn the previous Government's lack of consistency in its youth policies and programs. I would therefore urge our Government to try as much as possible to correct the mistakes made by the previous Government by extending the expiry dates of certain special grant programs provided within the framework of International Youth Year.

CLOSURE OF GANDER, NFLD., RADIO STATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the CBC cuts announced yesterday as a result of the policy of the Government are emasculating the corporation.

It is not the high profile national news identity that forms the raison d'être for this corporation. It is its promotion and encouragement of cultural identity and opportunities for Canadians in the local things done at each CBC outlet that make this corporation worth-while.

The CBC has announced the closing of Radio Station CGB in Gander, Newfoundland, one of its first stations in the province. It has the highest area ratings in listening audience of any CBC radio station in Canada. This announced closing is uncalled for, and makes no economic sense at all.

I am asking the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to use the authority given to him under the Broadcasting Act to reverse that decision. The Government, in forcing the CBC to cut, has handed it not a paring knife but a chain-saw.

During the election campaign we heard from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) a kind of inverted snobbery toward the CBC, to pooh-pooh everything the CBC does. This should not be allowed to translate into irrational and cruel actions such as the closing of CGB Gander.

Blinded by the deficit, the Government is crippling the people, crippling the environment, crippling the economy, and now it is crippling our cultural heritage.

FINANCE

SIZE OF NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that more and more Canadians are greatly concerned about the size of our national debt. Although the official debt has been expressed at some $190 billion, this amount does not include the accumulated debt of all the federal Crown corporations, some $60 billion. It does not include some $50 billion collected by the Government in contributions made to the Canada Pension Plan, the Public Service Superannuation Pension Fund, the Armed Forces Pension Fund, and the RCMP Pension Fund. The money collected in pension contributions goes into general revenue and is spent by Governments to pay current bills.

• (1415)

All in all, Mr. Speaker, our national debt in reality is some $300 billion.

This is the unfortunate legacy that our Government has inherited from the former Government.

This huge debt is one reason why all Canadians have been asked to bite the bullet, and for each and every one of us to sacrifice and work together in an unselfish way to get Canada out of the economic mire and back on track again to full employment and economic growth.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that we make every effort now to make the necessary changes and the necessary sacrifices to curb this debt if Canada is to survive.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN UNION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. When he was in New York declaring in his own rhetoric that Canada was open for business, did the Prime Minister have in mind statements made to a New York newspaper by executives of General Motors and Chrysler that, in view of the decision of the automobile workers of Canada to set up a separate union, which is certainly their fundamental right, these key executives felt that that decision threatened American investment in Canada in the automobile industry, and thereby threatened Canadian jobs? Is that the kind of business climate he had in mind in New York city?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I think my right hon. friend is perhaps confusing two statements that were made, Mr. Speaker. First was my statement that, indeed, we welcomed foreign investment to help us create the jobs we need. But a question was put after the dinner, when I was asked what I thought of the decision by Mr. White. I said that I thought Mr. White was a thoughtful and able union leader, and if he believed it was in his interest and in the interest of Canada to proceed that way, he did so with our encouragement and our good wishes.

GENERAL MOTORS' INVESTMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the very first Question Period on November 7 I put to the Prime Minister a concern that I had about an investment of General Motors in Canada as a result of the difference in union perspectives between Canada and the United States and the automobile industry. At that time the Prime Minister promised, and let me use his words: "I will take this up with the management of that corporation".

Has the Prime Minister fulfilled that promise? Has he talked to the senior executives of General Motors? What would his reflections be as a result of those conversations, and the recent threat by General Motors to curtail investment in Canada as a result of a separate union being set up in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I have not seen what my right hon. friend has referred to as a threat, Mr. Speaker. I have not seen that. I assume I would be as dismayed as he would be with that kind of rhetoric, if it were the case. Concerns have been raised as to the status of the auto pact in the event of a separation, but I still hold to the view, which I think would be endorsed by all Members of this House, that Canadian trade unionists are quite entitled to take whatever decisions they believe are in the interests of their members, and that Members of this House would encourage them in doing precisely that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we share this view, and I was more interested in discussing the promised conversation between General Motors and the Prime Minister.

REPORTS OF CANADAIR AND DE HAVILLAND PURCHASE BY FOREIGN INTERESTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): On the same subject, of relations with the United States, Mr. Speaker, rumours are persisting that de Havilland and Canadair will be purchased by foreign companies. In my reply to the Speech from the Throne, I expressed several times my concern about this possibility.

Could the Right Hon. Prime Minister give the House the assurance that if these aircraft companies are bought by foreign investors, the House of Commons will have an opportunity to make a full examination of the purchase transactions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, there are no groups or great numbers of companies or corporations, either Canadian or foreign, lining up to buy the assets in question. If there is any change, I shall certainly let the Hon. Member know.

TRADE

UNITED STATES BARRIERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As he probably knows, the United States and many other countries have a very highly complicated set of prohibitions and controls against foreign investment in their own countries, and trade. When the Prime Minister speaks about good friends and neighbours, I presume he means that is a reciprocal relationship. Has either he or his Ministers made any effort, or taken any initiative with the United States or other countries, to ask them to change their barriers and to eliminate their controls and prohibitions against both investment and trade, in light of the dismantling of FIRA which the Government has undertaken?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my speech in New York, and on many other occasions, I specifically referred to the fact that protectionism is our mutual adversary. I pointed out the problems inherent in attitudes in the American Congress which would give rise to protectionism that would, inadvertently or otherwise, harm Canadian interests. I said that Canadian interests are privileged ones and that we must have that kind of reciprocity. In fact, I went further. I said that if I were the President of the United States I would wake up in the morning and say: "Thank God for Canada. What can I do for Canada today? It is the best friend anybody could ever have".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

VISIT TO CANADA BY UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that is what the President in fact says, because it is not every day that he can sell the Brooklyn Bridge to a Canadian Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Considering that the debate and discussion on Investment Canada will take some time, will the Prime Minister undertake to take those initiatives with the United States and ensure that when President Reagan visits here in March he will be able to announce, as the Prime Minister did in New York the other day, the same kind of dismantling reduction and elimination of those kinds of barriers in his country as the Prime Minister announced as benefits to Americans?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can see why my hon. friend is somewhat unnerved today. There was a statement earlier today by the Leader of the Opposition which says Liberal Cabinet Ministers responsible for excessive spending should be terminated, should be held responsible. I can see why my hon. friend is somewhat perturbed today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I am not perturbed. I am asking you a question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When was that statement made?

Mr. Chrétien: When and where?

An Hon. Member: Table the document.

Mr. Speaker: I know it is Wednesday. If I didn't know, I do now. Would the Right Hon. Prime Minister care to finish his answer, please?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the intervention of the Leader of the Opposition was improper procedurally. If he would like to consult with me on my vast parliamentary experience, I would be happy to be helpful.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When was that statement made?

Mr. Mulroney: The statement was made this morning by Canadian Press. As the Leader of the Opposition knows, I believe everything—

Mr. Waddell: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Well, I think we will leave it at that. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

AUDITOR GENERAL

PETRO-CANADA PURCHASE OF PETROFINA—ACCESS TO CABINET DOCUMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last Monday when I asked the Government if it would make available to the Auditor General certain cabinet documents which he deemed to be essential in his assessment of the Petro-Canada take-over of Petrofina, the Government said no. Specifically the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said:

—the Auditor General wants from me what the law does not permit me to give—

The Government has now changed its mind.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister a straightforward question. What was illegal last week that has become legal this week, or will he tell us what law he is now breaking?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the only change between this week and last was when the Hon. Member for Burnaby was asked on "As It Happens" if he would divulge the confidence of a conversation with his Leader, and he said: "No, that is privileged". That was the only difference this week. My hon. friend will acknowledge that we have always taken the position, and I have defended it in the House, that cabinet conversations—

Mr. Broadbent: It is not conversations that he is talking about.

Mr. Mulroney: I quite agree. The Auditor General stated yesterday that he is not seeking political information or communications between cabinet Ministers. That assurance or that clarification having been given, I am now working with the Auditor General to provide to him all of the information that he requires to make value judgments on behalf of the people of Canada. His report yesterday is exemplary in this regard, and the analysis that it made of our predecessors. We want him to continue that same analytical judgment and we will provide him with all of the information that we have.

DEPARTMENTAL AND CROWN CORPORATION DOCUMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows, as the Minister behind him knows, that when she said last week that what the Auditor General wanted was illegal, she misinformed the House. It was not illegal last week, it is not illegal this week, and he ought to be getting that material on a regular basis.

If the Prime Minister has now agreed to provide to the Auditor General information concerning the Petro-Canada take-over of Petrofina, which includes documents which were heretofore regarded as secret under the cabinet confidentiality rule, on the understanding that the Auditor General does not want conversations about cabinet meetings, will he assure the House, and, more important, the people of Canada, because hundreds of millions of dollars were involved, that this rule will be applied to all Departments and Crown corporations without exception?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to give my hon. friend the assurance that all of the information available to the Government of Canada that is consistent with the point he has just raised will indeed be provided to the Auditor General of Canada so that he can make the kinds of decisions that he has to make on behalf of Parliament.

COURT ACTION LAUNCHED BY AUDITOR GENERAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear that. If the Prime Minister had said that a week ago, we would have saved a lot of time in the House of Commons. The Prime Minister shakes his head, but he knows that in private meetings as well as in public statements that what I say is the case. If this is now the case, and the Government of Canada is going to honour its obligations under the law to the Auditor General, will the Government make it clear to the Auditor General that it is unnecessary for him to wage a costly court battle against the Government of Canada to obtain, as a matter of right, what he ought to have?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): May I say with respect, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend makes a compelling point, but I made it yesterday. He is a day late. I had the Auditor General in precisely to explore that point. I thought it was offensive to the customs of this House that the servant of Parliament should have to initiate litigation, as he did against the previous Government, to seek information which was rightfully here in this House. I met with the Auditor General in a spirit of openness to attempt to find, with him, a formula that would enable us to do that. He appears to be satisfied with the talks as initiated.

I want to give my friend the assurance that I intend to follow through, consistent with that spirit that he mentioned, because our obligation is not to the Auditor General; our obligation is to the Auditor General as a servant of Parliament.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

INQUIRY WHETHER FOREIGN CORPORATION INTENDS TO PURCHASE CANADAIR

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Can the Minister confirm to the House that a foreign company has actually expressed its intention of buying Canadair? In reply to a question by the Leader of the Opposition, the Prime Minister just said that he was not aware of any companies that would be interested in buying Canadair. However, when the Minister tabled his Bill to do away with FIRA, he said this would allow foreign companies to purchase Canadair. Is there or is there not a company that is offering to buy the Canadair firm in Montreal?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member I would remind him that the Prime Minister said that there was not a long list of companies lined up to buy the aircraft firms. The statement that I made is quite correct. There is at least one company that has expressed an interest. However, I think until that company puts that interest into a firm offer, or at least is more inclined to talk in specific dollar terms, it would not be in anybody's interest to reveal its name.

POSSIBILITY OF SELLING CANADAIR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is particularly important since the Minister seems to be preparing us for the end of the aeronautics industry in Canada, unless the Government makes a definitive commitment. I would ask the Minister first of all, whether he is prepared to make the commitment that Canadair will not be sold unless the buyer offers guarantees that all existing technology at Canadair will remain in Canada, and second, I want to ask whether the Minister is prepared to commit the Government to not selling Canadair if the buyer cannot guarantee existing jobs in Montreal.

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will be pleased to hear that, if a deal is arrived at, it will certainly cover the points to which he was referred. It will certainly receive cabinet approval and it will certainly receive the House's approval if necessary under the Financial Administration Act. In any event, if the Hon. Member knows of any Canadian would-be purchasers for Canadair, or any Canadians who wish to become a partner with a foreign concern, he can come over and see me this afternoon. I will be in my office all afternoon waiting to talk to him.

ACCESS TO DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE INFORMATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and deals with the continuing difficulties of the Auditor General to evaluate satisfactorily the $3.5 billion overrun on the F-18, and other major expenditures of the Ministry of National Defence. Is the Minister aware that under a directive given by the Chief of Defence Staff in September, 1983, under Section 23, his Department was specifically told that the Auditor General should have no more access to information about his Department than would be available to the general public under the Access to Information Act? Will the Minister confirm that that is currently the departmental policy?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that in August, 1983, certain instructions were given to th e Deputy Minister and the Chief of the Armed Forces to the effect that certain information should not be passed on to the Auditor General as he requested. That situation has now changed. The Hon. Member has heard what the Right Hon. Prime Minister indicated today. My officials have received that same message from me, and the information the Auditor General seeks will be provided as outlined by the Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Are the directives issued on September 1, 1983 departmental policy or has this policy been dropped?

What instructions have been given to your departmental officials, and has this document now been cancelled, yes or no?

[English]

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, apparently the Hon. Member cannot understand it in either English or French. I would like to tell him, as kindly as I can, that the officials of my Department have been instructed to adhere not to the directives that were given by the former Government but to the directives given by this Government, a Government that believes that the Canadian people have a right to the information the Auditor General seeks to provide them.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—REDRESS SOUGHT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. As the Minister knows, in 1942 over 17,000 Canadian citizens who were of Japanese origin, even though they were born or naturalized Canadian citizens, were uprooted from their homes, and their businesses were expropriated. When will this terrible abuse of cabinet power under the War Measures Act be acknowledged and put right?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and his interest in this very important subject. I can say, subject to the House Leader's discussions and confirmation, that I would hope to have this important matter dealt with early in the Session after we return from the Christmas recess. I would also indicate to the Hon. Member that officials in my Department are at present discussing matters of concern with the Japanese Canadian community across the country. I may just add that the main point that we are trying to stress is that we want full consultation with that community so that this matter can be dealt with in an honourable and just fashion.

EMPLOYMENT

ANNOUNCEMENT BY CBC PRESIDENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, we all know how quickly the Minister of Employment and Immigration reacted when the problem was not just closing down an industry but a whole town, the town of Gagnon, and I wish to congratulate her. Today I would like to ask the Minister what she intends to do to help 1,150 CBC employees, especially the creative artists and writers who will not be eligible for pre-retirement and also the clerks and other "small fry" who were severely penalized as a result of yesterday's announcement by Mr. Juneau, the President of the CBC.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the question might interest the Minister of Communications.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I shall put my question to the Prime Minister tomorrow. It is about employment. I think it is directly concerned with . . . But perhaps I was too hasty. I would therefore like to ask, and my question is a very simple one: Does the Minister of Employment and Immigration intend to help 1,150 CBC employees, especially the creative artists, writers and clerks who are not and will not be eligible for pre-retirement? I do not think this comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Communications, since it concerns employment.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to take the Hon. Member's representations about this important cultural community under notice, but I would also assure him that in a country such as Canada, where there is so much opportunity and where there is confidence in the future, there is a place for writers, for the cultural groups, and for all of those who want to make a contribution and can make a contribution to the future of Canada.

FORESTRY

VANCOUVER ISLAND FOREST LANDS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Forestry. Vancouver Island communities with unemployment rates of 15 per cent are worried that the proposed federal-British Columbia forestry agreement will be directed toward replanting in the interior and will do nothing for the prime forest lands of Vancouver Island. I would like to ask the Minister if he will agree to the request of Vancouver Island mayors for permanent funding of intensive forestry on Vancouver Island that would create 1,100 permanent and immediate jobs, and provide long-term economic stability for the Island?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that I have personally visited that particular project on the Island. This afternoon at 3.30 I will be meeting that group and will listen to its representations. I do know a little bit about the magnitude of the request. It is a very interesting one. I think the project is an interesting one, and we will attempt to try to respond to its needs as the money becomes available.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. "As the money becomes available" is a very problematic situation. The money is needed now. Will the Minister tell the House whether the proposed agreement discriminates against Vancouver Island? If it does, will he make a commitment to secure additional funds in order that the hard-hit Vancouver Island communities will get their fair share?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I have visited various parts of B.C. and I do know that there is a great need. My cabinet colleagues are presently dealing with a variety of requests for assistance, and we will deal with that matter in due course.

EFFECT OF 1986 CENSUS CANCELLATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. Canadian ethnic leaders and organizations have been dismayed over the cancellation of the 1986 census, largely because for the first time in its history it was to collect data which would be used in implementing equal opportunity programs for visible minorities. Was the Minister consulted prior to the cancellation by his colleague, the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, Cabinet collectively dealt with the material which was put forward by the Minister of Finance. I do not share the Hon. Member's concern in terms of the various ethnic communities in this country.

COLLECTION OF DATA

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, if he does not share those concerns, he does not share the thousands of concerns which are pouring in from ethnic groups across the country.

An Hon. Member: Me too.

Mr. Marchi: The Minister of Defence should listen and learn.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: I would ask the Minister, given that both the Abella Commission report and the Equality Now report support the 1986 census, what he proposes to the House with respect to collecting that data base, so that Canadians from all parts of the country and all backgrounds can have equal opportunity programs for jobs in Canada.

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that a labour force survey will begin in a very short period of time. The information gathered through the labour force survey will be utilized by the Ministry of Multiculturalism.

EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS ON WRITERS AND ARTISTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. He will know that the President of the CBC announced yesterday that 750 permanent employees of the CBC will be laid off in the next couple of months. However, the President did not deal with the thousands of Canadians who work on a part-time or contract basis on particular programs—the writers, actors, musicians, and dancers. What studies, if any, were done by the CBC, or the consultants whom the minister employed to determine what the effect would be on these thousands of people?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, last week I informed the House that after serious and thorough consultations with CBC officials within the framework of our respective jurisdictional and regulatory responsibilities, we agreed that budget cuts would be applied mainly to the CBC's administrative areas so as to safeguard creativity and production in the cultural departments, both within the network and regionally. I think these consultations have born fruit, and today, we can see that the CBC has made an effort to restrict the necessary budgetary cutbacks almost totally to administration and capital investment.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary question.

EFFECT ON INCOMES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister knows that Hon. Members who represent areas where the CBC has operations have already heard from their constituents that regional and national programs are being cut-back despite the protestations of the Minister. Considering the fact that spokespeople for the cultural community have made the case over the last couple of years that their people are now living on very small incomes, what effect will this have on those people whose incomes will really be sharply reduced by the cut-backs by the CBC?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the CBC will do everything in its power to see to it that the cultural sector will suffer as little as possible.

U.S. TENDENCY TO IMPOSE QUOTAS ON CANADIAN LUMBER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Forestry).

Has the present Government made representations to the U.S. Government objecting to the tendency to impose quotas on Canadian lumber imports?

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, having just had consultations with the industry in the United States, I can tell the Hon. Member that it is a matter of concern, and that there is talk in the United States forest industry about quotas and countervail. I am sure it is a matter which concerns my colleagues in External Affairs and DRIE. We are presently dealing with the matter. We are monitoring the situation. I think the kind of comment that was made by the Prime Minister, and the kind of atmosphere which we are trying to develop between the United States and Canada, will possibly curtail that kind of talk in the United States.

THE CONSTITUTION

QUEBEC UNILINGUAL TRAFFIC TICKET—PREPARATION OF FACTUM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I have in my hand the factum, that is, the written argument, of the Attorney General of Canada before the Supreme Court which rejects the position of Duncan Macdonald of Montreal that he has the right to a court summons in English. The factum is dated November, 1984.

When questioned about this, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada first said that he had not read the factum, even though it bears his name. Later he said that it was prepared by his officials and he had no responsbility for it.

In Supreme Court cases which involve a sensitive political issue, is it the position of the Prime Minister that the chief legal officer of the Crown, the Attorney General of Canada, has not only the obligation to scrutinize closely any factum which goes to the Supreme Court in his name, but that he has full responsibility for its content? What is his position on that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, given the importance of the matter which is inherent in the question raised by my hon. friend, and not having had an opportunity to read the factum, I hope that he will allow me to consult with the Minister of Justice and get back to him as quickly as I can.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR FACTUM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, this is a question of government policy. The Right Hon. Prime Minister was a learned lawyer and he should be ready to answer the question. We have a factum, under the name of the Attorney General of Canada, which has been submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Allmand: I am simply asking the Prime Minister if it is the policy of his Government that a factum can be placed before the Supreme Court of Canada under the name of the Attorney General of Canada, and that the Attorney General can renounce responsibility for the factum and slough off that responsibility to the public servants in his Department. Is that the policy of this Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the policy that my hon. friend has described is the policy of the preceding Government. It sloughed-off ministerial responsibility. Any time it got into trouble, it consistently blamed it on the officials. That is what happened in the previous Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Prime Minister wish to finish his answer?

Mr. Mulroney: I do not want my hon. friend to get any more exasperated than he is.

I can tell my hon. friend that this Party has stood for the defence of Anglophone rights in Quebec and Francophone rights outside Quebec. We believe in the defence of minority rights. We have no lessons to take from the Hon. Member in that regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—GOVERNMENT MANDATE ON BEHALF OF FRENCH LISTENERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications and has to do with the CBC cut-backs.

English-speaking listeners have ready access to American networks such as PBS, but French listeners have no such radio and TV services, Mr. Speaker. Here is my question to the Minister: Given the cut-backs imposed by the Government, how can the CBC fulfil its mandate on behalf of French listeners?

[English]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the CBC is the only one responsible for French programming in this country. I will take this opportunity to explain that the private sector has some responsibility for that. If it is possible for us to improve the quality of our products, improve the exportation of our products, we will have better production in Quebec because the market will be stronger than it is now.

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: But, Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister said something about improving CBC program services, so my supplementary question is this: How can he now account for the contradiction between his promise of last week to improve services, on one hand, and his budgetary cutbacks at the CBC, on the other?

[English]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I explained a few days ago in Montreal that we must enlarge the range of French language programming throughout the country. We must give greatly increased emphasis to marketing, both national and international.

Mr. Nystrom: That is the contradiction right there!

[English]

Mr. Masse: I have new problems—

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: The contradiction is right there!

Mr. Nystrom: That is the contradiction!

[English]

Mr. Masse: There is a growing competition from Anglophone programming in this country, both domestic and foreign.

Mr. Nystrom: That was not my question.

[English]

Mr. Masse: It is not just the situation in Quebec. It is not a case of taking from the English to give to the French. That is not the way this problem should be perceived at all. That is not the solution at all.

JUDICIAL BILINGUALISM—MINISTER OF JUSTICE FACTUM

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

As many people in this country, we believe that under section 133 of the Constitution, the courts in some provinces are required to serve the people in both official languages. Mr. Duncan MacDonald's case, and the point which we want to stress for the information of this government, is that neither the Société franco-manitobaine, nor Alliance Quebec, nor a number of Canadians share the views of your Minister of Justice in his factum rejecting that position, which is restrictive of language rights. Is the Prime Minister ready to withdraw that factum, read it closely, bring it to his office and take a sensible decision on the matter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I think my hon. friend will agree with me that my position, my government's position is quite clear on the issue of minority rights. Fortunately, the courts in Canada have always been there to rule on the major current issues which have been referred to them in that area. There is no doubt that the Parliament of Canada and this Government fully support the rights of our linguistic minorities across Canada. Those are vital rights, and we are going to continue that support to our English or French-speaking minorities across the land.

REQUEST THAT FACTUM BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a very short supplementary. Will the Prime Minister withdraw the factum, read it, study it, and come back to this House with it?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I may say, when the issue came up regarding the protection of minority rights in Manitoba we took a clear cut position which was not shared by the Leader of the Opposition and some of his colleagues. So I may say that we have been consistent throughout the piece and, as I indicated to my hon. friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East, the Minister of Justice is not here but I would take notice of his question and advise the House at the earliest possible moment.

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—CONSULTATIONS QUERY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He promised consultation. The Minister of Finance failed to consult with CBC management in advance of applying cuts to the CBC. The Minister of Communications failed even to respond to a communication requesting consultation, from members of all three Parties from the Windsor area. Is that to be considered typical of that kind of consultation? Or will his Government agree to engage in real consultation with the people with a view of seeing whether there cannot be some correction in what are obvious errors in determining where the cuts should be applied in terms of their effect on Canadian content and sufficient recognition of the concerns of regional areas?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that had the Minister of Finance consulted with the President of the CBC prior to the event, my hon. friend would have accused him of political interference. All that has transpired is that the Minister of Communications and other government officers have dealt with the CBC in an acceptable way largely pursuant to a request from the President of the CBC. We are satisfied that the arm's-length relationship that must exist was respected and that the CBC Pesident and officers brought forward a new expenditure program they believed was in the best interests of the corporation. We did not interfere beyond that, and we try to respect what the President of the CBC and his colleagues decide.

IMPACT IN WINDSOR, ONT.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): With all due respect to the Prime Minister, you cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Neither can you.

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect, the Hon. Member cannot have a long first question and a preamble to the supplementary. The Member cannot have it both ways. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, how can we believe the assurances that the cuts would be applied to overhead and administration, when in Windsor all the cuts have been applied to programming?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The decision, Mr. Speaker, was of course that of the President of the CBC. I may tell my hon. friend that if he feels there has been an injustice in the greater Windsor area, I will be happy to consult with my colleague in Communications and bring that to the attention of the President of the CBC. I am sure that both he and I want the people of Windsor to be treated with the ultimate fairness as well.

DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC ON FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Forestry. Can the Minister tell us what progress is being made in the negotiations with Quebec on a Federal-provincial agreement for forestry?

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, negotiations have gone on between the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Province of Quebec for some time on an economic regional development agreement. I can assure the Hon. Member that this Government is in favour of that kind of agreement, and I suspect an announcement will be made very shortly relative to the signing of that agreement. I can tell him that forestry plays a very significant part in that particular agreement, and those details will be announced at the proper time.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. First, I want to welcome him back to the House from his NATO meetings and other various on-the-the-job training programs.

● (1500)

The Acting Defence Minister was not in a position to give me an answer to a question last week because he did not know what the Minister had said at NATO, even though he said they had very close communications. At the same time he did inform us that what the Minister had said "made a great deal of sense", even though he had not heard it.

When making statements about the CF-18 fighter aircraft and the six new patrol frigates, among other items, was the Minister simply not making several promises to our NATO allies that were based on commitments which had already been made and were already under way to a degree, by the previous Government?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, one of the real points of interest in the Auditor General's report is that the former Government told the Canadian people that the CF-18 program and the Canadian patrol frigate program were real programs. We found out from the Auditor General that they were half programs. They were buying half a plane and half a frigate. We are now carrying out the total program by putting the other things in the planes to make them real fighting planes, and putting the other things in the frigates to make them real fighting ships. That would not have happened under the budget proposed by the former Government. As a new Government we are saddled with delivering to NATO and NORAD—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect.

Mr. Coates: It was promised by them and will be done by us.

PETITIONS

DEREGULATION OF TELEPHONE SERVICE

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today of presenting four separate petitions, all dealing with the issue of telephone deregulation. The petitioners from the Birdtail Valley New Horizons Club, the Green Valley Senior Centre, and the Onanole Cheery Chirpers Seniors' Club and many citizens of southwestern Manitoba total 1,041.

Their concern is that telephone deregulation could undermine the tradition of affordable, universal service which we enjoy in this country. They ask that Parliament refrain from enacting legislation which would lead to deregulation.

Mr. Speaker: I have another petitioner, but I do feel duty-bound to ask Members either to take their seats or leave the Chamber, please. Hon. Members are petitioning the House of Commons and it only seems fair to me that they get a chance for the House to hear what they say. Order, please.

WORLD PEACE AND DISARMAMENT

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, as the Member of Parliament for London West it is my duty to present a petition signed by over 2,000 residents in my riding.

The petition will be familiar to the House. It calls for Parliament to declare Canada a nuclear weapons-free zone, to work actively for a multilateral de-escalation of the arms race, to divert arms funding to peaceful purposes, and to conduct a free vote to cease the testing of Cruise missiles in Canada.

PENALTIES FOR DRUNK DRIVING

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the residents of the City of Vernon in Okanagan North who are concerned about the lack of protection and effective legislation to reduce the carnage and destruction caused by drunk drivers on our roads and highways.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 30 and 73.

TREASURY BOARD LAWYERS

How many lawyers are employed by the Treasury Board?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): There are nine lawyers assigned to the Treasury Board from the Department of Justice.

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 73—Mr. McKinnon:

1. On March 31 of (a) 1981 (b) 1982 (c) 1983 (d) 1984, what total amount was at the credit of the Public Service Superannuation Account?

2. In the fiscal year (a) 1981-82 (b) 1982-83 (c) 1983-84, what (i) average rate of interest did the government pay for the use of the money in the Account (ii) total amount of interest was paid into the Account (iii) total amount was paid out of the Account?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board):

		Balance in Public Service Superannuation Account
1. (a)	March 31, 1981 —	$12,705,715,357
(b)	March 31, 1982 —	$14,757,155,902
(c)	March 31, 1983 —	$16,367,957,784
(d)	March 31, 1984 —	$17,980,598,737

2. Public Service Superannuation Account

	Average Rate of Interest %		Interest Paid Into Account $	*Additional Interest $		Amount paid Out of Account $

* The account earns interest quarterly at a rate determined as if the excess of receipts over disbursements each quarter since the account was established had been invested in Government of Canada 20 year bonds. In effect, the quarterly rate is based on the weighted average yield of all investments over the previous 20 year period.

Some interest earnings in excess of the rate used in the most recent actuarial report on the account (6.5% per annum) have not been credited to the account, but rather have been used to offset the cost of amortizing actuarial deficiencies that arise mainly as a result of annual salary increases. These amounts are shown in the additional interest column above.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Courts Amendment Act

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, last November 16, I had a question about the court challenges program placed on the Order Paper. That was a month ago. I therefore want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether we can expect an answer soon since, one month later, this matter is now making the headlines and the Prime Minister could perhaps use the answer to understand what is going on in the MacDonald affair.

Mr. Dick: Soon.

I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ONTARIO AND MANITOBA COURTS AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-3, an Act to amend various Acts as a consequence of the reconstitution of the courts in Ontario and Manitoba, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Justice) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Freshwater Fish Marketing Act

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans) moved that Bill C-5, an Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Mel Gass (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am fairly confident at this time that Hon. Members are familiar with the intent of Bill C-5. In a nutshell, it is an amendment to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act to increase the permitted borrowing limit from the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation to $30 million from the present borrowing ceiling of $20 million which was set 10 years ago. In the fishing industry, as is the case in most businesses over the last 10 years, market prices have risen along with operating costs, the cost of fuels, wages and so on. This certainly holds true with the FFMC which has seen its operating budget escalating steadily.

A recently prepared five-year plan of the Corporation shows that its working capital and fixed assets requirements will exceed $20 million in the fiscal year 1985-86, and within a year will be in the region of $24 million. It is significant that the initial payment of the Corporation, that is the amount of money paid out to the 3,500 fishermen in the FFMC area at the start of the season, based on predicted market prices, has risen from a total of $9 million in 1974 to more than $20 million in 1983. As Hon. Members may have noticed from a recent press release, total sales of the Corporation in 1983-84 were in excess of $44 million, which is a record amount.

Perhaps we should point out that the FFMC draws its working capital through loans from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It is, of course, not allowed to borrow more from that or any other source than that set out in the Act as its permitted borrowing limit.

Another point I would like to stress is that under the Corporation's mandate it is obliged to purchase all the fish offered to it by the fishermen who operate in the five million square kilometers of territory comprising the area covered by the FFMC. Most of these fishermen are native people who, in most instances, have no alternative means of making a living. It would be most unfortunate if these hardworking Canadian citizens had to suffer as a result of the FFMC having insufficient working capital. That situation could easily arise in the coming year if the credit ceiling is not raised as proposed in this legislation.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief. There is some urgency to pass this Bill today. We on this side of the House certainly agree with Bill C-5 because there are 3,500 fishermen, many of whom are native fishermen, who require this borrowing authority increase.

This Bill was previously introduced by the Government of which I was a member back in 1980. I recall that the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) did not have many favourable comments about this corporation during second reading stage of this Bill. He felt that it was extremely monopolistic in regard to the private sector in that part of the region. He went on to say that he supported the Bill because he is a good Party supporter, but I think the Hon. Member's remarks might give us cause to believe there is something in the Bill that we did not understand.

Although I am reluctant to bring that up, I would suggest to the Minister, the Parliamentary Secretary and the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry that witnesses should appear on behalf of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Agency so that we can delve into those accusations a little further.

I am extremely pleased to see the progress of the corporation this year. A recent news release on December 6 stated that there would be a final payment for 1983-84 amounting to almost $6 million, of which the single highest pay-out to an individual fisherman was $78,000. That fact reflects what we have thought about the corporation over the years. However, due to the reservations expressed by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, we should question witnesses from the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in the committee to see if there is any justice to those accusations.

There are no more speakers from the Official Opposition and we are prepared to see this Bill passed as soon as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: If the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) wishes to speak before me, I would yield the floor to him.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say how pleased I was with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), in the few remarks that he made. I appreciate them very much.

He made two points. First, he said that I in particular—I reflect the views of my constituency—have no great love for the FFMC in its present form, especially the way that it enjoys a monopoly in which no one else is allowed in the business. He also said that I was a good Party supporter. He was absolutely correct on both counts.

He also suggested that the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans should delve a little further into the problem of the marketing of freshwater fish. I agree with him wholeheartedly on this point. Let's face it, the committee hearings dealing with the Bill that is before us today were just a little bit of a railroad job. More time could have been devoted to the proper study not only of FFMC but the whole system of freshwater fish marketing and alternatives to the FFMC.

As I said at second reading, the problem is that the FFMC enjoys a monopoly. No one else is allowed in that business. The fishermen cannot sell their products to anyone other than the Crown corporation FFMC. In return, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Gass) pointed out, FFMC is obligated to take all the fish that the fishermen make available to them. However, there is nothing mentioned about the price that it has to pay. Therefore it can say that it will take the fish but only pay five cents a pound for it. The provision in the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation Act which states that, in return for granting FFMC a monopoly, it must take the fish really does not make sense. There is an easy way for FFMC to avoid that.

Those who have studied this matter independently have found that in all probability alternative methods of fish marketing could be established. People could go into that business, buy fish from the fishermen and take it across interprovincial and international boundaries in order to develop markets for that fish for the existing species that are marketed and for species that are underutilized or not utilized at all.

If the monopoly was revoked, I believe the enterprise within people would work wonders for the fishermen. It has and continues to be the policy of the Progressive Conservative Party that Crown corporations such as the FFMC should not enjoy that monopoly. This was well thought out prior to the last election campaign. It was an election promise made to fishermen in freshwater country that when we took over the reins of government that monopoly would be revoked.

This issue must not be allowed to go to the bottom of the heap. Perhaps it is not a great national issue involving all of Canada but it is certainly important in certain areas of the Prairies and certainly in the Northwest Territories. We owe it to those fishermen to carry out our election promise.

I hope that in the near future the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) and his Parliamentary Secretary, whom I know shares a keen interest in this problem, will confer with the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to see that new legislation is brought in which would amend the FFM Act to revoke that monopoly and enable the fishermen to sell their fish at the highest price to whomever wants to buy it.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a question of the Hon. Member who just spoke.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): You may, by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, I hear a no.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as the fisheries critic for the New Democratic Party, I would like to wind up the debate if there are no other speakers on this matter.

The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) stated that we wanted to pass this Bill previously but it was delayed as a result of controversy with the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). Apparently, the reason for that delay is that the Conservatives are divided on their own Bill. I find that quite extraordinary. Bill C-5 is one of its first Bills and the Government is already divided among itself in its large caucus.

I listened carefully to what the Member for Western Arctic said. He aroused memories I have of seeing fish coming out of the water at the north end of Great Slave Lake at this time of the year when I lived up there approximately ten years ago. I remember how important it is to the people. It is very interesting to see that when the fish come out of the water they freeze instantly. You do not have the problem of putting them into anything; the temperature is so cold that it instantly freezes them.

There are some problems with what the Hon. Member for Western Arctic said. As I understood what he said, he objects, and his Party objected in the campaign—but not as it brings the Bill into the House—to a monopoly situation. I am confused about this, Mr. Speaker. How far would the Member go? Would he get rid of the Canadian Wheat Board? That is a monopoly marketing organization, is it not? Does the Hon. Member believe in orderly marketing? The concept of orderly marketing was to try and give the producer a decent value for his product.

Mr. Benjamin: Maximum return.

Mr. Waddell: As my colleague has said, the maximum return for the product. We have great experience on that in Canada. We fought those battles 30 or 40 years ago. In the so-called free market, which turned out to be not so free, producer kept undercutting producer and the prices would go down and down and down. Does the Hon. Member honestly believe that if this were a free market for fish or for selling to a private buyer that the fishermen would have any more control over the fish? I am not so sure they would. I think they might be better off with a freshwater fish marketing board.

I accept the fact that the Hon. Member represents and speaks for his area. Obviously he is reflecting problems of the fishermen in his area, in the Arctic, an area which I have already said I appreciate and love a great deal. If they are having problems, perhaps we should have a further look at this situation in committee. The Hon. Member said the Bill was railroaded through the committee. To use his words, "it was a railroad job". I remind the Hon. Member that he is a member of the governing Party. The Conservatives control the committees. I hope he would have a little more influence with his own Government not to have a Bill railroaded through the committee. If there is a problem, it seems to me the committee should have another look.

The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) had a quite genuine suggestion, and I would be prepared to go along with what he said. I do not think it is in this Bill. This is a minor Bill in the sense that it just increases the credit ceiling so that the marketing board would have adequate working capital. Now is not the time to do it but the Member has flagged the problem.

I am not sure I agree with him. I think there are problems when you start departing from orderly marketing from the experience we have had in Canada. I would remind the Hon. Member that the reason the freshwater fish marketing board was set up—and I remind his colleagues too—is because the private sector failed. The fishermen were in desperate need. They had to get together and set up a board. It is similar to the other Bill we debated the other day on saltwater fish marketing. The Hon. Member's colleagues, in their great ideological pursuit of the holy grail of private enterprise at all costs, should give pause, as my friend from Calgary should give pause, and ask themselves why was this thing set up. It was set up because of the failure of the private market. I am sure a wise man, as the Hon. Member is, would think about that.

We are prepared to let the Bill go through now. I draw the Hon. Member's attention to my speech on second reading of the Bill last week. I ask him to consider the remarks I have made today. Maybe in committee we should make sure that the Government Members can agree among themselves and we will get on and try to do the best thing we can for the fishermen of northern Canada.

Motion agreed to and the Bill read the third time and passed.

The House resumed Tuesday, December 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, when we concluded debate on this Bill yesterday afternoon at five o'clock, I was just about to open the question of benefits for foreign investment. That seems to me to be the crucial question that should be considered. I suggested in passing that the Government was bringing this Bill in with much of the Christmas spirit about it. Santa Claus will bring us good things if only we are good. We will throw the door open and foreign investment will come in and all sorts of good things will happen. It is precisely the question whether good things will follow from foreign investment which deserves to be considered.

I suggested also that proponents of foreign investment have never, in my opinion, subjected the process and its consequences to the sort of consideration that it deserves to have. That for governments is particularly serious because they have the means of clarifying the matter. One can to some extent in a theoretical way open up the question and consider what some of the consequences are. That is what I want to do for a few minutes today.

First, there is concern about the need for capital in this country. It is probably not all that difficult an exercise to suggest gargantuan totals of capital being needed between now and 1990. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) suggested one of those totals. At the same time we are told that Canadians save at a world-leading rate. Given the levels of saving that occur here, one would not think the need for capital was actually as inordinate as is being suggested by the Government in bringing this Bill before us. One might recognize that when foreign investment is encouraged and when very large parts of the economic activity that occur in a country is foreign controlled, in Canadian manufacturing particularly and in large areas of resource extraction—it is overwhelmingly the case that so much of the activity is carried out in companies owned by people outside of Canada—the result year by year is an outflow of capital from Canada. There is no net gain at all.

When Government does not recognize that kind of reality, one begins to suspect it is being ideological and downright irresponsible in the economic policy which it puts before the country. On the score of capital for Canada, foreign investment can be an incredibly short-sighted gain. There are some other areas that are so enormously important to the economic development of this country. Surely what people mean when they talk about capital is technology, the bringing in to the country of knowledge presently not available. When we think of that kind of question and its ramifications, we have even more reason to be concerned about turning to capital investment for a simple answer.

The reality of the matter is that having technology imported into the country by reason of foreign investment can be an incredibly expensive gift to any people. If technology were not available, it would not be the easiest thing in the world but what would happen to Canadians, to the scientists, engineers and people involved in adapting technology and applying it? Canadian research and development would have to be done in order to fill those gaps. When we depend on others to bring the technology into the country, we close doors to our engineers and scientists. We shut off employment opportunities. If Government is ultimately concerned about foreign investment in order to ensure employment, again we have an incredibly short-sighted action in depending upon others to do these things for us.

If we think of employment in higher levels of management, New Democrats do not usually worry about that very quickly, but in terms of development and leadership of the country it is important too. When we depend on foreign investment to provide the capital and the technology, we are likely to get the skills and the management direction with it as well. It is a subject of the most profound importance to a country to consider what happens to it when the leadership and the direction of its economic affairs is coming from persons outside the country and when it is not Canadians who have the opportunity to benefit. A few able or very fortunate Canadians may rise through the international structure and be lost to Canada. At a time when skilled management leadership of the country should have opportunities to work here on a large scale, we lose them as a result of foreign investment.

We should think about another area of economic activity and ask ourselves what happens in trade areas as far as imports and exports are concerned. What are the possibilities of having more extensive processing of raw material in Canada? In the past we looked to raw material, together with foreign investment; foreign investment in Canadian resources was the basis for Canadian prosperity. What happens in the case of foreign investment? All too often companies are established in the country with only one purpose, that is, to extract the product and get it out to markets in their home countries. Over the years it has been sent to the United States, especially since the Second World War and farther back into this century. When it is between a subsidiary in Canada and a parent company in the United States, we know that the pricing which occurs means low returns in Canada and high profits in the United States. Income flows and the bases for capital are lost to Canada as a result of the establishment of subsidiaries in this country. We worry about imports, about Canada having such an incredibly high level of imports, particularly in manufactured goods. Opportunities are closed off. When we think of those things, we realize that it is American and other foreign subsidiaries which are overwhelmingly importers of manufactured goods.

On point after point I suggest that the Canadian economy suffers and employment opportunities are lost. The future of the country is blasted when we look to foreign investment. For those reasons I feel a deep anxiety about the Bill before us.

Once upon a time George Grant in Lament for a Nation talked about the Conservatives having a sense of the country's future. These days when debating Investment Canada, that becomes the fiction many of us felt for years that it was. Conservatives are betraying their heritage these days in bringing this legislation before Parliament and presuming to turn Canada in that direction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments in regard to the Hon. Member's speech? There are no questions or comments. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is as follows: Mr. Stevens, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-15—

Mr. Caccia: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

Mr. Caccia: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) seeking the floor on a point of order?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I submit that from the moment you began to read the motion, that terminated the issue and you were calling the question. At that time it was too late for my friend opposite to rise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that I did not see the Hon. Member, and I have now recognized the Hon. Member for Davenport.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your very thoughtful intervention. I deplore the intervention of the Hon. Member opposite who thinks that with a cheap intervention of that kind he can cut off debate on such an important measure. Where does he think he is, at the fish market? This is the Parliament of Canada. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate you for making that ruling because there are many Members on our side of the House who consider this Bill to be a very important one.

Mr. Thacker: On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Would the Hon. Member please be seated.

Mr. Caccia: The Hon. Member should sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I did not recognize the Hon. Member because I did not see him. I have now seen him and have recognized him for further debate in the House on Bill C-15. The Hon. Member for Davenport has the floor.

Mr. Caccia: I thank you for your courtesy, Mr. Speaker. I have followed the debate thus far with great interest. As we all know, this is perhaps the most important Bill to be put before the House before the Christmas recess. The Bill will attract the attention of Canadians in every region from coast to coast because of its far-reaching and long-term implications.

I listened yesterday to the intervention of the Minister who is sponsoring this Bill. Quite frankly, I admit that I was startled by some of his statements. As reported at page 1090 of Hansard, he said the following:

> —what we are saying is that with respect to new investment, as most of the Members realize from the kits we distributed, there will be no review other than in a very narrow sector.

Will it be to the benefit of Canadians to have no review other than in a very narrow sector? For some years we have had the benefit of the FIRA process which has thoroughly taken into account the desirability of acting in the interests of Canadians. This has been done in a way which has steered foreign investment in a manner that would be beneficial to our own long-term interests. Negotiations took place with FIRA and foreign investors in order to achieve the highest possible benefits for Canadians.

In making his statement evidently the Minister is giving up a very valuable and important review process which has served us well. In that sense he is abdicating an important role on the part of the Government of Canada on behalf of all Canadians.

The Bill as presented to us will not only have a very limited review in a narrow sector, but it will give the Minister total discretionary powers. It means that he will be the sole emperor who decides whether or not certain types of investment will be admitted into Canada. Therefore he will not have the benefit of consulting with Cabinet or his own caucus. He will make his decision in isolation without perhaps taking into account the interests of the minister of industry, trade and commerce or other Ministers who have regional concerns and may want to have a say in the nature, direction and timing of certain investments.

Also in yesterday's intervention he indicated that if the Minister had not made up his mind after 75 days, a particular application would be deemed to have been approved. I find that very difficult to believe; however I have read it in the Bill. It is in Clause 22(3). I see the Hon. Member leaving. If he would stay in his seat, he would learn something. The net effect of Clause 22(3) will be that the Minister may use it when he does not want to make an unfavourable decision; he could let the time period lapse and the matter would be resolved that way. Is that a sensible and responsible way to govern and to protect the interests of Canadian industries or Canadian small businesses? They may be affected by the lapsing provision in the Bill.

I also looked in the Bill to find any reference to Canadian interests because, as was indicated in Clause 2, its purpose is to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians. Once one goes beyond Clause 2, where does one find a reference to Canadians in the Bill? The Bill is some 30 or 40 pages long. The only place I could find a reference to Canadians was under the duties of the Minister in Clause 5(b). The rest of the Bill makes reference to anything other than Canadian interests.

What is this Bill intended to do? If one looks at it in its totality, one cannot help but conclude, regretfully, that the Bill was conceived in isolation. It has been put forward without the benefit of an over-all industrial strategy. There is no provision to enhance research and development in Canada in order to enhance the capacity of our industry to expand, develop new products and, therefore, new markets and the creation of jobs.

There is no provision for the protection of our cultural identity and cultural industry for those Canadians who make their living in cultural activities in this country. This Bill could have very serious repercussions on our cultural communities and industries. They are struggling to survive against very difficult odds caused by nations that have much larger markets and, therefore, greater capacity to be competitive.

The Bill has no provision to offset a high deficit, into the billions, in the trade of technology-intensive products. It does not make provision for the development of high-tech industries and the protection of fledgling new industries emerging in Canada. Their opportunities may be squeezed considerably or wiped out if a Bill of this nature becomes law without any consideration for the interest of this new high technology industry. In total, that industry is doing badly when we look at the trade figures and the deficit that we have accumulated year over year.

I have gone through this Bill with a fine-toothed comb on a couple of occasions. Another matter that I find surprising is that there is no provision to trigger Canadian savings into Canadian investment. We have a high percentage of savings in our economy because Canadians are thrifty. The savings do not find their way into the type of investment in Canada that this Bill wants to achieve. Where are the provisions to trigger Canadian savings in this Bill which purports in Clause 2 to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians? If that is to be part of the purpose of the Bill, there should be an arsenal of initiatives to give momentum to our own potential rather than develop an imbalanced kind of approach oriented toward attracting capital and initiatives from outside our borders.

I am puzzled because there is no provision for tax incentives for Canadians to invest in Canada.

Mr. Blenkarn: Of course not.

Mr. Caccia: You would expect there to be tax incentives. If the Hon. Member feels I am wrong in that, he can correct me at the end of my intervention and tell me which clause provides tax incentives.

Another puzzling aspect is that the Bill is put forward in isolation as to the future of our Crown corporations and their role in an investment strategy for Canada. What will be the role of existing Crown corporations? They are surrounded by uncertainty because of initiatives taken by the same Minister. If he moves ahead with an investment policy for Canada, he will have to indicate what is to be the role of Crown agencies that are owned on behalf of the Canadian people.

Debate on this Bill may not seem to be the proper place for a statement on the environment, but I was hoping that in his speech or in the press releases the Minister would have given an indication as to the environmental guidelines to be followed in connection with the signals going out from this ill-conceived Bill. There could have been some kind of warning or signal to foreign industrial investors that this Bill does not mean open season on the environment. That could be concluded by some foreign investors if they look at the abysmal performance of this Government with regard to the environment.

Members will recall the statements made last July and August by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as to what he would do with regard to acid rain. Our Prime Minister met with the President of the United States and there has been no action on acid rain. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) met with his counterpart and again there has been no action. One could say the same for the present Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier).

I submit I am within the terms of reference of this debate when I state that the Government proceeded with a number of cuts which indicates to potential industrial investors that the environment is becoming a second or third consideration in Canada. Otherwise this Government would not have cut the strength of the Canadian Wildlife Service or the National Research Council's environment program. Also it would not have cut a number of research and development initiatives that have to do with renewable resources. Experience has shown that foreign-controlled branch plants in Canada have been characterized by low levels of research and development, limitations on the ability of the branch plants to export and the fact that branch plants as a rule have short and inefficient production runs.

Many branch plants rely too much on imported technology. This has resulted in a lack of capacity in Canada for the kind of innovation which is an important prerequisite to developing products capable of meeting tough competition both world-wide and at home. These are probably the main reasons, coupled with the fact that, by and large, Canadians want control over their industrial and economic destiny, which led the Liberal Government to introduce the Foreign Investment Review Agency. It was a good measure, one that earned a lot of respect on the part of many Canadians.

What I do find disturbing about the Bill that is before us today is that it does not take into account the main concerns that led to the creation of FIRA in the past. It does not take into account that foreign ownership in technologically advanced industries may one day leave Canadians without participation in the most important growth sectors of our economy. The Bill is silent on that matter. That means that we may have very little, if any, participation in future investments in the advanced industries that may be launched and developed in our country.

The Bill does not take into account that a high level of foreign ownership may one day lead to Canada's future being decided behind the closed doors of corporate boardrooms outside of Canada. Is that what we want to have?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: Hon. Members over there are moaning and groaning. Perhaps they want to participate in this debate and give us the benefit of their answers to these questions.

Mr. Kempling: Read the Bill.

Mr. Caccia: I have read the Bill. That is why I am raising these questions.

Mr. Blenkarn: Read it.

Mr. Caccia: I am glad to hear these interjections because it tells me that it hurts. Somehow Hon. Members over there do not like to hear what I am saying and that means that some of their sensitivities are being awakened to the reality of fact.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Bill does not take into account that Canadians have, over the development of our nation, reached the point where they do really want to have control over their destiny. Canadians no longer wish to be owned by outside interests. This Bill really turns the clock back rather than moving us forward to a more improved position vis-à-vis our own economy. Certainly Canadians do not want to see the development of the country left in the hands of one Minister who will decide when, where and how these investments will be allowed into the country.

This Bill provides no guarantee whatsoever for the destinies of individual workers and their families. It does not protect the livelihood of a worker who may have been employed by a branch plant for 10 or 20 years. We have experienced in Toronto on several occasions a situation in which one day a worker finds that his branch plant is closed because of a decision—

An Hon. Member: So what?

Mr. Caccia: So what? Who said so what? I would like to know who said that. That means that there has been a tragedy in the life of a family. It is tragic to lose one's job all of a sudden because somehow, somewhere, in a boardroom across the ocean, a decision was made to close down and one is left without a job. What does one do then? This Bill is silent on this most important social and economic consideration.

I really hope that the Minister will address himself to these shortcomings when the Bill eventually reaches committee stage. There is no answer to the question of what happens to the Canadian worker when a foreign owner decides that Canada's markets have dried up or perhaps that the economy is contracting and it is better to go to another country where the grass is greener.

All of this is in sharp contrast with the promise made by this Government to create jobs. The open-door policy for foreign investors that the Government is announcing will lead to the creation of new business ventures, but will it create jobs? This is the basic question that we would like to have answered. Foreign investment does not necessarily mean the creation of jobs.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling me that my time is up. I thank you for your consideration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I have a question. The Hon. Member was a Minister in the last Government and, of course, would have spent a great deal of time in Cabinet discussing foreign takeover problems. Perhaps he would be able to give me the answer to a question that I should have given to Sudha Karayi from my riding, someone who had an opportunity to become the chief Canadian technical person in a new company owned by LUXTEC Corporation of Massachusetts. LUXTEC was supposed to come to Canada—and perhaps we can get them to come now because of this Act—to do some high technology work in fibre optics. When Mr. Karayi sent the foreign investment review application to LUXTEC, it filled it out but got the application forms back from the agency with a request for more information. Mr. Kloots of that company told Mr. Karayi that, under the circumstances and because of the complications, under no circumstances would they even proceed to look at coming to Canada with fibre optics and high-tech.

If we did not have this statute, I was wondering what the Hon. Member would tell my constituent who had the opportunity to develop this product and work in Canada? Would he tell him that it is too bad and he should stay unemployed?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, it is a rather rhetorical question. The Hon. Member knows better than that. Perhaps I should direct him to the guiding principle of FIRA which he knows very well by now, having been in Parliament on several occasions. Under that principle an application would be approved if it were to be in the Canadian interest. That means that it would be approved if it is one that enhances and strengthens already existing industries or does not damage them in any way, shape or form. That is not a bad guideline, I would submit. Evidently, if the specific application for fibre optics manufacturing in Canada was not proceeded with, there must have been some good reasons regarding jobs already existing in Canada.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). In the last two years of FIRA's operation, 95 per cent to 98 per cent of all applications were approved. Yet less than one-half of those foreign takeovers that were approved tended to increase investment or provide new jobs. Could I ask the Hon. Member, who was a member of the Cabinet of the previous administration, what steps he took to change that so that there were some guarantees on a much greater percentage of the foreign takeovers?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, to be questioned by Conservative Members for having gone too far and to be questioned by Members of the NDP for not having gone far enough tells me that we were on the right track, the middle-one.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) will know that it costs the Government $6,000 on average to process a FIRA application, but he may not know that it costs the ordinary private applicant somewhere aound $20,000 for legal fees, briefs, accounting statements, undertakings and the like. Indeed, at least one former Member of this House once had his entire law practice financed on foreign investment application. That was fine stuff. I was wondering if that might not be the reason why this fibre optics application was thrown away. Perhaps the applicant said: "I'm not going to bother coming to Canada with new jobs and new technology. I will not come to Canada if they are going to make me go through all that hoop-la. I might as well go to Brazil or a dozen other places in the world where they want investment and jobs". That is the kind of thing we are looking for. What is his comment with respect to new jobs for Canadians?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I am flattered by the persistence of the Hon. Member. He seems to be totally blind to the concern which I expressed at the end of my speech about protecting Canadian businesses and Canadian jobs. Evidently, the Hon. Member feels that an expenditure of $6,000 for an application is too much trouble if it ensures that the application will be screened, modified, or even rejected in the event that it affects the jobs of Canadians and the businesses of Canadians.

If the Hon. Member does not already know, I can assure him that Canada is seen as a highly-coveted country by investors abroad. Those who made applications which coincided with the interests of Canada in the long term, with the interests of the workers who are employed here, and with the interests of businesses and industries which were already active, are doing well for themselves as well as for Canada.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question based on his presence in the former Cabinet. With respect to foreign investment in Canada, was there an investigation undertaken of the Iron Ore Company of Canada with respect to its recent shutting down of its iron mining and processing activities because its parent company in the United States decided that it would rather invest in Brazil than continue its activities in Canada? Was there an investigation undertaken on those matters?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is expecting a degree of memory capacity on my part which I do not possess.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague from Davenport (Mr. Caccia). Is it not true that the experience in Canada for the past decades has been that foreign corporations operating here have contributed positively to our economy and that for several generations Canadians working for foreign corporations have been able to raise their children, send them to university, which would have been impossible without those companies in their community? This is my first question.

I would also like to make a comment or give him some information. A foreign corporation has been negotiating with a company in my constituency in order to purchase it. If no foreign owner can be found, the company will close down, since nobody in Canada has the expertise and capital to overhaul that factory now. In his very impassioned pleas for economic nationalism, the Hon. Member seems to forget that there is a very positive aspect to the purchase of Canadian businesses by foreigners who will abide by our regulations and who will be good corporate citizens.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I will answer the second part of the question because it is the one which I understand and with which I almost agree.

[English]

It is evident that the situation which has been described by the Hon. Member reflects the main principles that brought about the establishment of FIRA. FIRA was put in place to ensure that the interests of the community would be protected, that investment would not create chaos or disruptions in other Canadian communities, and that it would ensure that the potential growth of new industries which were in Canada would not be endangered by subsequent investment. Therefore, if the Hon. Member is in favour of investment which takes into account long-term Canadian interests, then we are saying the same thing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. The Minister of Communications.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to certain aspects of the legislation respecting investment in Canada, especially those dealing with Canada's cultural heritage and national identity.

We all know, but it is perhaps good to refresh our memories, that new methods being used by the media—including cablevision, pay-television, video-cassettes, personal computers—and by the cultural sector are becoming a focus for industrial, cultural and broadcasting policies. As countries recognize the important economic role of communications in the media and the arts, they have developed increasingly competitive industrial policies in those sectors. There is a growing world demand for cultural products and for new means of communication. This will result, and has already resulted, in an expanding international market for Canadian cultural products and opportunities for Canadians to compete for an increasing share of foreign revenue.

The cultural industries and the performing arts sector can therefore provide Canada with unique opportunities for economic renewal and future economic stability, as expressed in job creation and even trade. We must not forget that the cultural sector of our economy is one of the best ways to address the employment problem, since 60 per cent of each dollar generated is directed towards employment, compared with 20 cents in primary industries.

I believe that increased foreign investment would help us take advantage of and expand these opportunities. However, I also believe there is another dimension to foreign investment in Canada's cultural economy. Whether it is reflected in our cultural heritage, in music, films, art or the theater, it is a sector that is a central part of our own national identity. The ability to create, to express and to interpret artistic and social values is, I believe, just as important a measure of a country's viability. Canada has the advantage of having reached a point in its development where it has several ways of ensuring that this country will be strong both economically and culturally. Investment Canada is an example of this Government's commitment to creating employment and a free and strong industry, while at the same time ensuring that Canada's unique cultural identity will be enhanced.

In the past, the lack of directives and policies in the Foreign Investment Review Act to deal with cultural activities had created a climate of confusion and a lack of confidence that was most undesirable. I believe the Government has a responsibility to explain its policies and objectives in this sector, so that foreign investors will understand what Canada as a country hopes to accomplish in the cultural sphere.

That is why the proposed legislation provides that foreign investment in the cultural sector is to receive special attention and consideration. These guidelines would therefore help foreign investors to take advantage of opportunities in the Canadian cultural sector, while recognizing the fact that it is essential for us to preserve and develop our Canadian cultural identity.

Because of the impact of consumption and of the earning power of Canadian cultural products such as films, TV programs, recordings and editing on the cultural and social development of Canada, the profitability of Canada's cultural industries is a determining factor when reviewing proposed foreign investments in Canada. Both our culture and our economy are important sectors.

Film, video, recording and production industries now contribute $5 billion annually to the Canadian economy. In addition, they indirectly account for $4 to $5 billion in the related sectors of marketing and radio-TV broadcasting. A significant share of that economic activity comes from foreign investment firms and the distribution of foreign products on the domestic market. However, we note that the best opportunities with respect to employment and economic growth in sectors of cultural activities are offered by Canadian businesses. Apparently, that is due to the nature of the products distributed.

On the other hand, the economic activity stemming from films, recording and production is linked with copyright ownership. Indeed, if copyrights are foreign-owned, the revenues generated on the Canadian market will leave the country and create jobs abroad.

Thanks to the cultural intitiatives taken by the government in recent years—regulations on the Canadian contents of programming, the activities of the Canadian Film Development Corporation, known as Telefilm Canada, the assistance program for Canadian production development, the deduction program for film and video capital cost depreciation, and the postal grants program—Canadian cultural industries have been through a period of rapid development and growth these past few years.

That situation made it possible for Canada's cultural industries to explore new avenues so as to ensure economic growth and job creation to meet the ever increasing demand for our cultural products in an environment where new communication technologies are the last word.

Movie and record production has grown substantially thanks to new technological developments in films video digital recording and software for personal use. On the other hand, recreational medias such as television, AM and FM radio, pay TV, videocassettes and VCRs have increased the demand for programming. According to recent studies in the United States, by 1988, there will be a $5 billion market for video products alone, in North America. In addition, electronic publication and the use of computers for this purpose create new markets and new opportunities for the publishing industry.

Per capita, Canadians are the largest consumers of cultural products worldwide. Because of this great demand and of the proximity of the United States, the Canadian market will inevitably be invaded by foreign interests as development opportunities occur.

Direct investment in the Canadian cultural industry by foreign interests can bring in certain benefits if these investments contribute to the production and distribution of Canadian cultural products and if there are more joint ventures by Canadian and foreign companies to this end. During the next decade, this investment will be vitally important for Canadians if they want to take advantage of the market which now belongs to foreign multinationals, especially in view of the high cost of new technology, and greater competition thus resulting in more opportunities for us in Canada.

Investment Canada will play a major role in protecting the economic development interests of Canadian cultural industries. The provisions of the Investment Canada Act which deal with business activities related to the Canadian cultural heritage or to our national identity, such as publishing or distribution of books or periodicals and the production and distribution of movies, will create a healthy climate for Canadians to develop strong cultural businesses and will guarantee access to Canadian cultural activities and products. The review activities will allow for an easier assessment on the part of Government authorities of the economic and cultural implications of a proposed commercial activity.

A clear statement of Government policy objectives for the cultural sectors involved will be given to the investor and financial assistance will be provided with due consideration being given to the intentions of applicants as concerns these policies. This will guarantee not only a review of foreign investment opportunities, but also the development by Canada of its own competitive cultural businesses to meet the needs of Canadian artists as well as our cultural objectives.

That is all, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you that this Bill protects our national identity and will allow us to protect Canada's cultural heritage while providing investments which will create jobs. That is the purpose of this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate.

[English]

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Minister. I must admit he is a very fine communicator as Minister of Communications, but I wonder when he makes statements such as the cultural heritage being a determining factor for this investment. He made a very interesting point when he said that we have the highest per capita consumption of cultural products in the world. I am wondering how the Minister defines his role as it relates to maintaining the cultural heritage and the outlets for that cultural heritage which, in a lot of cases in rural and remote areas of Canada, are delivered through the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I have been wondering since yesterday afternoon about the function of the Minister as it relates to maintaining that presence in Canada. I was particularly interested in that question because it was announced yesterday that the only radio station in my riding will be closed.

I am wondering what the Minister's role would be under the Broadcasting Act, or what he perceives it to be, as it relates to decisions made by the CBC in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I would first assure the Hon. Member that if the previous Government in 1968 had not cut $71 million from the CBC's funding, there might now be a station in his constituency. I will add that for some years now, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—and as a previous majority government Member, you were certainly aware of the fact that the CBC was called upon to provide ever increasing services, to use or rather to develop new slots, to constantly enter into new fields—could not do all those things without the Government at the same time accepting the corporation's goals, without the Government providing it with the funds needed to carry out its new roles or goals.

Well, there were discussions between the corporation's president, its former president, Mr. Johnson, and the Government of the day. There was an agreement providing that the CBC would get a 5 per cent annual funding increase in actual dollars, so it could take up the new responsibilities assigned to it both by Parliament and Government. Well, the ink on that agreement had barely dried when the Government took away with one hand what it had given with the other, and then the Government never got around to respecting the agreement it had itself suggested to the corporation. But it never asked the corporation to curtail its services. Worse still, as I said earlier, in 1978 the CBC suffered a $71 million cut. Reviewing the corporation's situation over the past seven or eight years, we find that the cuts inflicted on the corporation in actual dollars were of the order of $300 million, without the previous Government ever providing the corporation with the means to have the level of administration expected by Parliament.

Indeed, the current president himself was the first to recognize that the corporation's administrative and financial image was not what it ought to be. What this Government did was to require the CBC to review its administrative procedures, trim down its administrative set-up so that the taxpayers' money be properly used for the purposes intended, namely creativity, productivity and production.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member need not fear for the CBC's future. With this Government, and ever since the Bennett administration under which the original Act was passed, and the Diefenbaker era when a radio and television agency was established separate from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and the days when former Prime Minister Clark appointed the Applebaum-Hébert Commission, and now with Mr. Mulroney, I can assure you that the CBC has a Government that is sensitive to its role and needs.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, this is very interesting. I mentioned that the Minister is a fairly good communicator. He is a fairly good communicator on his side. He just mentioned that the former Government had imposed restrictions on the CBC's increased mandate. I read in today's paper that this Minister says there will be even more spending on the French network. This is imposing again a mandate on the CBC after cutting it as extensively as the Government has done.

I asked the Minister a simple question. He said that the previous Government cut back on the CBC. Then he said that if it had not cut back on the CBC years ago, maybe I would have my radio station. Let me remind him that it was from the cut of this Government that I lost my radio station.

My question to him is quite simple. The former Minister of Communications would be acting if I had brought up in the House of Commons that I had lost the only radio station in my riding. What is the Minister's function under the Broadcasting Act? Is there an appeal procedure to the Minister, or do we have to accept the word of Mr. Juneau, who claims that it was on instruction from the Minister of Communication and this Government that he had to make these drastic moves with his chain saw? What is the appeal procedure? Do the people of Canada have any appeal to this Minister? Does he have any function under the Broadcasting Act as it relates to these cuts and possibly getting some of them overturned or reversed?

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, with his experience of Parliament which greatly exceeds mine, the Hon. Member will know that the CBC's annual report has already been tabled in this House, and that the Standing Committee on Communications has every chance of hearing the Corporation's officials if it so wishes. But as the Hon. Member is aware, it is not within my responsibilities to direct the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation concerning its day-to-day operations, in areas of its own responsibility.

I would also like to tell him that when I was in Montreal, I saw something which all French-speaking citizens inside and outside Quebec have already realized over a number of years, and that is the fact that among French-speaking viewers there is a tendency to switch from certain programs produced by both private or public television networks, to English-speaking or American TV stations.

That fact is evidenced by all the statistics, and it belongs—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Minister, but the period provided for questions and comments is ended.

[English]

Is there unanimous consent to let the Minister continue? I hear a no. I am sorry. Order, please. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure for me to have the opportunity to speak in support of Bill C-15, which is the Bill with regard to investment in Canada, otherwise known as Investment Canada. It is a pleasure to speak because this is really the second part of the Government's program for economic recovery in the country. I believe we should all keep that fact in mind at all times. We should all remember why we were elected and sent here. It was mainly for the purpose of getting the country going again and producing some jobs. This particular Bill is aimed at just that.

Traditionally, since World War II the program which governments have followed to get the economy moving again in times of economic recession has been one of government spending to create jobs. Unfortunately, whether we agree or disagree with government spending, that particular option has been foreclosed to this Government and any government acting in the country at the present time. The reason it is foreclosed is that every time anyone suggests that the Government should start spending again we are immediately met with a great howl in the country asking, "What about the deficit?" That deficit really ties the hands of the Government and limits the options available to it.

Members of the Opposition have commented on the deficit regularly since the beginning of this session. They have indicated that the Government should ignore the deficit and deal with the question of jobs. They have been suggesting that the way to do that is through spending and more spending. That is not, of course, the way they attacked the problem during the election campaign. During the election campaign all Parties recognized that there was a problem with the deficit which had to be addressed first.

The Government has approached economic recovery in the country with the deficit as its number one priority. That was in the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) which was announced in the House early in November. The economic statement dealt with trying to limit growth of the deficit to allow us to put our own financial house in order and to restore investor and consumer confidence in the country.

The second part of the economic strategy, Mr. Speaker, is to encourage the growth of capital investment in the country once confidence is restored. Of course, that is what this Bill is all about. It is simply to encourage the growth of capital and capital investment in Canada because that creates jobs. I have not heard any members of the Opposition who criticize this Bill deny that investing capital does not create jobs.

Ideally, we would all like to see that capital limited strictly to Canadian capital but we realize that historically that has not been the case and that that is virtually impossible in this country. Historically, it has taken capital from abroad to develop and build the country.

Unfortunately, as far as risk-taking is concerned, and the investment in risk capital, Canadians are rather timid and have not been prepared to take the risks necessary to create that pool of capital to create those jobs. That was very obvious during the last two or three years when we have been in the throes of this economic recession. We have not had enough Canadian capital to produce the jobs to pull us up by our bootstraps and get Canadians back to work. Therefore, the Government has been faced with an effort to try to stimulate that investment from somewhere other than Canada.

What approach should the Government take? A number of Members in the House and many people in the country believe that the course we should be taking is an unrestricted course of foreign investment. They believe that the Government should take off all the restrictions and allow all types of foreign investment into this country without review.

On the other hand, there are many in the House who have great concerns about unrestricted foreign investment. These concerns which Hon. Members in the Opposition have been raising include concerns such as plant closures, no exports by foreign owned companies, and lack of research and development by foreign owned companies. I believe that these are all reasonable concerns, but in facing the reality of today and the problem of trying to build investment and create jobs, the Government has had to try to find a way to encourage investment in this country which is not taking place through Canadian themselves.

Therefore, I believe that this Bill represents a compromise, an acceptable compromise for those of us who are Canadian economic nationalists. It is a compromise which will allow further investment capital into this country and will allow that investment capital to create the jobs that 1,500,000 Canadians very badly need.

This does not represent an entire dismantling or elimination of the previous legislation but, in fact, it is a modification of the previous legislation. It is interesting to note that the tests by which foreign investment is to be gauged, in this Bill remain virtually the same as they were in the present Act. In fact, there have been two additional tests added. Those are the tests that concern cultural policy and international competitiveness. In that respect, the Bill modifies the present law and, in some respects, actually strengthens the review process.

It is also interesting to compare the effect the proposed legislation would have on the applications of foreign investors that were reviewed under the present legislation in 1983 to what is now the law, particularly with respect to the area of direct acquisition of Canadian assets by foreign investors, which concerns most people. According to the proposed legislation, 91 per cent of the total asset values that were reviewed under the present legislation in 1983 will continue to be reviewed under the proposed legislation. That is not a great modification but one which should encourage more capital to come into this country and thereby create more jobs.

That is part two of the Government's program for economic recovery. It is only the second part of other parts yet to come. One of those parts which I, other Members and most Canadians are looking forward to is the budget that is proposed for next year.

I believe that as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) approaches the development of that budget he should look to three other areas to help us on the road to Canadian economic recovery. The first area concerns the question that was quite properly raised by the Opposition about attracting and encouraging Canadian investment. I believe that we certainly should be looking at some measures not only to attract capital from abroad but also to attract some more Canadian capital into the risk investment area. I believe this can be done through some further tax incentives. We already have tax incentives such as the dividend tax credit, the tax incentives on housing, the tax incentives for the film industry, oil and gas and research and development. Obviously that has not been enough. All of those incentives so far have not been able to attract enough Canadian risk capital to put 1.5 million unemployed people back to work. In developing his budget, the Minister of Finance should consider that area to see what other incentives can be created for Canadians to invest in their country.

One such area, I would suggest to him, is investment in rental apartment buildings and rental apartment development. Prior to the Benson Budget in 1970, there were some tax incentives in our laws that encouraged people to own and build rental apartments. We must put that sort of incentive back into our Income Tax Act so that we can encourage the building of badly needed rental units rather than discourage them as is the case with the present law.

The second area which I believe the Minister should address is the whole question of foreign trade. That is the key to long-term viability, not only of foreign investment in this country but also of domestic investment. During the last few months I toured two industrial plants in my riding. Both of these plants are subsidiaries of multinational foreign companies. One company is IBM. The IBM plant in my riding is the largest IBM facility in this country. The other is Ortho Pharmaceutical, which is a subsidiary of the Johnson and Johnson organization. Each of them employs many thousands of people in my riding. Each of them has a global product mandate and each of them carries on a great deal of research and development in this country. In fact, the IBM plant in my riding, which employs approximately 8,000 people, has a research lab which will employ approximately 1,000 people by the beginning of next year. Two years ago it employed 200 people and it has been growing by leaps and bounds. That is a subsidiary of a multinational company. That is the sort of thing we can do in Canada with foreign investment.

The people at IBM and the people at Ortho Pharmaceutical tell me that what we should be doing is trying to encourage world product mandates for all subsidiaries of multinational companies in Canada. They tell me it is essential for the foreign subsidiaries and they tell me that building and developing the foreign market is also essential for Canadian companies because, as we all know, Canada is a signatory to the GATT agreements. Under those agreements, the substantial tariff barriers that we once had are falling. One of these days very soon there will hardly be a tariff barrier here. It is not just a concern that foreign investors may pick up their assets and go home, it is also a concern that Canadian investors and Canadian companies will not be able to compete domestically unless they start to compete in the foreign market. What we should have is something in the forthcoming budget to encourage the development of foreign trade, not only by foreign investors but also by Canadian investors, and to encourage at the same time the concept of world product mandates.

The third area that I believe should be brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance is the whole question of consumer demand. It is fine to create a pool of investment capital. We need more of it and we know that investment capital will create jobs, but it is not going to create jobs and no one is going to invest unless consumers spend. Somehow we have to get consumers to spend. We know that we will be able to provide a little bit more of that with some of the pension improvements that have been promised in the Speech from the Throne that are coming soon. I believe we should also be approaching this problem from the same point of view that the United States has approached it. The Americans cut personal income taxes a few years ago, which put more purchasing power into the hands of the public. It allowed Americans to spend more and buy more of the products and the services produced in their country. As a result, manufacturers created more investment and put people back to work. That is the way we can help stimulate the economy of Canada. That is the way we can get people back to work again.

In summation, this Bill, as I have indicated, is the second step in a program of government economic recovery. There will be more, and all of them, including this Bill, will put Canadians back to work again and get Canada moving.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments?

The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker. I should like to direct a question to the Hon. Member. He said that the bill will provide employment for Canadians but I would like to know at what cost? How will the amendments to the legislation provide jobs for Canadians? I will give you an example. Last evening, on the television program Le Point, a business leader said he was pleased to see that the Prime Minister has opened the door to American financiers but that in 50 years from now Canada will have become the 51st American state. It may be interesting for businessmen, but not for Canadians who need to sure that the America corporations purchasing Canadian companies will not close them down as they have done in the past when the economy slows down. Canadian businesses could become warehouses responsible for the American products. Can the Hon. Member assure us that the bill will give real protection to Canadian workers?

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member had been listening when I was speaking because I think he would have heard the answer to his question. A few years ago—a long time ago in this country—foreign investment would move in because we may have had some lower wage rates and we had tariff barriers to protect that investment. The barriers protected those companies so they could sell their products in the Canadian market alone. Unfortunately, that type of a policy has become obsolete. Those tariff barriers are coming down and have been coming down for a number of years. Very shortly they will virtually disappear.

Anyone coming to this country from abroad and looking for an investment opportunity is not going to come to look at the Canadian market alone. There is just not enough of a market here and there is no protection. When an American company or any other foreign company—and I might say we should not be just restricting this to American investors, we have many investors from Asia who are coming here at the moment—comes to this country, it is not only because it is looking at the Canadian market but because it is considering the advantages of having a company here that will allow it to compete in a broader market, particularly the American market. I have had discussions with the Ministry of Industry and Trade in the Province of Ontario. One of its programs is geared to bringing foreign investors to Canada. This Ministry tells me that it is achieving its greatest success in attracting foreign investors from Asia. The reason is that Asians can build plants here, develop and manufacture a product, and sell that product not only in Canada but in the United States without having to worry about the non-tariff barriers and the quota system which the United States has for products manufactured in Asia. The Americans do not have those same non-tariff barriers and quotas for products manufactured in Canada. Therefore, it is very attractive for that kind of foreign investment to come to Canada. That is the reason foreign investors come here. They are not coming here anymore to produce solely for the Canadian market because of our great tariff barriers, which may contract and dry up the market. They are coming here to produce for the world market, and that is the only way they will be attracted to this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on a supplementary question.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's remarks confirm that if we want not only the Americans to come here, but also Canada to do business with all the other countries, Canada must be different from the United States, for there are countries in the world which would rather do business with Canada than with the United States.

However, if Canada should become the 51st State of the Union, as the Prime Minister seems to wish, these countries will seek other markets. I suggest, therefore, that the Hon. Member's remarks confirm the fact that the Bill not only does not protect Canadians workers' jobs, but eliminates the factor which some countries found attrative in Canada, namely, it being different from the United States. And now a short question. If you have ever taken part—as a businessman, you have certainly taken part in negotiations or attended conventions—how is it that the Canadian side is always anxious to make concessions or amend legislation? The Prime Minister goes down on his knees before representatives of American financial circles and says: "Canada belongs to you", although he has no assurance that the Americans will change their protectionist policy with regard to Canadian goods. It seems to me that in any negotiation we should keep some sort of trump in our hand.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would not try to misrepresent what is taking place here. Certainly the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has not gone to the United States to suggest that we become the fifty-first State of the United States. In fact, he went to the United States and said, "We welcome your investment into Canada" in order to create jobs and put 1.5 million Canadians back to work again. Certainly that is a protection for Canadians and for Canadian workers. It is not protection to continue the same course as the Hon. Member and his former Government followed, a course which did not attract any capital to the country, a course which did not create any indigenous Canadian capital, a course which did not create any jobs and therefore left us with 1.5 million people unemployed.

This Bill or this approach will attract some new capital that will create jobs. In that way it will put Canadians back to work and protect them much better than the former Government protected them in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made specific reference to capital investment creating jobs. If he had a plant in his riding with 100 employees and assets under $5 million which was acquired by an American or European company, what guarantee would there be that that investment in itself would create any new jobs in that plant? What guarantee is there that that would occur?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any guarantee that an investment of that sort will create jobs. I must say that I have many businesses of that size in my riding. I have businesses ranging from the one-persons operation up to operations with many thousands of employees.

Of course, the question is: What would be the purpose of a foreign investor buying the variety of company which the Hon. Member suggested? Given the current economic climate, not only in this country but in the world, and given the current state of economic relations, particularly with respect to tariff barriers, no one from a foreign company will invest in this country at all, either by way of investment in a new business or by acquisition, unless there is some benefit to the company. Surely the benefit is to create a larger profit for the company. One cannot create a profit without increased sales. The way to increase sales is to increase business. Generally, by and large, increase in the size of business increases employment.

There is no guarantee that Canadians who invest in particular companies or try to establish their own businesses will create any real benefit. They may disappear within a few weeks. As a business person and as a lawyer, I have seen many of that variety in my time as well. There is no guarantee of anything in the world. We have to create a climate which will stimulate business so that they can invest and create jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now expired. Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), I should like to recognize the Government House Leader.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise at this point in time to announce the business of the House for tomorrow. We will start the day with Bill C-10, an Act relating to tax interpretation; followed by Bill C-14, respecting foreign tribunals; followed by Bill C-15, the Bill we have been debating today.

As a result of consultations with opposition House Leaders, it is my understanding that we will deal with Bill C-10 and Bill C-14 in all stages including third reading tomorrow. We expect to make progress and then return to Bill C-15 and possibly even finish with it.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak today on what has to be one of the biggest snow jobs perpetuated in the last number of years. They say that Bill C-15 is "an Act respecting investment in Canada" and that its short title is Investment Canada Act. I suspect more appropriate titles would be: sell-out Canada act, warehouse Canada act, fifty-first state Canada act, or perhaps even harlot Canada act, as a harlot does not even begin to negotiate or to bargain for a price. It is simply a giveaway situation.

The other day when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was in the United States, he was saying that Canada is now open for business. I suspect he was trying to say that Canada is now for sale, that all those folks could now come in, that the floodgates have been opened once again, that we want to sell off more of our resources and that we want to give more of our industry to foreign control.

It is important for Members of the House to recognize that in the manufacturing sector alone—and we all know that it is the critical sector of our economy in terms of jobs—52 per cent is owned and controlled by foreign interests. I ask any Member to stand in the House and say what country in the world would tolerate 52 per cent of its manufacturing sector being controlled by decisions being made in another country. The decisions made in terms of our manufacturing industry are not made in Canada. They are made in Houston, Texas, New York, London, Berne, Hamburg, Tokyo and Hong Kong. This Government says, "Shucks, that isn't enough; we have to have 60 per cent or 70 per cent foreign ownership of our critical manufacturing sector". I have heard members of the Conservative Party say that this will create jobs or job opportunities in Canada.

I come from an area of British Columbia which not many years ago had a very viable agricultural sector. There were miles, miles and miles of large tomato farms. There were processing plants, apple orchards and asparagus farms. There were hundreds and hundreds of jobs. Then they decided that they should sell off these operations to foreign buyers. They said that it would be good for the local economy to sell that agricultural sector to foreign entrepreneurs because it would encourage development in that sector. When we drive through those same valleys today, there are no tomato farms, no asparagus farms, no producing orchards, no packing plants, no processing plants. Those foreign purchasers bought the land and the plants, closed down the operations, and now import into the area from the United States and other sectors outside the central British Columbia region. It has meant that hundreds and hundreds of jobs have simply evaporated.

Just a few weeks ago one of the major employment centres in my constituency owned by a Florida firm closed down its Canadian subsidiary because it was in the best interests of the Florida-based operation. Now 450 people are collecting UI. That is part of the result of foreign control of the economy.

Today we are discussing in the House of Commons a Bill which the Government has the courage to call "Investment Canada Act".

Mr. Orlikow: Audacity.

Mr. Riis: Audacity, as my colleague says. That is probably close to the truth. While we discuss this Bill to attract more foreign investment and more foreign control of the economy, as knowledgeable parliamentarians we all know that the manufacturing sector is 51 per cent foreign owned, the rubber sector is 98 per cent foreign owned, the agricultural machinery sector is 51 per cent foreign owned, the transportation equipment sector is 92 per cent foreign owned, the electrical apparatus sector is 70 per cent foreign owned, and the chemical industry is 71 per cent foreign owned. One could go on and on identifying each and every economic sector, only to find that between 50 per cent and 99 per cent of it is owned and controlled now by foreign interests.

If this were the United States Congress and we were debating the problem which the country faces, this Chamber and the Galleries would be jam-packed. We would be hearing some of the most emotional and intense speeches as Members of Congress rose to defend industries and jobs in their communities across the United States.

The Government says it has a great idea. It feels that if it makes more decisions regarding our economy in foreign capitals, it will be in the best interests of Canada and Canadians. The logic of this Bill escapes me, as does its approach to job creation and economic development. I will state a number of reasons why.

Something this country requires more than anything else if we are to compete in international markets and develop a viable manufacturing sector is more research and development in this country. This is a peculiar situation. The Government has just introduced measures to cut back on government sponsored and government encouraged research and development through to production. What happens when a great sector of the economy is controlled by foreigners? We need only look at the data. It makes it very clear.

For example, for companies with less than 50 employees, Canadian companies spent 11.2 per cent on R and D, whereas foreign companies spent 3.3 per cent. For large companies with more than 500 employees, Canadian companies spent 8.3 per cent on R and D over sales, whereas foreign companies spent only 2 per cent.

It is perfectly clear that foreign branch plants do not spend the same amount of money on research and development as do Canadian domestic firms. It stands to reason. In a transnational operation, where is the likely place for most of the research and development to take place? In a distant branch plant or in the parent head office? Of course it will be back in the parent plant.

There is a real need for Canada to expand its market opportunities. I would ask Members who are present a simple question: Where will the initiative to expand into new and, in particular, overseas markets originate? Will it originate in the branch plant in Canada or will it flow out of the parent company in the United States, Japan, Europe or wherever? The answer is perfectly clear. The branch plant is not here because this is the base of international operations. It is to serve a domestic or regional market within Canada, not as a major launching pad for foreign operations.

It is clear that research and development is not going to take place in firms that are foreign owned and controlled. In terms of creating more jobs, it is not there in terms of this Bill. FIRA is not something that somebody dreamed up one afternoon and decided to impose on the people and industries of Canada. For years and years in this country the problems of foreign investment were well known. Report after report documented the difficulties faced by a country which has so much foreign investment and foreign control over its economy.

In 1974 it was decided to put together a mechanism so that when an outside agency wished to enter Canada, participate and invest in the Canadian economy, it would have to demonstrate that that would result in some net gain to Canada and Canadians. As a mechanism, I do not think anybody could argue with that. If a firm wanted to come to Canada from which there would be no net gain to Canadians, why would we need it here? If it can demonstrate by entering Canada with its investment that there will be a net gain in terms of research and development, job creation and economic expansion, so be it.

That is why FIRA was introduced in 1974. Time after time we in this Party criticized that it had many shortcomings, that it was too secretive, too costly for some firms because of all the red tape through which they had to dodge and weave, and that the processing of applications was unnecessarily long. There were problems associated with it, but the response was not to emasculate this process. It was not to throw it out and put up a sign that we in this country are now for sale.

Let us recognize the problems and deal with them. The members of the New Democratic Party have often called for more appropriate foreign investment in our country. We said that if Japanese auto industries were going to come into Canada, sell vehicles, make large profits and take them to Japan, they should invest in this country. We said that if they were going to take profits out of Canada, they should create jobs as a result of investment in this country, building some Canadian content into those vehicles. We have been advocating that for a long time.

Since its inception in 1974, FIRA has received thousands and thousands of applications. In the last handful of years, about 98 per cent of those applications have been approved. I wonder how many legitimate mature firms have actually considered FIRA to be a major hurdle to their plans to invest in Canada. I do not think there is much hard data to indicate that there are large numbers of firms that would have invested in Canada if they did not have to go through this little streamlining system before they could enter.

Every industrialized western nation has its own version of FIRA, including the United States. As we stand here today and debate this Investment Canada Bill, there are 21 Bills before Congress, all of which can be called protectionist Bills. They are non-tariff barriers to restrict foreign investment in the United States.

The amount of Canadian production related to foreign controlled investment in Canada amounts to about 34 per cent on an annual basis. In the United States it is not 34 percent, but 3 to 4 per cent of American production as a result of foreign controlled enterprises in that country. The U.S. has all kinds of concerns about that 3 to 4 per cent. There are all kinds of protectionist measures that it is debating today. All sorts of groups are watching this foreign involvement in their economy.

We heard in this House today the concerns of the forest industry in the United States. They are considering imposing lumber quotas or countervailing duties on Canada. We have gone through the steel industry and the copper industry in terms of their concerns about foreign imports.

In the United States, 3 to 4 per cent of its production is from foreign owned firms, whereas in Canada it is 34 per cent. Our response is to throw open the gates even more. We want more foreign involvement, more foreign investment. We in the New Democratic Party are not convinced that this is in the best interest of Canadians. This will not create the 1.5 million jobs that are required in our country today.

I want to go through some specifics in terms of FIRA. A great many myths have been perpetuated in the last while. We have looked around for a bogeyman, something on which to blame our economic woes. Instead of blaming the past Liberal Governments' ineptness in terms of developing a sound economy that reflects the realities of the 1990s, we picked out FIRA as the culprit. This is going to be changed and we are going to invite more foreign investment than any single industrialized nation in the world, more foreign investment and control than in many developed countries. The new Government says this will work, creating the necessary confidence, investment and jobs. It is a little bit like Peter Pan. Peter Pan said: "Anyone can fly if he just believes it. If you believe it strong enough and long enough, you too can fly". The Peter Pan approach is a Conservative approach to economic development.

Let us look at some of the facts regarding foreign investment in Canada. The approval rate for FIRA applications over the past two years has been between 95 per cent and 98 per cent. Less than one-half of those approved foreign takeovers intended to increase investment or provide any new jobs. Since the beginning of 1984, 16 per cent of those approved takeovers promised neither new jobs nor new investment. That is the result of FIRA: no new jobs and no new investment.

Canada has more foreign ownership and control per capita than any other industrialized nation and more than a large number of developing nations. Canada imports more duty-free finished manufacturing goods, excluding automotive goods, than the United States, Japan and the European Economic Community combined. That was indicated by a Science Council of Canada report that gives us an idea of the amount of finished goods that come into our country.

When there is a domestic Canadian firm and a foreign-owned and controlled firm, one finds that the foreign-owned and controlled firm purchases four times as many imported manufacturing goods for its operation than does the Canadian domestic firm. That is simply because that is where its connections are. They go back to their colleagues in the United States, Japan, Europe or southeast Asia. Canadian firms look to Canadian colleagues to find out where they can obtain parts and supplies for their operations. In other words, they have some sense of obligation, if you like, to source their goods and supplies from Canadian suppliers. Foreign firms have not demonstrated that in the past.

We in the New Democratic Party have faith in Canadians. We believe that Canadians ought to be given some priority.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: We believe that Canadians now have the highest level of savings that has ever been experienced in Canadian history.

An Hon. Member: And the highest level of unemployment.

Mr. Riis: That is right. The observer says that we have the highest level of unemployment. We feel that the way to get Canadians back to work is to provide jobs in Canadian firms using Canadian money.

We have faith in Canadians. For example, we would like to look at RRSP money and find ways to generate that money into new investments. We would like to find a whole set of new mechanisms to provide Canadian savers with an opportunity to invest in Canadian entrepreneurial enterprises.

Government Members opposite say that Canadians will not solve our problems for us, we have to look to Hong Kong, Japan, Texas, the United Kingdom and Germany. We would like to look to those countries as well and we welcome their investment, but we have faith in Canadians. We believe that Canadian men and women can get our economy back on track. We have the knowledge, the expertise, the training, the capital and the entrepreneurial spirit. What we need now is a government that has faith in the people of the country and stops looking to some foreign country for the answer. We need a government that says to the Canadian people: "We have faith in you and we are going to provide the mechanisms to mobilize Canadian capital and not foreign capital to create jobs for Canadian citizens".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). His thinking is much analogous to that of a pocket gopher. He believes that if one piles the dirt high enough, one can believe that the rest of the world does not exist.

Since the Hon. Member used the United States as an example many times, I would like to ask him why it was that until 1886, the predominance of capital in the U.S. was European and mostly British. It was that investment into the United States that provided the base from which Americans could develop their industrialization and the ability to stand alone. Is the Hon. Member taking the view that it does not matter whether or not capital is foreign? Where can he raise the capital that does not come from some kind of process of development? Is he simply planning to tax from nothing to create something from nothing?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) that in spite of the best intentions of most cattlemen in his part of Canada, those pocket gophers persist and stay. They stay around for a long time, and I suspect the Hon. Member had better get used to that concept because they will stay for the next few years.

To reply specifically to the Hon. Member's question, I would say that I think it is perfectly clear that capital is required to get enterprises launched and under way. There has been and still is a role for the Japanese auto industry to play, and I think I referred to that specifically in my speech. My Leader has often advocated Japanese investment in the auto industry of this country. However, if they are going to take profits back to Japan, we would like to see them create jobs in this country. We have advocated that since the very beginning of the overseas auto industry.

There has always been a place for foreign investment in a growing economy. However, my concern is that there tends to have been a shift in understanding and emphasis away from Canada to the foreign markets. It perturbs me when I hear the Prime Minister of Canada, after having such an overwhelming mandate just given to him, going to the United States on bended knees begging American investors to come into this country and saying that we are now open for investment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: I hear Hon. Members guffawing and laughing. Surely the Prime Minister is saying that Canadian enterprises are for sale to Americans more than they ever were before. When I look at the track record of what has happened in the country, I see that most of the purchases in the last number of years have not resulted in new jobs or new R and D, but have been in the form of mergers and takeovers.

Mr. Mazankowski: Seventeen billion dollars left the country. What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, $17 billion left the country. We are very concerned about that $17 billion because the former Government created a climate that made it impossible for anyone with any sense—

Mr. Mazankowski: With your help.

Mr. Riis: Our concern has always been that an investor in this country, large or small, had no idea where the country was going. Policies changed week by week, month by month. We are trying to build some sense of confidence and direction into the economy. Quite frankly, we do not need to have foreigners solve our problems for us. We do not have to go on bended knee to the United States and other countries asking for help. We in the New Democratic Party have faith in the people of Canada. We can help ourselves. We will need foreign support at times but we can do it ourselves and that is our first priority.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) what he would do under the following circumstances, a real example of what happened with a FIRA application. I know about it because my company was involved. We made contact with what I will call a northern European company from a northern European country that had some technology that we felt was usable in the Canadian market. In fact, everyone who saw the product said that it would be great, would help the environment, would help energy costs and would reduce costs in their operations. They said they would like to have it.

Representatives of the company came to Canada and we met with them here. Then representatives from our company went over there and we had meetings over there. We spent thousands of dollars between us. Then they heard about FIRA. In spite of the fact that I was a Member of Parliament and told them that more than 90 per cent of FIRA applications were passed, we could not change their mind. They said that they had spent all this money and that they knew what their technology would do. They said that it would work in the Canadian market. It was a joint venture which we were working on, but there was no way they would place an application before a bunch of bureaucrats who would make the decision as to whether or not it should go ahead. It was technology which had never been used before in Canada. It was a breakthrough. As well, negotiations had been held with respect to exporting the technology into the northern part of the United States. However, we could not under any circumstances convince that company to come to Canada. It would not come to Canada if it had to go before a government review board. On top of that, there was considerable cost involved. We had both spent several thousands of dollars on travel, engineering analysis, purchasing analysis and so forth. In spite of that, the company said that it would not put an application before a government agency.

I say to the Hon. Member that there are thousands and thousands of instances which are similar to this one that would mean jobs for Canadians. We have not got all the brains in this country. We have a lot of them. But, there is technology in other countries which we could use. What would the Hon. Member do under those circumstances?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, to answer that question one would have to look at the co-sponsor of the application. I stand on the position which I mentioned at the outset of my speech. First, I do not think that the data he suggests exists or that thousands and thousands of legitimate enterprises were scared away by the FIRA process. I would like to see evidence. I have never seen any hard evidence. All I have heard are rumours and tell-tale. If there is evidence, I would ask the Hon. Member to present it to me.

If a legitimate firm were to enter the United States, Australia or other countries, it would go through a similar kind of process. Nobody walks into a country any longer and simply invests in that country. There are virtually no countries where that kind of behaviour takes place. If Members opposite can list those countries, I would ask them to stand in their places and tell me what countries would allow entrepreneurs to walk in without going through any screening process. I challenge them to identify those countries.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) continually tries to perpetuate the fear of foreign companies investing in Canada. I want to ask him—the same Member who talks of his great faith in Canadians—what fear he has with respect to Canadians investing in the rest of the world? Why is it that he wants this nationalist attitude, which would build walls around us and prevent us from getting out in the world? I come from a province which has one of the greatest exports. It is not a tangible product. It is the technology of thei oil industry. The Province of Alberta is one of the world's great marketers of oil technology. It not only creates jobs in western Canada, but it ultimately leads to the manufacturing industries of central Canada. Why is he so frightened and fearful of a world which has a bigger market, if at the same time he claims to believe in Canadians? Why does this Member believe that Canadians cannot compete in the international world and that we must build false walls around us? Why is he so frightened of the capacity of Canadians that he would give such a horrible speech about building walls? Are Canadians of no value?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear, as I did earlier, that we need research and development to allow Canadians to expand in international markets. The Hon. Member can read my speech tomorrow. Obviously he did not hear me when I mentioned that very fact. It is important to do that. If we are going to do that, we will need more research and development. The data tells us that the foreign firms which operate in Canada do not do the same amount of research and development as do Canadian firms. As a matter of fact, Canadian firms do four times the amount of research and development compared with that of their foreign colleagues. That is the point I am trying to make. If we are going to develop overseas markets and if we are going to look at foreign opportunities, we must have more R and D through to production. We must also become much more aggressive. Branch plants, by definition, are not aggressive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, is actually the first piece of legislation introduced by this Government. Parliament, business, labour, in fact everyone has been waiting to see what this Government's trademark will be and what approach it will take to cope with our country's problems, and also what kind of legislation it is going to introduce to reflect the promises made during the election campaign.

Mr. Speaker, the first major Bill introduced by a government, any government, is always a sign of how it intends to keep its promises and meet its commitments, not only as a responsible administrator but also as a government that is prepared to meet commitments it has made to the people.

Before examining in greater detail the principles contained in this Bill, I first want to make my position perfectly clear. First of all, I believe that generally, foreign investment can make a positive contribution to economic development, job creation and the transfer of technology. Second, I also believe that in an economy like ours where we need foreign markets to sell our products or at least a substantial part of our national production, we cannot afford to close our doors entirely to investment, especially from those countries to which we sell a substantial part of our national production, which means jobs for Canadians.

Third, I believe that, generally, and in the long run, a market economy has a better chance of increasing the optimum use of available resources than a controlled economy, which always generates a bias, inconsistencies and distortions which, in the final analysis, are counterproductive.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that since the early 70's, I have always been rather impatient with nit-picking controls that tend to discourage bona fide investors from coming to this country. I am from a province that constitutes both a linguistic and a cultural minority in North American terms, and usually, the foreign investment we get speaks English. However, we have often noticed that investors from outside Canada are often more sensitive to Quebec's specific problems than investors coming from other parts of this country, unfortunately.

Hon. Members will therefore understand that I have a tendency to qualify my position on control of foreign investment, more so than many other Members in this House, even the Members sitting on your right. However, Mr. Speaker, I must say that after reading Bill C-15, I was no longer worried about this, and I may say I shall have no hesitation in voting against the passage of second reading of this Bill. My main objection to Bill C-15 is that it is a lot of window-dressing. It is a clear indication of how this Government, which makes a virtue of just about anything, intends to govern this country from now. The documentation that was provided and the scenarios around the tabling of Bill C-15 told us enough about the way this Government, and especially the Prime Minister, intends to lead the country. With all the publicity, the whole performance, the managing of information, the actual contents of this Bill have been neatly sidestepped.

The image is what really matters, and this had been amply demonstrated by their approach. The scenario is quite simple because it is two-sided. The first side relates to the image that must be projected outside the country and, in that sense, the Ministers—on the heels of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in New York and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) in London—will go traipsing right and left and say: "Canada is now open for business".

But there is a second side which the Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette) unveiled in answering a question recently, and it has to do with internal consumption. The Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) again confirmed it this afternoon. That is internal consumption. Ministers and Government Members will address chambers of commerce, labour unions and boards of trade to tell them that Bill C-15 has been introduced in the House to protect them and safeguard jobs. That is the answer given by the Minister of State (Small Businesses) to a question asked by one of my colleagues—Investment Canada will protect them.

So we have a two-sided scenario: one for the outside world and one for Canadians. They say that Canada is open to foreign investors but, in the same breath, they add that the bill is designed to protect us.

Mr. Speaker, this two-sided scenario reveals to what extent the strategy was more important than the contents. The reality is quite simple: the Bill now under consideration—and many people will be shocked to hear this—is designed to control foreign investments. Hon. Members to your right and others on either side of us here claim that this Bill is not a measure to control foreign investments, but that is precisely what it will do. That is why I cannot understand the questions put to some NDP Members as well as to some of my own colleagues who have made speeches.

Fifty-one out of 52 clauses in this Bill provide rules to control foreign investments. And then they tell us: "Canada is open for business".

When are we told the truth? Well, there's the rub, and that is why, Mr. Speaker, because of this deception, of this strategy of communication and management of information, I will vote against this bill.

They dare pass off this Bill as a measure designed to promote investment. But which ones of my friends opposite have read the Bill? I urge them to examine that 32-page Bill in English and in French. In a clause dealing with investment are set forth the Minister's powers. Five paragraphs refer to the promotion of Canadian investments. But, Mr. Speaker, what is the underlying principle of every paragraph taken separately, for instance:

5(a) encourage business investment by such means and in such manner as the Minister deems appropriate;

Mr. Speaker, as a pious wish, it is hard to beat.

5(b) assist Canadian businesses to exploit opportunities for investment and technological advancement;

Good heavens! Is this not already the responsibility of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). It should also be partly that of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who lays down the fiscal and tax policy.

5(c) carry out research and analysis relating to domestic and international investment;

What are they trying to tell us? It means that until 1984, before the introduction of that pompous Bill, nobody in the Government carried out any analysis.

5(d) provide investment information services and other investment services to facilitate economic growth in Canada;

Here again those are responsibilities that are well known and they already are outlined in the Statutes of Canada.

5(e) assist in the development of industrial and economic policies that effect investment in Canada;

5(f) ensure that the notification and review—

Mr. Speaker, I had already finished, and I kept going on. There is nothing left in this Investment Canada Bill, absolutely nothing that will have us believe that its title is anything but a scam.

Mr. Speaker, looking at all those questions, at the provisions of the Bill that refer to investment, I suggest this is nothing but statements of principle taking up about 15 lines, and not even full lines. Not even a third of a page, and that third of a page is divided between the French and English versions. Nothing else but general principles of that sort. Nothing in the remaining clauses of the Bill. They are nothing but a bill to control foreign investment. And I hope that our friends to your right, Mr. Speaker, will at least have the courage to say here in Canada what they will be saying outside our borders.

I submit that this legislation flies in the face of the messages, the signals—to use the favourite Progressive Conservative words—the signals sent outside, especially by the Prime Minister during his trip to New York.

I submit that this legislation also flies in the face of the comments made by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) when he spoke in this House on second reading.

Mr. Speaker, the signal sent out by the Prime Minister in New York is that of a false alarm. Those who have read or heard the New York speech will be under the impression that they can now come to Canada and take over a business without anybody asking them any question. Well, Mr. Speaker, such is not the case. Each one of those foreign investors will have to submit an application to that renamed agency, because somebody will have to consider whether this is acceptable or not. And if this comes under the new agency's regulations, additional forms will have to be submitted. And the questions asked earlier from our friend, the NDP Member, are of course pointless. Those people have not read the legislation. They know not what they are talking about.

Also, among the changes referred to in the legislation, there are some that will make the process less functional, and in one way because of them the new screening agency will appear to be more suspicious, and more ambiguous, and will turn out to be more vague, more difficult to administer. After being openly critical of FIRA, the Progressive Conservative Government reverses its position, as it has done in many other instances, and takes an initiative which suggests to the people that foreign investment control will disappear completely even though this is not the case.

Mr. Speaker, in most of their speeches Members of the Opposition have dealt to a large extent with the scenario, the message to the public, because, and I think this is easy to understand, in a public debate, those who read the newspapers and hear the speeches have not all read the Bill. It is our duty as Opposition members to reply to the public statements made by the Government and not to fall for the scenario put forward by our friends opposite.

The control of foreign investment will still exist. It will now come under the jurisdiction of the new tzar, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Changes have been made, but these are unexplainable major backward steps with regard to chapter 46 of the 1973 statutes. For instance, I quite agree that the waiting period should be shorter. However, how can we solve relatively complex problems if there is automatic withdrawal after 75 days, even in complex cases or for applications involving other areas? I took part in discussions on this matter, and once the 75 day period expired, the Minister will have no other choice but to say no, or else the investor will have to make a new application.

Here is another backward step. A single Minister will be totally responsible for saying yes or no to major investments. In my opinion, this is nonsense, especially in view of the fact the Minister responsible under the Act has not given any evidence of great judgement in the past.

This is also a backward measure when compared with the previous legislation on FIRA as it blurs the considerations upon which the Minister will base his decision.

Mr. Speaker, can this Government assure us that the application of sections 20 and 21 will be subject to the assessment of the Auditor General to determine whether the conditions under which a foreign investment was accepted were truly met in view of the fuzzyness of this Bill?

Mr. Speaker, I must conclude my comments as my allotted time has run out, but I wish to thank you and to say that I shall have no hesitation in voting against this Bill at the second reading stage. I do not want to be involved in such deception.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. I recognize the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the previous speaker what is going on in the Liberal Party. Are they trying to argue both sides of this question? On one hand they are opposed to the gutting of FIRA by the Conservative Party, and on the other hand they are putting up speakers to say that the Conservatives have not gone far enough. This was a problem during the last election. No one knew where that outfit stood. Their track record and performance was abysmally bad. I do not think that many Parties in the history of Canada have ever taken such a beating at the polls as this particular organization did. That was due to exactly the same kind of performance as the one we saw from the previous speaker. Some of the Members are arguing on one side of the question, condemning the Conservative Party for gutting FIRA and failing to provide protection for Canadians, and the Member who just spoke, who I guess represents the real conservative wing of the Liberal Party, says that the Government has not gone far enough.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has the floor.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I imagine that you will leave the strategy of the Liberal Party to us.

As this bill deals with domestic consumption on the one hand, and foreign consumption on the other, we have decided to denounce it on both counts. We shall not allow this imposture to be swallowed by public opinion in Canada, and there are certainly others among my hon. colleagues who have fought and will continue to fight against it by responding to the public relations job the Prime Minister has done in the House and the statements the President of the Treasury Board has made and the press releases he has published following his return from London, Germany and France, and I suggest we should respond to this aspect. There is also the technical aspect of the legislation on which I have focused my attention.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was delighted to hear the comments of the Hon. Member in that they appear to agree with the comments I made during my intervention to the effect that this Bill does not eliminate the controls at all. It only modifies them. Almost all of the criticism of this Bill to date has misrepresented that concept and given the impression to the public and the media that this Bill is wiping out all controls over foreign investment. The Hon. Member has made it quite clear that this Bill does not do that. It only modifies the control system. It relaxes it somewhat, but leaves a control system in place to screen foreign investment.

What is the Hon. Member's view of this type of legislation? I get the impression that he would like to see a complete elimination of all controls on foreign investment. Perhaps he could enlighten me if that is his view.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, if that were the objective of the Government, why did the Hon. Member not tell the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to tell the American citizens the truth? Why did he not ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) to tell the truth when he went to London? Many Members of the House have made that type of visit in the past. They have heard the questions. Why are the Prime Minister and the President of the Treasury Board touring the world, with great publicity, making people believe that the controls do not exist any more?

[Translation]

As far as the second part of the question is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I for one believe that there should be controls of foreign investments in several areas of activities, especially those involving culture, high technology, key sectors of the economy, and I would certainly be outraged to see a corporation such as Canadair, in the riding next to mine, sold to foreign interests, because we have there a wealth of technology which has cost millions of dollars to the Canadian public to develop, and it would be a shame if it were to fall under the control of other countries which could eventually shut it down. I feel therefore that there should be controls in the areas of high technology which we have developed ourselves and where we have a comparative advantage. That is why I said a while ago that some of the amendments to the current legislation are major steps backward, compared with the provisions of Chapter 46 of the 1973 Statutes, and I could not support such amendments.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few things.

After listening to my hon. colleague, I realize—and I hope backbenchers opposite realize it too—that this two-faced government speaks with a forked tongue, for while the Minister of State in charge of Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) says one thing to Canadian businessmen, the Prime Minister says the opposite to their American counterparts in the United States.

I would like my hon. colleague to comment on this, Mr. Speaker. How is it possible to know when and where the government is telling the truth? It has been the same in all areas ever since it was elected and assumed power. The Prime Minister said something in New York, the "executioner" from the Treasury Board did the same in London, and we have here a bill that says something else . . . Therefore, how is it possible to know when the government is telling the truth?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer the Hon. Member's question, but I am strongly against this legislation because the government has shown itself to be two-faced these past few weeks.

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for his reaction to the following quote from the U.S. Senate Committee in 1981. It reads:

Much of our trade—

That is American trade.

—with foreign countries originates with orders placed by the subsidiaries of U.S. companies located overseas. For example, 75 per cent of our exports to the 300 largest companies in Canada originates from the subsidiaries of U.S. firms.

Could the Member comment on that kind of statement with regard to how it relates to his comments on the Bill?

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that I have too much experience to comment a statement that is quoted out of context, and before I can state my opinion in this regard, I wish to read the whole document and make a judgment. Listen, I was not born yesterday.

Mr. Bissonnette: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) says that we have no rights to examine investment such as Canadair, I hope that given the size of that investment, the company will sell at a price that will give us some rights. And when he quotes the Minister of State (Small Businesses) and deals with the impact on the small business sector, I believe, Mr. Speaker, that all Canadian small businesses will benefit from Investment Canada, because all new investments that will be made in Canada and that will develop new projects will benefit small businesses, whether in the construction or the service industry, and that is what we are looking for. Thus, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) must not be in the game, he must have improperly read his notes to realize—

An Hon. Member: Will you repeat slowly, he will understand, he is here.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, given the wording of the member's question, it would be quite difficult for me to answer it because, in fact, it does not have any logical lead and I do not see how I could answer a question about small business that relates to Canadair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to share some of my thoughts on the legislation before us today. The Bill before us today deals with an extremely important aspect of the Canadian economy. The rhetoric which the Government has put forward with respect to foreign investment is identical to that of the Conservative Governments across Canada that have been in power for some time.

I recall that when the Conservatives won the election in Saskatchewan, Premier Devine put out the call that Saskatchewan is open for business. Promptly, unemployment and the deficit went up and some very undesirable events occurred in the economy. That is a matter of record, not rhetoric.

The situation has been abysmally bad in British Columbia. Premier Bennett has used the same kind of rhetoric. He has invited foreign investors to come to British Columbia with a program very similar to what the Conservative Government here is attempting to put into place today. That province's economy is a complete disaster.

This is a serious situation and the Conservative Government should re-examine the program it is proposing today. Such a program has not worked at the provincial level because the Conservatives take an ideological approach rather than implement a clear program.

There have been some interesting examples of foreign investment given in the House today. Let us review the course that foreign investment in Canada has taken. For instance, Canada has more foreign ownership and control per capita than any other industrialized nation in the world. Our resources land our manufacturing is controlled by an outside agency and we cannot set our own goals or become involved in our own economic planning for the benefit of Canadians and our economy in the long run.

The Conservative Party has chosen to take a hands-off approach to the Canadian economy. It would rather have managers in the United States and other countries managing our economy than Canadian entrepreneurs who have ties to this country—

An Hon. Member: You don't know what an entrepreneur is.

Mr. Skelly: There was a quick shot from a Member across the floor who suggests we do not know what an entrepreneur is. I suggest to him that, as a result of the action of their soulmates from British Columbia, entrepreneurs in that province are desperately looking for an alternative to the Conservative approach. I suggest that in five years they will begin to wonder what an entrepreneur is because entrepreneurs will not support those Members as a result of these measures.

A number of examples have been given today, but one involves a number of small businesses in Vancouver that are involved in waste disposal. Those small entrepreneurs were handling the market, creating employment and buying equipment in Canada. When two large American firms were allowed into the waste management market through FIRA, they immediately began to drive the small Canadian entrepreneurs out of the market. They gave long-term contracts at very low cost, with which the small entrepreneurs were unable to compete. Those contracts were so far below the cost of delivery of that service that complaints were made with Consumer and Corporate Affairs in Canada. However, FIRA had already approved their entry and it was too late to assist the small entrepreneurs.

Canadian businessmen are being driven out of business by foreign investment. There is a definite and identifiable loss of employment as a result of foreign investment.

Furthermore, the business practices that are being brought into play in that market are unacceptable. It is unacceptable to the Canadian entrepreneurs who have invested and employed people in Vancouver. That is just one example. Members opposite should be looking at protecting those entrepreneurs instead of introducing legislation that will gut Canadian businesses and put this country on the block.

Canada imports more duty-free, finished manufactured goods, even excluding automotive goods, than do the United States, Japan and the European Economic Community combined. That fact comes from the Science Council of Canada report. Of course, those products are not manufactured by Canadians. It sets up an extremely negative flow in the balance of payments from this country. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has identified the problem, but the ideological fixation has prevented the Government from finding a solution to it. It is an extremely serious problem.

With an increasing number of branch plant foreign investment in this country, we will see those companies servicing a Canadian market with American and imported goods. That is a simple matter of fact. However, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) cannot go to the United states fast enough. Before introducing this Bill in Parliament, he is down in the United States to sell his wares.

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skelly: He is down on bended knee trying to sell out Canada. Of the top 50 companies in Canada, the greatest number of lost jobs over the past two years has been from U.S. owned companies. If they want to retrench in the United States in order to contain employment and economic opportunity in that country, they will certainly shut down the branch plant competition in Canada and attempt to pump their manufactured goods through their agencies.

It is purely a matter of re-inventing the wheel. The Government is going to go through this route once more, with the result that Canadians will not control their country and their economy. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) wants that to happen. He does not want Canadians to have control over their economy. He wants to sell this country out and cannot do it fast enough. He and the Prime Minister look good.

In 1983, Canada had a deficit of $9.4 billion in interest and dividend payments. Since the record began in 1926, Canada has been a net exporter of interest and dividend funds. This is the reality of this legislation. It reflects the attitude and philosophy of the Conservative Government in this country. It only makes sense that if foreign investors are allowed to invest here without scrutiny, they will attempt to maximize their profit and remove as much money from Canada as possible. They will be able to draw some rather exorbitant interest rates as a result of borrowing from the foreign parent corporation. In the pay-back to the American corporation, anything they take out of Canada will go into dividends.

One of the major scams that appears to have happened in the past is that if a foreign company can buy a Canadian firm in a captive market situation, it can produce the raw material in Canada. It will produce the raw material in Canada, sell it to the U.S. firm at or below the cost of production, and the Canadian company will continue to show a loss. Certainly, no tax will be paid. Ultimately, any loans paid out will have to be covered with interest payments to the United States. This means an outflow of Canadian funds.

I see you rising, Mr. Speaker. I will be more than happy to begin again tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS INTERPRETATION ACT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for Mrs. McDougall) moved that Bill C-10, an Act respecting the interpretation of Canada's international conventions relating to Income Tax and the Acts implementing such conventions, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-10 is to enshrine in the Statutes a number of rules for interpreting Canada's conventions relating to income tax. The general rules relating to the interpretation of treaties are laid down in the Vienna Convention on treaty law. However, this Convention is concerned with treaties in general and does not deal with the problems peculiar to conventions dealing with double taxation. Most conventions entered into recently by Canada and other members of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development are patterned after the OECD model convention of 1977 concerning double taxation. This convention is accompanied by an appendix entitled "Commentary" which also simplifies the interpretation of later conventions. However, it has now become necessary to provide for other rules as a result of the recent decision by the Supreme Court of Canada in Melford Development Inc. vs. the Queen.

In the Melford decision, the Supreme Court ruled that any terms and expressions in Canada's tax conventions that are not defined should be interpreted in accordance with the legislation existing at the time the convention was ratified and not according to the meaning they had at the time the taxable activity took place. In the case of older treaties, according to the interpretation given by the Supreme Court in the Melford case, taxpayers would have to know what certain terms meant at a given time, for instance in 1942, when the former tax convention between Canada and the United States was ratified. Furthermore, the same terms or expressions, but used in different conventions could, according to this interpretation, have a different meaning, depending on the date on which the tax convention in question was ratified.

The Supreme Court's interpretation was also contrary to the interpretation previously applied by Revenue Canada officials, who in the past had understood that, unless otherwise provided in the convention, the meaning of the terms used in our treaties would evolve with the changes being made in Canadian tax legislation.

This Bill is aimed primarily at ensuring, for the purposes of determining Canadian income tax, that the meaning of those terms and expressions in Canada's tax conventions that are not defined will evolve in terms of the changes made in Canada's tax legislation.

The Bill before the House today does not affect the interpretation of any terms that are already defined in a convention. It applies only when terms or expressions in a convention are not well defined or when the convention itself provides that the meaning of a term shall be determined, at least partly, according to the country's legislation.

Neither the OECD model convention nor the attached "Commentary" deal specifically with the issue raised in the Melford decision, that is, when the meaning of a term or expression is determined. The proposed legislation, however, does deal with this particular matter. It provides that, for the purposes of Canadian legislation, the terms used in a convention are to be interpreted according to the meaning they have in the Income Tax Act, as amended from time to time. For instance, if the matter concerns the income tax applicable to payment by a Canadian company, to a resident of a contracting country, of an amount that for the purposes of the Canadian tax system is considered to be a dividend, and if in the treaty the term "dividend" is to be interpreted as defined in Canada's tax legislation, the term "dividend" would, unless otherwise provided, be defined in accordance with the Income Tax Act at the time payment was made. The meaning of this term would then correspond to the meaning it would have under the legislation's provisions concerning dividends, as amended at that time.

The Bill provides that this interpretation rule shall not apply if other arrangements have been made, which would be the case, in the previous example, if the appropriate authorities of both countries had agreed on a specific definition of the term "dividend", as part of the mutual agreement procedure provided under most tax treaties. Nor will this rule apply if the convention itself contains an exhaustive definition of the term "dividend". In that case, if there is a difference between the definition contained in the convention and that provided in the country's legislation, normally the convention's definition would prevail. Thus, the Bill would not affect the clause, generally designated as the treaty's notwithstanding clause or the incompatibility provision in the enabling legislation for all Canadian tax treaties, which provides that in case of incompatibility between the convention's provisions and the provisions of any other legislation, the provisions of the convention prevail. This rule is consistent with those applied by most other countries when interpreting tax treaties.

Bill C-10 also provides an interpretation rule for non-residents whose business activity in Canada is carried out through a permanent establishment. This rule will make it possible to ensure that non-residents determine their profits from a business activity attributable to that permanent establishment in accordance with the Income Tax Act regulations at the time of determination of income from a business activity. This measure ought to allay any and all concerns raised by the Melford ruling which states that non-residents may indeed claim that the meaning of profits under Canada's tax conventions does not include the meaning as defined in amendments to the meaning of benefits from a business activity under Canadian tax legislation passed after the adoption of the convention. This Bill will ensure that non-residents who do business in Canada will determine their profits the same way as taxpayers who do reside in Canada.

As well, Bill C-10 contains the meaning of certain terms found in most Canadian tax conventions. For instance, the meaning of the term "Canada" will be the same as in the Income Tax Act and specify that the term "Canada" includes the seabed adjacent to the Canadian coast which falls under the jurisdiction of Canada.

The Bill also defines the terms "immovable property" and "real property".

Most Canadian conventions include special provisions on immovable or real property. Generally speaking, they provide that the country where such property is located has the right to tax income from that property, including any capital gain from its sale. Those provisions will make it clear that, as used in the convention, the terms "immovable property" or "real property" refer to any royalty or profit from an interest in the property which, for the purposes of Canada's tax legislation, is considered to be a Canadian mineral asset. Those definitions are in accordance with those included in the new Canada-United States convention.

Finally, under Bill C-10, the preceding provisions will apply, in respect of tax deductions at source for non-residents, to payments made after June 23, 1983 when the former government first announced publicly its decision to introduce legislation on the interpretation of tax conventions in Canada. As for any tax other than the non-resident tax deducted at source, the provisions will apply to taxation years ending after June 23, 1983.

Mr. Speaker, the rules of interpretation contained in Bill C-10 are the same as the interpretation that Canada and the major countries with which it has signed conventions gave to conventions concerning double taxation before the Melford ruling.

Under the provisions of Bill C-10, there will be a standard interpretation of terms and expressions already used in many Canadian tax conventions. In other words, the interpretation will no longer be subject to change on the basis of the ratification date of a given convention. The Bill will also eliminate the need to renegotiate such conventions whenever an amendment is made to the meaning of a term under our tax legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions of Bill C-10 have been the subject of long public debates. It was first introduced as a ways and means motion on July 23, 1983 and, after a few technical changes, on April 4, 1984. Those changes take into consideration the comments made by tax experts. Quick passage of this measure will remove uncertainties which still blur the interpretation of tax conventions.

I strongly urge all Hon. Members, concerned as they are with the efficiency of our parliamentary institutions, to support this Bill so that it may be adopted as quickly as possible.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to congratulate the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary and my neighbour, the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), for wanting to associate with a Liberal proposal. We have here a Bill that was introduced by the previous Government, and I understand that the Hon. Member is in complete agreement with the intent and the merit of this legislation.

[English]

There is not a great deal to say about this particular Bill. It is important in terms of allowing our domestic income tax to conform, on the one hand, to our international obligations and to ensure, as the Parliamentary Secretary pointed out, that when there is an ambiguity or a lack of interpretation, no void is created; and, on the other hand, that international conventions are constantly kept up to date in terms of our current interpretation and the changes we may wish to implement through amendments to the Income Tax Act and laws in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, having said this, I would like to emphasize once more that this Bill and others now before the House are initiatives of the previous Government.

I simply want to encourage our friends opposite to tell the Canadian people that some of the Bills passed as a consequence of the budget of the previous Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) were not only acceptable at the time, but are still valid.

[English]

In other words, the Budget of last February and the notices of Ways and Means motions which were tabled in this House pursuant to that Budget are obviously in keeping with what this current Government sees as being the requirements of the Canadian economy today. Obviously there will be some departures from the changes during the intervening period. What is significant here is simply that the Government of the day, and I deplore this, tends to be critical, to take positions and make representations in terms of its own rhetoric which are not substantiated by its actions.

Here we have an example of concrete action. It is not a particularly big Bill, but it is important. Again it is a Liberal Bill which was presented to this House as a Ways and Means motion. I would occasionally like to hear from the Government and spokesmen for the Government and acknowledgement of the fact that in nearly every area they are carrying through policies which were introduced into this House as matters of public policy by the preceding Government.

While we hear a lot of rhetoric from this Government in this area and many others, I want to make certain that the Government gradually comes around to ensuring that its rhetoric and actions correspond. If there is one thing that I and other members of our caucus have consistently noticed in the speeches not only in this House but outside this House, whether it be before the New York Economic Club, Chambers of Commerce in Canada or elsewhere, it is that more often than not the rhetoric we hear is not supported by actions. We hear a lot of criticism in this House about the economic policies of the preceding Government, yet the action that we see is the introduction of the same legislation and proposals which were part of the program of the preceding Government. I cite that as simply one more example in which the rhetoric does not correspond to the fact.

The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) seems to agree with my point. If he does, I hope he will raise it in his own caucus and try to bring the rhetoric and actions of this Government into conformity.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to congratulate my friend, the Parliamentary Secretary. There is no reason to delay the proceedings this morning and I hope that this Bill will be passed today.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-10 and also to congratulate the Parliamentary Secretary on a very terse delivery, providing us with an overview of the points contained in this Bill, essentially urging us to give some hasty consideration to ensure that this Bill passes as quickly as possible today. I can guarantee him that, as far as our Party is concerned, we will be doing just that.

I remind the House that this whole matter was first introduced in July, 1983 in a Way and Means motion. We have been waiting a long time to deal with something that presumably now requires some urgency. At that time it was also introduced with the indication that there was a necessity for passing this legislation quickly because of a number of problems associated with international tax agreements and understandings. It was brought forward again in the early part of this year and finally today we are dealing with Bill C-10.

Because of previous arguments, we certainly do not plan to provide any type of roadblock for this Bill. Basically it is a technical Bill. It is a Bill that in a sense attempts to approach the problem of the interpretation of international tax treaties and recognizes that, as times change and particularly as tax laws change, the need for updating these international tax treaties becomes rather paramount.

In the last four or five years we have seen a multitude of changes to the tax Act, particularly affecting non-Canadian citizens operating in Canada. They have been wondering and raising concerns with us over the last four or five years about a whole variety of questions. They want to know if they must deal with the tax laws as they are written today or with tax provisions as they existed when the tax treaties were introduced, be that 10, 20 or 30 years ago. There was an ambiguity and Bill C-10 attempts to sort out that ambiguity and provides as a law of the land that income tax laws which apply in the cases of tax treaties are the laws as they exist today and not on the day that the treaties were originally entered into. In a sense, this Bill clarifies for both the corporate sector and individuals operating here and abroad just exactly what tax laws are appropriate.

I suppose it was the Melford decision which brought this issue to a head and brought to the fore a whole variety of problems associated with international tax treaties. With that decision, the need for clarification became very obvious. Therefore, this new Bill C-10 will prevent confusion and disputes arising out of the interpretation of common terms such as "taxable income".

The part of the Bill that is most important in terms of future deliberations is the part which clarifies definitions, such as the definition of Canada. Presumably, many people would not find that definition to be particularly perplexing. However, the territories, the seas, the air space above the territories, the sea-beds and the subsoil resources are in fact categories of that definition which need to be clarified and specified. Bill C-10 clarifies beyond any doubt just what the definition of Canada is for the purpose of various tax treaties.

I would like to say that since July 23 when this issue was first introduced as a Ways and Means motion, we have been anxious to deal with this Bill. We look forward to its speedy passage through the remaining stages.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? There are no questions and comments for the first three speakers. Does the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) wish to speak on debate?

Mr. Fraser: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to enter into the debate but I understand that there is a disposition in the House to move this Bill through all three stages.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Hnatyshyn for Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Fraser, moves that Bill C-10, an Act respecting the interpretation of Canada's international conventions relating to income tax and the Acts implementing such conventions, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

FOREIGN EXTRATERRITORIAL MEASURES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. David Crombie (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-14, an Act to authorize the making of orders relating to the production of records and the giving of information for the purposes of proceedings in foreign tribunals, relating to measures of foreign states or foreign tribunals affecting international trade or commerce and in respect of the recognition and enforcement in Canada of certain foreign judgments obtained in antitrust proceedings, be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-14, an Act to authorize the making of orders relating to the production of records and the giving of information for the purposes of proceedings in foreign tribunals, relating to measures of foreign states or foreign tribunals affecting international trade or commerce and in respect of the recognition and enforcement in Canada of certain foreign judgments obtained in antitrust proceedings.

On Clause 2—Definitions

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I missed something. I thought that there would have been a government speaker on this Bill. I know we are now in committee, but I would appreciate hearing a government Member outline for the House the nature of the Bill. I believe that is the normal procedure.

The Chairman: We are now on Clause 2.

Mr. Waddell: I would like an explanation.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I am rising to make two points. The first point is exactly the point made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway. The Government ought to have someone at hand—and it is normally done at second reading—to tell the House about the Bill. Certainly I would echo the recommendation which came from my hon. friend on the other side of the House.

The second point is a point of order which deals with the reading of the motion. The motion on the Order Paper is to refer the Bill to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. After the question had been put, Mr. Chairman, you said that the matter was referred to the Committee of the Whole. I suggest that someone is getting their wires crossed. In order to make this proceeding legal, the House should at some point unanimously adopt the motion saying that the matter should be referred to a Committee of the Whole rather than to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that we would appreciate hearing the comments of the Government about this Bill, and if I may suggest something in all humility, the House could perhaps adjourn for five or ten minutes to give the Government an opportunity to agree on this Bill so that it can explain it to us.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) tabled this bill and we are going to ask him for explanations on each clause, but there is no one here to reply to our questions. I would like the Government to make arrangements so that we may proceed logically.

[English]

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Chairman, as all Hon. Members have had the opportunity to read Bill C-14, I feel that I only have to underline the importance of the Bill, not only to the Government but to all Members of the House and indeed the entire country.

As Members will note at the top of the first page, Bill C-14 calls for the authorization of the making of orders relating to the production of records and the giving of information for the purpose of proceedings in foreign tribunals, relating to measures of foreign states or foreign tribunals affecting international trade or commerce and in respect of the recognition and enforcement in Canada of certain foreign judgments obtained in antitrust proceedings.

Clearly, Mr. Chairman, for too long this country has been suffering as a consequence of not having the Bill in place. I believe the Minister of Justice should be congratulated, at such an early time in his career as Minister of Justice, for bringing the Bill forward. As the Minister has now entered the House, I know he would want to enlighten the House with further details.

• (1140)

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister of Justice is in the House. I wonder if he could explain the import of Clause 2 to us, please?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could assist. Clause 2, of course, deals with the definitions and I am quite surprised that the Hon. Member would ask such a question. If he has not read the definitions, I query his serious understanding of the Bill.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development a question. Under the definitions which he so kindly pointed out to us, a "tribunal" is mentioned. What sort of tribunal did the Government have in mind there? It mentions a court, body or authority, but what kind of tribunal did the Government really have in mind?

Mr. Crombie: The only kind of tribunal which one could have, Mr. Chairman, involves three people. If we wanted to have a "bi-bunal" it would involve two people. It is a tribunal; three people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, it is undoubtedly all right to be humorous for a time. However, this is an important matter. I understand that the Bill has been sponsored by the Minister of Justice, who is now in the House. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, it would now be possible for the Minister of Justice to give us a proper, non-humorous explanation of what the Bill is all about.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, as the Hon. Member has mentioned, this is a most important Bill and, of course, it gives the lie to the canard that we are helpless in our admiration and love for another foreign nations and will do nothing to protect Canadian interests. This is a Bill which provides the Canadian Government with the possibility of taking avoiding action or blocking action if a foreign power passes legislation or its courts act in some way which interferes with our own sovereignty, or purports to exercise extraterritorial control in ways which might affect Canada.

The previous Government had a similar Bill before the House on several occasions but, as usual, it never got around to passing the legislation. It never had the courage of its convictions. It would not stand up to the United States of America and move the legislation through the House so it never did get to second reading or to Committee of the Whole. Now we have a Government which has the guts and the gumption to pass the kind of legislation which the previous Government threatened for years but did nothing about.

The Bill is a mechanism of last resort. It will come into effect if there are outstanding problems which arise principally from the extraterritorial application of U.S. law which U.S. and Canadian officials cannot handle in a satisfactory manner. We have an antitrust agreement entered into between Canada and the United States. It was signed on March 9, 1984. It provides a useful mechanism to manage problems which may arise from time to time in the antitrust area. That understanding provides for notification whenever U.S. antitrust investigations, or proceedings which affect Canada or Canadian interests, require the seeking of information located in Canada. Once there is notification, that may be followed by consultation.

Although this is a useful mechanism at the political level, it does not resolve the underlying jurisdictional differences. The United States antitrust law has not given up its claim for jurisdiction through what is known as the "effects doctrine". In other words, the United States may hold that a company engaging in conduct outside the United States may be subject to U.S. jurisdiction merely by virtue of the fact that that conduct has or may have some effect in the United States. That is not a doctrine, of course, with which we agree and it causes us problems from time to time. Therefore, we are asking the House to pass this Bill so we will have some muscle to back up our objections.

Another problem which is dealt with in the Bill is the question of foreign subpoenas issued for evidence located in Canada, particularly with respect to criminal matters. We are having discussions with the United States of America which will lead towards the conclusion of a treaty for mutual assistance in criminal matters. It is not concluded yet. That treaty will provide more extensive regular channels for the exchange of evidence between Canada and the United States in criminal matters. That being the case, once that treaty agreement is reached there will be less likelihood of subpoenas being issued in the United States which might have extraterritorial scope which we object to being exercised in Canada.

Another problem with which the Bill deals, Mr. Chairman, is with respect to export controls. I believe we all remember the Siberian pipeline regulations issued by the United States in 1982 which created problems. The issue here is that U.S. law purports to exercise control over foreign corporations which are U.S.-owned or controlled. We have no objection to having U.S.-owned or controlled foreign corporations investing in Canada. However, we do not want the subsidiaries ignoring our law or our policy and acting only in accordance with U.S. laws which purport to exercise control over subsidiaries in other countries. I think that particular episode demonstrated the necessity for the Government of Canada to have the necessary tools so that we can respond effectively should that be attempted again.

So what does the Bill do? It sets out a framework for Canadian governmental responses to foreign governmental measures or decisions by foreign courts which have unacceptable extraterritorial scope. Yes, we want foreign investment. Yes, we want a better relationship, and we have a better relationship with the United States of America as an example. However, that does not mean to say that we are not going to defend our own vital national interests or our own Canadian sovereignty, and that is what the Bill does. The Bill gives us some muscle to do that. The Bill sets out the framework for us to respond to foreign government measures, or decisions by foreign courts, which we find to have unacceptable extraterritorial scope.

Our domestic laws are not affected until the Attorney General of Canada issues specific orders under the legislation, Mr. Chairman. So the threshold which provides for the exercise of these powers is the opinion of the Government that the foreign measures or foreign court decisions are likely to affect adversely our commercial interests, or adversely affect Canadian sovereignty. The Bill is designed to enable us to protect our own national sovereignty in exceptional cases, after diplomatic efforts have been exhausted and irreconcilable policy differences remain.

I might point out to Hon. Members of the committee that the United States Government is aware of the introduction of the Bill and of the fact that this Bill is going forward. It accepts the fact that we have the right, of course, to ask the House to adopt such measures. I would like to point out as well that other countries—two examples being the United Kingdom and Australia—have passed similar kinds of legislation. In the United Kingdom it is known as the Protection of Trading Interests Act. It was passed in 1980. Earlier this year the Australian Parliament consolidated its legislation in this area which was passed first in 1976. It is called the Foreign Proceedings (Excess of Jurisdiction) Act. The Australian Parliament adopted it with all-Party support. Both the Australian and British legislation resembles the substance of what is now before the committee.

The legislation should be of assistance to our citizens or companies when there is a conflict between our law or policy and the law of a federal state. Where a foreign jurisdiction has a legal apparatus—such as this Bill will provide—enabling the foreign jurisdiction to issue an order that prevents compliance with U.S. law, the U.S. courts will generally recognize this as a legitimate defence, which is known as "foreign government compulsion". We are one of the few countries which has a no legal apparatus at present, Mr. Chairman, to meet the challenge which U.S. court decisions have posed. In other words, those hon. gentlemen who were in power for most of the last 20 years left us, when they left power, with no legal apparatus to meet that challenge. We are meeting the challenge. We have the courage of our convictions to meet the challenge. We have the muscle and backbone to meet the challenge. We do not talk independence and sovereignty and do nothing, as the Liberal Party has done for the past 18 or 20 years. We are acting.

Mr. Dingwall: Crosbie for leader.

Mr. Crosbie: Cries of adulation will not stop me.

Mr. Orlikow: Tell us what will; we want to know.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman has me stumped. I do not know of anything that can stop me, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Waddell: How about an iceberg?

Mr. Crosbie: Before I end, Mr. Chairman, there are three main provisions in the Bill. The three main provisions are Clause 3—

Ms. Mitchell: Say it in French, John.

Mr. Crosbie: Clause trois—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —which permits the Attorney General to issue orders that prohibit production from Canada of documents and related evidence to foreign tribunals which exercise extraterritorial jurisdiction. So Clause 3 is an important clause.

Clause 5 authorizes the Attorney General to issue orders with the concurrence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This Bill will be administered, of course, in co-operation with that Department, but under that clause the Secretary of State for External Affairs has to concur, and then an order can be issued to prohibit corporations in Canada from complying with foreign governmental measures with unacceptable extraterritorial scope. To make that provision more effective we can issue orders to Canadian corporations which are foreign-owned or foreign-controlled prohibiting compliance with directives they have received from their parent companies in cases where the parent company tries to implement the foreign government measure by issuing to them instructions.

Under Clause 8 the Attorney General would be permitted, if the House passes this legislation, to issue orders preventing enforcement or recognition of foreign antitrust judgments in Canadian courts where they have exercised unacceptable extraterritorial jurisdiction. The order can relate to either the full amount of the foreign antitrust judgment or to part of it.

As you know, in the United States of America you can get treble damages awarded in a private antitrust action, so the Attorney General might decide to block the enforcement of two-thirds of it. In any event, he can issue a blocking order for all or part of a judgment. Or, if the Canadian party has had to satisfy the foreign judgment in that jurisdiction, they can take action in Canada in a Canadian court to recover the amount paid abroad.

I must apologize for not being here, Mr. Chairman, when the Bill was first called, I was at an important committee meeting. Of course, as we all know, I cannot reveal the secrets of the Cabinet, at least not yet. It may be that in a few weeks' time we can all discuss Cabinet secrets wherever we may be. However, this particular item which affected my home province of Newfoundland was being discussed and I thought there was 10 minutes before the Bill was coming up in the House. But Members are moving so "celeriously" and with such efficiency and dispatch under the new administration that the Bill came up before the 10 minutes expired and I was not here when I should have been. I noticed the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, in his usual capable manner, and being used to dealing with various jurisdictions across the country, was doing a splendid job. It is very appropriate that the Bill provides blocking orders because he was blocking for me down here.

If we enact this legislation, Mr. Speaker, the Government will have the kind of mechanism which will enable us to be effective in responding to foreign measures with unacceptable extraterritorial scope. As I say, similar legislation was prepared by the previous administration but it did not go through the House so I hope this Bill will be passed expeditiously. There are no current controversies under way at the moment, but in the past we have had several areas of considerable controversy where the United States in particular had taken some action with extra-territorial application in Canada and with which we have not agreed. So if Hon. Members pass this Bill we will have blocking mechanisms and will be able to support the principles we espouse with effective action. It points up the fact that while we are very keen on improving our relationship with the U.S., that does not mean to say that we are not Canadians first, last and always or that we are not concerned about Canadian sovereignty or our own country. We are Canadians first, North Americans next, citizens of the world after that and, of course, some Hon. Members go further than that and say we are citizens of the universe.

I have pleasure in asking Hon. Members to support the Bill and if there are any questions that I can attempt to answer, I will.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman, I know the Minister wants the House to proceed "celeriously"—

Mr. McDermid: That is easy for you to say!

Mr. Waddell: —on this matter. Sorry, I only know the French translation for that, not the English word!

Would the kind of situation the Minister has in mind be something like this? Suppose a number of industries come to Canada as a result of Investment Canada. The American Congress or a tribunal or court makes a judgment in the future that American companies are not to trade with, let us say, Nicaragua. Does that mean the Canadian Government under this Act could force the Canadian subsidiary not to obey the American court or tribunal?

Mr. Crosbie: The answer is yes, the Bill provides the power to the Government to prevent a situation where the foreign parent instructs its Canadian subsidiary to take action or not take action which is contrary to our own policy. For example, if the foreign parent instructed the Canadian subsidiary not to trade with Nicaragua but it was Canadian government policy that we should have normal trade relations with Nicaragua, then yes, we would be able to act and prevent the subsidiary from carrying out that instruction.

Mr. Waddell: That does not go so far, though, as to require the subsidiary to trade? The subsidiary could still adopt the policy of its parent without really stating that as a policy?

Mr. Crosbie: If there was any conflict between the Canadian law or policy in that situation with the foreign law or policy, our law or policy would be pre-eminent. Yes, they would have to trade or do whatever they were doing. Supposing they were already trading, if that company did not do business with Nicaragua, then I do not think we would say you have to do business with Nicaragua. But if they were already doing business with them, then they would have to disregard their parents' instruction not to do business with them.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Chairman, it is truly embarrassing to see what the Government did this morning faced with a piece of legislation which is relatively serious and important, and I can understand that the Government backbenchers would be tempted to blush when they saw what happened. I also understand their complaints. They are ashamed of what happened and do not want us to talk about it. I therefore understand why they are moaning.

Mr. Chairman, the Minister responsible was not here; even though the Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. Crombie) really tried to save face, we could see that the Government is not serious about this Bill. As usual, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) thought he had to give us a show and said that the previous Government had lacked courage. The previous Government tabled this Bill, and he, in his great wisdom, has suddenly had the courage to have it adopted. First, we could criticize his delay, his absence and his lack of knowledge about this Bill. I would like the Minister to tell us, clause by clause, what changes are contained in this Bill compared with the one tabled by the previous Government.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, there are no important changes of principle in this Bill, as I said when I spoke on the Bill. The difference is that we are asking the House to pass the Bill while the last administration never got around to doing that over a period of four or five years. There are no important changes in the Bill.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Chairman, I would like first to comment on the suggestion made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) that the previous Government lacked courage. I would remind him that the American extraterritorial legislation only came into force a few weeks ago. And I do not see why one should hurry before . . . I believe the previous Government introduced the bill intending to negotiate an agreement with the American government and ask them to withdraw the offending provisions in their own legislation, their own omnibus bill.

Besides, it is my view that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) should entertain a better historical perspective of the debate on extraterritorial involvement, rather than bragging about having solved a major issue single-handed. What he did was to recognize that the Americans could still have extraterritorial measures written in their statute books. And instead of enjoying their honeymoon and their increasing friendship with the Americans, and instead of asking them to withdraw such unacceptable measures, he sulks and says: Well, we will have in our own legislation the theoretical means to oppose the tendency of the Americans to meddle in the affairs of their Canadian subsidiaries.

But in fact, Mr. Chairman—and this I would like to hear from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie)—this is all very well between lawyers, and they could always say that it is in the law books. But in actual practice, even if the Canadian Minister of Justice says: American courts have no jurisdiction over subsidiaries in Canada, there is no reason to comply despite what the American head office might say.

Mr. Chairman, you know very well that one day the head office will get to its little Canadian subsidiary if it does not comply. And in my view, the problem is a lot more serious than what is implied by the Minister of Justice. I think the problem will be of increasing relevance in the coming months and years, once the American legislation is implemented, and there will be judgments with extraterritorial findings, and the only answer the Minister of Justice will be in a position to offer will be that Bill.

But to be practical, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Justice should have ensured that the United States will withdraw such a claim to extraterritorial action, rather than simply relying on that legislation. And I gather that the previous government had introduced the Bill to pave the way for negotiations. But when the American legislation was passed, our friends opposite were happy instead of opposing the extraterritorial claims of the Americans.

I remember, Mr. Chairman, there were receptions at the Canadian Embassy in Washington, and there our representatives suggested they had achieved a great success. Well, if that had been such a success, we would have no need for this legislation, because the Americans would have been really pressured by their so-called friends opposite into withdrawing their extraterritorial claims. Why do they need laws in their books giving them the power to go sneaking abroad? And the response of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) does not amount to very much under these circumstances. I do not understand. I hope his position involves more than that. I hope our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), instead of consultations with the Minister of Justice, will have consultations with the American Secretary of State to ensure that Canada will never submit to the American extraterritorial claims.

Strictly speaking, this response is definitely not good enough in my opinion, and I would like to know what are the views of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) on this. Is this his final response to the United States' extraterritorial claims, or is it strictly part of the negotiation, or has he already thrown in the towel?

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I really cannot see how these comments require an answer. At the moment the position is that the Government has no legal weapons with which to block attempts by foreign countries to pass laws or use the courts in ways that have an extraterritorial effect here in Canada.

As a result of the passage of this Bill, the Government will have means by which to do that. Furthermore, at the present time there are no immediate issues that require us to have these particular powers; therefore, this is a very good time for the legislation to be passed, when there is no current controversy under way. We will therefore be reay if one does arise.

In the meantime, as I said in my earlier remarks, negotiations are going on in connection with the mutual treaty between Canada and the United States so that we can more effectively exchange information and evidence in the criminal area. Constant discussions are under way so that the problems will not arise. I hope that we will not have these kinds of problems in the future. If we do, this Bill will provide us with the means to take action to ensure that the extraterritorial effects to which we are opposed cannot occur in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) has not stated his position. Is it the Government's position at this point that it should let the sword of Damocles that hangs over the heads of all the American subsidiaries in Canada stand in the American statutes? Is the Canadian Government opposed in principle and in practice to the extraterritorial provisions of the American Act? Does the Government intend to keep on demanding the withdrawal of the provisions in the omnibus bill, or is this his final answer? Will they keep on demanding that withdrawal, or will they simply respond with a kind of legislation that in the final analysis, will not prevent in practice the subsidiaries from crawling under the whip and control of the American head office?

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I must say that it is a bit confusing. If one could understand what the hon. gentleman was trying to get at, one could answer his question but it is a very muddled proposition. The hon. gentleman's question is quite muddled, but let me attempt to answer it. We have no power and no authority to stop the United States of America, the United Kingdom, the European Common Market or any country from passing laws that they wish to pass. However, we can object to certain laws if they have an effect on us that we find objectionable, if they attempt to have an extraterritorial effect on Canada, its citizens or corporations in Canada, or if they attempt to exercise some kind of control over subsidiaries of their corporations in our country. We can object to that and have done so in the past.

Now we are asking the House to give us some effective means of acting to prevent those effects from being carried out in Canada. This will be more effective than protesting and telling the United States or whoever that we do not want them interfering or instructing their subsidiaries in Canada to do things that are those countries' policies but are contrary to Canadian Government policy. We will have an effective means of stopping that and that is what the Bill provides.

The evil about which the hon. gentleman is concerned is one that we can address if this legislation is passed. We can effectively put an end to it rather than just protesting to the United States or other foreign countries. We will also have a means of blocking the consequences of the action in their own country. That enhances our sovereignty, which is our national identity. That is why we are asking the House to pass this Bill.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Chairman, what I am asking the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is this: Is it his view that the American extraterritorial claims are legitimate, yes or no?

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I suppose in the eyes of the United States they are legitimate. If we thought they were legitimate, then we would not be asking the House to pass this legislation. We believe companies that operate in Canada should obey Canadian law and policy. If Canadian law and policy is different in some respects from that of the United States, the United Kingdom, or France, the company, no matter where it is owned, has to comply with Canadian law and policy. This Bill gives us some muscle to ensure that they do that.

Mr. Lapierre: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) has just said he does not consider them legitimate. Now, does he intend to let the Americans go on like this or is he going to continue to pressure them to remove them from their books? That was the position taken by the previous Government. We were saying: We are not only prepared to introduce a Bill to block the extraterritorial effect, but we also want you to withdraw the amendment. And that is what I am asking the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). Does his answer apply strictly to his own Bill or is he going to continue pressuring the Americans to withdraw the offensive provisions from their legislation? That is what I am asking the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie).

Like the Americans, we all remember the debate on the "back-in". They not only considered it illegitimate but they also asked the Government at the time to withdraw it. It is the same thing. Does the Minister think it should be allowed to stay on the U.S. statutes? Mr. Chairman, we all know that whatever the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) says, if he protects branch plants of U.S. companies by means of his Bill, the parent company will get them some other way. His own leader has always taken his orders from the United States. Even if the Minister of Justice of Canada had told him not to listen to the United States, everybody knew his job was on the line. It is the same in all branch plants. What I am asking the Minister of Justice is basically: Does his Government intend to go on pressuring Washington to remove offensive provisions from U.S. legislation on extraterritoriality?

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, we believe it is wrong for the United States or any other country to pass laws that have extraterritorial effects in other countries. We will make that position clear to them whenever it arises in the future. In addition to making that position clear to them, if this legislation had passed the House we would have had some effective means of blocking what they are attempting to do. We cannot dictate, of course, to the United States Congress or the United States Government what kind of laws that country will have. We cannot dictate to their courts. We cannot force the Americans to change. We cannot force American courts to change their interpretations. But when it comes to Canada, with the help of this legislation we will have an effective means of blocking their attempts to have extraterritorial authority here in Canada. That is the whole purpose of the legislation.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Justice is throwing in the towel and saying that this Government has no influence on the American Congress. On the other hand, have the United States and the American Government had any influence on this Government, for instance as far as the National Energy Program is concerned? This Government is on bended knees before the American Government. For Pete's sake, Mr. Chairman! We had the example of the back-in provision under the National Energy Program. We are well aware that the American Government and big American companies influenced this Government, but what I am asking is whether this Government has any influence on the American Government since they are supposed to be such great friends. Will this Government make use of this great friendship or is it just a one-way friendship which allows the Americans to ask what they want while we have to protect ourselves with this little Bill C-14?

We have no authority or influence on the American Government. This is what the Members opposite say in their bill: We are going to resist as well as we can, even though it might be uncalled for; we shall accept that this legislation remain as the sword of Damocles over the heads of the administrators of American branch companies in Canada, because the Act will still exist. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand why the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Crosbie) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) do not have more guts not only to protect themselves before this House, but also to go to the United States and advise them of the situation.

Instead of just saying nice things when he made his speech in New York, I think the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) should have said: "Of course, we are open for business, but there are some things that we find unacceptable, and one of them is extraterritoriality." Otherwise, his approach to Canada-US relations may be simply what he has done in the past, which is to keep the Americans happy and follow their orders. This is what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) seems to be doing.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. gentleman does not like this Bill, let him vote against it. If the hon. gentleman does not want to give Canada some muscle to deal with attempts by foreign countries to impose legislation with an extraterritorial effect on us, then I say to him that he should vote against the Bill. Let him show his true colours. That is all he has to do. We do not just talk a great game. We are not the Government that has been in power in Canada for most of the time since 1945. We were not the Government that came into power at a time when Canadian trade with the United States was not what it is now. It has now increased from something around 60 per cent of our foreign trade to 75 per cent. It was under the hon. gentleman's Government that we have become so dependent for our prosperity on the United States of America. But we are better at managing the relationship than the Liberals were. Even though we can get on much better with the Americans, we are still going to adopt, if the House and the majority agree, legislation that will give us some powers to counteract any of their attempts to impose legislation with an extraterritorial effect on us.

As far as the American attitude toward Canadian policies in energy or whatever is concerned, they did not attempt to pass any legislation with an extraterritorial effect. We agreed with many of the points they made. The hon. gentleman's Government wrecked the oil and gas industry of Canada because of its stupid and obtuse policy. The Liberal Government brought an industry in western Canada that was leading the country in economic growth and prosperity to its knees with its stupid confiscatory, retroactive legislation, a retroactive back-in and all the rest of it. We are still suffering the ill effects of that.

Mr. Waddell: The retroactive back-in was not in Alberta.

Mr. Crosbie: The retroactive back-in was in federal lands.

Mr. Gauthier: Canada Lands.

Mr. Crosbie: The answer to the hon. gentleman is to put his money where his mouth is, vote for the Bill and let us get this legislation under way.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, Members in my own caucus do intend to vote for this Bill. This legislation is virtually identical to legislation introduced on the Order Paper by the former Government. If the Opposition of that day had been as constructive and positive as the Opposition of this day proposes to be, this Bill would have been legislation many years ago.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: There is something more to it than that, Mr. Chairman. It is not good legislation to bring forward when an antitrust action is proceeding before the courts in the United States against some entity and orders are being delivered across our border for implementation against interests which can be affected by the Government of Canada. Occasionally in the past, to my recollection as a Parliamentary Secretary and then as a Minister, some of the times when it was convenient to bring the Bill forward because of the parliamentary timetable, it was not exactly appropriate to bring it forward because of ongoing litigation initiated by the American Government.

I take it that the legislation is being brought forward by the Government now, although the Minister may not know it, because it is perhaps a quiet time in the antitrust field in the United States. This may well be a time when the legislation can be brought forward without reflecting upon any particular litigation or the activities of any particular corporation. I am glad to hear that this is a quiet time. In that spirit I am prepared to see the legislation move forward.

I wish the Government were bringing forward some of its own legislation. I know its Members were elected with very great expectations. It surprises me somewhat that they began by bringing forward Bill after Bill introduced by the former Government rather than the legislation which they should have considered as being part of their own mandate.

For example, I read about the Minister's trip to Newfoundland to meet with his counterparts from the provinces and the statement that he would get serious about drunk driving. Not only speaking for myself and my colleagues but I am sure for all Members of the House, if the Minister had been serious about it, as he said he was to the media, perhaps he would have brought that legislation forward in time for it to come into effect for Christmas or New Years, for all the parties which precede the holiday season when the risk of drunk drivers is a serious problem.

The Chairman: I would ask the Hon. Member to be relevant to the Bill, please.

Mr. Kaplan: I felt that I could be as relevant as the Hon. Minister was in his own remarks. Recently—

Very recently, the Minister appeared before one of the Committees of the House, and he promised to table his bill, which he called a mini-omnibus bill—

[English]

He promised a mini-omnibus Bill. Perhaps it should have been called a "minibus" Bill rather than the mini-omnibus Bill he promised for today. That was the Bill in which I was expecting the drunk driving legislation to appear. Perhaps I am less relevant to the subject of the Bill. However, I am relevant to the day on which the Minister said that he would be bringing forward legislation on that subject.

I note one amendment to the Bill from the form in which it was brought forward by the former Government, and that is that orders emanating from tribunals of states were covered by the legislation of the former Government. In addition, this legislation covers in a way which is totally acceptable to us orders which emanate from international bodies composed of states. I am sure this is done in recognition of the growing significance of international courts in various parts of the world whose orders might otherwise be imposed against Canadian interests.

I thank the Minister for bringing forward this legislation for enactment. It was a measure introduced by the former Government. At the same time I urge him to start living in the future and to start delivering some of the legislation which Canadians must be expecting as a result of the election.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman, I have a question about clause 8, but it would probably be better for me to wait until we get to it.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, when one with a suspicious mind reads this Bill, the possibility that the Government might be trying to reactivate the uranium cartel springs to mind. I hope that would not be the case. With our present House Leader, who is very vocal on that issue, I suspect that is not to be the case. Anyway, we now have a legal way of enforcing the gag order should the occasion arise.

I have a couple of questions. I will ask the first one first.

An Hon. Member: That is a good idea.

Mr. Nickerson: If circumstances were to be in reverse and if a Canadian court ordered a Canadian corporation to present certain documentation with respect to its activities in, say, Australia and perhaps the Attorney General of Australia under the authority of legislation such as this issued an order prohibiting that from being done, would it be a defence in a Canadian court that the corporation would not be able to provide the required documentation because of the order given by the foreign Government? Would it work in reverse?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether I understood the Hon. Member's question correctly. The Canadian courts and the Canadian Attorney General have jurisdiction over Canadian companies in Australia. They will have jurisdiction over companies which are resident in Australia. They will have the power to make orders which apply to companies within their jurisdiction.

Mr. Nickerson: Perhaps I did not explain my question well enough. In the initial presentation of the Minister of Justice, he said that it was a defence in courts in foreign lands, where a person was ordered to present certain documentation, to say that because of an order issued in another country it was not available and he was not at liberty to present that information. I wonder whether that is the case in Canada. For instance, we were told that both Australia and Great Britain have similar legislation. There are many Canadian companies operating in Australia. If a Canadian court required a Canadian company operating in Australia to bring forth documentation relating to its Australian operations and it was prevented from doing so by an order issued by the Attorney of Australia, would that be a good and adequate defence in a Canadian court?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I will have to make sure of my reply later, but my tentative opinion is yes. When I was speaking I pointed out that United States courts recommend as legitimate defences what they call foreign government compulsion. If we make an order here or such an order is made in Australia, it will be recognized in the U.S. courts. I will have to check to make sure about Canadian courts. I will get the Hon. Member the answer later when I have had a chance to check with the necessary experts in the Department.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I shall deal with my second question secondly. I am pleased to see under Clause 9 of the Bill that where a judgment is made in a foreign court against a Canadian corporation resulting from an order issued under this legislation and damages are awarded—

The Chairman: I believe the Hon. Member is asking a question about Clause 9. Could I ask the Member to wait until Clause 9 is before the committee for consideration, if it relates to Clause 9?

Mr. Nickerson: It relates to Clause 9 and to other parts of the Bill. I thought it would be an opportune time to raise it under general discussion because it might overlap other clauses of the Bill. I might as well be given an opportunity to do it now and I will not raise it again under Clause 9.

When damages are awarded, there will be a recourse in Canadian courts against the person who collected damages in a foreign court. I am pleased to see that. However, a question springs to mind. What happens when a foreign court or tribunal fines a corporation for not complying with the wishes of that court or tribunal? What happens if a corporation is fined the equivalent of $10,000 Canadian, as mentioned in the Bill under the penalty clause, because of an order issued under this legislation? Is there any recourse that Canadian personal corporations might have against the Government of Canada on account of actions of the Canadian Attorney General where they have been found remiss in a foreign court and had to pay those damages or maybe even spent time in jail?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe so. This clause would permit you to recover damages paid, but I do not think it would cover fines imposed, say, by a U.S. court because those fines would go to the U.S. Government or the state government. I do not think this legislation deals with that. It would only enable you to call back, as the phrase has it, a damage award or part of it.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 8—Attorney General may declare certain foreign judgments not to be recognized or enforceable

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Justice will know that I wanted to ask about this clause. I will read the beginning of clause 8:

(1) Where a foreign tribunal has, whether before or after the coming into force of this Act, given a judgment in proceedings instituted under an antitrust law and, in the opinion of the Attorney General of Canada, the recognition or enforcement of the judgment in Canada has adversely affected or is likely to adversely affect significant Canadian interests in relation to international trade or commerce involving a business carried on in whole or in part in Canada or otherwise has infringed or is likely to infringe Canadian sovereignty, he may—

Then there are a number of paragraphs as to what the Minister of Justice may do, including declaring that the order shall not be enforceable in Canada, restricting the money judgment. As the Minister of Justice said, you can get triple damages in antitrust actions in the United States. He might want to restrict that damage amount as it applies to Canada.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic picked up on my question. I am wondering about the use of this clause to block, and I will quote the words of the Member for Western Arctic: "We now have a legal way to enforce gag orders if the occasion arises". He was referring to the problems with the uranium cartel. In the Minister's view, could this clause be used to block American antitrust actions that would have indirect effects in the Canadian uranium cartel, recognizing that in the United States they really do pursue antitrust actions, unlike Canada? They had been after the Canadian uranium cartel, which the previous Government had gone to incredible lengths to gag and to bury, so much so that the then Leader of the Opposition, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead, took legal action in the Canadian courts.

Do the Member for Western Arctic and I just have suspicious noses or is there really a possibility of using this to stop antitrust actions that would apply to Canada and put the gag once again on the kind of secrecy with which we shroud the nuclear industry in Canada?

Mr. Crosbie: The answer is no, Mr. Chairman. The gag so-called was a domestic Canadian action that was taken. It has no relationship to that. This simply deals with the consequences of someone paying a judgment in the United States regarding anti-combines. It has no connection with what used to be known as the gag order that prevented the publication of any of those documents or whatever. It is unrelated to it.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman, the clause also says "Where a foreign tribunal has, whether before or after the coming into force of this Act". Is the Minister aware of any cases that would be affected by this Act, because it would apply retroactively to cases that may be affected by this clause?

Mr. Crosbie: There are none that I am aware of, Mr. Chairman. There are none that have been brought to my attention. It is always possible there could be some, but I can only answer no, not as far as I have any knowledge of them.

The Chairman: Shall clause 8 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 9 to 11 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosbie moved that Bill C-14, an Act to authorize the making of orders relating to the production of records and the giving of information for the purposes of proceedings in foreign tribunals, relating to measures of foreign states or foreign tribunals affecting international trade or commerce and in respect of the recognition and enforcement in Canada of certain foreign judgments obtained in antitrust proceedings, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to make a couple of remarks before the Bill goes through. I think it should go through. This is an interesting debate. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) alternates between a buffoon and a statesman. I do not know which role I prefer, probably the statesman.

I congratulate the Minister on finally dealing with the Bill and also the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). It is always a pleasure to hear him in the House. I know this Bill was a tall order for him, but he made short work of it.

Something that came up during debate on the Bill that I would like to talk about for a second is the matter of extraterritoriality. This Bill is a bit of a counterweight to the Government's efforts to open ourselves completely to foreign capital. We have seen this in Parliament in the past week with the changing from FIRA, an agency to look at foreign investment and make sure it was in Canada's interest in terms of jobs, research and so on, to a new agency called Investment Canada whereby we are wide open to foreign investment, too open in my view. Obviously the Minister of Justice disagrees with me.

In his remarks, the Minister mentioned that Members were trying to give examples of extra-territoriality and the difficulties that would be caused. I am not an expert in this area, but I know that in the area of energy, an area about which I know a little bit, the United States could pass emergency energy legislation during an oil crisis or could even pass legislation that anticipates an oil crisis. There could be difficulties in the Middle East or the Gulf states and Exxon, a large multinational corporation, might divert, as it once did in the past, oil that was bound for its subsidiary company, Imperial Oil of Canada, Canada's largest oil company, to the parent company in the United States. That is a broad example of extra-territoriality. Under this Bill, there is not very much that we could do about that. If Exxon were to ship its oil that was bound for Canadians to the United States, then perhaps we could do something about it on the order of an American tribunal.

I brought that example up to show why we in the NDP feel the way we do. However, we are not anti-American and the Minister did not say that we are, although I have heard it bandied about the House. We feel very strongly that we must be careful because we do not have an equal relationship with our great friends in the United States. The United States is a huge empire and we have become and are becoming more and more its colony. There was a book written by Arthur Lower, I believe, entitled Colony to Nation. It is a standard Canadian textbook on Canadian history and politics. It depicts how Canada has moved from a British colony to a free and independent nation. I am afraid that we are going to move from colony to nation to colony. I think that is the danger in the thrust of the Government when it says "ready, aye ready" to the Americans.

In the early part of the century, Arthur Meighen, a previous Conservative Prime Minister, said "ready, aye ready" to the British. The Conservative Party was a Party that wanted to keep Canada a British colony. The progressive forces in this country fought and won the battle and made Canada a nation. I would not like to see us go back to the regressive forces of the country as represented by an element of the Conservative Party which is saying "ready, aye ready" to another colonial power, the United States.

Mr. McDermid: You guys are paranoid.

Mr. Waddell: I do not think we are paranoid. The whole thrust of Canadian history has been to fight for an independent country. Indeed, that is the whole point and I will sit down now. The whole point of this Bill is to try to make sure that American laws that apply extra-territorially do not apply to Canada.

I am saying to the Government that we support this Bill for the reasons indicated by the Minister of Justice and for the reasons I have just indicated, but I would warn the Minister of Justice, in his capacity as a statesman, to be careful. As Tommy Douglas once said, when you are dealing with the Americans, it is like having the elephant dancing among chickens; every fellow for himself. They are a little bigger than we are. We do not need to be paranoid, afraid or anti-American but we do need to be careful and we have to make sure that we do not become an American colony just like we were a British colony in the past. I will conclude with those remarks and with the hope that Bill C-14 can pass through the House today.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Like my colleague who has just resumed his seat, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise at the conclusion of this debate and say to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) that the fact that he has introduced this Bill in the House and that Hon. Members unanimously support it reveals to what extent Parliament is fully aware of the danger that a country such as the United States may represent for the interests of Canada. I should think that, during the short debate today, the Minister of Justice must have realized just how much the messages sent to the Americans by his leader must always be dispatched with some reservations in his mind. He must be made aware that his good faith—and I am convinced that his leader is full of good faith—might cost a bundle to Canada if he is being overly naïve. As we are debating extraterritoriality today, we know full well that, on the part of the United States, it has definitely been a lack of respect for Canadian sovereignty over our own land. No Member of the House would ever stand still before anyone encroaching on Canadian sovereignty, and I am pleased the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) has finally introduced the Bill for adoption by the House.

I would suggest, however, that this prudent approach will have to be maintained in the future. I rather doubt that the leader of the Minister would ever want to become governor of the State of Canada. Keeping in mind that no one wants to become a governor or a servant knight, his party, ours and the New Democratic Party will have to be ever wary of any American move.

I hope as well that this era of allegedly warm friendship will indeed prove to be productive for Canada. We will have to remember that every time a measure is adopted, and I am thinking, among other things, about markings on steel pipes, something which may very well be to the detriment of Canada's industry. There is a series of other measures, and every day I see colleagues opposite who are interested in the pork industry for instance. But they very well know what is going on in the United States, and with that kind of discrimination they intend to handle Canadian pork. I could give dozens of other examples. I hope this legislation is the first in a series that will be introduced to ensure that our Canadian identity remains intact. Unfortunately, if the cultural aspect is any indication of that after the signals we have been getting these last few days, I am somewhat doubtful as to the preservation of an economic identity, let alone a cultural identity. And in that sense, I think that the legal and economic identity can be maintained, although this is a theoretical debate in my view because in fact the American influence on those subsidiaries stretches beyond judicial influence, and is a moral and financial influence that is more powerful than anything the Minister of Justice could do. But anyway this is a favourable signal, and I hope the Americans will perceive it as an opposition to any attempt at intervention in Canadian law and Canadian business.

Therefore, our party is very pleased in the first place, to have introduced the measure some years ago. But the fact that the discussions have not led to any withdrawal of the American extraterritorial claims is a great disappointment to us. Because in relations that are supposed to be serious, finally having to pass such a legislation certainly goes against a spirit of open trade, good relations and friendship. I think that when you shut the door in your neighbour's face, it is not necessarily a sign that you are getting along very well with him. In that sense it is a sad thing that we have to enact such a legislation, and I hope that this new friendship with our American cousins—philosophical cousins of course—will help us set aside such measures that are not very good for our relations. But anyway, we must remain firm if we do not want to be had in those relations.

And as my colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) suggested earlier, this is an unbalanced relationship and to that extent, we must be doubly careful. Moreover, I am convinced the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie)—not that he wanted to get the credit for the legislation—is admitting with this Bill that negotiations between his Government and the American Government have failed, and that he had to resort to such a measure because he could not convince the Americans to withdraw the provisions in their legislation that were unacceptable to the Canadian Government.

I am sorry that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Prime Minister could not convince the Americans of our legal sovereignty. This is a bad start. However, he has honestly recognized his error, his failure to convince the American Government, and he has finally introduced this legislation. We are happy to support it in the hope that in the future those special relations will preclude the need for similar bills, for the reason that, not the equality but the mutual respect of our two countries will be maintained. At any rate, it is not by kneeling before the Americans that we will achieve this in my view.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will not speak at any length, except to say that I remember reading Mr. Lower's book Colony to Nation, and one of our problems is that some people still have the fears that they had when Canada was a colony. Today we are a nation and I believe that we have less to fear.

The most important relationship in the world for us to manage is the one between the United States and Canada. It is largely a matter of attitude. At the moment there is a very healthy relationship between Canada and the U.S., but that does not mean that there will not be conflicts and differences of opinion, particularly in some of the areas which the House has been discussing. That is why this legislation is needed.

We are asking the House to pass this Bill in the absence of a crisis or a battle concerning the particular areas in which problems could arise at any time. We are satisfied that Canada will have a productive relationship with the United States in the next few years. It is a relationship which will benefit both countries. We are Canadians first, last and always. The passage of this Bill will serve to remind people of that. I thank Hon. Members for their contributions and their support for the Bill.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of letting some of the remarks which were made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) go unchallenged. When it comes to nation-building, if the Hon. Member would consult his history books he would find that it was Members of the Progressive Conservative Party—gentlemen such as John A. Macdonald—who did more than anyone else to create the nation of Canada.

I have a couple of comments with respect to the Bill. My first comment deals with the penalties which can be imposed under the Bill—a maximum $10,000 fine under indictment and $5,000 on summary conviction. It would appear to me, in light of some of the transactions and commercial dealings which might be involved under this Bill, that hundreds of millions of dollars, if not billions of dollars, might be involved. That small fine probably is not large enough. Possibly at a future occasion the maximum fines which can be imposed by this Bill could be increased. At the same time, we may want to examine the length of the maximum prison terms. They seem to be somewhat excessive.

The Bill is being passed by the House today because of the extraterritorial jurisdiction claimed by other nations with which we do not agree. If we look at subclause 7(2) we will find that we are not entirely lily white in this respect. The subclause to which I have referred would give Canadian courts jurisdiction over offences under this Bill which are not committed in Canada but outside of the Canadian territorial jurisdiction. It may require the United Nations or some other international body to examine closely the extraterritorial claims of various nations. I can envision a case in which a corporation or an individual may be caught in between the two—can be fined by one side for not complying with the regulations of another country and vice versa. It may require an international organization to examine the extraterritorial claims of jurisdiction to try to bring some order to what could conceivably become a rather difficult situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed, from Wednesday, December 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): As it is nearly one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 12.56 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

SERVICE REDUCTIONS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government recently announced cut-backs to postal services in Prince Edward Island. While the post offices are small, the impact is not.

I would like to read to this House a letter I received from one concerned Islander. It states, and I quote:

> The Victoria Village Council, on behalf of the residents and established businesses of Victoria and the surrounding community, vigorously protest the reduction of working hours of the Victoria post office.
> The post mistress, Annie Craig, is a 60-year old widow with no other means of employment. This is her only source of livelihood. It is regrettable that government restraint can deprive people who have worked, raised a family and contributed to the welfare of the province, of maintaining a meagre living.
> We trust you will use your influence in this situation and work on our behalf to retain Victoria post office at its present status.

Canada Post also announced cut-backs to the Richmond, Lennox Island, and Miminegash post offices in my riding. Will the next cut-backs take Saturday rural mail delivery away from Prince Edward Island? I hope that the Prime Minister and his Cabinet can assure us that this will not happen.

THE THIRD WORLD

AMOUNT OF MILITARY EXPENDITURES

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, a major obstacle to Third World development is military expenditure by both developed and developing countries. Some of the Third World's biggest military spenders are also the smallest achievers in social and economic progress. In 1980, for example, Ethiopia's military expenditures represented 10 per cent of its Gross National Product, its purchases being dominantly from the Soviet Union. Although each developing country has a right to provide for its own defence, it also has an obligation to give priority to its people's human needs.

As an aiding country, Canada can surely help improve this situation. We can review, for example, our own arms exports to the Third World. One estimate puts a $150 million figure on those shipments. We can also review our own aid policies and persuade assisted countries to limit their military budgets, for example, to perhaps 1 per cent of their Gross National Product. We can, as well, support creating an international arms register that would record the massive arms traffic around the world, including the Third World. Such measures, Mr. Speaker, would not weaken Governments in the Third World. I am confident that they can strengthen their people.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN VOTE AGAINST NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREEZE RESOLUTION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, Canadians, and indeed people everywhere, must be greatly disappointed today. Despite the assertion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that peace was his dearest wish and that Canada would exert a more creative presence at the United Nations, and despite the assurances of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Ambassador for Disarmament that Canada would play a leading role in the search for disarmament and peace, Canada has again voted against a nuclear weapons freeze at the UN. Yesterday we were one of only 12 nations to vote no to a superpower freeze.

In recent weeks, thousands of Canadians have tried to pursuade the Government to change its mind on this issue. Since Canada's "no" vote on November 20, Canadians from coast to coast have written to, and pleaded with the Government to support the UN call for a mutual, balanced, verifiable nuclear weapons freeze between the superpowers. Like the Liberals before it, the Government has ignored public opinion, public pleading, and the urgency of action to halt the nuclear arms race.

This week in the House the New Democratic Party tried to persuade the Government of the wisdom and need to support this UN effort. The Government did not listen. Instead, the Conservatives chose to take the same outdated advice, most of it emanating from the Pentagon, as the Liberals did before them. On this crucial issue of nuclear disarmament there is sadly no difference between those two old Parties, and nothing new about Canada's new Government—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

PETRO-CANADA

RETURN ON EQUITY QUESTIONED

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in this day of financial restraint I rise to question the prudency of our investment of $4.2 billion in Petro-Canada. A recent analysis of Petro-Canada shows a 1.2 per cent return on equity versus a 9.9 per cent return for similar companies. Is part of this poor earning record due to paying too much for Petrofina and BP? Consider, Mr. Speaker, that the same analysis estimates that Petro-Canada's assets are overstated by about $2 billion. Further, I question some of its decisions.

The company has a huge inventory of unused office space in Calgary. For example, the Hanover building was rented at about $20,000 per day, starting in April, 1982. Now, 950 days later, it is still three-quarters empty. That is a waste of about $15 million.

The Petrofina takeover is only one portion of the question. One has to look at all operations, the takeovers, real estate, operating costs, and the management. I call for a parliamentary inquiry to ascertain if the taxpayers' investment of $4.2 billion was a prudent investment and if the company was, and is, as well managed as similar Canadian companies.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, now that the Government, because of strong pressures, seems to be seeing a glimmer of light in its foggy perspective of its role in the environment, and has decided to continue monitoring the effects of forest pesticides on migratory birds, the effects of toxics in the Great Lakes on the herring gull, and the migration patterns of the caribou in the north, and is also making some positive noises about keeping the interpretation centres open. I urge the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), and the Government, to acknowledge at last that the environment is important, and to rescind the shameful decision to cut down the strength of the Canadian Wildlife Service.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

CALL FOR AMENDMENTS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, in southwestern Manitoba, as well as in Saskatchewan and Alberta, drought conditions and a grasshopper infestation have damaged or destroyed much of this year's crop. As a result, many prairie farmers are experiencing serious cash flow problems. I know my colleagues, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), are well aware of these problems, and I applaud the positive steps which have been taken to date. However, Mr. Speaker, I believe that more can be done.

Since many farmers urgently need cash in order to seed next spring, I strongly urge the Government to introduce amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Farmers in my area are encouraged by recent indications that there will be a large pay-out from the stabilization fund next year. It is my belief that a significant portion of that money should be made available to prairie farmers prior to spring seeding. In addition, the Act should be amended so that the initial payments can be made during the spring of future years when a pay-out is to be triggered.

For too long the former Liberal Government waffled on this issue, while the fund grew and farmers became more desperate. I expect the new Government, therefore, to act quickly to bring forward the necessary legislation so that western Canadian farmers will have a fighting chance next spring.

SUPPORT FOR INCREASED CORPORATE TAXES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate Winnipeg businessman, Albert Cohen, President of Gendis Corporation, who believes that large Canadian corporations should be paying higher taxes to help reduce Canada's deficit. Mr. Cohen proposed that corporations should pay 2 per cent more in corporate taxes for the next three years, and has urged the Canadian Chamber of Commerce to support this idea.

Given the size of our deficit and the fact that, according to the Auditor General, the cost to Canadians in tax expenditures, most of which benefits go to these corporations, is somewhere between $30 billion and $50 billion, I feel that the time is perfect to follow Mr. Cohen's suggestion.

PROGRAM OF ALLOCATION TO SPOUSES—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, a recent Gallup poll has shown that 57 per cent of Canadians disagreed about the stupid decision of the Government to waste $36 million in public funds to change the colour of the Canadian forces uniform.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the members of this House, whatever their party, will have the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) come back to his senses and transfer those $36 million to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to prevent any discrimination against senior citizens who will be denied access to his program of spouse allowances merely because they are single, separated or divorced.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I am against the party which is being prepared in the House of Commons in view of the wasteful expenditures made on fir trees. I do not know if a friend of the Prime Minister had a lot of fir trees to sell but I think that money should have been used to help the needy.

APPEAL AGAINST ACQUITTAL BY TORONTO JURY

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, the laws of our land are becoming a mockery in light of the outcome of the Morgentaler trial. I heartily commend Attorney General Roy McMurtry on appealing the Morgentaler case on the grounds that Dr. Morgentaler clearly admitted he broke the law, yet a jury saw fit to disregard the law and take upon itself the responsibility to judge whether a particular set of circumstances justified a specific law being broken. The job of the jury was not to decide whether the law was just or not; the job of the jury was to determine whether Dr. Morgentaler had broken the law.

Either the law of the land is to be adhered to, Mr. Speaker, or it should be abolished. Obviously the latter is not a logical choice. However, the outcome of this trial has set a dangerous precedent, one that cannot be accepted by the Crown or the people of Canada.

The jury selection in the Morgentaler trial made a mockery of that system as well. I urge our Attorneys General and Minister of Justice to make every effort to prevent this from ever happening again. The discrimination against upstanding, honest, hard-working Canadians, because they were churchgoers or occasionally attended church, was appalling.

I applaud Mr. McMurtry on making a difficult decision politically, but one that was in the best interests of all Canadians.

REFERRAL TO AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to suggest to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) that he should read the report of the Auditor General before describing the actions of this government as stupid.

When the Auditor General points out that there was a small mistake of $3.5 billion in the F-18 program, it is hard for my constituents to understand. When he says that the deficit was pratically out of control, he confirms what we were saying during the electoral campaign and he confirms that Canadians were right to think that it was about time to get rid of the previous Government, which was out of control. There is still room to skim off the fat. One federal employee in five is over-classified, which goes against the legislation and regulations approved by this House. We find that a bolt that should have cost $9 did in fact cost $1,900. If this is what the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) wants, he should take the time to read this report before calling the decisions made by this House stupid.

This report proves what we have always maintained. It summarizes what we were saying during the campaign.

ENERGY

BRITISH COLUMBIA OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT—CRITICISM OF ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEW PANEL

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the federal-provincial panel reviewing environmental impacts of offshore drilling in British Columbia lacks credibility because of its restrictive terms of reference. The panel is not even able to ask the basic question of whether or not Canada requires offshore drilling to meet energy needs. Although B.C.'s offshore area is subject to aboriginal claims, the panel is specifically prohibited from dealing with aboriginal rights. B.C. Indians are justifiably worried that, while land claims are being stalled, their resources are being ripped off and their environment destroyed.

Petro-Canada, which possess offshore leases, has shown the farcical nature of the panel by declining even to take part. It claims the cost of providing information is too high. Finally, no funding has been provided for intervenors. Communities which would be devastated by any offshore drilling accident do not have the funds to make full and adequate study of the risks involved.

This farcical panel was appointed by the previous Government. I call on the present Government not to lift the moratorium on offshore drilling until a proper study has been done. Intervenor funding must be provided, aboriginal rights must be considered, and the question of energy need must be raised.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It appears that the federal Government has made a contract, or deal, with the Province of Newfoundland concerning the offshore. On June 14 the Prime Minister, when he was Leader of the Opposition, wrote to Premier Peckford outlining the proposals of his Party for an offshore deal. Does the agreement, negotiated and apparently concluded with Newfoundland, reflect the provisions of that letter to Premier Peckford, and would he arrange that his Minister table the agreement in the House as soon as possible so the people of Newfoundland and the rest of Canada can review the terms?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I thank my right hon. friend for raising a very important issue, Mr. Speaker. In point of fact the matter has not yet been fully concluded. Under the direction of the Minister of Energy the talks have progressed extremely well. There is a meeting of minds and agreement in principle in some very major areas—almost all, I understand. There appear to be some housekeeping items and some tightening up to do, and we expect that at an early moment there will be a final agreement because such an agreement would be very much in the interests of Newfoundland and Labrador, and Canada.

ELIMINATION OF BACK-IN PROVISIONS IN NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in that same letter the Prime Minister, when he was Leader of the Opposition, assured Premier Peckford that the Crown-carried share in offshore Newfoundland and Labrador would be equally shared by both Governments. In light of his statement in New York city earlier in the week, where he proposed the elimination of the back-in provisions of the National Energy Program, how is the Province of Newfoundland going to be compensated?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it will be compensated financially, with money and with new opportunities, when the negotiations are completed. What has happened so far appears to be fully consistent with the agreement I worked out with Premier Peckford in June, and not at all inconsistent with the thrust of the statement I made in New York and which I made elsewhere in the country.

I want to assure my right hon. friend, and other Members of the House, because I know we all regard this as very important, that when the deal is concluded in its final form and brought to the House for approval, he will be satisfied that indeed this is an extremely worth-while and long-awaited agreement very much in the interests of the development of Newfoundland. It will open new opportunities to Newfoundlanders and other Canadians, as well as broaden our energy perspectives around the world.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Of course we hope that is true.

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in that same letter to Premier Peckford the right hon. gentleman assured the people of Newfoundland that there would be no dollar for dollar loss in equalization payments as a result of revenues flowing from the offshore. In light of the Prime Minister's current conversations with the Premier of Manitoba and with Premier Lévesque of Quebec relating to equalization payments, can he guarantee to the people of Newfoundland that there will be no loss in equalization payments?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have always felt the concept of federalism is sharing, sharing wealth and opportunity. Newfoundland has been a deprived province for too long and this Government, hopefully with the concurrence of all Members of the House, will take some very definite and positive steps to ensure that the people of Newfoundland and Labrador finally get a fair kick at the can here in Canada.

ROLE OF ONTARIO PREMIER

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I was astounded to learn that before Parliament was consulted, before the people of Newfoundland were consulted, Bill Davis was consulted. He approved the deal. He said: "It's okay, they're poor". I want to know why the Premier of Ontario was consulted. I want to know exactly what role he played in this deal. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, "check it with Erik" has been replaced with "check it with Bill".

Mr. Crosbie: Who did you check it with?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it has been the desire of both our Party and Premier Peckford and the Government of Newfoundland that any deal struck with Newfoundland should be in the national interest. The only way one can determine what the national interest is, is to talk to all the people involved.

In the formulation of the Atlantic accord back in the spring, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and I were in touch with other Premiers of other provinces, including Alberta, the Maritimes, and the Premier of Ontario, because we were breaking new ground. We were determined that we were going to use the accord as an instrument of equality for Newfoundlanders.

When I talked to the Premier on this matter, I pointed out that the average income in Newfoundland is 57 per cent of the national average. That is why they are poor.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Miss Carney: The premiers we have talked to agreed with us that the accord could be an instrument to bring equality and fairness to Newfoundland.

TRAINING IN OFFSHORE SKILLS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, only if Newfoundlanders have skills will they get jobs in the offshore. Why is there absolutely no mention of education or training in this agreement? What does the Government intend to do about training because, if it does not do something, Bill Davis's assessment of poor Newfoundlanders will be true eternally.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would say that this is a classic case of sour grapes. Don't you believe in good news?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: Answer the question.

Miss Carney: I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he wait until he sees the full agreement. We have a draft agreement of 62 clauses, in which more work has to be done in some technical areas.

Mr. Rompkey: You have shown it to Davis and not to us.

Miss Carney: We will certainly be presenting it in the House.

PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This morning the Minister of Finance told La Presse that universality is a luxury of the past. In September it was a sacred trust; in October it was negotiable, and now, as of this morning, universality is out the window. Who speaks for the Government, the Prime Minister of Canada or the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the press report that I have makes no such reference. I am sure that it is an inadvertent distortion of the facts.

The Minister of Finance is reported as saying that the awarding of social benefits to persons earning more than the national average—he did not refer to universality at all, at least in the press reports I have—

Mr. Deans: What are you talking about? Do you understand what is written there?

Mr. Mulroney: While I suppose it is open for debate or discussion, all he was saying was that his objective was to try to put more money into the hands of Canadians who need it most. The poor and the dispossessed in our society need more benefits than the bank president making $500,000 a year. That is exactly what we want to do.

Mr. Deans: Sit down. Don't be absurd.

SOCIAL CONTRACT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Does the Prime Minister not acknowledge that there has been a sacred social contract between the people of Canada and the Government of Canada regarding social programs? Is he now prepared to break this contract?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the traditions of this Party have been consistent from the very beginning. Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. Stanfield, among others, had occasion to debate this in the House, and did so with great honour to the Party and the country. We stand for social justice. We stand for social programs. We stand for equality of opportunity, and we also stand for an examination to try to help those in our society who genuinely need assistance. There are too many people in this country living below the poverty line. We are trying to help them before we help those who do not need that kind of assistance.

OECD REPORT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, surely the Prime Minister is aware that OECD studies show that Canada ranks second to last in social spending, and that people are suffering greatly? Will he agree today that there will be no cuts to old age pensions and family allowances? People are confused. Give us the truth.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it was a matter of inadvertence again. With regard to the OECD study to which the Hon. Member refers, in which Canada was second to last, health care was not included. If it was, it would have raised Canada almost to the top of the list. That is what is wrong with the NDP position.

Ms. Mitchell: I am talking about social programs.

Mr. Mulroney: I regret to say that my hon. friend, from time to time, has selective amnesia. I want to deal with that because we indeed stand firmly committed to assisting old age pensioners. We stand firmly committed to aiding all of those in Canadian society who need and deserve the help of the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS

DOLPHIN DELIVERY CASE—GOVERNMENT FACTUM

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns a factum submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada by the Government on September 3 in the Dolphin Delivery case. Does the Prime Minister stand behind the position taken by the Attorney General that the Charter should be narrowed so that citizens are not protected from encroachments on their freedom of expression and freedom of association where those encroachments arise under common law? Or is this another orphan similar to the one the other day for which the Government disclaims paternity?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that is a gross and wilful exaggeration of the position taken by the Government of Canada. The Government of Canada has not argued any diminution in the Charter of Rights of Canada. This was a case that, on the facts, relates to private parties only in a relationship governed exclusively by the common law, without any legislation or government action in issue. In those circumstances, the Charter has no application.

We have intervened in every major court case and supported the Charter of Rights in many of them. Therefore, the question is an absolute distortion of the situation.

Mr. Kaplan: It is not a distortion. In his answer the Minister just referred to the common law as being excluded from protection in the Charter. That is exactly my question.

COMMON LAW RIGHTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is admitting that common law rights are to be excluded by the Government, will he agree that in the future all factums in which the federal Government intends to stand against the rights of the citizens, as it has done in this case, and against the Charter, as in the MacDonald case, will be reviewed by full Cabinet before they are sent to court?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, no such action has occurred, nor will any review by the Cabinet be necessary. The Attorney General is in charge of these proceedings. We have intervened in case after case to support Charter rights and we will continue to do so.

When we think it is a situation where the Charter does not apply, as in the particular case to which the hon. gentleman is referring, a legal opinion will govern, not some cheapskate, political opinion to twist things, as the hon. gentleman is attempting to do.

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAX RATE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is is the position of the Government of Canada that in the near future the Government will reduce the already low 15 per cent corporate tax rate by introducing additional incentives for foreign investment in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No.

NEW YORK TIMES REPORT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, will he then look into the relationship between the Minister of Finance and Dr. Michael R. Graham, Vice-President of Dominion Securities Pitfield Limited, to determine why Dr. Graham, in an article in The New York Times, indicated that such measures were likely to take place?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am completely unaware of any of the information to which the Hon. Member refers. I will take it under advisement and ask the Minister of Finance to explain.

JUDICIAL BILINGUALISM—MINISTER OF JUSTICE FACTUM

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

For a week we have been asking the Government questions about the MacDonald case. The House will recall that a broad interpretation of Section 133 is being requested in Quebec to allow Canadians to receive bilingual introductory documents. The Government's position is based on an opinion given by the Department of Justice. The MacDonald case is about rights that are important to Canada's linguistic minorities. I would like to ask my question, considering the Prime Minister's statement yesterday in the House, at page 1150 of Hansard:

● (1430)

We believe—

Referring to your Party.

—in the defence of minority rights.

Will the Right Hon. Prime Minister do today what he promised yesterday, that is, revise his position, withdraw this factum from the Supreme Court and inform the House today of his decision?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Justice, who can take care of his own Department, has answered the question correctly. If I am not mistaken, Mr. MacDonald, the protagonist in this case, said yesterday on the TV news that he was satisfied with the representations made by the Minister. Nevertheless, since I have not had an opportunity to read the factum personally, and considering all the attention it is getting, especially from my hon. friend, I shall read it very carefully on the weekend and subsequently report back to my hon. friend. If, after consultation with the Minister, I reach the conclusion that it would be wise to examine this case from another angle, I shall do so without delay.

COURT CHALLENGES PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Secretary of State, the Minister responsible for official languages and also responsible for the Court Challenges Program, and who has financed Mr. MacDonald to the tune of $35,000. Was the position stated in the factum submitted by the Minister of Justice the result of a consultation with the Secretary of State, and is there an agreement between the Secretary of State and the Minister of Justice regarding consultations on these matters?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member I wish to remind him that the intention of the Court Challenge Program is to deal with test cases. The intention of it is arm's length from the substance of the cases involved.

The arguments here, as the Hon. Member will know, are parallel to similar cases in which previous Governments have intervened in this way. In that circumstance the Secretary of State is not involved with the Minister of Justice in the substance of the issue.

BENEFIT OF REVIEW PROCESS FOR CANADIAN SUPPLIERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this is a question for the Prime Minister on the continuing melodrama of FIRA.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: Research analysis of FIRA by the son of the Minister for Mining has shown that one positive benefit of FIRA review was to introduce small, new foreign investors to Canadian suppliers from whom the foreign firms then bought supplies. Why will the Prime Minister not keep this review process for new investors, which process has had such positive benefits for Canadian suppliers and the jobs they provide?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter is presently being debated before the House. It may very well be that my hon. friend, with his special concern and knowledge of that area, will be able to persuade Members of the House of the validity of his views, in which case they will be incorporated into the final piece of legislation.

I can say that we have broached the matter with open minds in the hope, and in the knowledge, that all Members of the House will take the kinds of positive attitudes expressed by the Hon. Member and support legislation designed to create new jobs and new opportunities in Canada.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain if it is open minds or vacant minds.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: Yours?

Mr. Langdon: Let me ask the Prime Minister whether he would be prepared, in view of his recognition that there is some substance in the case on this point, to make a recommendation to his own Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion that this particular part of the Bill be reviewed and reconsidered—

Mr. Speaker: I am in very great difficulty. I did not realize the subject of the first question was coming this way. The Member does not know, I am sure, because it is a rule peculiar to this House, that questions put during Question Period that are anticipatory of a debate later in the day are not to be permitted. Since the matter is called for debate, I am now in some difficulty having allowed the first question.

Perhaps I could simply explain my problem to the Member and go on to the next questioner. I am sorry I did not catch that on the first question. I have some sympathy for the Member since he is caught in a position that is of my making, and I apologize.

The Hon. Member for Sudbury.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I want to say that the Conservatives can worry about the bank presidents, but Liberals are going to worry about average Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Frith: In light of the Minister of Finance's interview with La Presse yesterday, can the Prime Minister tell us whether Canadian families who earn $35,000 a year or more are to expect cuts in their old age security cheques and in their family allowances?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

SOCIAL SPENDING AS PERCENTAGE OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister indicate to the House why his Government is not prepared to increase social spending in light of the study by the OECD countries which shows that Canada ranks sixth out of seven of the richest industrialized nations in the amount per cent of Gross National Product spent on social expenditures?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we appear to be moving up, depending upon which Party is asking the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: We have moved from the bottom to sixth. In point of fact we are third per capita in social spending.

The Hon. Member raises a good question, because we have increased social spending for widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64, and we have increased it as well for veterans who fought for Canada and who deserve our recognition and help at this moment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

CANADIAN COMPANIES' RECORD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who knows how important research and development are to allow Canadian enterprise to expand. Is the Prime Minister and the Government aware that Canadian firms do five times the amount of research and development through to production than do foreign firms of the same size?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the fact that Canada over the last 15 years has spent less per capita on research and development than any industrialized country, with the exception of Iceland and Ireland. This Government is designing policies to attract national and international investment and to have research and development dramatically expanded here. We are going to ensure that that the research and development component is extended irrespective of the nationality of the capital, because that is what creates durable jobs in Canada.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will know that has not been the case.

ROLE OF INVESTMENT CANADA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that Canadian firms do significantly more research and development through to production than foreign firms, will the Prime Minister explain how getting rid of the review process in Investment Canada is going to assist us in expanding that R & D sector?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Investment Canada is not an omnibus piece of legislation designed to correct all of the ills. It is a piece of legislation designed to enhance the creation of employment by the attraction of international investment capital here. There will be other legislative instruments designed to enhance research and development because we believe firmly, and I think we will bring in legislative instruments which my hon. friend will applaud, that research and development must be substantially enhanced here in Canada if we are to achieve the levels of prosperity and employment that we need.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST TRAGEDY—PROVISION OF WEATHER REPORTS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister will recall early in November the tragic deaths of five fishermen off the coast of British Columbia. At that time the people of British Columbia were concerned that inadequate weather information may have been a contributing factor to the tragedy. Over a month has passed. Can the Minister advise the House of the status of his inquiry into this tragedy? In light of proposed cut-backs in weather services, could he assure the House that adequate weather information is and will continue to be in place to prevent such tragedies from occurring in the future?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her important question. The report was handed to me today from my colleague, the Minister of the Environment. That report indicates that weather reporting was inadequate. It also makes recommendations with respect to the Department of Fisheries that all vessels report weather conditions as they find them on a daily basis, and that before any fishing openings are made consultations take place between Department of Fisheries and Department of the Environment atmospheric services. I ordered my Department today to make those arrangements.

With respect to cut-backs, there will be no cut-backs affecting the efficiency of weather reporting on the West Coast.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

SIGNING OF DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC—INDIAN DIMENSION QUERY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Tomorrow the Government of Canada and the Government of Quebec will sign a $1 billion five-year development agreement. The Indians of Quebec have been shocked to learn there is no provision in that agreement directing some of these moneys to Indian and native developments. There are equivalent provisions in the development agreements with Ontario, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. Would the Prime Minister assure us that he will raise this matter immediately with the Premier of Quebec and take steps to amend the agreement before it is signed tomorrow?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the IRDA agreement deals with items of economic development as raised, by and large, by various provincial premiers. The agreements, at least the ones we've tried to sign, reflect a rhythm of development within the provinces as selected by provincial Governments. I know that in a parallel way the Ministry of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been having many consultations with regard to native peoples.

If my hon. friend is of the view that there should be more integration, I would be happy to take a look at it. However, I can tell him that it appears that this agreement, which is the first the Government of Quebec will have signed with the federal Government in many, many years, will be very creative of job opportunities and employment for Quebecers. It is regarded as a major development in the Province of Quebec by all Quebecers who view economic development in co-operation with the federal Government as a step forward.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I must advise the Prime Minister that in the agreement signed with other provinces—and in the one signed by the Province of Ontario—there were specific provisions ensuring that Indians, Métis, and Inuit are not forgotten. Will the Prime Minister consult with the Minister of Indian Affairs to make sure that before tomorrow there is a possibility of including in this agreement, as is the case with other provinces, the same type of provision to ensure that some of that $1 billion goes to the Indians and Inuit of Quebec for their economic development? It is very important.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can give my hon. friend the firm assurance that the Indians and Inuit of Quebec, many of whom live in my riding and even vote for me, will not be forgotten at any time or in any circumstances.

INDIAN ECONOMIC BENEFITS ISSUE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Minister knows that if native people are not involved in the framework agreement, it will be almost impossible for them to have any kind of involvement in subsidiary agreements. How is it possible for an agreement to be drawn up between Canada and Quebec without including significant economic benefits for Indian people?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think there are two points which I could suggest to the Hon. Member. First, his premise is wrong. Second, economic benefits, both within and outside the agreement, will of course flow to those people affected in the Province of Quebec.

METRIC CONVERSION

DUAL LABELLING PROPOSAL

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Could he confirm reports to the effect that he is about to permit dual labelling, both in metric and in imperial measures? Having consulted with consumer, business, teaching, and science representatives across Canada, who all gave him the same advice, is he now prepared to ignore it? Has he caved in to the Neanderthals in his caucus?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have had consultations with different interest groups and I am now drafting my recommendations. I intend to submit them to my Cabinet colleagues at the earliest opportunity, and then I will make the appropriate announcement.

Mr. Berger: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When will the Minister make up his mind? He has been dragging his feet for three months now. Does he not know yet that one third of our income comes from our exports and that the cost of the two systems is higher?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important not to proceed too rapidly so as to make the most logical and effective decision in the best interests of Canadians. That is what this government will do.

AGRICULTURE

TRANSMITTAL OF FAMILY FARMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

Knowing the difficulties experienced in property transfers, such as a farm transmitted from father to one of his children, particularly with respect to tax matters, I would like to know what measures he will take to improve the situation and make it easier to transfer family farms from one generation to the next.

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question and his concern. Perhaps his question might be more appropriately directed to the Minister of Finance. However, it is my understanding at the moment that legislation allows for the transfer of the family farm from father to son or daughter, whatever the case may be, without a capital gains payment, providing the actual sale price is that of the valuation day value.

In addition, we now have a Bill before the Senate which would allow the seller to invest up to $120,000 in an RRSP providing he has been in the farming business for at least 10 years. The Minister of Finance in his economic statement referred the very important matter of capital—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Minister might want to send a letter.

HIBERNIA OILFIELD DEVELOPMENT—PROJECTED COST OF OIL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I want to say to her that all reasonable Canadians must applaud the fact that the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland have finally come to an agreement over Hibernia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Having said that, given that the world price of oil is between $28 and $30 U.S. per barrel, would the Minister tell us what are the most recent projections of her Department for the price of a barrel of Hibernia oil?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member welcomes the Newfoundland agreement. I think that he and members of the Opposition should wake up every morning and say: "Thank God we have a Conservative Government in Ottawa."—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the Minister would like to answer the question.

Miss Carney: To answer the question, which is extremely timely, all the projections that we have—and I have been briefed on this recently by Energy Ministers of other countries—show that oil prices should start increasing again in the early 1990s. They are in a stable mode now, but they are expected to head upwards in the 1990s. That is why it is important we bring Hibernia on now, so that we have energy security in 1990-92 when we expect the prices will be higher.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that some analysts have projected $60 per barrel for Hibernia oil, if world prices do not rise, are the Government and the Minister's Department contemplating a pricing system in Canada where there will be two prices—a price for the world oil market and a higher price to Canadian consumers for Hibernia oil or tar sands oil? Is that what the Government is contemplating for Canadian consumers?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

THE CENSUS

CANCELLATION OF 1986 ENUMERATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, thank God we have a vibrant opposition in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: In the absence of the Minister of Finance, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. According to the Canadian Press wire service and an internal report of Statistics Canada, the Government has overpaid $217 million in equalization grants over a five year period because the census data are not entirely up to date. According to the same report, estimates over 10 years would make matters far worse in the absence of a census. Will the Prime Minister tell us what consultation was held with the provinces before cancelling the census? Also, how much money will the provinces lose because of inadequate census data?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose nobody could lose as much money as the previous Government lost and be damned for it by the Auditor General for mismanagement and abuse of public funds.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: What we are trying to do, with a sense of fairness, is to save some of the taxpayers' dollars and to treat the taxpayers' dollars with frugality. I would have thought, notwithstanding some temporary inconvenience, that my hon. friend would be applauding to save taxpayers' dollars, rather than rising on a constant stream of red herrings.

DEPUTY MINISTER'S VIEWS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Finance. According to the same report Mr. Jean Fournier, Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance, is quoted as saying—

Mr. Speaker: With respect, does the Hon. Member want to put his question?

Mr. Boudria: Can the Minister inform the House whether those view of her Deputy Minister were the same views expressed by the Minister of Finance when he cancelled the 1986 Census?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, the microphone went off and I did not hear the quote from Mr. Fournier. I apologize to the House.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Member will send you the quote, and you can read it.

ACQUISITION OF NEWFOUNDLAND PAPER MILL—LABOUR LEGISLATION REQUIREMENT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. On November 23 of this year, under the provisions of FIRA, the Government gave permission for Kruger Inc., a foreign controlled company, to acquire the Bowater Mill in Corner Brook, Newfoundland. That company has now stated that it will withdraw its offer unless the provincial Government passes legislation which would change the Labour Standards Act retroactively to 1978. Will the Minister tell this House if that change in the Labour Standards Act was agreed to by FIRA? If not, will he tell this House what he is prepared to do to ensure that that company has to abide by the laws that were in place when the FIRA agreement was reached?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that it is not customary to discuss ongoing decisions and conversations and, for that matter, even the undertakings with respect to FIRA matters. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want me to break the precedent that has been set for so long.

POLICY INQUIRY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, given the Minister's answer, will he tell this House just how far the Government is prepared to go to attract foreign capital to Canada, and whether the price we will have to pay will be the elimination of child labour laws, minimum wage laws, health and safety laws, and environmental protection laws, all of which have been targeted by the corporate sector? How far is the Government prepared to go?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I think most Members would agree that we hear much nonsense in this House from time to time, but rarely such utter rubbish as the Member put in his question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRPORTS

LONDON, ONT. AIRPORT CONTROL ZONE

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. One week from today the control zone over the airport at London, Ontario, is scheduled to be reduced from 10 miles to five miles. This is as a result of a Ministry of Transport directive issued last year. According to the base user organizations in London, this reduction raises—

Mr. Speaker: With due respect to the Hon. Member, does he have a question, please?

Mr. Hockin: About the safety of aircraft. The Minister and his officials met with these groups—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member leaves me no choice. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie.

SPOUSES ALLOCATION PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Prime Minister, in the replies you gave earlier to the Member of the NDP and to my colleague about the meeting with the Minister of Finance to discuss social programs, you did say that your Government wants to help people in need, especially senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Malépart: Can the Prime Minister tell me whether he has changed his mind and his reply means that the 80,000 senior citizens who are single, separated or divorced will now receive assistance under the spouse allowance program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no question. We only heard a statement. There was no question. I could perhaps continue my reply to the question asked by my good friend from London West.

[English]

I want to know a little about the London, Ontario, airport.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Then the Prime Minister should ask the Minister of Transport to make a statement, under Statements by Ministers, about the London, Ontario, airport.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is evading his responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

An Hon. Member: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member has a question, and I presume the House is ready to hear it.

Mr. Malépart: Would the Prime Minister tell us whether he has reviewed his decision and whether his Government will help from now on those 80,000 senior citizens who are single, separated or divorced, under the Spouse Allowance Program?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, we are going to help those in our society who have been neglected by the previous Government. As the Minister of Finance clearly indicated in his speech, they deserve special attention from this Government. We are going to help them unhesitatingly and unequivocally.

NORTHEASTERN SASKATCHEWAN FARMERS—FLOOD COMPENSATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. About four or five weeks ago in this House he said that Treasury Board would be considering some assistance for the farmers in northeast Saskatchewan who were flooded out last summer. Did the Minister get that through Treasury Board, will there be assistance to those farmers, and why is it taking so long?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, I can appreciate his interest in the matter. I did not think it was four or five weeks ago that I made that statement. I might put his mind at ease. We have completed the calculations on the Saskatchewan Manitoba excess water compensation. We are in the final stages of assessing a similar compensation payment to the Province of Quebec. I hope to be in a position, within a matter of a very few days, to make a positive announcement with respect to both.

RATIO OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign the Minister's Party promised that it would put up two dollars for every dollar put up by the provincial Government. Can he assure the House today that that promise will be kept?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Not exactly at this point in time, Mr. Speaker.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE—ARCTIC BIOLOGICAL STATION EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As he knows, the Arctic Biological Station at Ste. Anne de Bellevue is to be closed as part of the Fisheries and Oceans cuts. Why has his office now advised all those who work there that they are not to make comments of any kind to the media, to the public, to Members of Parliament, or to any other government representative?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of any such suggestion. I think it is probably quite inaccurate because I can assure my hon. friend that that would be completely inconsistent with my own views and with the wishes of the Government. We want the public to be fully informed of government policy.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague, the Government House Leader, a question to enable him to set before the House the business he proposes for the House for the coming week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to my hon. colleague and to the House. We are ending this part of the session and are coming to the Christmas recess. We appear to be making progress on some items of legislation and I must say I appreciate the co-operation extended by both opposition Parties in this regard. I think this demonstrates to Canadians that we can make legislative progress while having sincere and good debates on the issues on which there may be differences.

I would like to bring forward some items on which we may make progress over the course of the next three days. Today we will carry on with the consideration of the Bill relating to Investment Canada, Bill C-15. Tomorrow I would like to call Bill C-8, the Bill with respect to the PGRT, for second reading and I think there might be a disposition to deal with all stages of that Bill in the House of Commons tomorrow. If we can complete that Bill tomorrow, I propose that we return to the debate on Investment Canada at the end of the day if we have not completed it by then.

On Monday it is my intention to call Bill C-13, a Bill relating to public works in Canada. Again, my understanding is that there may be a disposition to deal with that Bill in all stages including Committee of the Whole. If we complete the consideration of that Bill on Monday, it would be my intention to return to Bill C-15, relating to Investment Canada.

I think my hon. friend and I should keep in touch with each other. There will be further discussions that will take place with respect to progress on legislation which we hope to have the House deal with before the Christmas recess. At this point in time I propose only to deal with the business up until the end of Monday. I will give the assurance that I will consult with my colleagues in the opposition Parties with respect to business for the rest of the week. However, I think that depends very much on the progress that is made. Of course, the business that I have announced is always subject to the usual caveat that it may be changed in the event that circumstances or priorities change.

CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, to the honourable the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, the petition of the undersigned residents of the District of Muskoka in the Province of Ontario, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will thereafter provide a remedy, humbly—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I rise to advise the Hon. Member, as I have advised other Hon. Members, that he is in fact reading the petition. He should simply provide the House with a short summary or synopsis of the purpose and intent of the petition as opposed to reading it.

Mr. Darling: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This petition deals with the return of capital punishment and the undersigned hope that this House will give serious consideration to this. Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reinstate the death penalty for the murders of police officers and prison guards and for premeditated murder.

Introduction of Bills

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-216, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act (political rights).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to provide public servants with the right to engage in political activity, as may any other Canadian who is not a public servant, and to be a candidate in a federal, provincial or territorial election. It would add political allegiance and activities to the list of things they can do and would provide the right for a public servant to engage in political activity after working hours.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

LOUIS DAVID RIEL

MEASURE TO REVOKE CONVICTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-217, an Act to revoke the conviction of Louis David Riel.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, 1985 will mark the 100th anniversary of the conviction and hanging of Louis Riel. The purpose of this Bill is to revoke the conviction of Louis David Riel for high treason as opposed to merely granting him a posthumous pardon.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-218, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons-free zone.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, to lend strength to Canada's arguments and efforts to achieve a nuclear freeze and nuclear arms reductions, this Bill will declare Canada to be a nuclear weapons-free nation.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 38 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

PUBLIC WORKS—CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 38—Mr. Howie:

On January 1, 1984, were any Department of Public Works construction projects under way in New Brunswick and, if so, what were they?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member wish to be recognized on this matter?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I have had a question on the Order Paper for some time, question No. 1. It deals with the RCMP hiring policy for people who have for a very long time put considerable expense into this matter and it is creating a great hardship on applicants. I wonder if the return related to question No. 1 could be inquired into by the Hon. Member to see if the answer could be expedited. I am sure that a number of people may drop their applications and seek other occupational activities depending on the outcome. I think the question is based on fairness and a real need for people to have some information and probably a policy statement put forward by the Solicitor General.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise in my capacity as House Leader to ask whether the Parliamentary Secretary, over the course of the next few days could review the Opposition questions which have been on the Order Paper for some time to determine whether they might be answered. I notice that the practice of late has been to answer questions from government Members, perhaps inadvertently, but there have been many Opposition questions. I wonder whether he could look into the matter.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I realize that a number of questions which have been placed on the Order Paper by the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) have been answered. They were the simplest questions and took the least amount of time to answer. Perhaps that is why the others have not been answered. However, other questions are being considered and hopefully there will be further responses at the beginning of next week.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak today to Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada. In my speech I intend to demonstrate that if the Bill is passed in its present form, it will definitely harm the interests of Canadian workers.

Like all Members, every weekend in my riding of Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic I spend some time with my constituents. I cannot think of anything more distressing than listening to the personal tragedies experienced by constituents in their search for employment. I cannot say whether I sympathize most with a young person, a woman or a man over fifty with a family. They all have the same needs. Everyone needs a roof over his head and enough to eat.

I am sure Hon. Members would not remain unmoved if I mentioned all the sad stories I hear in my office. However, I will spare the House these details, because I am sure most Hon. Members are having much the same experience in their own ridings.

This Government is using the legislation now before the House to try and set up a common market with the United States by giving them all kind of concessions. For instance, 90 per cent of investments to acquire Canadian small- and medium-sized businesses will no longer be reviewable. I repeat the terms used by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in his speech in London, in Great Britain, on December 10th of this year, where he said:

> If adopted in its present form, the effect of the Bill will be to exempt from the review process all foreign investment concerning new businesses. Direct acquisitions of Canadian businesses whose assets do not exceed $5 million will not be reviewable, and the same will apply to indirect acquisitions of Canadian businesses with assets of less than $50 million.

Indirect acquisitions mean that a third party is involved.

Mr. Speaker, this provision is a threat to most of our small- and medium-sized businesses which, as the House is aware, form the cornerstone of Canada's economy. It is easy for the Prime Minister to go to the Economic Club and tell our neighbours to the South: Come on in, shop around in Canada, pick up any small business under $5 million, make an offer, and we will deliver. Mr. Speaker, he made us feel like some sort of Consumers' Distributors, this chain of small stores which everybody knows and where people can buy most everything at a very reasonsable price.

Mr. Speaker, it does not require much imagination to construct a scenario for the future. They will find all sorts of very good reasons to export their operation to the United States. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated in this House on December 10th, and I quote:

> What we are trying to do, and what the Americans encouraged us to do, is to improve the environment for private sector investment.

"—and what the Americans encouraged us to do—" Mr. Speaker. But since when should Canadians take into consideration what Americans want for us?

Instead of trying to sell Canada to the highest bidder, the government should take control of his inter-provincial employment policy.

I found a real gem on page 2 of the Investment Canada press release dated December 7th, and I quote:

Investment Canada, in consultation with the private sector and provincial governments, will work together with our trade services in Canada and abroad to promote and facilitate investment.

Well, we have a problem there, because when, for whatever reason, a Canadian worker in one province wants to settle in another province, there are a number of constraints. Workers are penalized in their search for employment. For instance, in many areas his skills are not recognized in another province. That is what is happening right now in Canada. I have another example taken from the construction industry. A construction worker who lives in Hull and for personal reasons wants to cross the river to settle in Ottawa, finds he cannot go back to Hull to work, because there is no such thing as mobility in our country. Mobility is not protected in Canada. We are trying to negotiate with the Americans and give them a good deal, while we have problems of our own we have yet to settle.

If today's high unemployment rates are hurting us in Canada, imagine what it will be like for Canadian workers and employers when Americans control most of Canada's small businesses. Especially when we realize that small- and medium-sized businesses are at the very heart of Canada's economic success. What right does anyone have to inflict this kind of situation, this kind of uncertainty on our businessmen and women? If their future is going to be snatched away by the first foreign investor who comes to town, that is enough for anyone to give up.

The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) said yesterday, and I quote:

Nobody is obliged to sell his business.

Mr. Speaker, how could anyone say such a thing? We all know that no one will be obliged to sell his business. The process will be infinitely more subtle and more insidious. As it becomes increasingly difficult for Canadian entrepreneurs to withstand financial pressures, it will be easy for any American entrepreneur to step in and take advantage of the situation. And there is not going to be much in the way of protest by this Government and other authorities. Is that what the Government opposite wants: to prepare our small- and medium-sized businesses for the hangman's noose?

Bill C-15 is a threat to the very essence and raison d'être of small- and medium-sized businesses in our country. The Foreign Investment Review Agency was used as a negotiating tool and an intermediary to ensure that any investment would be in the interests of this country.

This bill has nothing to offer to Canadian investors. I think it is shameful to show such disrespect for the Canadian population.

Another danger which I must single out in this piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, is the absolute decision-making power of the Minister. Knowing how mesmerized this government is before the almighty southern eagle, I am not at all sure that Canadians will be protected. This calls for drastic amendments during the committee proceedings.

For years and years, Mr. Speaker, we have been trying to get a handle slowly and methodically on our own economy. But now the Conservatives have shifted in reverse, just about ready to give up on the masters-in-our-own-home principle. That is a very popular slogan in Quebec, and so it ought to be for all Canadians. To all newly elected Members from Quebec, it is a well-known saying which should be repeated here before the federal government—masters in our own home.

Are we on the verge of becoming a satellite country, the 51st American State? In any event, I agree with my colleagues that the Americans are our friends and allies. Other speakers have debated the issue and I would rather not elaborate on it.

But the role of the Opposition is to safeguard the vested interests of Canadians, and that is why I took the floor today.

Before concluding my remarks, I have to remind the government that Canadians do want to work, but not at any price, certainly not if they cannot invest their hard-earned savings in a company of their own choosing.

Essentially, we are all here to make sure that our policies are fair to one and all. We all have the same goal, namely to promote investment while at the same time giving Canadian industry a leading role on the world's new economic stage.

It is in that spirit, Mr. Speaker, that I am prepared to cooperate fully and support all necessary motions in amendment once Bill C-15 has been referred to a parliamentary committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) for questions or comments.

• (1520)

Questions and comments?

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, here is my comment or question. After hearing the speech of the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens), I cannot help but ask myself certain questions.

I can understand that the Hon. Member finds it tragic when unemployed people whether they are women, young people or men heads of families come to see her at her constituency office.

I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member. I want to know whether the situation in her constituency has existed only since September 4 or whether this has not in fact been going on for several years.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spoke about the danger that our small businesses fall into the hands of Americans, but I wonder which is the greater danger, having businesses controlled by foreign capital which bring employment to these men, these young people and these women, or seeing these small businesses disappear because of a lack of capital.

The Hon. Member also said that the former Government had made enormous efforts to promote economic recovery. I wonder at what price this was done and in what condition this left our economy.

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked me whether the situation in my constituency was the same before September 4. I can say that the situation has worsened since that date. I represent a constituency—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Killens: No, you will listen to me as you should! I represent a constituency of blue-collar workers, most of whom are construction workers. You can imagine what is happening following the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who announced cut-backs in every area. People are panicking, and I see at my office whole groups of men who are being laid off. Winter is coming and the situation is impossible. We know what is happening in the city of Montreal. Mayor Drapeau who dreamed of building 20,000 housing units on Montreal island, will not be able to reach his target, and in my own constituency, where there are mostly construction workers, the situation has become even more serious since September 4. What compounds the problem is the fact that, since that date, young students knowing that there will no longer be a Young Canada Works Program—

Mr. Malépart: This is awful!

Mrs. Killens: —are already beginning to queue up at my office to ask for my advice. I must tell them that we are waiting because the Government is consulting.

Mr. Rossi: As usual.

Mrs. Killens: As usual, as my colleage from Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) says. I do not know what to tell these young people who come to see me. The situation is worse because of budget cut-backs which affect my constituency. That is my answer, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no further questions or comments, we will resume debate.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I must participate in this debate on Bill C-15 because I would have hoped that at this day and age, in 1984, we would not be turning the clocks back. However, it would seem that we have to mount a defence to prevent this Government from bringing forth this very regressive legislation which is going to do nothing good for the people of Canada; in fact, it will just help sell us down the river. I would like to address my remarks to what it means to the Canadian economy when we do have foreign investment, when we have companies from across our borders coming in and acquiring the assets of existing facilities or, in fact, building branch plants. I would like to read a list of branch plants, Mr. Speaker. It is admittedly a bit out of date. These are branch plants in Ontario in 1980, all owned by foreigners who at the time of the recession decided they had to consolidate and concentrate on their American parent companies instead of the Canadian branch plants. They are as follows: Bendix Automotive of Canada Ltd., Windsor, 55 employees; Bendix again, 650 employees; Canada-Ferro Company Limited in Brampton, 108 employees; Chrysler Canada Ltd., in Windsor, 2,200 employees; Crownfab of Canada Ltd in Oakville, 90 employees; Essex Wire, Dunnville, 350 employees; Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd., Windsor, 840 employees; Gabriel of Canada Ltd, Orangeville, 20 employees; Houdaille, Oshawa, 500 employees; Rockwell, International of Canada Ltd., Parry Sound, 200 employees; Sealed Power, Stratford, 180 employees and Vulcan Equipment in Fergus, 56 employees. All of these companies were branch plants which were closed when things got tough because the Americans who owned them decided they had to protect their own companies first. In those days, the lay-offs in Canada were horrendous. In a seven-month period over 10,000 people in all but Ontario were laid off. There were 130,000 laid off in Ontario. That is a total of 140,536 men and women who had their jobs wiped out because their American bosses decided they wanted to protect jobs in the United States rather than in Canada.

That is what foreign investment means to Canada when we are not careful to ensure that we have the kind of review process that FIRA was intended to provide. Instead of forming Investment Canada we should have been strengthening FIRA so that more than 50 per cent of the investments would guarantee new employment growth in Canada.

I mentioned the Houdaille plant in Oshawa which had been in operation in that community for over 50 years manufacturing automotive bumpers. In 1979 it was awarded a $600,000 grant from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to refinance the retooling of that plant. At about the same time, in fact in May of that year, Houdaille Industries was taken over by KKR Investments, a holding company based in Florida, with FIRA's approval in December. The shareholders were actually told of the planned phase-out of the Oshawa operation before FIRA even approved the sale. In fact, the phase-out began a mere 10 days after FIRA's decision when half the work force was laid off. Six months later, on July 9, 1980, the closure of the plant was announced. The remaining employees had a minimum of 18 years at the plant, many with more than 30 years, with the average being 29 years. That is what you get when you do not have controls.

Let us look at some recent figures. In 1982-83, of the top 50 companies in Canada, 32 were owned by Canadians, or 63 per cent of the total. That group lost 9,953 jobs. But the U.S.-controlled companies, of which there are only 11 or 22 per cent, lost 17,487 jobs. There were three other foreign owned companies, or 6 per cent, with a job loss of 550. That is not the way we should be moving in this country, Mr. Speaker. Very clearly Canadian companies do better. They have a greater incentive to keep their people working. It is their lifeblood, and because they are Canadians they feel strongly that they should do so. But someone who lives across the border has less loyalty to a company in Canada than a Canadian does.

Earlier today I raised with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) the situation in Corner Brook where we have Kruger Incorporated, with FIRA's permission, acquiring the assets of the Bowater mill. In fact, it was this Government and this Minister who gave that approval who also provided some fairly hefty financial assistance, along with the province, to allow Kruger to acquire the assets. But it seems that the rules are changing. Kruger is now saying to the Premier of Newfoundland that it will not go ahead with the deal unless that Government is prepared to bring in retroactive legislation to change the labour standards laws. That Conservative Government is doing that and, as we see have seen today, yesterday and the day before, the debate is continuing long and hard in that province as the Opposition tries to prevent this very regressive situation.

I asked the Minister just how far this Government was prepared to go in order to attract foreign capital. Would the price we will have to pay be the elimination of things like child labour laws, minimum wage laws, health and safety laws and environmental protection laws? I found his reply to be ironic. He referred to it as garbage. I was quite pleased to hear that, Mr. Speaker, but the scary part is that those suggestions have not as yet come from the foreign-owned companies; those suggestions are coming from organizations like the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in presentations to a government commission, from the Fraser Institute, and from Canadian chambers of commerce. If Canadians are suggesting that kind of regressive step, what are we going to get from the folks in Alabama? They are going to want right-to-work laws, which is the right to eliminate unions. That sounds fairly similar to what is happening in Newfoundland today.

Let me read from an editorial in the Calgary Herald dated October 22, 1984 with reference to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. That business organization says the federal Government could end the universality feature of programs such as family allowances and re-examine such things as minimum wage laws, child labour laws and health and safety standards in the work place. We do not want that kind of Canada, Mr. Speaker. We want a Canada where we have a direct say. While we recognize that there is a need for an influx of capital, both from Canadians and from non-Canadians, it has to be done through a set of rules we can live with. We do not want them coming in for quick fixes and then running back across the border when things get tough again. We need stable industries with a commitment to Canada.

Foreign-controlled companies do not spend anywhere near as much as Canadian companies do on research and development, a key source of economic growth and productivity increases. Let me give you some examples. This is the ratio of research and development over sales expressed as a percentage. For companies with less than 50 employees, it is 11.2 per cent for Canadian companies and 3.3 per cent for foreign companies. For companies with from 50 to 100 employees, it is 10.1 per cent for Canadian companies and 4.3 per cent for foreign companies. For companies with from 100 to 200 employees, it is 9.1 per cent for Canadian companies, 3.7 per cent for foreign companies. For companies with from 200 to 500 employees, Canadians do it at 8.4 per cent and foreigners at 3.4 per cent. For the companies which you would assume have the most bucks, those with more than 500 employees, it is 10.3 per cent for Canadian companies, and all the foreign controlled companies can do is to come up with 2 per cent. They are siphoning off that money and taking it home where they create jobs, not in Canada where jobs are needed. Foreign companies imported 22 per cent of their sales, five times that of Canadian-controlled companies. In manufacturing, they imported 30 per cent of their sales, four times that of Canadian companies. They are basically extensions of their parent companies whose activities are directed at the Canadian market only and not geared to the exports which we badly need.

Let us talk about the human side. I have talked about the lay-offs that occur when branch plants pull up stakes and go back home. What does it mean in human terms? I would like to read from a poem from the metropolitan Toronto Social Planning Study entitled Lay-offs: Job Retention As a Policy Issue. It was written by 13 year old Sharon L. The poem is entitled "My Dad Is Unemployed". It says: "My dad is unemployed and I hate it. It isn't his fault he hasn't a job. He tries hard enough. His company had to let somebody off. Guess who got picked? I hate his employers for what they did, for the quarrels and tension, but especially for making my dad feel so useless, unwanted, unneeded. I hate them for it." That is what foreign investment in this country means, Mr. Speaker, when we do not get a handle on it.

That is what it means when we do not ensure that there are some rules for foreign-owned companies to live by in terms of creating more jobs in this country and ensuring that they do not just extract our resources, take a quick shot at the market, wipe out a few competitors and bail out.

One of the messages I have heard in this debate from government Members is that they are concerned that Canadians are not investing in this country. I share their concern. Instead of developing incentives for Canadians to spend their savings in order to create jobs or for Canadian corporations to invest in Canadian products, the Government is looking abroad.

This should be called the popcorn Bill because the Minister seems so concerned about the businessman who wanted to come here to establish a popcorn stand for $6,000. If there are such possibilities for that business, why is there no Canadian investing in it? Why is it necessary to encourage the Americans or Europeans to set up a popcorn stand? The Government seems to suggest that they represent the entrepreneurs in Canada. However, I see no changes that will encourage entrepreneurs to invest here. Instead, many Canadian corporations have taken their money out of Canada and invested it elsewhere.

Let me give an example from my own community. Great Lakes Forest Products Limited has announced that it will build a pulp and paper mill in Washington State. It will spend $25 million U.S. from the Canadian economy to build that mill, which will eat into the Canadian pulp and paper industry and British Columbia's markets for newsprint on the West Coast. That company is in receipt of $48 million to $50 million in direct grants from the Government of Canada and the Government of Ontario. It owes $116 million in deferred taxes. Yet the Government is letting that company take its money to create jobs in the United States. Perhaps that company should go to Corner Brook to invest in the mill there and keep the money within Canada.

The reason given by Great Lakes for this investment in Washington is the unfavourable investment climate in Canada. Other companies have expressed the same sentiments. For many years we have seen our development companies buying shopping plazas and other enterprises in the United States and building condominiums. Why do they not do that here? Instead of simply opening the doors, the Government should be determining the causes for investment money to leave this country. I just do not understand.

Mr. McDermid: That is right. You sure don't.

Mr. Angus: Last year, personal savings in Canada totalled $36 billion. Surely we can do something to use that money to create some wealth in Canada. We do not even come close to the Americans.

Between 1950 and 1974, Canada had personal savings rates of 5.9 per cent. In the United States it was 6.9 per cent. In 1984 the figure is 12 per cent as opposed to 6 per cent. Canadians save twice as much as Americans.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Do you know why?

Mr. Angus: I would like to know why. Perhaps the Hon. Minister can join us in the debate and explain.

Yesterday, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) talked about housing and the need to encourage investment in housing. I agree with him but the reason why people are not building in this country is that they can make more money by leaving it in the bank. This is the result of the high interest rate policy of the previous Government which the present Government seems to accept. It has not taken action to ensure that interest rates go down to a realistic level so that people will invest money into housing again. The Americans will not build homes and apartments here because of the cost of borrowing. They realize that they can make money easier through other means. I suggest that the Government should change that policy.

I want to see Canadians investing in housing, whether it is rental or for purchase, so that we can escape from the intolerable situation which persists in most communities in this country.

We are also concerned about foreign investment with respect to the fishing industry in the Maritimes. There was an interesting discussion that took place recently in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. I am glad that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) is here today. He knows that the recent court decision effectively bars the Americans from the lucrative part of the Georges Bank. This means that the only way they can get into that market is by the acquisition of assets of Canadian companies, of fishermen, canneries or other companies.

It is my understanding that there is no provision for review by Investment Canada. I encourage the Minister to review that situation because I believe that other aspects of the fishery industry besides the Georges Bank could be in danger of being taken over. At least with FIRA, the Minister has an opportunity to say in Cabinet that such action is not good for the Canadian industry.

There also seems to be some confusion among Members of the Cabinet about provisions in the Bill. In reply to a question that I raised in the House two days ago, the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Bissonnette) said, as quoted in Hansard at page 1111:

—Investment Canada will see to it that the money is reinvested in Canada.

I have not found such a provision in this Bill. I would be pleased if an Hon. Member could tell me where that provision is because I have not seen it. I suspect it is not there and that the Minister did not understand the implications of the Bill.

In conclusion, let me explain what our Party would do. We would tighten up the existing FIRA legislation to cover a review of foreign firms already operating in Canada, applying stricter controls over any expansion of existing foreign-controlled business, ensuring that these firms promote trade in accordance with Canadian laws and policies rather than submitting to the laws and policies of the controlling company.

We would ensure that foreign businesses operate in our best interest by providing jobs, production of manufactured goods, research and development, re-investment of profits in Canada, and the purchase of Canadian goods rather than imports.

We would promote the expansion of public and co-operative ownership to promote ownership by Canadians of a larger sector of the economy and to halt and reverse the trend to foreign domination.

I am pleased to participate in this debate and look forward with interest to further discussions.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, we have been highly entertained over the last 20 minutes by some remarks that are hardly worth commenting on. However, I do have a question for the Hon. Member. He is against investment coming from off-shore into Canada. At the same time he is against Canadian companies growing by investing outside of Canada. What is the NDP policy? How would the New Democrats prevent Canadian companies from growing by investing off-shore? What legislation would the New Democratic Party bring into the House to prevent Canadian companies from growing off-shore? The Hon. Member does not need to get cribbing notes from his seatmate.

Mr. Langdon: He does not need cribbing notes.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, my colleague is right. I do not need cribbing notes. I welcome the Hon. Member's question. I remember seeing him in the halls of the other House a number of years ago. I want to say to him very clearly that we would provide mechanisms by starting with lower and controlled interest rates so that when Canadian companies and investors have some dollars there will be more incentive for them to invest in risk industries in Canada. Second, we would also be prepared, and we talked about this in the campaign so it is nothing new, to ensure that there is some kind of vehicle to prevent capital from flowing out. Perhaps some form of taxation system could be devised that would achieve a balance so that companies in Canada would find it more attractive to invest here at home. It is not that companies are expanding, Mr. Speaker. Great Lakes is undermining two other Canadian companies, two existing forest products companies in the Province of British Columbia. I, as a Canadian, object to that.

Mr. McDermid: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What the Hon. Member is saying to the House today is that he is opposed to competition in the market-place. That is the bottom line of his comments. He is opposed to competition of any kind and he is going to eliminate competition, which is absolute rubbish. It is absolutely insane to make a proposal like that.

Mr. Rodriguez: There is no competition among the banks.

Mr. McDermid: I think the Hon. Member said he was going to bring in monetary controls. He would prevent Canadians from taking money outside Canada. Would the Hon. Member like to suggest any limit? Are we talking of $600; $1,000 or; $10,000? What exactly is the Hon. Member proposing when he talks about monetary controls? He is talking about controlling Canadians, telling them that they cannot take money outside the country, that they cannot invest, that they cannot take that extended holiday or whatever. What is the Hon. Member trying to tell this House? Why do the socialists not come clean with the Canadian people? Nobody believes a single word the Hon. Member has said today, not one.

Mr. Angus: I want to assure the Hon. Member that when I spoke I did not speak in terms of the Canadian who is travelling to Duluth in the U.S., next door to my community or to Florida or what have you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, they are not going to have exchange controls imposed on them. I am talking about investments of over half a million dollars.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): All investments?

Mr. Angus: Some kind of controls have to be imposed on those kinds of investments. Those are the kinds of investments that are stealing dollars from potential Canadian industries. I would rather see this Government get tough with the tax breaks it is giving to the corporations, the billions upon billions of dollars that we as individual taxpayers have to make up for. Corporations must begin to pay their fair share in this country instead of using the money to go off some place else and create jobs that may eventually lead to the elimination of jobs in Canada. That is what it is all about.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, will you permit me to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus)? I am curious whether the Member realizes two things. First, if the particular company of which he speaks had not made the investment in Canada in the first place, there would never have been any jobs, nor would there have been any economy in the area of which he speaks. Second, and equally important, does the Hon. Member not realize that the money of which he speaks—and I can tell him I know a little bit about that company, that it is not taking out $50 million a year, it is scraping the bottom of the barrel—which the company may have taken out for investments in other parts of the world has been earned in other parts of the world? Most of the product, if not all, is exported to other parts of the world and earns foreign exchange income that we need badly if we want to rebuild Canada's economy and recapture our place in world markets. How narrow-minded can these socialists become? Why does the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) not give this fellow a lesson? He is young enough to learn, and the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap knows better, surely.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I will have a chat with my colleague the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), who obviously agrees with me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Angus: I wonder about the question which the Hon. Member asks. If he is talking about money that Great Lakes has earned in the United States—I assume he talks about sales the company has made of a product, as far as I know it does not have any other operations elsewhere in the world other than in Thunder Bay and in Dryden at this point in time—because that company played the exchange market in the United States, it lost a substantial amount of profit that could have been used to develop Canadian industry. That company lost $900 million by trying to play the market instead of investing in Canada.

Mr. Oberle: If it were not for the exchange it would be broke.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no further questions or comments, we will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart).

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker I welcome this opportunity to join in the debate on this important piece of legislation to all Canadians, namely Bill C-15. Unlike the comments of my colleague across the way, in my view this legislation heralds a significant change in the direction in which this country has been heading over the past 15 years. On September 4 Canadians sent out a message loud and clear that they wanted change. This Bill evokes change. That message could not have been made more strongly. On September 17 the process of this change began when our new Government assumed office. Since then we have had a Throne Speech and an economic statement which charted Canada's new course. Now we have Bill C-15, the first new piece of legislation by the new Government that will halt, as I love to call it, that slippery slide to socialism which those gentlemen know so well.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: That is the notion which the Liberals put into effect some 16 years ago with their sleeping buddies beside them.

Mr. McDermid: The socialist hordes.

Mr. Stewart: That is right.

Mr. Rodriguez: Tell us about B.C. today.

Mr. Stewart: Nothing symbolized the socialist policies of the previous Government more than the National Energy Program and the Foreign Investment Review Agency. Today we are beginning a process of making a break from those policies of the past that have bankrupted this great nation and placed 1.5 million people on the dole.

It is very interesting to note the comments of the opposition Members, the socialists in particular, who have spoken out so loudly against this constructive and positive piece of legislation. I noted in particular the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex Windsor (Mr. Langdon), who just left the Chamber and who in the past few weeks has been so critical of the deal approved by FIRA which will result in the loss of 600 jobs in the city of Barrie. That is my riding, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: Aren't you worried about it?

Mr. Stewart: I am very worried about it.

An Hon. Member: What are you going to do?

Mr. Stewart: Listen and you will learn.

I have searched long and hard for the logic in this argument and I can say I have found none. In his criticism of Bill C-15, he said that the end result would be a loss of jobs for Canadians. In his defence of FIRA he implied that FIRA would protect those jobs. I should like to quote from his remarks of December 11, 1984 when he said:

● (1600)

—under this Bill, Black and Decker would have been completely free of any review when the take-over occurred . . . they would have had complete freedom to shut down that subsidiary without any negotiation process, without any help for the workers involved, without any negotiation with the community and without any review mechanism by the Government of Canada. That kind of economic nonsense will damage communities across this country one by one over the next 10 years, if this Bill goes into effect.

The scenario described by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor is exactly what has happened in Barrie under FIRA. That is the type of economic nonsense, as he called it, which has been allowed to happen with the blessing of FIRA. Does the Member want this kind of economic nonsense to continue? Does he support FIRA or does he not? Does he want change or does he not? The Hon. Member did not say, but the inconsistencies in his argument were clear because 92 per cent of the cases which came before FIRA were approved at a cost of some $6,000 each. As a result of the work of the entire Cabinet in making those tremendous decisions, only 8 per cent were turned down. One of the ones which should have been turned down was the Barrie plant. Did they do it? Not on your "pooh-whippy", they didn't.

Mr. Johnston: How do you spell that?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Translation.

Mr. Stewart: Right now there is every reason to believe that that agreement in front of FIRA was defaulted by Black and Decker. Did FIRA catch it? Did FIRA say, "No, you cannot close the Barrie plant because you did not live up to the obligations under your contract"? No, not one word have we heard from FIRA. Ostensibly that plant is to be closed, but perhaps not, and it will not be as a result of anything done by FIRA. Believe me, they sat and watched the whole degenerative process. Out of the whole thing, all they ever look at was only 8 per cent. One of the ones at which they should have taken a shot, they let go by the boards. I do not think that says anything good whatsoever about FIRA.

I believe the vast majority of Canadians support the initiatives of the new Government, particularly the goals which Bill C-15 will achieve. During the election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made it clear to all Canadians that new infusions of capital were necessary if we were to revitalize the economy and allow it to create—the one thing he said which Hon. Members opposite keep throwing at us—jobs, jobs, jobs. But, how do we get those jobs, jobs, jobs? We must have somebody who will spend some money here. This country stretches 5,000 miles from sea to sea and it has a measly 25 million people. We do not have a domestic market which is sufficient to do the silly things which the former speaker mentioned. We must export. We are a great exporting nation. To export, we must have capital which builds buildings and machines and sells products. Not one doggone thing in the world happens until one sells something.

I am talking about a strategy which would encourage equity investment and stop the outflow of equity capital. That is the problem in Canada. In 1980, the Liberals told Canadians they would buy back Canada, that foreign investors were no longer welcome. That was the message of P.E.T. But the Liberals did not really buy back Canada. They borrowed it back. That is what they did. They absolutely and totally borrowed it back, replacing foreign equity with foreign debt. The Progressive Conservative Party wants to reverse that trend. We want to encourage an inflow of investment capital, because equity inflows mean less reliance upon debt. They mean lower interest rates, a lower deficit, lower inflation, higher economic growth and, given the one medium we need, but, most important they mean jobs. That is the critical need. We need to strengthen the capital base of Canadian companies, particularly our small businesses. Too many Canadian businesses have too much debt and too little equity. That is our problem.

The message was clear. Bill C-15 will fulfil the promises we made to Canadians. As I said before, on September 4 they voted overwhelmingly in favour of our policies and new directions for the country. If the members of the Opposition believe for one minute that Canadians do not want to welcome foreign investment capital into the country, let them look at the government Members surrounding them on that side of the House. The message is clear. Canadians have rejected FIRA, totally rejected it. Canadians have rejected the socialist policies which have brought about the worst economic crisis the country has experienced probably since Confederation.

There are 1.5 million of what our friends across the way like to call ordinary Canadians. We on this side are ordinary Canadians too. We think more of them than they do, with all their rhetoric. These ordinary Canadians must surely wonder why the NDP, which claims to have a monopoly on the concerns of ordinary Canadians, is speaking out so loudly against this positive piece of job-creating legislation. Perhaps we have a chance of getting rid of those albatrosses — de Havilland, or Canadair. Why do they demand a continuation of the policies which have done so much to damage Canada? Billions of dollars have been spent to prop inefficient operations. They cannot have it both ways. They have to make up their minds. Either they are for change, which means jobs for Canadians, or they are against it. I think the ordinary Canadians which we represent know where both opposition Parties stand. It is fairly obvious if one looks across the way.

What are the changes we can expect to see with the passage of Bill C-15? First, all new businesses are exempt from the review process. Second, all direct acquisitions of Canadian businesses under $5 million are exempt from review, except those pertaining to culture. I believe that makes sense. It refers to those in the print media, et cetera. Third, all indirect acquisitions under $50 million are exempt form review.

The effect of these changes will be significant, especially in light of the activities of FIRA in 1983. For example, none of the 442 new businesses reviewed in 1983 under FIRA would be reviewed under Investment Canada, 80 per cent of the 283 direct acquisitions would not be reviewed by Investment Canada, and 93 per cent of the indirect acquisitions would not be reviewed by Investment Canada.

Investment Canada has also been given a specific mandate to encourage investment for growth and jobs, to provide information services and to advise businesses and investors on opportunities and contracts. This matter was raised in the House today. We were asked why we would do away with that. That will not be the case whatsoever. The Prime Minister mentioned that there would be more Bills coming in, delving further and further into the problems of foreign investment. In short, it sends out a message that Canada wishes to become a better place for foreign investors to do business. It is as simple as that. In turn, this will give domestic investors increased confidence in the Canadian business environment.

Unlike FIRA, Bill C-15 reflects a new attitude. That is what we as Canadians must have. We require a complete attitudinal change. It recognizes the positive contribution foreign investment can make. Some 90 per cent of foreign investors will no longer have to wait for government approval before proceeding with their investments. We are placing realistic time limits on the length of the review process. We are not dragging our feet.

FIRA proceeded from the assumption that all foreign investment was bad. That was the Trudeau philosophy. Investors had to prove that they could benefit Canada, and the word "benefit" was defined by a bureaucrat. Investment Canada proceeds from the assumption that foreign investment is good for the country. Mr. Speaker, I ask you to think about the word "FIRA". Every foreign investor was afraid. The very word struck fear i the hearts of foreign investors. It was negative, the way everything was for so many years. Now we have something which is positive—Investment Canada, the place to put your money. It is a place of trust, a place of growth, a place where new jobs will be created. That is the difference between us and them.

Opponents of this legislation like to point out the high approval rate of proposals made to FIRA, but they missed the point. As Richard Smith of the American Embassy said in a letter to The Globe and Mail on September 8, 1982:

> FIRA's approval rate, reportedly close to 90 per cent—

In reality it is 92 per cent. He continued:

> —is not the relevant measure; it takes no account of applications withdrawn or not made as a result of FIRA's onerous procedures and requirements. Investment once established in a foreign country is highly vulnerable to the policies of that country, and it tends not to go where it perceives it is suspect. There is a sense in which FIRA can be viewed as a solution without a problem.

However, there is a problem. There is no way of knowing how many potential investors simply looked at government interference—particularly Americans to whom the words government interference are anathema—and then quickly looked elsewhere. There is no real way of knowing how many we lost, no way of knowing those potential investors were chased away by that one scary word, FIRA.

The Wall Street Journal expressed similar sentiments in the September 14, 1982, issue, and I quote:

In practice the agency has been secretive and capricious, and . . . has driven away many would-be investors through bureaucratic inertia . . . a continuation of FIRA provides just the wrong signal at a time of capital flight by Canadian and foreign investors alike.

Amen. All the criticism has not come solely from the United States. In August 1982, the West German Economics Minister said that Canada could move closer to recovery and secure new markets for its energy, if only it would drop its trade barriers and relax nationally-oriented policies.

Mr. Oberle: Those are my people.

Mr. Stewart: The Hon. Member says that those are his people, and I agree with him. He called FIRA and the NEP "hindrances that impair the investment climate of your country". That is about to change. It is like a breath of fresh air. A new day has dawned. The PCs are here and Canada is on the way straight up.

The underlying theme behind the criticisms of FIRA has not been so much over the approval rate, but over the potential investors who never even bothered to try to get through the plodding, bureaucratic mess. That has been the problem. We are now sending out a message to potential investors that Canada is again open for business. The door is open and the till is ready to ring.

FIRA has been a hindrance and a millstone since the day it was created. It is a bureaucratic nightmare. Since that time it has grown increasingly irrelevant. As The Globe and Mail pointed out a year ago, FIRA was set up in 1974 by a minority Liberal Government, but it came too late to fight the last war over high foreign ownership in the economy in the 1950s and 1960s, and now it is ill equipped for the next war, fighting for new business investment in the 1980s. If we are to survive as Canadians, we have to be out in the jungle, which is known as the world market-place. Let us put it to rest and bring in a new agency that encourages investment in Canada. Let us welcome it with open arms and not be so silly. That investment will create jobs for my children and your children. It will help take away that deficit which is a millstone around the youth of this nation. Job priority is the top priority. It comes from doing such things as, first of all, getting rid of FIRA.

How is it that the opposition Members can claim that we will lose jobs by bringing new investment into this country? That is the most ludicrous thing I have ever heard. How can they demand a stronger FIRA to protect jobs that do not exist? That was pointed out by my colleague to the left. Is it not obvious that the Liberal policies of the past 16 years, which the NDP so strongly supported, have brought us to the point we are at today? Is it not obvious that Canadians voted for change and that we are providing that change? It must not be because we still hear criticism.

Why do the opposition Parties continue to criticize the policies that were so strongly endorsed by Canadians on September 4? It was all put out in front of them. I dare say that there is not one of us on the government side who did not make speech after speech deriding and decrying FIRA and stating that we would change it. Every Canadian knew that. They continued to defend the policies that were so clearly rejected by that mass of voters. Perhaps that explains why they are surrounded by government Members on that side of the House. How much stronger does the message have to be before they realize that the policies of the past which they cling to, as our government House Leaders says, like Velcro, are irrelevant to the vast majority of Canadians in the 1980s? What was ever accomplished in North America by socialism? Nothing.

Bill C-15 is timely, relevant, positive, constructive and worth-while. It is what Canadians want and it is what they are going to get. I would urge all members of the opposition Parties to look to the left, to the right and then to support this legislation which Canadians want and so desperately need. Let us bring investment capital into Canada and create jobs for the 1.5 million unemployed ordinary Canadians, whom we in the P.C. Party support, who want to work but have been denied the opportunity to do so by the harmful Liberal policies, backed up by the little bit of ambiance to their left over the past 16 years. Have the courage once to vote for change.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it has been fascinating listening to the Member make his speech. It has been an interesting combination; first a little speech for the people back home who say, "My goodness, I think Barrie should have prevented the shut down of the Black & Decker plant", organized carefully for a clip on the TV station. Then, somebody clearly drafted for him a speech extolling the virtues of eliminating the agency that he just got finished saying should have stood up and protected the workers in his dome city. He carefully read the speech without recognizing the immense contradiction in which he was involved.

At the very least, as he stood and talked about the new day that had dawned, he should have blushed. The new day that dawned after the election for the 600 workers in the Black & Decker plant in his constitutency was a bleak and desperate day, a day in which their jobs were lost and in which this Government was presented with a challenge. This is the whole point of this debate: The existence of a review mechanism by the name of FIRA—it could have a different name or a slightly different approach—has given the workers of Barrie the chance to appeal the shutdown decided on by Black & Decker.

The Hon. Member is well acquainted with what is taking place in his constituency. He must realize that those workers came to Ottawa. They were able to meet with the staff of the Ministry of Regional Industrial Expansion. They were able to present to the Minister careful information, which contradicted the information which Black & Decker had provided to FIRA. As a result of the existence of that review mechanism, which he now wants to strip away, the Minister had Black & Decker come to him and provide a fresh explanation. The trade union involved is now taking that Minister to court to ask the Minister to intervene to protect their jobs under this piece of legislation of which he wants to get rid.

We have here a classic case of workers and communities being able to use FIRA to try to protect themselves. Instead of this Member standing up and supporting his community and the workers in his city, he stands up and says, "A new day has dawned. Thank Heaven for a P.C. Government". It is a classic case of jobs being lost as a result of foreign investment. The facts are on the record that it was a foreign company that took over another foreign subsidiary. The result has been a loss of 400 jobs.

Members opposite may not like to face reality. They may want to re-write history, but the facts are very clear in this case. Why did this Member get up in the House to try to defend the elimination of the one mechanism that his community and his workers have had to turn to in order to stop this company from doing what it wanted to do? Why has he been able to rise and unblushingly call for the cutting away of the one piece of legislation which is protecting the people in his community?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to tell the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor that when it come to speaking about free enterprise, I do not need any help. Second, perhaps I could ask him a question. Does he understand the meaning of grandstanding, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: When the Hon. Member first stood in his place in this House to speak about Black & Decker and General Electric, he mentioned that take over of Westinghouse by Black & Decker. He did not even know what the company was. He is up there grandstanding again on their great vision of ordinary Canadians.

Yes, that is happening in my riding. Only 8 per cent of all the applications that came before FIRA were reviewed, at a cost of $6,000 each. The one that FIRA should have reviewed was the Black & Decker application for Barrie. It did not review it and allowed it to happen. Why bother at all? That is the whole point. We will chase away 35,000 more than we will ever win. It is in my riding and it is my concern. However, defending an 8 per cent decision does not make it right at any time.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I am just going to step in and help you referee this exchange. I gathered from the Hon. Member's remarks that he seems to be telling us that had FIRA protected the Black & Decker workers, he would not be supporting this Bill but would be supporting the continuance of FIRA. Is that correct? That is the conclusion that I would draw from what the Hon. Member has said.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, may I tell the Hon. Member that his conclusions are the same as they were in the leadership race: he might win.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, again, the Hon. Member has missed the point of FIRA. The statistics regarding FIRA do not show that 92 per cent of the applications have not been reviewed. They show that 92 per cent of those reviewed were accepted with conditions, and the conditions in the case of Black & Decker, according to the news reports and the comments made by FIRA officials, were that the Black & Decker plant would remain profitable. So long as it remained profitable, it would be kept open.

The union has quite clear statistics that indicate, first, that Black & Decker was profitable last year and, second, that it has remained profitable this year. It is because of that that it is able to turn to FIRA and say: "You have not kept to the conditions to which you have committed yourself". In fact, it is the commitments that FIRA has gotten out of Black & Decker that now permit the workers in the community to go both to the Minister and in turn to the courts to try to protect those jobs.

Let me ask the Hon. Member whether he cannot recognize the contradiction in his approach. Can he not recognize that in this case, as I predict will happen in many, many cases in the future, jobs of Canadian workers will be lost because of foreign investment and jobs that could be protected by a review process will go without that protection in the future?

I have one last point to make, if I may. I am not grandstanding. I do not have constituents in Barrie to win to my side. I am talking about people in our country who are being hurt and whose jobs are being lost. That is the point and that is what our fight is about. I ask the Hon. Member to recognize that as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), but I ask him to make it a short answer.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I will make it short. It is not contradictory. I will always fight for my constituents. I will be fighting very hard for solving the Black & Decker problem, and not inflaming it as the Hon. Member is. Investment Canada, on the whole, will create a much better situation than we have now, and always will. Foreign investment—

An Hon. Member: Right on!

Ms. Mitchell: We made a convert.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and comments is now over.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate has passed Bill C-16, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1985.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson)—Fisheries—Georges Bank boundary decision—Possible United States request for moratorium. (b) Request that Prime Minister negotiate management agreement; the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Employment—Provision of funds to create jobs. (b) Source of funding; the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—Fitness and Amateur Sport—Reported importation of drugs by Soviet athletes.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens: That Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this Bill which, contrary to that party's commitments, is again intended to steal jobs from working men and women. Despite suggestions from some of the Progressive Conservative Members, nowhere does the legislation ensure that there will be more jobs in Canada. Despite suggestions from some of the Members, nowhere does it ensure that in any area, any province or any constituency there will be more jobs. But on the other hand, this legislation offers no guarantee that in any area or constituency there will be no loss of jobs. And I well understand why the Liberal Party, which forms the Official Opposition is not supporting the legislation as submitted. It is because when an American multinational corporation, as mentioned by the Prime Minister, decides to take over a number of small businesses, and there is a recession as has already occurred in some particular area of the economy, the decisions will be made in the United States rather than in Canada, and the financiers will decide to close down the Canadian subsidiaries in order to maintain production and employment in the United States, for which they are responsible. And in Canada, our companies will operate as mere warehouses and there will be lay-offs. There is no way the legislation can prevent that kind of situation.

Earlier this week, a Progressive Conservative Member wanted to know of instances where foreign corporations had come to Canada and had been badly served. Some people's memory must be short. One only has to mention Iron Ore. That company's representatives came here to develop resources in Quebec, and when they realized there was nothing left to do, you know what they did. They appointed a Canadian businessman as president to smooth things out, to close it down and lay off people.

Other Members will recall ITT. At one point they came to develop our natural resources in Quebec, with no thought whatsoever of reforestation, of the future. And when they were finished, when things were no longer profitable, they closed down and told Quebecers: You look after yourselves!

Mr. Speaker, it is important in my view that each Member in this House should make sure that the legislation is improved. I have no objection to investors from any country coming here in Canada to invest. But one thing must be ensured, namely that jobs are created and that economic and social policies in Canada do not end up being determined by foreign investors.

There is another ambiguity. If you read the speech the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) delivered in New York and examine the bill, you realize there is a very serious problem with this government because the Prime Minister always says different things in different places and you never know when he speaks the truth.

On page 4 of his speech, the Prime Minister of Canada mentions that he went to meet the President of the United States. I am of the opinion that he went to take the President's orders.

And finally, he announced that the President of the United States would come and check in Canada whether the Prime Minister of our country has complied with his orders.

Not only does he provide the answer to establish good relations between Canada and the United States, he also asks that regular meetings be held between both levels, that is between the President and the Prime Minister and also at the ministerial level. With such an attitude, I wonder who will govern Canada. Will the ministers of the Canadian government have to adjust to the decisions taken by American governors?

It should not be forgotten that our friends and neighbours are an important power. I find it hard to imagine the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and some other ministers discussing with representatives of the American government. I rather suspect they will enter those meetings with set ideas, and come out sharing the American views. After 15 to 20 years of that kind of attitude, the Americans will dictate not only our economic fate but also our social policy.

I noted another part of his speech where he refers to the control of some foreign investments by large corporations. But when a foreigner invests in small or medium business, there is be no problem. Come right in that's for sale and there is no problem!

However the government has forgotten that American financiers will at first purchase a small Canadian business, then a second one and a third one and after a number of years, thousands of Canadian businesses will have been snatched as a result of the lack of regulations in the bill. They will be the ones making the decisions.

I wonder if it is not the American government or the big American financiers who demanded that the government defer the enforcement of the bill amending the Labour Code which was passed by this House.

I would like to know whether the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) can assure us that no foreign interference influenced the government into denying the passage of a bill unanimously agreed to in this House following a debate in committee.

Energy is another crucial sector. And there I think that doors are wide open to the multinationals. I see my colleague from Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) . . . I think I would invite the members and ministers opposite, those from Ontario and Western Canada to listen to their colleague from Duvernay. He knows what multinationals are all about. He knows what multinationals think of small businesses and consumers. I hope that you will hear him in caucus, because he went through all that and he will soon tell you about it. He knows what the interests of a multinational are. Certainly not the protection of the consumers or of the small businesses. He experienced the problem in Quebec with other small garage owners.

I urge the Members of this House, especially on the government side, from the West and other provinces to listen to the Hon. Member for Duvernay.

I know he could speak from his own experience. So I think it is very important to think twice before selling Canada off to foreign investors.

Canadair is another case in point. The Minister has told the House that Cabinet would decide if foreign investors ever decided to purchase Canadair. But how can we be sure about a Government that is as consistent as a weather vane? At least under the former Clark Government, they would say one thing in French and the opposite in English, but this Government says the opposite in both languages. It changes its tune every day. I think it is important for Members from the Montreal area and from Quebec in general to make sure that Canadair keeps its jobs and that its technology stays in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, from the way the Prime Minister and some Hon. Members have been speaking to this Bill, I get the impression that they want to go back to what the situation was 75 or 80 years ago—the law of the jungle. The previous speaker, in his answer to a question by the New Democratic Party Member, said that as far as private enterprise was concerned, he knew all there was to know, but he never answered the question about jobs lost in the private sector. He did not know what to say to that, Mr. Speaker.

I think most of my colleagues, and even some New Democratic Party Members, said that Hon. Members would have to think hard before adopting this Bill. They will have to propose substantial amendments, while both protecting Canadian investors and making it possible for foreign investors to settle or do business in Canada. Above all, we must ensure that no jobs will be lost, and our main challenge will be to ensure that new jobs are created.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said that if his Party came to power, it would increase business confidence, and unemployment would go down. We have had the figures: 50,000 more unemployed. CBC employees thought that with a new Government, things would be all right. The result: more than 1,100 people have lost their jobs, and this does not include jobs lost as a result of those lay-offs.

Mr. Speaker, I could give a long list, but only one item has remained the Government's top priority and that is spending $36 million to change the uniforms of our soldiers, which should come as no surprise with a Prime Minister who seems to like window-dressing. However, I do not think the Canadian military need uniforms. They have the qualifications and the skills, and I do not see how changing the colour of their uniforms will afford better protection against Cruise missiles.

Mr. Speaker, to get back to the legislation before the House, I believe, I hope and I am confident, as I said earlier and I see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mrs. Carney), whom I would urge to listen to the Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) who has had experience with multinationals in the energy and oil sector. I expected him to be appointed Parliamentary Secretary, to have a balance with one defender of multinationals and one defender of medium- and low-income Canadians, but that was not to be. I urge Hon. Members to listen to him, and I trust that next week, the Government will bring in substantial amendments to protect the interests of Canadian workers. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition will do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens).

Mrs. Killens: Further to the comments made by my colleague for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), I would like to ask him a question.

Could he assess the housing situation in his constituency as of today, as against the days when he was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister responsible for housing?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

• (1640)

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to provide the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) with this answer. I think Statistics Canada has shown us today what has happened since September 4, with respect to housing. Actual figures show that in urban areas, there is a 15 per cent drop in housing starts, with a 28 per cent decline in collective housing.

The Minister when sitting on the opposition side, not very far from here, never tired of asking the Government to inject money that would stimulate the building industry. As the saying goes, when the building industry is healthy, everything is healthy. But the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that there have been cuts—

[English]

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would ask that the Hon. Member be more specific as to the time when I requested more influx of dollars to inflate the housing market artificially and allow those men and women who have been employed—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is no point of order there, Mr. Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I will have to repeat, because the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), the Minister in charge of Housing, does not understand. It is therefore important to . . . I suppose he read the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation's statistics showing the distressing housing situation. And, Mr. Speaker, not just housing starts but also rental accommodation are down, but the Minister recommended cuts in that area.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I did appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart); for a while there they almost sounded like his best wishes for the New Year. But he also said something about it being dangerous to have American investors or business owners. I am convinced that, even though it is not in his riding, the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie is fully aware of the existence of a company with head offices on the south shore, Pratt & Whitney Aircraft to be precise, and headquarters in Hartford, Connecticut.

The figures are there, Mr. Speaker, and they tell us that this company has been creating jobs for years on the south shore. Some of the Pratt & Whitney workers even come from Montreal. Perhaps some of them live in the Hon. Member's riding. So he might keep in mind that such investments do create jobs. That is the type of company which has been a boon to all regions of the country and primarily responsible for high technology development in Canada's aeronautical industry. Companies like that do not pack up and leave with millions of dollars every year, they do not bank all their profits in Hartford, because in the past 15 years that company has never stopped expanding, creating jobs and improving technology.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé). First of all, I think he picked the wrong example. As far as Pratt & Whitney is concerned, I did not say I was against attracting foreign investments. I said that we must make sure that foreign investments in Canada are used not to make us lose jobs, but rather to keep them or create more jobs.

He referred to Pratt & Whitney, but he should remember that it does not stand as an example, it is not a model company. Remember the 1972 labour troubles brought about by unionization! Remember how that American multinational company fought in Quebec to prevent male and female workers from joining the unions! As I recall, the National Assembly had to step in and legislate to force the company to let all its workers join the unions.

Still, I am glad the Hon. Member raised that point because it goes to show that American businesses and foreign investors alike must abide by the law. Recently, we heard about unions affiliated with American unions deciding to break all ties and join the Canadian labour movement. It proves that we do need strict rules to make sure that Canada is not directed from the outside.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) for a supplementary.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I wonder a bit when I hear the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) say that the company in question, Pratt & Whitney, was not a model company in our country, when his Government invested some $12 million in it in the last few years.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Hon. Member . . . I do not know whether he is hard of hearing, but I said that it is a bad example as far as unionization is concerned. He surely remembers that at the time, when there was a dispute at United Aircraft, as it was then known, the company's name was held in such contempt that it had to be changed for the company to continue operating.

The Member has certainly not forgotten the 1972 labour troubles in Quebec about the unionization of that company's employees.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now over—

Investment Canada Act

[English]

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House for the first time to speak extensively. I find it difficult to speak extensively when asking a question in this House so I will take the opportunity this afternoon to speak in this debate.

The Bill before us, Mr. Speaker, is a Bill which this House has debated in many forms over the past two decades without its necessarily being called Bill C-15. I support this piece of legislation for a number of reasons which are in direct contradiction with the views expressed in the last few days by members of the New Democratic and Liberal Parties. I want to make my comments under three headings. I believe these headings are the essence of the Opposition's arguments. The first argument is that most foreign countries have some sort of screening mechanism, some sort of "FIRA", and usually a much tougher FIRA or screening mechanism than we propose and, therefore, we are going to be exposing Canada to an investment climate which will be unusually demanding for Canada as compared to that in other countries in the world. This has been a major point in the argument of the Leader of the New Democratic Party and has been frequently alluded to by members of both opposition Parties.

In dealing with this argument I would like to quote from a report of the OECD on this particular subject. If you look at the way foreign countries deal with direct investment which comes into their country, Mr. Speaker, you will find some surprising facts. Canada's FIRA regulations in the past 10 to 12 years have been much more onerous and strenuous than those which exist as screening mechanisms in other countries. I will quote from a document entitled Controls and Impediments Affecting Inward Direct Investment in OECD Member Countries—which was published in 1982—under the heading, "Authorization Procedures, Regulations and Impediments of a General Nature". Germany: No authorization is needed. Greece: The importation of capital from abroad is not subject to authorization. Italy: Foreign direct investment does not require authorization and its screening mechanism is much weaker than FIRA was. For the Netherlands: Inward direct investment in the form of capital participation is not subject to authorization. Spain: As a general rule foreign investment in Spanish firms is free up to 50 per cent of the capital. Above 50 per cent the investor has to apply for an authorization which is granted in almost all cases. In the last two years, an average of 96 per cent of the total value of all applications submitted in Spain for authorization have been granted. Switzerland: No authorization is required for investment by non-residents or by established foreign-controlled enterprises, except for the acquisition of real estate which is subject to authorization and a couple of other limited industries. The United Kingdom: No authorization is required for investment by non-residents or established foreign-controlled enterprises. The United States, our neighbours, and I again quote from the OECD document as I have been all along: No authorization is required for investment by non-residents or by established foreign controlled enterprises. Some States of that Union prohibit or limit the ownership of land by non-resident foreigners or foreign corporations.

This is a very interesting document when one is trying to get a sense of where Canada fits in the context of over-all foreign investment in the world today. Why is this important? First of all it was raised by the Opposition. The truth is that Canada has constructed layer upon layer of deterrents through FIRA which are viewed as being psychological impediments by foreigners, which in their view is much more onerous than investment in other countries. If that is true, we have to come to terms with that reality.

I want to read from a recent book by Professor Edward Safarian of the University of Toronto. He looks at the flow of investment from 13 major countries in the last 20 years. From 1963 to 1968 Canada was the recipient of 16 per cent of the flow of investment from the 13 major investing countries in the world. From 1968 to 1973, it was 12 per cent. Then, when FIRA really moved into high gear from 1974 to 1979, it was 3 per cent; only 3 per cent of the total investment came to Canada, down from 16 per cent. We have to situate our screening mechanisms, whatever they are, in a world context. There is no better proof of that than the statistics that I have just read.

Of course, the most dramatic is the situation since 1980. From 1980 to 1982 our share of the flow of investment capital from these 13 major countries was negative. In other words, we were investing more abroad than was being invested here. We have to look at what Canada looks like abroad. We have to look at what our screening methods look like arrayed against the panoply of screening mechanisms in other countries. If you look at this you will find that FIRA was extremely dangerous for our economic development.

It is true that Sweden, Norway, Australia and Japan have screening mechanisms, but, by all objective views it is clear that they are much easier than FIRA. As a matter of fact, France is extremely open. It has an interdepartmental committee that looks at certain levels of foreign investment and it has a registry for foreign exchange investments, but it does not have strict criteria and its rejection rate has always been about 1 per cent, 2 per cent or 3 per cent a year of all foreign investment destined for that country. France, Australia, Scandinavia and Japan all have a very, very low rejection rate, Italy especially so.

We have to look at FIRA in this context. That is why FIRA, quite frankly, must go the way of the dodo bird. It is a mechanism which, if it ever was useful, is certainly no longer useful in the late 1970s let alone the 1980s.

The second major thrust I have found in this debate this afternoon as well as when the debate opened, is that there is somehow inherent in our Bill great danger to the survival of small firms. Of course, you can argue both positions on this subject with varying degrees of proof, but I would like to share with the House my thoughts on this very briefly.

I have a feeling that in Canada we have had a tendency, especially in the last 10 years, to produce small firms that grow to a certain stage but never grow to the second stage. That second stage is the ability to export abroad or even just to the United States, or to move to a technological stage whereby a company becomes a world-class firm. We have had a tendency in Canada of producing small firms which are then sold for the capital gain and the capital gain is used quite often to buy real estate, which is not particularly productive. We have to stop that. If we want our small firms to really develop, and this includes the Black and Deckers of the world, we have to find a way of getting them to that second stage where they can be truly an international presence. Small firms can be internationally strong as well as nationally strong. I believe the way to do that, Mr. Speaker, is by giving the kind of signals we are giving in this Bill.

I was told the other day by the president of one of the larger foreign-controlled firms in London that if this Bill is passed, he is thinking of buying two or three small firms in Canada and quadrupling their output. That company will export back into the U.S. from that base. It is going to quadruple its payroll and quadruple its labour. That is as a result of this Bill. In other words, small firms also are going to be resuscitated by this Bill. They are not just going to be threatened.

A number of firms who in fact find the competitive situation more difficult as a result of this Bill may find that their investment patterns would have been better in different directions anyway. We will have a more competitive situation which will drive down prices and force us to be more competitive and effective in the world economy. Hopefully, as a result, we can move to what I have referred to as the stage two of any business, which is able to be something more than a small national enterprise.

The third major argument we have been hearing is about the threat of foreign buyers moving into this country buying firms and closing them down. I think this was the burden of what we were hearing this afternoon. In that regard I would like to say that from all evidence we have seen in the last six or seven years, firms are not investing in Canada to shut down Canadian firms; they are not investing at all. Therefore, the essence of the opposition argument in this regard is really without any factual foundation.

I have heard arguments that if we have foreign ownership, we are going to change the production patterns of certain Canadian firms and so on. I would like to suggest, especially in the example brought up by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), that foreign participation in Canadair or deHavilland might be an extremely good thing. What those firms have are magnificent facilities, magnificent skills, magnificent technological capabilities. What those firms need is foreign distribution, foreign marketing expertise and some foreign leverage. In fact, they might get it by having a foreign partner.

EXECUTION OF MASS MURDERERS ACT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved that Bill C-209, an Act respecting the execution of mass murderers, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope that this Bill will pass second reading stage and go to committee. I believe it deserves that treatment.

This Bill is necessary because the Criminal Code of Canada fails to provide for the proper punishment of mass murderers, sometimes called serial murderers. The continued existence of mass murderers, or serial murderers, is a constant source of fear to Canadians in general and particularly to women and children.

The Bill provides for the execution of anyone who deliberately plans and kills 10 or more human beings and is found guilty beyond the shadow of a doubt.

One such murderer is Clifford Robert Olson. No one can deny that the murder of these girls and boys was not deliberately planned and carried out in cold blood. Let me outline this murder spree of Clifford Robert Olson. He had no conscience and killed simply for kicks. The first murder was that of Christine N. Weller. Olson took her to Richmond on November 17, 1980, and killed her with multiple stab wounds. Her murder, like that of all the others that followed, was planned and deliberate.

Five months later, Clifford Olson took Colleen Daignault to Surry and killed her. Her murder was also planned and deliberate. The cause of her death was skull fracture.

Five days later, Clifford Robert Olson took Daryn Todd Johnsrude to Deroche on April 21, 1981, and caused his unlawful death. The cause of death was skull fractures.

The fifth murder was that of Ada Anita Court, which took place just one month after the murder of Daryn. On June 21, 1981, Clifford Robert Olson took her to Agassiz and caused her death. The cause was strangulation.

Eleven days later, Clifford Robert Olson took Simon Patrick Partington, a nine-year old boy, to Richmond and killed him. The cause was strangulation.

The next murder took place 28 days later. Sandra Lynn Wolfsteiner disappeared on May 19, and finally Olson admitted that he killed her.

The next murder was seven days after that. Clifford Robert Olson took Judy Elizabeth Kozma to Agassiz on July 9 and caused her unawful death by multiple stab wounds.

Just two days later Clifford Robert Olson took Raymond Lawrence King to Agassiz. He killed him on July 23, 1981. The cause of death was skull fractures.

Again, just two days later, this man—if one can call him a man—took Sigrun Charlotte to Richmond and killed her on July 5. The cause of death was skull fractures. Just two days later, Clifford Robert Olson took Terri Lynn Carson to Agassiz and killed her by strangulation on July 27, 1981.

On July 21, just three days after the murder of Terri, he took Louise M. Chartrand to Whistler and killed her. The cause of her death was skull fractures.

Those are the 11 murders that this man carried out in that short period of time. In the month of July alone, he killed five people in cold blood. The evidence indicates that many of them were put through sordid degradation. The evidence is sufficient to indicate that at least some of these people faced sexual abuse and degradation before they were murdered.

I will deal with his sentence in a few moments. The first question I want to raise is whether Olson can be rehabilitated. In his 42 years of misspent life, Olson compiled a list of crimes which kept him behind the bars for the best part of 25 years. He committed one crime after another, and then capped it all with the murder spree of at least 11 young people. He now openly brags that he killed several others in the United States, for which he has not yet been convicted.

Perhaps the words of the wife of Olson can give an insight into the kind of man we are dealing with. She told the Supreme Court hearing that she was married to "an animal who terrorized me". She also told of nightmares that haunted her before her husband was caught in which the ghost of the murdered nine-year old boy, Simon Partington, begged her to help him. Whether it was a ghost or a dream, she sincerely felt that this young child was begging for help while her husband was brutalizing and killing him. She went on to say, "Oh, I hate him—I've hated him since the night he held a knife to my throat".

Robert Shantz, Olson's lawyer at one time, said that Clifford Olson is "conscienceless creep" who should be executed. He went on to say that, "There isn't anything that current medical science can do to change that fellow. You let him out and he is likely to have three more kids killed". This has been verified and confirmed by other highly trained psychologists. I ask the House: can he be rehabilitated?

First, Olson has no remorse for what he did. He laughed when he was collecting the money for the people he had murdered. Second, most experts say that, without a conscience, a serial killer cannot be reformed. Dr. Morrison, an American psychiatrist, said, "They are untreatable, unrehabilitatable, and uncontrollable". He went on to say that they can put on a good act but they cannot be reformed.

I submit that there is as much chance of Clifford Robert Olson being rehabilitated as the proverbial snowball staying a snowball in Hades.

Second, is it proper to try Olson a second time? This is an important question. Some people have raised the objection that this would be retroactive legislation which violates the fundamental principles of justice. Let me give you one or two instances. Adolf Eichmann was executed for crimes he committed prior to 1945 by laws which could not have been in existence prior to 1948 because Israel did not exist prior to 1948. The crimes he committed were so terrible there was no question that he should have been executed. He was. War criminals who were tried by army courts and who were not punished sufficiently were then tried by civilian courts and punished. Other war criminals were executed years after they had committed their crimes. There is an exception to every rule, and it is accepted generally by people around the world. When the reason is strong enough, the exception is made. Here we have a man who murdered 11 young people, laughs about it, and wants to profit by it. Twenty-five years in prison is not adequate. He has special guards, special protection, and special privileges. He watches television. He write letters, I do not know how many, with the dirtiest and most profane language I have ever read. The taxpayers of Canada are paying to keep a man like that alive.

Third, who will be responsible if Olson does escape or is eventually paroled? Not a boy or a girl on his street would be safe. He gets his kicks from killing boys and girls. Would those of you who think he should not be executed have him live beside your sons and daughters who have small children? Would you want him next door to you?

Retroactive legislation has beneficial side effects because if the possibility of retroactive legislation had been publicized, anyone who wanted to commit a murder today could no longer be absolutely certain that he will not be executed tomorrow. Who knows how many lives might have been saved from potential murderers because this Bill was on the Order Paper?

Next I want to look at the experience in one other country, namely, China. China, which we think is so primitive, established the death penalty for serious crimes. It included homicide, rape, robbery, explosions, and other activities. The report states that two months after taking this hard line, that is that people who committed crimes and were found guilty would be executed, crime fell to its lowest level in years, dropping 46.7 per cent one month and 11.5 per cent more the next month.

Death is a deterrent. Everybody wants to live. Very few want to die. Death is certainly a deterrent. It is certainly a deterrent when a man has committed a number of crimes and is then executed. He will not commit any more crimes. Had Clifford Olson been executed after he murdered the first girl, Christine Ann Weller, there would be ten fine young people alive today, but he was not executed.

I want to outline a few comments that I have in a thick file of letters from people all across Canada. One deals with the last point I want to make. People are urging that this Bill be passed. In the last session of Parliament I tabled more than 10,000 petitions from people across Canada who said that Clifford Robert Olson has no right to live. The punishment given to him is not adequate. Here are some comments. Here is what one person said, "It might be a good idea to let Olson mingle with the other prisoners". You know what would happen if they did that, Mr. Speaker? Why should the state make criminals carry out what is the state's duty? Other comments are: "Why should the taxpayer protect him? The children he killed were never given any protection and in a society where we thought they did not require it. Well, those children are rotting in their graves. Justice is a joke in Canada. A life sentence is a farce. These murderers are out in five years. He is dehumanized and should be treated in the same method given a mad dog suffering with rabies".

Fourth, execution works in other places as a deterrent. I have given the instance of China. By law, Olson's sentence means that no request for parole may be considered until he has served at least 25 years. The judge recommended that he not be permitted to have parole then, but strange things happen in our land. Olson escaped before from a maximum security prison. He may escape again. If he is executed, he will not be escaping or killing any more boys or girls. What if he does escape? I do not want the blood of the boys and girls on my coat-tails. I do not want the blood of the boys and girls he has already killed on my coat-tails. The man should be executed.

Some people have said to me that they do not believe in capital punishment because the wrong man may be executed. But there is no chance of the wrong man being executed in this case. It will be Clifford Robert Olson.

I want to close with a comment that came to me from somewhere in Canada, I forget where. The person said, "The man continues to make a mockery of our judicial system. He is still front page news because of our obsession with the money that was paid to him to uncover his victims, while his victims' ghosts are screaming in our apathetic ears for justice to be done". This person went on to say, "I hope they continue to scream. I hope they scream so loud that we are awakened from our self-serving lives determined to right the wrongs for which our neighbours' children have already suffered the consequences".

I have no hesitation whatsoever in moving that this Bill be read a second time and that Clifford Robert Olson be executed.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has raised a very important question. However, Bill C-209 respecting the execution of mass murders only deals with part of the problem in my opinion. I think that its scope should be extended.

What I do not understand is that although our constituents have made this a priority issue the Government opposite is showing no leadership on the question of the death penalty. When I was elected in 1979, one of the first things I did was to ask my constituents this question in a householder mailing: Do you agree with a return of the death penalty? 85 per cent of them answered yes. This was the opinion of my constituents in 1979. They were for a return of the death penalty. Each week, I receive letters from people throughout the country. In nine out of ten cases, people favour a return of the death penalty.

In terms of human tragedy, we often forget those who are the real victims. It is not only the one who is killed whose rights are violated, but all those around him who love him, his father, his mother, his sons, his daughters, his brothers and his sisters, and the spouse who go through a very harrowing and even traumatic experience.

The major problem revolves around the application of the law. If our institutions are unable to keep convicts in jail and if the convicts continue to escape, our correctional system should be reformed. How many times do we read in the newspapers that people on parole have committed another crime? How many times do we hear that they have committed acts of violence and even murders? The Government should have the courage, first of all, to submit the issue of the death penalty to a free vote in this House, and second, to review our parole system.

Mr. Speaker, I know that other Members want to speak, but in closing, I could perhaps suggest that we consider having a national referendum on the death penalty. I often have the feeling that some Members in this House are saying that their constituents want the death penalty, but that they themselves are against it. Are we here to represent our constituents or not? For my part, I would vote for a return of the death penalty for first degree murder.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to place a few remarks on the record concerning Bill C-209 in the name of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). The entire subject of capital punishment is a very emotional one, yet it is important to recognize, as did the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay), that we have to deal with this matter in a reasonable manner, not simply be caught up in an emotional stampede. I am opposed to capital punishment in principle. I am not simply opposed to this Bill, but I am opposed to capital punishment for four reasons.

First, capital punishment tends to be class legislation. People who are well to do are able to afford lawyers. They can go the whole route in terms of postponing trials, obtaining extensions and appeals, and bringing in witnesses. The route is something which helps many more people with money to be acquitted than people who do not have money. In the end, people who do not have money are executed, and those who have money are acquitted much more often.

Second—and the Hon. Member referred to it in his speech—there is always the possibility of convicting the innocent. For example, Donald Marshall of Nova Scotia served 11 years in prison for a murder which he did not commit. If we are to be consistent, we have to recognize that if we apply capital punishment for any reason, there is always the possibility that the innocent will be convicted.

Third, capital punishment is not a deterrent. Studies have been conducted in States in the U.S. which have capital punishment and are adjacent to States where capital punishment does not exist. These studies have shown that the rate of murder does not vary significantly. In fact, violence begets violence. If we want to encourage a violent society, perhaps returning to capital punishment is one way of doing it.

The fourth reason is a very important one. Juries tend not to convict when they know that a human life depends upon their decision. When they know that what they decide will result in whether another human being lives or dies, they are very reluctant to convict someone.

A number of Private Members' Bills have been given first reading in this session. Of the bills submitted, I believe the present one is perhaps the most objectionable from a legal point of view because it attempts to apply capital punishment in a retroactive manner. It is specifically designed to deal with a single individual. I agree with the Hon. Member that Clifford Robert Olson is a most odious individual. There is no one in the House who would want to defend such a person. As a person who opposes capital punishment in principle, I would go as far as to say that if anyone has forfeited his or her right to life, it would be a person like Clifford Robert Olson. However, I do not think that this is any reason for us to provide a retroactive law applying capital punishment. It is a repugnant principle in law.

The Hon. Member is aware of the concerns within his Party about applying a retroactive 25 per cent back-in under the National Energy Program. In that instance we are talking about money, and they oppose it in principle. They find it most repugnant. However, the Hon. Member is willing to take a life by passing a retroactive law. I think that illustrates the legal fallacy and the objectionable legal quality of the Bill which he is proposing.

Perhaps capital punishment gives society the feeling that we are doing something about a problem when we are not, or that we are dealing adequately with the situation when we are not.

It was revealing that when the news of the Olson murders first broke several years ago, a psychologist pointed out that there were five or six young people, children, in British Columbia at that time who, he believed, had the potential to act in the same manner as Clifford Olson. He was saying this at the same time that British Columbia was shutting down facilities to help such children.

Why are we not demanding diagnostic or treatment facilities for children in crisis so that they have some possibility of growing up and living normal and decent lives? We have to attack this kind of problem at its roots instead of waiting until we have a crisis, saying that we will take the life of a person we all find objectionable and feeling that somehow we are dealing with the problem.

In conclusion, I find this Bill to be a most objectionable one. It is a subject with which all of us have a great deal of difficulty dealing. I do not believe the Hon. Member's measures will in any way deal with the matter in an adequate fashion. People such as Clifford Olson have to be kept in permanent confinement. There is no doubt about that. I agree with the Solicitor General that we have to deal with this subject in a reasonable way. We should not be following blind emotion.

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to second this Bill. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), has my support for the second reading of Bill C-209, an Act respecting the execution of mass murderers. I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak in favour of the Bill.

It is very important that we have a concrete definition of mass murderers before we begin to discuss the various concerns and solutions. According to the Oxford Concise Dictionary, murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, that is premeditated and ill-meaning. Mass means relating to large numbers of persons or things or on a large scale. Therefore, we can safely say that a mass murderer is one who unlawfully kills a large number of human beings, having previously intended to do so.

In this category we must include not only those people who unlawfully kill a number of people at one time, but those who murder several people over a period of time. The latter is often called a serial murderer, and they definitely fall into the mass murder category because they are personally responsible for taking several lives.

At this time I would like to add that it is my opinion that one murder is one too many. Anyone responsible for the murder of two or more people is a mass murderer, in my judgment. I would like to point out that there is a very important distinction between those people who murder once and those who are responsible for several tragic deaths. While murder in any form is deplorable, the one-time murderer has often committed the crime in a moment of passion.

May I stress again that I do not condone that action. Murder is murder, no matter what the circumstances. My point is that the one-time murderer usually acts without malicious intent. It is in a moment of passion or emotion that he or she decides to revenge or benefit himself or herself, or it may be a case of fear, fear of being caught in the act of committing another wrong. It is rarely an act that has been thought out and it is rarely repeated.

The mass murder or serial murder is a completely different case. If possible, it is even more deplorable. It is a repeated deliberate action not only to harm, but to destroy another life. This is the murderer who kills again and again and feels no remorse for his or her actions. It is carefully thought out and usually cleverly executed. A pattern develops and the murderer chooses similar circumstances and methods for each death.

What makes this type of murder absolutely unbearable is the complete lack of respect given to the life of others, not only once, but several times over. What words can we possibly use to explain how terrible this crime is? We need only look at the victims and their surviving families to come to a realization of the disaster and chaos such a murderer brings to our citizens. There is an added dimension of pain and heartbreak to the family of a victim of a mass murder. The knowledge that the person responsible for killing a loved one has done so before to other families, and may do so again, is especially frightening. We need only talk to family members who have had a mother, father, brother, sister or child callously murdered. The pain is doubled because you know you are not alone in your suffering. Other families are experiencing the same pain.

There may be strength in numbers, but this is a terrible bond to have with others. So they suffer and wonder why their family, why their daughter, son, sister, brother, mother or father? Why indeed. It is hard to understand how a mass murderer, or serial murderer, picks his victims. There is rarely any connection between the victims of a serial murderer. There is no logical process by which the murderer singles out his prey. In most murders of this kind the victims are vulnerable single people, children out alone, elderly people on their own, women out by themselves.

Another similarity is that the victims are nearly always strangers to the murderer. They have to be strangers because the murderer needs the thrill of the chase. He chooses someone, be it male or female, who can be caught alone. Sometimes the killer seeks to gain his victim's trust, only so he can monstrously betray it. Such murders are monstrous. The actual killing is often sadistic and the murderer thrives upon the terror he induces in his unfortunate victim.

The question is, what can we do to stop or prevent such horrible crimes like these from continuing? Can we deter people from considering and committing this sort of murder? I strongly believe that we can, and more, that we must. We have a responsibility to our citizens and ourselves to make sure that we do just that. We have the technology and know-how to do so many incredible things. Yet for too long we have not implemented the one sure way to prevent the massive loss of human lives that occurs when mass murder takes place.

I am referring to the deterrent of capital punishment. While many mass or serial murderers put little or no value on another's life, they are still very concerned with the preservation of their own. The knowledge that, by taking the lives of others, one may lose one's own life is definitely something that would make one stop and think. It would force the potential mass murderer to think twice, once about his own life and the second time about another person's life.

Most of us would never really consider taking someone else's life. If the possibility of losing our own life was a very real and probable result from taking another's life, I am confident that an individual would be deterred from murder the first time.

As I mentioned earlier, while murderers may have little or no concern for their victim's life, they are very protective of their own. Most actions are based on a strong desire to protect and affirm one's own self. In order to present the mass murderer with a very real deterrent, we must concentrate on the one aspect of his life that does mean something to him, that is his own life. I am not talking about a vengeful action in taking a murderer's life.

I would also like to mention that hanging is not the only method available for the implementation of capital punishment. I sincerely believe that we can be more humane in our methods. The purpose of capital punishment is not to take revenge. It is to be used as a deterrent to prevent a potential murderer from becoming an actual one. I am talking about giving a clear choice to the potential murderer. If an individual decides to kill, then he should be held responsible with his own life. We must ensure that that choice is made clear to the murderer. It is his choice.

We have a responsibility to uphold our end of the bargain. Our parents taught us values and the lessons of life by warning us of the consequences our actions would bring. We must ensure that potential murderers understand that they will be asked to atone for their actions.

I am not suggesting revenge for the dead victims. Revenue is not the basis of our judicial and correctional systems. Revenue does not bring the victims back. However, weither can we turn a blind eye to such horrible crimes. The numbers of mass or serial murders are growing. In the United States, over 120 serial murderers are now in prison. Many have killed hundreds of innocent people in the course of their lives. Yet they feel little or no remorse for the taking of another person's life.

The notorious Henry Lee Lucas from the State of Virginia, who claims to have murdered over 360 people in 32 years, says, "Once I've done a crime, I just forget it. I go from crime to crime". Lucas' partner, Otis Elwood Toole, also shows no remorse. "I think of killing like smoking a cigarette, like another habit", he said.

We have a responsibility to break that habit of our mass and serial murderers. It is a habit that knows no economic, social or geographical barriers. While the United States is particularly plagued by most of the known serial murderers, here in Canada we too have experienced the trauma and terror that these murderers induce.

Our nation's attention has been riveted to the Clifford Olson case. However, that is just one example. We do not want a repeat of that horror to happen to any Canadians in the future. Those terrible events are ongoing in the hearts of the victims' families. Our main objective is to provide a deterrent to those considering murdering many times over.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize yet again that it is our responsibility to provide a measure which will give the potential mass murderer reason to re-think his proposed course of action. It is not a matter of revenge but a matter of being responsible and providing justice for our society. To provide for the capital punishment of murderers, I support this Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, the Bill presented by my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Taylor) touches on a fundamental issue. However, I do not want to use the precious time of this House to discuss the basic issue of this Bill, which is an attempt to reintroduce capital punishment into the Canadian penal system. We are all aware of the significance of this matter and the interest it generates. I am convinced that my colleague is proposing this legislation with the conviction that capital punishment is necessary for the welfare of Canadians. I do not intend to discuss the logic of this conviction. However, I do have an opinion on the subject.

Like other Canadians, the events of the past months have made me reflect on the issue of capital punishment. The Prime Minister has already indicated there will be a debate on the subject at some time during this session. The debate, to be followed by a free vote by all Members of the House, makes us aware of the fundamental significance of our own individual opinions on the subject, but I do not intend to discuss with you my own opinion nor the arguments in favour or against reinstatement of capital punishment in Canada. I do not think this is the appropriate time to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I may have said this before, but in any case, the Prime Minister gave Canadians the assurance that this difficult subject would be debated in the House at some time during this session of Parliament. The debate will probably be long and heated, as were all debates on this issue, including the debate in July 1976, when capital punishment was removed from the Criminal Code of Canada. No doubt every aspect will be examined and analyzed in detail, with statistics attached. No doubt the results of this debate, whether to reinstate capital punishment or to maintain its removal from the Criminal Code, a will be milestone in the evolution of Canada's penal system. However, and that is where I object to the Bill presented by my hon. friend, all the aspects and implications of the issue of capital punishment should be studied and debated, not just one particular case to which it could be applied. In other words, we shall have to consider the humanitarian as well as the preventive or reparatory aspects of such punishment and the impact it will have on Canadian society and on Canada's image abroad.

I feel that because of its fragmentary and superficial nature, the Bill presented by my hon. friend does not lend itself to this kind of debate and is therefore inopportune.

Mr. Speaker, that is not my only objection to the Bill now before the House. I am also firmly opposed to the Bill on substantive grounds because I feel it is inadequate in what it is trying to accomplish. It is enough to analyze the Bill's various paragraphs to see what kind of problems it raises. Mr. Speaker, the Bill is inadequate throughout because it deals with the complex issue of capital punishment in a few minor considerations, a preamble and a few clauses that lack substance.

Let us look at the preamble. The Bill deals only with one specific aspect of the issue, namely the death penalty for mass murderers. In my opinion, the scope of the Bill is too narrow; it does not meet the stated purpose explicitly described in the whereas clauses of the preamble, which is to relieve Canadians of their fears in general, lessen the grief and remove the anguish of the families of the victims of such criminals.

Murderers convicted of killing at least 10 people certainly deserve a particularly severe penalty and unequivocal condemnation of their actions which I would describe as savage. There is no question about the panic caused by a series of murders in a community or the anguish suffered by the families of victims. However, by what logic would these murderers be condemned to death while others who have committed actions just as monstrous, such as nine murders, would be spared?

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member would probably reply that you have to start somewhere and that is not because it is impossible to condemn to death all murderers that none of them should be condemned. While I do not question his sincerity in the least, I must seriously wonder as to the timeliness of proceeding as he suggests by legislating on a piecemeal basis. By proceeding in specific cases, would we not be doing in a roundabout and virtually secret way what we have promised to debate publicly?

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, if the death penalty must one day be reinstated in Canadian criminal law, this must be done following a comprehensive debate and discussion and not by what I would call a roundabout way. To do otherwise would be unworthy of this House, whatever the personal beliefs of every one of us on this matter. It would be unworthy because we would be depriving the Canadian people and ourselves of the comprehensive debate that the subject deserves, and also because, by acting in this way, we would risk developing a body of law without any guidelines, made up of individual cases and exceptions.

However, this is not the only problem with the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member. Indeed, clause 3 of this Bill sets deadlines for the execution of a mass murderer, which would be 90 days after the coming into effect of the legislation or 90 days after expiry of any time for appeal after the tenth guilty verdict is delivered, whether or not the murderer has exerciced his right to appeal or not. In other words, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is suggesting that the hanging take place before the appeal is heard. Let us hang him right away and we shall see later if he really murdered ten people! In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, he disregards the right of appeal, which is fundamental in our penal system and which can normally be exercised up to the highest Court in the land, that is the Supreme Court of Canada. Moreover, the Hon. Member is ignoring completely the historical right of all those condemned to death to petition for a reprieve or a commutation of sentence. During this week when we are celebrating the 36th anniversary of the International Bill of Rights, it is ironic that this House should be asked to consider a Bill which deliberately goes against some of the most basic rights guaranteed by this charter and by various other international instruments, including the International Covenant on Civil Political Rights.

I need not to remind this House that Canada has played an active role in the formulation and the adoption of these instruments. By passing such a Bill, we would be repudiating all the international commitments made by Canada in the field of human rights. For instance, as recently as last May, at a meeting of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, Canada approved a resolution containing provisions which reasserted the commitment already made in the International Bill of Rights and the Covenant. Anyone condemned to death has the right to petition for a reprieve or a commutation of sentence, and this can be granted to anyone condemned to death. The capital penalty will not be applied if there is an appeals procedure or any other procedure or power to obtain a reprieve or a commutation of a death sentence.

We are all aware that those provisions are not operative in Canada, but are we not morally required to honour our international commitments, inasmuch as Canada has for so long played the role of a supporter and promoter of human rights in the world?

Also, under our Common Law, anyone sentenced to death is entitled to clemency and pardon. Such executive clemency is a royal prerogative and an integral part of our Canadian judicial traditions that are confirmed in our Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker, it is my view that the enactment of my hon. colleague's Bill would place Canada on an equal footing with some nations that ignore human rights and profess that international commitments are of no value, even moral even symbolic. Surely this House has no desire to opt for the road proposed by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, it is Clause 5 of the legislation that I would like to discuss, the Clause under which my hon. colleague proposes to bypass the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms enacted less than three years ago for the purpose of entrenching for Canadians, under the Constitution itself, the most basic rights, the most essential to the survival and growth of democracy.

My hon. colleague proposes to use the procedure provided for in Section 33 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the "notwithstanding" Section under which the Parliament of Canada or a Legislative Assembly can specify that an Act shall operate notwithstanding the Charter. So my hon. colleague would have us bypass the Charter, ignore those basic guarantees that all Canadians are supposed to enjoy. But what are those specific guarantees he proposes to bypass? The one in Section 7, the right to life, liberty and security, not to be infringed upon except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice? The one in Section 12, the protection against cruel and irrelevant treatment and penalties? And finally, the one in Section 11, the right to the benefits of the lesser punishment if the punishment has been changed between the time of commission and the time of the sentencing?

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that it is in all good faith and quite within the law that my hon. colleague, by way of Clause 5 of the Bill, tries to bypass those provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. But I have serious doubts as to whether we should do so. Since April 1982, when the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms came into force, the Canadian people have been convinced that their rights are protected. They are assured that there is a mechanism which guarantees that their rights are safeguarded.

It is my view that it would be unworthy of the Parliament of Canada to use Section 33 in order to keep the Charter away from a debate in which its application is so basic. Bypassing the Canadian Charter under such circumstances would downgrade it to the level of an ordinary piece of legislation, rob it of all its character of a constitutional, basic and supreme statute.

I indicated earlier that this legislation was not appropriate by reason especially of the commitment made by our Leader to refer the question to the House for scrutiny and propose a free vote on it. The Prime Minister renewed that commitment in this House on December 3, in answer to the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan). Is our Leader's commitment not enough for my colleague from Bow River (Mr. Taylor)?

Also, without being an expert on parliamentary procedure, I do not feel a Private Member's Bill is the right avenue for debating a matter of public interest, as it is in my view.

Indeed, it seems to me that the public interest is at stake here, and that the Hon. Member's Bill is not under the circumstances the most appropriate way of raising the issue of capital punishment.

Although we realize that capital punishment is of interest to the public, and that the Government is very sensitive to the expressed concerns of Canadians, it is therefore my view that introducing this legislation is not the proper procedure for debating the issue.

[English]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret that the time left to debate Bill C-209 is so very short. I am sure that if the subject of the way to deal with those who commit capital offences is ever debated in the House, it will be debated at very great length because of the gravity and seriousness of the subject. Doubtless, many of us will want to scrutinize carefully every aspect of it because of its importance to us.

I would first like to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) for the views which he expressed. I identify with those views. I would also like to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) for his discussion of the specifics of this particular Bill, some of his concerns about it, and why it might not be the appropriate way in which to approach the much more complex and underlying issue of capital punishment.

I believe we must seriously address ourselves to the victims who suffer one murder, never mind the cases of the perpetrators of mass murders. What are we going to do to take care of the tremendous trauma, suffering and sorrow which takes place with the death of one person? I hope this Government will address itself in a better way than the previous Government might have addressed itself to this problem. We must address the concerns of the victims of crime. I know that the last Government began to address this problem, and I hope that trend will continue in the future.

I would also like to express my concern about the entire matter which deals with mass murderers, not only the mass murderers of individuals who are selected one by one, but the whole issue of terrorism. When this subject arises in the House again I would like to have the opportunity to speak about this tragic concern.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The hour provided for Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—GEORGES BANK BOUNDARY DECISION—POSSIBLE STATES REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM. (B) REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER NEGOTIATE MANAGEMENT AGREEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, during the past few days I have brought to the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and this House my concern regarding the successful implementation of the Georges Bank decision which has handed down by the World Court. The reasons for my concern were genuine because relations between Canadian and American fishermen have not always been good, and there has been no indication that those relations will improve with the Georges Bank decision. Because of the request made by the administration of the United States Government to have implementation of the decision delayed for a one-year moratorium, it has become even more important that negotiations on the decision be started immediately.

There is no doubt that the Prime Minister and Hon. Members of the House are aware of the long history of the Georges Bank dispute. Negotiations between the American and Canadian fishermen began in the early 1970s when a compromise on fishing rights was reached. However, eventually it was rejected by the New England fishermen. Canadian-American negotiations were continued through the late 1970s with Canada's Mr. Cadieux and the U.S. negotiator, Mr. Cutler, and an agreement was reached. But with the change of the American Government at that time, the agreement was not implemented. Therefore, when our countries could not come to any agreement, both countries agreed to put the case before the international Court of Justice. Although decisions made by the World Court are not binding, both countries agreed at that time that they would abide by the World Court decision.

As we are all now aware, the decision was reached and handed down. The decision did not give Canada everything she asked for, nor did it give the United States everything it asked for. However, I believe, and I feel most Canadians believe, that it was a good compromise because the smaller area which was given to Canada—about half of what was originally asked for—happens to be, a richer density of scallop fishery. I believe that Canadian fishermen can learn to live with that decision.

What is important now, however, Mr. Speaker, is the immediate implementation of that decision in order that Canadian fisheries management systems may go into effect, especially, of course, in the scallop beds, in order to ensure a healthy and productive fishery in the future.

Just the other day we had an official request by the American administration for the imposition of a moratorium. I posed the question the other day to the Minister and to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and I was pleased with the reply of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that they were not interested in a moratorium. This is something about which we should all be extremely concerned because it is time we get on with the job of good solid fisheries management of the Georges Bank, which will not only benefit Canadian fishermen, but will also benefit American fishermen.

The Canadian record of fisheries management has been very good in the context of world management of fisheries. Our biologists and scientists recognize the need for quality improvement to enhance the species. We cannot take everything; there has to be some stock left so the species will continue to thrive and be economically feasible for fishing. Of course we use the basic principle of size limits on shellfish and age limits for groundfish and the pelagic species. That is basically good solid management.

I am also concerned, Mr. Speaker, that just lately the International Trade Commission fact finding report, concluded on Wednesday, fully supports the U.S. claims that Canadian fish imports are injuring the New England markets. I am a little bit skeptical of that because it seems to be a lever over the heads of Canadians. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) and the Prime Minister—at the highest levels, that is my concern—assure Canadian fishermen that they get their rightful share and proper management. Unfortunately groundfish and pelagic fish will not fly the flags of Canada nor the flags of the United States; they are trans-boundary.

Mr. Stewart McInnes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) for raising this matter. The Government does not significantly differ from the position he stated, but for the record I think it would be appropriate that I review the history of this situation.

On October 12, the International Court of Justice established the Maritime boundary in the Gulf of Maine. That is the boundary, it is final and not in dispute. Indeed, in this House On December 5, in response to a question from the Hon. Member, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) put the position of the Government of Canada very clearly.

Before going to the International Court of Justice, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that Canada had negotiated and signed a treaty with the Americans which would have provided for reciprocal fishing rights and joint management of certain Gulf of Maine stocks, so that both countries would have experienced minimum changes to their established fishing patterns wherever the International Court of Justice might place the Maritime boundary between them. In the end this agreement was rejected by the U.S. Senate. The Americans have now proposed that both countries continue fishing as before in the former disputed area for a period of one year while they assess the implications of the decision and develop their position for such further negotiations as might be necessary in respect of East Coast fishery resources.

An official proposal on these lines was received from the U.S. Government on December 7. It acknowledges the final and binding character of the boundary fixed by the International Court of Justice. The Ministers concerned have not yet had an opportunity to finalize a formal response. However, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has stated publicly that we do not envision agreeing to the proposal. We have serious doubts about it.

One of our concerns is to avoid a return, however temporary, to a situation where unrestrained fishing might again threaten the living resources of the Gulf of Maine area. Our primary objective is to get on with managing the resource in a manner that will maintain it and, if possible, let it return to previous levels so that we can protect the jobs of Canadians involved in the fishing industry.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans scientists are working on an analysis of the resources in the Canadian zone in close consultation with the industry. When this analysis is completed, and only then, will we be in a position to determine precisely what we need to do to manage our resources and what we need in the way of co-operation from the Americans.

EMPLOYMENT—PROVISION OF FUNDS TO CREATE JOBS. (B) SOURCE OF FUNDING

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today as a result of a question I put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on November 29 with regard to certain statements, or musings perhaps, by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) about the money allocated for job creation.

In committee, the Minister indicated that this was not new money. The $1 billion which the Government so flagrantly used in debate and in the scrums with the various press people was implied to be new money for job creation programs. Unfortunately, on questioning the Prime Minister he seemed to indicate that he was not at all certain. That is how it appeared to me. The Government, in its economic statement, released by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), said there is a $1 billion budgetary allocation for job creation programs in Canada. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has now reneged and said that it is not new money but reallocated money. Therefore there are no new funds for direct job creation programs by the Government of Canada.

Much more important, the Government, which was elected with a massive majority on September 4, has reneged on its promises to the Canadian people. It has refused young people an opportunity to enjoy a meaningful life in the years ahead as a result of reneging on its promises. It has disallowed certain moneys under unemployment insurance. It has disallowed the entitlements that older workers in this country possessed up until this time, by cutting them off as well.

When it comes to direct job creation programs, the Conservative Party and its caucus of sheep have done absolutely nothing. They have reneged in the face of concrete fact which suggests beyond a shadow of a doubt that there is need in this country for moneys coming from the Government of Canada to create jobs.

What better example than the Canada Winter Works Program. There is $250 million budgeted for 1984-85. But what is the demand on that money? The demands are unequivocally six times that amount of money.

What do we get from the Prime Minister—this jokester, this man who stands in the House of Commons and laughs at the unemployment in this country? We have nothing but platitudes from him and from the Minister. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) is the real culprit in this. In fact, he is the minister of finance and the one who is setting the policies for the Government.

There is no new money for the unemployed in this country. Not only am I ashamed of the Government, I am ashamed of the caucus Members, those sheep over there and on the ends over here who have done nothing other than quote the Conservative rhetoric that emanates from the United States. They say that foreign investment will be the cure; foreign investment will be the cure for job creation in Canada. But the Minister responsible and the Minister of Employment and Immigration have refused to place on the table in the House of Commons the impact studies which will indicate to Canadians as well as the House how many jobs will be lost as a result of Investment Canada.

The Government is bankrupt of ideas. It is turning back the clock in regard to job opportunities for young people. There are 900,000 young Canadians without employment. What does the Government do? We not only get platitudes from the Prime Minister but from all the front benches.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has echoed in the Chamber and outside the Chamber that the unemployed are not looking hard enough for jobs. Where are the jobs, I ask the Parliamentary Secretary. Why are you not putting more money into Canada Works? Why are you not putting more money in a first chance program for young people? Why are you singling out the unemployed in this country to decrease the deficit of this country? Where is the compassion that you promised during the election campaign?

With great respect, I suggest that this Government is a vaudeville act. Act one was during the election. Now we are into act two. Scene three, if I may add, Mr. Speaker, will come when the Minister of Finance places before this House a budget which I suggest, if it does not address the problems of the unemployed, we in this Party will fight tooth and nail to make sure that the unemployed workers, the young people, will have an opportunity that they deserve. They deserve to have a meaningful life in this century.

This Government is bankrupt of ideas. Its cure is to throw rhetoric at the problems. I for one will not stand in this Chamber and take it sitting down. It is time for the Parliamentary Secretary or the spokesperson for the Conservative Party to stand in his place and tell Canadians just how wrong the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is, how wrong the real culprit is, the Minister of Finance, and how wrong the Prime Minister is. They have to do something and they ought to do it now for those individuals who are unemployed.

Finally, if I can conclude with a brief remark, Mr. Speaker, this Govenrment has singled out the older workers. Not only has it done nothing for the younger workers and the unemployed, but it has done nothing for the older workers who are ready for retirement and who will be slashed by this ruthless Government. Shame on this Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon), I am pleased to enlighten and reassure the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). I should imagine that, in the mind of the Hon. Member of the Official Opposition, there would be only one way to solve the problem—higher taxes or a larger deficit. That is certainly not how this government sees it.

As the Hon. Member probably knows, a special budget allocation of $1 billion in 1985-86 will go a long way towards opening new employment opportunities as a result of the Expenditure and Program Review tabled by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) at the same time as the economic statement. This review enabled us to recoup $4.2 billion through lower expenditures or higher revenues. Some of these funds are used to reduce the government's over-all deficit, and $1 billion has been set aside to create jobs and develop human resources.

The cut-backs mentioned in the Expenditure and Program Review affect all government programs, including of course those of Employment and Immigration Canada. However, I might stress that the $1 billion earmarked for new job creation programs is not money coming from 1985-86 budgets cuts in existing job creation programs. The new programs will be the subject of wide-ranging consultations between the various levels of government and with the parties involved in the private sector, that is management and unions. With these new initiatives, the unemployed will be offered many real opportunities to make a useful and productive contribution to Canadian society.

Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize as well that the Minister looks upon those future consultations as a process designed to promote co-operation by all sectors—federal and provincial governments, management and unions—so as to eliminate duplication and make the best of our limited resources. We will create as many openings as possible with these funds, and that is the commitment made by the government to all Canadians.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT—REPORTED IMPORTATION OF DRUGS BY SOVIET ATHLETES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on Friday December 7, I asked the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelenik) the following question:

Will the Hon. Minister either confirm or deny that three Soviet athletes have been charged with bringing drugs into the country?

The Hon. Minister replied as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I have been informed that three Soviet weightlifters were indeed detained at Mirabel International Airport last evening. They were found to have in their possession restricted drugs, contrary to the provisions of the Canadian Food and Drugs Act. The matter is now in the hands of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and, therefore, I am not in a position to make any further statements.

I have been advised that the three Soviets have been charged with bringing into Canada drugs which are illegal under the Food and Drugs Act. Of course the court will deal with the charges in due course.

I am concerned about the matter because it is illegal. People coming into Canada who bring in illegal drugs are not only breaking the laws of our land but are showing a disrespect for our laws and our traditions. In sport there have been times when people have drugged themselves in order to be more alert or to build bigger muscles. Others have given drugs to opponents in order to slow them down or dull their senses. The use of drugs in sport is completely contrary to the high ideals we Canadians place on athletic competition.

Probably the worst aspect of this whole deal is the example which is being given to the boys and girls and the young men and women who are athletically inclined in Canada. We hold our sportsmen in high repute. We pay large salaries to our baseball players, our hockey players, et cetera; sometimes even larger than is paid to the Prime Minister of Canada. We honour these athletes. Boys and girls look up to them. When athletes come into a country, they come as honoured guests to take part in tournaments or contests. Our athletes have a tremendous responsibility to make sure that they build their bodies with good food, not drugs; that they get proper sleep; that they get proper exercise; that they set an example of wholesome living, because what they do will have a very real effect upon hundreds of boys and girls who are growing up.

Drugs have many uses. There are drugs which relieve pain. At this very moment we have a Bill before the House which, if passed, will permit the use of heroine to relieve the tremendous pain that is suffered by those with cancer. In my view this is a proper use of drugs. We have drugs which are used for so-called recreational purposes, to take people on a "trip" to make them forget their troubles. Hon. Members will recall that the LeDain commission in 1972, which was commissioned to inquire into the non-medical use of drugs, concluded that "there is as yet no evidence of serious long-term effects from use at current levels of consumption of this drug in North America".

That was in 1972, but by 1981 many prominent authorities on the subject deemed that such an opinion was wrong. Dr. Powelson said in 1967 that "this particular drug is harmless", but by 1974 the same doctor admitted the following:

—in five years I knew I was totally wrong . . . medical research groups, after a generation of neglect, began to attribute long-range ill effects to the use of this particular drug.

There are those today who are advocating the use of drugs for relaxation, so-called "trips". When athletes use such drugs, they are betraying the young people who look up to them, and are gradually reducing their own stamina and strength.

There are other drugs which are used to relax muscles or to build muscles or to slow muscles down. Such drugs may be used before a contest so a fighter will not feel pain. Other drugs may be used to superficially keep him alert. Or, such drugs may be used for ulterior purposes by giving them to others to slow them down, to tighten up their muscles, et cetera. There is one good rule to follow; athletes do not need a crutch, and drugs are crutches. They do not need a crutch to build strong bodies. They need good food, good sleep, sound living, wholesome exercise.

I view with disdain the fact that athletes from Russia had the gall to come into Canada and bring with them drugs which they knew to be illegal under the laws of our country.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise in the House today to elaborate on the matter raised by my friend, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), regarding the infraction committed by not three but two Soviet athletes upon their arrival in Canada last week. I congratulate the Hon. Member for bringing this very important subject matter to the attention of the House.

The athletes were indeed charged under Article 15 of the Food and Drug Act after tests of the capsules identified their substance as illegal under the Act. I must state that I am satisfied that the laws of Canada were dealt with efficiently and fairly at that time from a legal standpoint. However, as Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, I cannot and will not condone such an obvious violation, not only in respect of the laws of our country, but the rules of sport and the spirit of fair competition.

On the premise that the use of drugs which artificially enhance performance is harmful to health, ethically wrong and ultimately a threat to high performance sport, Sport Canada has shown initiative in developing a policy to eradicate the use of such drugs.

The competition in question, however, was conducted under the rules and regulations of the International Weightlifting Federation which does not have in its regulations any sanctions or penalties for the possession of a banned doping substance. As a result, the two athletes in question could not be prohibited from competing, as would have been my hope.

Notwithstanding these circumstances, I initiated discussions with Mr. Gotfield Schodl, President, and Dr. Tamas Ajan, General Secretary, of the IWF. I am pleased to announce that I received assurances from both of these officials that they will undertake the following action. First, the IWF will address the specifics of this incident at the earliest opportunity. Second, a one year suspension against the two weightlifters will be recommended by the officials. Third, the IWF will discuss the adoption of sanctions and penalties for the possession of banned doping substances as well as the use of them. I further requested that Canada be permitted to conduct dope testing at this competition using our International Olympic Committee's accredited laboratory in Montreal.

Once again, I must state that this Government is unequivocally opposed to drug use in sport. To this end, our policy mandates every national sport organization to develop a plan to eradicate improper drug use, as well as suspensions for any athlete who uses, possesses or has been convicted of a drug offence in this country or elsewhere. We cannot achieve this in isolation. I am therefore committed to initiating international co-operation to solve this important problem. To this end, I am contacting my international counterparts with a view to eventually abolishing the use of drugs in amateur sport, not only in Canada, but around the world.

ASPIRATIONS OF CANADIANS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the people of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell have spoken. Yesterday, voters said they were fed up with promises and wanted no part of unilateral cutbacks. They want to keep their jobs, and they want the universality of social programs to be maintained. The message they gave applies to all Conservatives. Last night, the Tories went down to a crushing defeat in the riding of Prescott and Russell. The honeymoon is over. If the people of Ontario or voters across the country were called to the polls today, the results would be vastly different from what they were on September 4 of this year. The Liberal Party is vibrant and dynamic, both nationally and at the provincial level, and we shall continue to express the aspirations of all Canadians.

Voters are wary customers, Mr. Speaker. They realize that the provincial cousins of the Tories across the way are tarred with the same brush. The people of Prescott and Russell were not up for sale. The cheques, the promises and the big Tory guns were a complete failure, Mr. Speaker.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TAXATION STATUS—CALL FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the attention of Members of this House and of Canadians everywhere has been drawn in recent weeks to the famine in Africa. The Canadian Government has responded to that crisis, but the real measure of our concern as a nation has been the outpouring of contributions by individual Canadians to non-government organizations.

The voluntary sector has shown, in this and other crises, that it can respond quickly and effectively to the problems of Canada and the world. This Government has made clear its commitment to the principle of voluntary action, and has identified the voluntary sector as an equal partner with government in meeting the economic and social needs of Canadians.

For seven years the National Voluntary Organizations Coalition has been asking the Government to change the tax laws, to replace the existing tax deduction for charitable donations with a 50 per cent tax credit. The previous Government was consistently unresponsive to this proposal. It is my hope that this Government, clearly committed to voluntary action, will meet its pledges with action by implementing these changes to the Income Tax Act. If we are genuinely committed to the role of non-government agencies in the fight for social and economic development in Canada and abroad, there is no better path we could follow.

USE OF NORTHERN AREAS FOR MILITARY TESTING PURPOSES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to call on the Government to rethink the cavalier way in which it agrees to the testing of various military equipment over native homelands which have never been ceded to the Government by treaty. These lands, contrary to official perceptions, are not uninhabited and therefore suitable for testing.

They are the traditional homelands of the Innu people of Labrador and the North Shore of Quebec who have been subjected to low level highspeed test flying by West German fighter planes, putting at risk wildlife patterns that they depend upon, and terrorizing their camps. Or they are the traditional lands of the Dene in northern Alberta and Saskatchewan where the Cruise missile is tested without their permission.

The increasing use of so-called "unoccupied" territory for military purposes should be stopped if native people are to believe that Canadians and their Government really take seriously concepts like Indian nationhood, aboriginal rights and title.

These lands are the collective backyards of real people and real communities whose rights are recognized in the Canadian Constitution. Let the Progressive Conservatives, who are so fond of talking about property rights, ask themselves how they would appreciate analogous testing in their suburban backyards on the grounds that over significant periods of time they appear to be "unoccupied".

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INTERPRETATION OF MEDICAL NEGLIGENCE

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of this House an urgent matter that affects many veterans in Canada. A constituent of mine has been having a problem in getting an interpretation with respect to sub-section 12(2) of the Pension Act as it relates to the possibility of medical negligence on the part of Canadian Armed Forces doctors.

My constituent had 30 years of service to our country and was released from the Armed Services for medical reasons in 1976. He has since been advised by medical authorities that there is a good possibility his condition was not diagnosed or treated correctly. He was advised by the Pensions Advocate in January, 1984, that all the documentation necessary to proceed with his appeal had been received.

I have been advised by officials of the Royal Canadian Legion that there are over 100 cases of a similar nature awaiting the interpretation of this section of the Act.

I would urge the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) to instruct his officials to put this matter on an urgent priority basis in order to receive a ruling at an early date.

Veterans who have given many years of service to our country are entitled to better treatment than that which was provided by the previous Liberal administration.

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in July, 1982, a story in Maclean's magazine by the now Director of Communications for the Progressive Conservative Party, quoted the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) as saying: "If I told you what we (the Conservatives) would do, we'd never get elected".

Earlier this week the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) followed in the same vein as his colleague. He told reporters that people earning more than the national average should no longer expect full benefits from social programs. Yet the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has contradicted his Finance Minister by denying that his Government plans to cut social programs. He still insists that social programs are a "sacred trust".

Who are the Canadian people supposed to believe, Mr. Speaker? Is this part of the Tories' hidden agenda?

The Canadian people are beginning to see this Government in a new light. They promised jobs and a new day for Canada. But instead they have thrown thousands of people out of work with no hope of future employment. And they have plans to reduce and restrict access to unemployment insurance benefits. Having created more unemployment they now turn their backs on the problem and cut off one of the few means people have to support themselves.

The people of Canada want to know, Mr. Speaker, if this is another item on the Tories' hidden agenda?

Our Prime Minister says that he does not believe a bank president is entitled to the same benefits as the needy in this country. But it is not the bank presidents who are going to suffer from the devastating actions of this Government. It is the majority of Canadians, in the low income groups and the middle class, who are going to suffer tremendously from the actions of the Government.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, since the report of the Auditor General of Canada was tabled on December 11th of this year, Canadians have seen with considerable concern the irresponsible way in which the Liberal Government has administered public funds, and not one Liberal Member has apologized for this to the people of Canada.

Here are a few examples of bad management. The CF-18 fighter aircraft will cost at least $3.5 billion more than projected. VIA Rail omitted to pay back $74 million in surplus funds. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development neglected to account for the way a $500 million grant was spent. The Department of Public Works, after signing eight major lease-purchase agreements totalling $1.9 billion, failed to advise Parliament of its acquisitions. Seven harbour commissions have been keeping annual gains of $79 million without the Minister's authority. Federal real estate has not been managed in line with its value. The Government's banking transactions were poorly administered and have resulted in an annual loss of at least $95 million over the last five years alone.

Mr. Speaker, since the Liberals do not intend to apologize, I want to give Canadians the assurance that the 211 Progressive Conservative Members are going to clean up the Government's finances.

UNIVERSITY OF SASKATCHEWAN—CHAIR IN WOMEN'S STUDIES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the previous Government announced that it would sponsor five chairs in women's studies at Canadian universities. We understand that the present Government is following through with these placements but has yet to allocate chairs to Quebec and the Prairies. The University of Saskatchewan has proposed a prairie regional chair in women's studies to be located there. This chair would have a special focus on native and rural women. The Provincial Council of Women of Saskatchewan fully supports this action. I urge the Government to place a chair in women's studies at the University of Saskatchewan.

There is a dire need for research programs in areas affecting women—in law, economics, agriculture, commerce, education, and health, particularly as they relate to rural women. Because of their unique situation, rural and native women have not experienced the benefits of many policy changes and social programs which have benefited urban women.

We believe that a special focus on rural and native women is long overdue. Because of its historical involvement with rural women, because of its strong commitment to native programs, and because it is located in a province with a high percentage of native and rural women, the University of Saskatchewan is particularly well suited. I urge the Government to take such action immediately.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS GIVE INSTRUCTIONS TO CBC PRESIDENT

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) for his outstanding work in respect of the CBC.

However, I would draw your attention to the fact that 3,700 francophone artists have been penalized by the CBC for over twenty years, no less. Canadians throughout the country watch CBC programs eager to see the same people, the same individuals. Our old artists no longer work, our young musicians and artists are never seen on the CBC network, yet the mandate of the CBC is to promote our culture from sea to sea.

Mr. Speaker, I think that four individuals have been controlling CBC programs for many years, and I would urge the Minister of Communications to give the necessary instructions to the CBC president with a view to giving our musicians and artists, young and old alike, an opportunity to display their talent on the CBC network—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

FINANCIAL PLIGHT OF YOUNG FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, Canadian agriculture is facing the worst debt crisis since the 1930s. A combination of continued low commodity prices, increased input costs, including high interest rates, and a sudden decline in farm land values during the last few years has placed many family farms in jeopardy.

A recent Farm Credit Corporation survey revealed that 39,000 farmers were experiencing severe financial stress and that 1,700 were actually facing financial collapse and bankruptcy. The tragedy of these figures is that the farmers in the worst financial shape are the youngest farmers in Canada today. They are the most productive, and they account for one-half of all of Canada's food production.

The second tragedy is that this Conservative Government has not taken any substantial action to save these vital young farmers from financial collapse. For example, in November the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) put a moratorium on foreclosures of FCC loans until January 15, 1985, and promised to take action to help these young efficient farmers to survive. However, no effective action has been taken and none is planned, because there is no farm legislation on the Order Paper of the House to date. I call upon the Minister of Agriculture to stop this pussyfooting around and to take decisive action to avoid this impending calamity for thousands of young Canadian farmers.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCED INCREASE IN PENSIONS AND BENEFITS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Canadians heard all about the spending cuts in the economic statement, but how many realize that that same statement brought long awaited good news for over 140,000 war veterans and their survivors?

Veterans have been promised an enhanced indexation formula for war disability pensions for many years. The enhancement was to ensure parity with the average wage of five representative categories of public servants. For just as many years, the veteran has been disappointed and has, in fact, seen his or her pension fall behind the average composite wage as a result.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) announced, pursuant to the economic statement, that the disparity and the disappointment would be brought to an end. The basic rate is to be raised to reflect parity, and the indexation formula is to be improved to ensure that the disability pensioner never again falls behind. Measures were also announced which will provide for the payment of the married rate pension and, where applicable, the exceptional incapacity allowance and the attendance allowance for the full year following a veteran's death. These benefits are currently reduced or eliminated within a month of a veteran's death.

Veterans in Nepean-Carleton and all across Canada will be delighted by these changes. For this reason, I urge the Minister of Veterans Affairs to proceed with all possible haste to bring the necessary legislation before Parliament. Canada's war veterans have been patient long enough.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I will quote, so that I do not make any mistakes in the quotation. Yesterday the Minister of Finance was quoted as having said that the politics of fear forced the Conservatives to hide their plans during the election campaign from the Canadian public to cut spending and review social programs.

Instead, we have ended up with the Conservatives playing politics of deception, politics of duplicity, and politics of dishonesty. Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister if middle income Canadians could expect cuts in their Old Age Security and in their family allowance benefits, and he replied no. While he was saying that here in the House, his Finance Minister was indicating that social programs for middle income families cannot be afforded today. Canadian families are confused, and are fed up with the Prime Minister saying one thing to this House and the Finance Minister saying something totally opposite. Who is speaking for the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend said that he was going to quote textually. He may have quoted textually from a press report. He did not quote textually from the transcript of the statement of the Minister of Finance, who never said any such thing. The transcript reveals that.

When he used the term "the politics of fear", he was referring to politics as practised by the Liberal Party over many years which consistently distorted the positions of the Conservatives and the NDP during election campaign. That is what he was referring to. He has made no change. That is best exemplified by the Member for Île-Jésus who, during the election campaign, said that the Leader of the Conservative Party was leading a bunch of Orangemen. That is the politics of fear and distortion, and that is why they were repudiated. That is the politics of fear as practised by the Liberal Party, the politics of division over so many years.

What the Minister of Finance said was entirely consistent with his earlier statement, and consistent with the views as expressed in this House, that there is a legitimate question to be asked as to whether we are making the best possible use of scarce resources on behalf of those in our society who need it most. That is the position that he is trying to have debated. I hope that my hon. friend, who does it very well, will engage in that kind of thoughtful debate of which he is, from time to time, capable.

REVIEW OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives have deceived the Canadian public more in the first three months in office than we did in 75 years. The Finance Minister is quoted as having said in that same interview that his mind is already made up with respect to the review of family allowances. If that is the case, why are we going to go through the charade of the issuance of a white paper and the so-called consultative process with the Canadian public, if the Government has already made up its mind on what cuts will take place and when?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member belongs to a political party whose Leader campaigned in 1974 opposing wage and price controls and then introduced them, and who in 1979 participated in defeating a Government by saying 18 cents a gallon was too much. The Hon. Member for Windsor said that if gas went above 18 cents a gallon, he would resign.

Mr. Nielsen: And interest rates.

Mr. Mulroney: And interest rates as well. What we have done is consistent with what we have indicated.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, as I referred to earlier today at a press conference, in a speech to the Publishers' Association of Canada in April of last year I indicated that if we were elected we would invite Canadians, via discussion papers and this kind of exchange, of course, to examine, through the tax system as well, the best utilization we could make of these scarce resources.

If the impression conveyed by the press was that the Minister of Finance has come into this with a closed mind, I want to assure my hon. friend that that is not the case. He has an open mind on the subject and he looks forward to hearing from you as soon as he returns to the House.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my last question is very simple. It has now been admitted by the Minister of Finance that there was a hidden agenda. Why did the Prime Minister not tell the truth to Canadians during the election campaign and, instead, wait until after the September

4 mandate to come good to the Canadian public with his actual intentions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already answered that. I know that my hon. friend would not disagree with me when I say that the Minister of Finance is well known as a man of tremendous integrity and honesty. He speaks the truth at all times. He consults openly and widely, and I know that my hon. friend will want to applaud that statement because it is absolutely true.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT DEFINE "AVERAGE INCOME"

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will agree that clarifying the statements of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister is no easy task. In a press interview, and I have the transcript by the way, the Minister of Finance said that social programs, and specifically family allowance and old age security pensions, would have to be cut because the Government no longer could afford them. According to the tax figures published in 1983, only 9.1 per cent of personal income tax returns declared incomes above $35,000. I would therefore ask the Prime Minister for the Government's definition of an average income. Is it $35,000, $34,000, $25,000, $40,000? Could he inform the House of this definition, so that people will not panic because of these family allowance cuts?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the Minister of Finance was trying to open up a dialogue and debate on this important issue, and I am referring to the sensible utilization of the public funds at our disposal, for the benefit of the neediest in our society. I think I must congratulate my hon. friend who, after listening to the Minister of Finance on November 8, applauded his courage, since basically, he agreed with his message. I want to congratulate him because he was quite right to do so.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, for someone who has just accused my colleage of reading only part of the statements, the Right Hon. Prime Minister is not doing very well. He should have read the rest of my remarks.

The purpose of my question is to prevent any misunderstanding, since there are people among the general public who are wondering whether they are going to lose their family allowance or their old age security pensions. Mr. Speaker, 9.1 per cent of Canadian taxpayers have incomes over $35,000. Could the Prime Minister inform the House at what level old age security pensions and family allowance will be cut off and how his Government is going to establish that level? Are we going to have an army of investigators? How is it going to work?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, first of all, my hon. friend's question ignores the context of the statements made by the Minister of Finance. There will be a dialogue, and I hope it will be a two-way street.

Proposals and study documents will be tabled in the House and there will be discussions at the national level. What we are trying to do, and perhaps we are too optimistic, is to see whether we can obtain the objective participation of Opposition Members. We know we are going to get that participation from Canadians in April, which will help us make value judgments on very important issues, on what to do about an economy that was left in a terrible state, where we have a large number of our fellow citizens who urgently need public funds, those who are the neediest in our society. We want to help them instead of bank presidents earning $500,000 per year. That is what we want to do.

Mr. Speaker: I rise with great respect. Order, please.

UNIVERSALITY—PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does he still stand by the statement which he made on March 7 when he said: "We are not going to tolerate distortions of our position. We are in favour of universality of social programs and it shall not be touched"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I stand by that position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Mitchell: I hope, in saying that, the Prime Minister realizes that universality means that benefits go to all Canadians.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF FINANCE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that in a taped interview yesterday the Minister of Finance said: "Upper and middle income social programs cannot be afforded today"? Does this reflect the Prime Minister's position and the Government's position on universality?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR REFORM OF TAX SYSTEM

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Prime Minister is refuting what the Minister of Finance said. Why does the Prime Minister not stop using universality as a red herring? I would like to return to the bank manager whom he mentioned yesterday—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Ms. Mitchell: Is the Prime Minister really interested in fairness? If so, why does he not reform the tax system so that the bank president pays a handsome amount of income tax to help pay for all social programs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend would agree that it would be very unfair on a matter of this importance to segregate one part of a sentence and try to imply that that is government policy. I think if my hon. friend looked at—

Ms. Mitchell: I asked you.

Mr. Mulroney: I tried to respond to your question.

Ms. Mitchell: Answer it now.

Mr. Mulroney: If you would allow me, I would be happy to proceed. I indicated in a speech in April of last year, before the Association of Canadian Publishers, that indeed the tax system would be an important instrument in seeking fairness with regard to social programs. I hope my hon. friend would agree that when you have a deficit in excess of $37 billion or $38 billion, and when you are borrowing to pay the interest on the debt, what you are doing is diminishing opportunities for those in our society who need it most.

What we are trying to do is ask whether the Opposition is mature enough to participate in a debate which will help those in Canada who need it most. That is what it is all about.

USE OF POSSIBLE SAVINGS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, in his November interview with The Toronto Star, said any money saved from social programs would not be used to reduce the deficit. Can he explain why the Minister of Finance, in his taped interview with the Canadian Press yesterday, said that is exactly what the Government intends to do? And if there is any doubt about that, could ne explain why he said a moment ago that is what he intends to do—to use saved from social programs to reduce the deficit?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know my hon. friend is a man of such consistency that he is here notwithstanding a formal promise to resign because of a clear violation of the most important promise to Canadian people—two of them—one in regard to gas prices and the other in regard to interest rates. I hope he will submit his resignation after the next question.

My hon. friend knows full well that, having inherited an economic mess which is without precedent, and which was left by his Government, we are trying to restore a degree of sanity to the finances of Canada in order to have a favourable impact on interest rates and to participate in the job-creation process which is required. Concomitant with that is our obligation to examine, with you and with your help, those scarce resources to ensure, if we can, that those in our society—the dispossessed, the underprivileged, and the poor—receive a better share of the resources than those who are wealthy.

I wish you would stop defending the wealthy in this country because it is those in need we should be looking after, and that is what we are trying to do.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has just confirmed that he and his Government intend to use money saved on social programs to reduce the deficit.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ELECTION CAMPAIGN POLICY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Further, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister if this is correct, that he said in his press conference earlier today the Conservatives had to be "prudent" in putting out policy decisions during the summer elections? Is he not, therefore, confirming that during the election campaign the Conservatives did not tell the full story of what they intended to do, not to a handful of bank presidents but to millions of ordinary Canadians? Is that not why the Minister of Justice said before the election campaign that if the public knew what the Conservatives were going to do, they would never get elected?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose my hon. friend cannot have it both ways. The fact of the matter is that the word "prudence" was used. You are quite right, I did use that word, and we did proceed prudently, because we witnessed the volte-face, the turnabouts, and the rejection of principles as established by the Liberal Party. You campaigned on direct policies and you repudiated them as soon as you got back into office. The Canadian people have had enough of that. We have been consistent from beginning to end, and we are delivering on promises—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —designed to help ordinary Canadians and those in need. We are trying to create jobs and get the economy going again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND PENSIONS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister and is fairly straightforward, I believe. With respect to family allowances and pensions, does it continue to be the principle of this Government to observe universality in payments to both of those groups who are recipients? If it is, and if, as the Prime Minister has said, the Minister of Finance is announcing policy which is not a part of government policy, why is the Minister of Finance being allowed to make these statements?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has not announced policies in any way counter to—

Mr. Blaikie: He is babbling.

Mr. Mulroney: —what we have discussed in the House. Any Hon. Member of this House, including, I assume, my hon. friend, has from time to time had his phrases unintentionally distorted by the media—

Mr. Deans: Come on!

Mr. Mulroney: In point of fact, the Minister of Finance has been thoroughly consistent—

Mr. Deans: That won't wash, not this time.

Mr. Mulroney: We would hope, given the calamitous economic situation which we inherited, that there would be a degree of maturity and co-operation from the Opposition to help the Government and to help the country through a difficult period, as opposed to the distortions and nit picking which we see coming from the other side of the House.

We are inviting your co-operation and your understanding of the new way of consultation so that we can bring about economic growth and prosperity.

RECORDING OF MINISTER'S WORDS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): My supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. What we have here is government by a wink and a nod. I listened to the tape as well as the Prime Minister did. Is the Prime Minister suggesting to this House that the Canadian Press reporter played around with that tape and actually falsified the tape? I heard the tape. What the Minister of Finance said is exactly what is being said by other Hon. Members in this House.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am making no such suggestion at all. The Canadian Press reporters involved, I understand, are extremely competent people and are held in high regard for that reason. All I am saying is that the manner in which the statement appeared in some newspapers was not at all consistent with what the Minister of Finance was saying.

Ms. Mitchell: What about the tape?

Mr. Mulroney: I can assure you that what the Minister of Finance was saying was consistent with our desire to improve the economic situation of the country and does in no way—in no way—take positions which do violence to honourable Canadian customs.

LEVEL OF REVENUE AFFECTED BY BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Through you, Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister and afford him an opportunity to explain himself.

Mr. Prime Minister, there is a contradiction in this government. The media and the Canadian people have their own perceptions concerning your position and that of your Minister of Finance. Let us try to see through the smokescreen of verbiage which befogs the whole issue.

Can you tell us, and this relates to the question of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides . . . Over 13 million tax returns fall below the $35,000 mark.

At what income level will your cut-backs in social programs—such as family allowances and old age pensions—become operative?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is the purpose of the consultation process, the purpose of the dialogue with Members of the Opposition, the unions and the private sector. That is the purpose of the economic summit, of the First Ministers' conference scheduled for February 14 and 15.

Considering the pitiful inheritance we were left with, what can be done to bring relief to those Canadians who need the help of the federal machinery?

We want to try to bring help to needy Canadians, and that is the explanation. No decision has been made, as my colleague would know, and we urge him to enlighten us and co-operate with us in the preparation of more generous policies towards our destitute fellow Canadians.

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—POSITION OF BAIE-COMEAU RESIDENTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

If I understood correctly, the Prime Minister has just confessed that his mind is made up. He consults, then confirms.

May I ask the Prime Minister if people in his riding—Baie-Comeau, for example—will accept that their family allowances and their old age security benefits be reduced without having been consulted about it? I am sorry, but the Prime Minister did not have a mandate to reduce old age security benefits.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The people of Baie-Comeau who are watching us will say: Here is the Member for Vanier trying to misrepresent the position of our dear Member, for that is exactly what you are doing.

The Hon. Member knows very well that I never said that, that the Minister of Finance never said that, but honest dialogue is such a novel exercise for you that you do not accept it. We are seeking your co-operation, a national dialogue, so as to be able to give Canadians as much money as we can in the most productive manner possible.

[English]

MIDDLE-INCOME SOCIAL PROGRAMS—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister now knows that the interview which is being discussed here during Question Period is a taped interview. The Minister of Finance was heard to say quite clearly that middle-income social programs cannot be affforded today. Is the Prime Minister saying that the Minister of Finance is wrong?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am saying that the Minister of Finance, as my hon. friend has done from time to time, introduced subjects to invite debate and discussion. That is the object of the entire exercise.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: We have entered into this debate with open minds and with honest positions. We are trying to seek participation from my hon. friend. I hope there will be no disagreement from my hon. friend, who blinks and nods so disapprovingly—

Mr. Deans: Because you are not telling the truth.

Mr. Mulroney: —that, when we have inherited an almost bankrupt situation, we have a moral imperative to try to provide help to those in Canada who need it most, the widows, the dispossessed, and the underprivileged. And we are going to do it with or without your help. That is what we are going to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could we return to the idea that we listen to questions and listen to answers civilly on both sides of the House, please.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to go back to the Prime Minister, notwithstanding all of his idle, useless rhetoric. Given that the statement of the Minister of Finance is absolutely clear, is the Prime Minister saying now that the Minister of Finance is wrong in his statement that the Government of Canada, and the people of Canada, cannot afford to continue with the social programs which are presently in place for those who are deemed to be middle-income Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am not saying that the Minister of Finance is wrong. I am saying that, as usual, the Hon. Member chooses to place a wrong interpretation on what the Minister of Finance said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: You have made a career out of it. You should change.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

Mr. Deans: Some day we will have a real debate.

Mr. Mulroney: You won't be there.

Mr. Deans: Then you pick the place.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (1140)

AFFORDABILITY OF UNIVERSAL PROGRAMS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister recognizes by this time that this is a matter of great seriousness. There are a number of people, not only in the Chamber but throughout the country, who want some answers to this very important issue. You say that the Government is interested in those in need. I presume that includes women who, even though they may be in a middle income family, receive family allowance and need it to supply certain provisions for their children. The same is true with senior citizens.

We are talking about the Minister of Finance who is the senior economic Minister in the Government. He has said that these programs can no longer be afforded. Is that a clear statement on behalf of the Minister of Finance, representing the Government, that the Government no longer believes that we can afford universal programs for those in middle and upper middle income categories?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I came into the House a year ago I was warned to pay particular attention to the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry when he was maudlin. This is the case today. You have wilfully distorted a position of the Minister of Finance. I think it is unbecoming that on a matter so sensitive and so important you would attempt to sow fear and concern among Canadians when you know full well, because of the repeated statements of the Government and the Prime Minister of Canada, that our only intention in initiating this debate is an attempt to help those in our society who need it most, including the people to whom you refer.

As proof of our bona fide, notwithstanding the horrendous economic situation that we inherited, we provided more money to widows and to veterans who defended Canada and who needed it. That is the object of the entire exercise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I think the Canadian people will judge who is being maudlin at this point in time.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is quoted directly as saying: "What we're saying is that there are people who don't need it. Upper and middle income social programs cannot be afforded today." Those are not my words; those are his words.

Is that a clear statement of a position taken by your Government that you believe that these programs, which affect over 13 million Canadians, can no longer be afforded? Is that the proposition that you are going to be putting forward in the release of your social papers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows full well that his statement is fundamentally vexatious. My hon. friend has chosen to segregate one part of a sentence from a lengthy interview.

While my hon. friend was a member of the ministry he resorted to the same notion of inviting discussion on serious matters, through white papers or other means. The Minister of Finance is attempting to initiate discussion across the country to get views that might help us in our desire to deliver services more efficiently to those who need them most. I think my hon. friend would agree with that, because I think it is a proper and reasonable course to follow, particularly when we are burdened with such an enormous federal debt.

PROGRAMS REFERRED TO BY MINISTER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister be willing to tell the House what programs he thinks the Minister of Finance was referring to in the statement? Surely that could be answered without any accusations of things being distorted or taken out of context. If the Minister of Finance was trying to stimulate discussion, perhaps the Prime Minister could tell us what middle income social programs the Minister of Finance had in mind.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps once my hon. friend has had a chance to read the interview fully, and place it in its proper context, he will see, as I think any objective observer would, that the object of the exercise was precisely to invite reasonable dialogue and to avoid, to the extent humanly possible, supercilious questioning. I see we have not been fully successful.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it does not seem supercilious to me to ask a specific question if the Prime Minister is interested in dialogue. We cannot talk about things of which we know not.

PROGRAMS QUERY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Will the Prime Minister tell lus what programs the Minister of Finance was referring to so that we can respond to the invitation which the Prime Minister has extended, without any detail or substance, time after time today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Given the clarity of the question, I think I can fairly say, and I hope my hon. friend will agree with this, that when he takes the time to read the full interview, I genuinely believe he will find that it is not a substantial variance from the statement set out by my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, on November 8. There is a genuine desire to invite mature and reasonable dialogue on a vital question. I look forward to my hon. friend participating in that in a very productive way.

ESTABLISHMENT OF GATIQ—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

The Minister is probably already aware of the existence of a well structured action group in the riding of Louis-Hébert. The purpose of this group, which calls itself the GATIQ, is to promote the establishment of hi-tech industry in the Ste. Foy-Quebec City area. I intend to work along the same lines as the group, and I support its goals without reservation. I would like to know whether the Minister could inform the House of the measures he has taken and intends to take in this respect.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I shall be delighted to answer the Hon. Member's question.

[English]

I would like to inform the Hon. Member that it has been my pleasure to visit Quebec on two occasions to visit officials at Laval University and the optics laboratory there, and to meet with the group of which the Member speaks—

—GATIQ, the Groupe d'action technologique industrielle de Québec.

We are favourably inclined toward the proposal to establish a technological industrial park in Quebec along the lines of the proposals that we have been receiving. In a short period of time we will be announcing a decision as to the location of that industrial park and the optics laboratory to be contained therein.

Oral Questions

TORONTO ELECTION CAMPAIGNS—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the real debate and ask the Prime Minister a question. His Finance Minister was also quoted in this famous interview as saying that "the election campaigns that we fight in downtown Toronto are don't vote for the Tories or they are going to send you back to Italy." As an Italian Canadian I was profoundly shocked that the Minister would insult the intelligence and integrity of this proud, hard-working community. Questo governo è propio ignorante!

Can the Prime Minister provide the House with evidence that would support this disturbing allegation, and does he share his Minister's observations about Italians' understanding of the Canadian political system?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his observation. For my part, and that of my Party, we have been honoured by the support that we have received from the Italian community in Canada which made such an outstanding contribution to our national life. We are deeply honoured because of the growing support that we receive from that community.

During election campaigns, from time to time, tactics have been used by the Liberal Party. I don't think you would be unfamiliar with them. In fact the Member sitting near you went to Quebec City and said that Brian Mulroney is leading a party of Orangemen.

● (1150)

An Hon. Member: It's true.

Mr. Mulroney: He says that is true. In point of fact, I am leading the Orangemen, the Knights of Columbus—

[Translation]

—the Chamber of Commerce, the Knights of Columbus, the Dames de Sainte-Anne, the Filles d'Isabelle—

[English]

—and the Italians.

Mr. Marchi: It is exactly statements like that are why your Party has not got the support from the Italian community, and never will.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I don't know what is happening here today. It is getting quite out of hand. Wednesday becomes Friday, and Friday becomes Tuesday.

A supplementary question.

REQUEST FOR APOLOGY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I ask my supplementary in all seriousness, and I hope he answers the question. In light of the insulting and derogatory nature of your Finance Minister's question, will you, as Leader of the Government, and the Finance Minister, issue immediately in the House a formal apology to the Canadian Italian community? Will he do that to show that he has credibility to back up his words?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my hon. friend that I and my Party are delighted and honoured by the support, and growing support, we receive from the Italian Canadian community which has done so much to build a magnificent Canada. The only unfortunate racist statement was made by the Hon. Member—

Mr. Marchi: Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: —who tried to introduce an old canard into Canadian politics. It was for that reason that the Liberal Party was so resoundingly rejected across the country. That is why.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor.

Mr. Beatty: Can all the rest of us go home, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MIDDLE-INCOME SOCIAL PROGRAMS—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is a very serious and deeply felt question. When the Minister of Finance of this country says that we cannot afford social programs for middle income Canadians, is the Prime Minister saying that the Finance Minister is wrong?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am saying that the Finance Minister never said that.

Mr. Deans: He did.

Mr. Mulroney: I am saying—

Mr. Deans: Why don't you answer the question? He did say it.

Mr. Mulroney: I want my hon. friend from Hamilton Mountain—

Mr. Deans: You can't get away with all that.

Mr. Mulroney: —to save his energy for Christmas. It is coming.

Mr. Deans: Are you going to allow Christmas this year, Sir?

Mr. Mulroney: I am saying to my hon. friend who, since coming to the House, has demonstrated a degree of leadership not yet seen in the front benches of his Party, that he would recognize that this statement must be read in its complete context. I am satisfied that a proper reading of that will indicate that what the Minister was attempting to do was to engender thoughtful debate on an important matter.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the economy of this country is desperately in need of clear signals, will the Prime Minister now publicly state that that position attributed to the Minister of Finance, rightly or wrongly, is not the policy of the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Government is that which was articulated so well by the Minister of Finance on November 8. It is clear, and speaks to the serious nature of the problems confronting the country.

Mr. Rodriguez: Answer his question.

Mr. Mulroney: It invites substantial discussion and participation. I know that you will want to participate in the debate. The Minister has spoken to it, and I have spoken to it. I hope, when placed in context, that my hon. friend will agree that the manner in which we have done it is not unreasonable.

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM

REQUEST THAT FUNDING BE TARGETED TO SMALL BUSINESS SECTOR

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In light of the fact that small business creates between 70 per cent and 80 per cent of all new jobs, and that these are permanent jobs connected to real economic growth, will the Minister consider trying to target the funding of the Canada Works Program toward the small business sector, replacing the currently existing focus on the activities of social agencies which although deserving, should be considered under other programs?

Mr. Axworthy: Here we go again.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister I will take notice of the Hon. Member's question and ensure that his very interesting contribution to the debate is brought to her attention.

NEWFOUNDLAND—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it concerns the same Canadian Press interview. Earlier, in his economic statement, the Minister of Finance inferred that Newfoundlanders were lazy because they preferred unemployment insurance to jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: As I read the Canadian Press interview, now he infers that they were too stupid to understand cut-backs in IRDP and family allowances if the Tories had discussed that during the election campaign. In light of these statements by the Minister of Finance, how many more put-downs must Newfoundlanders suffer at the hands of the Minister of Finance? When will the Minister of Finance rid himself of the stereotype image of Newfoundlanders as quaint but inferior Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say, with respect to my hon. friend, that I thought that that kind of distortion went out of our political life quite some time ago. The Hon. Member knows full well that the Minister of Finance is a man of uncommon honour and probity.

He has participated in a very substantial way with my brilliant friend, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in bringing about an energy offshore agreement in Newfoundland which will bring honour, and prosperity, and new opportunities to Newfoundlanders, the likes of which they have not seen since they joined Confederation. I think it is a good day for Newfoundland, and a good day for Canada.

Mr. Rompkey: That untold wealth may come by the end of the decade. In the meantime, the assessment of Bill Davis is that we are poor Canadians.

MINISTERIAL TREATMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister move to stop this cavalier condescension on the part of Upper Canadian Tories? If his Ministers do not understand us, would they at least treat us with respect and dignity?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend knows that he is held in the highest regard and treated with great dignity, certainly by members of my Party and I know by all Members of the House. He has made a splendid contribution to Canada in his time here, and I salute him for it.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

SUSPENSION OF CALGARY CABLE STATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Communications, or the Parliamentary Secretary. The CRTC believes the Liberals are still in power. It has suspended a cable station in Calgary allegedly because it played Christian music. Will the Minister look into this and ascertain why the CRTC is so opposed to Christian programs and Christian music?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Communications I will take the question as notice. I can assure my hon. colleague that I will raise this matter with him personally as I have a special interest in that subject.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST TRAGEDY INQUIRY—WEATHER SERVICE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last night we learned that the investigation into the tragic loss of life on the B.C. coast on October 11 concluded that the federal Government weather services on the coast of British Columbia are inadequate. Will the Prime Minister give his commitment that the necessary funds and personnel to implement the recommendations made in that report will be forthcoming immediately?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, this is a case in which the Hon. Member has more than one Minister who is quite prepared to deal with the question. It is part of the openness of this Government.

I can answer the Hon. Member. I have read the report. As he knows, I made that report available to him yesterday. I know of his concern.

I made it quite clear yesterday in this House, and to the media afterwards, that there would be no cut of expenditures that would impair the efficiency of weather reporting. The recommendations in that report will be studied, and where there has to be improvement, funds will be found. There is nothing more important to this Government than the safety of the people on the ships and the boats on the west coast of British Columbia.

PERSONNEL AND FUNDING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. It is quite clear what the Minister of Fisheries is saying. It is very nice that there will be no cuts. But what the report concludes is that weather services in British Columbia are inadequate. We are talking about a question of life and death.

Mr. Speaker: What is the question, please?

Mr. Fulton: Will the Prime Minister give his personal commitment that the necessary personnel and funds will be made available immediately so that more lives are not lost off the coast of British Columbia?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will make this clear statement. Obviously the health and safety of people take precedence over everything else. In the light of that, I will be happy to meet with my colleagues in Transport and Fisheries in an attempt to resolve the matter, and respond favourably to my hon. friend as soon as I can.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before I have a couple of other things to say, might I remind the House—I did not want to interrupt Question Period today to do it—that it is a tradition, and in fact a rule, of the House that questions be put and answered through the Chair. We are getting a long way away from that practice. I just want to remind Members that that is the rule of the House.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE RULED OUT OF ORDER

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs presented its second report. It is recorded in the Votes and Proceedings as Sessional Paper No. 331-8/4. The operative paragraph, after the Committee explains that while it was studying the Annual Report of the Economic Council of Canada, reads as follows:

> During its consideration of this Order of Reference, your Committee discussed the issues relating to the television and radio broadcasting of its proceedings and has agreed to recommend that the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons be instructed by the House to examine in detail the matter of radio and television broadcasting of the proceedings of all standing and special committees of the House of Commons.

Standing Order 69 lists the standing committees of the House and sets out their powers. These powers are generally discussed in citations 620 and 621 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. There it is pointed out that committees often have to report to the House to seek the widening of an order of reference or to ask for some additional authority. It is also pointed out in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 621, that a committee "... can only consider those matters which have been committed to it by the House." There are numerous rulings on this subject by my predecessors, and Bourinot's Fourth Edition at page 469 is to the point:

> A committee is bound by, and is not at liberty to depart from, the Order of Reference.

On June 13, 1984, Mr. Speaker Francis made exactly the same point, as did also Madam Speaker Sauvé on June 29, 1983. May's Twentieth Edition at page 644 is no less clear.

In the present case the Finance Committee recommends that another committee be instructed to do something, namely to study the radio and television broadcasting of the committees of the House. It is certain that the Finance Committee is not empowered to consider that question. The relevance of this question to the Annual Report of the Economic Council of Canada is not established in the second report of the Committee, and in my opinion it could not be.

For good and obvious reasons, one committee cannot direct another, not even indirectly, as committees are creatures of the House and can only do what the House orders or directs. They have no relation one to another.

Therefore, I have to rule that the second report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is out of order and tha the Votes and Proceedings will reflect this fact.

At this point, I might also mention that the matter of broadcasting of committee proceedings seems to be occupying more than one standing committee of this House. In this connection I have already written to all committee chairmen. Committees, it is clear, are masters of their own procedure, but it is also clear that they must act only within the scope of the powers given to them by the House as they are but creatures of the House. The issue of broadcasting is one that rests currently with the House. It is a complex one and has been a subject of discussion from time to time. But as Speaker it is my duty to ensure that any initiative on such a matter remains the prerogative of the House until the House chooses otherwise.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Waddell: A clarification if I might, Mr. Speaker. I have been in the House six years—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, does the Hon. Member have a point of order?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there are certain prerogatives that remain with Mr. Speaker himself, including examples of broadcasting—

Mr. Speaker: The Member's point of order, please? Does the Hon. Member have a point of order?

Mr. Waddell: My point of order is that I think the Speaker should use these prerogatives to have influence in bringing the House of Commons up to date technologically, including—

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Member wishes to make an intervention on the question of broadcasting. That is not a point of order. The Member has other routes through his own House Leader as to whether he wishes a committee of the House struck again. That is hardly a point of order. In fact, it is not a point of order.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) on Thursday, December 13, 1984, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRODUCTIONS OF THE NATIONAL FILM BOARD

Question No. 31—Mr. Howie:

Is there any mechanism for the government to express its attitude toward specific productions of the National Film Board and, if so (a) what is it (b) did the government make use of the mechanism with respect to the Board's production "The Kid who Couldn't Miss"?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): The NFB is one of the agencies within my portfolio but decisions on questions of production are the responsibility of the Board itself.

Each agency has a selected board and a management whose role it is to make artistic and content decisions. The government will not intervene in the internal matters of the NFB as this would only serve to restrict the ability of the NFB to explore the types of social and cultural issues and concerns that serve to shape our lives.

The NFB has informed me that it has conducted an internal review of some of the criticisms raised against the film and concluded that the director, Paul Cowan, was scrupulous in his research and fair in his presentation of the exploits of Billy Bishop in the film.

There is a well established precedent, recognized through successive governments, which constrains the politicians responsible for Canada's cultural agencies, such as the NFB and the CBC, from intervening in the artistic and content decisions which must be made by these agencies. The government is committed to this precedent.

Some objections were raised concerning the depiction of Billy Bishop in this film. Notably, A. J. Bauer, Chairman of Billy Bishop Heritage, wrote to the NFB in March, 1984, outlining at least 15 historical and factual errors in this film, pertaining to the exploits of Billy Bishop. The NFB then asked the director to review and justify his research material. On August 16, 1984 François Macerola wrote to Mr. Bauer, that, as a result of the NFB's internal review, he was satisfied with the director's interpretation and that he would not withdraw or revise the film, as requested by Mr. Bauer. The film was not seen as denying the truth of the legend and Billy Bishop's heroism, but merely raised the possibility of some myth.

Order Paper Questions

SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNTS—INTEREST EARNED AND EMPLOYEE CONTRIBUTIONS

Question No. 49—Mr. Howie:

In each of the past three fiscal years, what was the amount of (a) interest earned by the (b) employee contributions to (c) employer contributions to the (i) Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (ii) Public Service Superannuation Account (iii) Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account and, in each case, what total amount was paid for disability, survivor and retirement pensions?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board):

Note: The accounts earn interest quarterly at a rate determined as if the excess of receipts over disbursements each quarter since the accounts were established had been invested in Government of Canada 20 year bonds. In effect, the quarterly rate is based on the weighted average yield of all investments over the previous 20 year period.

Some interest earnings in excess of the rate used in the most recent actuarial reports on the accounts (6.5% per annum) have not been credited to the accounts, but rather have been used to offset the cost of amortizing actuarial deficiencies that arise mainly as a result of annual salary increases. The above employer contributions include the net cost of amortizing actuarial deficiencies after the application of interest earnings of the accounts which were in excess of the rate assumed by the actuary.

FAMILY PLANNING DIVISION

Was the family planning division of the Department of National Health and Welfare dismantled or substantially reduced and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Family Planning Division of the Department of National Health and Welfare has not been dismantled. In the context of governmentwide expenditure restraint, the Family Planning Grants, a funding program administered by the Family Planning Division, was reduced by $700,000 in each of 1983-84 and 1984-85 for a total of $1.4 million. The manpower and operating budgets of the Division were not affected.

The Family Planning Grants program included project funding and sustaining funding (to national family planning voluntary organizations). During 1983-84, the responsibility for the sustaining funding was transferred to the Sustaining Grants Program for National Voluntary Health Organizations. This program received a substantial injection of new funds in 1983-84 and as a result of this, the family planning organizations whose funding had been reduced by the above-mentioned expenditure restraint, received new funds which essentially brought them back to the levels of funding previously planned.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDES AND SUICIDES

Question No. 75—Mr. Nunziata:

In the past five years, how many inmates of federal correctional institutions have (a) attempted (b) committed suicide?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984 (January to November 14, 1984)
(a) Attempted suicides	46	69	65	52	57
(b) Suicides	10	12	11	19	16

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Parliamentary Secretary, in light of the fact that almost half of the questions on the Order Paper are from opposition parties, whether he would be able to attempt to provide more answers to opposition questions? Almost all questions answered are exclusively government questions at this point.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That was explained yesterday.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that up to and including today the number of questions on the Order Paper placed there by members of the Conservative Party was 67 and the number disposed of is 25. Almost all of these were on the Order Paper in previous years; the work had been done by previous governments but they had not been answered. Therefore it was very easy to answer them. The amount answered represents 37.3 per cent.

Members of the Liberal Party have placed 55 questions on the Order Paper, eight have been disposed of, which represents 14.5 per cent. Members of the New Democratic Party have placed 22 questions on the Order Paper, none of which has been answered as yet. I hope to rectify that as soon as possible.

In total, 22.9 per cent of the questions have been answered to date. I would like to inform Hon. Members of the House that the number of questions answered is considerably higher than the number answered in the last two Parliaments on the 28th day of sitting.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Parliamentary Secretary whether he would answer question No. 91 dealing with the court challenges program which, as he knows, is a very, very important issue in this country. The Parliamentary Secretary replied "soon". Could he give me a definition of what the word "soon" means?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, it means not in a long time. It means in a shorter period of time.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-8, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased on behalf of our Government to rise in the House today and put before Hon. Members for second reading Bill C-8, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act.

The Bill before us clears up some unfinished business from the last Parliament. Many of the provisions included in this Bill have been in effect for over two years, despite the fact that the Bill never received parliamentary approval. Taxpayers acting in good faith have filed their returns and paid their taxes as though these provisions had the force of law. It is only fair to the affected taxpayers to give this Bill our final approval so that assessments can be completed and refunds paid.

With the exception of one important amendment, we will be proceeding with the Bill essentially unchanged from the form in which it was tabled last winter. We hope this will avoid any unnecessary delays in its passage.

The Bill includes some significant policy changes to the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act which were introduced by the former Government and were effective on either June 1, 1982 or January 1, 1983. These amendments implicitly recognize the failure of the tax in its original form to cope with both the upturns and downturns which are an inescapable part of doing business. In order to remind Hon. Members, the relieving measures included the introduction of a $250,000 annual credit for small corporate producers against their PGRT liabilities on Division 1 production revenues, a provision for the deduction of drilling expenses and the cost of oil well machinery related to an enhanced oil recovery project from the projects earned production revenue, and a one-year reduction in the effective rate of PGRT from 12 per cent to 11 per cent.

The temporary reduction in the PGRT rate is now history. It applied from mid-1982 until mid-1983, a period which was particularly difficult for oil and gas companies.

The annual credit for small corporate producers was set at a maximum of $250,000 by the former Government. This $250,000 credit ensured that the very smallest, struggling producers were not burdened by a tax they could ill afford to pay.

While this credit was certainly a move in the right direction, it did not go far enough. Therefore, today's Bill includes a new measure which my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), announced in his recent economic statement. The $250,000 annual tax credit against the PGRT liability on production revenue will be doubled to $500,000 effective January 1, 1985. The doubling of the maximum credit against PGRT will provide the Canadian petroleum industry with an extra $35 million per year. We have chosen to make this major move since the Bill was tabled in Parliament last year because many Canadians want and need very badly modifications in the tax regime.

The Government recognized that major modifications were called for in the tax structure as it applied to the oil and gas sector. All Canadians, but especially those engaged in this sector, need more incentives to invest, to invest right here in our own great land. Through appropriate incentives we can achieve a much larger participation by Canadian investors in this sector as well as increased discovery rates and development of resources.

This would mean increased reliance upon Canadian oil so that we would benefit as producers because we would pay Canadians in addition to and rather than foreign producers. As consumers we would benefit from lower dependence on foreign supplies, and as taxpayers we would benefit by reducing our deficit.

Therefore I urge Hon. Members to give the Bill speedy passage, not only because it is an incentive to the Canadian oil and gas sector to proceed full tilt with their part in restoring Canada's economy to prosperity but, more important, the Bill is an indication of our Government's desire to review the whole issue of federal energy taxation.

The Bill effectively doubles the small producer credit against the petroleum and gas revenue tax. We recognize that there is still a lot of scope for further flexibility in the federal energy tax system. Therefore, in our ongoing review of energy taxes we will continue to balance very carefully the interests of producers, producing provinces, consuming provinces, consumers and general taxpayers.

My colleague, the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), has already consulted with interested parties throughout Canada on this issue. We look forward to increased productivity and satisfaction in this area.

The doubling of the annual tax credit against liability about which I spoke earlier does not penalize the diligent efforts of small-sized Canadian producers. These producers have furthered the exploration of the western sedimentary basin and they deserve our full appreciation and recognition. I also want to signal our Government's appreciation of the steps which other producing provinces have taken to encourage increased activity in that province. We wish to support the positive results from this activity.

The capital deduction related to enhanced oil recovery projects has the effect that no PGRT is payable on the revenue from one of these projects until project participants have recovered their eligible capital investment. My colleagues and I have been most gratified to see the way in which the oil and gas industry has responded to even partial relief from the National Energy Program of the former Government.

Following the introduction of the enhanced oil recovery capital reduction, the industry announced work on three major projects at Cold Lake, Wolf Lake and Elk Point. Many older experimental projects are now also undergoing expansion. This renewed activity not only creates jobs and provides a hint of the vitality which the West used to enjoy before the National Energy Program was introduced by the former Government, but also ensures that Canadians are ready to exploit fully our oil reserves.

This Government applauds the innovation, hard work and willingness to take risks which have made these projects possible. We look forward to working with the industry and the provinces to achieve a more general rebound in exploration and development in all producing regions.

The Bill before us also includes a number of technical amendments. The most important one is a measure which will ease tax compliance for royalty holders. Prior to this amendment, which was effective on January 1, 1984, numerous small freeholders were required to make sense out of the intricacies and the legal concepts associated with the tax. In some cases taxpayers were paying more to their accountants to fill out their returns than they actually received in royalties. Now all royalty recipients will have their tax paid for them on a withholding basis.

The revenue implications of the older measures in the Bill were detailed during the last Parliament. The total cost of the measures to the Government was computed at that time to be $1.3 billion over the 1982-86 period. We believe that the energy sector is an area of growth for the Canadian economy rather than a source of revenue for the federal Government. We want a stable national energy policy to achieve energy self-sufficiency, to increase Canadian participation in exploration, to keep prices low, and to ensure that energy issues do not disrupt national unity as they did under the last Government.

In reviewing the energy sector we are striving for a policy which recognizes and supports the contribution oil and gas producers make to economic growth and prosperity in the country. We are still contemplating further action in the areas of oil pricing, energy taxation and incentives in particular. Therefore, we will be continuing our consultations with representatives of industry, provincial Governments and other interested parties before making any changes to this tax which we believe are necessary. Although we may decide to introduce further changes to this tax following a full review of energy policy which is now under way, it is only fair to those taxpayers who have filed their 1982, 1983 and 1984 PGRT returns and who may be awaiting refunds to have the Bill passed as speedily as possible. We prefer not to hold up the assessment of these old returns while a whole new policy is being debated.

Therefore I urge Hon. Members to give the Bill prompt passage to enable affected taxpayers to benefit from its simplifying and relieving amendments.

● (1220)

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be very brief because the measure before us is almost identical to those introduced by the previous Government. There is one exception to which the Minister addressed herself, namely that the tax credit is being doubled for small producers. The original wording in the December 7, 1983 version of the corporate tax credit reads as follows:

> That an annual tax credit be introduced for a corporation or an associated group of corporations of up to $250,000 in respect of taxes payable under Division I of the Act on production revenue, other than production royalties, attributed to the period after May 31, 1982.

The current version will increase that with slightly different dates. The current version reads:

> That an annual tax credit of up to
> (a) $250,000 for the period from June 1, 1982 to December 31, 1984, and
> (b) $500,000 for the period commencing on January 1, 1985,
> be introduced for a corporation or an associated group of corporations in respect of taxes payable under Division I of the Act on production revenue other than production royalties.

We have a measure which is essentially the same as those introduced in the past, except for this doubling of the tax credit. The doubling of the tax credit will result in something in the order of $64 million forgone by the Government. As the Minister said, these are old measures and it is essential to deal with them promptly so that outstanding tax returns can be dealt with.

Today is perhaps not the occasion for a detailed energy debate, although I would point out that in February, 1984 when the then Minister of State for Finance introduced these measures, it became the occasion for a very far-ranging debate on energy policy generally. We in this Party do not intend to delay the debate particularly, but we do want to have in the near future a very full debate on the Government's proposed changes to energy policy.

The economic statement tabled in this House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) some time ago made reference to this change in the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax. He stated that while the Government would be proceeding with those changes, the Government did want a very full examination of all our energy policies. We look forward to that debate.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise as my Party's energy critic to speak on this change to the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax. I spoke on it the last time it was before the House. At that time the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) was our energy critic. I am back in my old job and pleased to be here.

Mr. Speaker, I have not had the opportunity to congratulate you on your new suit. You look very debonair, even more debonair than usual. In fact, I prefer it to every suit I have seen you wear except for one, your football uniform with your football hat. That looked even better, not to mention other suits.

I want to say something about this Bill. I see you are smiling, Mr. Speaker. You may not be in a moment. One thing I got out of the Minister's speech was that the policy of the Conservatives was to keep energy prices low. If there is one thing that Canadians know, it is that the Conserative Party is a party of high energy prices. It does not represent the consuming public of Canada adequately. That Party continues to hose Canadians at the pumps and to hose them in their houses when paying for home heating oil.

The evidence is the Consumer Price Index issued this morning for December, 1984. The latest increase was November. It shows that food did not change from November, 1984; housing and clothing were approximately the same. The big increase was 2.9 per cent for energy. According to the Consumer Price Index, after three months of Conservative government energy prices have increased almost 3 per cent. That is consistent with the Conservatives buying the line hook, line and sinker of the big oil industries in Canada. They have taken it, swallowed it and are going to implement it. This Bill is an example of how that happens.

Let me explain a little bit about the PGRT. Coming from Alberta, I know you understand it, Mr. Speaker, but there may be some new Members who do not know about it. The PGRT is part of the National Energy Program introduced in 1980. It is part of the taxation system of the program. I know the Member knows that, but I wonder if the Member knows why the Conservatives ultimately want to get rid of the PGRT, the problems with the PGRT and other forms of taxation for oil companies and consumers. Let me tell him something about that.

The Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax is levelled almost right at the well. It takes the producers' gross revenues and deducts operating costs. The tax is on that amount of money. I believe this Bill reduces it from 12 to 11 per cent. It hits right in there.

The provinces do not like this. They see it not as a tax but a royalty, a grab at a portion of the oil. Western Canadian provinces believe, and I support them on this, that royalties are the prerogative of the provinces. Natural resources are the major thing the western provinces have to give us the kind of economic long-term growth that they have in Ontario and Quebec with their manufacturing industries. That is jealously guarded in the West. This is thought of as a royalty and the western provinces do not like it.

The oil companies do not like it because they have to pay tax. It is not like the old system of depletion and super depletion allowances. Under the old system, you produced the oil, subtracted your operating costs and then subtracted other costs such as old machinery, this company buying that machinery from your subsidiary, paying money or not paying money to the subsidiary that did the navigation and the drilling, and suddenly there was no money to tax. Oil companies were famous for never paying very much taxes.

In Question Period today we were debating precisely that. The Government is about to lower the boom on the middle class in Canada. There was a lot of blarney today, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was very weak in its defence. To be fair to the Prime Minister, it was indefensible.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) let the cat out of the bag. The Government has decided it has to cut the deficit. The way it will do that is by cutting spending and social programs. It will do that with programs that affect the upper and middle classes. That is a little more fair, but it will have a real impact on a lot of people.

There is another way it could cut the deficit. It is relevant to this Bill. It could make some of the corporations in this country pay a decent share of taxation like ordinary Canadians must. There are about $24 billion worth of deferred taxes owing. Can you defer your taxes, Mr. Speaker? No way. However, oil companies, banks and companies like that can defer their taxes, and of course they never pay their taxes. Therefore, the Government has a big deficit and has to deal with things like what happened in Question Period today when the Prime Minister had to defend what was virtually indefensible. He is going to bring in policies to take away some of those social programs from the middle class of Canada.

These 211 Conservative Members will not be cheering so loudly when their constituents start writing or phoning them and saying: "Hey, I have to pay more for my heating oil and my gasoline as a result of your policies. Now you are taking away my baby bonus or my pension supplement", or whatever. That is why this Bill is important.

For those who are interested in energy, this Bill contains another important item. There is a pattern forming here. In 1980, some of my colleagues and I predicted that this would happen. The National Energy Program was implemented. I will not call the policy radical, conservative or whatever. It was, however, certainly a new policy. It had a tremendous amount of impact. I know Members of the Conservative Party had criticisms of that policy and I might say that they put those criticisms very well. I see a few of the people today who were involved when they were on this side of the House. As a matter of fact, I miss them. I do not know where they are now. They had very strong criticisms about the policy. I did not agree with all of those criticisms but I congratulate them for making them. As the senior member of the Energy Committee, I feel that I am alone here on this side of the House.

A pattern developed, Mr. Speaker. The energy policy was implemented and the Government, as predicted, started retreating from that energy policy because of the pressure of the biggest and the best-financed lobby in Canada. The Consumers' Association of Canada has nothing on the Canadian Petroleum Association or IPAC, which is supposedly made up of the medium-sized companies but has some large companies indirectly involved in it. For the last three or four years, that lobby had produced these nice advertisements on television to show what nice guys the oil companies are. Anyone who knows anything and has read The Seven Sisters by Anthony Sampson can see the pattern created throughout the world by large oil companies in this century. In fact, large oil companies push their own interests to the extreme. If that means that Exxon in the United States wants to divert some of its oil bound for Imperial Oil of Canada to the United States because of a crisis or because it can make money, it will do it. That is fair enough under its terms.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My friend knows full well that that diversion was pursuant to an international agreement whereby the western countries agreed to apportion the cut-backs equitably. It was pursuant to an international agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, my friend can enter into the debate later. I suggest he read the book The Seven Sisters. I think he will find it very enlightening. The average Canadian feels it in his guts. He or she knows what big oil is up to. He or she knows that big oil wants to puts its hand in his or her pockets and take out some more money.

This Bill indicates another interesting trend. It amends the definition of old oil so as to bring into that category some new oil as well. Let me explain it to you, Mr. Speaker. I know you understand it, but perhaps some of the Members do not.

What is new oil and old oil? Is all oil not the same? Let me explain. Through the National Energy Program, the Government decided as a matter of national policy that Canadians should pay less than the world price for what was considered an essentially Canadian resource. Some Members disagreed with that. Members of the Conservative Party in particular disagreed with that. Members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party spoke of a blended price because we were importing some of our oil and could blend it in with the Canadian-priced oil.

The Government then set a price that was lower than the world price. It decided that when new oil was discovered, world prices could be charged for that oil. That provided a way to be able to charge world prices and also recognize that discovering new oil costs more money these days. Old oil was discovered when it cost about $1 per barrel to discover oil and it sold for $2 a barrel. Now oil sells at $28 American or about $38 Canadian a barrel. Quite rightly, the Government realized that it could not give a big windfall to those oil companies that discovered oil at $1 a barrel and were able to sell it at $38 a barrel, so the Government then began to talk in terms of old oil and new oil and that made some sense.

Of course, the oil companies started to pressure and lobby the Government. What could the Liberal Government do? It really did not want to completely change its National Energy Program or completely change its pricing scheme to accommodate the companies but it had to find some way of accommodating them. One way the Government yielded was very simple. It just called old oil new oil. If old oil is called new oil, it can fetch a higher price. That was a very smart thing to do. This Bill, to some extent, extends the concept of allowing old oil to be called new oil. It is just a horse of a different name and more money can be given to the oil companies.

The name of the game of this Government is to take money from the consumers of Canada and give it to the oil companies of Canada. We should make that very clear. You heard the Minister's speech, Mr. Speaker. She virtually said the same thing when she spoke. I would remind her that she has to pay a price. The consumers will have to pay a price and the Government will not have as much money. Then, if the Government wants to tackle its deficit, it will have to start cutting back on baby bonuses, pensions and the things that help ordinary middle-class Canadians. The Government may have 211 Members now. However, if it continues that policy, it may receive a few votes from oil company presidents, but the great majority of the Canadian public will not vote for it.

There is another problem with this Bill, and I want to talk a little bit about that. When this tax is reduced from 12 per cent to 11 per cent, will any of the benefits pass on to the consumers? The answer is no, it will not. I cannot see anywhere in this Bill that indicates that consumers are going to receive any benefit at all. The Minister has argued that jobs are created if we expand the industry. Of course, there are some jobs created when the oil industry is expanded. The oil industry must be treated fairly like all industries in Canada. I say to the Government that it should not believe that it will create 300,000 or 500,000 jobs if it just gives the Canadian Petroleum Association everything it wants. That is the line that is being peddled and that is the line that is being bought by the present Minister of Energy.

The other day the Minister said in the House that we should look at all the jobs that are being created. The fact is that since this Minister of Energy has taken office, jobs have been lost. We have lost 3,000 jobs in the energy department of the National Research Council. Most of those jobs went to private enterprise and private industry. The money was funnelled through the National Research Council and went to ideas like new glass manufacturing that would be equivalent to triple glazing and third generation solar technology. The Government did not know what it was doing when it cut back on that. The Government is so into the propaganda of the Canadian Petroleum Association that it does not look to see where jobs are created.

I will give you an example, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) is a reasonable Member and will understand this. If he wanted to create a job at a McDonald's restaurant in Mission-Port Moody, the capital cost would be about $15,000. If he wanted to create a job in light manufacturing, it would cost as much as $150,000 or $200,000. If he wanted to create a job in heavy manufacturing, it might cost as much as $500,000. That is the capital cost involved in creating a job. But if he wanted to create jobs in the Beaufort Sea or Hibernia, he might be talking about $1 million or $2 million.

I am sure the Hon. Member would agree that we must look at the cost of creating jobs. I say to the Government, when it is lobbied by the Canadian Petroleum Association and when it is pressured to develop resources offshore, in the North and so on, that it should remember the cost of creating the jobs. I do not have the figures that the National Research Council energy department has, but I would bet that it would cost a heck of a lot less than a million dollars to create jobs.

Some of those jobs were created in Vancouver. The riding of the Hon. Member opposite, as well as my riding, were two areas which had some of the best industry in soft energy technology. We must not lose that. It is not hippie, or yoghurty. A lot of Conservatives probably associate soft energy with the sixties, but it is the latest technology. Canada is a world leader in that technology. However, we are cutting it back at the expense of putting a heck of a lot more money into the oil industry.

The oil industry is important. The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) entertained me in his riding. He is wonderful at showing people around the tar sands. It is important for that industry to continue. But we should not succumb to the siren song that we must give more and more to big oil companies, because they will want more and more. They will want to get rid of the PGRT, to which the Minister alluded in her speech, and then they will want super-depletion allowances and capital cost allowances; they will want to defer their taxes and so on. We will be back to the old ball game in which big oil companies do what they like.

By and large, it is an industry which is foreign-controlled. The National Energy Program tried to push for Canadian ownership of the energy industry, but it appears that the Government is going to back away from that, unless it comes up with some very innovative taxation scheme for Canadianizing the industry. Our Party would be open to that.

I am prepared to have this Bill pass today. I accept the Minister's argument that companies have filed returns and they have to know where they stand. It is only fair. Because they are operating in this regime, it would be wrong for us to delay the legislation.

I have flagged several issues. One issue is that there are not the millions and millions of jobs which big oil companies suggest. In fact, there are more jobs in soft energy than there are in non-renewable resources.

Second, there will have to be a change in the PGRT, according to government policy. We will be watching that very closely to see that it is not simply a return to the old regime, which was basically a giveaway to oil companies.

Third, if the Government follows its present pattern, it will give more away to oil companies. As I have indicated, on the basis of the Consumer Price Index figures of today, the one item which really increased was energy. In the first three months of Conservative government energy went up. That is typical. Perhaps some government Members do not understand that the Conservatives want to redistribute money from the average ordinary Canadian, both at the pump and in the home. That money will go into the pockets of big oil companies, which are largely foreign-controlled.

If that is the kind of change for which Canadians voted, I am very surprised. I do not think Canadians want that kind of system, especially when they realize what the Conservatives are doing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In view of the Member's very kind remarks toward the Chair in his preamble, I must inform him that he has approximately 20 minutes remaining. I would like to bring to the attention of the House that the first three speakers had a 40-minute maximum. We will now revert to 20-minute speeches with questions and answers.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for suggesting that I had more time. However, I will not take the time. As a young lawyer I learned that the judge was sometimes on my side, but that if I continued to speak, sometimes the judge went against me. So you quit while you are ahead!

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact that there is time remaining, could we get the unanimous consent of the House to ask the Hon. Member a couple of questions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey).

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with the remarks of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) with regard to your sartorial splendour. Those of us in the House who have seen you in other suits and in other places know that you are equally—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will let the Hon. Member finish; however, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to my colleague from Newfoundland, but I am seeking clarification from the Chair. This will be the third opposition spokesman to one government spokesman. What is the rotation in speaking?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is up to the discretion of the Speaker. If the Hon. Member looked at Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 301, he would be made aware of that. I recognized the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) on the opposition side before the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador. I recognized him because I said that he would be the next speaker. You will follow him.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, now we must not only congratulate you on your sartorial splendour, but as well on your discretion and judgment.

I want some latitude today. I do not intend to delay the Bill unnecessarily, but I have some questions which I feel are relevant to the PGRT, energy taxation and policy that I want to put on the record. This is the only opportunity I have to do that. I appreciate the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) may not have all the answers to the questions which I will raise today; however, they are in regard to the deal which is being formulated between Canada and Newfoundland. It is a deal which we have been told about but which we have not seen.

What we have seen is a letter of June 14 from the then Leader of the Opposition to the Premier of Newfoundland. It is the only document on which we have to base our suppositions. It is important for us to know what is in that deal. I would like to put some very serious questions on the record.

The sixth principle in the letter states that "the Province would have the ultimate decision in matters affecting the mode of development . . . subject to the federal override". That is very important.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) on a point of order.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to belittle what the Hon. Member is saying, but I think the point of relevance is clear. He is talking about an agreement on the offshore rather than the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member is getting to the Bill. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I think the relevance will be clear, if the House will bear with me.

The sixth principle which is outlined in Mr. Mulroney's letter, who was then the Leader of the Opposition, indicated that the province would have the ultimate decision—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The "Prime Minister".

Mr. Rompkey: The now Prime Minister, who was then the Leader of the Opposition, indicated that the province would have the ultimate decision in matters affecting the mode of development, subject to a federal override. That is very important because the Province of Newfoundland would like to use concrete platforms in the development phase, as opposed to shipping the oil directly to market. Concrete platforms could be made in Newfoundland, thereby creating more jobs for Newfoundlanders and Labradoreans. The use of concrete platforms in the development stage of that oil in Hibernia, Mr. Speaker, is clearly in our best interests, and if the province has the final say, no doubt it will choose them.

However, what about the federal override? In what circumstances will the federal override be used? How ultimate is the province's decision if the federal Government has the final say? We are told that the federal Government would call the shots if the province's choice delayed "unreasonably" the attainment of self-sufficiency and security of supply in Canada. My second question is, then, what is "unreasonably"? How do you define it? Who defines it? These are questions to which we do not have the answers at this point. However, the answers mean a great deal to my province which has the highest unemployment, the highest per capita debt and the highest cost of living.

Furthermore, with respect particularly to energy policy, we are told that the Government has now backed off back-in rights. We are told that the Crown's share of back-in rights will no longer be entertained by the Government of Canada. The federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) seems to be under the illusion that back-in rights, the Crown's share, was somehow imposed unilaterally by the previous Government.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, for the record, that back-in rights have indeed been a fundamental and essential element of the Newfoundland proposal on the offshore from the beginning. As a matter of fact, it was not so much "back-in" as "front-in", and companies which have drilled off Newfoundland—not under federal regulations but under provincial regulations—have known from the beginning, from the first day they went there to drill, that not only would they have to give up 25 per cent, but that 40 per cent would go to the Crown. Indeed, the present Premier of Newfoundland, when he was Energy Minister as well as when he was Premier, was quite adamant about that. Indeed, I would say he staked and based his career on the proposition that Newfoundland had to catch up and that back-in rights, the Crown's share, was a fundamental way of doing it. I think it is fair to say that the Premier of Newfoundland brought the oil companies virtually to their knees on that particular point. However, now we are told that back-in rights are no longer to be entertained.

As the Premier, the Government of Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders saw it, the only way for our province to catch up was if it owned a piece of the action. Indeed, it was almost, I would say, a sacred trust. Yet Mr. Marshall said the other day during his meeting here in Ottawa that it is no longer sacred. He says now: "That is the policy of the Government of Canada. It is no longer sacred as far as we are concerned, and we accept the policy of the Government of Canada". But if the Crown share goes, if back-in rights are no more, how does Newfoundland collect revenue? I put those questions on the record. Will it be from royalties? Perhaps it will, we do not know. Will it be from PGRT? We do not know.

Perhaps the Minister of State for Finance could answer this question: Is the federal Government, as part of this deal with Newfoundland, going to turn over PGRT to the province? Is that part of the deal? What is the answer to that question?

What other federal taxes are going to go to the Province of Newfoundland if back-in rights are no longer to be entertained? We are told in the Prime Minister's letter of June 14 that the federal Government will maintain the right to establish and collect federal taxes. If it is going to collect them, are they going to hold them or is it going to turn them over to the provinces? These are very important questions for my province, Mr. Speaker.

The letter of the present Prime Minister, the former Leader of the Opposition, also tells us that any Government he led would promise a development fund for infrastructure. That is good. I support that, and the previous administration no doubt did offer the same proposal. However, what about funding for education and training for Newfoundlanders and Labradoreans? It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that that is of paramount importance. There is no mention at all, though, in that letter—and I suspect in the deal which is now being consummated—of any proposition, philosophical or financial, for the enhancement, development and the furthering of education and training for Newfoundlanders. There will be revenues to the provinces, and management, perhaps. But how do we ensure jobs for ordinary Newfoundlanders unless they have the skills to take those jobs?

In the past, the guidelines for PIP grants were a great step in the right direction because they ensured Newfoundland content which included a lot of local people in those jobs. But are those PIP grants going to continue to exist? We do not know that. And if those financial safeguards and levers are not there, then what do we put in their place and how do we ensure that Newfoundlanders get the skills to take those jobs? There are many who will seek those jobs and simply not get them on the basis of lack of skills.

Bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that 50 per cent of eligible young people in Newfoundland and Labrador are unemployed at this point. That is a tragic figure. A lot of those young people are looking not simply to the fishery, logging or mining, but, indeed, to this offshore deal as a means of securing employment. The point I am making is that one can talk all one likes about revenues and management, but if ordinary people, and particularly young people, do not have the necessary skills to take those jobs which are open, then, really, those things are not going to be of benefit to the ordinary Newfoundlander.

Instead of providing more training, the Government in its economic statement, has slashed funds and cut back on programs for young people. Those young people depended on those programs for employment, to fund their education and to help themselves for the future. What is going to take the place of those programs which have been slashed? We do not know. We do not hear a word about that. It seems to me that is a pretty important question.

It is obvious, then, Mr. Speaker, that at this point Newfoundlanders are being asked to venture into the unknown. The provincial motto is "Launch forth into the deep". It seems to me that is what we are doing at this point.

What I am really asking for here today is information. I would like the answers to those legitimate questions. We may receive those answers and find that this is a great deal. If it is a good deal for Newfoundland, I will say so, and if it is a good deal for Canada, I will say so. However, at this point in time we do not know. Certain members of the provincial and federal Cabinets may know but I, as a legitimately elected Member of Parliament for Newfoundland, do from not know. The Premier of Ontario knows what is in that agreement, but I do not know. What I am really asking for here, Mr. Speaker, is for the answers to those legitimate questions.

I hope it is a good deal and if it is, as I say, we will applaud it. But I want to make sure, and I intend to make sure, that my province gets the best deal possible from the Government of Canada. And that is difficult to do when the Government will not say what is in that deal.

I raise those questions today in the context of PGRT and energy policies because we need those questions answered, Mr. Speaker, and we need them answered right now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is one minute remaining for questions and comments.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. I understand his concerns, but does the Hon. Member not recognize that the agreement which is being proposed for the offshore Newfoundland gas and oil would be set up so that it is treated in exactly the same way as the resources in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, or British Columbia, for that matter? Does the Hon. Member not understand that there may not be agreement between Government and Government with regards to training, just as there has never been an agreement between the federal Government and the Alberta Government with respect to training people to participate in the jobs which are created? The Province of Newfoundland is being treated as the other provinces. It is up to the Province of Newfoundland, when it gives out the drilling right and when it administers the oil fields, that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. However, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) might like to think about the question over the next hour, and as there is still approximately ten minutes for questions and comments, he can answer the question when we come back.

[Translation]

Order please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In view of the fact that the person who finished speaking is not in the House, I would like to recognize—

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) on a point of order.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some clarification; I think it would be helpful to the House. When a Member finishes speaking just before the clock reaches 1 p.m. and then does not re-enter the House at 2 p.m., and the time remaining in the question and comments period is nine minutes, is it the opinion of the Chair that comments cannot then be made concerning his speech? I understand Your Honour's point about questions, but I wonder whether Your Honour would make a ruling on comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Comments can be made, but we naturally cannot have anyone answering questions. If there are going to be comments made, I have no choice but to recognize the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), who had the floor, for comments only because there will not be any questions asked. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Athabasca who was, at that time, concluding his last comment.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for your very wise ruling.

In the Member's address in the House he was taking exception to the fact that there was not a training component in the agreement being drawn up between the federal Government and the Government of Newfoundland with regard to sharing the offshore resources. I was trying to point out to the Hon. Member that the agreement is treating Newfoundland and its offshore resources, the Hibernia fields, in exactly the same way as the resources in the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan are treated by the federal Government and those provincial Governments. In my mind that puts Newfoundland on an equal footing with the Prairie provinces, the other oil-producing provinces in the country.

The onus is then on the provincial Government of Newfoundland to encompass the training and employment components in agreements granting drilling and development rights in Hibernia. In my view this puts much more persuasive power in the hands of the Newfoundland Government than it would otherwise. I wanted to know why the Hon. Member would not recognize this.

My other comment is that in Question Period yesterday and today I noticed that one Newfoundland Opposition Member of Parliament was questioning very strongly, and in fact condemning, the negotiations taking place between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and her counterpart in Newfoundland. Given that the whole underlying theme of the negotiations and the impending agreement is to make Newfoundland equal to any other producing province in Canada, why would the Member not agree that this is the best approach? Surely, all provinces must be treated equally and fairly. That is what our Government is attempting to do.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) during his speech on this Bill. One of his main points was that we, as Members of Parliament, do not have access to any of the information that is contained in that agreement. We do not even have access to the reports that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has concerning offshore oil development in Newfoundland.

The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) talked about jobs. That is why Members on this side in the Liberal Party have been attempting to have the Minister of Energy release a report which she has from Mobil Oil. She informs the House and Canadians that she cannot release the report until she knows what mode of development the Newfoundland Government wants.

The real reason why she will not release the report is that Mobil Oil talks about the number of jobs that will come to Newfoundlanders as a result of this development. I have it on very good authority that it will about equal the number of people who were laid off in the provincial Department of Highways over the past eight years because of automated equipment.

I remind the House that there is an average of 59,000 people in Newfoundland per month per year drawing unemployment insurance. There are 124,000 Newfoundlanders who filed for unemployment insurance in the past year.

The other point I want to make with respect to the hon. gentleman's speech concerns the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources today announced an agreement with Newfoundland to provide additional support equipment, such as helicopters and fixed-wing aircraft, for search and rescue operations on the offshore. The Minister stated today that there will be a second fixed-wing tracker aircraft stationed in St. John's with the federal Department of Fisheries which can be used for search and rescue. The big announcement was that a Canadian Armed Forces helicopter with SAR capability will be deployed to St. John's. However, from where is it being deployed? It is being deployed from Gander, Newfoundland, 150 miles in a straight line from the City of St. John's. It is stealing it from one part of Newfoundland and assigning it to St. John's.

The Government is doing this because the request came from both Members of the House who represent that area and from the Province of Newfoundland. However, it was not from the Province of Newfoundland, it was from the Government of Newfoundland. This amounts to stealing from one area of the province to give to another area of the province. The Government is removing that search and rescue capability needed by fishermen in central and northern Newfoundland and placing it in St. John's to fulfil, so the Minister claims, promises that she made during the election campaign. That is not fulfilling a promise; it is stealing from one to give to another.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on something the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) mentioned in his remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is no one to answer your question. I do not believe there should be another comment at this time. Unless there is someone prepared to ask a question or make another comment, the Member is not in the House and I cannot allow a supplementary comment.

[Translation]

The period for questions and comments has expired.

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate being recognized. I felt this morning that I was not recognized, probably because Your Honour took seriously what I said in jest about playing football back in the days when they did not use helmets. For that, I apologize.

I listened with great interest to the debate this morning as well as to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) who introduced Bill C-8 for second reading. Bill C-8 concerns the changes we want to make to the petroleum and gas revenue tax.

This is the first opportunity I have had to speak in the House since the election. I would like to take the opportunity to thank the electors of Brampton-Georgetown for being so kind to me over the summer. It was a great summer and it was even better after Labour Day. I want to thank them most sincerely for their kindness and I will try to justify the overwhelming support which they gave to me.

Mr. Gauthier: We all make mistakes.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) should be so lucky as to have such a majority.

Bill C-8 puts into place a number of fiscal measures affecting the PGRT that date back to 1982. Before I expand on that, I want to point out that in the 11 weeks since the Government has taken office a number of important incentives have taken place on the energy front. Of course, the focus of these early measures has been to assist an industry which has been brought to its knees over the last number of years, despite the efforts of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) to convince us that it is an industry that is hosing the public.

We want to assist the industry in the short run in order to create jobs. The creation of employment is a very important part of our over-all goal. Jobs are needed in Alberta where unemployment ranges from 13 per cent to 14 per cent. This industry, which has struggled in the last few years, must get back on its feet to restart that engine of growth.

As a first step, the Government consulted with the provinces and the industry. We sought their advice about how to turn it around and acted upon that advice on November 1 when the Minister adopted a market-sensitive pricing regime for natural gas exports.

Mr. Axworthy: We did that.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) wants to take credit for it.

Mr. Axworthy: We announced it in June.

Mr. McDermid: According to the industry, an additional 3.11 billion cubic metres will be sold over and above what would have been marketed under the previous system. This translates into an extra $1 billion in foreign exchange, the preservation of thousands of jobs and the creation of thousands more.

Another initiative is the Bill we are discussing today. These proposals were contained in the economic statement by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), through which PGRT credits to small producers have been doubled to $500,000. This will help the smaller firms who are often the most aggressive explorers and spenders. The lower rate of PGRT to integrated oil sands plants is extended for a further year. This indicates our Government's support for huge employment growth-generating projects. We are told it is worth some $35 million through 1985-86.

At the same time while this was going on, the economic statement provided protection for our vital primary and petrochemical industries. Farmers, fishermen, loggers and mine operators are eligible for the fuel sales tax relief with respect to commercial uses. These industries, together with the petrochemical industry, are also eligible for rebates equivalent to the increase in the PCC applied to refiners. That is worth some $135 million through 1985-86.

There are many other initiatives undertaken by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). I think everyone in this House will agree that she did a masterful job initially as the official spokesman for energy in her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. She accomplished as an opposition critic something which the Government of the day could not accomplish. We are seeing the fruits of those negotiations now coming to the fore with the productive discussions and agreements that are going on with the great Province of Newfoundland.

We saw the Minister of Energy for Newfoundland in the gallery the other day. He had a big grin on his face. If he had died right there on the spot the undertaker would never have been able to get the smile off his face. He is extremely happy. I know all Newfoundlanders, with the exception of two or three in the House in the Opposition, will be more than pleased with the results of the negotiations. Again, of course, our number one concern is employment for Newfoundland in order that Newfoundlanders may take advantage of the resources that are available there. We welcome that.

I can say that negotiations are going on extremely well with the producing provinces in the west. My Minister is at present winging her way to the west and will be meeting with western energy ministers at the first of the week. All Canadians, and we in the House of course, can be very satisfied and feel comfortable and confident that energy negotiations are being carried out in an exemplary fashion by the Minister of Energy. She is doing a marvellous job and we all wish her the best.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Another interesting development is the new co-operation between provincial and federal Governments so lacking over the last number of years with a Prime Minister who thrived on confrontation. The new regime is co-operating and consulting with the provinces in many, many areas. An initial meeting was held between my Minister, the Minister of Energy, and the Hon. Philip Andrewes, the Minister of Energy for Ontario. Mr. Andrewes has made it very clear that class 34 of schedule 2 of the income tax regulations, which pertains to fast write-offs for equipment used in the energy conservation area, was due to lapse in 1984 and requested that it be extended. An announcement to this effect was made by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy just recently. That was accomplished with the encouragement and suggestion of the Minister of Energy for Ontario. Co-operation, conciliation and consensus are going on in the field of energy with our partners, the provinces, in the energy field in this great country. I can assure Canadians that there will be benefits arising from these agreements that will please not only the producing provinces but the consuming provinces as well. I want to touch on that in my remarks today.

This Bill is an important Bill because the legal authority does not yet exist for a whole series of tax changes of a relieving nature that the industry has been promised but has not yet received in law. Many companies are affected and they have completed their tax returns for the past two and a half years in good faith, expecting these measures to have been passed by the previous Government. It is crucial that we now move quickly to retain industry confidence, that the Parliament of Canada keeps promises and can function in an efficient and business-like manner.

If I might with your permission, Mr. Speaker, just go into a brief history of the PGRT, it was introduced effective January 1, 1981 at an 8 per cent level. The Government at that time indicated the rate would be reviewed. It certainly was reviewed; after one year the rate was doubled to 16 per cent although many taxpayers were given a resource allowance of 25 per cent, they paid an effective tax of 12 per cent on their net operating revenues. The rate is still 50 per cent above the 1981 level. I am not sure that is what the Government meant when it said it was going to review it as it went along. The Government certainly reviewed it, upward. This tax, I believe has been—I do not think I am exaggerating when I say this—the single most unpopular tax of all those introduced as part of the previous Government's revenue sharing scheme. Why? The most important reason is that it was a tax on revenues and not on profits. It made no recognition, none whatsoever, of the high capital costs associated with bringing on new oil and gas supplies.

Second, the producing provinces as owners of the resource have always objected to the federal Government imposing a tax so close to the wellhead.

Third, many individual Canadians who have small royalty income—and this is very important—either because they are geologists, those fellows who do the searching and are involved in developing oil and gas plays, or because they were farmers who held freehold mineral rights, suddenly had 16 per cent of their income taken away at source. In some cases these royalties were an important source of retirement income. To add insult to injury, the Government even made them pay income tax on the money that had already been taxed away from them.

Most importantly, however, the PGRT reduced the incentive to reinvest because it was not profit-sensitive. It also reduced the cash flow available to companies, and because the tax rate was subject to review there was much uncertainty in the industry. This uncertainty and lack of confidence led to a poor investment climate and an unwillingness to invest in otherwise attractive opportunities.

I listened to my socialist friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), this morning who criticized firms for reinvesting money in the industry to search for new resources. He said it was a terrible thing for them to do. He said they should pay that money in taxes, not reinvest it in the industry, not create jobs or keep the economy going. They want the big tax-grab. That is all the socialists would do if they were ever in power; they would grab all the money they could get. You think businesses had their problems with the Liberals, Mr. Speaker, but heaven forbid if the socialists were ever in power.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: I will come back to the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) later on when we are discussing Bill C-15 because I have a lot to debate with him. He can go back to reading his paper now because I know he does not understand anything about the energy industry.

• (1430)

An Hon. Member: Say something worth listening to.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member may understand why we are in so much trouble in the energy industry when I have finished my remarks.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why don't you read Beauchesne?

Mr. McDermid: I am having enough trouble reading this speech. Because of the downturn in the energy industry, the Members from Windsor who are chuckling were as much affected as anyone. The ripple effect of the energy industry into Ontario is tremendous. In my riding alone there are 42 companies which do a great deal of business with the oil patch. When there is a downturn in the economy out there, it hurts my riding as well as the ridings in the Windsor area. Those Hon. Members can sit there and chuckle all they want, but it is very serious. It is as important to Ontario as it is to the producing provinces. Once they understand that, maybe they will get behind some of the incentives and programs which the Government is putting forward.

In early 1982 the previous Government, after tremendous pressure from the Opposition, finally recognized the damage which had been done by the taxes and put together a package of ad hoc changes. It reduced the one-year general PGRT rate from 16 per cent to 14.67 per cent and after the resource allowance it was reduced from 12 per cent to 11 per cent. It introduced the new $225,000 tax credit for incorporated working interests and reduced the PGRT rate on existing tar sands plants to 8 per cent for two years. The industry responded positively to these measures on the assumption that these changes would in fact be delivered. Therefore we must ensure that Bill C-8 is passed now so that they will finally be enacted and the industry will not be penalized for acting in good faith.

None of these measures did much to change the basic nature of the PGRT. It was still a tax on revenues, not on profits. It took another year of hounding by Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition before the then Government took another step to amend the PGRT and make it partially sensitive to profitability. On April 19, 1983 a Budget was delivered which proposed some capital expenditures for enhanced oil recovery projects, and that capital be deducted in the calculation of PGRT.

Anyone who has taken the time to look at the energy industry and has been west would know that enhanced oil is expensive to produce. It was clear that under the burden of a revenue tax and high provincial royalties, these projects would not have taken place. The result would have been even higher rates of unemployment in an industry which I think it is fair to say—I think the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) will agree—is an industry that is ready to get back to work. It is ready to go. It wants to go. I think we have seen some changes with mini-megaprojects which the Minister of State for Finance mentioned, such as Wolf Lake, Cold Lake, Elk Point and Peace River.

The tragedy is that it took so long for the Liberals to recognize the damage a revenue tax can do in a capital-intensive industry that many jobs were lost in the interim. It is obvious to those of us in the east that many jobs were lost. We see a lot of Alberta licence plates back in Ontario.

It is of concern that this measure was not put into law. We must enact it very quickly. During the years from 1981 to 1983 the PGRT took some $4.5 billion out of the oil and gas industry. It is not only the total amount that was removed which could otherwise have been used to create jobs; it was also the manner in which it was collected. It was applied to both high reinvestors and low reinvestors without distinction. It not only removed the cash available to be reinvested, it also removed the incentive to reinvest. It created a negative investor psychology. It was a tax which bore no relationship to profit, with a PIP grant system that paid for activity only. It did not reward success.

In the few minutes remaining I want to say that with the election of the new Government we have arrived at a new chapter in the history of the PGRT. As the Minister of Finance indicated in his November 8 economic statement, we are taking the initiative of doubling the $250,000 PGRT credit and extending the lower rate now provided to existing tar sands plants for an additional year. All these modifications have been packaged into Bill C-8. It is an important step in revitalizing the oil and gas industry, but far from the last one that we are prepared to take. In the not too distant future I am sure we will be discussing many new initiatives from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance which will be extremely positive for the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I had one or two questions which I had hoped to put to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) at Committee of the Whole stage. However, it begins to look as though we may not reach that stage today. I also note that the Minister is no longer in the House. Therefore I will direct them to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid), since they follow on his speech.

The Bill before us doubles the corporate tax credit from $250,000 to $500,000. In the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8, the cost of these measures was estimated at $64 million in fiscal year 1985-86. Could the Parliamentary Secretary tell me exactly how this cost was arrived at and what are the elements in it? Since he and other Members on his side have spoken a lot about energy as an engine of growth, may we know exactly what studies have been done and how many jobs will be created as a result of the doubling of the tax credit?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. I cannot answer specifically how the numbers were arrived at; that was done through the Department of Finance. I will get the information for her. I am sure it is doubling what the previous Government estimated it would cost at $250,000.

What is important is that this particular tax incentive will go to small and medium-sized energy industries, the ones which will grow and hire people, the ones which will put unemployed people back to work. That is the key to the whole program, if that kind of taxation break goes primarily to small and intermediate oil companies. They need that type of incentive in order to survive, to expand and to provide much needed employment in energy producing areas.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, first I should like to make a brief comment. I think the Hon. Member has quite properly drawn the connection between what happens with respect to energy policy and general economic conditions within the country. However, I think the nature of that connection could have been explored a little differently than the Hon. Member did. One could, for instance, have talked about the tremendous damage that was inflicted on the industrial sector partly through uncertainty and partly through the direct impact of the tax load, both in 1979 under the previous Conservative administration and under this administration. One of the very first acts since coming to power was to raise taxes yet again on gasoline for the consumer in this country. I will not say it has had a major and devastating effect. Let's not engage in rhetorical overkill. However, it has given rise to some serious problems in my constituency.

My questions are two slightly different ones. The Parliamentary Secretary made the case that the PGRT, because it is a revenue tax, should never have been imposed. Does the Parliamentary Secretary recognize that the oil resources of this country belong to the people of Canada and that they deserve at least some guaranteed return from each barrel of oil that is taken out of the ground?

I also want to follow up on what I see as some contradiction. If it is always a mistake to use taxation on the corporate sector which is not related to profit, why has the Conservative Government, as one of its first acts in office, increased the manufacturing sales tax, which is precisely the kind of tax unrelated to profit which the Parliamentary Secretary has so strongly criticized?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I first want to comment on what the Hon. Member said about increasing the cost of energy as outlined in the statement of the Minister of Finance. We have a compensation fund in this country which is supposedly to be a break-even operation. It permits the basic price of oil to be the same across this country so that one area of the country does not pay more than its fair share. That compensation fund was haemorrhaging or losing money at the rate of $140 million a month. It is about $1.2 billion in debt right now. Had the previous Government done what it was supposed to do, as it states in the legislation, and adjusted that, we would not have a deficit of $1.2 billion. The increase brought in by the Minister of Finance slowed down the haemorrhaging. It did not prevent it but it slowed it down from $140 million to $10 million a month. However, we still have $1.2 billion deficit in a fund that was supposed to be a break-even fund.

It is fine for the socialists to criticize that, but they never come back and ask where we are going to get the money to pay these huge deficits that have been amassed, especially on something that was designed to be a break-even operation. It was designed to level off the price so that it would be fair to all consumers from coast to coast.

Mr. Marchi: Where are you going to get the money?

Mr. McDermid: That is one of the problems. I am glad the Hon. Member has asked the question. If his Government had asked that when it was piling up these huge deficits, maybe we would not be in the trouble we are today. They should have asked themselves where they were going to get the money to do all these fancy things. Had they asked the question, maybe we would not be in the trouble we are today. The Member sits back and throws that out. He should remember who was around here for the last number of years and whose mess we are trying to clean up. It is not an easy job and it is not a pretty picture.

Mr. Tupper: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), who represents a riding in the Province of Ontario, on speaking so constructively about the needs of one of Canada's great industries. It was equally delightful to hear him recognize the importance of the petroleum industry to the Province of Ontario. He reminded the House how in the early years of this decade, from 1981 to 1983 in particular, the downturn in that important industry in Canada reflected on Ontario, how it hurt our steel industry and our iron ore producers and the spinoff effects. Will the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House how close Canada is to being self-sufficient in hydrocarbons?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It will have to be fast.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is it depends on to whom you are talking. I think we are fairly close to energy self-sufficiency in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time for questions and comment has expired.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I too want to comment on your elevation to your present position. I know that you will fill that chair with a great deal of decorum and presence.

I want to make a few comments on Bill C-8 by which the Government seems to be taking care of its friends pretty well. It is on the road to looking after its friends. I have no objection to the Conservatives looking after their friends in the cabbage patch, and I presume that is where the Cabbage Patch dolls come from, or is it the oil patch?

Why are we so anxious to exploit non-renewable energy sources in this country when the measures which the previous Government had in place encouraged Canadians to be energy conservationists? The Government is cutting back and over the next two years will eliminate the CHIP program. That is one program that looked after ordinary Canadians. It assisted ordinary Canadians in conserving energy.

The Government will eventually eliminate the RRAP program. RRAP is a conservation measure to assist low-income Canadians to insulate their homes and make them more energy-efficient. This Government through Bill C-8 is taking care of its oil producing and oil company friends. It has ignored and is in fact penalizing ordinary Canadians by removing the very measures which allow them to save on their energy costs.

There have been cut-backs on research for solar energy and other alternative energy sources. There is a downplaying and a cut-back. The Minister frowns. I do not know why she frowns, but that is what her Government is doing. This Government wants Canadians to go back to an era of consume, consume, consume. This is so that their wealthy friends on Bay Street who are in the oil business can put the profits in their pockets. Is that not marvellous, Mr. Speaker?

There is a surplus of natural gas in this country. It is supposed to be cheaper than conventional oil, yet in many small communities, and particularly in those in northern Ontario, the extension of gas lines into communities has been halted. This means that ordinary Canadians cannot have access to a reasonable source of energy.

The Government has now gone the other way. It is saying that we should pay world price for oil. We will settle with paying the world price for gas as well because we are selling gas to the American market cheaper than to the Canadian market. That is the kind of thing at which the Minister and the Government should really look. How can we deliver the surplus energy sources we have in the country to ordinary Canadians at a reasonable price?

We in northern Ontario have concerns. We are not impressed with the great competition among the oil companies that sell home heating fuel and petroleum for automobiles. We have been complaining about the existence of a differential of up to 10 cents per gallon on regular leaded gas between southern Ontario and northern Ontario. We have been asking why this differential exists. We asked the Consumer and Corporate Affairs Department of the previous Liberal Government to investigate the possibilities of a scam, price fixing or an agreement not to compete. We have always been put off. An investigation to determine why there should be this differential has never been launched.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the recent Consumer Price Index clearly indicates the rise in petroleum prices. For example, since October the price of petroleum has gone up 2.9 per cent. That means that ordinary Canadians have had to pay 2.9 per cent more for their petroleum or their home heating fuel since the Government has taken office. In fact, while the Government eliminates the opportunity for Canadians to have reasonably priced energy and while it has cut back and will eventually eliminate grants to ordinary Canadians that allow them to save money on energy costs, it is allowing the price of energy to rise. The price of fossil fuel energy is rising and ordinary Canadians will pay the shot.

I think Members opposite need to be even-handed and fair. Through this Bill we are taking care of their friends and buddies in Texas, in Alberta and on Bay Street. At the same time I think they should be even-handed and make sure that ordinary Canadians get a fair shake. They have won the friends who are more important to them. The ones who are the most important are the oil barons who can contribute to the Tory coffers and who have all their bum-boys and bum-girls elected into those seats—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw that and substitute the word "lackeys". I see Members over there are nodding now. That term is more acceptable to them. They agree with it and feel that it is more parliamentary. Their lackeys are over there to look after their friends in the oil patch. That is the ambivalence with which I am faced as I read Bill C-8. It will be with some trepidation that I decide how I will vote on this Bill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not rising to comment on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). However, as we in the Conservative Party say, "Bring back Judy Erola". That, however, is not the point of my rising.

There have been discussions between the House Leaders with respect to a Ways and Means motion that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) wishes to table at this time. There have been discussions with respect to the content and procedure to allow the Minister of State to rise at this time and, by unanimous consent, table a Ways and Means motion. I consulted with the House Leader of the New Democratic Party at noon today and I believe he has conveyed that information to the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), who will understand the implications of what has happened in terms of the Excise Tax Act Bill which is before the House. I would simply ask you to allow the Minister to stand at this time to table this motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Do we have unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCISE TAX ACT—TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I hereby table in both official languages two copies of a Ways and Means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act and ask that an Order of the Day be designated for its consideration.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-8, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think we should revert to questions and comments on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Are there any questions or comments?

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. colleague from Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) would pay attention, I would like to ask him a question.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he agrees that some of those people he has been insulting for the last twenty minutes, using every kind of epithet—and I have only one word for this kind of treatment but I will not say it—but in any case, some of the people out West whom he has been insulting are entrepreneurs, Canadians who are investing their energies, their imagination, their money, their dreams and their desires to help their fellow Canadians by creating jobs. These entrepreneurs out West are Canadians too, and they are people who create jobs. Nevertheless, my hon. colleague from Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) gives the impression that they are just a bunch of thieves without any conscience at all, whose only purpose in life is to get rich.

I would like to ask him a very serious question. Does he not agree that the oil industry creates jobs, as was said so aptly by my hon. colleague from Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper)? When there is a drop in production in the oil industry out West, Canadians in Ontario and Quebec are the ones who suffer. They are still suffering today, and many are unemployed because production went down as a result of a number of signals that, I think, were aimed at scaring off investors and at punishing, as the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) would love to do, at punishing people who prefer to make money through their own energies and efforts instead of getting grants and cheques. In the latter case, they can just sit back and let the State take charge of their lives, tell them where to work, what to do, where to invest—

Does my hon. colleague not have the energy and the interest for a serious debate of a few minutes, instead of indulging in rhetoric which adds nothing to the debate because it is too doctrinaire, emotional and ideological?

● (1500)

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that I did not call the entrepreneurs names; I called the members of the Conservative Party lackeys. That is not an indecent term, it is an endearing term. It is an endearing term between the Conservatives and their bosses in the oil patch.

I might point out to the Hon. Member that these poor entrepreneurs have done well in exploiting the resources of Canada.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Answer the question!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry.

[English]

Would the Hon. Member allow the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) to finish his answer?

Mr. Rodriguez: I do not mind the Hon. Member asking me a question. After I have answered it, I suppose she will tell me that I am wrong.

Mrs. Mailly: Answer it.

Mr. Rodriguez: I will. Just listen and be patient.

Mrs. Mailly: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, she does not want to be patient. Well, she must make up her mind.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I realize it is Friday, but the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has the floor. Would he please answer the question. Could we please have a little order.

Mr. Rodriguez: The poor entrepreneurs which I have ridiculed today have done very well in exploiting Canadian resources. They were offered PIP grants. Over a five-year period $8.6 billion was budgeted for the oil companies. To do what? To exploit Canadian resources and then charge us an arm and a leg for those resources. The entrepreneurs have done extremely well. Some of the oil companies in Canada have made spectacular profits but have not paid a penny in income tax.

There are jobs to be created in the renewable resource sector. There is an opportunity to create jobs in the renewable energy sector of Canada. But the Government has chosen to cut back. That was the point I was making. I do not mind the Government looking after its friends in Bill C-8, but it must think of the consumers, the ordinary Canadians. The Government has allowed the oil companies to have breaks, but at the same time the cost of energy has risen 2.9 per cent since the beginning of October. In many parts of Canada people have to heat their homes earlier and longer, and they must drive greater distances to their workplace, because they do not have the kind of urban transportation which we enjoy in the city of Sudbury and in other large cities. We are allowing the price of oil to increase to the world price, but at the same time we are not demanding the world price for natural gas. The Government must be even-handed in the way it deals with its friends in the oil patch. It does not deal with ordinary Canadians in the same fashion it deals with its friends in the oil patch.

[Translation]

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). He said earlier that the Progressive Conservative Party was taking care of its friends. He may recall that it was the Progressive Conservative Party that not long ago appointed a Member of his own Party as ambassador. I might also remind him that the Progressive Conservative Party is there to help the friends of all parties in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, if the Government is looking for the odd opposition Member to appoint to a position so that thereafter it can, with great pomposity, appoint every Tory to every board and commission, then it is on the right track, because it is doing that. However, the Government should not expect me to thank it for appointing New Democrats to positions. I want to see what it will do for ordinary Canadians. That is how the Government will be judged.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has expired.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few brief remarks on Bill C-8 which is before the House today. I would like to compliment the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). In my opinion, and in the opinion of my colleagues, she has been doing an excellent job. I would suspect that in their heart of hearts, Hon. Members opposite would agree with me.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: A number of Bills have come forward which are advantageous to all Canadians. The Bills will furnish tax relief and do all sorts of good things on behalf of the Government of Canada.

Bill C-8 has been in the works for some time. Most of it came to us as a legacy from the previous Government. It had to be put forward because there were so many problems in the PGRT as it existed. I am pleased that there has been an increase from $250,000 to $500,000 for the credit which is available to small producers. That measure should help the small companies who are having such a hard time in the West. They were hit hard by the Liberal national energy policy. The Government is making changes which will remove some of the ill effects of the ill-conceived Liberal policy of the past.

The enhanced recovery deduction will help to get tertiary oil production moving again in western Canada. It will help with projects such as the tar sands in northern Alberta. Again, we are trying to turn around the bad effects of the national energy policy.

There is one other point to which I would like to refer in the Bill, that is, the facility which will be made available for the transfer of unused exploration and development expense tax credits on the amalgamation or winding-up of a corporation which is engaged in the energy business. We all know that a number of small oil companies had their backs up against the wall and were forced into bankruptcy by Liberal policy. All that was worth anything to them were tax losses. I am pleased to see this provision in the Bill. It will ensure that the tax credits will not remain completely unused. They will not expire, and they can be used by a successor corporation. That will be an advantage—as the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) indicated—to our friends. We do have friends in the oil industry on this side of the House. Our friends are the people who drill oil wells and the people who draw seismic lines. They are the friends of my Party. They ought to be the friends of the NDP, but apparently the NDP has no sympathy for the people who are engaged in the drilling of oil wells or anything else which goes on in the oil and gas business.

I would like to say a few words about the over-all approach of the Bill. What is required is not a fine-tuning of the existing legislation, but an over-all examination of the tax laws which affect oil and gas. This is only an interim measure. A lot of things must be done to improve the tax royalty situation on oil and gas.

We could look at the NEP. What did that program really try to do? First of all, the Liberal Government of that day wanted to control the energy business in Canada. Legitimately, under the Constitution, it is primarily a provincial responsibility. However, the Liberal Government was not satisfied with that. It wanted to grab the whole thing and put on a lot of federal controls, destroying much of the industry in the process. It was a tax grab. There has never been a tax grab like it in the history of Canada. What the Liberal Government wanted to do was to extract from the energy industry and energy consumers $50 billion in five years. That was its projected plan to finance some of the ill-conceived schemes which it had going, and which still have to be paid for, unfortunately. That idea did not work out because oil prices did not escalate at the rate which was initially forecast.

However, what did the Liberal Government do when the price of oil jumped so high several years ago? Instead of letting the market look after itself, instead of letting supply and demand fix the prices, what it did was to keep the price, as far as the producer and the provincial take were concerned, at very much the same level, and then, by fiat, it increased the price to something very near world prices. The difference in between was the money that the Liberal Government of the day was going to take out of it. It was going to get all of that new price increase all to itself by taking it out of the industry and out of the consumers' pockets by way of the PGRT and a myriad of other oil and gas taxes which it had imposed.

I believe we have to get out of price fixing in the oil and gas business. I have a great deal of confidence in the market to come up with the best price under the circumstances. There are number of buyers and a number of sellers all competing in the open market. That will set the real price, not some manufactured price which the Government pulls out of a drawer some place. We have to get the oil and gas industry back to free market principles. Why should there be, Sir, the new oil reference price, the NOOR and the SOOP, and all these other things which are created by the Government? When you go to the gas pump and you buy a gallon of gas to put in your tank, you do not care whether that is new oil or old or some other kind of oil; it is all the same. There should be no difference between old oil prices and new oil prices. It is all the same as far as the market is concerned. I listened to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and I thought the light was beginning to shine into his rather thick skull when he asked the rhetorical question: Why should there be old oil prices and new oil prices? I thought he was going to give as lucid an explanation as to why there should not be those two prices I am presently doing. But that did not occur to him, Sir. All he wanted to do was to aggravate further the government control system, to the detriment, in the long run, of people who work in the oil and gas industry and the Canadian consumers.

What we have to work toward in the oil and gas industry, Mr. Speaker, is a free market price and free market principles. We must take those restrictions off the industry, let them go back to work, let them find more oil and gas, let them produce more oil and gas, thereby bringing the level of prices down. We must not let the situation escalate, which it is likely to do under the present circumstances.

What we need, Sir, is a much more simplified tax system for oil and gas in this country, not the PGRT, this oil tax and that compensation fund, or something else. We must get back to a simplified system and one which respects the constitutional niceties in Canada between federal and provincial areas of taxation. That, Sir, is my pitch this afternoon. I will be very pleased to vote in favour of this Bill. It makes sense. It makes the existing Act a little more fair and workable. However, what we have to do in the next several months is to take a new look at pricing and taxation in the oil and gas industry, and I have every confidence that the new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his very able assistant, the Minister of State for Finance, will do precisely that. In two years or three years hence, I am sure we will see a revitalization of the Canadian energy industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question arising out of the impassioned plea of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) to allow the market system to rule entirely in the case of oil and gas.

It is common for people who do not read history to be condemned to repeat history. I wonder if the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that had we followed that principle throughout the first 20 years of the oil and gas industry in post-war Canada, we would not have had the development of that industry because the expansion and exploration which took place at that time, and the remarkable contribution which that industry was able to make to the Province of Alberta, were based entirely on the willingness within this country to accept a price for oil which was significantly higher than the world price. That is a principle which we felt made sense because it helped to develop an important resource for us in the future. Would the Hon. Member agree that if we had followed his advice right from the start and allowed market prices to rule in the case of gas and oil, we would not presently have the kind of oil and gas industry we have now in this country?

Mr. Nickerson: No, Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not agree with that concept or idea of history. I agree with the Hon. Member that those who do not read history, in all likelihood, are going to repeat it. That is precisely, Sir, what the people on the other side of this room are doing. They have not read the history books and have not seen that over several thousand years of human existence, wherever government has come in and tried to control prices or to dictate what should happen, as time goes by it has had to relent because it ends up with a system where there is misallocation of resources and where prices are generally higher than what they should be under free market conditions. We can never turn the clock back and try a different system under the circumstances, but it is my suspicion, Sir, because that is all we can have, that had we not had all this allocation of market areas in Canada, and had we not controlled the price, we would have a more healthy situation today.

The Canadian oil industry would have grown up more accustomed to free market principles. We would not have had a system where western Canada for a long time has been subsidizing eastern Canada when it comes to oil and gas prices. All in all, it would have been a much healthier situation.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). The Hon. Member in his comments blamed the Liberal Government for not allowing supply and demand to function. He has followed up that allegation in his reply to my friend, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). If the Hon. Member really wants to be objective, could he not say that his own Government has already initiated some of the same kind of intervention in the market, given the fact that Canadian natural gas sells cheaper across the border in the United States than what we charge our own people, and given the fact that the Government has expressed a very clear intention to make that distortion even worse by adding another 9 per cent or 10 per cent when we go to full world price? Does the Hon. Member not see that that is clearly interfering with the real market price which, I would suggest, is being established across the line with our export price, and that is, the true price? How does the Hon. Member justify asking Canadians to pay more than what we will sell it for to Americans? And how does he justify proposing to add another 9 per cent or 10 per cent as we shortly go to full world price?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, what is happening with the present Government policy with respect to export gas prices is precisely opposite to the Hon. Member's interpretation. Markets exist in the United States for surplus Canadian gas in fields which are primarily in Alberta. The price of gas in the northern United States is set very much by market conditions. They are quite willing to buy Canadian gas at a certain price. They are not prepared to pay prices considerably in excess of other gas available to them from other sources. Therefore, we in Canada have to ask ourselves whether we should close off the border and not sell our gas to them at all or, alternatively, whether we should keep Albertans at work in the gas fields. Should we have foreign exchange coming into Canada as a result of these gas sales? Anyone whose business it is to drill gas wells or operate gas plants will certainly agree with you that the Government of Canada is on the right track as far as this export gas pricing policy is concerned.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I have spent most of my lifetime watching the price effects of another commodity, namely, wheat, which always sells at the surplus price on world markets. That, eventually, almost without fail, becomes the price in Canada for that product. We are told that, as farmers, we cannot do anything about it. That is the law of supply and demand. Why does the law of supply and demand have to be re-interpreted for the oil and gas people when their surplus markets do not set the price for domestic production? Why should we have a special set of circumstances for them and not for the producers of other raw products in the country?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party has played right into my hand because pricing of wheat is one of my favourite subjects. In the United States they have a free market for wheat, they have private people in the grain business, whereas in Canada it is the opposite. We have a monopoly on wheat.

Mr. Benjamin: Which do you prefer?

Mr. Nickerson: The prices are set, as the Hon. Member says, more or less internationally. There is not much difference when transportation costs are taken into account.

If one studies the two systems one would see that for the past 35 years American export wheat production, with its free market system, has increased three-fold. In Canada, with a government monopoly on wheat sales, the volume of production of export wheat has remained virtually the same.

Mr. Benjamin: That is not true.

Mr. Nickerson: We see the expansion in the American agricultural economy. As a result of socialist policies, we see the static system in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope that Hon. Members will stop playing poker in the House. Let us get on with the questions and answers.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I was intrigued when the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) said that the grain business is his favourite topic. After he was through speaking we figured he could not have had any other topic that was favourite.

Which system does the Hon. Member prefer? The system of the Canadian Wheat Board does not have a monopoly because a great volume of our grain is sold outside the Canadian Wheat Board in the feed grain system. Does the Hon. Member prefer that system or does he prefer the American free market system? As a Conservative Member of Parliament, would he mind telling us which one of these systems is the best to have?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I thought I answered that. I do not think there is any doubt in the Hon. Member's mind as to where I stand on that question. My preference is to have a free market rather than a controlled market.

Mr. Benjamin: Conservatives are against the Wheat Board.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I too want to congratulate you on your elevation to that very high and honourable post. Believe me, all Albertans are proud of you today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Shields: I would like to make some brief comments on Bill C-8. I want to congratulate the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) for introducing the Bill and on her remarks on the Bill and explanation of it. It is really too bad that Members do not get away from the partisan rhetoric and sit down to actually look at the facts and consider what this Bill is attempting to do.

Mr. Benjamin: You tell us. We can hardly wait.

Mr. Shields: Yes, I am going to attempt to tell you what happened in my community in northeastern Alberta, in Edmonton, Calgary and communities like Grand Prairie when the national energy policy was introduced and the petroleum gas revenue tax was imposed. I have heard Members from the New Democratic Party call it a revenue tax only. It was a production tax.

What would happen to the farming industry if farmers were taxed on every bushel produced before input costs or expenses were taken into account? What would happen if farmers were taxed 20 cents on every bushel they grew whether they were going broke or not? How would that reflect on a farmer's operation?

This was a confiscation tax. It is like a royalty imposed by the federal Government on assets that they do not own. I hear the New Democratic Party saying that the people of Canada own the resources. In one sense that is true because we are all Canadians from coast to coast. However, the jurisdiction of the oil resource belongs to the province. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has just gone to Newfoundland to work out a deal whereby Newfoundland's offshore resources will be treated in exactly the same way as the inland resources.

The Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) was quite vocal. What would happen to the mining industry in northern Ontario if there was a production tax on every tonne of ore removed from the mine—

Mr. Rodriguez: There is a tax.

Mr. Shields: —prior to any other calculation? I heard the other Hon. Member from the NDP say that expenses were taken into account prior to the deduction of the petroleum gas revenue tax. That is absolutely false. Consider a small service station that is franchised and gets a name or a hamburger store like McDonald's that gets a name. Those franchise operators must pay to the franchiser, the head office, based on the volume period. It does not matter whether there is an overrun in expenses because of labour force or new equipment. They pay on a monthly basis based on their total volume in their stores. You see them go out of business all the time. That is exactly what happened in western Canada.

The purpose of the National Energy Program was to Canadianize the industry. I would point out that in 1947, when Leduc No. 1 was found, there was a massive influx of oil companies from the United States, including oil servicing companies, geophysical companies and mud companies with all the anciliary activities that take place in the oil fields. All of these people came from the United States, and indeed I worked with many of those people as a young man. The head-offices were in Oklahoma, Texas, California and other such places.

By 1968, and into the 1970's, 95 per cent of all those companies were Canadian-owned. For example, some of the rigs manufactured in Edmonton and Calgary were used in the Middle East, the Far East, and Europe. These rigs were produced and developed in Canada. For example, some of the innovations for those rigs were patented and produced in Alberta. Some of the rig producers in Alberta were renowned around the world for the expertise and knowledge which they had gained. These companies were 95 per cent to 98 per cent Canadian-owned.

Did the National Energy Program affect the major oil producers when it was introduced? The National Energy Program affected the small companies that employed Canadians and used Canadian expertise. It actually destroyed the small companies, many of which went bankrupt.

At the same time, nailing the energy industry or the oil industry in western Canada had the ripple effect which hit the manufacturing sector in Ontario and Quebec, resulting in a gigantic loss of jobs. That is what we are talking about.

One Member of the New Democratic Party asked where the oil industry would be had Canada decided not to accept oil from western Canada at higher than world price. He fails to mention that this high price was cut off at ten cents a barrel higher than the world price. That includes some of the transportation costs to bring it to market. These facts are really irrelevant because at the same time the marketing of Canadian oil into the United States market would not be allowed, and that had to be addressed. The quotas were necessary but the sale was there and the industry would have remained at world price, which would have allowed a free economy. This would have worked well. The destruction of the oil industry in western Canada was beyond belief.

The NDP talked about multinational companies and how they are our friends. I live in Fort McMurray which has a population of 35,000 people. When I first went to Fort McMurray there were less than 3,000 people. At that time the Great Canadian Oil Sands Limited plant was being built. This plant was financed 100 per cent by the Sun Oil Company of Canada which came and spent millions and millions of dollars to develop the plant. The boast of the then Premier of the Province, Ernest Manning, was that there was not one nickel of government money in this plant. He was correct.

Although the company lost millions of dollars year after year, the mine remained and it kept producing because of the dream of the chairman of the board who wanted to make it work because the time was coming when oil sands would because very important to the world. I wonder where we would be today if Great Canadian Oil Sands Limited had not gone there and pioneered the development of the oil sands. The population of Fort McMurray grew to 7,000 people as a result of that one plant. The second plant, Syncrude, came onstream, and we now have a population of 35,000. It is an example of the jobs that have been created in that community and across the country. I hope this Bill is passed quickly in order to enable the industry to create more jobs in this country.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) made the same allegation about selling gas cheaper to the U.S. market than the Canadian market. Would the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) comment on the Toronto citygate price by which no gas exports can leave this country at less than the Toronto citygate price? This means that there is no situation in which we are exporting gas to the U.S. market at a lower price than that of Canadian gas.

Mr. Shields: I thank the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) for his question. He is absolutely right. The Toronto citygate price includes the prices of the gas commodity and the transportation costs from the fields in such places as the Peace River country to the Toronto city gate.

No gas can be sold across the U.S. border for less than the Toronto citygate price. The fact that it seems unreasonable that we have gas fields in Suffield in southern Alberta and a market across the border in Montana is a very contentious issue among the gas companies. One can understand why. However, an artificial price has been set, which is the Toronto citygate price. The Hon. Member is correct in stating that we are not selling gas to the United States market for less than the price at which we are selling to Canada as a result of the Toronto citygate price.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by paying tribute to the very people that the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has been talking about. In fact, I believe that he makes a valid point that entrepreneurs, both from outside Canada and from Canada, have made a tremendous contribution to the development, expansion and successful presence today of an extremely important oil and gas sector in our economy.

However, I think we should look at the history of that development somewhat more carefully than that given by the Hon. Member. I think, first, we have to recognize that at the beginning there were a great many Canadian entrepreneurs who were involved in early exploration and development. If we look—and I hate to point it out to Hon. Members—at the economic history of this industry, we see that in the first five years of its development a very significant majority of the oil wells drilled were drilled by Canadians. The point at which the industry began to shift is in the context of successful wells that were dug. Even in that context a significant number of Canadians were successful, but the great majority of them found it necessary to sell their discoveries to large international companies in order to develop the resources to a point where they could serve the country. That is not a problem, but that is the history, and I think we should get the history right.

Second, we should recognize that although the United States now may be incredibly interested in importing gas and oil from Canada, that has not historically been the case. Anybody who has looked at the history of the petroleum industry will know that there have been, at different stages since World War II, important import barriers which the United States put up to the sale of Canadian oil and gas within that market. It was in the context of those import barriers and the financing difficulties that Canadian entrepreneurs were having in developing their resources in the West—because the banks on Bay Street were no more sympathetic to Alberta then than they are now—that we adopted a strategy in this country to provide prices well above the world level for all the oil that was produced in western Canada.

I have to put it very bluntly, Mr. Speaker. The constituents of Essex-Windsor for 25 years paid the price to keep the oil industry in Alberta growing, developing and prospering. It is because of that historical contract that took place within this country in the 1950s and 1960s that the people of my constituency and the people of the Province of Ontario in 1970 and 1980 said that they had the right to some say in what was happening to the Canadian resources in oil and gas which they had helped develop.

We as well as the other Parties in this House have had to wrestle carefully with the difficult principles involved in trying to reconcile, on the one hand, the concern of the Province of Alberta which had been poor and then had become rich on the basis of oil and gas, with the interest of the province of Ontario based on manufacturing which had itself sacrificed through consumer prices for 25 years in order to build up that oil and gas industry. As have the Members in all Parties, we found that sorting out that dilemma was not an easy process. We found certain principles which helped us to establish a policy that at least had some consistency.

Let me outline to the House a few of those principles. The first one was to recognize what the history of the industry taught us, that we could not rely on the market system to decide what happened to gas and oil in Canada. As I said earlier, if we had done that, we would not have seen the kind of development in Athabasca, to which the Hon. Member referred. We would not have seen the kind of development in Calgary which is the source of so much prosperity in that community. We would not have the prosperity of Edmonton created throughout the years which occurred because we in Ontario paid significantly more than the marketplace would have provided for oil and gas. We said it was absolutely correct to take a strategy into this policy area which said, "Let's use the market system to some degree, but let's not let it rule the future evolution of such a crucial part of our economy".

Mr. Thacker: I never bought a tractor for less than world price and a tariff.

Mr. Langdon: If we look at the case of tractors, we will see that historically we have prevented farmers from importing tractors from England so that Massey-Ferguson, among others, could maintain a market here in which it could sell at a higher price. There is a royal commission report on farm machinery to which I refer the Member. Let him trace it back and he will find that he has made a mistake in this area as well.

Let me continue. We are talking about points of principle. If we move away from this first point, that the market cannot be permitted in this crucial area to decide everything, I think a second principle on the basis of the first principle is that Canadians across the country helped to build the oil and gas industry so that all Canadians can share in that industry.

What about the resources that come out of the ground? Consumers who contributed to building these resources over the years have a right to get some return from those resources when world prices go way up and, as a result, the value of those resources here in Canada goes way up. That is why we adopted as a principle the view that those resources taken out of the ground, whether in the Arctic, Alberta, British Columbia, or Saskatchewan, were resources that did indeed belong to the Canadian people, and that in turn it was proper to put a tax on those resources. That ensured that no matter how much some company could do in the way of the padding of expenditures between taking that gas out of the ground and selling it to the consumer, there was a guaranteed amount which went to the people of Canada.

The third principle has been the clear recognition, when talking about the great increase in price that took place as a result of what was happening in the rest of the world, that all those economic rents should not be allowed to go either to the companies themselves or to the oil companies and provinces in which production was based. Again this was a windfall to Canada as a whole. On the basis of that, there should be a sharing of those rents. That is where the principle of old oil and new oil in fact became important for us. As economists looking at what was taking place in the country, we knew that it was important to offer every possible encouragement to people to explore for new oil. We knew that if we tried, as a federal or provincial jurisdiction, to take away those rents from those producing and finding new oil, we would offer a disincentive. That was not the case with respect to oil which had already been discovered. Thus it made economic sense to make the distinction between old and new oil.

In the application of these principles, we found a way of drawing together both the western and eastern wings of our Party. It was a reconciliation which I urge upon people such as the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) who speaks with such passion about the oil industry. I appreciate the passion. I wish there was a little more logic associated with it.

In looking at taxation questions with respect to the oil and gas industry, I suggest that the Government should not look to an imposition, as it has done, on Ontario consumers. Instead, it should look to seeking to treat more fairly the tremendous tax benefits which the corporate sector has enjoyed in recent years. If it feels it is essential to increase tax revenue to cover some of the costs of equalizing prices across the country in oil and gas, that is where the Government should turn, not to the consumers of Ontario.

I do not wish to prolong this debate. However, I want to put clearly on the record the fact that our Party has approached this matter in a serious way, in an attempt to ensure that certain philosophical principles follow through which reflect the history of the country and the contribution we have all made to the development of the oil and gas industry and which reflect the concerns of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) that we owe a debt of gratitude to the entrepreneurs who took risks to help in a national effort to make the industry grow.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I just want to clarify two points. I know Hon. Members want to get the Bill through, but this is the first time I have risen in the House in this session. I was supposed to speak on another Bill and I want to get this Bill through, but I should like to make two comments. The Hon. Member started to tell us that it was Canadians who found the original oil in the West, that it was Canadian oil companies. That is inaccurate. He had better find out the facts. It was Imperial Oil which spent millions of dollars until the find at Leduc. Canadians from Bay Street did not have the guts to put any money in the West.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fennell: What the Hon. Member stated about the beginnings of the industry in the West is inaccurate.

I spent eight weeks studying the National Energy Program. It is a damn shame it was written by economists not by oilmen; this country would have been in much better shape today.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the pain and chagrin on the face of the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown. However, I have to make a quick comment. I refer the Hon. Member to the classic study of the history of the oil industry in western Canada written in our economic history books, including the classic study of Ronald Shearer. They indicate very clearly the early stages of that industry. I refer the Hon. Member to this study because it is a crucial part of our history. In fact, the risk-taking entrepreneurs were Canadian. The people who were prepared to put their money on the line were Canadian. He should check it out and he will see.

In fact, I will make a small commitment to the Hon. Member. I will track down the article for him and pass it on to him. If he concedes, his second speech in the House will be a speech of apology for his incorrect references.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no more questions, is the House ready for the question?

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by the Liberal House Leader and by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) not to give a major presentation because they want to see the Bill get through. However, I will use just a minute. When the Government wants a Bill to get through in a hurry, it should coach its Members not to make statements—

Mr. Nunziata: Inflammatory statements.

Mr. Baker: Exactly, inflammatory statements. They should not make such statements in the House so that we get angry.

They should not make incorrect statements. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid) said that everyone in Newfoundland, all Newfoundlanders, would be happy with the federal-provincial agreement except for the Newfoundlanders in the Opposition. I will not sit here without making some comment on such a remark.

In my one minute let me indicate that we in Newfoundland have been listening to promises by the provincial Tory Government—as well as promises by this Tory Government—for years, promises of thousands of jobs. If we could eat promises, every Newfoundlander would weigh 600 pounds.

For the Parliamentary Secretary to rise and make such a statement came close to making me rise today to prevent the Bill from going through. It is only because of the request of the House Leader of the Liberal Party and the request of the Minister of State for Finance that I will now take my seat. That is a warning to government Members.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-8, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be now read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on Bill C-8, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act.

In view of the fact that it is awfully close to four o'clock, we will not see the clock in order to expedite this matter.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On Clause 2—

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, under Clause 2, I was asked by my colleague how the numbers were arrived at in the extension of the tax credit on the PGRT. I should like to ask the Hon. Minister now if we could have some clarification of that point so that my colleague's question is answered.

• (1600)

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, as to the figures, the cost is $35 million per calendar year, and the $64 million represents the cost for the first two fiscal years. It does not relate to the figures published previously because the last estimate was based on a more optimistic view of energy prices and because of the adjustment from a $250,000 credit to a $500,000 credit.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 6—Credit deductions

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Chairman, can the Minister tell us what studies were done to justify doubling the amount for this tax credit and what sort of economic analysis and comparisons were done because in other areas of the Department of Energy we see a cut of $60.4 million, including some alternative energy programs? I would be interested in knowing the rationale for cutting the $60 million, which includes alternative energy, at the same time as giving this tax break which results in forgone revenues of something over $60 million to the oil industry.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to comment on anything except this Bill. There were no particular studies made in connection with this. It was calculated by checking actual company by company data. The change was made because it is obvious from the experience in the Province of Saskatchewan, where there has been a very active drilling program, since it revised its legislation that tax incentives are important to this particular area of the industry.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Chairman, is there any appraisal of the number of jobs that are expected to be created as a result of this tax credit, particularly in comparison with the number of jobs that are being eliminated by the other measures in the economic statement which affect energy, mines and resources?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, we do not have a specific number, but we do have indications from our conversations with industry people that they expect quite an increase in activity and quite a few more jobs as a result.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 6 agreed to.

Clauses 7 to 13 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to extend my thanks to members of the Opposition, particularly the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) who demonstrated a restraint that is typical of him but has not been seen today until now. I do appreciate the co-operation.

I rise now with respect to the business of the House on Monday. Hon. Members will recall that earlier this afternoon the Minister of State for Finance tabled a Ways and Means motion with respect to the Excise Tax Bill. It is my intention to call the Ways and Means motions of the Minister as the first item of business on Monday. Following the calling of those motions, we will then proceed with the business as announced yesterday with respect to Monday, that is to say, we will deal with the Public Works Bill. I anticipate, with the co-operation of the House after discussion with the House Leaders, that we will be able to conclude all stages of that legislation at some point on Monday. When we do, we will be able to devote our full time and attention to the well-known Bill dealing with Investment Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Chair be willing to not see the clock at five o'clock in order that whatever Member has a Bill today will be entitled to the full hour, and that we not see the clock until seven minutes after five?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all items and orders preceding No. 160 stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED ABOLITION OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX ON FARM LAND

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of abolishing the capital gains tax on bona fide farm land.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am indeed honoured to rise in this Thirty-third Parliament to propose my first Private Members' motion which, I may say, is exactly the same as the motion which I proposed in the Thirty-second Parliament, namely that the Cabinet should consider the advisability that capital gains tax be abolished on bona fide farm land. I was convinced then and I still am that it is in the national interest of Canada and of all citizens of Canada to have this motion passed. I believe that this time I have some reason to be genuinely optimistic. There is a new Government in place, so we have another chance. More evidence has been accumulated that capital gains tax is harming the family farm. I will argue that it is harming the nation as a whole.

As well, the Government has indicated that it is prepared to establish a parliamentary committee. That likely is in the process. Therefore, it should be easy for the Government to accept this motion. I believe that Members of this House, particularly those who are familiar with the farm scene, and even those who are not, will realize soon that it is in the national interest that we not tax the family farm as we have been.

I commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for responding so quickly to the pressure put upon him to honour the campaign promise. I know from talking to many farmers that they are genuinely impressed that in the first 90 days so much has been done for the benefit of agriculture. In the West, they speak of the $60 million so quickly provided to assist farmers because of the drought, and the $120 million that went to grain producers through western grain stabilization. All producers across the nation will have started to benefit from the 4.8 cents per litre fuel tax not being imposed which otherwise they would have been faced with. Of course, the freeze in the freight rate helps the grain exporter.

The Farm Credit Corporation has put a freeze on foreclosures across the entire country until more time can pass and we can get a handle on the problem. The Farm Credit Corporation's interest rates have been lowered and, of course, the appeal board can now act as an intermediary between an individual farmer who may be in trouble and the financial institutions. That is of enormous benefit because the farmer can go before a group of his peers who will look at his problem. In cases where the farmer is a good manager but has financial problems for reasons often beyond his own control, the financial institution will very likely accept a decision made by his fellow farmers to give him a chance. By the same token, there are a few farmers who are in the position of having no hope at all. They will be more apt to accept a decision of their own peer group telling them that it is obvious they are not going to make it and that they had better spend their time doing something else.

Dual labelling has been enormously popular with the farm community. I wish to commend the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) for having taken those steps.

I would ask the special parliamentary committee that was set up to remember some of the broad facts when looking at this special exemption. There is a general law that imposes capital gains tax but there are certain exceptions in many cases. I am asking that bona fide farm land be placed under a special exemption so that capital gains tax is not imposed. That is done in all sorts of cases. For example, there is a general law that imposes income tax on all of us but there are exemptions for those who are married, for those with children and for those who are over a certain age. All of that adds to the strength of the general principle. I am saying that we should be doing this for the farmers.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, on a world scale, Canada has a mere one half of 1 per cent of world population. Yet we are the stewards of over 3 per cent of the arable land of the world. That imposes an enormous responsibility on us. We are a small population with a great deal of land as compared to the rest of the world. There is no doubt in my mind at all that the plight of Ethiopia is simply the first such plight that has been brought to our attention. Within the next 10 years, Canadians are going to be called upon to produce food and share it with the rest of the world in a way we have never been called upon before. In order to do that, we need the family farm. In order to keep the family farm, we need to abolish capital gains tax on land that is kept in genuine agricultural production.

As we all know, Canada is a huge country. It is composed of 2.3 billion acres. While we have that huge area under our legal and sovereign jurisdiction, only 13 per cent of that land is arable. Of that arable land, only 4 per cent is designated Class I and Class II land. That is further complicated by the fact that over 50 per cent of the Class I land and over 30 per cent of the Class II land lies within 50 miles of the huge metropolitan centres like Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal, centres which are expanding at an enormous rate. We are giving up truly enormous amounts of good land.

My researcher, Mr. Darryl Pat, dug out the fact that between 1971 and 1976, we lost some 12,460 hectares of prime land each year. That is a very serious statistic. If we impose capital gain taxes on the rest of that land, we will simply draw more and more land out of agricultural production.

You may properly ask why we should exempt farmers from this tax, Mr. Speaker. There are many reasons, but I do not want to take too long as I know other Members wish to stand and put their views before us. Clearly, a basic fact that we must realize is that farmers in this country are not well off. In my area of the country, there are big farms and the farmers are better off than most. When looking at Canada as a whole, though, farmers are not well off. The average income of farmers in 1980 was some $13,265. The average income for all tax filers in that year was $18,241. You will realize instantly, Mr. Speaker, that farmers make only 72.7 per cent of the average income of all Canadians. Our income of $52,000 plus looks pretty generous compared to the income of the farmers who are putting the bread and butter on our tables.

Out of that 72 per cent of the average Canadian income, farmers must provide totally for their own pension. They do not have a salary like you and I, Mr. Speaker, and the taxpayers of the nation are putting extra money aside over and above the $52,000 they put directly in our pocket so that we will have a pension. Farmers do not have a pension. The land has always been the farmer's pension. Because they like the style of life and are committed to the land, farmers have been prepared to take a much lower income while they are working. However, the land is their pension. When they want to move to town, they sell their land. They buy a little home in town and their sons and daughters carry on with the farm.

The income of the farmers has become so low that over 58 per cent of farmers or their spouses must work off the farm in order to keep the farm together. The country is put in a fragile position when over 50 per cent of its best farmers must work off the land in order to keep the family together and the farm going.

I would note as well that most of us who live in the cities hold only one job. We do not need to hold two jobs to keep our families together; nor is our major investment, our home, subject to capital gains taxes. All of these big wonderful mansions in which we all live are capital gains tax free. We should expect at least the same type of consideration for the farmer's major investment, the farm.

I have no doubt in my own mind, and I think most Members agree, that capital gains taxes in fact destroy the family farm. I believe that the family farm is critical if we who live in the cities want to continue to have such cheap food. However, I hope that food will become more reasonably priced because it is unreasonably cheap right now.

The family farm is clearly the most efficient kind of farm. You will get a great deal of work out of the man and his wife who have a dream of developing a piece of land and passing it on to their children. They will work 18 or 20 hours a day winter and summer in order to keep that farm together and pass it on to their children. It is also best for the land itself. Huge corporations with professional management groups have employees who are not committed to the land. We will never get the same degree of conservation and preservation from them as we do from the family farmer who walks on his land every day and becomes deeply attached to it. If we destroy the family farm, we in the cities will pay far, far more for food than we pay today.

The Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais) may rise and point out that there are roll-overs. It is true that there are roll-overs, but the roll-overs have become a trap because the tax will ultimately have to be paid. Six generations down the line, some descendant might have to pay the taxes for six generations. That will drive virtually all of the land out of production. As well, it blocks the farmer's ability to pass his land as an economic unit on to a son or daughter who wishes to stay on the land, while at the same time remaining fair to the other children who must move off the land and take other jobs. It is absolutely impossible for a farmer to do that because the value of the land has gone way beyond its productive value as a result of inflation. A child inheriting a farm or buying it for its 1971 value simply cannot afford to pay the farm's present fair market value. The farmer cannot afford to transfer it at the 1971 value because he must do justice by his other children. It is a trap. As a result of inflation it is not working, and therefore it must be done away with.

The third reason is clearly one which a lot of people in the cities do not appreciate, and perhaps I do not appreciate it to its full extent. The reason for the abolition of the capital gains tax is to enable the people who live in the cities to continue to have land and food which is cheap. If we looked at the statistics we would find that on the average Canadians spend only 13 per cent of their disposable income on genuine home food. That figure rises to about 16 per cent if fast foods, such as McDonald's, are included. But for real food which is prepared and served at home, on the average Canadians spend 13 per cent of their disposable incomes. Europeans spend about 30 per cent of their disposable income on food. In centrally-planned economies, over 50 per cent of disposable income is spent on food. Therefore, we are not paying our farmers an adequate price for their products. Until we are prepared to do that, so that farmers can have a reasonable standard of living and can save enough money to pay capital gains taxes, we should, in all fairness, not charge the capital gains tax. It would be much easier to impose the capital gains tax on farmers if we were spending 25 per cent of our income on food, as do most other countries.

In summary, Canada has a small population which has an enormous responsibility to produce food for the world. The capital gains tax is affecting the production of food both domestically and internationally. I believe that the House should adopt the motion. It is a motion which calls upon Cabinet to consider the advisability of the abolition of capital gains tax on bona fide farm land. I hope it is a motion which my colleagues will accept.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to discuss the policy of the capital gains tax. In addition, I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) has raised the topic. I have no objection to a further study, but I am somewhat puzzled. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills comes from the governing Party which made its policy on the capital gains tax very clear during the election campaign and prior to the campaign. That policy was for the total abolition of the capital gains tax on farm land.

In the economic statement the Government indicated that it would immediately study the question of the capital gains tax along with other taxation matters respecting Section 31 and agri-bonds. I am wondering if the Hon. Member has not picked up some vibrations, being a member of the caucus, which would indicate that there is some foot-dragging going on regarding this promise. Is the Government going to change its policy? Is it having second thoughts? Does it not think that its mandate was clear? Are 211 seats not enough? Did the people of rural Canada not speak and tell the Government that they were prepared to have a change in the capital gains tax legislation? I know the Hon. Member is very experienced and very good at picking up vibrations. I think he must have been getting some bad vibrations from his colleagues in caucus. We in this Party would be pleased to help push the process to change the capital gains tax legislation.

While the rhetoric on the election hustings was very clear, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and virtually every Member who was elected said that they would immediately do away with the capital gains tax upon election. It was one of the Government's prime planks in its platform for farmers. However, upon election, the action which it took on taxation was simply to introduce a Liberal proposal. It did not provide exemptions or tax relief. It simply introduced a policy which would permit up to $120,000 worth of RRSPs. That is not an exemption or abolition of the capital gains tax; it is a method of extending the tax. By extending the tax, it avoids it from one year to the next and delays it, rather than abolishes it.

The Government says that it is prepared to look at the policies which it espoused. Did it not do a study prior to making those promises, as was done by our Party? Did it not look at the effects of the policy beyond a straight abolition? Did it not look at the effects it would have on communities, family farms and the provinces? Did it forget that such a move on taxation would affect the provinces? Did it not consider the potential for inequity in the total exemption of the capital gains tax?

I suppose it is necessary to have a study. It is a shame that we must have after-the-fact studies to justify a policy which was fought during the election campaign. I would hope that the Progressive Conservative Party would do a little homework on its policies and election promises so that it would be aware of the effects of what it is advocating before it goes to the hustings, instead of waiting until it finds that it cannot in good conscience carry out the promises upon which it was elected.

For example, does the Government not realize the effects a total exemption would have on windfall profits for some land holders? We assume that the policy is to help farmers, but how would the Government monitor it? How would it ensure that it is only permitted in cases where the land is being kept in farming? How would the Government determine who is a bona fide farmer?

I have heard several of the Hon. Member's colleagues argue that the abolition of the capital gains tax would reduce land prices. That argument avoids common sense and economic logic. However, on the hustings they argued that if there were no capital gains tax, farmers would sell their land at lower prices and therefore the cost of food would decrease. That is the first economic theory I have heard which suggests that the price of land in a free and open market—which I contend we have—is set by the seller rather than the buyer. The buyer determines what will be the price and the seller will take that price whether or not there is a capital gains tax.

It is quite clear that the existing law is inequitable as it applies to roll-overs within families. Not all families are so simply structured that they are made up of one or two children who want to share in the family farm. In most cases, the roll-over is extremely simple. They can avoid the capital gains tax because the transfer can take place directly from the parents to the children. Our law currently says there will then be no capital gains tax. However, when there are more than one or two children, and some children who do not particularly want to farm, it is very difficult to establish a price and a fair sharing of the assets of that property, particularly in cases where the parents have died and willed the property to some of the children and are hoping that the rest of the children will be provided for by whoever takes over the farm with a monetary settlement. In those cases, depending on the method of the transfer, there are sometimes very real hardships created for the people who have chosen to stay on the farm.

There are questions about the total exemption policy which the Conservatives had been advocating on the hustings and from which they seem to be backing away. Do people who have bought land for speculation within the last ten years qualify equally with those people who have farmed for 30 years, 40 years or 50 years? Those johnny-come latelies, the whiz kids of the investment community in rural Canada who, just in the last ten years, have been able to realize four times, five times, and sometimes as much as ten times their investment, do they get a full exemption for their rather shallow commitment to agriculture when compared to the people who have invested a whole lifetime? That question was never addressed in the full exemption policy. I believe it would be quite unfair to provide what would be a windfall profit to some whiz kid investor which is not provided for as a pension to someone who has committed his or her whole lifetime to agriculture.

I believe, therefore, it is clear that the full exemption policy which the Conservatives ran with in the election campaign has some very real shortcomings. We had recognized those shortcomings, Mr. Speaker, in the policy which our Party presented to the people of Canada. We had done our homework and suggested a couple of changes which we thought would have been more equitable and realistic. First, we suggested that one of the basic problems with the capital gains tax, and one of the largest inequities as it is applied across the country, stems from the fact that the valuation day was set at the end of 1971. The reason that is an inequitable time to start is that some regions of the country in 1971 were very depressed with respect to the farm scene. The prairie regions had extremely low land prices in 1971 as compared to land prices in other parts of the country where there were livestock and mixed crops. The capital gains tax, as a result, fell more heavily on prairie farmers than on farmers in other regions of Canada. We had proposed to change the valuation date from the end of 1971 to the end of 1976 because 1976 was a period of time when the various regions of the country had land prices more or less at equity.

We had also suggested that it was clearly necessary to recognize the fact that farm people do put their whole lifetime into their farms and that that is their only source of pension funds. We had suggested an exemption which would apply to all farmers of $100,000 of capital gain. The first $100,000 of capital gain which accrued between the sales price and the value at 1976 would have been exempt from capital gain. We had borrowed this suggestion, I have to admit, from one of the provinces which has already implemented such an exemption. Under the New Democratic Government of Saskatchewan, between 1971 and 1982 there was a $100,000 exemption on the provincial share of income tax generated because of capital gain.

That brings me to my last point, Mr. Speaker, the question which apparently the Progressive Conservative Party totally ignored during the election campaign and which it is now coming up against as it finds itself attempting to implement its full exemption of capital gains tax. It is a very fundamental question in a federation like ours. Can those Progressive Conservative Governments at the provincial level stand to take a reduction in their tax take because of a full exemption on all capital gains on farm land? Will those provinces do like the New Democratic Government did in Saskatchewan and provide exemptions, and will they go along with the full federal exemption? That question does not seem to have been asked of the various provincial Premiers. Perhaps that is why this Government is now dragging its feet on the promise it made up and down the byroads of rural Canada, to abolish capital gains tax on farm land absolutely and completely. I believe now the Conservative Government is beginning to come up against the reality of the fact that the provinces do not seem to be particularly enamoured of the proposal. It has not taken into account the very real possibility of windfall gains for people who have dedicated very little of their working lifetime to agriculture. It does not know how to deal with the problem of land being taken out of agriculture. How is that monitored? The Conservative Government is opposed to that sort of monitoring through FIRA or any investment agencies. But it seems quite clear that if land is going to stay in agriculture, there will have to be some sort of follow-up agency to make certain that that is in fact the case when land changes hands and the capital gains tax is avoided.

Finally, I should say that I have no objection to seeing this motion go for further study. I am just very sorry that so little homework was done by the Progressive Conservative Party before it went to the country with such an over-all policy prior to the introduction of which so little preparation had been done.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on this motion. I believe the motion is very well intentioned, Mr. Speaker, but I must point out one flaw in it which is of concern to me.

The motion addresses itself to the topic of abolishing capital gains tax on bona fide farm land. The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that not all bona fide farm land is owned by bona fide farmers. The difficulty I have, Mr. Speaker, is that being on the outskirts of the city of Ottawa, my own constituency is a very large agricultural area. Nevertheless, we see the urban sprawl coming closer, and I am sure that is the case in the area surrounding most cities. There are large tracts of good farm land classed I, II, III and IV agricultural land, which is presently owned by major developers. In some cases that land is owned by developers and leased or rented back to farmers to grow crops on, although that is not always the case. We could argue that good agricultural land should not be used for development purposes. However, we will leave that debate for the legislators of the Province of Ontario. That debate has gone on for a long period of time.

However, there is a considerable amount of good farm land owned by developers. Although I want to see bona fide farmers get the benefit of selling their land without having to pay capital gains, I certainly do not want to see large developers get that same benefit with the land they have rented out to farmers. Consider the situation of a developer leasing land back to a farmer for a number of years. We are trying to help the farmer through this. In this particular case the farmer is still working the land but someone else will get the deduction when it is sold. That particular proposition concerns me.

I recognize the good intentions of the resolution. If this were ever to be incorporated into a Bill it would have to be tightened up considerably to ensure that we do not give that type of benefit to very large developers. As we all know, Canadian businesses now receive considerable tax breaks of various sorts. In this resolution we are trying to give a break to farmers. I would hope that this break would not end up benefiting large companies which have very little, if anything, to do with the farming process. In many cases those same concerns are responsible for taking farm land out of production eventually.

A resolution similar to this was introduced in the House some time ago by a Liberal Member. I have in my hand an editorial from the London Free Press of October 3, 1983. It comments on a similar resolution which was placed before the House by the then Member for Essex-Kent, Mr. Robert Daudlin. This article indicates that Mr. Daudlin had brought forward such a resolution, but it had another feature in it which I think is very interesting. It provided that it would be a one-time exemption from capital gains tax to farmers of the country. That is not perfect either, of course, because you could argue that farmers often own many tracts of land. If they sell one portion and take advantage of the deduction at that time, when they sell another parcel of land in the future, perhaps a larger portion, they would not be able to get the benefit of the deduction. Although that particular proposition was not perfect, the intent was good.

I am rather surprised to hear about all these tax breaks right now, Mr. Speaker. I am surprised because during the election campaign we heard that the Government wanted to do all things for all people. I am sure you will recall that, Mr. Speaker, being the non-partisan person that you are. Since the election we have seen the exact opposite from the Government. We have seen indirect taxes introduced. In the expenditure and program review document which I have in my hand the Government introduced new taxes. They are called "increased revenue generation". If that isn't newspeak for taxes, I don't know what it is. I find it very interesting that the Hon. Member would bring forth this kind of resolution at a time when we are seeing only increases in taxes from the Government.

I will read some of them to you, Mr. Speaker, because I am sure you would be very interested to know about this double-talk on the part of the Government.

For instance, under "cost recovery" we see that the Government's agricultural services sector will have an additional cost recovery of $32.3 million.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, this means that taxes for farmers will go up by a total of $32.3 million. I think the Hon. Member could also have suggested in his motion that the Cost Recovery Service, as proposed in the Expenditure and Program Review, not be implemented. I think this is extremely important if we want Canadian farmers to save money, because although the Government made the promises mentioned earlier, for instance to remove the tax on gas, which it did, in part, and so on, on the other hand, it has given and it has taken away, as I indicated in the House a few weeks ago when we had a debate on this subject.

Furthermore, we see that a number of expenditures earmarked by the previous Government for various farm programs have also been eliminated. This means that many benefits offered farmers by the previous Government have in fact disappeared, for instance, the Canagrex Corporation, which will shortly be disbanded by the new Government. This corporation which was to have been involved in farm product marketing, Mr. Speaker, would have been of benefit to many Canadian farmers. However, this Government has, once again, chosen to make Canadian farmers a present of cutbacks and tax increases.

[English]

Having said that, I want to return to the resolution, recognizing the shortcomings that it has. In my view it should also talk about those other hidden taxes which I mentioned a moment ago. We heard members of the New Democratic Party say that the capital gains tax should be removed for those who are re-investing the money in an agri-bond type of scheme to ensure that the money stays in farm-land. They say that in those particular instances we should forgo the capital gains tax for farmers.

I see a problem with that, Mr. Speaker. Many people are able to take funds from registered retirement savings plans and invest them however they like as long as the plan is registered. Under that particular scheme the farmer would not be able to do that. He would not have the same benefit that many other citizens have. In adopting this motion we should ensure that the forgoing of the capital gains tax should not necessarily be linked with the agri-bond issue. Of course, Mr. Speaker, there should be some encouragement for investing funds in agri-bonds, if and when the Government finally decides to put that particular proposal into action. I do not think it should be a condition that farmers must put their funds in agri-bonds in order to get the benefit of not paying the capital gains tax. There are other methods of doing that which we could debate in the House, but I do not think that should be a condition.

I also think that farmers who own larger farms should be entitled to the same feature rather than just those with farms worth $100,000 or less.

Again, let us relate this to registered retirement savings plans for a variety of people. Let us assume that someone invests $3,500 a year in the savings plan for 35 years of their working life. The money they will have will exceed $1 million, including interest. Why should we give benefits to farmers that only amount to $100,000 when others have far greater benefits with respect to their retirement?

Of course, it could be argued that funds from the sale of farm land could also be put into a registered retirement savings plan so that farmers could enjoy that same benefit later.

While that may be true, we must remember that, in the case of farmers, their retirement planning pretty well takes place only once, that is, when they take the funds from the farm to invest. Since they do this at a later stage in life than those who invest in RRSPs beginning at the age of 25 or 30, it is usually a different method.

In other words, I believe farmers should be able to benefit from this particular clause not only for the first $100,000 but for a larger amount. I am sure that others could respond by asking what one would do in the case of large corporate farming concerns such as Heinz. Should they be able to benefit in this way? Of course, the answer is no.

On the other hand, those farmers who jointly own a few hundred acres of land with their sons for a dairy or other operation should be assured that the funds are available all at once without capital gains in order to benefit the maximum number of people.

When discussing this Bill today, we should remember that this issue is really on the periphery of the whole question of agriculture. I am concerned that while we spend time discussing issues such as this, which are not the most important questions facing agriculture, we may be digressing from the real concern facing all farmers, which is the availability of long term financing and the lack of adequate revenues for our farmers.

Last weekend I read an interesting paper on farmers' equity that was prepared by one of the major banks. There is a certain school of thought that perhaps some farmers were the cause of their own demise as a result of spending too much or purchasing more equipment than they needed. Certainly there are studies which do not confirm that belief. As a matter of fact, farmers still have a fair amount of equity in their farm, but the problem is that they never know what interest rates they must deal with. Mortgages are renewed on a very frequent basis now rather than the long-term financing that was available at one time in this country.

Perhaps we should concentrate more on discussing long-term financing, which was also promised by the Government during the election campaign. While today's topic is an important issue, it is peripheral to the central issue of long-term financing and adequate revenue generation for our farmers. Those are the two most important issues that we should address.

Last weekend I had the opportunity to meet with members of our local Federation of Agriculture. They gave me a copy of a brief which they presented to eastern Ontario members of the Conservative caucus. Their brief outlines a variety of promises that the Conservative candidates made during the election. The farmers commented on these promises during my meeting with them. It was their opinion that the two central issues facing farming today, at least for the farmers of eastern Ontario, were those involving financing and revenue generation.

When I asked specifically if capital gains should be directly connected to the agri-bond issue in the way I described earlier, it was their view that it should not be and that farmers should be able to take their money out of farming when they retire, without having to put it back into an agri-bond in order to get the capital gains exemption we are discussing today.

I am in favour of this particular resolution while recognizing that it must be done in such a way as to ensure that the farmers rather than large corporations benefit from it. I also recognize that there are other issues in agriculture which we should be addressing as a priority rather than this issue.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks. First, many of my constituents will welcome this Bill that was introduced by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker). With regard to the previous speaker, I would point out that any reference to agricultural land in this Bill is land sold for continued agricultural use. That should be understood throughout. It is the policy of this Party and I am sure it is the import of the Bill we are speaking to today.

In the interest of some stability and because many people acted in good faith on the RRSP proposal, our Government decided to carry on with it, pending a report of the soon to be formed committee to study a number of aspects relating to farm financial matters. These matters include Section 31, capital gains and agri-bonds.

I was particularly interested in some remarks made by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) with respect to Saskatchewan. The farm capital gains problem is relatively more acute in Saskatchewan and it has been exacerbated there because our friends in the NDP had a land bank program in the Province of Saskatchewan which helped to drive up land prices drastically. In their lust for collectivization, or state ownership of land, they taxed Saskatchewan farmers and used their tax money in order to outbid them for land. To add insult to injury, they turned around and leased that land to their friends for rentals which were well below the fair market value. Perhaps it is the NDP who should do some homework when talking about this issue.

The first relief in regard to capital gains should go to the farming community by virtue of their unique position as price takers. The farmers' costs are rising rapidly while their returns are diminishing as a result of exposure to the world market. The resultant cost price squeeze has placed many farmers in serious financial difficulties.

Many older farmers would like to retire at this time but are caught in this classic Catch 22 situation where they cannot afford to carry on yet cannot afford to sell either. Certainly, the abolition of capital gains on farm lands for continued agricultural use will enable that older farmer to secure enough for his land to retire with some dignity yet to permit land transfer at a price that a young purchaser can expect to repay.

I have no hesitation in supporting the Bill put forward by the Hon. Member.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, before I make a few brief comments I would like to recognize the very capable and able way in which the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) brought forward this motion and presented it to this House with his explanation. I have known the Member for a number of years now and I know that he has a constant and genuine concern about all agricultural financing but particularly this area. He has great expertise that he can share with others in this House, and we will all gain from his input to this debate.

There is no question that the concerns raised by all Members who have participated in the debate today are real and genuine. There are serious problems in agriculture and serious concerns have been expressed in the House of Commons today. Solutions to all the problems of agriculture, obviously, are not to be found by adjusting the tax laws that apply to farmers. However, like other Members I welcome the proposal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to invite a parliamentary committee to study some of the important taxation issues affecting agriculture. The taxation of capital gains on farm land is one of these issues. In his November 8 economic and fiscal statement, the Minister also said he will be seeking the views of the committee on the complex issue of the taxation of part-time farmers and on the proposal which has been under discussion for some time for issuing agri-bonds as a way of reducing interest costs of investments in farming.

The House has before it a motion and there has been debate on it by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) as to why we should have to discuss this issue. But let me say to the Hon. Member that he cannot have it both ways. The Minister of Finance has already indicated in his November 8 statement, as was mentioned by a previous speaker, that we are stopping certain taxation measures on farm fuels. This results in a net return to agriculture of nearly $100 million. That is a significant effort taken in the first economic statement which this Government has made. A number of other significant things have happened. Through the economic statement, the Minister opened up the process. Comments were made during the election period, but even in the comments made here, regardless of how we approach it, we have been criticized severely for not having the level of consultation and co-operation on the one hand, and, on the other hand, we are being criticized here today for not acting post haste in coming forward with issues that have a significant impact on the entire agricultural community. In opening up this process and in bringing forward these issues into a special committee or a standing committee of the House, which is expected to bring back recommendations and to have considered this and other important agricultural financing issues, the Minister will be in a position prior to his next budget to do the kinds of things that are important to agriculture.

I think those are the two sides of the coin, Mr. Speaker. In balance, the Minister has attempted in short order to try to provide the opportunity for input and discussion that I think all Members of this House would like to encourage and support.

With that I would like to offer the support of the Minister of Finance and the Government for the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills. With the co-operation and understanding of other Members of the House, who I hope will be of like mind, we would like very much to see this motion referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it we have until 5.07 p.m. before the House adjourns, that is two minutes from now. I do not think that any Member of this House wants to delay the question put forward by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacher) who is simply reminding the Government of one of its many promises. The P.C. commitment to agriculture is, "to ensure financial stability for the agricultural community. We will abolish . . ." That is not "shall" and not "perhaps" but, "we will abolish the capital gains tax on the sale of farm property for continual agricultural purposes". The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills is simply nudging the Government and the Cabinet. He is reminding them that they made that commitment. I think each Member of the House supports the resolution which he put forward today in the manner in which he has always performed in this Chamber on behalf of his constituents.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Thacker) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

It being 5.07 p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5.07 p.m. the House adjourned.

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act, laid upon the Table on Friday, December 14, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC WORKS ACT
PUBLIC LANDS GRANTS ACT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Public Works) moved that Bill C-13, an Act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, after consultations with opposition House Leaders, I think there is a predisposition to have the matter referred to the Committee of the Whole and to pass all stages today.

Miss MacDonald: That is true.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, if you ask the House, I think you will find consent to deal with it. If Hon. Members want to speak on the Bill, surely that is satisfactory.

Mr. Keeper: Yes, we want to speak on the Bill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why don't we start again?

Mr. Speaker: No. We have already adopted the Bill. However, if that is the pleasure of the House, the record should show that by unanimous consent we will refer the matter to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Keeper: We have no objection to its going through today but we would like to speak to the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: I waited at that point to see if anyone would rise. I would be perfectly happy to revert if that is the wish of the House. I am in the hands of the House. Perhaps the Hon. Member might wish to make his speech on Clause 1 in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Keeper: Okay.

Mr. Speaker: The same privileges apply and the same right to speak applies. Therefore, by unanimous consent, is it the pleasure of the House that the Bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, I do now leave the chair.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-13, an Act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act.

On Clause 1—Other properties

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to put our views with regard to this legislation on the record. We do not really want to hold up the Bill or to debate it so long as to prevent its passage. However, there are a number of things which need to be said about the legislation.

First, I should like to deal in a very brief manner with the purpose of this piece of legislation. It asks for certain authorities for the Department of Public Works to undertake various kinds of actions with regard to land and property. It deals with the whole question of lease-purchase. Apparently the Government has been carrying on these practices for a number of years. Now its authority to undertake these practices is under question because of a ruling from the Chair with regard to the use of votes in the House. The legislation asks for the Minister of Public Works and the Department of Public Works to have various authorities to carry on real estate development in a manner in which they have already done.

We have no serious objection to the Government having this authority. In fact, in his report the Auditor General recommended that the authority of the Department be clarified. Our real concern is not so much with the exact wording of the legislation or the exact legislative authority of the Department. More specifically, it is with how the Government exercises its authority.

I should like to put on the record our concerns about how the Government has exercised the authority which Parliament has given it. We cannot allow this to pass without comment. I want to draw the attention of the Committee to the Auditor General's report because two of its chapters were devoted to the Department of Public Works.

The Auditor General is an officer of the House. He has been given the responsibility of ensuring that we have adequate information to make financial decisions in the Chamber. Obviously the making of financial decisions is the purpose of the Chamber itself. The Auditor General draws our attention to public works and says that the federal Government has been doing a horrendous job in looking after its real estate and the millions of dollars which it spends on property leases. The Auditor General simply condemns the way in which the Government has been handling its real estate. He says that it does not manage its $40 billion to $60 billion worth of property in a manner that in any way recognizes the value of that property, that the Government often overpays for property and that it often takes space which it does not need. Those are three very serious indictments of the Government's practice with regard to real estate management. It does not recognize the value of the property, often overpays for property and takes space that it does not need.

While the Department of Public Works need adequate legislative authority to carry on the business of providing accommodation for government purposes, it is crucial that this be done in a way that recognizes the concerns of ordinary Canadian citizens about economy and government and the fact that we must get fair value for our taxes. If this kind of practice were allowed to continue indefinitely, this House would have to cease to give authority to the Department of Public Works to do that which is necessary in order for government to carry on its day-to-day business, namely providing accommodation for government departments which provide services to Canadians.

We are dealing with a very serious matter. It has to do fundamentally with how the Government handles the taxpayers' dollar. The Auditor General's report contains two full chapters of numerous case studies outlining the way the Department of Public Works handles real estate. The Auditor General describes that as shameful. It would make a private property manager blush with shame.

I am outlining these concerns which the Auditor General has brought to our attention in the hope that the Government will respond to them. While we give them the legislative authority they need to carry on the day-to-day work of the Government, they must answer to us for the way that they use or abuse this authority. I hope they will do that today. I must say that those practices outlined by the Auditor General were carried out under a previous Government; therefore, this Government cannot be indicted for those practices. However, if these practices continue or if the Government does not take corrective measures, measures that can be seen to be effective, there will be good reason to indict this Government's handling of real estate.

The Auditor General said that the Department of Public Works often failed to follow Treasury Board guidelines and, in fact, government departments failed to follow directives of the Department of Public Works. This has come about because there is no effective mechanism in place whereby the Department can ensure compliance with its directives. This is one area in which the Department has a responsibility, and the Government and the Minister have the responsibility, to assure this House that this is being changed. In other words, an effective mechanism must be put in place to ensure that the directives of Treasury Board and of the Department are followed.

I must say in passing that it surprises me that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) could not find the time to be present in the House today. Perhaps later on his colleague will share with us why the Minister is not here at a time when legislation involving his Department is before the House.

The Auditor General was so concerned about the handling of real state that when he was asked by the press whether or not he would recommend the firing of the Deputy Minister of Public Works, obviously a serious matter, he responded by saying that it was not his job to tell the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) how to manage public affairs but that if a real estate manager in the private sector were to handle property in the way the Government's managers have handled it, he or she would be given the pink slip. We are facing a serious question here, Mr. Chairman. How does one hold civil servants accountable for the property for which they are given responsibility by this Parliament?

Obviously the previous Minister who was responsible for this property when it was so mismanaged is no longer in office. In effect, he has been held accountable by the people. The people have relieved him of his responsibilities. However, what happens when the properties for which a senior civil servant is responsible are mismanaged in a blatant way? Does the Government have the responsibility to judge and to say that the management of that property is incompetent and the person who has been managing the property should be removed from his or her duties? Does the Government then bring in someone who can handle that property responsibly? If the Government does not share that view, does it have an alternative view that would assure us that property will not continue to be mismanaged but will be handled in a responsible way in the future? These are serious matters which I hope the Government will address in debate today.

The Auditor General has brought to our attention a number of cases involving the management of these real estate problems. For example, the Department of Public Works rented a 54,000 square metre building in 1982 at a cost of $154 million over a 10-year period without getting Treasury Board approval. Can you imagine making an expenditure of $154 million over a 10-year period, Mr. Chairman, without receiving Treasury Board approval?

Mr. Lewis: Sure, they got it from a Grit.

Mr. Keeper: My colleague across the way, a Member of the Conservative Government, made mention of Grits. I assume he would mean that it was the Liberals that did this.

Mr. Lewis: Certainly.

Mr. Keeper: Certainly it was the Liberals but the Liberals are no longer in office. The Conservatives are in office and we need to hear from the new Government about its specific, credible plans to assure us that this will never happen again. What will the Government do to assure us that $154 million will never again be spent by the Department of Public Works without Treasury Board approval? Will a procedure be put in place to correct that?

The Auditor General also found some $63,122,000 in excess payments involving some 12 leases. The Auditor General has been documenting the overpayments made by the Department of Public Works. Now, $63 million is a lot of money, Mr. Chairman. At this time of very high unemployment, that kind of money could be used to supplement the Canada Works Program, for example, which at this time is in bad need of additional appropriations. I would like to know from the Government how it will assure us that there will be no more excess payments. What new procedures will be put in place to assure us that the Government will pay fair value for property that it leases but that it will not overpay? We should have a response from the Government on that matter.

The Auditor General recommended that the Government take a close look at lease-purchase agreements. That is central to the legislation which is before the House today. The legislation clarifies and confirms the authority which the Department has in entering into lease-purchase arrangements. By the lease-purchase agreements, the Government agrees to rent a building for a period of time, and at the end of the rental period the Government purchases the building for a fixed amount. As a consequence, very large sums of money are tied up. It is not a trivial matter; in fact, the Auditor General has identified $1,919,600,000. Almost $2 billion is tied up in lease-purchase arrangements. It is a very heavy responsibility for the Government. The Government must examine how it handles lease-purchase arrangements.

The Auditor General has indicated that these agreements may cost the Crown more than if the Government borrowed the money and built the buildings. In other words, lease-purchase arrangements may cost the public purse more than if the Government built the buildings. For example, the Auditor General studied four lease-purchase agreements which totalled $762.9 million. The Auditor General found that if the Government had borrowed money and built the buildings at the same price as the developer, the cost would have been $85.8 million less over 35 years. In other words, it would have cost the taxpayers $85.8 million less if the Government had built the buildings rather than going the route of the lease-purchase arrangement.

It is incumbent upon the new Minister of Public Works and his Department to assure us that further consideration will be given to the whole question of lease-purchase agreements, as well as to assure us that lease-purchase arrangements will be handled in such a way that they will not cost taxpayers additional money. Why should we lease-purchase if it is better for the Government to borrow the money and build the buildings? That question must be examined.

The Auditor General also raised a question about the way the Government handles real estate and the way it utilizes that space. Is the space needed? Is it used? In using the figures of the Government, the Auditor General found that over the past five years the Government has had about 700,000 square metres of unoccupied space, at a cost of approximately $25 million per year. In these times when the public dollar is scarce—as the Government itself has said—it is important that the Government tell us now what policies and procedures it is going to put in place which will assure us that existing government space will be used and that it will not acquire space which will simply sit empty. What kind of system will the Government put in place to assure us of that?

There is one other area covered by the Auditor General's report which I feel is crucial and should be dealt with today by the Government. The Auditor General found that the federal Department of Public Works withheld information from the federal Cabinet when it leased three downtown Ottawa office buildings two years ago from Campeau Corporation for a total of $400 million. Because this essential information was not provided to Cabinet, it gave up an opportunity to obtain a building worth $46.5 million for $15 million. It is bad enough, Mr. Chairman, when Governments do not share information with Parliament, but when civil servants fail to provide information to Cabinet, the system becomes totally unworkable. So I would like to hear some assurances that the Government is going to make sure it receives all information before it makes decisions with regard to public works.

To sum up briefly, Mr. Chairman, the authority which is being asked for today appears to us to be legitimate. The problem has been the abuse of that authority in the past. We would like to know how this Government is going to assure Parliament that this abuse will stop and that the public dollar will be used wisely and with due prudence. I would like to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary—and I wonder why the Minister is not here—as to just what procedures are going to be put in place in order to make sure that the taxpayers' money is not wasted. I would like to know specifically how the Government is going to hold its civil servants accountable in order to ensure that the job which needs to be done is done.

Mr. Stewart: First of all, Mr. Chairman, let me say that I was going to speak on the Bill previously. However, when it was referred to Committee of the Whole I did not feel there was any need to waste the time of the House as we pretty well have agreement.

I believe the Hon. Member has legitimate concerns which are shared by Hon. Members on all sides of the House. I would like to inform him, first, that the Minister is unavoidably out of the House today. He has a press conference and a meeting and consultation in Quebec City, and he just could not be in two places at once. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that he is really addressing the sins of the past. I want to assure him that these sins will not be repeated. This is not the mandate we were given by the people of Canada. We have a good and experienced Minister in this portfolio who really welcomes the opportunity to work in close consultation with the Auditor General.

With respect to lease-purchases, I will say that, of course, the Auditor General has made his views well known and I do not disagree with him. However, we must acknowledge that where Crown finance is not possible or preferable, lease-purchasing does clearly result in cost saving or cost avoidance to the Government, and ultimately to the taxpayers of this country. I have with me, Mr. Chairman, lease-purchase agreements for the Esplanade Laurier and C. D. Howe buildings which total some $24,668,890. The total rent in 1983-84 for comparable space in Ottawa would have amounted to $45,119,760. In this case the Government has an actual saving of $20,450,870.

These purchases are not always wrong. There are some advantages, of course, in the fact that there is fixed rental for 35 years and it will only vary up or down every five years. The operating and management fees are also fixed. The Crown will eventually own the building and has control over the quality of the building, ensuring that the performance specifications are met.

For the information of the Hon. Member, Mr. Chairman, an analysis is made in each case to compare lease-purchase to leasing and Crown financed construction. These analyses are given to Treasury Board. Let me assure the Hon. Member that the Minister will work very closely with Treasury Board in order to make sure the effective changes the Hon. Member is so concerned about—as we all are—will be put in place and that things which were not done properly in the past will be done in the future to everyone's satisfaction. I believe I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that all lease-purchase projects will be done in the most effective manner through Treasury Board and the Minister.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Chairman, I asked the House Leader if I could have an opportunity to speak on this Bill for a couple of minutes because I spent two years preventing Bill C-91, this Bill's predecessor, from going into effect. I wanted to get on the record that the reason for that is that in the original Bill, under Clause 1(4) it was not mentioned that no services or work may be performed under Subclause (3) on properties not belonging to Canada without consent of the owner. I wanted to emphasize what this Government is doing to protect the people of this country. The Bill must protect people from having their property worked on without their permission. This is an important change.

I would also like to take this opportunity to make a recommendation to the Government. It arises out of the Auditor General's report referred to by the Hon. Member from the NDP concerning lease-purchase arrangements. I would like the Government to consider wherever possible, in the case of a lease-purchase, that government financing be used. It costs the Government 2 per cent less on average to borrow money than it does the private sector. If the Government is on the hook for a 35-year lease-purchase, then use government financing. The Auditor General points this out very clearly in his report. I notice the gentleman from Public Works is shaking his head. I am sure he will be shaking his head even more as we go through the Public Accounts with him. However, I would like that recommendation reviewed so that if there is a saving it can be passed on to the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, recently I took the time to go through one of the towers of the PetroCan Building in Calgary. I found a most up-to-date mail system with little trains which stop at every office and take the mail to a central location. It would do justice to the very best that Canada Post has ever tried to do. I was also impressed with the gymnasium. It would be a tremendous asset to any YMCA in the country. However, the thing that amazed me most was that office after office after office was completely empty.

My question to the Parliamentary Secretary is: Did the Department of Public Works have any say in the construction of this building? Were they notified of it? Did they have any input into it? Was there any check made to see how many tenants could be secured? In other words, in brief, does Public Works share any responsibility for the two towers built by PetroCan in Calgary?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is no. I would also say to the Hon. Member for Ontario that the difference in financing costs would be only eight-tenths of 1 per cent.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I am getting to my feet at this time simply to confirm that, obviously, we are quite amenable to this Bill going through all stages today. The Bill before us is intended to make some useful changes to the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act which the Parliamentary Secretary has described. However, in saying this I am not associating myself with his rather inflammatory introductory sentences. I do want to say the Bill itself is in the same form, as I understand it, as a Bill introduced by a previous Liberal Government. Again, I think it is useful to have on record that the best things the new Conservative Government could find to bring before the House in the crucial early days of its mandate were measures prepared by the previous Liberal Government.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary can give us specific examples of the type of authority being sought under Clause 1 concerning the right of the Minister to perform work on properties that do not belong to Canada, and so on. I would like specific examples of where this might be required.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the Saint John seawall is a specific example. The Government built the seawall to shore up provincial lands so that housing could be built.

Mr. Nickerson: The Parliamentary Secretary said this had already taken place. Presumably there was no authority for that to be done. If there were, there would be no need for this amendment to be brought before the House today. So under what authority was that seawall constructed?

Mr. Stewart: The authority of the Ministry.

Mr. Nickerson: Under what legislative authority?

Mr. Stewart: To my knowledge there is none and that is what we are talking about today.

Mr. Nickerson: No it would appear, Mr. Chairman, that the previous Government was illegally spending public funds contrary to the law of the day for these projects, rather than bringing the previous Bill before the House of Commons and getting it passed. No wonder, Sir, that the Auditor General finds such fault with the activities of the previous Ministers of Public Works.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary spoke briefly about lease-purchases. I was not entirely satisfied with his response; I had a number of other areas of concern when I spoke and he did not respond to any of those either. So I want to ask a few questions.

Because of the horrendous way that public property has been managed by the Department of Public Works, and given the Auditor General's statement that if a private sector property manager were to behave in this way he would be given the pink slip, what I would like to know from the Parliamentary Secretary is whether the Government is considering giving the pink slip to the Deputy Minister of Public Works on the basis of incompetence? If not, then how is he going to assure this House that this kind of waste of public funds will not occur in the future?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, that will be in the hands of the Minister and, thus far, he has confidence in the Deputy Minister.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, it is too bad that the Minister is not here to answer these questions. It seems to me that if the Minister or the Prime Minister continues to employ in a responsible position a Deputy Minister who has clearly demonstrated incompetence, then they are taking on the responsibility for that kind of behaviour. Until now, the Government can legitimately say that these are things of the past and they will not be repeated. Is the Government saying that this will not happen again but it is all right to continue employing the person responsible for these actions? If you are not going to relieve him of his duties, what are you doing to assure yourselves that this kind of waste of public dollars will not happen again?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, as I said before, we do have a competent Minister. I assure you that the Minister will take all steps necessary to ensure that this does not happen again. Whether the concerns are with regard to the Auditor General's report, Treasury Board or whatever, I can assure you that they will not be repeated.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary really has not answered the question. He has clearly said that they continue to have confidence in the Deputy Minister and that they are going to keep him on in spite of the record of the Department. Therefore, they must have some other measures they will take to assure us that this kind of waste of public funds will not continue. He has not enunciated those measures here. These are serious matters involving millions of dollars. The Minister is not here to enunciate them. I assume the Parliamentary Secretary is not telling us because he does not know himself and must simply rely upon his own confidence that the Minister will do things that are necessary.

It is really not adequate for the Parliamentary Secretary to say in the House that they will take all measures that are necessary. We need to have those measures spelled out. The Government must tell us how the Department will avoid acquiring space it does not need in the future which costs something like $25 million a year. Specifically, how is it going to avoid overpayments for property in the future? How is it going to ensure us that directives of the Department of Public Works and the Treasury Board will be followed? Give us the procedures and policies. Most importantly, how is it going to assure itself that Treasury Board and the Cabinet receive the information necessary to make decisions with regard to real estate?

Mr. Chairman, I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to give us information on how the Government will ensure that this waste of public money does not continue in the future. It is not enough to simply say that it will take all measures possible or necessary.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the Hon. Member wants. The Minister is quite aware of all the properties in question and all the lease-purchases. He is on top of that. He is checking with the Deputy Minister. He is listening to the Auditor General and he is going to do everything possible to ensure that the things which happened in the past which concern the Hon. Member will not happen again. What more can I say? He is the Minister of the Department and he has a handle on it, unlike the previous Government.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, it is not adequate for the Parliamentary Secretary simply to assure the House that the Minister has a handle on it. Those are nice, vague words. They have no specific content. It is not good enough for the Minister to send a Parliamentary Secretary to the House who cannot give us information on how the Department is going to avoid waste in the future when the waste in the past is already accurately documented.

I will deal with one specific item on that list, Mr. Chairman. The Department of Public Works has not been following Treasury Board guidelines. The Auditor General points out that there is no effective mechanism in place to ensure that the Department will follow Treasury Board guidelines. Could the Parliamentary Secretary deal with that one specific item and tell us what mechanism will be put in place to assure the House that the Department will follow Treasury Board guidelines and that other Departments will follow the guidelines as set out by the Department of Public Works?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I will answer that very happily. The policies and procedures are in place right now as far as the Ministry and the Treasury Board are concerned, and they will be followed. It is a very simple thing. You don't rent, you don't do anything that you don't have to do, and you utilize the things that are there. As I said, the policies are in place with Treasury Board and they will be followed. I am sure the Hon. Member will be very happy to see what happens with Public Works now as compared to the former Government.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I find these responses totally inadequate. We are talking about the loss of $25 million a year through the Government acquiring space that it does not need. All the Parliamentary Secretary can do in the absence of the Minister is stand up and say that it will not happen again. That is not good enough. The Auditor General has pointed out that there is no mechanism in place to assure that the Department of Public Works will follow Treasury Board guidelines. Let us put a mechanism in place. Describe it specifically.

This is simply not good enough Mr. Chairman. All we are getting from the Parliamentary Secretary is his bland assurances that this will never happen again. That suggests that in fact this will happen again and we will have another Auditor General's report in the future which will identify more waste of public dollars unless the Government wakes up and does something specific to change the items that have been documented by the Auditor General.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the Auditor General's report has been duly noted and digested by the Minister. The policies and procedures, in conjunction with the Auditor General's report, are about to be put in place. It just came out. Unfortunately the Minister is not here but he will tell you the same thing. he is going to do everything possible to put the Auditor General's report in place and ensure that these things do not happen again. What more can I say? Shall I stand on the desk three times and sing it?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I am pursuing this matter because it is important. I will be a little nicer to the Parliamentary Secretary. If the Parliamentary Secretary cannot tell the House today specifically how the Department and the Government are going to avoid this kind of waste in the future, when will they tell the House? When will they outline in specific terms how they will avoid this kind of waste of public funds in the future? Right now they can sit there comfortably and point out that these wastages took place under a previous Government. That is true. However, they cannot do that in the future. We need specific action from the Government now which outlines new mechanisms that will assure that this will not happen again.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, there is nothing new about a Government accepting things that were wrong and did not work. We are not going to accept the things that are wrong and do not work. We are putting in place the recommendations of the Auditor General. Treasury Board is on to it. Again, what more can I say?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to proceed on the same item in the same direction. I do know that this report was written a considerable time ago and that the Department of Public Works knew that these particular reports were coming out from the Auditor General. In the report the Auditor General says that the Government's estimates of unoccupied space are notoriously unreliable. Would the Parliamentary Secretary give an indication whether the Department of Public Works now knows whether the 6.3 million square feet of unoccupied space which the Government had is the minimum, or is there actually much more than that unoccupied? Has the Public Works Department done that kind of survey or has it not made any effort to answer that particular charge by the Auditor General?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, in response to the Hon. Member, the actual measurement of space is very difficult to come up with right at the present moment. However, the Minister is actually involved in doing that, and when he returns he will be introducing some new mechanisms into the guidelines, specifically on rental properties and lease-purchases. I am not able at the moment to tell the Hon. Member exactly what the Minister will be introducing. It will be in conjunction with the things we have already mentioned.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, some of the suggestions by the Auditor General are based directly on what appeared to be a leasing of property which might be needed ten years hence. I am referring particularly to Vancouver site 56. There does not seem to be anything in Treasury Board regulations to stop this kind of thing. Will this Government attempt to put something into Treasury Board regulations which will limit the kind of forward planning which results in the leasing of more than six million unused square feet?

Mr. Stewart: I will certainly take the Hon. Member's suggestion as well as the concerns of his seatmate to the Minister, Mr. Chairman. We welcome suggestions from the Opposition at all times. We are only interested in improving the situation. The Minister is going through that whole exercise at present.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Chairman, I would like, if I could, to pursue a question raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre. It does seem to me that we should at least have some indication of the direction in which the Department is considering moving in order to deal with some of the problems from the past.

Are we talking about directives being put in the form of changes to regulations, or are we talking about some legislative changes that may be possible? We are dealing with a set of legislative changes this morning that help to clarify a number of areas that have been murky in the past. It may well be that there needs to be similar legislative changes to deal with some of the concerns that my colleague raised. Is this something the Minister is considering or are we talking about changes in regulations within the internal directives of the Ministry itself?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. What is happening is that we are getting a long, long way from all-Party agreement on some purely housekeeping measures that we can get rid of before the Minister arrives and develops fully the specific areas he wishes to address. These measures will be new, and I am sure when Hon. Members, all three in the New Democratic Party, see what these specifics are, they will be more than pleased. What we are dealing with now is just a bit of housekeeping. If we can get on with that, Hon. Members will be pleasantly surprised when the Minister returns with his specific suggestions.

Mr. Lewis: I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary, Mr. Chairman. I would like to preface it by saying that in the past, as Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee and in conjunction with my colleague from Prince Albert, we had an opportunity to look into some of the Department of Public Works problems. The biggest problem was not that the regulations were not there; the problem was one of enforcement and a will to enforce the regulations.

Would this not be the case with the Minister of Public Works, that it would be a matter of enforcing regulations already there rather than, as my colleague from Prince Albert will testify to his seatmate, just letting these regulations continue to go on unenforced?

Mr. Stewart: I would like to thank my hon. colleague for clarifying the matter and saying the things that should have been said at the beginning, Mr. Chairman. I could not agree with him more. I would like to say that the Minister, while he is not in the House today, has been travelling extensively and visiting all the major projects right across Canada with a view to doing exactly the things that have been mentioned here today. The Minister wants to understand the situation fully. We have inherited a very sticky wicket. We wants to be fully informed of all the projects, the rental properties, the lease properties, et cetera, so he will be entirely on top of it all and can return to make good recommendations to the House.

Mr. Hovdebo: I want to thank the Member from Simcoe North for his interjection, Mr. Chairman but I want to speak for a moment on that point. I agree entirely with the point of view he has taken. It appears that in all cases regulations are there, but there is no limitation on a lot of them. For instance, one can get space, and while we are going to need it five years down the road—I am speaking of a particular area—maybe to curtail this kind of overexpenditure on space there should be some limiting authority as far as the Department is concerned. Perhaps every lease should have a sunset clause which would stipulate that if space is not used within a certain length of time, it could be returned to the lessor, in which case this extra expenditure would not have to be made. Would the Parliamentary Secretary respond to that approach?

Mr. Stewart: Of course, that is something that should be looked at, Mr. Chairman, but the Hon. Member has to remember what has happened with land costs in recent years. I do not think there is anything inherently the matter with the federal Government land-banking certain land which it knows will be required. In other words, long-range planning. It must though be prudent and there must be an escape hatch so that land can be returned if it is not used within the time for which it was acquired.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue a completely different line of questioning, more specifically on the legislation itself.

This legislation was before this House as Bill C-91 in the last Parliament. It was introduced by the Liberal Government of the day. When this legislation was being debated at second reading, the Conservative Party was in opposition. While the Parliamentary Secretary today describes the legislation as a housekeeping measure, at that time Members of the Conservative Party described it in a completely different fashion. For example, the Conservatives described it as a dangerous piece of legislation giving too much power to the monstrous bureaucracy in the Department of Public Works. They said that the Bill goes beyond all realms of possibility, that it goes beyond the wildest dreams of the Socialist International. Let me emphasize, "beyond the wildest dreams of the Socialist International", Mr. Chairman. The Conservatives in opposition said this Bill was taking away people's rights. They did not describe it as housekeeping. They described it as taking away people's rights and property rights. This legislation takes away property rights; that does not sound like housekeeping.

They went on to say about the Liberal Government of the day that every piece of legislation had a nasty, rotten thread running through it. That might be described as housekeeping in a way, but it sounds different to me. A Conservative Member who spoke at that time said that it was a socialist thread to put all responsibility into the hands of the bureaucracy. Then the Member went on to say: "I pray to the Almighty that there will be an election soon and that we rid the country of that rotten mess which is destroying it".

We have had the election and we have had a change of government. Now what happens? The Conservatives are no longer in opposition. They are in government and a piece of legislation which goes beyond the wildest dreams of the Socialist International becomes mere housekeeping.

Would the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House how this piece of legislation has so transformed itself? If he cannot do so, why is it that the Conservatives said one thing in opposition and another in government?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the biggest reason is that the Bill has been changed and improved. In the next instance this went to Justice with the input of all Parties, including the NDP. It was agreed upon. That is the explanation.

Mr. Keeper: I would not want to be unfair to the Government. Therefore I acknowledge that there is at least one significant improvement in the legislation wherein the Government is seeking authority to make improvements in properties it does not own. The new legislation now requires that the Government get the consent of the property owner. That is good. It is a progressive amendment to the legislation. That change, while significant, has not transformed the legislation to the extent that a "socialist dream" has somehow simply become housekeeping. I am still puzzled as to why the Conservatives said one thing in opposition and something totally different in government.

Mr. Stewart: The difference is that the Bill in its previous form was introduced by a socialist Government with socialist friends. We now have a Conservative Government with a new Bill. That is the difference.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I cannot allow that to pass. The Conservatives in opposition described the legislation in words which simply amounted to saying that it was a socialist plot. Now they are in office it becomes housekeeping. Clearly they do not know what the word "socialist" means at all.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Chairman, as a new Member of the House I must say that this is a fascinating debate. I was struck by a number of the comments made when the last Bill was before the House. Frankly, I had not realized how this Bill represented a remarkable example of turning the clock back and trying to forget about the past. I am particularly struck by some of the comments about the specifics of Section 3 of the previous Act. If I read the present Bill before us correctly, there has not been significant change. The previous Bill was described by a representative of the Conservative Party who said: "What a colossal fraud this Bill hopes to perpetrate on the people of Canada". That Member continued by saying: "The Government is now seeking authority to sell or lease any property whether or not the Government owns it, whether or not it is required for public purposes". Some of the rhetoric was remarkable, such as: "What a horror scenario we have in front of us".

Would the Parliamentary Secretary deal specifically with that section of the Act and tell me, as a horror-stricken new Member of the House seeking to understand, why this represented a colossal fraud in the past and why it does not represent a colossal fraud in the present?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, if the Hon. Member takes a look at the two Acts in question, he will see that the section has been changed significantly. That makes a great difference to the "colossal fraud" to which he referred. I will not bother the House by going through the whole section, but it has been substantially changed. The Hon. Member can look it up.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, thank you for the chance to speak to the Parliamentary Secretary about some of the abuses of public funds which were clearly evident in the Department of Public Works. I recognize, as does the Parliamentary Secretary, that those were the works of the previous Government. However, I want to see whether we can have some assurances that the same abuses will not take place under the present Government.

Perhaps I could begin by asking a specific question which relates both to purchases and leases of property by DPW. The Parliamentary Secretary will be aware that half-empty or partially occupied buildings were leased at great public expense in the riding of the Hon. Paul Cosgrove and I think in the riding of the Hon. Roméo LeBlanc, both Members of the previous Cabinet. There was a great deal of intuition on the part of people that those leases were in fact much more related to the political fortunes of those Ministers and their doing favours for friends than to real need. Could the Parliamentary Secretary confirm whether it is the Department's belief or his belief now that that was in fact the case?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I would not want to point a finger at any individual in the House and say that something like that was done as a matter of intent. Before the Hon. Member came into the House, I addressed specifically the fact that the Minister would be bringing forward specific recommendations to the House to ensure that things such as the Hon. Member described do not happen again. I share his concern.

Mr. Cassidy: Could the Parliamentary Secretary assure the House that there will not be spending of public resources in the way that happened under the Liberals in order to put office buildings, leases or such things into ridings of Members of the present or future Conservative Cabinets? Could he assure us that we will not see the kind of patronage abuse in the future that we saw in the past when the Liberals were in power?

Mr. Stewart: I am sure the Right Hon. Prime Minister will be watching with interest any such thing. We all know how many people came back on this this of the House. It was because of things like those the Hon. Member described that we are here. I am also very sure that the Minister will be keeping a very close watch on the things he described.

Mr. Cassidy: With respect, the Parliamentary Secretary agrees that he deplores such things happening, but he shies short of actually promising that they will not happen under the new Government after a certain breathing period or honeymoon has taken place. Could I have a categorical assurance that the kind of thing which took place under the Liberals will not take place under the new Government over the next four years?

Mr. Stewart: I cannot put words in the mouth of the Minister, unfortunately, but I can assure the Hon. Member that his concerns will be brought to the attention of the Minister. As far as I am concerned, I am sure he will make certain that what the Hon. Member is speaking about does not happen.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, it is not just my concern. I am speaking on behalf of millions of Canadians who felt there were a lot of abuses. I am beginning to wonder whether what they are seeing now with a new Government is a Government just as prepared to break its word, to break promises, to forget how it came to office and, I fear, just as prone to take on the practices of the old Government.

Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary can comment with respect to the favouritism shown to certain developers. I think of the deal which was reported by the Auditor General with respect to Place de Ville, the Journal Towers, and the Centennial Towers in downtown Ottawa. As the Parliamentary Secretary knows, some $40 million to $50 million of excess costs were incurred by DPW because of the totally amateurish way in which it negotiated that particular deal. One could say either that the officials were totally amateur or that the reason the deal was entered into may have had something to do with the fact that Bob Campeau has been a well-known friend of the former Government. Possibly it was a consequence of that that the Government of the day was prepared to give such a sweet deal to Mr. Campeau and to put such a lot of excess profit into his pocket.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary assure the House that the new Government will not act in that same generous fashion but will avoid acting in such a generous fashion if developers with links to the Conservative Party come along and want to do business with the new Government?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I think almost categorically I can say that we will do everything in our power to see that such things do not happen again. The very fact that the Hon. Member brings them before the House and the Canadian people—and it is a recognized fact that this sort of thing did go on with the previous Government—would make us idiots if we did not stop the practice, in my view. I might just add that this side of the House fought long and hard during the constitutional debate for the inclusion of property rights in the Canadian Constitution, something his Party did not. This would augur well.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, the last comment has flown right over my head. How that excuses the Department of Public Works for its mismanagement of public funds is absolutely beyond me.

The Parliamentary Secretary said that the new Government would be idiots if it did not put an end to those kinds of sweet deals with developers that happen to be of the same political stripe as the Government. I did not hear him specifically say that the new Government will avoid those kinds of deals over the next three or four years; in other words, during its term in office. I am not sure whether that is significant or not, but I think it should be reported on the record.

I would now like to comment on a specific opportunity by which the new Government could perhaps save money. It has said again and again that it wants to reduce the deficit. I am puzzled over the decision made by the previous Government to play musical chairs with major Departments moving around Ottawa over the course of the coming very few months. As the Parliamentary Secretary knows, the new Government inherited a plan which would have Treasury Board, the Comptroller General's Office and the Department of Finance, which I believe are in two or three different locations, move into L'Esplanade Laurier buildings at Bank and Laurier in downtown Ottawa. The cost of that move is in the order of $23 million and, I think, rising. The amount reported one or two years ago is probably below what it will actually cost. In addition, the move has the effect of requiring that both the Public Service Commission and the National Capital Region office of Public Works move to Les Terrasses de la Chaudière in Hull.

The interesting question is this. In the first place, does it make sense for the National Capital Region of DPW, which provides services throughout the region, to move across the river or, likewise, the Public Service Commission? The second question is: Why do we have to play musical chairs not once, but twice? I understand that the Department of Finance is getting turfed out of Place Bell Canada. Presumably this is because Bell Canada is continuing with its policy of removing its head office from Montreal, which I am afraid has gone on for much too long. At any rate, the landlords have said they want the space, it is their right to have it and the Department of Finance will move.

Is it because of the departmental pecking order that Finance gets to move to Bank and Laurier and that DPW and the Public Service Commission get shifted to Hull? Is that what is happening? If you are exercising due regard for economy and efficiency, surely it would make sense for the Department of Finance, Treasury Board and the Comptroller General to move from their current quarters directly to Les Terrasses de la Chaudière. Instead of having to spend $23 million to relocate to L'Esplanade Laurier and having to spend another $20 million or so to move the Public Service Commission and DPW to Hull, we could spend that $20 million once rather than twice.

Since I speak as an Ottawa area Member, there are a lot of other things that could be done with that $20 million rather than have it mis-spent or wasted on the musical chairs game now going on. Will the Parliamentary Secretary comment on that item?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is correct about the Bell Canada building. It is a case of the lease running out. L'Esplanade Laurier is the only place large enough to hold the two Departments. In order to give an in depth answer, which I shall do, I will now take the question as notice and get an answer from the Minister.

Mr. Cassidy: I appreciate that assurance. I would like an assurance from the Parliamentary Secretary that we can have an answer in the House or in writing before the end of this week. The Auditor General's report indicates that the move is to be made at almost any time.

Given the fact that there has been empty space in some of the buildings in Hull for as long as four or six years, and given the size of those buildings, which we can all see by looking out of our windows, I am a bit surprised there is not adequate space there to accommodate those three Departments. If the space is not totally contiguous but is separated by a floor or two, I am not sure whether that is a serious enough handicap to require us to spend $20 million extra in order to ensure that a few public servants do not have to go up or down an extra flight of stairs when going to see one of their opposite members in one of those related Departments. I would appreciate a comment on that. If we could have a reply this week, perhaps the Department can indicate more specifically why all that extra money is being spent when one move could take place rather than two.

Mr. Stewart: As I said before, Mr. Chairman, I will get the answer for the Hon. Member as quickly as possible.

Mr. Cassidy: One final point, Mr. Chairman, recognizing that I am perhaps treading a bit on the goodwill of the House.

An Hon. Member: Not at all.

Mr. Cassidy: My friend says not at all, so I am encouraged. The phrase "revenue dependency", as the Parliament Secretary knows, talks about a theory by which Departments should be paying either market cost or full cost price for facilities they get from the Department of Public Works. I recognize this relates to the previous Government, but can the Parliamentary Secretary explain why it has taken such a damnable amount of time for the theory, which most people recognize will lead to more prudent use of space by client departments, to be put in place? I understand it has not been translated into operating practice. If they cannot get all the bugs out, why not get it 90 per cent corrected and at least make the charges related to cost rather than carrying on in the present manner?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is quite correct. It has been under study and has taken a long time. It will be operable in 1985-86.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, the Department is reported to have called for tenders on only 7 per cent of the space requirements. Despite specific rulings from Treasury Board in terms of policy, it managed to find exceptions for 93 per cent. What is the goal of the new Government in terms of its apportioning of the acquisitions of space which will be tendered under the new Government? What will the percentage be?

• (1220)

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, as far as I can understand, just as high as possible.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could put some numbers on it. This matter returns to the Bill itself. The powers of the Department are being broadened. The Department is being given more flexibility to use some of the techniques which have been used by the private sector, like lease-backs, lease-forwards and those kinds of things. Under those circumstances, this Bill gives more capacity to the Department of Public Works to enter into sweet deals and deals which would otherwise be impenetrable by or incomprehensible to the House and the Auditor General. That is one of the reasons why this may have been criticized in the previous Parliament. However, I was not here then.

Only 7 per cent of the leases worked out by the Department previously had been worked out on the basis of tenders. What percentage of tenders, rather than exceptions to the present rules, does the new Government aim to achieve?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the figure of 7 per cent is correct and it was 6 per cent before that, I believe. The aim of the present Government is to get as many as possible under tender. Obviously I cannot give the Hon. Member specific numbers at this point, but it will be as many as possible.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary knows that the Auditor General identified a number of ways in which public dollars have been wasted by the Department of Public Works. For example, the Auditor General found $63 million in excess payments with regard to 12 leases. He also found that, over the period of the past five years, the Department had 700,000 square metres of unoccupied space at a cost of $25 million a year. In addition, through four lease-purchase agreements the Department paid a price for property which cost the Government $85.8 million more over a period of 35 years than it would have cost if it had developed the property itself.

There is some one item. The Auditor General said that the Department of Public Works withheld information from the federal Cabinet which resulted in a further loss of funds. Earlier today the Parliamentary Secretary said that the Minister had complete confidence in the Deputy Minister of Public Works. With these kinds of losses of public funds, I am wondering if the Parliamentary Secretary could explain to the House the Government's complete confidence in the Deputy Minister of Public Works. How can the Government have complete confidence in a Deputy who has been in charge of a Department that has lost this many public dollars?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member has mentioned all of these points previously. I think I have attempted to answer him as well as I can. Let me tell the Hon. Member that all of these things happened under the former Government. The Deputy Minister takes his instructions from the Minister. He is now dealing with a different Minister.

As I explained to the Hon. Member, guidelines will be presented in the House by the Minister after he has done a complete inspection of all of the things mentioned by the Hon. Member, an inspection which he is doing personally right now. Surely the Hon. Member wants the Minister to have absolute knowledge so he can return to make the changes to which the Hon. Member refers. That is what he is doing.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the Minister will be returning with specific recommendations. We will await those recommendations.

In the absence of the Minister, I would like to know from the Parliamentary Secretary what a senior public servant must do in order to lose the confidence of the Government. Obviously, these actions took place under the previous Government but it is the present Government that is expressing its confidence in the Deputy Minister of Public Works.

How many dollars of public funds must a Deputy Minister in charge of a Department waste before he is seen to be incompetent by this Government which is in office today? How can this Government put its confidence in a senior civil servant who wastes so much public money? I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to tell me how this Government can describe a senior civil servant as competent when, in his term as a senior civil servant, he has overseen the waste of this many public dollars.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Hon. Member what waste has occurred since this Government has taken office. That is the whole point. The Minister is the man who is responsible. He will stand in his place and will be answerable for what happens in the Department of Public Works, but not for what happened under the previous administration to which the Hon. Member is trying to tie this one. I am sorry. The Minister will make the decisions and I am sure that the Deputy Minister will follow the instructions given by the Minister to everyone's satisfaction.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, it is hard for us to have confidence in this Government when, in the first instance, the Minister of Public Works cannot find the time to be present in the House to deal with his own legislation. How can we have confidence in a Government which acts in this way?

The Parliamentary Secretary has said that all of these things happened in the past and they are not going to happen in the future. It was in this Parliament that the Auditor General reported on what has been going on in the Department of Public Works. Even though millions of dollars have been wasted by that Department, it is the present Government that is expressing its confidence in the senior civil servant who is responsible for that Department. That is a decision made by the Parliamentary Secretary's Government, not by the previous Government. The previous Government was not faced with the report of the Auditor General indicating that the Government wasted money because the Department of Public Works did not provide adequate information to the Treasury Board. It is this Government that is making the decision that a senior civil servant is competent to carry on his duties even though, under his direction, a Department wasted all of this money.

Is there any point at which a senior civil servant would be declared by the Government to be incompetent? How much public money would a Department under the direction of a Deputy Minister have to waste before this Government would say that that behaviour is incompetence?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is going through a hypothetical flim-flam.

Mr. Keeper: Hypothetical?

Mr. Stewart: Sure it is hypothetical. The Hon. Member is asking what our Minister will do. Every bit of this happened previously. It is like trying to see what is inside a Christmas present without undoing the string. Just give us a change and we will show the Hon. Member.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary has said that this is hypothetical. The fact that the Department of Public Works wasted all this money is documented in the report of the Auditor General. I simply want to know from the Parliamentary Secretary if there is any level of wastage of money for which a Deputy Minister is responsible at which the Government feels that that behaviour is unacceptable? Is there any point at which the Government loses confidence in a civil servant who has carried on in that manner?

The Parliamentary Secretary keeps referring to the fact that this happened in the past. Yes, it did happen in the past. It is being reported on today. However, the Deputy Minister is still there. The Parliamentary Secretary has expressed full confidence in this Deputy Minister. I would like to know upon what basis the Government judges the performance of its senior civil servants?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, on the contrary, I am expressing confidence not only in the Deputy Minister; I am expressing total confidence in the Minister who has had previous experience in this portfolio. If he believes that the changes can be effected with the present staff, then I absolutely agree with him. Until such time as we see that the changes are not forthcoming and that the Department is not run properly under the Minister, I think the Hon. Member is off base. He is talking in the past. The Hon. Member has not mentioned one concrete item which has been implemented since we have been in government which he would like to have changed. As I previously stated, motions are now being made, the policy is being put in place and allowed to operate.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, the Government does not present us with a picture which would allow us to express confidence. The Minister is not in the House when his legislation is being debated. The Parliamentary Secretary is unable to tell us precisely and specifically how the wastage of public money will be avoided in the future. The Government is not willing to articulate those procedures today. But at the same time the Government is expressing 100 per cent confidence in the Deputy Minister, the public servant under whose direction these moneys were wasted.

Miss MacDonald: Another Svend Robinson!

Mr. Lewis: McCarthyism!

Mr. Keeper: "McCarthyism", I hear from Members opposite. Mr. Chairman, is it McCarthyism to ask the Government to tell us on what criteria it evaluates the performance of Deputy Ministers? How can this new Government express total confidence in a Deputy Minister under whose direction so many public dollars have been wasted? In the Government's evaluation of senior public servants, does it take into account how they handle the public purse?

The Chairman: I would remind Hon. Members of Standing Order 59(2) which reads as follows:

Speeches in Committees of the Whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

I am not convinced that some of the matters which being discussed are strictly relevant to the clause which is under consideration. Does the Parliamentary Secretary wish to reply?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the Chair for its remarks. I was about to say that we are having a spurious line of questioning which is not germane to the Bill. Question Period is the time when the Hon. Member should ask the questions which he is now posing.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, the relevance of the line of questioning is this. The first clause in the Bill refers to the capacity of the Minister and the Department of Public Works to make expenditures. It is an open-ended clause which reads:

(3) The Minister may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, incur expenditures or perform, or have performed, services or work in relation to—

It is an open-ended clause which allows for the expenditure of funds. At the same time, the Auditor General has identified that the expenditure of funds by the Department of Public Works has been wasteful. We must ask ourselves how that will be corrected. Will it be corrected by changing the public servants who are responsible for it? In other words, will competent people be put in charge? Will the Government change its practices and policies? If we cannot satisfactorily be assured of that, then perhaps it must be written into legislation.

The relevance to the line of questioning which I have pursued is that the Government is asking for authority to spend money. It is asking for open-ended authority in the first clause. In another clause it asks for the authority to engage in lease-purchase arrangements. The Government has been doing that for a number of years. In his report the Auditor General identified that under those arrangements the Government has spent money in a way which has cost the public purse more than if the Government had simply built the buildings itself.

We need concrete assurances that the waste which has been identified will not be repeated. The assurances must be either in terms of how the moneys are administered, the competence of the personnel and the policies and procedures which oversee the handling of those moneys, or else it must be in legislation. The legislation before us today asks for the authority to spend money, particularly the first clause which is open-ended.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works a question. Does he not think that the tactics of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre in raising the allegations regarding the competence of certain government employees smack of the McCarthyism which we have witnessed coming from other Members of his Party? Does the Parliamentary Secretary not think that this is not the appropriate place for a discussion of personalities and competence, and that if the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre had the courage of his convictions, he would make such statements outside the House and/or bring them up in Question Period?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I totally agree. I stated before that I did not think the line of questioning was relevant to the debate. I thank the Hon. Member for his comments. I thought we had an all-Party agreement, and I would like to get on with the legislation.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I am being accused by government Members of engaging in McCarthyism. Is it McCarthyism to ask the Government what criteria it uses to judge the competence of a Deputy Minister? The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board talked about allegations. The incompetent handling of real estate property by the Government is documented in the Auditor General's report. The facts are documented, they are not picked out of the air. The possibility of a public servant being relieved of his duties because his actions were incompetent was not raised by myself, it was raised by the media. The media asked the Auditor General whether he would recommend to the Prime Minister that such a Deputy Minister be fired. The Auditor General said that he would not comment on how the Prime Minister should manage the Public Service. However, the Auditor General did say that any property manager who handled property in the private sector this way would be handed a pink slip.

To accuse me of McCarthyism is an attempt to throw a red herring into the debate.

Mr. Lewis: That's what McCarthy did.

Mr. Keeper: Government Members laugh. These are serious matters which involve millions of dollars of public funds. The Government ran on the promise to cut waste. I want to know how it will do that. I want it to be specific in its assurances to the House that it will in fact do that. When the Parliamentary Secretary says that he has complete confidence in the Deputy Minister, I want ot know on what basis he has that confidence. The Parliamentary Secretary has mentioned that the Minister has complete confidence in the Deputy Minister. I would like to know on what basis the Government has that confidence. Is there a level of the wastage of the public moneys which are under the direction of the Deputy Minister at which the question can legitimately be put: Is the person who is managing these public funds competent or incompetent?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, if the Hon. Member would look at the appointments which were made by the Prime Minister in the past, he would see that the Prime Minister has confidence in people of all stripes. In addition, if he reviewed the Conservative task force on income tax he would find that we went to great lengths to ensure that people were innocent until proven guilty. Unlike the Hon. Member, we believe that all senior civil servants should have the opportunity of proving themselves under a new Minister before they are judged guilty and sentenced.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary simply refuses to answer the questions on all bases. The question is: Upon what criteria does the Government judge the competence or incompetence of a senior civil servant? And does not the wastage of enormous amounts of funds raise questions about his or her competence? I ask that question because when I pursued the other question—

Miss MacDonald: It is the 250,000 civil servants he is going after now.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, 234,000 civil servants.

Miss MacDonald: Why don't you speak up on behalf of the civil servants?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I am beginning to get a lot of heckling from the government side. Obviously, that is because those people opposite are not willing to deal with the issue at hand.

If the Government cannot tell us upon what criteria it bases its confidence in the competence of a senior civil servant, then will it tell us what new procedures it is going to put in place to assure us that those civil servants who will continue in those positions will in fact not waste taxpayers' money in the future?

Miss MacDonald: He is accusing them all of wasting money. Shame on you.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the sacred trust of every Minister is to protect taxpayers' money. That is what our Minister is going to do. I cannot keep going over the same old ground with the Hon. Member. He is just regurgitating the same old stuff. The Minister will evaluate his Department once he has gotten a complete grasp of the situation, which he has travelled across Canada to asertain. It will be done on the basis of competence and on the principle of saving the taxpayer of Canada money.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if this Bill would provide relief for people renting buildings or facilities to the federal Government. I am thinking in particular of the post office building at Richards Landing, Ontario. The owner, who was previously the postmaster but is retired now, and served in the Canadian forces in his earlier years, rents the building to Canada Post. He signed an agreement, I believe, in 1977 for a period of five years, to 1983. He was then forced to renew for another five years at the rate of rent which existed during the previous five-year period. The building has 720 square feet and was rented for something like $160 a month, including light, heat, maintenance and caretaking. That figure is very unrealistic today and, of course, will be even more so by 1988.

A number of representations have been made over the year. The Department tells him that it does not have the option to simply cancel the existing lease. I would hope that this legislation will give the Minister power to cancel an unfair, unjust and unjustifiable lease agreement. In this case, the amount of rent is very low. The individual owner is not in good health. He wants to sell and dispose of the building but is locked in for a five-year period with an unrealistic lease. No one would want to buy the property because they know they are not going to get a fair return on the investment.

I would be interested to know if the Parliamentary Secretary can tell us if this Bill, which gives certain powers to the Minister, will also allow him to change this lease, which is obviously unfair and unjustified? If so, will the Parliamentary Secretary undertake to request that the Minister allow this lease to be cancelled so that this individual, who retired several years ago and wants to get out of the lease, can do so? Surely it is not the design of the Government of Canada to lock a senior citizen into an unfair and unrealistic agreement such as is imposed by the existing arrangement.

Mr. Stewart: I thank the Hon. Member for his concern, Mr. Chairman. I suppose it would be the normal procedure for a five-year option to go to Treasury Board. I have no knowledge of the case in point. I will take his question as notice to the Minister and get him a reply.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, I have a specific question on the meaning of Clause 1. It states:

> The Minister may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, incur expenditures or perform, or have performed, services or work in relation to
> (a) properties belonging to Canada . . .
> (b) properties not belonging to Canada.

Does this provision authorize the Department or the Minister to undertake limited housekeeping changes, such as maintenance? Does it allow long-range or far-reaching undertakings or is it only short-term changes?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the Hon. Member I will say yes, it does. I believe an example where this authority is implemented is where work is required on municipally-owned land and when the federal Government has agreed to participate in a project in order to further widen social and economic objectives. A specific case in point which I mentioned earlier was the Saint John Market Square where the federal Government built a seawall on municipal land. This was in order to allow multiple use for housing. That is the type of thing which Clause 1 covers.

Mr. Hovdebo: Is that for one-time transactions or long-term transactions, or could it be used for both?

Mr. Stewart: Clause 1 can and does apply to Canada Post, for instance.

Mr. Hovdebo: Would it be possible for this provision under paragraph (b) to be used for work on private property with a no strings attached sort of approach? In other words, can it be used for expenditures on private property which is leased by the Government with no strings attached so that if the lease runs out or the property is returned, there is no recompense to the Government?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I believe not. I think that these specific instances mentioned by the Hon. Member would be covered under criminal law, et cetera.

Mr. Hovdebo: No, I speak specifically of property which is leased by private individuals or companies to the Government. It says that the Minister has the right to do housekeeping work or exercise far-reaching undertakings which would change the status of that particular property. Will there be strings attached to those changes if they are done on private property? Or will that property just return to the private owner at the end of the lease period without any recompense to the Government, if a large amount of money has been expended?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, it would, of course, depend on what was written in the contract. In the normal course of events the improvements would stay with the community or person involved.

Mr. Hovdebo: That is exactly what we and the Auditor General have been talking about. Under those circumstances it is quite possible to sweeten the deal during the time of the lease and in that way provide a certain amount of patronage to an individual or corporation. Will the Government give us some indication that these kinds of expenditures by the Minister of Public Works will provide for some recompense if at the end of a lease period the property is returned at double its value to the individual or corporation concerned?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, in my experience most of these things normally come under the term "leasehold improvements". We cannot act like the private sector, as the Hon. Member is aware, but we can write very indelibly into any contract the necessary measures to protect the public.

Mr. Hovdebo: Let us take a particular situation. If the Department decided it wanted to change some property and required the permission of the owner, what would be done? Subclause (3) requires that no services or work may be performed in relation to property not belonging to Canada without the consent of the owner. That is perfectly acceptable. What would be the Minister's position if the owner said that he could not accept this particular change to his property even if we had a 20-year lease? Would the Minister have any alternatives in that kind of situation?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, it would depend on the terms of the contract. This clause says very clearly that nothing can be done without the consent of the owner. You cannot run a road through someone's property if they do not want it there. In the case of the seawall, if the community had not wanted it there to help bring forward affordable housing, then of course they would have said no. But it was to their advantage to say yes. As I said, it would depend on the terms of the contract. We are not trying to railroad anything through in this Bill, by any means. That is why this clause is there.

Mr. Hovdebo: In most cases the changes are being carried out on behalf of another department, so where will the funds come from? Will they come from Public Works' budget or the budget of another department?

Mr. Stewart: Well, it depends, Mr. Chairman, on the circumstances. Canada Post, for argument's sake, would pay the Department. So it depends on the circumstances.

Mr. Hovdebo: There is a lot of similarity between this and Section 5 of the Public Works Act. Why does this particular section need to be changed? What is the difference between this particular section and the powers under Section 35 of the Act?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, as far as I can gather here it covers a transfer of property from the Minister of Transport to Public Works or from Canada Post to Public Works.

Mr. Hovdebo: Does that mean that the Minister of Public Works, through this particular change in the Act, is taking on a great deal of responsibility which other Ministers had for their buildings? What is really the relationship between this clause and Section 35?

Mr. Stewart: I think it is a reciprocal agreement between departments where they want the department to take on the management of the property in question, as in the case with the post office.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary has indicated that we should be more concerned to ask questions about potential waste associated with this Government rather than the previous Government. Will the Parliamentary Secretary undertake either to report back or have the Minister report back to the House on the complications which might have arisen and the consequent increases in costs associated with the freeze imposed on a vast number of Public Works projects in the aftermath of the new Government taking power?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Langdon: If I could simply expand briefly on that point, there have certainly been cases in our constituencies of projects which have incurred significant costs in the period leading up to the election and, indeed, after the election which, because of the decision to freeze the projects for a period of time, are now in a kind of catch-22 situation. Because of the cut-backs for next year there is no possibility of these projects being run through-on to next year's budget. We do not have enough time left in this particular fiscal year to complete those projects. In at least one case of which I am aware this is more than a possibility, it is a very strong probability. Projects which have incurred significant start-up costs will now be suspended for a period of up to three years because of budgetary constraints. Had they been carried forward according to the original schedule there would be no problem with completing them this fiscal year and the start-up costs incurred would not be wasted. I am deeply concerned that the start-up costs in a number of these projects will, indeed, end up wasted.

The Chairman: Order. It being one o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

THE CENSUS

OBJECTION TO 1986 CANCELLATION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, since 1955 Canada has conducted mid-decade censuses. The censuses provide important data to all sectors of government and business. This information is used to assess population movements which affect transfer payments, to assess labour market trends, income distribution, living conditions, and many other things.

The information from censuses helps businesses make marketing decisions. The officials of the Minister of Supply and Services admitted that various organizations have protested the cancellation of the 1986 census, but they would not name the associations. One of those joining the list of those protesting the cancellation of the 1986 census is the Canadian Home Builders Association. The Association has 5,000 members, and their objections to the cancellation of the 1986 census are representative of the protests of many others.

As one of their research people is quoted as saying in the Ottawa Citizen:

> The cancellation of the 1986 census means the loss of an essential benchmark on housing data. This benchmark now will not be available until 1992.

The article continues:

> The cut to the census which provides free data to everyone, means that only large housing companies will be able to get the necessary information because they have enough money to hire market research firms.

Statistics Canada officials confirmed that businesses request special compilations of census data. The Government is ignoring their needs.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

CONTRIBUTIONS AND BENEFIT LEVELS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in the report of the chief actuary of the Department of Insurance tabled in the House of Commons this year attention is focused on the serious underfunding of the Canada Pension Plan. If contribution rates are not increased, costs of benefits and expenses will exceed contributions next year. The CPP account would grow until 1994 and then would start to decline. The account would be exhausted by the year 2004, which is just 20 years hence.

Benefit levels and contribution rates cannot be altered under existing legislation without provincial agreement. Therefore I would urge both the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and his provincial counterparts to take urgent action to preserve the integrity of the Canada Pension Plan. If changes are not made now, there will be no funds left in 20 years with which to pay pensions to those Canadians who are now, by law, obliged to contribute hard-earned cash into the scheme.

ACQUISITION OF PETROFINA—ALLEGATION CONCERNING PROFITS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on February 25, 1981, I called in the House for a special federal inquiry into the share transactions on the Petro-Canada-Petrofina deal. I was prompted to do so by an Insiders Report filed with the Ontario Securities Commission in 1981 which showed that four officers of Petrofina had, through the sale of stock options and shares in the short period leading up to the take-over, made excessive profits in excess of $400,000. In March of 1981 I raised the matter again in the House, calling it "Lotofina". I suggested that the matter be referred to the National Resources and Public Works Committee for investigation. I raised the matter again in June of 1981. In June of 1982 I put 13 questions on the Order Paper. One of the questions asked about the share options of one Pierre Nadeau.

It is time we got to the bottom of this matter and found out what really happened in that deal. In light of the fact that 91 employees are alleged to have made $10.3 million in profits, and that Mr. Nadeau himself made $1 million, I suggest that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs look into the trading of Petrofina's shares on the New York, Tokyo, and London stock exchanges at the time of the sale. Second, I suggest that Maurice Strong and Pierre Nadeau appear before the National Resources Committee. Finally, I suggest that we should think of establishing, in Canada, a National Securities Exchange Commission such as exists in the United States through which we could look into these matters and get to the bottom of the deal.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

LAND CLAIMS—EXCLUSION OF REFERENCE TO OFFSHORE RIGHTS

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, the Inuit have used and occupied the lands and waters of the Arctic for generations. Because of this they are negotiating a comprehensive aboriginal rights settlement with the federal Government. This process of negotiation, also referred to as land claims, is designed to define the rights, ownership of lands, and cash compensation for lands for which title has been relinquished. The focus on the possession of land and other terrestrially based rights neglects an important part of the claim that involves the offshore.

The most recent federal policy statement on land claims, in all fairness, makes no reference to aboriginal rights in the offshore. In light of Inuit dependence on the offshore, and the fact that our rights have yet to be defined, I find the exclusion of any reference to the offshore to be somewhat disturbing. Most of my constituents are heavily dependent upon the sea. In fact all communities, with the exception of one, are located on the coast. I would like to see a clear recognition of this need as government policy.

In the past Inuit have been used to affirm Canada's sovereignty. Inuit were cited as the reason for forming the Arctic Islands Game Preserve, and were relocated from northern Quebec to the islands north of the Northwest Passage to reaffirm sovereignty in the 1950s. Inuit welfare was cited in the preamble to the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act as one of the reasons for the passage of the Act.

I would therefore like recognition from the Government that Inuit aboriginal rights claims to the offshore will be recognized—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

WORRY, UNCERTAINTY AND INSECURITY FELT BY SUPERANNUATES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, on November 8 of this year, the Government made a commitment to create an economic climate that would be favourable for investment and economic development. Since then, the Government has succeeded in creating another kind of climate, a climate of anxiety, uncertainty and insecurity, especially among pensioners who are drawing old age security pensions.

Within the last few days, the question that cropped up most frequently among most of my constituents was the following: Are they going to cut our pensions? Mr. Speaker, how are we supposed to answer this question and reassure these people, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) says that "at least in his mind", the universality of family allowances and old age security pensions is a thing of the past? Mr. Speaker, what do you think Christmas is going to be like for these people, a season that should be full of joy and peace? If this Government has any heart, it should take steps to correct this situation and give all Canadian pensioners the same feeling of security they had before. Wishing them happiness is not enough. We must have positive statements on old age security pensions and the assurance that these will not be cut.

RAILWAYS

PRINCE ALBERT DECLARATION—RETENTION OF SASKATCHEWAN LINE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, on July 4 and 5, 1984, the P.C. Party met at Prince Albert. The results were announced by our Leader in a statement that has become known as the "Prince Albert Declaration". That document embodies the emancipation of western Canada after years of shameful Liberal neglect.

At Prince Albert we said that no rail branch-line would be tampered with until the legislative review of the Western Grain Transportation Act was completed in 1985-86 and all other options and innovations for continued branch-line use had been explored. In 1980 the Canadian Transport Commission ruled that portions of the Shamrock and Gravelbourg sub-divisions in my constituency of Swift Current-Maple Creek should form part of the basic rail network. The previous Government assured the producers of the Hallonquist and McMahon areas that the necessary Order in Council would be passed to enact that decision. These same Liberals, who now pretend to criticize the Government, did not pass that Order in Council. The previous Minister of Transport said he would, but he did not, thus causing the producers years of anxiety.

I am pleased to announced that the Government, which has a Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) who understands the West, has now passed the Order in Council. The rail line from Hodgeville to Tyson to Hak will be guaranteed to the year 2000. Mr. Speaker, that is another P.C. promise kept. The historic words of Prince Albert ring true. The loyalty and trust that western Canadians have placed in our hands will continue to be honoured.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

INSECTICIDE POISONING—EFFECTS ON FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the events at Bhopal have focused world attention on the agony of death from pesticide poisoning as more than 2,000 people died horrible deaths. I want to raise the consciousness of the House to the everyday pesticide poisonings that occur amongst the world's farmers. Six thousand farmers, more than three times as many as died at Bhopal, are killed by pesticides every year.

In addition, more than 500,000 farmers are poisoned by pesticides each year. Some recover; some are harmed permanently. These poisonings occur in the developed countries as well, but the majority occur in the underdeveloped countries. The chemical industry says that the reason is illiteracy, but it is also due to a reduction in legislative requirements restricting usage in those countries. Chemicals not permitted here because testing has shown them to be unsafe to the users are used in less developed countries.

In addition to reduced regulation, newly industrialized countries like Mexico, Brazil, and India have tough import taxes to stimulate the growth of domestic chemical industries. They are, to use a familiar phrase, open for business. I urge the House to take action on the clear need for adequate testing, and the inception of a policy to monitor the cumulative effects upon humans who must handle farm pesticides in the fields in our country so that eventually we will know the effects on users and avoid this continued needless waste of farmers' lives.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

CALL FOR RESTORATION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, most races from the most ancient times to the present have prohibited murder and severely punished offenders.

First degree murder by definition means "the unlawful killing of one or more human beings, by another or others with malice aforethought".

One can easily realize that in this age of violent weaponry, murder is made all too easy.

One cannot exist in a society where one's self or one's family and friends are at the mercy of those who go about casually taking lives.

The stupid, the evil, and yes, some who are insane, seek to solve their real or imagined problems with murder. And they have also been known to commit murder for no reason at all.

Murder, Mr. Speaker, bears the highest priority for any nation in social prevention and retaliation.

There are crimes committed against others which cannot be waived or forgotten. Murder is such a crime.

Therefore it is my hope that the people of Canada will soon be given the satisfaction for which they have been clamoring since capital punishment was abolished in 1976, the satisfaction of a free vote, and I emphasize a free vote, which was not certainly the case in 1976, on capital punishment, the outcome of which, I believe, would satisfy the majority of the people of Canada.

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF GANDER RADIO STATION—DEMAND FOR REVERSAL

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House, and to the attention of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), who is in the House right now, that the CBC, in closing down and announcing the closure of radio station CBG in Gander, is violating the terms of union between the Province of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada. Term 31 reads:

> At the date of Union, or as soon thereafter as practicable, Canada will take over the following services—

Sub-clause (k) reads:

> The public radio broadcasting system—

CBG was operative at that time. Later on in Term 33 we read "radio stations" at the time of union. In sub-clause (i) it reads:

> —real and personal property of the Broadcasting Corporation of Newfoundland—

I am asking the Minister of Communications to intervene and use his power under the Broadcasting Act to reverse the decision taken by the CBC simply because, Mr. Speaker, it violates the terms of union between a province and the federal Government.

Let me also remind the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) that in increasing the rates across the Gulf they cannot be increased beyond the rates charged by rail because of Term 32 in the terms of union between Newfoundland and the Government of Canada.

I wish that some of these cabinet Ministers would really check into the terms of union that certain provinces have with the federal Government and not make such bad mistakes as they are making now.

ELIMINATION OF LEAD IN GASOLINE—COST TO FARMERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker; the trend towards the complete elimination of lead in gasoline is another example of how our society is becoming more and more urban-oriented to the disadvantage of rural Canada.

On December 31, 1983, the then Liberal Environment Minister announced his decision to proceed with a reduction in the lead content in leaded gasoline from its existing level of 0.77 gram per litre to a standard of 0.29 gram per litre by January 1, 1987. I recognize that there are advantages such as to health and pollution control with unleaded gasoline, but there are also some disadvantages. For example, it costs, according to Environment Canada, 0.3 cents more per litre to produce unleaded gas, and also about 160 jobs in the Canadian lead additive manufacturing industry will be lost. And a gigantic disadvantage will be the cost to our farmers.

Millions of dollars have been spent on farm machinery that requires leaded gas. Will the farmers have to write off this tremendous cost? Who will pay for the new machinery? The enormous burden this will place on our farmers seems to be ignored.

Agriculture can only stand so much, and if we keep adding costs to the production of food we will eliminate, through the back door, our family farms.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

UPPER AND MIDDLE-INCOME SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, fundamental to the operations of Parliament is the accepted and understood principle that the Prime Minister and his Cabinet not only speak the truth but do so with one voice. You cannot have the Prime Minister saying one thing, his Finance Minister something else, and now his Health Minister something else again.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You were the experts when in government.

Mr. Frith: My question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Minister of Finance. You were quoted as having said that upper and middle-income social programs cannot be afforded today, yet that position was repudiated in Question Period on Friday by your own Prime Minister.

Does the Finance Minister stand by his statement and, if so, who is telling the truth?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I made a statement in an interview, which was in the context of the things that were said in the agenda paper that was issued on November 8, as well as—

Ms. Copps: It was on tape.

Mr. Wilson: —in the context of my statement on that same night. There is no question that the background has been clearly established there.

What I was saying, and what the Prime Minister was saying when we were in the House on Friday, is that we are committed to a full consultation on the programs that were under discussion on Friday, a full consultation with Canadians to see whether those programs could be better directed so that the needy in our communities would receive a greater degree of benefit and that, through the tax system, we could redirect some of those moneys—

Ms. Copps: Some?

Mr. Wilson: —that now are being gained by upper income Canadians and put that in the hands of those who need it the most. That is the principle we are following and that is the principle to which we are committed.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, is the Finance Minister now saying, with respect to that same interview, in which he said that his mind was already made up on what he wanted to do with family allowances, is your mind made up—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Frith: —on the position that your Prime Minister has stated to this House, or is it made up about your position in the interview—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Frith: —or is it now going to be made up on the basis, Mr. Speaker, of the position taken by the Health Minister?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is misquoting what I said in that interview. I never said my mind was made up. The mind of this Government is not made up. We have embarked on a full consultative process that I hope the Hon. Member will be a part of in a positive, open, and productive way.

Mr. Gauthier: Did you tape it?

Mr. Wilson: We are saying that it is important that we receive the views of Canadians as to how we go about the principle that I established, that I set out in my first answer, that of taking some of the moneys now being received as a net benefit and, working through the tax system, redirecting it to those who need it the most.

Ms. Copps: Some?

Mr. Wilson: I ask the Hon. Member to approach this matter in a more positive, open, and productive way than has been the case to date.

REPORTS OF MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, when questioned on Friday, the Prime Minister indicated that he felt his Finance Minister's statements had been distorted by the press. My question is for the Finance Minister. Is he suggesting himself that Canadian Press distorted his statements that he made on record?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that there were statements attributed to me in that interview that were distorted, distorted by himself and distorted by Members of the New Democratic Party in the way that the questions were posed on Friday. I watched the total tape of Friday's Question Period. That's where the distortions occurred, and that's where the Prime Minister was referring to the distortion.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Is it accurate or not accurate?

Mr. Wilson: What I have said today is very, very clear. I hope the Hon. Member will think back to what he said during the election period when he was a Minister of the Crown, when he was saying exactly the same thing, that the Government then was in favour of redirecting some of those savings from the upper income brackets to those in lower income brackets, through the tax system.

INCOME LEVEL—REPORTED CUT-OFF POINT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the only thing that is distorted in this House is the position of the three Ministers on the government side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: My question is for the Prime Minister.

• (1420)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, does the Right Hon. Prime Minister agree with his Minister of National Health and Welfare who said last Friday that an annual income of $26,000 is being considered as the cut-off point for universal benefits? Does he agree with a Conservative policy that would sacrifice more than half of the Canadian population?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First of all, I wish to welcome the Hon. Member after her extraordinary performance in the Ontario by-elections.

The Hon. Member is clearly, though perhaps inadvertently, twisting the Minister's words. What we are trying to do with some measure of success and after consultation, I hope, is to find a formula for allocating more money to the neediest in our society—those who really need help.

It seems to me that this is an honest issue that deserves to be considered in a sensible manner.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister, the Johnny Carson of the Canadian House. Two-thirds of Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is—

Mr. Dick: Back to Queen's Park.

Ms. Copps: At Queen's Park the Government took its responsibilities at least as seriously, if not more seriously, than you are doing in this case.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Two-thirds of Canadians today fear losing their jobs. Now he and his Government are saying that they are considering cutting off family allowances and old age pensions to more than 50 per cent of working Canadians. Is this the Conservative Christmas present to Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say, with respect, to my hon. friend, that I am somewhat mystified as to why a comment like that would be made when in point of fact it bears no resemblance to anything said by a Minister of the Crown or to any intentions of the Government. All we are trying to do is to share declining resources, modest resources, with those in our society who need it most—the disadvantaged, the widows, those people who need assistance. We are trying to be helpful to them, and we hope that you would help us rather than criticize.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER—PRIME MINISTER'S REPLY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the question of distortion. The Minister of Finance said a minute ago that there was distortion on this side of the House on Friday. I say to him that the only side of the House on which there was distortion on Friday was from the government benches, including the Prime Minister himself.

My question, specifically for the Prime Minister, concerns a reply which he gave to the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor in the House. It was a question about what the Minister of Finance said outside. The Minister of Finance said outside the House that "upper and middle-income social programs cannot be afforded today". I was in Toronto. I heard it on the radio. I subsequently checked three newspapers. All attributed these precise words to the Minister of Finance.

Considering that the Prime Minister said in the House, and I quote, "the Finance Minister never said that", will he now take the occasion to withdraw his comments?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that my hon. friend was not here on Friday because, had he been here, he would have gotten the flavour of the entire exchange which dealt with a very serious question of context. For example, in the discussion paper set forward by the Minister of Finance on November 8—and I think in fairness my hon. friend would agree that it bears upon the subject matter—it states:

> The Government agrees that a frank and open discussion is timely, and that there is considerable scope for improving and redesigning social programs based on the twin tests of social and fiscal responsibility. Social responsibility dictates that wherever possible, and to a greater extent than is the case today, scarce resources should be diverted first to those in greatest need.

Mr. Broadbent: What does that have to do with the question?

Mr. Mulroney: That is the fundamental point which was set out by the Minister of Finance on November 8. It bears importantly on the context within which the exchange took place on Friday. This Government has been thoroughly consistent from November 8 to today in defending those who need help in our society.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister took another minute and a half to say nothing. He once again gave us his puff 'n stuff routine. He didn't deal with the question. I am going to ask him once again, since what is involved here is a very important matter of trust, since all kinds of reporters, Members of Parliament, as well as a majority, or a good number of Canadians, heard the Minister of Finance say what he said, once again will the Prime Minister take the occasion now to correct the record and withdraw the words that he uttered last Friday in the House when he said, "the Finance Minister never said that"?

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, why would I withdraw something that is completely true? I was indicating, in the absence of my hon. friend, that the context was very important. For example, on Question Period, the television program, Mr. McDermott of the CLC said on December 9 that they can get at these people and I think everyone will agree they don't need it. He said Trudeau doesn't need the baby bonus for his children—get at people like that through the tax system, and get it back from them that way without tinkering with the universal aspect of it. That is exactly what we are trying to do. If we got help and mature debate from my hon. friends, we could make progress in this area. The people of Canada understand what we are trying to do, and I am surprised at my hon. friend's persistent refusal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has seen nothing yet. You just start tampering with those social programs and you'll see a political fight like you've never seen before in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Since the Prime Minister had the occasion to withdraw his comments, and since what is at stake is both the integrity of our social programs and the trust of the Prime Minister, I say with care he has deliberately misled the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Oshawa knows that I must ask him to withdraw that comment.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Do you have any respect for this institution?

Mr. Broadbent: I have a lot of respect for this institution. I have never, especially with the Prime Minister, said what I just did. The Prime Minister had two occasions to correct the record. I am interested in truth. I wish he were.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gauthier: He really wants you to name him, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No respect for Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are now into a parliamentary matter. I ask the Hon. Member one more time to take the occasion, if he would, please, to withdraw the comment he has just made.

Mr. Broadbent: No.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member knows full well that I am left no choice but to name the Member. For the sake of Hon. Members, what I must do now is name the Hon. Member for Oshawa for disregarding a direct request from the Chair. He is, therefore, in a position of disrespect of the Chair itself.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, it is with great regret, because of the respect we hold for this institution, that I am obliged to move the following motion—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): How about the three weeks you walked out?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I move, seconded by the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister:

That the Hon. Member for Oshawa be—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot hear the motion of the Hon. Government House Leader because of the noise in the House. We are now in a very deep parliamentary matter. Could I please have quiet? I have named the Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You guys walked out for three weeks. That is some respect for Parliament.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, should I repeat the motion?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. The Chair did not hear the Hon. Member.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I move, seconded by the Deputy Prime Minister:

That the Hon. Member for Oshawa be removed from this Chamber for the balance of this day.

● (1430)

Mr. Speaker: This motion is not debatable and cannot be amended. The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn), which was agreed to on the following division:

POINT OF ORDER

REMARKS OF MR. MULRONEY UNPARLIAMENTARY

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have received notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I must advise him that I must take it, given the substance, as a point of order, but we will take it now.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, as you say, I had notified you about a statement that was reported in Hansard on Friday, at page 1238. In this ongoing parliamentary examination as to where the truth lies, I suggest that the statement made on Friday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), suggesting that I had wilfully distorted the comments of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), were a matter of privilege. I have now received a communication from the Prime Minister saying he will withdraw the matter. Therefore, my question of privilege would be ended at that point in time if the Prime Minister would in fact take that action.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend conveyed to me this morning his intention to raise as being unparliamentary the words that I used on Friday, which were, I believe, "wilfully distorted". I was advised that indeed that phrase is unparliamentary and earlier today, at 12.30 or one o'clock when I found out about it, I immediately wrote to my hon. friend conveying my apologies for the use of that phrase and indicating my intention to apologize to the House.

I believe that the magnificence of Parliament can function only when the Speaker's rulings are sustained and when Members display appropriate humility and understanding. So without hesitation I convey an apology to my hon. friend and I withdraw that phrase.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is respect for Parliament.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PETITIONS

TOUGHER PENALTIES FOR CRIMINALS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from several thousand people calling for the automatic early release program to be withdrawn, for tougher bail and parole laws to be enforced, for tougher penalties for violent crime, especially rapists, child molesters and murderers to be enforced, and for life sentences to be in fact life sentences.

DEREGULATION OF TELEPHONE SERVICE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to present a petition to this House on behalf of approximately 100 constituents from the Prince Albert area who ask that the Parliament of Canada reject any proposal to deregulate Canada's telephone service. These Canadians are satisfied with the current telephone service and feel that deregulation would result in poorer and costlier service. Therefore, the undersigned call upon this House to stop deregulation of telephone service.

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present two petitions from groups of residents of the town of Sackville who deplore the cuts in the Canadian Wildlife Service. These cuts mean the total curtailment of research activities on the effect of budworm spray and the toxicology program that monitors the build-up of toxics in the ecosystem. They humbly call upon Parliament to reinstate the programs of the Canadian Wildlife Service.

PROTECTION OF THE UNBORN

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition signed by constituents in the Barwick, Emo and Fort Frances areas of my riding requesting that the Criminal Code be amended so that unborn human beings are afforded legal protection.

ASSISTANCE FOR WOODSTOCK, ONT., FIRM

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 3,784 residents of the City of Woodstock and environs who are dismayed at the possible loss of the King Truck Engineering Canada Limited firm in Woodstock due to financial difficulties. They hope that when a suitable financial package is put together the federal and provincial Governments will come to their assistance if appropriate.

CONTRACTS RE GRAVEL BULLDOZERS

Question No. 11—Mr. Howie:

1. In the fiscal year ending March 31 (a) 1981 (b) 1982 (c) 1983, what were the names of persons or firms who supplied trucks for hauling gravel at CFB Gagetown, New Brunswick, and what amount was paid?

2. For each fiscal year, what were the names of persons or firms who supplied bulldozers and/or front end loaders for this purpose and what amount was paid?

3. In each case, were tenders called and did tender specifications indicate a required volume capacity for the trucks?

4. Were payments made for the time on the job or for the volume of material conveyed and what was the reason for the method of payment?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence):

3. For all Supply and Services Canada (SSC) contracts/ Standing Offer Ageements with stated volume specification tenders were called. For local hire all dump truck rentals are obtained off SSC one time contract or standing offer. SSC does not advertise in newspaper but as it pertains to CFB Gagetown SSC requests bids from 23 companies in the Gagetown region. Those invited to bid are taken from a locally complied suppliers list. In order to be placed on such a list suppliers must apply in writing in accordance with SSC brochure "Selling to Supply and Services Canada". Furthermore it is confirmed that on one from NB has been refused listing.

4. The method of payment is usually on a time basis, i.e., per hour, per week or per month, etc. Dump truck hire is to replace NDN-owned vehicles undergoing maintenance or to meet peak workload periods. Primary usage is on small maintenance projects scattered over an 1100 square km area and often shifted from job site to job site on a daily basis. To charge the hire on a ton mile basis would require a large number of weight scales or the constant move of portable scales which would produce costly time delays. Gravel pits available for use on Base are small and widely scattered. For a single project, different types of gravel/sand could be required thus compounding scale problems. The pits are operated by DND personnel and equipment. If the operation is slow, the supplier is subject to a decrease in revenue if hired on a ton mile or volume mile basis. The only two instances where time hire rates were not used involved projects under the total operation of the supplier. One was on a project/lot basis for construction and the other was on a volume basis for stockpiling gravel.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE LAWYERS

How many lawyers are employed by the Department of National Defence?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): There are 64 legally qualified officers of the Canadian Armed Forces including the Judge Advocate General (JAG). In addition, there are three civilian lawyers of the Department of Justice who are currently seconded to the office of the JAG for such duties as he may assign.

CADET PROGRAM—GAGETOWN

Question No. 41—Mr. Howie:

Did any persons partcipate in Cadet programs at Canadian Forces Base Gagetown during the summer of 1984 and, if so, how many?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Yes. During summer 1984 a total of 1,052 cadets participated in the Summer Cadet Camp Argonaut at Canadian Forces Base Gagetown.

[English]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PUBLIC WORKS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration in Committee of Bill C-13, an Act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act—Mr. Hnatyshyn (for Minister of Public Works)—Mr. Danis in the chair.

On Clause 1—Other properties

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, I have one more question on Clause 1 before we leave it. Earlier I asked the Parliamentary Secretary about where the money would come from, the budget of Public Works or of the Department. I also asked whether or not the Minister of Public Works would proceed with changes to property without the consent of the people who are operating or using the building.

● (1520)

I will ask the question by assuming a hypothetical situation. I am not sure whether this is correct, but I presume that if a building occupied by a post office were to be repaired in some way the post office would be charged for it. What if the post office decided it would not pay for it? Would Public Works proceed under those circumstances anyway? Would you proceed with the repair of a building over which you had jurisdiction but which you did not operate?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, if the Hon. Member will look at the explanatory notes he will see that it says "management, charge or direction, and also, with the consent of the owner". It is very clear. With regard to the second part of the question, they do not operate anything that they do not have a contract with. There is a contract with the post office for any buildings that Public Works operates.

Mr. Hovdebo: It seems to me that the amendment could work out so that the Minister of Public Works could be required, in the case of saving a building which belonged to the Crown, to do repairs on it while the people operating the building would not give their consent to do so. What would you do in that case? Would you proceed with the repairs without consent?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the building belongs to the Crown. I do not understand the relevancy of the question. The building belongs to the Crown so the Crown would do what it has to do.

Mr. Hovdebo: But the repairs would be charged to each different department?

Mr. Stewart: Could be, yes.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to use this opportunity to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary. A number of very long-term leases have been entered into by the Department of Public Works with private lessors. Although the amount of rent that has been charged may have been a fair market value 15 years ago, it is now no longer a fair market value. In fact, in several circumstances with which I am familiar, the amount of rent paid by DPW does not even cover the local taxes. The owners of buildings are finding themselves in a very serious predicament. There is, I understand, authority for the Government to renegotiate leases of this type. The previous Government was certainly not prepared to do that. I do not know of one instance in which it did that. As a result, some of these buildings have been run down, especially residential buildings which have been leased to the Government. No maintenance has been done on them because there is no money coming in to the landlord. Could we be advised of the position of the new Government with respect to this problem? Will it be prepared to renegotiate leases even though there might not be a strict legal requirement for it to do so?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague for the question. Of course, the leases he is talking about are under contract to the Government. That can be changed by Treasury Board. I will have to take the question as notice and ask the Minister whether he will be taking such cases to Treasury Board for renegotiation.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On Clause 2—Lease on other disposition of Public Works

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary why Clause 2 is in the Bill at all.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, once again it is a simple housekeeping matter. As the explanatory note to Clause 2 says:

> This amendment would provide for the lease or other disposition of public works in which the Crown retains occupancy rights.

It is that simple.

Mr. Hovdebo: Does that mean that you did not have that authority before?

Mr. Stewart: In essence, yes.

Mr. Hovdebo: If that is the case, all of the lease-purchase agreements in the past have not been legal agreements.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, no, that is not the case. It was an interpretation which used to come before the Speaker for clarification. This would mean that this will not have to happen in the future.

Mr. Hovdebo: If the process of lease-purchase was legal before, why are these clauses being put in there at all? If you have been doing it, you should have had that authority before.

All you are doing here is putting into the clause another legal requirement.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, previously this was implied. It is now spelled out clearly and in detail without any doubt as to what is meant by the Act.

Mr. Hovdebo: If that is the case, Mr. Chairman, one would think that after the Auditor General's report and his comments about lease-purchase this kind of clause would be left out and the authority for lease-purchase would be taken away. The Auditor General states specifically that the cost of lease-purchase is considerably more than any other method of getting space and that the full cost of future funding requirements arising from acquisition of real properties through lease-purchase are not being disclosed to Parliament.

I think that in this case we are adding to something that the Auditor General thinks is bad and which the Department was not sure whether it had the authority to do but which it had been doing. Now we are making it legal for the Department to do it. At least, we are clearing away some of the smoke so that it can do it with that legality in the Act. That is my interpretation of your answer. It would seem to me that this is not the time to be giving further powers to the Department for lease-purchase considering the cloud that has been put over lease-purchase by the Auditor General's report.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, we are speaking about a recommendation of the Auditor General. As I said this morning, the Minister has been touring Canada from coast to coast to get a handle on this Department which has been grossly neglected. For example, the Minister addressed 350 people in the Department of Public Works in Toronto who had not seen a Minister of Public Works in 10 years. That is the kind of negligence that went on in that Department. The Minister is travelling from coast to coast listening to the people in Public Works, the Auditor General and Treasury Board. I stated that this morning. I do not know how many times I must say it to get it through your head. When the Minister comes back and has had time to digest what he is attempting to do, he will be making recommendations to see that that Department works in the manner in which it should.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, it would be helpful to see the Minister of Public Works in this House listening in this Chamber. Maybe that is an old fashioned notion, but it is one that should be respected.

I want to deal with the question of lease-purchase which is the essence of this clause. In connection with this, I would like to move an amendment to this clause and seek your guidance, Mr. Chairman, as to whether I should speak before or after I move the amendment.

The Chairman: Go ahead.

Mr. Keeper: I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert:

Public Works Act

That Clause 2 of Bill C-13 be amended by adding a new section 39.2 as follows:

39.2 Within 90 days of any lease and occupancy agreement or lease-purchase agreement being entered into under the provision of Section 39.1, the Minister shall report to Parliament the full cost and funding requirements related to the lease.

The reason I move this amendment has to do with the cost overruns identified by the Auditor General with regard to the practice of lease-purchase and also, more specifically, because the Auditor General himself has recommended this sort of action. On page 13-19 of his report, the Auditor General makes this recommendation:

The Department of Public Works should disclose to Parliament the full cost and future funding requirements arising from acquisition of properties through lease-purchases.

I am attempting to do what I asked the Government to assure us of this morning. I have asked the Government numerous questions in this Chamber. I have asked it to take some specific action that would ensure that that kind of cost overruns would not be repeated in the future. We have had no more than general assurances from the Parliamentary Secretary.

This is a specific recommendation which addresses a couple of things. It addresses the concerns of the Auditor General about the administration of real estate by the Government, a specific recommendation he made. Second, it addresses the general concern about Treasury Board having adequate information in order to make decisions with regard to lease-purchase arrangements.

In his report the Auditor General has made the claim that the Department of Public Works withheld information from the federal Cabinet two years ago when it leased three downtown office buildings from Campeau Corporation for a total of $400 million. The transactions resulted in unfavourable terms that cost the Canadian people more than $50 million and in the missed opportunity to obtain a $46.5 million building for $15 million. This lack of information has cost the Canadian taxpayer large sums of money.

By moving this amendment what we are doing is ensuring that all the information is on the table when the decisions are made. This will act as a prod to make sure that the Department of Public Works provides all information to the Treasury Board so that when it makes decisions with regard to lease-purchase arrangements, Treasury Board will have all the information before it.

The concern about lease-purchase is that there are large sums of money tied up in lease-purchase arrangements, some $1.919 billion. The way we handle these arrangements is very crucial. These arrangements have already led to excess costs for the taxpayer. For example, as I said this morning, a study of four lease-purchase agreements in the Ottawa area resulted in the cost being $85.8 million more over a 35 year period than otherwise would have been the case. The way the Government up to now has been handling lease-purchase arrangements has meant increased costs for the Canadian taxpayer.

I have asked the Government over and over again to give specific recommendations, to tell us just how it is going to avoid such extra costs for the taxpayer. The Government has come up with nothing specific today. We feel compelled to offer some concrete suggestion, at least in one area, where these overruns might be avoided in the future.

We are asking this Government to put in place a procedure whereby, after the Government has signed a lease-purchase arrangement, it would be required 90 days thereafter to share the information with the House of Commons as to the costs entailed in these lease-purchase arrangements.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. But the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member read an amendment then proceeded to discuss it. As I understand it, the very basic requirement of parliamentary procedure is that the Chair, first, has to rule whether an amendment is admissible before the Hon. Member can engage in a discussion of such an amendment.

The Chairman: It can be done both ways. In any event, I have just received a copy of the amendment. I will read the amendment now. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre moves:

That Clause 2 of Bill C-13 be amended by adding a new section 39.2 as follows:

39.2 Within 90 days of any lease and occupancy agreement or lease-purchase agreement being entered into under the provision of Section 39.1 the Minister shall report to Parliament the full cost and future funding requirements related to the lease.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. It is up to the Chair to determine whether that amendment is in order. It would seem to me, on the face of it, that that amendment is not in order for a very simple reason.

Under Clause 2 we are dealing with the case where the Government of Canada, the Crown, is to be the lessor or the vendor. The amendment presented by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre contemplates the very reverse, the case where the Crown is to be the lessee or the purchaser. It does not make sense. The proposed amendment cannot be an amendment to the proposed Clause 39.1 because it just does not make any sense whatever. I hope the Chair will take that argument into account when the determination of the admissibility of the amendment is made.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary as to the meaning of the last three sentences in the clause under discussion and whether those three sentences mean generally what the Hon. Member is talking about.

In relation to the point of order, I understand the Chair's difficulty in trying to rule on a point of order raised by the Member for Western Arctic in that one would have to be totally aware of what is in the clause, what the intent of the clause is, and where it is in the Act in order to rule on the amendment put forward by the NDP.

• (1540)

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the point of the Hon. Member is already covered in the Bill. The Bill addresses all his concerns. It is just application and the difference between application and technique which we are talking about. What he was talking about in terms of the former Government has no relevance to what is going on now.

The whole matter comes under the normal accounting procedures of the Government of Canada. It already goes to Treasury Board for approval. Therefore I do not see the relevancy of the amendment at all.

The Chairman: After having heard the arguments, the Chair rules the amendment in order.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary said that the concerns which I addressed in the amendment were already covered in the legislation. He did not enunciate specifically how they were covered. The purpose of my amendment was to follow on the recommendation of the Auditor General that the cost of lease-purchase arrangements be disclosed to Parliament. The words of the amendment are simply that after the Department of Public Works enters into a lease arrangement, it be required to table that information in the House, that is, the full cost and the future financial requirements of those arrangements, so that the House is made aware of the costs of any lease-purchase arrangement. That should help to prevent any future abuse of the lease-purchase arrangement and to ensure that it is only used when it makes economic sense.

I am surprised that the Conservative Government would not jump at the idea. It is an idea which is very similar to notions which the Conservatives advocated themselves when they were in Opposition, for example, the fact that programs should have sunset provisions. In other words, after a program had run for a period of time, it should automatically come up for review.

The Conservative Party has claimed to be the Party of the House of Commons and to want Parliament to function. Obviously one of the fundamental purposes of the House of Commons is to hold the executive or the Government to account in financial matters. This is a concrete step we could take to prevent waste of public funds in the future. It is a concrete procedure which will ensure that the waste of the past will not be repeated. I would be curious to know why the Parliamentary Secretary would not find this to be a friendly amendment and why he would not be prepared to support it at this point. Maybe he is prepared to support it.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to support the amendment. The Hon. Member should look a little further into the Auditor General's remarks, particularly at paragraph 13.54 on page 13-21 which reads:

The Department should seek clarification of its authority to enter into lease-purchase arrangements including, if appropriate, legislative amendments.

All these matters will be reviewed in the Estimates of 1985-86. These prices and costs are submitted to Treasury Board prior to having the project approved. Therefore, I still cannot go along with the amendment.

Mr. Keeper: The legislation before us deals with one recommendation of the Auditor General. It is the recommendation indicating that the authority of the Department of Public Works should be clarified. That is clear, but certainly it does not deal with the need for disclosure to Parliament. Obviously in the past the Estimates of the Department of Public Works went to committee and came before the House of Commons. However, that did not prevent the kind of abuse which the Auditor General documented with regard to lease-purchase arrangements.

We need further provisions which will ensure that public moneys are not wasted. A Government concerned about the dollar would welcome arrangements that would bring to light or bring to public debate the costs and benefits of any lease-purchase arrangement. The specific purpose of my arrangements should be disclosed to Parliament. This amendment would provide a mechanism to ensure that that happens.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the point of the Hon. Member, but will the Government's hands be so tied that it cannot even enter into a contract without coming to the House of Commons? If it is afterwards, then it is too late. If it is afterwards, it will be caught by the Auditor General. What are they trying to do? Are they trying to tie the hands of the Minister so that he cannot do anything? We do not sit in July or August. Many of these things could come up in July and August. Legislation has to be sensible. This would make it completely nonsensical. It is saying that the Government must bring it to the House of Commons. If it is after the fact, what is the difference since it is already in the Bill? If it is before the fact, the Minister could not do a thing on that particular phase before coming to the House of Commons.

We set out the general lines in legislation. If the Minister makes a mistake, he takes the blame for it.

An Hon. Member: Just like the last one.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, like the last one did. Our Ministers are determined not to make such mistakes. If they do, they will be called to account by the Auditor General and by Members of the House. Let us not tie their hands and say, "Do the job, but we will handcuff you first.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the comments of the Hon. Member for Bow River. That is the point I have been trying to get across since this morning. Just to clarify it, the fact is that Part III of the new Estimates will highlight for fiscal 1985-86 a complete financial disclosure of what the Hon. Member across the way is seeking. Again it comes back to the fact that we have a new Minister who will be going in a new direction with public works in conjunction with Treasury. As I said before, it will all come out in the wash in Part III of the Estimates for 1985-86.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to clarify exactly what we are doing under Clause 2. Would the Parliamentary Secretary give us an example of that which is contemplated under Clause 2?

Is it not a situation where the Crown is to be the lessor and some private individual or corporation is to be the lessee? Or is it the circumstance envisaged by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, where the situation is to be the reverse of that and the Government is to be the lessee rather than the lessor?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make one or two comments following those of the Hon. Member for Bow River. We are suggesting in this amendment that after the deal has been made, the Department will be required to table the information before the House. The reason is well documented in Chapter 13 of the report of the Auditor General. If the Department has reason for doing it correctly because it will show up immediately, or within 90 days, whether or not it will be a good or a bad deal, rather than waiting from three years to possibly five years for the Auditor General to find it, the Auditor General is saying that we should get it before Parliament as quickly as possible. That is the reason for our amendment.

Also I should like to comment on the fact that it will be in Part III of the Estimates. I agree with the Parliamentary Secretary that Part III of the Estimates will be a lot better and that possibly it might do what we are trying to do. However, the Auditor General also knows what will happen in Part III of the Estimates, but still he made his recommendation. We think that the recommendation is sound and that the amendment is sound.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Investment Canada Act

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, December 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-15 is to replace the Foreign Investment Review Act and the review process it enables the Government to carry out with a new Act creating Investment Canada. The Government says its purpose is to attract foreign investment to Canada and, as a result, create jobs and other benefits for our economy.

The kindest thing I can say about the Bill is that while it may be well-intention, it is thoroughly misguided. In my view, it will not bring the results intended. It will do just the reverse. If the Bill passes, it will seriously weaken the ability of the Government to ensure that the limited kinds of foreign investment covered by the present Foreign Investment Review Act brings real and significant benefits to Canadians, especially when it comes to jobs, but also including such factors as more research and development, more sourcing of parts and components here, and more exports.

Even though the level of foreign control in some sectors here has declined somewhat in recent years, Canada still has more of its economy owned and controlled outside of its borders than any other developed country. Study after study has shown that foreign investment, while it can bring benefits to our economy, has real costs attached to it for Canadians. Yes, it may bring access to markets and new technology and jobs that might not otherwise be here, but the evidence is clear that foreign-controlled firms generally do less research and development in our country. They purchase more of their parts and components outside of Canada and they tend to export less than their Canadian-controlled counterparts.

A recent Statistics Canada report indicates that foreign-controlled firms tend to import substantially more of the parts required for their products than Canadian-controlled firms. The Progressive Conservative Party's task force on Canada's high-tech future issued a report earlier this year. It stated that recent data indicates that research and development intensity of foreign subsidiaries tends to lag behind domestically owned operations of comparable magnitude. All this means a branch plant economy for Canada, one that will not be able to prosper, much less survive effectively in a tough world marketplace which demands of countries and their companies a high degree of efficiency, productivity and innovation.

Foreign direct investment which owns or controls companies and assets in Canada means key decisions about our economic well-being are made outside our borders. It means outflows of interest and dividends to the extent where they help to create and perpetuate balance of payment problems. I have to say that as long as our capital needs cannot be filled from domestic sources, there is certainly a place for foreign capital in Canada, a welcome place to the extent that it brings real benefits to our economy, to the extent that these benefits can be maximized and their cost minimized.

That is the purpose of the FIRA process. It is not primarily to block foreign direct investment, but to strive to maximize its benefits and to minimize its costs for Canadians, in short, to ensure a good deal for the foreign investors and for Canadians. That it has been able to do this is demonstrated by the high level of approvals, averaging 92 per cent since the process began in 1974. Until recently, at least, this high percentage of approvals was criticized by many as showing that the FIRA process was too lax. In reality, it shows that investors have been able to meet the test of the significant benefit to Canada in such things as more jobs, research and development and exports, either in their original applications or as a result of negotiations by the Government, resulting in a good deal for the investors and for Canada.

This high level of approval helps demonstrate that FIRA has not discouraged or prevented from entering Canada foreign direct investment needed by and beneficial to Canada. This fact is also demonstrated by statistics on foreign capital movements, showing that these inflows in the years after FIRA began operating in 1974 were substantially higher than in the years preceding its beginnings. In fact, foreign direct investment in Canada has steadily increased each year since the FIRA process began in 1974, perhaps dropping somewhat only in the depths of the recession which affected not only Canada, but the entire world. During that recession, capital flows slowed down everywhere, including the United States. However, in the first quarter of 1984, foreign direct investment in Canada reached its highest level in many years.

All of this demonstrates one important point. Capital moves to a country in response to expectation of profits. It comes when investors seek the opportunity to make a profit. Dismantling FIRA, replacing it with a truncated remnant called Investment Canada, will do nothing to respond to this essential point. The Bill does nothing to create more real opportunities for profit by investors.

In any event, FIRA never dealt with more than about 3 per cent of foreign direct investment. It does not deal at all with the largest potential source of foreign investment, the existing foreign-controlled sector in Canada. Projects for expansion, modernization or for new plants by firms already here do not require review and approval by the Government. Investment in the form of loans does not require approval by the Government under FIRA, nor does equity investment in quantities not sufficient to control an enterprise.

To repeat, the Investment Canada Bill does nothing to help our economy offer more prospects to make a profit, more prospects of success to potential investors, whether foreign or Canadian. Nor does it create markets for their production, another factor bringing investment to a country. It does nothing to create consumer or industry demand in Canada or abroad. Using this Bill to dismantle FIRA will not bring more beneficial investment from abroad, either in the limited area covered by the Foreign Investment Review Act—and basically this covers takeovers of companies and new projects by companies not already established here—or the much larger area of the kinds of investment not dealt with by the present FIRA process.

● (1600)

A very serious flaw among the many in the Bill is that while the Government says the new Investment Canada agency will have a mandate to encourage Canadian investment as well as foreign, there is nothing in the Bill offering any real encouragement or incentive to Canadian investment. Yet there is a great potential for more investment by Canadians in their own economy. Canadians have a very high rate of savings; at least twice that of people in the United States. The basic thrust of the Government is to seek out foreign investors to sell off more of our economy abroad rather than to give priority to encouraging our capital needs to be filled from Canadian sources. However, a substantial capacity to do so definitely exists in our country according to studies done by the Investment Dealers' Association.

In September 1981, the President of the Investment Dealers' Association said in part:

> Our capacity to generate savings in Canada is now very large and growing quickly. It would appear that some 94 per cent . . . of the new savings required in the 1980s can be generated in Canada . . . the balance of 6 per cent will have to be imported.

He went on to say:

> This reliance on foreign capital will be slightly less than over the past 10 years and indeed on a net basis will disappear entirely mid-way through the 1990s.

Last week, my office asked the staff of the President of the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada if it could update those projections. We were told that they are generally the same except that they would now indicate that 95 per cent rather than 94 per cent of the savings needed for the investment required by our country in the 1980s can be generated right here in Canada.

The Minister has said that Investment Canada will be given the job of going out and encouraging investment in Canada. However, that has always been the job of the entire Department of what is now called Regional Industrial Expansion and its regional offices across Canada, the Department of External Trade, especially its overseas trade commissioner services, as well as other high-tech Departments like Communications. Apparently the Tories intend to change all that and limit the work of the Government in encouraging investment to the tiny agency they intend to call Investment Canada. It will be composed of no more than the present staff of FIRA, some 130 people, many of whom will have to carry out the remnants of the review process that will still exist if this Bill is passed. I submit that the results will be less effort and less real work by the Government to promote beneficial investment for Canada than was the case under the previous Liberal Government.

The decision made by American Motors after it had been taken over by Renault to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in expanding its Brampton, Ontario, plant and to increase jobs there substantially came after negotiations by the previous Liberal Government through its Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and FIRA. The decision of MBB of Germany to create a joint venture with Fleet Aircraft, a Canadian company, to manufacture helicopters in Fort Erie also came following negotiations by the previous federal Government through Regional Industrial Expansion and the FIRA process. As well, this was generally the case with the deal with Bell Helicopter to establish a plant near Montreal. This also involved investments of hundreds of millions of dollars. These are concrete examples to show how the previous Liberal Government helped attract beneficial foreign investment to Canada involving new technologies, world competitive products and thousands of jobs.

The FIRA process, rather than discouraging or preventing this kind of investment, helped maximize the benefits flowing from it to Canadians, and the investors in question certainly were not discouraged or turned away by the FIRA process. The present Conservative Government, through recently cutting back and limiting of the Industrial and Regional Development Program of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and now apparently intending to concentrate the Government's investment promotion efforts in little Investment Canada, will be decreasing the likelihood of getting more of these kinds of good deals for Canada and for Canadian workers.

Also, if this Bill passes, the Government will no longer be able to review any new investment projects proposed by a company not yet established here or by one established here if the proposal is totally unrelated to what that company is already doing, regardless of the size of the project. This means the Government will not be able to negotiate to seek binding commitments from the investor to maximize the benefits to Canada in areas of jobs, research and development and world product mandates as a condition of allowing the transaction to proceed. In other words, the bargaining power which helped the Government to confirm that there were realistically defined maximum benefits for Canadian workers and the Canadian economy in projects like AMC in Brampton and MBB-Fleet in Fort Erie or Bell Helicopter near Montreal will no longer be there.

As well, if this Bill passes, no direct takeover of a firm in Canada worth less than $5 million and no indirect takeover where control of the parent changes abroad worth less than $50 million will be subject to review by the Government. The door will be open for firms below these thresholds to be taken over and closed down and the products they make exported into Canada by the new parent firms from abroad with jobs being lost to Canada.

If the Bill passes, in addition to the risk of this very difficult kind of situation, the door is open for firms below these thresholds to be taken over and, if not closed down, then turned largely into warehousing operations with the production and technology they have developed transferred abroad. The Government will not be able to do anything to protect Canadian jobs and Canadian technology. As well, the Government will not be able to negotiate and get commitments not simply to preserve but also to confirm additional jobs and other economic benefits if takeovers are below these new thresholds.

The Minister spoke about not wanting to deal with applications to set up peanut stands. If I can mix a metaphor, that is a very big red herring. In many sectors and especially those in the high technology areas, firms are generally small, especially in the beginning stages. As organizations like the Canadian Federation of Independent Business always remind us, Canada's small businesses, generally Canadian-controlled, are a major potential source of new jobs and innovation. The Conservative Government, in pushing for the adoption of Bill C-15, is ready to see all this lost to Canada. Also, many firms below these thresholds may be small but they are major employers and are very big in the economies of the communities in which they are located. This point has also escaped the Conservative sellout artists.

Of course, every government organization and every government program which has been in existence for a number of years has room for updating and improvement. This includes FIRA. As Minister, I made changes in the administrative side of FIRA which did not require legislation to achieve. These changes were made to simplify, smooth out and greatly speed up that process. It is strange that the Conservatives, in developing this Bill, left intact one of the major points of concern both for business and the general public regarding the existing Foreign Investment Review Act. I am talking about the high degree of confidentiality which the law requires of all FIRA operations. Among other things, this confidentiality prevents the Government, except in very general terms in FIRA reports, from setting out the facts on the thousands of additional jobs, research and development and exports which resulted from the application of the FIRA process.

As well, it is strange, in light of the concerns about the so-called arbitrariness of the current FIRA process, which I believe are not justified, that this Bill would make the successor to that process truly arbitrary. It places all powers of decision over the few large takeover cases, which would still be reviewed and could involve the futures of thousands of workers, in the hands of the Minister alone rather than having those decisions be collective decisions of Cabinet.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would say that we do need more investment, both foreign and Canadian but especially Canadian. However, if this Bill is passed, it will not be the way to go about getting it. This Bill, if passed, would weaken the ability of our Government to protect existing Canadian jobs and technology. It will weaken the Government's ability to obtain a realistically defined maximum in terms of more jobs and other economic benefits for Canadians from direct foreign investment.

This Bill should be looked at along with the harm to our cultural identity which will likely be caused by the cuts to the CBC budget, the Prime Minister's speech in New York confirming his desire to have even more of our economy sold off abroad, as well as the Government's seeming willingness to undermine our political and economic sovereignty and prospects for growth through pushing for complete continental free trade. All this forms a disturbing pattern. It is one that should greatly alarm Canadians. Over-all, the Bill is deeply flawed. It requires a major study by the House as well as by Canadians. It does not deserve the support of the House. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault):

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-15, An Act respecting investment in Canada, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Hon. Members have heard the amendment of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). Debate is now on the amendment. Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the opposition House Leader, who is a former Minister, had an opportunity to confer with the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) with respect to his attitude toward the Bill. When the Bill was before the House the other day, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides indicated that he would not support it because it did not go far enough. He said that it was a Bill which would control foreign investment. I was wondering if that is the opinion of the Hon. Member for Windsor West and, if so, why would he object to a Bill which significantly controls foreign investment? The Bill would control over 80 per cent of anticipated foreign investment. Why would he object to the Bill when he knows, as a former cabinet Minister, that his Cabinet gave tremendous consideration to one foreign investment proposition after another? That Cabinet made some 860 determinations a year.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has raised an important point. I think the contradiction is not on our side; it is on his side. If we listened to the rhetoric of the principal spokespersons for the Conservative Party regarding the FIRA process and how difficult and harmful it has been, then we could wonder why the Government has not introduced a Bill which would completely remove that process instead of leaving a tiny remnant for the delectation of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

There is a contradiction inherent in the Conservative position. If one takes its point of view literally, it should not have left a review process of any kind in the hands of the Minister. Yet the Government left a review process. That means it must admit that the problems that both I and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) I have outlined in our speeches are real. Rather than the Conservatives facing up to those problems, they will make it more difficult for the Government, on behalf of the Canadian people, to deal with them in a constructive and beneficial manner. The Government may say that it will review a limited number of large cases, but the sensitivity, for the future of Canadian communities, in many ways will arise from what will happen in the small cases, particularly in high-tech areas.

I would like to respond to the last point made by the Hon. Member which dealt with the time that was taken by Cabinet on FIRA cases. The responsible Minister indicated that 20 per cent of cabinet agendas were filled with FIRA cases. That may have well been correct. However, I would like to tell the Hon. Member—and I believe that I can say this without breaching the concept of confidentiality which is so important to his Prime Minister—that consideration of FIRA cases did not take 20 per cent of cabinet time. There was a process for the quick handling of cases. There was an assurance for full interdepartmental consultation, an assurance for full consideration of regional effects and of a whole range of policy concerns. That will be missing totally in this misguided and truncated Bill C-15. That is why I say that we, on behalf of the Canadian people, must oppose the Bill.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I feel a certain amount of sympathy for the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). He introduced FIRA shortly after his election four years ago and it has gone down the drain. In the last year of FIRA his Government allowed 96 per cent of the takeovers. What is the difference between his position of the last four years and that of the present Government? I cannot see much difference.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, there is a world of difference. I am sorry to say that it is the usual NDP tunnel vision which prevents it from seeing the difference.

First, we oppose changing the present process so that direct takeovers under $5 million in value would be totally exempt. We oppose changing the present law so that indirect takeovers below the $50 million threshold would be totally exempt. We oppose excluding all new transactions from the FIRA process. We oppose leaving the sole authority for the truncated remnant of a review process totally in the hands of the Minister. I could go on, but I think I have given enough examples of the very substantial difference between our view and that of the Conservative Government.

Second, we have a straightforward point of view, which the Conservatives do not. We believe there are problems as well as benefits connected with a high level of foreign control, and we want to maximize the benefit to the extent that we require foreign capital and minimize the costs, while at the same time we do something substantial and constructive to encourage Canadian investment. That is totally missing from the misguided Bill C-15. As I said in my speech, if there was a high level of approval of applications under FIRA by the last Government—and there was—it meant that investors were willing to structure their deals to meet the test of significant benefit. The law was not an impediment. The Government and its officials did their duty and found that the test of significant benefit was met in a way which brought a good deal for the investor and, more important, a good deal for Canadians, especially Canadian workers.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make three quick points. One, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) mentioned foreign control. We are not giving foreigners control. They will be working under our laws. They will hire our people and they will pay taxes in Canada. We are not giving them control.

I could give the Hon. Member an example. When we requested money in Alberta to develop Canada's oil and gas industry—and if that had not happened we would not have the industry which we have today—eastern Canada would not provide a cent. England would not provide a cent. But when we went to the United States the Americans came in with money and drilled about 200 dry holes. It cost the U.S. investors millions of dollars before they struck oil. We did not sell out to the Americans. They invested their money under our laws and our rules. That is what this Government plans to do.

Second, the Hon. Member mentioned that Canada would lose its identity. We are not losing any identity. We are Canadians and we will remain Canadians. Just because we accept foreign money to help develop our resources does not mean that we are losing our identity. We will keep our sovereignty and our identity. They use their money to hire Canadians. We get taxes from them and the country becomes more buoyant. That is the difference in our proposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Windsor West—

Mr. Taylor: My third point—

Ms. Copps: He's not a member of the Reagan administration—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order please. If the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has a third point, will he please make it.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned that during the regime of the Liberals, millions of dollars came into the country and thousands of jobs were created. Why did $9 billion leave the country? Why are their 1.5 million people unemployed? Where are those millions? Where are those jobs?

• (1620)

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, even though my hon. friend has spoken in a way which sheds more heat than light on the whole issue, he has raised some points which I believe will help clarify the debate. The fact is that there have been net inflows during this whole period of foreign investment. The outflows largely result from the coming into Canadian hands of major assets, Canadian ownership of major assets, particularly in the oil and gas industry, about which the Hon. Member is talking. I do not know why he would want to oppose that. If we buy something from people in another country, then, obviously, we have to pay them for it. I hope the Hon. Member is not opposing that and calling for confiscation of those assets, because, in that case, I would certainly oppose his point of view.

Second, the Hon. Member is right when he says that foreign investors have to be here under our laws. Someone asked, I believe the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), if not the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), what is going to stop someone from taking over a Canadian firm and closing it down so that he would not have to face competition from that firm, or so that he could export from a foreign base. I believe the answer was that he would act honourably, but in any event, he would be subject to our laws. That, Mr. Speaker, is just the point. We will not have the laws we have now to ensure—

Mr. Mayer: Don't be silly. No one is going to buy something and close it down.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): What we want is to have constructive conduct both for the investor and for Canada.

Third, when I talked about the CBC—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The time for questions and comments is now terminated.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the next speaker, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand)—the Constitution—(a) Unilingual Quebec traffic ticket appeal. (b) Federal Government's factum; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Farm Credit Corporation—(a) Moratorium on farm foreclosures. (b) Proposed United States program; and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—(a) Effect of budgetary cut-backs on writers. (b) Effect on incomes.

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak this afternoon to the Bill before the House, an Act respecting investment in Canada. I have been in the field of public economic development policy for five years, and during that time I had occasion to examine the work done by the Foreign Investment Review Agency. My conclusion was that dogmatic and ideological considerations have no place in economic development.

Mr. Speaker, representations made by the Opposition, both by the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, have, until now, been highly emotional, ideological and dogmatic. We have seen the damage done by the National Energy Program because it was based mainly on dogmatic considerations. The program was created out of a desire for centralizing control over the oil industry at the federal level, mainly in order to restain the producing provinces which were showing too much independence to the federal, then Liberal, Government's taste.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen the damage done by the 1980 MacEachen budget, which was also based on dogmatic concepts and the desire to weaken the private sector and those people who, according to the Liberal Administration, appeared to favour business methods and development and growth priorities that differred from those sanctioned by the Government at the time. Because Bill C-15 is a step in the right direction towards removing the impact of dogmatism, I am supporting this Bill and I would like to see it referred without delay to the appropriate committee of the House, for thorough analysis in a constructive and a responsible manner, and subsequent amendments as appropriate.

When considering ways of promoting economic development, Mr. Speaker, we should simply ask ourselves whether a given method or measure or the withdrawal of a measure will or will not promote development. That is the question we must ask. Today, environmental protection and employment are some of the aspects that must be considered as a matter of course. We are not talking about development at any cost, on the contrary.

The Bill now before the House recognizes that investment is the linchpin of economic growth and job creation and the key to technological development. That is why we make the assumption that investment in Canada, either by Canadians or non-Canadians, is likely to benefit this country.

The Bill provides for the establishment of a new agency, to be called Investment Canada. It also provides for the review of significant investments by non-Canadians to ensure that the assumption that the investment will benefit Canada is justified. Non-Canadian investors intending to make minor acquisitions or create new businesses need merely notify the agency of their intentions.

This legislation is therefore not sounding the death knell of Canadian ownership or of our pride in our Canadian businesses. It is simply a new Bill that takes a more positive and less dogmatic approach than the legislation it is going to replace.

Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the existing FIRA had approved more than 90 per cent of applications for acquisitions in this country, so the first question that comes to mind is whether the huge amounts budgeted for that exercise have been well spent or even well allocated. Our economy and our country have had other priorities, and I am wondering whether such funds allocated for an exercise which did not seem to be all that essential were indeed wisely allocated, particularly if we consider that, since the advent of FIRA, Canadian ownership has increased regularly despite rising direct foreign investment in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I have the CALURA report which contains a table on percentages of foreign controlled non-financial industries in Canada for 1971, 1976 and 1981. As an example, I will refer to a few sectors only. In agriculture, foreign ownership declined by 9 per cent, 32 per cent in mining, 17 per cent in foodstuffs, 28 per cent in primary processing of metals. Overall, foreign ownership in those sectors decreased by 11 per cent, notwithstanding the fact that FIRA approved more than 90 per cent of foreign applications for acquisitions.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to stress that, in the same report, indirect investment is said to have gone up accordingly. That is another aspect of the whole question of foreign investment which I want to discuss. Investments in the form of direct funding are better than investments in the form of debts, because they create jobs and are profitable to the investor and the host country. The investor cannot make profits and declare dividends unless he succeeds.

As stated in a Conference Board of Canada report:

• (1630)

[English]

In the 19th century foreign investors favoured this country by buying the bonds of its municipalities and railroads. In the early years of this century such portfolio investment was rapidly superseded by foreign direct investment. The economic significance of this distinction is that direct investment typically involves the transfer form the parent to the affiliate of an intangible and proprietary asset such as technology, managerial control, a unique or differentiated product, or a market position. Alternatively, direct investment may involve backwards integration to ensure security of supply for raw materials used in the parent company's production process. The circumstances surrounding direct investment make it desirable from the investor's point of view for the parent to exercise a managerial control that is not possible with portfolio investment in order to protect its unique and non-transferable assets or market position.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this means that direct investments bring us jobs and profitable businesses. On the other hand, indebtedness creates a return for the foreign creditor while the country in debt has no employment, no productivity or return on its investment. The country with borrowed rather than directly invested capital will find itself with growing debt which affects inflation and domestic interest rates and undermines its development opportunities.

Indeed, it is because Canada has irresponsibly accumulated debts that we find ourselves in an economic deadend today. Because of that, we found ourselves compelled to agree to policies we find repugnant, such as the 1 per cent increase in sales tax which was advocated by the previous Liberal Government, and the rate increase for various services provided by the Government, and also to impose cut-backs in certain areas. While it is true that most of these cut-backs are related to administrative costs, we hate having to implement them because of the current unemployment problem.

Mr. Speaker, all Hon. Members are aware that an individual can give the appearance of economic stability, affluence and ownership. He can do so by driving a leased car, by living in a house with a 90 per cent mortgage and by buying his clothes with credit cards. However, they also know that, when his income is reduced and he can no longer meet his payments, he is faced with disaster. He may feel that he owns all this, but it is only an illusion of ownership.

Therefore, I believe that as a country under previous governments, we have, in a similar way, increased our indebtedness as opposed to acquiring the kind of direct capital investment that creates jobs and gives us the flexibility required to assume our responsibilities as a just society anxious to look after those who have the direst needs.

Over the last decade, Mr. Speaker, Canada has been driving a rented Buick. It has been entertaining friends at the golf club using a Visa credit card. The most recent bill handed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) added up to at least a $34 billion deficit and an indebtedness of over $150 billion.

It is time we destroy some of those credit cards, Mr. Speaker. Not all of them, of course, because credit is also a tool for economic growth, but some of them.

Moreover, I also believe it is high time we asked ourselves whether we are not entertaining the illusion of ownership, whether our debt is not the one most important amount or property we wholly own.

Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that theorists have no place in the area of development. I would like to refer to that study by the Conference Board which commented on the establishment of the screening agency along the lines of the "Gray" report's recommendation.

I am sorry that the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has left the House, because I think he would be interested in this comment.

The Conference Board stated in its report:

[English]

Public and political reaction to the Gray report was in large measure dictated by the foreign investment issue's high public profile and the precarious political balance after the 1972 federal election when I believe the Liberal administration had a minority. The key factor in the situation was the New Democratic Party's espousal of some form of foreign investment screening. Finding itself pressured by the Waffle group, a radical fragment of its Party, the NDP in turn exploited its position as the Party holding the balance of power to exert pressure on the ruling Liberals. In this atmosphere, the Gray report rapidly became a cause célèbre.

[Translation]

A celebrated law case. And the report goes on to state that—

[English]

There are a number of academics, politicians and business leaders who are sympathetic to the notion of abolishing FIRA. It is difficult, however, to assess whether these forces opposing FIRA are capable of overcoming the political interests which view FIRA as an important electoral and policy symbol. It goes on to say that the suggestion to permit new investments to enter Canada without being subjected to FIRA would certainly alleviate FIRA's caseload and therefore speed up the process. New business applications comprise about one half of the total applications FIRA receives. This suggests that on close scrutiny FIRA's decision on new acquisitions is based on the fact that it does not believe that these bring significant benefit to Canada. In addition, some domestic companies may not welcome the idea of an open door policy regarding new investment since FIRA provides these companies with an element of protection from foreign competitors. I know, Mr. Speaker, that this is an unhealthy sign for a trading nation such as we are, one which needs strong industry and must cease to take refuge behind non-tariff barriers.

As Hon. Members know, there is both fear of growing protectionism in our major commercial trading partners and a growing need to free trade between nations in order to increase employment growth in various countries, including ours. Canada should be working toward strengthening its industrial sectors to meet competition at home and to go out and secure other markets outside. Therefore, we must strike a balance between leaving our weaker sectors exposed to competition and making every effort to seek new markets, which will only be open to us if we are ready to be open to them. Countries which need to sell to us their specialties would not look kindly on our closing our markets to them or their investments. The whole question of world economic stability and debt service in developing countries is also tied to our ability to trade the world over. This is why—

Mr. Benjamin: Who wrote that?

Mrs. Mailly: I did. This is why I recommend to this House that the Bill should be sent immediately to the pertinent standing committee of the House so it can be studied seriously to ensure that it is all we want it to be. We also want it to ensure that the Minister's responsibilities for the enactment of Investment Canada are also all that they should be.

[Translation]

—because we are not dealing any death blow to the principle of essential screening nor to the protection of Canadian ownership with this legislation, Mr. Speaker. On the contrary, we are introducing a positive investment dimension, combined with a realistic protection of our best Canadian interests.

I note in the Bill, Mr. Speaker, that the responsibilities of the Minister and of the agency are to encourage business investment by such means and in such manner as they deem appropriate, assist Canadian businesses to exploit opportunities for investment and technological investment.

I found out in the Conference Board report I was referring to that France has taken such an open approach. Although France has a Socialist Government, that Government is sufficiently concerned with the country's development to realize it must provide other nations and private enterprise with incentives to come in and invest. Therefore, in their screening provisions, they have that positive aspect we want somehow to copy here, that is to help businesses acknowledge investments here while being very careful to protect Canadian ownership and interests.

Its responsibilities also include making studies of investment both at the national and international level. I noticed that in the definition given of France's screening agency, there was the same attitude, namely to provide an investment information service to promote economic growth, to help develop economic and industrial policies that foster investment and to ensure that investment notification and review is done in accordance with the legislation. I see here some very positive aspects. I see here some serious and responsible interventions on the part of the Minister and his agency in the area of investment in Canada. I do not see what we have been hearing during the last few days, which was that our interests are being sold down the river and that we have forgotten and neglected our pride in Canadian ownership.

Mr. Speaker, I think this Bill is a valid one which should be given serious consideration in committee, with no thought of partisanship, keeping in mind what binds us together which is our country's interests, the interests of today's youth who are unemployed and also the interests of future generations. In considering this legislation, we should make this the first Bill where Parliament has been able to agree that the interests of young Canadians, of the elderly who need funds for their pension plans, of women who need a sound economy to attain equality, are of primary importance. In committee, Mr. Speaker, we ought to consider this Bill carefully and make it one of which we can all be proud, whatever our political affiliation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a few questions, if I may. First of all, I would like to say I found the Hon. Member's speech very interesting, and that it is indeed important to consider this concept in a non-partisan way. However, I think there are a number of very important factors the Hon. Member should not forget.

First: Why did the Government decide to do away with the review process for new investment? Is it not important for small Canadian businesses to look at these small investments?

Second, there is the matter of—

• (1640)

[English]

I switch to English here because my grasp in French of some of the technicalities such as an indirect takeover is simply not sufficient to permit me to proceed in French. How does an indirect takeover, which this Bill now permits, help us to achieve the improvements in employment which I think the Member is quite sincerely attempting to search for?

[Translation]

It is important the Hon. Member should consider what is happening in France, because in France, the Government decided that it was important to have foreign investment in that country. To achieve this, however, it is unnecessary to eliminate all investment regulations, because, as far as I know, if a foreign corporation wants to set up a factory in France, it must first have the Government's permission. And they did not change the regulations to change all that.

[English]

In short, Mr. Speaker, I think that we must seriously consider this in a careful and conscientious way. I agree with the Member that it is important to do so in committee. To do that it is important that the matter of the takeover limit for small investments coming into the country, the matter of whether we will be able to have some review of new investments coming in, and the matter of the size of the indirect takeovers will have to be open to question. I wonder, as a fellow member of that committee—

[Translation]

—whether the Hon. Member can say whether it is true that all Progressive Conservative Members want to look at these things with an—

—an open mind, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says. Can we expect that?

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: I want to thank my colleague for asking these questions.

In reply to the first one dealing with the limits set to exonerate acquisitions under $5 million, I believe that this should in fact be discussed in committee to determine whether this amount is realistic and will help protect small businesses. According to available data and in view of the fact that the number of acquisitions approved by the former screening agency did not cause any harm to small businesses, the amount of $5 million chosen by the Minister seemed appropriate to solve the problem of how not to interfere with investment favourable to Canada while protecting small businesses which may be weaker than others. However, this is a very serious subject which should be reviewed in committee, and this is why I would like us to reach this stage as soon as possible instead of spending many hours in the House letting off steam, which I do not consider particularly constructive.

As for the second question of why a change should be made at this point, it is because, as I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks, over 90 per cent of the applications submitted were approved by the screening agency, which might suggest that the rules were not realistic. Otherwise, perhaps half of the applications or even more would have been turned down. In fact, nearly all the applications were approved in spite of the fact that they were screened at a cost, I believe, of $6,000 each. This is why a change is needed and it is partly motivated by the wish to reduce expenses and to determine whether existing agencies truly play an essential role, especially when they are costly to run, and whether we could not obtain the same results at a lesser cost. This is one aspect of the matter.

Another aspect has to do with indirect transfers between non-Canadians. If a business was already controlled by foreign interests and everything was going well, we have to ask ourselves this question: Does the state have any business interfering in an exchange between two individuals or moral persons for reasons which are mostly ideological? However, this is another issue that my hon. colleague will certainly want to discuss in committee.

As for the last question asked by the Hon. Member, or rather his comment on the situation in France, I believe that he will agree that France has recently taken a new direction, because earlier, the tendency was mostly to direct the economy in a traditional manner with traditional socialistic methods.

But people realized that France does not exist in a vacuum, that she lives in a world where trade reaches beyond frontiers, otherwise there cannot be economic growth in the country.

Canada is in the same situation, perhaps more so for Canada because we do not have the Common Market which does give some protection to France. I therefore think that France is leaning much more on our side than the Hon. Member would care to admit, but I have the impression that we are headed in the right direction and that other countries, for which it is not a traditional approach, seem to be doing the same thing.

But again those are aspects which will be debated in committee, I hope.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

• (1650)

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I think we would fully support this Bill if it were renamed "Abandon Canada" because, to be frank, that is exactly what is happening with this piece of legislation as it is.

I have only two small questions to ask the Hon. Member.

[English]

Yes, I would support it if you renamed the legislation "Abandon Canada".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Ms. Copps: If you renamed the legislation "Abandon Canada"—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has the floor.

Ms. Copps: It would certainly reflect the context of this legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have two short questions. First, what guarantees will be provided by the legislation once it is enacted? What guarantees will be provided for instance for the Sainte-Thérèse workers, who are now faced with the situation that the American General Motors Corporation has decided not to proceed with a $1 billion investment in Canada, but rather to redirect it to the United States? What guarantees will be provided for the Quebec workers so that a corporation such as General Motors, which has already made the best of the Auto Pact . . . what guarantees will be provided not only for existing jobs but for future investments?

Because workers, especially automobile workers, really fear that now the United States and the American automobile manufacturers will attempt to invest in the United States because we have tried to organize labour unions in Canada. What guarantees will your Government allow to ensure that the billions of dollars in investments such as we once had in Sainte-Thérèse, Quebec, will not be called off by American corporations who think only in terms of their own profits in the United States without concern for the interests of Canadian workers?

My second question is this:

[English]

What kind of guarantee? The Government has already put on the chopping block companies like Canadair and deHavilland.

Mr. Benjamin: Nobody will buy them anyway.

Ms. Copps: I would like to know, as a result of this legislation, what kind of job guarantees this Government would give to the workers of companies like deHavilland if a foreign purchaser were to be found. What job guarantees is this Government prepared to give to deHavilland, and specifically what changes is this Government prepared to make to the auto pact to ensure that the kind of investment cancelled in Sainte-Thérèse—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The time for questions and comments has expired. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) will have to answer the question at another time or meet the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) later. Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) raises some interesting questions. Would the House give unanimous consent to having those questions answered?

Mr. Gauthier: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Gatineau to answer the questions of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: No.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. Perhaps I can dwell for a few moments, until five o'clock on a section of this Bill that has been overlooked so far. What is the primary reason, as I see it, for the six-month hoist? Why should this Bill not be allowed to proceed unless certain actions are taken by the Government of Canada? Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker. The very Minister who introduced this Bill did so to promote economic development in Canada and to try to create an atmosphere for investment, not only, as the Bill says, for foreign countries through FIRA, but for ordinary Canadians and Canadian investment. But that very Minister had to cut $175 million from the industrial and regional development program in his Department, what he calls adjustments to regulations. This program provides the very industrial incentives that businessmen need when they want to develop in high unemployment areas of Canada. I am talking primarily about a province like Newfoundland. That very Minister, Mr. Speaker, also approved reductions in what he called other Drie industrial incentive programs to the tune of $25 million for a total of $200 million.

Prior to about two years ago we always had the DREE program in the high unemployment areas. That program guaranteed 25 per cent of the capital costs. Along came the departmental reorganization into DRIE. All of a sudden, costs amounted to 50 per cent to 60 per cent overhead plus 65 per cent of the cost of a study. Now we see there is drastic reduction in the very Department of the Minister who brings in a Bill and says, "We want to encourage investment in Canada by foreigners and by Canadians". Then there was the industrial training program with its cuts. In other words you have a businessman wanting to set up in a high unemployment area of Canada. You could always use what was called on-the-job training. Cuts were announced by the Government amounting to $40 million.

First, if you want to set up, you cannot. That has been cut. If you want to train people, you cannot. That has been cut. The Government was not content with that. It looked at modes of transportation from high unemployment areas. The Government said, "Let us take a crack at that". What about transportation by air? An investor says, "I want to move certain commodities by air". The Government then announces that there will be an air cargo tax coming into effect in 1987. What if you want to go by rail, or by land? We have fare increases, and operating costs. There was a cut of $93 million from VIA rail. What if you want to go by ocean, Mr. Speaker? Surely the ocean method is going to be overlooked by this Government. Not so. Along came the increases in CN Marine and the coastal boat service of Newfoundland. If that were not enough, to the company that wants to export to foreign nations, there were cuts in various departments, even to the extent of cutting out completely the Canadian commercial corporations. There actually was a corporation that dealt in negotiations between governments for the exports of commodities from Canada.

That is why the Liberal Party today introduced a six-month hoist. On the one hand the Government is saying this, and it is saying that it is in favour of investment in Canada by Canadians and by foreign countries. On the other hand, however, this Government turns around and cuts and cuts and cuts the very areas that influence investment. It makes cuts in the very areas in which people would need assistance if they were going to set up in high unemployment areas, or in any part of Canada for that matter. It is a poor reflection upon the Government of Canada.

I see my time has run out, but I think I have made my point. I think I can continue with my additional 15 minutes when the Bill is returned to the House.

● (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I think you can.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise at this point to announce the almost certain but still tentative business for tomorrow. Until further notice, as we are in the process of negotiating with the opposition Parties about making progress, it would be my intention to call Bill C-12 tomorrow morning, followed by the Bill relating to Investment Canada once we have concluded deliberations on Bill C-12 or, as the House will see tomorrow morning, the final product of Bill C-12 after unanimous consent.

That is my present intention for tomorrow. It is subject to change if circumstances or priorities change or if a consensus is arrived at. We look forward to making progress.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, though many in the House might not understand the ramblings of the Government House Leader, they are perfectly clear to me. It is obvious that being the Government House Leader is indeed a chore which only this particular Member could undertake with any degree of proficiency at the moment.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all orders and items preceding item No. 155 stand?

Some Hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Stand.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) moved that Bill C-203, An Act to amend the Official Languages Act (supremacy of the Act) and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages Policy and Programs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, for a number of years I have been submitting Private Member's Bills to this House, aimed at correcting certain discrepancies in the Official Languages Act, and I must say it is a source of great satisfaction to me that every time in the past eight or nine years that I presented a Bill, there was a good debate in the House and the Bill was given serious consideration by the Committee on Official Languages. Moreover, suggestions made in these Bills were adopted both by the Committee and the Government.

Today's legislation, Bill C-203, is therefore one more in a series of Private Members' Bills presented by me in the House, and I may remind Hon. Members that the last time the matter was discussed in 1980, the Bill or Bills were referred to the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages for study and consideration, resulting in very substantial amendments both to the Criminal Code and to the Official Languages Act.

To give Hon. Members some historical background, in 1978, Bill C-210 which I presented in the House was aimed at correcting certain discrepancies in the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1970 and deleted certain references to bilingual districts, which, in any case, were never established. Hon. Members will recall that at each census, a committee was to be formed to examine the establishment of bilingual districts.

These bilingual districts were examined by two commissions, after the 1971 and 1981 census, and Parliament never followed up their recommendations. When the Government fails to follow the recommendations made by a committee established under an Act of Parliament, one would think the legislation was not terribly important and that anomalies such as bilingual districts, for instance, should be deleted from our statutes.

The same Bill C-210, in 1978, gave the defendant the right to be heard and judged by a court or a judge speaking the language of the defendant, and the Bill also amended certain Acts including the Railway Act, the Winding-up Act, the Bank Act and a number of other statutes in order to remove certain discrepancies from the Statutes. I would like to give one example which I find rather obvious, and that is the Railway Act.

The Railway Act provides that, in Quebec, the station agent shall write, with white chalk on a blackboard, the arrival and departure of trains as well as the time of overdue trains. The Act states clearly that this is to be done in French and English in Quebec, whereas it is to be done in English in the other provinces. Well, we all know that today that measure does not apply only in Quebec, thanks to the Official Languages Act. I have colleagues from Ontario, western and eastern Canada—and yourself, Mr. Speaker—who would readily acknowledge that nowadays the proper thing to do for a national carrier is to abide by the Official Languages Act and that it is irregular to have in our statute books a provision under which that procedure applies only in Quebec. The same thing applies to banks, the same thing applies to liquidations: only in Quebec must it be done in French and English, which leads one to believe that the rest of Canada is unilingual and anglophone.

In any case, here I am again with Bill C-203, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act, and I move that it be read the second time and referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages Policy and Programs. Mr. Speaker, Bill C-203 is similar to others like C-214 and C-210 which I introduced in Parliament in May 1980 and whose general intent was to be given approval by the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages. Indeed, in its fourth and fifth reports, the committee refers to the recommendations contained in Bill C-214.

Bill C-203 is based primarily on considerations of a legal nature, but also on considerations of a political nature, in the non-partisan sense of the word. If I may sum up those two aspects in a single statement, I would say that this Parliament must consolidate one of the main foundations of our federal system, the principle of linguistic equality, by deleting from our statutes any ambiguity concerning the importance and supremacy of the Official Languages Act which, coupled with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, happens to be the legal foundations of that linguistic equality. In short, the purpose of this Bill is to assert the political will of this Parliament with respect to the supremacy of the Official Languages Act.

Bill C-203, about which this Parliament is called upon to make a decision, is aimed at asserting the primacy of Official Languages Act Section 2 over any other legislative and regulatory provision of the Parliament and the Government of Canada. Secondarily, it also stipulates that banks and railway companies shall publish, in Canada's both official languages, certain notices and other documents intended for the public. The Acts to be amended now prescribe that only in the Province of Quebec shall they publish certain notices and documents in French and English.

Section 2 of the Official Languages Act passed in 1969 says the following:

> The English and French languages are the official languages of Canada for all purposes of the Parliament and Government of Canada, and possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada.

It was therefore 15 years ago that this Parliament decided to legislate to entrench the principle of linguistic equality in the Canadian Federation. This was an important decision, a symbol of the progress made at the time. However, legally, the Official Languages Act does not necessarily have supremacy over other pieces of legislation passed by this Parliament. However, in our legal system, depending on how the general principles of interpretation of our laws are applied, Section 2 of the Official Languages Act might not have precedence over another legislative provision where there is a conflict. The courts have even recognized that a simple regulation may occasionally, in case of conflict, have supremacy over Section 2 of the Official Languages Act.

Mr. Speaker, this is basically the situation which Bill C-203 wants to change. From now on, if the Bill is passed, in case of a conflict between Section 2 of the Official Languages Act and another federal Act or Regulation, Section 2 would have precedence. I invite the Hon. Members to read the proceedings of the Committee on Official Languages, which was first a Special Joint Committee and is now a Standing Committee, on this issue to learn about the full impact of this Bill.

This Parliament would clearly establish that, as a first step, the courts would attempt to see whether it is possible to interpret federal Acts and Regulations in such a way that they would not cancel, restrict or violate the rule stated in Section 2. If this proves impossible, they would have to give precedence to Section 2, and any other legislative or regulatory provision in conflict with it could be declared nul and void. However, Bill C-203 leaves Parliament free to go against Section 2 of the Official Languages Act by an express statement to this purpose. Thus by giving Parliament the right to go against Section 2 Parliament would be fully empowered to make the political decisions it deems appropriate to ensure linguistic equality in federal institutions. Thus, while some progress will be made as far as linguistic equality is concerned, exceptions to this principle will still be possible.

Once more, Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues in this House to examine the submissions made to the Committee in this regard. For instance, there was the submission made by Professor Gerald Beaudoin, who told us clearly and precisely that, in fact, the purpose of such a clause was to give to the Official Languages Act supremacy over any other piece of legislation so that it would have the status of a linguistic charter.

If the Official Languages Act contains a provision which allows Parliament to make exceptions, this also provides some flexibility and thus establishes a linguistic charter, which is essential in my opinion.

The principle contained in Bill C-203 has already been approved by the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages. Hon. Members will recall that this Committee was asked to examine Bill C-214 introduced during the previous Parliament, whose purpose was the same as that of the bill now before us. It made a recommendation to that effect, even though the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms enshrines this in almost similar terms, in its Section 16 that is well known to us all. It is the same wording, the same principle. The Official Languages act, as pointed out by a witness in Committee, and I quote:

—can cover fields that are not directly provided for in Section 16 of the Charter of Rights.

To illustrate, Mr. Speaker, let me add that the coming into force in 1982 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms has not done away with the relevancy of the Canadian Bill of Rights. On the contrary, it will be remembered that the Canadian Bill of Rights Act was enacted in 1960 and that we also passed in 1977 the Canadian Human Rights Act.

That has not changed anything, those Acts are still in the books and they do not conflict with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Official Languages Act, especially Section 2, therefore remains a necessary element to the promotion of linguistic equality in federal institutions in this country. Bill C-203 proposes to give precedence to that principle, while providing Parliament with a notwithstanding clause. Briefly, such is the extent of the measure submitted to this House.

In a non-partisan spirit, Mr. Speaker, let us now look at the political aspect.

In the Throne Speech, the Government stated on November 5, 1984, and I quote:

My government is committed to ensuring that the equality of the two official languages—so vital to our national character and identity—is respected in fact as it is in law. My Ministers acknowledge the need for ongoing improvements and for vigilance in this indispensable area of our national life.

This is a goal I endorse wholeheartedly, Mr. Speaker, but we are forced to conclude that the Government is not very specific with respect to its legislative intentions. It is my view that if this Parliament were to give all the attention needed to Bill C-203 I am introducing today, a major step would be made in respect of the linguistic reform started in 1969.

Since 1969, the linguistic reform has made undeniable progress. Within the three political parties in this House, there is at the official level at least a wide consensus on the principle of linguistic equality and its implementation. As evidence you have the two resolutions passed by this House during the previous Parliament at the time of the linguistic crisis in Manitoba and the three-party consensus which marked the proceedings in the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages, to which I referred earlier and of which I was a co-chairman.

You will also remember, Mr. Speaker, the wide consensus which prevailed when the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms was adopted, which as we know included important linguistic provisions. The fact remains, however, that the Official Languages Act is somewhat outdated. In many respects, it does not reflect the progress made in the linguistic reform process it had launched and which, in the view of some people, it is not hindering. I am thinking especially of the whole question of language in the work place within the Public Service of Canada. Linguistic equality having been enshrined at the highest level in the Constitutional Act of 1982, consistency now requires that we do more, that we give the Official Languages Act the status it deserves. In so doing, this Parliament will clearly indicate to the Canadian people its determination to actualize the principle of linguistic equality.

Language tensions are still a political fact of life in Canada, Mr. Speaker. Recent events in New Brunswick and Manitoba show that the road to linguistic equality is not an easy one. French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians need reassurance from the federal legislators that, despite the pitfalls, there is unswerving determination at the national level to attain linguistic equality. This is the least we can do, Mr. Speaker, and I conclude my remarks on Bill C-203 by expressing the hope that I will get the support of Hon. Members, in order that the motion on this legislation may carry today.

In past years, Mr. Speaker, one or our colleagues would suggest that the Bill be deferred to a committee for consideration. I think that such an issue could be covered in a resolution by a member of this House. I would greatly appreciate it if this very important and extremely relevant question could be thoroughly dealt with by the joint Committees on Official Languages Policy and Programs chaired by a government member. I think that the committee should meet and thoroughly examine the proposal so that one day true linguistic equality will be achieved in this country.

• (1720)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should like to warn the House that I will make my first comments in French.

[English]

I thought it was only fair to warn you, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity to put into perspective the bill under consideration. It contains an amendment to the legislation on official languages that would give it precedence over all other federal laws, orders, rules and regulations, past as well as present.

I am sure that Hon. Members understand the vital importance of that proposal which has numerous present and future consequences. It is therefore crucial that the underlying principle of the bill be considered in the light of existing legislation, of events which occurred during the past four years and of its impact on our future.

[English]

Over the past four years, we have listened with considerable admiration for the persistence and the single-minded dedication with which the Hon. Member has introduced proposals to amend the Official Languages Act.

I do not know how it is done in Queen's Park, Mr. Speaker, but in the House of Commons, one does not pass between the Chair and the Member who is speaking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is a point of order. I think we should bring that to the attention of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and of other Hon. Members. One does not pass between the Member who is speaking and the Chair. I would hope that all Hon. Members, and particularly the new Members, would keep that in mind.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am sure it was unintentional.

I was making reference to the Hon. Member's persistence and dedication to the cause which he espouses. I can say that we have watched this dedication with a great deal of admiration.

In 1980, the Hon. Member sponsored Bill C-214, to which he has referred today, which proposed to amend the Official Languages Act to assert its primacy over other federal legislation. In June 1984, the Hon. Member introduced an identical Bill, Bill C-255, with the addition of the consequential amendments which are now attached to this Bill. However, Bill C-255 died on the Order Paper as a result of the election called by the Hon. Member's Party. Our roles have now changed.

Our Party has an opportunity to deal with a broad spectrum of concerns which affect all Canadians. I can assure the House that it is our intention to fulfil our mandate in a thoughtful and comprehensive manner.

I suggest to the House that we examine what happened to Bill C-214, the Hon. Member's previous effort to which I referred a minute ago. That Bill was referred on second reading to the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages. This was a committee which included the Hon. Member on its roster. I mention this because the discussions which took place in the House and particularly in the joint committee at that time raised important issues of principle, just as Bill C-203 does at this time. It is my opinion that it is relevant to review some of those discussions as reported in Hansard and in the minutes of the joint committee's proceedings of May 12, 1982.

When the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) spoke on behalf of Bill C-214 in July, 1980, he noted that he was pleased with the progress made in the official languages field since the inception of the Official Languages Act. However, he felt at that time that there were still problems that remained to be solved. He pointed out that the official languages policy had remained consistent over the previous two years and that this was evidence of a high degree of unanimity among the Parties of the House, despite the changes in Government which had occurred in the interim.

From time to time, the Hon. Members has stressed that for some Members, linguistic equality is one of the main principles of the Canadian federation and one which needed to be recognized in the new Constitution in order to be protected against possible infringement.

[Translation]

As we all know, the equality of both official languages is now entrenched in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which is part of our new constitution. The Charter has been enthusiastically endorsed by all three parties.

In the past, the core of the argument made by the Hon. Member was that the principle of linguistic equality as set in section 2 of the Act on Official Languages did not take precedence on all other laws and regulations made by Parliament and the government of Canada. Well, such was perhaps the case when the Hon. Member introduced his first bill but that basic principle of linguistic equality is now part of our constitution.

[English]

As a fundamental part of our Constitution, it would have primacy over all federal legislation and regulations, I would submit. I suggest with respect that the Hon. Member's argument is lost on that score.

I believe that I am on sound ground when I say that the best guarantee of continuity for the principle of equal status and rights of the official languages is not the embodiment of a primacy statement in the Official Languages Act but, rather, the fact that we have now enshrined it in the Canadian Constitution. At this juncture in our history, we have Sections 16 and 20 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Those provisions establish the equality of the status of the official languages of Canada and guarantee equal rights and privileges as to their use in federal institutions.

Section 20 of the Constitution entrenches the right of any member of the public to communicate and receive services in either French or English at the head office of any Department, agency, institution, et cetera, of the federal Government wherever such office is located. Members of the public also have the same right to such services from any other office where there is a significant demand or where the nature of the office makes it reasonable to have bilingual services available. In addition to these fundamental rights, Section 24 of the Charter now permits any member of the public to seek redress in the courts if he or she believes that these rights have been infringed upon. Section 20 of the Charter already places some qualifications on the requisite availability of bilingual communications and services.

The basic criteria to be applied are the provision of such services from head offices and from offices where there is significant demand or where the nature of the office requires a bilingual service. With these criteria in the Charter, it is difficult to understand what the absolute primacy provision of Bill C-203 will add to the linguistic guarantees that already exist with respect to service to the public in Section 20 of the Charter.

I stated earlier in my remarks that it is the Charter of Rights that provides the protection, not the primacy sections of the Official Languages Act or the primacy provision which my hon. friend seeks to insert by way of this Bill. By saying that, I know I am impinging upon the Hon. Member's intentions. In the testimony of the Deputy Minister of Justice and the Deputy Attorney General of Canada before the special joint committee they expressed the opinion of the Department of Justice that the principle enunciated in Section 16 of the Charter was indeed binding and obligatory. Moreover, it was pointed out that anyone feeling prejudiced in the application of Section 16 could appeal to the courts for a remedy under Section 24 of the Charter.

I would suggest that the issue of whether or not Section 2 of the Official Languages Act is supreme over other provisions of any legislation passed by Parliament appears to have been settled by the passage of Section 16 and other related sections of the Constitution. As a matter of fact, the Hon. Member has agreed with this view.

In his presentation to the Joint Committee on Official Languages concerning Bill C-214, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier stated:

> As far as I am concerned ... Section 16 of the Constitution is binding. Moreover, Section 52(1) of Part VII of the Constitution is quite explicit in this matter.
> The Constitution of Canada is the supreme law of Canada, and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect.

Therefore, it is clear, according to the Member, that the principle of linguistic equality alone is adequately covered by the Constitution.

[Translation]

Many Hon. Members are aware that in its fifth report which was tabled before Parliament in April, 1983, the Joint Committee proposed a number of amendments to the Official Languages Act. These amendments, which would have defined both the declaratory and executory characters of the Official Languages Act, provided that Canada's two official linguistic groups were to be equitably represented within every institution of the Parliament and government of Canada and at every level; that all federal Civil Servants could work in the language of their choice, subject to provisions governing the Civil Service, and that the provisions of the Act would apply to all Crown corporations and their subsidiaries as well as joint ventures.

[English]

With respect to the recommendation concerning Crown corporations, it is noteworthy that the joint committee's notes make it clear that the Act was to extend to any corporation or mixed enterprise in which the Government of Canada had a controlling interest. I would like to take a minute to consider the implications of this particular proposition.

Since many subsidiaries of Crown corporations are private sector companies operating under the relevant laws, and probably cannot be considered as institutions of Parliament or the Government of Canada, I suggest that there could be problems if the primacy principle of Bill C-203 were enforced. The question I raised is this: Would all such private corporations in which the federal Government had a controlling interest, have to apply the provisions of the Official Languages Act or the Constitution which relate, or are presumed to relate, to service to the public, publication of notices, and language of work?

In addition, the Government of the day—which now sits in Opposition—in its December, 1983 response to the joint committee's recommendation noted that the Official Languages Act applied to Crown corporations as defined in Part VIII of the Financial Administration Act. In its response, that Government pointed out that attempts to bring all subsidiary corporations and mixed enterprises within the ambit of the Official Languages Act presented significant legal problems and that such a proposal needed to be thoroughly examined at all levels before such steps could be taken. I raise this point in order to identify the complexity of attempting to apply the Official Languages Act to Crown corporations and their subsidiaries. I do not say that it is something which should be studied thoroughly by the House, but I do not think we can rush into it.

For example, if the primacy proposal contained in Bill C-203, which my hon. friend has proposed, were to apply, what would be its effect on the question of the Official Languages Act in its application to Crown corporations and their subsidiaries?

As Members of the House know, Bill C-24 which was passed by the House on June 28, 1984, was an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations. Its provisions included a new Part XII in the Financial Administration Act which defined wholly-owned subsidiaries, and which made it possible for the Governor in Council to give a directive to any parent Crown corporation when it was in the public interest to do so.

If a directive were issued to certain corporations to apply some, but not all, official languages policies, because of the nature of the Crown corporation, would such a directive then be invalid if the primacy provision were in the Act? This possibility was raised by the representative of the Department of Justice in his testimony before the special joint committee in May of 1982. I would like to quote the relevant portion of his statement. He said:

> In our opinion, Orders in Council not in accordance with the provisions of the Official Languages Act, as amended by Mr. Gauthier's Bill, could be cancelled, because in a very broad sense they are instruments of a regulatory legislative nature; from that point of view, they will have to conform to the principles incorporated by Mr. Gauthier's proposition into the Official Languages Act, just like actual regulations or Acts.

In my opinion, this illustrates the difficulties which are inherent in an absolutist provision such as the primacy proposal. I would remind Members of the House that the Constitution, in Section 1 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, recognizes the need for flexibility in the operations of government by providing for such reasonable limits to the guarantees provided by the Constitution as may be prescribed by law. The principle of recognizing limits to the applications of laws is a most important dimension in the legal framework which governs our Canadian society. If such limitations were absent, as appears to be the case with the primacy proposals contained in this Bill, indeed the consequences could be serious.

While Section 16 of the Charter of Rights states the general principle of equal status for both official languages, some limit to this right for French or English and to equal rights is in the very nature of government activities. I suggest that this is why it is in that section of the Constitution. We cannot read Section 16 of the Charter alone and give it an absolute content. It must be read in conjunction with the other sections of the Constitution. We have to consider exactly how Section 16 is going to be applied to any government activities, which do not exist by and of themselves but are there to provide services to individuals and to the public.

I see my time is up, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to thank the House for this opportunity to bring forward this point of view.

[Translation]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) for the quality of his French and for his effort to participate in the debate in both official languages of this country. For my part, I would like to support the bill introduced by my friend the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and his suggestion to have the said Bill referred to the Joint Committee on Official Languages Policy and Programs for further study.

I remember that when Mr. Walter Baker, the then Hon. Member for Ottawa-Nepean, was the spokesman of his party on this issue, he had supported in principle on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party a similar Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). He had definitely supported also his effort to have the Bill referred to a committee for further study. And frankly I am quite disappointed by the decision which the Progressive Conservative Party seems to have made, now that it is in power and unfortunately deprived of Mr. Baker's wise advice, not to allow the bill to be reviewed by the Committee on Official Languages.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate also my hon. colleague for his Bill and I, for one, suggest that it would be quite appropriate to consider again this proposal and the motion that the Official Languages Act be given primacy over all other legislation and not only in the Constitution.

The Hon. Member from the Progressive Conservative Party who has just spoken has indicated that since the Canadian Constitution refers to the official languages and grants equal status to both of them, that is enough, and there is no need to require legislation to assert the primary of the Official Languages Act over all other legislation adopted by the House or orders in council, and so on. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I would be very skeptical about a statement to the effect that only judges, following an appeal made by a citizen, could rule whether the wishes of Parliament in the official languages field have been met. I would say that if we definitely and actually want to guarantee rights pertaining to the official languages, the concept of primacy makes much more sense than simply providing for such rights in the Constitution. The reason is that court proceedings are time-consuming. Since it is a costly process as well, it is not within the means of the average citizen. There have been recently the Bilodeau case in Manitoba and also a similar case involving a Montrealer, both of whom went before the Supreme Court for a parking ticket. Up to now those cases have cost thousands of dollars for the defence of rights provided under the Official Languages Act. Then, if those cases can be so expensive and so difficult in spite of the experience we have gained, the idea of giving primacy to those rights in the law of the land makes good sense.

[English]

I would say as well, Mr. Speaker, in replying, I suppose, to the comments made by the spokesperson for the Conservative Party, that it is surprising to find those Hon. Members changing their point of view from the days when they were in the Opposition now that they are in Government. It is also surprising to hear the argument that because the Constitution is there, therefore, this Bill is negative and should not be proceeded with, even to the extent of having it studied within the Official Languages Committee, a joint committee of the Senate and of the House.

The declaration in Clause 1 of this Bill is quite simple. It says that the Official Languages Act has primacy unless there is a specific declaration by Parliament in another Bill to the contrary. And there remains flexibility in the Bill because it is left up to Parliament to make the decision in each case as to whether or not it wants to exempt a particular piece of legislation from the primacy of the Official Languages Act. That is something which is quite easy for Parliament to do.

I believe, however, it is very important that that be done as a specific act of Parliament and not as something which is done offhand or, quite possibly, Mr. Speaker, something which is done as a consequence of the desires of some officials who might persuade the Minister to let a piece of legislation slip through, one which may not apparently touch on the Official Languages Act but which may, in fact, do so at the expense of the bilingualism which we seek to achieve in this country under federal law.

I have not had the experience of studying this project in the Official Languages Committee. If it goes there, I would certainly hope to have that experience. I am not aware of whether this Bill is totally ideal in its drafting or whether in fact changes or amendments might need to be made.

The question of Crown corporations has been raised. I do not see any fundamental problems there. If those problems are there, they can ventilated before the Official Languages Committee. However, simply to leave the matter now on the grounds that perhaps there were members of the Conservative caucus who felt that the Official Languages Act was a mistake, who declared themselves publicly beforehand—

Mr. Lewis: That is nonsense and you know it.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, I believe there are members from the Manitoba wing of the Conservative Party who made their feelings quite clear—

Mr. Lewis: It is not only a lot of nonsense, but unparliamentary.

Mr. Cassidy: —except when they were called to discipline by their Leader. At that point they reluctantly and grudgingly said they supposed that they supported the Official Languages Act.

Mr. Lewis: Absolute nonsense.

Mr. Cassidy: But it was grudging, and we all know, Mr. Speaker, that some of those people have been quite active in their support of the other side of the issue, as has been the Leader and the entire caucus of the Conservative Party in the Province of Manitoba. It is to the discredit of the Conservative Party that its colleagues in the Province of Manitoba sought to exploit the language issue and sought to inflame that particular issue over several months in the course of the last year or so.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that this House should acknowledge the great courage of Howard Pawley, the Premier of Manitoba, his Cabinet and the New Democratic Government.

[Translation]

The courage demonstrated by Premier Howard Fawley, his Cabinet and the New Democratic Party, the Government of the Province of Manitoba, faced with the opposition of the Conservative Party in that province and the efforts made by the NDP Government in Manitoba, not to solve a problem of their own making but one which began with the Conservative Party, I do not know precisely when, that problem has been with us for over half a century. So, the courage demonstrated by the New Democratic Party in trying to find a solution, to negotiate a settlement with the French-Speaking community in Manitoba—

Mr. Speaker, we intend to get more votes in the Province of Quebec in the next election. As I said when I was in Quebec City last Friday, our party caucus intends to open the way to Quebec, to co-operate with our party in that Province, to provide Quebecers with a real choice in the next election.

Mr. Speaker, I noticed during the last election that Quebecers very clearly wanted a change in the Liberal Party. They have stated bluntly that they are looking for a change. But in many cases the change they got was not what they expected.

The only option available in the last election was the Conservative Party. That is why the voters elected so many Conservative Members of Parliament. I suspect that many Quebecers have agreed with the policy put forward by the Conservative Party during the election campaign. But I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether those Quebecers who chose to vote for the Conservative Party really wanted the policies that are now being suggested, that are being implemented by the Conservative Government, now that they are in office and not simply campaigning?

I noted, Mr. Speaker, how the Conservative Party said one thing during the last election but is now admitting frankly that they withheld their policies from voters for fear of not winning public favour—

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Will you address the Bill?

Mr. Cassidy: I was simply replying, Mr. Speaker, to the interjections of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). Perhaps I can now return to the Bill.

I am disappointed, Mr. Speaker, in the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has indicated that it is no longer a priority for him to ensure that Ontario take the necessary steps to become officially bilingual. I guess I can comment on the fact that the Premier of Ontario, Mr. Davis, spent his last day in the Legislature on Friday. He is standing down and a new leader will come to the fore after the convention which is being held in January. I am disappointed that not one of the four candidates for Premier of Ontario is prepared to put his reputation on the line and say that he is prepared to make Ontario officially—

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have carefully read the very thoughtful Bill which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). In that particular Bill there is absolutely no reference to the leadership campaign in Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order.

• (1750)

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: My colleague comes from Ontario, Mr. Speaker, and I do like to talk about matters relating to Ontario. He has criticized my comments on Quebec, and after having made those comments on Quebec, I will try to switch to another subject.

Reverting to this Bill, Mr. Speaker, I believe it has to be considered in committee. I don't know if all the proposed amendments make sense, but that is why committees exist, to study the details in depth. As I said, I think this House is supposed to discuss not just the Official Languages Act but also the whole question of bilingualism. As I just said, I feel one of the most ignored points to date has been the refusal by the Province of Ontario to accept bilingualism, I mean official bilingualism, for Ontario; and frankly I am very disappointed by the fact that when the Liberals were in power, neither the then Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, nor his Cabinet, or his Government, were willing to put pressures on the Conservative Government, their good friends in constitutional matters, to make sure that Ontario would accept Section 133 of the British North America Act with respect to bilingualism in Ontario.

To conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to leave some time for my colleague from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) who wants to make sure that this legislation will be deferred to the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages Policies and Programs for detailed study and, hopefully, get back here in this House for adoption in the near future.

[English]

Mr. Pierre H. Cadieux (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, before I start my speech on this particular Bill I want to point out to my colleague on the other side that in my riding in the Province of Quebec there was, during the last election, an NDP candidate, but he was not elected. So they had another choice besides the Conservatives.

[Translation]

Since it is the first time I rise in this House, Mr. Speaker, I will start with a few remarks about my constituency of Vaudreuil. I would like to convey my gratitude to my constituents who put their trust in me as their representative and I am convinced that they will do so again in coming years. But I want to extend my best wishes to my predecessor, Mr. Hal Herbert, who had been the member for Vaudreuil for 12 years.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, we are considering today an important Bill, as can be seen from the explanatory notes, considering that its purpose is to assert the primacy of the Official Languages Act over other acts and regulations of the Parliament and Government of Canada.

While listening to the previous speakers, Mr. Speaker, I could not help but think that the progress they mentioned was the result of years of efforts, compromise and adjustments of all sorts. Since the very beginning of Confederation, section 133 of the Constitutional Act of 1867 provided that the use of either French or English was to be allowed before the Canadian courts and in the proceedings of Parliament. As well, use of both languages was mandatory in legislation, records, reports and proceedings of this institution. Through the years, we gradually moved towards the Official Languages Act, which was passed in 1969, and more recently the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in which linguistic rights are clearly defined.

Linguistic reform in Canada bears the stamp of historical continuity as was so rightly put by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) in the speech he delivered, on behalf of the Prime Minister of Canada, before the national conference on linguistic services organized by the Secretary of State last October for the 50th anniversary of the Translation Bureau. He recalled that, through the years, there was a slow accumulation of progress and improvements. In 1927, for example, stamps became bilingual; in 1934, the government of Prime Minister Bennett established the Bureau of Translation; in 1936, banknotes became bilingual too. In 1945, the government began to issue family allowances cheques in both languages to Quebec homes. In 1962, the Diefenbaker government generalized that practice, making all financial operations by cheques bilingual. Three years earlier, in 1959, the Diefenbaker government established simultaneous interpretation here in the House of Commons. All that became with time normal practice for Canadians to the extent that we have sometimes the impression that it has always been the case.

This demonstrates, Mr. Speaker, that this long development towards equality between English and French as official languages of Canada was only possible because of the joint efforts of the federal governments which have followed one another since Confederation, thanks to the capacity of Canadians parliamentarians to understand all the complexity of these questions, legislating in this very sensitive area only when all the studies had been made and the time was right, which means when there was a certain consensus among the Canadian people.

After extensive preparations and thanks to the reflexion aroused by the work and the report of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission, the Official Languages Act which we propose to amend today was in 1969 an important benchmark in this long historical evolution which characterizes the Canadian process. This act, which was passed with the support of all the political parties in the House, extended the principles of bilingualism within the federal administration and emphasized the duties of the departments and other institutions of the federal government in their responsibility to serve the Canadian public in both official languages.

I should like to remind Hon. Members that since the coming into force of the Canadian Charter of Rights, in April 1982, the basic principles of the Official Languages Act are finally entrenched in the Canadian Constitution. The entrenchment of our fundamental linguistic rights into our Canadian Constitution, which again was approved by all political parties is in keeping with the best Canadian tradition of tolerance and civility and that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has firmly resolved to revive everywhere. With the Official Languages Act the federal public administration, has become more consistent, both from the viewpoint of its representativeness and the services it offers, with the realities of Canadian life. Through that legislation, we now enjoy a better balanced Public Service, which is just starting to truly serve the Canadian people in the language of their choice.

Therefore, in a few years time, backed by a solid tradition of tolerance and social justice, the federal Government in its Public Service and various institutions, has made some remarkable progress.

Of course, when it was the Official Opposition, the Progressive Conservative Party did criticize some aspects of the administration of the language policy of previous governments with some exaggeration perhaps but, as the Hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) recalled on October 9 last, it has always supported the program's objectives as well as its administrative consequences. He then stated that the challenge we now have to meet as the new government, is not only to maintain what has already been achieved in the area of official languages but also improve existing services. In short, to do more and better, and for less money than our predecessors.

In the same vein, even though time is running short, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from the statement of the Hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) which will indicate to the House how the Progressive Conservative Party intends to tackle the study of the official languages issue, including the consideration of this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

THE CONSTITUTION—UNILINGUAL QUEBEC TRAFFIC TICKET APPEAL. (B) FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S FACTUM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on December 6 I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) who in the Government had approved of his factum, that is his written argument, in the Duncan MacDonald case before the Supreme Court of Canada. I also raised this same issue on December 10 and December 12. In addition, my colleague, the Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has raised this issue on several other occasions.

Early in December we learned that the Minister of Justice had, by way of intervention, filed a factum in the Supreme Court of Canada opposing Duncan MacDonald's contention that under Section 133 of the Constitution Act, 1867, he had the right to be summoned to the Quebec courts in the English language. Section 133 of the Constitution is that section which guarantees citizens the right to use their own language, English or French, in the courts of Canada and Quebec, as well as in the Parliament of Canada and the legislature of Quebec.

The question to be decided by the Supreme Court in this case was formulated by Mr. Justice Ritchie when he granted leave to appeal and is as follows:

> Does a summons which is printed and published in the French language only and commands an English speaking person to appear before the Courts of Quebec offend the provisions of S. 133 of the Constitution Act, 1867, resulting in a total absence of jurisdiction of the Court to proceed against him?

The Minister of Justice, who is also the Attorney General for Canada, has given the following answers to my questions. In the first place he said that the factum had been approved by the Liberal Government before him. Mr. Speaker, I checked that point and it is absolutely false. The factum is dated November, 1984. In addition, I checked with the Minister of Justice who preceded the present Minister of Justice, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) who was the Minister of Justice before September 17 and had been the Minister for several months. He said that the factum was never put before him for approval.

It is possible that some preparatory work on that factum was being done by civil servants in the months that preceded the Conservative Government. However, the fact that preparatory work was being done does not mean that approval was given. As we all know, civil servants prepare documents and positions for Ministers to approve. The approval, as I say, was not given under the previous Government. It was sent ahead under the Government which is in power today.

It is possible that some confusion has arisen in the mind of the Minister of Justice between the decision to intervene in the case and the approval of the factum. It is true that the decision to intervene in the Duncan MacDonald case by the Government of Canada was made under the previous Liberal Government. However, that is a decision simply to intervene in the case and not the position on the factum. The factum is the written argument which, as I said a few minutes ago, was sent to the court and prepared and approved in the month of November, 1984.

The next answer that was given to me by the Minister of Justice was that the content of the factum was decided upon by the legal officers in his Department and that he had no responsibility for it. Mr. Speaker, that is completely unacceptable. The Minister of Justice is the Attorney General for Canada. He is the chief legal officer for the Crown. He is the chief legal officer for the Government of Canada, and he has the responsibility for any document, paper or legal opinion which goes from his office under his name to any court in Canada. This factum, which bears the name of the Attorney General of Canada, certainly should have been his responsibility. He cannot slough off the responsibility for the contents of that factum on the officials in his Department.

As a lawyer he should know that there are always many legal opinions on any question. In this case we have the Société Franco-Manitobaine which has intervened in the case and supported Duncan MacDonald. This association has looked at the precedents in the law and supported Duncan MacDonald. Alliance Québec, which is an organization of Anglophones in the Province of Quebec, has intervened in this case and decided to support Duncan MacDonald.

● (1805)

The next answer the Minister gave me was that he had not read the factum, and that I had jumped on him because he had not read the factum. I return to what I said a few seconds ago. He has, as the Attorney General, the responsibility to read the factum. It was under his name and there is no way it should have gone forward without his examination and approval. That is his job in the Government of Canada as the Attorney General. To admit that he had not read the factum was a disregard of responsibility.

The Minister also said to my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, when he questioned him about the same thing, that he was making a mountain out of a molehill. I want to say to him and to the Government, the language question in Quebec is certainly not a molehill. That question is being heard tomorrow morning in the Supreme Court of Canada.

We have asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Justice to withdraw this factum, or to say nothing if they cannot say anything good. We had hoped originally that the Government of Canada would support MacDonald as other governments have supported people who were pleading for minority language rights. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us that the Government is withdrawing that odious factum and will at least be quiet tomorrow morning when Duncan MacDonald pleads his case before the Supreme Court.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is important in the interests of the Canadian system of justice not to argue this case in this House because, as my friend has pointed out, it is to be argued tomorrow morning in the Supreme Court of Canada. However, the Opposition leaves the Government no choice but to mention a couple of matters that pertain to this case.

First, it is part of the traditional role of the Attorney General of Canada to intervene before the Supreme Court when important constitutional issues are at stake. The intervention in this case took place on July 18. I am not sure, quite frankly, what date the factum was filed.

Mr. Gauthier: November, 1984.

Mr. Speyer: But I do know that on July 28, the deadline for the intervention, the Liberals were in power.

Second, there is one thing on which I agree with the Hon. Member and that is with respect to the policy. The requirement of a bilingual summons would be the most desirable policy, for many reasons. One reason is that there may be more than one accused, speaking both languages. Another reason is that it is not always possible to know in advance which language the accused will wish to use; therefore, to be sure of having a summons in that language, both languages are necessary. The difficulty with reading this policy into the section is that Section 133 makes clear that process issued by a court may be in either language. Moreover, this provision is included in a paragraph that makes clear that laws must be in both languages. If this were the intent for process, it would also be clear.

I say to the Hon. Member, who has raised this on many occasions matter over many years in the House, and feels very deeply about it, that the legal aspects are going to be decided by the court tomorrow, based upon an interpretation of Section 133. Whatever the policy is, and the policy was stated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that we will defend minority rights in all provinces—

Ms. Copps: Withdraw the factum.

Mr. Speyer: We will not withdraw the factum because an interpretation of Section 133 has to be made before the Supreme Court of Canada. We take the facts as we get them. We cannot withdraw. It is a public law case and our intervention is important. Notwithstanding my friend's intense interest in this matter, a proper construction on the facts of this case, Section 133, must go ahead and we will not withdraw the factum.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION—MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES. (B) PROPOSED UNITED STATES PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on December 10 I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) concerning the intentions of the Minister to introduce legislation in the House before the Christmas recess and hopefully have it passed, because of the very serious debt crisis facing thousands of farm families across this nation.

● (1810)

In early November the Minister of Agriculture instituted a moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures to January 15. I note that if the Minister was not to take any action in the intervening time between early November and January 15, it was obviously just a cynical trick on his part, not allowing foreclosures to take place. When he put on the moratorium, he indicated that he would put in place policies and programs to assist young producers facing financial crises, yet nothing is on the Order Paper to date.

The FCC has appeared before the standing committee. They have not indicated what is being planned by the Department. The Minister's reply was simply that they were putting in place an FCC appeal process. They talked about a couple of pilot project review boards in southwestern Ontario. Also the Minister mentioned previously that he lowered the FCC interest rate from 15 per cent to 14 per cent on a 20-year loan.

We are talking about the kinds of promises which the Tories made in the last election campaign. I should like to refer to their campaign material, particularly the document issued by the then Leader of the Opposition on July 5 in Prince Albert. It indicated that since many producers found their economic viability threatened as a result of being locked into long-term, high-interest rate loans, they would immediately allocate the necessary funding to assist producers in refinancing their loans at prevailing rates. When will the Government introduce that legislation? It is very clear. It indicated that it would reduce Farm Credit loans and all farm loans and immediately allocate adequate funding to refinance outstanding loans to current day prevailing rates. They have not done that. They have not brought in legislation. There is nothing on the Order Paper today from the Minister of Agriculture to implement that campaign promise, or any other one.

I asked the Minister whether he would consider putting in place a program tailored to Canadian needs, Canadian resources and so on, such as the one in the United States. Its set aside program provides a set-aside under farmers' home administration loans of up to 25 per cent for up to a five-year period and, for bank loans, where the bank will forgo up to 10 per cent, it will provide a 90 per cent loan guarantee on the balance. I asked him whether the Government would implement such a program to suit Canadian needs. It was done in the United States over two months ago. The Minister displayed his lack of information by saying that the program was only proposed and was not in operation. In fact, it was approved by the U.S. administration on September 18 and has been the law of that land ever since.

The key point is that we have some 39,000 farm families across the country who are facing very serious financial crises. The FCC estimates that some 1,700 of these families are actually facing financial collapse because of the farm financing situation due to low commodity prices, to high input costs, which are gradually rising, including interest rates, and to falling land values. Many farmers who were in very good positions only four or five years ago are now faced with practically no equity at all. Some 1,700 of them are actually facing farm bankruptcy.

We are asking the Minister to come forward and implement the policies which he promised in the election campaign, or implement other programs, not to talk about farm credit review boards as though that would have a tremendous impact on assisting the hard pressed farmers.

Last week before the standing committee it was estimated that farm debt had increased from $5 billion a couple of years ago to approximately $19 billion at this time. The crisis relates to our youngest farmers, our most productive farmers, who produce at least half of our farm products.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will indicate that the Minister is going to take some concrete and effective steps to help resolve the farm debt crisis facing this country today.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is for me a pleasure to answer that question because I think our Government is doing a very good job for the farmers. Since the present problems faced by farmers result from disastrous economic policies implemented by the previous Government, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) should realize it will take more than two months to repair mistakes made by the previous administration over a twenty-year period. Obviously, it is impossible and even unthinkable to lower suddenly the interest rates, even though I agree they are too high.

However, Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) made two very important announcements for Canadian farmers. First, interest rates charged by the Farm Credit Corporation have dropped drastically. Since December 10th, the interest on loans approved under the Farm Credit Act has decreased. Presently, the interest rate is 13.25 per cent for 5-year loans, 13⅝ per cent for 10-year loans and 14 per cent for 20-year loans. Even if 1 per cent seems to be a relatively small reduction, the consequences will be far-reaching because these loans amount to hundreds of millions or even hundreds of billions of dollars. In fact, this represents a ¾ of 1 per cent reduction depending on the loan duration. Besides, the interest rate charged under the Farm Syndicates Credit Act dropped as well to 13¼ from 13¾.

The Hon. Member should also be pleased by the second announcement made by the Hon. Minister of Agriculture. He is wondering about what will happen after January 15 to farms which benefited from an interruption in the Farm Credit Corporation's collection procedures. Moreover, it is interesting to note that it is only recently that members from the previous government have been expressing concerns about agricultural producers. Before that, they were not concerned about this situation.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister has asked, the Farm Credit Corporation to expand the mandate of its appeal boards, in order for them to review the cases in which it is considering the foreclosure of mortgaged assets.

There are 10 appeal boards, one for each province, and each one is comprised of experienced farmers. At the request of borrowers who are on the verge of losing their assets to the Farm Credit Corporation or those placed in a dire financial situation, the appeal boards, and this is important, will review the cases. Each case will be examined without prejudice by a third party. This seems important to me because of the circumstances, Mr. Speaker. The appeal boards will allow the farmer to ask all his creditors to appear before them. In the presence of all those who are interested in the survival of this farmer one has to think about the survival of the farmer, Mr.

Speaker, the appeal boards will be in a much better position to assess the options which would allow the farmer to come through.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret, but I must interrupt the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS ON WRITERS. (B) EFFECT ON INCOMES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, both in Parliament and outside of Parliament, there has been a great deal of discussion about the $75 million which has been cut from the budget of the CBC. It has been made clear that the CBC has had to issue lay-off notices to 750 of its present employees. What has not been discussed is the fact that there are thousands of people who do not work for the CBC full time who will be affected. These include writers, actors, musicians and dancers, to name just a few who do not work for the CBC but who work occasionally on programs produced by the CBC. The payment these people receive from the CBC has been a substantial part of their total income. Thousands of these people will not be able to do the work they did before the budget-cutting program is put into effect.

Before and during the election campaign the arts and culture community campaigned vigorously by contacting the three political Parties and urging them to continue to support the activities of the arts and culture community which are so important if this country is not to become the 51st state of the United States of America. Each Party made commitments to the arts and culture community.

Members of the Conservative Party, when they were in opposition, promised the arts and culture community that if they were elected, funding would continue at last year's level plus whatever increases were dictated by the cost of living. Now that Conservative Members are in Government, they have announced cuts to all of the culture institutions including the National Arts Centre, the Canada Council and the National Film Board. They have announced a major cut of almost 10 per cent to the CBC. As I indicated, $75 million of this cut relates to programming and $10 million relates to technical equipment.

When the Minister is asked about this, he continually says that he directed the CBC to make the cuts in the administration and to let programming continue. I think the CBC tried very hard to do that but the scope of the cut is such that programming must be cut. When 750 people including writers, producers, sports and news people are let go, the programs which they helped produce do not continue.

The Minister indicated that most of the cuts will be made at the head offices in Toronto and Montreal. Major cuts were made there. However, the fact is that regional cuts will also be very substantial. In the City of Winnipeg, which has played a pretty important role in the operation of the CBC, 80 people are going. In Vancouver, 70 people are going. In Windsor, 50 people are going. In Halifax, 45 people are going. In every community in which the CBC operates, people are going. Those people were not sitting there doing nothing. Those people were in charge of programming.

What happens now to the kind of programming the CBC was directed to do the day it was established in the 1930s by a Conservative Prime Minister, Mr. R. B. Bennett? When he proposed that the CBC be established, Mr. Bennett said that we needed an organization like the CBC to highlight the Canadian identity.

In the City of Winnipeg, programs which were to have been produced next year which would have employed symphony and chamber orchestras will be gone after this year. Drama programs which were produced in Winnipeg and televised will be gone. That is the inevitable result of what this Government is doing. It is a disaster for Canadian arts and culture. It is a disaster for a country such as Canada.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in responding to my distinguished colleague from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), I am pleased to comment in somewhat greater detail on the very painful exercise which affects writers, creators, musicians, dancers, singers and others in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The reduction of some $75 million of parliamentary appropriation will affect in a very unfortunate way the people who are involved.

Before specifically addressing the matter, I feel it is important to stress that the Minister, and indeed most Members, recognize that the CBC plays a very vital role in Canada. I am a personal fan of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The Hon. Member is right in saying that the CBC was a creation of a Conservative Government. It was created in the days of R. B. Bennett. We are convinced that it makes a terrifically important contribution to the cultural life of the country. We want the CBC to be as effective in its expenditure of public funds as it is creative in its programming.

The President of the CBC announced on December 11 the Corporation's plans to cut $75 million from its budget. In reducing its budget, the CBC is trying to use attrition, the freezing of vacant positions, early retirement, and, as a last resort, lay-offs. As the Minister announced in the House last Friday, he approved the CBC's request for amendments to its pension plan which will facilitate early retirement, which should minimize the loss of jobs.

In making its budget reductions, the CBC announced that it has not exempted any activities from its review. Therefore, I would expect that all aspects of the Corporation, including contract work, will be examined closely by the CBC. As the Minister has previously stated, he and the President of the CBC, after serious and thorough consultations within the framework of the respective jurisdictional and regulatory responsibilities, agreed that budget reductions would be applied mainly to the CBC's administrative areas so as to safeguard creativity and production in the cultural areas. This would take place both regionally and nationally.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.30 p.m. the House adjourned.

EXCISE ACT

The House resumed from Friday, December 7, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations with the Opposition House Leaders with respect to Bill C-12. As your Honour will know, there is a notice of Ways and Means motion which was accepted by the House yesterday with respect to certain provisions of this Act which have the effect of amending Bill C-12. We have had discussions and, if you are prepared to put this order to the House, Mr. Speaker, I think you will find, even in the spirit of Christmas, that there would be a decision to accept this order as an order of the House as follows:

That, the Order of the day for resuming debate on the motion of the Minister of State (Finance) for the second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be discharged and the Bill withdrawn;

Provided that a Bill based on the Notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act, concurred in on Monday, December 17, 1984, and on the Notices of Ways and Means motions to amend the Excise Tax Act and to amend the Excise Act, concurred in on Thursday, November 22, 1984, shall be deemed to have met the notice requirement, been introduced, been read a first time and, notwithstanding any Standing Order, to have reached the same stage in debate on a motion for second reading as the former Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, had reached; and

Provided that for the purposes of debate on a motion for the second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of the aforementioned Bill the time remaining pursuant to Standing Order 35(2)(b) shall be deemed to be six hours and 46 minutes.

If you are prepared to put that motion before the House, Mr. Speaker, I think you will find there is unanimous consent for the motion.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to say on behalf of my Party that we do, of course, give unanimous consent after the consultations. I want to say for the benefit of anyone who is watching that what we did was agree to accept amendments without having to go back over all of the debate that had already taken place. That in essence was what that long motion was intended to accomplish.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we also agree. We have been consulted and we give our consent.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Government House Leader have unanimous consent for the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is carried. Accordingly, the order for second reading of Bill C-12 is discharged and the Bill is withdrawn; Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and Excise Act, is deemed to have been introduced, read a first time and is now before the House as an order for resuming debate on a motion for second reading and reference to the Committee of the Whole.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

EXCISE TAX ACT
EXCISE ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on second reading of Bill C-17. It is important for Members to recognize that much of what was contained in Bill C-12 had been carried over from two previous Budgets, one on April 19, 1983, and the other on February 15, 1984, with some important additions that will bring welcome news to some hard-hit sectors of our economy.

Basically the major changes included in this Bill are the following. There is a special recovery tax which, to all intents and purposes, is an increase in the federal sales tax. It is interesting that the new Government is introducing as one of its first pieces of legislation an increase in the federal sales tax.

Not many months ago when similar matters were raised in the House, a variety of individuals had substantial comments to make about what this would result in.

I want to take a few moments to remind Members on the government benches of quotes of certain of their Members regarding excise tax increases. On December 13, 1983, at page 116 of Hansard, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) had this to say:

This . . . is a huge regressive tax bite, far greater than the hospital insurance premiums collected by Ontario or any other province, that this Government has now introduced legislation to try to stop. Hypocrites, cynics, manipulators guilty of deviousness, deviates; this is what the Government is composed of.

This was uttered by the Hon. Member for St. John's West regarding this particular measure. At that time the measure was referred to as being devious. It was a manipulative move on the part of the Government. It was a cynical move on the part of the Government. It was a hypocritical move and represented a sense of deviousness. A few months later this Government has turned around and is introducing exactly the same kind of legislation.

I make this point not only to indicate that once Members of Parliament change from the Official Opposition to the governing Party they change their tune on a whole set of issues but that it is the kind of thing that encourages people to be cynical about what politicians have to say. For example, on February 13 of this year the same gentleman, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, asked the then Minister of Finance if he would agree to eliminate the federal sales tax increase of 1 per cent next October, a sales tax which he has already imposed on the Canadian consumer. He went on to ask if the Minister did not agree that Canadian consumers must be helped if there is to be a continuing recovery. The Hon. Member for St. John's West was attempting to say that, by taking out of the pockets of Canadian citizens through an increased federal sales tax hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars, this money would not circulate in the communities of Canada. He indicated that we are talking about hundreds of millions of dollars that this particular piece of legislation will take from the pockets of Canadians.

It does not take much imagination to recognize that for a recovery to occur in Canada, one of the critical ingredients is that Canadian consumers exercise their buying power and begin to purchase goods and services once again. The Gallup poll of a few days ago indicates that Canadian consumers do not have much confidence in what lies ahead in the next number of months and are consequently keeping their money in their savings accounts. They are not purchasing the goods and services that a recovery requires. What the Hon. Member for St. John's West said back in February, 1984 still holds true today and perhaps even more so.

The Government is trying to generate a sense of confidence in the country and to encourage people to be confident about the ability of the Government to create an environment in which a recovery can inevitably occur. To have as one of the very first acts of the Government the implementation of the increase in the federal sales tax is not the kind of gesture that develops and builds confidence in the country. It does not encourage Canadian consumers to have faith in how the Government is going to treat them.

A few days later, on February 16 of this year, the Hon. Member for St. John's West had this to say:

The Minister calls it the special recovery tax. He should rename it the special recession tax. There is no recovery. This tax is not going to help it, this special recession tax—

Where does the Minister help domestic demand in this Budget? . . . He might help consumer demand if he did away with the 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax that is coming in October. It is a regressive tax that bears more heavily on lower income people.

Again, the Hon. Member for St. John's West was trying to point out to the Liberal Government of the day that introducing a sales tax at that critical time when the recovery was at a very fragile point in its evolution would not be appropriate. I respect that view. I think it would be in the best interests of this new Government, if it wants to build a sense of confidence and hope for the future, to listen to the advice of the Hon. Member for St. John's West. The Government should stop this nonsense of introducing a federal sales tax which will take hundreds of millions of dollars out of the pockets of Canadian consumers. It will do very little in terms of encouraging a positive atmosphere in the country for economic recovery.

A few days later, on March 30, 1984, the Hon. Member for St. John's West had this to say:

One thing I would not have done is to bring in the tax increases which the Minister of Finance brought in in April and which he confirmed again in February. How could this be the right time to have tax increases when there is not any kind of vigorous recovery going on in the economy? I would not impose another 1 per cent increase in the sales tax on the Canadian people in October, and I would not have made the changes in the child tax credit and the other changes which were introduced in the Budget last April.

Again the Hon. Member was trying to point out to the Liberal Government of the day that an increase in the sales tax was not the kind of action which would encourage recovery in the country.

In the dying days of the last Parliament, on June 28, 1984, the Hon. Member for St. John's West went on to say:

In the next three years the Government is going to take $2.4 billion from Canadian consumers through the new special recovery tax, a 1 per cent increase in the sales tax. This year the Government will take $300 million. How can the Minister justify these increased taxes on Canadian consumers whom he is crucifying with increased interest rates at the same time? How can he justify that, the unemployment it will bring, and the recession that will follow it?

Why is it that I am reminding Members opposite of the words of the Hon. Member for St. John's West which were spoken only a few months ago? As an individual who had been the Minister of Finance and who at that time was the financial critic for the Progressive Conservative Party, he was standing up in his place and saying day after day that an increase in the federal sales tax would work against recovery and that it would not be in the best interests of economic recovery in Canada. A few weeks later the first action which was taken by the Progressive Conservative Government was to turn 180 degrees and impose the regressive sales tax increase which it had argued against so vigorously.

It is that kind of behaviour which encourages many people in Canada to have doubts about the integrity of the new Government. It said that it would not increase the sales tax one month, and a few weeks later it did exactly what it had argued against. It is encouraging the people of Canada to wonder, when they hear the Leader of the Government of Canada stand in his place and say the Government will do this, or a certain Minister stand and say the Government will try that, why they should believe the Government today when it has gone against the very concerns and points which were raised a few weeks ago.

I feel badly. I appreciate the argument which members of the Government make when they say that an environment of confidence must be created for the future, and that we must encourage people to be hopeful and positive about what the future will bring. But when the Government says one thing one day and does something totally opposite the next day, it is no wonder that people across the country are wondering whether they can take what the new Government says as the truth.

This legislation will take in excess of $2 billion out of the pockets of consumers over the next four years. That means there will not be $2 billion circulating in the communities of Canada. When a dollar bill leaves the pocket of a consumer and ends up in Ottawa, it is a dollar bill which does not circulate, week after week, month after month, in the rural areas of Canada and in the large cities and small towns of Canada. What that means is that that dollar bill will not circulate and assist small businesses. It will not be there to encourage and support small retailers in Canadian communities.

The amount of $2.4 billion is a lot of money to take out of the economy over a four-year period, especially during this very critical and fragile time. But this is what this Bill does, Mr. Speaker. That is one reason we feel an obligation to oppose it. We feel an obligation to stand in our places and speak against this Bill because it is not in the best interests of economic recovery, economic development and job creation in our country.

There is as well, of course, a tax now being imposed on telecommunications cable companies in the country. It is called a telecommunications programming services tax. A lot of independent cable operators across the country, economic conditions being what they are, are operating very close to, or on the verge of, bankruptcy and now they hear the news that the Government is going to impose additional taxes on television cable rentals.

One has to wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the right step towards economic recovery is to raise taxes on a variety of businesses as well as on individuals. President Reagan felt that it was not the step to take in that country and he has chopped taxes all throughout the system. One can argue about how and where he chopped those taxes but nevertheless he said: "To have economic recovery in the United States of America, we must reduce taxes". This Government believes that to have economic recovery in Canada we must increase taxation of all people, particularly the poorest people in this country. An increase in the federal sales tax, Mr. Speaker, in fact raises taxes disproportionately on the poor of Canada. We in this Party do not feel that is right. We do not believe it is fair and it is certainly not in the best interests of economic recovery.

There is an up side to this Bill as well, Mr. Speaker. It is one very important part of the Bill about which we feel strongly. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), has been lobbying the Government for months and months now to bring some relief to the hard-pressed loggers, fishermen and farmers in his community. Other Hon. Members have tried to point out that these people are undergoing particularly difficult times and that one of the steps the Government could take is to remove the sales tax on diesel fuel for fishermen, loggers, miners and farmers. This section of the Bill is a step in that direction. We applaud the fact that this measure will remove the sales tax on diesel fuel sold to the groups I have just named as long as it is not resold, of course, for commercial purposes. We have been calling for this type of tax measure for some time as a type of tax measure which will result in increased economic activity in those sectors, which will give those particular sectors a boost during these difficult economic times.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, this Bill now slaps an extra tax on domestic air transportation. We are the second largest country in the world and air transportation plays a very critical role in economic development for the various regions of Canada. I see the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is here today. I appreciate his concern about this matter. I wonder how he feels about increasing the domestic air transportation tax. I wonder how this is going to assist economic development in the Arctic and the more remote regions of Canada. I have received many representations from people from central and northern British Columbia who have attempted to point out again that these small airline companies assist in the economic development of the northern interior parts of Canada and that imposing additional taxes on domestic air travel is not going to be in the best interests of assisting those particular sectors.

• (1125)

The total cost, Mr. Speaker, of these measures, excluding the lost revenue from the removal of the sales tax on farm fuels, which we support, will be $3.1 billion for the years 1984-1988. The fact that $3.1 billion is now being taken out of consumers' pockets is something we have a difficult time supporting. As a matter of fact, we cannot support it in all good conscience. It is important that we recognize that in this Bill the new Government is really bringing forward and implementing Liberal legislation. It goes back to the Budget of 1983, and we must recognize that as we listen to our colleagues in the Liberal Party. It has some important additions, particularly assisting those in the mining, logging, fishing and farming businesses, but we have also to recognize that the federal sales tax is an extremely regressive tax. Everyone must pay the federal sales tax regardless of their income or economic status.

That is just not the kind of taxation that these times require. Taking $3.1 billion of purchasing power out of circulation will certainly not help the Canadian economy. Basically the new Government is taking the wind out of any economic recovery sail with this measure. People in the construction industry are struggling and we are going to be paying more tax on construction materials. As I look at my friends across the way in the Conservative Party—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Don't forget us on both ends.

Mr. Riis: I ask my colleagues to the left and right to explain how increasing the tax on construction material will assist economic recovery. I ask them to explain how increasing the federal sales tax and taking money out of consumers' pockets is going to assist the recovery, an obviously very fragile recovery.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is going to lower interest rates.

Mr. Riis: My friend says it is going to lower interest rates. That is an argument I am looking forward to hearing during this debate.

To close my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the $3.1 billion this tax will raise could easily be raised by ending many of the unproductive tax expenditures to the corporate sector. All we have to do is turn to the twenty-third annual report of the Economic Council of Canada where they say all sorts of revenue can be derived from simply taxing the corporate sector in a more sensible way. I think it is time we paid some attention to that. Rather than go out and raise regressive sales taxes, rather than raise taxes on domestic airline companies or small cable television firms, if you like, why not change the corporate tax structure which every single tax adviser has alerted us to? If we want $3.1 billion we can get it from a progressive corporate tax system, not raise it on the backs of Canada's poor, which is what a regressive federal sales tax essentially does.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I think the House will agree that any tax is a bit regressive, but the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is telling us how disastrous borrowing is. I suppose he would now prefer that we not pass this Bill but increase our borrowing.

I was wondering why he would criticize this Bill particularly when it fulfils one of the promises of this Party to relieve farmers, fishermen, loggers, trappers, miners and others of the burden of high fuel costs in developing the resources of this country. I would have thought that he would congratulate the Government on fulfilling that promise.

He also speaks of the federal sales tax as being regressive. Perhaps it is, but all taxes are regressive and he will know from his commercial experience—maybe he does not have that commercial experience—that when companies were organizing the pricing of goods for this fall they calculated the federal sales tax in their prices. So when we came to analyse the effect of that tax Bill we found we would not reduce prices one bit by not passing it. The tax was already built into the pricing system. Those who manufacture and sell wholesale and retail have already built that tax in.

Has the Member thought about that position? Could we have the support of the New Democratic Party instead of continual harping opposition for no earthly purpose at all?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, he is a very mean-spirited individual today. I must admit that I did not catch all of the nuances of the Hon. Member's question. I did hear him say that he agreed that the federal sales tax was regressive. I am curious why an Hon. Member with such concern as he says he has for economic recovery would support a tax that he himself admits is regressive. He himself admits it is going to punish the low income earners of Canada the most. It will punish the poor people of Canada. Why a Progressive Conservative Government would introduce such a tax is beyond me.

However, as I indicated in my earlier comments, we were pleased that the Bill included diesel fuel rebates. I do not think I can recall a single week in the last two years when there has not been a representative of the New Democratic Party arguing on behalf of the loggers, miners, fishermen and farmers of Canada for the need to introduce these steps at this critical time. At that time the Liberal Government indicated that it would look into it and was considering it. I think the Government now recognizes that farm bankruptcies are continuing. Due to the financial situation of the agricultural, mining, fishing and forestry industries across the country, the new Government simply had no alternative other than to bring in this measure. I am certain, however, that they did not do it with enthusiasm, being so concerned about the deficit.

All of these measures, many of them extremely regressive, will raise $3.1 billion essentially from the consumers of Canada over a four-year period. I do not know why the new Government did not simply follow the advice of every progressive financial firm with regard to introducing a fair corporate tax system. In its most recent report the Economic Council of Canada made the point that enormous growth in these corporate tax concessions during the 1970s alone have had a questionable impact. It is estimated that the Government will be spending in the neighbourhood of $18 billion in outright grants and tax breaks to the corporate sector this year. These regressive taxes will raise $3.1 billion over four years. As the Chairman of the Bank of Montreal said not long ago, the corporate sector of Canada is awash in tax concessions. He was trying to tell the Government to stop this nonsense but, of course, he could not say that to his political colleagues in the Conservative Party.

If the Government so desperately wants $3.1 billion, then it should be raised. However, let us not raise it on the backs of Canada's poor and Canadian consumers whose participation we require in this economic recovery period. Let us raise it by introducing some progressive corporate tax measures.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Member knows that this is not a corporate tax Bill. He knows that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), together with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), are reviewing all of the corporate tax changes which are appropriate and those will be introduced in the Budget. We are dealing with an excise tax Bill which goes a long way to creating prosperity in the country. It helps the producers of the country but the New Democratic Party does not want to help producers. Sure, it taxes people, but those taxes were already in place in the system and the Member did not answer that point. Sure, it taxes airline tickets, but of course only the poor travel by air, or maybe it is only New Democrats.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) if he wishes to answer.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain how I can respond to that question, or statement, or whatever it was. I can only say that I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party will be waiting with bated breath to hear the comments of those opposite as they justify increasing a federal sales tax, taxes on domestic airlines and taxes on cable companies. We will be listening carefully to hear how they can explain that this is in the best interest of the Canadian recovery.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a short comment with regard to the Progressive Conservative Member who intervened and the New Democratic Member who responded about how wonderful the rebate and the excise tax are.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Comments must be addressed to the speech of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, if you have a comment to make concerning his speech. Maybe at some other time the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) will make a speech and then you can comment on it.

Mr. Baker: I would not want that to happen, Mr. Speaker. In relation to his speech, it is fine to give the primary producers $200 and then to take $1,000 away from them in other measures. That is exactly what the Government has done. It is fine to give them a rebate on excise tax and to raise the price of gas and oil. It is fine to give them a $200 rebate and then charge them for tying up their boats and for weather forecasts, and to do away with the insurance scheme which was run by the Government so that they must pay another $10,000 or $20,000 a year. I wanted to remind the hon. gentleman that the former Liberal Government would never have perpetrated that on the primary producers of the country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no further questions or comments, we shall resume debate. The Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson).

Excise Tax Act

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the two important amendments which are being made to this Bill. The first one involves the extension of the eligibility for this fuel tax rebate, which had previously been granted to farmers, fishermen, loggers and miners, to include hunters and trappers. This comes about at the very welcome suggestion of the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). The second amendment involves the mechanism by which the rebate is to be delivered.

Having raised in the House on November 29 and December 4 the problem of potential discrimination against some bulk fuel dealers under Bill C-12 as originally drafted, I welcome the opportunity to comment on this amendment. Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the problem arose because, owing to various degrees of integration of the oil companies, some bulk fuel vendors held inventory free of sales tax while other vendors held inventory on which they had paid the sales tax. As originally drafted the Act allowed the dealers with tax-free inventory, those who held the bulk fuel on consignment, to pass the sales tax rebate of 4.8 cents per litre, or 22 cents per gallon, straight through to their customers at the time of sale.

However, those with the tax-paid inventory—and those vendors included independents, co-operatives, some Gulf dealers and others—had to collect the tax back from their customers who in turn would submit their invoices and an application form to Revenue Canada, Excise, in order to secure a rebate of the tax paid. Obviously this created an unfair market situation because most primary producers purchasing fuel would naturally buy their fuel from the vendor who could give them the immediate cash benefit of the tax rebate at the point of sale.

The amendment to the Bill today solves this problem by permitting all bulk dealers to give the rebate benefit at the time of sale. Those dealers who paid the sales tax may secure rebate of that tax paid from Revenue Canada. I trust that, pursuant to paragraph 9 of the notice of motion, the regulations will ensure speedy reimbursement to vendors who regularly sell gasoline or diesel fuel in bulk to these primary producers who hold sales tax bulk permits. The system cannot be perfect due to the fact that the tax goes on at an early point in the system and because only certain purchasers of fuel, the primary producers, qualify for the rebate. Hopefully this option will prove to be the most workable in the market-place.

I am pleased to see the return of this Bill with these provisions suitably redrafted to at least eliminate the discriminatory nature of the application of the sales tax rebate mechanism. I congratulate the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) for her prompt legislative response to a very practical problem in the market-place.

The Government is also to be congratulated for fulfilling yet another campaign promise. Each day we are subjected to suggestions by the opposition Parties that we are not living up to our promises. Nothing could be further from the truth. Each day, just as fast as the presses can run, new legislation is coming forward ensuring the realization of these commitments. Initiative follows upon initiative all within a financial framework that was left in a shameful state by our predecessors who laugh about leaving the cupboard bare so that we cannot live up to our promises.

As a Member from Saskatchewan, I was proud to be present at Prince Albert on July 4 and July 5 and to participate in the policy formulation and I was heartened to hear the words of the Prince Albert declaration delivered by our Leader. Let me quote from that declaration:

> A Progressive Conservative government in Ottawa will respect Western Canada as a unique region with its own special challenges and opportunities. To underline this mutual trust and faith, a Progressive Conservative government will adopt five basic principles which will govern a fresh new relationship between Western Canadians and their federal government.
> 1. Western Canadian economic development policies and strategies will be developed and implemented specifically by and for Western Canada in the belief that regional strengths and prosperity ultimately benefit all Canadians. No longer will regional differences and concerns be crushed in order to fit a single mold designed in Ottawa.
> 2. Federal policies will recognize and welcome Western Canada's role as a powerful engine of growth and job creation across all of Canada. As a special priority, the Progressive Conservative Party will ensure that our youth are able to stay, advance and prosper in their home regions.
> 3. Western Canadians will be brought back to the federal Cabinet table in positions of major power and influence.
> 4. Western Canadians and their duly elected provincial governments will be respected and listened to as partners. The Liberal record of confrontation and bitterness will be replaced by co-operation, consultation and understanding at all times.
> 5. A Progressive Conservative government will prove to Western Canadians by listening and taking action that the federal government is as much their government as that of any region. Westerners will again see Ottawa as a friend—not a threat.
> The loyalty and trust that Western Canadians have placed in our hands will continue to be honoured when we form the national government.
> While these principles are vitally important and provide Western Canadians with hope that once again the federal government can truly be on their side, only specific policy initiatives can put these principles into practice. That is the objective of the Progressive Conservative Party.

This fuel cost relief to primary producers is but one example of these specific initiatives made in the spirit of Prince Albert. In a mere six short weeks, the Government has done more for Canadians than the previous Liberal Government did in four and one-half long years. I repeat that the loyalty and trust that Canadians have placed in our Government will continue to be honoured.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak to this Bill, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

I was amused by the remarks made by the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) because the Conservatives who are present in the House today and those who spoke earlier in the debate seemed to be avoiding any response to what their former finance critic had to say.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), touched on a number of comments that were made by the Conservatives before the election. It is interesting to note that no Conservatives are rising today to deal with statements which were made by them in opposition. Once they are elected to government, while some new taxes were proposed in a couple of Liberal budgets—

Mr. Blenkarn: Why didn't you ask him?

Mr. Fulton: All he touched upon was one minor section of the Bill. I will certainly be touching on his comments while I am speaking this morning.

I would like to hear some Conservative Members respond to what the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) had to say. Let me quote from Hansard of June 28 this year. The Member for Mississauga South can read his Hansard to make sure this is correct. I believe Canadians should know what kind of Party the Progressive Conservatives are. Since this is a regressive tax, I am reminded of Allan Fortheringham's line, "Regressive convertibles".

The Hon. Member for St. John's West, when he was finance critic, said on June 28, 1984, as quoted at page 5249 of Hansard:

> In the next three years the Government is going to take $2.4 billion from Canadian consumers through the new special recovery tax, a 1 per cent increase in the sales tax. This year the Government will take $300 million. How can the Minister justify these increased taxes on Canadian consumers whom he is crucifying with increased interest rates at the same time? How can he justify that, the unemployment it will bring, and the recession which will follow it?

I would like to hear from Conservative Members whether the Member for St. John's West was simply billowing hot air or in fact knew what he was talking about. He is a former Minister of Finance and is presently the Minister of Justice. I assume that Conservatives throughout Canada supported his view that this increase of 1 per cent in the sales tax would increase unemployment and deepen the recession in Canada.

I have yet to hear some Conservative Members explain either why this tax is necessary—one for which there are many alternatives which I will explain—or why the Member for St. John's West was wrong and the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is suddenly so correct.

Let me explain Bill C-17 so that Canadians will know why it is so regressive in terms of its impact on Canadian workers, on poor people, young people and the elderly in this country. The special recovery tax, which is a federal sales tax increase, is a result of the April, 1983 Budget. The rate of federal tax was increased on October 1 of this year and is to expire on December 31, 1988.

The federal sales tax will increase by 1 per cent on a number of items. First, there will be an increase for construction materials. I question the increasingly negative impact that will have in terms of the Canadian housing market. There will be an increase in the tax on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products from 12 per cent to 13 per cent. Again, that is a very regressive tax. Third, an increase in all other taxable goods from 9 per cent to 10 per cent.

This increase was initially introduced in order to offset the cost of the special recovery capital projects which were announced in the April, 1983 Budget. We now know how political those special recovery capital projects were. While some of them were of benefit in terms of increasing jobs, the Government could have found many other uses for that money in terms of special recovery.

The cost of the federal tax increase alone is approximately $2 billion over the four years. That figure is derived from the economic statement "A New Direction for Canada". It is a new direction all right. According to the Member for St. John's West, the new direction is down. This tax will increase the recession and will in fact remove hard-earned dollars from the pockets of consumers which could have been used to increase demand.

A Statistics Canada report indicates that in the second quarter of this year our manufacturing sector was operating at only 72 per cent capacity. Therefore, why is the Government dampening demand? I challenge Conservative Members to tell us what great benefits we will get from dampening demand, increasing unemployment—according to the Member for St. John's West—and prolonging the recession. I have difficulty understanding why the Conservatives fight against measures such as these when they are in opposition but are suddenly converted into Liberals when they are on the government side.

The second major component of Bill C-17 is in terms of the telecommunications programming services tax. I look forward to hearing from Conservatives in the House as to why this is such a progressive measure. Again it comes from the Liberal Budget of April, 1983. It imposes a 6 per cent sales tax on television cable rental, pay television and movies shown on television in hotels. Why do the Conservatives find this to be so progressive? I do not recall their promoting it, particularly during the campaign. I know they will allude quite quickly to the suggestion that some of this money will go to assist independent producers, but the cost of this tax will be some $55 million per year.

The third main component of Bill C-17 is the wholesale tax for motor vehicles which comes from the February 15 Liberal Budget of this year. Apparently this tax is introduced because the sales tax burden on domestically-produced automobiles is higher than that for imported vehicles, because the tax is imposed on the manufacturers' price for domestically-produced vehicles and at the imported price for those vehicles which are brought in from offshore. In essence, this will cause all automobiles to be taxed on their sale price to automotive dealers. As Japanese and European cars are often imported at much less than their wholesale value, this will cause an increase in their sales price from about $100 to $200 relative to North American produced cars.

Rather than deal with the whole automotive question in terms of getting vehicles with all the research and development design done offshore in Europe, Japan or elsewhere in the world, rather than encouraging through direct negotiations with those countries to get the R and D and the automotive production in Canada, again the Tories are taking an approach which they opposed while in opposition. The cost of that will be about $10 million per year according to the February 15 Budget Papers.

The fourth point was touched on by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap. It is one for which I have been fighting since I was first elected in 1979. It deals with the removal of sales tax on diesel fuel for farmers, fishermen, loggers and miners. It is intriguing that the Conservatives are not spending a little more time focusing on what has really happened. A few moments ago a Liberal Member pointed out that in many areas of Canada the increase in fuel costs is greater than the rebate. It is a bit of a shell game to introduce a rebate which is in fact less than the increase. In fact, loggers, farmers, fishermen and miners will be paying more for their fuel than they were before the Conservatives were elected, that is, including the rebate.

It has taken some time to get Conservative Members on the government side to agree in principle that the rebate paper process should take place at the bulk plant rather than individuals doing it at home, keeping various meticulous records and basically working for hundreds of hours per year for the Government in doing the paperwork. I hope the Conservatives ensure that that kind of a process is in place right across Canada, that the actual paperwork for the rebate is done at the bulk plant, and that this is not foisted off on independent logging truckers, skidder operators, fishermen and everyone else. It would be much more reasonable and responsible for that to occur at bulk plant operations.

This measure will remove the sales tax on diesel fuel sold to those groups as long as it is not resold for commercial purposes. The information on the lost revenue, at least to this point in the debate, has not been revealed by the Government. It is a measure which is sensible, particularly for northern communities. I can give some examples in my own constituency now where wood fibre is moved about 125 miles on rubber. That could be wood fibre moving down to Watson Island for the pulp mill or wood coming out of TFL-1 or out of the Buckley Valley for sawing in the mills. In terms of fishermen, I represent the largest single group on the Pacific coast. In an indirect way the rebate will be of benefit to them in that many of the larger fishing vessels on the West Coast gobble up 20 gallons per hour or more. I admit it is of benefit to them, on the one hand, but I should like to hear Tory Members explain why there is an over-all benefit to the Canadian economy, particularly to primary industrial producers such as farmers, fishermen and loggers where the increase is already greater than the rebate in areas such as the one I represent. I consider it to be a bit hypocritical that the rebate was not allowed to include the increase which the Government announced at the same time. They have done a little tap dance without telling the whole story.

The air transport tax is an interesting one to look at in terms of who gets the largest single increase. The tax is being increased from 8 per cent to 9 per cent with the cap now being $30 whereas the previous one was $23. Contrary to what the Hon. Member for Mississauga South said, most people in my constituency at some time or other have to move by aircraft.

There are many communities which I represent that do not have roads or wintertime access to ferry service. They have to move by air. This tax is directed more toward people who must move by air than those people who move for travel purposes.

On that very point, it is interesting that the international tax is increased from $12.50 to $15.00. The large national tourism lobby has got to the new Conservative Government. It has told the Government not to increase massively the international tax because tourists will be driven away. In terms of within Canada, there is no special provision for those who must fly for medical, dental, work, business or whatever purpose. They end up having to pay a much greater tax, again a regressive form of tax.

According to the new Minister of Finance the cost for fiscal year 1985-86 will be $34 million and $50 million for two years thereafter. Again it is money taken, to an enormous extent, from people who can afford to pay it the least.

The total cost of these measures, excluding the figures which have not yet been provided by the Government in terms of the removal of sales tax on farm fuels, will be $3.1 billion. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap pointed out that there is a variety of other areas within the Canadian economy where this money could be found. Of course, the most visible one is the $18 billion which is given directly to the corporate sector. As my friend pointed out, the Chairman of the Bank of Montreal indicated that there were many tax loopholes and tax credits for the corporate sector. It is awash in them. It cannot even absorb them all, it has so many.

Let me refer to what happened in recent years to the Canadian tax system under continuing Liberal and Conservative regimes. A typical unmarried nurse will pay about $5,800 in income tax this year on a salary of $25,000, a tax rate of 23 per cent. A first-class police constable without dependants will pay about 25 per cent of his $32,000 income in tax. The tax rate for the average single high school teacher will be roughly 26 per cent of a $33,000 salary.

Let us take a look at some of the most profitable and largest companies in Canada which pay the lowest rates of tax. In 1982, TransCanada PipeLines Limited, a firm with $4.7 billion in assets and pre-tax earnings of $182 million, paid tax at an effective rate of 7 per cent. Husky Oil Ltd., with assets of $561 million and pre-tax earnings of $22 million, paid an effective tax rate of 5 per cent. Consolidated Bathurst Inc., with pre-tax earnings of $79 million, paid no tax in 1982 and in fact claimed a credit of $3.6 million to be deducted from future taxes.

Let us go back a few years and look at what has happened in terms of the transformation of the tax system in Canada from the burden being carried by the corporate sector to its being carried by middle and lower income Canadians. In 1954 the federal Government of the day collected $1.17 billion in income tax from individuals, slightly more than the $1.05 billion it collected from corporations. Now, 30 years later, the gap has widened dramatically to the advantage of corporations. In 1982 Ottawa collected $26 billion in income tax from individuals and only $8 billion from corporations. This means that individuals were shouldering 76 per cent of the tax burden compared with the corporations' 24 per cent.

I should like to give another example of what has happened in the tax system as we have seen it completely reversed in 30 years, from where the corporate sector paid three-quarters and individuals paid a quarter to individuals paying more than three-quarters and the corporate sector paying an ever declining amount. Shell Canada is a good example. If one reads its annual report, one will get the impression that the oil giant pays an onerous income tax. Its 1982 annual report pegged the company's income tax at $152 million on pre-tax profits of $302 million. In a note, it calculates that this gave the company an effective income tax rate of 50.4 per cent, a hefty rate by any standard.

Another note further down on the page turns that 50.4 per cent figure on its head. It indicates that Shell deferred $199 million in taxes that year. This wipes out the $152 million tax bill and leaves Shell with no tax to pay at all. In fact, Shell got a tax credit of $47 million. The bottom line is a far cry from the 50.4 per cent tax rate first mentioned. Deferring taxes is one of the key ways in which the tax system allows corporations to reduce their tax burden.

We must now go back for a moment to the statements made in this House by the Conservatives before they were elected. We must get some clarification of where that political party is going. There is none better to quote than the Hon. Member for St. John's West. On February 16 of this year, page 1444 of Hansard, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, then the finance critic for the Conservatives, had this to say about the tax measure that the Conservatives later today will vote into law:

> The Minister calls it the special recovery tax. He should rename it the special recession tax. There is no recovery. This tax is not going to help it, this special recession tax... Where does the Minister help domestic demand in this Budget?... He might help consumer demand if he did away with the 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax that is coming in October. It is a regressive tax that bears more heavily on lower income people.

Where are the Conservatives on this? On September 4, most Canadians who follow tax measures thought in good faith that what the Conservatives said in the House of Commons and said during the election campaign was what they were going to do. We now find that what the Tories said in the election campaign is fantasy. When the next federal election comes, I hope Canadians will remember it. What they say during an election campaign is certainly not what they intend to do.

I see the Minister of State (Forestry) (Mr. Merrithew) here. I would like to hear him explain how it is that this fuel rebate the Tories are touting across the country is so beneficial to loggers and the forest sector. He knows full well that in my area of British Columbia the increase in the cost of diesel fuel brought in by his Government is greater than the rebate.

There has to be some degree of honesty and credibility. They send out, at the taxpayers' expense, from the House of Commons literature to everyone in these sectors saying: "Aren't we great? We Conservatives get elected and we give you this wonderful rebate". Should they not put in there, at least in small print so you can just barely read it, that the increase they provided in moving toward the world price has stripped away that small benefit and is driving more and more people to the brink of bankruptcy?

I am hopeful that we will hear from some Conservatives in the next few minutes. I would like to read a few more nice, clear quotes from the Hon. Member for St. John's West, the former Minister of Finance and now Justice Minister, because his quotes really hit the nail on the head. I quote from page 116 of Hansard for December 13, 1983, where the Hon. Member for St. John's West has this to say in referring to the sales tax increase:

> This . . . is a huge regressive tax bite, far greater than the hospital insurance premiums collected by Ontario or any other province that this Government has now introduced legislation to try and stop. Hypocrites, cynics, manipulators guilty of deviousness, deviates; this is what this Government is composed of.

The Member for St. John's West has aptly described his own Party. I find it amazing. With regard to this tax increase we will vote on today, the headlines in The Globe and Mail and the headlines in Gander and Prince Rupert should read "Mulroney Government guilty of deviousness", that they are "deviates, hypocrites, cynics and manipulators", because that is a direct quote from their former Finance Minister. Those are the words that he used this year to describe this measure now being brought forward.

I will put one more quote on the record; they are so good that Canadians have to know where the Tories are coming from. I quote from page 1313 of Hansard for February 13 of this year where, talking about the Minister of Finance, he had this to say:

> Would he agree to eliminate the federal sales tax increase of 1 per cent next October which he has already imposed on the Canadian consumer? Does he agree that Canadian consumers must be helped if there is going to be a continuing recovery?

That says it all. In Bill C-17 the Tories have introduced tax measures which they opposed during the election, in the House of Commons and as Party policy. It is a shameful day when we have to watch Tories get up and vote for what they in principle and policy opposed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech?

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing the bringing forward of this Bill demonstrates, it is the fact that the more things change, the more they remain the same. When in opposition, the Progressive Conservatives opposed this Bill vehemently. The main provisions of this Bill are proposals brought forward by Mr. Lalonde, Minister of Finance in the previous Liberal Government. The present Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), then finance critic for the Official Opposition, was scathing in his criticism of this Bill. I wish to put on the record a couple of quotes from speeches which he made. On December 13, 1983 he said, referring to the sales tax increase:

> This . . . is a huge regressive tax bite, far greater than the hospital insurance premiums collected by Ontario or any other province that this Government has now introduced legislation to try and stop.

He went on to characterize the then Government as follows:

> Hypocrites, cynics, manipulators guilty of deviousness, deviates; this is what this Government is composed of.

On February 16 of this year, talking about the then Minister of Finance, he had this to say:

> The Minister calls it the special recovery tax. He should call it the special recession tax. There is no recovery. This tax is not going to help it, this special recession tax . . . Where does the Minister help domestic demand in this Budget? . . . He might help consumer demand if he did away with the 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax that is coming in October. It is a regressive tax that bears more heavily on lower income people.

The then finance critic for the Progressive Conservative Party was 100 per cent right. This is a very regressive tax. The increase of 1 per cent in the sales tax will take from the people of Canada between $2 billion and $3 billion in purchasing power between 1984 and 1988, a time when our manufacturing sector is operating at only 72 per cent of capacity.

The then finance critic of the Conservative Party was correct when he attacked the then Liberal Government proposal to increase the sales tax by 1 per cent. Nothing has changed. The addition of 1 per cent to the sales tax will have exactly the same effect which he predicted less than a year ago. It will lead to a slowing down of the economy rather than improving it.

Why is the Government going back on the position it took when in opposition? They tell us that the Government's financial cupboard is bare and that this tax is necessary to help deal with the deficit. Surely it is now obvious that the large deficit which we face and the deficits faced by all of the provincial Governments, whether they be Conservative, Social Credit, New Democrat or Parti Québécois, have not been caused because Governments have over-expended but because the economy is operating at so much less than its capacity. It is because there are a million and a half unemployed people. People who are not working are not paying income taxes and are not purchasing goods and services thereby contributing to revenues of government through the payment of income and sales taxes. Instead of contributing to the revenues of the country, they are helping to increase the deficit because when they are not working they are collecting unemployment insurance benefits; or, if they have run out of unemployment insurance benefits as so many Canadians have by now, they are on welfare. Both of these create tremendous costs for federal, provincial and municipal Governments. As well, because they are not working they are not in a position to do the kind of purchasing which would help the economy grow.

If the Government wants to deal with the deficit, it needs to do a major review of the entire tax system. Surely it is now obvious to everyone that our tax system is simply not working as it should. What the former Liberal Government did over the years it was in power and what the present Conservative Government is now doing is to skew the tax system so that individuals will be paying more of the costs of government through increased income tax or through increased charges for the services which government provides. Corporations have been paying less and less and will continue to pay less and less of their share.

As a result of the corporate tax policies of the former Liberal Government which are being continued and made worse by the present Conservative Government, the tax system has mushroomed over the past 12 years into an increasingly large and elaborate set of measures that allow corporations to pay effective tax rates well below the official corporate tax rates of close to 50 per cent. In 1980 corporations were able to use various tax breaks to reduce their effective tax rates to an average of 23 per cent.

The burgeoning list of corporate tax breaks has been a key factor in shifting Canada's tax burden over the years from corporations to individuals. In 1951 corporations paid 28 per cent of all Canadian taxes. By 1981 their taxes, having been reduced by a wide range of special balances and exemptions, accounted for only 17 per cent of the tax bill. Correspondingly, the share of the total tax bill paid by individuals rose from 24 per cent in 1951 to 43 per cent in 1981. This, of course, has cut down on the ability of ordinary citizens to live as well as they should and it has taken away from their purchasing power so that they are not able to buy the goods and services which have been produced by Canadian companies.

Let us see how these tax breaks to corporations really work. One of my colleagues pointed out that at the present time a typical unmarried nurse will pay income tax of $5,800 on an income of $25,000. He also indicated that a single high school teacher will pay income tax of 26 per cent on a $33,000 annual salary. On the other hand, let us look at what some of the large corporations are paying. Husky Oil, with assets of $561 million and pre-tax earnings of $22 million, paid an effective rate of 5 per cent—

Mr. Mayer: Your former leader is a director.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, my friend, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), says that our former leader, and I presume he is referring to Mr. Douglas, is a director of that oil company. So what? I am not suggesting that the company is doing anything illegal or improper. The company is doing exactly what the Government tells it it is entitled to do. I would be surprised if the Minister who is the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette would defend a system in which Husky Oil with pre-tax earnings of $22 million pays an effective rate of 5 per cent as its corporate tax while comparing that rate with the rate paid by the farmers and small businessmen who live in his constituency. I would like him to return to his constituency to see if he can justify that discrepancy to his electorate.

Let us take Consolidated-Bathurst Limited as an example, Mr. Speaker. With pre-tax earnings of $79 million, it paid no taxes in 1982 and in fact claimed a credit of $3.6 million to be deducted from future taxes. Shell Canada, one of Canada's largest oil companies with assets of $4.7 billion and pre-tax earnings of $302 million, paid no income tax in 1982. In fact, it received a credit of $47 million against future taxes. I wonder how many individuals in Canada have that kind of arrangement.

In 1954 the federal Government of the day collected $1.17 billion in income tax from individuals, slightly more than the $1.05 billion collected from corporations. However, by 1982 the federal Government collected $26 billion in income tax from individuals and only $8 billion in income tax from corporations. This means that individuals were shouldering 76 per cent of the tax burden as compared to corporations which were shouldering only 24 per cent of the tax burden.

What actually happens in this kind of tax system, Mr. Speaker? Deferring taxes is one of the key ways in which the tax system allows corporations to reduce their tax burden. Billions of dollars in corporate taxes have been deferred. That is the official description of those taxes. However, the word "deferred" is in fact misleading because in almost every case the taxes are deferred indefinitely and the corporation holds on to its money indefinitely. In fact, Jean-Jacques Carrier, a spokesman for Consolidated-Bathurst, put it very bluntly when he said in reference to deferred corporate taxes:

If you ask me when we expect to pay these, I'll tell you never.

He did not say that he would pay them next year, the year after or a few years from now when the expansion, modernization and improvements in technology which the company is hopefully making will be complete. Mr. Carrier indicated that he will never pay those deferred taxes. What is true of Consolidated-Bathurst is true of Inco and Canadian Pacific. The same is true of virtually every large corporation in this country.

It is that kind of system which explains why Consolidated-Bathurst recorded a tax rate of 34.7 per cent in 1982. That was in its financial statement, even though it paid no income tax.

Deferred taxes have been accumulating in corporate accounts. In 1971 deferred taxes amounted to $2.78 billion. By the end of 1980 deferred taxes had increased almost tenfold to $24.24 billion. One does not need to be very radical to say that is wrong. Former Liberal Cabinet Minister Eric Kierans pointed out that for new small firms the kind of depreciation and tax benefits which are permitted for corporations mean nothing, because those firms do not have the kind of profits which would permit them to defer their taxes.

If the Government is worried about the deficit, it should go after the people who have the money. It should go after the corporations which have received billions of dollars in deferred taxes that will never be paid. I would have much less objection to the corporate tax breaks if I could be convinced that those breaks were being used to improve the efficiency of the companies and the environment which has been damaged so severely by so many mining and forestry corporations over the years. I would have much less objection if the money was being used to provide jobs for Canadians.

Governments, both Liberal and Conservative, have given tax concessions without asking the fundamental questions which should be asked before providing concessions and tax breaks to corporations. What will a company which receives tax deferrals do in order to justify the Government of Canada giving that company the tax deferral? Surely, that is a major, fundamental question which should be asked of every corporation which applies for a deferral of its taxes. Without that, hundreds of millions of dollars will be given to companies and the Government will not ask for anything in return.

I would like to deal very briefly with another aspect of the tax system which I feel requires some examination before a Bill is brought forward to increase the sales tax by 1 per cent. I have already indicated that the increase will have a regressive effect. Information provided by Revenue Canada indicated that approximately 8,000 Canadians who had incomes of over $50,000 a year in 1981—and that is the last year for which we have figures—paid no income tax. We know that there were almost 250 Canadians who managed to pay not one cent of tax on incomes of more than $250,000. How can the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) justify bringing forward a Bill which asks ordinary middle-income Canadians, who are paying between 20 per cent and 30 per cent of their total income on tax, to make that sacrifice when he has failed to approach the individuals and corporations who are not paying their fair share of taxes? It is because the Government has not addressed that question and has not provided its views on that matter that we will oppose the Bill.

I will conclude by summarizing the economic reasons for which we will oppose the Bill. We will oppose it because we believe that the increase in federal sales tax is extremely regressive. Everyone must pay the same amount on goods purchased regardless of their income level. I would remind Hon. Members of the thousands of Canadians with high incomes who pay no income tax, and of the millions who pay a substantial amount of their incomes in taxes.

In addition, we oppose the Bill because it takes over $3 billion of purchasing power out of circulation. That will not help the Canadian economy, it will hurt it. Only by increasing the purchasing power of Canadians can we put the productive capacity of Canadian companies to more extensive use.

Finally, we oppose the Bill because the $3 billion could easily be raised by ending many of the unproductive tax expenditures which are permitted for the corporate sector. In its most recent report, the Economic Council of Canada indicated that the enormous growth in corporate tax concessions during the 1970s had a questionable impact, and more often than not it was a waste of money. It has been estimated that the Government will spend $18 billion this year in the outright grants and tax breaks which will be given to the corporate sector. If the Government needs more money to deal with the deficit, we suggest that it should get the money from those individuals and groups, and particularly Canadian corporations, that have the money but who are not paying their fair share of taxes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

Excise Tax Act

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few brief comments regarding the Bill which is before the House. I would also like to make a few comments regarding the speech that was made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

First, when the Member speaks of skewing the tax system, he should refer to the Bill. In fact, the Bill provides relief for farmers and fishermen. As a rule, farmers and fishermen run quite small enterprises and operations. The Bill provides a considerable amount of relief for those people. If he is opposed to the Bill because this Government is doing exactly what the previous Government did—and that is skewing the tax system in favour of large operators and corporate entities—he should understand that the Bill does exactly the opposite. The Bill will provide tax relief for more than 330,000 farmers. In addition, it will provide relief for a large number of hunters, fishers, trappers and people in the logging industry. A large number of those people are very small operators. If the Hon. Member is opposing the Bill, he is opposing tax concessions for those people who very much need them.

The Hon. Member should also know that the only province in Canada which has an NDP Government has a sizeable provincial tax on fuel. The Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta do not have a provincial sales tax on fuel. He should be aware that the Government of Manitoba, which I assume he supports, is not carrying through with many of the matters to which he referred.

I congratulate both the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) in recognizing the need for tax relief for farmers, fishermen and other people who pay a lot of tax.

With respect to the Minister of State for Finance, concerns were mentioned regarding the way the tax relief would be granted to individual farmers and fishermen because of the different ways fuel was held in bulk. We were very pleased that the Minister, with her officials, was able to workout a system where everyone would be able to have the tax reduction at source without paying it and then collecting it. That is in contrast to the previous Government which had on the books what amounted to a seven cents a gallon, or 1.5 cents a litre, tax which was then refundable. That caused all kinds of problems for the people who had to keep records and then submit them for a refund.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) should understand that some of what the Government is doing is exactly the kind of thing he was criticizing this Government for not doing. I feel that point needs to be put on the record. I believe one of the reasons that the goings on in this place are disconcerting to the people who watch on television is that all they hear is complaining. It is fine that Hon. Members oppose the Bill, but they should oppose it on balance. They should say that there are some things in the Bill they do not like and some things they do like, but on balance they must oppose it.

After listening to Hon. Members of the Opposition speak, one would think there was nothing in the Bill which was of any use to anyone. Clearly, that is not the case. I feel that out of respect for this institution Hon. Members of the Opposition should take a balanced approach every once in a while. I see Hon. Members across the way who represent farming communities. I wonder if any of those Hon. Members have ever risen in their place and said: "Thank you very much; on behalf of my constituency I very much appreciate the kind of tax reduction which has gone forward".

Mr. Riis: Yes, we have.

Mr. Mayer: I hear an Hon. Member opposite saying that that has been done. If that is so, I very much appreciate it because that adds to the validity of the debate which goes on in this place.

I would like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by mentioning one other point which I feel needs to be made. This Government believes above all we should not be taxing people out of business before they open their doors in the morning, whether they be farmers, fishermen, small businessmen or large businessmen.

Mr. Riis: How about sales tax?

Mr. Mayer: Let us try to do everything we can to support these people so they can stay in business and create jobs and everyone can share in the many resources we have in this country. We should not put all of these taxes up front so that people are put out of business before they even get a fair chance at staying in business.

Mr. Riis: What about the sales tax?

Mr. Mayer: This is what the reduction in sales tax, the excise tax on farm fuels, is all about. It is a reduction in tax.

Mr. Riis: How about tax on construction materials?

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member can make the point, and it is a valid point, that the federal Government still takes a large share out of the dollar which goes to purchase fuel or gasoline in this country. However, this Bill certainly is a step in the right direction. It is a recognition of that concept which I just indicated. Let us help people stay in business. Let us make sure they have a chance to make a profit and pay handsomely a tax on the profit they make.

I thought, Mr. Speaker, I should get up and at least try to put in context some of the things which I heard my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, say. Even if the Hon. Member does not have farmers, fishermen or a lumber industry in his constituency, he would have to recognize that, on balance, very many people are going to benefit, such as small employers and small businesses in this country which he and his Party likes to think they support.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister knows that when we come to dealing with this Bill clause by clause we will support the Bill and give the Government whatever credit to which it is entitled. I would like the Minister to compare the benefits to farmers of the provisions in this Bill, such as the farm fuel tax, with the tremendous burden which high interest rates are causing these farmers in the Minister's constituency and in every other constituency in Canada. If I remember correctly—and the Minister is right, I have only a few farmers in my constituency—a recent study showed that 17 per cent of all farmers are in very serious danger of losing their farms, many of which have been in their families for three or four generations. The burden of high interest rates on loans which they have had to make is so onerous that they simply cannot continue. I wonder if the Minister could not compare that kind of problem with the relatively small benefits—and we do not oppose those benefits—which will come to farmers as a result of changes in the sales tax on farm fuel?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to advise the Minister that there are only two minutes left for the question and comment period.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, at the time you recognized me I thought you recognized me as speaking on the Bill rather than making a comment or asking a question. In any event, it will not take me very long to respond to the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North raises a very interesting question, but let me tell him that farmers have as much at stake in the reduction of interest rates as does any sector of the economy. It is interesting to note—

Mr. Orlikow: What are you doing about that?

Mr. Mayer: —that it takes as much money to create a job in the farming sector now as it does in the manufacturing sector because farming has become so capital-intensive in this country. It is, therefore, in the farmers' interest to see that we do everything we can to reduce our deficit. If we do not do that, instead of paying $1 out of every $3 which is collected in taxes to service interest, it will very quickly increase, and farmers, because they have such a capital-intensive industry, will find it more and more difficult to finance because of the pressure of interest rates. I want to tell the Hon. Member that farmers have a tremendous amount at stake in terms of getting interest rates under control in this country. What we are doing here is trying to look at the over-all picture. Admittedly, there was a reduction in government spending of $4.4 billion. However, at the same time it was done in such a way that there were some benefits provided to some of the sectors of the economy.

It is true that the reduction in farm fuel tax is small, but at least it is not an increase. It is a recognition of some of the problems which are there. If we can manage our fiscal affairs properly as a federal Government, then we have a chance to bring interest rates down, not only to the benefit of farmers but to the whole economy. In that case everyone will benefit.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Minister represents a farming community. He is concerned, as he should be, with the welfare of our farmers. Let me ask another question. Given the need for farmers to produce foodstuffs more cheaply, more efficiently and of higher quality than ever before, and given that the Government cut the $4.4 billion with the intention of creating as little difficulty as possible, how can the Minister justify the very major reduction in the expenditures of the federal Government for agricultural research, which amounts to several million dollars, just at a time when, according to experts in the field, other countries are doing very much more than Canada in the way of research?

Mr. Mayer: Again, I would like to put some facts on the record. If the Hon. Member would like to refer to some of the statements made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), he would see that there was an over-all reduction in expenditure by the Department of Agriculture, some of it achieved by genuine reduction and some of it achieved by a fee for service. However, in terms of the reduction in the amount for agricultural research, there was absolutely none.

I agree totally with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North that we must do more research. We are behind in many areas of research because of the lack of emphasis put on research by the previous Government, especially in agriculture. That is very sad because the Department of Agriculture in the past, and I believe still to a large degree, has very much of a world-wide reputation for research. Unfortunately, it was not kept up. I will tell the Hon. Member that the amount of money spent by the Department of Agriculture for research has not been cut by one cent as a result of the Minister of Finance's reductions in over-all expenditure.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister for his comments regarding the advantages to farmers particularly, but also to loggers, miners and fishermen, of the diesel fuel rebate which amounted to cents. In most parts of Canada the increase in price they had to pay for diesel fuel was more than the rebate. Will the Minister confirm that the Government gave a rebate to assist the farmers, miners, loggers and fishermen with one hand and then raised the price of their diesel fuel with the other, so that, in a sense, they were right back where they started?

• (1240)

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I am a little bit surprised at the Hon. Member. I think of anyone on that side he should know better. He should know there was a tax reduction of three cents a litre, which is something like 13 cents a gallon. At the same time there was an increase of 1.8 cents a litre in order that we could balance the books of the energy account, as we are required to by law. That was not collected from farmers. Sure, you can make the argument that we gave with one hand and took away with the other; but the net effect is still a reduction of something like eight or nine cents a gallon on fuel used by the groups the Hon. Member has referred to.

He should also know that the farmers, fishermen and loggers of his area are now eligible for a tax reduction of something like 28.5 cents a gallon. The Hon. Member should know above all, being in the position he is in his Party, that the reduction was genuine and the one did not cancel out the other.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. We shall now resume debate with the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Just a couple of comments with respect to the debate which has been taking place, Mr. Speaker. One of the luxuries in which you can indulge yourself, especially when you have no sense of responsibility as is evidently the case with Members of the NDP, is that whenever a tax increase is imposed you can condemn it; whenever a reduction in government expenditure is proposed you can condemn it; and at the same time you can condemn the deficit. You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Althouse: You used to.

Mr. Nickerson: When you find yourself on this side of the House, a situation in which the NDP will never find itself, then you have to take on that sense of responsibility. You have to work towards a balance in government finances.

Mr. Riis: It is called changing your mind.

Mr. Nickerson: That is precisely what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) are doing.

Mr. Murphy: What did they say before the election?

Mr. Nickerson: It has been brought to our attention that the Bill we are dealing with today is largely a Liberal initiative. It is that, with the exception of the fuel tax rebate which the Liberals had no intention of granting to resource producers. This, as we have heard, even from members of the Opposition, will do much to assist the primary producers. It will certainly assist the trappers, miners and fishermen in my area. Equally it will help agriculturalists and loggers in other parts of the country.

However, we are dealing with what is in many respects a Liberal Bill. That would explain why the members of the Liberal Party are almost as quiet as church mice on this issue. Even the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), usually one of the most vocal Members of this House, has been deafening in his silence this morning.

The money that will be raised under the measures before us today has already been spent, Mr. Speaker. It was part of the so-called special recovery projects and, if you recall, they were brought in not too long before the previous election. The idea was that the Liberals would spend all this money and buy themselves votes. They were going to try and buy themselves back into office. Needless to say the Canadian citizenry did not buy that idea and they condemned the Liberals to a spot in the Canadian political spectrum from which they will never, in my opinion, recover. The money had been spent and the taxes to pay for it were not to come into effect until after the election. That was a dastardly trick and it is a pleasure for me to see that it did not work. They were unable to pull the wool over the eyes of the Canadian electorate as they had done on previous occasions.

The problem we are faced with now in government is to pay off those debts. We have to pay off the money that was spent trying to re-elect the Liberals. I am pleased to see that we are addressing that problem in a responsible manner and it is certainly my intention to vote for this Bill and get some of this Liberal legislation which burdens us all out of the way so that in the new year we can come in with our own new Progressive Conservative tax initiatives.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I always appreciate hearing from the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), particularly when he is very brief. Given the importance of air transportation in his constituency, does he support the tax increase on domestic air transportation from 8 per cent to 9 per cent? Does he think this is a good idea in order to generate more economic activity in his constituency?

Mr. Nickerson: Of course, no one likes tax increases. The unfortunate part is, for reasons I have already stated, that this is something we have to do although we would like not to do it. The Hon. Member should remember that for most of the trips taken by air in areas where there are no roads, usually by small aircraft, this tax will not be imposed. It will not be a burden for most of the people in the area that I represent, which the Hon. Member was so concerned about. They will not be obliged to pay that airline tax; they are exempt.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, in his speech the Hon. Member mentioned that trappers would somehow benefit from the removal of the sales tax. Could he explain how that is going to happen?

Mr. Nickerson: Not from the sales tax but from the excise tax on fuel. The Minister of State for Finance tabled in this House just a matter of three days ago, I believe, Ways and Means motions which would extend the fuel tax rebate to trappers. That was presumably an oversight in the earlier Ways and Means motions but it certainly will be fair because trappers are also resource producers in Canada. It will be of great assistance in the constituency I represent and also in the constituency of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) would like to touch on how much more regressive the 1 per cent sales tax increase will be in a constituency such as his as compared with the constituency of, for example, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The price of most products, by the time they are available in Yellowknife or elsewhere north of 60, are substantially higher because of transportation, overhead and carrying costs. Whether we are talking about 80 cents for milk here as opposed to $1.60 in the north, or anything else, perhaps the Hon. Member can give us some idea of how much more regressive that tax is in his area than in most other areas in the country.

Mr. Nickerson: The answer is very simple. It is proportionate. One per cent is 1 per cent wherever you live in the country.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure the Hon. Member wanted to answer the question so let me make it clear. If there is a 1 per cent increase in sales tax, you pay 1 cent more for an item costing $1 in Toronto. If that same item costs $2 in Yellowknife, then a 1 per cent increase in the sales tax is a 100 per cent leap above and beyond the increase in Toronto. The level of taxes that is being imposed on residents of the western Arctic is perhaps 50 to 100 per cent higher than elsewhere in the country. Has the Hon. Member sought some kind of exemption from the Minister of Finance regarding this regressive tax on his constituents?

• (1250)

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to confirm the Hon. Member's arithmetic. Certainly 1 per cent of $1 is one cent and 1 per cent of $2 is two cents.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue along the line of questioning that the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) was following. The Hon. Member for Skeena pointed out very clearly that increasing sales tax as a method of gaining revenue for the federal Government is discriminatory in two ways. It discriminates on a geographic basis against the people in more remote areas of Canada who pay, by definition, a much higher cost for goods and services. Therefore, the taxes they pay would be that much higher.

It also has an especially punitive aspect with regard to lower income people. One per cent on a commodity has a much greater punitive impact on a lower income earner than on a middle or high-income earner. Yet presumably he favours this type of taxation.

If he does not favour this, perhaps he could explain why the Government has not simply attempted to raise the $3.1 billion through revisions to the corporate tax system, an area of the taxation system from which every progressive tax lawyer and tax accountant says there is a great deal of revenue to be derived. Can the Hon. Member explain why he supports a punitive tax system as opposed to a progressive corporate tax system?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, that was a serious question and I will try to answer it seriously. Any form of tax that is imposed by government will have some bad effect. There is no such thing as a perfect tax. That is why we have a mix of taxes in the Canadian system. We have income taxes on businesses, income taxes on individuals, sales taxes and excise taxes. By juggling them together we can hopefully achieve a system which is as fair as possible overall.

It is fair and reasonable to say that those people who pay the greatest amount of excise tax or sales tax will be those people in the higher income brackets who are making major purchases. If someone buys a Lincoln automobile he will be paying a lot more sales tax than someone who buys a Volkswagon. In that respect the tax is proportionate and not regressive.

What was the second question? I have forgotten it.

Mr. Riis: Geographical.

Mr. Nickerson: There is a certain amount of truth in what the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap says. It is a matter on which I have spoken on several occasions. This is especially true with regard to goods which are manufactured in remote areas of the country with high transportation costs. If you manufacture something in the south for a cost of $100 and then ship it into a remote area at a transportation cost of $100, your total cost is $200 plus sales tax on $100. However, if you brought the components into the northern area of the country at a transportation cost of $100 and manufactured it there, your cost would then be $200 plus tax on $200. Therefore, there is certainly a serious element of truth in what the Hon. Member said.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is a candid person who speaks his mind and appreciates truth. Since there is so little participation in this debate by government Members and members of the Official Opposition, it is valuable to have an intercession like his in which he points out some truths. I want to investigate some of those and conclude with a question.

As the Hon. Member says, this legislation is largely the product of the previous Liberal Government. He does not worry very much about that, although he gets in a few shots. That is a matter of considerable interest for us because it suggests that conformity of opinion on vital matters which affect Canadians every day of their lives as they spend, seek to maintain their lives, and face a heavy burden of taxation in one area while watching others get off scot-free. Later in this debate I would like to explore what the consequences of that might be.

Past Governments in the early 1970s launched themselves on a particular course of action which all too often won the support of the Official Opposition. Now that the former Official Opposition is the Government, it is following the same course of action. It is proposing this legislation for our support without any great uneasiness about it, even though there were warnings from others about it and even though, during the election campaign, members of the Conservative Party expressed great concern about the consequences of that action if it were carried out by the other Party. This conformity of opinion between the Liberal and Conservative Parties is surely a matter of enormous concern to the Canadian people who did not vote to have Conservatives pass this kind of tax legislation rather than having Liberals do it. Surely the Canadian people have hopes for prosperity that require some fundamental reconsideration of tax policy rather than passage by the other Party of the same kind of legislation.

There was just a hint in the comments of the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, that we might see a change in the next Budget. I would be interested to know what reason there is for thinking that the Government is going to change direction in tax policy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Member for Western Arctic for a brief answer, if possible.

Mr. Nickerson: What reason is there to expect changes in tax policy? Mr. Speaker, there are all manner of reasons. Over many years in this House and outside we have stated our intention to have a more equitable system of taxation in Canada which generates interest in business and increases employment opportunities. We ran an election campaign on that. We received a great mandate from the people of Canada. Since coming back to the House there has been a Speech from the Throne which said precisely the same thing. There has been an economic statement issued by the Minister of Finance which outlined the procedure we would follow leading up to significant tax changes in the next Budget. This is all part of the process. The people of Canada can certainly have every expectation that fundamental changes in the approach to taxation will be made by the new Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments on the Hon. Member's speech is now over. We shall now resume debate with the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments remaining I would like to say that never before in the history of the Canadian Parliament have we seen such a rip-off perpetrated on the primary producers of eastern Canada as has been the case with the present Government. The measures that were introduced in the financial statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and in the cuts tabled by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) have removed money from the pockets of our primary producers across the country.

All of a sudden a Bill comes along, for which we are asked to be thankful, which is supposed to provide a small rebate on the excise tax. Actually it is an increase on the rebate of the excise tax available to primary producers. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) says that we should thank the federal Government on behalf of the primary producers for this great act of recognition of our primary producers in the country. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, primary producers are faced with the highest increases ever in their cost of living and in the services which are supposed to be provided by the Government of Canada.

I will call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

S.O. 21

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

PUBLIC WORKS

OFFICIAL RESIDENCE OF PRIME MINISTER—SUGGESTED USE OF REPAIR EXPENDITURES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the Minister of Finance's (Mr. Wilson) public statements on making the best use of scarce resources and having the maximum benefit from scarce resources, I would like to suggest the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) take the $600,000 allocated for repairs to his home and transfer it to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to be used under a Canada Works application. This would mean work for two months for 231 workers, with expense money of $250,000 which would be adequate. Wages would be $350,000, and there would be 1,857 man-weeks, or stamps, as we say, issued from the project.

Repairs to the Prime Minister's residence could be a symbol of national unity. It could include youths and women working on the project, with 20 from each province and the territories to act as a symbol of national unity, a big Canada Works project.

Alas, there is a problem. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has created this year what she calls Constituency Advisory Boards to screen applications in each constituency and to "direct funds to worth-while activities that demonstrate need". According to that criterion, the application would be rejected.

EXTERNAL AID

"ETHIOPIA AIRLIFT" ESTABLISHED BY HALIGONIANS

Mr. Stewart McInnes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has requested the co-operation of all Canadians in the Ethiopia relief effort. In this spirit, a group of Halifax residents have established a charitable organization called "Ethiopia Airlift", to provide speedy and effective assistance to the drought stricken people of Ethiopia.

This group of Haligonians has worked assiduously to build a regional network of support enabling it to collect the food, medical supplies, and equipment that will be sent to the Hararghe region of southern Ethiopia. It has succeeded in sensitizing Nova Scotia, and indeed much of the Maritimes, to the urgency of the Ethiopian problem and the need to make contributions.

This spontaneous outpouring of hope and good will was rewarded when, on December 7, the Canadian Government offered the committee two DC-8 freight jets, each with 44-tonne capacity cargoes. This will enable the group, which is now incorporated as a charitable institution, to carry out two airlift operations to deliver emergency goods to a target group of 50,000 famine stricken Ethiopians, 10,000 of whom are children. The first airlift will be leaving from Halifax on December 23. The offloading and distribution of the supplies will be arranged in co-operation with World University Service of Canada.

"Ethiopia Airlift" is intended to provide emergency and interim aid to a relatively small proportion of needy Ethiopians.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

IMMIGRATION

PLIGHT OF DETAINED IRANIANS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, 13 Iranians have been held in detention at the Avion hotel near Pearson Airport. Some of them have been held for four months or more, all of them for over two months. They claim to be fleeing from Iran and the well-known bloody dictator there. Ten of them went on a hunger strike for a week in order to draw attention to their situation.

In fact they have not been treated according to the laws of Canada. They have never been informed of the program for Iranians under IS-26 of the immigration guidelines. They were never given the pamphlets which are said to be issued, and it is questionable whether the pamphlets to advise them of their rights under that program have ever been printed.

They were never able to apply, as the program provides, for a ministerial permit to stay in the country for 12 months and earn a living until their situation is cleared up. None of these rights according to our laws were given to these people.

Some are now being released because members of certain churches have individually given a $10,000 bond each in order to get these people out of close confinement.

I call on the Minister to inquire into this incident and to inquire why these people were not informed of their rights according to Canada's laws under IS-26, B-6, 9, 10 of the immigration regulations—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

CO-OPERATIVE FEDERALISM

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, all Members of this House, especially those from Quebec, can take pride in the general agreement on regional economic development signed last Friday in Montreal by the federal Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and the Quebec Minister for Intergovernmental Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, I found that the people I spoke to in my riding last weekend were delighted with the action taken by this Government. This generous agreement, which provides funding totalling $1.6 billion over five years, has put an end to a deadlock that existed for several months because the previous Liberal Administration refused to recognize Quebec's full jurisdiction over its economic development. The truly historic moment when the agreement was signed by both governments put an end to an era of confrontation maintained by the previous Liberal Government. The agreement recognizes Quebec's authority over its own development and is a clear demonstration of the spirit of rapprochement and understanding that pervades federal-provincial relations today.

Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign, our Party made a commitment to develop co-operative federalism, and the present agreement is a very clear example of what we had in mind.

DISARMAMENT

CANADIAN POSITION ON UNITED STATES STAR WARS ARMAMENTS PROPOSAL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, over the weekend Canadians were treated to some very disturbing statements by two senior Ministers of the Government. First, we had the incredible admission by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that the Canadian Government is now waffling on its opposition to President Reagan's plan to promote Star Wars weaponry. This is a total reversal of the position taken by previous Canadian governments and recently endorsed by the Minister himself. In fact the Ambassador for Disarmament stated in a recent speech: "Canada's objective at the United Nations is to encourage talks aimed at limiting outer space as an area for military competition . . ."

We have also had the spectacle of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) mocking the many thousands of Canadians who belong to the peace movement. The broad support of this movement across the country is clear, and involves many prominent Canadians, such as 34 recipients of the Order of Canada, former Moderators of the United Church, eight university presidents, and many other distinguished Canadians.

These recent statements clearly show the Government's lack of interest in the peace issue within the international community and within the country. I call upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to clarify the position of his Government immediately on the Star War's issue, and to apologize to all those Canadians who are actively involved in the peace movement.

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

IMPACT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, the Medical Research Council of Canada may lose approximately $30 million for research funding in the upcoming year.

Many research foundations and institutes try to provide research operating funds, but a significant portion of their resources is consumed in the provision of research space, care support facilities, and "seed money" for pilot projects. These items are critical to a successful research program but are not funded by any major external funding agency. The scientific community, therefore, looks to external funding agencies for a significant portion of its operating support.

The Medical Research Council of Canada is prominent amongst these funding agencies, and any reductions in its funding capacity will have an immediate drastic impact on established world class research programs. I seek the assurance of the Government that no cut-backs will be implemented in scientific and medical research funding areas.

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—NEED FOR ASSISTANCE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, a delegation of representatives of all three Parties has just returned from Ethiopia. There is solid unanimity across the Parties both as to the impression we had of the famine crisis there and what Canada should be doing about it. The famine is as bad as you ever saw it on television. People are starving to death.

It is important that Canada intervene massively with emergency food aid because the situation will only get worse next year. Farmers are not able to form, and pastoralists do not have any pasture, so that production is down drastically. At the same time as we are giving emergency food aid, we should not be cutting back on development.

For Ethiopia to become self-sufficient in agriculture, as well as other countries affected by the famine, massive intervention is needed for reforestation, agricultural improvement, and water projects. This is something in which Canada can engage adequately. We have the technological expertise, and we have food riches that we should be giving generously. The United Nations is calling for 1.3 million tonnes of cereal aid. Canada should be coming up with at least 200,000 tonnes as its contribution to a tragic situation in a world in which we are all together.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to mention that the form of debate during question period has vastly improved, and you are to be congratulated.

However, as far as the substance is concerned, I would like to point out to Hon. Members that every day, Canadian voters across Canada are being offered a show that is mediocre in the extreme. What is the purpose of these questions? What are the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party trying to do?

The purpose of their questions is to emphasize the differences in how statements by Ministers and the Right Hon. Prime Minister are interpreted. Their questions are petty, repetitive and full of political rhetoric.

The Liberals ask the same questions as the New Democrats and the New Democrats the same questions as the Liberals. They each want to replace the other as the Official Opposition.

May I suggest to the House that Opposition Members act more responsibly before their constituents and the people of Canada? The role of Opposition Members consists in asking questions about legislation and administration. Let the Party Leaders set an example. Let them stop their childish emoting and show in their questions that they are intelligent and competent.

In fact, their responsibilities and their status as parliamentarians should not leave them any other choice.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SRI LANKA—CIVIL VIOLENCE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the recent past there has been a flood of disturbing news of violence and killings in Sri Lanka, a friend and ally of Canada. Sri Lanka, since its independence from British rule, obtained in 1948, has throughout preserved the democratic process in its Government.

Recent events, reportedly brought about by a Tamil separatist group seeking to divide this small island, include brutal killings of innocent citizens of the country, and are threatening its very carefully preserved democracy. The Government has appealed for calm and urged the Sinhalese majority not to retaliate against innocent Tamils. The Government is struggling hard with meagre resources to bring about peace, and sustain law and order.

The democratically elected Government of this nation is highly vulnerable in this particular case. I call upon the Canadian Government to do everything possible to ensure that law and order, peace and democracy are maintained in the country of Sri Lanka. I would like to know whether the Government is contemplating any steps to assist the Government of Sri Lanka, and what response the Canadian Department of External Affairs will give to try to preserve democracy in this fragile situation.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—TRIBUTE TO WORK OF MUSKOKA COMMITTEE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to throw a bouquet to the acid rain committee which has been so active in the District Municipality of Muskoka. Since 1980 members of this regional government standing committee have been addressing the environmental hazards of acid rain from the grassroots level. Under the auspices of Sheilah Hatch, Mayor of the Township of Muskoka Lakes, this committee serves as a shining example of the impact which can be achieved by municipal government bodies. A small annual budget of $2,000 is used for travelling expenses and correspondence, much of which involves discussions with groups in the United States.

It stands to reason that an acid rain committee should be active in Muskoka. Each time councillors drive to a meeting, they bear witness to stands of hardwood showing ill health, and acidified lakes devoid of fish.

Mayor Hatch attended the meeting on auto emission standards in Ottawa earlier this month. She agrees with me that the technology already in place to reduce nitrogen oxide emissions should be used on Canadian automobiles to bring us up to standards set in the United States.

On their behalf, I challenge other municipalities affected by acid rain to pick up the torch at the grassroots. There can never be too many groups assessing the horrible blight of acid rain in Canada and around the world.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CRITICISM OF MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, recent ministerial statements and actions are leading Canadians to lose faith in the veracity of their Government. When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) publicly confuses law and tradition, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) ascribe greatly different meanings to the word "universality", and their daily ration of vaudeville, diatribe, dogma and evasion, is described as answers, Canadians must wonder if the Government is deliberately trying to undermine our languages.

Confucius, when asked what would be the most important reform to better the human condition, replied after careful consideration: "I should insist on the precise meaning of words".

A Government that debases the language is as bad as one that debases the coinage. I call upon the Government to adopt as its New Year's resolution, to say what it means and mean what it says.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT POLICY—REQUEST FOR PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. When I was on the West Coast I read the disturbing statements of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance to the effect that they intend to dismantle our social programs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are so outraged about this particular situation that I intend at three o'clock to present a motion for an emergency debate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Well, that sacred trust has now become a broken trust.

Will the Prime Minister instruct his Minister of Finance to bring down a Budget at an early opportunity so that we will know the entire scope of what the Government has in mind, who will receive old age pensions and who won't, who will receive family allowances and who won't? I believe the confusion which has now been shored up in the minds of Canadians needs to be dispelled and an early Budget brought down in the House.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in a letter issued on October 6, 1982, it was stated as a recommendation that "it means looking seriously at the universality of the social security programs which now have become the vested interest of the middle class rather than the needy". The author of that is the McMillan, Binch newsletter, and we reject that. We reject that philosophy. We have been defending an important proposition.

Ms. Copps: Get out of the gutter, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: We have been defending an important proposition. I was asked on Friday:

> When the Minister of Finance of this country says that we cannot afford social programs for middle income Canadians, is the Prime Minister saying that the Finance Minister is wrong?

And I answered:

> I am saying that the Finance Minister never said that.

The reason for that is that, inadvertently or otherwise, my friend from Essex-Windsor amputated two important words—"upper and"—from the answer, which meant clearly—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —which meant very clearly—

An Hon. Member: He wasn't quoting.

Mr. Mulroney: —which meant very clearly that when I said that the Minister of Finance never said that, he never had said that, and the Hon. Member was wrong, and the Leader of the NDP was wrong yesterday in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We stand for social justice and fairness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor and the Hon. Member for Oshawa will be able to take care of themselves. However, I want to say to the right hon. gentleman that I am getting a little tired and annoyed—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —at selective miscitations of what I am purported to have said or written. I did not write that document. I did not write that document.

It is quite clear now that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, throughout the election, had a hidden agenda whereby they were going to dismantle the social contract.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): By "social contract" I mean the contract by which hundreds of thousands of Canadians paid taxes in order to qualify eventually for old age pensions. How many of our senior citizens will qualify and how many will not qualify, despite the fact that every one of them has paid taxes toward old age pensions?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all of the senior citizens are going to qualify because we have never placed in jeopardy the notion of universality for our senior citizens. All of them are going to qualify for it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to the McMillan Binch newsletter, I never accused the right hon. gentleman of writing it. The question is, did he charge for it?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AMOUNT OF PENSIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you that I will stand up to this particular exchange when the senior citizens of the country manage to see it and hear it. I am asking the Prime Minister whether the pensioners, and those who will qualify shortly for a pension, will receive the same statutory equal pension that they now receive. Is that going to be a part of government policy? Is there going to be any discrimination between citizens when they reach retirement age?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have responded once, but let me do it again. The response to the question put by my right hon. friend is yes, all senior citizens will deserve the pensions to which they are entitled notwithstanding the profligacy of the previous Government which placed the public finances of Canada in jeopardy.

PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

This morning, in an interview on the CBC French network at quarter past eight, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance mentioned that the Minister had said: We no longer have the resources. He is disavowing the basic principle of universality by setting new limits. We must review universality, starting with its basic definition which should be universality of care and social services for those who need it. They are challenging universality and the criteria established by the previous government.

Mr. Speaker, could the Right Hon. Prime Minister inform the House whether the Parliamentary Secretary, the Member for LaSalle, was speaking on behalf of the Prime Minister, the Government, the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Health and Welfare, when he clearly gave Quebeckers the impression that the principle of universality had been set aside by the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am delighted to hear that a Bay Street lawyer listens to the CBC French network at eight o'clock in the morning. That is good news.

The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have said, and I think to the satisfaction of my hon. friend, that the programs and principles governing those programs are and will be fully effective. What we are trying to do is engage in civilized dialogue and debate with Hon. Members to find out whether we cannot make a better use of the public funds at our disposal, for the benefit of those members of our society who are truly in need. That is what we are trying to do.

[English]

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT STATEMENT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, when will we get the clear truth from the Prime Minister? When will the Prime Minister stop covering the debate with his usual thick layer of verbal fudge, as Richard Gwyn said in his column yesterday? When a person is blamed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when will we get a clear statement so that Canadian families who make more than $26,000 will know that their programs will not be cut, as suggested by his Minister over the weekend?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important, if my hon. friend is going to be fair and objective in his analysis, that he defer at least for a while to his spokesman on health and welfare, who is quoted in La Presse of November 20, 1984—

An Hon. Member: That is not the question.

Mr. Mulroney: Indeed it is the question—as saying the following:

[Translation]

If the Government wishes to remove universality of pensions in order to give the money to senior citizens who need it most, I agree with that.

That is what he said, and I am merely saying that we do not want there to be any doubt about the principle of universality. We want to provide benefits for those members of our society who need them most, regardless of the positions taken by the Liberal Party.

[English]

Ms. Copps: Slick, slick, slick.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps Hon. Members would like to remember who we are and where we are.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Mr. Broadbent: And we should all remember to tell the truth, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

UNIVERSALITY PRINCIPLE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Prime Minister has said on a number of occasions that he regards the universality principle in social programs to be a sacred trust. His Minister of Finance said recently that social programs for the poor are a sacred trust. These are two different notions. Does the Prime Minister still regard the universality principle of social programs to be a sacred trust, and will he tell us precisely what he means by the universality principle?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend is going to quote, and if the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor is going to quote, I ask him to go back and read Hansard of Friday with regard to the amputation of language that took place. He ought to begin his comments today by apologizing to the Speaker of the House of Commons, and to me, because I have been consistent throughout the piece, and I will accept your apology as an Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend from Windsor will agree with that, that there were important words that were not used in his quotation from the extraction of the statement of the Minister of Finance.

The answer to the question is that indeed we favour the concept of universality. As I indicated in a speech in April in Toronto, and on many occasions thereafter, we would like to use the tax system to introduce an element of fairness that we believe is lacking whereby—

Ms. Copps: Is it a sacred trust?

Mr. Mulroney: She has done all the damage she can do to the Liberal Party of Ontario, and she is doing it here now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We plan to examine the possibility of using the tax system to introduce a greater notion of fairness for those in our society who need help without doing violence to the principle of universality.

TAX STATUS OF BENEFITS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we still have not got it clarified. As the Prime Minister knows, for decades Canadians have taken it for granted that if they pay—rich, poor, middle income persons and families alike—either through the tax system or through other means, into pension plans, medicare and family allowances, they would all get those benefits back, none of which would have a specific tax levied upon them. They were counted for taxable income but they did not have a specific tax levied on the benefit. That is what makes them a universal principle. That is what we in this Party defend. That is what the people of Canada want. Is the Prime Minister proposing to introduce, for the first time, a specific tax on a particular social benefit program which, if he does, will undermine the universality principle?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to examine various possibilities to try to get more money into the hands of those who need it. For example, the question was asked by Ms. Frum: "Will you be prepared to tax upper income Canadians to get more money into the system?" The Member for Vancouver East said: "We would be prepared to tax them and tax back their old age pensions as well." There is the policy of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East. We are opposed to that. That is what is wrong with the NDP.

• (1430)

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that this Party has for years been prepared to include all sources of income as taxable benefits. We stand by that. We do not say one thing during an election campaign and another thing after we are elected to the House of Commons.

Considering that the Prime Minister's proposal—and it is clear that he is going to act on it—is in essence to levy a special tax on particular social programs, to ghettoize Canadians and to create two classes of Canadians when it comes to social programs, will the Prime Minister change his position and maintain the universality principle for Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Hon. Member that we will protect the integrity of universal programs against the rapacious tax attitudes of the NDP as articulated by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East. We want to treat people fairly, and we are going to keep the taxman away from those who are in need the most.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps Hon. Members would at least allow the Chair to hear the question.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the point of my question is not to find out what the Hon. Member for Vancouver East or members of the NDP believe. We want to know what the Government intends to do, because it will be making the decision.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister and goes back to an answer he gave to the Leader of the Official Opposition. He said that he does not intend in any way to reduce or change the benefits that will go to senior citizens or families. If that is the case, how does he explain the statement made on the weekend by the Minister of National Health and Welfare who said that his priority is to change those programs and in fact to develop a cut-off point through the tax system that would reduce the benefits for parents and the elderly? How does he reconcile those two statements? Is he going to repudiate the Minister of Health and Welfare?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry should be careful with his selection of facts, if those are facts at all. I will tell him why. Under the child tax credit system, the Liberal Government which introduced that program had a turning point of $26,330 namely, that a family with a net income at that level would receive the full child tax credit. From that amount of money up to a net family income of $41,000, the child tax credit was totally gone. That was their plan. If the Liberals are arguing that that is a removal of universality or will somehow negatively affect Canadian families, I do not understand, because it was their plan.

When we look at these plans, let's be sensible in terms of what is on the table and what Canadians are receiving, and let's not put forward motives that simply do not exist, motives which are dishonest and which we have never been following.

REVIEW OF BENEFITS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to either the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Prime Minister. I would remind them that when we brought in the child tax credit, we did not reduce the basic benefits to senior citizens or families in those cases. Do the plans that the Minister is preparing, and the examinations undertaken by his Department, in any way involve the reduction of the existing benefit structure or formulae, either through the tax system or through direct benefits to senior citizens or families who presently receive the old age pension or the family allowance? Will there be any form of reduction whatsoever to the existing basic benefit plan?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry that the answer to those reductions that he is trying to impute as a motive of the Government is, no.

Mr. Axworthy: What about the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I will give the Hon. Member an answer, if he just gives me some time. The point I would make to the Hon. Member, and to all Members of the House, is simply this: at the present time the tax system does allow for a tax on income whether it is income of a senior citizen or a family. There is no problem there, I would think. The only question is what NAPA has said, what the Status of Women today and the Hon. Member for Sudbury have said, and I can turn to the debate of July 26 and the words of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East—we were all in the same studio—he said, on behalf of the then Liberal Government, that they would be considering taxing back and re-arranging. Is it fair to re-examine a certain amount of the money that goes to the upper-income level, and to re-direct it to those who are not as well off as the Hon. Member and I?

TAXATION OF INCOMES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. This Party believes in taxing all incomes, and in taxing the wealthy who pay little income tax now in proportion to their incomes in order to pay for the cost of all social programs. We do not believe in taxing specific social programs. Is this what the Minister is proposing to do?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I got the sense of that question. If the Hon. Member is asking whether or not we are intending to tax social programs like Old Age Security and Family Allowances, I would say that today those are taxed. There has been no change. According to what the Minister of Health and Welfare has said, we are looking at the possibility of taxing some of those programs for those in the upper-income brackets to allow us to provide a greater degree of assistance to those who are in greater need, in the same way as the Hon. Member herself said that they would be prepared to tax upper-income Canadians and tax back their old age pensions as well. There is no difference between us. We are trying to have an honest, open, and objective debate on how we should achieve this. I would encourage the Hon. Member and members of her Party to join in that debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ACCESS TO UNIVERSAL PROGRAMS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about global taxation, not program taxation. I would like to ask the Minister if he intends to undermine a very proud Canadian tradition, the right of all Canadians, regardless of their incomes, to the universal social programs which they have earned by their contribution to Canada and for which they have paid through their taxes. What is his intention?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. We have every intention of leaving the principle of universality in place, whether it is for benefits for the elderly, family benefits, or medicare. These are things that we hold as strongly as the Hon. Member opposite. We are committed to holding those, and we are not going to tax back the old age pensions in the way that the Hon. Member described last July.

INCOME LEVELS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that the comments made by the Finance Minister today do not jibe with the comments he made when he said that that there are people who don't need it and that upper and middle-income social programs cannot be afforded today. That is what the Minister said last week.

My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Today there has been an admission in the House that there will be a tax-back on senior citizens' benefits and family allowances. I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he can tell us at what threshold he will stop in the tax-backs. Will it be the $26,000 figure he quoted last week? This would mean that more than half of working Canadians will be caught by his Government's ripoff tax-backs which indicate that the Government is reneging on the social contract with the Canadian people.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I find the Hon. Member's comments passing strange, for the simple reason that the very $26,330, which we have not established or confirmed as a threshold, was used by her Party. Why would she not only call it unfair but use it as a basis of determining that the entire system is unfair? Obviously our system will be more fair than the one she has supported.

• (1440)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, in fact I am quoting the words of the Minister of National Health and Welfare from an interview in which he stated that $26,000 was the base figure being used.

DESCRIPTION OF SYSTEM

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister still agree with the statement which he made in November when he said:

> If we were to leave the system untouched, we would be leaving in place a system that, strictly speaking, not only is not universal, but is in fact regressive—

Does he believe that the universal system, which we hold dear in this Party, is a regressive system?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Hon. Member that I think anyone who has looked at the system sanely and quietly will say that it is regressive. For example—

Ms. Copps: It is regressive.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Oh, you agree that it is regressive. Let me give the Hon. Member a very quick example—

Mr. Axworthy: There is no—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Let Sheila speak for herself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): First, I will tell the Hon. Member that the manner in which she used my quotes was inaccurate. I wish she would be accurate.

Second, under the tax exemption plan of Revenue Canada today, it is regressive in the sense that anyone who has a larger income has a greater benefit in terms of reduced taxation because of the tax exemption. Surely that is regressive. The person who does not pay any tax does not get that benefit. So, if that meets her definition of regressive, as it does mine, then in that sense the system is regressive.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—IMPACT ON PROGRAMS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I almost hate to change the topic, but I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister which deals with another area that is of universal concern to all Canadians, that is, the quality of our environment. It is a universality question, whether or not we like it.

Yesterday my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena, released information regarding the scope of the cut-backs in the National Research Council Environmental Secretariat which performs important studies into such things as fetal hazards and the effect of environmental lead on children. Those programs have been cancelled. Does the Prime Minister not think that these programs are important? If he does think they are important, will he have them reinstated?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed I think that all the programs were important. It was a question of the budgetary restraints which were imposed upon us and the priorities which were established. I hope my hon. friend will agree that it was done with care and concern for the total environment of Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Prime Minister that the environmental deficit which this Government will leave Canada if it continues with these programs is every bit as serious, in another dimension completely, as the financial deficit to which the Prime Minister keeps referring.

REQUEST THAT CUT-BACKS BE REVIEWED

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, when will the Prime Minister and his colleagues realize the tragic short-sightedness of the cut-backs in the Environmental Secretariat of the NRC? When will the Government show the kind of willingness to reconsider, that I think the Minister of the Environment showed last week when she indicated that some changes might be made to the cut-backs in research in the Canadian Wildlife Service, and have the entire set of cut-backs reviewed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed I think the Minister did indicate that last week. She is expected back in the House tomorrow. I am sure she will be delighted to meet with the Hon. Member to review it.

Oral Questions

MARITIME FEED GRAIN COSTS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Would he be prepared to consider favourably the representation he has received from the Maritime Farmers Council concerning the disparity in feed prices between there and the rest of Canada? As well, would he agree that the survival and future prosperity of the livestock and poultry industry depends on closing the gap, and accept their recommendation that the Feed Freight Equalization Program be revised to cover 50 per cent of the transportation costs on feed grains from central and western Canada?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in the subject. Let me respond to his first question by saying yes. With respect to his second question, I would throw in a word of caution. I hope that the financial resources will be available to the extent that we can provide some financial assistance in the foreseeable future to this very deserving problem.

SOCIAL SECURITY

OLD AGE PENSIONERS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am sure there is something upon which all Members of the House will agree, that is, that the Government has succeeded in creating confusion, anxiety, insecurity, and even fear among our elderly citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: Yesterday I received calls in my riding—and I am sure it is the same in Don Valley West as I am sure it is true in the riding of every Member of the House—because those people are concerned.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Johnston: Not long ago, a woman asked me—and I am going to put the question she asked me to the Right Hon. Prime Minister—she asked me: Mr. Johnston, are they going to take away my pension, my cheques?

That is the question I now wish to put to the Prime Minister. What is he going to say to the people who are asking us these questions?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would answer the Member's question very directly—and I hope through him to his constituents and every Member in the House—that this Government has no intention, has had no intention, nor will it, to remove the old age pensions from those Canadians who have contributed to our society of which we are all the benefactors. The simple answer to his question is no.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUDGET PRESENTATION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary question which I would like to direct to the Minister of Finance. There is only one way in which we can get rid of the confusion and anxiety, and that is to bring in a budget. Let us see exactly what the Government has in mind, and let us have it quickly. We cannot wait until March, April, May or June.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member has directed a question to me, but maybe I could help him out with his concern.

We have tried to put the matter in a very clear way. The comments which were just made by my colleague state what the problem is and what the questions are. We will be putting out a paper on this matter in advance of the Budget so that we can have an ojbective, fair, honest and open debate. I would encourage the Hon. Member, who has expressed some views in this area, which have the effect in a very clear way of removing universality, but—

Mr. Johnston: Creating universality.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): No, removing universality. I would encourage the Hon. Member, the Hon. Member for Sudbury, and the Leader of the Opposition, to join in this debate in an open and positive way, and not to contribute to any misunderstanding on the part of Canadians who want to receive the benefits of these programs.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Article 12 of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement with the United States calls for intensified research. Could the Prime Minister explain how the cuts to environmental programs related to the Great Lakes respond to the wording of the Canada-U.S. treaty?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I said, the Minister of the Environment will be back to respond tomorrow to that question.

HEALTH ASPECTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on December 14 the Prime Minister stated in the House, and I quote with care:

—the health and safety of people take precedence over everything else.

Why did he agree to allow the savage cuts to the Environmental Secretariat, particularly to the projects which are directed to evaluate the effects of viruses, heavy metals, and toxic materials on the health of the 40 million North Americans who drink from the Great Lakes?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am assured that no cuts were introduced which would have that kind of dire impact upon anyone. But, as I indicated, the Minister will be back in the House tomorrow and I am sure that she will be able to satisfy any concerns which my hon. friend has.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF AGREEMENT SIGNED IN MONTREAL

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

In Montreal last Friday, the Minister and the Quebec Minister for Intergovernmental Affairs signed an agreement on regional economic development, an important event that demonstrates the improvement that has taken place in relations between the Federal Government and the Government of Quebec. Could the Minister inform the House in what way this agreement differs from agreements signed with his counterparts in British Columbia and Ontario?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I am sure all Members will understand that it is difficult in a short answer to explain the differences in a comprehensive way between British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec IRDA agreements. Perhaps it would suffice if I assured the Hon. Member that the agreement we signed with Quebec last Friday is one which anticipates extensive sub-agreements and funding to fall out therefrom. The total amount of new money over the next five years which is anticipated will be about $630 million, which the Province of Quebec has agreed to match. That makes a total $1.320 billion. In short, it is the finest such agreement which has ever been reached between the Government of Quebec and the Government of Canada, which the former Liberal Government was unable to do—

SOCIAL SECURITY

RELEASE OF WHITE PAPER

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I believe Canadians are justified in their confusion, mainly because on this issue of universality there have been three positions taken by Hon. Members on the front bench opposite.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Frith: Three positions. Is it the intention of the Government to wait until we recess this House on Friday before it releases the white papers on family allowances and old age pensions? Or will the Minister of Finance do the courageous thing and table the documents and those papers in the House tomorrow so that members of the Opposition can have the opportunity to question the direction the Tory Government wants to take, before we break for Christmas?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that on July 26 he, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East, and myself appeared on a national television program in which it was said: "To sum up your position on the medicare question—"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): "—and on the social welfare net, you seem to be saying, "No new money". You just want to look at the existing money and redistribute the existing money. No new money for either medicare or poverty programs". That was Mrs. Frum, and Mr. Frith said: "That's correct". Therefore, coming directly to what the Hon. Member has said, and what we have said—

Mr. Chrétien: What about the white paper?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Minister that I cannot hear the answer. The Hon. Member has a supplementary, perhaps. I could not hear the answer because of the noise in the House.

Mr. Frith: I will come back, Mr. Speaker, and ask the same question again. Is it the intention of the Government to wait until Parliament recesses before it has the courage to release its directional papers on family allowance and old age security? Why will the Government not table those documents here this week so that we can have the opportunity to debate them in this House?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I could table the press releases of the increase in family allowance, the table on old age pension, the increase in the Canada Pension Plan—

Ms. Copps: Table the document.

Mr. Foster: Check with Erik.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We could table all those documents. The Hon. Member has been in cabinet. I am in cabinet. I want to say to the Hon. Member that when the Cabinet has made its decisions, those papers will be tabled. I hope that, just as the Hon. Member has previously contributed in a rational debate on this issue, including on televison, I hope he will contribute at that time as well.

FISHERIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT ON WEST COAST SALMON FISHERY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It is in regard to the recent Canada-U.S. agreement on the management of West coast salmon. Would the Minister agree that this deal is part of the pattern of his Government caving in to American demands?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: For example, in this agreement, in the transboundary fisheries in the north of British Columbia, on rivers such as the Stikine and Taku, the Americans get up to 85 per cent of the catch without any reciprocal compensation to Canadians. Would the Minister agree with that statement?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the Hon. Member's question is, of course, no. As the result of a great deal of hard work on the part of some very able Canadians and Americans they have finally brought together in one place, and on one piece of paper, an accord which is going to go to both Governments. This is after 18 years of effort. I must assure the Hon. Member that under no circumstances am I prepared to accept on behalf of this Government any suggestion that the agreement which was worked out was a cave in of any sort whatsoever.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the Minister himself is quoted as agreeing with Jack Nichol, the President of the Fishermen's Union, that Canadian fishermen are carrying the burden created by the need to rebuild the stocks, and given the fact that the negotiations were generally carried out in secret, will the Minister at least refer the treaty to the appropriate House of Commons committee so we can hear from the industry and the fishermen before its ratification by cabinet?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, of course the Canadian fishermen are carrying the burden. They are carrying the burden of the fact that, for a decade or more, on both sides of the border proper conservation measures and proper catch allotments were not accepted. So, of course, we have to accept the burden of rebuilding the salmon stocks. That is fundamental common sense.

The Hon. Member, by his own admission, is not an expert in the fisheries. However, he can add and subtract. If we do not have enough fish to go around, sooner or later we have to make an agreement that we are going to rebuild the stock, and that is what this agreement is all about. And it is one of the best things which has happened between our two countries for a long time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

SIZE OF PAY-OUTS

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Recent media reports indicate that the Western Grain Stabilization Fund will provide pay-outs of $17,000 to 135,000 western farmers, which could amount to $2.3 billion.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member have a question, please?

Mr. Scowen: Will the Minister indicate if these figures are accurate?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raised a very serious issue. I do not think it does anyone any good, particularly the farmers who are in financial stress, to engage in idle speculation. The figures are not accurate as to the number of farmers. It is too early to say how much the fund will pay out. I would like to acknowledge the support of the two spokesmen for the opposition Parties for the two small amendments which we will have to bring in in order to make an interim payment. I would also like to thank the Hon. Member for giving me a chance to put some of these things on the record.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PROGRAMS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Today, we saw the Minister of National Health and Welfare release another trial balloon when he said they were going to give with one hand and take away with the other. I would like to ask the Prime Minister why he does not tell Canadians frankly and honestly that he deceived them during the election campaign and that now he is in power, he is going to cut back social programs one way or another, either through the tax system or directly, but cuts there will be.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I feel a little uneasy if I do not hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that we have no intention of acting in the way he suggests. We had in mind—as the Hon. Member for Sudbury said during the televised debate this summer, it might be a good thing—since this is acceptable, to use the tax system to try and get more funds for those who need help most in our society. That is all we are trying to do, while maintaining the integrity of the principles by which we are governed. We are trying to find a better way of using the funds at our disposal to help the neediest in our society who truly need government aid.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has just told the House once again, to raise the level of anxiety among Canadians . . . The Minister of National Health and Welfare has just launched a trial balloon and now the Prime Minister is continuing in the same vein.

I would like to know whether the Prime Minister intends to "come clean" very shortly, in order to put an end to the anxiety that exists among senior citizens and mothers with a family. If the decision is already made, why bother about so-called consultations, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, it is just the usual smoke screen and the usual canards used by the Liberal Party. We all know this is part of the traditional politics and stunts of the Liberal Party in Quebec. They have always made a habit of heaping lies and insults on their opponents. You know quite well what we are saying. We are here to help the average citizen have a better life. That is what we are going to do. We are going to defend the integrity of our social programs against the petty politicking of the Liberal Party. That is what we are trying to do.

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENT OF MR. MULRONEY DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Speaker: I have received a note from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who desires to raise a question of privilege.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege arising from a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Question Period. I understood the Prime Minister to say that I had destroyed the Ontario Liberal Party, and for that I would like—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —an apology from the Prime Minister.

An Hon. Member: Who do you want to blame it on?

Ms. Copps: I would also like the Prime Minister to know that the only thing he has destroyed is his Government's credibility, and that was self-inflicted.

Mr. Speaker: I could say this is not a question of privilege but it may be a point of order or a matter for debate at some other time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Sheila, you could not do it alone; you had help.

Mr. Speaker: I have a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Beatty: Peterson's gain is Turner's loss.

ALLEGED MISQUOTATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I raise this question in a search for enlightenment from you, if I could.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question of privilege?

Mr. Langdon: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: What is the Hon. Member's question of privilege?

Mr. Keeper: He is stating it.

Mr. Langdon: The question of privilege I wish to raise has to do with the allegations made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) today during Question Period with respect to my supposed misquotation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Stevens: Amputation.

Mr. Langdon: Is this the time when such a question can be raised?

Mr. Speaker: Let me try and guide the Hon. Member. It could be raised now if it were a question of privilege. I take it there is some dispute about the facts of the matter and I have to advise the Hon. Member that cannot normally form the basis of a question of privilege. However, Members have the right, on a matter arising out of Question Period, to present a question of privilege immediately after Question Period or give me notice in writing on a question of privilege tomorrow or later, if that is the earliest opportunity after the Hon. Member has read the "blues".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Or they can get expelled from the House.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member that he is, I take it, making some claim with regard to the accuracy of statements made by another Member. It is difficult to form a question of privilege on that basis. I take it that is the advice the Hon. Member seeks. Is he now rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Langdon: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: What is the Hon. Member's question of privilege? Other than the one he has just mentioned, please.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, if I could just very briefly put what I see as the question of privilege and allow you to rule—

Mr. Speaker: Let me help the Member, if I may. Citation 19(1) of Beauchesne's says:

> A dispute arising between two Members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

Does the Hon. Member have another question of privilege?

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the question is not with respect to the fact of the comments made but with respect to a point suggested by the Prime Minister, that I was directly quoting the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when in fact I was quite clearly, as recorded in Hansard, paraphrasing the key comments—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: —that were made.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Tell Ed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am in great difficulty. The Hon. Member is now telling me that something the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said happened did not in fact happen. I take it that is a dispute as to facts. The Hon. Member is saying that he did a certain thing and the Prime Minister said he did something else. That is clearly a dispute as to fact. Does the Hon. Member have a question of privilege?

Mr. Langdon: I will reserve my—

Mr. Speaker: No, on the point the Hon. Member has raised, he does not have a question of privilege. If he thinks he has one he has the right to submit a notice and we can consider it.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

UNIVERSALITY IN SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Speaker: I have received notice from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) of this desire to make a case to me under Standing Order 30 today.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on an urgent matter of which I have given Your Honour notice.

Given the alarming and confusing situation which the Government has caused, which occupied the House today and which is exacerbating the situation regarding our social programs, I ask leave to propose a motion under Standing Order 30 to move adjournment of the House to discuss a matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the declaration yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that universality in our social programs in this country is no longer a fundamental policy of the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It might be worth while if you were right in your premise but you are not.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has given the Chair the required notice of his intention to seek leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing an urgent matter, namely the declarations yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) relating to universality in social programs. The Chair recognizes that the issue of universality is an important matter and what is said about it on both sides of the House will continue to be of interest to all Canadians.

Standing Order 30(16) provides the Chair with some guidelines as to the conditions that must be met for such a debate to take place. The principal condition is that the matter proposed must relate to a "genuine" emergency and require "urgent consideration". Speaker Jerome, while ruling on a similar application, attempted to define the use of the word "emergency", or the application of the word "emergency". As reported at pages 2191 and 2192 of Hansard on December 10, 1979, he said:

● (1510)

The phrase "genuine emergency" is not capable of precise definition necessarily, but I must take into account the fact that the word "genuine" is used for a specific reason by the drafters of the rule. While I can never say it rules out forever a situation in which the emergency itself is a matter of dispute, it seems that the word "genuine" implies that the rule should be used where at least the emergency itself is not a matter of argument.

Order Paper Questions

At the present time, the subject raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is a matter of continuing debate and does not, in the opinion of the Chair, warrant an emergency debate. I therefore must rule that the application of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition cannot be accepted.

DESTROYER STRENGTH

Question No. 56—Mr. Howie:

How many destroyers are on strength in the Canadian Armed Forces, and of this number, how many are currently under repair or otherwise incapable of going to sea?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): The total strength of the Canadian Forces destroyer fleet is 23, of which three are in an unmanned reserve status, three are undergoing routine refits and a fourth is scheduled to commence refit on December 3, 1984.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK MANDATE

Question No. 97—Mr. Dingwall:

Does the Federal Business Development Bank have a mandate to be a lender of last resort for community development corporations and, if so, does the mandate include (a) the Local Employment Assistance Development Program (b) non-profit organizations?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): The Federal Business Development Bank may make loans to commercial enterprises; non-profit organizations do not qualify for loan assistance. Community development corporations including those set up under the Local Employment Assistance Development Program generally fall into the latter category.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to debate this Bill, I do not think that the Canadian people want us to debate this Bill, and the Liberal Members in the House do not want us to debate this Bill while there is an issue outstanding which smacks at the very core of our social security system in the country.

SOCIAL SECURITY

UNIVERSALITY OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS—NECESSITY FOR WOMEN TO SUPPORT DEBATE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the universality of social programs is a basic concept that gives women financial protection through family allowances and old age security pensions. However, women are no longer the priority they were during the election campaign, now the Government has started to question the only means by which women are given financial and economic recognition.

Canadian women must act now to pressure the Government to respect their social contract, as they pressured the Government before to include the equality clause in the Constitution.

[English]

Government policy seems headed the wrong way. We should be improving things for women, not taking away. We are retracting instead of moving ahead.

It is vital that the voice of Canadian women be heard. I urge them to participate in this debate now and to call the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at 2-4211, to send in petitions and to protest the cuts.

INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF WINE INDUSTRY

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, this week I, along with others, had the occasion to hear a presentation made by the Canadian Wine Institute here in Ottawa. In spite of the congeniality of the occasion and the palatability of the fine quality Canadian wines, the evening was marred by a deep and abiding concern.

The good, clear, sparkling wines that we were sampling are facing a cloudy future, and the Government has the ability to lift that cloud. The wine industry in Canada is at an all-time low both in terms of profitability and market share. The decline in Canadian wine sales can be attributed to many factors, including the heavily subsidized production in Europe, an unfavourable exchange rate, and the flagrant use of wine as barter for Canadian exports. The most significant factors, however, are the federal and provincial taxes levied on the grape and wine industry. All of these factors have led to an untenable situation in which imported wines retail for prices far lower than domestic products.

Growers and wine producers have invested in the future. They have proven that they can produce a quality product. It is within our power to assure them that there is a future that is as clear and bright as the products they produce. Do it, and do it now.

TOURISM

PORTS OF ENTRY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has voiced a commitment to expanding the tourist industry in Canada and has also appointed Canada's first Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan). It is my understanding, however, that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) will be closing 19 ports of entry in the coming year, thus affecting tourism in those areas.

[Translation]

I am sure the Government understands that money is needed to support this industry. Considering the number of American tourists coming to Canada, I would urge the Minister of National Revenue to maintain his ports of entry and the Minister of State (Tourism) to support his colleague on this matter.

[English]

Beaudette, Minnesota, is an important aircraft pre-clearing point for tourists coming into the Rainy River area of Ontario. The Customs service provided at Beaudette is slated to be discontinued on January 1, 1985. I call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), the Minister of National Revenue, and the Minister of State for Tourism to act immediately, and in concert, to see that this important service is maintained.

S.O. 21

ABSENCE OF MINISTERIAL SIGNS APPLAUDED

Mr. Leo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, on my way into Winnipeg International Airport last week, I was pleasantly surprised to see that signs indicating alterations list the sponsor as Transport Canada and make no mention whatsoever of the Minister responsible. I was even more pleasantly surprised to see that the same policy was evident at the Ottawa airport.

The previous Government's practice of erecting huge signs and bronze plaques, with the Minister's name receiving an obscene profile, for even the smallest of projects, was an insult to the Canadians whose taxes paid for such projects.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Duguay: I want to congratulate the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) on this simple but important step of returning to the people of Canada the credit that is their due. I wish to encourage other Ministers to follow suit. Such a practice will not only save the Government money when Ministers change, but will highlight Canada's support for a project rather than one Canadian's political generosity. All of this would make more credible the role of Canada's servants, the Members of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ADMINISTRATION

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has embarked upon a program of action in this Parliament which stands so contrary to the promises made during the election campaign that the main campaign issue of Conservative credibility is now the main issue facing the House of Commons. The sacred trust of universality, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has called it, is no more than an opportunistic, vote-getting flim-flam. The Conservative Members have a hidden agenda, an agenda hidden only in the sense that they have denied its existence in the face of overwhelming evidence to the contrary.

The recent statements made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicating that Canada cannot afford universal social programs for middle-income Canadians serve only to confirm the existence of such a hidden agenda. The Liberals giveth, and the Tories taketh away.

OPPOSITION PARTIES' ACTIONS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the fact that, time and time again, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has stated that the pensions of our old age pensioners, our crippled, and our needy, would not be reduced, members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party continually put fear in the hearts of the needy of Canada by inferring that their benefits will be cut. The objective of the P.C. Government is to pay more to the needy, not less.

I say shame on the Liberals and NDP who are playing politics yes, and dirty politics at that, on the backs of those in wheelchairs and those who are not receiving enough to make both ends meet. I send this message to all of the needy of Canada: "Don't let these Liberal and NDP politicians frighten you. They are the ones who would continue borrowing to the point where all social benefits would have to end, and they want those making $50,000 to $200,000 per year to keep on getting their benefits while you go hungry part of the month." On your behalf, I say shame on the Liberals and the socialists for trying to build themselves up on the backs of the needy of Canada. I assure you that your Progressive Conservative Government is looking for ways and means of paying you more—yes more, not less.

The Opposition is speaking for the rich and wealthy. The P.C. Government is working to give more to those who need it the most. The people of Canada have elected a Government under the leadership of the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, and it is a Government that has compassion and a Government that cares.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

THE FRIENDLY GIANT—CANCELLATION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, they say that Christmas is for children. As this House prepares to break for its Christmas recess, what do we find is the Government's Christmas present for our children? It cut The Friendly Giant! A Canadian institution that so many of us have grown up with is gone with the stroke of a pen, and all in the name of restraint.

Is this what restraint means to Members on the government benches? Are they prepared to say to the children of Canada: "Sorry kids, but we have to make the books balance, and you'll just have to pull in your belts too"? The Government is giving a whole new meaning to the phrase: "Find the boot".

It is not only our children who have been victimized by the Government and its cuts. Outlying communities have also been targeted. For example, Radio Noon in Thunder Bay is to be cut and replaced with a Toronto phone-in show. When will the Government realize that such locally-produced shows have far greater importance to their communities than their counterparts in the major centres? When a local program is cut in Thunder Bay, northwestern Ontario loses a tangible and important part of its identity, and there is nothing to replace it.

The value of Canadian culture and the value of regional identity cannot be measured on a balance sheet. Cuts to children's programming, as well cuts to regional programming like the ones we have seen in northwestern Ontario, strike very deep indeed.

I have a message from the outlying communities and from the children of Canada. The Government will have to raise itself up—it will have to raise itself "way up"—before it can hope to regain their respect.

SOCIAL SECURITY

APPLICATION OF TAX SYSTEM

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) plans to stand and fight on the beaches to protect our present inequitable social transfer system. He demonstrates that he really does not understand what in fact happens in the tax system when citizens are given exemptions dependent on their investment income, their age, and the number of children and spouses they have. For example, a single senior citizen with no income receives absolutely no benefit from the personal tax exemption of $4,140, or the age exemption of $2,590, or the $1,000 investment income exemption. To a senior citizen having a taxable income of $30,000 a year, the exemptions will total $7,730 in 1985, which represents to federal and provincial Governments a tax expenditure of approximately $2,950.

When we calculate the value of pensions and their universal application, we must calculate the personal tax expenditures allowed to every person. These expenditures are valuable to those who have taxable income; and to those who have the most taxable income, the most value. If a person is poor, the expenditures are worthless to him. He gets nothing. But, if a person is modestly rich, with a taxable income of $30,000, $2,950 is not a bad allowance; it is nearly $250 per month.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

SOCIAL SECURITY

UNIVERSALITY OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS—SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from an article by Michel Roy that appeared in the newspaper La Presse yesterday morning:

S.O. 21

It is rather surprising that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance should create this incredible confusion about budget cutbacks and the universality of social programs. (. . .) It all looks as though the Leader of the Government were being over anxious to clarify the somewhat vague statements made by his Minister of Finance and were actually trying to hide the truth.

Mr. Speaker, considering the contradictory statements made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance with respect to the universality of social programs, I am afraid I must agree with this statement. Should we not censure a Government, and especially a Prime Minister, when they persist in their refusal to tell the truth and prefer to maintain this atmosphere of ambiguity and confusion among our senior citizens, a generation that made so many sacrifices for this country.

Mr. Speaker, our senior citizens know perfectly well this Government intends to put an end to universality or to cut the amount of money they receive in some way or another.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition intend to oppose this discriminating measure.

INCOME TAX ACT

DEFERRAL OF CAPITAL GAINS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I rise to put forward the plight of taxpayers who are reassessed under Section 44 of the Income Tax Act for failing to file an election concerning replacement property. Section 44 allows taxpayers who have sold land to elect to defer the capital gains realized on the sale if they have purchased replacement property of equal or greater value.

● (1415)

This concept of deferral is well known in the agricultural community. Unfortunately, however, many taxpayers are unaware that Section 44 provides that an election must be made before the capital gain can be deferred. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, there is no election form provided by Revenue Canada. People, therefore, assumed, not unreasonably, that the act of repurchase, the actual documented replacement of land, constituted an election within the spirit and intent of Section 44.

The previous Government authorized reassessment of many vendors for failing to file an election. This has resulted in situations where taxpayers who purchased replacement property in the honest belief they could defer tax now find themselves reassessed for substantial amounts of tax and capital gains from their sale. In fact, they used the proceeds of sale to buy new land.

This is manifestly unfair. These taxpayers ask the Minister of National Revenue to examine the entire matter of Section 44, and to consider the act of repurchase as an effective election.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is clear that the Government is bent on reshaping, even vandalizing a good many of our programs in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Oh, the crocodile tears.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Government has obviously abandoned the opposition of Canadians to star wars technology. It has softened our fight for our environment and against acid rain. The Government has also, Mr. Speaker, through the Minister of Defence, insulted the peace movement in our country.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And now, of course, Government is mounting, or appears to be mounting, a frontal attack on the social programs which represent a heritage to Canadians from coast to coast.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: Oh, cool it over there.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I ask the Prime Minister whether he would, in the interests of dissipating the uncertainty which has been provoked by the contradiction in his remarks, the remarks of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and of the Minister of Finance, allow and authorize, through his House Leader, a special debate on the subject of our social security programs before this session adjourns for Christmas.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that I can understand the frustration of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. He gets upstaged by the guy who wants to be the Leader of the Opposition—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —who is sitting next to the guy who wants to be the Leader of the Party which wants to be the Opposition—right over there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Where is Joe Clark, by the way?

Mr. Mulroney: I believe my right hon. friend would agree that we have not been—

Mr. Tobin: You started up your lies in Montreal and you've been telling them ever since. Ask Joe Clark. Ask Clark.

Mr. Mulroney: That Hon. Member has never been the same since he almost became Minister of Youth.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: He just hasn't recovered, Mr. Speaker. We have not been vandalizing anything, as my right hon. friend knows.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes or no?

Mr. Mulroney: We have been seeking to improve. We have indicated that it is our intention to maintain the concept of universality, to provide Canadians with all of the benefits to which they are entitled. We are trying as well, and we hope with the co-operation of the Opposition, to find ways, with our scarce resources, to get more money into the hands of those who need it most in Canada. I would think that those Hon. Members would rush to support this kind of progressive view—

Mr. Gauthier: The question, Brian; the question.

Mr. Mulroney: —because it is in the interests of people in Canada who need help from the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER ISSUE STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister is not going to instruct his House Leader to give us an immediate debate on this issue in the House of Commons, and if he has not been able to persuade his Minister of Finance to bring down an early Budget in order that Canadians may have an understanding of which pensioners will receive their pensions and which families will receive their family allowances, would he issue a statement in his own name detailing where the cut-off is going to be and whom the tax back is going to affect? Would he do this before Christmas so that the Canadian people can understand where they and their families stand for this season and the coming year? I think this is a very essential question.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition asks if I will instruct the House Leader. He is quoted this morning as saying that he will instruct a bunch of Liberal bagmen in the Senate to try to frustrate the will of the duly elected House of Commons. I can tell him that he will not get away with that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is an accurate quote.

Mr. Deans: Abolish the Senate.

Mr. Broadbent: Abolish it.

Some Hon. Members: Abolish it, abolish it.

Mr. Mulroney: There is nothing worse than when two sweethearts yell at one another. Now stop that.

What we are attempting to do, for which we received a mandate from the Canadian people, is to utilize, not the distortions of the Opposition—

Mr. Gauthier: A sacred trust you said.

Mr. Mulroney: —not the yelling and screaming—

Ms. Copps: A sacred trust you called it.

Mr. Mulroney: —or not the sweet sounds from the Member for Hamilton East. We received a mandate to utilize, in a proper and sane way, the moneys available, to put more money into the hands of those in our society who need it most, while respecting the principle of universality for all Canadians who have contributed to those programs. That is what we are going to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman used to speak about civility in the House of Commons. If he wants civility in the House he can achieve it by replying to our questions with courtesy and directness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I mentioned yesterday, Mr. Speaker, that I objected strenuously to being misquoted. I said this morning to the members of the media that I recognize the primacy of the elected House of Commons over the Senate. That is my position, it has always been my position, and the right hon. gentleman knows it.

Would the Prime Minister allow the House of Commons, and, through the House, the people of Canada, some certainty that if there is going to be a two-tier social security system the Canadian people will know what it is? The Minister of Finance says no, the Minister of Health says maybe, and the Prime Minister says yes. If the Government of Canada does not know what it is going to do, why did it start this confusion in the first place? Will they clarify it for the people of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we know exactly what we are going to do.

Some Hon. Members: Tell us, tell us.

Mr. Mulroney: My right hon. friend quite properly speaks of the requirement of civility. I know that that has been his conduct, as I think it has been mine. It is difficult for him to justify it with the kind of misconduct coming from the Members behind him. They are the ones who have been interrupting the House while I have been trying to provide answers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

Mr. Mulroney: Our objective is to maintain the integrity of our social programs in Canada for the benefit of all Canadians who have contributed to them. That is maintaining the universal concept. Secondly, we plan to maintain as well those other programs which we have introduced in our first initiatives and made allowances for, to help, for example, those elderly people between 60 and 64 who need it, and the veterans who are entitled to it. We have done nothing except to invite mature debate from the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Let's have a debate.

Mr. Mulroney: It appears in certain circumstances that is unlikely, but it will not deter us from our initiatives, namely, to enhance the well-being of Canadians by a proper universal system which benefits Canadians who need it most of all. There is the contribution.

TAXATION QUERY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, almost every day the Government offers us a new candidate for the program That's Incredible.

Mr. Bradley: Oh, good line, Don.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I sat with the Minister of Finance on The Journal the night of his mini-Budget, and he was asked if there was going to be a tax increase. He remembers what he said. He said no, increased taxes are not the way to go. Yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare told the press that there was going to be a general tax increase to tax back social benefits. Then, of course, we had a clarification—we should become accustomed to that—later, which said it was going to be a special tax to tax back social benefits.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Johnston: Will the Minister of Finance tell us if he is going to levy a general tax across the board to bring these social benefits back into the treasury, or is he going to apply a special tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the nature of the debate we would like to have, if we could get by the partisan bickering of the Opposition—

Mr. Chrétien: We are ready today.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The purpose of the debate is to discuss the very issues the Hon. Member is raising.

Mr. Gauthier: Exactly.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): How we should deal with the very clear principle that the Prime Minister has established today and on many occasions in this House. We are going to be issuing a paper which will be setting out some of the options available.

Some Hon. Members: When?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): After which we will be having discussions with Members opposite as well as with a number of organizations which are already participating in a positive and open way. I encourage Members opposite to do the same thing—

Some Hon. Members: Let's have a debate.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —because that is the way we will get on with the decision.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, that is even more incredible. Forgive me if I am wrong, but I thought I just heard the Prime Minister say that you knew exactly what you were going to do.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, just a minute ago. You are honest, Mike; you don't know, and we know you don't know.

Mr. Johnston: Will the Minister of Finance admit that he is contradicting the statement just made by the Prime Minister?

Mr. Chrétien: Do you know, or don't you know?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): This is another example, Mr. Speaker, of the Members opposite distorting what the Prime Minister just said.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: Deny that he said it.

Mr. Chrétien: We will send you the tape, Mike.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Prime Minister said he knew exactly what we were going to do. We were going to go through a process of discussion, rational and honest discussion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me make a clear response here.

Some Hon. Members: We want Crosbie.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am in great difficulty.

Mr. Crosbie: We all are.

Mr. Speaker: Do Members wish to hear answers to questions that they have asked, or do they not?

Mr. Rossi: There are no answers.

Some Hon. Members: No answers.

Mr. Speaker: If Members—thank you. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

TAX POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Ouellet: He's off the hook.

Mr. Broadbent: —I have a question for the Prime Minister, who just expessed some deep concern about Liberal bagmen in the Senate. I am sure his concern can be summarized this way. It bothers him that, for the moment, there are more Liberal bagmen in the Senate than Tory bagmen. I am sure he will rectify that very soon. If he wants a motion to abolish the Senate, we will pass it in 24 hours for him.

● (1430)

My question for the Prime Minister concerns conflicting statements that have come from the Government from two different Ministers yesterday. One was made inside the House, and one was made outside.

Inside the House the Minister of Finance clearly indicated that the Government was considering imposing a special tax on particular social programs. Outside the House yesterday afternoon, the Minister of National Health and Welfare specifically rejected this approach and said no, that the Government was considering instead a general increase in income taxes.

For this confusion alone, will he provide some light? What is the Government's tax policy when it comes to social programs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the confusion, yesterday, as reported at page 1343 of Hansard, the Leader of the NDP said that his Party:

> . . . has for years been prepared to include all sources of income as taxable benefits.

I assume that means veterans allowances, capital gains on the sale of principal residences, employee benefits for dental plans, life insurance, strike pay, imputed rent. This is what the NDP plans to do to social policy in Canada, and I can tell you that we are opposed to that, not only today but every day. It would kill the farmers and small businessmen of this country.

The answers are found in the agenda paper. As explained by my hon. friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare was entertaining a question from a CBC reporter and answered to a hypothetical question in part. I think that the adequate answers are found and fully developed, I believe in a fair and honourable way, in the paper set out on November 8 by my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance.

I can tell you that nowhere in that document will you find the kinds of pernicious taxation advocated by the Member for Vancouver East and specified yesterday by the Leader of the NDP, which would kill the small businessman, the farmer and the ordinary Canadian. We won't go along with you on that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister is getting very desperate indeed. He came close to answering the question, though. I will give him credit this time. It has been two and one-half months and he is getting there. Maybe we will finally get an answer.

TAXATION PROPOSALS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the proposal that was presented yesterday in the House by the Minister of Finance, in which the Government was thinking about levying a special tax on a particular social program, would completely and utterly vitiate the universality principle and sneak a means test through the backdoor. This is totally unacceptable to every recipient of a pension and family allowance in Canada, and is something that all Canadians oppose. Therefore, will the Prime Minister say that, whatever option the Government chooses in the future, it will not go the route of imposing a special tax on a particular social program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): That special tax idea was advanced by the Member for Vancouver East, and I tell you that we will not follow that program advanced by the NDP which is designed to destroy universality in this country. You are the people who change your position every other day. That is what is wrong with the NDP.

REQUEST FOR TAX INCREASE FOR THE WEALTHY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Clearly this issue is finally getting to the Prime Minister because once again he resorts to misstating the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Three strikes and you are out, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: He just said that the Member for Vancouver East has advocated a position that the Government of Canada is contemplating. I say to the Prime Minister that the position taken by the Member for Vancouver East was that the kind of income she was alluding to should be considered as part of revenue—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, considering that the Prime Minister has expressed concern about the wealthy having too much in the way of income, and considering that he promised during the election campaign that he would impose a handsome tax on the wealthy, instead of fouling up the country's atmosphere and confusing the country on social programs—

Some Hon. Members: Order! Question.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Broadbent: —will he deliver on what he promised and bring in a tax increase now on the rich to make them pay their share?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is not doing very well. He always does better when he is sanctimonious.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Gauthier: Look who's talking.

Mr. Mulroney: This bears exactly on what the Member said yesterday.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: The question was: "Would you be prepared to tax upper income Canadians to get more money into the system?" And the Member for Vancouver East said: "We would be prepared to tax them and tax back their old age pensions as well". That is the position of the NDP, and that is the position which we reject in the interest of—

Mr. Broadbent: Absolute nonsense.

Mr. Nunziata: We want to know your position.

Mr. Broadbent: That is nonsense, and you know it.

Mr. Mulroney: If we followed that principle as defended by the NDP, it would have the effect of destroying the principle of universality which we want to maintain. That is the difference.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF WHITE PAPERS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I might add that Canadians are confused about this issue because those on the government front bench have confused and fumbled the issue themselves.

If the Prime Minister is serious about wanting to have a debate on this issue, let me make this proposal to him. Would he instruct his Government House Leader to allow the emergency debate to take place tomorrow and, after a full meeting with his Cabinet, release by tomorrow morning the directional papers on family allowances and Old Age Security so that Canadians can understand his hidden agenda?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a classical example of Liberal consistency.

Mr. Malépart: Yes or no.

Mr. Mulroney: They ask for emergency debate—tomorrow.

Mr. Chrétien: Today.

Mr. Gauthier: Why not today?

Mr. Mulroney: Why not next week? Let's have an emergency debate next year, they say.

Mr. Chrétien: No. Now. Sit down and we will start.

Mr. Mulroney: That is how consistent the Liberal Party is. If my hon. friend wants to be consistent, he should just refer to a statement that he, as an Hon. Member, made, speaking for the Government on July 26. "In the family allowance area there is the child tax credit itself. You can redistribute the moneys that are presently in that envelope system. This is one area that we are looking at". They were looking at that then, and they never told the Canadian people. There is the hidden agenda. They were the Government of Canada, and we are trying to get it back on track.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER APPEAR ON TELEVISION PROGRAM

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Prime Minister has been misquoting my own Leader and other Members. We are never allowed the chance to come back. It is completely out of context.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Frith: Will the Prime Minister instruct his health Minister to appear on The Journal this evening—we were to have taped at four o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Frith: There has been a refusal by your own Health Minister to debate the issue. Why not get this out in the open?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. With due respect, the Chair cannot hear the question when the other side of the House is also making too much noise. May I hear the question, please? I could not hear it.

Mr. Frith: Will the Prime Minister allow an emergency debate to take place beginning at three o'clock today? I think it would be better for him to release the white papers on family allowance and old age security so Canadians can get a true understanding of the parameters of the debate, and get an understanding of what your hidden agenda is.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I know there would be a certain amount of urgency involved for my hon. friend because he referred to the CBC. During CTV's Question Period, the Leader of the Liberal Party said on November 18: "The policy of the Liberal Party is in favour of universality at the moment".

Mr. Chrétien: Yes or no.

Mr. Mulroney: We are in favour of universality, not at the moment, but every moment. That is the difference between the Conservatives and the Liberals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1440)

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition says that he is in favour of it at the moment, and you talk about the CBC. We are in favour of universality at all times, on Global, CTV, CBC, Radio Canada, and TVA.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

USE OF TAX REVENUE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question if I could. It is very difficult, I am sure the Prime Minister understands, to know exactly what the Government has in mind in a particular sense. The Minister of Finance on the seventeenth indicated, in response to a question, that the intention of the Government was to tax and redirect certain of the benefits received by higher income groups to the benefit of lower income groups. Is that a departure from the statement made last week by the Minister of Finance where he not only indicated that was the Government's intention with respect to high income groups but he also indicated that was the Government's intention with regard to middle-income groups?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that my friend listen very carefully—

Mr. Deans: I am listening.

Mr. Mulroney: —to the question and the answer put to his own expert on social policy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Let me quote: "Would you be prepared to tax upper income Canadians to get more money into the system?" The answer from the Member for Vancouver East is: "We would be prepared to tax them and to tax back their old age pensions as well". The NDP wants to destroy the old age pensions in this country, and we are going to put up the biggest fight that you have ever seen. Any time that you try to take that away from the elderly, we will put up the biggest fight you have ever seen in this country, and stop it. I guarantee that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that if I had wanted to ask the question of the Member for Vancouver East I simply would have turned around and asked her.

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): What I am asking of the Prime Minister is not what the Member for Vancouver East may, or may not, have said.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: What I am asking from the Prime Minister is what his Government's intentions are. Is it the intention of his Government to impose additional taxes on the middle income group of Canadian income earners in order to pass some benefit, whatever, to others in society?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of this Government to so manage the public finances in a proper and frugal way as to get more money into the hands of those in our society who need it most. If the NDP will not do it, we will do it on behalf of the ordinary Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR CANADA

CLOSURE OF RESERVATION FACILITIES IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport concerning the loss of 43 Air Canada positions from Saskatchewan to the city of Winnipeg, making Saskatchewan the only province west of Quebec not to have an Air Canada reservations centre. Would the Minister investigate the elimination of these jobs, from the perspective of corporate responsibility, the element of fairness to Saskatoon and Regina, and was this decision politically motivated by the previous Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I obviously share the concern of the Hon. Member. It is true that Air Canada will be consolidating its reservation facilities into a new building, and there will be some 43 jobs affected in Saskatoon and Regina. However, 21 new jobs will be opened up in Winnipeg. I am advised that all efforts are being made by Air Canada to ensure that there is a smooth and orderly transition, and this in no way diminishes the role of Air Canada in both Saskatoon and Regina. As a matter of fact new services are going to be provided and there will be some expanded facilities in both airports in the not too distant future.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

INCOME EVALUATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns his promises and the contradictory statements made by his Ministers.

Yesterday, an important member of Cabinet, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, was asked the following question: "Is the question of the means test still open?" He replied: "The question of the means test has never been off the table." Could the Right Hon. Prime Minister inform the House whether this statement reflects his Government's policy or whether this is just another instance of a Minister putting his foot in it?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Government's replies are those I have provided in the House.

[English]

ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister tell us of the 338 promises that we have, whether 100, 200, or 300 are untrue? Would he come clean with this House and tell us the number that are true? Why can we not have a debate to find out how many of them are true?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are having the promises evaluated by the 600,000 civil servants, identified by the Leader of the Liberal Party.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister obviously thinks he is on the Gong Show, I will address my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: According to today's edition of The Globe and Mail, we read that the Minister:

—told reporters that the Government already decided to tax back universal benefits selectively but is trying to decide which Canadians will be penalized.

Later on he said that he would favour a general tax system.

Will the Minister consider the feelings, as I know he surely must, of the senior citizens, and the families, and the people near retirement who are out there and who are being affected by the contradictions he is making and the contradictions among the three Ministers who have spoken? What does he think they are feeling?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): First, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should keep in mind the debate that we are having in the House and in which she has engaged in committee and in other places. The Hon. Member has put forward the proposition. Because of the present social programs that we want to maintain, at the upper level is it possible to redirect some of those social resources to those more in need?

Mr. Deans: What about the middle income earners?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I have heard the NDP put forward that proposal time, after time, after time. That is the proposal which the Right Hon. Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and this Government are putting forward for discussion. I am glad that we can get into a rational discussion, rather than putting forward these straw men which they always want to put up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well what our position is. It is the Government's position we want. We would like to have the Minister go on The Journal tonight to explain it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Let him go, Erik.

REQUEST THAT WHITE PAPER BE RELEASED BEFORE CHRISTMAS RECESS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Since the Minister's officials have indicated there is a Government paper that will be available before Christmas on this very subject, will he release it immediately so we can debate it before the House closes? This Party wants to know.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in view of the success we had, both in the September 4 election and in the debate on July 26 in which the Member obviously put forward statements from which she would now like to withdraw, I want to say to her that when papers are completed, as I am sure the NDP Government in Manitoba would do also when its Cabinet makes a decision and makes it public, we will make ours public too.

EDUCATION

OPEN HOUSE CANADA PROGRAM—BUDGETARY CUTBACKS—INSTITUTIONS IN REMOTE AREAS

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State.

Could the Minister inform the House whether the 28.5 per cent reduction in funding for the Open House Canada Program will affect institutions in remote areas that provide special services for second language teaching?

I am thinking of the Jonquière CEGEP, which has high academic standards and has been taking an active part in student exchanges between provinces. Will it also see 30 per cent of its funding cut off?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question I can assure him that in the adjustments which are to be made to the Open House Canada Program they will be done bearing in mind the commitment to the objective of the program, which includes both equality and regional balance. I can also mention to him that these will come into play next year. With regard to his concerns about his region, a project before me has been approved and information will be in his hands early in the new year.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the fact that yesterday Canadians learned from media reports that Canada is giving up its leadership role in the abatement of acid rain. During the election campaign the Prime Minister promised to deliver on acid rain. I would ask him whether he agrees with his Minister of the Environment that Canada should now give up on its global role in combating acid rain, in the interest of the North American region.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, contrary to giving up our role with regard to acid rain, yesterday I communicated with the President of the United States and indicated that I wanted acid rain on the top of the agenda when I meet with him in Quebec City on the seventeenth of March.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LEVEL OF EMISSIONS CAUSING ACID RAIN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is good to hear this from the Prime Minister. I would urge him to have a chat with his Environment Minister so that they can get their messages on the same wavelength. In view of the Prime Minister's answer, will he now assure Canadians that his Government will pursue the commitment made with the provincial Ministers of the Environment that Canada will cut its acid rain emissions by 50 per cent by 1994? Is that the policy of his Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes it is, Mr. Speaker, and with hard work and honourable negotiations we hope to bring about better success than we have seen in the past. It is a major problem for Canada, the pollution of the environment. I know all Members of the House take it very seriously. I can assure my hon. friend that we will negotiate vigorously to improve the environment for all Canadians.

INTERNATIONAL DIMENSION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It also has to do with the remarks made by the Minister of the Environment. I just want to get this clear. Is the Prime Minister saying that when the Minister of the Environment said that Canada no longer regarded acid rain as a pressing international concern, and that it should simply be regarded as a question of bilateral relations, she was not speaking for the Government, and Canada will continue to regard acid rain as the international problem which it is universally recognized to be?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no contradiction at all between the Minister and myself. It is clearly international in scope, but I think my hon. friend will agree that the manner in which it must be resolved is through serious bilateral negotiations, and that is precisely what we plan to do.

SOLUTIONS TO BE SOUGHT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the point. Of course acid rain is not just a bilateral question. It is also a national and an international question. We want to hear from the Prime Minister that the Government will continue to seek international solutions to what is also an international problem and not just a bilateral one. We have not yet got that assurance from the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter is so serious that we shall seek help and solutions anywhere that we can. I might even ask my hon. friend for his counsel in this regard.

SOCIAL SECURITY

UNIVERSALITY OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS—SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, senior citizens and families in this country must be rather pained to see their Prime Minister acting like a clown.

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, since some people—the Prime Minister never tells the truth, that is a habit of his—are saying that family allowances and pensions will not be cut. The Minister of Finance says the exact opposite. The Minister of National Health and Welfare states there will be a special tax. Can the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: I assume the Hon. Member will withdraw the words: the . . . Minister never tells the truth. I presume he knows he cannot say that in the House.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I have been elected and re-elected as the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, and I was elected to come here and to tell the truth. What I said—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to withdraw what he said about the Minister and his ability or practice with respect to telling the truth. He knows perfectly well he must withdraw those words.

Mr. Malépart: —the blues I said the Prime Minister has a habit of not always telling the truth, and I do not think I will withdraw those words, because it is the truth.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member one more time to withdraw the statement.

[Translation]

I presume the Hon. Member is well aware that he used these words and made unparliamentary remarks, and that he now has an opportunity to withdraw them, or else I have no other recourse but the one he knows.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I can prove today that the Prime Minister did not say—

Mr. Speaker: I will give the Hon. Member another chance to withdraw what he said. Is the Hon. Member prepared to withdraw his remarks? I was listening to the Hon. Member when he said that the Prime Minister never told the truth or words to that effect. That is what I heard.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to seem stubborn, but I would have to see the blues. I have the impression I said that the Prime Minister does not always tell the truth.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would it suit Hon. Members on this side of the House to allow me to hear the Hon. Member? Why is it so difficult for Members to understand that, if I cannot hear the Member, nobody else can tell what he is saying? That is my problem.

[Translation]

I am sorry. I heard the Hon. Member and I thought he said the Prime Minister never told the truth. Is that what he said or else what did he say? I must know what he said in order to determine whether he should withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, as far as I can remember, I said that the Prime Minister does not always tell the truth. It is up to you to judge whether or not that is unparliamentary. I am not an expert on parliamentary procedure.

Mr. Speaker: It is unparliamentary to say that a Member has never or has not always told the truth. It is unparliamentary, because it constitutes an attack on the character of another Member.

I will give the Hon. Member another chance to withdraw his remarks. Quite simply, is the Hon. Member prepared to withdraw his remarks?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would have to see the blues. But if I said—

Mr. Speaker: If I give the Hon. Member another chance . . . No! No! Does the Hon. Member withdraw his remarks? Does the Hon. Member withdraw his remarks, yes or no? I have no other recourse but to name the Member, Mr. Malépart, the Member . . . I have no other recourse but to name Mr. Malépart. Waiting for the blues is not allowed. If the Hon. Member is prepared to withdraw his remarks, there is no problem—

• (1500)

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member offered to read the "blues".

Mr. Speaker: He can't.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not a question of what the Hon. Member said. It is a question of what I—

An Hon. Member: Yes, it is.

Mr. Nunziata: You just said you couldn't hear anything.

Mr. Speaker: I advise all Members to read the rules about naming. My dilemma is that I have heard a phrase that I find unparliamentary. As the Speaker, I therefore asked that the words be withdrawn.

The Hon. Member has a solution open to him. He accepts the Speaker's request that the remarks be withdrawn. That is his solution. If he chooses to use that solution, there is no problem. If he chooses not to use that solution, he is refusing a request of the Chair. Then he must be named. It is not a question of waiting. I have no other solution but to ask the Hon. member to withdraw the words. I have done this several times.

I am trying to encourage the Member simply to withdraw the words. If I am wrong, I will find out when I have read the "blues" and then I will deal with it. I am asking the Hon. Member to withdraw the words. May I give him that option?

[Translation]

Once again, I will give the Hon. Member the option of withdrawing his words. Is the Hon. Member prepared to do so? Perhaps I may explain to other Hon. Members that it is a matter for the Speaker to decide. That is all. If I am wrong, I am willing to read the blues myself later on, but I must inform the Hon. Member that I heard a remark that to me is unparliamentary. Is the Hon. Member prepared to withdraw that remark?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, with respect, I do not know whether not telling the truth or that sort of thing is parliamentary or unparliamentary, but I maintain that I still think what I said about the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I will give the Hon. Member another chance . . . Is he prepared . . . Order, please. Does the Hon. Member feel that by what he just said, he has withdrawn his previous remarks? Is that what he feels?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, what I wanted to explain in plain French is that if I do not have the right to say what I said, I still maintain what I think of the Prime Minister. And I presume I am still free to think what I please here in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I am not here to determine what you are thinking but to decide whether a remark used in the House is unparliamentary.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

WORLD PEACE AND HARMONY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members will understand if I say that I am awfully glad that there are only two more days left in this week.

I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) on Tuesday, December 18, 1984, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by over 100 residents of the Timmins-Chapleau riding. The petition deals with property rights of Canadians. Although the petitioners recognize that property rights are guaranteed and protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights, they hereby petition this House to have property rights entrenched in the Canadian Constitution.

REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition from the residents of southwestern Ontario and principally the area surrounding Ingersoll following the death of police officer Jack Ross. These petitioners humbly beseech that the Parliament of Canada either hold a free vote of its Members on the issue of the reinstating of capital punishment or hold a public referendum on the issue so that the will of the majority of Canadians may be clearly expressed. I have several thousand signatures to present at this time.

RISING COSTS FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am presenting this petition on behalf of residents of 3015 Lawrence Avenue East in Scarborough and other citizens of Scarborough. Their concern is that senior citizens are finding it increasingly difficult to deal with rising costs of living and that any increase in pension benefits is negated by increases in rent and other necessary living expenses.

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present another petition on behalf of the people of Sackville, censoring the cuts in the Canadian Wildlife Service. These cuts will mean the end of a number of programs and undermine the effectiveness of the Canadian Wildlife Service. The people of Sackville humbly pray that you consider their concerns.

SYRIA—EMIGRATION OF JEWISH CITIZENS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, today on the occasion of Hanukkah, I have the honour of presenting a petition from the Jewish Students Association of the University of Manitoba and the University of Winnipeg. Their concern is for the repressive regulations which the Government of Syria is enforcing on those Jewish citizens attempting to leave the country. They ask that Parliament urge the Government of Syria to lift these regulations and permit the Jewish citizens to emigrate freely.

Order Paper Questions

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-219, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (leave of absence).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, the intent of this Bill is to provide job security to employed persons seeking election to Parliament and will guarantee them leave of absence without pay during the campaign and for one full term of Parliament. As well, it will ensure job security on their return after that one full term.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1984

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-18, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, to amend an Act to amend the Criminal Code and to amend the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Act, the Excise Act, the Food and Drugs Act, the Narcotic Control Act, the Parole Act and the Weights and Measures Act, to repeal other Acts and to make other consequential amendments.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that The Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA HOME RENOVATION PLAN

Question No. 10—Ms. Copps:

1. Since the inception of the Canada Home Renovation Plan, how many (a) homeowners applied for assistance by (i) province (ii) city (iii) type of dwelling (b) applications were accepted?

Order Paper Questions

2. What was the average cost to approve each application?

3. What was the average grant and loan per application by (a) province (b) city (c) type of dwelling?

4. What was the average income level per recipient of a (a) grant (b) loan by (i) province (ii) city (iii) type of dwelling?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. (a) A breakdown of the number of eligible homeowners who applied for assistance under the Canada Home Renovation Plan (CHRP) is as follows:

(i)

Province	No. of Eligible Applicants
Newfoundland	2,867
Prince Edward Island	1,048
Nova Scotia	8,206
New Brunswick	8,255
Quebec	33,166
Ontario	42,659
Manitoba	5,806
Saskatchewan	3,151
Alberta	10,359
British Columbia	12,995
Yukon	82
Northwest Territories	—

Note: CMHC did not maintain a record of the number of ineligible homeowners who may have applied for CHRP, as the applications were returned.

(ii) Since the program was only partially computerized for statistical monitoring purposes, a breakdown, by city, is not available.

(iii) Program eligibility was restricted to owner-occupied, single family houses containing not more than two units. Where the building contained two units, only one loan was permitted. No other information on dwelling type is available.

(b) All eligible applications which were received up to the program termination date were accepted. Note: Approximately 4,000 applications were subsequently cancelled after approval as the homeowners did not proceed with the work as agreed.

2. The approximate average administrative cost to approve each application was $191.

3. (a) The average forgivable loan per application, by province, was:

Province	Average Forgivable Loan
Newfoundland	$ 1,859
Prince Edward Island	1,844
Nova Scotia	1,755
New Brunswick	1,988
Quebec	1,786
Ontario	1,694
Manitoba	1,601
Saskatchewan	1,875
Alberta	1,599
British Columbia	1,738
Yukon	2,154
Northwest Territories	—

Only the forgivable loan was available, the applicant provided the balance.

(b) and (c) See response to parts 1(ii) and 1(iii) above.

4. (a) The average income level per recipient of the forgivable loan, by province, is as follows:

(i)

Province	Average Income of Forgivable Loan Recipient
Newfoundland	$ 20,849
Prince Edward Island	21,434
Nova Scotia	21,186
New Brunswick	21,374
Quebec	23,709
Ontario	24,575
Manitoba	25,109
Saskatchewan	22,193
Alberta	22,046
British Columbia	25,005
Yukon	24,803
Northwest Territories	—

(ii) and (iii) See response to parts 1(ii) and 1(iii) above.

(b) Not known. Only the forgivable loan was available under the program, the applicant provided the balance.

CANADA OIL SUBSTITUTION PROGRAM

Question No. 62—Mr. Howie:

In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, under the Off-Oil Program, how many (a) applications for assistance were received (b) rebate cheques were issued?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): (a) During the fiscal year 1983-84, the COSP Secretariat received approximately 247,900 applications under the Canada Oil Substitution Program (COSP); (b) 244,224.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

UNIVERSALITY IN SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to you, when I gave notice before noon of this day, in light of the confusion which has resulted from the various points of view that have been taken by different Ministers of the Government, I request the Speaker of this House to indicate that an emergency debate will be allowed to take place on the whole concept and issue of universality later this day.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) is asking leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 30 to discuss a matter which is significantly similar to the one cited yesterday in the application made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

I have once again given considerable thought to the underlying principles that must guide the Speaker in deciding whether an application under this Standing Order ought to be accepted. Inevitably, the Chair is called upon to make a value judgment as to whether or not a given situation is an emergency. In the opinion of the Hon. Member it is urgent to him that the question of universality of social programs be considered, and I presume from the voices being raised in the House it is urgent to other Members as well.

In my opinion, very little has changed since yesterday in the circumstances surrounding this subject. While the matter may be immediately relevant, of concern and on the minds of many Hon. Members, the Hon. Member for Sudbury has not convinced me that a genuine emergency exists yet.

That is not to say, however, that the circumstances in this matter of continuing debate and concern could not change, and that, faced with unexpected occurrences leading to a real emergency, I might not rule otherwise. Therefore, I must refuse the Hon. Member's application.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the House of the business which is scheduled for this afternoon. There has been no indication prior to this with respect to the business for today.

First, the House will deal with the excise tax Bill. That will be followed by the borrowing Bill. When the House is finished with those two items, it will proceed to the completion of the Bill which deals with Investment Canada.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 18, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Hon. Member already spoken in this debate?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): No.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I am being confused by the angels! The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which is in relation to the calling of second reading of this Bill. Until this morning, I did not have a chance to look at the ruling of the Chair which was made yesterday in relation to the calling of this order.

As Mr. Speaker will recall, it was agreed in this Chamber to make Bill C-12 Bill C-17. That was done after Bill C-12 had been called, read the first time, read a second time and debate was to have been on second reading. A motion was then presented to the Chair that, in effect, indicated that this Bill was deemed to have been read a first time and deemed to have been introduced for second reading by the Minister.

There are certain things which this Chamber can do, but there are certain things which it cannot do. Therefore, I submit that this Chamber cannot deem a Bill to have been read a first and second time without that Bill having been read a first and second time.

Mr. Speaker: Then the Hon. Member should have raised that point yesterday. The House chose yesterday to achieve this by unanimous consent. It was a request which was put to the House for unanimous consideration. It was adopted unanimously. Had the Hon. Member not been in favour of that proceeding, and had he been here yesterday, his rights as a Member would have been protected at that time. However, the Member cannot now raise a point of order arguing that the House could not do what the House chose to do yesterday. It was the choice of the House.

Does the Hon. Member have something to add?

Mr. Baker: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I believe the rules state "when it comes to a Member's attention". I was not here yesterday, but surely I have the right to raise a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has the right at present to refrain from granting unanimous consent. If the Member is raising a separate point of order, then I presume the Member wishes me to consider a point of order which suggests that the House could not do it by unanimous consent, although he has not stated that. If he wishes to make that case, I would be happy to hear citations.

It is my understanding that the House did yesterday, by unanimous consent, what it chose to do, as is its right. Does the Member have a point of order with regard to the change of procedure by unanimous consent?

Mr. Baker: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have. In fact, what I am saying is that when the Chair accepted the motion, the Chair should not have been—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair accepted the motion by unanimous consent. The Chair asked if there was unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion.

To my rescue again, I will quote Citation 237 of Beauchesne which reads:

> A point of order against procedure must be raised promptly and before the question has passed to a stage at which the objection would be out of place.

The effect of that rule is that the Member cannot raise a point of order about yesterday's proceeding today. I suggest to the Hon. Member that there is good reason for that rule: a Member could come along a year from now and raise a point of order about something which happened today. Clearly, that is not intended. Clearly, the Hon. Member cannot raise a point of order today about what happened yesterday.

Does the Member have a different point of order?

Mr. Baker: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have. Mr. Speaker put the question that this Bill be now read a second time. That was the same question which was put yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Speaker received a request for a House Order and put the request for unanimous consent as to whether the matter should be considered by the House. The House considered it and adopted it unanimously. The House is master of its procedure.

Ms. Copps: Or mistress.

Mr. Speaker: Or mistress, if some Members prefer.

Resuming debate on the Bill, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, after all the activity we have had today and the lack of activity yesterday, it takes some effort to carry our minds back to the matter which we are debating.

Bill C-17 deals with changes to the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. It deals with increases in the federal sales tax, increases in the telecommunications programming services tax and the wholesale tax on motor vehicles. In addition, the Bill proposes to remove sales tax on diesel fuel for farmers, fishermen, loggers and miners. The Bill also increases the air transportation tax.

Most of the tax proposals are increases which will be paid by individual Canadians. The Bill represents increases in taxation. It ultimately takes money out of the pockets of Canadians, and in the process of doing that it reduces the amount of money which people have to spend and, consequently, that part of aggregate demand.

In speaking on this Bill this afternoon, I would like to give some consideration to the kind of tax policy which the Government should be following if it wishes to achieve the prosperity that Canadians so desperately want. When this bill was previously debated, it was pointed out that there was, after all, one tax reduction included in the legislation. That is the removal of sales tax on diesel fuel for persons involved in various primary industries.

We in our caucus welcome that particular change. However, I would like to point out that this particular change is part of an unfortunate Canadian tax tradition which was followed by the previous Government over the past dozen or more years. It represents just that kind of continuity of policy which the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) and I were debating yesterday afternoon. What we have seen increasingly in Canada over the past dozen years is a shifting of the tax burden from a balance between corporate income taxpayers and personal income taxpayers, to a situation in which there is an overwhelming weight of taxation being borne by individual persons paying personal income tax. That particular shift in the balance of taxation creates an imbalance which most of the tax proposals before us in this Bill only intensify. That is, in my opinion, at the root of the economic difficulties in which Canadians find themselves.

I would like to consider now why that assertion might be true. What would be a sound policy, particularly fiscal taxation policy, for the Government to follow in order to achieve more economic activity in this country so that we can move toward fuller employment and achieve finally that state of social efficiency which full employment would represent? Both the tax revenue flowing in and the reduction in the cost of government, would serve to put an end to the budget deficit from which Canadians are suffering, which deficit is the strong preoccupation of the Government. I submit that the Liberal Government—and now it seems the Conservative Government as well—have a preoccupation with prosperity for Canada in which investment is regarded as the basic engine for increasing economic activity and achieving prosperity in this country. Of course, that will prove to be relevant when we debate Bill C-15. However, in the case of Bill C-17, what we see is the negative consequences of that kind of preoccupation.

What we see here is a readiness to tax individuals more heavily in order to continue sheltering corporate enterprise. Government feels that if these corporations, and perhaps the wealthy Canadians who are the primary shareholders, had large enough incomes—and the tax shelters could do so much to increase the amount of resources at their command—then they will surely invest that money, and as the investment occurs we will achieve prosperity. It is obvious, of course, that when investment does occur, whether it is in the form of factories, construction, the installation of machinery, the buying of equipment to produce goods, and so on, there would certainly be more prosperity.

However, the difficulty with this idea is that investment is so largely a matter of a means to an end, that end being, of course, the production of goods and services for Canadians. When we find the demand for these goods is weak, then there is in fact no real inducement to invest. But we must find the means to encourage that to which earlier Liberal policy, and now Conservative policy, is oriented.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when factories operate at three-quarters of capacity or less, or when there is 50 per cent more capacity in existence than they actually need in order to fill their orders, then there is absolutely no inducement to invest even if one uses every tax inducement in the book. One could, of course, have investment take place at some other location, to have more efficient equipment installed so that the end result at that plant will be efficiency of operation. But when demand falls so far short of capacity of production, the end result is going to be a close down at the less efficient plant in order to keep the other one operating. In these times of weak economic demand which Canadians have experienced during these last years, there is only one real possibility for the kind of investment-led economic expansion which Liberals in the past, and now the Conservatives, regard as the basis for Canadian prosperity.

I would like to suggest that the great Canadian need is to ensure that individuals and families, far more than is now the case, have the income which is required in order to live more comfortable lives, in order to buy the goods which are held out to them, particularly at this Christmas season, and in so doing build up a demand for goods which will in turn encourage manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers, to higher levels of activity. Thus there will be employment of more people. It is that kind of increase in demand for goods and services which we want to achieve.

It is patently obvious, however, that that kind of program is not being considered by Bill C-17 which is presently before us. It is obvious that the effect of these various taxes is to take some billions of dollars out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians. It is obvious as well, in looking at the record, that Hon. Members of the present Government, when they were in opposition in the early months of this year, were clearly conscious of that fact. The present Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) in late 1983 said of the sales tax increase which was designed to cover the cost of the special capital recovery projects, as reported in Hansard of December 13, 1983 at page 116, that this sales tax increase:

> —is a huge regressive tax bite, far greater than the hospital insurance premiums collected by Ontario or any other province that this Government has now introduced legislation to try to stop.

He had one specific concern in mind in making his comment, adding some of the colourful language for which he is well known.

Speaking two months later to the day, he said as reported in Hansard of February 13, 1984 at page 1313:

> Would he—

That is the Minister of Finance,

> —agree to eliminate the federal sales tax increase of 1 per cent next October which he has already imposed on the Canadian consumer? Does he agree that Canadian consumers must be helped if there is going to be a continuing recovery?

That is exactly the question I am asking this afternoon. And I would like to add my question: What is the present Government doing by bringing in that same proposal for us to pass?

Three days later the Minister of Justice made an even stronger statement, and I quote from Hansard of February 16, 1984 at page 1444:

> The Minister calls it the special recovery tax. He should rename it the special recession tax. There is no recovery. This tax is not going to help it, this special recession tax.

And then he went on to ask:

> Where does the Minister help domestic demand in this Budget? He would help consumer demand if he did away with the 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax that is coming in October. It is a regressive tax that bears more heavily on lower income people.

The New Democratic Party could hardly have said that better, although we might try for greater eloquence. There is the point nicely stated by the present Minister of Justice, that this is a tax that takes money out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians, which in turn reduces the amount of business activity in all of our communities across the country. That means there is not as much business being done in department stores, supermarkets, smaller shops, furniture stores and conceivably automobile agencies. One can name the various businesses affected in every community across the country.

Whether the business happens to be one of the great national chains with which Canada is blessed or cursed, depending on your perspective, or one of the smaller organizations which is an active member of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, whose president has chosen to be such a firm supporter of this new Government, the result of this taxation is to reduce the amount of business being done. There will be less business being done by wholesalers which means less need for transportation. There will be fewer people at work conceivably on the railways, ultimately in the trucking business, moving goods. Ultimately, given this weaker demand in the economy, there will be less production in factories and far fewer people employed.

What this country needs so obviously is confidence among consumers, not among business people. Business people respond to circumstance; they are going to respond far more genuinely to the confidence of individual consumers if they are told the future is going to be better. We have had a lot of that kind of rhetoric but it seems pretty clear from the level of savings and the reaction of businessmen that confidence has not been increased over the last month and 10 days or so since the economic and fiscal statement was brought down. Canadians await some positive signals. In fact, some number of Canadians, and how many is surely not yet clear, are waiting for the day that they receive their last pay cheque before they join the jobless rolls. They then receive unemployment insurance, which increases the cost of government, and they begin looking for work.

Each of those actions will reduce confidence, not build it up. Those actions will reduce the amount of money people have to spend and increase the cost of government, forcing it to borrow more money in order to meet those costs. That, of course, is the very heart of the misguided policies that this Government is following, which policy was expressed early on in the decision to carry through the sales tax increase on October 1. Those policies were expressed in the determination to deal with the deficit instead of recognizing that the deficit is only a sympton. What the Canadian people want is a government which says we need more spending. If we have individual Canadians spending money, we should not take it out of their pocket with taxation. We should find ways to put them to work doing the constructive things this country needs. When we do those things we genuinely build up confidence, but it seems this Government has no sense of that kind of needed activity at all.

We then face, Mr. Speaker, a situation in which misguided policies are all too likely to bring us into a severe recession in 1985. God only knows what will come after that. We live then in a situation in which the popular sense that Tory times are hard times is all too likely to be fulfilled by the present Government because of its misguided policies as reflected in Bill C-17 and its various provisions.

Notice, too, that part of the mistaken reasoning which exists in the Government is reflected in the fact that the sales tax increase the Government asserts was designed to raise money to cover the cost of the special capital recovery projects which the previous Government brought forward is being imposed at a time of semi-depression. No one has any reason to object to borrowing money if we are building things which make this country a better place to live, particularly if it is part of the strategy of moving us back towards full employment. At that point our fiscal difficulties are going to be much easier and the deficit the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is preoccupied with will be gone. But what we see instead is an assertion that the Liberal program was to raise the money required for these projects by taxation and this Government is going through with that.

The gibes earlier this afternoon about bickering, or whatever it was, between sweethearts, the noise one hears between the Official Opposition and the Government benches, leaves no doubt about the bickering lovers in this place. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), at one point when referring to bickering, recognized the appropriateness of the fact that here were lovers who struggled for control with the very same ideas in their heads. Now the other bunch have power and they follow through with the same programs.

There is no sense at all here of achieving the real change that Canadians want. There is no recognition of the truth that Tom Maxwell of the Conference Board of Canada tried to remind us of during the election campaign. Certainly recovery depends on lower interest rates, and God help us if the Americans do not achieve lower interest rates in order to save the rest of the world from the disaster that stares us in the face, not just Canada but Latin America and various other parts of the world.

If I may conclude, Mr. Speaker, given this preoccupation with the same policy, given a preoccupation with interest rates, there is no sense of a need for real change, a need for a government which will work towards full employment and prosperity. Instead we have this unfortunate preoccupation with taxation, with taking money out of the pockets of Canadians after the money for the special recovery projects has been spent. It means more taxation and more depression for Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech? Since there are no questions or comments I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco).

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to have the opportunity to address one particular element of the Bill, that being Section 49.01. The elements contained within that section were really a cornerstone of Conservative policy towards the forest and mining industries, particularly in Kootenay West.

Bearing in mind that in Kootenay West we have the highest unemployment level in British Columbia and we are among the top eight in Canada, what is it about this particular provision which is so attractive and important to the forest and mining sectors? It is the fuel tax rebate of three cents a litre, which may not seem to be a significant sum. However, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that a truck logger who drives for 15 or 20 miles on very steep, mountainous roads, usually using the bottom end of his gear box, has a high consumption of fuel. In colder weather the vehicles tend to burn more fuel by virtue of shrinkage. That five, 15 or 25 miles of bush road, and in the case of Kootenay West mountain road, is only the first part of his journey. The next part is to get those logs to the mill site. That can mean a journey of 10 to 150 miles. There is a lot of time spent on the highway. In many instances it takes as long to traverse the 15-mile bush road as it does to get to the mill pond using higher speeds on the highway.

That is really not important. The important thing is that I have been assured that Section 49.01, which refers to off-road use, will have the widest latitude in its application. Off-road use would imply that the tax rebate would only apply on the bush road. The difficulty with that is that at times that bush road is a privately-owned, ungazetted road into a privately-owned timber stand. At times that bush road is a forestry road yet to be gazetted, and at times it is on another access road which is gazetted but is considered, for all intents and purposes, to be off highway. That really is not the intent of the Government because it only takes care of a portion of the saving which could flow to the operator. The skidders, heel booms and various other mechanical devices of the bush pretty well remain in the bush until they require servicing. The highway use of that equipment is virtually non-existent but the logging trucks are used on the highway all the time.

More than one truck logger in my constituency has told me that the difference in this fuel tax rebate will decide whether he will have sufficient savings to buy a truck tire. The savings on fuel would enable a logging truck contractor to buy one truck tire monthly. That is a substantial sum, especially when we are talking about an 18-wheeler.

I would like to discuss the mining industry as well. In Kootenay West we are fortunate to have some rather good bodies of ore which are located in very difficult and mountainous terrain. There is an opportunity for the mining sector to offset the cost of moving their concentrates and ore from the mine site to a concentrator or to the Cominco smelter in Trail. This is a matter involving massive weights both on and off the highway. It could represent a substantial saving to that sector.

When considering how this applies to the forest and mining sectors in Kootenay West, we are generally speaking about small people, or "ordinary Canadians" as the NDP would like to refer to them. I have yet to understand what an average Canadian is versus an ordinary Canadian versus any other Canadian. I did not realize that we had classes of Canadians in Canada, but the NDP have a habit of classifying people, not just by rank and station, but also by politics. Mr. Speaker, these are hard-working, dedicated people.

Mr. Keeper: Ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Brisco: Their contribution to Kootenay West has been generous and extensive over many years. If one considers what Kootenay West has generated in terms of tax dollars over the last 50 years and compares that figure with what Kootenay West has taken back, it would not take long for anyone to determine that up to now the people of Kootenay West have not received their fair share. That time is due. This is just the start of what I hope will be a substantial move toward equality of that fair share.

These average people, these hard-working, industrious loggers, are private operators for the most part. They may have one, two or three trucks. They may have one piece of equipment or several. Whatever the case, they have a very substantial investment in that equipment. That equipment has by and large been shut down by the depressed market for lumber, high interest rates, and the costs of operation.

This rebate, considered in isolation, may seem somewhat insignificant. Let me assure the House that taken in its total form it will have a very substantial and significant impact on any one truck logger or small mining company. If it does nothing else but maintain that operator, it will have achieved its goal. In the case of a larger operation this fuel tax rebate may well mean the difference between a small mill operating or not operating. It may mean the difference between hiring an extra employee or not hiring one.

Today I have heard much discussion from my hon. colleague who sits on the NDP benches. He says that the sales tax which we seek to impose is going to wreak havoc on Canadians. I have not heard anyone on the NDP benches saying: "Here is something that we support and endorse". It would be very refreshing if Members opposite would be prepared to give credit where credit is due and to share the desire that we on this side have to take positive steps for Canadians instead of negative steps. I realize that the role of the Opposition is to oppose, but I do not think that should be a 100 per cent commitment. I think there should be some balance in what is said. Indeed, all we hear is criticism. There is an absence of support for positive measures. That is certainly a disappointment as far as I am concerned.

In conclusion, let me say that I, other Members of the B.C. causus and indeed all Members whose constituencies include the forest sector, the mining sector and indeed trappers, are appreciative of his measure whichi will substantially facilitate these operators' survival, given the state of the economy today.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Hon. Member. He wants support from the NDP for positive measures. The Bill before us today includes an increase in the sales tax. When members of his Party were in opposition it was their view, as stated on December 13, for example, that this sales tax increase "is a huge, regressive tax bite".

The Party opposite makes it very difficult for us to offer any support for its measures when they affect ordinary Canadians. It is very clear that that is the case given comments even from his own caucus when they were in opposition. Would the Member comment on that?

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I have no difficulty with commenting on that at all. If the Hon. Member was paying attention he would know that I was talking about Section 49.01. The record shows that I was talking about the fuel tax rebate for loggers, the mining industry and trappers in my constituency. I suppose it applies to farmers in his constituency. That is the subject with which I was concerned in my speech. Those are the measures about which I am pleased. I think the Hon. Member opposite would be pleased with those as well. No one wants an increase in any tax. We all hesitate and find it somewhat regretful to increase a tax.

I hear the Hon. Member making reference to ordinary Canadians. I do not know what an ordinary Canadian is.

Mr. Deans: That is right.

Mr. Brisco: I know what Canadians are. "Ordinary Canadian" is a class status applied to a group by the NDP. Is the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) an ordinary Canadian or a little bit below them?

Mr. Deans: I am a very, very ordinary Canadian.

Mr. Brisco: Just what is his status? They are the class act in town. If they want to establish classes in Canada, let them go to it.

Mr. Keeper: I can tell you that you are ordinary.

Mr. Brisco: Thank you.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco).

Mr. Brisco: Not to my speech, you didn't. You weren't here.

Mr. Deans: I was watching you from the lobby where I was attempting to work out some arrangements for tomorrow.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that perhaps it would be helpful if he understood the process that we go through here. For example, the very matters we are discussing are only before the House because, in essence, we agreed to have them here. We recognize that they are of value. These matters were not in the original Bill and we accepted that to include the rebates for the very people he is suggesting require them was a useful step. Therefore we allowed the Bill to be withdrawn by unanimous consent and reintroduced the Bill with those rebates there so that those people could get those benefits.

I say to the Hon. Member that it would be helpful if he understood that our role is to point out problem areas. For those areas which we do not deal with, one might presume from time to time that we at least favour if not support them.

However, with respect to his comments, those provisions could not have been in the Bill unless we agreed they be there.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I find the Hon. Member's remarks rather strange, that he should make such an interjection on the basis of my comments.

Mr. Deans: Why?

Mr. Brisco: I have no argument with the House process. I was speaking about the support of—

Mr. Deans: We said it would not get there if we did not support it.

Mr. Brisco: I think I have the floor. If the Hon. Member wants to have another shot at me, let him have another shot. If the Hon. Member wants to debate the issue he can go back to my former speech and read that. I see that he has now left his seat. He really does not want to listen to the debate.

Mr. Deans: I am listening to you.

Mr. Brisco: The fact of the matter remains that when a positive element is introduced by the Government there is very little recognition. The Opposition deals solely in the negative and that is the bottom line.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) left his seat to go and talk to the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in order, perhaps, that the Government House Leader would be good enough to talk to the Hon. Member so that he may better understand the proceedings in the House before he stands up and makes such comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) have another question?

Mr. Keeper: Another question, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member pointed out that this Bill includes some rebates for farmers and fishermen. It is obvious that we have facilitated the passage of those rebates in the House. That is certainly positive support for those measures.

However, It would not be necessary to have rebates if the Government would not continue to increase sales tax in the first place. That is another part of this legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) care to answer?

Mr. Keeper: He gave up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) wish to debate?

Mr. Dorin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that the Speaker called the question prior to the Hon. Member standing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I want to tell the Hon. Member that as long as I keep reading, until I come to the yeas and nays the question is not called. Therefore, I recognize the Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak in this debate because I believe it concerns several important matters. Not only are these matters of concern to all Canadians, they are important to my constituents as well.

The first matter concerns the proposed 1 per cent sales tax increase. This was originally introduced by the previous Government as the special recovery tax. I found it rather ironic that the Liberal Government would propose a future sales tax in order to pay for their current expenditures. This means that we are in a position where we must impose this tax as a new Government to pay for those expenditures. I believe we are properly using our authority to put these measures through. I hope it can be done in a timely and orderly manner.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deans: On division.

• (1600)

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I know all Members of the House want to see these clauses in the Excise Tax Act for farmers, fishermen, loggers, and miners implemented. I have a couple of questions to which I hope the Minister can respond this afternoon.

These provisions were introduced to the House at a time when the petroleum compensation charge was increased to $17.50 a cubic metre, or nearly $3 a barrel. It is important to the farm community to know what the impact of the Excise Tax Act is when it is balanced off. Is the petroleum compensation charge refundable or not chargeable for farm operations?

The petroleum compensation charge of $17.50 is chargeable for farm vehicles operating on the highways carrying produce, all produce, coming to and from the farm and for supplies coming to the farm. From the farmers' point of view, I would like to know what the balance is on input costs by removing the excise tax. We know in the Finance Minister's statement that an additional farm service charge of $32.3 million will be imposed on farmers for inspection services and so on. The excise tax is going to be removed, but with regard to the imposition of the $17.50 a cubic metre on all fuel being used by farm trucks and vehicles, for all supplies coming to the farm, including certain fertilizers which use petroleum feedstocks, what will the impact be of those two factors being balanced off? Does the farmer end up any better off? It is my understanding that the excise tax amounts to about a $100 million reduction for the farmer. The petroleum compensation charge is not imposed on farm-use petroleums until 1987, and there are the farm service charges of $32.3 million. There are the increased charges for the fuel used in farm vehicles on the highway carrying produce coming to and from the farm.

Can the Minister respond to that question? I think it is important for the farm community to know whether as a result of the economic statement of the Minister of Finance the input costs have really been reduced. I recall that when we were increasing the prices of petroleum by $1 or $2 a year back in the 1970s we used a factor of something like one-half of 1 per cent increased inflation for each dollar by which the price of a barrel of oil increased.

Can the Minister tell me what the factor is that is applied generally to the population by increasing that petroleum compensation charge by $17.50 per cubic metre, which is roughly $3 a barrel? What is the impact of that on inflation in the country and on economic growth? We are all concerned about economic growth. I am trying to find out exactly what the net effect for the individual farmer would be. I have another question, but I see the Minister looks puzzled so I will not put another question until she answers this one.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the majority of the fuel that the farmers use will be subject to this rebate. I cannot be precise about figures because they will vary from one user to another, but most farm vehicle use is off-highway. The farmer should benefit greatly from this change. Farmers have told us that this will be the major part of their fuel use. They are quite satisfied with it.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, if the Minister does not have figures to indicate what the net effect is of increasing fuel prices on the highway on farmers in particular, could she say what the net inflation factor, which the Government calculated in preparing the economic statement, is of increasing the petroleum compensation charge by $17.50 per cubic metre?

Can the Minister indicate what the net reduction will be on economic growth? Calculations must have been made on that. I think from that we could get some reading of what the increased inflation costs are for farmers, for their produce being shipped by trucks or whatever, by the level of the input costs of transportation to the farm. Can the Minister indicate the inflationary impact of the petroleum compensation charge and the economic growth reduction?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the net impact or the balancing between the two is that the farmer, like other people, will pay 1.8 cents per litre for highway or at least non-defined use, but he get a 4.8 cents break on his farm use. The balance is in his favour. To respond to the question about economic benefits on the fuel tax side, that will come from Energy, Mines and Resources. They will have done the economic impact work on this.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I cannot believe that when the Department of Finance imposed a $17.50 per cubic metre increase for every gallon of fuel consumed in this country, except fuel consumed by farmers, fishermen and miners, a calculation was not done as to what the inflation factor would be. That is clearly in the realm of the Minister of Finance. Sure the Minister of Finance is very concerned about what the inflationary impact will be on a fuel increase of that magnitude and what the drawdown will be on economic development. I am sure the Minister and her officials will have those figures at their fingertips. I hope she will be able to respond to that because I am sure the Department of Finance officials can do those calculations almost off the top of their heads.

I want to inquire about the excise tax. Bill C-12 was withdrawn and this Bill introduced. Will this Bill require local distributing companies, such as the United Co-operatives of Ontario distribution outlets across Ontario, to charge the excise tax to their customers and have their customers claim it back from the federal Government? My impression is that the Bill as initially introduced required local distributors like the United Co-operatives of Ontario to charge the tax. The individual farmer or other user had to apply to the Government to get the rebate. Large integrated companies such as Imperial Oil or Gulf did not have to charge the excise tax. It would be refunded because they were a manufacturer or a base distributor.

Will this Bill allow local distributors not to charge the tax the same as the large oil companies such as Imperial Oil? If it is not on that equitable basis, it will be most unfair to the little independent distributors. They will have to charge an extra 4.8 cents a litre whereas Imperial Oil will be able to send its truck around the farming community and not charge the tax. It is a most unfair system. Can the Minister explain exactly what the arrangement will be as the result of Bill C-17?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the smaller dealers should be able to qualify as well. That was part of the purpose of this. It will be a direct credit. I think the qualification is that it is a bulk sale either at the pump or delivered to the farm. Those dealers will qualify as long as they are registered with Revenue Canada.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, part of this legislation provides for a rebate to fishermen, farmers, loggers and miners. That is to be applauded. At the same time, however, the Government is imposing an increase in the federal sales tax, for example, on construction materials which will cost something like $2 billion over four years. Has the Minister calculated the impact on employment in this country as a result of taking $2 billion out of the pockets of the consumers? Can she tell us how many jobs will be lost in the economy as a result of increasing the sales tax and reducing purchasing power at this time?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, we have made very clear the reasons why we are raising the sales tax. We are in a position of paying for programs that were bequeathed to us and we need to raise the revenue. We proceeded with the sales tax. I believe this has been well discussed in this House.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, since the Minister has not directly answered my question as to what the impact will be on employment as a result of taking $2 billion out of the pockets of Canadian consumers, I presume the Government has not examined the impact on employment by increasing the sales tax, particularly on construction materials, at this time. Will the Minister confirm that? Has the Government not examined the impact of an increase in the sales tax as it affects employment, particularly in light of the fact the Conservative Party ran on the promise of jobs, jobs, jobs?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, our assessments indicate that the impact on consumers is relatively modest and that a large part of the sales tax increase falls on imported goods. Therefore, there will be some modest benefit to Canadian business competitively and the consumer will not be that much worse off.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, is the Minister willing to share the analysis upon which she makes the assertion that an increase in the sales tax in the order of $2 billion will have a minimal impact on employment and consumers at this time? Does she have an analysis upon which she makes that assertion and is she willing to table the study on which she makes the assertion?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, considering that items such as food, clothing and footwear are exempted from the sales tax increase, I thought it would be fairly clear to the Hon. Member that the injury to the consumer will be very modest.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, when the Minister says that the impact will be minimal, is she saying that a 1 per cent federal sales tax increase on construction materials, for example, will have no visible impact on construction activity in this country or with regard to employment? Is she saying that when the sales tax is increased by $2 billion at a time when people are pressed for money in order to make ends meet, people will not suffer as a result?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, no one likes tax increases. We would have preferred not to be in the position of introducing this tax increase. We have made the best judgments that we can so that the impact will be minimal. I cannot see that we can say much more on this topic.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I have a final supplementary question to ask the Minister. She says that they are reluctant to introduce a tax increase. I wonder if she is aware that the tax increase that she is introducing to the House is the same tax increase that was introduced by the Liberal Government when it was in office, that she is in fact implementing Liberal tax policy here today and that her Party, while in opposition, described this sales tax increase as a huge, regressive tax bite. How can the Minister raise taxes for people, though she says reluctantly—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Keeper: How can she say one thing in opposition and another when in office?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I hope the Hon. Member would remain relevant to the clause. That is not relevant to the clause. I will recognize another very short supplementary question.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, are you saying that the tax increase is not relevant to the clause?

The Deputy Chairman: I am saying that Standing Order 59 of the Standing Orders of the House shall be observed in Committee of the Whole so far as may be applicable, except the Standing Orders regarding the seconding of motions, the limiting of the number of times of speaking and the length of speeches. I would like the Hon. Member to be relevant as far as Clause 1 is concerned.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Chairman, I will seek your guidance. I was asking the Minister about the sales tax increase. Is that not a part of the clause?

Mrs. McDougall: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I thought the Hon. Member was speaking to you.

I think we have made abundantly clear the sitution with which we are faced. We are asking Canadians to share in helping us resolve some of our difficulties. We do not like to have to ask them to do that but the tax increase was essential at this time. As I said, we introduced it reluctantly given the fiscal situation in which we find ourselves.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I believe the Minister said that the rebate on the excise tax on gasoline was 4.8 cents per litre. Does that 4.8 cents include the rebate that was already in place for the last 10 years plus a new rebate or is it just the new rebate?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, that includes the three cents and the 1.8 cents from the PCC.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could be a little more explicit. I asked her if the figure includes only the rebate to be received under this Bill or if it includes the total rebate.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, no, because there is—

Ms. Copps: Who's running this country anyway?

Mrs. McDougall: Not you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: In addition to the 4.8 cents, there is 1.5 cents, which I believe is the figure to which the Hon. Member refers, that has been in place for 10 years or so.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I would like the Minister to explain the difference in figures or to give us an understanding of just what the total rebate on the excise tax on gasoline will be to a primary producer. As the Minister knows, the rebate on the excise tax on gasoline was available to fishermen and farmers for many years. There is a total value on that rebate. Then there is an additional value added by the legislation before us today. I would like to have the Minister explain just what the figures are.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the figures are three cents plus 1.8 cents plus 1.5 cents.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, as I understand the two excise taxes and the petroleum compensation charge, the farmer, fisherman, logger or miner will not have to pay the three cents and the 1.8 cents. I wonder why the Minister did not provide for the 1.5 cents excise tax which I believe was imposed by the Budget of June 10, 1975, to be withheld as well. Why is that being left so that the primary producer must submit a claim for a refund for that 1.5 cents excise tax that has been sitting there for many years? He does not pay it. It just seems to me that that makes for more bookkeeping. I wonder if we could introduce an amendment in committee to provide that the 1.5 cents per litre excise tax which has been in existence for some time could be taken away so that the primary producer does not have to pay it when he buys the fuel.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, that is a matter that is with the Department of National Revenue. They are reviewing the way that tax is assessed and will be bringing something regarding that before the House. However, it is not my Department.

The Deputy Chairman: I believe the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate had a supplementary question.

Mr. Baker: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The only reason I am putting this very important question to the Minister is that some confusion arises, when someone talks about a rebate on the excise tax to primary producers and uses figures, as to where the total figure comes from. It is still confusing in my mind. The Minister indicates that it is three cents here, 1.8 cents there and 1.5 cents here. I still do not understand that the Minister has said and I do not understand what the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board said yesterday. Members of the general public do not understand what they said either. I would like some clarification.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I apologize for confusing the Hon. Member. Far be it for me to do that.

The old tax was 1.5 cents a litre for all gasoline. The new one is 4.8 cents a litre, combining the 1.8 cents and the three cents a litre, and it applies to diesel fuel and gasoline. They do not quite compare and it is hard to give the Hon. Member a total figure.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I am still confused after having listened to this debate. Perhaps I could ask the Minister how much better off a farmer or a fisherman will be under this legislation. Will his energy costs be reduced by 4.8 cents or by five cents or by 1.5 cents? How much better off is the primary producer going to be?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, under this Bill that is before us today, the primary producer is better off by three cents. Under the Petroleum Administration Act, the primary producer is better off by 1.8 cents. Under the old Bill, the primary producer is better off on that portion of it by 1.5 cents.

• (1630)

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I have another question for the Minister. In the provinces, most of the gas which is used—and there is a provincial tax rebate—is marked gas. Is there a mechanism in this legislation which would distinguish between off-highway gas and highway gas? Will there be a dye or something in the diesel fuel?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the answer is no. There will not be a marking. It varies from one province to another. Some use it and some do not. We have chosen not to mark it.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate rising to speak on this clause?

Mr. Baker: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I have listened to the Minister describing the rebate on excise tax on gasoline and how it will be implemented. There has been much discussion on this particular clause as it relates to primary producers. I wonder if the Minister will have a comment on what I am about to say, or if she could take it up with the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Agriculture.

The excise tax on gasoline to which the Minister referred—the 1.5 cents which is available, and has been for years, to primary producers, farmers and fishermen—is also available to clergymen and anyone who is using the gas to further their occupation, on a judgment of the question by the Department of National Revenue. However, there is a problem with that rebate as it relates to primary producers. The problem is that a very low percentage of primary producers who qualify for the tax rebate do not receive it, simply because they do not apply for it. In fact, I would say that half of the fishermen on the East Coast of Canada do not apply for the tax rebate. Furthermore, I would say that one-quarter of those fishermen did not know that the provision existed. It was only in the case, as the Hon. Member for Egmont pointed out, in which the gas was marked and there was a distinction in the community that a particular type of gas could be used occupationally that they were aware of the provision. Of course, as the Hon. Member for Egmont knows, there have been a number of court cases concerning people who have used marked gas on the highway.

I would like the Minister to comment on the fact that there have been rebates available for some time and that primary producers were not taking advantage of them for some reason or another. Although some Members may say, "No way, all the farmers have been taking advantage of this in Canada", I can assure the Minister that they have not.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I think the difference lies in the bulk permit, because the farmers will be able to claim credit at the pump. If they have not chosen to do that before, we have made it easier for them to do it now.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the legislation provides for on-farm use. There is a problem with that. For example, on Prince Edward Island there are a lot of farmers who truck potatoes from the field to the warehouse. When potato harvesters are in the field, they load the trucks and sometimes must drive 10 or 15 miles on the highway to travel to the storage warehouse. Will this tax apply to them for that distance, from the time they leave the field until they arrive at the warehouse? It is a very difficult situation. Part of the distance is definitely on-farm use when the trucks are back in the field, but a large part of it is on the highway. A farmer cannot stop at a driveway, siphon out the gas, fill up the truck with gas on which he would pay tax, and repeat the procedure at the next gate. That presents a real difficulty. I do not think this legislation addresses that situation. Therefore, would the Minister consider that to be a serious situation which could develop? It could put many farmers in my area in the position of breaking the law and landing in jail.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, we have chosen to do it this way because some farmers truck their own produce and others use transportation companies. We have kept the definition of farm use, because that applies through the legislation.

Second, we anticipate that the farmer will be in a position to best decide the proportionate use of fuel on and off the farm.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the Minister may well be confused about what I am saying. I understand the situation from the warehouse to the market-place, but that is different from the point which I am making. I am talking about the primary product in its primary stage, before processing or packaging—from the farm to the warehouse. In many instances in my province a farmer drives 15 or 20 miles on the highway because he has no storage on the back 40. It is a very difficult situation when farmers must drive on the main highway to get to their primary source of storage. What the Minister is stating is quite correct—from the storage to the market-place—but that is a totally different situation.

Mrs. McDougall: That is not what I am talking about.

Mr. Henderson: Yes, it is. As well, I am not talking about farmers who hire outside trucking firms to transport the produce. I am talking about a truck with a potato box on it, which is used for nothing else throughout the year but trucking potatoes from the field to the storage area.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that I do know about what he is talking. My second cousin ships his eggs from the farm into town on somebody else's truck. That is the kind of comparison which I am making.

If it is for farm use, it applies to everybody. If we apply it for highway use, it will then apply to some and not to others.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the egg situation does not apply. The Hon. Minister is mixing eggs with potatoes.

An Hon. Member: Hash browns.

Mr. Henderson: Yes, hash browns. The situation which I am discussing is totally different from the egg situation. The egg comes out of the hen in the henhouse, goes to the storage place, and then goes to the market-place. The Minister is talking about the market-place. That is after processing. I am talking about farm produce on the way to the market-place, or to the warehouse which holds them for processing. I am talking strictly about primary production, from the potato field to the potato warehouse. In some cases the warehouse is on the farm, but many farmers in Prince Edward Island farm four or five farms and some of those farms are from 15 to 35 miles away from the warehouse. The processing of the product, the washing, bagging or whatever as it is prepared for the market-place, is done at the warehouse, and that is where the potatoes are stored in temperature-controlled storage. But to get the potatoes out of the field and to the warehouse—and about 85 per cent of those potatoes are moved on highways—is a very difficult and expensive operation. That is where a lot of farmers use most of their fuel.

• (1640)

The Deputy Chairman: Does the Minister of State for Finance have any further comments?

Mrs. McDougall: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Foster: Just before we leave Clause 1, I wonder if the Minister could clarify exactly how much excise tax is involved for the four different groups who will be involved? How much excise tax is saved? The petroleum compensation charge is really only a saving in that before the economic statement there was no additional $17.50 per cubic metre of compensation charge. Could the Minister spell out what excise tax will be saved for the four main groups involved?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, for agriculture and fishing in the current fiscal year, $14.5 million will be saved; for mining, $9.0 million; for forestry, $1.5 million; for hunters and trappers, under $1 million. To 1985-1986, for agriculture and fishing, $1.15 million will be saved; for mining, $37.5 million; for forestry, $7.5 million. That is a total of $160 million.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 9—

Mr. Riis: I wonder if the Minister could inform us of the extent to which consultations took place with the industry prior to the adoption of this change. I have had myself, and I am certain the Minister has had as well, a number of representations by companies which are going to be affected by this. The case they make is that particularly in hard pressed parts of Canada where there has been a tremendous cut-back in the number of subscribers to their programming, this additional tax is going to add that much more of a financial burden on firms which are already hard-pressed. Could the Minister indicate what kind of consultation and input the Department received from the industry before this clause was considered?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, this tax has been in effect for two years. It was never passed by this House. There were extensive consultations, I am told, by the Department of Communications. We are simply legislating something which has been in place for a long time. I do not believe that consultations at this stage would be appropriate.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I am aware that this is in a sense, retroactive taxation. It was imposed without any legislation to authorize it, and I appreciate the process. However, the Minister will also appreciate that times have changed over the last two years in many communities. Perhaps two years, three years of four years ago, when this additional tax was being considered, the economic climate of Canada was certainly quite different from what it is today. As I said, a number of cable companies have brought to my attention that the revenues they anticipated in the communities in which they operate are quite different from what they were two or more years ago when the legislation was being considered. They have asked me to ask the Minister if she is aware of this situation. If so, was there any consideration given before dealing with this Bill? We are now enacting this legislation presumably in perpetuity.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, nothing is in perpetuity. I appreciate the point which the Hon. Member is making. We all know that times have changed. They have changed for a great many industries over the last two years or three years. It is certainly our intention to try to create a climate of prosperity where the cable operators, as well as other people in this country, will be economically much more viable.

Mr. Riis: I have one short question, Mr. Chairman, particularly in light of the Minister's last comment that the world has changed. The economic times facing these companies, particularly some of the smaller companies, have placed them under extreme pressure. It is for that reason that I ask the Minister—if in fact the Government is trying to create an environment in which there will be economic expansion—if she could explain how this taxation will assist the Government in creating the sense of optimism, and so on, which we so often hear these days.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the money from this tax has already been collected, allocated and spent over the last two years. It is for the benefit of Canadian programming that this tax was introduced in the first place. I recognize as much as anyone the economic difficulties in which people find themselves. I also recognize the difficulty in which the Government finds itself in trying to proceed with some fiscal responsibility. As I said, nothing is in perpetuity. I will be glad to take the case to my colleague, the Minister of Communications.

Clause 9 agreed to.

Clauses 10 to 15 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 16—

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, in my estimation, Clause 16 is the critical clause of this particular Bill. I believe it would be appropriate for the Minister to take a few moments to explain how increasing the tax, as it is reflected in Clause 16, is going to be beneficial to economic recovery? I appreciate that this has been introduced as a result of ways and means motions, and October 1 was the date on which it was imposed. However, many Hon. Members in their speeches at second reading, when the principle of the Bill was being debated, asked Hon. Members of the Government to explain it. So I take the opportunity now to ask the Minister if she would enlighten us as to how this particular section is going to assist anyone.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I believe I indicated in my comments on second reading that once again we are faced with a situation where funds have already been committed. Many of these funds have been spent. There are ongoing program commitments. We are in a position—which I believe we have explained at quite considerable length—where we have to pay for those programs and expenditures which are already in place, and we must raise the revenues to do that.

I might also point out that if we do not act in a fiscally responsible manner, we are not doing the future of this country any favour at all.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would indicate whether she perceives this type of taxation as being regressive taxation or progressive taxation? Given her last comment, how can she justify this type of taxation, particularly at this time when we know there is a growing gap between the haves and the have nots in Canadian society, a growing gap between the lower and upper income earners?

• (1650)

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I do not regard this lightly at all. This is a revenue raising tax. It is not regressive in the sense that products which people require in daily life such as food and footware, and I believe health care, are all exempted from this sales tax. So we have taken into account people at the lower income scale.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, one could argue that particular point at some length, but perhaps we will have an opportunity at third reading to develop that particular theme. I would be remiss if I did not ask the Minister to explain how this increase in sales tax, particularly as it applies to construction material, is justified. Why are construction materials not exempt from this increase? I am thinking particularly of the housing industry in this country. The construction industry in many parts of Canada has unemployment levels running in the 90 percentile range. To add now another percentage point to the federal sales tax on construction material seems to be absolutely opposite to the type of behaviour we should be seeing at this time. An incredibly hard-pressed industry is now going to be under more pressure than ever before because of this increase.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the impact of this tax on the construction industry generally, or the construction of housing in particular, is essentially very low. Included in the price of a house is a very high land and labour component as well as the material component. I might also add that one of the biggest problems for people buying houses is high interest rates. If we do not deal with our problems in such a way that we bring downward pressure on interest rates, then we are never going to help the housing market at all.

Mr. Riis: I do not want to let that remark go, Mr. Chairman. I think we all recognize that interest rates are the major financial component in new construction. It seems to me that if the Government were serious about economic recovery it would be taking some action on that particular front, and not simply adding additional costs to the construction sector, which is reflected not only in that sector but in manufacturing as well where the materials are made. I just wanted to say that if the Government and the Minister were serious about high interest rates and recognized that we are, in a peculiar way, blessed with the highest real interest rates of any industrialized nation, they would take some action on that front.

Mrs. McDougall: I will not comment on that, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 16 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 16 agreed to.

Clauses 17 to 21 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 22—Definitions

Mr. King: Mr. Chairman, notice has been given of the difficult situation with regard to farm fuels faced by farmers who use their vehicles to travel on highways. The situation is even more exaggerated with respect to logging trucks, many of which travel primarily on the highway system. Has the Minister addressed the particular situation faced by logging truck operators who travel hundreds of miles daily on highways and who will be provided very little relief under the provisions of this Bill?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, in the forestry business the transporting of logs is felling, limbing, and off-highway transportation to the mill. It does not include any of the production activity on logs after transportation to the mill.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Chairman, my difficulty with the definition of off-highway transportation of logs to a mill pond or mill yard is that really, on recollection, I cannot think of a single mill—and there are several in my constituency and others in British Columbia—where the mill pound or mill yard is accessible by off-highway use. That implies that the mill is in the bush where the logging trucks are operating. These mills are inevitably some distance removed from the bush. They do not always log adjacent to the mill. Once the slope is logged off, they could be 100 miles down the highway. So I have great difficulty with the term "off-highway transportation" in reference to getting the logs to the mill yard or mill pond.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the only way I can respond is in the same way as I responded earlier. We are attempting to give relief to people who are engaged in these industries, and we are limiting the relief only to the extent that we feel there may be competitive factors involved in the transportation sector.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow up on those questions regarding logging. Northwestern Ontario, as in British Columbia, has no direct connections any more between the mill or mill pond and the stumps, if you like. There seems to be support on both sides of the House for deletion of the words "off-highway" in order that transportation of the raw product from the stump to the mill, where it travels in both cases off the publicly financed roads system, will not be affected. Granted that the bush roads are only partially subsidized as opposed to the public highways which are paid for fully by government, but I think it would be consistent with the Minister's comments to provide support for this sector. In northwestern Ontario we are travelling distances of 60 to 100 miles as our forests are harvested. We will not have the opportunity to harvest the second or third crop for 60 or 80 years so we do have to travel further. It would be a great addition to this Bill if this one change could be accepted by the Minister.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, you have to begin somewhere and stop somewhere. We have provided a substantial amount of relief for primary producers, including about $7.5 million in the next fiscal year for the forestry sector. It would always be nice to be able to offer more. We believe that we have realistic definitions. The relief in total next year is $160 million to the primary sectors. We believe that that is fairly substantial and that they will take advantage of it.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I do not doubt that what the Minister says is a reflection of their considerations. I am wondering whether the Minister would be prepared to have her staff examine the number of miles of off-highway travel versus the number of miles of on-highway travel relative to the transportation of the raw product from stump to mill. Perhaps in the new year a change to this legislation could be brought in which would, in effect, provide some fairness and efficiency.

I would suspect that right now the forest-based companies have to go through a series of calculations to determine what percentage of travel of their trucks is on the logging roads and what percentage is on the public highways, then be prepared to be audited. I would suspect that for both the Government and the private sector it would be much more efficient if it were very clear in black and white. If it is hauling of raw product from stump to mill, it should have that exemption.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, there was a similar tax rebate some years ago and the companies involved in the forestry sector are used to dealing with the situation. They understand the definitions that we are talking about. We believe it will work the way it is.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the problem is that in terms of relief it misses the point because it really is not relief to the people who—

The Deputy Chairman: Order please. If the Member wishes to discuss something, would he please go behind the curtain?

Mr. Friesen: You were not speaking to me, Sir, I know. If we are speaking of relief, then it must affect the people who need it most. Under the terms of this definition, off-highway does not spell relief in any way because it does not meet the needs of the people who need it, particularly when we want to design the program in such a way that the ones who would not survive otherwise are not going to benefit, meaning the small independent logger. The big multinationals will make it some way or another. As the Minister says, they have already worked out the system and understand it very well. However, the small independent, with one, two, or three rigs, is not going to make it if he is not going to benefit from the hauling he has to do on highways. It seems to me that the officials who drafted this clause really did not understand the nature of the problem. I hope that this will be revised.

The Deputy Chairman: On one further supplementary, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: No, not one further supplementary, two or three little supplementaries. I want to ask two or three questions of the Minister. I must say that I have been encouraged by interventions made by Hon. Members opposite and from all sides of the House. There obviously is a serious problem here. I appreciate the Minister's sensitivity to this problem.

With regard to changing realities, distance trucking has become a necessity and a natural extension of the operation of small independent loggers due to the lack of reforestation which has occurred over the past number of years. I suspect that when the officials originally drafted this type of legislation the nature of the logger was quite different from what it is today. They were dealing with much smaller geographic areas, and transportation from the stump to the mill pond was over small distances. To the Minister's obvious perception, that has now changed. We have heard interventions by Hon. Members who represent constituencies in which logging operations form a significant part of the local economy. It is important that the Minister note the interventions. While we may not be able to change this today with the existing information, it seems to me that this is an area worth further inquiry. It might be in order for the appropriate standing committee of the House, namely the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, or perhaps a subcommittee to look into the matter of primary producers.

I would like to ask the Minister two or three questions of a related nature. With regard to the mining industry, I notice that this does not include activities relating to exploration for a resource. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that at a time when we are attempting to expand economic opportunities, that kind of support might be in order. Perhaps the Minister could explain to us why she has excluded activities related to the exploration of a mineral resource from the receipt of this fuel rebate.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, as I explained earlier, we would like to extend the rebate as broadly as possible. We attempted to come up with the best definitions that we could. I can only suggest that there is some $37.5 million worth of tax relief to mining next year. We believe that that is a reasonable tax break which the mining sector will welcome.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, to emphasize how serious this is, I would like to move:

That in Clause 22, Section 49.01(b) have the words "off-highway" deleted.

The Deputy Chairman: Would the Hon. Member please send it up in writing? Does the Hon. Member want this deleted from the clause on page 29 where it says "in any quantity, in any other case"?

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I believe that is the appropriate place.

The Deputy Chairman: It says:

—in any quantity, in any other case;

"logging" means the felling, limbing, bucking and marking of trees, construction of logging roads, off-highway—

Does the Hon. Member want the words "off-highway transportation of logs" to be deleted?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, for clarification, my concern is the term "off-highway". We submit that that is a reasoned amendment to make the point of the problem associated with that particular clause.

● (1710)

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. With respect, this Bill is based on the ways and means resolution. Thus, the amendment only increases the ways and means, and therefore I believe it should be ruled out of order. Shall the clause carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 22 agreed to.

Clauses 23 to 40 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 41—Departmental regulations

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, in computing the amount of money that the rebate will cost, how did the Department arrive at the figures of on-highway and off-highway? In other words, the Minister outlined the total amount of money that it would cost the Government to implement the rebates. In the implementation of the rebates, is the Minister saying that there was some way the Department could compute a figure that would not take into account on-highway use?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, all we can do in situations like this is to estimate what we feel is valid and fair. We think we have done that.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, could the Minister tell us whether any assessment has been made? If you have done the assessment on the off-highway use, as a part of that assessment, did you also assess the cost of maintaining your off-highway use and also the on-highway use for off-highway purposes?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, we have made an assessment of what we think is a valid and fair return to primary producers. We have attempted to define it in such a way that it applies to all people within particular areas so that we do not get into situations where some people get it and some do not, depending on their type of business. That is the kind of assessment that we made.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, the Government had an assessment done. Its assessment was based on the use of gasoline and diesel fuel by primary producers.

I submit, with respect, that in the assessment that was done, the Government could not have removed on-highway use because, as Members of the House have said about the logging industry and the potato industry, the assessment was done on the consumption of gasoline and diesel fuel. There was not an assessment done, therefore, on that portion of the gasoline that would be used on the highway as it relates to the logging industry and as it relates to the potato industry. In fact, according to the Minister's response, the assessment could not have been done because there was no reason for doing the assessment in the past.

There was no way that the Department could have discovered what portion of that gasoline would have been used on the highway as opposed to off the highway if its assessment was done on the total consumption of gasoline and diesel fuels.

On that basis, I would like the Minister to respond because her response, I believe, would mean that a future amendment could be made which is similar to the one that was ruled out of order.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to refer these comments to my officials for discussion. I believe we have made our assessments fairly and openly. We have provided valid tax relief. I believe that the tax relief we have provided is to the benefit of all those industries. Those with whom we have discussed this have had a favourable response.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 41 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 41 agreed to.

Clause 42 agreed to.

On Clause 43—Interim Rate of Interest

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Chairman, while I do not want to prolong this, my comment concerns the questions that have surfaced on both sides of the House with respect to the application of the term "off-highway". I simply suggest that it might be useful to have the benefit of the Department's interpretation of off-highway at some point today or in the future. We may well find that that interpretation in itself may provide the solution we are looking for in this debate.

While I am on my feet, I would like to make note of the contrast between the definition of logging and the reference to off-highway which is followed by the definition of mining and the absence of any reference to off-highway. The two are inextricably entwined in a constituency such as mine.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Chairman, the February, 1984 Budget contained proposals for a formal assessment and appeal system to be introduced into the Excise Tax Act. We are now almost at the end of this Bill and at the section dealing with interest and penalties.

It seems that the Government has chosen not to proceed with those proposals, which were an effort to have the appeal rights of Canadian taxpayers protected and entrenched in law. I would appreciate an explanation of that.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance specifically indicated in the economic statement his intention to deal with the administration and appeals proposal at a later date. We would like to have some further consultations. Some private sector groups have expressed concern with certain aspects of the proposed system. The Government will be reviewing those concerns and we will bring them to the attention of the House at a later time.

● (1720)

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to say that in view of this Government's record of promises to date, that answer does not inspire confidence.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 43 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 43 agreed to.

Clauses 44 to 55 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. McDougall moved that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

And the division bells having been rung:

● (1850)

Mr. Speaker: After consultation with all of the Parties, I have made a simple decision. I intend to order that the bells be stopped. I am now suspending the sitting until nine o'clock tomorrow morning, at which time the bells will recommence.

At 6.51 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 9 a.m., Thursday, December 20, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

● (0900)

And the division bells having stopped at 10.42 a.m.:

● (1050)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should rise at this time to indicate that when the House reconvenes for business today at the normal hour, eleven o'clock this morning, we propose to call forward for second reading the Bill dealing with amendments to the Criminal Code. If that were to pass we would then consider going on to the currency Bill which should receive first reading later today. The borrowing Bill would be the third option.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Hon. House Leader a question? Firstly, what is the disposition of the Government to split the Bill amending the Criminal Code so that the drunk driving provisions can go through possibly immediately? I say this by way of inquiry. Secondly, when will I get a response to the very reasonable request that was made by our Leader in the House yesterday for a special debate on the subject of the protection of our social programs, before the House rises for Christmas?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I am in some difficulty given the fact that we are past six o'clock p.m. of this parliamentary day. I suggest that those matters could be discussed outside the House in context.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: If the Members wish to discuss this matter by unanimous consent, we are going to run into a problem. The Hon. Government House Leader, briefly.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, suffice it to say that of course we are amenable, with respect to the Criminal Code amendments, to working on the basis of consensus. As the Opposition House Leader will know, I have had discussions with both opposition Parties. At this point in time it is not possible to arrive at a consensus with respect to this matter, but I take it that he is opening that matter up for discussion.

With respect to the second item, I guess he will have to make up his mind, Mr. Speaker. If he wants to discuss matters in House Leaders' meetings and then ask for a response here, come on to the floor of the House of Commons and start negotiating in public, I guess he will have to decide how he wants, on behalf of his Party, if he indeed speaks for his Party, to conduct the negotiations with respect to House business. I am happy to carry on the tradition of dealing in a spirit of co-operation in House Leaders' meetings with the opposition House Leader, but I am not going to sit and negotiate publicly a matter that he initiated privately.

Mr. Speaker: The rules require me to find that it is after six o'clock p.m. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on the same point of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I cannot see that anything useful is being achieved at the moment. I would like to invite my colleagues to join me and perhaps we can discuss these matters.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It being after six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock a.m. later this day.

At 10.54 a.m. the House adjourned.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1984

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-18, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, to amend an Act to amend the Criminal Code and to amend the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Act, the Excise Act, the Food and Drugs Act, the Narcotic Control Act, the Parole Act and the Weights and Measures Act, to repeal certain other Acts and to make other consequential amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, before we begin debating the substance of the Bill, I wanted to ask, as a matter of order, whether the Government is prepared to separate out the drunk driving provisions so that they could be enacted before—

Mr. Speaker: That may well be a matter for negotiation between the Parties, but I really do not think it is a point of order, with respect. I therefore recognize the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, in starting the debate on second reading of this Bill I might say that the situation has not changed since yesterday. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) heard me say yesterday, at a press conference which he attended, that I am hopeful that this Bill will go through the House as a whole. There is nothing in it which is strange or startling compared to last year. Most of these provisions were introduced last year in a Bill known as C-19.

We are prepared, of course, to consider that the Opposition is obdurate and for some reason does not want to pass the Bill as a whole. As far as I can see, the provisions in this Bill are largely non-controversial. They are provisions that were introduced last year. The more controversial aspects of the Bill that was introduced last year have been removed. Many of them will be back in the House in further legislation which I hope to introduce in the next session.

I hope to persuade the House that the proposals now before it are not controversial or strange or in any way dangerous to the public will. I am hoping that the whole Bill will go through because all of the provisions of the Bill are needed. However, if it appears that it is going to take a long time or there is some great difficulty, we are prepared to consider other arrangements. This Bill is not just concerned with impaired and drunken driving. There are many other good provisions changing the law in this Bill that need to be passed by the House. I do not think that we should fasten on only one aspect of this Bill.

I would like to indicate at the start some of the provisions of the giant Bill introduced last year that are not included in this Bill. We have removed from the Bill the areas dealing with sentence reform. Last year's Bill was a 306-page Bill. This is a 172-page Bill. The area of sentencing reform is going to be dealt with in 1985.

I hope to deal with the area of obscenity and pornography when we introduce legislation in February or as early in the year as possible. The area of soliciting for the purposes of prostitution will be dealt with in amendments which will be introduced next year.

The area of contempt of court, which was quite controversial, particularly with respect to the judiciary, will be dealt with. There are going to be changes there. I think some of the objections that were put forward by members of the judiciary with reference to those proposed changes had to be considered and dealt with, so that will be dealt with next year. The question of changes with respect to jury trials is another area which I propose to leave until next year.

In the Bill before the House, which I will be describing for the next few minutes, are areas which are largely non-controversial. There are provisions to deal with computer crime. There are provisions to deal with search and seizure to ensure that that area of the law complies with the Charter of Rights and court decisions. In this Bill we are dealing with international conventions which relate to the proliferation of nuclear material. We are dealing with provisions that enable us to carry out our responsibilities under the International Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material. In addition, there are provisions in the Bill which deal with enabling us to carry out our responsibilities under the Convention to Facilitate the Prevention, Prosecution and Punishment of Acts of Hostage Taking.

This is not just a Bill to deal with impaired driving. It is a Bill to deal with many important areas of the law that need to be changed at the moment, including hostage taking and drug control. There are provisions in this Bill to deal with controlling the medical use of narcotics and controlled drugs.

When I am finished outlining the provisions that are in the Bill, most of which are not new to Members of the House, having been proposed last year in Bill C-19, I trust and hope that Members of the House will be—

Mr. Prud'homme: There are 125 new Members.

Mr. Crosbie: That is right. There are 125 new Members and just about all of the old Members replaced were Liberals. It is a painful memory for the hon. gentleman, but the new Members who replaced the old Members are quick-thinking, intelligent, alert and they can catch up on these things.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: Thank you.

Mr. Crosbie: It does not take too long for them to catch up on what the old Members had learned.

Mr. Nunziata: I agree with you, John.

Mr. Crosbie: I know that you will want to listen to me in dead silence and not interrupt me.

Mr. Ouellet: Dead silence?

Mr. Crosbie: Dead silence is probably the best kind of silence you can have after a caucus party.

With the exception of Bill C-127, which was enacted in 1982 and dealt primarily with sexual assault, extensive amendments have not been made to the criminal law since 1977. Our Bill presents proposals to amend the law concerning impaired driving and other aspects of the Criminal Code. As I have said, many of them were introduced last year in Bill C-19. I do not view changes to the criminal law as being partisan or feel that it should all originate in the mind of one political Party or the other. We are quite prepared to give hon. gentlemen opposite credit for coming forward with these changes last year. That is, of course, why we expect their co-operation in passing this Bill through the House and into committee as we have requested. The parts before the House now are either needed on an urgent basis or are needed and are non-controversial.

I have mentioned some of the main points that we are dealing with in the legislation. First, let us deal with impaired driving. We all know that the consumption of alcohol seriously affects a person's ability to drive. In fact, it seriously affects a person's ability to perform generally. Certainly, the ability to drive is impaired by alcohol. In spite of this, there are tens of thousands of people who insist on driving while their ability to drive is impaired by alcohol.

I remember being extremely impressed during a visit to Switzerland some years ago on a financing deal on behalf of the Newfoundland Government. I can say that I was not visiting my bankers but was there on business for the Newfoundland Government to borrow some money. Arrangements had been made for us to see the president of one of the major Swiss banks. As it turned out, we could not see him because he was serving a jail sentence for impaired driving. There are no options in that country; there is no namby-pamby option of a fine in Switzerland. If a person is convicted for impaired driving that person goes to jail. It does not matter if you are the president of a bank and earning $500,000 a year. Perhaps we will have to consider that in other years if this legislation does not improve the situation.

Impaired driving is one of our most serious social problems. On any given night, 25 per cent of the drivers on the road in Canada have been drinking, 6 per cent of whom are legally impaired, according to the studies. That is a frightening statistic. If one drives along the Trans-Canada Highway in Newfoundland—believe me, that is the highway on which you need to have all of your faculties at their pitch of perfection in order to survive anyway—when one considers that 25 per cent of the drivers on the Trans-Canada Highway in Newfoundland have already been drinking and 6 per cent are legally impaired, one would turn one's car in and walk from then on.

It is estimated that alcohol is involved in 50 per cent of all fatal traffic accidents and in 30 per cent of all injuries caused in traffic accidents. Drunk drivers take the lives of some 2,500 Canadians each year. I think we all agree that this is alarming and that we must do something to attempt to stop that kind of carnage.

Our legislative response in this Bill focuses on three main concerns: new offences concerning the impaired driver who injures or kills; second, the penalties meted out to impaired drivers; third, the deficiency in the law whereby an impaired driver can, in certain circumstances, avoid a blood test to determine the amount of alcohol in his bloodstream. Such a circumstance could be if he is admitted to a hospital or is suffering in some way.

These are the three areas with which we want to deal. There are offences which address the causation of death. For example, there is manslaughter which is causing death or bodily harm by criminal negligence. However, there is a serious discrepancy between the incidence of fatal or serious collisions and the rate of convictions on those offences. In part, this may be due to the exercise of prosecutorial discretion but there are legal reasons as well.

When dealing with offences based on negligence, proof of impairment of the ability to drive will not support a finding of criminal negligence unless accompanied by extrinsic physical evidence of conduct that shows wanton or reckless disregard for the lives and safety of others. That is why it is difficult to get convictions for motor manslaughter. Therefore, the present provisions applicable to situations where impaired driving causes injury or death are not broad enough to be applied in all instances where death or bodily harm has resulted.

We are introducing new offences in this Bill. In order to expand the scope of liability in cases where the driver's consumption of alcohol or drugs was the cause of the death or the injury, we are proposing that new offences of dangerous driving and impaired driving causing death or bodily harm be enacted specifically to address the causation of death or bodily harm in circumstances which, while amounting to illegal driving behaviour, may not amount to criminal negligence or manslaughter. That is a bit of a tortured way of explaining it but, as Hon. Members know, law and the legal system often require tortured language to try to explain what is being done. We are creating these new offences to apply in circumstances where there has been illegal driving behaviour but it is not perhaps criminal negligence or manslaughter.

There are three reasons for considering whether steps should be taken to increase sanctions against unlawful driving that causes death or bodily harm. First, it is an anomaly that driving offences should explicitly condemn conduct that creates a grave risk to public safety but fails specifically to condemn the conduct when the risk results in bodily harm or death. Second, an alarming proportion of deaths and grievous injuries involving motor vehicles, vessels and aircraft are caused by negligence or dangerousness which can be attributed in large measure to impairment. Third, public opinion is changing with respect to how we perceive criminality and unlawful driving that causes death or bodily harm, especially where impairment is a significant factor.

The opinion of the public is changing. The public no longer regards drunken driving to be merely some kind of offence that can happen to any of us and for which we might all be guilty and therefore should not be punished too severely. That attitude is changing.

In recent years we have seen many organizations of people who are concerned about the rights of victims. I am continually receiving correspondence from organizations or people whose relatives had suffered terrible injuries in automobile accidents caused by an impaired driver and from organizations whose families have had someone die as a result of impaired driving. They are forming groups and organizations and demanding that we do something about this. We are attempting to do that.

In addition, we are proposing that a new offence of driving while disqualified be enacted. We all know dozens of cases of people whose licences have been lifted by the provincial authorities but who drive and are picked up again. We will create a new offence of driving while disqualified. We expect that the wording of the new offence will rectify the problems that were presented by the Supreme Court of Canada decision in the case of Boggs versus The Queen, where the Supreme Court ruled that the current offence of driving while disqualified was ultra vires, "beyond our power", because the criminal sanction could be imposed for the violation of a provincial licence suspension pursuant to a conviction for a non-criminal highway traffic offence.

In order to get around that, the new offence will apply only to violations of a new judicial order of prohibition which is contained in this legislation, upon which I will expand later, and violations of provincial licence suspensions that are imposed pursuant to a criminal driving offence. That will get around this difficulty that the Supreme Court of Canada found.

I propose that the penalty for dangerous driving be increased from the present maximum of two years to a maximum of five years. If one is convicted of dangerous driving after this legislation is passed, one can be sentenced for up to five years.

I am also proposing that the offence of criminal negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle be repealed. The distinction between negligent and dangerous driving has troubled the courts for many years. In a nutshell, the controversy arises from the need to distinguish driving that shows wanton or reckless disregard from driving that is dangerous to the public. That has been the problem. The repeal of criminal negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle will eliminate these difficulties.

There is no substantive reason why the criminal law should provide for negligent and dangerous driving as separate offences. They are variations of a single concept of risk creation. The offence of dangerous driving is a broader concept and includes instances where liability could be imposed for negligent driving. Increasing the penalty to five years, which was the previous maximum for criminal negligence when you operated a motor vehicle, will give the courts the discretion to impose heavy sentences where the circumstances warrant. I hope the House will support that.

Research shows that the typical drinking driver appears to be male, single, less than 50 years of age and coming from a bar, and driving a car as opposed to a truck or other vehicle. Let me emphasize the fact that the typical drinking driver is male, single, less than 50 years of age, who is coming from a bar and is driving a car. It is likely that the offender has committed other non-criminal traffic violations, and approximately one-quarter of offenders have previously been convicted of drinking and driving offences under the Criminal Code. This suggests that the penalties imposed on these offenders have not worked in the past. That is an argument for increasing the penalties now. Ninety per cent of the offenders are now fined and the fines for impaired drivers range between $100 and $300, above the mandatory minimum of $50 but well below the maximum fine of $2,000 for a first offence.

• (1120)

Fines appear to vary somewhat by offence and in different parts of the country. They are usually higher in western and Atlantic Canada than they are in central Canada. I do not know why that is but it is a fact. The courts are now prepared to impose fines substantially above the average where circumstances warrant. Depending on the province, 25 per cent to 40 per cent of all Criminal Code matters—and this is interesting, Mr. Speaker; I know this is a bit turgid and heavy—

Mr. Waddell: And fascinating.

Mr. Crosbie: Is the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) fascinated?

Mr. Waddell: Yes.

Mr. Crosbie: Anything that can fascinate the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway has got to be of some interest to everybody, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Depending on the province, 25 per cent to 40 per cent of all Criminal Code matters dealt with by the courts are for impaired driving, driving when one has over 0.08 per cent of alcohol in one's blood or for refusing to provide a breath sample. Convictions for those offences account for 20 per cent to 25 per cent of all provincial jail admissions.

There is a noise in the Chamber, Mr. Speaker. Maybe somebody is being taken away now.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: They are calling for you, John.

Mr. Crosbie: I think there is a Cabinet meeting on, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The average daily cost of incarcerating an individual—I would have said, had I written this, "jailing" an individual—is approximately $65. The direct cost to the taxpayer is therefore pretty significant.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Minister just said, had he written what he is delivering. The former Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada on November 9, 1983 delivered a speech to the Victoria Chamber of Commerce in Victoria, British Columbia—

Mr. Speyer: What is the Hon. Member's point of order?

Mr. Nunziata: The Minister has misled this House. He has virtually plagiarized a speech delivered—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member does not have a point of order.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in that point of order. It shows the degree of imbecility that one can come across in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: These are notes prepared by the Department of Justice. I am going to use them. If the hon. gentleman wants to say that some Liberal used similar notes a couple of years ago, all I can say is that I hope he delivered them as well as I am delivering them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister should go on with his speech and not argue a point which the Chair has ruled is not a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: This is the epitome of laziness. You liked our Bill so much you took our speeches.

Mr. Speyer: There are echo chambers between your ears.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman has just come from Queen's Park. That explains it.

Mr. Nunziata: You have had too much to drink.

Mr. Crosbie: Drinking and driving is perceived by the public to be a matter of concern. There is more public support for tougher drinking and driving legislation. There is some evidence that the desire for heavier sentences has focused particularly on drinking drivers who have been involved in serious traffic accidents and have killed or injured innocent people. The surveys show that a majority of people do not favour a mandatory prison term for a first offence. They prefer instead fines in the range of $100 to $500. A substantial majority appear to support mandatory imprisonment for a second offence. I would be prepared, I think, to consider a mandatory prison term for a first offence, but the public does not appear to favour that yet. However, if the steps we are taking now do not appear to result in a satisfactory response, then the Members of the House can consider that in future years.

The experience also suggests, and this is interesting, that where legislative reforms are introduced with considerable publicity and accompanied by enhanced enforcement efforts, alcohol-related traffic fatalities decrease in the short run but return to their previous levels within a period ranging from several months to a year or two. In other words, when the House passes this legislation and there is publicity and enhanced enforcement, the statistics will show that the number of traffic fatalities from alcohol will go down.

The view is widely held that legislation tends to be effective in the short run because drinking drivers perceive that there is a higher probability of being apprehended and punished. That kind of perception does not continue as publicity dies down and enforcement efforts are relaxed because drinking drivers feel that there is a low probability they will be caught. Therefore, a driver's perception of the risk of being caught is a more critical factor in the longer term than the severity of the sentence.

The most significant implications that might occur would flow from a decision to make more extensive use of incarceration. Experience in the United States suggests that if you introduce jailing rather than fining, those kinds of changes can lead to more plea bargaining, larger numbers of contested trials and increased pressure on prison facilities. The American Bar Association reported that mandatory sentencing for drinking and driving offences caused overcrowding of jails in almost every section of the U.S.

We cannot predict with any precision what the impact on our justice system might be with these possible amendments to the Criminal Code. It is interesting to note that British Columbia officials have estimated that increasing the mandatory minimum period of imprisonment for a second drinking and driving offence from 14 days to 30 days would result in additional spending in that province of $2.7 million because of the increased numbers of people who would go to jail. You can see, Mr. Speaker, that if we introduce mandatory minimum terms of imprisonment on the 90 per cent of offenders currently fined there would be a very significant increase in the number of people jailed and a significant increase in costs.

The legislation proposes that the minimum fine be increased for impaired driving from $50 to $300. That would be a six-fold increase in the minimum fine. This would also bring the minimum fine more in line with what judges are actually imposing.

We are not suggesting an increase in mandatory jail sentences at this time for the reasons that have been suggested earlier. Research indicates that it will not deter impaired driving and might be counter-productive, although I am inclined to the other view.

• (1130)

As Hon. Members know, a sentencing commission has been appointed to examine the whole question of sentencing in Canada. I think it is supposed to spend the next two years on that task. It will be examining the usefulness of effectiveness of all mandatory minimum sentences. That will be included in the report at the end of the period of the commission.

In addition we are suggesting mandatory suspension of driving privileges. That appears to be an even greater deterrent to impaired driving because that sanction causes impaired drivers great inconvenience. The legislation proposes a mandatory judicial order of prohibition from driving. The maximum period of prohibition would be three years and the minimum period would be three months for a first offence, six months for a second offence and one year for a third or subsequent offence.

That prohibition will apply all across Canada. It will be superimposed. It will not depend upon penalties or restrictions which provincial registrars of motor vehicles may impose. They could still impose what penalties or restrictions they like. This will be superimposed over any penalty they may wish to impose. There will be no exceptions to the rule. Every drinking driver will have to be made aware of the risk of the loss of the privilege to drive. No matter what their personal circumstances or occupation may be, there will be a mandatory judicial order of prohibition from driving if they are convicted.

The Bill also proposes a discretionary judicial order of prohibition from driving for all other driving-related offences. There is the mandatory and the discretionary. The maximum prohibition would be for life for those offences which have a maximum sentence of life imprisonment—manslaughter or criminal negligence causing death. In the case of criminal negligence causing bodily harm or causing death or bodily harm by dangerous driving or impaired driving, it will be 10 years, and three years for all other driving-related offences. There will be much greater stress on the suspension of driving privileges.

Also it is proposed in the legislation that a judge be empowered—and this is new—to order that any vehicle used in the commission of an impaired driving offence be immobilized for up to one year if the accused is the owner, the holder of a long-term lease or the principal driver of the vehicle. Another possible penalty will be that the vehicle is ordered to be immobilized. That is to ensure that persons, in particular those who do not obey or observe orders of prohibition from driving or licence suspensions, do not drive the vehicle. We all know of many instances where people who were ordered not to drive or had their licence cancelled continued to do so. The judge will be able to order that the vehicles of repeat offenders be immobilized. It will depend upon the province; they can use a Denver boot or whatever other means they want to see that the vehicle is immobilized.

We are informed that research on deterring impaired drivers indicates that the emphasis has to be put on the effectiveness of the sanction, not just how severe or how difficult it is. Some people may feel that the increase in the minimum fine from $50 to $300 is not severe enough to deter impaired driving, but when that is placed in the context of the other penalties which I have just outlined, it is different; then I think the sanctions are tough and effective—to have one's vehicle impounded, be prohibited from driving and so on.

Another feature of the Bill which is very necessary and has to be included with the provisions applying to driving offences is the acquisition of blood samples. In 1969 Parliament reached a compromise. It required a person to provide a breath sample, not a blood sample. That may have been an acceptable compromise at that time. However, since then we are all aware of the fact that fatalities on the highways have risen, the public is more aware of the problem, there are demands for action and more has to be done. We need other tools in addition to the obtaining of a breath sample.

It is difficult to prove responsibility under existing legislation in a number of cases where evidence may become unavailable.

Mr. Nunziata: You are just reading Mr. MacGuigan's speech.

Mr. Crosbie: This is my speech.

Mr. Nunziata: It is MacGuigan's.

Mr. Crosbie: MacGuigan's speech was prepared by the Department of Justice. The same people prepared notes for me. Many of the notes might be the same.

Mr. Nunziata: Many, many.

Mr. Crosbie: So what?

Mr. Nunziata: Can't you read your own speech?

Mr. Crosbie: If the hon. gentleman does not want to listen to me, he does not have to stay in the House. He can leave the House. I would take a blood sample from the Member if I thought I would find any blood.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt the Minister, but this is a very important debate, with 2,500 people dying per year. Rather than supercilious heckling from both sides, we should get on with the matter. If the Minister wants to read his speech, it is fine with us. It is a very technical and very important area, and we should get on with it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would invite all Hon. Members to listen to the Minister, especially one Member who has been interrupting him.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to wing it, but the information would not be as accurate as the House is getting at the moment. When I finish with these notes, I intend to speak for another couple of hours. I will wing it for a few hours. The Member should put his mind at ease. I can give a speech without notes. I can give a speech for two hours. If he aggravates me, I will do it until the end of the session on Friday.

Mr. Ouellet: That is what we want.

Mr. Crosbie: To get back to breath samples, there are cases where the present sample is not adequate. What are some of the examples? Sometimes there has been an accident and the driver is unconscious and cannot provide a breath sample. Perhaps the Hon. Member could; he seems to be able to blow on all occasions, conscious or unconscious. Another situation would be where the driver is conscious but has sustained injuries which make it impossible for him to comply with the demand for a breath sample. Or the driver may be conscious but pretends to be seriously injured in order to avoid a breath test. He may be conscious but incapable of comprehending the nature of the demand for a breath sample, or he might be conscious but incapable of providing a breath sample because of his medical condition. He may be suffering from emphysema, asthma, brown lung disease or some other disease which renders him incapable of giving a breath sample. Breath samples are not always satisfactory.

One solution is a blood sample from people suspected of impaired driving. However, we have to balance certain interests, civil liberties or rights, such as the right not to have one's person interfered with. That right has to be balanced against the right of the public to be secure and people to be protected from injuries when on public highways, the rights of society as a whole. One has to be balanced against the other.

What can we do with respect to blood samples? The balancing process has produced the provisions we have included in this Bill. In respect of people who are conscious and can consent to giving a blood sample, we are proposing that a blood sample be taken only if there is consent. Suppose there has been an accident and someone is suspected of drinking. That person will be asked for his or her consent to give a blood sample. If he or she says no to giving a blood sample, then he or she will not have to give a blood sample. However, if that person does not give the blood sample after having been asked to and is conscious and can make a choice, he or she can be charged with the offence of refusing to give a blood sample and the penalty would be the same as if that person were charged with impaired driving. In other words, that is the same provision that now applies with respect to breath samples.

Mr. Marchi: What page is he on in the MacGuigan speech?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, that is how it works when a person is conscious.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: If the hon. gentlemen are interested—

Mr. Waddell: The Liberals are not interested in this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, what about a situation in which an individual cannot give his consent for reasons that I have mentioned? We are then proposing that acquisition of a blood sample be mandatory. We are proposing that if a person is not conscious, we will be able to take blood sample under certain circumstances through the use of a judicial warrant which might be obtained by means of a telephone or other telephonic instrument. This is to be limited to cases where death or injury has occurred at the scene of an accident. We believe that if death or injury has occurred at the scene of an accident, then the rights of society justify the potential infringement on the civil liberties of the unconscious person. This, of course, can only occur if the person is unconscious.

All of the blood samples, if they are taken, will be taken by licensed medical practitioners or other qualified persons who are authorized by, or working under the direction of, a licensed medical practitioner. A blood sample will not be taken in these circumstances unless a medical practitioner is satisfied that taking a blood sample will not endanger the life or health of the person involved.

In addition, the legislation proposes that the accused be given a sample of his own blood for independent analysis. There are many safeguards in connection with the taking of blood samples. As I recall, the laws of Saskatchewan and British Columbia already provide for the taking of blood samples in similar circumstances.

What, then, is this telephonic warrant or telewarrant? As you know, Mr. Speaker, the legislation will remove writs of assistance. Under previous Governments, the writ of assistance has existed for many years. That writ permits a certain number of RCMP officers who are enforcing the drug or customs and excise laws to enter homes without a search warrant. Many have considered the writ of assistance to endanger basic individual rights of Canadians. A writ of assistance continues to run, has no time limit and can be used by the RCMP member who has it. New writs have not been issued since 1976, I believe.

The British Columbia Court of Appeal has found the writ of assistance to be in accordance with, and not invalidated by, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, while the Ontario Court of Appeal has found the writ of assistance to be invalidated by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If the House passes this legislation, it would end the matter in any event because the writ of assistance will no longer exist.

As was proposed last year, we are proposing the telewarrant. There is nothing new, strange or startling about the telewarrant, Mr. Speaker. The State of California has had them for a number of years, as has the State of New York, the State of Arizona and the State of New South Wales in Australia. They are in use in other jurisdictions as well. In effect, it is a conventional warrant that is obtained by using the telephone or other means of telecommunication. The person seeking the warrant does not appear in person before a justice of the peace or provincial judge to get a search warrant, but gets it most likely over the telephone. It is done under oath, and reasonable grounds for believing that evidence of an offence may be found at a specific location must still be given.

The person seeking the warrant does not appear personally before the judicial person to obtain it and the judicial officer's signature will not appear on the copy of the telewarrant. However, the judge himself will be filling in the necessary details on his side of the telephone and the police officer will do the same on the document that he has on his side of the telephone. He will then leave a copy of it with the person whose premises he is searching by use of that telewarrant.

Telewarrants are to be used only in cases in which it is impractical to apply for a conventional warrant. In some circumstances they may be used in order to get a blood sample from a person who was in an accident, is suspected of impaired driving and is unconscious. They may be used in a situation such as one which might occur in the Yukon or Northwest Territories in which the RCMP member or police might have to travel 40, 50 or a couple of hundred miles before he could find a person to whom he could apply to receive a search warrant. It is to be used under those kinds of circumstances.

This proposal is similar to a recommendation made by the Law Reform Commission of Canada and, I think, fully protects individual rights. It is fully—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister but the allocated time is up.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the subject and the importance of the Minister's having the opportunity to explain it all, I think he ought to have more time, but certainly not the unlimited weeks, days and hours that he implied might be required.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I gather that there is unanimous consent for this? I would like to put a limit on the time of 10 or 15 minutes. May I suggest 10 minutes?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, perhaps we might ask the Minister how much time he requires in order adequately to introduce the Bill, and then agree unanimously to a specific amount of time.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that when introducing a Bill one has unlimited time.

Mr. Ouellet: No, you're not the Leader.

Mr. Crosbie: We're not talking about what should be. I will certainly finish within 30 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather there is such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Deans: One of the most interesting leadership speeches I've heard in a while.

Mr. Crosbie: The difference between us and the two opposition Parties is that we do not need any other Leader.

Mr. Ouellet: It took you a long time to say it.

Mr. Crosbie: It took me a long time to be convinced but now I am convinced.

I had better speed up a bit in order to cover some of the other main sections of the Bill. My parliamentary assistant who, of course, is a real expert in all these areas will hopefully be able to answer any questions that are asked.

• (1150)

The legislation also deals with computer crimes. It covers three aspects of the problems associated with the abuse of computer systems. One of those aspects is already covered by the law, that is, the destruction of hardware and instruments of a computer system. That is adequately covered. However, there are two areas which are not adequately covered. One area is the unauthorized acquisition or destruction of the data in a computer system. The other area which is covered by this legislation is the unauthorized use of computer services.

As all Members of the House will know, with the increased use of computers the instances of abuse are occurring more frequently. People who are not authorized to use computer systems are plugging into them. I do not know how this is done because I am not mechanically minded, but apparently it can be done and it is being done.

Mr. Waddell: Watch the movie WarGames.

Mr. Nunziata: Look who's talking! You sanctimonious son of a gun.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, some people cannot help but let their innate nastiness out.

In order to save time, I would suggest that Hon. Members look at the provisions which deal with computer systems. The legislation will bring the law up to date in that area. If the amendments are passed, it will be an offence under the Criminal Code to wilfully destroy, alter or interfere with the lawful use of data in computer systems. In addition, it will be an offence dishonestly and knowingly, without authority, to obtain a computer system service, intercept the function of a computer system, or use a computer system with the intent to commit any of the above-mentioned offences. That will correct an area of the law which is now lacking. As a matter of fact, a year or two ago there was a committee of the House which examined this area and recommended changes similar to the ones which are included in this legislation.

The legislation deals with the matter of search and seizure. I have already talked about the writ of assistance, but I would like to put on the record that a writ of assistance is a court order issued by the Federal Court under the Customs Act, the Excise Act, the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act. The writ empowers the officers named to search any place, including a dwelling or a house, at any time in the execution of their duties, to enforce the relevant Act. The writ empowers its holders to enter any place without requesting entry, to break open doors, chests, locks and containers. It is valid as long as the holders are officers under the Acts. Obviously, a very broad power is being removed. In removing the power of the writ of assistance, I believe we will have to replace the system with telewarrants. Telewarrants will be of some assistance to the police and the RCMP when they lose the right of issuing a writ of assistance.

I have already described telewarrants. The United States has been using telewarrants for 14 years. They have consistently withstood constitutional challenges. In other words, the system has been found to be in accord with United States law and the Bill of Rights. The system has been held to be a reasonable alternative to the conventional warrant. Telewarrants must be taken under oath and recorded by the justice who issues them. Research has been done in this area, mostly by civil liberties groups, and it has been found that there is broad support for this procedure in the legal community.

The Bill includes restrictions on publicity when searches are made. A search may be made on a certain premises, but there may not be any charges laid. It would seem to be unnecessarily harmful to the persons whose premises had been searched to have their names reported and publicized in the event that a charge is not laid. It could affect their reputations. The amendment would impose restrictions on publishing the facts of the search, unless the persons involved gave their consent or charges were laid.

Another area in the legislation deals with solicitor/client privilege. If documents are seized from the possession of lawyers and they claim that the documents are privileged, the documents can still be seized but they would be placed in a sealed packet and would only be made available to the prosecution if a judge made the finding that the documents were not protected by the solicitor/client privilege.

There is a provision in the Bill which calls for the prompt return of seized property. We have all happened upon people who were quite annoyed because they had suffered a theft or a break-in and their property had to be used as evidence in court proceedings. It often takes months, sometimes years, before that property is returned to those individuals. The proposed amendments will require reviews to be made at each stage of the proceedings, and will require that such property be quickly returned to the owners.

As I mentioned earlier, there are two provisions in the Bill which will enable us to carry out our obligations pursuant to the International Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material and the Convention to Faciliate the Prevention, Prosecution and Punishment of Acts of Hostage Taking. Both of those conventions require changes in our criminal law.

Canada's jurisdiction over nuclear material offences will be extended to cover instances where crimes are committed in our territory, on board a ship or aircraft which is registered in Canada, where the offender is present in Canada but not extradited, or where the offender is a Canadian national. Although we are a party to that convention, we have not ratified it because the necessary amendments have not been passed.

With regard to the hostage taking convention, the Bill creates a specific offence for hostage taking which includes essential elements as defined in the convention. The legislation sets out a penalty which reflects the grave nature of the crime and gives the courts extra-territorial jurisdiction in connection with the offence and the offender, in accordance with the manner in which the convention sets it out. If the amendment is passed, we will be in a position to ratify that convention and to act in the event of hostage taking incident.

I mentioned earlier that there are provisions in the legislation which will provide more effective control over medical prescriptions which are issued by practitioners who do not observe the law. It will help in controlling the medical use of narcotics and controlled drugs, and people who seek narcotic prescriptions without telling the medical practitioner that they had obtained a narcotic prescription during the previous 30 days. I believe that these steps need to be taken and should be taken quickly. Another amendment in the legislation would clearly provide that the proof of commercial consideration is not an essential element of the offence.

There are a number of other amendments which are designed to improve the administration of justice. They deal with the jurisdiction of provincial courts, appeal procedures, preliminary hearings, the powers of judges at trials, credit card crimes, air safety and motor vehicle odometers.

There are two specific amendments that should reduce the backlog of cases and expedite trials: pre-trial conferences and the disposition of preliminary matters in the absence of a jury. Those amendments are very sensible. Pre-trial conferences would allow the judges to hold those conferences and to call in counsel for both sides to consider various matters which might make the trial more clear or expedite the trial. The value of the pre-trial conference has been proven very amply. In jury trials, pre-trial conferences will be mandatory, if the amendments are passed. The conferences would be held pursuant to the rules of the court. It is done a great deal in Ontario and it has been found to be most valuable.

We are all familiar with the movies and with the fact that arguments often ensue as to whether certain evidence is admissible. The jury must be absent from the courtroom when these arguments are being made. Sometimes the arguments take as long as a day or a day and a half. There was one case in Newfoundland recently where the jury had to be excluded for a couple of days while the admissibility of evidence was argued.

If we pass the amendments which have been suggested to the House, then the judge and the lawyers could decide those kinds of questions before the trial begins so that the jurors are not forced to be absent from the court for hours while these arguments take place. It is time that someone gives some thought to the comfort of jurors. People called upon to serve as jurors lose a lot of their time and it is too bad that they are treated in this way. To exclude jurors from the courtroom while these arguments go on is a waste of time and extremely expensive as well. The provision is included here so that the judge and the lawyers involved can settle these issues before the trial begins.

I believe I have now outlined the Bill, with the help of the Department of Justice which prepared the notes. Most of the important provisions which are in this legislation have been pointed out to the House. I could continue but my Parliamentary Secretary will be speaking and he will be able to address himself to any points which Hon. Members opposite want to raise.

With respect to any suggestion that the Bill should be divided, as I said previously we are not opposed to considering whatever might be suggested. However, I do not believe that to be necessary. These amendments are all necessary and timely. It is long past time they were passed. They do not endanger the common weal of the country at all. They are a step forward and an improvement to the law. While I am anxious that we should deal with the question of impaired and drunk driving as quickly as possible, I believe these other issues should be dealt with as quickly as possible as well.

Considerable work was done on this Bill in order to divide up Bill C-19, which was felt to encompass too much for one swallow by Members of the House of Commons and the Justice Committee. We have attempted to address these provisions which I am sure it will be widely agreed are necessary. I cannot see them as being controversial and I believe we should deal with them, and deal with them expeditiously. There may be—and I am sure there will be—much more need to debate amendments in the other areas I mentioned earlier which we hope to come forward with in February. They will be more controversial and we will need a longer time to deal with them. However, I hope that Members of the House will deal expeditiously with this legislation today and we will be able to refer the Bill to the Justice Committee.

Unless the Opposition is very much impressed it is unlikely that we can pass the legislation in all stages today and tomorrow. Upon looking across the way, I feel it might be possible. But if it is not, then I suggest we have the Justice Committee take a good look at the Bill in January and I can see no reason why it should not be possible to pass it before the end of January.

The Bill, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, is going to be treated in a non-partisan manner since most of these provisions, except for minor changes, were contained in the previous Bill C-19. We know we have the support of the Official Opposition, and from the attitude of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, it is extremely likely that we have the support of the New Democratic Party as well. In any event, we will soon know. Therefore, I commend the Bill and move second reading so that the Bill may be referred to the Justice Committee, unless Hon. Members want to deal with all of it here today by putting it through Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister concluded with some suggestions as to how the Bill might be handled. Perhaps I could begin by talking about some of those suggestions. I gather that the Minister would be delighted to get the whole Bill through all three stages today. However, I do not feel that would be appropriate. I believe that some of the provisions of the Bill, although supported by my Party—I will explain why and the nature of our support—do require some further discussion.

I know that when the former Government brought this legislation forward, part of the contemplation of the Government was that it would go to committee and that the private sector and public interest groups would have the opportunity to come forward, make representations and express views about other particular aspects of the Bill. I believe the Bill could be improved even though, as I say, it had its genesis with the former Government, and it could be improved by the process of committee hearings. I make that observation in general but I want to make an exception of the provisions which deal with drunk driving. Those provisions received instant attention and consideration when they were brought forward by the former Government. As the minister indicated, they have been changed very little from the form in which they were first introduced.

I noted with interest the Minister's observations during the last few months that this law might be in effect by Christmas and the New Year. I know that drinking occurs all year and drunk driving regrettably occurs all year as well. However, it is a special problem at this season and I had hoped, and still hope from what the Minister said, that it might be possible to detach that one portion of the bill, which has had quite a lot of public scrutiny, and see that portion enacted today and tomorrow. I would like to offer the full co-operation and support of the Liberal Members of Parliament in order to achieve that goal.

I do not believe it is good enough for the Minister to say, as he did, that it is all important legislation and it should all go forward. I wonder whether there is not behind that statement an attempt by the Minister to force the hand of Hon. Members on this side of the House by indicating that if we want the drunk driving provisions, we are going to have to agree today as well to all of the other provisions. I do not feel that is an acceptable bargain. I put it to the Minister that that is unfair and that the drunk driving provisions can stand on their own. I know that the justice critic for the Conservative Party in the last Parliament put that position forward. That was available all during the year. But now we are reaching a critical time when drunk driving does become a special problem. The Minister should know that, of course, because it is a well known police matter across the country. Provincial Attorneys General would be very much assisted by the gesture of this Parliament in legislating the drunk driving provisions right away. The other provisions could be left for committee study and for the receipt of briefs and hearings.

I can also give the Minister the assurance, as I did when he appeared before committee on estimates, that we will not hold this Bill up. This is a Bill we would like very much to see in the law in general, although certain other provisions will require study. Nothing is gained from the point of view of the Government or the legislative timetable by trying to twist the arms of the Parties opposite by saying we can only give the country the drunk driving legislation by giving it the rest of the legislation. I urge the Minister, perhaps through his Parliamentary Secretary who might speak this morning, to accept that offer before the Senators leave for the Christmas holidays, in order to get these drunk driving provisions into effect.

Let me say in general that I was interested in the length of time it took for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to come forward with the omnibus, "minibus" Bill which is now before us. I had assumed, as the days, weeks and months went by, that the Conservative Government was going to deal in the first omnibus Criminal Code amendment with some of the issues which were current during the election campaign, that there might even be provisions dealing with prostitution and pornography. These are issues in which voters had a considerable interest, as was expressed during the last election campaign. I would not even have been surprised if the Bill had addressed the problem of capital punishment, a high priority issue to many Conservative candidates during the election campaign.

So when the Bill came forward I was disappointed to find that it was actually less than the Bill that was before the House in the last Parliament. I had expected that in that amount of time criminal law reform would be a priority and that this Bill would show it. But what we see is that this Parliament and perhaps the new Government will continue to be governed by the Liberal criminal law agenda. Certainly this Bill has less than the Liberal criminal law agenda, but I think I can say with some pride that that agenda is still governing this Parliament.

This Government has brought forward some but not all of the very important reforms introduced last year by my colleague Mark MacGuigan, to whom I think this Bill, even in its diminished form, is a tribute. I wanted to begin by noting that and by expressing our approval in general of the Liberal criminal law agenda which this new Conservative Government has seen fit to follow.

I mentioned there were some very sad omissions from the Bill. The Minister has referred to some of them himself. For example, I am very sorry that we have not moved ahead with the contempt of court provisions because Members on our side have been aware of and discussing the problems with respect to wife battering. According to media reports, a number of wives have over this past summer ended up in jail for contempt of court because they did not want to testify, after charges were laid, against husbands who beat them. I think this is an urgent matter. I know it is a difficult matter, but criminal law reform is sometimes difficult. The former Government bit the bullet, made a decision and put forward provisions which would have helped in that situation. I wish they were in the law now because there would be less battered wives going to jail for not testifying against their husbands. Yet this Government has taken a step backward and said it will not act, that it will leave things the way they are until it can have further discussions and give it some further thought.

I place in the same category the problems of pornography. The House has been discussing those problems in Question Period regularly. Pornography seems to be on a descending dynamic; the degradation gets worse and worse. Instead of moving forward the new Government has chosen to wait and have more discussions and consultation before acting.

In the same area I include the general subject of sentencing reform. I had hoped to see in this Bill something like the toughening up of the mandatory supervision law which I had introduced shortly before the election and which the Conservatives indicated they supported. I think everyone in the country knows, and it is a discredit to the criminal justice system, that there are a number of hardened criminals whose violence and aggression and further criminality can be predicted with a pretty high degree of accuracy. Yet because of certain failings in the present law, they get out on the street before the end of their sentence where they represent a kind of walking time bomb or menace to the Canadian people. New victims are created.

As the inadequacy of the law was recognized, I brought forward a Bill for tougher treatment and tougher rules concerning mandatory supervision. But instead of going further, as one might do in view of certain things which have happened in the last few months, the Conservatives have stepped back and we find no reforms being offered to the Canadian people right now.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, prostitution has been omitted. I thought the present Government, given statements made during the election campaign, had a pretty clear idea of what it wanted to do with street prostitution. I have made public my own views and I would have been very happy to have seen street prostitution dealt with by removing the requirement for pressing and persistent behaviour and by introducing a provision to allow prosecution of both the prostitute and the prospective client. I wish more had been put on the table by the Government in this regard, indeed in general.

There is as well an urgent requirement for law reform dealing with the profits of crime. The former Bill contained a provision which helped the state confiscate the profits of crime. There are some provisions for this now in the present criminal law but their inadequacies are well known. There are huge fortunes being built in North America as a result of illegal activities and illegal funds being laundered. I can refer to statements made by the RCMP Commissioner recently about the limitations on police and court action under the present Criminal Code. I know that some of the provisions we had were controversial. Perhaps they might have been improved in committee through the appearance of civil liberty groups and the banks who were worried about the consequences of those measures. But instead of doing that and seeking a way of dealing with the profits of crime, the Government has taken a big step backward and is going to sit and wait until a perfect solution is devised. This will perhaps be done without the benefit of the public input that the former Government would have liked to see in the committee when the matter was considered there.

I would also like to have seen more for victims in this package because there was more proposed for victims in the other package. One of the most remarkable and troubling injustices of the present system is its failure adequately to recognize the needs of the victims of crime. The Government has done a little in this Bill but I think it is a discredit to the criminal justice system that victims suffer as much as they do from that system as well as suffering at the hands of the criminal who has caused them their loss or damage. To me it meant a lot to see more for victims and I am glad the Minister has said he is thinking about it and is going to bring forward more provisions in that area. But if he had put them in this Bill and sent it to the committee, I think there would have been a better process of law building and we would have achieved justice for victims more quickly than by seeing a lesser package than the one that was before the House at the time of the last election.

I would like now to turn to a couple of the substantive subjects affecting this Bill. I talked earlier about the timing of the drunk driving provisions. Concerning substance, I would like to say that there is no doubt that there is a great interest in having tougher treatment of drunk or impaired drivers. The inadequacy of the law and the failure of the courts to impose a certain minimum sentence is becoming a public scandal in many ways. I welcome the opportunity for Parliament to give some direction to the courts about how the Canadian people feel about drunk drivers, whether they actually injure anyone or damage property or not. This is an act of social irresponsibility and that should be underlined, and the Bill will do that.

If the Minister does not accept the opportunity to pass the Bill today and it goes on to committee, there may be some interesting questions which could be addressed in this area, although they are not questions which would have led us to want to see the Bill delayed.

I would just like to mention one that the Minister referred to in his remarks, and that is the problem of involving a doctor in taking a blood sample. There are a number of doctors' associations that are raising the issue of whether doctors should perform any services at all that do not contribute directly to improving the health of their patient. Of course, taking samples for the purpose of prosecution is in that category. If the Bill goes to committee, I want to be certain that we can get the CMA, or one of the other medical associations in the country, to appear to give us the good housekeeping seal of approval on that feature if we are going to make the opinion of the doctor as important as it seems we intend to from what the Minister said.

With regard to telewarrants, I think they really are urgent. There are still some writ of assistance cases before the courts. There are a few dozen cases that are at some stage or other of the criminal justice proceedings. The validity of the writ of assistance is a matter for the courts. The former Government ordered the RCMP to turn in all writs of assistance and none was being used, even the outstanding ones, at the time of the last election. The absence of the writ of assistance and the non-arrival of the telewarrant presents a serious problem for law enforcement because there is an important element of time in which a drug criminal can commit an offence and get away with it because the telewarrant and the writ of assistance are not available to permit the evidence that would be required for effective prosecution to be seized. We need telewarrants and I hope all Members of the House will recognize that, whatever the problems with them. I hope we will try to solve those problems to get an instrument which will permit a policy action on a timely basis to permit the drugs to be seized so that they will be available for trial.

I certainly do not hold it against telewarrants that they are new. As I mentioned yesterday at my press conference, I had the opportunity to visit the United States and to follow the process of a telewarrant in a police car to a house. There was no doubt that if the normal alternative procedure of looking for a justice of the peace or a judge, appearing before that individual, and swearing the affidavit is followed, hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of drugs could easily be flushed down the toilet, burned, or contaminated very quickly and the police would just be wasting their time.

Therefore, we do need that, but I was concerned about the newness of the telewarrant and the Bill which was before the last Parliament reflected that concern by limiting the issuing of telewarrants to senior judicial officers, excluding justices of the peace. I notice in this Bill that a judge can designate specific justices of the peace to issue telewarrants. I am concerned about that. At the moment I am not saying that that is an unacceptable feature, but I would like to know why the Government feels that it ought to extend the authority to issue telewarrants that widely. My own preference would be to keep them narrow and to have tight judge-shopping provisions. I think Canadians are concerned about their civil liberties. We are in an era of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I do not think that we want to introduce a provision lightly without all of the safeguards that can possibly be included. I am putting the Government on notice that I would like a good explanation for Canadians as to why the authority to issue telewarrants needs to be given to justices of the peace, even designated ones.

I was hoping that it would be possible to finish by one o'clock, or perhaps shortly after three o'clock, so I will not go on at very great length. I want to close by noting one very important omission from the drunk driving legislation. I hope the Government is prepared to correct the omission of the requirement for mandatory treatment of drunk drivers, particularly repeat offenders, during further consideration of the Bill. I think that treatment should be imposed.

In saying that I recognize all of the difficulties with that. It is hard to impose a process on an individual in which his participation is required to make it work. On the other hand, I think that a direction ought to be given to courts to ensure that some effort is made to get at repeat drunk driving offenders. There are some in every province of the country. I myself believe that the Government is hung up on the idea that there are some difficulties with it. When we brought it forward we knew that there were some difficulties with it, but I would have looked forward to the chance to try to improve it. Even if there are some difficulties with it, we are ultimately faced with the problem that drunk driving is a fact in our society. Any reasonable measure that we can introduce to limit it should be introduced and there would be public support for it. I regret very much that the Government has abandoned that. If this Bill is not enacted today I call upon the Government to bring back the provisions for treatment of drunk drivers so that we will have a Bill which will do something to correct the problems of the abusers in addition to simply punishing them.

Having said that, I would like to say that I am glad that criminal law reform is a priority of the Government. I am proud that the Liberal political agenda in the criminal law area is still the guiding principle of the new Parliament. I look forward to co-operating to ensure timely consideration of all of the important provisions of this Bill.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak today on behalf of the New Democratic Party. This is a very important Bill, as I am sure all Members realize. We heard mention of prostitution, soliciting, pornography and so on, but when you think of it, perhaps impaired driving affects more of us. We are all potentially at risk from the dreadful consequences of the impaired driver. We have heard from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) today that 2,500 lives per year are taken by drunk drivers. I suspect that the problems of injury or death caused by an impaired driver have touched the lives of most of the Members of the House, whether through friends, relatives or young people struck down in the prime of life. We have all read about it and some of us have knowledge of personal cases.

I myself am particularly interested in this area because in my first job as assistant city prosecutor for the City of Vancouver I literally prosecuted about five impaired drivers a day for about a year and a half. As is often done in law, I switched to the other side after that and spent another year and a half defending many impaired drivers. Therefore, I know a little bit about this area.

I also had the privilege of serving on the Alcohol and Drug Commission in British Columbia for two years. Later I would like to speak a little bit about one of the programs that we had to deal with, which I think is the main issue that is not even faced in this Bill. I refer to the treatment of the alcoholic problems of people who get into their cars and drive.

Our Party would like to see this Bill go through today in principle. It can then go to committee where it can have an expeditious hearing so that these provisions, especially those concerning drunken drivers, can come back to the House as soon as possible. The Minister of Justice indicated that it was not necessary to divide the Bill today because Parliament has already sent a signal that it is ready to crack down on impaired drivers in this country. I agree with the Minister that we have sent the signal.

I understood the Minister to suggest that the Bill could be split in committee. It is an interesting observation that it might be better dealt with in committee.

The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) dealt with this Bill in an honest way. I agree with him when he said that drinking and drunken driving takes place throughout the year and not only at Christmas. There is nothing special about Christmas except that it is a more festive time of the year.

I regret that the Government did not introduce the Bill earlier because I believe it would be almost impossible to split the Bill now. Our justice critic, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), in committee on December 4, warned the Government that it should try to bring in the Bill sooner so we could deal with it. Indeed, the Hon. Member for York Centre said in the committee on December 4 at page 3:20:

> I am not committed to the provisions in Bill C-19, but I feel that if it has taken you this long to bring forward your own bill, it is pretty unfair to put us under the gun of having to respond and give the country the bill by the New Year. I do hope you will try to beat your deadline of December 15 and get it forward by an earlier date, if possible. If not, at least put out some kind of interim statement so that we, and the various groups in the country who care about it, can at least start thinking about it. If we are going to be given only a few hours in the House to pass it or be blamed for not doing so, that will give us some time to reflect on it.

He was also asking that the Bill be brought forward and that we should not have a gun to our heads. As a matter of fact, he said that the part of the Bill dealing with the taking of blood samples especially needed further consideration. He said we should not rush it through in order that we could hear from the Canadian Medical Association, I believe, in committee. I think that is a good suggestion and perhaps a reason why we should put the Bill into committee.

During the last session I, along with other Members at that time, rushed a Bill through at the last moment. It concerned an amendment relating to Indian women. That Bill was rushed to the Senate. I suggest it was embarrassing for Parliament when one senator would not consent to the Bill and it died. Eventually that legislation will have to be passed but we were clearly not ready to put it through at that time. I suggest it is irresponsible for us as legislators to rush legislation through for a symbolic purpose or for political postering. I believe if something is worth doing it is worth doing right.

Let me point out some of the provisions of this Bill which I would like the committee to consider. As I have said, there is obviously a public will that we become more strict with impaired and drunken drivers. We have sent that signal as a result of this Bill. However, I want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether tougher penalties will really solve the problem. During his speech the Minister of Justice said it would not. In fact, he said that these penalties would have a short-term effect because people thought they might not get caught. They knew the laws were tougher but that fear would wear off in the long run.

I had the benefit of looking at a study called "Deterring the Drinking Driver" conducted by H. Lawrence Ross of the State University of Buffalo. Let me refer to this study because it is similar to what the Minister of Justice was talking about. At page 111 it states:

> However, deterrence-based policies are questionable in the long run. No such policies have been scientifically demonstrated to work over time under conditions achieved in any jurisdiction. This fact does not mean that such policies are hopeless but rather that success—if achievable—probably will involve something other than what has been done in the past. On the basis of the evidence, it will not suffice to import further elements of the Scandinavian approach into other jurisdictions in the expectation that Norway and Sweden have the answers. Moreover, the option of merely increasing penalties for drinking and driving has been strongly discredited by experience to date. The most hopeful opportunities for further deterrent accomplishments would seem to lie in increasing the actual probabilities of apprehension and conviction of drinking drivers.

The Minister of Justice acknowledged in his speech that increased penalties will not solve the problem in the long run. This Bill provides for increased penalties. The Minister said he would advocate a penalty of a jail sentence and gave the example of the bank president in Switzerland. We know that in Scandinavia and in Norway and Sweden there are tougher penalties for first offences. I suggest that we will return here in a couple of years to pass that type of law. We will probably favour a law that will place a drunk driver in jail. My point is that we know that it still will not solve the problem. While increased penalties may partly solve the problem, it does not answer the entire question.

The average Canadian is most familiar with our provincial courts or lower court system. If one studies a court docket, there are usually about two or three impaired driving cases each day on a judge's court docket. These cases take up much time in our courts. It is at this level that most Canadians usually become involved. I have found in my experience that many of those who were charged with impaired driving were repeat offenders.

This was also reflected in the Minister's statistics which he gave us today. I have found through my personal experience that many were repeat offenders and had a drinking problem. It is only occasionally that a person who drinks too much at a party gets caught and is charged with impaired driving. It is usually those who have a drinking problem who are caught and it is a symptom of deeper problems. It is often the case, when acting as a lawyer for someone who has been charged with impaired driving, that he has been stopped by the police before and let go because they were not quite sure of his condition. In British Columbia in the past there was a provision for roadside suspension of a licence. However, such people would finally be charged with impaired driving.

That is really an alcohol problem, a treatment problem. What we tried to do in the Alcohol and Drug Commission of B.C.—I am having a little trouble speaking; perhaps Members could go and converse in the lobby. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but it is a little distracting. We formed local committees made up of local citizens. In Nanaimo, British Columbia, volunteer groups had programs for impaired drivers after conviction. These drivers would meet with the local coroner, a local doctor, local policemen and nurses. It had a bit of shock value. Then they would meet with job providers and so on. These were not fancy professionals but local people. It did not cost very much because it was mostly volunteer work. We provided some of the films, the aids and things like that. It cost the Government very little. We started to get good results in that we were stopping repeaters. A ripple went out in the community that impaired driving was a community problem.

I want to say something to Canadians. I suppose one is not supposed to criticize one's electors but Canadians are hypocritical on this issue. We all want to stop impaired driving. We want to have tougher penalties; at least, we say we do. On the other hand we are not prepared to face the problem that we are a pretty alcohol-soaked society. I am not advocating prohibition or anything like that, but there will have to be some fundamental changes in attitude. It is coming. You notice it at a party. A couple goes to a party and one person does not drink so he or she can drive home. I am told this is much more prevalent in Scandinavia.

These are, however, the responsible people. The problem is some younger people who are less responsible and some people who have an alcohol problem. We also have a problem of people making judgments. You hear people say: "If you get in your car and drive you will get a penalty. You might go to jail or it might cost you a lot of money". We can all appreciate that now, but we may have a different attitude after six or seven drinks because then one is impaired. That person then has to judge whether to get into a car. As I say, Canadians are a bit hypocritical. We know that 2,500 people a year die as a result of impaired driving, yet we continue to drink and drive and we continue to make it easier to do so.

I want to refer to some other parts of the Bill. The Minister said that he is going to change the two offences. I noticed in my practise of law that these were real problems. One offence would be .08 blood alcohol and then there would be another offence. Gradually these offences were combined. There was plea bargaining for one as opposed to getting convicted of the other. There are problems with second offences. There are tremendous technical problems in this area. I know because I used to get some of my clients off on technicalities. It is important that the committee look at the technicalities.

This Bill should not be put through quickly. The committee should hear from the Canadian Bar Association, prosecutors and defence counsel. The committee should hear about the difficult technicalities. One technical slip-up in this legislation and some bright young defence counsel will figure it out. A case could be thrown out as a result and all the other cases are backlogged until that one case goes to the Supreme Court of Canada for a decision. If we want to make this legislation effective, now that I am a legislator rather than someone at the other end I can see we must make the technical aspect absolutely correct.

I want to make reference to the matter of telewrits. Obviously writs of assistance had to go; that was long overdue. The process was an abuse of the due process of law. I regret the decision of the B.C. Court of Appeal. I think the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal was the right one, but that is past history. As I understand this legislation, writs of assistance are gone. But let us not put in their place some sort of new creature that will also violate our due process of law.

The Minister says that telewarrants are being used in other jurisdictions. I acknowledge that. I think, however, as the Hon. Member for Burnaby has said in the past and as the Hon. Member for York Centre said today, that we should keep their use narrow and make sure that there is no judge shopping in order to get a judicial official who gives writs more easily than others. We should hear from the Civil Liberties Association. As I understood what the Minister of Justice said, civil liberties groups support telewarrants. I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Speyer) in the House. I would like to hear the Government confirm that. We value our civil liberties in Canada. I agree with the Minister of Justice that it is a balance. I acknowledge that even the Warren court, the very liberal court in the United States, when it came to decisions concerning the drunk driver and providing blood samples, tended to rule on the side of the state to stop the problem of impaired and drunk drivers rather than on the side of the particular rights of the individual. Other cases have focused on the rights of the individual. I can see the balance in this area perhaps has to go on the side of the state. We have to look at these things in committee and I flag them for the committee.

Computer crime is a very current matter and should be looked at. The committee should get on with that. The Bill also deals with emerging sorts of crime, such as terrorism, hostage-taking and so on. Unfortunately, we have to deal with that type of crime because that is the nature of the modern world. These things have to be dealt with under the Criminal Code.

There are provisions in this Bill, as the Minister of Justice said, to deal with the backlog and to update trial procedure. I am now speaking personally. I would not hold your breath, Mr. Speaker, about those provisions to make fundamental differences to speeding up trials. You can put into legislation all sorts of pre-trial conferences and so on. Looking back in my experience there are tremendous inefficiencies in the courts. There are too many delays. Not being a business venture, the court system is a different sort of process and there are bound to be some delays. We all agree that justice delayed is justice denied. We need competent people in the courts. We need competent judges, and let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, without getting into any detail, that we have a big variation in the level of some judges. We need competent judges and competent counsel, both prosecution and defence counsel. We need experienced counsel. Having competent people speeds up cases just as effectively as all the pre-trial conferences you want to legislate.

I have gone over the technical faults in the Bill. I think we want to hear from the Canadian Bar Association, from crown attorneys and from the civil liberties people. We may want to put another message out to Canadians, that they will have to change their attitudes about impaired driving.

Another area I wanted to flag was the idea of blood samples. Again I am speaking personally. I think this provision is overdue. I remember cases which seemed unfair. For people who were not injured and survived accidents which were their fault because they were drunk—they could stand and walk and breath and talk—there was sufficient evidence to convict them of impaired driving. However, if they hit their heads or something like that, it was very difficult to deal with them. It was difficult to request that they take breathalyser tests and it was difficult for the police to deal with them. However, it was easy for defence counsel to say that they hit their heads. A perfectly sober person could hit his head, stagger, have strange looking eyes and so on. Blood samples give the prosecution a definite advantage. In some ways it is overdue.

However, I have some questions about blood samples. We have to look at this area very carefully because it is an intrusion into civil liberties; in fact, it is an assault. I noticed in the legislation that the Minister mentioned that the accused be given a sample of his own blood. In the previous impaired driving legislation, the accused was supposed to be given a sample of his breath. I never had one case in which anyone ever got a sample of his or her breath. In fact, I think that provision was never proclaimed.

Mr. Speyer: It was never proclaimed.

Mr. Waddell: Will we have a similar situation, that it will not be proclaimed? I do not find that to be very acceptable law. Let us decide whether we will give them a sample of their breath or a sample of their blood. Do we have the equipment? Can it be done? If we are not going to do it, then it should not be put in the law.

Mr. Speyer: I agree.

Mr. Waddell: I flag that for the committee's attention.

The Hon. Member for York Centre spoke about prostitution and pornography, as well as aid to victims. My understanding was that these other matters would be dealt with shortly by the Government in other Bills that will come before the House of Commons early in the New Year. The Hon. Member for York Centre mentioned victims. I think he said that there was more for victims in the previous package that distresses me somewhat because I personally think that our criminal law should be focusing more on the victims of crime, on ways in which to help them and give them some rights in this process. I hope the committee looks at what the Hon. Member for York Centre said and at what the Hon. Member for Burnaby has said in the past on this matter.

I think I have said all I want to say in terms of the Bill. In summary, the fact is that the Bill is overdue in terms of its impaired driving sections. There seems to be a growing consensus on the part of Canadians that we should get tough on impaired drivers. Perhaps they do not understand the consequences of that. It is not only the impaired drivers or drinking drivers out there, it is us. We are all involved. Perhaps we should be a little less hypocritical. We will all be affected by it; we have to adjust our behaviour accordingly. Sometimes that will not be easy.

I am glad the Minister of Justice recognized that there was a limited aspect to deterring drinking drivers with greater penalties. It will not be the entire answer. It may be the short-run answer but it is not the long-run one. No one has the long-run answer. I do not pretend to have it. It may lie in enforcement. It may lie in the area of treatment, education or understanding. I think that is probably where it lies. The next generation, through its notion of what it is like to live in the late 1980s and the 1990s, will live in a new society which is much more interested in the good life, a clean and pure life. It will mean limiting one's intake of drugs and alcohol, in the recognition that one can have a good time and fun without being impaired, without being stoned or without changing in other ways. If there is any hope in the upcoming generation, that is the great one. In the long run it will be the way to deal with this terrible problem with 2,500 people per year, many of whom were young, losing their lives as a result of the actions of drinking drivers.

I commend both the present and previous Government for putting a lot of thought into the Bill. For our part, we are prepared to let it go through today. I am the last speaker for our Party. We would like to see it go to committee immediately and to see it back in the House as soon as possible for early passage in the New Year.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) articulated what is in the Bill. I have enjoyed very much the comments of the critic of the Official Opposition. I also enjoyed in particular the comments of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). They expressed their personal concerns. I will articulate many of them also, as well as some of my concerns and the reason I support the Bill. I have absolutely no intention of repeating what the Minister of Justice said about what is in the Bill. I should like to analyse it and to talk about where we have been in terms of the criminal law and where we are going.

In 1953 the Criminal Code provided that a person who stole a car must be incarcerated for a period of one year. The same Criminal Code also indicated that if a person stole from the post office, it was mandatory that he go to jail for six months. My point is that there was a tremendous emphasis upon property rights. There was not an emphasis upon drinking and driving nor upon the protection of one's body or safety. That was the ethos of the fifties, the forties and indeed the 19th Century.

Times change. Crown attorneys, in order to ensure that young people would not have to go to jail for taking a car for a very brief period of time, would take a lesser offence of possession. Sometimes when one stole from the mail, one would be charged with theft as opposed to theft from the mail.

In the 1960s I became a prosecutor and, Mr. Speaker, I speak to you as one who has a wonderful reputation in terms of your own practise of criminal law. In 1967 when there was no mandatory breathalyser and I was a prosecutor, if a person did not blow 1.5 or over the charges would be withdrawn. We are talking of less than 15 years ago, but that was the rule of thumb. Unless a person refused to blow, had tremendous physical symptoms of impairment or there were other special circumstances, we would withdraw the charge because we did not believe he was impaired. Thank God there has been an evolution in thinking.

The point I am trying to make is that in those years when I was a young prosecutor, a person who would have a puff of a marijuana cigarette had to go to jail for six months; it was mandatory. Everyone must have been interested in hearing the Commissioner of the RCMP—he is a fine man and a great Canadian—who said he thought the penalties were too harsh, that the courts were not enforcing them and that indeed police forces were not enforcing them in the circumstances.

May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE PENSION QUALIFYING AGE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party has continuously been championing the importance of universal social programs against the misguided, half-hidden agenda of the Conservative Government. Of special significance has been the plight of pensioners. I think it appropriate, therefore, not only to echo the concerns of those on this side of the House to protect that which we pioneered, but to urge the Government to enhance the old age pension system by lowering the qualifying age from 65 to 60.

In my own riding I have witnessed people who are 60 years of age and over, particularly those engaged in heavy construction work, who continue their work in pain and agony. They do so because they must put food on the table. However, these individuals would gladly take a well deserved rest at age 60 and enjoy their remaining years with some comfort and integrity. This would also open up opportunities for many of our young people.

It was a Liberal Government which lowered the pension age from 70 to 65. It is the Liberal Party which today is leading the fight to preserve an equitable pension system. It is my recommendation to establish the qualifying age at 60 so that we may make pensions even more progressive and fair for all Canadians.

SOCIAL JUSTICE

RECORD OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the commitment of the Conservative Government to social insurance was expressed in this year's Throne Speech which introduced improved pensions for widows and veterans. This was no innovation. For over a quarter of a century, Progressive Conservative Governments in Canada have shown the same concern for universal social justice for all Canadians regardless of age, sex, race, religion or region.

One reason for the Liberal defeat in 1957 was the niggardly treatment of old age pensioners by the St. Laurent Government. Soon after taking office the Diefenbaker Government fulfilled its pledge to make a substantial increase in the old age pension, an act which helped gain that administration a victory in 1958. That Diefenbaker Government introduced the first federal hospital insurance to Canada and thus began the publicly-funded medicare programs across the country which are now administered by seven provincial Progressive Conservative Governments.

It was a PC Government that introduced the Canadian Bill of Rights which assured social justice and civil rights for all Canadians.

The technological and vocational education Act provided educational opportunities for all Canadians regardless of their region, including those in regions which were not adequately funded.

For over a quarter of a century, Progressive Conservative Governments and their policies have sought to give social justice to all Canadians regardless of age, sex, race, religion or region.

CRIMINAL CODE

WARRANT ISSUED FOR ARREST OF DR. MORGENTALER

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Metropolitan Toronto Police issued a warrant for the arrest of Dr. Henry Morgentaler on a charge of conspiring to procure an abortion. I am rising to express my concern, and the concern of many people in my Party and across Canada, that yet another charge is being laid against Dr. Morgentaler despite the fact that four juries have acquitted him on abortion charges laid over the past decade, and that doctors who provide abortions in the Province of Quebec under the same federal law have not faced criminal charges since 1976.

My Party calls on the Government to repeal Section 251 of the Criminal Code so that women can have access to a full range of reproductive health services, including access to medical abortions in free conscience.

Four juries have sent a clear message to Parliament that they will not convict under the current law. They are saying that the law is unenforceable, and a law that cannot be enforced makes a mockery of the law generally and should be changed. In the majority of countries with a common law system, the Crown is not permitted to appear a jury acquittal. In announcing his decision to appeal, the Attorney General of Ontario said that to proceed with another prosecution without the law being clarified would clearly not be in the public interest.

I therefore call on the federal Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to expedite the process of clarifying the law. All of the proceedings in the Morgentaler case in Toronto should immediately be put before the Supreme Court of Canada on a direct constitutional reference, in order to get the opinion of the highest court of the land on this important social issue. It is a question of justice and fairness.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

PARLIAMENT

EXPECTATIONS OF CANADIANS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, Canadians realize that we must all get down to the job of solving the country's problems and building on its strengths and potential. I submit that they do not want this Parliament to be paralysed. They do not want an extended period of obstruction. They do not want a stalemate. They want responsible action by this Government and this House.

What we need now, Mr. Speaker, is input from, and consultation with, all Canadians so that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will be able to present a thoughtful budget which will be sensitive to the needs of all Canadians. Canadians have every right to expect and demand open, responsible, and constructive action by this Parliament. Let's get on with it.

SUPPORT FOR UNIVERSALITY PRINCIPLE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is with pride that I say that universality is the cornerstone of the Liberal legacy in Canada. Rich and poor alike through their taxes pay for social programs. As a result, rich and poor alike are entitled to these programs. From bank presidents to bus drivers, everyone is equal under these programs. At least everyone was equal while our Party was in Government.

If the Tories want to reform the tax system by making the rich pay their fair share of taxes, that is fine with us and we will support them. However, when they tamper with universality, they tamper with the heart and soul of the Liberal Party. We will not stand for it, and we will fight them every bloody inch of the way.

The vacuous garbage that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has been spouting on the subject of universality leads us to believe one of two things. Either the Tories are innocently and unforgivably naive and confused, or they have been deliberately dishonest with the Canadian public. Either situation is dangerous for the people of Canada. Elderly people have planned their retirement based on the expectation of receiving the old age pension. Young couples are planning their families with the expectation of receiving the family allowance. I say to the senior citizens and families of the nation that the Liberal Party will defend and protect their pensions and family allowances with all the vigour and aggressiveness it commands. We may be small in number, but we are large and strong—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

SOCIAL SECURITY

METHOD OF FUNDING BY FORMER LIBERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, social benefits depend on the productivity of a country. The higher the productivity, the better the social benefits. During their years in office Liberals kept up the social benefits only by borrowing and building up the national debt to some $200 billion. Had the Liberals continued this practice, it would have caught up to them eventually and the social benefits would have had to be cut or eliminated.

The P.C. Government was elected last September because the people of Canada saw what was happening. The new Government inherited a whopping debt and an empty treasury, and now the same Liberals who lived in extravagance on borrowed money are obstructing the elected Government that is determined to increase the productivity so that we can pay more to those who need it the most. Both Liberal and NDP Members do not like this.

The Bay Street lawyer does not want one cent taken from the income of his pals who are making well over $100,000 per year. Like the pampered rich in days of yore, he in effect says: "Let the poor eat cake". NDP Members, always palsy-walsy with their Liberal bed-partners, go right along with the obstruction. The people foresaw this obstruction and gave us a large majority so the Liberals and the NDP could not stop the passing of needed legislation.

In spite of the Liberals and the NDP, the programs of the PC Government are what the people want. Let us go over the top of the trenches and advance Canada and its people, including the seniors, the crippled, the halt and the blind, into a new era of prosperity; indeed, a new Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APARTHEID IN SOUTH AFRICA—VISIT BY BISHOP TUTU

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this week Canada is honoured by the visit of Bishop Desmond Tutu, winner of the Nobel peace prize. This morning when he met with a group of parliamentarians, Bishop Tutu pointed out that he would not be able to meet with a similar group in his own country of South Africa.

Because of its apartheid policy, South Africa does not even recognize Bishop Tutu as a citizen. Its new Constitution excludes 73 per cent of its population from any meaningful participation in national affairs. Only one sentence of it refers to blacks. It reads:

• (1410)

All matters relating to Blacks will be dealt with by presidential decree.

Bishop Tutu has pointed out that apartheid will be dismantled, either by negotiation or by violence—but it will be dismantled.

Canada should hasten the negotiation process, and the chance for a peaceful solution, by applying economic pressure. Bishop Tutu himself cannot call for economic sanctions, since that would be an indictable offence which carries a minimum sentence of five years. But if Canadians do not want to be complicit in the injustice and inhumanity of apartheid, and if we want South Africa to avoid a blood bath, we should use the full range of economic pressures, up to and including sanctions.

SOCIAL SECURITY

ENTITLEMENT OF SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, all Members of this House have a responsibility to the senior citizens in their ridings. We in the Government know—and so do members of the opposition Parties—that the Government has no intention of dismantling or removing the old age security.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Winegard: Let us stop the scare tactics which are not worthy of Members of this House. Let us, with one clear and loud voice, tell the people of our ridings that we will not let them down.

An Hon. Member: This is a plea for help.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, the louder the bray, the bigger the donkey.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Winegard: Senior citizens will, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has promised, receive their pensions and the security to which they are entitled. Let us do what we can to ensure that some joy, peace, and security are in the minds of all of our senior citizens during this holiday season.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS NEEDED BY STUDENTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on or about April 15 students will be out of university and ready for summer employment. Many of them are already looking for work, and a good many have been to our offices. They are concerned because the Government, which said that its first priority was jobs, has already cancelled the Summer Canada program which operated for many years.

When I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on December 5 when he would announce a new program to replace Summer Canada, he said that the Government was consulting and would announce something soon. It is now December 20, the House adjourns tomorrow, and we still have no news from the Government. In a few months' time students will require this employment to pay for next year's tuition and other expenses. They and their prospective employers must know now what the Government's program will be.

The Government has said that it would keep the student employment offices and employment in the public sector, but what about the summer jobs which were always sponsored by Summer Canada in the voluntary sector? That program was not only important for students, it was also important for the many services which were provided by voluntary groups.

As it is traditional to announce the summer employment program before the Christmas adjournment, will the Prime Minister tell us today, or tomorrow, what the Government intends to do? Students want answers now, before it's too late.

CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mrs. Cabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to set the record straight following a statement made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) on Monday. The Hon. Member said that when the previous Government introduced the child tax credit in 1978, it did so without reducing other benefits for Canadian families.

Mr. Speaker, the truth of the matter is that at the same time, the previous Government modified benefit payments to Canadian families, but not to their advantage. Under the previous administration, the system of benefits for children was restructured as of January 1, 1979. Family allowance went from $25.68 per month per child to $20 per month. This is a reduction of 22 per cent. The Government also eliminated the $50 tax rebate per child.

In fact, the child tax credit was financed by reducing family allowance payments and eliminating the child tax rebate.

Now that we are mentioning the possibility of again making changes in the way benefits are distributed within the system, Liberal Members find the idea unacceptable. Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note how commitments that were acceptable to the Liberals become unacceptable when they are being considered and proposed by a Progressive Conservative Government.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It is a specific question which relates to the future of old age security pensions and the baby bonus cheques which are provided to millions of Canadians from coast to coast. My question is factual. Is it the Prime Minister's view that one possibility would be to reduce the amount of pension or family allowance paid to higher income pensioners or families, or to tax it back at higher than normal rates of tax, or in some way to achieve a tax-back of those pensions and family allowances?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to maintain and enhance the integrity of the universal system of social benefits in Canada—and I think my right hon. friend would agree—while attempting to find an acceptable formula which would allow us to place more money into the hands of those Canadians who need it most.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENTS IN GOVERNMENT DOCUMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I did not get an answer to my question. Yesterday it appeared that the Prime Minister was in favour of a tax-back. Does he agree with the propositions which were put forward in the Minister of Finance's paper, on pages 73 and 77, that taxing back higher income families and higher income pensioners was a possibility and an option?

Because the different positions which have been taken by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister are causing confusion in the minds of Canadians, I would hope that the Prime Minister could give us a clear answer on where he and the Government stand.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no confusion, and there is no partisan advantage to be gained or lost. I think it is widely accepted that, by and large, to the credit of the House of Commons, all leading political Parties have over many years, and in support of many administrations, endorsed the principle of universality.

From time to time Governments have had to face the problem of scarce resources. What we are trying to do, and what we shall do, is maintain the integrity of the universal system of delivery of social benefits to Canadians, to the elderly, to the dispossessed and those who need help, while attempting to find a formula—we hope pursuant to mature debate with our friends—that will allow us, even in difficult times, to do more for those members of our society who genuinely need help. It is the doctrine of fairness. We want to listen to the Opposition. We want to listen to Canadians. We are trying to apply the doctrine of fairness in social policy and in tax policy, to get more into the hands of those who need it most.

DELIVERY OF PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect to the Prime Minister, there is still a deep confusion in the country as a result of the Government's recent statement, and the statements which have been made by the Prime Minister and two of his senior Ministers, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance. It is crucial for us to know that the Government is truly committed to a system of universal delivery in our major social programs, that the system will be available to all Canadians, and that it will not be a two-tier or a two-class system with a cut-off point in personal revenue. That is what we are getting at. That goes right to the fundamental fabric of those programs and to the way the country has treated its citizens.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without hesitation I believe that I can give my right hon. friend the assurance that there will not be a two-tier or a three-tier system. There will be the kind of system which has over the years done honour to our traditions as Canadians, and which Members of all political Parties have supported.

What we are trying to do was set out in the paper to which my right hon. friend refers. We said: "The Government agrees that a frank and open discussion is timely and that there is considerable scope for improving and redesigning social programs based on the twin tests of social and fiscal responsibility". It is clearly, as we go on to indicate, an attempt, pursuant to mature and thoughtful dialogue with Canadians, with trade unions, with the poverty groups, with the provinces and others—

Mr. Skelly: Get to the point.

Mr. Mulroney: —to maintain the integrity and the strength of our social programs, which have done great honour to Canada, and to try to agree upon a formula whereby we could place more money into the hands of the poor and the dispossessed who need it perhaps more than the fellow making a half a million dollars a year. We are trying to be fair and do it that way.

TAX EXEMPTIONS FOR FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether it is his Government's policy, or whether his Government intends, to reduce gradually over the years the tax exemption for families with children?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. That is not what the Government intends to do.

Mr. Garneau: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

If the Government does not intend, or it is not this Government's policy, to reduce, gradually or otherwise, tax exemptions for dependent children, does it intend to reduce gradually the amount of universal family allowance now being paid?

Mr. Mulroney: I would say that having initiated the dialogue, we shall submit a document for discussion purposes and ask all Canadians to give us their comments, both critical and otherwise, to see whether together we can find a formula that will make it possible, as I said before, to allocate more funds to the people in our society who really need it. I am referring to people on very modest incomes, including widows and senior citizens. We have a moral obligation to help the elderly in our society, and I know I can count on my hon. friend's co-operation in this respect.

TAXATION QUERY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in response to a question put by myself, the Prime Minister did clearly indicate that the Government would not favour a special tax of any kind on a particular program in our social system. Outside the House, the Minister of Finance said something quite different. He said that that is still an option which the Government is considering. I listened carefully to what the Prime Minister had to say today and he said that he would maintain—and these were his words—"universality of delivery" in the system, which leaves open the possibility of the tax-back to which the Minister of Finance referred outside the House. Will the Prime Minister give us an unequivocally clear answer? Will he assure the House that there will be no tax-back provision of any kind applied to pensions or any other social program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the tax-back was raised and initiated by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East, a member of your own Party.

Mr. Broadbent: Here we go again.

Mr. Mulroney: That is where it came from. More important, the Hon. Member referred to a conversation or comment by the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance said yesterday, "There will be papers that will be sent out as soon as they are ready and we will set out the options that are available, and after that we want to have a rational debate". That is what the Minister of Finance is saying. I suppose the proper question is: Is the Leader of the New Democratic Party interested and capable of mature, rational debate on an important issue which affects the welfare of so many Canadians? I invite the Hon. Member to set aside the nit-picking and to join in a healthy, vigorous, and positive debate, where we can help Canadians who need it most.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I invite the Hon. Member to do that.

Mr. Broadbent: I do not need lectures on maturity from Mr. Puff'n'stuff who does not give a clear answer to any question in the House, whether it is asked by the Liberals, asked by ourselves, or even asked by his own back-benchers. It is time he lived up to the responsibility of his job.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I want a straight, factual answer. I know the Prime Minister has trouble dealing just with facts. But I will ask a factual question and see if he will give me a factual answer. Will he tell us what he told me yesterday, which was different from what was said by the Minister of Finance outside of the House? Will he assure Canadians, the pensioners, recipients of family allowances, for example—never mind just the Opposition—that there will not be any special tax imposed upon a particular social program? That is the question. Will he say yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Hon. Member that, notwithstanding the pernicious tax suggestions made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East, we will defend and enhance—

Mr. Broadbent: Yes or no?

Mr. Rodriguez: This is a recording.

Mr. Mulroney: —the integrity and the positive benefits which come from a universal social program—

Mr. Rossi: How do you spell "integrity"?

Mr. Mulroney: —in favour of the elderly in this country who need it so much. We will defend and enhance that program, as a Government in Canada which believes in the concept should. We hope to do it with the full co-operation of my hon. friends from the New Democratic Party. But I guarantee them that if they stick to those nasty tax habits where they want to destroy universality, we will fight them on that—

Mr. Skelly: Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: —because we are going to protect the integrity of universality in this country. I will guarantee it.

PROGRAM TAXATION QUERY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Prime Minister for the third time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You don't like the answer, but it is true.

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to remind the Prime Minister that there are indeed thousands of Canadians, pensioners, recipients of family allowances, who are concerned out there as they watch his attempt to evade these questions. I will ask the Prime Minister for the third time: Will he give us the assurance that there will not be a special tax on a particular social program? Yes or no? It is pretty straightforward. We want no fluff and stuff; just give us a straight answer.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): For some reason the Leader of the New Democratic Party feels that in advance of the consultation documents which have been promised, in advance of listening to Canadians, in advance of responding to the question of fairness—is it fair for someone making a half a million dollars a year to receive the same benefits as others?—these are legitimate questions which have to be debated and understood—in advance of these things, and in advance of consultations with the provinces, we are supposed to respond to every conceivable hypothetical question that that Hon. Member proposes to raise, not to enhance the integrity of social programs but to try to score a few brownie points.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Well, the Hon. Member is wrong. The people of Canada have got your number. They have got the NDP's number.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: and I can assure my hon. friend that he will be standing in his place and will be voting with the duly elected Government of Canada when we bring in our social programs which will contribute so much to the universality and to the advancement of those in Canada who need it. He will be voting with us that day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister says that the viewpoints of himself and his front-bench are not contradictory. Is the position of the Prime Minister and his Government on universality that which he outlined when he said that he will not tax-back old age pensions from upper income Canadians? Or will it be the viewpoint which was put forward by the Minister of Finance yesterday after Question Period in which he contradicted the Minister of National Health and Welfare—that is the third viewpoint we have had from the front-beach—when he said that the Finance Minister has not ruled out a special tax on the family allowance and old age security benefits going to the well to do?

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, is it the position of the Government, which the Prime Minister represents, what a member of his own Cabinet, the Government Leader in the Senate, who is quoted in the Senate Hansard of two days ago—

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Mr. Frith: That is a question. It is not out of order.

Mr. Crosbie: You are not on The Journal now.

Mr. Frith: He was asked the question by Senator Frith in the Senate.

Mr. Crosbie: Get to the point.

Mr. Frith: He was asked: "Is the question of the means test still open?" And the reply was—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The difficulty, with respect—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: The Hon. Member should sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect, it is not normally permitted to quote from debates in the other place in this House. The Hon. Member's first question could now be answered, I believe.

Mr. Frith: Would the Prime Minister explain to the House which Minister is speaking for government policy?

An Hon. Member: Erik Nielsen.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, you are right. There are no rules in the House which dictate that the Prime Minister has to respond.

Mr. Mulroney: I would be happy to respond.

Mr. Frith: The question is which viewpoint, that of the Minister of Finance, of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, of the Prime Minister, of the Government Leader in the Senate, is the position of the Government? Which one do we believe?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have said we believe in universal social programs, we are opposed to a means test, and we are looking for ways to try to put more into the hands of the poor. Are you opposed to that? I want to know now, Mr. Speaker, if the Liberal Party is opposed to that. You should stand up and ask your question in consequence.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Prime Minister said that he, on behalf of the Government, was opposed to imposing a tax-back scheme on the pensions of the elderly. Is that the position of the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite clear to Members opposite—

Some Hon. Members: Please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that we intend to set out in a very clear way, in papers that will be issued early in the new year, the various options available to us in a limited way. We then want to have an open discussion on these various options to see how we can fulfil the principle that the Prime Minister has just established, that we want to see whether there are ways of maintaining the universality of the programs and direct a greater degree of benefit to those who need it most in our society.

POSSIBLE OPTIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister then inform the House whether one of the options that will be considered is that of taxing back the benefits received by old age pensioners in certain income categories, in direct opposition to the position put forward by the Prime Minister yesterday?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, patience is a virtue. The papers will be available early in the new year. I think that if Hon. Members opposite would cease trying to cast fear into the hearts of the people who need help most, and let us get on with the debate we have said is important, it will happen in due course, and I hope that Hon. Members participate fully in that debate.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I have been informed that during the Christmas recess the Minister, through Order-in-Council, will be making far reaching changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I request an undertaking from the Minister that there will be no changes to the Act through Order-in-Council during the Christmas recess. As well, will she undertake to complete the consultation process evidenced in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance, by consulting with labour, business, the provinces, and Members of Parliament?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure where the Hon. Member has been gathering his information. Certainly not through consultations with me, I can assure you, Sir. I have no intention of making any statement or undertakings by Order-in-Council during the Christmas recess.

WORKING PAPER INQUIRY

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister undertake to provide the working document outlining the details of proposed changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act? Will she be prepared to table that today prior to Members going home for the Christmas break?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am still somewhat bewildered by what the Hon. Member is referring to.

Mr. Crosbie: So is he.

Miss MacDonald: There is no document. Perhaps if he would like to speak to me privately to explain what it is he is getting at, we might be able to satisfy his request. I can assure you, Sir, that there is no document that I have yet had a chance to prepare.

SOCIAL SECURITY

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. Since he said yesterday outside the House that one option was a tax-back provision, does he not consider that this is a clear contradiction of what the Prime Minister said yesterday within this House?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I characterize that as a clear distortion of what I said outside the House.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the contradictions from various parts of the Government, is the Minister of Finance in favour of full universal old age pensions and family allowances with no means tests and no specific tax on those programs? Is he also in favour of major tax reform which will help to pay for social programs? Major tax reform?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member is trying to do is prejudge the whole consultation process that Canadians want to participate in. I say to her, as I said to her colleague, be patient. The papers will be out shortly and then—

Ms. Mitchell: People are worried. Old age pensioners are worried.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —we want to have a full discussion. She says the old age pensioners are worried. They have no reason to be worried, and they would not be worried except for the canards the Hon. Member throws up to cast fear into their minds. There is no reason.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The largest and most important of the programs we are contemplating are those affecting Canadians 65 and over. Will the Minister confirm that Canadians at age 65 will continue to receive this benefit on a universal basis, as they do now, and that no surtax will be paid on this benefit by any pensioner after the review process has been completed?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks me will old age pensioners receive the same benefit in the same manner as they are now, as well as those who come to retirement at age 65, and the answer to that question is yes.

DISARMAMENT

UNITED STATES STAR WARS TECHNOLOGY PROPOSAL

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Apparently the United States Secretary of State, Mr. Shultz, has announced that star wars testing and research will continue in the new year despite the scheduled talks in January with Foreign Minister Gromyko. Mr. Speaker, the British Government firmly opposes the star wars plan. Last week in Europe the Secretary of State for External Affairs said, and I quote: "This was a question I was hoping to avoid". In view of those facts, can the Prime Minister tell Canadians why his Government is refusing to support the policy that this Parliament and the previous Government enunciated, opposing strongly the new development of the star wars system which is threatening the world at this time?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Canada is an adherent to the 1967 outer space treaty. We believe very fundamentally in it. We have not been approached in regard to what is not an undertaking but a research project, I understand, which is going to get under way. There has been no change. We have not been asked to consider anything, but we have ventured the view that the Canadian Government will press incessantly for the elimination of all instruments that damage the cause of peace. We are deeply committed to the talks in Geneva, and we hope that good will flow from them.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister if this is a change in policy? It is very disturbing for Canadians to realize that everything the Americans are asking of the Canadian Government is agreed to. The star wars system is a new dangerous development. The speech in New York by the Prime Minister offered Canada as a give-away to the United States, with, for example, the abandonment of FIRA and the changing of energy policy to please the big American corporations. Is it the Prime Minister's ambition to become the first Governor of the united states of Canada?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my speech in New York, the Government of Canada will defend the integrity and the interests of this country at all times and in all circumstances. The Hon. Member referred to international corporations. His law firm is representing most of them in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We are committed to the integrity of this country, and we shall defend it. We need no lessons from the Hon. Member from Bay Street in that regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. A few minutes ago a member of his own caucus, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, asked the Minister very clearly whether there will be no surtax applied to old age pensions. The Minister conveniently avoided answering that question. I would like to ask him again whether it is the intention of the Government that there will be no surtax on pensions or family allowances.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question that was asked in terms of universality, maybe at this stage, in this House and in the country, we can put the question that the Opposition has been putting forward, to rest. There is no change. There never was any intention to change. There are no conditions to change the universality under which the old age pension is being paid to Canadians. It will be paid.

Mr. Broadbent: That is not the question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Just a minute, Ed, patience. You were taught that earlier today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): On the matter of resources, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have asked whether it is fair to ask of Canadians whether at certain income levels a certain amount of the money they receive could be better used, for example, by single parents who live below the poverty line. Those are the questions and answers that we want discussed, and I would like to have the Hon. Member's input too.

SURTAX QUERY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I will simply ask the question again. As the Member of his own caucus, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka asked, will the Minister clearly tell the House whether it is the intention of the Government to place a surtax on pensions or family allowances? Yes or no?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Hon. Member says he repeats his question. I give him the same answer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PAYMENT OF PENSIONS AND FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is extremely important that the people of Canada quite clearly understand what the Government is saying.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: I would like to ask the Minister whether the Government is unequivocally committed to maintaining the current old age security system and the family allowance system? Will every Canadian who is presently entitled to receive a cheque for old age security or for family allowance continue to receive it? If so, how does the Government propose to improve benefits for low income Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the opposition Members recognize that good questions can be asked.

Mr. Gauthier: Answer it.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The answer to the question is yes. It is the same situation and we have answered it the same way to others. I am glad that Members can understand it. I hope that the Opposition might consider that as well.

CHILD TAX DEDUCTIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to give him one more chance to tell the truth to the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Did I understand the Prime Minister to respond "no" to my colleague when asked:

[Translation]

Does his Government intend to eliminate gradually, over a number of years, the tax exemptions for children? Did he say no to that question here in the House today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will find out when she reads Hansard. It is all there.

[English]

GOVERNMENT DOCUMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Prime Minister. He said "no" in the House today. In fact the document from whence came the question of my hon. colleague was drawn from his Government's discussion paper called—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Member have a supplementary question?

Ms. Copps: Will the Prime Minister tell the truth on what his Government intends to do as described in his own document, A New Direction for Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when my hon. friend understands that you do not have to offend people to get an answer in this House, she will realize that the answer was amply and adequately given to her satisaction and the satisfaction of all Members of the House of Commons.

IMMIGRATION

LONG TERM ILLEGAL MIGRANTS PROGRAM—ANONYMITY OF APPLICANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister and her predecessors have given assurance that under the Long Term Illegal Migrants Program the anonymity of applicants will be so honoured that those applications which are rejected will not in any way be used to trap people who trusted the Government's promises. Therefore, will the Minister explain why the executive director of immigration caused this copy of a rejected anonymous application to be sent to the Director General, Immigration, Ontario Region, Toronto, for matching for the purpose of enforcement, that is, deportation? How does the Minister intend to correct this dangerous abuse of the executive director's power?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have met with the Hon. Member to discuss this situation. I have given him my assurance personally that the identity of individuals will not be disclosed. I do so again publicly today.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH COUNCIL FOR YUKON INDIANS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is not here so I will address my question to the Prime Minister, although had the Deputy been here he may have wished to answer. Was a decision made in Cabinet this morning regarding the Council for Yukon Indians? Will the negotiations be allowed to continue into the new year? Will the benefits to the elders continue to be received? Will the land freeze be maintained? Will funding for those negotiations go on until they are satisfactorily completed?

Hon. Jake Epp (Acting Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to the Hon. Member on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I know that he has been seized with this situation. He has been looking at it very carefully over the past weeks. The Hon. Member will know that there has been a long period of negotiation with the CYI and the Government of Yukon. We are all hoping for a satisfactory conclusion.

As to the four specifics which he mentioned that flow from the agreement, at the present time I can only tell him that I will take that to the Minister. I can assure him that the Minister is well aware of those difficulties.

STIPULATED DEADLINE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I gather that no decision has been made. In working towards this decision will the Minister not agree that December 31 was never a deadline but only a target date? Will he take that into consideration so that the future of the Council for Yukon Indians will not be foreclosed by a decision taken in haste?

• (1450)

Hon. Jake Epp (Acting Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the sensitivity with which the Member brings this matter to the House and I will convey that to the Minister.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR

NOBEL PEACE PRIZE WINNER, BISHOP TUTU OF SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has he had an opportunity to meet with Bishop Tutu who is visiting here from South Africa?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not. However, I look forward to this afternoon when I meet with this extraordinary and exemplary man who is with us today. On your behalf I want to welcome him to the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR TAX ON RICH PERSONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today members from all sections of the House have asked questions about the Government's intention or otherwise to impose special taxes on particular social programs. I regret to say that the Government has not answered these questions but has suggested that it wants to raise money for the poor.

My question to the Prime Minister is very direct. Considering that the previous Liberal Government reduced taxes on the rich by $1.7 billion, and there is another $400 million left untouched because thousands of uppper income Canadians pay no tax whatsoever, would he obtain this additional revenue, which is more than $2 billion, by putting a reasonable tax on the rich instead of undermining the credibility of our social programs by the process that his Government is going through right now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is pretty apparent. The desperation to see who will be the Leader of the Opposition is coming through every day. That is the real problem. All the hanky-panky around here deals with the NDP trying to get over there. That is all it is, and everyone knows it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: As my hon. friend knows, and I will repeat it again, we are fully committed to the concept of universality. We are opposed to means tests and we are seeking a formula which will allow us to get more money into the hands of the poor and the underprivileged in our society. I hope that the NDP agrees with this. I hope you are not opposed to that.

The other matter that we are in agreement with is the concept of introducing more fairness into the tax system. We propose to do that, and we hope you will applaud that as well when the Minister of Finance brings in his new budget in April.

TAX REFORM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has expressed concern about getting more income that can be distributed in a more equitable way to the poor in our society. That is something that my Party has fought for year in and year out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: We agree with that. I just want to test his commitment to the idea.

Given that the Prime Minister during the election campaign promised a minimum tax on the rich, which he has not brought in yet, and since we know that we can get a minimum $2 billion simply by restoring taxes for the rich to where they once were, why will he not bring in tax reform now to get that additional revenue and spend it now for the poor, instead of just talking the way he is in the House?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I don't know what has come over my hon. friend who has a tradition of reasonableness in the House, and relative objectivity in dealing with problems. I know that he has disappointed a great number of Canadians with the malice he has shown in the last couple of days. I want to tell him that that kind of conduct is unbecoming and unrewarding.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend knows it. He knows full well that there will be consultation in regard to the introduction of tax changes that simplify and render the tax system more fair in order to achieve some of the objectives of equity that we are all seeking.

I hope my hon. friend will drop the malice and come out in support of a Government that wants to do more for those people in our society who genuinely need and deserve the help. That is where the NDP should be standing up, to agree.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—CONTROL OF AUTOMOBILE EMISSIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport to whom I have given previous notice. It concerns the announcement made in the House yesterday by the Right Hon. Prime Minister when he informed Canadians of his impending meeting with the President of the United States and the fact that acid rain would be high on the agenda. Before that meeting takes place, will the Minister of Transport announce his decision on introducing control of automobile emissions as part of the over-all Canadian strategy to control acid rain emissions in a better manner?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the House earlier, I am expecting a consolidated report arising out of the public hearings that were held here in Ottawa, public hearings that the former Government chose to hold in private. As soon as I get that consolidated report I will consider it and take appropriate action arising therefrom.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the hearings were completed a couple of weeks ago, does the Minister see any difficulty in making his decision and announcing it in January, before the proposed meeting between the Prime Minister and the U.S. President?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get locked into a definitive timeframe but I will certainly act upon the report as soon as I see it. It will naturally have to be a decision that will be taken in consultation with my cabinet colleagues.

THE ECONOMY

REVIEW OF FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As reported in this morning's Globe and Mail, New York bankers have said that the Government's approach to foreign investment will have little impact on the level of investment flows, and that FIRA itself was not the bogyman that kept away foreign investment. Will the Prime Minister admit that he is wrong to think that abolishing foreign investment review will help create the jobs that Canada needs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I don't suppose the Hon. Member would want me to argue or quarrel with the opinion of an investment banker or take particular pride in statements made by investment bankers on the other side of the concept. We will continue to work hard to build a stronger economy because we believe that, in part, the attraction of capital will create jobs that our fellow Canadians need.

I think we should all recognize modest indications of progress. The Bank of Canada bank rate dropped 40 basis points to 10.16 today. I think that is an indication of how well things are going.

GOVERNMENT'S STRATEGY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, since it is not Canadian bankers or the bank rate that the Prime Minister has relied on, but foreign investors, will he now concede to the House that his strategy of trying to charm New York investment with speeches and legislative changes designed to weaken our economy is not working? Will he change that strategy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I don't know what it is about the NDP, that they see problems under every rug. We are attempting to conduct ourselves in a civilized manner with our friends. We make no bones about that. We are trying to create jobs. There are 1.5 million Canadians crying out for work and we are trying to re-energize the economy to deal with that moral difficulty confronting Canada. We will commit every resource and all of our talents, and we hope the co-operation of the House of Commons, to reduce unemployment so that Canadians can find that degree of prosperity they need. You should be applauding that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

PREPARATION OF DISCUSSION PAPERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In his discussion paper A New Direction for Canada he refers to some directional and discussion papers which include subjects like old age pensions and the family allowance. His colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, indicated that those papers were to be published before mid-December. Have those papers been withheld and rewritten as a result of questioning in this House of Commons—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —as a result of the public furor and anxiety in the country—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —and the concern now being expressed by the backbenches of the Conservative Party?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, they have not, Mr. Speaker.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which is as follows:

Rideau Hall,
Government House,
Ottawa.

December 20, 1984

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Willard Z. Estey, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 20th day of December, at 3:00 p.m. for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière, Administrative Secretary to the Governor General.

REFORM OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons to which, pursuant to Standing Order 69(13), the Committee requests a comprehensive response.

It is my understanding that today's report will be printed and appended to today's Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: I must treat that as a request that it be so. I presume there is unanimous consent for the appending. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

REDUCTION IN POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of the Village of Upper Woodstock, in the Province of New Brunswick, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that this Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that Canada Post has intentions of reducing local postal services by eight hours a week, and that last year we lost our rural delivery on Saturdays. Wherefore we seek to retain the hours presently in effect in the post office. And as in duty bound your petitioner will ever pray.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind Members that the purpose of this moment when we get to petitions, which we got to by my error, is not to read the face of the petition. It is to present a summary of the petition.

LAW REFORM COMMISSION

TABLING OF 1983-84 ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to lay upon the table of the House in both official languages a copy of the Annual Report for 1983-84 of the Law Reform Commission of Canada. I ask that the report be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Commission produced four reports to Parliament, five working papers and two study papers this year and it is continuing its very valuable and helpful work.

INMATES INCARCERATED IN FEDERAL CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 72—Mr. Nunziata:

1. Of those presently incarcerated in federal correctional institutions, how many are (a) male (b) female?

2. How many inmates convicted of murder were released from the correctional system during the past five years after having served their sentences and, how many were subsequently convicted of a further indictable offense?

3. How many inmates in the federal correctional system are currently serving life sentences for murder and manslaughter?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

1. (a) Male inmates incarcerated in federal correctional institutions: 11,813

   (b) Female inmates incarcerated in federal correctional institutions (includes federal female inmates incarcerated in provincial institutions under Federal/Provincial Exchange of Service Agreements): 232

2. See Annex A.

3. Number of inmates serving a life sentence for murder:

capital murder:	20
non-capital murder:	359
first degree murder:	252
second degree murder:	785

Number of inmates serving a life sentence for manslaughter: 20

EXPENDITURE OF PROVINCIAL CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

Question No. 78—Mr. Nunziata:

What is the per capita and total budgetary expenditures on provincial correctional services in each province, and what are the amounts?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

The attached table shows the provincial operating expenditures for fiscal year 1982-83 on adult correctional services and the per capita operating cost by province.

Capital cost figures are not available, nor are juvenile correctional operating expenditures.

Provincial Correctional Operating Expenditures for Fiscal Year 1982/83
(Adult Correctional Services)

Province/Territory	Total ($000's)	Per Capita ($)	Population Estimate June 1/82
Newfoundland and Labrador	9,741	17.11	569.2
Prince Edward Island	2,388	19.45	122.8
Nova Scotia	13,173	15.46	852.3

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1984

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, to amend an Act to amend the Criminal Code and to amend the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Act, the Excise Act, the Food and Drugs Act, the Narcotic Control Act, the Parole Act and the Weights and Measures Act, to repeal certain other Acts and to make other consequential amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, before lunch I was trying to demonstrate to the House the tremendous change that has evolved over time in our criminal law. It has been an evolution that is very, very important. At that time I said that property rights received far more emphasis than rights that related to the person. I gave as an illustration the fact that one could go to jail for one year for stealing a car with absolutely no discretion. I traced the fact that stealing from the post office carried an automatic six-month jail term.

We then moved into the 1960s. As I said, when I was a young prosecutor I remember that when a person was caught smoking a marijuana cigarette, there was absolutely no alternative but to send him to jail for a period of six months. Then in 1968 and 1969 we saw further matters that relate to this Bill evolve that dealt with drinking and driving. Until that particular point in time there was no compulsory breathalyser test. There was a very substantial debate as to whether or not a person should be compelled to take a breathalyser test for the purpose of determining the amount of alcohol in his system. There was substantial debate and certain safeguards were implemented with respect to it.

As I pointed out, in the City of Toronto in the 1960s, unless a person who blew less than 1.5 on the breathalyser was a falling-down drunk, the charges against him were withdrawn. That was less than 15 years ago. The law has evolved so that it is an offence not only for a person to be an impaired driver, but for a person to blow over the statutory limit. That statutory limit, whether or not the person is impaired, is the 0.8 reading which we have today. The law is moving in such a way that there is a substantial body of opinion which believes, as they do in other jurisdictions, that the limit should be further reduced to .05. Now, finally, in the fullness of time, there are more severe penalties for those who drink and drive.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) asked a very pertinent question. He asked if these tougher impaired driving laws were going to be the panacea which Canadians hope they will be. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway said that it was only a partial answer.

I would like to tell the House a story. I spent some time in Sweden. Back in the early seventies there were very restrictive driving and drinking laws in Sweden. If charged, a person was automatically incarcerated in that jurisdiction. But there is something far more than that which Canadians must learn—

Mr. Keeper: Socialism.

Mr. Speyer: Not socialism. We have enough of that. What Canadians must learn is that it is wrong to drink and drive. Those good people who would have absolutely no thought of breaking and entering, stealing or committing a crime in which there is some sense of moral opprobrium, will get into a car, having had too much to drink, and drive it with the potential of risk. In a sense, the legislation forms a deterrent. I would say to all Members of the house, and to the people who may be watching these proceedings, that that is not the whole answer. In the home, parents teach their children what is right and what is wrong. Good education tries to instil in young people a sense of ethics and morality. Until the day comes when people think it is just as wrong to enter a car after having consumed alcohol as it is to commit a crime, this legislation will only be part of the answer. Over the fullness of time, people will become increasingly aware that it is not only illegal, but that it is morally reprehensible to drive when they have had too much alcohol.

For a lot of us there is a certain amount of personal hypocrisy in that. I know that is the way society is moving and it is the way in which changes have evolved in other aspects of criminal law. As sure as I am standing here, in 10 or 15 years, I know our children will not understand how we could have been so lax with respect to drinking and driving in previous years.

There are other aspects of the legislation about which I would like to speak. One of them is the necessity to have a degree of flexibility. There are no minimum penalties which have been increased. Judges still have the ability, in worthy cases, to exercise discretion in favour of the accused. We cannot categorize every case in terms of minimum laws. This legislation increases the penalty in cases which are reasonable. If a person assumes the risk of getting into an automobile after drinking, whether or not that person intended to, and causes injury, bodily harm or death, that person will be susceptible to a very harsh penalty. In the case of bodily harm, the penalty will be ten years. In the case of death, the penalty will be 14 years. That is the risk which is being run. It is one of the deterrent aspects of the legislation.

A new feature of the Bill which I would like to draw to the attention of Hon. Members is that normally in criminal law offences the offender is punished. However, in this legislation, which is subject to being proclaimed in each and every province, there is the provision for a judge to order the immobilization of a vehicle. Why is that included in the legislation? It is in the legislation so as to prevent the prohibition—when a person cannot drive after a conviction—from being neglected or disobeyed. This happens often. One of the ways to punish the offender is to seize the vehicle. The vehicle is not being impounded, it is being immobilized. The intention does not involve the cost of bringing the vehicle to a pound. The provinces must decide what they will do. It may very well be that a vehicle will end up in the owner's garage, locked with a device such as the Denver boot. The power will be with the courts to order immobilization in some circumstances.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway mentioned some concerns with respect to telewarrants. I hope that I am second to nobody in terms of defending rights. When I first considered telewarrants, I was concerned and apprehensive because it was a new system. I agreed that writs of assistance had to go. I was glad to see the Ontario Court of Appeal strike them down as unconstitutional. However, in emergency circumstances we had to put an authorization in place by which a judicial officer could issue a warrant. I ask Members to focus on this point. A telewarrant is an extraordinary measure. The normal measure is an ordinary warrant. It is a warrant which protects people from police or other people of authority entering their houses, offices, cars or domains. Under normal circumstances, that is what will happen. Normal warrants will be taken out and sworn before a justice of the peace.

However, there are extraordinary circumstances. For example, if a person is found unconscious and a police officer suspects that that person has been drinking, then the police officer will be forced to comply with all the conditions before obtaining a warrant. He will have to swear an oath and set forth the facts upon which that oath is taken. Then the police officer must confirm it. I hope that in practice there will be tape recordings of the oaths. Then the authorization will be given to a medical practitioner who will take a blood sample. If a person is in northwestern Ontario and an emergency situation occurs, a police officer will have the ability to swear under oath that he has reasonable and probable grounds to believe an offence has been committed, to state the facts upon which his belief pivots and, under those circumstances, an oath would be forthcoming, subject to it being confirmed. The protections are there.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway asked where the proposition came from, and I would like to answer that. Believe it or not, it came from the Law Reform Commission. I have been here since 1979 and I have never known of a Law Reform Commission recommendation to be adopted by this House with respect to criminal legislation. No one could ever accuse the Law Reform Commission of being a red-neck body. It is a commission which is dedicated to civil liberties. It saw a vacuum which could be created at the time when the writs of assistance were disposed of. So it put in this very sensible mechanism which, on the one hand, will balance the interests of the state and, on the other hand, will give the protection which all of us desire with respect to warrants.

I am going to speak very briefly about two other matters in terms of the administration of justice. People such as yourself, Mr. Speaker, who have had many jury trials know that one of the things which happens is what is known as a "trial within a trial" where the jury is not entitled to hear the evidence. That does not occur until a jury is empanelled. The jury then sits at the expense of the state sometimes for days and days while lawyers argue points of law. What we have done here is to put into legislative form that which is the practice in some jurisdictions such as Ontario whereby matters which come before the court would be able to be argued prior to the empanelling of a jury. This is entirely practical and sensible. It will save the time of the court and the jury and will save Canadians needless expense.

I ask Hon. Members to contemplate a particular feature which, in my view, is underrated. We are talking about the 1984 law. If there are any deficiencies of substance, they have to do with computers, because the last substantial change in the criminal law was in 1954. There have been amendments throughout the years, but what we had to do was to come up with a good law which would protect property rights from the wilful and unauthorized invasion of a computer. We must protect against the destruction of property which is held in computers because the present laws are not sufficient. It is really an extension of the law which we call "the law of mischief", and I certainly believe that is important.

In conclusion, I would like to make a point which I believe is very important. I feel that this Bill is not at all contentious. I would be very interested to hear from anyone who has a substantial or fundamental disagreement with respect to the Bill. There were aspects of the former Bill which was brought forward which were contentious and which divided the people or parties involved. For example, prostitution and soliciting is a very sensitive topic about which reasonable people could differ. I believe it would be wrong to include provisions with respect to prostitution and soliciting in a Bill which deals with impaired driving, computer crime and matters relating to streamlining the court process.

Obscenity is another sensitive topic. I have a lot of difficulty, Mr. Speaker, in all frankness, with respect to amendments to the law dealing with obscenity. I want to make sure there is a balance so that there is a maximum of tolerance on the one hand and, on the other hand, children are protected. We must draw the proper line in the proper place so that there is no real restriction of freedom of speech, but at the same time we do not want people to see certain things because it is just wrong. Hon. Members of this House are going to have to draw that line, and that certainly will be a contentious issue.

Another contentious topic is contempt of court proceedings. Judges did not like the various proposals. These are matters which should be debated individually. There are also the topics of gun control and jury trials. We have taken all of these matters out which would divide people. They are not in the Bill.

What is in the Bill, in my view, Mr. Speaker, is necessary. It is timely, and it deserves the attention to the House in terms of putting it through quickly. I have yet to hear anyone, either the critic for the Liberal Party or the acting critic for the New Democratic Party, give any substantial reason why he would disagree with this Bill. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway raised certain legitimate questions. Those questions can be disposed of. This Bill ought to be law and we ought to act promptly to make it so.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he agrees with me that along with these very important amendments to the Criminal Code dealing with impaired driving, it is absolutely essential that the Government undertake a public education program which would send very strong messages and educate the public with respect to this very serious problem. If he does agree, can the Hon. Member advise this House as to the reasons why the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), in his wisdom, decided to cut some $700,000 from public legal education? I would like the Hon. Member to advise the House why such a drastic measure would be taken when it is so absolutely necessary and essential that the public be educated with respect to matters of law reform?

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, in answer to my friend's question, may I say that I hope that I articulated the fact that this Bill is not a panacea. It is one aspect of deterrence. Public education is very important, I agree with the Hon. Member. I believe that, whether it be in the schools or whether it be at home, these things take a period of time. As the Hon. Member heard yesterday, because I saw him at the press conference, over $200,000 is going to be spent on public education and advertising. The Attorneys General of the provinces have all pledged money. In Ontario it is in train right now. We must make people aware that society will not permit this kind of behaviour.

Quite frankly, I would love to spend incredible amounts of money to make people aware of the importance of certain things. But there are certain limits on the Government, and $200,000 is only the beginning. Public education is important. The Minister of Justice does not deny that. I do not deny it. I know, as the Hon. Member knows, that it is important. We are not cutting anything. The amount of $200,000 is being spent, and over the fullness of time people will become aware of the importance of this legislation.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member just indicated that nothing was being cut. I beg to differ with the Hon.

Member. I was present at the meeting of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs where the Minister admitted that some $700,000 was being cut from the public legal education program which had been planned. Perhaps the Hon. Member could consult with his Minister.

Once the Hon. Member confirms that the $700,000 has been cut, I would ask him if he would petition his Minister and urge the Minister to reinstate that sum of money and specifically direct that $700,000 to a program of education for the public with respect to the very serious nature of drinking and driving.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, first, I will not give such an undertaking. Second, I say to the Hon. Member that the $700,000 was never in train. It has never been a matter for which moneys had been committed. Third, the $700,000 refers to the totality of all matters involving legal education, not just impaired driving, but everything. The fact is that there are certain constraints on the Government. Every Hon. Member in this House hears of good programs which may very well have to be sacrificed because we just do not have the money. So I cannot give the Hon. Member the undertaking he is looking for.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have some questions for the Parliamentary Secretary. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) as well as the Parliamentary Secretary referred to the importance of that part of the Bill dealing with drinking and driving. I think all Members of this House share in that concern and are anxious to get these changes into committee to hear various representations as soon as possible. My question is this. If the Government was really concerned about this provision, recognizing that this time of year is a little different as there is much more tendency to party and, as the police would indicate, more people are on the highway who have been drinking, why did it not separate this section from the Bill? The Bill is very complex and includes a variety of critical areas. The Minister said during his presentation that he would like to see this Bill passed today or tomorrow. Well, rather than introduce it the day before the House is going to recess for the Christmas break, why did he not introduce it two or three weeks ago so this could have been accomplished?

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the opposition Parties did not co-operate on the passage of this Bill—which, in my respectful submission, is not contentious. If the Hon. Member can point out any particular part of the Bill with which he is in substantial disagreement, I would be very surprised. Would he vote against those matters concerning computer crime, streamlining of the courts or telewarrants? I have heard absolutely no arguments from any Party against these provisions.

Mr. Nunziata: Be patient, we are not finished yet.

Mr. Speyer: The critic for the Official Opposition was the one who said this morning that not only does he favour telewarrants but he thought that he initiated them.

I say to the Hon. Member that, sure, it is important that this Bill be passed and I suspect very strongly that it will be passed before the end of January. It would be nice if it could be passed in a day or two, but the fact is that it will go to committee where people will have the opportunity to pose questions if they have any.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, regarding the new proposals concerning deterrence, does the Parliamentary Secretary know of a study being done or does he have any information available about where legislation of this type has acted as a deterrent in other sectors of society or in other countries?

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to answer as best I can. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway referred to a study done in Buffalo on whether deterrence was effective. I think there are certain limits on deterrence. It is important, but after people become used to it, it may very well be that they will still drink and drive. I can tell the Hon. Member that in Sweden the laws are dramatically tougher than they are here. As a result of public pressure a number of years ago, Germany became far more severe. In the state of Maine and the state of New Jersey, dramatically new and tougher legislation has gone into place. Many states in the U.S. are contemplating these changes because there is an ethos going around the world that drinking and driving will not be permitted. If one is going to indulge in this form of conduct, then he or she will be punished more severely. I am not in a position right now to cite to the Hon. Member any studies that have been done, but I undertake to send him a letter on the subject when the Department gives me the list of studies that are available.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now terminated.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this Bill. As a new Member it is my first opportunity to speak on a new legislative proposal. I would like to begin by indicating how chagrined I am by the fact that this Government should wait so long to introduce a Bill which was introduced by the Liberal Government on February 7 of this year.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Then pass it today.

Mr. Nunziata: On the admission of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), it is, with respect to the drunk driving provisions, virtually identical to the Bill introduced by the Liberal Government and the then Minister, Mark MacGuigan. This extremely important and urgent Bill could have been introduced by the Government some seven weeks ago in order to afford an opportunity for the House to take a very close look at its various provisions. But for some unknown reason the Government decided to wait. It is crucial that signals be sent out to the community as early as possible that drunk driving is a very serious problem. But this Bill was a Liberal initiative.

Mr. Speyer: Why not pass it, then?

Mr. Nunziata: With respect to the drunk driving provisions, we were prepared to pass them—10 months ago, but because of petty partisan politics, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speyer: On your part.

Mr. Nunziata: —the Progressive Conservative Party stalled and delayed.

Mr. Kempling: You were not here.

Mr. Nunziata: These amendments were necessary in order to toughen the laws with respect to drinking and driving. The Minister of Justice agrees so much with the drunk driving provisions that he had the audacity to read actually from a speech delivered by the then Minister of Justice, the Hon. Mark MacGuigan, on November 9, 1983.

Mr. Kempling: How terrible.

Mr. Nunziata: He was reading verbatim from parts of that speech. We appreciate that our speeches are good, but we would simply ask the Government—

Mr. Thacker: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure my friend opposite would not deliberately want to mislead the House. Beauchesne is quite clear. The Minister answered that allegation by saying he was reading from Department of Justice notes, the same notes with which the Department had prepared the speech for the previous Minister. That was my point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does not rule that this is a point of order. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston may continue in debate.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I simply ask, with the greatest of respect, that when the Government intends to use speeches delivered by Liberal Ministers, that it ask permission before it plagiarizes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Marchi: Or acknowledge it with a footnote.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary says he would be surprised indeed if any Member were to have serious disagreement with any of these provisions. I would like now to surprise him, notwithstanding that the official critic of the Liberal Party has indicated that the Liberal Party fully supports the drunk driving provisions and would be prepared, if we could only gain agreement of the NDP and the Government, to pass those provisions immediately. We believe that even though improvements can be made to the drunk driving provisions, they are so necessary and important that they should come into effect immediately. We would have liked to have seen the amendments come into effect before the Christmas season, because it is at this time of year that public awareness is heightened with respect to drinking and driving. If we wanted to send out very clear and definite messages to those who drink and drive, now or three or four weeks ago would have been the time of year to do it. However, it appears that the Government fell asleep at the switch, either deliberately or innocently.

• (1600)

Although I did indicate that we would be prepared to pass this Bill as it is as there would be an opportunity at a later time to improve it, I would like to indicate to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary the concerns that I have with respect to the various penalties with regard to drinking and driving. I am concerned specifically with certain inconsistencies. The Bill provides that on a second offence for drinking and driving there is an absolutely mandatory 14-day prison term.

Mr. Speyer: The same as it is now.

Mr. Nunziata: That is the same as it is now, as the Parliamentary Secretary points out. There is a minimum. As the Member is aware, Mr. Speaker, there are very few Criminal Code offences that carry minimum sentences. This particular offence is one of those few. Yet, with respect to the new offence of impaired driving causing death, there is no minimum sentence.

I would like to present a hypothetical situation to the House. Consider a situation in which someone deliberately consumes alcohol, becomes intoxicated, gets into his automobile and, with reckless and wanton disregard, causes an accident and the death of an innocent individual. In that case there is an option for the court not to impose a prison term. In the case of an individual who, on two occasions, may have had four or five drinks, the minimum amount of alcohol required to constitute a criminal offence, that person must, by law, serve a 14-day minimum jail term. That is an inconsistency that I am concerned about with regard to the drunk driving provisions of this Bill.

I am hoping that these concerns can be remedied. I am not quite certain what consultation process the Government went through before it introduced this legislation.

Mr. Speyer: This is your Bill.

Mr. Nunziata: I fully recognize that this is a Liberal Bill, and it is a good Bill. It is an excellent Bill and we wanted to pass it in February of this year, but because of petty politics, Mr. Speaker, that Party stalled.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Let's pass it in December then.

Mr. Nunziata: They stalled and delayed, and because of their stalling and delaying more drunk drivers were permitted to drive and to kill and maim and to produce carnage on the highways.

Mr. Speyer: Let's get serious.

Mr. Nunziata: I assure the Hon. Member that I am very serious. I would have hoped that the Progressive Conservative Party could have been a little more serious when these important amendments were introduced in February of this year. It is unfortunate that they chose to stall, but be that as it may, we are prepared to turn the page and to deal with this very important legislation.

As my hon. friend, the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) so eloquently stated, the Liberal Party will not oppose for the sake of opposing. We are prepared to co-operate with the Government. I am only sorry that the New Democratic Party is not prepared to co-operate to ensure that this Bill, especially the provisions with respect to drinking and driving, will become law before Christmas. I only hope that the NDP will reconsider its position.

With respect to the matter of drunk driving, it it quite clear that it is a very serious social problem in this country. As has been indicated in the past, in 1981 there were 158,000 convictions in the country for drinking and driving. Unfortunately, I do not have the statistics available with respect to the last few years, but I would suspect that the number of convictions has increased since 1981. That number itself would indicate how serious this problem is.

While it is recognized that the criminal law can go a long way to deter individuals from drinking and driving, the criminal law in and of itself is not sufficient to get the message out to the Canadian public that drinking and driving is a type of behaviour that will not be accepted. It is socially unacceptable. It is extremely dangerous and extremely costly. I am very disappointed, as are other members of my caucus, that the Minister of Justice would cut, purely for the sake of cutting, $700,000 from the public legal education program which was planned. That money could have been earmarked to educate the public with regard to drinking and driving. I asked the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary whether he would petition the Minister to re-instate those funds and to earmark them for this specific purpose. For whatever reason, he indicated that he would not so petition the Government. That would lead one to question the credibility of the Government when it talks about the seriousness of combatting drinking and driving. If the Government is serious, I challenge it to spend at least that $700,000 to educate the public.

We are talking about a very serious social problem. We are talking about human life. There are literally hundreds upon hundreds of individuals who are killed or maimed every year because of drunk drivers. The statistics indicate that alcohol is a contributing factor in 50 per cent of all fatal traffic accidents. Statistics also indicate that the economic cost of alcohol-related accidents is in excess of $800 million per year in this country. On any given night, 25 per cent of the drivers on the road in Canada have been drinking and 6 per cent are legally impaired. Drunk drivers cause 30 per cent of all traffic accidents in which injuries are sustained.

The Liberal Party is prepared to support the provisions with respect to drinking and driving, Mr. Speaker. We are also prepared to support in principle the other provisions in this Bill. However, with respect to the other provisions dealing with telewarrants, computer crime and other amendments that would allow for pre-trial conferences, we believe that those clauses of the Bill should be given some serious consideration by the Justice Committee. This would also provide an opportunity to various interest groups from across the country to indicate their concerns to the Justice Committee.

Returning to the question of sentencing, I have indicated one of my concerns with respect to the regime of sanctions that are proposed in this legislation.

In May of this year, I believe, the Liberal Government appointed a commission to study the whole question of sentencing in this country. Although the Sinclair Commission is to report to Parliament some time next year, I am disappointed to learn that the Commission has yet to meet. As of approximately two weeks ago, it had yet to commence deliberations to discuss the terms of reference for studying the question of criminal law sentencing in this country. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister of Justice will request that the Commission begin immediately to look at the whole question of sentencing. This is a very important consideration when one talks about adding new offences to the Criminal Code of Canada.

I am also interested in the concept of adding the immobilization or impounding of vehicles to the impaired driving provisions. I believe that there would be a definite deterrent effect to impounding vehicles of those who are convicted of impaired driving. I say this because in the short time I have been a member of the Ontario Bar it has been my experience, while defending individuals who have been charged with drinking and driving, that it is the sanctions attached to drinking and driving that affect them the most.

In Ontario, the first offence fine for drinking and driving ranges anywhere from $150 to $500. This Bill will increase the minimum from $150 to $300. Presumably a clear message will go to the judiciary in this country that the existing tariff is too low and the penalty should be increased. I hope that there is some uniformity with respect to sentencing across the country.

With respect to the immobilization of vehicles, I suggest it would be an effective deterrent to include that sanction of impounding of a motor vehicle upon conviction. I would further suggest that the automobile should be impounded regardless of whether or not the person convicted is the owner of the automobile. This would make owners of vehicles more responsible in terms of the person to whom they lend their cars.

The current Ontario civil law holds that the owner of a vehicle as well as the driver are jointly and severally liable for negligence in the operation of that vehicle. I hope the Government would consider applying that principle to the Criminal Code and to the drunk driving provisions of the Criminal Code.

I recognize that my time is up. That is rather unfortunate because I wanted to discuss some other matters. However, I welcome any questions from Hon. Members.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to hear the Hon. Member say that he was very serious about the subject of impaired driving and the introduction of legislation to deal with that. If he is so worried about this subject and about Parliament proceeding on this Bill as expeditiously as possible, why was he wasting the time of the House this morning and why did he comment again on the speech made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie)? He was wasting the time of the House this morning by continuously interrupting the Minister of Justice. He referred to it again this afternoon. I would suggest to him that he is wasting the time of the House, and I want to know why he is doing that if he is so worried about getting this legislation through?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would have to rule out of order only the part about the Hon. Member's comments about what the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) did this morning. However, I will allow the part about the speech of the Hon. Member for York South-Weston.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I make no apologies whatsoever for representing my constituents in the House of Commons. I take particular exception to the Hon. Member's suggestion that I am wasting the time of the House by exercising my right in law to speak for my constituents who elected me to represent them here. It is quite surprising that the Member should indicate his concern in this respect.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I only have a brief comment. This morning, the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and the official critic for the Liberal Party made speeches that were very thoughtful, thought-provoking and of substance. I believe that the intervention by the Hon. Member has introduced a number of new things in the House other than his new black leather pants. I have never heard such a low level calibre of speech from a Member who is allegedly trained at the Bar in Ontario. That is surprising. The Member, coming from Queen's Park, has delusions of adequacy.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to indicate to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that he should get his facts straight. I was not a Member of the Ontario Legislature and have never been a Member of the Ontario Legislature.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. That is not a point of order. I would also ask the other Hon. Member to refrain from speaking about one's clothing in the House. If we could end the matter there I think it would be in the best interest of the House with regard to the particular personal comments. However, it is the Hon. Member's right to reply.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the arrogance of the Hon. Member—he may have had the opportunity to be a Crown attorney for some time and he certainly has the experience in the House because I understand he has been here for a number of years.

As I indicated at the beginning of my comments, this is the first opportunity I have had to speak. I take personal offence—

Mr. Speyer: Good. It was intended.

Mr. Nunziata: —that the Parliamentary Secretary should stoop so low as to comment about an Hon. Member's clothing and comment about the quality of an Hon. Member's speech.

Mr. Speyer: It was dreadful.

Mr. Nunziata: I would simply indicate to the Hon. Member that if you cannot stand the heat, get out of the kitchen.

● (1620)

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, my first comment that I would like to make to the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) is that this is his first speech on a legislative issue in the House. I welcome him to the House of Commons. We are pleased to have his participation.

With respect to the content of the Hon. Member's speech, obviously, Mr. Speaker, I am at variance with what he has said. I want him to understand that the relationship of alcohol and accidents is a national tragedy. It is a non-partisan issue. It is not an issue on which Liberals, New Democrats or we as Conservatives can stand any higher than anyone else. As to his comments that in February the Liberals introduced the Bill and the Conservatives somehow filibustered it, I dare him to give us quotes to show where one Conservative filibustered the Bill on drinking and driving.

With respect to the question as to whether the Liberals were the first to introduce the Bill, let me give the Hon. Member the facts. I as a Member of Parliament introduced a Private Member's Bill on drinking and driving long before the Government did. I was the only Conservative to speak. The NDP put up one speaker and hoped my Bill would pass. But the good Liberals, who, as the Hon. Member says, supported the Bill, stood up one by one and talked it out. I dare the Member to claim that the Liberals are the ones who were trying to protect Canada from the dangers of drinking and driving.

This is not an issue for partisan debate. It is a national tragedy. People are dying as a result of drinking and driving. All Members of this House have sent the signal that on that aspect of the legislation this Bill should be passed. The country wants the Bill as law. It is not for any one of us to stand here as this Member did and try to say that somehow shrouded in his Party is this great belief. It simply does not stand the test of facts. I now challenge the Hon. Member for York South-Weston to give us those facts and to read out for us those excerpts which he said demonstrated filibustering last February. The truth is the Liberal Party could not get its legislation through from February to the end of June and the country said, "Let's get rid of them". That is the reason the Liberal Party forms the rump today.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that the Bill should be non-partisan. These very serious and important amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada should be supported by all Members on all sides of this House. I simply indicated in my comments that this Bill was introduced in February this year by a Liberal Government and that the initiatives are Liberal initiatives. It is the Liberal criminal law agenda that is being proposed now by the Conservative Party. Yes, the Progressive Conservative Party, when it was in Opposition, stalled, delayed and insisted that the Bill be cut and separated and refused to give immediate consent. Had the Conservatives not done that, the Bill could have been passed at an early stage and stiffer penalties could be in place.

I can assure the Hon. Member and the Government opposite that we in the Liberal Party will not use the stalling and delaying tactics that were used by the Conservative Party simply for the purposes of gaining political brownie points when there is important legislation that must be passed for the benefit of Canadians from coast to coast.

If we wanted to, Mr. Speaker, we could stall this Bill.

Mr. Speyer: Try it.

Mr. Nunziata: But no, we will not do so because we believe in this Bill. We believe it is important and should be passed immediately. We are prepared to pass it today if we can get the agreement of the New Democratic Party and the Government.

Mr. Gauthier: Why did the Government wait until today to pass it?

Mr. Nunziata: The Member indicated that the Bill should be non-partisan, and I agree with him. I wish to point out that a few months ago when that Hon. Member was in Opposition, he stalled and delayed when the Bill should have been passed.

An Hon. Member: Prove it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis)—Science and Technology—Establishment of GATIQ—Government position; the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone)—Youth—Minister's area of responsibility. (b) Press statement attributed to Minister; the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker)—Environmental Affairs—Canadian Wildlife Service—Request for re-examination of budgetary cutbacks. (b) Terminated positions—Request that Minister table job descriptions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1984

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, to amend an Act to amend the Criminal Code and to amend the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Act, the Excise Act, the Food and Drugs Act, the Narcotic Control Act, the Parole Act and the Weights and Measures Act, to repeal certain other Acts and to make other consequential amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity in the latter part of today to rise and make some comments regarding Bill C-18, an Act to amend the Criminal Code. I plan to keep my comments brief to enable this very critical piece of legislation to get into committee quickly where it should have been some time ago, and to allow necessary public reflection on some of the critical parts of this Bill. I refer specifically to the need to have representatives of the Canadian Bar Association, to have provincial Attorneys General and to have various groups representing civil liberties who have indicated their interest on commenting on sectors of the Bill appear before the Committee.

I want to make a comment or two about the procedure. I have been listening to Members of the governing Party and to Members of the Liberal Party on the need to move with haste particularly on the most critical section of this Bill, that is the section that deals with amending the Criminal Code as it relates to drinking and driving.

The past Liberal Government had years and years in which to introduce a Bill that addressed the problems associated with drinking and driving if that had been a major priority for it. The Liberals were in power for many many years. There is no reason we could not have been debating this Bill six months ago if it had been a real priority. On the other hand, I say to the Government that I feel a little uncomfortable about the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) coming to the House of Commons the day prior to the Christmas recess and saying that he has a Bill that the Government would like to pass in the next few hours.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a simple piece of legislation. This is a piece of legislation that will touch either indirectly or directly the lives of every Canadian. It has to do with changes to the Criminal Code, amendments to the Weights and Measures Act prohibiting fraudulent replacement of a motor vehicle's odometer and all the related problems associated with car sales. It includes amendments to the Combines Investigation Act. It amends the Narcotic Control Act, and it also amends the Food and Drugs Act. This Bill is not a simple piece of legislation that ought not to receive any public scrutiny. The committee is the place for it. Today, on second reading, we speak to the Bill in principle. That is essentially what I plan to do. I plan to keep my comments brief to ensure that this Bill today is referred to committee where it will be dealt with expeditiously.

At the outset of today's discussion on this Bill, the Minister of Justice reminded us of some statistics that point out how serious the section of the Bill dealing with drinking and driving is. He mentioned that at certain times of the day on the roads of Canada 25 per cent of Canadians behind the wheels of vehicles have been drinking. At almost any point of the day, 6 per cent of those people could be classed as legally impaired. That is an extremely serious situation. I do not know how Canada compares to other countries around the world, but having 6 per cent of people who could be classed as a menace on the highway as a result of their drinking must be among the highest.

Fifty per cent of all fatal traffic accidents in Canada are the result of drivers of those vehicles having had alcoholic drinks. Two thousand five hundred lives are lost each year as a result of people drinking and driving. Two thousand five hundred lives is one statistic. There would be tens of thousands of other lives that are ruined in many respects, loved ones who have received serious injuries from which they suffer the rest of their lives causing disruption to individuals and their families. As other Hon. Members have indicated today, this is a tragedy with which we must deal as quickly as possible.

The Bill before us will not solve the problem per se. In fact, it attempts to deal with a small part of the problem. Basically, it increases the punishments meted out on people caught drinking and driving. For example, we find that the minimum fine associated with drinking and driving will be raised from $50 to $300. That does not seem to be a very punitive sum in today's society. Nevertheless, it is an increase in the minimum fine. Also, on a first offence the driver will lose his or her licence for a three-month period, and on a second offence, for a six-month period. The punishments being meted out are being increased in severity.

If a person is caught and convicted of driving impaired or being over .08, the second offence could result in 14 days imprisonment and being prohibited from driving for six months. Each subsequent offence could result in another 90 days in jail and as much as being prohibited from driving for a year. The maximum will be five years imprisonment, an unlimited fine, and three years prohibition from driving. I suppose they are severe penalties by some people's evaluation.

Other countries, particularly those in western Europe, have much more severe penalties. One receives an automatic jail sentence if caught behind the wheel with a minimum amount of liquor in one's blood system. That automatic jail term has deterred drinking and driving to a certain extent. However, the situation goes beyond that. I suspect that increased penalties will result in a reduction in the number of people drinking and driving as a result of partying. That is why passage of the provisions is so critical at this time of the year when people are in a festive spirit and parties occur more frequently and are perhaps more widespread than at other times of the year. It will serve as a deterrent to a certain extent. People could stand to lose their licence for a period or end up serving time in jail. I suppose some people will think twice about drinking and driving.

I heard with interest on the radio this morning a story about a reporter in the City of Montreal who went out to see how much people would support him as an intoxicated person who wished to drive. He approached a number of people. He was acting out a state of intoxication. Almost everyone assisted him to his vehicle, to get his key into the ignition and to get his vehicle on to the highway. If that is an indication of what is happening, we really have not adequately alerted people to the seriousness of drinking and driving.

Why is it that we stand here today passing legislation, which will hopefully result in a decrease in those persons drinking and driving, when at the same moment we are encouraging those firms which sell liquor, alcohol, beer and wine to support Canadian athletic events? When we are in our constituencies over the next few weeks, we will see the banners of various liquor companies on the ski hills as they support community events. When we catch up on some of our casual reading, we will find in popular magazines pages and pages and pages of liquor ads encouraging people to buy more varieties of liquors. We will see all these rather seductive pages of peoples holding wine glasses and cocktail glasses, obviously in their pursuit of an elegant and modern lifestyle. In a sense there is some hypocrisy, which I do not direct at any one Party or at any one set of individuals. On the one hand we are introducing legislation to punish people who are caught drinking and driving. On the other hand, we are condoning in a sense or almost encouraging by our silence more alcoholic consumption for Canadian citizens. I find it particularly despicable that liquor companies of one kind or another advertise at and support athletic events from one end of the country to the other. We are only touching one very small part of the particular problem.

We as parliamentarians do not want to feel that by passing this legislation today, getting it into committee and having it returned to the House early in the new year, our job is complete. Perhaps a more important job for the Government of Canada would be to bring out an educational program. It should invest in a program which will clearly demonstrate the problems associated not only with drinking and driving but with drinking per se.

Let us face it that those people who are convicted by the tens of thousands in our courts each year of drinking and driving are not simply party goers who have a few extra drinks and get caught. These are people who have serious alcoholic problems. The do not wilfully go out in unguided missiles to drive up and down our highway systems. These people have a serious illness, an illness which is not being adequately addressed at this time. I do not want to suggest for a moment that this will solve the problem. I do not think any other parliamentarian would suggest that, anyway.

I should like to refer to another two or three points of particular interest in this piece of legislation because it covers much more than drinking and driving. I refer specifically to the area dealing with credit card fraud. Now is a time perhaps plastic money is more popular than carrying cash for most Canadians. One important aspect of the Bill will be to set aside that particular area and to deal with the whole matter of credit card theft. Credit card offences have been modified to cope with the rising trend in credit fraud. Credit cards will be subject to the offence of forgery of documents and dealing with forged documents. Prosecutions for credit card offences may be instituted in a province other than the province within which the offence is alleged to have been committed. This is an important area, recognizing at the moment that people may be protected within various provincial jurisdictions.

Also I should like to deal with the provisions of the Bill dealing with new emerging types of crime, specifically computer crime. Basically the Bill recognizes three aspects of the problem of abuse of the computer system. The first is the unauthorized acquisition or destruction of hardware related to computers. The second is the unauthorized acquisition or destruction of computer systems data, and the third is the unauthorized use of computer services. At present the Criminal Code does not provide adequate protection for those adversely affected in these situations. Of course, these amendments will provide protection.

It is important to recognize that there are some obvious omissions in the very complex Bill before us. For example, we recognize that there are areas which have not been covered. We have indicated serious concern in the House over the last many months concerning pornography and the matter of changing the obscenity laws of the country. Many of us were hoping that this rather complex Bill would have included aspects dealing with pornography and defining obscenity. The whole matter of prostitution and soliciting for the purposes of prostitution must be dealt with. I trust the Government will be bringing in legislation quickly to address those areas.

A problem was brought to our attention not many months ago regarding the fact that women were jailed because they failed to testify against their spouses or people with whom they were living. Obviously the area dealing with contempt of court must be dealt with. There is the issue of trial within a reasonable time. This Bill takes a major step in an attempt to streamline the justice system, but I suspect that in spite of the changed and new regulations, it will often come down to the willingness of the players involved to streamline the justice system. Rules and regulations are only as good as the players involved. There are certain types of judges, who, in my estimation, do not necessarily fulfil their obligations as they ought to and will often allow an extended wait for trial.

There are the issues of child abuse and wife battering. There are a great many critical areas of the law with which we must deal. Since they are omitted from this particular Bill, I would certainly encourage the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Speyer) to do what he can to ensure that legislation to address these very critical areas will be brought forward soon.

As far as all of us are concerned, the clauses dealing with drinking and driving are critical. I was pleased to see that the new provisions will also be applied to boating and flying. With the number of people who go to the recreational areas on the lakes, rivers and coasts of Canada, this has become a serious problem. It is natural that we would expect these changes to the Criminal Code as they relate to impaired driving to relate also to impaired boating and impaired flying. With all of these being grouped together in the Criminal Code, it will certainly make the work of the police much easier.

In closing, I would like to say that while we are anxious to get this Bill before the committee and to hear representations from the appropriate groups and individuals, we would like to point something out particularly to those folks who advocate instant or lengthy jail sentences for drinking and driving. In British Columbia alone, if a jail term were to be expanded from a minimum of 14 days to a minimum of 30 days, the additional cost to that one province would be $2.7 million. I would also like to point out to Hon. Members that the jails in both the United States and Canada are already jam-packed with people who are there because of drinking and driving offences. The average cost of jailing an individual who is held under these conditions is $60 per day.

I do not expect for a moment that, other than making a very clear statement of the seriousness with which we take this particular offence, simply jailing people for two or three months will be the answer that will resolve this question. I do believe the answer is education and an expenditure of funds by the Government to ensure that a decent educational process is put into place. I am disappointed, however, to find that the Minister of Justice recently reduced funding to the public legal education program by $700,000. I think it is appropriate to point that out today. Again, this is not the type of step that complements the legislation before us today.

We are looking very seriously at getting this Bill into committee for passage that is as rapid as possible. We anticipate the representations to be made by those who should comment on this Bill other than Members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have one very brief question to ask the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). Are we to understand from his presentation that it is the official policy of the New Democratic Party that liquor firms should not be allowed to sponsor sporting events? Second, am I to understand that it is that Party's policy to ban liquor advertising from newspapers and magazines and presumably also from radio and television?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have two observations to make. When the New Democratic Party formed the Government of Saskatchewan, it in fact did take steps in that direction. When the Conservative Party formed the Government of that province, it again allowed liquor and cigarette companies to support and endorse sporting and athletic events.

I am sure the Hon. Member will appreciate what I was trying to do. We debate this issue very seriously in the House. As hon. Members have pointed out, it is not a particularly partisan discussion we are having today but it is one that indicates the grave concern of all Members of Parliament to ensure that drinking and driving is reduced and, hopefully, eliminated in this country.

As we speak about increasing the penalties associated with those who drink and drive, we are on the other hand encouraging in a variety of ways companies that sell liquor to support some of the more public athletic events in the country. There seems to be a certain hypocrisy in our society. I do not mean that any one Party is associated with that hypocrisy, but it exists in our society per se.

I think it is important to note that the New Democratic Party Government of Saskatchewan actually took steps to eliminate that type of support. I suspect that that might indicate the nature of our concern and the nature of the direction in which we would like to move.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether the New Democratic Party would be prepared to sever the drunk driving provisions from this Bill in order to ensure speedy passage, if not tomorrow then at the earliest opportunity when the House convenes after the Christmas recess.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, many organizations have indicated a deep concern and a wish to be heard regarding the provisions of this Bill. My concern is that this is a very technical Bill and the clauses relating to alcohol-related driving offences are very technical clauses. There are tens of thousands of people in this country who should be prosecuted in our courts but who get off because of a technicality in existing legislation.

I am not certain that it would be in the best interests of Canada to move such an important piece of legislation ahead without the appropriate scrutiny of the Canadian Bar Association for example. Those people who act as defence counsel or prosecutors should have an opportunity to indicate what they feel about the specific technical portions of this Bill.

On the other hand, that is an option that the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, in concert with the House Leaders of the Liberal and Conservative Parties, would probably be quite prepared to discuss. I would like to point out why it is we are hesitant about so enthusiastically rushing this Bill through at this particular point. I do not want to see those people who should in fact be penalized for drinking and driving getting off because of the technicalities which today exist in the tens of thousands.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) is rising on a question or a comment?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment on what my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), has said. What we ought to keep in mind today with respect to the timing of the Bill is not whether one Party could have introduced it at one time or another or whether the Government introduced it today when it could have done so two weeks ago. I think the timing is such that not only the Government and the political Parties but the Canadian society as a whole are arriving at a moment at which we now feel that something must be done.

At this point we are saying that the time has come, yes, but the time has come to do it right. Let us not do it on the last day before a recess. Let us have this legislation, which is so very important, go before the committee. Let us hear from the people who are concerned, such as the groups which have formed out of families that have been so tragically harmed by these kinds of events. Let us hear from people from the legal community. The time has come, but the time has come to do it right. I think that is what we are saying here today and, if they give it some thought, Hon. Members would agree with us on that.

We know that the Bill cannot become law by Christmas. Let us not kid ourselves or anyone else. Let us agree as a Parliament and as parliamentarians to get this Bill into committee and to come out of committee with the very best Bill possible so that having achieved this one part of the struggle against the kind of tragedies that we want to prevent, we can go on to some of the other issues which attend these problems, such as the whole question of alcohol advertising. Let us then move on to whatever the next stage may be. We have an automobile culture and we have an alcohol culture. Most, if not all of us, are part and parcel of those cultures. We have cities which are built around the automobile and we have a whole culture which is built around alcohol. Therefore, there are still serious steps which must be taken. This legislation is one step by which we should collectively dedicate ourselves to doing right. The examination which this legislation will get in committee will be a part of that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? Is the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) rising on a question or comment, or is he rising on debate?

Mr. Marchi: On debate.

Mr. Malone: Filibuster.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If no Member wishes to put any questions or make any comments, I will recognize the Hon. Member for York West on debate.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. I do not take very kindly the comments which the hon. gentlemen has just hollered across the floor. I will reiterate the comments of a previous speaker, that everyone in the House has an opportunity to participate in the debate. Every Member of the Chamber has a responsibility to reflect the ideas and issues which they receive from their constituents.

I think that the problem of drinking and driving is well recognized by most Members of the House. However, the problem does not only occur during the festive season. I think the Bill is being brought in under the guise that it is a short-term problem. If it was a short-term problem the Government should at least have the responsibility to give it the importance it merits by putting forward a separate piece of legislation to address the very serious problem of drinking and driving. Therefore, I do not think it is completely responsible for the Government to come before Parliament with a 50 page Bill, which it wants us to pass in several hours, on the day before we break for the Christmas recess. The Government is asking Members not to use up time by rising to express their views on this matter. That is not responsible government, it is not communication, nor is it consultation. If the Government were serious about having a Bill which would effectively address the question of drinking and driving, it could have introduced the Bill much earlier. It should not have introduced the Bill at the eleventh hour. The Government could have introduced a separate Bill to focus debate on this particular item. There is not enough time to address the various elements which this legislation contains.

I agree that there should be minimum standards on the drinking and driving problem. I differ somewhat from the Hon. Member of the NDP who indicated that we require a perfect Bill and, therefore, the legislation must go to committee. It would be ideal to have perfect legislation on every matter, but perhaps the ideal is not always attainable. We must at least begin to address the problem. However, when the Government does not look at the process, then I think the Government is not completely serious. I would have preferred it if the Government had provided several days in which to debate this Bill. I would have preferred it if the legislation had dealt with one item, rather than the sophisticated and far-encompassing type of Bill which is before the House today.

When we talk about drinking and driving, we are talking about public education which goes far beyond the Christmas holidays. That public education should continue 365 days of the year. We must educate people about the serious effects of drinking and driving. Some Members have already pointed out that 25 per cent of the drivers on Canadian roads drink and that 6 per cent are legally impaired. That suggests that we have some distance to go in our public education efforts. We have some distance to go in telling Canadians that drinking and driving do not go hand in hand. But, on the other side of the equation, we have a Government that removed $700,000 from public programming and public education.

I would submit that the Government cannot have it both ways. It cannot be serious about drinking and driving legislation, and communicating and consulting with the public, and at the same time remove $700,000 from public education efforts. The Government cannot do both at the same time.

There is a lot of emphasis being placed on the whole question of greater and stiffer penalties. That is a start, but research suggests that the commission of an impaired driving offence is often an early indication of alcohol abuse and dependency. Therefore, we must place a greater emphasis on the question of treatment, as opposed to something which happens after the fact. Perhaps we should be initiating rather than reacting. It is fine and dandy to discuss stiffer fines and penalties after the tragic accident has occurred. However, that would suggest that there is trouble with some government mechanisms. It suggests that Government is merely a reactionary body. "Why didn't you act before?" is a criticism which is often levelled. Perhaps, the Government is introducing stiffer fines and penalties because of the percentage of accidents. Certainly that is a deterrent. Perhaps it is a deterrent to those who abuse the laws, who abuse drink and who abuse the privilege of driving an automobile. But we should look at the problem from a forward-looking policy perspective, and not simply focus on the penalties and fines which will be charged after the accidents have taken place. We must have the sense to go further than that. We must learn from those accidents. We should not simply increase the fines from $100 to $200 today, and from $300 to $400 tomorrow. We should nip the disease in the bud.

I notice that my time is becoming somewhat limited—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: I hear some Hon. Members laughing. In his speech this morning, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) placed great emphasis on the fact that we on this side of the House were not taking this Bill seriously. Yet Members on the government side are laughing. They say one thing when the TV cameras are on them, but they certainly act differently when the cameras are off them.

Mr. McKnight: It is the content of your speech which we find strange, not the Bill.

Mr. Marchi: It is also interesting that while the Government managed to amalgamate a number of different elements in this legislation rather than concentrating on one particular aspect, it also managed to leave some things out of the legislation. As critic for the Ministry of Multiculturalism, I find it strange that there was nothing said respecting the hate propaganda literature which infests this country from coast to coast. In the Liberal Government's introduction last February—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Member's Business.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like some clarification, because it was my understanding that this matter would be referred to committee today. Is there unanimous consent of the House to refer this matter to committee today?

● (1700)

An Hon. Member: No.

Some Hon. Members: The Liberals say no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hear a "no", so obviously there is not. Technically, it is not a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to indicate to the Government that we in the Opposition may be small in number, but let it just provoke us. If it wants our co-operation to have this Bill passed as quickly as possible, let it recognize the right of each individual Member of this House of Commons to have the opportunity to speak, but when Hon. Members on the other side try to deny us that right, we will exercise that right.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I just want to make it absolutely clear that the New Democratic Party said, yes, that this Bill could now go to committee and have serious work begin. It was the Liberals who said no.

Mr. Nunziata: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to make it clear to the House that we in the Liberal Party as well would like to see this Bill go to committee for immediate review.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: There will be opportunity, Mr. Speaker, tomorrow to send it to committee.

Mr. Speyer: It is not on the Order Paper.

Mr. Blaikie: You've got as much class as a bag of nails.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all orders and items preceding item No. 4 stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NARCOTIC CONTROL ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR MEDICAL USE OF HEROIN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved that Bill C-213, an Act to amend the Narcotic Control Act (therapeutic use of heroin) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a Bill whose time has clearly come. Perhaps by way of background I can bring the House up to date on the genesis of this Bill. This Bill was first introduced in the House on April 29, 1983 by the then Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, the late Walter Baker. One of the tragic ironies of the Bill, Sir, is that when it came up for second reading on June 1, 1983, the sponsor of the Bill, the then Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, was stricken with cancer but did not know it at the time. Indeed, he was to die a few short months later. He has motivated, Mr. Speaker, to bring in this Bill by a personal experience he had had within his own family with someone who was close to him. I suppose there is not an Hon. Member of this House who has not been touched at one time or another by the tragedy of a loved one or friend or neighbour who has come down with a terminal illness and in many cases has had to die a slow, painful and agonizing death.

Unfortunately, at that time the Bill did not get referral to committee. I had the pleasure in the next session of that Parliament, on February 23, 1984, to reintroduce the same Bill. It was then Bill C-221. It received second reading on March 15. The House was moved at that time to allow the Bill to be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

I want to acknowledge now, Mr. Speaker, the support I have received during the course of the debate on my Bill, as well as during the debate on the Bill put forward by my colleague, by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), who is now the distinguished Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), all of whom are still sitting in this House.

Following referral of the Bill to the standing committee, the committee held its first hearing on March 31 of this year, its second hearing on June 5 and its third hearing on June 7. Unfortunately, it was overtaken by the parliamentary calendar because the session had to adjourn for the summer. I do not want to inject a partisan note here, but it was my view at the time that if the Government of the day wanted to get on with a serious examination of this Bill, we would have had more than three hearings of the standing committee. Indeed, there was no justification, in my opinion, for the committee not sitting throughout the month of June, because there was nothing else before the committee at the time. However, the Bill was overtaken by the parliamentary calendar and subsequently by the dissolution of the last Parliament.

I indicated at the commencement of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, that I felt this was a Bill whose time had clearly come. Let me illustrate. On April 25 of this year, the World Health Organization called for greater attention to the issue of pain management. It is ironic because it was the concern of the World Health Organization, which was expressed in 1954, which resulted in the banning of the manufacturing and importation of heroin for medical purposes. At that time the concern arose because of the growth in the illicit trade of heroin in the world and in the addiction to it. Again, on June 6, 1984, the Association of Ontario Boards of Health endorsed the medical use of heroin and called for its reinstatement. During the week of July 2, the Gallup poll indicated that 73 per cent of Canadians endorsed the use of heroin for the terminally ill. Then on August 21 of this year, the Canadian Medical Association, which appeared before the standing committee in June when the subject matter of my Bill was before the committee, passed a resolution at its convention in Winnipeg. It was clear, concise and unequivocal. The resolution read, and I quote:

Resolution 84-50.

That the Government of Canada immediately resume the licensing for importation, manufacture and sale of diacetyl morphine (heroin) for medical purposes.

It is my view, Sir, and I believe the view of my colleagues and the view of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that the politicians of Canada should move very carefully and cautiously in dictating to the medical profession what it may or may not prescribe. I do not believe that the governmental process should really interfere with the right of physicians to make this judgmental choice. That, in fact, is what the CMA was saying to the Government of Canada.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, and refer you to the evidence which was presented to the committee. I can refer you to public interests which were reflected in editorial comments across the country during the past few months. I hesitate to do so, Sir, because I would not want to take up the time of the House.

Perhaps you will forgive me, Mr. Speaker, if I quote from the speech of the late Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, the late Walter Baker. He said on June 1, 1983, and I quote from Hansard at page 25938:

I think that is the issue for the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker. I think it is time that the House faced it. I think it is time the medical profession faced it. I think it is time the cancer societies in the country faced it. I think it is time the public faced it. I ask the House of Commons to support this Bill today so that the public examination can begin.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Little did my colleague know the train of events that his Bill and his eloquent speech in the House would set in place, bringing us to where we are today.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to you that there may be a disposition on the part of the House to hear from the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, I believe, is prepared to make a statement. I realize this is an unusual procedure for Private Members' Business, and of course the House would have to consent to that taking place. However, it is my understanding that the Minister will be making today a major policy statement on this issue and it would be my intention, after the House has had a chance to address this issue and before the clock runs out, to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw the Bill so the Government can bring in its own legislation which will be addressed today by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I hope it will be the disposition of the House to hear from the Minister at this time.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, and colleagues, first of all I want to thank the House for the courtesy of allowing me as a Minister to become at this moment a private Member once again and address what I think is an issue—

Ms. Mitchell: Welcome back.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —which is important to all of us. I intend to be brief and I hope the action I am announcing today will find appeal from the point of view of fairness and the point of view of doing the right thing and addressing what obviously is an issue which concerns all mankind, and it is done in that spirit. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I participate today in the debate on this Bill.

When I was a Member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, as has been mentioned, I joined the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) in support of this Bill in its earlier form. At that time the effort to see heroin legalized for therapeutic use was spearheaded by our sorely missed colleague, the late Hon. Walter D. Baker.

As my colleagues in the House of Commons will know, when in public life one is asked frequently to take positions on controversial issues, issues which obviously have more than one point of view. It is in this House of Commons where these matters are debated, debated with vigour, and where points of view are firmly held and expressed. However, when that is done, there is a common sense that on certain issues there is widespread agreement, and on this issue, hopefully, unanimity.

As Members of Parliament, in most cases we are not qualified to make a determination on issues, especially on this one, from a technical point of view. I fully recognize that my colleagues, such as the Hon. Member for Oxford and other medical officers who are Members of Parliament, have both the experience and very often the technical background on these medical issues which I do not have. But I do think that on this issue it is not a technical question which we are addressing but, rather, the meaning of life and the inevitability of death; the sanctity of life and how death with dignity can be enhanced. Those are the issues that this Bill addresses in part.

Therefore, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to respond to my colleague's Private Members' Bill and to announce that it is the intention of the Government to legalize in Canada the medical use of heroin for the terminally ill and those in intractable pain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Government has decided to take this action in response to the very clearly expressed desire of many individual Canadians, service organizations, indeed church groups, the Canadian Medical Association and health care practitioners that this potent painkiller be made available to the loved ones and patients with whom all of us can identify.

Given the sensitivity of the issue and the many legal, professional, regulatory and security considerations associated with the reintroduction of heroin in Canada for therapeutic use, a statement concerning availability and a protocol for the use of the drug will be made available on or about March 1, 1985. I want to put it in that context for the simple reason that for this matter to be effective, I think it is important that the protocol be done properly, and for that I think that time will be needed. Hopefully we can do it a little earlier, and that is why I say that on or about March 1 the matter will be addressed. Obviously it will be done expeditiously and it will be done in the right fashion.

This delay is necessitated, Mr. Speaker, by requirements to control access to and use of this powerful drug to those physicians and hospitals which have demonstrated certain levels of accreditation. The protocol will outline and explain the availability of the drug and what security measures must be taken. This will ensure that it is used solely for medical purposes and that the drug is not subject to redirection and misuse. Members might also be aware that in the last 48 hours we have had the most recent report by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on the illegal use of heroin and cocaine. Some have said to me over the last few hours: "Is that not a major concern to the Government?" Obviously it is. I think it is of concern to every Member of this House. But the point that I make is this. The illegal use of those drugs should not in any way be associated with what the Government is doing this afternoon. There is no diversion, no misdirection in the therapeutic sense to those who are illegally using the drug. I think it is ironic in the extreme to know that there are people in society who are using the drug illegally while those who are in greatest need because of pain do not have access. That is an issue that has obviously motivated me in making this determination today.

It will also be necessary for this Government to consult other Governments, a process which has already begun, as well as associations of health professionals and provincial licencing authorities of health disciplines, before March, 1985. Out of courtesy, this Government will also examine the regulatory requirements of the United Nations and the international implications of the reintroduction of heroin in Canada. I believe that at present there are 38 countries which in fact have permitted the use of heroin for therapeutic purposes. The various manufacturing and distribution aspects of the reintroduction of heroin must also be determined and the necessary procedural steps taken before the drug is legally available. In light of this decision and announcement, a blind field study planned for 1985 will not go ahead.

There has been much media and public debate surrounding the ban on heroin use in Canada which has been with us since 1955. The issue is a sensitive and difficult one which goes to the heart of our personal feelings about life and death. It is my hope that the renewed availability of this drug will bring relief to many of those in Canada who suffer pain or are terminally ill. I sense that many families will also find comfort in this decision. I trust that all those involved in this debate will understand that the Government also has a responsibility to ensure the safe and controlled use of this powerful and controversial drug. I will elaborate on these regulatory measures in early March, as I have already indicated.

Once again, I would like to pay tribute to my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East who has been tireless in his efforts to bring this matter to the attention of the Canadian people and their Parliament. I commend him for his determination and sensitivity to those who are suffering in Canada.

Finally, I would like to dedicate this action to the memory of one who could not be here to share this moment, the late Hon. Walter Baker, who only last year spoke in the House. Before I quote him I would like to indicate to the House that we did speak to Lois and asked her whether she wanted to attend today. I understand that she is watching, and we all send our regards to her.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It was possibly best put by Walter Baker when he said:

> There has been a strong feeling growing within the public of Canada and within some segments of the medical profession that those who fight against cancer should have every possible armament and every possible arrow in their quiver to relieve the anguish and the pain of the terminally ill.

I thank the House for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words in connection with this Bill. I would first like to pay tribute to our colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), not only because of the content and significance of this Bill, but because his action today shows each of us what a private Member can do. We are sometimes frustrated and bewildered, but the example of the Hon. Member indicates to us that there is an important and impressive contribution open to us all. If we have the perseverance and concern demonstrated by our colleague, we can copy his example and share equally in his achievement.

As well, I would like to say something about the Bill itself and the opportunity that the Government has indicated it is opening, because I have some concern about the possible restrictions on the use of heroin to relieve cancer victims. I recognize the motives behind the Government's intention and I respect them. The policy may well be right. However, I ask the Minister and the committee that will review this Bill to reconsider these restrictions in light of the need that many Canadian cancer victims have.

I speak of this because of the experience I had some years ago when serving in another kind of public service. It was my duty and privilege then to sit beside many people suffering terminal cancer. I saw them degenerate from robust health and strength to become but shells of humanity, sometimes over a matter of months, sometimes more drastically over a matter of weeks. I saw them suffer fearsome pain, which today, as one who sat with them day after day, I can still remember with great sensitivity.

I am suggesting to the Minister and to the members of the committee that may review this Bill, that further consideration be given to the possibility and advisability of making the drug available for use in homes, hospices and other places to which terminal patients are taken. So very often a person suffering from terminal cancer is just sent home when a hospital can do no more for him and her. The hospital, quite understandably, needs the facility for other people to whom it still has services to offer. That person is sent home to be cared for by loved ones, visiting nurses and others. They are sent home to suffer probably the worst pain that they will be called upon to endure. It seems to me that in such a situation that patient will need a drug of this kind that can relieve pain.

I am aware that there are other drugs which can relieve pain equally, though not as rapidly. Nonetheless, I ask that consideration be given to this. I am aware of the potential dangers, but we are equally aware of the fact that these dangers are possible as well in hospitals or wherever the drug may be administered. There will always be a need for surveillance, vigilance and action by authorities. I hope that some further consideration can be given to this matter on behalf of nameless and faceless people who will, nonetheless, be sufferers and who could find an equal measure of relief to that given those patients in hospitals with whom we are now concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, add my Party's comments to those made by the Minister and the Hon. Member presenting this Bill, which aims to legalize, within certain limits, the therapeutic use of heroin.

We have all known Walter Baker, the former Member for Nepean-Carleton and a good friend, and I remember when he presented a similar Bill in the House. I was in the House at the time, and we all realized the meaning of his message. This afternoon, the Minister explained that the Government intended to come back with its own legislation next March, and the Minister deserves to be praised for this felicitous initiative.

There are of course two sides to the question, but I think the Minister has understood the problems involved. We simply want to say that we are anxiously awaiting this Bill or amendment, that we fully support this initiative and that we also want to congratulate the Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who has shown once again that backbenchers can contribute very substantially to the parliamentary process.

I feel the Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) made a valid suggestion, namely to extend the use of heroin to institutions other than hospitals. This is of course a point that will be looked into by the Minister because of the risk factor in controlling a dangerous drug, even if it is to be used for a very humanitarian purpose, namely to alleviate pain.

In previous Parliaments, I have heard Hon. Members—physicians—who objected to the therapeutic use of heroin, and said that new and effective drugs were available. As the Minister said, we are not experts. This is a technical question, and we are not qualified to discuss this aspect. However, I have to say that there is a proven need. We hope that by March next year, the Minister will have had an opportunity to consult Hon. Members and that he will let us know what his requirements are and what kind of co-operation he will be seeking to implement the legislation. We therefore fully support this initiative.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would agree with my colleagues that there is no better tribute to the late Hon. Walter Baker, whom we all respected and of whom we thought so much, than to have carried this Bill forward. I congratulate the Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) for presenting the Bill and stimulating the debate today, and also the Minister for his Government's response which would allow some very positive movement in implementing the use of heroin for therapeutic purposes as a controlled pain-killer.

• (1730)

There is no doubt that this is a subject that raises considerable fear as a result of misinformation, distortion and misunderstanding. Since that will be the basis for the response in many parts of Canada, it is very important to involve the public in public education as well as to have a clearly controlled time limited experiment as a first step.

Hon. Members may be interested in reading an article by Marjorie Nichols in The Vancouver Sun in which she attributes much of the fear and opposition to the use of heroin for therapeutic purposes, at least in our province, to the history of the race wars, or opium wars.

There is no question that studies have shown that this is a very wise and safe procedure. Experience has shown for some time in the United Kingdom that heroin has proven to be a most significant drug as a pain-killer. As the Minister said, other countries have adopted the use of heroin as a pain-killer as regular policy and we really have nothing to fear.

I believe public education is important. Although the CMA has certainly recommended this move, there are still some reservations even among physicians. Therefore, a time limited experiment with controlled research would seem to be very wise at this time. We support this move and commend the Minister and the Member for St. John's East for the steps they have taken.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join the debate today. Let me begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who has kept this issue alive in the House to a large extent. He has done what our late colleague, Walter Baker, tried very strenuously to do. The words of tribute that were paid to him by the Hon. Member for St. John's East and the Minister are indeed ones with which I want to be associated. I am sure that is true of everyone in the House.

The comments that have been made this afternoon are very useful. They relate the broad feeling about the importance of the use of this drug for people who are stricken with cancer and suffering great pain. There is no doubt that there is a valid use for this drug as well as for many other pain-killing drugs.

The Minister spoke very eloquently about how we can heighten the quality of life for a person who is suffering much pain in the last few days or weeks of his or her life.

The Member for St. John's East touched on one reason why I believe it is important to pass this Bill. He quoted a resolution that was passed by the Canadian Medical Association. It was advocated that we continue with this. I want to deal with that this afternoon because I believe we have a principle at issue here which is exceedingly important, both in the context of the professional practice of medicine and in the practice of politics.

As the Minister said, it is important to be careful how those who are not experts make a judgment on a technical subject. While they have a right to be concerned, they should make their decisions carefully. For example, I was somewhat alarmed by a presentation made to the standing committee by the Canadian Cancer Society. In a presentation made by Mr. R. A. Macbeth to the committee on June 7 of this year, he quoted a statement made by the Canadian Cancer Society which reads:

—'that (in the opinion of the members of the committee) there is no supportive evidence available at this time that heroin provides unique qualities in the control of pain in cancer patients that cannot be duplicated by the use of already available drugs and that, in consequence, it is recommended that no further action be taken.'

I am concerned about that kind of approach to the use of drugs. They are saying that there is no need for another drug if there are 10 or even 100 drugs that are used to treat a particular condition. However, if this approach is taken to its logical conclusion, it would cause some difficulty because there are people who may tolerate one drug for arthritis yet there are hundreds of drugs that could be used for that condition.

It may be in the future that if a government becomes too bureaucratic and must deal with increasing medical costs, it will decide to limit the number of drugs that can be used in the treatment of a certain condition. Politicians or bureaucrats who may not have professional training will be deciding what drug a physician may give to his patient. Such an occurrence disturbs me. That is what is being implied in this statement from the Canadian Cancer Society.

I want to stress that if a drug is useful, any licensed physician should be allowed to use it. Of course, there is the caveat that if the drug causes definite harm, it should be legislated out by the Government. However, with respect to heroin, it was removed in the 1950s because other drugs were as useful. I do not believe that is a valid reason for its discontinuance. I hope we can make that message clear.

I want to congratulate the Minister on the approach he has taken throughout the last year to the debate that has been taking place on this issue. He was most attentive during the course of the committee hearings last spring, and I know that he has been deliberating very seriously the pros and cons of this issue since then. He has not come to a decision lightly and should be congratulated for that.

I also want to congratulate Members of the House. The public sometimes gets the impression that we are a chamber of antagonists who never get along. They watch us during Question Period but, unfortunately, few see this kind of atmosphere in which all Parties are working together toward a good cause. Members will notice that the Press Gallery is empty. The press is not interested in something of this nature in which we intend to show considerable agreement. Therefore, I want to congratulate Members of the House for this co-operation.

Finally, there is one name that has been omitted in our discussion today. It is that of Dr. Kenneth Walker whose pseudonym is Dr. W. Gifford-Jones. We have been congratulating ourselves as private Members because the Hon. Member for St. John's East has been able to get the Bill to the stage where the Government has been willing to accept it in principle. It proves that private Members have an opportunity to be involved and be effective here. I think we should also announce to the public that if people are as strongly concerned about an issue as Dr. Walker is, that it is not impossible for them to mount a public campaign if it is based on credible information, and this influences many Canadians. Part of the reason all of us here are concerned is because Dr. Walker, whose pseudonym is Dr. Gifford-Jones, has influenced us by his description of the facts regarding heroin. Many myths about the properties of heroin have been disseminated. Dr. Walker has also made it known how this drug has been used in the United Kingdom, how it has grown in use in the U.K. without any particular adverse effects.

Dr. Walker appeared before our committee last spring and brought a paper in which he identified 35 questions commonly asked, and supplied appropriate answers. There was much revelation about the myths that many of us have had over the years.

I listened with great attention to the Minister's presentation. Actually, I would have had no trouble approving completely the private Member's Bill C-213 which the Hon. Member for St. John's East has placed before the House today. I have some reservations, similar to those of the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse). He pointed out one of my reservations, namely, instances where this drug would be proven to be very useful outside of the controlled hospital atmosphere. Like the Hon. Member for Scarborough West, the Minister recognizes the potential problems that may exist, but I trust that as the Minister works with his officials and develops the protocol to which he referred, he will keep in mind that there will be times when heroin will be very useful for cancer patients outside of the hospital. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I am also interested and a little concerned about what the Minister means by "intractable pain". I think I know what intractable pain means. It means pain that is not easily relieved. It is a persistent pain that does not go away. That is a pain characteristic of cancer in many cases.

In my experience as a physician I had the privilege and the opportunity of being taught at the University of Toronto—which is not just a third-rate medical school—to use heroin. It was recommended and as a physician I used it regularly as an analgesic in my first few years of practice in obstetrics. It is a tremendous analgestic in obstetrics. It gives the patient a sense of euphoria. If it is combined with hyoscine it gives some amnesia of the events, which for many people is desirable.

I am not aware of any patients who became addicts because they had one or two shots of heroin during the course of labour. I do agree that there are other techniques available to control the pain of labour which makes it less necessary perhaps to use heroin. But where one wants to use an injectable analgesic in obstetrics, I would be disappointed if we in the House of Commons thought that we had enough expertise to say no, you can only use heroin for the intractable pain of cancer.

Let me cite another example, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps some Members have had senior family members who have gone into severe heart failure in the middle of the night when they sit up in bed, cannot breathe, are choking and spewing out bloody sputum from their throats. They are in terrible agony and anxiety. The first thing a physician does at three o'clock in the morning when the goes to see a patient is to give the patient something to stop anxiety. The quickest acting drug is heroin. Morphine is not bad, and many of us have used morphine for that affliction in latter years. Nonetheless heroin is used regularly in the United Kingdom right now for that purpose. It quickly relieves the anxiety a person has, which is very important if you are going to give the person proper attention for his basic cardiac condition.

I am putting in a couple of pleas to the Minister and to his officials to give some serious consideration to the protocol they are developing. I know the Minister will do this, but I plead with him that he not forget there other good uses for heroin beside its use for the intractable pain of cancer. It would probably be a little bit of a mistake for us here basically composed of lay people trying to say that heroin is a tremendous pain-killer, but let us use it only for cancer. If it is good for that, it may be good for some other conditions too. I hope the Minister will recognize that and allow the protocol to be broad enough in its considerations to allow other uses as deemed necessary by licensed physicians.

I speak very strongly in support of this private Member's Bill, but even more so in support of the Minister who has indicated his willingness to have heroin promptly legalized for use in Canada. I hope that all Members of the House—I know there are others who want to speak—will see fit to support this proposition today.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support strongly the initiative taken today by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I will try to be brief. I know there are other Members who wish to take part in this debate. I would like to underline the point made by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday). It is in circumstances such as this that Parliament really operates at its finest. When a Member of Parliament, who in this case has been a Member for many years, takes an initiative and approaches it on a non-partisan basis, works closely with the Minister, whom I commend for his reasoned and sensitive response to this Bill, and Parliament collectively acts on a matter clearly of national concern, it is Parliament at its best.

Over 40,000 Canadians die each year from this terrible disease of cancer. I am sure most Members of this House have had close friends or family members who have been afflicted by it. I myself have lost two very close friends, one 24 years old who suffered long and great pain before death, initially in the hospital and then finally, when it was realized there was no hope, at home with his family.

I hope the Minister will look very carefully at the suggestions made by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) and other Members with respect to the possible conditions that may be attached to the use of heroin in these circumstances. If we accept, as I believe we must, the positive benefits of the use of heroin for terminally ill cancer victims, I believe it would be a mistake for us to restrict the use of those benefits to a hospital setting. Obviously we must recognize that there must be careful controls. Given that, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will examine carefully the broadening of the possible use of heroin.

I know the sponsor of this Bill, the Member for St. John's East, spoke earlier this year in March very eloquently on this Bill and he said that he himself was touched in his own family. I believe it was his brother who died in great agony from cancer. We are responding here not just as parliamentarians but as human beings to a serious problem.

I would like to join in paying tribute to work done by Dr. Kenneth Walker, also known as Dr. Gifford-Jones, who led a national campaign for changes in this area of the law. I believe over 150,000 Canadians signed petitions initiated by Dr. Gifford-Jones through his column. Dr. Walker did appear before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, as my colleague from Oxford indicated. In a very short but eloquent statement he underlined the importance of parliamentary action in this area. He noted that some of the most believable and convincing witnesses could not appear before the committee because they were dead.

He set out a series of facts which I believe are important. First, heroin is a more potent painkiller than morphine. It is superior to morphine when patients require injections. Heroin has the most rapid onset of any narcotic. English doctors have increased their use of heroin nearly four times during the last ten years and decreased their use of morphine. Heroin is prescribed by British physicians to treat heart attack victims, women having difficult labour, severely burned children and young children during the terminal stage of malignancy. Not just with respect to cancer, heroin has been found to be very helpful in other areas as well. It helps to calm apprehensive patients. It is the best drug to stop the cough reflex of patients dying of lung cancer. Heroin produces a sense of well-being and euphoria. Addicts do not take heroin to get depressed, as Dr. Walker noted. Patients develop a tolerance to narcotics. It is therefore advisable to have other pain-killers available. Patients vary in their response to drugs for reasons that are not well understood. Doctors should therefore have a choice of different narcotics. Patients develop allergic reactions to pain-killers. It is sensible that physicians have available the maximum number of drugs to treat cancer pain.

Finally, there is no historical precedent for assuming that legal heroin would end up in the street. As the Minister noted in his remarks, it is a rather ludicrous situation when Canadians can easily obtain heroin for pleasure and the victims of cancer die in agony without this pain-killer.

There is one other person to whom I should like to pay tribute today. I am referring to Dr. William Ghent who headed the committee of the Canadian Medical Association which recommended the legalization of heroin for medical purposes. He conducted a very exhaustive study on this question. I am pleased that the Minister has responded in the way he responded today to Dr. Ghent, among others.

He notes some of the concerns with respect to the use of heroin, not just in the treatment of terminally ill cancer patients but in other areas as well. Dr. Ghent goes a step further than some of his fellow doctors and advocates the use of legal heroin for medical purposes. Dr. Ghent would in fact supply heroin addicts with legal prescriptions for the drug as is done in England. In those circumstances, as he indicates, the addict would be given a choice—use prescriptions for heroin to maintain their habit or submit to a clinic for treatment and withdrawal. He notes—and I think this is an interesting point—that the most commonly used heroin substitute, methadone, is the most addicting drug known to man. He points out that this system would eliminate underworld traffickers and their multi-billion dollar profits by prescribing illegal drugs such as heroin and, hopefully, at the same time engaging in education. Ultimately, the only real solution is to engage in education so that people might not use these particular drugs.

I am pleased the Minister responded to the initiative of the Hon. Member for St. John's East and to the initiative of our former colleague and friend, the late Walter Baker. I am pleased to rise and support this initiative. I hope the Minister, in establishing the framework for the use of heroin for medicinal purposes, will take into consideration some of the points which have been made by Dr. Ghent and by Members of the House in the debate today.

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak concerning to a Bill that covers such an important subject. I want to thank the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the Hon. Minister for presenting this Bill in the House.

I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker, to give others as well a chance to make their comments.

I would like to say that I speak with the experience of someone who has been practising medicine for twenty-eight years, both as a general practitioner, when I had to prescribe medication to alleviate pain and, for many years, as a psychiatrist treating patients who had become addicted to certain types of medication.

In fact, if we consider the social aspect, dispensing medication that may be addictive is certainly preferable to letting people suffer because we do not have all the therapeutic drugs or tools we need.

I also would like to talk about something that is much closer to home. During the last twelve months, there were four deaths in my immediate family, two caused by cancer. I can assure you it is very difficult for a doctor who is a member of the family to see people wracked by pain, not only physical but mental as well, since they know that their suffering can only end in death. I would have been more than happy to be able to alleviate their distress.

However, the drugs we have today have the immediate effect of poisoning the patient and affecting his mental faculties. We have to measure the doses carefully to keep them mentally alert and at the same time alleviate some of their physical suffering.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the only point I wish to raise. I also feel it is not really the Government's responsibility to interfere with the kind of medical treatment that health care practitioners wish to give. I agree here with Dr. Halliday.

Again, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the Hon. Minister for presenting this Bill in the House, and I agree wholeheartedly with this initiative.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a very short comment. I do not intend to say anything new. I took part in the debate some time ago when the former Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, the late Walter Baker, brought forward the suggestion of legalizing heroin for therapeutic purposes in a Private Member's Bill. We have heard many people quite properly refer to the work done by Walter Baker in this respect. The one thing I would like to add is the way in which the events today dovetail with two concerns of the late gentleman. One of his concerns has been referred to, that is, his concern that heroin be legalized for therapeutic purposes. The other one of his consuming passions was parliamentary reform.

Here we have an instance where a private Member, through persistence and through the work of another private Member—in this case the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) carrying on the work of the late Walter Baker—has been able to call attention to an issue, albeit aided by Dr. Kenneth Walker and many other Canadians. Nevertheless, it is an example of where a private Member has been able to call enough attention to a particular issue to have the Government respond in the way in which the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) did today.

I just wanted to put these two points on the record. I only hope that in future more of this kind of thing will happen and that those of us who are working on the special task force on parliamentary reform will be able to make suggestions which will enhance even more the role of the private Member.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) for his initiative in bringing forward this Bill and carrying on the work of the late Walter Baker. I also want to congratulate the Minister. I am sure his officials put many arguments to him as to why we should not legalize this drug because of international conventions. This is when the common sense of politics and a free democratic society override officials.

We are all aware of circumstances involving cancer. In my wife's family, both her parents died of cancer. She works regularly as a volunteer at the cancer clinic here in Ottawa. Many families have experienced the trials and tribulations of losing family members to cancer and seeing incredible pain. I have also had representations from a very close friend of mine in Gore Bay on the Manitoulin Island whose first wife died of cancer several years ago. He has written me regularly, and I have regularly made representations to the Minister of National Health and Welfare to have this amendment carried out to legalize the use of heroin to alleviate pain, especially in terminally ill patients. I would like to add my voice of support and to congratulate those who are responsible for seeing this Bill put before the House. I will take my seat now so that the Bill can be carried.

● (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is now six o'clock. It is my understanding that the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I would like to take a few brief moments to withdraw the Bill by unanimous consent so that the Government can then get on with bringing in its own legislation pursuant to the statement made by the Minister today.

Perhaps you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, briefly to thank the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) and the Minister for their kind personal references to me.

On behalf of the Canadian Medical Association, Dr. Ghent, and Dr. Kenneth Walker whose work was referred to by the Hon. Member for Oxford, on behalf of the hundreds of hundreds of dedicated men and women who are involved in pain management and palliative care, and perhaps to go even one step further, on behalf of the suffering of future patients who will benefit from this Bill, I would like to extend my thanks to the Minister and to the House. I think it is appropriate that the House and the Government should have acted in a spirit of generosity in this season of love.

I would therefore ask the unanimous consent of the House to have the order discharged and to withdraw Bill C-213, an Act to amend the Narcotic Control Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Does the Hon. Member have that unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—ESTABLISHMENT OF GATIQ—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I am both pleased and proud to have this opportunity to speak in the House today. I think it is a great privilege to have been chosen by a significant majority of the voters in the riding of Louis-Hébert to represent them in these venerable halls, and I am thankful for having been given this opportunity. I intend to spare neither time nor effort nor talents in serving my constituents. I know that I can count on God's help and on your understanding, Mr. Speaker, and that of all Members of this House, wherever they may be sitting. In turn, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you and all my colleagues that you will have my loyal co-operation, and I intend to apply the utmost courtesy and dignity to my interventions here in the House.

My purpose in speaking to the House is to explain my interest in research and development, which has a long-term job creating function, and more specifically in the establishment of a hi-tech industrial park in my riding and how the various parties concerned are striving towards the same goal.

I would like to describe my riding to be able to explain the actions of various intervenors. My riding is located east of Quebec City along the St. Lawrence. It forms more or less the main entrance way to Greater Metropolitan Quebec, whether we approach this area by road, by railway or by air. The riding includes four large towns: Sainte-Foy, Sillery, Cap-Rouge and Ancienne Lorette, and has a population of over 100,000. These large suburban towns that make up the riding have been carefully planned, which makes them all the more interesting.

One could say that the population of Louis-Hébert consists largely of stable families with as a result many young people. The problem with these families, Mr. Speaker, as I realized during the last campaign, is what is going to happen to all these young people, many of whom are educated but are doomed to remain idle due to lack of jobs or opportunities, without the slightest hope for a better future. I have therefore made youth employment my first priority.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who was visiting Louis-Hébert when I started my fund raising campaign—this was in October 1982 and he was still president of Iron Ore—said the following and I quote: "In this riding and this region, you have all the resources to become a focal point for research and development. You have industries, universities, skilled manpower, research centres, social infrastructures, and so forth. All you need is for the federal Government to set objectives in line with our local requirements and human resources and consult and co-operate with Quebec, to make this dream come true".

Indeed, my riding has a number of educational institutions including Laval University, the oldest francophone university in North America, which has researchers working in every discipline and where excellent courses are given in optics and laser techniques. There is also the University of Quebec, three CEGEPs—one English-speaking—two highly sophisticated scientific complexes, the Institut national de recherche scientifique which specializes in hydrology and geology and also gives courses for students preparing a masters degree or Ph.D. The Centre de recherche industriel du Québec, maintaining a close working relationship with industry, has maximized automation of production processes in line with the Quebec Government's support for new technologies. There are also private companies with an international reputation in advanced technology such as Gentec, Didactech, and many more. There are tertiary services, financial institutions, public utilities and ultra-modern community services provided by the towns in the area. Road, railway services and air services are satisfactory.

I can say that the quality of life in the riding is excellent, since I have been a resident for over 25 years. There is an abundance of hotel accommodation, restaurants, information and tourism facilities and in addition, the riding's geographic location is such that the attractions of the Quebec City area are readily available.

Several years ago, local organizations started to do a complete analysis of the economic in the Quebec City area. The conclusion was that our industrial sector badly needed reorganizing. The previous Government had been far too concerned with one-time, temporary job creation programs. It is high time this bandaid policy was replaced by a real regional development strategy.

All the parties concerned now agree that we should focus our energies on revitalizing the region's industrial sector. In April 1983, the GATIQ, the Groupe d'action pour l'avancement technologique et industriel de la région de Québec, was established, an initiative that was in line with the subsequent economic summit. The Groupe d'action, Mr. Speaker, consists of establishments that are directly connected to technological disciplines and the industrial sector. These include Laval University, the Institut national de recherche scientifique, The Société Inter-port, which recently announced that seven industries were ready to settle right away in the Sainte-Foy area, including the Chambre de commerce du Québec métropolitain and the Centre de recherche industrielle du Québec. The GATIQ intends to consolidate the region's scientific and technological resources by promoting exchanges among researchers and between researchers and industry. In this particular context, the most satisfactory way of achieving these goals is to create a hi-tech industrial park. In this connection, the Conseil d'orientation de développement économique de Sainte-Foy, following an economic summit and a thorough study of the matter, has come out in favour of establishing advanced technology industries in the Sainte-Foy-Quebec City corridor. The existing industrial park was suggested in this connection since its location was admirably suited to the purpose the council had in mind.

The park is located behind the CRIQ and the INRS, is surrounded by zoned industrial parks and has all the resources and services required. This is where we would like to see the Institut d'optique et de laser, which has been very much in the news recently.

Mr. Speaker, although we are hardly in the Silicone Valley class, we in Louis-Hébert and the Quebec City Region are in a position to prove that this is where the economic future of our region lies.

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada, just like the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis), is favourably impressed by the commendable role played by GATIQ—Groupe d'action pour l'avancement technologique et industriel de la région de Québec—in the establishment of hi-tech industry in the Quebec City area.

The cooperation process in this endeavour among both levels of government, local universities and the private sector stands as an example to be emulated.

• (1810)

The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) went to Quebec City twice in recent weeks to meet with representatives of various groups working with GATIQ.

In the course of their discussions, the Minister did say that he was in favour of the project sponsored by GATIQ concerning the establishment of hi-tech industry in the Quebec City area.

In that respect, the Minister held consultations with the leading promoters of this project concerning the future building site of the new National Research Council's optics institute, a project which the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis) has always supported wholeheartedly.

The institute will help Canadian industry through technological development and transfer, by training qualified staff and by developing expertise in potentially promising industrial fields. It will also provide the industry with optical design services and a test laboratory to assess the quality of optical components and systems.

This institute does faithfully reflect the government's commitment to help Canadian industry make the best of new technologies which offer challenging opportunities such as those in optics.

The great interest shown by GATIQ and the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert in the construction of that institute is quite understandable, and their contribution in this case has been greatly appreciated.

The government feels that a decision in this case is extremely important, and we hope to be able to make an announcement in the near future.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Hon. Member for her outstanding efforts to promote this project. I also want to assure her that the Government of Canada will handle this project in such a way as to respond to the economic aspirations and well-being of the Sainte-Foy-Quebec City area.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say again that the Canadian government is aware of the significant technological new trend in the economic future of the Quebec City area, as proposed by GATIQ and unreservedly supported by the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) has the floor, and I might suggest that the Hon. Member be as brief as possible because we are running a little bit late as a result of the consideration of the public bill.

Adjournment Debate

YOUTH—MINISTER'S AREA OF RESPONSIBILITY. B) PRESS STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I hope I can put my question within the seven-minute period allotted to me.

[English]

The point I want to raise, Mr. Speaker, relates to the question I asked the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) in this House on November 8 concerning her responsibilities. Hon. Members will recall her answer, that she was doing some housecleaning in her Department, and that she did, in fact, confer with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) before the latter decided to reduce grants for youth on the job-training opportunities from $1 billion to $27 million, which our Liberal Government had budgeted. Ultimately, she admitted, yes, she should also help young people who are not well off but that they should also help themselves and do their share.

We cannot be satisfied with such answers, Mr. Speaker, given the present high level of youth unemployment and the level of youth unemployment forecast for this winter and the following summer which, by the way, will be marked by the beginning of the International Year for Youth. Statistics, studies and testimony of young people demonstrate to every Canadian, except, it seems, to this Government, that the number one problem facing our youth is unemployment. The young people most affected by the economic recession are those who have left secondary school with no marketable skills. The plight of these young people, as well as of our graduates, without future job prospects, must be addressed directly if the problems facing them are to be overcome.

How can young Canadians who represent 25 per cent of our population expect to have their vital interests properly defended by this Government? For me, Mr. Speaker, the mandate of the Minister of State for Youth is only one of advocacy as she herself stated in her reply to the Speech from the Throne. In addition, she sits only on social development cabinet committee and consequently cannot be heard on the crucial economic and regional development committee, or on the priorities and planning committees where key decisions are made.

Canada's youth deserve direct access to decision making. Perhaps the Minister should review her mandate with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

I believe that within the context of this economic recession, when competition between different age groups is exacerbated, the Minister should be doing more than simply managing the distribution of approximately $8 million in grants for the International Year of Youth, and doing advocacy. Our youth need more than rhetoric on how important they are to this country, and a few sporadic projects. They need a co-ordinated approach to their serious social and economic problems. They need to believe there is a future for them in the job market and that they can play a useful role in Canadian society. Otherwise their despair will grow and their sense of self-worth will plummet even further. Lost hope, lost dreams, lost generation. Such a denial of the right to work is unjust and leads only to depression.

[Translation]

If the Minister of State is not concerned about the plight of young Canadians, the Governor General of Canada is very much concerned about it. Mrs. Jeanne Sauvé feels that Canada must find ways and means to solve the unemployment problem among its young people, failing which they will become a lost generation. As a matter of fact, she emphatically stated, and I quote: "If we do not manage to solve our young people's unemployment problem, we are going to lose a whole generation. That is very serious." That is exactly what I personally told the Minister recently. It is a tragedy!

[English]

To this end, Mr. Speaker, I ask what kind of encouragement, what kind of concrete measures this Government and the Minister are providing young Canadians. Is it through budgetary cuts to essential programs; through a witch hunt with respect to unemployment insurance beneficiaries to save a hypothetical $200 million; through statements to this House to the effect that "the Government has only so much money to spend on direct job creation"? That is, $200 million. Is it through statements that 85 per cent of young Canadians are able to function normally, thus neglecting the reality that the level of unemployed youth ranges from 18 per cent to 22 per cent and is particularly bad for visible minorities?

My riding office is now filled with young Canadians who await the result of the Minister of Employment and Immigration's consultations, who count on her promises, and who are acutely aware of the impact any decisions she makes will have on job prospects in 1985. Yet here we are two days away from the Christmas recess with not a word being uttered as to the fruits of the so-called consultations. There are no structures in place to be implemented for next summer's programs, and again not a word of protest from the Minister of State for Youth.

The serious impact on your youth and students with the abolition of the Summer Canada Program of $85 million does not go unnoticed by our youth, their parents or our society. Consultation continues but no decisions are made. Yet there is a desperate need for jobs now. Long term alternatives are fine, indeed, and desirable, but this does not diminish the urgency of the present situation and the need for programs now.

When the Minister of Employment and Immigration cannot take positive action for youth, can young people rely on their Minister of State for Youth to do so? When the Secretary of State acknowledges a freeze on the Canada Student Loans Program, can the students rely on their Minister of State for Youth to protect their vital interests? If the Minister cannot challenge or effect change with respect to youth employment programs, if she cannot have any responsibility with respect to the major concern of jobs and employment, then how can our youth feel that their interests are being heard, that they have a voice and be encouraged?

This Minister does not even respond in the name of youth, and protest when a previous Liberal Government youth training program involving $1 billion and creating 100,000 First Chance jobs gets cut to $27 million and provides a mere 3,000 to 4,000 on-the-job-training programs. Job training is just one answer, representing an ongoing process. The Minister could be encouraging increased Canada Works Programs where many meaningful activities for society can be presented in order to meet unemployment needs.

Furthermore, young Canadians are tired of getting only promises. In the past, summer employment programs for youth would have been announced before Christmas in order to allow young people to plan ahead. Instead, cuts and complications concerning the Canada Student Loans Program have been announced which could ultimately prevent students from obtaining the education necessary to pursue a financially rewarding career. It is a vicious circle; no loan, no summer program, no education, no job.

In the recently released list of grants for the International Year of Youth only one of the 22 projects—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret that the seven minute period is over.

[Translation]

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member pointed out, the mandate I was given by the Prime Minister is twofold. I am responsible for co-ordinating the Canadian Government's program of activities for International Youth Year, and I also speak on behalf of youth in Cabinet and in the federal Government.

I see this coming year as a unique opportunity for all young Canadians to strengthen their perception of themselves and of their potential. I want to encourage the full integration of all Canadian youth in society and to make adult Canadians aware of the situation of our young people and realize that they have a positive contribution to make to society. We must realize, and it cannot be said often enough, that there is no such thing as a lost generation. We must have confidence in our youth. We must encourage them to take advantage of opportunities when they arise.

Mr. Speaker, I believe all my provincial counterparts share my views. During our meetings in recent weeks, they confirmed that in the course of the year, they intend to focus on what young people have been able to achieve so that this will act as a stimulus for young people who have been less fortunate.

The program for International Youth Year is based on these considerations and consists of five points. First of all, its purpose is to help support any initiatives the Youth Secretariat may undertake jointly with Government departments or agencies.

We also have a grants program to facilitate the implementation of special projects set up by young people, or for them through volunteer groups and agencies. This week, Mr. Speaker, I was able to announce the allocation of 22 grants totalling $429,000.

There is also the Peace and Development Program, whose aim is to provide financial assistance for activities that will make young Canadians aware of the international situation. There is also an information and communications program that will focus the attention of the public on young people and make it aware of what young people have to contribute to society.

Finally, five national forums will be held in various parts of the country. Here, young people and their social partners will be able to exchange views and develop strategies that will make for a better understanding of the situation of young Canadians. The conclusions of these forums will be used in developing long term policies affecting Canadian youth.

I will also be setting up an advisory committee on International Youth Year, consisting of young people from all parts of Canada.

My total budget for carrying out my mandate is a little over $28 million, for fiscal 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) was very vocal about employment problems. She claimed that the Government failed to meet its commitment to create jobs for young people.

The changes recently announced will deeply alter the government policies and programs. Our new government wishes to promote independence rather than dependence on the government.

The Hon. Member has suggested that the new Youth Training Option program has reduced by a third the budget for young people. Such is not the case. The training program had been announced by the previous government during the election campaign without any consultation with the provinces and the private sector. The program had such an enormous scope—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret to interrupt the Minister but the time allotted to her has expired. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE—REQUEST FOR RE-EXAMINATION OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS. (B) TERMINATED POSITIONS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE JOB DESCRIPTIONS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) and the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) for being here to answer questions; the Ministers normally give that duty to their Parliamentary Secretaries. I want to draw attention to that and have it on the record. I believe that both these Ministers are doing a good job in their departments—as well as can be expected with the imposition of the vicious cuts by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government of Canada. As the Minister for Youth has said many times, these cuts are something that one just has to live with. If it wasn't this, it would be something else.

The Minister knows my purpose in rising today as we have gone over this question many times. I have asked her questions in the House, and she has appeared before the committee—even today. Perhaps I sometimes get a little too nasty in my remarks regarding the Minister. I want to assure her that my remarks are directed toward the cuts which I believe have been imposed upon her by the Minister of Finance and the Government of Canada. I know that in defending those cuts the Minister must sometimes get a bit nasty with me in her response.

However, let me tell the Minister that apart from the other cuts, the real problem is with the policy she has announced, and which the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) has announced in the blue book where he said that the areas of research on migratory birds and endangered species would not be touched.

The Minister knows, as I pointed out in the committee meeting this afternoon, that ducks are migratory birds. The experiments conducted on the prairies by a research team of five this past summer showed that the effects of an insecticide on ducks which are nesting on the prairies caused the death of those ducklings. That research team was out there for a very important purpose, to examine the effects on the birds and to recommend to the Department of Agriculture that perhaps by decreasing the size of the droplets in the insecticide the problem could be overcome. The purpose of the research team was not to stop the spraying of grasshoppers with that insecticide. Its purpose was actually to try to re-arrange it so it did not kill that wildlife. Ducks are migratory birds. In addition, there are the shore birds along the Fraser Delta. Various projects with respect to endangered species have been cut. I outlined a particular species in Newfoundland to the Minister this morning, and spoke of the real emphasis of her Department as far as the peregrine falcon is concerned.

My major concern is that what was outlined in the cuts by the President of the Treasury Board have actually not taken place. Those two areas which are supposed to be protected in the Minsiter's Department are in fact not being protected, as I outlined today in committee. The most important aspect is, as the Minister knows, that birds in various provinces have been destroyed because of policies of governments, mainly provincial governments, on the advice of the federal Government. They have been destroyed as a result of the recommended use of chemicals over large land areas. We are destroying the very birds which get rid of the insect we are trying to spray.

Whether or not a bird is an endangered species, the point is the Canadian Wildlife Service was the only agency that was there to protect the wildlife. The companies were not interested. The foresters were not all that interested, and the provincial governments were not all that interested. The pest control division of the Department of Agriculture did not require an analysis as part of the spraying program.

What do we have left, Minister? If all the cuts are allowed to take place and that type of thing happens, nobody will be looking out for the birds. Therefore, Minister, what you are saying in effect is that nobody is looking out for the people. As we all know, when the environment is destroyed people are destroyed. It is as simple as that. The birds I refer to in this particular instance perform a vital function. In some countries they put the emphasis on bird hatcheries, rather than on sprays.

It would be wonderful and in the spirit of Christmas if the Minister would announce now that the Canadian wildlife Service will be relieved of these absolutely vicious cuts imposed by the Minister of Finance. I could then praise her in the House during Question Period, under the provisions of Standing Order 21, as well as on points of order and in general discussions.

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for his comments and I can assure you that if it were up to me, I would love to be honoured like this for a whole day, as it was certainly not the case in the House yesterday and today.

I also want to reassure the Hon. Member about the fact that my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), did not force any cutbacks on me. I take the full responsibility for them, and it is I, with the officials at my Department, who reviewed the programs and decided, in accordance with our federal mandate and the responsibilities under our jurisdiction, to cancel certain programs and to make sure that some of them would be taken over by the provinces.

To give a more specific answer to my colleague, I can assure him that we are still concerned with peregrine falcons and their reintroduction to the wild. We also continue to concern ourselves with the effect of pesticides on birds, for instance within the interdepartmental committee on the effects of pesticides on the environment, which is responsible for advising the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) on the use of these pesticides.

I do not believe that it would be appropriate for me to speak too long about the cutbacks. Much has already been said about this. However, I want to say that these cutbacks affect the following occupational group: 10 science researcher and program manager positions, 50 professional or technical positions and 13 support positions; these are the only positions affected.

For some of them, we already have alternatives. I would like however to take a few moments to refer to the overall effort by my officials and myself to soften the impact of those cuts on the people concerned. Our surplus employees have been notified as early as possible of their status, so they may have an opportunity to find other jobs on the market place. We have put a freeze on hiring throughout the Department, and we will very soon complete the identification of all vacant jobs. Further, we will offer retraining programs, where appropriate, to help our employees relocate.

We have ongoing consultations with the provinces and the universities with the hope that some of the programs may be taken up by one of those jurisdictions.

Among other things, as a result of our diligent handling of the matter, we have succeeded in arranging the take-over of one of the five wildlife interpretation centres. We have in fact reached an agreement with the Province of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, it is my view that we have acted very humanely and within the spirit of our commitment made to Canadians to reduce Government expenditures.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.35 p.m. the House adjourned.

STATISTICS CANADA

IMPORTANCE OF IMMIGRATION TO FUTURE POPULATION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday Statistics Canada published "Fertility in Canada: From Baby-Boom to Baby-Bust", a report prepared by demographer Anatole Romaniuk. The report points out a number of disturbing facts, including a dramatic shift in Canada's age structure.

If the present fertility rate of 1.7, which is well below the replacement level, remains constant, it will be impossible to maintain adequate growth of Canada's population. This kind of situation demands serious consideration because it raises a number of concerns. The report also shows us the importance of the role of net immigration with respect to future population growth, especially if we consider the structural and social changes that affect the annual profile of Canada's population. Mr. Romaniuk's conclusions in this respect are clear. If we are to maintain our present population at a level in line with the pursuit of certain national objectives, we will have to develop short, medium and long-term immigration strategies.

As was emphasized in the report, there is no foolproof solution, and there are many factors to consider. However, since immigration is a major component in the present situation, I would urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to focus on this problem as quickly as possible, especially in view of her recent statement about the slowing—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES OF CANADA

RETENTION IN PROXIMITY TO NATIONAL LIBRARY A NECESSITY

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Public Archives of Canada, which is physically affiliated with the National Library in the nation's capital, and closely related to it as a resource and service, is one of Canada's great institutions. Within its walls are stored the details of Canada's heritage, the history of its communities, its families and its development. These archives are second to none in the world.

The present proximal arrangement of the Public Archives and the National Library has the overwhelming support of researchers, and persons exploring their genealogical heritage. Canadians and relatives of Canadians want to find archival material in the nation's capital. Earlier in the year the Liberal Government, a Government now known for its ineptitude and disregard for the wishes of the Canadian people, announced that the Archives would be moved out of the nation's capital. The separation of the Public Archives and the National Library would be regrettable and disastrous, and not necessary, especially when there is room for expansion on the present site.

I speak on behalf of many Canadians in urging the present Government, a Government noted for its good judgment, to keep the Public Archives in the nation's capital.

NATIVE REGIONAL PROGRAMMING IN ONTARIO

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the CBC has an undisputed obligation to promote regional and cultural programming to underserved parts of Canada. That has been an underlying raison d'être of the CBC since its inception some four decades ago. Nowhere is that commitment more appreciated and more necessary than in the remote native communities of northwestern Ontario where CBC programming is in many cases the only programming available.

The recently announced $75 million CBC budget cuts, the chopping of 1,150 staff positions, and the freezing of programming funds are, to say the least, alarming. The threat to present programming is also very real. We in the New Democratic Party call upon the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to maintain the native language programs aired over the CBC, and specifically to continue the program Indian Faces which is currently produced by the Wawatay Native Communications Society.

CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

GOOD WORK OF OTTAWA SNOWSUIT FUND

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw to the attention of the House a most worthy and charitable cause, the Snowsuit Fund. This is a charity program sponsored by businessmen and concerned citizens in the Ottawa area. It was established to help provide children in eastern Ontario with warm winter clothing. The group has targeted 3,000 needy children this year, and it has a goal of raising $75,000 to buy the necessary snowsuits. The Air Force is kindly providing the transportation of snowsuits from Winnipeg, where they are made, to Ottawa.

The Snowsuit Fund has an office conveniently located at 90 Sparks Street, the Queen Street entrance. From the office at 90 Sparks Street this little known effort has in past years been successful in providing a warmer winter and happier holiday to children throughout the area, and it is a commendable example of Canadians helping Canadians to have a very Merry Christmas.

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, referring to social programs, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said: "Canadians are not given credit for their intelligence on these issues". The Liberals know Canadians are intelligent and should be included in the debate on social programs. If the Conservatives truly believed in the wisdom and judgment of Canadians they would have opened the debate over universality and social programs during the election, when voters could really contribute. The Canadian public can best make its voice heard on the issue of social programs if it is debated prior to and during an election campaign.

The Conservatives were afraid of revealing their true position to Canadians. As the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) said during the election campaign: "If the Tories said what they would do if elected, they would never be elected". The present Minister of Finance did not trust the Canadian public either, as he said in his recent Canadian Press interview that if the Tory position on social programs had been announced during the election campaign, the Canadian people would have misunderstood them. It is obvious the Government does not believe in open debate. It did not believe in it during the campaign, and it does not believe in it now.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) told reporters during the campaign that "the Conservatives had to be prudent in putting out positions". If the Prime Minister truly believed in Canadians, and in open and honest debate on social policy, he would have had the courage to come clean about his true position on social programs during the election campaign, and he would agree right now to a debate on social programs.

SOLIDARITY OF PEOPLE'S REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, on the last day of the session before the Christmas holidays, I want to appeal to the intellectual honesty of both opposition parties and ask them to stop their efforts, here in the House, at feeding this climate of insecurity among the neediest in our society.

They know perfectly well that a government would never dare take away vested rights, and they also know perfectly well that the present Government does not intend to penalize Canadians in need.

If they had any self-respect and any respect for their fellow Canadians, they would stop their politics of petulance and prepare for the holidays in an atmosphere of peace and serenity, making it clear to the rest of the country that they intend to work in good faith with the present Government to maximize existing programs.

More solidarity among Canada's elected representatives would be a more effective response to the needs of Canadians and give them a Christmas free of worry, and the hope that 1985 will bring them a step closer to a better future.

DISARMAMENT

NON-PARTICIPATION IN ARMS RACE ADVOCATED

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, as we prepare to leave this place and return to our homes to celebrate with family and friends the birth of the Prince of Peace, let us reject the satisfaction that the Minister of Defence (Mr. Coates) seemed to take in Winnipeg at the small numbers outside a Winnipeg hotel protesting the Pentagon tour. Instead, we should reflect on why it is that those who freely devote time to trying to call our attention to the insanity of the nuclear arms race are put down, despised, and sometimes arrested, while at the same time those who are paid well to prepare for the death of our planet and its inhabitants are doing nothing illegal, and are even held in high regard for the work they do in spending in one day what the United Nations needs between now and the year 2000 to provide clean water for everyone, and probably will not get.

Plans to fight and win a nuclear war, Mr. Speaker, are so completely contrary to the vision of the angels and the shepherds outside Bethlehem hearing the good news of peace on earth, and so completely contrary to Christ's commandment of love and his own disarmed death on the cross, that Canada must, in the name of life and the future, and in defiance of the powers of death which surround us, say an unambiguous no to participating in the nuclear arms race. That would be an act truly in the spirit of Christmas.

THE CENSUS

DECLINE IN BIRTH RATE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada warns that the fertility rate of Canadians has dropped to an all-time low. On average each Canadian woman bears 1.7 children in her lifetime, significantly below the break-even rate of 2.1 needed to maintain a steady population. If this trend continues, not only will our population decline unless made up by massive immigration, but also the average age will increase, thereby putting strain on social security systems as fewer people in the workforce are called upon to support more and more pensioners.

Canada is severely underpopulated, with tremendous resources left unutilized, and millions of acres of land that has yet to see the plough. Therefore, Sir, it ought to be a public policy to encourage families to have more children. In that the process involved is not unduly distasteful, might I suggest that we could all start with renewed vigour this Christmas.

On a serious note, Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is this. If we do not populate our own country, most of which is largely uninhabited, someone else eventually will do it for us.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

YUKON INDIAN CLAIMS—EXTENSION OF NEGOTIATIONS URGED

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) informed Yukon Indian people that the Government lacks the political will to settle their aboriginal claims fairly and justly. While much progress has been made towards a settlement, several recent historical events have significantly affected the settlement process. The Minister himself has recognized the importance of these new factors, some created by him, such as his decision to undertake a full-scale review of native claims policy. Despite his earlier flexibility and apparent willingness to accommodate these factors, his decision of yesterday denies Yukon Indian people the time and resources they need to assess these events properly.

Why has the Minister abandoned his earlier flexibility? From where has the pressure come causing him to take a harder line? It is unfair, unreasonable, and unacceptable for him to insist that the Yukon Indian people must make such a momentous decision in haste. This is not just one more small item on the Government's agenda. The future of an entire group of people is at stake.

I therefore call upon the Minister not to foreclose on these negotiations. Do not walk away from the table. Allow them the needed funding, since it is an advance on the Yukon settlement anyway, and let the legitimate concerns of the Yukon Indian communities and their leaders be much more carefully considered.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if you would allow me to trespass gently upon the rules, I would like to wish you and your bride, the Prime Minister and his family, and all Members of the House a merry Christmas and happy holiday. I would also like to wish the House a productive new year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is in this benign spirit that I say that I am pleased that the Prime Minister and the Government are allowing a debate, beginning in an hour from now, which I will be leading, on our social security programs.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question which reflects the one point of unanimity which he and his two principal Ministers in this debate, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance have reached. They are talking about taking from the existing social programs for the needy. That position contradicts the Prime Minister's statement made before the Canadian and Empire Clubs on October 28 when he said that "we will achieve these objectives without touching our existing social programs". There seems to be a contradiction between the unanimity achieved among the Prime Minister and his two Ministers and what the Prime Minister said in Toronto. Would he explain that contradiction?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the same spirit of kindness, which I acknowledge with thanks, in a very special way I want to wish my right hon. friend a long and productive career as Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. I would like to tell him what I think a lot of Members realize, that he has, in a very real way, notwithstanding the events of the last few days, contributed substantially to creating a new atmosphere of reasonableness and civility. I think all Members of the House of Commons would want to applaud him on his leadership.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I feel that there has been no contradiction at all. I appreciate the Right Hon. Leader's concerns. They are legitimate. I feel they have been well answered and completely responded to by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance. I feel, as well, that the consultation papers on which we will all have an opportunity to speak shortly, will provide us with a free-wheeling but reasonable atmosphere to discuss programs and solutions for Canadians while maintaining the principles that we have all agreed upon.

OPTIONAL PROPOSALS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Ministers have been talking about a cut-off point, and revenue figures of $26,000 and $35,000 have been mentioned for the payment of family allowances and old age pensions. Would the Prime Minister not recognize that there are other options for meeting the needs of lower income Canadians than by taking from the existing social programs of middle-income Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I quite agree, and some of these will be set out in the discussion papers. I do not imagine that anyone has contended, or would contend, that these papers will be perfect. We expect them to be improved upon as a result of suggestions from the Opposition and comments from interested groups in the country. I think that is the way a fruitful and productive dialogue can be undertaken. I thank my right hon. friend for his openness in this regard, and I assure him that all suggestions will be carefully and thoughtfully considered with a view to enhancing the social programs that we now have and trying to get more money into the hands of those in our society who need it the most.

• (1120)

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, despite the denial by the Minister of Finance, I suspect that there will be some rewriting of the directional papers, or white papers, on family allowances and old age pensions as a result of questions and remarks in the House.

When those papers are being rewritten, will the Prime Minister or his Ministers be consulting members of his own political Party who, at their last political convention, expressed themselves 92 per cent against increases in universal family allowances, 62 per cent against increasing universal old age pension benefits, and 82 per cent against increasing medicare benefits? Will the Prime Minister be heeding the wish expressed by the majority of his Party at its last political convention, when he rewrites those papers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my right hon. friend goes back to a paper on this issue that was presented by the Hon. John Munro when he was a member of the Government of which my right hon. friend was a member, he will find that he seriously questioned the concept of universality, as did the Member for Westmount when he was seeking the leadership of that Party. He did so very directly, and in fact shot it down and said that he would scrap it and try to introduce a negative income tax.

My right hon. friend said the other day on CTV that he was in favour of universality for now. We are saying that, indeed, there is room for improvement. The papers are in the process of being concluded. When the documents are brought forward they will be consistent with the fundamentals to which we have always adhered.

I have stipulated that this Party stands, as it has always stood, for the maintenance of universal programs on the one hand, that we are opposed to a means test and that there will be no means test. We are trying to develop, with your help, a formula which will allow us in an acceptable way to perhaps take some funds from other sources in the system and elsewhere, and place them into the hands—

Mr. Nunziata: From what sources?

Mr. Mulroney: The friend of yours who is making $500,000 a year. He does not need the money to the extent that a single mother who is living under the poverty line needs it. We are trying to help them. With your help, maybe we can succeed. That is what it is all about.

REVIEW OF PROGRAMS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, with respect to this whole debate on universality, I can say that the Government has finally been able to square its own circle. Not only has it managed to confuse the Canadian public, it has confused the minds of its own Government backbenchers who no longer even know the direction the Government wants to take on this issue.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister. When the Government completes its review of old age pensions and family allowances, will he guarantee to the House today that the disposable income for middle income families in Canada will not be decreased?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that question has been adequately and thoroughly considered in the House. I can tell my hon. friend not to be surprised if government Members speak up and ask questions, because they are independent, able people, who will speak their minds, as opposed to Liberal backbenchers who simply follow their Leader at all times.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Frith: All I can say is that Erik Nielsen must have had a change of heart.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Will the Prime Minister guarantee to the House today that when the rewritten directional papers on family allowances and pensions are released in January, those papers will be relegated to the appropriate standing committees of the House of Commons so that Members from all Parties can hear the viewpoints of average income Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend makes an excellent point. We very much want to listen to Canadians and consult with important groups in our society, from the provinces to the groups representing the poor. We very much want to listen to Members of Parliament.

• (1125)

I would be happy to sit down with my hon. friend and work out a formula whereby all Members of Parliament will be absolutely certain they have had complete and full input. We do not view this in any partisan sense.

The social programs of the country are there to be respected and enhanced where possible in the interest of the greatest number of citizens. We do not view this in a partisan spirit. We view it as an on-going obligation that we have to maintain, with the help and support of all Members of Parliament.

MEANS TEST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, normally I would have saved this for the end of the day, but since there are enough Members to speak at this point in time I would join the Leader of the Government, the Prime Minister, and the Leader of the Official Opposition, in wishing to everyone, on behalf of my colleagues and my Leader, a very merry Christmas and a new year filled with promise, a new year filled with hard work, and for everyone in the country some degree of assurance that they have a future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: With regard to the Prime Minister's responses this morning, he has indicated that he does not favour a means test. Would he acknowledge that a tax-back provision which would be directed specifically at old age pension or family allowance is in fact a means test?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is an abstract, hypothetical question. I have already said that we are not going to have means tests, not yesterday, not today, and not tomorrow. I hope that satisfies my hon. friend.

Mr. Deans: I must be honest; it does not quite satisfy me, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: What would?

POSSIBILITY OF TAX MEASURES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask him to consider for a moment that the Minister of Finance has indicated that the option of a tax-back applied directly to social programs, old age pensions, and family allowances, is one of the options being considered. I ask the Prime Minister again: would he recognize that if there were a tax specifically designed to collect back from those that portion of their income which was directly attributable to old age pension, or to family allowance, that that in fact would be intended to reflect a cut-off point, or a way of getting back certain income based on the income of the individuals, and that that in effect would be a means test?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Member begins his question by saying "if there were a tax". It is a completely hypothetical question, and the Government is under no obligation to respond to this kind of question. I am surprised the Hon. Member raises it, inasmuch as the Member for Vancouver East has specifically come out and stipulated the NDP policy in that—

Ms. Mitchell: That is not true. I did not say that.

Mr. Mulroney: —where there is a proposed tax-back all the way through the system that could, in circumstances, have the effect of seriously undermining the concept of universality. We are very much in favour of maintaining the principle of universality in our society in trying to find ways of getting more money into the hands of the poor and those who need it most. I would hope my hon. friend will agree with that.

Mr. Deans: I can think of nothing I would rather see happen than to guarantee that the poor receive more money so they can live at a decent level.

CONSIDERATION OF OPTIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): My final supplementary question is also for the Prime Minister. If it is true that he has rejected a specific tax on specific programs, such as old age pension or family allowance, why then does the Minister of Finance continue to offer that that is one of the options under consideration, that that is one of the options that will be placed before the public of Canada and the House of Commons, and that that is in fact still under active consideration by the Government?

• (1130)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend begins again by saying: "If it is true".

Mr. Deans: It is true.

Mr. Mulroney: What we are saying I think is pretty clear-cut and, I hope my hon. friend would agree, is also reasonable. At an appropriate time very soon, consultation documents will be brought forward and will be given to all Members of Parliament. They will be provided to all interested groups in society. All appropriate considerations and information that we have will be made available, and we will have a debate on how we can improve the system.

I know my hon. friend feels strongly about these points. We want to hear from him on the basis of the best information that we shall be able to put forward. However, I think it is important to mention—and it is not redundant to point it out and to say it again—that our objectives as members of the Government are not different from those of other parliamentarians. What we are trying to do—and we shall do, I hope, with his help and support—is to maintain intact the principle of universality which has brought honour to the country, to ensure that there are no demeaning means tests applied to Canadian citizens, and to find a formula, given the tremendous financial burdens placed upon the people and the Government of Canada at this time, whereby we can, with fairness, get more money into the hands of the underprivileged, the widows and the elderly in the country who need it more than others. We hope we can do that, and that is the objective of the exercise.

DISARMAMENT

UNITED STATES PROPOSAL TO DEVELOP STAR WARS TECHNOLOGY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we might prevail upon the Prime Minister for a few more moments of good will to try to clarify another set of contradictory statements made by him and one of his Ministers, or other Ministers, in relation to an issue of great and vital importance to Canadians, that is, the position on the star wars program of the United States.

In answer to the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice yesterday the Prime Minister said that there was no change in the long traditional opposition of this country to any development of a star wars technology. Yet a week ago in Brussels the Secretary of State for External Affairs said: "We are discussing the question internally in Canada. We are a new Government with differing views". It is very important for the Prime Minister to clarify today for many thousands of Canadians involved in peace movements, even though his Minister of National Defence does not believe that there are that many, that the Government, on behalf of the country, is clearly opposed to any form of development by the United States of a star wars technology and in fact will make that opposition very clear when the Prime Minister meets with President Reagan in March. Is the Prime Minister prepared to enunciate very clearly our opposition as a country to that new development of star wars technology?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend constantly seems to single out the United States. We are opposed to developments by either of the superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union, which indulge in matters that detract from the principal obligation of all countries, including ours, that is, to work in an unrelenting manner in pursuit of a durable peace. This is a U.S. research project which has not been formally brought to our attention. The basis of our action is the 1967 treaty which we have signed, and by which the Government continues to live.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not answered the question. The Soviet Union has said that it is against any new star wars development—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: —and the British Prime Minister has said that. I suggest that Tory Members should read the newspapers from time to time to keep up on the news. I think this is incumbent upon the Prime Minister. It is not something one can be evasive about. Is the Government clearly prepared to say to our American allies that we do not believe the cause of peace is in any way improved, and in fact will be detracted from, if it goes ahead with any development or research which would lead toward the implementation of a star wars technology in outer space that would contradict the space treaty? Is he prepared to make that statement today, in the spirit of Christmas and in the spirit of peace?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, again there is a mind-set in the Liberal Party which directs its venom on a constant basis at the United States of America. We are ready to say what I have always said. We will defend the noble concept of peace and restraint with the United States and with the Soviet Union. There is another side here, too.

Mr. Axworthy: Then say so.

Mr. Mulroney: We are saying that. We signed the 1967 treaty and we remain bound by it.

Mr. Axworthy: Are you against it or not?

Mr. Mulroney: I think it is unbecoming for my hon. friend persistently to take one side of the argument. He is constantly against the United States of America. He is constantly against our allies. We are trying to be even-handed, productive, and helpful in this.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

COUNCIL FOR YUKON INDIANS—LAND CLAIMS NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Several bands within the Council for Yukon Indians have had difficulty with some of the issues related to the agreement in principle on land claims, yet the Minister of Indian Affairs has held them ot the December 31 date for ratification. This made it impossible for them to reach any agreement on the outstanding issues. Now the Minister has terminated negotiations and ended funding for the CYI. Is the Government prepared to act in a mood of good will and flexibility, reconsider its decision, reopen negotiations with the Yukon Indians, and work toward a just and mutually satisfactory agreement on their land claims?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I think it is important in this sensitive issue that it be very clearly understood on the record what the Minister has said and what he is prepared to do, rather than the flavour or the face of the Hon. Member's question.

I have no objection to quoting from a letter which has been made public. It was addressed to Mr. Harry Allen, Chairman of the Council for Yukon Indians. It was written by the Minister of Indian Affairs. If I might have the time of the House, the Minister made three salient points in that letter—first, that he would seek authority so that the elders program would continue; second, that he would continue the current informal arrangements; and, third, that with regard to funding for the Council for Yukon Indians, any existing federal commitments in this fiscal year to CYI would, of course, be honoured.

CONDUCT OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations have been terminated and future funding has been cut off. If the Government is not prepared to deal with the Council for Yukon Indians in an open, flexible, and honest manner, how can aboriginal peoples in any part of Canada put any confidence in the so-called review of land claims policy which the Minister announced, or in any other action of the Minister?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, back in 1979 there were no negotiations. In an open, honest, and forthright manner, those negotiations were put together. That is the manner in which the present Minister of Indian Affairs and this Government are operating. Nothing has changed from those principles.

DISARMAMENT

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, on the subject of peace, I should first like to congratulate the Prime Minister on two appointments—Ambassador Roche and, more recently, Geoffrey Pearson. Unfortunately he has a loose cannon running the Department of National Defence, Canada's very own Archie Bunker, it would appear. This week, or late last week, he cast aspersions on the men and women in the Canadian peace movement by saying, in a speech in Winnipeg, that the movement was weak and that that was "right and proper". Then he apparently went on to applaud the locking up of certain protesters in Nova Scotia.

I want to give the Prime Minister the opportunity to denounce these stupid and irresponsible statements by the Minister, and to apologize to those dedicated men and women across this country who have been working tirelessly to give concrete leadership to establishing peace and good will for men and women in the world.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret the comment of my hon. friend who has characterized the Minister of National Defence in that way. The Minister has been an honourable Member of this House for almost 28 years. I think he has contributed greatly to his country—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —and I regret the comment.

• (1140)

With regard to any activities undertaken by groups interested in promoting the cause of peace, I have had the opportunity of meeting with the Bishops, and on previous occasions with groups of peace activists. What I have indicated to them is this. I urged them strongly to maintain the pressure at all times. Most times it does not accord with government policy, but so be it, because the pressure of honourable people working for the pursuit of peace is the strongest assurance that a democracy is healthy. I welcome it. I encourage them at all times, because nothing is more noble than citizens working for the cause of peace. I encourage them, and I assure them that they will always receive a welcome and hospitable reception at the office of the Prime Minister of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I understood the Prime Minister to say that the efforts of the peace movement do not correspond to government policy, which I must say I find very disturbing. I will look at the "blues", but that is what I understood him to say. Instead of regretting—

Mr. Speaker: With respect, I must ask the Hon. Member to come to his question.

Mr. Johnston: Instead of regretting my statements, would he not regret the statement of his own Minister who has cast aspersions on the motives and the efforts of these people in the Canadian peace movement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the text of the remarks to which my hon. friend refers, but I speak for the Ministry in the statements I have just made. They represent the views of the Government of Canada, that we welcome and encourage peace activists in every walk of life across Canada. We think that their activity is honourable, and we encourage them at all times.

SHIPBUILDING

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister of Canada.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to confirm that, although it has Davie Shipbuilding Limited in Lauzon, Quebec, for instance, the Government intends to place orders outside the country for the construction of new ships for our navy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am not sure I fully understood my hon. friend's question. However, I shall bring it to the attention of the Minister. In any case, I can assure you that as far as I understood the question, that is not what the Government intends to do.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence is never in the House. May I repeat the question?

Notwithstanding the existence in Quebec of Davie Shipbuilding Limited which would be able to fill orders for military purposes, is the Prime Minister prepared to confirm today that the Government now intends to go outside the country to place orders for new ships for our navy?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. We will always use our own shipyards whenever possible.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Contrary to what was said by the Opposition and certain media, social programs will be maintained by our Government.

Could the Minister repeat before the House the commitment he gave last Tuesday, namely, that old age security pensions, the guaranteed income supplemnent and the spouse's allowance will be increased according to the increase in the cost of living and that people drawing benefits under the Canada Pension Plan will get a 4.4 per cent increase early in 1985?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the regular indexing of the Old Age Security, Guaranteed Income Supplement, and family allowance will be increased as of January 1, 1985, and the Canada Pension Plan will also be increased 4.4 per cent relative to inflation for the last year.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister is on record promising that our youth will have a summer work program. Today is the last day of the session. For the first time in decades, the Minister of Employment of this country has not announced a government summer job plan before the Christmas break. The youth of the country are wondering where the Minister's priorities are, because our youth need jobs. Is the Minister planning to announce today how many new summer jobs there will be, by which programs, and for how much money? Is the Minister prepared to answer those questions and to tell us what the mechanism is so that there will be summer youth jobs in time?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, for the first time the Minister of Employment and Immigration of this country has been consulting with provincial Governments, the private sector, business and labour, in order to come up with summer programs for young people that will be meaningful and that will give them an opportunity to lead to permanent jobs. I can assure the Hon. Member, as I have assured the House on other occasions, that those programs will be in effect for next summer.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF PLANS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister would stop lecturing. The youth of this country want lectures from professors, not from you.

Miss MacDonald: I am sorry, you will have to repeat your supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Member have a question?

Mrs. Finestone: Concretely, can the Minister announce today her summer job plans to create jobs for youth? Today. Never mind the consultations.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: She gets her training in Mount Royal.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there speaks the voice of the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Never mind consultations, never mind treating the people of this country in a decent and straightforward manner. Never mind any of this. We saw 15 years of government when a Liberal Government ignored the people of this country. We do not intend to follow that route.

PUBLIC WORKS

OLD PORT OF QUEBEC—COMPOSITION OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works and his parliamentary secretary, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Recently the Minister of Public Works announced the membership of the Conseil d'administration du Vieux-Port de Québec. None of these new members came from labour circles or community groups. Could the Minister inform the House whether this lack of community representation was accidental or planned?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, many of these appointments are made according to certain criteria applied by our ports, chambers of commerce, and so forth. I am not acquainted with the exact conditions, but I will ask the Minister about this to set the Hon. Member's mind at rest.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Once the Prime Minister has consulted with his Minister of Public Works about the lack of community representation, could he give the House the assurance that he will appoint representatives of the labour movement and community groups, to the board of directors so that the board reflects a cross-section of the population of Quebec City?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, in all appointments we want to strive as far as possible towards the kind of representativity referred to by the Hon. Member, something we are very much in favour of. In fact, we want to try to achieve this at all times.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TREATMENT OF SEVERANCE PAY AND PENSIONS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I have committed myself to meet next week in my constituency with two groups of union members who are interested in the proposed changes to the unemployment insurance regulations. Could the Minister now tell us specifically how she intends to proceed with respect to the treatment of severance pay and pensions?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when the changes to the unemployment insurance regulations were announced at the time of the economic statement, I undertook to listen to representations from Members of Parliament and to consult with labour and business about the implementation of these measures. I can tell the Hon. Member, and Members of Parliament, whose representations I have appreciated, that with regard to separation pay the changes in regulations will not affect any collective agreements which have been negotiated and signed prior to the end of December, 1984. In other words, the claims will be treated under those agreements according to the present regulations.

I would also say, with regard to pensions, that we have decided—and again this decision came after consultation—that a year of transition is the best approach. Those provisions will come into effect as of the first of January, 1986.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED DISMISSALS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Reports in the media have documented several cases of public servants being fired on the basis of their past political affiliations. During the election campaign the Prime Minister promised that there would be no hit list or purge in the Public Service of Canada. The Prime Minister said that he believed in a competent and impartial Public Service.

In view of the disturbing reports, which are seriously documented by Southam Press today in the Ottawa Citizen, there appear to be in contravention—

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the Hon. Member to come to his question, please.

Mr. Gauthier: These firings appear to be in contravention of the Public Service Employment Act. Can the Prime Minister tell the House why the Act is not being applied?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend is probably referring to two questions. There is a full-time professional Public Service, and of that there can be no doubt. All of our activities are designed to respect the integrity and independence of the Public Service.

Perhaps he alludes to former ministerial assistants who have been politically active and who are seeking reintegration into the Public Service. I would tell my hon. friend—as I did when I had the opportunity of speaking with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition—that I view this kind of service as very honourable. The Government and the Public Service have been instructed to facilitate the re-entry into Public Service positions of former advisers to Liberal Cabinet Ministers, and to be as helpful and as forthcoming as possible. I think that political service and activity are an honourable calling, and we have instructed the Public Service accordingly.

HIRING OF COMPETENT AND IMPARTIAL PEOPLE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Considering the Prime Minister's reply, is he prepared to instruct his Ministers and deputy ministers, especially his deputy ministers that the Public Service Employment Act should be applied unconditionally, and to explain that from now on, on the basis of this legislation, they must try to hire people who are both competent and impartial?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): We intend to act in accordance with the provisions of the legislation, but I also wish to inform my hon. friend that it is important to recognize the legitimacy of positions held by former assistants of the previous government. They have a number of vested rights, which we intend to respect.

SHIPBUILDING

PRECARIOUS SITUATION OF NOVA SCOTIA SHIPYARD

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services.

The shipyard is now in receivership. Could the Minister inform the House whether his department will continue its contract in order to maintain the remaining 950 jobs?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I am not in a position at this point in time to be able to give definitive answers to the Hon. Member about the disposition of that work. But our intention is always to preserve whatever jobs can be preserved. As soon as I am able to get more information in this regard, I will get back to the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Will the Minister inform the House whether the Government of Canada will help the Government of Nova Scotia to find an acceptable buyer for the shipyard in order to ensure these jobs will continue to exist?

[English]

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the receiver who was appointed by the Government of Nova Scotia will be reporting to the Government of Nova Scotia on January 8. It is my understanding that there is a good possibility other owners will come along to take over and run the yard. We are hopeful in that regard. I have a senior official who is now in Halifax working with the receiver. Hopefully, early in the new year the situation will be clarified in a way which will preserve those jobs.

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—NEWSPAPER REPORTS

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, according to the December 18 editions of La Presse and The Globe and Mail, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation would have preferred to make cuts in programming instead of reducing administrative staff, to meet budgetary cutbacks. The Minister of Communications told journalists that the report in The Globe and Mail was substantially correct, according to Canadian Press on December 19.

Mr. Speaker: The question, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: I am getting there, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Juneau has just announced that the CBC never planned to cut back on programming rather than personnel. Could the Minister inform the House who is telling the truth: the President of the CBC, or the Minister when he told The Globe and Mail that the report was substantially correct?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give my hon. colleague the assurance that my relations with Mr. Juneau, both in public and in private, have always been marked by a civilized and statesmanlike exchange of views, and that I do not intend to let speculation, rumours or allusions to the media draw me into a debate that is not the kind I care to indulge in.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: Does the President of the CBC still enjoy the full confidence of the Government in carrying out his important duties and responsibilities?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated some weeks ago—and I think it was in response to a question from my hon. friend—the high regard the Government has for the President of the CBC. That has not changed.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SOUTH AFRICA—ABOLITION OF APARTHEID ADVOCATED BY BISHOP TUTU

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In light of Bishop Tutu's visit and representations on behalf of his people, and in view of historical Progressive Conservative advocacy of human righs in South Africa—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stackhouse: Oh, yes! It goes back to the Diefenbaker Government.

What consideration is being given to increasing Canadian pressure on South Africa to abolish apartheid?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was honoured, as we all were yesterday, by the presence of Bishop Tutu in the House. I had the privilege of a private meeting with him wherein he gave me the benefit of his views. I indicated to him how helpful they would be to the new Government as we get into a foreign policy review. Of course the question of our relationship with South Africa will be very carefully re-examined.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of a question of privilege which I am required to deal with at this time. The Hon. Member for Burnaby has submitted to me a question of privilege. Is the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition rising on a question of privilege or—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, at the time I stood up it was before twelve o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I have several clocks. That is one of the problems which Speakers have always had. This clock had actually struck exactly 12, which is why I rose to accept the question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

RETRACTION OF REMARKS IN STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, December 3, at a meeting of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, I made public a confidential U.S. document raising very serious questions about activities of the CIA and the U.S. intelligence community, directed against Canada in the mid-1970s. The CIA document in question ordered the intelligence community to obtain detailed information about Petro-Canada, including the possible acquisition of a United States oil company.

During the Monday meeting of the Justice Committee, I named two senior individuals at Petro-Canada as having possibly been tasked to obtain confidential information for the CIA. In naming these individuals, I was relying upon a confidential source of information and I availed myself of parliamentary immunity in the process.

While the tradition of parliamentary immunity is a long and important one, in retrospect I regret that I used my immunity to name these individuals. I have written to both men to express unreservedly my regret for having publicly named them in the Justice Committee.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I wish at this time to issue a complete and unequivocal retraction of the allegations I made and unreservedly apologize to the two individuals involved, Mr. Frederick Rayer and Mr. Robert Foulkes, for the hardship that this has undoubtedly caused them.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of order with respect to the business of the House.

We have had the usual amicable and fruitful consultation between House Leaders which has allowed us to determine the business, I believe, by consensus and consent, at least until the end of today.

Therefore, I wish now to present to Your Honour and to the House a draft order of the business of the House for today. I believe you will find that there will be a predisposition to give unanimous consent to the presentation and acceptance of this draft order, as follows:

That the first Order of the Day to be called this day shall be the Order for the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-18, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, to amend an Act to amend the Criminal Code and to amend the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Act, the Excise Act, the Food and Drugs Act, the Narcotic Control Act, the Parole Act and the Weights and Measures Act, to repeal certain other Acts and to make other consequential amendments, and once called, it shall be deemed to have been agreed to without division;

That the second Order of the Day to be called this day, shall be the Order for the second reading and reference to a Committee of a Whole of Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Currency Act, provided that no more than one Member from each of the recognized Parties shall be permitted to speak no longer than 10 minutes, notwithstanding Standing Order 35(2), at the second reading stage of the said Bill, and that all questions necessary to dispose of the Bill at all stages shall then be deemed to have been adopted without division;

That the third Order of the Day to be called this day, shall be the Order for the second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority;

Provided that:

(i) notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 35(2), one Member from each Party shall be permitted to speak for twenty minutes and that no other Member be permitted to speak longer than ten minutes during the consideration of the second reading stage of the Bill;

(ii) when the debate on the motion for second reading has been completed, the motion shall be deemed to have been adopted without division;

(iii) at not later than 3:55 o'clock p.m. today the motion for the second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of the Bill shall be deemed to have been adopted without division and the House shall immediately proceed to consideration of the Bill in a Committee of the Whole;

(iv) during consideration of the Bill in a Committee of the Whole, a Minister of the Crown shall move an amendment thereto as follows:

"That Bill C-11 be amended by deleting line 5 at page 2 and substituting the following therefore: whole twelve billion dollars, as may be";

En français:

"que le projet de loi C-11 soit modifié en retranchant la ligne 6 à la page 2 et la remplacant par ce qui suit 'douze milliards de dollars, necessaires à la' ";

and that the said amendment shall be deemed adopted without debate or amendment; and

(v) at not later than 4:00 o'clock p.m. today every question necessary to dispose of all the remaining stages of the said Bill shall be deemed to have been adopted without division.

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, when Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, is passed the House shall immediately proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business No. 65.

Once this is disposed of, the House shall then stand adjourned.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say on behalf of the Official Opposition that the draft Order which was read to us by the Government House Leader represents the results of the discussions which have taken place among House Leaders. I would like to say that what is in the draft Order with respect to the borrowing Bill reflects the discussions as well of the various finance critics of our Party and, I think, of the New Democratic Party, as well as the Minister of State for Finance, for reducing the amount sought to be borrowed by the Government. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the House Leader for the Government is also going to make an additional undertaking with respect to the borrowing Bill.

I would also like to say that the result of the Order, if adopted by this House, will be to enable debate to take place, within the framework of consideration of the borrowing Bill, on the matter of universality of social programs.

I believe what has been presented to the House by the Government House Leader shows how, when the right approach is applied, the work of this House can be facilitated. In this context, Mr. Speaker, I would like to wish my hon. friend the compliments of the season. I can assure him that we will be working very hard to see that, if possible, this approach of co-operation continues so that when the next election comes, if things work out as we hope, we will both be House Leaders but on opposite sides of the House.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I cannot, frankly, join in the last sentiment. I would like first to acknowledge that the agreement which is before us is indeed the agreement which we reached. There is another aspect of it. Although it is not contained in the draft Order, it is an important component of the agreement we arrived at, that being that the Government has committed itself to bring forward, within two weeks of the introduction of its Budget in 1985, the borrowing requirements for the Government in order that we and the public of Canada can see within one time frame the Government's requirements with respect to its tax provisions, spending provisions and borrowing requirements.

I would like to say on behalf of my colleagues that this does afford an opportunity to accomplish all that we set out to accomplish. We do, however, believe that come the early part of 1985, a definitive debate on the question of universality will have to take place and we anticipate that that debate will take place after we receive from the Government the white paper which it promised would be provided to the House of Commons and to the public of Canada in order to facilitate the ongoing debate in the country about the future plans of the Government.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise at this point in time in response to the observations of both House Leaders concerning the amendment to the Bill relating to borrowing. Also I would advise the House and the people of Canada that when the Bill is passed in the form indicated in the draft Order, I can undertake on behalf of the Government of Canada that, no later than two weeks following the next Budget brought down by this Government, we will be tabling a borrowing Bill which will set out the balance of the borrowing requirements by the Government for the fiscal year 1985-86. That is, of course, conditional upon this Order receiving consent of the House at this time.

As far as the debate is concerned, we are dealing with a borrowing Bill and some people may have some observations on an important topic concerning the Bill in the final stages. Others may have quite different ideas as to what the important issues of this country are and will want to deal with the real issues; but we have left that to the discretion of individual Members. We hope to carry on and complete the debate in the course of the afternoon in accordance with this Order.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Does the Government House Leader have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have heard the terms of the motion. Before I put the motion there is one small matter the Chair must ask about. The Chair assumes it is the intent of this motion to, without saying it directly, deal with the amendment to Bill C-11, the six-month hoist.

Mr. Deans: All matters.

Mr. Speaker: May the Chair and table assume that it was the intention of this motion to state that that amendment would, with consent, be withdrawn?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the—

Mr. Deans: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry, Sir, there is one thing that strikes me in that request. I want to be sure that, in agreeing to the withdrawal, that will not inhibit any Member who may have spoken prior to the introduction of the six-month hoist from speaking again. In other words, those Members who spoke prior to the introduction of the six-month hoist will be entitled to enter the debate as if the six-month hoist provision remained in effect throughout the debate until the question is put at 3.55 p.m., or at whatever time the question is put.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, that seems to be reasonable.

Mr. Speaker: Since we are adopting an extraordinary procedure today I suppose it would not hurt to have another extraordinary procedure adopted. We will therefore assume—well, perhaps the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) will excuse me if I do not say we will assume that no one spoke. I think the way we will treat that for procedural purposes is that we will now deem there is an instruction that the six-month hoist amendment is to be withdrawn, with unanimous consent, at the very end of the debate.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Which I think achieves the purposes of the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, that does not get over the problem of someone who has spoken to the six-month hoist and who will then not be able to speak to the motion. You are not getting over the problem.

Mr. Speaker: What I was aksed to get over was the problem of people who have spoken before the amendment was moved. Does the Hon. Member want to confer with his House Leader?

Mr. Baker: No, I—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think it is the disposition of the respective House Leaders on behalf of their groups that, if a person wants to take part in the debate today, the fact that he or she will have spoken either on the main motion or the six-month hoist will not prevent them from doing so.

Mr. Speaker: Shall we adopt the motion as I indicated it would be adopted and assume that what the House wants to happen will happen?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Does that get around the problem? How the Table will deal with that is, well, the Table's problem! All I have to do at the moment is to ask the House whether it consents unanimously to the introduction. The House consents. Does the House adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEES

SUSPENSION OF PROVISIONS OF STANDING ORDER 69(1)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): I have a further point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: Not again, Ray.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We may be able to conclude the business of the country into 1986 if we have this kind of co-operation.

I have another straightforward matter that I would now like to bring to the House by way of unanimous consent. I have discussed and given the Opposition House Leaders this Order to facilitate the reconvening of committes following the recess of Christmas. Under the Standing Orders the Striking Committee is required once again to be reconstituted and go through the whole process of naming Members to the committees. It was thought to be more expeditious for us, and everyone will understand this, to put forward the following draft Order. I think you will find there will be unanimous consent and approval for the following:

> That the provisions of Standing Order 69(1) shall be suspended until 6:00 o'clock p.m. on Friday, December 20, 1985, or in any event at 6:00 o'clock p.m. on the last sitting day in 1985, provided that the recommendations contained in the first report of the Striking Committee concurred in on Friday, November 16, 1984 shall remain in effect until that time.

That would allow the presently constituted Standing Committees of the House of Commons to continue to function throughout the next year.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House consent to the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

TAX BREAKS FOR CORPORATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of residents of the Province of Ontario who request that this Parliament should this year, in 1984, enact legislation so that large corporations will receive tax breaks only in proportion to the number of net new jobs they have created, and that the breaks and jobs be reported quarterly to Parliament.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will answered today: Nos. 90 and 115.

[Text]

CANAGREX

Question No. 90 Mr. Porter:

1. What was the cost to the government of all aspects in establishing Canagrex?

2. What was the dollar value of export sales it was successful in closing?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Total expenditures, to October 31, 1984, in establishing CANAGREX amounted to $2,659,000.

2. When the Corporation began operations in the spring of 1984, policy focused on facilitating sales by bringing a willing buyer and seller into a negotiating position, rather than on purchasing products or selling for the corporation's account. Operating in this manner, CANAGREX was involved in negotiations leading to facilitation of sales worth $16 million. In addition, there were transactions in process worth a potential $100 million expected to be finalized by March 31, 1985.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL APPOINTMENTS

Question No. 115—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Has the mandate of the national committee responsible for advising Cabinet on political appointments been established and, if so (a) for what period of time (b) what is the salary range of each member?

2. What is the normal salary range for a member of an advisory council?

3. Was a study made by the government in order to determine the usefulness and necessity of such a committee?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): 1. No such committee exists.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 46 could made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 46 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION LOANS

Question No. 46: Mr. Howie:

Since March 1, 1983, did Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation or its subsidiaries make any loans to its employees and, if so, in each case (a) on what date was the loan (i) made (ii) due (b) what was the (i) amount of the loan (ii) interest rate charged (iii) purpose of the loan?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, why are the other questions not being answered?

[English]

Mr. Dick: There have been a number of other questions answered and we will answer the others as soon as possible in the new year. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that in the thirty-first Parliament some 18.5 per cent of the questions had been answered at this point in time; in the thirty-second Parliament it was 17.4 per cent; by the thirty-fourth sitting day of this Parliament, which is today, we have answered 21.6 per cent, which is better than the other two.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary would resolve in the new year to attempt to answer at least a few of the many, many questions that New Democrats have on the Order Paper.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just the ones that are worthwhile.

Mr. Dick: The reason they have not been answered is that they were not put on at the earliest stages as some of the other ones were. But I should point out that of the 32 questions from Conservative Members which have been answered, 30 were repeat questions from the last Parliament. Of the 13 answered for Liberals, five were in fact withdrawn. We will get on to that as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, December 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-18, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, to amend an Act to amend the Criminal Code and to amend the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Act, the Excise Act, the Food and Drugs Act, the Narcotic Control Act, the Parole Act and the Weights and Measures Act, to repeal certain other Acts and to make other consequential amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: If I remember the terms of the special Order, reading the Order has the effect of second reading.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Call it.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, the Bill stands referred to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

• (1220)

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services) moved that Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Currency Act, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Currency Act, is a simple one-clause Bill which permits the Royal Canadian Mint to mint a $20 silver coin. The purpose of allowing the Mint this ability is to launch the Olympic coin program which will provide some of the funds the federal Government has committed to the Calgary Winter Olympics.

It is the intention of the Mint, through this vehicle, to generate non-tax revenues in keeping with the commitment by the Government to the Calgary Olympics. This is proposed to be done by issuing 10 issues of a $20 silver coin containing one ounce of silver and one issue of a $100 22-carat gold coin containing one-half ounce of pure gold. That will be a maximum mintage, Mr. Speaker, of five million silver coins and 350,000 gold coins.

The Mint feels fairly confident that it will be able to sell a minimum of three million silver coins earning approximately $30 million for the Calgary Olympics. If they are totally successful and sell out the entire issue, $50 million will be raised for the Calgary Olympics.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Royal Canadian Mint is the largest seller of numismatic coins in the world. They have an impressive track record and I believe the House can have some confidence in their ability to meet their objective. It should also be pointed out for the benefit of the House that there is no financial risk to the Government in this program because all costs are related and deductible from the sale of coins.

The Royal Canadian Mint is confident that it can achieve this goal by 1988 with the launch of the first issue on September 1, 1985. I should thank the Opposition for its co-operation in this effort because it is important that the Mint have the ability to proceed with this program very quickly inasmuch as in 1988 there will be Summer Olympics in Seoul, Korea. They too will be launching a coin program so, in a sense, there is some competition there. It is useful for us to be first off the mark around the world. I should point out that the coins will be sold around the world.

The federal Government has committed $200 million of non-tax revenues to the Olympic Games. My colleague, the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek), is working very diligently to seek ways of raising the additional funds beyond this coin program. The Royal Canadian Mint is working with him to discover whether there are other means we can use. We are hopeful that we will find the means to raise the necessary funds to meet that commitment to the Calgary Olympics.

I should mention, Mr. Speaker, that of the $200 million which the federal Government has committed to the Calgary Olympics, $27.8 million will go towards the budgeted cost of the Olympic Saddledrome, an outstanding facility. The amount of $35 million will go toward the Olympic Oval at the University of Calgary. That is the only speed-skating oval in the world that will be covered. That will mean that the legacy of skill in speed-skating which Gaetan Boucher brought to Canada will be maintained through this magnificent facility. The amount of $62.2 million will go toward the Canada Olympic Park, $30 million will go toward the Olympic endowment program, and $45 million will go to the operating fund of OCO '88, the Calgary Olympic Organizing Committee.

My colleague the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport is working closely and harmoniously with the Calgary Olympic Committee. In this new era of co-operation all things are possible. We in the House can be very confident that, if we deliver on our promises, the Calgary 1988 Olympics will be a truly outstanding event in which all Canadians can take great pride as the world looks at us with some envy.

I again reiterate my thanks to the two opposition Parties for their co-operation in this effort. There are other details about the coin program which I have been asked by the Mint not to discuss because of the competitive nature of this business. I would certainly be willing to share any information on a confidential basis with any Members of the Opposition who would wish it. Should they wish, the Mint would certainly be prepared to give a briefing on the details of the program. When these coins come out they will be a work of art and I am sure that everyone in the House will want to buy some of those coins to contribute to the effort of raising that money.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be speaking in this debate on behalf of our Party. It will be my first opportunity, as Official Opposition critic for Supply and Services, to speak to a Bill introduced by the Minister. I therefore wish to thank the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) for asking me to be the Supply and Services critic.

It is unfortunate that the Minister . . . I am sorry. It seems the remark I was about to make would be unparliamentary. I would have liked to obtain answers to certain questions, and I hope the Minister will be able to reply later on.

[English]

There is quite a bit of history behind the Olympic coin program. We are informed that Olympic coins have been struck since 480 B.C. for Olympics at that time. Of course, they were not struck for the purpose of raising funds for the Olympics then. We are told that the first Olympic coins struck for the purpose of raising funds were in fact struck for the 1952 Helsinki Olympic Games. At that time the seigniorage, the net yield between the monetary value of the coin and the sale price of them, which was generated by the striking of those coins was of the order of $1 million.

The Minister has indicated to us today that the striking of these coins for the 1988 Olympics will generate a far greater amount of money. That is good. I do hope that the coins have the success which the Minister hopes they will to enable us to finance a good part of the Olympic Games. We all know of the coins that were struck and sold to benefit the 1976 Olympic Games. Those coins were sold for a number of years after the Games in order to generate the funds.

We phoned the Minister's office on a few occasions attempting to get more information on the coins, but I regret that the Minister's staff was not too forthcoming with information. I understand the Minister's explanation today about why we were unable to obtain all the information we were seeking. Hopefully we will be able, through briefings, to obtain further details on the Olympic program.

Our Party is very supportive of this Bill, Mr. Speaker. I understand that we have an agreement to keep the debate rather short, which I am about to do. In conclusion, I would like to take advantage of this occasion to wish the Minister a very merry Christmas and a happy reinstatement of the 1986 census.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I too will keep my comments very brief to allow us to get on to the important debate which is about to follow. We recognize that the Bill before us simply amends Part II of the schedule in the Currency Act which allows an increase in value of the Olympic coins. However, we do have two or three concerns about it. Since we will not have an opportunity to deal with these concerns in committee, I want to flag them so that the Minister or his officials may be able to deal with them.

I understand that it is the opinion of the Royal Canadian Mint with respect to potential sales of these coins that the world market is somewhat tense about Olympic issues generally. In the past they have been overminted and their consequent value is obviously affected. This makes it very difficult to know the actual value of the coins in potential markets.

We want to ensure that the production of the coins are kept in line. This is true particularly when one considers that the American issue and distribution in Canada fell significantly below their expectations. Therefore, since this is basically viewed as a souvenir and a way to support the Olympics, we want to ensure that the Minister takes care that the production is in fact a realistic line.

The Minister has indicated that these coins will be sold globally. I would ask the Minister to inform the House as soon as possible as to which company will receive the rights for the distribution of these coins on the international market? A French company worked with the Americans and the Royal Bank represented American distribution in Canada. I think it would be appropriate for us to know who would be the representative in terms of global distribution.

I want to suggest another aspect of the revenues that will be generated from the sale of these coins. The Minister pointed out that these are tailored specifically for a variety of capital projects for the 1988 Olympics. If the sales go particularly well I suggest that we could see some extension beyond that traditional figure associated with the support of amateur sports in Canada.

On behalf of my Party, I wish the Minister well in his endeavour to ensure that adequate funds flow to Canadian support for our Olympics in 1988.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Order made earlier this day, Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Currency Act, is now deemed to have been read a second time, considered in Committee of the Whole, reported without amendment, concurred in at the report stage and read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85 (No. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, December 6, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Althouse (p. 948).

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we asked for this debate for a very simple reason. Canadians are confused, upset and frightened by the conflicting statements on the future of our social programs coming from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his senior Ministers.

[Translation]

The purpose of this debate is to determine, once and for all, what the Government intends to do about family allowance, old age security pensions and other social programs that for many decades have provided security for Canadian men and women.

[English]

And we are not the only ones who want straight answers. As we saw in the House yesterday, Conservative back-benchers are asking their Minister where the Government stands on this issue.

These are basic, fundamental and essential programs. Every parent who has raised a child knows the difference that the baby bonus makes in helping defray part of the ever-increasing cost of their children's clothing, education, shoes and food. Everyone 65 years and over knows how important the old age pension cheque is to help put a roof over one's head and to put food on the table, at this time of the year maybe even to pick up a few presents for the grandchildren.

Those approaching retirement age have a legitimate interest in knowing whether they will receive their legitimate pension for which they have paid tax and for which they have contributed throughout a lifetime of work in this country. Anybody who has ever been sick knows how important it is to have a universally accessible medical system. If you have been on your back in hospital for a day or a few weeks, Mr. Speaker, the last thing you need is the added burden of worry and anguish about doctor and hospital bills which can run into the thousands of dollars.

The philosophy behind these programs has been a Liberal philosophy. Every one of these programs has been brought in by Liberal Governments, defended and expanded by Liberals and protected by the Liberal Party.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the struggle to protect the universality of social programs is continuing today and is being carried on by the Liberals. I can assure you that we in the Liberal caucus and the Liberal Party will continue this struggle with all the determination and energy we can muster.

[English]

The Party that we had to fight against to bring in some of these programs is the same Party we are fighting today to maintain these programs. The Prime Minister, his Party and his Ministers have been all over the map. In 1976 when he was a candidate for the leadership of his Party, the Prime Minister said that abolishing the principle of universality in social legislation would eliminate a great deal of waste and bureaucracy. He advocated a five-year freeze on increases in social spending when he ran for the leadership again in 1983. He said again that he wanted to review Old Age Security benefits.

In the book which he published entitled Where I Stand he said on page 19 that "Doing away with indexed pensions and benefits would produce a desirable result".

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and former Minister of Finance of this country said when he was finance critic in opposition that he wanted to review social programs and that eliminating universal programs such as baby bonuses and old age pensions would help reduce the deficit. In March of this year the Prime Minister said that he had no hesitation in reviewing the concept of universality.

Then came the election. The old record came off and was replaced with a new disc. It went right to the top of the charts. For the purposes of the election, suddenly universal social programs became for the Conservative Party, in those famous words, "a sacred trust not to be tampered with". But that was just for the campaign. The Minister of Finance's mini-budget that was brought in just three days after this Parliament assembled raises questions and alternatives to universal social programs. It does not say that those programs will not be touched. It does not say that they will not be tampered with. There is no mention of a sacred trust in that document.

On December 13 the Minister of Finance was quoted as saying that "upper and middle income social programs cannot be afforded today". Those were his words. This is a clear admission that the sacred trust of the Prime Minister and his Party was just a temporary commitment. It is a clear admission that they now intend to do exactly what they promised they would never do. It is a clear indication that they in fact fully intend to tamper with and dislocate and dismantle the universality of our social programs.

[Translation]

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) finally admitted that he and his party hid their real plans from Canadians during the election campaign. They have admitted they had a hidden agenda, whose first item consisted in breaching the universality of our social programs.

[English]

His rationale is that had he revealed his secret intentions, the hidden agenda of the Conservative Party, we in the Liberal Party would have told Canadians the truth. The Minister of Finance says that we played the politics of fear. I say that it is a pathetic excuse for not telling the truth. I say that it is, rather, from the Government of today, the politics of deception.

Of course we on this side of the House would have told Canadians the truth. I make no apologies, Mr. Speaker, for doing that during the campaign, and now again in the House for bringing the issue before you and the Canadian public.

It is no great surprise for me, Mr. Speaker, nor for the Members of my Party what the Tory Government is now doing. We said that the Government had a secret agenda. We were right. We said the Tories could not be trusted to fight for universal programs. We were right. But now it is coming as a big surprise to Canadians because this Government did not talk about the real agenda during the campaign.

We knew what the Tories thought of the social programs. They told us in their policy convention in 1982 and we know where the pressure is coming from to end universality now: it is coming from Members of the Conservative Party. At that last Tory policy convention, 92 per cent of the delegates were against increases in universal family allowances; 62 per cent of the Conservative delegates were against increasing universal old age pensions; 82 per cent were against increasing medicare benefits; 65 per cent were against increasing the guaranteed income supplement; 92 per cent were against increasing unemployment insurance benefits; 65 per cent were against increasing the child tax credit and 79 per cent were against increasing money for day care.

We knew that Canadians would be in for this shock when inevitably they saw the true face of this Government in action. Now, Sir, the Tories are showing their true colours. Now we know that a new era which they promised is not going to be the one they talked about in the election campaign; it is going to be the one they did not talk about in the election campaign.

I believe, and the Members of my Party share this conviction, that this is an essential issue before this House because it is a question of trust and credibility. Governments and political Parties must do what they say they will do and must not do what they say they will not do. Governments have an obligation to be honest with the public. This goes to the very heart of the democratic system. If the Prime Minister wonders why his and his Ministers' statements on this vital question for millions and millions of Canadians have elicited such an energetic response from this side of the House, he need look no further than the words I have just spoken. It is a matter of trust, a matter of credibility and a matter of confidence in government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why are we so committed to universality? It is because Canadians believe in equality. Canadians believe that all individuals, no matter what their social status, deserve equitable treatment. If you segregate services, if you ghettoize services, if you direct services only to the needy or the poor, then those services exclusively meant for the poor become poor services.

Universal access means that all individuals in Canada are treated the same. It means that the rich man and the poor man sit in the same doctor's office, receive their skills in the same fashion, wait in the same line and will be covered by the same fee and the same treatment.

Mr. Keeper: What about women?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Naturally enough; it covers a broad range of people. Universality has been a unifying force in our society. Everyone, no matter what his income, has a stake in these programs and we are all interested in protecting these programs.

We do not make improvements in our social security system by altering, tinkering and playing around with the principle of universal access. We accomplish that through improvements in the equity and fairness of the general tax system.

Preserving the social contract—because it is a matter of contract—is not an empty, rhetorical phrase. It means something. It means that those who may have contributed through a lifetime of work in this country, a lifetime of paying taxes, are entitled to the benefits of that contribution, to the benefits of the pension that they can statutorily expect, to the benefits also of those allowances that they can statutorily expect. In Canada that means universality of those allowances, namely old age pensions and medicare. By injecting uncertainty and confusion of where they stand and what they do with the payments under these programs, the Government is destabilizing and endangering that social contract which is based on trust and legitimate expectation.

[Translation]

The Conservatives are trying to backtrack and change the rules of the game. Can Canadian men and women count on these benefits, yes or no? Are single parents going to get their family allowance cheques, yes or no?

[English]

Will our elderly pensioners get their cheques or not? Will there be an income cut-off of $26,000, or less, or more, beyond which no benefits will be given? The answers to these questions given by the Prime Minister, by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), I believe when properly tabulated and analysed, will put the Government in a straight-jacket and in a box. They have expressed reaffirmation apparently in universality of delivery. They have said there is no tax-back. When you look through the options available, I fear that if they are going to fulfil any kind of commitment, it really means a general tax increase.

I would urge Members of the House during the recess to examine the statements that have been given to us during the past week and a half. We asked the Government to move up the date of the Budget so that Canadians could find out whether they are going to get benefits or not. The Government refused. We asked the Prime Minister to ask his Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare to accelerate the publication of those directional papers on family allowances and pensions so Canadians could know the intentions of their Government. The Government refused. I suspect the partial reasons for that refusal, and perhaps the main reason, is that those papers, in the light of what has been said in this House in respect to questions that have been strongly directed in this House, will have to be rewritten by the Minister to reflect the views of the Opposition and the views of the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I asked the Prime Minister to give Canadians at the very least a clear, simple statement of the intention of his Government. He refused. Instead, Sir, he accuses us of nit-picking. I refer to Hansard for December 14, at page 1237, in this respect. All I can say to the Prime Minister is that if this Government continues to create confusion and mistrust on programs affecting millions of Canadians, he had better get accustomed to our nit-picking because we intend to keep talking, and talking, and talking on this issue until it is clarified once and for all.

Instead of answers, all we are getting in response to serious questions on this fundamental and vital subject is a series of one-liners and jokes. I want to tell the Prime Minister that this House is not a vaudeville stage. This House is not a burlesque theatre. We have an obligation to our constituents and to all Canadians to live up to the enormous trust they have given us by sending us here to represent them. We have an obligation to have well informed and reasoned discussion on the question before us. We cannot have informed discussion when the Government will only hint at what its intentions are. We cannot have informed discussion if the Government will not answer simple questions but instead play frivolous and unbecoming games with an issue that touches millions upon millions of Canadians.

This debate came about because we on this side of the House in the Official Opposition put pressure on the Government one way or the other, in the budget, in a statement or even in an answer to questions, to clear up the ambiguity and keep its commitment not to tamper with the universal social programs. This debate will not end, Mr. Speaker, not today, not next year, until there is a clear, unmistakable, credible, believable and unassailable commitment from this Government that it will not tamper with the universality of the social programs in this country, which are counted on by millions upon millions of Canadians. They are part of the social contract, part of the glue, the adhesion and the unity that have made this country a very decent place to live.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to participate in this debate. I just regret that the debate has become a necessity. As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has just indicated, we on this side of the House, both opposition Parties in this context, have called for this debate. We called for a serious discussion during the course of this week precisely because what was regarded as a permanent part of the social and political life of this country, namely our existing social programs and the principle of universality on which they were grounded, has been called into question. Indeed, it has been threatened by what I can only describe in this context as a Government which is insensitive and uncaring about the universality principle.

● (1250)

In the time period which we have allocated by agreement among all Parties, I want to begin to put this debate in perhaps a broader context than the debate has normally been dealt with, certainly in Question Period. Question Period does not exactly lend itself to philosophical speculation. The kind of debate which is just beginning this day, the last day before the Christmas break, and which will be resumed in the New Year, could only be taking place in a modern society.

There are Members in all Parties who are not only members of the Christian faith but of others. I say to my colleagues that if we were back in medieval times, this debate would seem absolutely and utterly ridiculous. In the pre-modern or pre-market society, it was assumed that all men and women had a set of reciprocal rights and responsibilities. The goods and the benefits which were to be distributed were not to be done on the basis of a market. Distribution was to be done on the basis of a cash connection, that is, if one has the cash one could buy it and if not one has to go to charity. That came later.

My key point is that not long ago in the history of humanity there was an assumption, or certainly a core notion of Christendom, that a social contract existed among members of society to share in its benefits. Along came the market mechanism which effectively broke down the set of reciprocal rights and obligations in society. We saw developed in the 17th, 18th and 19th Centuries a view of society which had radically been transformed over that period of time. Everything was taken out of a set of communal or shared responsibilities and put into the market.

Then we saw a reaction because we had seen what it led to. On one hand it led to the creation of the greatest amount of wealth in the history of humanity. Of course, I am talking about the economic system known as capitalism. In that development we saw fantastic growth. In terms of the productive capacity of the human society there had been nothing like it in the past. Also we saw human beings relegated to being merely instruments of the market itself. Then we saw great collections of poverty. We saw people left out entirely. As a result there was the response about which I am talking in the 19th Century. Gradually it was said that we should not leave our children to the market. In the history of every European country child labour laws were passed. They became universal. There was the quaint notion that people under a certain age had to be protected by laws in society and that the market should not interfere with their lives.

Also we saw a radical notion during that period. Elementary education was deemed to be an essential social right. It was to be universally available, not simply a right of the rich. It was to be made available to every child in society. It was argued then, why we should provide publics schools? Of course, in England public schools were really private ones. However, it was said that what we call public schools were unnecessary for the rich because they could afford to create their own. At one point it was finally said that the state should provide schools for the poor. At that point the classic debate, in my judgment, began to be joined. It began to be argued that we should create an elementary system of education. That took place in this country as well. It was a system financed by public taxes which was not only available to the poor, but was a universally available elementary education system for rich, poor and middle-income Canadians.

Returning to the history of our own country, lo and behold, rich, poor and middle-income children have by and large attended the same schools. We took that out of the market. We said that it was part of what it meant to grow up and be Canadian.

I will jump through a lot of history now and come to the past few decades. There was a gradual evolution by which we took more things out of the market and left many things, appropriately, to the market. We took some things out and said that we should redefine our nation of citizenship. The Leader of the Opposition was absolutely right when he said that Liberal Governments introduced these programs. They were in power. However, he would also acknowledge that in the main it was the predecessors of my Party in the CCF who led the debate. First they forced the debate for pensions. Then they led the debate for medicare and in a number of other benefits. I do not want to be presumptuous or ridiculous by suggesting that members of other Parties were not involved. Of course they were, but they were in the minority. They eventually became the majority in the Liberal Party which governed at that time.

The arguments we heard in the past were exactly what we are hearing now from those who want to dismantle these programs—that pensions were not needed for everyone, that they were only needed for the poor or those who really could not look after themselves. Small "c" and big "c" Conservatives of the day were persuaded that maybe it should be a universal right, not just relegated to the poor. Then came medicare, and I remember the arguments when I was relatively young. I remember Conservative arguments—they were coming from Liberals as well—in Saskatchewan asking why we needed state medicare. Originally they suggested that medicare should be provided as a charity for those who could not obtain medical care. They indicated that the rich could afford it and asked why we should have it. Eventually, not only a majority of my Party but the majority of other Parties came to accept the idea that we should change the market mechanism and that what it meant to grow up in a decent society was to have something like a pension, a medical plan or elementary education as a matter of right for all Canadians.

That was the key argument of my Party in the past, it is today and will be in the future. Our view of the universality principle is that there are certain goods and benefits of society to which all Canadians are entitled. Whether one is a banker, a cab driver, a logger or whatever occupation, whether one works inside or outside the home, all Canadians contribute and all Canadians should have them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It is part of our ongoing definition of what it means to have a civilized concept of citizenship. It is a concept in which my Party believes profoundly.

I should like to give three quick arguments in favour of the principle of universality. First, the universality principle is not simply a matter of dollars and cents. I want to underline that. In the most sketchy fashion something has been said about the history of humanity from the medieval period to the present. It was sketchy indeed, but the principles involved—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There may be an inclination to allow the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), to continue his speech, which will last only 10 more minutes if Your Honour will not see the clock.

• (1300)

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That is correct, Mr. Speaker. I understand that when the Leader of the New Democratic Party has concluded, we will adjourn for lunch and reconvene at two o'clock, at which time I intend to take up the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather there is unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I begin by thanking my colleagues, the Leader of the Opposition and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), for their consideration. I want to say publicly what I have already said to the Minister, that I deeply regret that I will not be able to be here for his contribution to this important debate because of another commitment.

I was saying that there are three arguments that I want to make in favour of this important principle of universality, which has become imbedded as part of our Canadian tradition. First, the very nature of universality brings people together instead of driving them apart. Society is already excessively divided in terms of income and regions. This produces tension, not co-operation. Sharing in a common program, not provided by government but provided by themselves as a community through the instrument of government, is a very important way of creating a co-operative sense of community in society.

There are two negative aspects of the question that I would like to address as well. I plead with the Minister of National Health and Welfare to consider this very seriously before legislation is brought in to change the principle of universality. For social programs to continue to have the primary financial benefit that they are intended to have in terms of finances for the poor, they need to have as active participants and recipients middle-income Canadians.

In a society that is governed by the majority, in order to maintain support programs for the poor, the majority must be seen to be beneficiaries in some way of those programs. That is absolutely crucial. If the majority begin to sense that they are being left out, that they are being set aside, they will not continue the strong support that has been built up over past decades for these programs.

I cannot emphasize too much the importance of this. If we begin to take these benefits away from middle-income Canadians, we begin to undermine these programs so essential in dollar terms to the poor. I want to say in passing that this does not assume that the majority of people are selfish. It merely assumes that the majority of human beings in any society are not altruistic, that they are not by nature in their ongoing disposition charitable. It is very important to understand that. Men and women are prepared to do their share, to make their contribution to the common good on a continuing basis if they see themselves as at least getting some benefit from those programs.

The third point I want to make is certainly related to this. If we break up the universal nature of these programs, we begin to ghettoize society. We begin to create within our different programs a two class system, the recipients and others who finance the programs. I regret, as I am sure all Members of this House do, that when you go into a community some Canadians talk about recipients of welfare in quite a pejorative way. There is an unfortunately negative regard for many people who receive welfare even though we well know that 99 per cent of the welfare recipients totally deserve it and totally wish they did not have to get it.

My concern is very much that if we begin to cut out middle-income Canadians, we will ghettoize more and more Canadians in terms of their perception of membership in their communities. Side by side we will have two ordinary working people, one of whose income may be marginally greater than the other, and one will get the benefit of the social progams and the other will not. Inevitably that will tend to create among those who are paying for the program but not getting any benefit—not the rich but just the middle income people—a sense of resentment toward those who do receive it.

I say to the Minister that we do not want to create more tensions in society. We do not want to create more ghettoes. We want to build a greater sense of community and a greater sense of co-operation. That is why we need these universal programs.

I want to conclude with this and perhaps be a little more partisan than I have been up to this point. In the debates in the House this week, the Prime Minister and indeed his Ministers have created a spurious straw man form of argument. They said that if we are against what they are doing as a Government, we are not in favour of assisting the poor. They said that all they are doing is aimed exclusively at the objective of getting more revenue to help those in society who need it most.

The Prime Minister does not need to lecture those on this side of the House, in particular the Members of my Party who have been fighting for the poor and the better distribution of income all their political lives. The beginning assumption is that the Government needs more revenue. I agree we need more revenue if we are going to do more for the pensioners, those in poverty and the unemployed whose benefits are running out, as well as the handicapped who need the assistance of those of us who can afford to pay. But there is another option. We do not have to destroy social programs of earlier generations which all parties worked to build up. We do not need to put asunder all this useful construction in modern Canadian history. We can look at all those in society who can now afford to pay more in terms of income tax.

I say to the Minister that there are two options. More revenue can be generated by destroying the principle of universality and allocating that exclusively to the poor. I have already argued against that approach. There are many Canadian men and women who have a lot of money, in excess of any sense of equity of what they should have if we had a fair tax system.

If the Minister wants more revenue now, he should look at the change in the tax system introduced in 1981 by the then Liberal Minister of Finance, Mr. MacEachen. He reduced the marginal tax rate of the rich, as the Minister well knows. By bringing in that reduction in the marginal tax rate of the rich, he lost $1.7 billion of revenue to the treasury. If the Minister wants more money, I can tell him where to get $1.7 billion. Just re-establish the tax rate that the rich used to pay and should be paying now.

Second, the Prime Minister, in that all too charming way we have grown accustomed to in debate, said when talking about a minimum tax that the rich should pay and pay handsomely. This is not a glib debating point for me. Everyone else in this country pays a lot in taxes. They work hard. Men and women, farmers, auto workers, cab drivers, work hard and pay plenty of taxes. I find it offensive that there are still thousands earning over $50,000 a year who do not pay any taxes because our system of taxation, which is riddled with loopholes, makes that possible.

I say to the Minister he should fill in one reform, and the Prime Minister agreed to it. Bring in a minimum tax rate of 20 per cent for all those earning over $50,000 and you will get an additional $400 million to $500 million in revenue. I repeat, that is not over-taxing the rich but simply taxing the rich who now are not paying a cent in taxes.

I conclude by saying that on the whole we have had a positive evolution and development of community-building social programs, whether they be pensions, family allowances or medicare, which all Canadians are proud of. We have all shared them in the past, and we had better continue sharing them on the basis of equalty in the future. In the meantime, if the Government needs more revenue, all it has to do is make those in our society who are not paying their share pay their share. The Government should take that income and do with it—particularly at Christmas—what ought to be done. The Government should ensure that the money goes to the poor in Canada who need it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 11 minutes after one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1.11 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on the review of social programs announced by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in November, in his economic statement. These programs are interrelated and are delivered through both the tax system and as direct expenditures of the Government.

It is all too easy in discussing these programs to become confused and to sow confusion. In the course of debate in this House on the review of social programs, a number of assumptions have gained widespread currency which I fear have added to the confusion rather than clarified the purpose, nature and scope of the review. I would like to address some of those assumptions this afternoon.

First, there is the assumption made by many Hon. Members, especially Liberal Hon. Members, that under past Governments, and especially Liberal Governments, there was never any change to programs affecting the elderly or families with children except to increase benefits under those programs. That is simply not the case, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that on four separate occasions in the past eight years, the former Government, without consultation, brought in budgets which changed the laws governing old age pensions, family allowances, the child tax exemption, the child tax credit and the former dependent child tax reduction, in order to lower or eliminate benefits in one or a combination of those programs. On only two of those occasions were savings redirected into other child benefit programs and elderly benefit programs.

In 1976, family allowances were deindexed for one year. There was no offsetting change in any child benefit program. That step adversely affected every family in Canada who had children. Poor families were not cushioned from that blow.

In 1978, to provide funds to establish the child tax credit, normal indexing for family allowances in 1979 was eliminated and the family allowance benefit itself was reduced 22 per cent from its 1978 level; from $25.68 per month per child to $20 per month per child. In addition, a $50 a year tax reduction for each dependent child was eliminated from the tax code.

In 1982, a partial deindexation was applied to old age pensions and family allowances through the six and five program. Persons eligible for the GIS were cushioned from this step so that their total OAS-GIS benefits remained fully indexed, and there was a $50 per child increase in the maximum child tax credit for the 1982 tax year.

In 1983, the level of net family income at which the full child tax credit benefit begins to be reduced was frozen permanently at $26,330, instead of being indexed to inflation as was formerly the case. At the same time, the level of the child tax exemption was also frozen permanently at $710 per child rather than being indexed to inflation. There were no offsetting increases in any other child benefit programs to cushion these steps, which will gradually reduce the number of families eligible for the child tax credit and reduce the real value of the child tax exemption for all families with taxable income.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we see that on four relatively recent occasions benefits have been reduced in programs now under review. In two cases, savings made were redirected on an income-tested basis to other programs in the respective systems. In the other two cases they were pure restraint measures designed to benefit the federal treasury.

Leaving aside the question of the wisdom of those steps, it is clear that the opposition Parties agree that none of these changes destroyed universality, even though benefits in the universal family allowances and old age pensions were affected. The very accusation that we want to undermine universality accepts implicitly that it is still there to be undermined. So when we raise a new, and open up to public consultation, the question of whether, without disturbing the principle of universality, benefits within the child tax benefits and elderly benefits system can be reformed so as to be more equitable in their impact, I fail to understand the alarm of Hon. Members opposite.

Do they seriously believe that the Canadian people will swallow a double standard, under which what a Liberal Government has done in four different budgets without consultation is accepted as being consistent with universality, while similar initiatives, when put on the table for public discussion by a Progressive Conservative Government, become a clear and present danger to the integrity of our social programs?

I must conclude, Mr. Speaker, that the real fear of the opposition Parties is not, in the words of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), that we will "dismantle" these social programs, but that we will make them more rational and equitable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It is for the Party's political purposes that it wants to foster the false assumption that any change to the status quo will erode these systems and threaten the principle of universality. Why? It is not because the existing systems are perfect. Hon. Members opposite know, and we know, that many elements of these systems are in fact regressive. The child tax exemption, the age exemption, and the pension income deduction, increase their benefits as family income rises. Many groups and individuals whose commitment to progressive social policy cannot be questioned, such as the Canadian Council on Social Development, the National Council of Welfare and the National Advisory Council on the Status of Women, have all pointed out for many years these and other anomalies and inequities in the system, and have called for their reform.

The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition Parties are willing to keep these perverse features of the status quo undisturbed if that is the price of preventing a Progressive Conservative Government from demonstrating that it, too, can implement progressive social reforms. What the opposition Parties want to preserve is not universality but the false image of our Party as the enemy of the poor and the disadvantaged. That is their political goal and that is dishonest.

I am pleased that this debate is taking place in the House today, that once and for all, while the opposition Parties might not agree, at least the Canadian people, who I know have the sensibility to understand, will know that yes, Progressive Conservative Party members also have families who will grow old. They also get ill. We also have compassion. We also are led by those ideals. I hope for once Hon. Members opposite will be quiet and not say that it is only they who understand people, only they who understand compassion and have a heart. We do, too.

• (1410)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: I think we touched a nerve.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Yes, you did, because it was a dishonest approach you were taking.

Mr. McKenzie: As phony as a $3 bill.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): In doing so, Mr. Speaker, they have themselves become prisoners of the status quo and the enemy of free debate on these programs. They have locked themselves into a posture where they are, in effect, saying that before the Government even begins to consult with the Canadian public on these programs it must either promise not to change them at all or it must tell them in advance precisely what action it will take to change those programs, what persons will benefit and who will bear the burden.

I saw that demonstrated today by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) when she said: "Forget about consultation, forget about speaking to the people or the provincial Governments; just do it". That is not the way we will approach it. If any evidence was needed that this review was necessary and that consultation was valid, that to ask the Canadian people was purposeful, I saw it demonstrated today in Question Period when she said that we do not need to consult, that we should just get on with it.

The absurdity of these demands, considered in the cold light of day, is obvious, Mr. Speaker. It is legitimate for the Opposition to ask on what principles these reviews will be carried out. We have stated these principles and I want to state them very clearly again. First, all savings generated from any changes will be redistributed to social programs and will not be applied to deficit reduction. Secondly, there will be no income test before family allowances or old age pensions are paid, and benefits from old age pensions will be taxed no differently from any other form of income.

To go beyond this is to designate preferences for particular mechanisms of living up to these principles which would be to foreclose legitimate debate on these programs and their relation to the tax system. We believe that the advice of the Canadian people can help us devise better methods of implementing these principles than those we would have been able to devise without that advice. I realize this might be a difficult approach to grasp for Members opposite, that a Government would not rush blindly into changing basic social programs without seeking public input. But it is an approach to which this Government is committed and which it will follow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): For example, we do not agree with the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) that any surtax on family allowances, no matter what rate is applied or at what level, is an idea that is not legitimately open for discussion. What we are saying to the Opposition is simply this. Let us have a reasonable debate. Put your points forward clearly. Express them forcefully. But do not put behind motives on which you have been elected for so long, trying to create fear and to say that somehow you have a corner on the concept of compassion. Do not attempt to use as legitimate political action the idea that by creating fear you can somehow get re-elected. I do not believe that that is a legitimate approach.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): For example, the Leader of the Opposition said today that a program directed to the poor is a poor program. Hon. Members nod their heads. I ask them: The guaranteed income supplement program is paid to whom?

Senior citizens below a certain income. Is that a poor program? The spouses' allowance and the program we want to advance for widows and widowers, widows who get nothing between the age of 60 and 64, is that a poor program? I ask you: Is that a poor program?

Mr. Lapierre: It is a poor program.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It is a poor program?

Mr. Lapierre: How about divorced and single people?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why did you not do something, then?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, what about the Canada Assistance Plan, is that a poor program?

Ms. Copps: You are going to cut it out anyway.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That also is not the case.

Ms. Copps: That is what you said in your directional paper.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I really should not respond to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) because when one is hunting elephants one does not follow rabbit tracks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, with about the Canada Assistance Plan, is that a poor program?

Mr. Lapierre: It is, because people have to—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What I am hearing from the Liberals is that because of the nature of these programs they would eliminate them. Well, we will not because we want to help people who are not as wealthy as the rest of us.

Another point I want to make to the House and the Canadian people is something I said on November 15, but it obviously has to be repeated. Let me conclude by putting on the record some remarks I made on universality and on the process which I intended to deliver in the Throne Speech but did not complete because of time constraints.

At that time I offered two possible definitions of the meaning of universality. One might be that all social programs should be available to everyone regardless of need. Defenders of that definition, if there are any, must realize that they are not defending universality since no such thing presently exists except in the three programs I mentioned in my November 15 speech. The GIS and the spouses' allowance are two programs for which the basis of eligibility is need.

Another definition of universality might see social programs providing the same level of after-tax benefits to all recipients. Defenders of that definition must realize that there is no such thing as universality under that definition. The progressive tax system, which is not open to serious question as far as I know, ensures that benefits are taxed at a higher rate for high-income earners than for low or middle-income earners.

Therefore we want to create the opportunity, because we believe this is the best way to reach the right decision, for Canadians to consult with us. You might argue, Mr. Speaker, that consultation is dangerous. It is in the sense of believing that you have all the right answers and you are afraid that someone might give you an answer that is even better. Well, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to having good answers from Canadians. I look forward to Members in this House giving us good answers through this consultation process. I will consider them. What I will not consider are supposed answers based on short-term political gain.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Distortions.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I will not accept answers based on distortions. I will not accept answers which might be seen to be giving a short-term advantage to the Liberal Party, for example, over the NDP in their constant struggle as to who is number two. I will not do that. What I will do is listen to answers where Canadians will be better served, where they will have dignity and live independently, and where the Government of Canada, within the constraints it has, can meet those challenges. That is my role, that is my commitment to the House, and I hope it is understood from this moment on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would remind all Members that from now on speeches are limited at 10 minutes. The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith).

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, since 10 minutes is not a very long period of time I wish to divide my speech into two parts; one on the substance of the issue here before the House, and the other on the process by which the Government has chosen to debate this most important issue. The process up until now has led to nothing but a disservice to the debate, with all respect to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). In essence, because of the confusion on the front benches of his own Government, he did a disservice to the Canadian public and this Parliament.

This morning when the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) rose to speak in the House of Commons, he left the impression that it was the New Democratic Party which was responsible, in large part, for all of the social legislation that has been enacted in this country in its first 117 years of existence. I am not going to suggest that by any stretch of the imagination any one political Party in the country has a monopoly on virtue or truth. However, I will say that the Liberal legacy is one that we can all be proud of as Canadians. For the majority of the time in the last 70 years the Liberal Party has sat on the government side. It was the Liberal Party which brought in family allowance, Old Age Security and the pension system in this country.

I would like to remind the House of one thing so that when we open up this debate some time in the New Year we will have the parameters of the debate in perspective. Every time a universal program has been created it has been on the basis of age requirement or the existence of a family. It goes to all people regardless of income level. As my Leader stated this morning, it is very true that if you design systems and programs only for the poor, they will ultimately become poor programs.

The concept of universality understood by Canadians is not the one which I have just indicated. There have been times in the past when the government of the day, usually a Liberal Government, has decided that certain groups in our society who we feel need help more than others have had certain programs targeted to them. If one studies the concept of universality one will see that there is a horizontal program of services available to all. In addition to that, there are specifically designed vertical programs in the system which feed money to the people in our society who need help the most. The child tax credit is one of those areas, as is the guaranteed income supplement. I would like to remind Members opposite that when we wanted to target certain groups in our society, that was done by way of an add-on to the spending in the social envelope. It was never done on the backs of middle-income people. That is an important difference in this debate.

I will now discuss how I feel about the mandate which was given to the Conservative Government on September 4 and the way in which I feel the Government has misled the Canadian public. If we are going to have a proper debate on this issue it is fundamental that all Members on the front bench speak the truth in this building with one voice. In that regard I have some serious doubts about the intent of the Conservative Government. I do not underestimate the mandate that was given to the Conservative Party on September 4. Two hundred and eleven seats is a pretty massive rejection. With the 211 seats which the Government won came a responsibility to provide good legislation and good government.

Let us not go back to the rhetoric, but on September 4 the Canadian public did not give the Government a mandate to dismantle the social programs built up by decades of Liberal administrations in the country. In the rhetoric of the election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was quoted as saying that universality was a sacred trust never to be broken. He also said during the election campaign that, if anything, they were going to augment social programs to help those in our society who need help more than others. After September 4 the Government indicated in A New Direction for Canada that it wants to have a good, open, honest debate on the issue.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has stood up and said that he intends to use some of the money saved in this review of social programs for deficit reduction. His Prime Minister is quoted as having said that any money saved from this review of social programs will be redirected only to those people in our society who need help the most. In committee the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that one of the options still under consideration was to use the money saved in that review to help reduce the size of the deficit. That is the first confusion.

Second, the Minister of Finance is saying that he is considering a specific tax-back on the benefits available to the elderly and through family allowance. Yet that is consequently denied by his own Minister of Health, who said that rather than looking at a direct tax-back the Government is looking at the possibility of an over-all general tax increase to cover the cost of those programs. That creates more confusion in the minds of the public. A member of the Cabinet who is the Leader of the Government in the Senate says that means tests are still on the table for discussion at Cabinet. That is reported in the Hansard debates of the Senate. That adds more confusion to the matter.

I will now come back to what the Government is actually intending to do. It is confusing to Members of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties and it also, as I mentioned in Question Period this morning, causes confusion for Government back-benchers who do not understand if the Government is clear in the direction in which it wants the debate to continue.

The Government document A New Direction for Canada indicates that some $8.3 billion of government revenues is redirected into old age pensions. Of that $8.3 billion only $450 million is recovered in tax. I would like to point out that the reason there is only $450 million of tax-back is that 95 per cent of Canadians who receive old age pension cheques are in the lower income levels on a 5 per cent marginal tax rate. I question the value of a review of that system when the individuals who will be subject to that review have so little to live on.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare was quoted as having said that the review would be of families with incomes between $26,000 and $41,000. The Prime Minister was talking about the nine bank presidents in the country who earn around $500,000 a year. There is a great difference between a bank president and a family who earns between $26,000 and $41,000 a year. The average International Nickel Company worker in Sudbury, the average worker in Hamilton and the average worker in metro Toronto earn $26,000 a year. I do not think the Minister of Health is serious when he says that a family which earns $26,000 a year is perhaps getting too much in terms of family allowance.

I said at the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, that no one in the House has a monopoly on compassion or virtue. We have as much concern for those groups in our society that require help more than others as anyone else. I am only suggesting to the Minister of Health that if the intent of the Government's exercise is to redirect funds to that avenue, then let us broaden the debate so that you will not attempt to aid those who need help more than others on the backs of the middle-income people in the country. That is at the heart and essence of the debate.

If the Government is serious about finding a way to get a better delivery of services to the poor in our society, I suggest that the Government should not dare to dismantle the existing programs and should take a further look at the tax system. As the Leader of the New Democratic Party said this morning, it should be broadened to include the revenues we lose through business incentives to large business groups and oil companies. If you want to review the system, review the tax system which has created some degree of regressivity with respect to social programs. Do not do it on the backs of the middle-income people in the country, as has been proposed by the Conservative Party.

Finally, there are other important issues to be debated in the House of Commons over the next four years. I have some concern about the direction the Government is taking on social programs, defence policy, foreign affairs and free trade with the U.S. If the Government uses the same process to have a legitimate debate on other issues besides the social programs, it will be difficult to function with some civility in the House. We cannot afford to have a Government front bench with four different positions on an issue. I invite the Government to have legitimate debate, but prior to doing so it must set out the parameters for debate so that the Government is united. What it has done here has been a disservice to Parliament.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there would be agreement by all Members to give unanimous consent to the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) to continue and explain his definition of universality and which programs today are universal in nature.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think that is a point of order. Unless there is unanimous consent, there is no provision for a question in the draft Order.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I rise today with a great sense of pride and commitment. I am very proud to be the government Member who follows the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) in this debate. He has given this House an argument that is eloquent, that is committed and that gives integrity to the social programs that this Government stands for.

I am also proud to be here because our Party follows in the tradition of former Prime Minister John Diefenbaker. He and his Party were one of the first in this country to be committed to a system of national health care.

I am also proud to be speaking today because I represent a riding that looks to the Government for leadership. I have a sense of commitment to the people of my riding. When I talk to an Italian Canadian who lives on Bond Road in my riding, who is a proud Canadian and has worked in this country for 20 years only to lose his job because of the policies of the former Government, I know that I have a responsibility in the House. In my constituency there is a recent Caribbean immigrant who owns a shop on Eglinton Avenue which is on the verge of bankruptcy because of the policies of the former Government. I am here on behalf of all those people who are looking to the Government and our Party for leadership and a sense of fiscal responsibility. They want a government that will look after the interests of those proud people who are prepared to work and have started a business for which they worked hard. That is why I ran to be a Member of the House of Commons. That is why I am honoured to be a Member of the House. I can serve the people of the riding of St. Paul's.

Today I want to talk about the fiscal responsibility of our Government and the changes we want to make so that the Government and the country can plan for the future. I am here to talk about Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority. No one knows better than I that borrowing is not a pleasant task for any Government. We are seeking to borrow $12 billion for the first few months of the fiscal year 1985-86. The Government originally intended to borrow $16 billion but we have agreed to reduce that amount by $4 billion as a result of the concerns raised by some Hon. Members of the House.

Many Members have reservations about borrowing requests for the next fiscal year. Let me take a few moments to explain the situation in which the Government finds it necessary to request this authority.

This amount should be sufficient to cover the financial requirements to the end of June, 1985. It is directly linked to the Government's expected financial requirement in the first quarter of 1985-86. As many Hon. Members know, the financial requirements of the Government are not distributed equally throughout the fiscal year. They are usually very heavy in the first part of the year and this seasonal pressure is due largely to the requirements among Canadian citizens for income tax refunds.

Over the past five fiscal years the proportion of the total years' financial requirement for the first quarter has ranged from 21 per cent to 49 per cent of the year's total. For fiscal year 1985-86 the Government expects that $11 billion to $12 billion, or 38 per cent of the financial requirement for the year, will be required during that three-month period.

Members opposite have made a great deal of the Government's request for 1985-86 and have raised the fear in the minds of Canadians that the Government is somehow attempting to ignore Parliament. Let me assure all Members that the traditions, rights and privileges of Parliament are foremost in the minds and actions of this Government and of this Minister.

I can assure the House that in our economic statement, the paper that we discussed, in the amendment to the Bill and what we are telling the House today, we have laid on the Table an agenda which gives Hon. Members a very clear picture of where the Government stands, where it intends to go and what its financial requirements will be over the next year. It is a far clearer picture than the House has ever had before.

I would be remiss if I did not mention my own discomfort in coming before the House to request such tremendous sums of money to be borrowed. The Government is not the author of this unfortunate situation. The former administration placed this burden on the people of Canada and passed it along to us. This Government with its sense of financial responsibility is committed to implement the changes which our Party outlined during the summer campaign in order to rejuvenate this country's economy so that those who come to this House in the future will never be forced into a situation where they must seek such authority or be required to approve such measures.

The Government is taking bold steps to reduce spending because Canadians voiced their disapproval of this deficit on September 4. We are committed to the elimination of this kind of profligacy. When I go to Eglinton Avenue, to Winona Avenue or to Bond Road, I can look my constituents in the eye and tell them that we are a responsible Government.

We are proceeding in a rational and economic manner and encouraging people across Canada, like those in my riding who have an entrepreneurial spirit and a willingness to work, by getting our own House in order first.

The borrowing authority we are seeking today will provide sufficient time to allow us to come back later to seek supplementary borrowing authority. That will get us through the period beyond the spring Budget. We will be back to the House before the summer recess with the next stage of our fiscal plan and budgetary measures. I look forward to that debate. I know that the Canadian people will still know that ours is a Government that is acting in their interest in order to bring rational government and responsibility back to Canada.

Once again, the people of my riding and the people of Canada will see this as a land of opportunity. That is why we are in office today and those are the objectives we have laid clearly before the Canadian people.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure that the Government has at least come part way toward meeting the request of the opposition Parties, and that it reduces the unreasonable amount of money it is borrowing.

The Government has reduced the borrowing for the 1985-86 fiscal year from $16 billion to $12 billion. We are willing, therefore, to see the Bill proceed. We recognize that for the 1984 fiscal year some money is needed, and since the Government is too pig-headed to follow the advice that the Conservatives insisted on giving one year ago, that is, to split the Bill into what is needed for the 1984-85 fiscal year and what is needed for the 1985-86 fiscal year, we are willing this time to let the Bill proceed.

However, we are still very dissatisfied with the Government's irresponsibility, especially in light of the sanctimonious words it uttered last year when it was on this side of the House condemning the very action it takes now and continues to take. To illustrate why we are dissatisfied, I want to read a petition. This is a petition I entered this morning and on which I have entered with other names on some previous mornings, but because of the rules I was not able to read it then. I shall read it in full now: the petition sheweth:

THAT an increasing share of taxpayers money is being used for federal grants, subsidies, and tax incentives to corporations; and

THAT such tax breaks should increase the number of jobs in Canada; and

THAT these grants, subsidies and tax incentives continue to be issued although many of these corporations are not creating more jobs but are in fact reducing them;

WHEREFORE the undersigned, Your Petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to change the appropriate laws in 1984—

We have only an hour in which to do it, and I doubt that we will get it done, Mr. Speaker. The petition continues:

—so that in 1985 large corporations will receive these tax breaks only in proportion to the number of net new jobs they have created, and that the number of jobs created by each corporation and the tax breaks it receives will be reported quarterly to Parliament.

AND as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray.

I think that is a very reasonable petition. I wish Parliament had heeded it. Parliament has heard this petition from time to time over the last two months, but the majority in Parliament and the Government that gets its power from that majority has clearly ignored it.

The petition does not mention the amount of money that is given to these corporations. It is very difficult to know the amount of money. It is not just difficult for a backbench opposition Member untrained in economics, but it is difficult for the Auditor General of this Parliament. Mr. Dye, the Auditor General, has talked about the tax expenditures, the tax give-aways to the corporations. The best he could do at giving us a figure was to say it was somewhere between $30 billion and $50 billion. That is the best he could do without carrying out a further investigation, which I believe he said would cost another one million dollars.

That gives some idea of the amount of money. It is probably more than the annual deficit, the deficit about which the Government opposite gets so hysterical and so lyrical that it no longer wants to talk about jobs now that it has won the election. The Government wants to talk only about the deficit. Yet the Auditor General has confirmed that the means of clearing off that deficit is at hand in these tax give-aways to the big corporations. Ninety per cent of those moneys goes to 10 per cent of the largest corporations.

There is no accounting of that money. There is no ready way that a member of the public, a Member of Parliament, or even the Auditor General can find out just how much money goes, who it goes to, let alone what this country gets in return for that tax money which is spent for the benefit of a private corporation. There is simply no way of knowing what we get for the $30 billion to $40 billion to $50 billion a year of the peoples' money. When we have no accounting of how that money is spent, then there is no good reason for the cuts which the Government has made in such a flamboyant way. There is no good reason to cut people off unemployment insurance with new cut regulations. There is no good reason to cut nearly $10 million from social housing. There is no good reason to make cuts in the arts and the CBC. There is no good reason to make cuts in the environmental protection work of Canada.

When we have money, several times as much money as is supposed to be saved by those cuts—ten times at least—available to this Government, it is absolutely irresponsible to make those cuts and then come before us and ask to borrow more money. The Government had the means at its disposal and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) admitted during the election campaign that there should be tax reform. Tax reform would mean making the people who have plenty and pay no tax pay a fair share. It would mean also that those who now receive tax gifts from this Government and from the previous Government would always have to give an account of what they are doing for us in the way of creating jobs. Budget after budget after budget—it will be the same when this Government brings down its budget. We will hear sweet songs about how this tax gift and that tax gift to the corporations will make more jobs.

Mr. Manly: They never have.

Mr. Heap: Next year unemployment will be as high or higher because they will not make more jobs. As often as not corporations use the money to buy labour-saving devices that reduce jobs or they invest the money overseas. This Government, like the previous Government, will not have the guts to introduce the kinds of controls that we used during wartime in Canada and that are used now by most countries in western Europe.

There is no good reason why this Government should have increased the taxes on ordinary working people by an amount that probably averages out to $500 more per family per year. This Government has taken, by its various pieces of legislation, $500 more per family per year from those of low and middle income and has refused to take one penny of the kind of tax reform which the Prime Minister promised when he was asking for the votes of Canadians.

Mr. Manly: No wonder people have no confidence in the economy.

Mr. Heap: The Prime Minister talks about confidence. He is obviously looking for the confidence of investors who want a wide open situation so they can destroy this country with pollution, and poison the people with pollution so long as it makes more money. The Prime Minister obviously wants to bring in the kind of investors who will expect to cut wages because people have been cut off unemployment insurance and there are no more jobs available for them to find.

Where are those investors? They are not in the New York money market, so the spokesmen of the New York money market have told us.

Mr. McDermid: When did you start talking to them?

Mr. Heap: He is not going to bring in the investment that he promised because the domestic market in Canada is shrinking, not increasing, and foreign owners of Canadian branch plants have never shown any interest in building the competition in Canada against their parent firms.

The only possibility which the Prime Minister seems to leave open is reflected in his policy of promotion war. He not only votes against a nuclear freeze, he not only undertakes to send another brigade over to Europe, but he also posts a team of shoppers from the Pentagon to go across Canada to talk about buying war goods from Canadian industry. It appears that that is the only active means the Prime Minister is interested in taking to create the jobs which he promised. He wants to turn us into producers of the American means of destruction rather than producers of the Canadian means of life. This borrowing Bill will not do anything to ameliorate the situation. I call upon the Government to use the next few weeks to reconsider the wrong direction which it is taking.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not enjoy standing up and speaking about borrowing money. Out of necessity this borrowing Bill had to be brought before the House. It must be passed so that income tax rebates, among other things, can be given out early in the new year once they have been handled by the Department of National Revenue.

Anyone who sat in the House over the last number of years will remember that the Government used to use the old excuse that it did not have the authority to get the money out to the people or that it had not adjusted its computers to handle changes in the tax system. I see the Hon. House Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition sitting across the way. Either he or the then Minister of National Revenue was responsible at that time for handing out the cheques.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): It was the Minister.

Mr. McDermid: In any event, they were not getting their rebates when they should. Of course, this borrowing will allow for that.

Mr. Boudria: Oh!

Mr. McDermid: Perhaps I should give a lesson to my hon. friend who has come here from the provincial House on a white charger. Of course, the demands on the federal Government are not consistent throughout the year. There are periods of time when there is a greater demand on the Treasury than at other times. One is in the spring when income tax rebates take place. The Hon. Member would not understand that after being in the provincial House, but we handle income tax in the federal House. Once he understands the responsibilities of a federal Member of Parliament, he will get along much better with everyone here. One of our responsibilities is to send rebates to those who are entitled to them.

Mr. Boudria: Whose policy is it that cut off the cheques? It is yours.

Mr. McDermid: Now we are borrowing money to pay these rebates because of the sins of that motley crew over there in the last 15 years. There is no question about it. This is what we are talking about today. We have to borrow money to pay the monumental bills which they built up over the last number of years. It is a shame. I am sorry that we have to come before the House to do that. I really am sorry. I do not like doing this, but it has to be done. Our hands are tied. We are forced to do that.

We are asking for two amounts of money. We are asking for $7.3 billion to carry us through to the end of the 1984-85 fiscal year. I commend the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) because they reduced their borrowing authority request by a number of billions of dollars, to $12 billion. This is provided for 1985-86 in order to carry us through until after the budget which will come down some time in April and to carry us through while the Budget is being debated so that we have the necessary funds with which to operate in government.

I was very interested in some of the debate today. We just heard the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) roll through on his little pink wagon. I was surprised to learn today that the NDP is now consulting with the money giants in New York. That is quite a turnaround. Normally members of that Party would not talk to them or listen to them. Suddenly they are consulting with them. I do not know what they would be consulting about. I am not sure they would take any of their advice. However, it was certainly refreshing to hear it. I hope they will continue doing so, because perhaps they will learn something.

I listened today to the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). I was pleased to learn today that the Liberal Government is carrying its tradition of not consulting with the Canadian people—

Mr. Boudria: You are the Government; we are not.

Mr. McDermid: —and running roughshod over the people of the country.

Ms. Copps: You are the Government, John.

Mr. McDermid: That is exactly why they are not in office today. It was because they did that. They said that they knew better than anyone and said what they were going to do. They forget about consultations. She said it today in the House in Question Period. She said, "Forget consultations". They do not ask Canadian people what they want; they just do it.

Ms. Copps: Students want jobs.

Mr. McDermid: That is exactly what the debate is about today.

Mr. Marchi: Whom did you consult?

Mr. McDermid: This Government, led by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), is committed to consultation with Canadians. That is what is going on right now.

Mr. Gauthier: On the cuts?

Mr. McDermid: This will continue through the life of this Government. I might add that it will be around here for a very long period of time.

Mr. McKenzie: For 40 years.

Mr. McDermid: That is right. We will emulate my provincial cousins in Ontario. I will not be around here to celebrate our forty-first anniversary of being in power. Neither will the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Speak for yourself.

Mr. McDermid: We will probably be retired by then and in our rocking chairs.

Mr. Boudria: We will retire you in the next election.

Mr. McDermid: I know she will be retired. Probably after the next election she will be retired. That is what will probably happen in Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: What happened to your candidate in Hamilton East?

Mr. McDermid: It will be either that or she will go back to the Ontario Legislature and run for the leadership again, because their Leader there is in very bad trouble right now. I am sure that is what will happen.

Ms. Copps: We know Frank Miller has a problem.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I ask the Hon. Member to speak either on the borrowing Bill or on the universality issue, please.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I thought I was doing so, because part of the reason we have to borrow money is to pay the salary of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. I think I can refer to her here. I think that is fair.

An Hon. Member: You should borrow some credibility.

Mr. McDermid: Over the last few weeks we in the House have seen a phoney issue raised. They read polls as well as we do. They know that the Leader of their Party is lower in popularity than the undecided in the country. We know that they got together at caucus a week and a half ago and said, "Nobody knows the guy is alive". He is down to 11 per cent now. That is just his relevance. They knew they had to make an issue in the House, so they decided to scare the hell out of the old folks in Canada. They knew that would get their attention, so they raised this phoney issue. It is a phoney issue, but they wanted some publicity for their Leader. Then members of the NDP said, "Wait a minute, we had better get on the bandwagon too". Their Leader was holding his own at 20 per cent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask the Hon. Member to be relevant.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to question your authority, but I sat in the House and listened to a debate on universality today. That is what I am talking about, this phoney issue which they raised to scare or frighten people in Canada.

Ms. Copps: What about your back-benchers, your bookends?

Mr. McDermid: The Opposition raised the issue.

Ms. Copps: Yesterday in the House of Commons your own Members questioned you.

Mr. McDermid: And they got an answer with which they were satisfied. Why is the Opposition not satisfied with it?

Ms. Copps: That is not what they said on The Journal.

Mr. Gauthier: Ask your back-benchers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask Hon. Members to listen to the Hon. Member's speech.

Ms. Copps: He isn't saying anything.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I am rather enjoying this. It is like the provincial House. When I worked with the Ontario Government, that same motley crew did the same motley things down there.

Ms. Copps: Porkbarrel.

Mr. McDermid: They just moved up here, lock, stock and barrel. Here they are hollering again. I am enjoying it. I do not mind at all. I only have a couple of minutes remaining, but I want to say that I am fully prepared to go home and talk with the people of my riding about universality.

• (1500)

I am not at all concerned about those in our society who need help, because they are going to get it. Not only will they be taken care of by this Government, but they will be taken care of better than they are today. That is a commitment of this Government. It was a commitment during the campaign. It is a commitment that we will undertake and carry out over the term of our office. There is no question about that.

I worked very closely with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) when he was in Government. We spent a lot of time discussing issues we were both concerned with, immigration matters and so forth. It was not brought to the floor of the House—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his 10 minutes have expired.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. We have seen in the last two presentations by members of the Conservative Party why we are having a debate. We have seen the kind of insensitivity and lack of interest in this fundamental social issue that is causing a wide and abiding sense of concern among many Canadians.

They call it a phoney issue. It is a phoney issue when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) inadvertently in his own peculiar fashion admits that they are going to alter substantially and amend the method of payment for older people and families. That is not an issue raised by the Opposition. It was raised by the Minister of Finance. Now we are told it is a phoney issue. I guess the logic of that would be that it is the Minister of Finance who is the phoney. He is the one who raised the issue and put it on the table of this House. It is that kind of consternation which his comment raised which provided the abiding level of concern we now see among many Canadians.

We also see this in the comments made by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) who rose to her feet to talk about her constituents in Eglinton who are obviously obsessed, as she is, with the question of reducing the deficit. She refused to deal with the issue of the many senior citizens, students and children in her riding who are also faced with the possibility of losing their benefits. I did not hear a word about that from the Minister. That is why this debate is taking place.

The problem is that this Government will not tell the people of Canada what is going on. This debate was set aside to give the Government an opportunity to clarify what is happening. What do we hear? They talk about fiscal responsibility. That is really the code word. If they start amending the structure of social benefits, we know where the money will go. It will go to feed that strange obsession of fiscal responsibility which the Minister of State has.

For all the protestations of the Prime Minister about how the needy will be helped, we did not hear that from the Minister of State. We heard not one word about the needy in her riding. I happen to know that there are many people in her riding who have needs.

The Minister was not prepared to say, "What a minute, before we cut into existing social programs to help the poor and the needy, we should look at the other forms of revenue the Government may be able to command from the economic envelope or other forms of tax expenditures and re-allocate that to social programs for the needy".

There has been no consideration by any Minister in this Government—the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) or the Minister of State for Finance—to say that if they really want to deal with the problems of those in need, they should find the money elsewhere rather than cutting deeply into the existing social framework of this country. That option has not been presented and put on this table. The problem with this Government is that it is blinded. It has little catchments on its eyes which say it is not interested in social programs.

Let me raise another reason why there is suspicion. It goes back to the incredible verbal gymnastics to which we are treated every Question Period. The Prime Minister stands and says that black is white one day, white is black the other day, up is down, and east is west. He says this with all the sincerity that he can muster, and that is not a great deal. We are supposed to believe him. He gave an interview to Readers Digest in August 1983. Let me quote the words of Brian Mulroney. He said:

> The only way that universality can be touched will be by an all-party committee of the House. The objectives of social programs should be to get the most money into the hands of the people who need it most and do it efficiently. Are the programs delivering benefits to the peole who need them most? That's a legitimate question. But it is so delicate that I would examine it only with all-party agreement.

Where is the all-Party agreement? The Minister of Finance says that he has already made up his mind. He has already decided what he is going to do. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is already preparing his proposals. The Minister of State does not talk about it. The Prime Minister, in his former incarnation, said, "I think it is so delicate a matter, I am going to have an all-Party agreement before I even begin to discuss it".

Where is it? Why are we having these musings in public indicating where they are going? I can state why. The suspicion we have is that they are not really concerned about the needy and the poor. If they were so concerned, why would they cut off summer employment for our young people? Why are they changing the unemployment insurance system into a welfare system where you only get it based upon need, not because you have an entitlement to the program? Why do they cancel the industrial training program that was used almost exclusively by women who want to get back into the workforce? the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is a fraud and a phoney. She says she believes in women's rights, and then she cancels an $80 million program which helps all kinds of women get back into the workforce.

Mr. McDermid: Our Government is one of consultation.

Mr. Axworthy: The Member who is bellowing says his Government is one of consultation and that the Liberals did not consult. He was a member of a parliamentary comittee which we established that spent a full year consulting with Canadians about employment programs. That committee made a report and we implemented most of its findings. That was consultation. That was the kind of initiative we took. That was a parliamentary committee of all parliamentarians. It was not done in secret like the Minister of Finance is doing. We consulted and we got results.

Let's get down to the basis issues. They say they are not really going to change universality only tinker with the tax system. They say they are not going to wield the tax system around. Let me say something about the tax system.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask all Members to listen to the Hon. Member's speech as they did this morning to the speeches of the Leaders.

Mr. Axworthy: Part of the problem is that they say they are really not to going cut benefits because they are going to use the tax system. What they ignore is that the tax system cannot measure real need in the family situation. There are families in my riding whose income is not the true measurement of their need. It does not recognize that the woman has a child rearing responsibility. Many times they do not receive their fair share of the family income. The family allowance is essential to maintain the basic requirements for those children.

That cannot be measured by family income. You cannot apply an artificial touch. If Members opposite do not know that, they are not in touch with what is going on in their constituency. I suggest they spend the Christmas holiday talking to people rather than engaging in this artificial, insensitive, silly kind of economic accountability, which is simply designed to help the Minister of State fulfil her obsessive desire for fiscal responsibility.

Let's talk about the needs of women and children in this society. The problems of older people cannot be measured by their incomes because they may have to pay $400 to $500 a month for a rental apartment. Tax away their income and they will no longer have a place to live. The tax system cannot be used to measure true needs in society.

If this Government applies the artificial measurement, that accounting principle designed somewhere in the bowels of Toronto Bay Street, to attempt to determine who has needs, it will ignore the reality of our social structure. It will ignore the fact that the basic strength of the universal system is that it recognizes that both children and older people have basic needs that cannot be measured by some quirk or mathematical formula.

That is why it is so essential to maintain and defend the principle of universality. If Members are so interested in consulting, I suggest they listen to their own advisory council on welfare, a group of Canadians drawn from across Canada who also said they see no compelling reason at the present time to change the family allowance program. Those are Canadians talking. Why is the Government changing the program? Why is the Government playing games? We know the real reason. It is not interested in the needy or the poor. The Government simply wants to get back to what the Minister of Finance describes as a rate crisis to reduce the deficit. That is what this is all about. That is why Canadians are worried. The Government will never succeed because we will fight it to the end to stop those changes.

• (1510)

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate today, but I am beginning to wonder why, after listening to the speech of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Sparrow: I stand in support of the statements which were made by the Minister of Nationoal Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). As my hon. colleagues have so well stated, the reason the Government must borrow these moneys is to pay the financial obligations that the Government inherited from or which were levied by the previous Government. If that Government had managed the country with responsibility, perhaps we would not be here today asking for this money.

On September 4, Canadians voted for a change and for a better future, because they knew that this Government could do much more to create that future. In doing so, they provided the opportunity to make a fresh start, to build new confidence and to provide a new national sense to achieve the economic promise and potential of Canada.

We are a Government of Canadians, which is for Canadians, and we will continue to be that way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Sparrow: The major reason for Canada's poor performance was the failure of the previous Government to deal with the real problems. For too long that Government ignored the causes of the problems and dealt only with the symptons. For too long it allowed the fiscal situation to deteriorate and the debt to increase.

Through excessive regulation and intervention, the previous Government substituted the judgments of politicians and regulators for the judgment of those in the market-place—the people of Canada. This Government believes that Canadians have the desire to produce and to innovate, and that Canadians have the capability to generate much stronger growth than that which we have seen in the past decade.

Our objective is to put in place a policy framework which will release the creative energies of Canadians in order that they can build a better future for themselves. It will give young people a chance to make a productive contribution, and it will open new opportunities for older workers.

Canada is the only major country without unimpeded access to a market which is large enough to permit substantial economies of scale. If we are to foster growth through trade, we must obtain more secure and improved access to foreign markets on the broadest possible basis.

Canada is a major trading nation. We must look beyond the United States to the market-places in the Pacific Rim. Canadians have an imperfect understanding of the full meaning and implications of the emergence of Japan as an economic superpower, and as the centre of emerging developments in the Pacific Rim. We must direct our energies toward this area. We must realize that the world is changing in trade, technology and economic institutions. Investment Canada will provide a two-way street. We must view Japanese investment—in fact, all foreign investment—as a positive force in the economic development in Canada. We must have stable economic growth.

Both the deficit and unemployment will decline substantially if the Canadian economy grows at a reasonable pace. This Government will create a climate of stability and it will regain the confidence of Canadians. We can attract investment in Canada, and we can turn our great country around to achieve increased productivity and, therefore, create more jobs for Canadians.

There is much that we in Canada can do to improve our economic performance. We must put our fiscal house in order so that we can limit and ultimately reverse the massive build-up of public debt. The Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), on November 8—with his deferrals, cuts and transfers—saved $4.5 billion and applied $2.2 billion against the deficit. We must adopt policies which foster higher investment, greater innovation and increased international competitiveness. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) brought forward Investment Canada. Because of that, we can look forward to more equity being invested in Canada.

The Members of the Conservative Cabinet have travelled and will continue to travel across Canada. They are speaking with their provincial counterparts, industries, labour and the people of Canada. This Government consults first and acts second.

In closing, I would reiterate that this is a Government of the people, for the people, and it will listen to the people.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to join in the debate this afternoon. It is a somewhat unique debate, as far as I have been concerned since I have been in the House.

The House is speaking to Bill C-11, which is a Bill to provide borrowing authority for the Government. It is a Bill which has been before the House for three or four weeks. It has gone through one amendment after another. Those amendments were moved by the Opposition. However, apparently we will achieve some progress today, because of the unique aspect of the debate and the fact that we are also debating the principle of universality and social policy. I would like to speak briefly on both issues. As well, I would like to speak on the authority of the Government to borrow money in order to pay for the deficit.

As far as the question of universality in social programming is concerned, I was delighted this afternoon to hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) outline very clearly and firmly the policy and views of this Government. I believe his remarks clarified once and for all the present position of the Government and the position which our Government has always taken. In his speech, the Minister touched upon two points in which I believe very firmly. The Minister indicated that they are cornerstones of his beliefs and of government policy. The first is universality, the second is that there will not be a means test. I would like to endorse whole-heartedly the statements which were made by the Minister, and I congratulate him on those statements.

The Minister also dealt with the whole question of examining social programs, to see if more can be produced out of the same types of programs with the same revenue. I believe that is what we will be focusing our debate on in the coming year. We are going to have an opportunity, once the discussion papers have been issued by the Government, to take an in-depth look at those various programs, and to see what we can do to improve the lot of the Canadian people.

I know that Hon. Members of the Opposition who are here today, and those who are not, truly believe in trying to help the disadvantaged and low-income people of this country. I know that they are seriously going to join us in this debate in order to attempt to improve the system for all Canadians. Most of the opposition speakers have been telling us that the whole system was introduced by their Party, so I would hope that they would join with us in improving the system which is in place.

As far as the economy is concerned, the borrowing aspect of this Bill is mixed blessing. I would be very happy, quite frankly, to be able to stand up here in these economic times and feel that we were borrowing money which would help the disadvantaged and the unemployed in this country. Unfortunately, that is not what we are doing. We are borrowing a lot of money here to try to pay the bills of the Government and to look after the current spending programs. That money is not going to add one cent to help put people back to work, unfortunately. The reason for that is that in the past we have had such staggering deficits that now our hands are tied as we try to cope with the problems facing the Canadian people, problems with which the Government is committed to deal, those of getting people back to work.

Traditionally, since the Second World War, the way of solving these problems has been to spend money. Unfortunately, even with all the money we are spending, with a $37 billion deficit, we still have a million and a half people unemployed in this country. That is a tremendous tragedy. I know that the Opposition shares my thoughts on that. There is no doubt that one of the saddest parts of this whole deficit tragedy, however, is the fact that our deficit, which is something like $37 billion, is just about equal to the amount of money which the Government spends in any one year on social programs. Now we are faced with a situation where the deficit is the tail that is wagging the dog, instead of the other way around. Somehow or other we are going to have to get a handle on the deficit if we are going to be able to deal with this matter, Mr. Speaker, because the deficit has become a psychological barrier to solving the economic and unemployment problems of the country.

I have said on a number of occasions in this House that there are really three ways of getting that deficit reduced. First, we must reduce all of the unnecessary and wasteful spending carried on by past Governments for years and years. We have had reports from the Auditor General year after year outlining those specific areas of wasteful spending. This year has been no different. We have received another report which has outlined a vast array of government waste. In fact, the Auditor General says there are hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars involved in wasteful spending which he has outlined this year.

One small way in which we can rapidly deal with a large part of the deficit and get it under control is with respect to the cash management of the Government. For years and years the Government has managed its cash in such a way, as indicated by the Auditor General, that we are losing about $350 million a year just in lost interest payments because of the fact that when we get the money in we do not put it in the bank fast enough. That is surely something which can be eliminated very quickly. The Auditor General has also told us that the Government of Canada holds a great array of properties which are not being utilized for any specific government function. This year alone we are going to pay almost $25 million in grants in lieu of taxes. So those are a couple of ways which have been identified by the Auditor General in which we can get the deficit under control.

Until we do get the deficit under control, we are going to have to borrow some money, and that is what this Bill is all about. That is why I am pleased to hear this afternoon that the Opposition is finally going to join with the Government to pass this Bill which will allow the Government to borrow enough money to pay for all of the social programs which Hon. Members of the Opposition have told us all week they are so concerned about.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter into this debate. I must say that it took some time to convince this Government to have this debate before the House closed down for Christmas. It is too bad that the Government was not open enough to provide us with the consultation papers which it is promising for the new year. If we had that information available now, rather than after Christmas, it would have shed more light on this debate. Certainly, the statement of the Minister on policy earlier in the day did not shed much light at all. In fact, it continued the state of confusion from which we are suffering in this policy area. At one time the Minister said that one of his three principles for this area of social policy is that there would be no special tax on social programs. Later on he said that he disagreed with the position of our Leader when it came to taxing social programs. Therefore, it is hard to tell just where the Government is coming from. It would be worthwhile for the Government to provide us with information which would allow us to understand what direction the Government is seriously considering to take. Hopefully, it would alleviate a lot of concern which exists across the country and would allow us to have a genuine debate with regard to social policy, rather than being lost in a fog which keeps flowing from the front-benches of the Tory Government across to the opposition benches.

One of the fundamental problems with which we are faced in this House is the fact that this Government said one thing during the election campaign and now that it is in office is saying something totally different. This is not just restricted to the social policy area. The most prominent area in which the Government has carried on this practice of saying one thing during the election campaign and another thing when in office has to do with employment. Obviously if there were increased employment at this time, then there would be increased government revenues. We would not have to borrow the amount of money we are borrowing today. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would not have to muse about not being able to afford social programs. During the election campaign, those Hon. Members promised, "jobs, jobs, jobs", and once they got into office, what they did was to shift their priorities pretty quickly. They focused their priority upon the deficit and upon cutting back on public spending, even in light of the fact that economic forecasters who examined the economic statement pointed out that its measures were going to result in greater unemployment. Obviously, that will result in a loss of revenues to the Government and the threat of a larger deficit.

This Government has to learn a fundamental lesson. The Conservatives should do in office what they said they would do during the campaign. They should not be acting like a two-headed monster, one head for the election and one head for government. On November 8, they outlined their economic policy concerning the reduction of public spending, not jobs as they promised. They have really started to put their social policy on the national agenda. They have managed to do this amidst a great deal of confusion, which is very sad because during the campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that universality was a sacred trust. He knew that universal social programs received broad public support across this country and he wanted to make sure he had sufficient support to be elected. Now that he is in office, he is sowing seeds of doubt about the principle of universality for pensions and family allowances. If the Conservatives succeed in this, when will they move on to medicare? They are simply testing the will of the Canadian people by flying a lot of trial balloons. If they get away with tampering with universal social programs such as family allowances and pensions, they will move right down the road to attack medical services.

Another thing the Conservatives said during the campaign was that they would run a co-operative approach to government. They would consult with people and act in a co-operative fashion to draw the community together. Well, Mr. Speaker, we begin to get the impression that their approach to consultation is really a smokescreen for their own real agenda. I am not so sure that we could say it is a hidden agenda because they are floating their ideas in various documents issued to the public. But certainly they have a very specific agenda and very specific direction, so that their promises of consultation and co-operation really wear thin. It looks more like a cover for the policies they wish to implement. The Hon. Member across the way laughs. These are serious questions, Mr. Speaker.

Pensions are a very good example, Mr. Speaker, of why universality is a cornerstone principle of our social policies in this country. Before we established public pensions people simply had to rely upon private pensions. Not everyone had access to a pension when it came to retirement, regardless of how hard they worked. So the notion of public pensions for everyone arose because people were concerned about the fact that everyone had a right to dignity in their old age through a secure income.

There is no way that a selective pension plan could work and provide security for all Canadians. First and foremost, the notion of universality applies to pensions, but it is also important with regard to family allowances. It is important not only because all children across this country deserve to have their basic needs met, deserve to have a good Christmas, deserve to have toys like the neighbours have, as well as proper clothes to go to school in. It is important because it is not simply for the children. One of the reasons family allowances were introduced and made payable to the mother rather than the father is that we were concerned that all women have some income they can call their own. For a long period of time, perhaps even today, there were women who did not have an income that was strictly under their control.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, the Government needs to clear up the confusion it has spread in the area of social policy because it is causing a great deal of concern among people. One of the fundamental principles of the social contract in this country is that all people have the right to social support because all Canadians pay for those programs. It is not enough to just say that the social programs are for the needy only. We need programs for all Canadians if they are going to be adequately funded and adequately supported politically throughout the country.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, today tomorrow and Sunday, all Members will be going home to celebrate Christmas. Speaking for myself and on behalf of my Party, I would like to wish all Members of this House a very Merry Christmas.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is very unfortunate that in the House, today, Progressive Conservative Members failed to clear up once and for all what is going to happen to universality.

I have already received many telephone calls, and I know that other Members including Conservative Members have also received calls from their constituents, from senior citizens and young mothers who want to know what is going to happen to their pension cheques and family allowance.

We were waiting . . . we on this side resorted to some very strong tactics this week—

An Hon. Member: A public confession!

Ms. Copps: —in order to ask the House for a debate on universality. Because we in this Party—

Mr. Masse: Let us call it the bogeyman party!

Ms. Copps: —it was our Party that initiated these programs and our Party is going to defend them to the very end.

Mr. Speaker, what happened this afternoon when we finally gave Conservative Members a chance to tell the truth—

Mr. Masse: The truth?

Ms. Copps: —what did they talk about? I would like to use the words said by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), for instance.

[English]

The Minister's comments, when he was discussing universality, were with regard to the perverse features of the status quo. The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), when he was speaking about universality, what did he have to say on the issue? I quote: "I am not concerned about those in society who need it most". That is what the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown stated in his speech.

Mr. McDermid: That is a little out of context, Sheila.

Ms. Copps: We heard from the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). Instead of discussing the issue of universality, she talked about the deficit. She talked about her responsibility with respect to the fiscal side of the ledger. She did not talk to the Canadian people—

Mr. McDermid: Start telling the truth!

Ms. Copps: —to Canadian senior citizens and young men and women who want to know whether universality will exist under this Government. When one of the other Government members talks about universality he says the deficit is the tail wagging the dog. Well, Mr. Speaker, in my mind and in the mind of my Party the deficit is the tail that is wagging the Government. In fact, the Government has no intention of living up to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) called a sacred trust. During the election campaign, the Prime Minister said that universality is a sacred trust and it will not be tampered with. The Prime Minister and his policies have been denuded before the Canadian people. We see now that the emperor has no clothes.

● (1540)

In the working document introduced by the Prime Minister's Government he says that we must ask ourselves whether the federal transfer payments of Old Age Security, Guaranteed Income Supplement and tax expenditures should continue in their present form or whether they need to be redesigned to increase fairness and reduce the burden on the federal Government. Mr. Speaker, these are not the words of the Opposition. This is not the working document of a previous Liberal administration. This is the document introduced by his Government and his Finance Minister in an attempt to begin the erosion of the universal social programs which we as Liberals have spent and will continue to spend our political lives fighting for.

When the Prime Minister is speaking in the House or out on the hustings in Baie Comeau he may not say the same things as he does when he is talking to The Financial Post. However, when he was talking to The Financial Post on March 24, 1984, he said, "I have no hesitation in reviewing the concept of universality".

Today in the House Members on all sides had an opportunity to put their positions clearly. The Government Members had an opportunity to clarify for the Canadian people what kind of cut-backs we can expect. Instead, we heard obfuscation and more deceit and dishonesty on the part of this administration.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Ms. Copps: In Question Period we heard the Prime Minister talk about the benefits received by bank presidents and people earning millions of dollars. I want to remind you, Mr. Speaker, and the Canadian taxpayers that the figure which is being bounced about by the Government as a potential cut-off point for universal benefits is not that of the income of bank presidents. The figure that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) gave in a newspaper interview last week as a potential cut-off point was $26,000. I want the Minister and the Government to know that a $26,000 family income in Canada right now is below the national mean. It is a less-than-average income for families. If he thinks that we on this side of the House are going to stand back and watch his Government trample and destroy the social programs that we have spent a lifetime building, he will have to take another look, stand back, and think again. We are prepared to fight the figure of $26,000. We are prepared to fight the figure of $34,000. We are prepared to fight a Government that has received a massive majority from the Canadian people only to implement a hidden, secret agenda which it was not prepared to reveal to the people of Canada before September 4.

It is becoming increasingly clear to me, Mr. Speaker, that the issue of trust, which has never been properly dissipated in the minds of Canadian people, is an issue which many senior citizens will ask themselves about this Christmas. Many of those senior citizens voted for the current Government and the Prime Minister because he said that universality is a sacred trust which they would not tamper with. We have seen the trust of the Government. We have seen the words of the Prime Minister who contradicted his Finance Minister. We have seen the words of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who subsequently contradicted the Minister of Finance as well as the Prime Minister. The Minister of State for Finance does not even dare discuss the issue of universality because she knows that if the true feelings of the Conservative Party on this issue were to emerge, they would spell the death knoll for her Party in any future election.

My Leader made reference to that burden which is being carried around by the Conservative caucus in a Party which has never believed in universality or baby bonuses. It has not even believed in shelters for battered wives. The majority of Progressive Conservatives, at their last convention, voted against increases in funding for shelters for battered wives. I believe that is the legacy that the Government must live with. I believe it is a legacy which government Members would like to throw off. However, because the Government and the Prime Minister were elected at the beck of Bay Street, it is now clear that their hidden agenda will come out.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that their hidden agenda started today with 100 board and other appointments for Progressive Conservatives. This from a Prime Minister who promised all Canadians he would never do anything like that.

[English]

Again, Mr. Speaker, we have another indication of a broken trust, a broken promise, an emperor who has no clothes, and a Government which has been denuded of all moral and social responsibility. Mr. Speaker, we will fight them to the limit.

Borrowing Authority

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, today is the first occasion I have had to speak in the House since the recent election. I have spent the last 10 and a half weeks as the Government's representative to the United Nations where a debate on social security centers on the fact that millions of people throughout the world are starving because of drought in Africa. Hundreds of thousands of people are freezing because of lack of clothing and shelter. Having just returned from that 10-week experience, I found it interesting to listen to the Canadian debate today on issues which are in the same direction but not of the same quantity. I hope that Members of the House and Canadians who happen to be watching today will open their hearts and wallets to those starving people around the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is like coming back to a strange planet. I think the Liberal and New Democratic Parties are saying to the House that the present system is O.K. Those members of the Opposition who have sat with me on committee over the last five and a half years and listened to testimony surely realize that the present situation is not O.K. In Canada today a child living in a family which has an income of $10,000 or less per year receives $15 more per month than a child living in a family which makes $45,000 a year. If we can, through better management and better systems, double the difference to that poor segment of society, to those children born to families where the food, clothing, shelter and educational opportunity are inadequate, that is what a consultation process is all about and that is what the Government stands behind. It stands behind finding ways to produce more money for that segment of society where it is really needed. The consultation process concerns finding ways to produce more money for that segment of society where it is really needed. I stand four square for that principle and my Party stands four square for that principle as well.

● (1550)

Members opposite in the Liberal Party talk about social justice. I spent 60 days knocking on doors in my community of Calgary, Alberta. Two years ago, young people from your ridings were coming to my community to find a job, develop a career and achieve a decent standard of living. This summer, 25 per cent of the office space in Calgary was vacant, 15 per cent of the apartments were vacant, and I met family after family who have not worked for over a year.

That is a result of the policies put in place by the Liberal Party of Canada despite the objections of the Opposition despite the information it had and because of the lack of consultation. It made a mistake that was disastrous and which has forced millions of people to live below the poverty line who had not lived in poverty before. We will avoid those mistakes because we will be involved in the process of consultation.

We will not make those mistakes. If Members opposite read the Auditor General's report they would find that the Liberal Government approved a purchase for the F-18 jetfighter that will cost $3.5 billion more than indicated. That amount alone could double assistance to seniors in this country had that one mistake not been made.

I look forward to the debate that will ensue. I now yield the floor to the representative of the NDP.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to end this debate today. I wanted to make two major points in the closing few minutes. If the Government is legitimately concerned about providing more opportunity, more financial support and more social program support for the poor of Canada, rather than seriously considering the tax-back provision which has been discussed in the House and referred to by government Members, I would suggest that we reform our tax system. That would enable us to implement a minimum tax on people in the upper income brackets and to implement a tax system where certain loopholes are closed so that everyone, regardless of economic status, pays his or her fair share of individual and corporate taxes. Therefore, adequate moneys would be available for all the social programs that the Government may wish to provide to the poor of Canada.

I am pleased that the Government has decided to eliminate $4 billion from this borrowing authority. I suggest it shows a willingness to listen to the arguments from those in the Opposition benches. It has also agreed to introduce the requirements for the borrowing Bill in the next fiscal year within two weeks of the budget being brought down. This opens up a new process that I hope will become a precedent in the years to come. In this way, the Government is able to lay out for the people of Canada its expenditures for the coming year and indicate its revenues and borrowing requirements in a two-week package. It will enable the people of Canada to evaluate more thoroughly the performance of the Government and decide if it is providing the appropriate fiscal management that is so desperately needed in our country.

In closing, since the Government has agreed to eliminate $4 billion and to provide a two-week introduction period for the next borrowing authority, I believe we really have made progress during the last number of weeks. I applaud government Members for recognizing the wisdom of the suggestions being made by members of the NDP.

In that spirit, I wish to use this opportunity to wish my colleagues, on behalf of our Party, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have one minute left. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, one minute is not very long. However, I want to point out the contradiction in what the Government is doing. It was elected not to cut social programs but to give the people of this country more. It said that it wanted to give Canadians a better life. That is not what it is doing now.

It has disappointed the people of Canada and they will long remember the very sad legacy of the Government. They will remember the promises that were made.

I would just like to remind all Hon. Members, if you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, that our staff on Parliament Hill has worked very hard for us during the year. I would ask all Hon. Members to consider that next Monday and Monday, January 31, should be a holiday for our staff who have worked very hard. They deserve it and they are not getting a holiday on the 24th and the 31st.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 3.55 o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to Order made earlier this day, to deem adopted the motion for second reading and reference to Committee of the Whole of the bill now before the House. Accordingly, the Bill stands referred to Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. The House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority.

Clause 2 and 3 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 4—

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-11 be amended by deleting line 5 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

Whole $12 billion as may be"

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 4, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 4, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNTIL JANUARY 21, 1985

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order at this time. Before dealing with that, I think you will allow me the indulgence, as we come to the conclusion of the sitting for this semester before the Christmas recess, to extend a word of heartfelt and sincere thanks, which I am sure all Members of Parliament share, to our very excellent staff in the House of Commons. Of course, that includes everyone who has anything to do with the operation of the House of Commons, including the English and French Hansard reporters, the pages who have served us so well again this year, and the officials of the House at the Table. We are a privileged nation and a privileged Chamber. Part of the reason is that we are served by people with such dedication and we are grateful. I take this opportunity at this time of year once again to express to them our sincere thanks for the outstanding service they render not only to the Chamber but to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1600)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is one other item Mr. Speaker. I want to thank particularly the opposition House Leaders for what has been a very rewarding period up to the holiday season.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I say this in a totally non-partisan sense, they are not bad people.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They are nice people. I say it has been a pleasure for me to have dealt with them.

In that spirit of consultation, there have been discussions and, accordingly, Mr. Speaker I think you would find a disposition for the House to receive and to adopt the following motion:

That notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 3, once consideration of Private Member's Business, No. 65, has been completed, or in any case at the usual hour of adjournment this day, the House shall stand adjourned until 11 o'clock a.m., Monday, January 21, 1985.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the draft order. Is there unanimous consent for its introduction?

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the unanimous consent for the introduction of this order and its adoption. I want to associate myself, at least on this one occasion, with the words of the government House Leader in his thanks to all the personnel of the House of Commons. We are very privileged here to have people of such high calibre assist us in our work. We thank them for their assistance. We wish them a very happy holiday and a very happy New Year. I want to repeat also my good wishes for the New Year to my colleague, the government House Leader. He is not such a bad guy either.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I am the Grinch that stole Christmas, but not necessarily so.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: On behalf of my colleagues I want to say, first, that we will, of course, give unanimous consent to the motion.

Second, I want to say that the relationship we have developed can do nothing but good for the House of Commons. The working arrangements that have been developed among the House Leaders are the best that I have had in many years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: We operate in as close to a non-partisan way as is humanly possible in the circumstances.

Mr. Gauthier: Did you get a card?

Mr. Deans: I did not get a card.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I think that that co-operation, though it is not always reflected in the partisan debate which takes place in the House of Commons, has to be recognized as a vital and important part of the ongoing work of the House.

I want to express, as I did earlier today, to the Members and to all others who are here and present, those who work for and on behalf of the House of Commons, the desire of this Party that they should enjoy the holiday season, that they should enjoy next year, and that it be a fruitful and worth-while year for everyone.

On behalf of my colleagues and my Leader, and I think on behalf of everyone, I say to the country at large that we want 1985 to be a year in which people can fulfil the kinds of dreams and ambitions they hold for themselves and others, and that it be a year in which the sharing of responsibility and the concern for others in Canada and around the world will become the uppermost concern of everyone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: There is unanimous consent, I take it, for the introduction of the order:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 3, once consideration of Private Members' Business No. 65 has been completed or, in any case, at the usual hour of adjournment this day, the House shall stand adjourned until 11:00 o'clock a.m. on Monday, January 21, 1985.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Before we go to Private Members Business, may I just say that there have been new experiences for many of us this year. The Speaker wants everybody here to know that you are a fine bunch of men and women.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Speaker and his wife wish you all a very merry Christmas. I want to say to the Table Officers and to the Pages of the House that when the House Leaders indicated we are all blessed to have you, they were speaking only in short terms what we all deeply feel, that we are extraordinarily blessed by the services that are rendered by our people in this Chamber.

It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES CONDOMINIUM ORDINANCE VALIDATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic) moved that Bill C-214, an Act to validate the Northwest Territories Condominium Ordinance be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, if the subject of debate is the validation of condominium legislation in the Northwest Territories, one can only conclude that it must be Friday afternoon in the House of Commons.

The object is to resolve a technicality in the present law which prevents the construction of condominiums in the Territories, and I might say the same is also true of the Yukon. The objective is to provide reasonably priced housing, of which there is a shortage in the north as there is in many other places throughout Canada. The request for this legislation comes from the Government of the Northwest Territories and individual MLAs from all three political Parties represented. It also comes from the City of Yellowknife, in particular, and His Worship the Mayor, Don Sian, and from the real estate fraternity as well as from individuals who would like the opportunity to own and invest in condominiums.

When condominiums started to be constructed throughout Canada, in 1969 a condominium ordinance was passed by the Territorial Legislature. It is, Sir, a model Act. It is based on provincial Acts. It does not diverge from them in any way. I suspect the advice of the law commissioners was taken in the drafting of this legislation. It governs the regulation of condominium corporations, the title to common areas by condominium corporations, title to individual units therein, and the relationships between a condominium corporation and the holders of individual units. However, it was found that there was a conflict with the federal Act, the Land Titles Act. As a consequence, the condominium ordinance was ultra vires.

What we are trying to do today is to put this matter to right. The Land Titles Act has a long and honourable history going back to Confederation. It deals with things like the concepts of dower and courtesy. Anybody who is familiar with medieval matrimonial law will know all about this, but it does not deal with the condominium concept. The condominium concept was not around at the time of Confederation. It dealt with the registration of land titles at the time throughout the whole of western Canada, all the land that the new nation of Canada acquired from the Hudson's Bay Company via the Imperial Crown. Since that time, the Province of Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan have all enacted their own land titles legislation.

In January, 1981, Bill C-52 was introduced into the House of Commons. This would have put the situation right. It would have done two things. First, it would have addressed the narrow condominium issue. Second, it would have repealed the Land Titles Act so that the Territories and the Yukon could enact their own land titles legislation, the same as is in place in the provinces. We must remember here that we are talking about the function of registration of land titles and not of the disposition of Crown land, which is done pursuant to the Territorial Lands Act and maybe the Public Lands Grants Act.

At the present time in the Territories, the administration of the Land Titles Act is done by the Territorial Government acting as agent for the federal Government. It would be no great difficulty were it to take over under the terms of its own legislation registration of land titles. The Government of the day never proceeded with that Bill. It was always a low order of priority. This would probably be the preferable way of dealing with the situation rather than by way of the Bill before us. It would address several problems at the same time.

I understand that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) intends to reintroduce Bill C-152 or something very similar. For that reason, I understand there is a disposition on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Fretz) and of the House that the subject matter of this Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I would be very pleased if that course of action were followed and if that happened.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise to speak on a Bill which is of utmost importance to the people of the Northwest Territories. In fact, I am heartened to hear that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) is intending to move ahead with it. If we were able to get unanimous approval for this Bill in the form of a Private Member's Bill or in the form of government legislation, it seems to me that it would be a great step toward relieving the housing crisis which currently exists in the Northwest Territories.

The Hon. Member who proposed the Bill is certainly very aware of the difficulties currently being faced, particularly in the area of housing, in the Northwest Territories. This particular proposed amendment would allow the construction of condominiums in the Northwest Territories. In a small way it could begin to alleviate the situation which is reaching crisis proportions.

We do not intend to supply a number of speakers on the issue because we would like to see it come to a vote in the House this afternoon. If in fact the issue is dealt with and the discussion terminates, it is my understanding of the rules of the House that we would have a vote on the issue. I think it would be roundly supported by most members of my Party and I am sure of the New Democratic Party.

However, I should like to take a moment to outline some of my concerns specifically as they relate to the housing situation in the Northwest Territories. No doubt the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that the housing budget for the Northwest Territories is the largest component of the budget of the Territories. As such, it exceeds the contributions made by most other provinces and parts of Canada with respect to housing budgets. Housing is the number one expenditure of the people of the Northwest Territories. If we look at the amount of money which must be spent to provide affordable housing for people in the Northwest Territories, it is clear that the Government has a very significant role to play in that area. That is why I as the critic for the Liberal Party and members of my Party have very grave concerns about the general direction of this Government which seems to be moving away from government involvement in the housing field.

I refer in a more general way to the decision to cut back 23 per cent on the amount of money which will be made available for home rehabilitation, to cut back on social housing programs and to cut back on the number of units which would have been provided under previous CMHC agreements. The general housing cut-backs indicate the thrust of the Government to get out of the whole area of government involvement in housing, to the point where some concern has been expressed that CMHC is now looking at the possibility of getting out of the whole issue of guaranteeing mortgages in general. If CMHC decided to extract itself from the mortgage lending business and in fact allow it to be done totally by the private sector, areas like the Northwest Territories would be particularly affected in a disastrous way.

I urge the Government to support this initiative which will try to alleviate a very difficult situation. There are as many as eight, ten or twelve family members living in two or three-room houses in the Northwest Territories. It has been recognized by the Government of the Northwest Territories as one of the major social problems it will be attacking in 1985. Also I encourage the Government and its Members to do everything in their power to maintain the social and governmental role for housing which was developed during the last two decades through social housing programs, through co-operative housing programs, through home rehabilitation programs and through other means where the Government decided to play a leadership role. That is particularly crucial in areas such as the Northwest Territories, which are sometimes more subject to the vagaries of the market-place in a much more extreme and severe way than in other more populated areas of the country.

I rise to support vociferously and briefly the Private Member's Bill which the Hon. Member introduced and to encourage the Government to take a hard look at the new directions—and I believe they are false directions—which it seems to be taking in the area of housing policy for Canadians.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise in support of Bill C-214 which will permit condominiums to be built in the Northwest Territories, as was intended by the Ordinance but was prevented by a very simple housekeeping oversight conflict with the Land Titles Act.

I was pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) say that he hoped this would enable the building of good and more affordable housing in the Territories and that the Government there has a large budget for promoting housing.

I would like to add that I hope the Government, the builders and the people of the Northwest Territories would be willing to learn from a major error which was made in Canadian cities to the south. Generally they undertake to try to avoid the errors of the South. This is one I hope they take to heart. I hope they will avoid the error of many cities. Mr. Speaker, you are as familiar as I am with the error of permitting adult only apartment buildings and dwellings, buildings where children are forbidden. Your Honour was as warmly concerned about this matter as I was a few years ago. The error of permitting adult only buildings is now beginning to show as statistics demonstrate that the fertility rate in Canada is dropping.

Actually the Hon. Member for Western Arctic expressed concerned about it this morning in a statement which he made. He has undertaken to do the best he can individually, but obviously it will not resolved the problem, as I can testify myself. It is really quite serious to insist that children be born, to try to throw people in jail for abortion, yet insist that they do not need a place to live after they are born. This is the custom in cities like Toronto.

I hope the Government of the Northwest Territories will learn by this experience and ban adult only buildings within its jurisdiction. This will allow Canadians to live in a more natural way with children than is now permitted in certain parts of cities like Toronto. We will begin by referring this Bill or the subject matter of it to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I hope the matter will proceed smoothly.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-214, an Act to validate the Northwest Territories Condominium Ordinance, be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development".

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the amendment. It is the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Fretz) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, the order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: It being 4.20 p.m.,—and it looks remarkably like five o'clock to me—pursuant to Order made earlier this day this House stands adjourned until Monday, January 21, 1985, at eleven o'clock a.m.

Merry Christmas to all. Please have a fine break and get a lot of work done. If Hon. Members have a little while in the next few minutes, the usual invitation from the Chair is extended to you all.

At 4.20 p.m. the House adjourned until January 21, 1985, pursuant to Special Order.
